Also on 13 March,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Commission deferred until 1989 consideration of a draft optional protocol to the 1984 Convention against torture, submitted by Costa Rica in 1980. Noting the draft European convention against torture, the Commission recommended that other regions consider preparing a draft convention containing ideas similar to those in the draft optional protocol, which provided for a system of periodic visits by a committee of experts to places of detention or imprisonment within the jurisdiction of States parties to the Convention. The Secretary-General was asked to submit in 1988 a progress report on such conventions.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1986, 56 States had signed the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; 14 States had ratified or acceded to it, six less than the number required for the Convention to enter into force.⁽³⁾ The Convention had been adopted by the General Assembly in 1984⁽⁴⁶⁾ and opened for signature in 1985.⁽⁴⁵⁾

Human Rights Commission action. By a 12 March 1986 resolution⁽⁵¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights asked States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority; it invited all those ratifying or acceding to the Convention to consider making the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention—recognizing the competence of the Committee against Torture, to be established under the Convention, to consider communications to the effect that a State party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations, as well as communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by the State party. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly in 1986 and to the Commission in 1987 on the Convention's status.

Report of the Secretary-General. Following the request by the Commission and the Assembly⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August 1986,⁽⁵³⁾ at which time 51 States had signed it and seven had ratified or acceded to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/134 without vote.

Status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling further its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and called upon all Governments to consider signing and ratifying the Convention as a matter of priority, as well as its resolution 40/128 of 13 December 1985,

Mindful of the relevance, for the eradication of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and of the Principles of Medical Ethics,

Convinced of the desirability of early finalization and subsequent adoption of the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, Seriously concerned about the alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment taking place in various parts of the world,

Determined to promote the full implementation of the prohibition, under international and national law, of the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Welcoming the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1986/50 of 13 March 1986, to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to examine questions relevant to torture,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have signed or ratified the Convention since it was opened for signature, ratification and accession on 4 February 1985;

3. Requests all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

4. Invites all States, upon ratification of or accession to the Convention, to consider the possibility of making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session and to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

6. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-second session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

Fund for victims of torture

On 12 March 1986,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.⁽⁵⁵⁾ It also asked him to help make the Fund's humanitarian work better known and to keep it annually informed of the Fund's operations.

The Secretary-General stated in his annual report⁽⁵⁶⁾ on the status of the Fund that the Board, at its fifth session (Geneva, 24-27 February 1986), had made recommendations to him for grants of some $1.2 million, which closely corresponded to the available resources. To continue its activities, the Board decided to appeal to Governments for new contributions. Over the years, the focus of the Fund's grants had shifted in response to the increased number and variety of projects presented. Projects concerned with therapy and rehabilitation of victims of torture accounted for an increased share of funds allocated (97 per cent in 1986 and an average of 90 per cent for the whole period) as opposed to training projects. In addition, projects were carried out to a greater extent in places where resources for rehabilitation or training were limited (90 per cent over the whole period, up from 64 per cent during the first year).

In 1986, the Fund supported several new projects of assistance to refugee victims. Projects for refugees in Argentina and Mexico, implemented by UNHCR, were added to already approved projects in Costa Rica and other Central American countries; funds for similar projects in Belgium, France, Sweden and the United Kingdom had been approved. Other therapy and rehabilitation projects were under way in Argentina, Guinea, the Philippines and Uruguay. The Fund supported the training of medical professionals in specific techniques required in the treatment of torture victims.

Since the Fund began operations in 1983, 69 grants totalling nearly $2 million had been authorized for 46 projects in 25 countries. Total income of the Fund in 1986 was slightly more than $1 million, including $889,940 in pledged contributions. Fund expenditure totalled $596,346, leaving an excess of income over expenditure of $411,583.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/135 without vote.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Again recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling also its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling further its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to those Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions.

Detention on grounds of mental illness

The Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1986,⁽⁷⁾ noting that it was unable to consider the detention of persons on grounds of mental illness because the Sub-Commission had not completed its work, reiterated the urgent need for principles and guidelines preventing the misuse of psychiatry and safeguarding the rights of all individuals. The Commission invited Member States to consider carefully the 1983 conclusions and recommendations of the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur⁽⁸⁾ and to take steps to protect the rights of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder. It urged the Sub-Commission to complete in 1937 consideration of the draft body of principles, guidelines and guarantees so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations to the General Assembly later that year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 41/114 without vote.

Implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Recalling also its resolution 40/110 of 13 December 1985, in which it again urged the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission to expedite their consideration of this question, so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council,

Endorsing Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/12 of 10 March 1986,

Expressing deep concern at the repeated evidence of the misuse of psychiatry to detain persons on non-medical grounds, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission,

Reaffirming its conviction that detention of persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds is a violation of their human rights,

Regretting that, because of the deferral of its thirty-ninth session, the Sub-Commission was not able to conclude this year its consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees,

Again urges the Commission on Human Rights and, through it, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to expedite their consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, so that the Commission can submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Draft declaration against unacknowledged detention

A revised version of a draft declaration against unacknowledged detention of persons had been completed by the Working Group on Detention in 1985.⁽⁵⁹⁾ The Sub-Commission had recommended the adoption of that declaration by the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission on Human Rights.

The Commission decided on 13 March 1986⁽⁶⁰⁾ not to act on the draft declaration and invited the Sub-Commission to reconsider the question, with a view to submitting a new text in 1987.

Hostage-taking

On 12 March 1986⁽⁶¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, with 2 abstentions, strongly condemned those responsible for hostage-taking in all circumstances and demanded the release of those being held. It called on States to take preventive and punitive measures and to put an end to cases of abduction and unlawful restraint. It asked the Secretary-General, whenever a State requested, to use all available means to obtain the release of hostages and decided to take up the question of hostage-taking again in 1987.

Extra-legal executions

In conformity with a 1985 Economic and Social Council request⁽⁶²⁾ Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in February 1986 a report on summary or arbitrary executions.⁽⁶³⁾ The report updated information contained in three previous reports presented in 1983,⁽⁶⁴⁾ 1984,⁽⁶⁵⁾ and 1985.⁽⁶⁶⁾ It attempted to identify the causes of summary or arbitrary executions and to find possible means to end their occurrence. Information concerning such executions had been received from 11 Governments, a regional organization and eight NGOs. In addition, five Governments had replied to the Special Rapporteur's urgent appeals concerning imminent or threatened summary executions. Replies to allegations of summary or arbitrary executions had been received from 15 Governments.

Arbitrary and summary executions remained widespread, the Special Rapporteur concluded, urging the international community to continue to monitor extra-legal executions and consider ways of effective intervention. There was a need for co-ordination between him and United Nations bodies and other international organizations which touched on some aspects of the problem. International standards were needed, he said, to ensure that investigations were conducted into all cases of suspicious death, especially those connected with law enforcement agencies. In his review of national legislation, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern over exceptions in the safeguards to the right to life, particularly during times of public emergency, and recommended that a study be made in this area and that national legislation conform to internationally accepted standards. With regard to an increased number of deaths in custody, the Special Rapporteur considered it imperative that Governments disclose the identity, location and condition of all persons arrested or detained by police, military or security authorities; disclose the reason for detention; and allow access to the detained person by an advocate or relative. He called for further examination of the application of the death penalty to persons under the age of 18 and asked for guidance from the Commission on the question.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/36 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which the Assembly reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights were of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Mindful of General Assembly resolutions 36/22 of 9 November 1981, 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983, 39/110 of 14 December 1984 and 40/143 of 13 December 1985,

Taking note of resolution 1982/13 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary or arbitrary executions,

Bearing in mind the endorsement by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, as well as the ongoing work on summary or arbitrary executions within the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Deeply alarmed at the occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

1. Strongly condemns, once again, the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, which continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. Amos Wako;

4. Decides to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. Amos Wako, for another year, in order to enable him to submit further conclusions and recommendations to the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Requests the Special Rapporteur in carrying out his mandate to continue to examine situations of summary or arbitrary executions;

6. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has occurred;

7. Takes note of the need to develop international standards designed to ensure effective legislation and other domestic measures so that proper investigations are conducted by appropriate authorities into all cases of suspicious death, including provisions for adequate autopsy;

8. Invites the Special Rapporteur to receive information from appropriate United Nations agencies and other international organizations and to consider the elements to be included in such standards and report to the Commission on Human Rights on progress made in this respect;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

10. Urges all Governments and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

11. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of summary or arbitrary executions as a matter of high priority at its forty-third session under the item entitled "Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/144 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that every human being has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling also its resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which it reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights are of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Recalling further its resolution 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which it condemned the practice of summary or arbitrary executions, and its resolutions 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983, 39/110 of 14 December 1984 and 40/143 of 13 December 1985,

Deeply alarmed at the continued occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Recalling resolution 1982/13 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary or arbitrary executions,

Welcoming Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984, and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto, which resolution was endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15, as well as the ongoing work on summary or arbitrary executions within the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in efforts to bring an end to summary or arbitrary executions,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental human right, the right to life,

1. Strongly condemns once again the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, which continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Demands that the practice of summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end;

3. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982, in which the Council decided to appoint for one year a special rapporteur to examine the questions related to summary or arbitrary executions;

4. Also welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/36 of 23 May 1986, in which the Council decided to continue the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. A. Wako, for a further year and requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of summary or arbitrary executions as a matter of high priority at its forty-third session;

5. Urges all Governments and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights in order that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

6. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has recently occurred;

7. Endorses the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session on the need to develop international standards to ensure that proper investigations are conducted by appropriate authorities into all cases of suspicious death, including provisions for adequate autopsy;

8. Invites the Special Rapporteur to receive information from appropriate United Nations bodies and other international organizations and to examine the elements to be included in such standards and to report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session on progress made in this respect;

9. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

11. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to be respected;

12. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur to be prepared in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/35, 1983/36, 1984/35, 1985/40 and 1986/36, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary ex-

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1986,(67) the Commission on Human Rights extended the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for another two years. The Group was requested to submit in 1987 a report with conclusions and recommendations, discharging its mandate with discretion so as to protect persons providing information or to limit the dissemination of information provided by Governments and observing United Nations standards and practices in dealing with communications. The Group was also requested to present to the Commission all necessary information.

Urging Governments to co-operate with the Group, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite countries with numerous cases of disappearance to envisage establishing a national body to investigate and answer requests for information on them and to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance and resources. The Commission encouraged Governments to consider with special attention any wish expressed by the Group to visit their country.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1986/139 of 23 May 1986, approved extension of the Working Group's mandate for two years, on an experimental basis. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to ensure all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources required, so as to reduce to the minimum any discontinuity in the Group's activities.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,(68) held only two sessions in 1986, due to the financial crisis of the United Nations, instead of its usual three: its nineteenth and twentieth (Geneva, 25-29 August and 3-12 December).(69)

During those sessions, the Group held seven meetings with government representatives and nine meetings with representatives of human rights organizations, associations of families of missing persons and relatives or witnesses directly concerned with reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances. As in previous years, the Group examined information from both Governments and non-governmental sources, decided on the admissibility of cases, their transmission to the Governments concerned as well as their clarification, and considered further the development of its method of work.

Two members of the Group visited Peru from 3 to 10 October and provided the Commission with an analysis of the situation of disappearances there.

In 1986, the Group received some 3,200 reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances and after examination transmitted 1,962 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned. The Group also retransmitted summaries of outstanding cases to Governments and informed them about clarifications or new information received.

The Group noted that the practice of disappearances persisted, with missing persons reported in as many as 39 different countries. There appeared to be an increase in enforced disappearance of defence lawyers and human rights advocates at the hands of government agents; relatives of missing persons, particularly those occupying leading positions in organizations for victims of repression, suffered a similar fate. Since its establishment, the Group had transmitted almost 14,000 cases to Governments. Co-operation with Governments had substantially improved, the Group noted, but there were others which consistently failed to respond to its communications. The Group further noted that the financial crisis of the United Nations had considerably cut into its ability to cope with its mounting work-load.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/145 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 40/147 of 13 December 1985 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/55 of 13 March 1986, in which the Commission decided to extend for two years, on an experimental basis, the term of the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and Economic and Social Council decision 1986/139 of 23 May 1986, in which the Council approved the Commission's decision,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend for two years, on an experimental basis, the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI), of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting by the Group;

3. Also welcomes the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/55 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with even greater efficiency;

4. Appeals to all Governments, particularly those which have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group, to co-operate fully with the Group so as to enable it, with respect for its working methods based on discretion, to perform its strictly humanitarian role;

5. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling the Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

6. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group to the Commission at its forty-third session;

7. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities.

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Freedom of movement

On 11 March 1986,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the progress made by Special Rapporteur Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia) in his study on everyone's right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return to one's country. It took note of a 1985 Sub-Commission request⁽⁷¹⁾ that he continue his work, and appealed to the Sub-Commission to consider in 1987, as a matter of priority, the Special Rapporteur's final report and the preliminary draft of a declaration on the topic.

Freedom of speech

On 12 March 1986,⁽⁷²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the extensive occurrence in many parts of the world of detention of persons who exercised their right to freedom of opinion and expression. It called on States to allow full realization of that right and appealed to them to ensure respect and support for those who exercised that right and to release those who had been detained solely for doing so. It also affirmed that further national and international measures might be required to ensure respect for that right.

Amnesty

Expressing appreciation to the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur, Louis Joinet (France), for his 1985 report on the study of amnesty laws and their role in safeguarding and promoting human rights,⁽⁷³⁾ the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1986/38 of 23 May 1986, decided that the study should be disseminated as widely as possible in all the official United Nations languages. The Council acted without vote, following similar approval by its Second Committee on 21 May of a text recommended by the Commission on Human Rights.

Independence of the judicial system

On 11 March 1986,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the completion in 1985 of a study on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers⁽⁷⁵⁾ by the Special Rapporteur, L. M. Singhvi (India), and requested the Sub-Commission to consider the report as a priority matter with a view to submitting it to the Commission together with the Sub-Commission's final recommendations.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Human Rights Commission action. By a 10 March 1986 resolution,⁽¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to 7, with 4 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States to pursue policies directed towards implementing economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, and called on them to co-operate in creating conditions conducive to the enjoyment of all human rights. It took note of the reports, submitted pursuant to a 1985 Commission invitation,⁽²⁾ of ILO,⁽³⁾ FAO,⁽⁴⁾ UNESCO⁽⁵⁾ and WHO⁽⁶⁾ on the implementation of the rights to work, food, education and health, respectively.

The Commission urged its Sub-Commission to pursue the study on the right to food and requested it to examine and update for the Commission's 1987 session the conclusions and recommendations of the 1974 report entitled The Realization of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Problems, Policies, Progress.⁽⁷⁾ It invited Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to comment on their policies regarding the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights (see below) and asked the Secretary-General to submit a report containing those comments for consideration at the Commission's 1987 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/117 by recorded vote.

Indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Recalling that in the preambles to the International Covenants on Human Rights it is recognized that the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his economic, social and cultural rights as well as his civil and political rights,

Bearing in mind that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its resolution 40/114 of 13 December 1985,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977 that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights can never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Convinced that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights,

Desirous of removing all obstacles to the full realization of human rights, in particular colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination in all its forms, apartheid, foreign intervention, occupation, aggression, discrimination and domination,

Recognizing the fundamental rights of every people to exercise full sovereignty over its natural wealth and resources,

Reaffirming that there is a close relationship between disarmament and development, that progress in the field of disarmament would considerably promote progress in the field of development and that resources released through disarmament measures should be devoted to the economic and social development and well-being of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Recognizing that the realization of the right to development could help to promote the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/42 of 14 March 1985 and 1986/15 of 10 March 1986, in which the Commission stated that the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights have not received sufficient attention within the framework of the United Nations system,

Requesting the Secretary-General to enhance his efforts under the programme of advisory services to States in the implementation, promotion and protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other United Nations instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Appeals to all States to pursue policies directed towards the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights;

2. Calls upon all States to co-operate in creating national and international conditions conducive to the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, its views and recommendations on these human rights;

4. Welcomes the establishment by the Economic and Social Council of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which will be entrusted from 1987 on with the important task of overseeing the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give publicity to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure that it receives full administrative support in order to enable it to discharge its functions effectively;

6. Affirms the importance and relevance, to programmes and activities being undertaken throughout the United Nations system, of reports submitted by States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

7. Decides to discuss at its forty-second session, under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights", the question of the indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 129-1-25 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/878) by recorded vote (103-1-25), 21 November (meeting 53); 7-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.65/Rev.1); agenda item 97.

Sponsors: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Syrian Arab Republic.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

The Assembly adopted the ninth preambular paragraph by a recorded vote of 131 to 9, with 15 abstentions, following its approval by the Third Committee by a recorded vote of 103 to 9, with 15 abstentions.

The United States objected to the text on the grounds that it attempted to redefine and reinterpret the concept of human rights developed by the United Nations over the past 40 years.

The United Kingdom, on behalf of the 12 EC countries, objected that paragraph 1 did not refer to the International Covenants on Human Rights. The Twelve also had objections to paragraph 2 and they could not accept the premise in the title and the sixth preambular paragraph that all human rights were indivisible and interdependent. They also believed that the list of obstacles to the realization of human rights in the eighth preambular paragraph could not be complete without referring to other obstacles such as totalitarian practices; in their view, the ninth preambular paragraph's wording was inconsistent with the language of the International Covenants and the tenth preambular paragraph oversimplified the complex relationship between disarmament, security and development. They also expressed concern over the eleventh preambular paragraph.

Japan said it could not accept the concept of interdependence of economic, social and cultural rights on the one hand, and civil and political rights on the other. Similarly, Canada and Costa Rica felt that the text over-emphasized the importance of the former; the text was based on a questionable interpretation of United Nations accomplishments, Canada added. Argentina regretted that paragraph 1 contained no mention of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Japan pointed out that there were discrepancies between the ninth preambular paragraph and the provision on sovereignty over natural resources in that Covenant. Costa Rica believed that the ninth preambular paragraph distorted the principle of sovereignty.

In Australia's opinion, the text lacked balance and stipulated an unfortunate conditionality for the enjoyment of fundamental rights in the preamble and in paragraphs 1 and 2. Chile regretted that international terrorism was not included among the obstacles to the realization of human rights listed in the eighth preambular paragraph.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1986, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽⁸⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽⁹⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 88 States. Argentina, the Niger and the Sudan became parties to it during 1986.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Secretary-General reported on the status of ratifications or accessions to and signatures of the Covenant as at 1 August,⁽¹¹⁾ as well as on other questions related to its implementation (see p. 739).

Implementation of the Covenant

The Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the Covenant held its eighth session in New York from 14 April to 2 May 1986.⁽¹²⁾ The Group was set up in 1978⁽¹³⁾ and restructured in 1982⁽¹⁴⁾ to comprise 15 States parties to the Covenant. New arrangements for the Group, which was to be renamed Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, had been decided on by the Economic and Social Council in 1985 (see p. 716). The Group examined 24 reports from 19 States parties on their implementation of specific provisions of the Covenant. On each report, the Group heard statements by, and put questions to, the State representatives concerned. Under a programme established by the Council in 1976,⁽¹⁵⁾ reports required under the Covenant were to be submitted in three biennial cycles of stages, each stage covering a related group of articles of the Covenant.

For the first stage (due 1 September 1977), the Group examined reports from France,⁽¹⁶⁾ India,⁽¹⁷⁾ Mexico⁽¹⁸⁾ and Nicaragua⁽¹⁹⁾ concerning rights covered by articles 6 to 9 (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, the rights of trade unionists, the right to social security). At their request, consideration of first-stage reports from Afghanistan,⁽²⁰⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea⁽²¹⁾ and the Netherlands⁽²²⁾ were deferred. Second-stage reports (due 1 September 1983) examined came from Colombia,⁽²³⁾ the Federal Republic of Germany⁽²⁴⁾ and Poland;⁽²⁵⁾ one from Czechoslovakia⁽²⁶⁾ was deferred at its request.

The Group examined initial reports (due 1 September 1979) from Colombia,⁽²⁷⁾ Hungary,⁽²⁸⁾ Japan,⁽²⁹⁾ Madagascar,⁽³⁰⁾ Rwanda,⁽³¹⁾ Venezuela⁽³²⁾ and Zambia⁽³³⁾ on rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, an adequate living standard, and physical and mental health). Second-stage reports (due 1 September 1985) examined came from Australia,⁽³⁴⁾ Austria,⁽³⁵⁾ Finland,⁽³⁶⁾ Hungary,⁽³⁷⁾ Iraq⁽³⁸⁾ and Spain⁽³⁹⁾. Consideration of reports from Cyprus⁽⁴⁰⁾ and the Ukrainian SSR⁽⁴¹⁾ were deferred at their request.

Also examined were reports (due 1 September 1981) on implementation of articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and participation in cultural life) from Canada⁽⁴²⁾ Colombia,⁽⁴³⁾ the Netherlands⁽⁴⁴⁾ and Venezuela.⁽⁴⁵⁾

In addition, the Group considered an April 1986 note⁽⁴⁶⁾ of the Secretary-General transmitting the eighth report of the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations. The report detailed progress in observing the provisions of articles 6 to 9, as well as article 10, of the Covenant, within the scope of ILO's activities, by 18 respondent States.

The Group suggested to the Economic and Social Council that it might wish to remind States parties of their obligation to submit reports and urge them to cover the entire cycle of initial reports before submitting second periodic reports; second periodic reports should not be considered if that condition were not met. The Secretary-General should be requested to revise the guidelines for preparation of reports and, in the mean time, States parties should comply with the existing guidelines. Reports should be balanced, go beyond a mere transcription of legislative and administrative measures or a reproduction of statistical data, be limited to a reasonable length and contain a brief introduction with general information on the country and basic data on its economic, social and constitutional conditions.

The Group welcomed the specialized agencies' participation in its session and recommended that the Council urge them to provide their views on implementation of the Covenant within their special fields of competence. It drew attention to the fact that its meetings were public and that States parties, Member States and specialized agencies could participate. It urged the Council to ensure continued press coverage of the successor Committee's proceedings.

Expressing serious concern about non-submission and delays in the submission of reports, the Group suggested that the Council might wish to consider requesting States parties to inform it of difficulties in preparing and submitting their reports. It emphasized the need for the Secretary-General to devise and implement a programme of advisory services and technical assistance on report submission.

The status of the submission of reports by States parties, as at 1 February 1986, was contained in a note by the Secretary-General to the Council.⁽⁴⁷⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/3 by vote.

Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women, and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recalling its resolution 1988(LX) of 11 May 1976, by which it noted the important responsibilities placed upon the Economic and Social Council by the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in particular those resulting from articles 21 and 22 of the Covenant, and expressed its readiness to fulfil those responsibilities,

Recalling also its decision 1978/10 of 3 May 1978, by which it decided to establish a Sessional Working Group on the: Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, for the purpose of assisting the Council in the consideration of reports submitted by States parties to the Covenant,

Recalling further its resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, by which it decided to establish the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which will be entrusted, as from 1987, with the important task of overseeing the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Having considered the report of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

1. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

2. Commends the States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that have submitted their reports under article 16 of the Covenant;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Covenant;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights for the work it has accomplished since its establishment;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Sessional Working Group;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, at its session in 1987, the suggestions and recommendations of the Sessional Working Group;

7. Urges all States parties to the Covenant to extend their full co-operation and support to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

8. Decides to include the question of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the provisional agenda for its first regular session of 1987.

Meeting numbers. ESC 13-16.

The text was directed towards the States parties of a Covenant to which it was not party and on the monitoring committee of which it could not serve, the United States remarked. The United Kingdom voted in favour on the understanding that the concept of the indivisibility of human rights did not mean that certain rights could be neglected for the sake of others, or that the enjoyment of one set of rights depended necessarily on the enjoyment of others.

Composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Working Group

In 1985,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Economic and Social Council had decided on new arrangements for the composition, organization and administration of the Group, which was to be replaced in 1987 by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights composed of 18 individual experts. The first elections of the Committee members took place in May 1986 (see APPENDIX III).

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1986,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights urged all States which had not become parties to the Covenant to do so. Welcoming the establishment of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Commission encouraged States parties to extend their support and co-operation to it. It appealed to Governments to consider carefully nominations for the Committee, which, it hoped, would consider the development of guidelines for preparing reports pursuant to articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant. The Commission affirmed the importance of the Committee's reports to the Economic and Social Council and urged specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to co-operate with and support the Committee. It asked the Council to consider improved ways of bringing to the attention of United Nations organs, their subsidiary bodies and specialized agencies concerned with furnishing technical assistance, including the regional commissions, any matters arising out of reports to the Committee which might assist them in deciding on measures likely to contribute to the full implementation of the Covenant. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue the programme of advisory services and to consider holding a training course on preparing reports on the Covenant's implementation. It also encouraged him to give publicity to the Committee and ensure full administrative support.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on a recommendation of its President, on behalf of the Bureau, the Economic and Social Council decided on 7 February 1986, by decision 1986/102, that sessions of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights should be held at Geneva, in accordance with a 1976 General Assembly resolution.⁽⁵⁰⁾ On 21 May 1986, the Council, by decision 1986/123, decided that the first session of the Committee would be held from 9 to 27 March 1987.

In December 1986, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Right to Development.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 10 March 1986 resolution,⁽⁵¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 34 to 1, with 8 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights urged the General Assembly to give the highest priority to considering the draft declaration on the right to development with a view to its adoption in 1986. The Commission decided to convene its Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development for three weeks in January 1987 to study ways to promote that right, so that the Group could submit its proposals to the Commission. The Secretary-General was asked to provide all necessary assistance to the Group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1986, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1986/133 by recorded vote.

The right to development

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/16 of 10 March 1986, approved the Commission's decision to convene its Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development for three weeks in January 1987 to study the measures necessary to promote the right to development and its request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Working Group.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/133

42-1-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) by recorded vote (37-1-9), 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Japan, Papua New Guinea, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Canada questioned the value of a Working Group meeting when the General Assembly had not reached a decision on the question of the right to development. The Federal Republic of Germany considered the right to convene a meeting premature; it seemed unlikely that the Group could do any useful work if convened so early.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/128 by recorded vote.

Declaration on the right to development

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the right to development,

Decides to adopt the Declaration on the Right to Development, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Right to Development

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations relating to the achievement of international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian nature, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing that development is a comprehensive economic, social, cultural and political process, which aims at the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population and of all individuals on the basis of their active, free and meaningful participation in development and in the fair distribution of benefits resulting therefrom,

Considering that under the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in that Declaration can be fully realized,

Recalling the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling further the relevant agreements, conventions, resolutions, recommendations and other instruments of the United Nations and its specialized agencies concerning the integral development of the human being, economic and social progress and development of all peoples, including those instruments concerning decolonization, the prevention of discrimination, respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the maintenance of international peace and security and the further promotion of friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter,

Recalling the right of peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they have the right freely to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Recalling also the right of peoples to exercise, subject to the relevant provisions of both International Covenants on Human Rights, full and complete sovereignty over all their natural wealth and resources,

Mindful of the obligation of States under the Charter to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Considering that the elimination of the massive and flagrant violations of the human rights of the peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those resulting from colonialism, neo-colonialism, apartheid, all forms of racism and racial discrimination, foreign domination and occupation, aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity and threats of war would contribute to the establishment of circumstances propitious to the development of a great part of mankind,

Concerned at the existence of serious obstacles to development, as well as to the complete fulfilment of human beings and of peoples, constituted, inter alia, by the denial of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and considering that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that, in order to promote development, equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights and that, accordingly, the promotion of, respect for and enjoyment of certain human rights and fundamental freedoms cannot justify the denial of other human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that international peace and security are essential elements for the realization of the right to development,

Reaffirming that there is a close relationship between disarmament and development and that progress in the field of disarmament would considerably promote progress in the field of development and that resources released through disarmament measures should be devoted to the economic and social development and well-being of all peoples and, in particular, those of the developing countries,

Recognizing that the human person is the central subject of the development process and that development policy should therefore make the human being the main participant and beneficiary of development,

Recognizing that the creation of conditions favourable to the development of peoples and individuals is the primary responsibility of their States,

Aware that efforts at the international level to promote and protect human rights should be accompanied by efforts to establish a new international economic order,

Confirming that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations,

Proclaims the following Declaration on the Right to Development:

1. The right to development is an inalienable human right by virtue of which every human person and all peoples are entitled to participate in, contribute to, and enjoy economic, social, cultural and political development, in which all human rights and fundamental freedoms can be fully realized.

2. The human right to development also implies the full realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, which includes, subject to the relevant provisions of both International Covenants on Human Rights, the exercise of their inalienable right to full sovereignty over all their natural wealth and resources.

1. The human person is the central subject of development and should be the active participant and beneficiary of the right to development.

2. All human beings have a responsibility for development, individually and collectively, taking into account the need for full respect for their human rights and fundamental freedoms as well as their duties to the community, which alone can ensure the free and complete fulfilment of the human being, and they should therefore promote and protect an appropriate political, social and economic order for development.

3. States have the right and the duty to formulate appropriate national development policies that aim at the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population and of all individuals, on the basis of their active, free and meaningful participation in development and in the fair distribution of the benefits resulting therefrom.

1. States have the primary responsibility for the creation of national and international conditions favourable to the realization of the right to development.

2. The realization of the right to development requires full respect for the principles of international law concerning friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

3. States have the duty to co-operate with each other in ensuring development and eliminating obstacles to development. States should realize their rights and fulfil their duties in such a manner as to promote a new international economic order based on sovereign equality, interdependence, mutual interest and co-operation among all States, as well as to encourage the observance and realization of human rights.

1. States have the duty to take steps, individually and collectively, to formulate international development policies with a view to facilitating the full realization of the right to development.

2. Sustained action is required to promote more rapid development of developing countries. As a complement to the efforts of developing countries, effective international co-operation is essential in providing these countries with appropriate means and facilities to foster their comprehensive development.

States shall take resolute steps to eliminate the massive and flagrant violations of the human rights of peoples and human beings affected by situations such as those resulting from apartheid, all forms of racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, foreign domination and occupation, aggression, foreign interference and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity, threats of war and refusal to recognize the fundamental right of peoples to self-determination.

1. All States should co-operate with a view to promoting, encouraging and strengthening universal respect for and observance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without any distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

2. All human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent; equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights.

3. States should take steps to eliminate obstacles to development resulting from failure to observe civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights.

Article 7

All States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and, to that end, should do their utmost to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as to ensure that the resources released by effective disarmament measures are used for comprehensive development, in particular that of the developing countries.

Article 8

1. States should undertake, at the national level, all necessary measures for the realization of the right to development and shall ensure, inter alia, equality of opportunity for all in their access to basic resources, education, health services, food, housing, employment and the fair distribution of income. Effective measures should be undertaken to ensure that women have an active role in the development process. Appropriate economic and social reforms should be carried out with a view to eradicating all social injustices.

2. States should encourage popular participation in all spheres as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights.

1. All the aspects of the right to development set forth in the present Declaration are indivisible and interdependent and each of them should be considered in the context of the whole.

2. Nothing in the present Declaration shall be construed as being contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, or as implying that any State, group or person has a right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the violation of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenants on Human Rights.

Article 10

Steps should be taken to ensure the full exercise and progressive enhancement of the right to development, including the formulation, adoption and implementation of policy, legislative and other measures at the national and international levels.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Sweden, United Kingdom.

In the opinion of the United States, the Declaration was imprecise and confusing and it defined development as constant improvement of an entire population's well-being which, according to the United States, was not assured by governmental promises but by performance. References to the human rights of peoples were inconsistent with the proper concept of human rights as rights of the individual. The Declaration could dilute and confuse the United Nations human rights agenda which was already inundated with issues posed by numerous failures to respect the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In addition, the United States took exception to connections between disarmament and development and disagreed with the view that development was to be achieved mainly by transferring resources from the developed to the developing world.

Similarly, the United Kingdom believed that the text, in the twelfth preambular paragraph and article 7, provided an over-simplified view of the complex relationship between disarmament, security and development, and it did not accept a link between the promotion and protection of human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order, a view also voiced by Finland on behalf of Denmark, Iceland and Sweden. In addition, the United Kingdom objected to the cause and effect relationship implied between human rights violations and development in the ninth preambular paragraph; people living in Non-Self-Governing Territories were not prevented from the full realization of their human rights, provided they were free to exercise their right to self-determination. It also disagreed with the indivisibility and interdependency of human rights, as expressed in the tenth preambular paragraph and article 6, and considered the formulations in the eleventh and twelfth preambular paragraphs unsatisfactory, as well as the reference to the right to development as an inalienable human right in the last preambular paragraph and article 1. Reference to human rights of peoples in articles 1 and 5 and the implication in article 5 that States should eliminate only massive and flagrant rights violations were unacceptable. While agreeing that States should take steps to promote development, the United Kingdom could not accept that that should become an obligation under international law. The concept of popular participation in article 8, which the United Kingdom took to mean "democratic participation", was still under consideration by the Commission on Human Rights.

The Federal Republic of Germany believed that the Declaration failed to relate the right to development to the individual and feared as a result the erosion of the concept of individual human rights as embodied in United Nations instruments.

Finland (speaking also for Denmark, Iceland and Sweden), and Norway expressed similar reservations, saying that, by elevating the right to development to a human right, the protection of a person against oppression by State authorities might be jeopardized. Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden would have been ready to go along with adoption of the Declaration as a whole after separate votes on the ninth and last preambular paragraphs and articles 1 and 5.

Human rights as rights of individuals had to be protected from possible arbitrary action, Japan said, adding that international co-operation under the Charter, especially Article 56, was the result of voluntary acts by sovereign States and had nothing to do with the inalienable rights of individuals; for those reasons, it could not accept the wording of articles 1.2, 2.2, 3.3, 4.1, 5, 8.1, 9.2 and 10.

Austria questioned that the Declaration would contribute to human rights—a clear distinction was needed between the concept of the rights of peoples, on which it had reservations, and that of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

France supported the Declaration because it had been revised along the lines of the amendments it had submitted with the Netherlands⁽³²⁾ and which had already been introduced in 1985,⁽³³⁾ when the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the question. It understood that references in the Declaration to the right of peoples to full sovereignty over all their natural wealth and resources were governed by article 1, paragraph 2, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and interpreted the ninth preambular paragraph and article 5 to mean that human rights had a two-fold dimension—comprising both individual rights and collective rights. France also reaffirmed that its approval of the Declaration did not imply any change of position on the various texts referred to in the preamble, particularly the fifth preambular paragraph. Belgium and the Netherlands said they supported the text for the same reasons as France.

Iraq expressed reservations on the revisions based on the proposals by France and the Netherlands, saying they might be construed to be prejudicial to the fact that the right of peoples to exercise full sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources was inalienable and absolute. Following the text's oral revision, Nigeria withdrew its sponsorship.

While voting in favour, Australia, Canada, Iraq and Ireland expressed reservations. Australia had some difficulties with elements of the Declaration but supported its broad thrust, including the emphasis on the individual as the central subject of development. Canada said certain aspects of the Declaration should be brought in line with the principles of the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants. Ireland voiced reservations with regard to the unspecific use of references to the human rights of peoples and found the affirmation of the right to development as an inalienable human right unconvincing.

Colombia regarded adoption of the Declaration as one of the Assembly's major achievements.

Also on 4 December, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/133 by recorded vote.

Right to development

Declares that:

The achievement of the right to development requires a concerted international and national effort to eliminate economic deprivation, hunger and disease in all parts of the world without discrimination in accordance with the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States;

To this end, international co-operation should aim at the maintenance of stable and sustained economic growth with simultaneous action to increase concessional assistance to developing countries, build world food security, resolve the debt burden, eliminate trade barriers, promote monetary stability and enhance scientific and technological co-operation.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

The text was originally introduced in the Third Committee as an amendment to the draft declaration on the right to development, with the purpose of inserting a new article, as article 4. The draft declaration and the amendments had been submitted in 1985,⁽⁵⁾ when the Assembly decided to postpone consideration of the question.

Canada felt that the text's contents were extraneous to any document addressing human rights issues, and the manner in which a proposed amendment had been converted into a declaration hardly reflected the seriousness of the issue. France had difficulties with the idea of transforming an amendment into a resolution; Belgium and the Netherlands voiced similar reservations. If the proposed amendment were to be treated as a separate text, Iceland considered, it came within the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee's competence and would therefore be out of order. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom objected to the desirability of a new international economic order as touched on in the text.

Australia believed that the subject was more appropriate to the Second Committee's work. Austria regarded it as inappropriate to take a decision on such short notice on an issue of considerable importance, which had been under consideration for several years in the Second Committee.

Right to own property

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/132 by recorded vote.

Respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States

The General Assembly,

Guided by the desire to promote a higher standard of living, full employment and conditions for economic and social development that foster the greatest possible use of human resources,

Reaffirming the principles enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the right of States freely to choose and develop their political, social, economic and cultural systems, as well as their right to determine their laws and regulations,

Bearing in mind also that all peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic co-operation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit and upon international law, and that in no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence,

Convinced that the full enjoyment by everyone of the right to own property alone as well as in association with others contributes to securing the goals of economic and social development enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced further that the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and as reaffirmed in paragraph 11 of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons and article 16 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, is of particular significance in fostering widespread enjoyment of other basic human rights,

Reaffirming, in accordance with article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that, in the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society,

Recalling the principles associated with the right of individuals to own property described in the relevant articles of regional human rights instruments of the Organization of American States, the Organization of African Unity and the Council of Europe,

1. Recognizes that there exist in Member States many forms of legal property ownership, including private, communal and state forms, each of which should contribute to ensuring effective development and utilization of human resources through the establishment of sound bases for political, economic and social justice;

2. Emphasizes the role of individual initiative as an invaluable resource in promoting economic and social development;

3. Affirms, in accordance with article 30 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that nothing in the Declaration, including the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth therein;

4. Invites the regional commissions to consider the relationship between the full enjoyment of the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the economic and social development of Member States;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report, taking into account the views of Member States, specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system, within existing resources, on:

(a) The relationship between the full enjoyment by individuals of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the economic and social development of Member States;

(b) The role of the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in ensuring the full and free participation of individuals in the economic and social systems of States;

6. Invites Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the subject of his report;

7. Invites the specialized agencies and other competent bodies of the United Nations system to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the subject of his report;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report his findings, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

9. Also requests that a preliminary, oral report on this question be made to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

10. Invites the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session to resume consideration of the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others;

11. Decides to consider this question at its forty-second session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

By a roll-call vote of 34 to 29, with 67 abstentions, the Committee rejected a motion by the Byelorussian SSR not to take action on the revised draft resolution and amendments thereto; by a recorded vote of 47 to 44, with 44 abstentions, it rejected a motion by the USSR to defer consideration of them until 1987.

The Committee, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 24, with 74 abstentions, approved a motion by the United States not to act on amendments by the USSR.⁽⁵⁴⁾ It also accepted United States motions not to act on amendments by Czechoslovakia,⁽⁵⁵⁾ by a recorded vote of 34 to 23, with 68 abstentions; Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic,⁽⁵⁶⁾ by a recorded vote of 32 to 27, with 68 abstentions; and the Byelorussian SSR,⁽⁵⁷⁾ Mongolia⁽⁵⁸⁾ and the Ukrainian SSR,⁽⁵⁹⁾ by recorded votes of 34 to 23, with 75 abstentions, 33 to 24, with 76 abstentions, and 31 to 30, with 72 abstentions, respectively.

The Byelorussian SSR said the United States tactics—accepting some amendments while rejecting others—were negative and clearly did not take the views of other countries into consideration. Colombia thought the revised text was well-balanced, but strongly rejected the procedure which produced it and what it called an unnecessary ideological confrontation and an exercise of repeated votes which confused the Committee; while the original text was a distillation of the ideological bible on economic matters of one of the super-Powers, the amendments were equally unbalanced and arbitrary distillations of ill-digested Marxist economic principles drafted by the other super-Power and its satellites.

Mongolia felt that some paragraphs still needed improvement, based on principles in United Nations documents concerning the link between the respect of basic human rights and socio-economic development; the right to own property could be realized in the context of all other basic human rights and should not be separated from the socio-economic environment. Mongolia also stressed that the consideration by regional commissions and other organizations concerned with the question should not be detrimental to their programmes and priorities already adopted.

Each country or society had the right to decide on its social system, Ghana said; accordingly, the invitation in paragraph 4 to the regional commissions was unnecessary. Paragraph 5, too, was uncalled for: if the United Nations were to foster co-operation between countries with different social systems, that paragraph would cause dissension.

The Sudan stressed that, while it supported the text, its position should not be regarded as detracting from its support for communal ownership or as belittling the role of the State and Government in national planning.

Argentina interpreted paragraph 4 in accordance with the International Covenants and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.⁽⁶⁰⁾ Sri Lanka said its constitution affirmed the right of individuals to own property. Austria hoped that the subject would receive in-depth consideration in the Commission on Human Rights.

Introducing the text, the United States said respect for the right of property could further the exercise of other basic human rights.

Popular participation and human rights

Taking note of a report by the Secretary-General on popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights invited on 10 March 1986⁽⁶²⁾ Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies and NGOs which had not done so to submit their comments on the Secretary-General's final study on popular participation.⁽⁶³⁾ The Secretary-General was requested to submit a report containing those comments in 1987 when the Commission would continue consideration of the question.

The Secretary-General's 1986 report, prepared pursuant to a 1985 Commission resolution,⁽⁶³⁾ summarized comments received as at 20 December 1985 from four Member States, eight United Nations bodies and specialized agencies and six NGOs.

Right to adequate housing

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1986,⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, reiterating the right of all persons to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing, expressed deep concern that millions of people did not enjoy the right to housing. It decided to continue consideration of the question against the background of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 673).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/41 by recorded vote.

Realization of the right to adequate housing

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, in which the Assembly proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recalling further that the objective of activities before and during the Year is to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of some of the poor and disadvantaged by the end of 1987, according to national priorities, and to demonstrate by the year 2000 ways and means of improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and disadvantaged,

Bearing in mind that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights provide that all persons have the right to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing, and that States should take appropriate steps to ensure the realization of that right,

Noting that the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless are related to the realization of the economic, social and cultural rights set out in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and that the Economic and Social Council could make an important contribution to the achievement of the objectives of the Year, taking into account the activities of the United Nations bodies and agencies in this field, notably the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), which was designated as the body responsible for organizing the Year,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/36 of 12 March 1986,

1. Reaffirms the right of all persons to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing;

2. Expresses its deep concern that millions of people do not enjoy the right to housing;

3. Calls upon all Governments and all concerned institutions, both national and international, to intensify their efforts to help achieve the objectives and goals of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

4. Decides to consider the question of the realization of the right to adequate housing, as contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, at its first regular session of 1987, under the item entitled "Human rights".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/41

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/146 by recorded vote.

Realization of the right to adequate housing

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, in which it proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recognizing the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Bearing in mind that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights provide that all persons have the right to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing, and that States should take appropriate steps to ensure the realization of this right,

Noting that the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless are closely related to the realization of the economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Noting also that the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) is responsible for organizing the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/41 of 23 May 1986,

1. Expresses its deep concern that millions of people do not enjoy the right to adequate housing;

2. Reiterates the need to take, at the national and international levels, measures to promote the right of all persons to an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families, including adequate housing;

3. Calls upon all States and international organizations concerned to intensify their efforts to achieve the objectives and goals of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council to give special attention during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless to the question of the realization of the right to adequate housing;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to pay appropriate attention to the question of promoting the right to adequate housing in the information he is to provide to the General Assembly on the results of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel, United States.

Introducing the text on behalf of the sponsors. Mongolia said that, although adequate shelter had been universally recognized as a basic human right for more than a quarter of a century, the overall situation was deteriorating alarmingly, with approximately one quarter of the world's population not having adequate shelter and living in unsanitary and unhealthy conditions; it was estimated that about 100 million people had no housing whatsoever. The right to adequate housing, proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽⁶⁵⁾ and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, could not be fully ensured without effective national and international action.

Panama said government action was necessary to resolve the housing problems experienced in a majority of countries.

Right to education

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/118 without vote.

Efforts and measures to promote the eradication of illiteracy

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights the inalienable right of everyone to education is recognized,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recognizing that the elimination of illiteracy constitutes a prerequisite for ensuring the right to education,

Emphasizing that widespread illiteracy, especially in many developing countries, seriously hinders the process of economic and social development and cultural and spiritual advancement,

Emphasizing further that this situation is utterly incompatible with what is required by the great advances in the scientific and technical revolution that mankind is witnessing,

Convinced that the process of education can make an indispensable contribution to the achievement of social progress, mutual understanding and co-operation among nations,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy calls for world-wide co-operation and joint efforts,

Considering that the complete elimination of illiteracy in all regions of the world should be recognized as a priority objective of the international community,

Convinced that the elaboration of a global strategy for the eradication of illiteracy and the organization of a world-wide literacy campaign will promote deeper understanding by the world public of the various aspects of the problem of illiteracy and help to intensify efforts to spread literacy and education,

Taking into consideration the appeal made by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in its resolution 2.2, adopted at its twenty-third session, concerning the proclamation of an international literacy year,

1. Approves the appeal made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to proclaim an international literacy year;

2. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider in 1987 the question of declaring 1989 as the international literacy year and to inform the General Assembly of its recommendation at its forty-second session;

3. Requests the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare, in co-operation with other interested organizations, his suggestions on the observance of the international literacy year and to submit them to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council;

4. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare, in accordance with General Conference resolution 4.6, a plan of action designed to assist all States in eradicating illiteracy by the year 2000, whereby the impetus given by the international literacy year will be duly furthered.

Advancement of human rights

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/131 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/46 of 23 November 1979, 35/174 of 15 December 1980, 36/133 of 14 December 1981, 38/124 of 16 December 1983, 39/145 of 14 December 1984 and 40/124 of 13 December 1985,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/43 of 14 March 1985,

Underlining the fact that the right to development is an inalienable human right,

Recognizing that the human being is the main subject of development and that everyone has the right to participate in, as well as to benefit from, the development process,

Reiterating once again that the establishment of the new international economic order is an essential element for the effective promotion and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reiterating also its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights,

Reaffirming the importance of furthering the activities of the existing organs of the United Nations system in the field of human rights in conformity with the principles of the Charter,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/56 of 22 July 1986,

Underlining the need for the creation of conditions at the national and international levels for the promotion and full protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples,

Recognizing that international peace and security are essential elements for the full realization of human rights, including the right to development,

Considering that the resources that would be released by disarmament could contribute significantly to the development of all States, in particular the developing countries,

Recognizing that co-operation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Convinced that the primary aim of such international co-operation must be the achievement by each human being of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Acknowledging the progress so far achieved by the international community in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Concerned, however, at the occurrence of violations of human rights in the world,

Reaffirming that nothing in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in the International Covenants on Human Rights may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person the right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth therein,

Affirming that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population, on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

Considering that the efforts of developing countries for their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources, as well as by policy and appropriate measures aimed at creating an external environment conducive to the development of their countries,

Emphasizing that Governments have the duty to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking note of the work done by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, as reflected in its reports to the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights continue its current work on the overall analysis with a view to further promoting and improving human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the Commission's programme and working methods, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of General Assembly resolution 32/130 and other relevant texts;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for each human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the others;

3. Affirms its profound conviction that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, protection and promotion of both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reaffirms that it is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States should undertake specific obligations through accession to, or ratification of, international instruments in this field and, consequently, that the standard-setting work within the United Nations system in the field of human rights and universal acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

5. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

6. Reaffirms its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and expresses its concern at serious violations of human rights, in particular mass and flagrant violations of these rights, wherever they occur;

7. Expresses concern at the present situation with regard to the achievement of the objectives and goals for establishing the new international economic order and its adverse effects on the full realization of human rights, in particular the right to development;

8. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

9. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements in achieving the full realization of the right to development;

10. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

11. Considers it necessary that all Member States promote international co-operation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, with a view to resolving international problems of an economic, social and humanitarian character;

12. Expresses concern at the disparity existing between the established norms and principles and the actual situation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the world;

13. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Reiterates the need to create, at the national and international levels, conditions for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples;

15. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all rights and complete personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for workers' participation in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

16. Again requests the Commission on Human Rights to take the necessary measures to promote the right to development, and welcomes the decision of the Commission, in its resolution 1986/16 of 10 March 1986, concerning the future work of the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report containing information on the progress made by the Working Group in the accomplishment of its tasks;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 134-1-21 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/925 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (112-1-21), 19 November (meeting 50); 27-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.41/Rev.1); agenda item 101. Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, Romania, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

By recorded votes of 138 to 1, with 15 abstentions, and 141 to 1, with 14 abstentions, respectively, the Assembly adopted the seventh preambular paragraph and paragraph 8. The Committee had retained those paragraphs by recorded votes of 111 to 1, with 21 abstentions, and 110 to 1, with 22 abstentions.

Several countries, including Australia, Japan, and the United Kingdom on behalf of the 12 EC countries, voiced concern over the link between the text and the right to development. The United Kingdom also felt that international economic and disarmament issues referred to in the text should not be considered by the Third Committee because they were being treated in other forums.

Norway, on behalf of the Nordic States, disagreed with formulations such as the human rights of peoples and those implying that the attainment of a certain degree of development or the establishment of a new international economic order could be a pre-condition for the enjoyment of human rights of individuals; they also regretted the continual emphasis on the right of States rather than individuals. Similarly, Japan asserted that economic development should not be a prerequisite for the protection of human rights.

Iraq believed that the text represented appropriate means of eliminating the obstacles in the way of development; the right of peoples to full sovereignty over their wealth referred to in paragraph 11 was included in article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and could be interpreted as full and absolute sovereignty of States over their resources.

National institutions for human rights protection

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January 1986, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report⁽¹⁾ on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights. In 1984,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly had encouraged Member States to take steps to establish or strengthen such institutions. In the light of information received, the Secretary-General was to prepare for publication, as a handbook for the use of Governments, a consolidated report on the various types and models of national and local institutions for promoting and protecting human rights. Since his previous report of July 1985,⁽³⁾ relevant information had been received from 10 States, two specialized agencies and one intergovernmental regional organization.

In October 1986, the Secretary-General submitted another report⁽⁴⁾ on national institutions as requested by the Assembly in 1985.⁽⁵⁾ As in his 1981⁽⁶⁾ and 1983⁽⁷⁾ reports on the topic, the Secretary-General understood the concept of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights to cover more than organs, authorities and agencies whose primary functions were to promote and protect human rights; the report encompassed a wide range of organizations, including women's rights movements, community groups, equal employment agencies and other voluntary organizations.

Among the national institutions for the protection of human rights, the Secretary-General reviewed legislative organs and organs established to examine the constitutionality of laws; judicial institutions and non-judicial organs supervising the observance of the law (such as the "ombudsman"); legal assistance; human rights commissions and agencies entrusted with responsibilities for minorities, children and women; equal employment agencies; and the role of NGOs. The Secretary-General also analysed the promotional role of human rights commissions, specialized human rights agencies for minorities, women and children, equal employment agencies and NGOs.

In 1985,⁽⁸⁾ the Assembly also had requested the Secretary-General to continue to provide and enhance assistance to Governments within the framework of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights (see p. 742). In July 1986,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported that within that framework a training course was held (La Paz, 19-30 May), at the request of Bolivia, on the provisions of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international organs. The course was attended by representatives from the Ministries of Interior, Foreign Affairs and Education and from the Supreme Court of Justice, the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, and by a prominent NGO.

The handbook of national institutions was being prepared and a report on it would be submitted to the Commission in due course, the Secretary-General stated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/129 without vote.

National institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/123 of 16 December 1977, 33/46 of 14 December 1978, 34/49 of 23 November 1979, 36/134 of 14 December 1981, 38/123 of 16 December 1983, 39/144 of 14 December 1984 and 40/123 of 13 December 1985 concerning national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights,

Mindful of the guidelines on the structure and functioning of national and local institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 33/46,

Emphasizing the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments for promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Conscious of the significant role that institutions at the national level can play in protecting and promoting human rights and fundamental freedoms and in developing and enhancing public awareness and observance of those rights and freedoms,

Welcoming the holding at Geneva, under the auspices of the United Nations, of a Seminar on the Experience of Different Countries in the Implementation of International Standards on Human Rights, from 20 June to 1 July 1983, and a Seminar on Community Relations Commissions and Their Functions, from 9 to 20 September 1985, and other current United Nations initiatives to assist in the development of national machinery to combat racial discrimination,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes the importance of developing, in accordance with national legislation, effective national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, and of maintaining their independence and integrity;
3. Encourages all Member States to take appropriate steps for the establishment or, where they already exist, the strengthening of national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights;
4. Draws attention to the constructive role that national non-governmental organizations can play in the work of such national institutions;

5. Encourages all Member States to take appropriate steps to promote the exchange of information and experience concerning the establishment of such national institutions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to give due attention to the role of national institutions and non-governmental organizations concerned with the protection and promotion of human rights and to provide all necessary assistance to Member States, upon their request, in the implementation of paragraphs 3 and 5 above, according high priority to the needs of developing countries;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide and, as appropriate, to enhance assistance in the field of human rights to Governments, at their request, within the framework of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General to complete as soon as possible and to submit to the General Assembly, through the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council, a consolidated report, for eventual publication as a United Nations handbook, on national institutions for the use of Governments, including information on the various types and models of national and local institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, taking into account differing social and legal systems;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/129

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/925 & Corr.1) without vote, 13 November (meeting 45): 7-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.39); agenda item 101.

Sponsors: Australia, India, Iraq, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Sri Lanka. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 36-38, 43, 45; plenary 97.

UN machinery

A seminar on human rights in the United Nations (Geneva, 8-10 September 1986) was organized by the Special Committee of International Non-Governmental Organisations on Human Rights, following cancellation on financial grounds of the 1986 session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (see p. 730). Apart from 52 NGOs, participants in the seminar included a majority of Sub-Commission members, 14 individual experts and 70 observers (with full right of participation), among them representatives of United Nations bodies and agencies such as the Centre for Human Rights, ILO, UNHCR and UNICEF.

In its conclusions, the seminar stated that, in recent years, United Nations machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights standards had become increasingly effective; a drastic reduction in funding—only 0.7 per cent of the United Nations programme budget being allocated for that purpose anyway—would destroy much of its accomplishments. The current underfunding of United Nations human rights activities made it unthinkable that any across-the-board reduction for the United Nations budget as a whole would be applied automatically to United Nations bodies concerned with human rights.

In addition, the seminar regretted the increasing politicization of human rights within the United Nations, adding that human rights activities should become an integral part of all relevant programmes of the United Nations system, in particular those concerned with development. The highest priority of the United Nations human rights programme should be activities concerned with monitoring, fact-finding, investigations and policy recommendations, and continued support must be guaranteed for examinations of specific global issues such as torture, disappearances, arbitrary arrests and killings, investigations of rights violations, including apartheid, genocide, racism and other forms of discrimination, and monitoring compliance with international instruments.

Careful consideration of areas in which new human rights standards were required should continue, the seminar said. Technical assistance and advisory services should be made available to States to assist them in translating international norms into national practices to promote and protect human rights. While recognizing that some voluntary financing of such services and assistance might be appropriate, human rights should generally be funded through the regular budget.

Making recommendations for improved co-ordination and co-operation of United Nations human rights activities and for increased efficiency and cost-effectiveness, particularly of meetings and conferences, the seminar expressed strong opposition to reducing the frequency of meetings of the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission and the bodies monitoring the implementation of treaties; it also opposed the elimination of summary records for human rights organs.

The seminar's conclusions and recommendations were transmitted to the Secretary-General by the United Kingdom on 26 November.⁽⁹⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1986,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Rights decided to consider in 1987 the possible establishment of an open-ended working group to continue the overall analysis of alternative ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and for further promoting those rights and freedoms, including the question of the Commission's programme and methods of work.

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-second session at Geneva from 3 February to 14 March 1986. At that session, the Commission adopted 64 resolutions and 10 décisions. In addition, the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council eight draft resolutions and 12 draft decisions.

Election of a Commission Vice-Chairman

By a letter of 27 February to the Secretary-General,⁽¹¹⁾ Israel deplored the election as a Vice-Chairman of the Commission of Herman Klenner, head of the German Democratic Republic's delegation and allegedly a former Nazi with the party membership card No. 97-56-141. On 11 March,⁽¹²⁾ the German Democratic Republic transmitted a statement by Mr. Klenner, stating that Israel's accusations had no basis and were purely slanderous.

Report of the Commission

On 23 May 1986, by decision 1986/144, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on Human Rights on its forty-second session.⁽¹³⁾ The Council's Second Committee had approved the text on 21 May, as recommended by the Commission.

Reports of special rapporteurs and special representatives

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 41/432 without vote.

Submission of the reports of special rapporteurs and special representatives of the Commission on Human Rights and of reports of subsidiary organs of the Commission

At its 97th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, decided that the reports of the special rapporteurs and special representatives of the Commission on Human Rights and the reports of the subsidiary organs of the Commission should be issued in their entirety and should be available in sufficient quantities in all the official languages of the United Nations, in accordance with the general rule established in rule 56 of the rules of procedure of the Assembly and in conformity with the provisions of its resolution 38/32 E of 25 November 1983.⁽¹⁴⁾

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) without vote, 28 November (meeting 61); 26-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.83), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Argentina, Belgium, Burkina Faso, Canada, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, France, Gabon, Guinea, Kenya, Mali, Morocco, Mexico, New Zealand, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Spain, Togo, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 54, 61; plenary 97.

Introducing the draft decision in the Committee, Zaire said on behalf of the sponsors that the fact that part of the reports had not been translated into all the official languages could only adversely affect the Committee's work and contravened rule 56 of the Assembly's rules of procedure, whereby all documents must be published in the six official languages.

Organization of work of the 1987 session

Taking into account its heavy work schedule and that of its sessional working groups, the Commission decided on 13 March 1986,⁽¹⁵⁾ by 32 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions, to recommend that the Economic and Social Council authorize 20 fully serviced additional meetings, including summary records, for the Commission's 1987 session, whose Chairman was to make every effort to organize the work within the normal allotted time.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved a text proposed by the Commission, authorized, by decision 1986/141 of 23 May 1986, for the Commission's 1987 session 20 additional meetings and summary records, if possible within existing financial resources. The Council also took note of the Commission's decision to request the Chairman of that session to make every effort to ensure that additional meetings were utilized only if absolutely necessary.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Sub-Commission session

As part of the economy measures taken to help alleviate the financial crisis of the United Nations (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I), the Sub-Commission's 1986 session was postponed until 1987 as a result of General Assembly decision 40/472 A of 9 May 1986.

Review of the work of the Sub-Commission

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1985 Commission request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in January 1986 with later addenda,⁽¹⁷⁾ a report on various election procedures and practices in United Nations bodies, which could be applied to strengthen continuity of the Sub-Commission's work. The Secretary-General had invited Governments and legal counsels of specialized agencies to convey their views; annexed to his report were replies from 10 Governments and three specialized agencies, as well as a comprehensive list of electoral provisions.

Human Rights Commission action. On 12 March,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Commission on Human Rights noted that its Sub-Commission in 1985 had reviewed and made suggestions for improving its work.⁽¹⁶⁾ It also noted the Sub-Commission's decision to consider certain items biennially and requested it to do so unless otherwise authorized by the Commission. The Commission called on States to nominate as members and alternates persons who were independent experts. It requested the Secretary-General to consider providing services for three 3-hour meetings, to enable a maximum of three sessional working groups to meet concurrently. It recommended that the Sub-Commission propose a new study only when a previously authorized study was in the final stage of completion, and reminded it that new studies could only be undertaken or reports involving financial implications requested after authorization by its superior bodies. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to draw the Sub-Commission's attention to the necessity of submitting, for approval by its superior bodies, draft proposals which had financial implications. The Sub-Commission was requested to give priority to topics on which standards were being prepared and was invited to seek the widest possible agreement on draft resolutions; it was also requested to continue its efforts to rationalize its work to achieve increased efficiency and economical work methods.

Sub-Commission documentation

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/33 without vote.

Documentation of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Economic and Social Council

1. Requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities henceforth to submit to the Commission on Human Rights, after a thorough examination, the studies and reports prepared by the Special Rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission with a brief written introductory statement by the Special Rapporteur, and to discontinue the practice of requesting Special Rapporteurs to introduce their reports personally to the Commission;

2. Further requests the Sub-Commission to adhere strictly to the guidelines governing the limitation of documents and to ensure that Special Rapporteurs responsible for preparing reports and studies are brief and concise and that their reports and studies, as far as possible, do not exceed thirty-two pages;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to member States or organizations concerned only those resolutions or decisions of the Commission or the Sub-Commission which require specific responses on their part;

4. Decides that henceforth studies prepared by Special Rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission shall be printed only following an express decision to that effect taken by the Commission and subsequently by the Council, which should have an opportunity to study the relevant financial implications.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/33

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) without vote, 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

Election of Sub-Commission members

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/35 without vote.

Procedure for the election of members of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the need to ensure better continuity in the work of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Decides that, from 1987 onwards, members of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities shall be elected for a term of four years;

2. Further decides that half of the membership of the Sub-Commission and the corresponding alternates, if any, shall be elected every two years and that accordingly, at the elections held in 1987, the Chairman shall draw lots to select those members whose terms will expire in two years;

3. Authorizes the Chairman of the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights to draw lots to select the members and, as applicable, their corresponding alternates, whose terms will expire after two years in accordance with the following pattern: three members from African States; three members from Asian States; three members from Latin American States; one member from Eastern European States; and three members from Western European and other States;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements so that elections of members of the Sub-Commission can be conducted from 1987 onwards in accordance with the procedures set out in the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/35

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) without vote, 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/143 by recorded vote.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The General Assembly,

Having considered, under the item entitled "Report of the Economic and Social Council", the work of the Commission on Human Rights and the work now being done by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Mindful of the importance of the work being done by both the Commission and the Sub-Commission in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Bearing in mind, in particular, that the Sub-Commission is now in the final stage of its consideration of questions of great importance, such as those relating to the results achieved and the obstacles encountered during the first Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the independence and the impartiality of the judiciary, injuries and legal advisers and the independence of lawyers, the status of the individual in present-day international law, the present dimensions of the problem of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, the right to adequate food as a human right, and the right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return to one's country,

Convinced that it would be highly beneficial for the present members of the Sub-Commission to continue the work needed to complete those studies and to consider the final reports thereon at the forthcoming thirty-ninth session of the Sub-Commission, in 1987, since they have taken an active part in those studies and provided the necessary guidance to the special rapporteurs for the drafting of their reports,

Profoundly concerned by the fact that the thirty-ninth session of the Sub-Commission, which was to have been held in 1986, has been postponed until 1987 owing to the current financial situation of the United Nations,

Recalling that the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1985/28 of 11 March 1985, endorsed the desirability of better continuity in the work of the Sub-Commission,

Recalling further that the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1986/35 of 23 May 1986, established a new procedure for the election of the members of the Sub-Commission with the object of ensuring that continuity,

Bearing in mind that in 1949 and 1956, as an exception, the mandates of the experts then serving on the Sub-Commission were extended,

Recommends that the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1987, decide:

(a) To extend the mandate of the present members of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities for one year in order to ensure their participation in the thirty-ninth session of the Sub-Commission, to be held in 1987;

(b) To postpone until the forty-fourth session of the Commission on Human Rights, in 1988, the election of new members of the Sub-Commission scheduled to be held during the forty-third session of the Commission, in 1987, and to ensure that the election is governed by the procedure established in Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/35;

(c) That the Sub-Commission resulting from the election referred to in subparagraph (b) above should begin to exercise its mandate, in accordance with present practice, immediately following that election.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 135-1-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.1) by recorded vote (114-1-19), 25 November (meeting 57); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.33), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

oros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malé, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Australia expressed concern over the procedural aspects of the text and said it was distressed to have had to vote on the Sub-Commission when efforts were under way in the Commission to carry out Sub-Commission reforms. It hoped that cancellation of the Sub-Commission's 1986 session did not constitute a precedent for other United Nations bodies. Finland, on behalf of the Nordic States, expressed a similar view, saying that cancellation of the session had a disruptive effect. Canada would have preferred the Assembly to have referred the matter of nominating Sub-Commission members to the Commission on Human Rights which, it believed, could have given full consideration to ways of ensuring the continuation of the Sub-Commission's work. Panama stressed the importance of maintaining continuity.

Inter-sessional meetings of the Bureau

On 11 March 1986,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights decided not to act on a 1985 Sub-Commission resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ requesting authorization for the Bureau elected at each of its sessions to hold two inter-sessional meetings per year, so that it could review developments and ensure timely collection of information needed for bringing to the Commission's attention any situation which it believed revealed a consistent pattern of human rights violations (see p. 745).

Public information activities

The Secretary-General presented to the Commission on Human Rights in 1986 an overview of public information activities in the human rights field by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) and United Nations information centres, as well as by Governments, specialized agencies, regional commissions and NGOs.⁽²⁰⁾ The overview included a status report on the availability of principal international instruments on human rights and the draft of a basic human rights teaching booklet, prepared in accordance with a 1985 Commission request.⁽²¹⁾

By a 13 March 1986 resolution,⁽²²⁾ the Commission requested Governments to facilitate publicity on United Nations human rights activities, with particular reference to the work of the Commission and expert bodies, and to accord priority to the dissemination of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽²³⁾ and the International Covenants on Human Rights.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to issue by the end of the year a personalized version of the Declaration in the six official United Nations languages, and afterwards to produce personalized versions in national and local languages. It requested him to build up the collection of reference works on human rights in each United Nations information centre and requested United Nations agencies to send reference material to the Centre for Human Rights for distribution. It asked the Secretary-General again to make greater use of audio-visual techniques and computer technology in preparing and distributing United Nations material, to continue work on the basic human rights teaching booklet and to examine how the entire United Nations system might assist in the dissemination of human rights material. The Commission asked the regional commissions to assist further in disseminating material, invited Governments, agencies and NGOs to submit further comments and proposals for enhancing United Nations promotional activities, and asked the Secretary-General to report in 1987 and give an updated status report on the availability of the principal international human rights instruments in the official and other languages, and a summary of human rights-related activities of the information centres.

In response to the Commission's invitation for further comments and proposals for enhancing United Nations promotional activities in the area of human rights, the Secretary-General submitted in November 1986 a report⁽²⁴⁾ summarizing replies received from two States, two specialized agencies and one NGO, and giving summaries of comments on the draft teaching booklet received from three States, a regional commission, three agencies and four NGOs.

The Secretary-General stated that the personalized version of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights had been issued in all six official United Nations languages; owing to the financial crisis of the Organization, however, work was deferred on building up the collection of reference works and United Nations material in information centres. The Secretary-General also reported on promotional activities carried out at United Nations Headquarters, by information centres and by the Information Service of the United Nations Office at Geneva.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/130 without vote.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are necessary to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and that programmes of teaching, education and information are central to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular resolution 40/125 of 13 December 1985, and related resolutions in the field of human rights concerning international instruments and the activities of national institutions and regional arrangements,

Welcoming Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/54 of 13 March 1986 on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing the catalytic effect of United Nations initiatives on national and regional public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing also the valuable role that non-governmental organizations can play in this field,

Believing that the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights and the fortieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights should provide a focus and renewed impetus to the promotional activities of the United Nations system in the field of human rights,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights;

2. Requests all Member States to publicize and to facilitate and encourage publicity for the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights and to accord priority to the dissemination, in their respective national and local languages, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international conventions;

3. Emphasizes the need to make available United Nations materials on human rights in simplified, attractive and accessible form, in national and local languages, and to make effective use of the mass media and new audio-visual technologies to reach a wider audience, with priority given to children, other young people and the disadvantaged, especially those in isolated areas;

4. Calls upon all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies and the regional commissions, as well as Member States and non-governmental organizations, to assist further in the dissemination of United Nations materials on human rights;

5. Recommends that all Member States include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to finalize work on a draft teaching booklet on basic human rights, taking into account any comments that may have been offered by Governments, and to draw the attention of Member States to this document, which could serve as a broad and flexible framework within which teaching could be structured and developed in accordance with national circumstances;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to complete as soon as possible the task of issuing the personalized version of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in the six official languages of the United Nations and to proceed thereafter, in co-operation with regional organizations and Governments, to the production of this document in national and local languages;

8. Invites Member States to consider nominating national focal points to which the Secretary-General could supply copies of relevant human rights materials to complement the existing means by which such materials are disseminated;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite work, within available resources, on building up collections of reference works and United Nations materials at each United Nations information centre, taking into account the list of basic reference works on human rights prepared by the United Nations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to make available, from the existing budget of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, appropriate funding for public information activities in the field of human rights, and to ensure that adequate arrangements are made for the storage and distribution of United Nations public information materials in this field;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reprinting as soon as practicable of the publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session, information on the implementation of the present resolution, including a status report on the availability, in the official languages and in other languages, of the principal international instruments in the field of human rights and an assessment of the activities of the United Nations information centres in this field;

13. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-second session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Regional arrangements

In a July 1986 report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that contacts between regional organs and United Nations bodies entrusted with the promotion of human rights had become a regular practice and were pursued in various ways. Contacts with regional organs were also being pursued in the context of regular annual informal consultation meetings of the secretariats of international organizations dealing with human rights; they were further maintained through the organization of advisory services and technical assistance.

In a later addendum,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the state of signatures and ratifications of three regional instruments—the 1981 African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights and the 1950 European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and the eight Protocols thereto.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/154 without vote.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/127 of 16 December 1977, 33/167 of 20 December 1978, 34/171 of 17 December 1979, 35/197 of 15 December 1980, 36/154 of 16 December 1981, 37/171 and 37/172 of 17 December 1982, 38/97 of 16 December 1983 and 39/115 and 39/116 of 14 December 1984 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling that, in its resolution 39/115, the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of that resolution,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/26 of 11 March 1985 and 1986/52 of 13 March 1986 concerning advisory services in the field of human rights,

Taking note also of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/48 of 14 March 1985 and 1986/57 of 13 March 1986 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian-Pacific region,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, as well as the addendum thereto on the state of signatures and ratifications of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, the American Convention on Human Rights and the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and Protocols thereto, or accessions to those instruments,

Noting with satisfaction the progress achieved in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level and, in particular, the recent entry into force, on 21 October 1986, of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights may make a major contribution to the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that the exchange of information and experience in this field among the regions, within the United Nations system, may be improved,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
 2. Notes with interest that contacts, of various kinds, between representatives of regional bodies and United Nations bodies entrusted with the promotion of human rights, with a view to exchanging information and experience in this field, have become a regular practice and have been further strengthened through advisory services and technical assistance activities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider the possibility of encouraging these developments;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/52 that Governments in need of technical assistance in the field of human rights should be encouraged:

(a) To make use of the possibility offered by the United Nations of organizing, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, information and/or training courses at the national level for appropriate government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international organs;

(b) To avail themselves of the advisory services of experts in the field of human rights, for example for drafting basic legal texts in conformity with international conventions on human rights;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of advisory services and to make, where necessary, the relevant recommendations;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

7. Decides to consider this question further at its forty-third session.

Asia and the Pacific

In February 1986, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council a note⁽²⁷⁾ on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian region. In addition to comments submitted in 1984,⁽²⁸⁾ comments were received from India and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) on the 1982 Seminar on National, Local and Regional Arrangements for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian Region.⁽²⁹⁾ Those comments were also contained in an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights.⁽³⁰⁾

The Commission, on 13 March,⁽³¹⁾ invited ESCAP members to submit their comments, in particular on the Seminar's conclusions and recommendations concerning the development of regional arrangements; it asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1987 a report incorporating further comments, and asked him to encourage ESCAP to establish a regional depository centre for the collection, processing and dissemination of human rights materials, and to hold, in co-operation with ESCAP, a training course on teaching human rights.

As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General in July 1986 asked all ESCAP members that had not done so to send their comments; a November report⁽³²⁾ contained an additional comment from one specialized agency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/153 without vote.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 39/116 of 14 December 1984, on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian region,

Recognizing that regional arrangements make a major contribution to the promotion and protection of human rights and that non-governmental organizations may have a valuable role to play in this process,

Bearing in mind that intergovernmental arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights have been established in other regions,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Seminar on National, Local and Regional Arrangements for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian Region, held at Colombo from 21 June to 2 July 1982, and the comments on the report of the Seminar received from the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and from States members of the Commission, Welcoming the designation of the Social Development Division of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific as a regional human rights focal point,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/57 of 13 March 1986,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to assist and encourage the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to pursue the establishment of a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials within the Commission at Bangkok, the function of which would include the collection, processing and dissemination of such materials in the Asian and Pacific region;

3. Renews its invitation to States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific that have not yet done so to communicate to the Secretary-General as soon as possible their comments on the report of the Seminar on National, Local and Regional Arrangements for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian Region and, in particular, to address themselves to the conclusions and recommendations in the report concerning the development of regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to finalize as expeditiously as possible preparations for a training course, to be held in the Asian and Pacific region, on the teaching of human rights;

5. Takes note of the efforts of United Nations development agencies in the Asian and Pacific region to promote the human rights dimension more actively and systematically in their development activities and invites them to pursue those efforts;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, incorporating information on progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-third session.

International human rights instruments

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/120 without vote.

Setting international standards in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling the extensive network of international standards in the field of human rights, which it, other United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies have established,

Emphasizing the primacy of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in this network,

Reaffirming that effective implementation of these international standards is of fundamental importance,

Recognizing the value of continuing efforts to identify specific areas where further international action is required to develop the existing international legal framework in the field of human rights pursuant to Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that standard setting should proceed with adequate preparation,

Emphasizing that the standard setting activities of the United Nations should be as effective and efficient as possible,

1. Calls upon Member States and United Nations bodies to accord priority to the implementation of existing international standards in the field of human rights and urges broad ratification of, or accession to, existing treaties in this field;

2. Urges Member States and United Nations bodies engaged in developing new international human rights standards to give due consideration in this work to the established international legal framework;

3. Reaffirms the important role of the Commission on Human Rights, among other appropriate United Nations bodies, in the development of international instruments in the field of human rights;

4. Invites Member States and United Nations bodies to bear in mind the following guidelines in developing international instruments in the field of human rights; such instruments should, inter alia:

(a) Be consistent with the existing body of international human rights law;

(b) Be of fundamental character and derive from the inherent dignity and worth of the human person;

(c) Be sufficiently precise to give rise to identifiable and practicable rights and obligations;

(d) Provide, where appropriate, realistic and effective implementation machinery, including reporting systems;

(e) Attract broad international support;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide appropriate specialized support to United Nations bodies working on standard setting in the field of human rights.

Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

In 1986, the United Nations commemorated the thirty-eighth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted on 10 December 1948.⁽²³⁾

As at 7 October 1986, according to a note by the Secretary-General,⁽³³⁾ 24 States had submitted information concerning their observance of Human Rights Day (10 December) in 1985, in commemoration of the proclamation of the Declaration and in accordance with a 1950 General Assembly resolution.⁽³⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/150 without vote.

Fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Considering that the year 1988 will mark the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which, conceived as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations and having provided the basis for the development of the International Covenants on Human Rights, has been and rightly continues to be a fundamental source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling, in this respect, its resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948, by which it officially proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and its resolution 36/169 of 16 December 1981, concerning the observance of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, as well as its resolution 38/57 of 9 December 1983, relating to the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration,

Convinced of the continuing need to promote the universal observance and enjoyment of human rights, which contribute to peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

1. Decides to celebrate in 1988 the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

2. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take appropriate measures, such as those set forth in the annex to the present resolution, and to support appropriate activities aimed at encouraging the promotion of the universal observance and enjoyment of civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to consider including in his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 appropriate activities, such as those indicated in the annex to the present resolution, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration;

4. Requests the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to disseminate appropriate public information, broadcasting and audio-visual material designed to draw attention to, and emphasize the importance of, the Declaration and the role played and the work done by the United Nations to ensure the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Invites the United Nations Postal Administration to issue commemorative postage stamps on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session an item entitled "Fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights";

7. Further decides to devote one plenary meeting during its forty-third session to the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration, which falls on 10 December 1988, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for the programme of that meeting.

ANNEX

Recommended measures for the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

1. The following measures are recommended for possible action at the national level:

(a) Formal proclamation of 10 December 1988 as Human Rights Day;

(b) Issuance of special messages on 10 December 1988 by heads of State or Government or other prominent civil personalities;

(c) Special meetings of parliamentary and other public and private institutions on Human Rights Day;

(d) Special consideration by States which have not yet ratified or acceded to the international instruments of the United Nations in the field of human rights to become parties to those instruments;

(e) Establishment or strengthening of national or local institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and encouragement of teaching programmes on human rights at various educational levels;

(f) Dissemination of the text of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in national languages, including the languages of minorities;

(g) Issuance during 1988 of human rights postage stamps, first-day covers and special cancellations;

(h) Participation by non-governmental organizations in the celebration of the anniversary, and the organization of activities by such organizations;

(i) Organization of activities within the framework and in support of current decades and international years being prepared on human rights issues.

2. It is recommended that the following measures, among others, should be taken by the Secretary-General at the United Nations level:

(a) Issuance by 10 December 1988 of updated versions in all official languages of the United Nations of the publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

(b) Issuance by 10 December 1988 of updated versions in all official languages of the United Nations of the publication entitled United Nations Action in the Field of Human Rights;

(c) Organization of commemorative events, as in past practice, at United Nations Headquarters and at the United Nations Offices at Geneva and Vienna, as well as at Nairobi and at United Nations information centres, on or around 10 December 1988;

(d) Organization in 1988, within the framework of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, of an international seminar on the teaching of human rights;

(e) Adoption of arrangements for the award of human rights prizes, as envisaged in recommendation C of the annex to General Assembly resolution 2217 A (XXI) of 19 December 1966.

Reporting obligations of States parties

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1986⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a report on reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights. Reporting obligations were contained in five such instruments, including the two International Covenants⁽³⁶⁾ the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁽³⁷⁾ the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽³⁸⁾ and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽³⁹⁾

States parties undertook to submit initial and periodic reports to an international supervisory body responsible for monitoring implementation of each Convention. The periodicity of reporting after the entry into force varied from one instrument to the other. As at 1 June 1986, the system of reporting under the conventions comprised 143 States which were parties to at least one of those instruments. Overdue reports totalled 460: 133 under the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 36 under the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 127 under the Convention against racial discrimination, 135 under the Convention against apartheid and 29 under the Convention on eliminating discrimination against women. The number of overdue reports under practically all the conventions had increased and the States experiencing the greatest difficulties in fulfilling their reporting obligations were located in Africa, Asia and Latin America, the Secretary-General noted; in most cases, the failure to submit reports seemed to be due to a lack of trained competent personnel. The Secretary-General recommended that national and regional training courses be conducted under the human rights advisory services programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/121 without vote.

Reporting obligations under United Nations instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing updated information as at 1 June 1986 on the problem of overdue reports by States parties to United Nations instruments on human rights, the comments of States parties with more than two such reports and information on training activities to assist States in fulfilling their reporting obligations,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the significant backlog of reports developing in relation to other United Nations instruments on human rights,

Recognizing the burden that coexisting reporting systems place upon Member States that are parties to various instruments and noting that this burden may become more onerous as additional instruments come into force,

Welcoming the decision of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to approve the practice of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination of considering multiple overdue reports in consolidated form,

Reiterating the fundamental importance it attaches to the fulfilment of reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights,

Drawing attention to the need for States parties to submit reports in a timely manner to the various bodies that have been set up to supervise implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights and to co-operate as fully as possible with those bodies to make the best use of their meeting time, in particular by presenting their reports on scheduled dates or, if that is not possible, by providing sufficient notice to enable meeting time to be reallocated,

Bearing in mind the need for those bodies which depend on funding from the regular budget of the United Nations to improve their efficiency and cost-effectiveness, especially in view of the financial emergency faced by the United Nations,

1. Urges States parties with overdue reports to make every effort to present their reports as soon as possible and to take advantage of opportunities whereby such reports could be consolidated;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue work on developing a compilation of the general guidelines elaborated by the various supervisory bodies and the list of articles dealing with related rights under United Nations instruments on human rights;

3. Encourages States parties to take the relevant guidelines into account when preparing reports and to provide reports that are as succinct as possible;

4. Invites the Chairmen of the supervisory bodies to encourage their respective members:

(a) To give priority attention to consideration of remedial measures to deal with the problems highlighted in the Secretary-General's report;

(b) To give further consideration to harmonizing and consolidating the reporting guidelines developed by these bodies and to other means whereby duplication could be avoided in the submission of material by States parties to the various supervisory bodies;

(c) To consider rearranging, where possible, the periodicity of reporting, especially in view of the future probable increase in the number of instruments;

(d) To report on the results of their deliberations to the appropriate meetings of States parties;

5. Further invites the Chairmen of these bodies to maintain communication and dialogue with each other on common issues and problems;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to consider making provision in his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 for a meeting of the Chairmen of these bodies in 1988;

7. Invites the new Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to give early attention to the question of the reporting system on implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, taking due account of reporting guidelines developed by the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

8. Reaffirms the importance of maintaining summary records of the substantive proceedings of the bodies supervising implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights, in particular for the presentation and consideration of reports by States parties;

9. Endorses the Secretary-General's proposals to arrange, within existing resources and taking into account the priorities of the programme of advisory services, training courses for those regions experiencing the most serious difficulties in meeting reporting obligations under United Nations instruments on human rights;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session a separate item entitled "Reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations instruments on human rights".

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1986,(40) the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the importance of the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽³⁶⁾ in promoting universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It appealed to States to become parties to the Covenants and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, emphasizing the importance of strict compliance with their obligations under those instruments. The Commission urged the Secretary-General to give more publicity to the work of the supervisory committees and improve administrative and related arrangements to enable them to carry out their functions effectively. It encouraged all Governments to publish and distribute the texts of the Covenants in as many languages as possible. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to consider ways to assist States parties in preparing their reports, including fellowships, regional training courses and other possibilities under the programme of advisory services. It also requested him to report in 1987 on the status of the Covenants and on the work of the Economic and Social Council and its Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. (See also p. 715.)

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1986,(41) the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the status of the International Covenants, as well as on questions related to their implementation. As at 1 August, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights had been ratified or acceded to by 87 States, while those adhering to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights numbered 83. In addition, nine States had signed the former, 10 the latter and seven had signed the Optional Protocol to the latter Covenant. Eighteen States had made the declaration provided for in article 41 of that Covenant, recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee established under article 28 to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party claimed that another State party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant. (See also pp. 692 and 715.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/119 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/51 of 14 December 1978, 34/45 of 23 November 1979, 35/132 of 11 December 1980, 36/58 of 25 November 1981, 37/191 of 18 December 1982, 38/116 and 38/117 of 16 December 1983, 39/136 and 39/138 of 14 December 1984 and 40/115 and 40/116 of 13 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting with appreciation that, following its appeal, more Member States have acceded to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Taking note of the approach adopted by the Human Rights Committee at its twenty-eighth session in reviewing its activities, setting priorities and seeking savings that would not affect the Committee's vital work,

Taking into account the useful work of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in relation to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Welcoming the establishment, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to oversee the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to delays in the submission of reports due under the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Noting that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Human Rights Committee on its twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth sessions, and expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which the Committee is continuing to undertake its functions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that have submitted their reports to the Human Rights Committee under article 40 of the Covenant and urges States parties that have not yet done so to submit their reports as speedily as possible;

3. Urges those States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that have been requested by the Human Rights Committee to provide additional information to comply with that request;

4. Commends the States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that have submitted their reports under article 16 of the Covenant and urges States that have not yet done so to submit their reports as soon as possible;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, have been represented by experts for the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the Human Rights Committee and the Economic and Social Council in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in the future;

6. Again urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

7. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

8. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

9. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation;

10. Recommends to States parties that they continually review whether any reservation made in respect of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights should be upheld;

11. Urges States parties to continue to pay active attention to the protection and promotion of civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights;

12. Urges States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the specialized agencies and other relevant United Nations bodies to extend their full support and co-operation to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee informed of the relevant activities of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, and also to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee to those bodies;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

15. Again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give more publicity to the work of the Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Economic and Social Council, to maintain satisfactory programmes of meetings and to improve the administrative and related arrangements to enable them to carry out effectively their respective functions under the International Covenants on Human Rights;

16. Welcomes the progress already made with a view to the publication of the official public records of the Human Rights Committee in bound volumes and looks forward to further progress in this regard;

17. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Economic and Social Council in the implementation of their respective functions under the International Covenants on Human Rights.

Twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants

The focus of United Nations activities in the human rights field had gradually moved from the definition of human rights to the promotion of respect for the rights as defined; it was to be expected that this movement would expand during the remaining years of the century, the Secretary-General stated in his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3). With the coming into effect of the International Covenants, the capacity of the United Nations to pursue that sensitive but important task had increased substantially.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/5 without vote.

Twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as the tenth anniversary of their entry into force,

Aware that the peoples of the United Nations have, in the Charter of the United Nations, declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Conscious that the General Assembly proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations and that the International Covenants on Human Rights develop its provisions, constitute the first all-embracing and legally-binding international treaties in the field of human rights and establish standards to which States should conform,

Recalling that responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the United Nations in promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, is vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the decision of the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/114 of 13 December 1985, to convene during its forty-first session a commemorative plenary meeting devoted to the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/17 of 10 March 1986, in which the Commission reaffirmed the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major elements of international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Noting that only half of the States Members of the United Nations have acceded to the International Covenants on Human Rights and conscious of the desirability of participation of all States in the Covenants,

1. Invites States to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights by continuing and strengthening measures designed to conform with the provisions of the Covenants;

2. Appeals strongly, on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Covenants, to all States that have not yet become parties to these instruments to do so, so that the Covenants acquire genuine universality, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

3. Invites the Secretary-General, on the same occasion, to continue systematically encouraging States to become parties to the Covenants and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to provide technical assistance to the States that are not parties to the Covenants with a view to helping them to ratify those instruments or accede thereto;

4. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

5. Invites all States and international organizations to carry out special activities on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the Covenants.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/5

21 May 1986 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

2-nation draft (E/1986/L.16), amended by 11 nations (E/1986/L.25) and orally revised; agenda item 5.

Sponsors of draft: German Democratic Republic, USSR.

Sponsors of amendment: Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Senegal, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

An oral proposal by the United States to replace, in paragraph 1 and the third preambular paragraph, the references to "States" by "States parties" was rejected by the sponsors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As it had decided in 1985,⁽⁴²⁾ the General Assembly held on 3 November 1986 a commemorative plenary meeting devoted to the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants. Since the entry into force of the Covenants in 1976, the Secretary-General said, the task of their implementation had become an ever-increasing and important responsibility for the United Nations. The Organization's consideration of economic, social and cultural rights had contributed to an improved understanding of those rights and of the manner in which their implementation could best be pursued by States parties as well as by the international community. The adoption of the Covenants lent further substance to the purposes of the United Nations, the Assembly President stated; peace was not possible without due recognition of human rights. Statements were also made by Barbados, Cameroon, Canada, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, on behalf of the five Nordic countries, Japan, Jordan, Morocco, Nicaragua, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Senegal, the USSR, the United Kingdom, on behalf of the 12 EC members, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/32 without vote.

Twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Aware that the peoples of the United Nations have, in the Charter of the United Nations, declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling its resolution 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification or accession the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling its resolution 31/86 of 13 December 1976, by which it welcomed with deep satisfaction the entry into force of those instruments as a major step in the international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling also its decision, contained in resolution 40/114 of 13 December 1985, to convene during its forty-first session a commemorative plenary meeting devoted to the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Convinced that the entry into force of the International Covenants has furthered the ability of the United Nations to promote, encourage and guarantee universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Also convinced that respect for and implementation of the provisions of the International Covenants in the field of human rights contribute to good co-operation between States for the achievement of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting, however, that only half of the States Members of the United Nations have acceded to the International Covenants,

Conscious that it is desirable to broaden accession to the International Covenants so that they acquire a genuinely universal character,

Desiring to observe solemnly the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants,

1. Invites all States to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights by continuing and strengthening measures aimed at the implementation, promotion and protection of the provisions of those instruments;

2. Invites also the appropriate United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take appropriate measures to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants;

3. Reaffirms, on the occasion of this twentieth anniversary, that, in order to contribute to the realization of the purposes and to the implementation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, States should pursue policies directed to the full implementation of the rights referred to in those instruments;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those States that have become party to the International Covenants;

5. Appeals strongly, on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants, to all States that have not yet become parties to those instruments to do so, so that the Covenants acquire genuine universality, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

6. Invites the Secretary-General, on the same occasion, to continue systematically encouraging States to become parties to the International Covenants and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to provide technical assistance to the States that are not parties to the Covenants with a view to helping them to ratify those instruments or accede thereto;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange, within existing resources, the dissemination of appropriate public information on the International Covenants on Human Rights with a view to emphasizing their importance;

8. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenants in as many languages as possible, and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories.

Advisory services

In 1986, under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights, established in 1955,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁴⁾ that experts provided advisory services to Equatorial Guinea (see below). The programme also included training courses and seminars. A Seminar on International Assistance and Support to Peoples and Movements Struggling against Colonialism, Racism, Racial Discrimination and Apartheid was held in Cameroon (see p. 682) and a national training course on human rights was held in Bolivia (see p. 728).

The Secretary-General considered that a trust fund on advisory services could be important to provide additional resources for the programme.

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1986,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Rights requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see p. 711), to inform Governments of the services available to them under the advisory services programme. It appealed to Governments to organize, under that programme, information/training courses for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards, and encouraged those Governments needing human rights technical assistance to avail themselves of the advisory services of experts. Taking note of the Secretary-General's efforts to solicit voluntary contributions for human rights projects within the programme, the Commission called on Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to consider making contributions. It encouraged the Secretary-General's efforts to award human rights fellowships to, and to organize training courses for, persons directly involved in the implementation of international conventions on human rights, and asked him to continue his efforts to co-ordinate and facilitate the flow of bilateral human rights assistance to States which had indicated such a need. It also asked him to organize, whenever the Economic and Social Council or the Commission requested, international human rights seminars within the programme and to report in 1987 on the implementation of the programme. Considering that the establishment of a trust fund on advisory services merited further examination, the Commission requested information in 1987 on the possible role of such a trust fund and the manner in which it would function.

Equatorial Guinea

Pursuant to a 1985 request from Equatorial Guinea⁽⁴⁶⁾ two Costa Rican legal experts—Fernando Cruz and Oscar Fernandez—were sent to Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, to draft legal texts, such as a penal code, a code of criminal procedure, a civil code, a commercial code and a code of civil procedure. In July 1986,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the experts reported to the Secretary-General and made recommendations, expressing at the same time regrets that, although they had received the co-operation of various government officials, they had met with difficulties which adversely affected the mission's outcome. They were unable to carry out any codification work since many of Equatorial Guinea's laws had not been issued because of inadequate printing facilities. In addition, they encountered a lack of qualified personnel. The experts' recommendations for concrete measures to facilitate codification were transmitted to Equatorial Guinea for comments.

In November, the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights met with Equatorial Guinea's Foreign Minister in New York and stressed the importance of obtaining the Government's comments as soon as possible. The Assistant Secretary-General renewed an offer to organize a national training course on human rights in Equatorial Guinea and also mentioned the availability of fellowships. Subsequent to the meeting, a reminder was sent to Equatorial Guinea to submit its comments, but as of the end of 1986 no reply had been received.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/39 without vote.

Situation in Equatorial Guinea

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/36 of 7 May 1982, 1983/35 of 27 May 1983, 1984/36 of 24 May 1984 and 1985/39 of 30 May 1985,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/53 of 13 March 1986,

Considering that the conclusions and recommendations of the expert appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to Council resolution 1984/36 concerning his most recent mission to Equatorial Guinea indicate that more needs to be done by the United Nations and the Government of Equatorial Guinea to implement and make better use of the plan of action proposed by the United Nations and accepted by the Government of Equatorial Guinea,

1. Requests the Government of Equatorial Guinea to consider the possibility of continuing to implement the plan of action, taking particular account of the expert's new proposals, especially those concerning amendments to the Fundamental Law of that country;

2. Further requests the Government of Equatorial Guinea to take steps to facilitate the repatriation of all refugees and exiles, including the adoption of measures enabling all citizens of Equatorial Guinea to participate fully in the country's political, economic, social and cultural affairs, thus helping to relieve the shortage of specialized personnel mentioned in the expert's reports;

3. Appeals to the Government of Equatorial Guinea to accede to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, among other international instruments concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with a view to implementing the plan of action and bearing in mind the discussions held in New York between the Government of Equatorial Guinea and the expert, to seek ways and means of establishing a system for co-ordinating assistance furnished by the Centre for Human Rights under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights with all other forms of assistance to Equatorial Guinea, both multilateral and bilateral;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to appoint an expert to co-operate with the Government of Equatorial Guinea in the full implementation of the plan of action proposed by the United Nations and accepted by that Government;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to keep this matter under consideration at its forty-third session.

Meeting 19

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) without vote, 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Pursuant to a 1985 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁴⁸⁾ an open-ended Working Group, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1984⁽⁴⁹⁾ to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, held eight meetings at Geneva from 27 to 30 January and two further meetings on 7 and 12 March. In January, the Group elected its Chairman/Rapporteur, adopted its agenda and held a general debate.

On 7 March, the Chairman/Rapporteur presented to the Group a schematic outline of a draft declaration.⁽⁵⁰⁾ Its five chapters were to focus on: the affirmation and definition of the right to exercise, assert and promote for oneself and others economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, and to protect those exercising, asserting and promoting human rights; the right to know one's rights and to impart to others knowledge of their rights; the right to associate with others in promoting and disseminating knowledge about human rights; conditions and limitations on the exercise of the right to promote and protect human rights; and the right to be protected in the exercise, assertion and promotion of one's rights and those of others, and to have recourse to effective remedies in the event of violations of those rights. The declaration's preamble was to be determined. In adopting its report on 12 March,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Working Group also approved the draft declaration's outline.

Human Rights Commission action. On 12 March 1986,⁽⁵²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a one-week session of the Working Group prior to the Commission's 1987 session. It decided to continue in 1987 work on the elaboration of the draft declaration, taking into account the views expressed and the proposals made by the Group in 1986.

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/37 without vote.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/44 of 12 March 1986,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group to meet for a period of one week prior to the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights, with a view to continuing the elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting prior to and during the forty-third session of the Commission and, to enable the group to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft declaration, to transmit to all member States in advance of the meeting the report of the Working Group that met prior to and during the forty-second session and all documents submitted to that group.

Respect for the rights of peoples

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly, by decision 41/433, postponed until its 1987 session consideration of a draft resolution⁽⁵³⁾ on the promotion of the universal recognition of, and respect for, the rights of peoples, their equality and dignity

Proposed establishment of a new international humanitarian order

In August 1986,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General presented a survey of specific humanitarian issues, as a follow-up to a 1985 report⁽⁵⁵⁾ based on government comments concerning a proposed new international humanitarian order. The proposal had been advanced by Jordan in 1981.⁽⁵⁶⁾

The Secretary-General's 1986 report contained a survey of the issues of hunger, health and environmental conditions, unemployment, illiteracy, the situation of women and children, genocide, summary executions, torture, disappearances, slavery, armed conflicts, weapons that caused unnecessary suffering, gross human rights violations, refugees, mass exoduses, migrant workers and non-citizens, natural and man-made disasters, population questions, vulnerable groups whose survival was threatened, racial and religious intolerance, and the drug problem. Annexed to the report were the views of three countries submitted pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request.⁽⁵⁷⁾

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly, by decision 41/430, deferred consideration of a new international humanitarian order until its 1987

Human rights violations

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined in 1986 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Kampuchea, South Africa and Namibia, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970⁽¹⁾ to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Commission held closed meetings in 1986 to study confidential documents, observations thereon submitted by Governments and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1985⁽²⁾ to examine the material.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1986/142 of 23 May 1986, adopted on the recommendation of its Second Committee, approved a 13 March decision⁽³⁾ of the Commission to set up a similar five-member working group to meet for one week prior to its 1987 session to examine particular situations that might be referred to it by the Sub-Commission under its procedure for dealing with confidential documents, and those of which the Commission was seized.

On 13 March 1986, the Commission Chairman announced that the Commission had taken action in closed session, under the 1970 Council resolution, with regard to the following countries: Albania, Gabon, Haiti, Paraguay, the Philippines, Turkey and Zaire. He also announced that the Commission had decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situations in Gabon, the Philippines and Turkey.

The Chairman reminded the members of the Commission that, in conformity with that resolution, they should not make any reference in public debate to the confidential decisions taken under the procedure nor to any confidential material relating thereto.

The Council decided that material relating to the Philippines dealt with by the Commission under the same procedure should cease to be confidential (see p. 760).

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

Working Group report. In 1986, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established in 1967(4) by the Commission on Human Rights, was to have undertaken a mission to Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, but due to the United Nations financial crisis only three Group members and the Special Rapporteur on summary and arbitrary executions, S. Amos Wako (Kenya), participated in the mission, which was limited to Lusaka, Zambia, from 8 to 14 August. In a report(5) to be submitted to the Commission in 1987, the Group stated that the two declarations of the state of emergency in July 1985 and on 12 June 1986 contained provisions which gave the South African military and police authorities unprecedented powers, resulting in increasingly severe banning orders; numerous cases of expulsion of apartheid opponents; some 10,000 arrests without charge or trial, including arrests of children under 15; proceedings against hundreds of persons, including children; death sentences; more numerous cases of death under detention; torture and violence by both police and security forces; and loss of thousands of lives following acts of violence by security forces which enjoyed almost total immunity under the emergency regulations.

Despite the abolition of the pass laws, bantustanization and enforced transfers continued, and boycotts and protest demonstrations against inequalities in the education system had resulted in injuries and killings of schoolchildren and students. Publication of articles related to "unrest areas" had been forbidden, particularly in connection with protest demonstrations or activities by police and armed forces.

Black workers continued to perform the lowliest jobs and to live an increasingly precarious existence, and the few trade union organizations were systematically prosecuted and subjected to repression. The 1985 and 1986 states of emergency also had repercussions in Namibia, where any opponent of the illegal occupation of the Territory might be subjected to arbitrary arrest and ill-treatment.

The current situation was described as the most serious ever in the history of South Africa, the Group noted. According to information reaching the Group, arrests between 1 January and 30 September included: 158 teachers, students and intellectuals; 238 community and political leaders; 31 trade unionists; 26 members of the clergy and church workers; three journalists; and 397 other persons. Moreover, according to official statistics published by the South African authorities on 18

August 1986, 8,500 persons were arrested and detained for at least one month under the emergency laws—other sources estimated the number at more than 10,000. The Group particularly noted the wave of arrests of children under 16, who were often in the front line of school boycott demonstrations, and said it had been informed of cases of torture and ill-treatment of child detainees; government statistics indicated that, as at 7 December 1986, 256 children under 16 years old were detainees, but according to a number of other concurring and reliable sources there were many more. On 22 December, measures aimed at complete press censorship were introduced so that the press could not publish without prior authorization any news of riots, actions by security forces, illegal gatherings, speeches, arrests, or conditions of detention and release of persons detained under the state of emergency.

The Group recommended that the Commission reiterate its call for the abolition of apartheid. It called for common citizenship, abolition of the homelands policy and a parliamentary structure which permitted the black population to exercise its right to self-determination. Further recommendations included: abolishment of the state of emergency and repeal of the strict censorship of all political events in South Africa; official investigation of deaths in detention or in police custody and prohibition of the use of torture by police. The Group requested the Commission to stress the study of the serious situation affecting pupils, teachers and the black population in general, with special attention being paid to the purposes, procedures, resources and other means specifically devised to give blacks an inferior education. It also recommended bringing to the attention of UNESCO and other organizations the special situation that had been created in South African educational establishments as a result of protest movements, boycotts and clashes with the police. The Group deemed it essential to improve the mobilization of the United Nations information media to inform the world of the conditions of South African schoolchildren and the danger to their education and their lives. It recommended that the Commission attach greatest importance to the study of trade union rights and the situation of black workers and that it expand information throughout the world on the growing impoverishment of black workers, the violation of their trade union rights and the constant threat to their liberty and their lives.

The proclamation of the state of emergency in South Africa also affected Namibia. During the period under consideration, armed attacks by the South African air force had intensified, violating the territorial integrity of bordering States, particularly Angola; those warlike activities were carried out at the same time as stepped-up measures of intimidation against members and sympathizers of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). Enormous resources were being devoted to defence needs, to the detriment of economic and social development.

According to eyewitness accounts and concurring information from various other sources, the counter-insurgency policy unit, formerly known as Koevoet but renamed COIN, committed atrocities; the Group also had received news of several deaths of detainees and of torture and ill-treatment of captured freedom fighters and civilians. Several cases of arbitrary arrest and of ill-treatment of children were also reported.

The inhabitants of the northern part of the country, which had been proclaimed a "security zone" in which movements were strictly controlled by police, continued to endure sufferings of all kinds. The Special Report of the Director-General on the Application of the Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid in South Africa (International Labour Office), published in 1986, referred to the establishment during the period under consideration of "manpower bureaux" whose real objective was to control the workers, thereby seriously impairing the rights to work and to freedom of association.

The quality of teaching had continued to deteriorate since the application in Namibia of the so-called Bantu system of South African education; moreover, the budget estimate for the education of the black population was far lower than in previous years. In several places, there were conflicts between schoolchildren and school authorities and officials, which sometimes resulted in strikes.

In the light of the situation in Namibia, the Working Group appealed to the Commission to urge the international community to support the United Nations plan for Namibia, adopt global sanctions against South Africa and sever all relations with it. It reaffirmed the need to ensure South Africa's unconditional withdrawal from Namibia and requested that the Commission call on States not to recognize the alleged interim Government which was subservient to South Africa. The Working Group invited moral, military and financial support to SWAPO as the only legitimate representative of the Namibian people as a whole, and requested the Commission to condemn South Africa's attacks against front-line States. It called for generous support of those countries' development efforts and encouraged contributions to the OAU special fund for assistance to them.

In view of the deterioration of the educational system of black children, the Group invited the international community to exert pressure on South Africa to put an immediate end to the so-called Bantu system of education; it requested the Commission to urge South Africa immediately to end its restrictions on trade union freedom and other measures impairing freedom of association. It recommended that the Commission call on South Africa to release all political prisoners and, in the mean time, apply to them the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War.

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 39 to none, with 3 abstentions, taken on 28 February 1986,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights congratulated the Working Group for the commendable and impartial manner in which it prepared its progress report on the 1985 human rights situation in South Africa and Namibia.⁽⁷⁾ It took note of the Group's studies and findings, presented in a 1985 report,⁽⁸⁾ on the relationship between apartheid and genocide and requested the Group to continue investigating the matter. Affirming that apartheid should be abolished in all its forms, the Commission reaffirmed its rejection of the so-called constitutional arrangements in South Africa, as they served to perpetuate apartheid and other forms of racial discrimination and continued to exclude the black majority from participating in the country's political, social, economic and cultural life and to deny the black population their full citizenship rights.

The Commission denounced the policy of "bantustanization", the forced removals of the black population and the policy of denationalization, and expressed deep concern at the escalation of human rights violations since the imposition of the state of emergency in July 1985, particularly the harassment, intimidation and repression of apartheid opponents, as well as their abduction and assassination, the unrestrained use of violence in dealing with legitimate protests, indiscriminate arrests and torture of political activists, the killing and ill-treatment of detainees, including physical and psychological abuse, the discriminatory system and inferior quality of black education and the continued adverse effects of apartheid, especially on women and children. The Commission also expressed concern at the banning and harassment of popular organizations opposed to apartheid, the persistent persecution of the trade union movement, the widespread detention and incarceration of minors and the unilateral restrictions imposed on the mass media in reporting apartheid atrocities. It expressed profound indignation at the fact that apartheid remained institutionalized and totally rejected any manoeuvres by South Africa to avoid the abolition of apartheid through its so-called reform measures. It condemned South Africa for its military pressures on front-line States and its support to bandits who sought to destabilize those and other neighbouring States, and for its indiscriminate use of force against unarmed demonstrators, widespread use of torture against political opponents and inhumane detention and incarceration of minors.

The Commission demanded that South Africa abolish apartheid, end its brutal repression, torture and harassment of organizations and individuals opposed to apartheid, repeal its ban on popular organizations and release unconditionally all political prisoners. It also demanded that South Africa ensure that all South Africans were afforded a unified, free educational system consistent with the development of a profound appreciation of the brotherhood of mankind, liberty and peace, and called on South Africa to respect international standards on trade union rights. It urged States which had not done so to stop collaborating with or assisting South Africa and recalled the General Assembly's 1985 decision⁽⁹⁾ to organize in 1986 a World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa (see p. 123), as well as the Assembly's adoption in 1985⁽¹⁰⁾ of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports.

The Commission renewed the Working Group's mandate to study human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, and requested it to continue to bring to the Commission Chairman's attention particularly serious violations. It requested the Group, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue to investigate ill-treatment and deaths of detainees and authorized the Group Chairman to participate in events connected with action against apartheid organized under the Committee's auspices. It renewed its request to South Africa to allow the Group to make on-the-spot investigations of treatment and living conditions in prisons of South Africa and Namibia. It requested the Group to submit its final report in 1987 and asked the Secretary-General to assist it. It also requested the Secretary-General to report in 1987 on an international penal tribunal to be established under the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.⁽¹¹⁾

Also on 28 February,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 36 to none, with 6 abstentions, reaffirmed the Namibian people's right to self-determination and independence under conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978.⁽¹³⁾ The Commission condemned South Africa for the militarization in Namibia, the use of mercenaries, the recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, the proclamation of a security zone in Namibia, the forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes, torture and brutality against the population and captured freedom fighters, the military conscription of Namibians and the exploitation and depletion of natural resources. Strongly condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and institutions with

South Africa, the Commission expressed its conviction that such collaboration helped prolong South Africa's domination and control over Namibia. It demanded that South Africa co-operate to bring about Namibia's independence and unconditionally terminate all acts of aggression against neighbouring countries, particularly Angola, and withdraw all its armed forces from Angola. The Commission demanded that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release those who were still alive, and declared South Africa to be liable to compensate the victims and their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for the losses sustained. It again requested South Africa to allow the Working Group to make an on-the-spot investigation of living conditions in Namibian prisons and the treatment of prisoners. It requested the Group to report in 1987 on policies and practices which violated human rights in Namibia and to submit recommendations.

On 14 March 1986,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission authorized its Chairman to send a telegram to the President of South Africa appealing on humanitarian grounds for the release of political prisoners Nelson Mandela and Zephania Mothopeng.

Communication. By a letter of 20 February⁽¹⁵⁾ Angola transmitted to the Commission Chairman photographic material depicting the aftermath of an 8 February surprise attack on the population of Camabatela in northern Angola by the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola, during which 107 persons, including many children, died immediately, while dozens of others were seriously wounded.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1986, there were 85 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973⁽¹¹⁾ and entered into force in 1976.⁽¹⁶⁾ In 1986, Costa Rica and Pakistan acceded to and Uganda ratified the Convention.⁽¹⁷⁾

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General annexed a list of the 35 States that had signed, 31 that had ratified and 53 that had acceded to it as of 1 August.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the 1986 Commission session a reply⁽¹⁹⁾ received from one Government in response to his invitation to States parties to express their views on the extent and nature of the responsibility of transnational corporations (TNCs) for the continued existence of apartheid, and to provide information concerning the types of the crime of apartheid as described in the Convention. The Commission had requested him in 1985 to renew that invitation.⁽²⁰⁾

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention and in 1986 composed of the German Democratic Republic, Nicaragua, and Senegal—held its ninth session at Geneva from 27 to 31 January⁽²¹⁾

The Group examined initial reports from Gabon and Suriname, second periodic reports from Ecuador and Peru, a third periodic report of Czechoslovakia, and fourth periodic reports of the German Democratic Republic, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Group also continued to examine the question of whether actions of TNCs operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken under the Convention. The Group noted that several United Nations organs and States parties had repeatedly drawn the attention of the international community to the close interconnection between TNC activities and South Africa's persistence in pursuing its policy of apartheid. The Group was of the view that effective international action to eradicate apartheid had been hampered by TNCs and reiterated that article III of the Convention, concerning international criminal responsibility, could apply. While noting that some Western countries had undertaken measures towards disinvestment, the Group said that those measures, in order to be effective, should be accompanied by sanctions to be decided by the Security Council.

The Group noted with concern that less than half of the States parties had submitted a report—as at 1 February, 136 reports were overdue—and urged in particular those which had not submitted their initial report to do so as soon as possible. When preparing their reports, States parties should take into account the general guidelines for form and content of reports and provide more information on legislative, judicial and administrative measures against apartheid, or measures taken against persons responsible for crimes of apartheid, on implementation of article XI on the extradition of such persons as well as on teaching and education measures for fuller implementation of the Convention. Individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II should be identified, as well as those against whom legal proceedings were undertaken.

The Group again drew attention to the need to enhance public awareness of the situation in South Africa and to disseminate information on the Convention. It reiterated its appeal to States parties to strengthen their co-operation to implement fully United Nations decisions on apartheid, and urged them to ratify or accede to the Convention. Noting that apartheid was a form of genocide and as such fell under the 1968 Convention on the Non-

Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity,⁽²²⁾ the Group recommended to the Commission that such interdependence be reflected in its resolutions as well as the fact that adherence to the Convention against apartheid was an indication of the implementation of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (see p. 774).

The Group once again drew attention to the importance of assistance to the national liberation movements in southern Africa. It recommended that States parties be invited to express their views on the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid, and that those States, specialized agencies and NGOs be invited to provide information on the types of the crime of apartheid committed by TNCs in South Africa.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 28 February 1986 resolution,⁽²³⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights took note with appreciation of the Group of Three's conclusions and recommendations. It urged States to adhere to the Convention against apartheid without delay, especially those which had jurisdiction over TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia, and also to ratify the genocide Convention.

The Commission urged States parties to take full account of the guidelines laid down by the Group of Three in 1978 for submission of reports,⁽²⁴⁾ and reiterated its recommendation that parties be represented during consideration of their reports by the Group. It requested the Secretary-General once more to invite States parties to express their views on the extent and responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid. The Group was requested to continue examining the extent and nature of TNCs' responsibility for the apartheid system and legal actions that could be taken against TNCs whose operations came under the crime of apartheid, and to report to the Commission in 1987.

The Commission called on States parties to strengthen national and international co-operation in order to implement fully United Nations decisions concerning the prevention, suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid, drew their attention to the desirability of disseminating further information on the Convention, its implementation and the work of the Group, and noted the importance of teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention. The Group was to meet for up to five days before the Commission's 1987 session and the Secretary-General was asked to give it the necessary assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/103 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa, in particular the further escalation of ruthless repression by the Fascist-like apartheid régime, including the use of the armed forces against the opposing people and the imposition of virtual martial-law conditions intended to facilitate the brutal oppression of the black population,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued policy of apartheid and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its policy of destabilization, including numerous acts of aggression against Angola and other African States,

Mindful of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/7 of 28 February 1986, in which the Commission expressed its conviction that the crime of apartheid is a form of the crime of genocide,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without delay are necessary for its effectiveness, and therefore will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States that have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia and without whose co-operation such operations cannot be halted;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established in accordance with article IX of the Convention, and, in particular, of the conclusions and recommendations contained in that report;

5. Draws the attention of all States to the opinion expressed by the Group of Three in its report that transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia must be considered accomplices in the crime of apartheid, in accordance with article III (b) of the Convention;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom legal proceedings have been undertaken;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the above-mentioned list to all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

9. Notes the importance of measures to be taken by States parties in the field of teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention;

10. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 128-1-27 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/793) by recorded vote (116-1-23), 27 October (meeting 25); 20-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.8); agenda item 89 Id.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Rwanda, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Zambia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mauritius, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraphs 5 and 8 by recorded votes of 120 to 17, with 15 abstentions, and 121 to 15, with 16 abstentions, respectively; the Committee had approved the same paragraphs by recorded votes of 105 to 18, with 13 abstentions, and 106 to 16, with 14 abstentions. The fifth preambular paragraph was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 117 to 16, with 17 abstentions, having been approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 105 to 16, with 15 abstentions.

The United States held the position that the Convention purported to extend international criminal jurisdiction in a broad and ill-defined manner and sought to rely on powers of domestic jurisdiction for its enforcement; article III of the Convention appeared to extend international criminal responsibility to private acts of individuals, wherever committed. That broad extension of international jurisdiction under the Convention was impossible for the United States to accept as consistent with basic norms of fairness and due process essential in criminal law. From a legal point of view, it also could not accept the presumption that apartheid was regarded as a crime against humanity; it rejected the formulation equating apartheid with genocide and a crime against humanity as it rejected the condemnation of TNCs engaged in legal activities.

The United Kingdom, speaking on behalf of the 12 EC members, said they believed that the Convention made no real contribution to eliminating apartheid and, although they supported its ultimate objective, had grave reservations on the envisaged methods which in their view raised serious legal problems. They objected to the fifth preambular paragraph and did not accept that an Assembly resolution could purport to extend the definition of genocide or the area of application of the genocide Convention, as only the parties to that Convention or the appropriate organs were competent to pronounce on its interpretation. With regard to paragraphs 5 and 8, the Convention was applicable only to States that had ratified it and to their citizens.

Israel felt many legal aspects, particularly with regard to the definition of genocide, were neglected; the concept of genocide should not be belittled by trivial and repeated use out of context.

Also on behalf of Finland, Sweden said their abstentions were not based on the substance of the resolution, but rather on its potentially far-reaching legal implications. The Convention and the adopted resolution also raised legal and constitutional problems for Australia and Austria.

Costa Rica disagreed with the wording of paragraph 5; it supported the fifth preambular paragraph although it did not believe that the crime of apartheid warranted comparison with any other type of crime. Uruguay said it was studying the legal and formal methods of making the Convention compatible with its national legislation.

Foreign support of South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 28 February,⁽²⁵⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 5, with 8 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed the rights of the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination, independence and enjoyment of their natural resources, to dispose of those resources for their greater well-being and to obtain just reparation for the exploitation, depletion, loss or depreciation of those resources, including reparation for the exploitation and abuse of their human resources.

The Commission vigorously condemned the increased assistance to South Africa by major Western countries and Israel, particularly in the military field, and demanded that that assistance, which it was convinced was a hostile action against the people of South Africa, Namibia and the neighbouring States, be immediately terminated. Condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and others with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. It strongly condemned the activities of all foreign economic interests exploiting Namibia's resources and demanded that TNCs refrain from new investment or activities in Namibia, withdraw from it and end their co-operation with the South African administration. Noting with appreciation recent measures taken by some States, parliamentarians, institutions and NGOs to exert pressure on South Africa, the Commission called on them to intensify their efforts to force South Africa to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions. It called on all Governments to take legislative, administrative or other measures to prevent their nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investing activities in South Africa and Namibia, to end technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there, and to cease nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

The Commission rejected all policies that encouraged South Africa to intensify its repression of South Africans and Namibians and to escalate its aggression against neighbouring States. It welcomed the General Assembly's request that the Security Council consider mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular regarding collaboration in arms manufacture, military supplies and in the nuclear field, loans (including International Monetary Fund loans), investments, trade, petroleum and petroleum products and other strategic goods, and called for the mobilizing of international public opinion in favour of sanctions.

The Commission appealed to States, specialized agencies and NGOs to co-operate with the liberation movements of southern Africa. Strongly condemning South Africa for its persistent aggression against Angola, the Commission called on it to withdraw its troops from there and demanded that it cease destabilizing the political institutions of neighbouring States.

The Commission, reaffirming that the updating of the report containing the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting the régime was of the greatest importance for the fight against apartheid, welcomed the Assembly's 1984 invitation⁽²⁶⁾ to the Special Rapporteur to continue to update the list. It attached special importance to the widest dissemination of the updated report as a United Nations publication, called on Governments to give it wide publicity, and requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, in particular in establishing direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid, in expanding the annotation of selected cases and in computerizing future lists.

Also on 28 February,⁽²⁷⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 4, with 6 abstentions, expressed its satisfaction to Special Rapporteur Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt) for his 1985 report on adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to South Africa⁽²⁸⁾ and appreciation for his attention to comments expressed during the debates on the subject. It invited him to continue to update the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting South Africa; to use all available material to indicate the volume, nature and adverse consequences resulting from assistance to South Africa; and to intensify contacts with the Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid. The Commission called on Governments to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur to make the report even more accurate and informative and to give the updated report widest publicity. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and make available to him two economists to help him expand his work on the analyses and annotations of certain selected cases as reflected in his report. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue to give the updated report the widest distribution and publicity as a United Nations publication.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1986/145 by recorded vote.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/6 of 28 February 1986, approved the request addressed by the Commission to the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa all the assistance that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view to intensifying direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid, and to make available to him two economists to assist him to expand his work on the analyses and annotations of certain selected cases as reflected in his report.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/145

41-7-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) by recorded vote (32-7-6), 21 May (meeting 20); 10-nation oral proposal; agenda item 9.

Sponsors: Algeria, Djibouti, Gabon, Guinea, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Senegal, Uganda, Zaire.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

Abstaining: Australia, Canada, Finland, Iceland, Spain, Sweden.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur, Mr. Khalifa, presented in August 1986 an updated report,⁽²⁹⁾ to be considered at the 1987 Sub-Commission session, on adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other assistance to South Africa, with an addendum containing an updated list of banks, insurance companies, firms and other organizations assisting South Africa, directly, indirectly or through Namibia, including those deleted from that list.

In September 1986,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General brought the report to the General Assembly's attention, stating that it had not been considered by the Sub-Commission as a result of the deferral of its 1986 session.

Trade union rights

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa continued in 1986 to study the situation relating to the right to work, conditions of workers, workers on trial, trade unions rights and consumer boycotts. Its interim findings regarding that situation, included in its report to the Commission (see p. 745), were submitted to the Economic and Social Council separately in March,⁽³¹⁾ in accordance with a 1985 Council request.⁽³²⁾

The Group reported that dehumanizing conditions continued to be imposed on South Africa's black workers, especially in rural areas where they were treated in a manner equivalent to slavery. Black workers who participated in strikes and picketings were, on many occasions, charged with intimidation, illegal striking and attending illegal gatherings. Although the number of strikes had declined, a greater number of working days were lost and, on average, each strike involved a far greater number of workers—attributable to the increased activity in mines. The mining industry was the most strike-prone, followed by the motor assembly sector, chemical, food and metal industries. The industrial courts heard many cases involving black workers, who had asked to be reinstated in their jobs, alleging that they were dismissed without a fair hearing; where it had been established that this was true, a court did not hesitate to order reinstatement.

Black workers' unions were participating in the courts and in conciliation boards. According to a survey of 23 emerging unions representing 363,000 workers, half of them expressed dissatisfaction with their dealings with industrial courts and only three were happy with their participation on industrial councils; three expressed satisfaction with the operations of conciliation boards, another three were ambivalent, while the rest were dissatisfied. Three quarters expressed satisfaction with mediation—the only conciliation method mentioned which usually operated outside official channels.

Black unions were increasingly moving to the forefront of political activity against apartheid (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

Ethiopia

On 12 March 1986,⁽³³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights decided by a roll-call vote of 29 to 12, with 2 abstentions, to take no decision on a draft resolution⁽³⁴⁾ on the situation of human rights in Ethiopia.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Communications. In a 19 January 1986 message, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 11 April,⁽³⁵⁾ the Association of Lawyers of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan requested the Commission on Human Rights to condemn the subversive and terrorist acts allegedly carried out on Afghanistan's territory by armed counter-revolutionary bands trained in Pakistan and other neighbouring countries.

In a 6 December statement transmitted by the United Kingdom⁽³⁶⁾ the European Council drew attention to the situation in Afghanistan where, the Council charged, large scale human rights violations continued to engender massive suffering.

The situation in Afghanistan was also the subject of a number of other communications submitted throughout the year (see p. 212).

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 1985 Commission request⁽³⁷⁾ as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council⁽³⁸⁾ Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) presented to the Commission in February 1986 a report on the situation in Afghanistan⁽³⁹⁾ including the human and material losses resulting from bombardments of the civilian population.

Unable to obtain the Government's permission to visit the country, the Special Rapporteur visited Pakistan from 25 July to 10 August 1985, interviewing persons from 16 Afghan provinces and visiting seven refugee camps and five hospitals. He made a similar visit to Pakistan from 31 December 1985 to 6 January 1986. With a view to obtaining clarification of information concerning allegations of serious human rights violations, the Special Rapporteur, by letters of 2 September 1985 and 13 January 1986, drew the Afghan Government's attention to his need for co-operation.

The Special Rapporteur based his report on a cross-section of personal-experience cases illustrating the situation, in addition to documentation by NGOs and organizations directly concerned with the situation in Afghanistan. With regard to human and material losses resulting from bombardments, the Special Rapporteur stated that no official figures were available to him but that he was able to achieve reliable results after having studied more than 80 newspapers, journals, reports and statements, including governmental sources.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the human rights situation in Afghanistan had not changed for the better and the Government was attempting to legitimize itself by trying to build up a democratic power base. However, he believed that no political or humanitarian solution could be found without the representation and respect for the wishes of the nearly 5 million refugees. He noted that the kind of warfare had changed—guerrilla warfare had reached the cities, whereas in outlying areas there was direct confrontation. Large parts of the country were out of the Government's control, and where the Government had control it used all forms of anti-guerrilla activities, including torture and death sentences, against its opponents. The methods of warfare—massacres of civilians, anti-personnel mines, looting, methods of retaliation and disproportionately heavy bombardment of villages—were contrary to humanitarian law and the resulting civilian casualties in 1985 were estimated at some 35,000. In government-controlled areas, the educational system allegedly failed to give due regard to the rights enshrined in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and as a result of the conflict the regime could not guarantee economic and social rights.

The Special Rapporteur was of the view that the only solution to the human rights situation was the withdrawal of foreign troops, as more than one third of the population was outside the country and was unwilling to return while foreign troops controlled it. He recommended that the international community, through the United Nations system, be permitted to contribute to the restoration of economic, social and cultural rights and that the specialized agencies be permitted to provide humanitarian assistance throughout the country. The Government should be urged to comply strictly with the obligations imposed on it by international human rights instruments, especially the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted in 1984⁽⁴⁰⁾ and the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. Regarding death sentences and political imprisonment, amnesty, clemency and pardon should be taken into account.

Concerning the situation before the withdrawal of foreign troops, the Special Rapporteur suggested that those areas which were not government controlled be declared neutral zones where United Nations agencies and NGOs could offer humanitarian services. During the withdrawal of troops, precautions should be taken to ensure the protection of all civilians, in particular women, children and elderly persons. After the troop withdrawal, conditions should be created to enable refugees to return home without fear and the regions affected by warfare should be cleared of explosives. He also recommended that a genuinely representative LoyaJirgah (Grand Assembly) which included refugees be set up and that the United Nations encourage the adoption of a status of permanent neutrality.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 12 March 1986 resolution⁽⁴¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 28 to 9, with 5 abstentions, the Commission expressed concern that the Afghan authorities, with heavy support from foreign troops, were acting against their opponents without any respect for the international human rights obligations they had assumed and that the methods of warfare used were contrary to humanitarian standards and to the relevant instruments to which the States concerned were parties. It expressed concern about the consequences that the indiscriminate bombardments and military operations had on civilians, and about the number of persons detained for seeking to exercise their fundamental human rights and freedoms and their detention under conditions contrary to internationally recognized standards. It noted with concern that the widespread human rights violations had caused millions of people to leave their homes and were still giving rise to large flows of refugees and displaced persons and that the educational system did not respect the liberty of parents to ensure the religious and moral education of their children. The Commission shared the conviction of the Special Rapporteur that the duration of the conflict increased the seriousness of the gross and systematic violations and expressed profound distress and alarm at the widespread violations of the right to life, liberty and security of person, including torture and summary executions of the regime's opponents, as well as increasing evidence of a policy of religious intolerance.

It called on the parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to facilitate operations of international humanitarian organizations to alleviate the suffering of the Afghan people. Deciding to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to have him report to the Assembly in 1986 and the Commission in 1987, the Commission urged the Afghan authorities to co-operate with him and requested the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1986/136 by recorded vote.

Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/40 of 12 March 1986, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan and to request him to report on the question to the General Assembly at its forty-first session and to the Commission at its forty-third session. The Council further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/136

37-7-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) by recorded vote (36-7-5), 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Iceland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Morocco, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, India, Poland, Romania, Syrian Arab Republic, USSR.

Abstaining: Finland, Iraq, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Uganda said it voted for the decision on purely procedural grounds; it would not have supported it had it been identical to the Commission's resolution.

Speaking before the vote, Afghanistan said that no valid reason existed to justify an investigation of the human rights situation in Afghanistan; the Special Rapporteur's report was part of a campaign of lies and an echo of imperialism's psychological war against Afghanistan. It attempted to down-play the importance of the Loyajirgah and the local jirgahs, and remained silent on the free and democratic local elections which had been held and which constituted the basis for the direct participation of the entire Afghan people in the conduct of public affairs. The report also called into question Afghanistan's sincerity towards international human rights and instruments, which Afghanistan had implemented by incorporating them into national legislation and respecting them in its actions. It also ignored achievements in various social and economic fields and included lies and fabrications in order to satisfy imperialist circles and their local allies.

Afghanistan also expressed indignation at the manner in which the report discussed medical services and the right to health in the country, down-playing the importance of the Red Crescent and accusing the Government of using Red Crescent supplies for its own purpose. With regard to Afghans living abroad, Afghanistan stated that its doors were open to them and they would be given every opportunity, with full guarantee of security, due respect for human dignity and without discrimination, to join the efforts to build a prosperous and independent Afghanistan. The Council must consider the real human rights violations: the barbarous acts of gangs of mercenaries trained, financed and armed chiefly by the United States.

Interim Report of the Special Rapporteur.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan⁽⁴²⁾ prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's request.

The Special Rapporteur reported that once again he had been unable to obtain Afghanistan's permission to visit and that he had gone to Pakistan in September where he interviewed 108 persons from 20 provinces, visited refugee camps and hospitals set aside for Afghan wounded, and made two helicopter overflights along the Pakistan-Afghan border to ascertain the position and distribution of the camps in which hundreds of thousands Afghan refugees in Pakistan were concentrated. He also learned about the situation by gathering information from individuals and organizations in Europe and by consulting documents of the United Nations, publications, newspapers and periodicals.

The human rights situation continued to be a source of deepest concern, with the population, especially women and children, being subjected to serious suffering, and because of the magnitude of the economic, social and cultural problems confronting the growing numbers of refugees, the Special Rapporteur concluded. Action against the opposition movements and civilians had intensified and there had been an increase in the number of military operations focusing on the roads leading to Pakistan, causing heavy loss of life. Although fewer civilians were killed in 1986—10,000 to 12,000 compared with 37,000 in 1985—bombardments in certain areas had intensified and the brutality of the conflict had not diminished.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the new Government, established in May 1986, sought broader recognition by attempting to build up a democratic power base, in particular through local jirgahs, which the refugees, however, did not acknowledge. On the international level, intergovernmental talks under United Nations auspices continued and the withdrawal of some 8,000 foreign troops could be considered a positive step if it signalled the beginning of a complete troop withdrawal.

The conflict continued to produce waves of refugees in spite of the increased hazards involved, ranging from outright bombing to brutal reprisals against villagers who assisted them on their way and despite amnesty decrees and government appeals. The estimated number of over 5 million refugees was out of all proportion to the assistance available and the situation could not be improved without additional international assistance. Having no representation either inside or outside their own country, the refugees were also denied their right to self-determination; the Special Rapporteur recommended electing representatives in the areas not under government control, so as to form a council that would represent the 5 million refugees.

Torture continued and prison conditions for political detainees had not improved, while alarming reports had been received of severe disciplinary punishment within the prisons; it would be a positive step, the Special Rapporteur said, if the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) were permitted to carry out its humanitarian duties with regard to political detainees. In the large areas outside direct government control, the situation of the population, whose basic economic, social and cultural rights could not be guaranteed without outside assistance, gave cause for alarm.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Assembly urgently appeal to States to strengthen humanitarian support by increasing their contribution to relief efforts and, in particular, to UNHCR. He also suggested that the Assembly invite all groups concerned with child welfare to assist UNICEF in implementing its immunization programme for all Afghan children. Because of the deterioration of the situation, UNESCO should be encouraged to carry out its special responsibility for protecting Afghanistan's cultural heritage, including the observance of the 1954 Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/158 by recorded vote.

Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Emphasizing the obligation of all Governments to respect and protect human rights and to fulfil the responsibilities they have assumed under various international instruments,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/55 of 15 March 1984, in which the Commission expressed its concern and anxiety at the continuing presence of foreign forces in Afghanistan, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/38 of 13 March 1985, in which the Commission expressed its profound concern at the grave and massive human rights violations in Afghanistan and urged the authorities in that country to put a stop to those violations, in particular the military repression being conducted against the civilian population of Afghanistan,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council decision 1985/147 of 30 May 1985, by which the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to request him to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session and to the Commission at its forty-second session on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, including the human and material losses resulting from the bombardments of the civilian population,

Recalling resolution 1985/35 of 30 August 1985 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission requested the Commission on Human Rights to ask the Special Rapporteur to look into, in particular, the fate of women and children as a consequence of the conflict in Afghanistan,

Recalling also its resolution 40/137 of 13 December 1985, in which it expressed its profound concern that disregard for human rights in Afghanistan was more widespread and that the conflict continued to engender human rights violations on a large scale, endangering, as a result, not only the lives of individuals but also the existence of whole groups of persons and tribes,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/40 of 12 March 1986 and Economic and Social Council decision 1986/136 of 23 May 1986, by which the Council approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur,

Having carefully examined the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, which reveals continuing grave and massive violations of fundamental human rights in that country,

Recognizing that a situation of armed conflict continues to exist in Afghanistan, leaving large numbers of victims without protection or assistance,

Deploping the continuing refusal of the Afghan authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur for his report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan;

2. Expresses once again its deep concern that the Afghan authorities, with heavy support from foreign troops, are acting with great severity against their opponents and suspected opponents without any respect for the international human rights obligations which they have assumed;

3. Expresses its grave concern at the methods of warfare used, which are contrary to international humanitarian standards and the relevant instruments to which the States concerned are parties;

4. Also expresses its grave concern, in particular, at the severe consequences for the civilian population of indiscriminate bombardments and military operations primarily targeted on villages and the agricultural structure;

5. Shares the conviction of the Special Rapporteur that the prolongation of the conflict increases the seriousness of the gross and systematic violations of human rights already existing in the country;

6. Expresses once again its profound distress and alarm, in particular, at the widespread violations of the right to life, liberty and security of person, including the commonplace practice of torture and summary executions of the opponents of the regime, as well as at continuing evidence of a policy of religious intolerance;

7. Expresses its deep concern about the number of persons detained for seeking to exercise their human rights and fundamental freedoms, and their detention under conditions contrary to internationally recognized standards;

8. Notes with great concern that the educational system does not appear to respect the liberty of parents to ensure the religious and moral education of their children in conformity with their own convictions;

9. Notes also with great concern that such widespread violations of human rights, that have already caused millions of people to flee their homes and country, are still giving rise to large flows of refugees and displaced persons;

10. Calls once again upon the parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to admit international humanitarian organizations, in particular the International Committee of the Red Cross, and to facilitate their operations for the alleviation of the suffering of the people in Afghanistan;

11. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur, in particular by allowing him to visit Afghanistan;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

13. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-second session, the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan in order to examine this question anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 89-24-36 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) by recorded vote (79-23-36), 28 November (meeting 61); 20-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.76); agenda item 12.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Afghanistan said the text and the Special Rapporteur's report were composed of cheap lies and unfounded allegations. Afghanistan had been unfairly singled out and the Third Committee's consideration of its human rights situation was in violation of the Economic and Social Council's rules of procedure; the arbitrary selection of the Special Rapporteur was in breach of the Committee's practice of ensuring prior consultations and his anti-socialist and anti-progressive views left grave doubts as to his moral authority to draw up an unbiased report, which was based on allegations of mercenary ringleaders and their followers and was full of categorical statements, leaving no room for rectifications. Afghanistan expressed concern that the text would lead to a proliferation of similar actions against other small, independent and non-aligned countries, would lend legitimacy to a misuse of the United Nations for political ends and would undermine the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of Member States.

The USSR felt that the text was unbalanced and would impede a political settlement. Referring to a 20 November statement made by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the USSR said it had no intention to establish bases or search for raw materials in Afghanistan; its troops were sent there on a temporary basis at Afghanistan's request. The USSR considered that the action being taken under United Nations auspices constituted genuine progress and could lead to a political settlement if Pakistan and the United States followed such a solution. The USSR thought that the day was not far off when a political settlement would be reached, which would mean the simultaneous withdrawal of Soviet troops.

In Pakistan's view, the intensified military campaign of repression by foreign troops, the escalating bombing of villages and the increased violations of Pakistan's borders, as revealed in the Special Rapporteur's report, did not add up to a desire for a political settlement but appeared to indicate a desire for a military solution.

Speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, Czechoslovakia said the text was based on a politically motivated assessment of developments in Afghanistan and reflected the arguments in the Special Rapporteur's report, which was based on information obtained through counter-revolutionary sources; neither the report nor the resolution referred to the extensive democratic changes made to ensure the social, economic, political and civil rights of the Afghans. The text's purpose was not to express concern about respect for human rights but to reverse the developments in Afghanistan; it thus ran counter to the basic principles of international co-operation in human rights.

In Mongolia's opinion, the text and the report failed to analyse the real situation and contained a wide range of totally false and slanderous allegations; they contained no reference to the democratic and progressive changes that were under way in Afghanistan and ran counter to the basic principles of international co-operation in human rights. The text was designed to justify the undeclared war launched by imperialists and reactionary forces against a United Nations Member; outside interference in Afghanistan's affairs should be immediately phased out.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya voted against the text because it believed that its sponsors were responsible for the massacre of the Palestinian people, the decimation of the Namibian people, the bombing of residential areas of Tripoli and Benghazi, and the oppression of blacks and American Indians.

Trinidad and Tobago felt that the United Nations had a responsibility to address human rights violations impartially and refrain from politicizing the issue.

Ecuador reaffirmed its conviction that human rights matters should be discussed on a universal basis and with a view to their full observance in all States. Bolivia abstained because of elements in the text which it considered to be unconnected with human rights.

Iran

Communications. On 8 January 1986,⁽⁴⁶⁾ Iran submitted to the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights a statement alleging human rights violations by Iraq, which included demolition of cities and population centres, raids on residential areas, ill-treatment of prisoners, use of chemical weapons and attacks on civil aircraft.

On 13 February,⁽⁴⁴⁾ Iraq transmitted to the Centre for Human Rights a copy of a 10 February letter to the Security Council President⁽⁴⁵⁾ concerning an alleged large-scale armed attack by Iran against Iraq (see p. 218). On 18 February,⁽⁴⁶⁾ Iraq transmitted to the Assistant Secretary-General a document charging Iran with human rights violations, including the use of chemical weapons and the use of children as minesweepers.

Iran, by a 7 March letter to the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights,⁽⁴⁷⁾ stated that any decision of an international organization, especially the Commission, intended to put pressure on Iran had no credibility; such politicization of humanitarian matters was totally unacceptable.

Note by the Chairman. In January 1986,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Chairman informed the Commission that the Special Representative on Iran, Andrés Aguilar (Venezuela), had resigned as of 1 January. Annexed to the Chairman's note were a letter of 3 January by the Special Representative submitting his resignation and his statement before the General Assembly introducing a 1985 interim report.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Human Rights Commission action. By a 12 March 1986 resolution,⁽⁵⁰⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 19 to 4, with 16 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, noting the Special Representative's 1985 interim report, endorsed his conclusion that allegations of grave human rights violations could not be dismissed and urged Iran to respond to those allegations. Expressing deep concern about the alleged violations, in particular those related to the rights to life, freedom from torture or inhuman treatment, to liberty and security of person and freedom from arbitrary detention, as well as the rights to a fair trial, to freedom of thought and expression and to practise one's own religion, the Commission urged Iran to ensure all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The Commission extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year, asking the Chairman to appoint someone of recognized international standing to replace Mr. Aguilar, and requested the newly appointed Special Representative to present to the Assembly in 1986 an interim report on the human rights situation in Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and to submit a final report to the Commission in 1987. It urged Iran to co-operate with the Special Representative and requested the Secretary-General to give him all the necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1986/137 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/41 of 12 March 1986, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as set out in Commission resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, and to request its Chairman to appoint an individual of recognized international standing to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Andres Aguilar. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the newly appointed Special Representative to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and a final report to the Commission at its forty-third session. The Council further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/137

21-7-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) by recorded vote (24-7-13), 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Spain, Sweden, Uganda, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Bangladesh, Indonesia, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey.

Abstaining: Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, Gabon, Guyana, Haiti, India, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Uganda stated that it voted for the text on purely procedural grounds; it would not have supported it had it been identical to the Commission's resolution.

Report of the Special Representative. On 9 July 1986, the Commission Chairman designated Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) as Special Representative. In an interim report of November 1986,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Special Representative informed the General Assembly of action taken in accordance with his mandate and of his communications sent to Iran. A July letter requesting Iran's co-operation in establishing direct contacts and another sent in August proposing that he visit Iran had, however, remained unanswered, as had an October letter seeking replies to his predecessor's request for information and communicating additional allegations. The documents accompanying the October letter included: two previous lists containing cases of persons who allegedly had been summarily or arbitrarily executed or allegedly had died as a result of ill-treatment during detention, as well as information containing allegations of human rights violations; a list containing alleged violations of the right to life and certain other rights, such as those affecting the medical profession; and a summary of information collected, in the course of informal hearings conducted by the Special Representative from 23 to 25 September, from a number of persons who were said to have had first-hand experience and knowledge of certain aspects of the human rights situation in Iran.

The Special Representative stated that an examination of the information gathered required more than the four months that had been available to him and that the interim report was, therefore, a progress report confined to certain parts of his mandate. Stressing the importance of establishing direct contacts with Iran in order to examine accurately the human rights situation there, he considered it pertinent to reiterate the appeal to Iran to extend full co-operation to him, including the acceptance of a visit. Iran should also be urged to reply to the requests for specific information regarding the lists submitted to it. The Special Representative hoped that by the time he presented his final report to the Commission, Iran would have communicated to him its view on the issue of co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/159 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/27 of 11 March 1982 and 1983/34 of 8 March 1983,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, in which the Commission expressed deep concern at the continuing serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Islamic Republic of Iran and requested its Chairman to appoint a special representative to make a thorough study of the situation of human rights in that country,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/39 of 13 March 1985,

Taking note, in particular, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/41 of 12 March 1986, by which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Representative for one year and requested him to present an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and a final report to the Commission at its forty-third session,

Mindful of resolution 1985/17 of 29 August 1985 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission expressed its alarm at the continuing reports of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Regretting that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran has still not extended its full co-operation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Representative, in particular by not allowing the Special Representative to visit the country,

Taking into account the transmission by the Special Representative to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran of a list of alleged violations of the right to life and certain other rights, such as those affecting the medical profession, which allegedly occurred during the period October 1985 to September 1986,

1. Takes note of the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran and of the general observations contained therein;

2. Expresses its deep concern about the specific and detailed allegations of violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran and, in particular, those related to the right to life, such as summary and arbitrary executions, the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the right to liberty and security of person and to freedom from arbitrary arrest or detention, the right to a fair trial, the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and to freedom of expression and the right of religious minorities to profess and practise their own religion;

3. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, as a State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in that Covenant;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to study carefully the final report of the Special Representative, as well as other information pertaining to the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and to consider further steps for securing effective respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in that country;

5. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to extend its full co-operation to the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights, and, in particular, to permit him to visit that country;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;

7. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, during its forty-second session in order to examine this situation anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 61-32-42 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) by recorded vote (53-27-42), 28 November (meeting 61); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.86); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 57, 61; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Togo, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Benin, Brunei Darussalam, Comoros, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Iran, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen.

Abstaining: Argentina, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Cote d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Japan, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Senegal, Singapore, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

The Committee, by a recorded vote of 48 to 30, with 32 abstentions, rejected a motion by Pakistan that no action be taken on the text. India and the Syrian Arab Republic supported the motion, while Costa Rica and Denmark declared their opposition to it.

According to Iran, the text politically exploited human rights issues and was based on the allegations of a terrorist group, even though the Special Representative had pointed out that he had not been able to investigate those allegations. The sponsors had to be held accountable for obstructing the Special Representative's efforts to initiate a constructive dialogue; Iran would co-operate with and support an objective and non-politicized inquiry.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya explained that it voted against the text because its sponsors were responsible for the massacre of the Palestinians, the decimation of the Namibian people, the bombing of residential areas of Tripoli and Benghazi, and the oppression of blacks and American Indians.

Trinidad and Tobago felt that human rights violations should be addressed impartially and without politicizing the issue. Bolivia did not agree with the inclusion of elements it considered unconnected with human rights. Human rights matters should be discussed on a universal basis and with a view to their observance by all States, remarked Ecuador.

Iraq had reservations on the sixth preambular paragraph, whose wording it regarded as restrictive since oppression in Iran was directed against all Iranians, irrespective of their beliefs; in addition, Iraq alleged that serious violations were being committed in Iran under the pretext of Koranic law. New Zealand was disappointed at the failure to secure Iran's co-operation and expressed sympathy for Iran's position that United Nations resolutions should not prejudice the situation in the country before all the facts were known, that the investigation should be impartial and that a Special Representative with a knowledge of Islamic jurisprudence and international human rights law should be appointed; the matter should be reviewed in 1987 so that Iran might be assured that the Commission was acting impartially and that judgement would be withheld until the facts were established.

Kampuchea

Both the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed that continued occupation by foreign forces constituted the primary human rights violation in Kampuchea (see p. 698).

Philippines

In March 1986, the Commission on Human Rights decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situation in the Philippines (see p. 745).

In May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1986/147 without vote.

Materials on human rights in the Philippines

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind the decision of the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session to discontinue consideration of the situation with respect to human rights in the Philippines, and in view of the strong commitment of the Government of that country to the full restoration and promotion of human rights, decided that the material relating to the Philippines which had been before the Commission under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) of 27 May 1970 should cease to be confidential.

Cyprus

On 12 March 1986,⁽⁵²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights postponed debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus until its 1987 session, on the understanding that action required by previous Commission resolutions on the subject remained operative, including the request for a report on their implementation.

In February 1986,⁽⁵³⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Commission that the situation regarding the implementation of the provisions of previous Commission resolutions which dealt with refugees and displaced persons and with changes in the demographic structure of Cyprus remained essentially unchanged. He also reported that following the appointment in 1985 of the third member of the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Committee had held two working sessions. Its work had reached an advanced stage in nearly one quarter of the cases before it and initial work had been completed in nearly half of the cases.

In a later report⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that during its eight working sessions in 1986, the Committee continued to investigate 168 individual cases of missing persons. In the framework of the Secretary-General's mission of good offices, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs and the Director in the Under-Secretary-General's office visited Cyprus and discussed the Committee's work and how to achieve further progress. At the end of November, the Secretary-General reported, the number of Greek Cypriots living in the northern part of the island had further diminished to 699. The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (see p. 245) continued, under its mandate, to discharge humanitarian functions on behalf of the Greek Cypriots remaining in the north, as well as to make periodic visits to the Turkish Cypriots living in the south.

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February).

In February 1986, Special Rapporteur Fernando Volio Jimenez (Costa Rica) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights his final report on the question of human rights in Chile, covering mainly the second half of 1985.⁽⁵⁶⁾ He stated that the broad co-operation extended to him by Chile had enabled him to visit the country from 8 to 19 December 1985. He had interviewed many senior government and judiciary officials, senior representatives of the Catholic Church, representatives of numerous Chilean human rights, social and trade union organizations, and many private individuals; the visit had allowed him to obtain first-hand information on reports of human rights violations.

The Special Rapporteur reported that he had transmitted to the Government complaints taken from legal documents which had been given to him by the individuals concerned, their lawyers or Chilean human rights organizations. Those complaints involved violations of the right to life; the right to physical integrity of persons; the right to liberty; disappearances; the right to security; the right to enter and leave the country freely; the rights to freedom of movement and freedom of expression; and the situation of persons under investigation by military prosecutors' offices for offences under the Internal Security of the State Act and/or the Firearms and Explosives Control Act. He recommended that those complaints be given particular attention and commented on.

In his conclusions, the Special Rapporteur stressed that the official recognition of his mandate by the Government opened the road to full restoration of Chile's relations with the Commission; that co-operation should continue and the Commission and the United Nations should, in turn, assist Chile in protecting the fundamental freedoms of its people. He made several recommendations which were taken up by the Commission (see below).

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 14 March,⁽⁵⁷⁾ commended the Special Rapporteur's efforts and recognized as a positive development the fact that Chile had permitted him to visit and had provided the co-operation and freedom of access to persons necessary for his investigation. However, the Commission expressed concern at the persistence of serious violations, such as disappearances, torture and abuses by security forces, as well as suppression of fundamental rights and freedoms through the maintenance of arbitrary executive powers. It expressed dismay at the ineffectiveness of government and judicial authorities in preventing the recurrence of abuses by security forces, and special concern over the failure to ensure the thorough investigation and prosecution of the many unsolved cases of murder, kidnapping, torture and disappearances. Convinced that a legal and political structure, representative of the will of the people as expressed in free elections and respecting the full exercise of legal rights, was essential to the full observance of human rights, the Commission appealed again to Chile to respect human rights and re-establish legality and democratic institutions.

The Commission urged Chile, in conformity with the Special Rapporteur's recommendations, to take the following steps: immediately end all physical and psychological torture by security and police forces and reiterate and make public a 30 July 1985 order by the Ministers of Defence and the Interior to end such abuses; investigate through judicial and administrative action all reports of torture, killings, kidnappings or other human rights violations by security forces and take action against those found guilty; end persistent rights violations by reorganizing the security and police forces and establishing a permanent system to monitor their conduct; co-operate fully with investigations of violations, assuring the independence of the judiciary and maximum effectiveness of judicial remedies, particularly amparo and habeas corpus; end activities of groups and bands reported to be responsible for kidnappings, interrogations, intimidation and beatings, and punish those responsible; bring legislation into conformity with guarantees of basic human rights as defined in international agreements; provide for the protection of public order against acts of violence by punishing persons found guilty of those acts, without using terrorism as a justification of any abuse of authority; end the practice of ordering internal banishment without recourse to the judicial system; allow the return of all Chileans living abroad, recognizing their right to enter and leave freely; re-establish labour rights and take into account the population's legitimate cultural and socio-economic interests; and respect activities related to the defence and promotion of human rights.

The Commission asked Chile to increase its co-operation with the Special Rapporteur and fully implement his recommendations, and invited the Government to submit in 1987 its comments. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate, requesting him to report to the General Assembly in 1986 and to the Commission in 1987. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council ensure that the necessary resources and staff were provided.

On 23 May 1986, by decision 1986/143, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to request him to report on the situation of human rights in Chile to the General Assembly and the Commission. The Council further approved the Commission's recommendation that the necessary financial resources and sufficient staff be provided.

Communication. On 25 July,⁽⁵⁸⁾ Chile replied to the report and the Commission's decision, taking exception to the fact that it had received specific charges compiled during the Special Rapporteur's visit with less than a month's notice and that the report had been brought to its attention on even shorter notice.

Chile disagreed with various parts of the report on the grounds that many of its conclusions were based on one-sided information unrelated to the realities of the situation; to elucidate its views, it submitted detailed observations on the Special Rapporteur's conclusions and recommendations, including a special chapter on terrorism which, as recognized by the Special Rapporteur, had considerable impact on the situation in the country.

Report of the Special Rapporteur (October). As requested by the Commission, the Special Rapporteur submitted to the General Assembly in October a preliminary report⁽⁵⁹⁾ covering the period 1 January to 31 August 1986, as well as later events leading to the 7 September state of siege following an assassination attempt against the President of Chile. At the time of the completion of his report in September, the Special Rapporteur was aware of the suspension of several opposition publications, the detention of prominent opposition leaders, and intimidation directed against other democratic political leaders and against individuals working in human rights organizations.

Commenting on Chile's reply to his February report (see above), the Special Rapporteur stated that he had related what he regarded as reliable accounts based on written and oral information; although the reply included assessments of his work which he could not share, it allowed for further dialogue. The report seemed to have led to an attitude in government bodies as well as in a certain population sector conducive to according due attention to respect for fundamental freedoms. No new complaints were received concerning persons arrested or disappeared for political reasons in 1986. The Rapporteur also noted improvements in laws governing health protection and labour situations.

Summing up his observations, the Special Rapporteur noted that Chile had continued to cooperate fully, not only providing important information but also giving prompt attention to requests made by him, even allowing him to act as a protector of individuals and apolitical organizations. The Government also consented to a second visit to the country, although at the time of preparation of the report agreement had not been reached on the exact dates.

The Government indicated that "states of emergency" were necessary to maintain law and order and did not constitute a change in the traditional Chilean system, except that they were now legalized by the Constitution; besides, the Government said it used its powers under that régime extremely sparingly. Nevertheless, the Special Rapporteur stated, in view of the fact that the country was living in a repeatedly renewed state of emergency and that the corresponding powers were used as a tool to repress the aspirations and demands of those sectors of the population that were seeking to improve their living conditions and the establishment of real democracy, those states of emergency had an adverse effect.

Constitutional Acts concerning the normalization of political life leading to a democratic system were to be adopted and implemented in the first quarter of 1987. Responding to the Special Rapporteur's recommendation that a system be set up to monitor the day-to-day conduct of security bodies, the Government had taken a valuable step towards safeguarding human rights by establishing on 25 June 1986 a high-level Advisory Commission on Human Rights of the Ministry of the Interior whose functions included receiving complaints concerning terrorist acts, unlawful coercion, including torture, and arbitrary arrests. Another important step was the establishment of a special body for labour law, which seemed to indicate that the Government was trying to follow, at least in part, the Special Rapporteur's recommendations concerning better treatment of workers' petitions for improved living conditions. Still lacking, however, was a more open and consistent attitude on the part of the Government which would enable organized workers to petition the relevant authorities directly, thus avoiding violent confrontations or at least mitigating their adverse effects.

Some progress was noted in the area of freedom of expression, but Chile continually renewed its powers of censorship. Until 31 August, there were no new threats against lawyers defending persons accused of contravening the State Security Act or other such legislation, but sudden abductions of citizens continued, as did government-ordered intervention in universities. Terrorism had increased and the process for establishing by peaceful means a democratic, representative, pluralistic participatory system had not gathered momentum. The process of returning exiles to Chile had not accelerated.

The Special Rapporteur hoped that the reorganization of the Carabineros would continue and that the Government would facilitate the task of investigating the 663 pending cases of missing detainees which had been brought before the courts. He recommended that the Advisory Commission and freedom of the press and expression be strengthened, and that the Government redouble its efforts to end acts by gangs of extremists.

On 18 November,⁽⁶⁰⁾ Chile submitted to the General Assembly's Third Committee its comments on the Special Rapporteur's preliminary report, acknowledging that it was more objective and balanced than the previous one, but still included some views and value judgements with which it disagreed. Chile believed that most important was the Special Rapporteur's recognition of the gravity of the terrorist-subversive escalation that had increased with a massive importation of arms and culminated in the attempt to assassinate the President.

Chile objected in particular to the Special Rapporteur's observations on the situation of persons temporarily prevented from entering the country, in regard to which he had stated that no progress had been made, and his views on the activities of the courts of justice and the role of the Office of the Controller General which, the Special Rapporteur had maintained, had lost its inspection authority. Regarding alleged actions of the police and security authorities, Chile stated that the Special Rapporteur related them simply as facts, without passing judgement on their merits. The most controvertible observation, however, was, Chile believed, that the human rights situation continued to be a source of great concern because the system was not democratic and only representative democracy guaranteed respect for freedoms. Chile's Political Constitution established clearly the route to full democracy, but, as the Special Rapporteur had observed, to attain complete democracy not only the will of the Government was required but also that of the democratic opposition.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/161 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile

The General Assembly,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Noting the obligation of the Government of Chile to respect and protect human rights in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile is a party,

Bearing in mind that the concern of the international community at the situation of human rights in Chile was expressed by the General Assembly in a number of resolutions, particularly resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons and resolution

40/145 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to adopt the most appropriate measures for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur,

Considering that the Special Rapporteur proposes to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-third session a final report on the situation of human rights in Chile,

Recalling the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, particularly resolution 1986/63 of 14 March 1986, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year and to consider this subject as a matter of high priority, in view of the persistence of serious violations of human rights in Chile,

Deploping once again the fact that the repeated appeals of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other international organs to re-establish human rights and fundamental freedoms have been ignored by the Chilean authorities,

Considering certain reports prepared by various non-governmental organizations which have made public the serious violations of human rights in Chile,

Noting that certain measures, such as the re-introduction of the labour tribunals and the establishment of the Advisory Commission on Human Rights of the Ministry of the Interior, are insufficient owing to the restrictions imposed on their competence and that the decision not to banish opponents and expel them from the country does not limit the existing discretionary powers,

1. Takes note with interest of the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile, submitted in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/63;

2. Recognizes, as a positive fact, that the Government of Chile permitted the Special Rapporteur to visit the country in December 1985, providing him with its co-operation and free access to the facilities for conducting his investigation, and expresses its confidence that a further visit will be authorized on the same conditions in the immediate future; at the same time, it regrets that this co-operation of the Government of Chile with the efforts of the United Nations has not led to a substantial improvement in human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Expresses its deep distress at the absence of institutional machinery which protects the unrestricted exercise of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, a basic condition for the free expression of the people's will;

4. Expresses its deep concern at the persistence of serious violations of human rights in Chile, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur, which refers to such violations as deaths, abductions, temporary disappearances, torture and ill-treatment by the security forces, the climate of insecurity, the maintenance of exile and the discriminatory character of the announced list of citizens authorized to return to the country and the denial of fundamental rights and freedoms through the maintenance of arbitrary executive powers during the prolonged period in which states of emergency have remained in force and the recent re-establishment of the state of siege;

5. Expresses its concern at the denial by the Chilean authorities of the exercise of the rights of free expression, assembly and association, through the use of repressive methods and violent responses to social and political demonstrations of opposition, in particular military searches of marginal settlements and university premises and acts of intimidation against religious and lay human rights bodies;

6. Again expresses its conviction that a legal and political order based on the expression of the people's will through an electoral process open, on a footing of equality, to all the citizens and on free elections is fundamental for full respect for human rights in Chile as it is in any other country;

7. Expresses its grave concern at the ineffectiveness of the governmental authorities in preventing the ill-treatment of individuals by the military, police and security forces and expresses particular concern at the failure of the competent judicial authorities to take the necessary steps to conduct full investigations and prosecute those responsible for the numerous unresolved cases of murder, abduction, disappearances and torture;

8. Welcomes with satisfaction the requests from various social and political sectors for the re-establishment of a pluralist democracy;

9. Emphasizes the need for the Government of Chile to restore and respect human rights in conformity with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in compliance with the obligations it has assumed under various international instruments, so that the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the effective enjoyment and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms may be restored, and, in particular:

(a) To put an end immediately to the state of siege declared in September 1986 and to the arbitrary practice of declaring "constitutional states of emergency" under which serious and continuing violations of human rights are committed in the country;

(b) To amend legislation, including the laws permitting the arbitrary use of such states of emergency, so as to bring them into conformity with guarantees of human rights, as defined in international instruments;

(c) To put an end immediately to all forms of physical and psychological torture and to respect effectively the right to life and to physical and moral integrity, and to desist, furthermore, from intimidation and persecution, abductions, arbitrary arrests and detention in secret locations;

(d) To proceed as a matter of urgency, through judicial and administrative action, to investigate all reports of deaths, torture, abductions and other human rights violations by the military, police and security forces and to punish those found guilty of such violations;

(e) To proceed vigorously to end the activities of bands and groups, whether private or connected with security forces, which are responsible for abductions resulting in deaths, intimidation and ill-treatment of persons;

(f) To investigate and clarify without further delay the fate of persons arrested for political reasons who have subsequently disappeared;

(g) To reorganize the police and security forces so as to help put an end to persistent human rights violations;

(h) To ensure the independence of the judiciary and the maximum effectiveness of judicial remedies, particularly amparo or habeas corpus, to prevent the intimidation of judges, defence lawyers and witnesses, and to re-establish the jurisdiction of the civilian courts delegated to the military courts;

(i) To guarantee that anti-terrorist legislation is not used against persons who have not committed terrorist acts, that persons inculpated in acts of violence or terrorism are accorded due process of law and respect for their rights, and that the accusation of terrorism is not adduced as a justification for any abuse of authority, torture and inhumane treatment;

(j) To respect the right of nationals to live in and freely enter and leave their country, without arbitrary restrictions or conditions, and to put an end to the practice of forced exile;

(k) To restore the full enjoyment and exercise of economic, social and cultural rights, particularly labour rights and the right to freedom of information, and to preserve the socio-cultural identity of ethnic minorities;

(l) To respect the activities of organizations and persons related to the protection and promotion of human rights;

10. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider, as a matter of high priority, the report of the Special Rapporteur, taking account of the relevant information at its disposal; to take the most appropriate steps for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, including extending the mandate of the Special Rapporteur; and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, with a view to examining the human rights situation in Chile.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 94-5-52 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) by recorded vote (84-5-46), 28 November (meeting 61); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.99), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Australia, Austria, Cuba, Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Chile, Indonesia, Lebanon, Paraguay, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Liberia, Malaysia, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Somalia, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Yemen, Zaire.

The text was unbalanced and full of lies, and contained statements no country would have accepted, Chile said; it disregarded facts, interfered in matters that fell under Chilean sovereignty, violated the principle of non-intervention and ignored the co-operation between Chile and the Special Rapporteur.

In the opinion of the United States, the text relied on rhetoric rather than reality; it was neither balanced nor constructive and failed to reinforce the Special Rapporteur's constructive recommendations. While the text pointed out that fundamental liberties, such as freedom of association and expression, were even more curtailed under the state of siege, other aspects of the situation, mainly the problems of terrorist violence from both extremes or the discovery of a large cache of terrorist arms from abroad, were left out, as were the positive steps taken by the Government or actions taken by government opponents which had damaged the transition to democracy, in particular the attempted murder of the President.

Trinidad and Tobago felt that the United Nations had a responsibility to address human rights violations impartially and to refrain from politicizing the issue. Ecuador was convinced that human rights should be discussed on a universal basis, with a view to their full observance by all States. Generally sharing Chile's views, Honduras said it regretted the lack of objectivity of the text which, but for its failure to take due note of the Special Rapporteur's report, had cast doubt on his work; of particular concern was the text's failure to mention the problems of terrorism in Chile. Bolivia abstained in view of the inclusion of elements unconnected with human rights.

The United Kingdom regretted that the text failed to underline the urgent need to resume an open dialogue and prejudged the Commission's decision regarding the Special Rapporteur's mandate. It voiced concern about the human rights situation in Chile which, it felt, should be treated in the same way as other country situations, but welcomed the limited measures Chile had taken since March 1986, such as the establishment of an Advisory Commission on Human Rights. Costa Rica believed that the text did not adequately reflect the Special Rapporteur's report and failed to acknowledge the co-operation he had received from Chile; the language in paragraph 9 was excessive and paragraph 9 (k) omitted reference to civil and political rights. Costa Rica also objected to the fact that no mention was made of terrorism in Chile. Also in the view of the Federal Republic of Germany, the positive elements of the Special Rapporteur's report were not reflected in the text; Chile should be called upon even more strongly to implement his recommendations, especially by initiating a process of democratization and engaging in a dialogue with the democratic opposition. In Peru's opinion, the text contained elements which went beyond the human rights situation and could be regarded as attempts to interfere in domestic affairs; by failing to take into account certain positive aspects of the report, the text might actually discourage Chile's efforts towards improvement. Accordingly, Peru had reservations on paragraphs 3, 8, 9 (c) and 9 (k). Canada deplored the growing spiral of violence which appeared to be leading to a further polarization of Chilean society; it regretted that the text did not appeal to both government and opposition forces to refrain from using violence.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative (February). Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo, in fulfilling his mandate extended by the Commission on Human Rights in 1985,⁽⁶¹⁾ submitted a report to the Commission in February 1986,⁽⁶²⁾ giving mainly an overview of the situation in 1985.

With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, the Special Representative observed that the situation had not changed significantly. In a growing atmosphere of labour unrest, there were indications that labour leaders had been arrested by government agents, and attacks by military forces, particularly systematic attacks by guerrilla forces, affected the economic infrastructure. The Special Representative was convinced that murders of civilians continued; he also found indications that severe psychological pressure, equivalent to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, had been exerted in extrajudicial interrogations of some political prisoners. He believed that politically motivated human rights violations still had not been investigated and punished, and expressed concern that violations committed in military operations by the Salvadorian Army continued to result in unjustified deaths and injuries among the civilian population and in damage to property. In an effort to humanize the war, the Special Representative noted, the armed forces had caused fewer casualties than in the previous year among the non-combatant population. Regarding non-combat-related violations by guerrilla forces, he observed a disturbing increase in the number of individual and collective murders, as well as a disturbing increase and greater selectiveness in abductions of civilians. He expressed concern that guerrilla combat actions caused unjustified deaths and injuries among the civilian population and damage to private and public property.

The Special Representative again recommended that all parties to the conflict—the Salvadorian regular army and the guerrilla forces—immediately terminate attacks on the lives of non-combatants. He further recommended that the Government and the left-wing opposition ensure peace through a sincere and open dialogue; until a negotiated peace was achieved, both sides should take steps to humanize the war by scrupulously respecting the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols.⁽⁶³⁾

In addition, he recommended to the Salvadorian authorities the following measures: repeal of all legislative and other measures incompatible with international human rights instruments; strengthening of government control over armed forces, security bodies, armed individuals and organizations, and increased monitoring of investigations carried out in the security bodies; adoption of measures to investigate and punish human rights violations rapidly and effectively, including the dismissal of those committing such violations; intensification of mass campaigns to promote respect for human rights; and broadening of administrative and social reforms, including judicial and agrarian reforms.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 12 March 1986 by 39 votes to none, with 4 abstentions,⁽⁶⁴⁾ expressing deep concern at the adverse effect of warlike activities on the enjoyment by the Salvadorian population of political, civil, economic, social and cultural rights, appealed to both parties to humanize the conflict by complying with the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols. It deplored the interruption of the dialogue initiated in 1984 between the Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario (FMLN-FDR) and urged the parties to hold a sincere and realistic dialogue to achieve a negotiated solution that would end the conflict and help institutionalize and strengthen the democratic system; and requested all States to promote the resumption of the dialogue until a just and lasting peace was achieved.

The Commission asked the Government and the opposition forces to co-operate fully with humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of civilians and to permit ICRC to continue to evacuate the wounded to places where they could receive medical attention. It also urged El Salvador to accelerate the adoption of measures necessary to investigate and punish rapidly and effectively human rights violations and called on the authorities to amend any legislation or other measures incompatible with the international instruments on human rights binding on El Salvador. In addition, it recommended an intensification of administrative and social reforms, including agrarian reform.

The Commission requested all States to co-operate in receiving refugees and to support organizations dealing with displaced persons, and asked El Salvador to continue to grant facilities to Salvadorians wishing to return to their homes.

Extending the Special Representative's mandate for another year, the Commission requested him to report to it on further developments in 1987, after reporting to the Assembly in 1986. It renewed its request to the Government and other parties to continue to co-operate with the Special Representative and requested the necessary assistance from the Secretary-General.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, by decision 1986/135, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and to request him to submit his report on further developments in El Salvador to the General Assembly and the Commission. The Council further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative.

Report of the Special Representative (October). As requested by the Commission, the Special Representative presented to the Assembly in October another report on the human rights situation in El Salvador.⁽⁶⁵⁾ He had visited the country from 21 to 27 September, interviewing the country's President, a number of high-ranking government officials, representatives of the church and NGOs, visiting two prisons where he spoke with political prisoners, and meeting with peasants evacuated from the conflict zones.

The Special Representative noted that living conditions in El Salvador had further deteriorated and that forced evacuation of civilians had resulted in intractable human and social problems; systematic guerrilla attacks on the country's economic infrastructure seriously threatened economic, social and cultural rights. While he believed that non-combat-related political assassinations committed by members of the armed forces, security forces and civil defence had declined, summary executions and abductions of civilians by the guerrilla forces had continued. The number of political prisoners had also increased and, in some cases, those prisoners had been subjected to severe psychological pressure. Activities to investigate and punish the perpetrators of many serious violations committed in previous years continued to be highly unsatisfactory, the Special Representative noted, although he recognized the difficulties which impeded the normal functioning of the criminal justice system and also the important attempts to reform the legal system.

With regard to the conduct of the armed conflict, the Special Representative had received no reliable information concerning massacres perpetrated by the regular army which, he believed, had however caused incidental damage to private property and some accidental deaths and injuries among civilians. Taking note of the large and disturbing number of non-combatants killed or seriously wounded by the explosion of contact mines, he placed on record the general view, which he shared, that most of those mines were placed by guerrilla forces. He mentioned that the guerrilla forces had released soldiers captured in combat through ICRC. He noted that respect for human rights continued to be an important element of the current government policy which, he said, was achieving significant results in the area of respect for the life of persons both in non-combat situations and in or as a result of combat.

The Special Representative recommended that the parties immediately end attempts on the lives, physical integrity and freedom of non-combatants. He encouraged them to resume talks aimed at ensuring the humanization of the conflict and achieving a negotiated settlement. He recommended that the constitutional authorities repeal all legislative and other measures incompatible with international human rights instruments, increase monitoring of extrajudicial interrogations of political prisoners and expand agrarian and judicial reforms. To FMLN, he recommended that it refrain from placing mines which could kill or seriously injure non-combatants and that it refrain from attacking the country's economic infrastructure. Concluding, the Special Representative recommended to all States, in particular the most developed countries, to assist in alleviating and improving the living conditions of Salvadorians displaced or made refugees by the conflict.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/157 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the humanitarian rules laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols I and II thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the relevant international instruments,

Reaffirming also the essential task of the United Nations to ensure the observance, promotion and strengthening of human rights among Member States,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 35/192 of 15 December 1980, 36/155 of 16 December 1981, 37/185 of 17 December 1982, 38/101 of 16 December 1983, 39/119 of 14 December 1984 and 40/139 of 13 December 1985, it expressed its deep concern at the situation of human rights in El Salvador,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a special representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, 1982/28 of 11 March 1982, 1983/29 of 8 March 1983, 1984/52 of 14 March 1984 and 1985/35 of 13 March 1985, as well as Commission resolution 1986/39 of 12 March 1986, whereby it extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session and to the Commission at its forty-third session,

Noting with satisfaction that the Special Representative points out in his report that the question of human rights continues to be an important element of the current policy of the Government of El Salvador which, within the process of democratic normalization, is achieving increasingly significant and commendable results,

Expressing regret, however, that the armed conflict is persisting in El Salvador and that economic, political and social rights continue to be seriously jeopardized, and noting also that the attacks against civilians not participating in combat and against the economic infrastructure continue to be a matter of great concern,

Considering that there is an armed conflict of a non-international character in El Salvador in which the Government of that country and the insurgent forces are under an obligation to apply the minimum standards of protection of human rights and humanitarian treatment provided for in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and in Additional Protocol II thereto, of 1977,

Bearing in mind also the praiseworthy humanitarian work carried out in El Salvador by the International Committee of the Red Cross,

Considering also, as indicated by the Special Representative, that despite the laudable and serious governmental plans and projects for the reform of the administration of justice, the capacity of the judicial system in that country continues to be patently unsatisfactory,

Taking note of the report prepared by the Special Representative, as requested by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/39,

Concerned about the continuing situation in which a considerable number of Salvadorian citizens are obliged to leave their homes and become displaced persons or refugees,

Recognizing that dialogue is the best way to achieve national reconciliation, and with the understanding that broad sectors of the country favour a comprehensive political negotiating process for a solution which would help to improve the situation of human rights and put an end to the suffering of the Salvadorian people,

Aware that the negotiated political solution to the Salvadorian conflict can be cut short if external forces do not support the resumption of the dialogue but, instead, seek in different ways to spur the prolongation or intensification of the war, with ensuing grave effects on the situation of human rights,

1. Commends the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

2. Takes into account with interest and emphasizes that it is important that the Special Representative indicated in his report that the question of human rights is an important part of the policy of the Government of El Salvador, which is achieving increasingly significant and commendable results;

3. Expresses, nevertheless, its deep concern at the fact that serious and numerous violations of human rights continue to take place in El Salvador owing, inter alia, to non-fulfilment of the humanitarian rules of war, and therefore requests the Government of El Salvador and the insurgent forces to adopt measures conducive to the humanization of the conflict by observing scrupulously the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977;

4. Recommends that the Special Representative continue to observe and inform the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights of the extent to which the contending parties are respecting those rules, particularly as regards humanitarian treatment and respect for the civilian population, prisoners of war, those wounded in combat, health personnel and military hospitals of either party;

5. Reaffirms once again the right of the Salvadorian people freely to determine their political, economic and social system without interference from outside, through a genuine democratic process, in which all sectors of the population enjoy the guarantees necessary to enable them to participate freely and effectively;

6. Requests all States to refrain from intervening in the internal situation in El Salvador and, instead of helping in any way to prolong and intensify the war, to encourage the continuation of the dialogue until a just and lasting peace is achieved;

7. Expresses deep regret that the dialogue initiated in October 1984 between the Government of El Salvador and the opposing forces continues to be interrupted and recommends the early resumption of open and generous talks so that through sincere dialogue they may be able, in accordance with the joint communiqué issued at La Palma, to reach a negotiated comprehensive political settlement which will contribute decisively to an improvement in the situation of human rights, put an end to the armed conflict and contribute to widening and strengthening the democratic system based on the full exercise by all Salvadorians of their civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights;

8. Reiterates its appeal to the Government of El Salvador and to the opposing forces to co-operate fully with the humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of the civilian population, wherever these organizations operate in the country, and to permit the International Committee of the Red Cross to continue to evacuate those wounded and maimed by war to where they can receive needed medical attention;

9. Requests all States to collaborate, as much as possible, in the reception of refugees and to support the autonomous organizations dealing with displaced persons within El Salvador, and requests the Government of that country to grant facilities to Salvadorians wishing to return to their homes;

10. Deplores the fact that the capacity of the judicial system in El Salvador to investigate, prosecute and punish violations of human rights continues to be patently unsatisfactory and therefore urges the competent authorities to deepen the process of reform of the Salvadorian judicial system, in order to punish speedily and effectively those responsible for the serious human rights violations which have been committed and are still being committed in that country;

11. Calls upon the competent authorities in El Salvador to make the national legislation compatible with the provisions contained in the international instruments on human rights binding on the Government of that country;

12. Recommends the continuation and broadening of the reforms necessary in El Salvador, including the effective implementation of agrarian reform, in order to contribute to a solution of the economic and social problems which constitute the roots of the internal conflict in that country;

13. Renews its appeal to the Government of El Salvador, as well as to other parties concerned, to continue to co-operate with the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights and requests the competent bodies of the United Nations system to provide any advice and assistance which the Government of El Salvador may require to achieve the highest levels in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-second session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador, in order to examine this situation anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council, in the hope that there will be improvement.

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) by recorded vote (98-0-37), 28 November (meeting 61); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.18/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Denmark, Greece, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Panama, Peru, Spain, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Haiti, Indonesia, Jordan,* Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Yemen, Zaire.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

By a letter of 24 October,⁽⁶⁶⁾ El Salvador noted that the draft resolution had originally been distributed as an official document in a way which, it said, violated the usual procedural principles. The text had also been submitted considerably in advance of the human rights debate and in advance of the Special Representative's report; this, El Salvador believed, reflected the intent of certain countries to prejudge the actual situation.

In Committee, Costa Rica withdrew a draft⁽⁶⁷⁾ it had submitted, as some of its elements had been integrated in the approved text; other points, however—such as a reference to the forcible recruitment of young persons—were not included.

Explaining its position, El Salvador said it did not participate in the vote because it had detected political intentions in the way the text was put forward in the Committee, prejudging efforts, measures and changes in its political and social system which had been adopted to improve its human rights situation. While the text contained elements that encouraged El Salvador to continue the political process, especially the promotion and protection of human rights, it also contained terms which prejudged, or even denied, that changes had occurred; so had, for example, the legitimacy of recent electoral processes, which demonstrated the exercise of democracy, been questioned. El Salvador expressed its willingness to co-operate with the Special Representative and its commitment to work for higher standards of living; it was prepared to make every effort to consolidate its democratization by adopting measures to make fundamental changes and improve the situation with regard to economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights. Asserting that it was an open democratic society, El Salvador expressed concern that consideration of human rights in certain countries was really based on political and ideological interests and was incompatible with the spirit and the intention of human rights bodies.

Trinidad and Tobago stressed that the United Nations had a responsibility to address human rights violations impartially and to refrain from politicizing the issue. Ecuador reaffirmed that human rights matters should be discussed on a universal basis and with a view to their full observance by all States. Bolivia did not agree with certain of the text's elements which, it felt, were not connected with human rights. In Australia's view, the text failed to cover some important matters mentioned in the Special Representative's report.

Canada recognized the improvements in the human rights situation in El Salvador and encouraged El Salvador to continue its commitment to human rights; it strongly supported the process of dialogue towards national reconciliation and regarded the 1984 elections in the country as valid and representative of the popular will and did not view the two sides to the conflict as being equal in legitimacy.

Guatemala

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February). In February 1986, Special Rapporteur Viscount Colville of Culross (United Kingdom) submitted a report on the human rights situation in Guatemala.⁽⁶⁸⁾ He updated information contained in a 1985 report⁽⁶⁹⁾ and included new information derived from a visit to the country from 28 January to 2 February 1986, following a 1985 election and a transfer of power on 14 January 1986 to a new civilian Government.

The Special Rapporteur reported that Guatemala's new Government and Congress had embarked on many policies which were relevant to international human rights instruments and that steps were being taken to implement his November 1985 recommendations. He noted that the Government was likely to request technical assistance to train police, judiciary and court staff in criminal investigation, preparation of criminal charges, presentation of evidence to courts and court procedures evaluating the evidence; a request was also expected for technical assistance related to criminal procedure including admissibility of evidence. He believed that the election of an independent Supreme Court and the appointment of an Attorney-General coupled with the training of police, junior judges and court staff, would set the scene for a return of the rule of law.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the Government proposed inviting exiled human rights organizations to return on the assurance that they could operate in safety. He noted that negotiations were about to begin with ICRC to establish its presence there and that Guatemala, in order to clarify disappearances, intended to ask UNHCR and the Mexican Government for lists of Guatemalan refugees in Mexico. He believed that the investigation of the Tripartite Commission (composed of the Attorney-General, the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Defence) into disappearances would have to be succeeded by a completely new investigation, which had already started to the extent that the Ministry of Defence was supplying lists of people who had taken advantage of successive amnesties since March 1982. Economic and social projects, he said, would continue under the new Ministry of Development. He noted that the existence of civil patrols would be voluntary and subject to local plebiscite.

The steps to be taken on his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur concluded, could be seen as important changes towards establishing and maintaining human rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1986,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the establishment of a National Human Rights Commission and the office of the Attorney for Human Rights, in accordance with Guatemala's new Constitution. It also took note with satisfaction of Guatemala's determination to adopt measures to investigate earlier human rights violations and of its declared intention to promote respect for human rights and the measures it had taken to that end. The Commission expressed its confidence that the authorities would investigate current and past human rights violations and would make all possible efforts to clarify the fate of disappeared persons. It encouraged Guatemala to continue to ensure that all its authorities and agencies, civilian as well as military, fully respected human rights and fundamental freedoms. Noting Guatemala's willingness to continue co-operating, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide Guatemala with advisory services and other assistance which it might request. It decided to terminate the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its study of the human rights situation in Guatemala, and requested its Chairman to appoint a special representative to receive and evaluate information on the implementation of Guatemala's new legal order for the protection of human rights and its efforts to guarantee full enjoyment of fundamental freedoms, to solicit any other relevant information from reliable sources and to report to the Commission in 1987.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May, by decision 1986/140, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to request its Chairman to appoint a special representative to receive and evaluate full and detailed information which the Government of Guatemala had expressed its willingness to provide on the implementation of the new legal order for the protection of human rights and its efforts to guarantee the full enjoyment of fundamental freedoms, to solicit any other relevant information from reliable sources and to report to the Commission in 1987. The Council further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide such advisory services and other assistance as might be requested by Guatemala.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/156 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Reiterating that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 40/140 of 13 December 1985, in which it decided to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala at its forty-first session,

Recalling also the previous resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the subject, and taking note of Commission resolution 1986/62 of 13 March 1986,

1. Welcomes the process of democratization and return to constitutionality, which are fundamental steps towards complete and effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encourages the Government of Guatemala to continue to take measures for the effective implementation of the Constitution and other laws aimed at safeguarding these rights and freedoms;

2. Requests the Government of Guatemala to continue co-operating with the Commission on Human Rights by providing it with information about the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular in regard to the application of the new legal order for the protection of these rights and freedoms;

3. Recommends that the Commission on Human Rights should continue to consider the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala, in accordance with Commission resolution 1986/62, and decides to continue its consideration of developments in that situation at its forty-second session.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 134-0-21 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) by recorded vote (122-0-18). 28

November (meeting 61); 9-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.57/Rev.2); agenda item 12. Sponsors: Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 53, 57, 61; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bhutan, Bolivia, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Ecuador, Egypt, Indonesia, Jordan,* Lebanon, Maldives, Nepal, Oman, Romania, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Yemen.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The revised text took into account a number of amendments sponsored by Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Ireland, Norway and Sweden.⁽⁷¹⁾ It did not include, however, a provision by which the Assembly would have noted with concern reports about violations of human rights, in particular politically related assassinations and involuntary disappearances, despite the measures taken by the Government.

On behalf of the sponsors of the amendments, which were subsequently withdrawn, Sweden expressed regret that the text had not been adopted without a vote and that the dialogue between the sponsors of the draft and those of the amendments had not happened at an earlier stage; the text might then have reflected more adequately the situation in Guatemala where, according to reliable and independent reports, violations continued to take place despite the new Government's efforts to control them. Sweden expressed support for those efforts and expressed the hope that a constructive dialogue would take place well in advance of the Third Committee's consideration of the topic in 1987.

Trinidad and Tobago felt that the United Nations had a responsibility to address human rights violations impartially and to refrain from politicizing the issue. Ecuador was convinced that human rights matters should be discussed on a fully universal basis and with a view to their observance by all States. Bolivia expressed satisfaction with the process of democratization in Guatemala which had led to a constitutional system that showed special respect for and commitment to human rights and freedoms.

Middle East

Lebanon

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution on the situation in southern Lebanon, adopted on 12 March by a roll-call vote of 25 to 1, with 17 abstentions,⁽⁷²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Israel for its human rights violations—assassinations, detentions, abductions, demolition of houses, desecration of places of worship and other inhuman acts—and called on it to end such practices immediately. Demanding Israel's immediate and total withdrawal from Lebanese territory, the Commission called on Governments to end economic, political and military aid to Israel which, it said, encouraged that country to persevere with its policy of aggression and expansion. The Secretary-General was requested to monitor implementation of the resolution and submit to the Assembly a report on the results of his efforts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1986/148 by recorded vote.

Situation in southern Lebanon

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/43 of 12 March 1986, endorsed the request of the Commission to the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of that resolution and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the results of his efforts in that regard.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/148

35-1-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) by recorded vote (31-1-17), 21 May (meeting 20); 3-nation draft (E/1986/C.2/L.13); agenda item 9.
Sponsors: Lebanon, Morocco, Syrian Arab Republic.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Rumania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Note of the Secretary-General. By a November note to the General Assembly,⁽⁷³⁾ submitted in accordance with the Commission's request for a report, the Secretary-General stated that human rights and humanitarian principles were constantly in the forefront of his efforts to improve the situation in southern Lebanon and promote peaceful solutions of problems there. Details of those efforts, including those relating to human rights, could be found in his reports on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (see p. 291) and on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon (see p. 485).

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1986, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. This was in addition to the consideration of political and other aspects by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see p. 319).

Communication. On 22 January 1986,⁽⁷⁴⁾ Jordan submitted to the Centre for Human Rights a report prepared by PLO, containing allegations of Israeli practices in violation of human rights in the occupied Palestinian territories during 1985.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January 1986,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, as requested by the Commission in 1985,⁽⁷⁶⁾ he had brought the two resolutions the Commission had adopted that year on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Governments, General Assembly and Security Council members, the Special Committee on Israeli practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; they had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and intergovernmental organizations. They were wellpublicized through United Nations press releases, journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine and a pamphlet on the work of the Special Committee on Israeli practices.

Also in accordance with a 1985 Commission request, the Secretary-General submitted in February 1986⁽⁷⁷⁾ a list of all United Nations reports issued since 15 March 1985 which dealt with the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 20 February resolution, adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 7, with 6 abstentions,⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that occupation itself was a fundamental violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine. It denounced Israel's continued refusal to allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the territories, and reiterated the Committee's concern at Israel's policy based on the so-called "homeland" doctrine envisaging a monoreligious (Jewish) State that included territories occupied by Israel since 1967—a policy which, the Committee affirmed, not only denied the population its right to self-determination but was also the source of systematic violations of human rights.

The Commission reaffirmed that Israel's continuous grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and the 1977 Additional Protocols⁽⁷⁷⁾ were war crimes and an affront to humanity. It rejected and reiterated its condemnation of Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem—measures which the Commission considered null and void. It strongly condemned Israel's attempts to subject the West Bank and Gaza Strip to Israeli laws, as well as the terrorist actions against Palestinian inhabitants by what it called Jewish gangs.

The Commission strongly condemned Israeli policies and practices, administrative and legislative measures to promote and expand the establishment of settler colonies, as well as the following practices: the annexation of parts of the territories, including Jerusalem; the continuing establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements on Arab lands and the transfer of an alien population there; the arming of settlers to commit violence and strike at Moslem and Christian religious and holy places; the evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants and the denial of their right to return; the confiscation and expropriation of Arab property; the destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, collective punishments, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population, as well as torture and inhuman prison conditions; the pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and practices, as well as with family rights and customs; the systematic repression of cultural and educational institutions, closing them or restricting and impeding their academic activities; the expropriation and exploitation of the territories' natural wealth, water and other resources; the dismantling of municipal services by dismissing elected mayors and municipal councils; and preventing the flow of Arab aid funds to the territories.

The Commission called on Israel to: take immediate steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants to their homes and property; to arrange for the immediate return of the municipal chiefs to their municipalities; and to release all Arabs detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and the territories' liberation and, pending their release, to accord them the protection envisaged under international instruments concerning the treatment of prisoners of war.

The Commission again called on States, in particular the parties to the fourth Geneva Convention, and on international organizations not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories, including Jerusalem, and to avoid action or aid that might be used by Israel in its annexation and colonization policies. It urged Israel to refrain from practices violating human rights in the territories; requested the Assembly to recommend to the Security Council the adoption of measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter; and requested the Secretary-General to give the Commission's resolution wide publicity and to report in 1987, also bringing to its attention all United Nations reports on the situation appearing until then.

By another resolution adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 9 abstentions,⁽⁷⁹⁾ the Commission, expressing deep concern at the consequences of Israel's systematic refusal to apply the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, and condemning Israel for its failure to acknowledge the Convention's applicability, reaffirmed its applicability, and that fundamental human rights as set forth in international instruments remained applicable in cases of armed conflict. Strongly condemning Israel for its ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian prisoners, the Commission urged it to grant prisoner-of-war status to all captured Palestinian fighters and to treat them accordingly. It called on Israel to respect its obligations under the Charter and other international instruments; requested it to release all Arabs detained for fighting for self-determination and liberation, pending which to accord them prisoner-of-war status; and demanded that it cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab prisoners. It strongly condemned Israel for deporting liberated Palestinian prisoners in contravention of an agreement for the exchange of prisoners, called on it to refrain from deporting

Palestinians and to rescind its deportation decision. The Commission urged Israel to co-operate with ICRC and to allow it to visit all Palestinian prisoners in Israel. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1987 on progress in implementation of the resolution, after bringing it to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, and intergovernmental humanitarian and non-governmental organizations.

By a third resolution, also adopted on 20 February and by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 10 abstentions,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Commission condemned Israel for its persistent disregard for, and defiance of, United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan Heights. It called on Israel to rescind its 1981 decision⁽⁸¹⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory, which, the Commission said, had resulted in its effective annexation and which it declared null and void; it reaffirmed its request to United Nations Members not to recognize any such measures. The Commission strongly deplored the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a Security Council permanent member which had prevented the Council from adopting measures against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter. It deplored the inhuman treatment, terror and practices contrary to human rights that Israel continued to apply against Syrian citizens in the Golan Heights by reason of their refusing Israeli nationality and called for an end to such practices. The Commission emphasized that Israel must allow the evacuees from among the Golan population to return and recover their property and residences, and firmly emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations, to give it wide publicity and to report to the Commission in 1987.

Other alleged human rights violations

During the 1986 General Assembly session, three draft resolutions were introduced in the Third Committee on which the Committee decided to take no action following motions by India. By a draft resolution on the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba,⁽⁸²⁾ sponsored by the United States, the Assembly would have: welcomed the release and emigration from Cuba of a large number of political prisoners; expressed concern over detailed allegations of grave human rights violations in Cuba; appealed to Cuba to establish democratic and legal institutions in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽⁸³⁾ and to co-operate fully with international organizations seeking to examine its human rights situation; and called on the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of human rights in Cuba in 1987, recommending in particular that it assure the preparation of a report for submission to the Assembly.

Cuba sponsored two revised draft resolutions. By the first,⁽⁸⁴⁾ on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Puerto Rico, the Assembly would have: urged the United States to stop immediately all repressive measures against Puerto Rican patriotic forces and to take measures to end racial discrimination in the United States against Puerto Ricans; requested the United States to end all military activities endangering the security of the Puerto Rican people and attempts against their human rights and fundamental freedoms; and requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider separately in 1987 human rights and fundamental freedoms in Puerto Rico, recommending that a report be prepared for submission to the Assembly, and to explore the possibility of appointing a special rapporteur.

By Cuba's second draft resolution,⁽⁸⁵⁾ on the situation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Indian nations and the black community in the United States, the Assembly would have: urged the United States to end racist and discriminatory attitudes against ethnic minorities, especially the Indian nations and the black community; condemned the forced expropriation of lands of the Hopi and Navajo Indian nations in Arizona; asked the United States to stop stealing and plundering Indian lands; and urged it to release Indians imprisoned without charge or trial for their opposition to the division of Indian lands. It also would have urged the United States to implement economic and social programmes for its black citizens and requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider separately in 1987 the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Indian nations and the black community in the United States, recommending in particular that a report be prepared for submission to the Assembly, and to explore the possibility of appointing a special rapporteur.

On 28 November, the Committee approved without vote separate motions by India that no action be taken on the three drafts.

Mass exoduses

Welcoming the steps taken by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons (see Chapter XX of this section), the Commission on Human Rights, on 12 March 1986,⁽⁸⁶⁾ invited Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the problem. It welcomed the Secretary-General's interest in the question, reiterated its request to him that he follow developments closely and encouraged his efforts to enable the United Nations to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/148 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject,

Considering the efforts which have been made to address this subject within the United Nations, in particular by the Commission on Human Rights,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to special rapporteurs when studying violations of human rights in any part of the world,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed upon the international community as a whole, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need to improve international co-operation aimed at the prevention of new massive flows of refugees in parallel with the provision of durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Taking note of the final report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Taking note once again of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses,

Recalling its resolutions 35/196 of 15 December 1980, 37/186 of 17 December 1982, 38/103 of 16 December 1983, 39/117 of 14 December 1984 and 40/149 of 13 December 1985 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 30(XXXVI) of 11 March 1980, 29(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, 1982/32 of 11 March 1982, 1983/35 of 8 March 1983, 1984/49 of 14 March 1984, 1985/40 of 13 March 1985 and 1986/45 of 12 March 1986,

Welcoming the steps taken by the Secretary-General to establish an early warning system, as mentioned in his report on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-first session,

1. Welcomes the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes;

2. Invites Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the serious problem of mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Welcomes the special interest which the Secretary-General has taken in this question, and reiterates its request to him to follow closely developments in the field of human rights and mass exoduses;

4. Encourages the efforts being undertaken by the Secretary-General to enable the United Nations to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to making appropriate recommendations concerning the further measures to be taken in this matter;

6. Decides to review the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-second session.

Genocide

Strongly condemning genocide, the Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March 1986,⁽⁸⁷⁾ reaffirmed the necessity of international co-operation towards its elimination. Noting that many States had ratified or acceded to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Commission urged those that had not done so to become parties without delay.

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1986,⁽¹⁷⁾ 96 States had acceded to or ratified the Convention. An additional four States had signed it. A list of those States was annexed to an August report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁸⁹⁾ There were no new accessions or ratifications during the year.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/42 without vote.

Status of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which the Assembly approved and proposed for signature and ratification or accession the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, annexed thereto,

Mindful of the fact that the year 1986 marks the thirty-fifth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that genocide is a crime under international law, contrary to the spirit and aims of the United Nations,

Expressing its conviction that recognition and strict observance of the provisions of the Convention by all States are necessary for the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 40/142 of 13 December 1985 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/18 of 10 March 1986,

1. Once again strongly condemns the crime of genocide;
2. Reaffirms the necessity of international co-operation to liberate mankind from such an odious scourge;
3. Takes note with appreciation of the fact that many States have ratified the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide or have acceded thereto;
4. Urges those States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede to it without further delay.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁾ on the status, as at 14 August 1986, of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims⁽³⁾ or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts), as follows (those in italics acted in 1986):

Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Cameroon, Central African Republic, China, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Holy See, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Niger, Norway, Oman, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire; United Nations Council for Namibia.

All of these parties also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts), except Angola, Cuba, Cyprus, Mexico, Mozambique, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Zaire. France and the Philippines adhered only to Protocol II; the latter acceded in 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/72 without vote.

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979, 37/116 of 16 December 1982 and 39/77 of 13 December 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Mindful of the need for consolidating and implementing the existing body of international humanitarian law and for the universal acceptance of such law,

Particularly mindful of the need to protect the civilian population, especially women and children, against the effects of hostilities, and of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies and civil defence organizations in this respect,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and to disseminate knowledge of the two additional Protocols,

1. Notes with appreciation the virtually universal acceptance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

2. Notes, however, the fact that so far a lesser number of States have become parties to the two additional Protocols;

3. Appeals to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 to consider becoming parties also to the additional Protocols at the earliest possible date;

4. Calls upon all States becoming parties to Protocol I to consider making the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the status of the Protocols based on information received from Member States;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts: report of the Secretary-General".

Explaining its position, Israel said that while the text as a whole was acceptable, it would have abstained had there been a vote; subjective and political elements had been introduced in determining the scope of application of Protocol 1, particularly in article I, paragraph 4, that induced groups dissatisfied with the regime under which they lived to claim the protection of the Protocol, which served only to encourage them to resort to terrorist activities and use violence against civilians. That fact was all the more serious since under article 50 individuals and groups were treated as civilians until they were killed; article 44 ignored the distinction between combatants and non-combatants in granting prisoner-of-war status and regarding protection of civilians.

The United States expressed similar views, stating that article 1, paragraph 4, and article 44 undermined the basis of humanitarian law, endangered civilians and recognized as combatants groups which were unauthorized to carry out the obligations imposed by the Government; the Protocol contained a series of unacceptable provisions from the military standpoint.

Rights of the child

Draft convention

Working group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1985,(4) an open-ended working group met from 27 to 31 January and on 11 March 1986 to continue drafting a convention on the rights of the child.

The group adopted articles 9 bis, 12 ter, 18, 18 bis, 19, 20 and 21, concerning, respectively: a child's right to preserve his/her identity; the right to a periodic review of treatment received by children placed for care, protection or mental or physical treatment; protection from economic exploitation; protection from illegal drug use; promotion of a sense of worth and dignity in children having broken the law; respect for rules of international humanitarian law during armed conflict; and the convention in relation to States parties' laws or international conventions, treaties or agreements.

The Group also discussed articles 4 bis, 6 bis, 12, 16 bis and 18 quater concerning, respectively: children born out of wedlock; the right to leave any country and to return to their own country; traditional practices harmful to children's health; indigenous children's cultural and educational rights; and the right to freedom of association, peaceful assembly and protection against arbitrary and unlawful interference with one's privacy, family, home or correspondence. The text of these articles, together with those previously adopted, and proposed draft articles which the Group could not discuss for lack of time, were annexed to the Group's report.⁽⁵⁾ Also annexed was a paper submitted by Bangladesh containing comments on specific articles.

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1986,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights decided to continue in 1987 its work on the draft convention with a view to completing it. The Commission requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a one-week session of an open-ended working group prior to the Commission's 1987 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/40 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/113 of 13 December 1985, by which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to, and to make every effort at its forty-second session to complete, the draft convention on the rights of the child and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the forty-second session of the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1986/59 of 13 March 1986,

1. Authorizes a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights, with a view to completing the work on the draft convention on the rights of the child at that session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting prior to and during the forty-third session of the Commission to enable it to fulfil its task successfully, and notes the usefulness of providing the working group, in advance of its session, with such working documents as a compilation of all amendments and new proposals, and relevant provisions of other international instruments.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/40

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/95) without vote, 21 May (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1986/22); agenda item 9.

Communication. On 28 November 1986,⁽⁷⁾ India transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration of the heads of State or Government of the member countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation (Bangalore, 16 and 17 November). Among other issues, the declaration dealt with children's rights, underlining the importance of enhancing public consciousness and building a national political consensus on those rights, and calling for an early conclusion and adoption of a convention on the rights of the child.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/116 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/166 of 20 December 1978, 34/4 of 18 October 1979, 35/131 of 11 December 1980, 36/57 of 25 November 1981, 37/190 of 18 December 1982, 38/114 of 16 December 1983, 39/135 of 14 December 1984 and 40/113 of 13 December 1985,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 20(XXXIV) of 8 March 1978, 19(XXXV) of 14 March 1979, 36(XXXVI) of 12 March 1980, 26(XXXVII) of 10 March 1981, 1982/39 of 11 March 1982, 1983/52 of 10 March 1983, 1984/24 of 8 March 1984, 1985/50 of 14 March 1985 and 1986/59 of 13 March 1986, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1978/18 of 5 May 1978, 1978/40 of 1 August 1978, 1982/37 of 7 May 1982, 1983/39 of 27 May 1983, 1984/25 of 24 May 1984, 1985/42 of 30 May 1985 and 1986/40 of 23 May 1986 and Council decisions 1980/138 of 2 May 1980 and 1981/144 of 8 May 1981,

Reaffirming that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of unsatisfactory social conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced of the positive contribution which an international convention on the rights of the child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, would make to protecting children's rights and ensuring their well-being,

Noting with satisfaction the widespread interest in the elaboration of an international convention on the rights of the child displayed by a great number of Member States representing all geographical regions and socio-political systems, as well as by international governmental and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with appreciation that further progress was made during the forty-second session of the Commission on Human Rights in the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/40, in which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the forty-third session of the Commission in order to facilitate completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to, and to make every effort at its forty-third session to complete, the draft convention and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Invites all Member States to offer their active contribution to the completion of the draft convention on the rights of the child at the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the working group in order to ensure its smooth and efficient work in the fulfilment of its important task;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Question of a convention on the rights of the child".

Sale of children and child labour

On 11 March 1986,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to invite States parties to report regularly on their compliance with the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery⁽⁹⁾ and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others.⁽¹⁰⁾ It invited States to become parties to the 1949 Convention or to explain why they were unable to do so. It strongly urged States, relevant United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit broader new information to the Working Group on Slavery and to participate more actively in the Group's work.

The Commission recommended that educational facilities for children be made available at the work place or elsewhere, that a legal minimum age and minimum wage for children be introduced and that national authorities ensure that no children under the legal minimum age were employed. It also recommended that United Nations agencies, development banks and intergovernmental bodies involved in development projects encourage policies and measures to protect children against abusive labour.

Recommending that the draft convention on the rights of the child (see above) include provisions against the sexual exploitation of children and that effective measures be taken to promote the equality of women and men, using the mass media to do so, the Commission encouraged Governments to establish national policies to protect children from sexual exploitation and to enact guidelines to prevent travel agencies, public carriers and hotel-keepers from co-operating in such exploitation. The Commission expressed the wish that UNICEF be designated the body primarily responsible for research and education relating to the sexual exploitation of children. It requested the Secretary-General to collect for the Working Group on Slavery relevant information published by the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations. It recommended that the anniversary of the adoption of the 1949 Convention, 2 December, be proclaimed World Day for the Abolition of Slavery in All Its Forms.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

Report of the Working Group. Pursuant to a 1984 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹¹⁾ a Working Group composed of experts designated by the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, UNICEF, UNESCO and WHO conducted a comprehensive study on the traditional practices affecting the health of women and children. The Group held its first session at Geneva from 18 to 22 March 1985, its second from 9 to 13 September 1985 and its third from 13 to 17 January 1986. The Group reported⁽¹²⁾ that it had focused on female circumcision, traditional birth practices and preferential treatment for male children.

Regarding female circumcision, the Group recommended that public services describe its adverse effects to birth attendants, nurses, mobile health teams, social workers, vocational health personnel, rural teachers and community auxiliaries at the beginning of their training. It advocated the distribution of information in health centres, pre-natal centres, women's development centres, handicraft centres and government-run social institutions and the preparation of teaching materials for training educational, medical and paramedical personnel, as well as psychologists. The Group recommended alternative training for traditional practitioners whose main source of income derived from female circumcision. Information on female circumcision and its eradication, the Group said, should be included in sex education, literacy campaigns, teacher-training programmes and curricula at all levels. The Group believed that countries with large Muslim populations should emphasize the importance of women, the condemnation of their ill-treatment, and the fact that female circumcision was not mentioned in the Koran and was not a religious obligation.

Concerning the reasons for son preference, the Group stated that in some societies sons were economic assets to their family, parents saw their sons as having far greater obligations towards them in their old age, sons were needed to carry on the family lineage, and most religious beliefs seemed to consider women as inferior and therefore unfit to perform sacred duties and rituals. The Group noted that son preference had serious short- and long-term implications for the health of girls and women, as a result of different feeding, nurturing and care. The Group recommended identifying the problem of male preference using a number of indicators, such as: the female mortality rate of children between 1 and 4 years old; analysis of body growth by sex; and the analysis, by sex, of clinic and hospital records and immunization records. To remedy existing practices, the Group recommended feeding and other nutritional intervention programmes, immunization campaigns and the provision of services to all children on a compulsory or free-of-charge basis. To eliminate the underlying causes of male preference, the Group advocated legislation against discrimination on the grounds of sex and, in addition to free and compulsory primary education, social support measures such as adequate social security so that a son was no longer a must for security in old age. It believed that WHO, UNESCO and UNICEF should provide technical and other assistance to Governments requesting it.

The Group recommended that each country examine its traditional childbirth practices and identify those which were harmful and needed to be eliminated and those which should be encouraged. It strongly recommended that Governments give higher priority to maternity care in national development plans and budget allocations. The Group advocated public education programmes and registering, training and supervising traditional birth attendants. It recommended that the Commission on Human Rights call on regional economic commissions and international agencies, such as WHO, UNICEF, UNESCO, UNFPA, UNDP, the World Bank and regional development banks, again to recognize that over 50 per cent of women in developing countries had no trained assistance in childbirth, and to give high priority to collaboration with and support to countries in improving their maternal health care. Finally, the Group recommended that bilateral aid donors and international NGOs emphasize the provision of maternity care.

Human Rights Commission action. Taking note of the Working Group's report, the Commission on Human Rights, on 11 March 1986,⁽¹³⁾ commended the Group for its efforts and called on specialized agencies and NGOs to assist Governments in combating traditional practices affecting the health of women and children. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to transmit the report to Governments, relevant organizations and specialized agencies and to draw to their attention the Group's recommendations.

Human rights of disabled persons

In March 1986, the United Nations Secretariat informed the Economic and Social Council⁽¹⁴⁾ that Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina), pursuant to a 1985 Sub-Commission request,⁽¹⁵⁾ was engaged in full consultations with Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs, with a view to preparing a full progress report on human rights and disability, with the assistance of the Secretariat, for the Sub-Commission's 1987 session.

Human rights and science and technology

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1984 Commission on Human Rights request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to its 1986 session a report⁽¹⁷⁾ summarizing the views of nine Governments and four United Nations bodies and specialized agencies on the recommendations of a group of experts that had convened in 1975 to discuss the balance to be established between scientific and technological progress and the intellectual, spiritual, cultural and moral advancement of humanity. Annexed to the report was the statement adopted by the group of experts.

Following another 1984 Commission request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in 1986 a report⁽¹⁸⁾ summarizing the views of two Governments, five United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, a regional commission, an intergovernmental organization and six NGOs on the most effective ways of using the results of scientific and technological developments for the promotion and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1986,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's 1984⁽¹⁶⁾ and 1986 (see above) reports on the use of scientific and technological developments to promote human rights and expressed its appreciation to those States and organizations which had submitted their views. It called on States to make every effort to utilize the benefits of scientific and technological developments to promote human rights and invited the United Nations University, in co-operation with other academic and research institutions, to study the impact of scientific and technological developments on human rights and to inform the Commission of the results.

Under the agenda item on the implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights, the Commission adopted a resolution which dealt with the rights of individuals detained on grounds of mental illness (see p. 708).

Implementation of the Declaration on the use of scientific and technological progress

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 11 abstentions, on 10 March 1986,⁽²⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Rights stressed the importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms under conditions of scientific and technological progress of States' implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind.⁽²¹⁾ The Commission called on States to use the achievements of such progress for peaceful economic, social and cultural development and to improve the well-being of peoples. It once again requested the Sub-Commission to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study on the use of those achievements to ensure the right to work and development.

Communication. In a 28 April 1986 letter to the Secretary-General,⁽²²⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged the United Kingdom with terminating the studies of and expelling a large number of Libyan students enrolled at institutes and universities there. Those measures, it said, violated a number of international instruments, including the 1975 Declaration which made it the duty of all States to assist in establishing, strengthening and developing the scientific and technological capacity of developing countries.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly four additional replies he had received as at 3 September 1986⁽²³⁾ in response to a 1980 request⁽²⁴⁾ and subsequent annual reminders for information concerning implementation of the 1975 Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/115 by recorded vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society,

Recalling once again the great importance of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Considering that implementation of the Declaration will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and the security of peoples and to their economic and social development, as well as to international co-operation in the field of human rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Seriously concerned that the results of scientific and technological progress could be used for the arms race to the detriment of international peace and security and social progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person,

Convinced that in the era of modern scientific and technological progress the resources of mankind and the activities of scientists should be used for the peaceful economic, social and cultural development of countries and for the improvement of the living standards of all people,

Recognizing that the establishment of the new international economic order calls in particular for an important contribution to be made by science and technology to economic and social progress,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and scientific and technological developments,

1. Stresses the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in order to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress;

3. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take into account in their programmes and activities the provisions of the Declaration;

4. Invites those Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to submit their information pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/130 A of 11 December 1980;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration;

6. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to take appropriate measures and to assist the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in preparing the study requested by the Commission in its resolutions 1982/4 of 19 February 1982, 1984/29 of 12 March 1984 and 1986/11 of 10 March 1986;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 131-0-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/876) by recorded vote (106-0-24), 20 November (meeting 51); 36-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.73); agenda item 95.

Japan said it disagreed with paragraph 6 which called for a study requested by Commission resolutions on which it had abstained.

Human rights and peace

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March 1986⁽²⁶⁾ by a roll-call vote of 25 to 8, with 9 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the inherent right to life of all individuals, the safeguarding of which it considered an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights. It again stressed the urgent need for the international community to make every effort to remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, to halt the arms race, to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control and to prevent violations of the Charter principles, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life. It also stressed the importance of practical disarmament measures for releasing substantial resources that should be used for social and economic development.

The Commission called on States to assist in implementing the right to life by adopting national and international measures. It also called on States and all others concerned to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress were used exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Once again the Commission called on all States to prohibit any war propaganda, in particular the formulation, propounding and dissemination of propaganda for doctrines and concepts aimed at unleashing nuclear war. It asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1988 a report on the resolution's implementation in the light of comments and views submitted by States.

On 11 March,⁽²⁶⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 34 to none, with 8 abstentions, affirmed the need for all concerned parties to realize the adverse effects of the arms race on human rights, and requested all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States, to continue and intensify their efforts to end the arms race and strive for promotion and universal realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/113 by recorded vote.

Human rights and use of scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, to maintain international peace and security and to develop friendly relations among peoples and international co-operation in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind and the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 38/75 of 15 December 1983, the General Assembly resolutely, unconditionally and for all time condemned nuclear war as being contrary to human conscience and reason, as the most monstrous crime against peoples and as a violation of the foremost human right—the right to life,

Recalling its resolutions 37/189 A of 18 December 1982, 38/113 of 16 December 1983, 39/134 of 14 December 1984 and 40/111 of 13 December 1985,

Taking note with appreciation of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/7 of 19 February 1982, 1983/43 of 9 March 1983, 1984/28 of 12 March 1984, 1986/10 of 10 March 1986 and 1986/29 of 11 March 1986,

Convinced that all rights and freedoms, as well as all material goods and spiritual wealth that both man and nations possess, have a common foundation—the right to life,

1. Reaffirms that all peoples and all individuals have an inherent right to life and that the safeguarding of this cardinal right is an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights;

2. Stresses once again the urgent need for the international community to make every effort to strengthen peace, remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, halt the arms race and achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control and prevent violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the self-determination of peoples, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life;

3. Stresses further the foremost importance of the implementation of practical measures of disarmament for releasing substantial additional resources, which should be utilized for social and economic development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Calls upon all States, appropriate United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress are used exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Again calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures with a view to prohibiting, in accordance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, any propaganda for war, in particular the formulation, propounding and dissemination of and propaganda for doctrines and concepts aimed at unleashing nuclear war;

6. Looks forward to further efforts by the Commission on Human Rights to ensure the inherent right of all peoples and all individuals to life;

7. Decides to consider this question at its forty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 129-10-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/8761 by recorded vote (105-10-15), 20 November (meeting 51); 21-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.66): agenda item 95.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Chile, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

In Japan's opinion, the text's focus was not relevant to the agenda item. Denmark, which spoke for the five Nordic countries, said the text referred to matters that should be dealt with in other forums; it also expressed reservations concerning references in the preamble to General Assembly resolutions they had not supported, and concerning paragraph 5.

International co-operation in human rights

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/155 by recorded vote.

Strengthening of international co-operation in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations include the achievement of international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international co-operation in the field of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international co-operation should be based on the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant international instruments,

Deeply convinced that such co-operation should be based on a profound understanding of the economic, social and cultural realities and the variety of problems existing in different societies,

Emphasizing the necessity for the international community to continue its efforts to take practical measures to prevent mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms affected by situations that jeopardize international peace and security, such as apartheid, all forms of racial discrimination, colonialism, foreign occupation and domination, aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity, as well as the refusal to recognize the fundamental rights of peoples to self-determination,

1. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the protection and promotion of human rights, including the development of further international co-operation in this field, on the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant international instruments and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with this international legal framework;

2. Considers that such co-operation should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights, to the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

3. Emphasizes that co-operation in the field of human rights should be guided by justice and equality, with due respect for the dignity of all people without any discrimination;

4. Notes the important place that the promotion and protection of human rights has secured on the international agenda and in relations between States;

5. Invites all States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on means and methods of strengthening international co-operation in the field of human rights;

6. Decides to consider this question at its forty-second session under the item entitled "Report of the Economic and Social Council".

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 154-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.2) by recorded vote (141-0-1), 28 November (meeting 61); 4-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.100/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 12. Sponsors: Czechoslovakia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 59, 61; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

The text was based on a draft deferred from the 1985 Assembly session⁽²⁷⁾ and reproduced in an October 1986 Secretariat note;⁽²⁸⁾ introducing the new text, the Ukrainian SSR said it placed greater emphasis on the need to strengthen international co-operation in human rights.

Explaining its abstention, the United States said the text deprecated vague formulations concerning economic, social and cultural realities in a human rights context; the human rights agenda should be reserved primarily for the promotion and protection of individual human rights.

Sweden, speaking for the Nordic countries, expressed reservations concerning the ambiguity of the concept of international co-operation in the field of human rights which it felt could be misinterpreted; while it was essential to prevent mass and flagrant violations, it was also important to prevent other violations. Human rights could not meaningfully refer to anything but the relationship between the State and the individual, it believed.

Australia said it could accept the text on the understanding that the draft on promotion of the universal recognition of, and respect for, the rights of peoples (see p. 744) was not acted on in 1986.

Chapter XVIII

Women

During 1986, work continued throughout the United Nations system on the advancement of women and on the elimination of discrimination against them. The system's work was guided by the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women—a set of measures adopted in 1985 to overcome the obstacles to the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985). The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that activities for the advancement of women were being pursued throughout the system and the fear that the end of the Decade would result in programme curtailment appeared unfounded. In December, the Assembly called on Member States to establish specific targets to increase the percentage of women in professional and decision-making positions in their countries and called on the Secretary-General and the heads of United Nations bodies to establish new five-year targets for women at those levels (resolution 41/111).

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-first session, recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council 17 draft resolutions and a draft decision. The texts dealt with a wide range of issues connected with follow-up to the 1985 Nairobi Conference on the Decade, including the elimination of discrimination against women, peace and international co-operation, both generally and in connection with specific groups of women, and women in development. Acting on the Commission's recommendations, the Council adopted resolutions on the elimination of discrimination against women (1986/17); violence in the family (1986/18); women in the United Nations (1986/19); the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation (1986/20); assistance to South African, Namibian and refugee women (1986/25); elderly women (1986/26); the role of women in society (1986/27); implementation of the Arusha Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of African Women Beyond the United Nations Decade for Women (1986/28); physical violence against detained women specific to their sex (1986/29); implications of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the programme planning system and the programme of work of the Commission on the Status of Women (1986/30); national machinery to promote the advancement of women (1986/31); updating the world survey on the role of women in development (1986/64); and the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies (1986/71). In December, the Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution on the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation (41/109) and, taking note of the resolution on women in society, urged Governments to encourage the support of parenthood and provide women with security for their jobs to allow them to fulfil their roles as mothers without prejudice to their professional and public activities (41/110).

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its fifth session, considered initial reports of eight States parties on their implementation of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, to which 91 States were parties at the end of 1986. The Economic and Social Council in May (resolution 1986/4), and the Assembly in December (resolution 41/108), urged States to ratify or accede to the Convention as soon as possible and to make efforts to submit their initial reports to the Committee.

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, at its sixth session, underlined the importance of research, training and information activities for implementing the Nairobi Strategies and for the Institute's continuing role in linking issues of relevance to women and development and approved a budget of $2.6 million for 1986-1987. In May, the Economic and Social Council renewed its appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other potential donors to contribute to the Institute's Trust Fund (resolution 1986/32).

The United Nations Development Programme created in 1986 a Division for Women in Development to identify the role of women in the economic and social development of recipient countries and ensure their reflection in mainstream development programming. In July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to take a series of measures designed to strengthen the work of the United Nations in integrating women effectively in economic development programmes and activities (resolution 1986/65). The Consultative Committee of the United Nations Development Fund for Women recommended approval of 21 new projects. The Fund's total income in 1986 amounted to $4.9 million and expenditures to $5.2 million.

Advancement of women

Implementation of the Nairobi Strategies

In accordance with a 1985 resolution,⁽¹⁾ by which the General Assembly endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1986 a report on the Strategies' implementation.⁽³⁾ In order to rationalize the reporting procedure, he included information from various parts of the United Nations system regarding the review of their financial and technical support activities to assess the involvement of and impact on women, as called for by the Assembly in 1980.⁽⁴⁾

With regard to general implementation of the Strategies—a set of measures to overcome the obstacles to the Decade's goals and objectives of equality, development and peace during the remainder of the century—the report stated that activities in favour of the advancement of women were being pursued throughout the system and that the fear that the end of the Decade would result in programme curtailment appeared unfounded. Although systematic efforts aimed at implementing the Strategies were also being made by the organizations of the system, there was a considerable diversity of approach. Some components were attempting to integrate the Strategies in programming activities and institutionalizing the advancement of women; others were simply maintaining the acquired momentum. A few components considered their activities to be non-gender-specific and believed the Strategies were not relevant for their activities although they were aware of their importance.

Although implementation of the Strategies had been undertaken with vigour by many components of the system, there were problems such as resource constraints and the longer-term ability of smaller specialized components to maintain activities if the Strategies were not incorporated in their continuing mandates. Also, with regard to the distribution of activities according to the Strategies' recommendations, a Secretariat survey showed that most of the 86 meetings on the advancement of women in 1986 concentrated on development (49 per cent) or co-operation (22 per cent) or were of a general nature (19 per cent). Meetings on equality, peace and areas of special interest accounted for only 6, 2 and 2 per cent respectively.

Monitoring of the Strategies was carried out by the Commission on the Status of Women, by a network of focal points in the United Nations system and by various components within the system. With regard to future monitoring, the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) was designing monitoring activities for itself and for the system and was collecting information on the system's activities to assist in that procedure. At the national level, the Centre planned to conduct a survey on national monitoring simultaneously with revising its directory of national focal points for the advancement of women. The results of those exercises would be presented to the Commission in 1988. Thereafter, monitoring would focus on issues set by the Commission at its 1987 session as priorities for its long-term programme of work to the year 2000.

Many organizations and agencies of the system reported providing technical co-operation, training and/or advisory services to implement the Strategies. Priority had been given to training activities but increasing attention had also been given to formulating and adopting guidelines and check-lists in order better to allocate resources for, and promote technical co-operation projects or project components on, women-in-development issues.

Other issues addressed in the report were institutional co-ordination, research, participation of women in international activities and information dissemination.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Assembly in October a report⁽⁵⁾ on incorporation of the interests of women in the work programme of the regional commissions (see Chapter VII of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/111 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which, inter alia, it endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Taking into consideration Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/30 of 23 May 1986 and 1986/65 and 1986/71 of 23 July 1986,

Conscious of the considerable and constructive contribution to the advancement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Emphasizing the need for the immediate and full implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and for their evaluation and follow-up,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Reaffirms the need for the Forward-looking Strategies to be translated immediately into concrete action by Governments, as determined by overall national priorities, as well as by the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

3. Reaffirms also the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women and calls upon the Commission to promote the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000 based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education", and urges all organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Commission in this task;

4. Reaffirms further, in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, the role of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, in particular the Branch for the Advancement of Women, as the substantive secretariat of the Commission on the Status of Women and as a focal point for matters on women, the catalysing role of the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the role of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women in the advancement of women in the context of the participation of women in development;

5. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/30, in particular the decision by the Council to convene in January 1987 a session of the Commission on the Status of Women for five working days prior to the organizational session of the Council and its decision that the session be held in New York as an exception to the general principle, reaffirmed by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985, that United Nations bodies shall plan to meet at their respective established headquarters;

6. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women in the development process, having in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries;

7. Calls upon all Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the percentage of women in professional and decision-making positions in their countries;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General and the heads of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to establish new five-year targets at each level for the percentage of women in Professional and decision-making positions, in accordance with the criteria established by the General Assembly, in particular that of equitable geographical distribution, in order that a definite upward trend in the implementation of Assembly resolution 33/143 of 20 December 1978 be registered in the number of Professional and decision-making positions held by women by 1990, and to set additional targets every five years;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically, through the Commission on the Status of Women, to the Economic and Social Council on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on measures taken to implement the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider these questions further at its forty-second session under the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

General Assembly resolution 41/111

Meeting 97

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/830) without vote, 11 November (meeting 42); draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.3/41/L.37); agenda item 93.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 23-30, 38,40,42; plenary 97.

System-wide co-ordination

In accordance with a 1985 Economic and Social Council request⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), submitted to the Council, through the Commission on the Status of Women, a report⁽⁷⁾ outlining a proposed framework of a system-wide medium-term plan for women and development (see p. 794).

The Strategies would determine the overall policy framework for the plan and it was expected that the organizations of the United Nations system would take careful account of the requirements and new emphases of the Strategies and review their programmes to ensure that their direction corresponded to the orientation called for in them.

ACC action. An inter-agency meeting on follow-up to the 1985 World Conference on the Decade for Women was held at Vienna from 6 to 8 March 1986.⁽⁸⁾ The meeting made recommendations, which it brought to the attention of the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)), concerning: establishment of an institutionalized mechanism within the ACC machinery for the implementation of the Strategies; promotion and implementation of the Strategies; updating the world survey on the role of women in development (see p. 791); and the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development.

Having considered the recommendations, CCSQ(PROG) (first regular session of 1986, Geneva,

2-4 April)⁽⁹⁾ considered that the existing arrangements within ACC for co-ordinating the implementation of the Strategies should be continued, with the primary responsibility remaining with CCSQ(PROG). It agreed that ACC subsidiary bodies should regularly include the implementation of the Strategies in their agenda and report their conclusions to CCSQ(PROG), which would ensure proper interfacing between the work of the subsidiary bodies in that context. The Committee also agreed on the importance of promoting and implementing the Strategies and considered that CSDHA should play the leading role in disseminating them.

At its second regular session of 1986 (New York, 6-9 October),⁽¹⁰⁾ CCSQ(PROG) had before it a note on the implementation of the Strategies as dealt with by ACC subsidiary bodies. The Committee noted with appreciation action taken in response to its request that the subsidiary bodies regularly include in their agenda the question of the Strategies' implementation and report to CCSQ(PROG). It noted that it would continue to monitor the responses by the bodies concerned.

CPC consideration. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) (New York, 28 April-23 May 1986)⁽¹¹⁾ noted a 1985 request of the Economic and Social Council⁽⁶⁾ that CPC should undertake in 1989 a cross-organizational programme analysis in the area of advancement of women. In a 16 May letter,⁽¹²⁾ the CPC Chairman informed the Council President that the Committee had recalled that the Council had considered a cross-organizational review of the issue of women and development in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system in 1985 and that CPC would be considering a draft system-wide medium-term plan for women and development in 1987. It recognized that a detailed analysis of the system's activities in the area of advancement of women for the 1988-1989 period would provide an important basis for monitoring the implementation of the medium-term plan for women and development and other plans. It decided to revert to the question of the form of such an analysis at its 1987 session in the context of its consideration of the medium-term plan.

CPC also had before it the Secretary-General's proposed revisions⁽¹³⁾ to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989. Revisions to the plan's chapter on social development and humanitarian affairs were put forward in order to take account of the adoption of the Strategies. CPC recommended the approval of the revisions with a number of modifications.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July 1986, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/71 without vote.

System-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/46 of 31 May 1985, in which it requested the Secretary-General to take the initiative in formulating a system-wide medium-term plan for women and development,

Bearing in mind paragraphs 311, 338 and 339 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, outlining measures to improve system-wide co-ordination of activities for the advancement of women and as a means of implementing the Strategies,

Noting General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly endorsed the Forward-looking Strategies,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the proposed framework of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development,

1. Takes note of the proposed framework of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development;
2. Emphasizes the importance for the comprehensive implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women of programme 2, on access to productive resources, income and employment, and programme 3, on access to services;
3. Decides that the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development should pay particular attention to programme 2, which includes activities of the highest priority for integrating women into economic development, and to programme 3;
4. Recommends that future medium-term plans of the United Nations and the specialized agencies should contain intersectoral presentations of the various programmes dealing with issues of concern to women, particularly those relating to the access of women to productive resources, income and employment and the access of women to services;
5. Recommends also that priority areas addressed in programmes 2 and 3 of the system-wide medium-term plan should be reflected in technical co-operation activities carried out for the benefit of women;
6. Emphasizes that the system-wide medium-term plan should be formulated so as to permit verification and monitoring of the progress made towards the achievement of its objectives;
7. Further emphasizes the importance of the plan of action formulated by the United Nations Development Programme in consultation with the United Nations Development Fund for Women for the more active and deliberate involvement of women in development through technical co-operation;
8. Requests the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to undertake in 1989 a cross-organizational programme analysis in order to review systematically the activities for and resources allocated to the advancement of women;
9. Decides that the Commission on the Status of Women shall review the final draft of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development before its consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/71

23 July 1986 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/126/Add.1) without vote, 18 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 20.

Related resolution: ESC 1986/30.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 November 1986, the Assembly's Third Committee adopted a decision⁽¹⁴⁾ by which it referred to the Secretary-General's proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989⁽¹⁵⁾ and recommendations made thereon by CPC.⁽¹¹⁾ The Committee considered that the Secretary-General's proposal on promotion and monitoring of the achievement of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women and of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies incorporated the programme implications of the legislative mandates on monitoring adopted at the 1985 World Conference. It requested its Chairman, through the Assembly President, to communicate the decision to the Chairman of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. By a 28 November note,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Fifth Committee Chairman transmitted the decision to the Fifth Committee.

By resolution 41/203 of 11 December, the Assembly adopted the revisions to the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, as well as modifications recommended by CPC, taking into account the views of the Assembly's Main Committees, particularly those expressed by the Third Committee on the promotion and monitoring of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

National machinery

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1986/31 without vote.

National machinery to promote the advancement of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3275(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/136 of 16 December 1976 and 33/186 of 29 January 1979, in which the Assembly recommended that Member States establish appropriate national machinery to accelerate the integration of women in all spheres of national life,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1978/26 of 5 May 1978 and 1980/35 of 2 May 1980, concerning the important role of machinery at the national governmental level in the implementation of the objectives and goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and in the attainment of national priorities for the advancement of women,

Stressing the need, expressed in General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, for Governments to allocate adequate resources and to take effective appropriate measures to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women as a matter of high priority, including the establishment or reinforcement, as appropriate, of national machinery to promote the advancement of women, and to monitor the implementation of the Strategies with a view to ensuring the full integration of women in the political, economic, social and cultural life of their countries,

Taking note of paragraph 106 of the Forward-looking Strategies, in which it is stated that appropriate national machinery is lacking or, where it exists, lacks the resources, focus, responsibility and authority to be effective, which is a serious obstacle to the effective integration of women in the development process,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, subject to the availability of financial resources, an interregional seminar, including heads of national machinery, to examine the question of national machinery and to make recommendations for consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women with a view to strengthening that machinery for the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women at national, regional and international levels;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a document for the seminar, on the basis of information provided by Member States and others concerned on the current status of national machinery to promote the advancement of women, to identify issues for discussion and to develop for that purpose a number of case studies;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report for in-depth consideration by Member States at the 1988 session of the Commission on the Status of Women, based on information obtained from Member States and others concerned, on the proposals of the seminar and on the basis of experience gained during the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, and to propose guidelines for national machinery to promote the advancement of women and ways to ensure effective implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, in preparing the above-mentioned report, to draw upon all relevant information, including reports of States members of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

Advancement of African women

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/28 without vote.

Implementation of the Arusha Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of African Women Beyond the United Nations Decade for Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the draft resolution on strengthening the role of the Commission on the Status of Women which was before the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Aware also of the draft resolution on assistance from non-governmental organizations to women and children, particularly in drought-stricken countries, which was before the Conference,

Recalling with appreciation that the organizations of the United Nations system, the Member States and non-governmental organizations have devoted resources, time and effort to the advancement of women during the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling the seriousness and unity of purpose that reigned at Nairobi during the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, and in the drafting of the Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which promise continuity in the pursuit of the Decade's objectives of equality, development and peace for all women,

Mindful of the diminishing resources available for development in Africa,

Gravely concerned by the world economic crisis, which affects African countries in particular, and by the difficulties encountered by national machineries in mobilizing funds for programmes that would benefit women,

1. Recommends that the Commission on the Status of Women should be strengthened to enable it to monitor the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Appeals to the African Member States to include in their plans the Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of African Women Beyond the United Nations Decade for Women, identified at the regional intergovernmental preparatory meeting held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 8 to 12 October 1984 and incorporated in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, and to ensure their implementation;

3. Appeals to the organizations of the United Nations, Governments, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the implementation of the five-year plan for the implementation of the Arusha Forward-looking Strategies in African Member States under the following priority areas of special concern:

- (a) Agriculture and food production;
- (b) Impact of desertification on the condition of women;
- (c) Industrial development;
- (d) Human resources development;
- (e) Apartheid in South Africa and Namibia;
- (f) Refugee and displaced women;
- (g) Monitoring changes in the situation of women in Africa;

4. Calls upon United Nations organizations, the African Member States and non-governmental organizations to assist in the periodic holding of regional conferences to review and appraise the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies;

5. Calls upon United Nations organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental funding agencies to devise a clear, practical and efficient system of mobilizing and channelling funds for women's programmes and projects in Africa;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate in establishing a mechanism for monitoring the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, the progress made in achieving the objectives of the Decade for Women, and the changing situation of women in Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, (resolution S-13/2), the General Assembly stated that the role of women in development had to be taken seriously into account in development planning and disbursement of resources.

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its sixth session at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 3 to 7 February 1986.⁽¹⁶⁾ In addition to reviewing INSTRAW's 1985 activities,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Board discussed the 1986-1987 programme budget, the process of building a network among Governments, United Nations bodies and non-governmental, academic and women's organizations, particularly the setting up of a network of focal points at the national level, and other matters related to INSTRAW's functioning.

The Board adopted a series of decisions, which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It underlined the importance of research, training and information activities for the implementation of the Strategies and for the role the Institute would continue to play in linking issues of relevance to women and development. The Board, having considered the proposed 1986-1987 programme budget presented by the Director, approved the programme of activities for the biennium, approved revised estimates of $2.6 million taking into account the priorities indicated by the Board for various programmes, requested the Director to implement programmes in accordance with priorities recommended by the Board and within the $2.6 million budget ceiling and to postpone activities involving expenditures beyond that limit until additional resources became available, and encouraged the Director to pursue further her activities to raise funds in order to implement fully the approved programme budget. The Board recommended that, in view of the system-wide medium-term plan on women and development under consideration, it would be desirable for it to examine in 1987 the proposed framework for the long-term development of the Institute's programme. It also recommended that the regional commissions inform the Board in 1987 on their current and future programmes to facilitate co-operation between them and INSTRAW.

The Board decided to endorse the list of designated focal points put forward by the INSTRAW secretariat. It also decided that, in view of financial constraints, a meeting on the subject planned for 1986 should be postponed to 1987. The Director was requested to co-operate with approved focal points to the fullest extent possible within existing resources.

Reporting on the work of the Institute during 1986, the Director stated that programmes had been strengthened in three major areas: improvement of indicators and basic statistics on women; issues relevant to policy analysis at the macro- and micro-levels; and the role of women in particular sectors of development.

In the context of the training, advisory services and fellowships programme, INSTRAW had sponsored jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) an international seminar on rethinking the role of women in development: social sciences research-training (New Delhi, India, 25-27 August 1986), which contributed significantly to training methodologies and curricula on women in development.

Three training workshops were held for producers and users of statistics on women: a subregional workshop for the Caribbean Community (Hastings, Barbados, 29-31 July); and two national workshops (Lagos, Nigeria, 11-14 August; Islamabad, Pakistan, 2-6 November). (See also p. 878.)

A training seminar on the role of women in the development planning process was organized jointly with the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), and co-sponsored by the Latin American Demographic Centre and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) (Santiago, Chile, 27 October-14 November). Owing to the enormous response to that seminar, two subregional seminars for Latin America would be organized by INSTRAW, ILPES and ECLAC in the near future.

A regional training seminar highlighting the need for guidelines for addressing women's issues in rural development and food self-sufficiency, with emphasis on country action plans (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 22-24 August), was organized by INSTRAW and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in co-operation with the Centre on Integrated Rural Development for Asia and the Pacific.

Concerning the priority programme of the role of women in the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), INSTRAW co-sponsored with UNESCO a meeting on socio-economic and policy aspects of water resources management in Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 2-7 June).

At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held in November 1986, 19 Member States pledged $466,084 to INSTRAW for 1987. Actual pledges, together with announced contributions, brought assets for 1987 to $601,084, a 9 per cent increase over 1986. As at 31 December 1986, the balance of the Trust Fund for INSTRAW amounted to $1,567,934.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/32 without vote.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/45 of 31 May 1985, concerning the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 40/38 of 29 November 1985,

Having considered the report of the Board of Trustees of the Institute on its sixth session,

Noting that the programmes implemented by the Institute, as well as those included in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 as approved by the Board of Trustees at its sixth session, are consistent with the goals of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recognizing that it is important for the Institute to have the necessary resources to implement its programme of work,

Convinced of the importance of the Institute's mode of operation through networks for its activities at the national, regional and international levels,

1. Takes note of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its sixth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the fact that the Institute implemented its programme of work for the biennium 1984-1985, making adequate use of its resources;

3. Invites the regional commissions to keep the Board of Trustees of the Institute informed about their most recent activities and future programmes, in order to facilitate continuous co-operation between them and the Institute;

4. Renews its appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other potential donors to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Institute.

Women and development

UNICEF action. At its 18 to 22 April 1986 meeting,⁽¹⁾ the Programme Committee of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) discussed the role of women in development and expressed general support for the outline of the programme implementation strategy on UNICEF's response to women's concerns as contained in a conference room paper.

At its 1986 session (New York, 14-25 April), the UNICEF Executive Board adopted a decision⁽²⁾ by which it endorsed the Programme Committee's proposal that, at future sessions, women in development be a separate agenda item on the basis of a separate report on UNICEF activities in that area. For the 1987 session, the report should contain an implementation strategy on UNICEF's response to women's concerns with verifiable objectives and a time-frame for implementation. The Executive Director's 1987 report should also contain steps taken by UNICEF to implement 1985 General Assembly resolutions on the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women⁽³⁾ and on improving the status of women in the Secretariat.⁽⁴⁾

UNDP action. In 1986, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) created a Division for Women in Development⁽⁵⁾ to co-operate with UNDP operational units in identifying the role of women in the economic and social development of recipient countries and to ensure that those roles were reflected in mainstream programming. Working through focal points in UNDP field offices and headquarters units to promote women as project participants and beneficiaries, the new Division also worked closely with UNIFEM to develop common approaches to development issues.

In response to a 1985 UNDP Governing Council decision,⁽⁶⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted in February 1986 an implementation strategy to deal with issues of women in development.⁽⁷⁾ The strategy's objective was to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of UNDP-supported development programmes through the active involvement of women as participants and/or beneficiaries. The plan of action for the strategy identified the inter-relationships between four basic areas of action: mechanisms for integrating women's participation in development into UNDP's planning and implementation system; support mechanisms; areas of special concern; and resources.

On 27 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Governing Council welcomed the increased involvement of UNDP in integrating women in development. It took note of the plan of action and encouraged the Administrator to implement it. He was urged to bear in mind both the prerogative of developing countries to define their own development priorities and the continuing need to improve programme delivery, and requested to report in 1987 on progress made in implementing the various activities.

By another decision of the same date,⁽⁹⁾ the Governing Council noted that the estimated costs of the Administrator's proposals for the preliminary phase of a staff training programme on women in development was approximately $375,000 for the biennium 1986-1987, and authorized him to meet those costs from savings in the biennial budget. If that did not prove possible, the Administrator was authorized to charge the shortfall against special programme resources under the programme development category. The Council requested him to include cost-effective proposals for full implementation of the proposed training programme in the 1988-1989 budget estimates to be submitted to the Council in 1987 and, at that time, also to submit comprehensive proposals for the strategy's full implementation.

Updating the world survey on women in development

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

At its April/May 1986 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a draft resolution, recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women,⁽¹⁰⁾ concerning the first update of the 1985 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development.⁽¹¹⁾

On 23 May, the Council adopted decision 1986/132 by which it deferred until its July session consideration of the draft resolution.

On 23 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1986/64 without vote.

Updating of the world survey on the role of women in development

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/204 of 17 December 1985, invited the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session to suggest terms of reference for the first update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, which is to be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session, in 1989,

Emphasizing the need to update the multidisciplinary and multisectoral survey on the integration of women in development,

Aware that the majority of the developing countries are at present suffering from a serious financial, economic and social crisis and that their precarious situation is leading to deterioration in the condition of broad groups of the population, particularly women,

Bearing in mind that the problems of the developing countries caused by the critical situation are aggravated by increasing external debt, deterioration in the terms of trade, protectionism, and other measures that affect their exports,

Conscious of the urgent need to study and to propose alternative courses of action to face the critical situation at minimum cost to the well-being of women,

Emphasizing the interrelationship between the preparations for updating the survey and the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, including, inter alia, the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1988 session a first draft of the updated world survey on the role of women in development, taking into account the integrity of the three themes of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, namely, equality, development and peace;

2. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in preparing the update of the survey and in linking it closely to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women:

(a) Analyse the impact on women of the adjustment policies resulting from financial indebtedness, deterioration in the terms of trade, protectionism, and other measures that affect exports from developing countries and resource flows to those countries;

(b) Identify and assess the effectiveness and efficiency of selected innovative policies to promote women's integration into the economy, in particular to draw conclusions regarding any changes in the data in the light of such policies;

(c) Include other emerging development trends, to be identified in consultation with the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations co-operating in this effort, in particular to focus on one or two areas where women are most disadvantaged or most prominent in the work-force, such as the informal sector, agriculture and food production, including livestock raising, and issues relating to women and population;

(d) Examine the impact of the reduction in spending on programmes for the advancement of women in those countries where such reduction has taken place, particularly in the fields of health, education and housing;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make all efforts, through the Statistical Office of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women in co-operation with the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations, to improve the availability and reliability of data on women in the economy, including the informal sector, for the updated survey, bearing in mind the need for standardization of data and consistency between chapters of the updated survey;

4. Requests all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including all the regional commissions and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, to co-operate in the preparation of the first update of the survey;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to pay attention to the concrete implications for action of the survey and the updates by disseminating the results, especially to national machineries by way of information notes and training seminars;

6. Recommends that the first update of the survey should be submitted, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session and to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1990;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in the preparation of the updates, to draw as far as possible on existing and already planned studies.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/64

23 July 1986 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1986/28) without vote, 16 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1,2), orally amended by Vice-Chairman following informal consultations; agenda item 7.

Women and science and technology

On 6 June 1986,⁽¹²⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development invited the Secretary-General to ensure that the implications of the Forward-looking Strategies for the work of United Nations programmes in the field of science and technology for development were fully taken into account. It requested him to examine the requirements for the implementation of the Strategies in relation to the United Nations programme of work in science and technology for development and to report thereon in 1987. He was also requested to include activities both undertaken and proposed to implement the Strategies in the field of science and technology for development in his 1987 report on implementation of a 1985 General Assembly resolution.⁽³⁾

Women and energy

In June 1986,⁽¹³⁾ the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy urged Governments, the United Nations Secretariat and international institutions and organizations to implement fully the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, particularly the paragraphs on women and energy, which were expected to have implications for the future work of the Committee, for the ACC Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and for United Nations programme planning activities in the energy sector.

Integration of women in economic development programmes

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1986/65 without vote.

Strengthening the work of the United Nations in integrating women effectively in economic development programmes and activities

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 setting forth the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the first instrument to include as an objective the full integration of women in the total development effort,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, to which is annexed the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 3342(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3505(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/175 of 21 December 1976, 33/200 of 29 January 1979, 34/204 of 19 December 1979, 35/78 of 5 December 1980, 36/74 of 4 December 1981, 39/172 of 17 December 1984, 40/108 of 13 December 1985 and 40/204 of 17 December 1985 concerning the effective mobilization and integration of women in development,

Fully recognizing the economic value of women's contribution to overall growth and development, including food and agriculture,

Emphasizing the vital importance to national economic growth and development of the effective mobilization and integration of women in economic life,

Aware that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/108, invited intergovernmental organizations to give high priority to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and, in particular, to ensure that sectoral policies and programmes for development included strategies to promote the participation of women as agents and beneficiaries on an equal basis with men, and requested those organizations to report periodically through the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council on the activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies,

Recalling that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, reiterated and extended to the year 2000 the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: equality, development and peace,

Considering that the measures to integrate women effectively in all aspects of development, outlined in chapter II of the Forward-looking Strategies, have major implications for the work programmes of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, in particular in the economic sector,

Further considering that the full participation of women in the formulation and implementation of the above-mentioned work programmes will enhance their effectiveness and efficiency,

Convinced that the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 should take into account the legislative mandate to integrate women in economic development activities, projects and programmes provided by the Conference and by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/108,

Bearing in mind the recent initiatives taken by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme, the Commission on Human Settlements, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic Commission for Africa, as well as by the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to take into account the relevant recommendations of the Forward-looking Strategies when drawing up their respective programmes of work,

Noting paragraph 338 of the Forward-looking Strategies, in which the Economic and Social Council is encouraged to play a more forceful and dynamic role in reviewing and co-ordinating all activities of the United Nations system relevant to women's issues,

1. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To propose activities for the implementation of those measures contained in chapter II of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women that relate to programmes of work of the United Nations in such economic fields specifically identified in the Strategies as employment, education, energy, the environment, food, water and agriculture, housing, settlement, community development and transport, trade and commercial services, science and technology, and communications, in order to provide for effective programme planning to integrate women in economic development, for review by the relevant intergovernmental and expert bodies within their respective spheres of competence;

(b) To include in his instructions for the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 a reminder to programme managers in the area of economic development to take the Forward-looking Strategies into account when preparing their programme proposals and to ensure that the necessary checks are applied during the review of the proposals to determine that the instructions have been followed;

(c) To take account of the relevant policy orientations and goals of the Forward-looking Strategies in the formulation of the objectives and strategies in all sectors of economic development when preparing the draft medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995;

(d) To prepare an intersectoral analysis of the various United Nations programmes dealing with women, with cross-referencing in the context of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development to related work of all other organizations of the United Nations system, to accompany the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps, in particular for the period 1988-1989, to implement chapter V of the Forward-looking Strategies, on international and regional co-operation, taking into account the need to assess the performance, achievements and effectiveness of the work of the United Nations system in integrating women in economic development activities by means of technical co-operation, training and advisory services, research and policy analysis and the dissemination of information;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind section VIII of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, to make the necessary arrangements for the effective, system-wide implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies in the economic field and to ensure that specific measures are taken to co-ordinate the application of the Strategies at the regional and international levels, taking particular account of the need:

(a) To ensure coherence among approaches to the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies by central, regional and sectoral bodies;

(b) To provide to intergovernmental bodies of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations a compilation of United Nations intergovernmental mandates which have specific reference to women;

(c) To harmonize the implementation and monitoring of the Forward-looking Strategies with all relevant United Nations intergovernmental and international strategies and programmes of action;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include, in his comprehensive report on co-ordination to be prepared in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 40/177 of 17 December 1985, a review of intersecretariat arrangements for the co-ordination of administrative, operational and programme activities relating to the integration of women in economic development, as well as specific recommendations aimed at enhancing co-ordination in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, having due regard for the need:

(a) To give priority attention to joint planning and programming;

(b) To ensure in-depth consideration of the question at periodic intervals;

(c) To develop concrete measures to improve the delivery of technical co-operation activities;

(d) To integrate women in the decision-making and policy-formulating process of the United Nations system;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/65

23 July 1986 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1986/128) without vote, 16 July (meeting 14); draft by Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on draft by Canada (E/1986/C.1/L.4); orally amended in Council by Philippines: agenda item 7.

As oral amendment by the Philippines added the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to the bodies referred to in the penultimate preambular paragraph.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 41/451 of 8 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, endorsed Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/65 and noted that the comments made in the Council and the Assembly on the question of effective mobilization and integration of women in development focused on both the impact of development processes on women and the implications of the socio-economic status of women for development, in the light of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

A draft resolution endorsing the Council's resolution was sponsored in the Second Committee by Bangladesh, Canada, Greece, Guyana, Kenya, Lesotho, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, New Zealand and Thailand.⁽¹⁵⁾ This text was subsequently withdrawn in light of the adoption of the above decision.

Medium-term plan for women and development

In a note⁽¹⁵⁾ to the February 1986 organizational session of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretariat referred to the timetable for preparation of a system-wide medium-term plan for women and development called for in a 1985 Council resolution.⁽¹⁶⁾ Stating that the Council's request for submission of the plan—through the Commission on the Status of Women, to CPC and then to the Council in July 1986—raised the problem of adequate time for preparation, the Secretariat suggested the following modified schedule: a preliminary outline would be submitted through the Commission (February/March 1986) to CPC (April/May) and the second regular session of the Council (July); on the basis of the views of those three bodies, the Secretariat and the organizations of the system would elaborate the plan and present it to the Council in May 1987 in time to prepare the system's individual medium-term plans for 1990-1995.

In a February report,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Council, through the Commission, an outline of the proposed framework of the plan. The purposes of the plan, he said, would be to express the United Nations system's commitment to implementing intergovernmental mandates and priorities in the area of women and development and translate that commitment into a co-ordinated programmatic strategy. It would serve as a policy framework for the system's plans and programmes, as an instrument to improve programme coherence and as a yardstick against which to assess the system's efforts in selected priority areas. It would also be a framework for integrating women's concerns into all United Nations planning and programming.

With regard to the plan's policy framework, while the Forward-looking Strategies would set the direction in which the system should proceed, the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women, based on the world survey on the role of women in development, would help to determine areas requiring increased emphasis or renewed focus as part of the implementation of and follow-up to the Strategies. The plan's structure would comprise an introduction, which would highlight the interrelationships among different programmes for women and development, and the interrelationships among those programmes and others addressing global socio-economic concerns, plus the core of the plan, the programmatic strategy. The plan would encompass the following programmes: elimination of all legal and practical forms of discrimination; access to productive resources, income and employment; access to services; participation in the decision-making process; research, data collection, analysis and information; and comprehensive approaches to women and development.

By decision 1986/111 of 7 February 1986, the Council agreed with the modified timetable proposed by the Secretariat and decided to consider the final plan at its second regular session of 1987. In May 1986, the Council had before it a draft resolution, recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women,⁽¹⁰⁾ on the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Strategies (see p. 786). By decision 1986/132 of 23 May, the Council deferred consideration of the draft until its July session.

CPC action. At its April/May 1986 session,⁽¹⁸⁾ CPC had before it the Secretary-General's report on a system-wide medium-term plan for women and development,⁽¹⁷⁾ and agreed that it would consider the draft plan in 1987. The draft plan should define the objectives that could be achieved by the system from 1990 to 1995 in the context of the realization of the Strategies, set priorities for the system during that period and identify means for achieving them, specify which organizations of the system would be responsible for particular objectives and clearly indicate the role of the United Nations itself.

ACC action. In October,⁽¹⁹⁾ CCSQ(PROG) had before it the first draft of the system-wide medium-term plan. It agreed that the final plan would place greater emphasis on removing constraints on the economic contribution of women to development and decided to add a number of subprogrammes to achieve full coverage of significant issues for women and development. The Committee agreed that the Secretariat would prepare a revised draft of the plan to be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women in January 1987 and reviewed by an ad hoc inter-agency meeting following the Commission's session. A final draft would be discussed and approved by CCSQ(PROG) at its first regular session of 1987 and the final text would be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1987 through CPC.

UN Development Fund for Women

In a report on the 1986 activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women,⁽²⁰⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that the Consultative Committee on UNIFEM had met twice during the year (17-21 March, 8-12 September). It had again confirmed that the most important basis for the Fund's new mode of operation was the 1984 General Assembly resolution⁽²¹⁾ by which the Fund was established as a separate entity in autonomous association with UNDP. UNIFEM continued, in 1986, to give operational effect to its mandate as set forth in that resolution, which named two priorities in using the Fund's resources: to serve as a catalyst with the goal of ensuring women's involvement in mainstream development activities, as often as possible at the pre-investment stage; and to support innovative and experimental projects directly benefiting women, in line with national and regional priorities.

UNIFEM began 1986 with 260 ongoing activities, about two thirds of which were implemented by national executing agencies, either Governments or non-governmental organizations (NGOs). A total of 181 project proposals were received during the year. Some were referred to other funding sources while others remained in the pipeline. At its 1986 meetings, the Consultative Committee recommended approval of 21 new projects, pending receipt of final project documents. Another 31 small-scale activities which were assisted by the Fund were noted by the Committee.

The Fund's total income in 1986 amounted to $4.9 million and expenditure to $5.2 million. At the end of the year, the Fund's balance was $12.2 million, of which unspent allocations totalled $8.2 million. The UNDP Administrator established two sub-funds for UNIFEM in 1986: the Canadian International Development Agency/UNIFEM Trust Fund for Women in Appropriate Food Cycle Technologies in Africa for a donation from Canada of $362,319; and a fund for a contribution to CSDHA from Japan of $220,000.

In 1986, UNIFEM received contributions and pledges from 49 Member States. The $3.9 million in pledges made for the Fund's general resources represented an increase of 15 per cent over 1985 pledges, exclusive of special contributions earmarked for specific projects. A further $0.2 million was received from individuals, NGOs and national committees on the Fund, and an additional $0.7 million was received for joint financing. Total contributions to UNIFEM general resources for 1987, taking into account pledges made at the November 1986 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities and those announced after the Conference, were expected to reach $4.7 million.

UNDP Governing Council action. At its special session (New York, 19-21 February 1986), the UNDP Governing Council approved appropriations of $2,172,000 to be allocated from UNIFEM resources to finance its 1986-1987 budget;⁽²²⁾ an increase of 36 per cent over the 1984-1986 level. The Council took this action after considering reports on the topic by the UNDP Administrator⁽²³⁾ and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).⁽²⁴⁾

In accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1986,⁽²⁶⁾ transmitted to the Assembly the UNDP Administrator's report on the 1985 activities of UNIFEM.⁽²⁴⁾ By decision 41/426 of 4 December and decision 41/446 of 5 December, the Assembly took note of the Administrator's report.

Status of women

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-first session (Vienna, 24 February-5 March 1986),⁽¹⁾ recommended 17 draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. They dealt with: elimination of discrimination against women and exercise of all their rights; violence in the family; women in the United Nations (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III); participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation; Palestinian women; women and children under apartheid; Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III); front-line States; assistance provided to South African, Namibian and refugee women; updating the world survey on the role of women in development; elderly women; the role of women in society; implementation of the Arusha Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of African Women Beyond the United Nations Decade for Women; physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex; the programme of future work of the Commission; national machinery to promote the advancement of women; and a system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and system-wide co-ordination of the implementation of the Nairobi Strategies. The Commission also dealt with the provisional agenda for its 1987 session.

In accordance with a 1983 Council resolution⁽²⁾ the Commission appointed a working group to consider confidential and non-confidential communications regarding the status of women. The working group reported that many of the communications received concerned in equal degree discrimination against men and women and did not fall within its competence. Regarding communications specifically related to women, the group reiterated that the trend of the exposure of women, while officially detained, to physical violence continued (see p. 805).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1986/30 without vote.

Implications of the Forward-looking Strategies for the programme planning system and the programme of future work of the Commission on the Status of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women, which is to promote the rights, status and advancement of women in all their dimensions,

Recalling further that in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which were endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, it is stated that the functions of the Commission should include the monitoring of the implementation of the Strategies to the year 2000, which would necessitate the expansion of the functions of the Commission,

Bearing in mind the need for the Commission to review and appraise the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000 in order to ensure their expeditious and universal application,

Aware that since its inception the mandate of the Commission has expanded considerably,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/108, recommended that immediate measures be taken to ensure that future medium-term plans of the United Nations and the specialized agencies should contain intersectoral presentations of the various programmes dealing with issues of concern to women and that revisions of current plans should be considered in the light of the results of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

1. Decides to convene in January 1987 a session of the Commission on the Status of Women of five working days prior to the organizational session of the Economic and Social Council, and that the session shall be held in New York as an exception to the general principle, reaffirmed by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985, that United Nations bodies shall plan to meet at their established headquarters;

2. Decides also that at that session the Commission shall consider the following:

(a) Revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 intended to fully integrate the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women into both economic and social development programmes, prepared for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

(b) Proposals for the preparation by the Secretariat of the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995;

(c) Programme narrative of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989, prepared for consideration by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-seventh session;

(d) Final draft of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, prepared for consideration by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-seventh session and by the Economic and Social Council;

(e) Monitoring, review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies with a view to facilitating their expeditious and universal application, prepared for consideration by the Commission at its thirty-first session;

(f) Proposed guidelines for the long-term programme of work of the Commission to the year 2000;

(g) Proposals for the strengthening of the Commission in discharging its functions, prepared for consideration by the Commission at its thirty-first session; and invites the Commission to concentrate its deliberations on matters which it considers to be priority issues;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission, well in advance of the 1987 session, concise reports, including those identified in the provisional agenda for the 1987 session, and relevant documentation on the matters referred to in paragraph 2 above;

4. Approves the provisional agenda and documentation for the 1987 session of the Commission on the Status of Women contained in the annex to the present resolution.

Women and society

Communication. On 11 March,⁽³⁾ the Philippines transmitted to the Secretary-General a message from its the President which stated that the relatively peaceful transition of power in her country was a reflection of the commitment of the people to preserve popular will. Her gratitude and appreciation were especially addressed to the Filipino women who played a critical role in charting the political destiny of the people, as they participated in human barricades that prevented what could have been a bloody confrontation between elements of the military. The Filipino women had set an example for the whole world to emulate in upholding popular will and defending democratic institutions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1986/27 without vote.

Role of women in society

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the validity of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Noting the importance of the documents adopted by the world conferences held during the Decade,

Convinced of the necessity to secure for all women full and effective enjoyment of the rights embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other pertinent instruments in this field,

Emphasizing that the achievement of equal and full participation of women in all spheres of activity is an integral part of the political, economic, social and cultural development of all countries,

Commending the expanding participation of women in political, economic, social and cultural life, and in the promotion of international peace and co-operation,

Convinced that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women should be among the developmental and policy priorities of Governments, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Bearing in mind that the promotion of the status of women in all its aspects and the complete integration of women in society go beyond the problem of legal equality and that deeper structural transformations of society and changes in current economic relations, as well as the elimination of traditional prejudices through education and dissemination of information, are required to create conditions in which women may develop fully their intellectual and physical capacities and participate actively in the decision-making process related to their political, economic, social and cultural development,

Bearing in mind also that economic inequality, colonialism, racism, racial discrimination in all its forms, apartheid, aggression and interference in the internal affairs of other States, and violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms are obstacles to the active integration of women in all spheres of life,

Bearing in mind the resolution on equal opportunities and equal treatment for men and women in employment, adopted on 27 June 1985 by the International Labour Conference,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 40/101 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly stated its awareness of the necessity to enlarge the possibilities for both men and women to combine parental duties and household work with paid employment and social activities, that the role of women in childbearing should not be the cause of inequality and discrimination, and that child rearing demands shared responsibilities among women, men and society as a whole,

1. Recommends that all Governments and international and non-governmental organizations pay due attention in their activities to the role of women in society in all its interrelated aspects—as mothers, as participants in the economic development process, and as participants in all aspects of public life;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women should contribute to the elimination of all forms of inequality between women and men and to the integration of women in the development process, and should ensure the broad participation of women in the efforts to strengthen international peace and security;

3. Calls upon Member States to adopt necessary effective measures with a view to the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies as a matter of priority, including the establishment or strengthening of appropriate mechanisms for the advancement of women and for the implementation of the Strategies, in order to ensure the full integration of women in the political, economic, social and cultural life of their countries;

4. Invites Member States to encourage such social and economic development as would ensure the equal participation of women in all spheres of work activity, equal pay for work of equal value and equal opportunities for education and vocational training;

5. Appeals to Member States to promote conditions that would enable women to participate as equal partners with men in public and political life, in the decision-making process at all levels and in the management of different spheres of life in society;

6. Urges Governments to recognize the special status and social importance of childbearing and child rearing and to take all necessary measures to encourage the support of parenthood, including paid maternity, parental and child-care leave, and to provide women with security for their jobs as long as necessary with a view to allowing them to fulfil their role as mothers without prejudice to their professional and public activities;

7. Appeals to Governments to promote the establishment of appropriate facilities for the care and education of children as a means of combining parenthood with economic, political, social, cultural and other activities, and thus to assist women towards full integration into their societies;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to pay due attention to the questions of the situation of women, their role in society and the progress achieved in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies when preparing future reports on the world social situation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to pay due attention to all the interrelated aspects of the role of women in society when preparing surveys on the role of women in development;

10. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women to pay due attention to all aspects of the role of women in society in its consideration of the question of women and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 41/110 without vote.

The role of women in society

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the validity of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Noting the importance of the documents adopted by the world conferences held during the Decade,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/101 of 13 December 1985, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/27 of 23 May 1986, which reiterated the expression by the Assembly of its awareness of the necessity to enlarge the possibilities for both men and women to combine parental duties and household work with paid employment and social activities, and of its awareness that the role of women in childbearing should not be the cause of inequality and discrimination and that child rearing demands shared responsibilities among women, men and society as a whole,

Women and peace

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1986/20 without vote.

Participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the necessity of the full participation of women in all activities related to the decision-making process at all levels, including those related to lasting peace and international co-operation,

Affirming the need for equal participation of women in the decision-making process, including that related to peace, disarmament and security at national, regional and international levels, and within the United Nations system,

Referring to the relevant provisions of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and to General Assembly resolutions 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation, and 39/124 of 14 December 1984, in which it requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider what measures might be necessary to implement the Declaration,

Bearing in mind that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, emphasized that the main principles and directions formulated in the Declaration for women's activities aimed at strengthening peace should be put into practice,

Taking note with satisfaction of General Assembly resolution 40/102 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly, inter alia, requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider measures which might be necessary to implement the Declaration in the context of the Forward-looking Strategies for the period up to the year 2000,

Reaffirming Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/20 of 24 May 1984 on the future work of the Commission on the Status of Women, in which the Council recommended, inter alia, that the Commission at its thirty-first session, as a contribution to the International Year of Peace, should consider recommendations for concrete proposals to ensure the full participation of women in the establishment of conditions conducive to the maintenance of peace and to the elimination of inequality and poverty,

1. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women to consider the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation in the context of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in order to elaborate action-oriented recommendations aimed at the increased participation of women in all spheres of life, including that of the promotion of peace;

2. Calls upon Member States to take practical institutional, educational and organizational measures to facilitate women's participation on an equal footing with men in the decision-making process, including that related to peace, disarmament negotiations and the solution of conflicts, and to inform the Secretary-General of their activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Declaration as a contribution to the International Year of Peace;

3. Invites Member States and the Secretary-General to support increased participation of women in all United Nations bodies, including those dealing with peace, disarmament and international negotiations;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to take adequate steps to give wide publicity to the Declaration and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/20

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) without vote, 20 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 41/109 without vote.

Participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation

The General Assembly,

Confirming the noble goal enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations to maintain peace and security in the world and the determination of the States Members of the United Nations expressed therein to save present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Recalling that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000, recognized that women should participate fully in all efforts to strengthen and maintain international peace and security and to promote international co-operation,

Expressing the need for equal participation of women in the decision-making process, including that related to peace, disarmament and security at national, regional and international levels, including the United Nations system,

Convinced that the International Year of Peace, proclaimed for the year 1986 by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/3 of 24 October 1985, could give new impulses for safeguarding international peace and security,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,

Recalling its resolution 39/124 of 14 December 1984, in which it requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider what measures might be necessary in order to implement the Declaration,

Bearing in mind its resolution 40/102 of 13 December 1985, in which it requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider measures which may be necessary to implement the Declaration in the context of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000,

Wishing to encourage the active participation of women in promoting international peace, security and co-operation,

Convinced that increased efforts are required to eliminate still existing forms of discrimination against women in every field of human endeavour,

Conscious of the need to implement the provisions of the Declaration,

1. Pledges its determination to encourage the full participation of women in the economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs of society and in the endeavour to promote international peace and co-operation;

2. Appeals to all Governments to take the necessary measures for putting into practice the principles and provisions of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation;

3. Invites all Governments to give wide publicity to the Declaration and its implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take adequate steps to ensure that publicity is given to the Declaration;

5. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/20 of 23 May 1986, in which the Council called upon Member States to take practical institutional, educational and organizational measures to facilitate women's participation on an equal footing with men in the decision-making process, including that related to peace, disarmament negotiations and the solution of conflicts, and to inform the Secretary-General of their activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Declaration as a contribution to the International Year of Peace;

6. Recommends that future medium-term plans of the United Nations and the specialized agencies should, in accordance with the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, contain intersectoral presentations of the various programmes dealing with issues of concern to women, including those relating to the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation;

7. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women at its session in 1987 to consider, inter alia, guidelines for the long-term programme of work of the Commission up to the year 2000, including activities for the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation;

8. Decides to consider the further implementation of the Declaration at its forty-second session, as a sub-item of the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

Women under apartheid

On the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council, on 23 May 1986, adopted resolution 1986/22 by which it demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners, who increasingly included women and children. It urged Member States and United Nations organizations to give effect to the Forward-looking Strategies that dealt with women and children under apartheid, with particular attention being given to education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities and the strengthening of the women's sections of the liberation movements.

In accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution,(4) the Special Committee against Apartheid on 9 August 1986 observed the annual International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia.

Assistance to South African, Namibian and refugee women

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1986/25 by recorded vote.

Measures of assistance provided to South African, Namibian and refugee women

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on measures of assistance provided to women inside South Africa and Namibia and to women from South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as a result of the practice of apartheid, prepared in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/17 of 24 May 1984,

Further taking note of the report of the International Conference on Women and Children under Apartheid, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 7 to 10 May 1985 and the recommendations contained therein,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 34/93 K of 12 December 1979, 35/206 N of 16 December 1980 and 36/172 K of 17 December 1981 on women and children under apartheid,

Noting with regret that during the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace the status of women living under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia has deteriorated,

Concerned about the special needs of women and children forced to flee from South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as a result of the practice of apartheid,

1. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to intensify their support and solidarity with women and children inside and outside South Africa and Namibia and in front-line States, in particular:

(a) To provide for the widest possible dissemination of information about the situation of women and children under apartheid;

(b) To provide legal, humanitarian and other assistance to women and children and their families who are victims of apartheid;

(c) To provide assistance to women in the national liberation movements to enable them to attend major international conferences and seminars and to undertake speaking tours to further promote international solidarity with oppressed women;

(d) To support the projects and activities of the southern African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, particularly those involving women, children and refugees;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To ensure close co-ordination between United Nations bodies, in particular the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the Centre against Apartheid, the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Council for Namibia, as well as the Department of Public Information, with a view to maximizing publicity on the situation of women and children under apartheid;

(b) To report to the Commission on the Status of Women at each of its sessions on new developments concerning the situation of women living under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia;

3. Recommends to the General Assembly that it request the Special Committee against Apartheid to include in its work programme for 1987 the organization of a seminar on the special needs of South African, Namibian and refugee women and ways of increasing measures of assistance to them, in close co-operation with the Branch for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Economic Commission for Africa, and to submit the report of the seminar to the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1988 session.

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 43-1-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) by recorded vote (43-1-8), 20 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1.2); agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Spain, United Kingdom.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said the text did not have direct implications specific to women and should be dealt with elsewhere; such resolutions increased the politicization of the Commission on the Status of Women. Canada said its views on apartheid were well known. However, some of the wording and tone of the resolution went further than seemed appropriate. The Federal Republic of Germany said the resolution presented a distorted picture of the issues and contributed to further politicization of the Commission.

Palestinian women

The Commission on the Status of Women had before it an interim report⁽⁵⁾ by the Secretary-General on the preparation of a comprehensive report on the situation of Palestinian women living within and outside the occupied Arab territories, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984⁽⁶⁾. The Council had requested that the final version of the report be submitted to the Commission in 1988. Also before the Commission, as requested in 1984, was an updated version⁽⁷⁾ of the Secretary-General's 1984 report⁽⁸⁾ on the situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Arab territories.

In his interim report, the Secretary-General proposed that the first part of the comprehensive report should deal with Palestinian women living within the occupied Arab territories. He suggested that the updated report⁽⁷⁾ should be adapted and further updated for that purpose. The second part would contain information on the situation of Palestinian women living outside the occupied territories and, in keeping with established procedure, would focus on their situation in the host countries as defined in United Nations practice, namely, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Secretariat would seek information from those Governments, as well as from the Palestine Liberation Organization, on the situation of Palestinian women living there.

By a 5 May letter⁽⁹⁾ to the Secretary-General, Israel submitted a rebuttal to the updated version of the report on the situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Arab territories.⁽⁷⁾ Israel stated that the report painted a partial picture limited to activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and ignored Israel's parallel and significant efforts. Also, by its own admission, the report was based on material dealing with living conditions of Palestinian people as a whole, and thus was only marginally related to women.

Israel stated that the situation of Arab women in Judaea, Samaria and Gaza compared favourably with neighbouring Arab countries and that significant progress had been achieved in those regions considering the situation prior to 1967 when the problems, neglect and suffering prevalent there were not subject to United Nations scrutiny. Information and statistics were provided on emigration, the economic situation, political matters and social matters, including employment and working conditions, education and health.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/21 by recorded vote.

Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the prevailing living conditions of Palestinian women,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the preparation of a comprehensive report on the situation of Palestinian women living within and outside the occupied Arab territories,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the comprehensive report, to focus on the identification of the main humanitarian needs of Palestinian women;

2. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1988 session to propose concrete measures of assistance to Palestinian women on the basis of the conclusions of that report;

3. Calls upon United Nations organs and organizations, as well as national, regional and international women's organizations, to extend their assistance to Palestinian women;

4. Emphasizes that nothing less than the realization of their inalienable rights will put an end to the sufferings of Palestinian women.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/21

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 44-1-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) by the recorded vote (44-1-7), 20 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, United Kingdom.

Paragraphs 2 and 4 were adopted by separate recorded votes. In the Second Committee and the Council, paragraph 2 was adopted by 43 to 1, with 8 abstentions. Paragraph 4 was approved by the Committee by 41 to 1, with 9 abstentions, and adopted by the Council by 41 to 1, with 10 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said the resolution was one-sided and did not help to solve the serious problems in the Middle East; only a comprehensive settlement respecting the right of all men and women to live in safety would bring peace to the area.

The United Kingdom said the resolution did not have direct implications specific to women and should be dealt with elsewhere; such resolutions increased the politicization of the Commission on the Status of Women. The Federal Republic of Germany said its views on Palestine were well known. However, the resolution presented a distorted picture of the issues and contributed to further politicization of the Commission.

Elderly women

In accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on the question of elderly women⁽¹¹⁾ to the Commission on the Status of Women.

The information on the socio-economic conditions of elderly women presented in the report was intended to serve as a basis for formulating and implementing policies and programmes to respond to their special social and economic planning needs. A central demographic factor influencing those needs was the longer life expectancy of women relative to men, resulting in their increasing predominance in the elderly population, which thus consisted primarily of women at the oldest ages when frailty and disability implied the greatest need for family and community support.

Vulnerable groups had been identified in both developing and developed countries. In urban areas of developing countries, the weakening of the extended family through industrialization and crowded living conditions increased the risk of poverty and destitution among elderly widows; in rural areas, the migration of young people to cities for employment threatened the traditional support systems of elderly women. In many developed countries, the growing tendency for older women to live alone increased their risk of psychological and social isolation and physical hardship.

The report stated that the experience gained from issues facing elderly women needed to be analysed in relation to projections of trends in order to ensure that current generations of young and middle-aged women would not face problems similar to those faced by their older sisters. Factors which needed to be taken into account in that analysis included the role of education, employment, pension schemes, recognition of the work involved in raising children and the contribution and potential of elderly women as a human resource.

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/26 without vote.

Elderly women

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the International Plan of Action on Aging adopted by the World Assembly on Aging, in which it is indicated that women will increasingly constitute a majority of the older population and that gender-based differences in longevity have implications for living arrangements, income, health care and other support needs,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, in which the Assembly endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging, Commending the report of the Secretary-General on the question of elderly women, prepared in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/13 of 24 May 1984, which documents the increasing number of elderly women and the challenges faced in addressing their needs,

Noting with appreciation the work of non-governmental organizations on behalf of and with the elderly, as well as the statement submitted by a broad group of non-governmental organizations to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session,

Noting with concern the continued undeserved and cumulative vulnerability of elderly women in a number of developed and developing countries,

Stressing the need for effective long-term policies and programmes to prepare women and men equally for a secure and dignified old age,

Reaffirming the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 286, which states specific concerns and needs of elderly women,

Further reaffirming the need to implement the Forward-looking Strategies in a timely, effective manner,

1. Recommends that Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations should effectively harmonize the essential features of the International Plan of Action on Aging with the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, on behalf of elderly women, to ensure their economic and social security and to promote systems of social support and primary health care appropriate to their needs;

2. Further recommends that elderly women should be accorded a respected role in society which would reduce their isolation and permit their full participation in society, including participation in the development of policies and programmes that affect their well-being;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure that in all future reports on the question of aging, data are presented and analysed by sex and age cohorts, and that information is included on the needs and risks of the very elderly, most of whom are women, and the most disadvantaged among elderly women;

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General should encourage the exchange of information, knowledge and experience and that he should report on successful measures in both the developing and the developed countries in meeting the economic, social, health and cultural needs of elderly women and in reducing the risks to which they are exposed;

5. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to compile relevant data and prepare appropriate strategies for the development and improvement of reporting systems to permit monitoring and comparison of the condition of elderly women with that of elderly men and younger women and, in time, better appraisal of the impact of various circumstances, policies and programmes on the status of elderly women.

Violence in the family

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/18 without vote.

Violence in the family

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/36 of 29 November 1985 on domestic violence and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/22 of 4 May 1982 on abuses against women and children and 1984/14 of 24 May 1984 on violence in the family,

Recalling also resolution 6, on the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Bearing in mind the recommendations made by the Seventh Congress on the subject of women as victims of crime,

Bearing in mind also the deliberations on the subject of domestic violence at the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985,

Mindful of the need to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women nationally and internationally, especially paragraph 258, in which it is stated that women victims of violence should be given particular attention and comprehensive assistance; that legal measures should be formulated to prevent violence and to assist women victims; that national machinery should be established to deal with the question of violence against women within the family and society; and that preventive policies should be elaborated, and institutionalized forms of assistance to women victims provided,

Recognizing that violence in the family is a serious and persistent world-wide problem, which includes physical, psychological and sexual assault and abuse,

Convinced that failure to take the appropriate measures to control violence in the family represents denial and condonation of the practice and contributes to its persistence,

Recalling that, in pursuance of Council resolution 1984/14, the Secretary-General is to convene a meeting of experts on family violence,

Emphasizing that the results of that meeting will provide a solid basis for the Commission on the Status of Women in its efforts to implement the relevant provisions of the Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Deplores the abuse of women in the family that both reflects and reinforces the inferior status of women and jeopardizes their opportunities for full and equal participation in economic, social, cultural and political development;

2. Condemns the practice of violence in the family as a grave violation of the rights of women and a threat to their physical and mental well-being;

3. Commends the non-governmental organizations for drawing attention to this problem, and welcomes the demonstration of national and international political will, particularly during the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, as well as the efforts of the competent United Nations organs, organizations and bodies that have begun to address this issue;

4. Encourages Member States and competent organizations of the United Nations system to develop or improve data collection on family violence;

5. Recommends that the agenda for the meeting of experts be prepared taking into consideration the comments made and the concerns expressed during the thirty-first session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Expert Group meeting. In accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹²⁾ and within the framework of a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹³⁾ an Expert Group Meeting on Violence in the Family, with Special Emphasis on its Effects on Women, was held at Vienna from 8 to 12 December 1986. A major conclusion of the Meeting was that violence against women in the family crossed all divisions of class, income, race, culture and religion, and was, in the vast majority of cases, forced upon women by men. In addition to recommendations for action to be taken at the international and regional levels, the Group made detailed recommendations on national criminal justice and justice systems with special reference to domestic violence against women.

Violence against detained women

In accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report⁽¹⁵⁾ based on replies from Governments to his request for their views on physical violence against detained women specific to their sex. Replies were received from 17 Governments plus one which indicated that no material was available on the subject. The only reference to physical violence against women while detained was to rape, with some Governments indicating that if rape was committed in prison, the laws governing rape as a criminal offence, as well as the administrative regulations of the house of detention, were applicable. All Governments but one indicated that, to minimize physical violence against detained women, women should serve their sentences in quarters separate from men's quarters or in institutions for women only, where duty guards should also be women. One Government cited the good results of having duty guards of both sexes. A number of countries mentioned specific provisions applicable to inmates who were pregnant or had young children.

The Secretary-General drew the Commission's attention to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,⁽¹⁶⁾ which stated that the number of women in detention had increased over the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985), that the trend was expected to continue, that detained women were exposed to physical violence, sexual and moral harassment, that conditions of their detention were often below acceptable hygienic standards and that their children were deprived of maternal care.

The Secretary-General also drew attention to the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,⁽¹⁷⁾ which had dealt with the issues of the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system and the situation of women as victims of crime.

A working group on communications on the status of women, established by the Commission, considered both the Secretary-General's report and a note by him on non-confidential communications concerning the status of women. The group reiterated that the earlier trend, namely the exposure of women while officially detained to physical violence, continued.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/29 without vote.

Physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with grave concern that the Commission on the Status of Women, in the report on its thirty-first session, drew attention to the continuing pattern of physical violence against women, cases of rape and other sexual abuse, including violence against pregnant women, while detained,

Considering that women are especially vulnerable to sexual violence,

Considering also that pregnant women require special protection and care by society,

Recalling its resolutions 76(V) of 5 August 1947, 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950 and 1984/19 of 24 May 1984,

Recalling also its resolutions 1980/39 of 2 May 1980 and 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, by which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission to consider communications relating to the status of women, including the replies of Governments thereon, if any, and to draw to the attention of the Council emerging trends and patterns so that it may decide what action to take,

Taking note of the consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on this question by the Commission at its thirty-first session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and expresses its thanks to all Member States that contributed to it;

2. Calls upon all Member States that have not yet done so to take appropriate measures urgently, as necessary, to eradicate acts of physical violence against detained women;

3. Invites Member States that have not yet done so to submit to the Secretary-General a report on legislative and other measures they have taken, as applicable, to prevent physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex, so as to enable him to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1988 session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission prepared on the basis of reports received from Member States;

5. Requests the Commission to continue to consider communications relating to the status of women and to make recommendations thereon to the Council, if necessary.

Elimination of discrimination against women

At its February/March 1986 session(¹) the Commission on the Status of Women approved, for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, a draft resolution on elimination of discrimination against women and exercise of all their rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1986/17 without vote.

Elimination of discrimination against women and exercise of all their rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the extreme importance of eliminating discrimination against women to ensure the economic, social, cultural, political and civil rights of women,

Convinced of the necessity of securing conditions under which women can fully enjoy all their rights as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Considering that Member States should take all the necessary measures at the national level to create the conditions required for women to play an active role in the political, economic and social development of their countries,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women adopted by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Affirming the importance and interrelationship of the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the need to pursue them,

Recalling the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Considering that existing international tension leads to the diversion, as a result of the accumulation of arms in many parts of the world, of immense resources from the implementation of the tasks directly or indirectly related to the advancement of women,

Recognizing that in some countries a considerable number of women living under conditions of economic and social crisis face serious problems in exercising their rights, including the rights to life in peace, to education and to work,

Noting with concern that, in general, the level of unemployment among women exceeds that among men, making it more difficult for women to exercise their political, economic and social rights,

Aware that the insufficient educational level resulting in lower skills, the lack of political freedom, and social inequality limit the possibilities for women to participate in the development process, and stressing the importance of women's education and of providing women with access to technical training programmes,

1. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations and the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies concerned to continue to pay priority attention to the development and implementation of effective measures to secure the exercise by women of their rights;

2. Invites all the United Nations bodies concerned to take an active part in the realization of specific programmes and activities under the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women which are to be implemented following the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account those opinions expressed in the Commission on the Status of Women that concern the ways and means for women to exercise their rights, including the rights to life in peace, to education and to work;

4. Requests also the Secretary-General, in the preparation of reviews on the role of women in development, to pay the necessary attention to the progress achieved in the elimination of discrimination against women and the exercise of their rights;

5. Recommends the inclusion of an item on the elimination of discrimination against women and the exercise of their rights in the agenda of the 1988 session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Convention on discrimination against women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982(²) under the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women(³) held its fifth session in New York from 10 to 21 March 1986.(4)

The Committee considered eight initial reports of States parties on legislative, juridical, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention, which had entered into force in 1981.⁽⁵⁾ The reports were submitted by Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Mongolia, Portugal, Venezuela and Viet Nam.

Following examination of the reports, CEDAW adopted a general recommendation saying that initial reports of States parties should cover the situation up to the date of submission, after which reports should be submitted at least every four years after the first report was due and should include obstacles encountered in implementing the Convention fully and measures adopted to overcome them. CEDAW also suggested that States parties might consider establishing public institutions to eliminate discrimination against women.

Following a discussion of the problems of women's unemployment and women in rural areas, the Committee decided to reflect a number of general observations in its report, dealing with the kind of information that should be included in reports of States parties, and measures which should be taken by them to involve more women at decision-making levels of government and to introduce measures to overcome obstacles to equality arising from prejudices, customs or practices based on stereotyped roles. Reports should also include information on unemployment and differences in wage levels between men and women and on measures to combat them.

In a resolution on the International Year of Peace (1986) (see p. 115), CEDAW called on States parties to the Convention to show their commitment to peace and the advancement of women by taking steps to ensure equal participation of women in national and international bodies, committees and institutions having power to make decisions concerning peace, war and disarmament. It appealed to women, men and NGOs to accelerate and intensify their activities in promoting world peace in a spirit of equality and mutual co-operation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/4 without vote.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, by which the Assembly adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, annexed thereto,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 35/140 of 11 December 1980, 36/131 of 14 December 1981, 37/64 of 3 December 1982, 38/109 of 16 December 1983, 39/130 of 14 December 1984 and 40/39 of 29 November 1985, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/1 of 17 May 1983, 1984/8 of 22 May 1984, 1984/10 of 24 May 1984 and 1985/18 of 28 May 1985,

Aware of the important contribution which the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women can make to eliminating all forms of discrimination against women and to achieving legal and de facto equality between women and men,

Noting the emphasis placed by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace on the ratification of and accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its fifth session, notably the general recommendation, suggestion and general observations of the Committee, as well as its resolution on the International Year of Peace,

Recalling the decision of the third meeting of the States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to request the Secretary-General to seek the views of States parties to the Convention on reservations which could be considered to come within the scope of article 28, paragraph 2, of the Convention and to include those comments in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, and to include in the agenda of their next meeting the question of reservations to the Convention,

1. Welcomes the ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by an increasing number of Member States;
2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;
3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;
4. Urges States parties to make all possible efforts to submit their initial implementation reports in accordance with article 18 of the Convention and the guidelines of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women;
5. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its fifth session;
6. Notes with concern the Committee's account of the present constraints within which it operates with regard to the backlog of reports awaiting consideration and encourages a continuing discussion on ways and means of dealing with this problem, including possible adjustment of the reporting system;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to make all efforts to ensure adequate servicing of the Committee;
8. Takes note of the general recommendation and suggestion adopted by the Committee pursuant to its discussion at its fifth session on ways and means of implementing article 21 of the Convention;
9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to the General Assembly at its forty-first session and to the Commission on the Status of Women, for information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 41/108 without vote.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling its resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, by which it adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/140 of 11 December 1980, 36/131 of 14 December 1981, 37/64 of 3 December 1982, 38/109 of 16 December 1983, 39/130 of 14 December 1984 and 40/39 of 29 November 1985,

Recalling the decision of the third meeting of the States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to request the Secretary-General to seek the views of States parties to the Convention on reservations which could be considered to come within the scope of article 28, paragraph 2, of the Convention, to request him to include these views in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session and to place on the agenda of their next meeting the question of reservations to the Convention,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its fifth session,

1. Notes with appreciation the increasing number of Member States that have ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit annually to the General Assembly a report on the status of the Convention;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention;

5. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its fifth session;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

7. Urges States parties to make all possible efforts to submit their initial reports in accordance with article 18 of the Convention and the guidelines of the Committee;

8. Notes with concern the account by the Committee of the present constraints within which it operates with regard to the backlog of reports awaiting consideration and encourages a continuing discussion on ways and means of dealing with this problem, including possible adjustment of the reporting system;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to make all efforts to ensure adequate servicing for the effective functioning of the Committee;

10. Takes note of the general recommendation and suggestion adopted by the Committee pursuant to its discussion at its fifth session on ways and means of implementing article 21 of the Convention;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to the Commission on the Status of Women at its session in 1988, for information.

Chapter XIX

Children, youth and aging persons

Reducing infant and child mortality remained a primary goal for the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in 1986, its fortieth anniversary year. Efforts continued to achieve universal child immunization by 1990 and to combat the world's biggest killer of children—dehydration from diarrhoea—through oral rehydration therapy. As a result of those two measures alone, 1.5 million children were alive who would otherwise have died in 1986.

In a message issued on 11 December—UNICEF's anniversary—the Secretary-General said that children were humanity's most precious resource and embodied the world's future. UNICEF's work in 119 countries had sought to remove impediments to children's survival and healthy growth.

Ten years of work by the United Nations culminated in the General Assembly's adoption, in 1986, of the Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally, which undertook to reconcile various juridical principles on foster placement and adoption with religious laws and practices.

In follow-up to International Youth Year (1985), the Economic and Social Council called for improved co-ordination and information in that area, while the Assembly urged Governments to strengthen their youth programmes and to give priority to resolving youth unemployment, and took further action to strengthen communication between the United Nations and youth.

The Assembly called for intensified efforts to implement the 1982 International Plan of Action on Aging and requested the Secretary-General to strengthen United Nations programmes on that subject.

Children

In 1986, UNICEF assistance was provided in the areas of child survival and development (CSD), primary health care, water supply and sanitation, education, social welfare, household food security and emergency relief. A significant outcome of the CSD strategy had been the learning of techniques of promoting low-cost measures on a national scale; another had been the broadening of international co-operation for children as UNICEF worked with many institutions—global, regional and national—in support of CSD.

The General Assembly, by resolution 41/85, adopted a Declaration on social and legal principles relating to the protection and welfare of children, especially with reference to foster placement and adoption.

UN Children's Fund

In 1986, UNICEF co-operated in programmes in 119 countries and territories (42 in Africa, 34 in Asia, 30 in Latin America and the Caribbean and 13 in the Middle East and North Africa), with a child population under 16 years old of about 1.4 billion. In addition, it provided technical or advisory services in 18 higher-income countries.

Support was given to child health programmes in 113 countries, to education in 109, to child nutrition in 98, to child welfare services in 95, to water supply and sanitation in 93 and to emergency relief in 15.

Total UNICEF programme expenditure amounted to $326 million in 1986. Of that amount, $119 million or 36 per cent was expended on child health, $58 million or 18 per cent on water supply and sanitation, $53 million or 16 per cent on planning and project preparation, programme support services and programme support communication, $32 million or 10 per cent on emergency relief, $31 million or 10 per cent on education, $17 million or 5 per cent on child nutrition, and $16 million or 5 per cent on community and family-based services for children.

In his report covering 1986 activities,⁽¹⁾ the UNICEF Executive Director stated that the world economic environment continued negatively to affect the majority of developing nations outside Asia, particularly in Africa and Latin America. China, India and several other Asian countries were economically more successful, although the economies of at least six major Asian countries remained stagnant. In countries where economic growth was negative or negligible, the situation of children suffered. Nevertheless, CSD strategies—especially immunization and oral rehydration therapy (ORT)—were undertaken in many countries; accelerated universal child immunization (UCI) programmes were adopted by more than 80 States. Progress was also achieved in linking CSD actions with other basic services, such as water supply and sanitation, maternal health and household food security.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its 1986 regular session in New York from 14 to 25 April 1986.⁽⁷⁾ It also met on 25 June to elect officers for the period 1 August 1986 to 31 July 1987. The Programme Committee met from 18 to 22 April 1986 and the Committee on Administration and Finance from 22 to 24 April.

On 25 April,⁽⁸⁾ the Board emphasized that the drafting of a convention on the rights of the child—being carried out by the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 776)—should be concluded without further delay. It requested UNICEF to participate and encouraged its members to assist in the drafting for its early conclusion. The UNICEF Executive Director was asked to keep the Board informed of progress.

In connection with the preparation of the system-wide policy review of operational activities for development (see p. 411), the Board, on 25 April,⁽⁴⁾ drew to the attention of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council some issues that it considered particularly relevant: the beneficial impact aid co-ordination could have for mothers and children, as evidenced by UNICEF's experiences in support of the resident Co-ordinator and the Joint Consultative Group on Policy (see p. 820), and its work with other organizations; the relevance of adapting technical assistance to the changing needs of developing countries by promoting low-cost interventions combined with social mobilization, such as the CSD initiative; the need to integrate women's concerns into development activities and to promote full consideration of the impact of economic stabilization and adjustment programmes on mothers and children, as evidenced by UNICEF's experience; the importance of a major global mobilization for Africa where vulnerable groups had been most severely affected and where food, health and economic policy issues were intertwined; and the relevance of sharing UNICEF's resource mobilization experience, particularly where collaboration with other organizations had proved effective.

Programme policy decisions

At its April 1986 session, the UNICEF Executive Board reviewed UNICEF's performance in 1985 and approved the programme objectives and priorities of the medium-term plan 1985-1989. The Board endorsed⁽⁹⁾ its Programme Committee's proposal that women in development be considered as a separate agenda item at future Board sessions. It endorsed⁽⁶⁾ various activities as UNICEF's response with regard to children in especially difficult circumstances, notably those in areas of armed conflict, affected by natural disasters or in exploitative work situations, street children and abused and neglected children.

The Board approved⁽⁷⁾ $84.5 million from general resources for programme co-operation and replenishment of the Emergency Reserve Fund, "noted" programmes to be funded from specific-purpose contributions in the amount of $285.7 million, and endorsed the Executive Director's emergency appeal for $102 million for 16 countries in Africa. It also decided⁽⁸⁾ that a review of UNICEF communications strategy, including development education, in industrialized countries should be carried out and a report prepared for the 1987 session. In addition, it called on the General Assembly,⁽⁹⁾ at its 1986 special session on Africa (see p. 442), to support programmes to develop Africa's human resources and to help African States achieve the global objective of health for all by the year 2000 and universal child immunization by 1990.

On the recommendation of its Working Group on the Future Work and Procedures of the Executive Board, the Board decided⁽¹⁰⁾ that the programme of work of its Committees would be organized to permit adequate discussion by: achieving rational use of time through concise interventions and strict punctuality; allowing for maximum interaction without being structured by a formal speakers' list; utilizing informal consultations; consulting secretariat staff members on an informal basis; and extending Committee meetings as required. The Board also decided⁽¹¹⁾ that the Working Group would concentrate in 1986-1987 on: clarifying the presentation of programme and administrative budgets; achieving a biennial concentration of the Board's work in phase with the budget cycle; and further improving the Board's work. It recommended that at each Board session the secretariat make a presentation on one or two programmes for each region and one or two mid-term reviews of programmes, and requested the secretariat to develop guidelines for preparing regional reports on programme development and country programme recommendations, taking into account the information needs of the Board and its Committees.

The Board, bearing in mind the review of the CSD revolution to be undertaken by it in 1987, requested the Executive Director to submit a report examining the emphasis given in implementing UNICEF priorities.⁽¹²⁾ It also decided that the secretariat should provide more financial and evaluative data in programme documentation.⁽¹³⁾

With regard to financial rules and regulations, the Board requested⁽¹⁴⁾ the Economic and Social Council to recommend that the General Assembly authorize the Executive Director to promulgate the financial regulations required by UNICEF's specific needs. The Executive Director was requested to prepare a draft of UNICEF financial regulations appropriate to its needs, ensuring conformity with the United Nations Financial Regulations and taking into consideration UNDP's recently adopted regulations, presenting the Board with information on points where they differed. He was also asked to obtain the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) thereon.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted decision 1986/181 without vote.

Report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1986, the Economic and Social Council:

- (a) Endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its 1986 session;
- (b) Recommended to the General Assembly that the Executive Director of the Fund be authorized to promulgate, after consultation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subsequent deliberation and approval by the Executive Board, the financial regulations required to meet the specific needs of the Fund.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/181

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/125) without vote, 16 July (meeting 15); draft by Chairman (E/1986/C.3/L.16); agenda item 19.

Medium-term plan for 1985-1989

The Executive Board's Programme Committee had before it the 1985-1989 medium-term plan.⁽¹⁵⁾ The plan, which was revised annually, was a framework of projections rather than a detailed plan with dates and quantities, except in terms of income and expenditure.

UNICEF's basic long-term work and country programme goals were: to accelerate the reduction of infant and child mortality; to protect and improve the situation of children through a broader range of child development actions; to help improve the situation and status of mothers and poorer women; and to contribute to the slowing of population growth.

Major programme thrusts would include: acceleration of child immunization and the use of ORT; promotion and protection of breast-feeding and sound weaning practices; increased use of growth monitoring; and control of malaria in children and pregnant women and action to combat acute respiratory diseases.

The plan also outlined regional strategies and the planning of UNICEF capacity for supportive action.

On the recommendation of the Programme Committee, the Executive Board reaffirmed⁽¹⁶⁾ its endorsement of CSD priorities and their implementation in the context of strengthening primary health care (PHC) and the basic services strategy. While recognizing that country programme priorities should be set according to the specific needs of countries, the Board endorsed the major programme thrusts described in the plan, as amended with a broader view of child survival, development and protection. It stressed the importance of programme support and the need to mobilize international support to ensure successful implementation of UNICEF-assisted programmes. The Board also encouraged close collaboration between United Nations agencies, bilateral aid agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and national Governments and organizations.

The 1985-1989 medium-term plan also contained the UNICEF financial plan for 1986-1989, which was designed to bring general resource income and expenditures into better balance and improve liquidity. The plan projected an income of $399 million for 1986, and $416 million, $438 million and $461 million for the following three years. Projected expenditures for the same period were $393 million, $410 million, $431 million and $454 million.

The Executive Board approved⁽¹⁷⁾ the medium-term plan as a framework of projections for 1986-1989, including the preparation of up to $190 million in programme commitments from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1987. That amount was subject to the availability of resources and to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure in the plan continued to be valid.

Awards

On 14 April, at the ceremony to celebrate UNICEF's fortieth anniversary (see below), the Chairman of the Executive Board presented the 1986 Maurice Pate Memorial Award—established to commemorate the first Executive Director of UNICEF—to the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. The award was presented to the League as a tribute to its outstanding contribution to the health and survival of children, particularly since it adopted its 1984 "Child Alive" programme for the control of diarrhoeal diseases and the promotion of breast-feeding, proper weaning and sanitary practices and ORT.

Also at the ceremony, the Chairman presented special awards to Belisario Betancur, President of Colombia, for his outstanding efforts in the area of child survival, including mobilization of a mass immunization campaign, and to Prince Talal Bin Abdul Aziz Al Saud, President of the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations (AGFUND), for his services to children as UNICEF Special Envoy from 1980 to 1984 and as AGFUND's founder.

Observation of the fortieth anniversary

In 1986, UNICEF celebrated the fortieth anniversary of its establishment by the General Assembly in 1946.⁽¹⁸⁾ A ceremony took place during the opening meeting of the Executive Board's 1986 session, which was highlighted by a choir of schoolchildren who sang a song dedicated to the anniversary. In his opening remarks, the United Nations Secretary-General said that UNICEF's work constituted a record of achievement and aspiration for building a better future for humanity. The Board's Chairman stated that UNICEF's efforts to remain non-partisan and non-political and its operational efficiency and flexibility had contributed to its image.

On 25 April,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Board adopted a declaration on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary, by which it called on Governments, organizations, institutions and individuals to strengthen their attention to the vital needs of children and their families as an essential protection for the future of each society, to achieve significant acceleration in CSD and to sustain the protection, growth and development of children as the first priority of society.

Among commemorative activities held during the year were Sport Aid—hundreds of sports events which raised some $30 million for assistance projects in Africa—and the First Earth Run—a relay in which runners carried the torch of peace around the world. Two books were published by the UNICEF History Project—The Children and the Nations, chronicling UNICEF's story in the context of social development and international co-operation, and We Are the Children, a pictorial history of UNICEF. Television co-productions on Africa and on child survival and social mobilization themes were developed with broadcasting companies in a number of countries, including Canada, Finland, France, Norway, Trinidad and Tobago and the United Kingdom. A film, UNICEF, the First 40 Years, and a radio programme, Children of the World, were widely distributed.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

During 1986, total programme expenditures for Africa amounted to $113 million, representing some 35 per cent of UNICEF's total global programme expenditure.

In April⁽⁷⁾ the Executive Board endorsed the Executive Director's emergency appeal for $102 million for 16 African countries (Angola, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, Ethiopia, Ghana, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, Sudan, Zambia) where there were still considerable non-food needs or where economic deterioration had seriously affected the situation of children. A total of $20.4 million had been raised by the end of December 1986.⁽²⁰⁾

To a large extent, the drought and famine in Africa subsided in 1986. The international response, coupled with improved rainfall, ensured the availability of food for most countries, and the United Nations emergency effort in which UNICEF had played a significant part was concluded at the end of October (see p. 455). UNICEF interventions had given special attention to child survival actions and to revitalizing governmental basic services, community involvement and mobilization. Moreover, UNICEF had launched widespread immunization and ORT programmes with funds provided by Italy, the Canadian International Development Agency and other donors. In total, during 1984-1986, UNICEF received more than $100 million in emergency cash contributions and an estimated $27.6 million of donations-in-kind.

However, Africa continued to face an acute economic crisis and the gap between the state of African children and children living in other parts of the developing world continued to widen, as economic conditions deteriorated. Per capita gross domestic product (GDP) fell 2.5 per cent in 1986 and Africa was the only region where per capita food production declined over the preceding 10 years.

In west and central Africa⁽²¹⁾ the condition of children remained unsatisfactory in both urban and rural areas. Though rates of population increase were high, the quantity and quality of urban services had not kept pace. Up to the age of one year, while a child was still being breast-fed, urban and peri-urban maternal and child health centres provided some care. Subsequent care, however, was lacking. Only in Burkina Faso, where the Government actively promoted "garderies populaires", could marked progress be observed in the health and development of young children. Children in rural areas, where about 80 per cent of the population resided, fared worse; rates of child mortality exceeded 200 per 1,000, for example, in Chad and Sierra Leone.

In southern Africa⁽²²⁾ rapid deterioration in social conditions was cause for concern. As a result of destabilizing external influences, child mortality rates and malnutrition continued to rise in all countries, particularly Angola and Mozambique.

As part of UNICEF's CSD strategy, most African countries were accelerating expanded programmes of immunization (EPI). African health ministers had declared 1986 the African Year of Immunization and set a minimum target of 75 per cent coverage for children under one year old by 1990. To increase national coverage, vaccination days were held in Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, the Congo, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Nigeria, Senegal and Togo. Collaboration between UNICEF and the World Health Organization (WHO) included a joint training course for EPI managers in Kenya and Swaziland. Both UNICEF and Governments were concerned with the sustainability of immunization programmes, as an analysis in Mauritania showed that vaccination would cost $17.40 per child using mobile teams, $6.80 using fixed centres and $9 during vaccination days, which were not sustainable amounts for countries with small health budgets.

The control of diarrhoeal diseases (CDD) was also a priority in west and central Africa. Diarrhoea was linked to more than 30 per cent of deaths among children under five years old, 80 per cent of which were due to dehydration. With UNICEF assistance, more than 20 countries carried out campaigns to increase the use of oral rehydration salts (ORS). A cholera outbreak dramatized ORS use in Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger and Sierra Leone. Subregional workshops in ORT, organized by UNICEF and WHO, were held in Cape Verde, the Congo and Mali, and inter-country training centres were established in Angola and Senegal. Most of the countries of eastern and southern Africa had prepared national CDD operation plans, but those in the Comoros, Kenya and Madagascar had not gone into effect. Sachets of ORS had been supplied regularly in countries where programmes were operational.

Since increasing levels of food self-sufficiency was another priority area, UNICEF support to CSD programmes included household food security activities. A pilot programme developed in co-operation with the International Institute of Tropical Agriculture (IITA) at Ibadan, Nigeria, aimed at providing affordable weaning foods, reducing women's work-loads while increasing their financial resources, and improving varieties of traditional staple foods, such as cassava. In October, UNICEF collaborated with IITA in organizing the third regional workshop on roots and tubers at Bangui, Central African Republic. In December, the IITA Executive Board approved the development, in collaboration with UNICEF, of Africa-wide programmes on household food security.

Training activities and technical assistance in nutrition surveillance continued to be provided by UNICEF under the Cornell University (Ithaca, New York, United States) Nutrition Surveillance Programme. A six-week training course on the subject was held in conjunction with the University of Malawi's Centre for Social Research.

Efforts with regard to women's issues included two workshops organized by the UNICEF office in Nigeria on maternal malnutrition, early marriage, female circumcision and family planning; women's organizations were being mobilized around those questions. Projects in Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Mauritania, Senegal and Togo were aimed at lightening women's work-loads so that they might devote more time to their children. A regional seminar on women at Niamey, Niger, revealed their dominant role in CSD and household food production. UNICEF assisted women's economic activities with income-generating projects in Ethiopia, Kenya and Zimbabwe, and supported the production of manuals on co-operative practices and procedures and on bookkeeping, costing and budgeting in Zimbabwe.

In April,⁽⁶⁾ the Executive Board recommended that UNICEF give more attention to children in especially difficult circumstances—armed conflict, exploitative work situations, abuse and neglect. On 2 May, the African Network on Prevention and Protection against Child Abuse and Neglect was established at Enugu, Nigeria. The aim of the Network was to facilitate the exchange of scientific information on problems affecting children in Africa and to serve as an umbrella body for national chapters co-ordinating advocacy efforts on their behalf. National chapters were formed in Kenya, Nigeria and Zimbabwe.

UNICEF supported water programmes in 19 of the 25 countries in west and central Africa. Although the number of water sources developed was impressive, results were mixed, with maintenance posing a major problem. In Guinea, maintenance was a contractual matter between the national water supply service and local committees that raised funds for repairs. In Burkina Faso and the Niger, efforts had been made to train local persons to repair wells. A seminar on low-cost approaches to water supply and sanitation for urban and peri-urban areas of Africa was held at Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, in October.

In the Sahel, following a good 1986 rainy season, UNICEF gradually ceased its emergency programmes or adapted them to rehabilitation programmes. Food security was the order of the day in Sahelian countries. Several projects helped farmers with counter-season agriculture in cuvettes (natural, fertile depressions with a high water table). At Gouré, Niger, farmers grew cassava, bananas, maize, beans, peanuts and potatoes, apart from wet-season millet. UNICEF provided fencing and grinding mills to lighten the work of women. An off-season agriculture project helped destitute Tuaregs at Téra, Niger, to grow millet, beans, maize and potatoes. A similar project at Tienkour, Mali, helped nomads with flood-plain and irrigated rice cultivation. Ongoing emergency programmes in the Sahel included supplementary feeding, growth monitoring and vaccination campaigns.

In Angola during 1986, escalation of the externally supported insurgency resulted in an increase in the number of affected people to 600,000, of whom 80 per cent were women and children. UNICEF emergency assistance comprised a supplementary feeding programme for 200,000 severely malnourished children, basic drugs and health unit equipment, rural water supply and relief and survival equipment.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1986, UNICEF programme expenditures totalled $27 million in the Americas and the Caribbean, a region where UNICEF repeatedly expressed concern about the continuing deterioration in the quality of life of society's most disadvantaged groups, particularly women and children, who continued to suffer the effects of a prolonged socio-economic crisis aggravated by natural disasters and armed conflict⁽²³⁾.

The prevalence of chronic malnutrition in some countries ranged from 6.4 per cent in Costa Rica to 56.3 per cent in Guatemala; 3 of every 100 preschool children in the region were severely underweight, and another 20 per cent were moderately underweight. Anaemia was widespread in the under-five age-group and among adult women. Despite efforts to increase immunization, some diseases continued to proliferate. Malaria was present in several countries, while diarrhoea continued to be the leading cause of infant death in many.

A UNICEF/WHO nutrition support programme was under way in six countries of the region—Bolivia, Dominica, Haiti, Nicaragua, Peru and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. A successful project in Bolivia, in remote communities with no access to iodized salt, involved the control of goitre through iodized oil injections. Other activities to improve the nutritional status of children included the distribution of vitamin-A capsules in Brazil to children aged one to four, and co-operation in preventing vitamin-A deficiency and xerophthalmia in children and controlling anaemia in pregnant women in Haiti.

In 1986, EPI national acceleration days were held in Bolivia, Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Haiti, Paraguay and Peru, as well as in Central America. Mexico, which was fully committed to attaining UCI and the eradication of poliomyelitis by 1990, held two polio vaccination days in January and March, and more than 95 per cent of the under-five population received two doses.

Almost all UNICEF co-operation projects contained an ORT/ORS promotion component. More hospitals, health centres, community health workers and parents were using ORS to combat dehydration caused by diarrhoea, and national statistics were soon expected to show a significant reduction in deaths. ORT activities made major progress in El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua. However, in Guatemala, there was not enough ORS, and in Haiti, studies continued to show an imbalance between the level of knowledge of ORT among mothers (about 80 per cent) and the use of ORS (about 35 per cent).

The region's socio-economic crisis intensified the critical situation of children in especially difficult circumstances. A growing number of children, particularly in urban areas, were being forced to leave home or were abandoned. The problem was complicated by thousands of orphans, mutilated children, refugees and displaced persons who were victims of armed conflicts in Central America. During 1986, UNICEF programmes for abandoned or institutionalized children were expanded in Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador and Mexico, while Governments, the Catholic Church and NGOs organized seminars to consider policies that might be undertaken on behalf of those children.

UNICEF Executive Board action. On 25 April⁽²⁴⁾ the Executive Board, recognizing the impressive acceleration of immunization and ORT activities in Latin America, expressed its support for UNICEF co-operation with Governments. It recommended that efforts continue in the region with special emphasis on supporting programmes which: ensured full development of the child, giving priority to monitoring children's growth and development, supplementary feeding and promotion of breast-feeding; pursued women's full participation in development to raise the quality of family life; and concerned children in especially difficult circumstances, particularly street children and abandoned children.

Asia

In 1986, UNICEF programme expenditures in Asia totalled $140 million. In the east Asia and Pakistan region⁽²⁵⁾ political developments during the year generated new openings for advocacy on behalf of children, but they also slowed down implementation of national plans and consequently UNICEF-sponsored projects. The new President of the Philippines issued proclamations on the attainment of UCI by 1990 and the necessity for appropriate child development; in Indonesia, the President emphasized the importance of reducing the infant mortality rate; and in Pakistan, the Prime Minister included in his programme the achievement of health, safe drinking-water and literacy. The South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation (SAARC) held a Conference on South Asian Children, supported by UNICEF, in October; the Conference appealed for annual monitoring of the situation of children in each of the countries in the east Asia and Pakistan region, an appeal endorsed by SAARC in November. Despite those developments, the poverty situation in many countries of the region remained bleak. In Bangladesh, the number of people living below the poverty line reached 80 per cent, while in the Philippines, it increased from 46 to 59 per cent between 1975 and 1985.

Bangladesh, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand endorsed UCI, and Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Viet Nam registered advances in coverage. The cost of vaccines increased by between 33.3 per cent for oral polio vaccine and 106 per cent for diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus. UNICEF expected to contribute 15 per cent of the $60 million to $120 million to be spent for 1.1 billion doses of vaccine from 1986 to 1990.

In Bangladesh, four UNICEF-supported plants were producing up to 11.2 million half-litre ORS packets annually. In Pakistan, the Second National Plan for Control of Diarrhoeal Diseases was endorsed by UNICEF, the United States Agency for International Development, WHO and others. In Indonesia, an ORT promotion campaign was initiated with UNICEF support in West Java and aimed at mothers and village health workers. In Viet Nam, ORS packets were distributed in selected districts of 29 provinces.

Implementation of the 1981 International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes⁽²⁶⁾ received support during the year; the Philippines incorporated the Code into law, following similar action by Palau (Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands). A regional meeting of the International Baby Food Action Network was supported by UNICEF in Thailand in October; the meeting was attended by more than 50 delegates from 20 countries and covered implementation of the Code and the technical, economic, legal and social dimensions of breast-feeding, with particular reference to Asia.

Malnutrition continued to be a serious problem in the region. Interventions by UNICEF concentrated on growth monitoring, breast-feeding promotion, family food production and nutrition education, with programmes to combat deficiency diseases (especially iodine and vitamin A). UNICEF sponsored iodine-deficiency control programmes in Bangladesh, Burma, Indonesia, Pakistan, Thailand and Viet Nam. Activities to increase family food production were promoted in several countries; in the Philippines, UNICEF introduced home gardening components in urban projects and in Negros Occidental province, where child malnutrition was acute. A UNICEF-assisted programme in Thailand promoted local food production and processing with the establishment of 103 model village food funds reaching some 10,000 families.

Apart from CSD and nutrition projects, several other PHC activities were in progress, including the strengthening of basic infrastructure, training of community workers, distribution of essential drugs, support for traditional medicine and health education. By the end of 1986, UNICEF had partially or totally financed the training in Bangladesh of 9,162 traditional birth attendants (TBAs) and 26,913 female health workers. In Thailand, 22,977 village drug co-operatives covered about 40 per cent of the villages. In Viet Nam, UNICEF continued support for traditional medicine, which was used at both local and central levels throughout the country. An Indonesian health education programme provided for midwives to train cadres to organize mothers' awareness groups. Fifteen countries of the region participated in a WHO/UNICEF interregional consultation on urban PHC at Manila, Philippines, in July.

UNICEF also assisted water supply and environmental sanitation projects, urban basic services, women's activities, early childhood development and education.

The situation of children in the countries of south central Asia (Afghanistan, Bhutan, India, Maldives, Mongolia, Nepal, Sri Lanka) remained mixed;⁽²⁷⁾ the infant mortality rate had fallen in all countries, but still averaged above 100 per 1,000 live births. Malnutrition among mothers and young children was extensive. UNICEF's programme priorities in the subregion were: basic education; immunization; water supply and sanitation; diarrhoea management; control of iodine deficiency; nutrition and acute respiratory infections; women and development; and collaboration in development.

Forces of positive change in the region seemed to be stronger and growing more pronounced. It was widely recognized that there was no inherent conflict between immediately achievable interventions (immunization and diarrhoea management) and long-term measures (primary education and environmental sanitation). Some countries in the region (parts of India and Maldives, Mongolia and Sri Lanka) were ahead of the rest in certain areas but even they faced new challenges in the endeavour for child development.

Middle East and north Africa

In 1986, UNICEF programme expenditures totalled $32 million in the Middle East and north Africa region.

A conference on Arab children, co-sponsored by UNICEF, AGFUND and the Arab League, was held at Tunis, Tunisia, in November 1986.⁽²⁸⁾ The conference recommended the establishment of an Arab Council for Children, with representation from the Arab League and other Arab organizations; it also urged Governments in the region to achieve UCI by 1990, to support the improvement of the nutritional status of women and children, and to develop formal and informal female education.

UNICEF supported the training of TBAs in Egypt, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and the West Bank. In 1986, Egypt trained 400 TBAs, Iraq more than 300, the Syrian Arab Republic 240, and Yemen 140.

In response to concern about the high level of female illiteracy and the poor economic status of women in a number of countries in the region, UNICEF attempted to maximize the participation of women and girls in CSD, thereby enhancing their welfare. Female health and education programmes were under way in Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Yemen.

Serious emergency situations were created in several countries of the region by armed conflicts. In Lebanon, UNICEF mobilized NGOs to provide minimum health services, particularly immunization, and repaired water supply systems. Since the start of the rehabilitation programme in 1981, 536 projects (233 in school repair, 227 in water, 46 for health facilities and 30 in community self-help) had been implemented. Simultaneously, Palestinian mothers and children in Beirut were supported in the areas of water supply and day-care and pre-school facilities. In the Sudan, emergency operations were being scaled down in the northern part of the country, which had experienced improved rainfall and crop production, but emergency measures were increasingly required in the war-affected south. Since 1985, UNICEF had received $10.7 million from 42 donors in response to an international appeal for emergency support in the Sudan, a major part of which went to food supply and logistics. In 1986, in response to the drought, UNICEF drilled 129 wells, providing water to at least 130,000 people. In Iraq and Iran, UNICEF offices continued to support immunization and EPI programmes, respectively.

UNICEF also assisted water and sanitation programmes in Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Morocco, Tunisia and Yemen. The Morocco programme aimed to provide pumps for 700 water sources in 13 provinces, and the Egyptian programme built 700 new pit latrines, raising the total to 1,200.

UNICEF programmes by sector

In 1986, UNICEF programme expenditures totalled $326 million⁽¹⁾ Under the broad mandate of CSD, UNICEF programmes included immunization, ORT, promotion of breast-feeding and good weaning practices, growth monitoring, control of malaria in children and pregnant women and action to combat acute respiratory diseases. Other major programmes were: nutrition; water supply and sanitation; formal and non-formal education; community and family-based services; and emergency assistance.

Child survival and development

Most infant and child deaths had a limited number of causes, preventable by low-cost interventions, augmented by health education and social mobilization. Growing out of experience with PHC and basic services, UNICEF began a CSD campaign in 1983,⁽²⁹⁾ utilizing immunization, oral rehydration, growth monitoring, breast-feeding, family food security, family (birth) spacing and female education.

In 1986, UNICEF co-operated in child health programmes in 113 countries—42 in Africa, 24 in the Americas, 34 in Asia and 13 in the Middle East and north Africa. It provided grants for training, orientation and refresher courses for 410,900 health workers; technical supplies and equipment for 61,500 health centres, especially rural centres; and medicines and vaccines. Child health expenditures totalled $119 million in 1986, compared to $82 million in 1985.

Working closely with WHO, UNICEF provided major support to Governments undertaking immunization campaigns against six childhood diseases—tuberculosis, measles, poliomyelitis, diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus—which continued to take the lives of some 3.5 million children annually, and programmes against diarrhoeal dehydration, which was the main cause of death of more than 4.5 million children in 1986.⁽³⁰⁾

The Task Force for Child Survival (established by UNICEF, WHO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation) in 1986 co-ordinated development of a one-dose injection device; carried out operations research into alternative vaccination schedules and delivery strategies; co-ordinated support and identification of resources for applied vaccinology research; and disseminated information about world-wide immunization activities through its newsletter, World Immunization News.

By the end of 1986, more than 110 developing countries had prepared operational plans for national CDD programmes. Implementation was under way in at least 85 countries, 42 of which were producing ORS for ORT, the most effective measure for treating and preventing diarrhoeal dehydration. ORT could be provided either by distributing ORS through community health workers, or by teaching parents to prepare a solution of the correct proportion of salt, sugar and water, or to care for their children with salted rice water or vegetable broth.

Growth monitoring was proving to be a valuable component of CSD when adopted as a part of overall health care, education of mothers and nutrition. Nearly half the children in developing countries became underweight between the ages of one and five. Slow growth was closely related to diseases and high child mortality and might indicate to a mother or health worker that something was amiss. In Indonesia, the Integrated Health Post programme, an extension of the Family Nutrition Improvement Programme, was implementing growth monitoring as its central activity, and, in the United Republic of Tanzania, the use of growth monitoring was proving successful as the key strategy to generate community participation in support of CSD activities.

Many countries continued promoting breast-feeding during 1986, and UNICEF advocated that more Governments adopt a national code on the marketing of breast-milk substitutes. Advocacy and educational activities about breast-feeding continued to be strong in some countries, with the emphasis shifting from general promotional messages to specific instruction to help mothers overcome problems in breast-feeding. Brazil, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania had particularly strong support groups.

Family food security had become an acute problem, especially in Africa. Lack of food in the household was usually not due to an overall shortage of food in a country, but arose from the maldistribution of food, exacerbated by the lack of purchasing power in needy families. UNICEF was collaborating with ITTA in Nigeria and other African universities and research institutes in Mozambique, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania to promote improved yields of traditional food crops, such as cow peas, yams, maize and cassava.

Birth spacing was integral to CSD and, in 1986, 70 out of 134 developing countries had policies for reducing population growth or advocating spacing. With WHO and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), UNICEF helped to prevent pregnancies through maternal and child health (MCH) programmes. The UNICEF emphasis was on advocacy and training personnel in MCH services.

Despite the well-documented connection between the educational level of mothers and their children's survival and development, the rates of female literacy remained low in many countries. Heightened attention was being given to women's education in all relevant UNICEF country programmes; for example, literacy assistance was being integrated with skills and crafts training in the Sind province of Pakistan and projects to increase the number of female teachers were being conducted in Bangladesh, Nepal, Oman and Yemen.

On 25 April⁽⁶⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board endorsed activities with regard to children in especially difficult circumstances, notably children in areas of armed conflict and those affected by natural disasters, children in exploitative work situations, street children and those subject to abuse and neglect.

It decided that, at the country level, UNICEF should widen the scope of the regular analysis of the situation of children; provide support to government organizations, universities, institutes, NGOs and community-based organizations to formulate policies and implement actions for children in especially difficult circumstances; include support in country programmes for such children; and promote enhanced awareness of them in government, professional and private sectors. At the international level, the Board decided that UNICEF should collaborate with other international agencies, promote the collection and dissemination of information, seek specific-purpose contributions with regard to children in especially difficult circumstances, and participate in work being done within the United Nations system to establish a legal framework for the rights and needs of children. It requested UNICEF to develop an implementation strategy with special attention to improved staff training and allocation of resources and time to activities relating to children in especially difficult circumstances. The Executive Director was asked to report annually to the Board on UNICEF activities in the area.

Nutrition

In 1986, UNICEF expenditures for child nutrition programmes totalled $17 million.

UNICEF co-operated in nutrition programmes in 98 countries—37 in Africa, 22 in the Americas, 29 in Asia and 10 in the Middle East and north Africa—and helped to expand applied nutrition programmes in 18,300 villages, equipping nutrition centres and demonstration areas, community and school orchards and gardens, and fish and poultry hatcheries. It provided stipends to train 9,000 village-level nutrition workers and delivered some 15,460 metric tons of donated foods (grain mixtures, non-fat dry milk, special weaning foods and nutrition supplements).

Joint UNICEF/WHO nutrition projects were under way in 18 countries seeking to overcome malnutrition in children and mothers through a multisectoral, preventive and developmental strategy.

UNICEF support continued for programmes concerned with micro-nutrient deficiencies, the three most common being iron, vitamin A and iodine. Work on iron-deficiency anaemia remained weak, although it was a serious problem for pregnant women. The situation was severe in south Asia and Africa, where it was exacerbated by malaria. Vitamin-A deficiency was widespread;

WHO had identified 34 countries where vitamin-A deficiency caused sufficient sight impairment and blindness for it to be considered significant in public health terms, and an additional 23 countries where it needed close monitoring. During 1986, UNICEF reviewed and reformulated its strategies for combating vitamin-A deficiency, using a two-pronged approach: improved nutrient intake through home gardens and nutrition education and continued supplies of vitamin A in megadose capsules where appropriate. It was estimated that in 1986 iodine-deficiency disorders affected more than 500 million people in Africa, Asia and Latin America. UNICEF was assisting Bhutan, Bolivia, India, Indonesia, Nepal, Pakistan and Peru with iodine-deficiency programmes. Most programmes involved iodization of salt and some the injection of iodized oil.

Water supply and sanitation

In 1986, UNICEF expenditures on water supply and sanitation programmes totalled $58 million. It co-operated in programmes to supply safe water and improved sanitation in 93 countries: 36 in Africa, 21 in the Americas, 25 in Asia and 11 in the Middle East and north Africa. It completed more than 83,000 water supply systems, including 71,341 open/dug wells with hand-pumps, 1,203 piped systems with 567 motor-driven pumps and 10,357 other systems, such as spring protection, rain-water collection and water treatment plants. It also completed 293,404 excreta disposal installations.

The year marked the mid-point of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980.⁽³¹⁾ Since the beginning of the Decade, water supply coverage had increased in rural areas 4 per cent and sanitation 2 per cent; in urban areas, the increases had been 5 per cent and 6 per cent, respectively. The increases represented an additional 270 million people with water supply and 180 million people with sanitation facilities; in the preceding 10 years, UNICEF had spent $500 million on water projects.

UNICEF continued to promote low-cost technologies, especially those that could be manufactured locally, for the construction of water supply and sanitation systems. It was at the centre of a world-wide network of agencies collaborating on low-cost programmes, which was reflected in an October statement issued by a UNDP-sponsored international seminar at Abidjan, which outlined a strategy for community management of water supply and sanitation systems based on proven low-cost technologies. The strategy focused on: the role of Governments and donors; policies to standardize technology and socio-economic approaches; sustainability and replicability; inter-agency co-ordination; community involvement, especially women, in decision-making and management; affordability of water supply systems; community water supply as an integral part of PHC; choice of technology, in-country manufacture and distribution of hand-pumps and spare parts; and community-based maintenance, supported by a national strategy of standardized spare parts.

Education

Components of UNICEF's education programme included early childhood care and education to the age of five; primary education through schools and, where necessary, alternative non-formal methods for primary-school-age groups; and literacy and non-formal post-literacy education for women and youth. Globally, the main problems related to achieving universal primary education and literacy were concentrated in south Asia and parts of sub-Saharan Africa, with pockets in a number of countries in the Arab world and Latin America.

During 1986, UNICEF co-operated in formal and non-formal education programmes in 109 countries: 43 in Africa, 27 in the Americas, 26 in Asia and 13 in the Middle East and north Africa. It helped to equip more than 70,600 primary schools and teacher-training institutions and 800 vocational training centres with maps, globes, science kits, blackboards, desks, reference books and audio-visual materials; assisted many countries to prepare textbooks locally by funding printing units, bookbinding and paper; and provided stipends for refresher training of some 87,600 teachers. Total expenditures amounted to $31 million.

With regard to curriculum development, UNICEF assisted national institutions in several countries, including Bangladesh, Bolivia, Ethiopia, Maldives and Zimbabwe, which were defining instructional objectives, developing and testing learning materials, and preparing teachers' guides and students' workbooks. Support for improving the professional skills of teachers took the form of short in-service training courses; in Ethiopia, during 1986, for example, 2,517 primary teachers and 600 headmasters participated in a six-week in-service course on classroom practices and school management. There were growing efforts to link education and the survival and health of children. In India, UNICEF supported the production of mass media materials about child health and survival, helped to introduce CSD materials in 2,500 teacher-training institutions, and distributed 600,000 copies of a booklet (in 13 languages) on the teacher's role in CSD. Further, UNICEF helped developing countries to prepare, produce, warehouse and distribute teachers' guides and students' textbooks in Bangladesh, Burma, Democratic Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Nepal.

Community services for children

Rapid growth of cities in the developing world resulted in large numbers of urban poor. In many cities, slum and shanty-town dwellers represented a majority of the population. To help Governments cope with those concentrations of impoverished people, UNICEF increased its support for urban basic services (UBS), which undertook to enlist the participation of neighbourhood residents in providing essential services to children.

In 1986, UNICEF co-operated in social services for children in 95 countries: 38 in Africa, 23 in the Americas, 21 in Asia and 13 in the Middle East and north Africa, with total expenditures of $16 million. Equipment was supplied to more than 23,900 child welfare and day-care centres, 500 youth centres and clubs, 4,100 women's centres and 800 training institutions for social workers. Stipends were provided to more than 39,000 women and girls for training in child care, home crafts, food preservation and income-earning skills, to 130,000 local leaders to train them to organize activities in their own villages and communities, and to 69,800 child welfare workers.

Among ongoing UNICEF-assisted urban projects were: expanding basic services for children and women living in 14 "villas miserias" in Buenos Aires, Argentina, with the aim of covering 110,000 people by 1988; constructing a PHC community clinic, training attendants and supplying basic medicines in Accra, Ghana; and adding some 130 low-income communities in Sri Lanka to the 400 already benefiting from CSD/UBS interventions.

According to the audited financial statements for 1986,⁽³²⁾ UNICEF income in 1986 totalled $455 million, compared with $375 million in 1985. Income comprised $296 million for general resources and $159 million for supplementary funds, including $32 million in emergency contributions, mostly for Africa. Contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations represented 75 per cent of the total ($340 million) and those from private sources (fund-raising campaigns, greeting card profits and individual donations) 20 per cent ($93 million). A further 1 per cent ($2 million) was received from the United Nations system and 4 per cent ($20 million) from miscellaneous sources, including exchange-rate movements.

Expenditures in 1986 totalled $447 million, compared with $390 million in 1985. Of that amount, expenditure totalled $250 million for programme co-operation from general resources and $145 million for programme co-operation from supplementary funds. Expenditures of $45 million were for administrative services and there were write-offs and miscellaneous charges of $6 million.

In April⁽³³⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board decided that the substantial importance of supplementary funds contributions to UNICEF activities should be reconfirmed within the basic policy that such contributions would not be received from a Government unless it remained a generous contributor to general resources. The Board also decided that the concern to preserve the integrity and multilateral nature of UNICEF work should be judged in the light of the notable stability of the proportion of supplementary funds to general resources and in the context of the medium-term plan and the "noting" mechanism, which permitted the Board to control the projection of both supplementary funds income and projects to be funded from those funds.

Budget estimates for 1986-1987

In April 1986,⁽³⁴⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board adopted a restatement of budget expenditure and income estimates for the 1986-1987 biennium. It approved an expenditure commitment of $232,543,633 for 1986-1987, to be administered by the Executive Director for staff, general operating, and packing and assembly costs. It also allocated $2 million in the 1986-1987 estimates in place of the $630,000 set aside as amortization payment. The Board approved income estimates for 1986-1987 in the amount of $22,140,000, comprising contributions from assisted Governments towards local budget costs, recovery from packing and assembly activities, and other income.

In April 1986,⁽³⁵⁾ the Executive Board's Committee on Administration and Finance reviewed and noted the observations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ on the 1984 UNICEF financial report and the financial report of the Greeting Card Operation (GCO) for the 1983/84 season⁽³⁵⁾ as well as comments made and action taken by the Executive Director in response to those observations.⁽³⁶⁾

1985

The Committee on Administration and Finance⁽³⁷⁾ also reviewed and noted UNICEF's financial report and statements for the year ended 31 December 1985.⁽³⁷⁾

In August 1986, the United Nations Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the financial report and financial statements of UNICEF, including GCO, for 1985.⁽³⁸⁾ The Board made a number of observations regarding: capital asset acquisitions; transfer of funds between budget lines; budgetary controls; payment of travel costs of Executive Board members; overpayment to staff of rental subsidies, repatriation grants, final settlements, and travel; and overpayment of consultants. The Board also found a number of weaknesses and inconsistencies in year-end procedures in the combination of UNICEF and GCO accounts, drew attention to the lack of a contingency plan and back-up procedures in the electronic data-processing system, and discussed various accounting deficiencies and errors in connection with the UNICEF Procurement and Assembly Centre. With regard to GCO, the Board again pointed out the difficulties arising from different reporting periods for GCO and UNICEF.

In September,⁽³⁹⁾ ACABQ stated that UNICEF's response to issues raised by the Board was far from satisfactory. The Committee expected UNICEF to ensure that its accounting and other practices were in compliance with the Financial Rules and Regulations and noted that a set of financial regulations and rules specific to UNICEF was being drafted.

By resolution 41/176, the Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements and endorsed the comments of ACABQ.

Organizational questions

Greeting Card Operation

The 1985 season of the Greeting Card Operation (1 May 1985-30 April 1986) concluded with a record $22.5 million net profit contribution to UNICEF general resources.⁽⁴⁰⁾ The downward trend of previous years was reversed with 117.3 million cards sold—6.1 million more than in the 1984 season. Except for Latin America, where sales decreased by 0.2 million, all regions showed increases: an additional 1.6 million were sold in North America; 0.2 million in Asia; 1.7 million in India, Pakistan and the Pacific; 2.7 million in Europe and the eastern Mediterranean; and 0.1 million in Africa. Gross proceeds were $56 million, an increase of $7.5 million over 1984, attributable to price increases in major markets (10 per cent) and increased volume (5.5 per cent). Sales by major product category were cards, $45.4 million; calendars, $3.4 million; stationery, $2.2 million; shopping bags, $1.8 million; educational material, $1.5 million; and other products, $1.7 million.

In response to a 1985 Executive Board request,⁽³⁵⁾ the Executive Director submitted an analysis of GCO, 1955-1984, and a plan for development, 1985-1990.⁽⁴¹⁾ The report contained a 21-point action plan to increase profitability from 21 per cent in 1984 to 45.5 per cent by 1990.

In April,⁽⁴²⁾ the Executive Board approved a work plan for the 1986/87 GCO financial year

(1 May 1986-30 April 1987), as recommended by its Committee on Administration and Finance, in which sales volume was projected at 120 million units and net profit at $20.2 million. The Executive Director was asked to report in 1987 on steps taken to improve profitability.

Headquarters arrangements

In April,⁽⁴³⁾ the Executive Board authorized the Executive Director to allocate up to $1,281,500 for the one-time installation costs for UNICEF House in New York, in addition to the $2 million already appropriated by the Board in approving the 1986-1987 budget estimates. The Executive Director was asked to make maximum efforts to ensure that actual expenditures were further reduced below the level of the allocation and to report to the Board in 1987.

NGO relations

In April 1986,⁽⁴⁾ NGO representatives held a joint meeting with the UNICEF Executive Board. As a follow-up to the Board's decision on children in especially difficult circumstances,⁽⁵⁾ UNICEF intensified its co-operation with leading NGOs in that field and supported the creation of a new NGO, Child Hope, which would be a global advocate for street children.

On 25 April,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Executive Board welcomed the opportunity provided by the joint meeting with NGOs and UNICEF National Committees to exchange views on areas of common concern and encouraged the NGO Committee on UNICEF to organize similar forums in the future. The Executive Director was asked to transmit the report of the 1986 NGO Forum on action for children to the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

The NGO Committee on UNICEF and UNICEF created a paper, Action for Children, as part of the observance of UNICEF's fortieth anniversary; eight issues were published in English, French and Spanish.

Inter-agency co-operation

During 1986, the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, comprising UNDP, UNFPA, the World Food Programme (WFP) and UNICEF, met regularly.⁽¹⁾ UNICEF continued to work closely with the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa in responding to the Africa emergency and actions planned as follow-up to the General Assembly's special session on Africa (see Chapter III of this section).

In collaboration with its partners in the United Nations system, UNICEF actively pursued its concern about the impact of adjustment programmes on children and continued to press for more attention to nutrition and human issues in the World

Bank's consultative groups and UNDP round tables. UNICEF co-operation with the World Bank continued in the areas of health, nutrition, education, water supply, sanitation and urban development. Its long-standing collaboration with WHO was further reinforced; a system of regular semi-annual meetings was established between UNICEF, WHO and UNFPA. UNICEF and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued their co-operation on a broad range of concerns, including formal and non-formal education, health education and education for child survival.

Declaration on adoption and foster placement

In December 1986, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally.

The Assembly had first considered the issue in 1972,⁽⁴⁵⁾ when it had asked the Commission for Social Development to consider policies, programmes and comparative law concerning the protection of children for adoption and foster placement and to comment on the question of sponsoring an international conference to elaborate an international convention on the subject. Following a 1975 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Secretary-General established a group of experts to prepare a draft declaration, which he submitted to the Assembly in 1980, together with proposed amendments and reformulations and an analysis of the views of Member States on various articles.⁽⁴⁷⁾ In 1982, at the Assembly's request,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General asked Member States for their views on the draft declaration, and in 1983, also at the Assembly's request,⁽⁴⁹⁾ he invited them to comment on the procedure for completing work on the draft. In 1984,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Assembly appealed to Member States to undertake consultations on the draft, which then took place in 1985. Following consideration of the report on the consultations, the Assembly decided⁽⁵¹⁾ that the Sixth (Legal) Committee should hold informal consultations in 1986 to consider remaining questions, with a view to adopting the Declaration at that time.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Introducing the draft resolution in the Sixth Committee containing the text arrived at during informal consultations, the Netherlands stated that the two remaining questions in the draft declaration had been solved: the term "sole criterion" in article 5 had been changed to "paramount consideration"; and the proposal to include a principle on the problem of abduction of children for illicit placement (see article 19). Agreement had also been reached on the manner in which the institution of Kafalah—foster parenthood under Islamic law—would be incorporated in the text.

On 3 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/85 without vote.

Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/167 of 16 December 1981, 37/115 of 16 December 1982, 38/142 of 19 December 1983 and 39/89 of 13 December 1984, and its decision 40/422 of 11 December 1985,

Taking note of the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally, as submitted by the Economic and Social Council by its resolution 1979/28 of 9 May 1979,

Taking note with appreciation of the work done on this question in the Third and Sixth Committees, as well as the efforts made by Member States representing different legal systems, during the consultations held at Headquarters from 16 to 27 September 1985 and early in the forty-first session, to join in the common endeavour of completing the work on the draft Declaration, Adopts the Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, which it proclaimed by its resolution 1386(XIV) of 20 November 1959,

Reaffirming principle 6 of that Declaration, which states that the child shall, wherever possible, grow up in the care and under the responsibility of his parents and, in any case, in an atmosphere of affection and of moral and material security,

Concerned at the large number of children who are abandoned or become orphans owing to violence, internal disturbance, armed conflicts, natural disasters, economic crises or social problems,

Bearing in mind that in all foster placement and adoption procedures the best interests of the child should be the paramount consideration,

Recognizing that under the principal legal systems of the world, various valuable alternative institutions exist, such as the Kafala of Islamic Law, which provide substitute care to children who cannot be cared for by their own parents,

Recognizing further that only where a particular institution is recognized and regulated by the domestic law of a State would the provisions of this Declaration relating to that institution be relevant and that such provisions would in no way affect the existing alternative institutions in other legal systems,

Conscious of the need to proclaim universal principles to be taken into account in cases where procedures are instituted relating to foster placement or adoption of a child, either nationally or internationally,

Bearing in mind, however, that the principles set forth hereunder do not impose on States such legal institutions as foster placement or adoption,

Proclaims the following principles:

A. General family and child welfare

Article 1

Every State should give a high priority to family and child welfare.

Article 2

Child welfare depends upon good family welfare.

Article 3

The first priority for a child is to be cared for by his or her own parents.

Article 4

When care by the child's own parents is unavailable or inappropriate, care by relatives of the child's parents, by another substitute—foster or adoptive—family or, if necessary, by an appropriate institution should be considered.

Article 5

In all matters relating to the placement of a child outside the care of the child's own parents, the best interests of the child, particularly his or her need for affection and right to security and continuing care, should be the paramount consideration.

Article 6

Persons responsible for foster placement or adoption procedures should have professional or other appropriate training.

Article 7

Governments should determine the adequacy of their national child welfare services and consider appropriate actions.

Article 8

The child should at all times have a name, a nationality and a legal representative. The child should not, as a result of foster placement, adoption or any alternative régime, be deprived of his or her name, nationality or legal representative unless the child thereby acquires a new name, nationality or legal representative.

Article 9

The need of a foster or an adopted child to know about his or her background should be recognized by persons responsible for the child's care, unless this is contrary to the child's best interests.

B. Foster placement

Article 10

Foster placement of children should be regulated by law.

Article 11

Foster family care, though temporary in nature, may continue, if necessary, until adulthood but should not preclude either prior return to the child's own parents or adoption.

Article 12

In all matters of foster family care, the prospective foster parents and, as appropriate, the child and his or her own parents should be properly involved. A competent authority or agency should be responsible for supervision to ensure the welfare of the child.

C. Adoption

Article 13

The primary aim of adoption is to provide the child who cannot be cared for by his or her own parents with a permanent family.

Article 14

In considering possible adoption placements, persons responsible for them should select the most appropriate environment for the child.

Article 15

Sufficient time and adequate counselling should be given to the child's own parents, the prospective adoptive parents and, as appropriate, the child in order to reach a decision on the child's future as early as possible.

Article 16

The relationship between the child to be adopted and the prospective adoptive parents should be observed by child welfare agencies or services prior to the adoption. Legislation should ensure that the child is recognized in law as a member of the adoptive family and enjoys all the rights pertinent thereto.

Article 17

If a child cannot be placed in a foster or an adoptive family or cannot in any suitable manner be cared for in the country of origin, intercountry adoption may be considered as an alternative means of providing the child with a family.

Article 18

Governments should establish policy, legislation and effective supervision for the protection of children involved in intercountry adoption. Intercountry adoption should, wherever possible, only be undertaken when such measures have been established in the States concerned.

Article 19

Policies should be established and laws enacted, where necessary, for the prohibition of abduction and of any other act for illicit placement of children.

Article 20

In intercountry adoption, placements should, as a rule, be made through competent authorities or agencies with application of safeguards and standards equivalent to those existing in respect of national adoption. In no case should the placement result in improper financial gain for those involved in it.

Article 21

In intercountry adoption through persons acting as agents for prospective adoptive parents, special precautions should be taken in order to protect the child's legal and social interests.

Article 22

No intercountry adoption should be considered before it has been established that the child is legally free for adoption and that any pertinent documents necessary to complete the adoption, such as the consent of competent authorities, will become available. It must also be established that the child will be able to migrate and to join the prospective adoptive parents and may obtain their nationality.

Article 23

In intercountry adoption, as a rule, the legal validity of the adoption should be assured in each of the countries involved.

Article 24

Where the nationality of the child differs from that of the prospective adoptive parents, all due weight shall be given to both the law of the State of which the child is a national and the law of the State of which the prospective adoptive parents are nationals. In this connection due regard shall be given to the child's cultural and religious background and interests.

General Assembly resolution 41/85

3 December 1986

Meeting 95

Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/898) without vote, 26 November (meeting 55); 9-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.13/Rev.1); agenda item 136.

Sponsors: Cape Verde, Netherlands, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Sweden, Uganda, Venezuela.

Speaking in explanation of position, the United Kingdom said that, with regard to articles 23 and 24, it could not accept any construction that would interfere with the power of its courts to make an adoption order in respect of a child because of his or her origin. Belgium also had difficulty with those articles but had joined the consensus because their wording did not prejudice implementation of its domestic legislation. France said that article 24 did not apply retrospectively to adoption. Italy said no provision in the Declaration should be interpreted as entailing changes to its adoption law; article 24 did not entail any exception to the basic principle laid down in article 5. Poland agreed and called article 5 the keystone of the Declaration.

Sweden, also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, said the Declaration was not suited to matters falling within the purview of the private international laws of different States. Morocco, on behalf of the States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, said those countries had agreed to the adoption of the Declaration on the understanding that nations would contribute to the objective of child care in the framework of their own religious belief and legal principles; the Declaration's provisions regarding the family name and inheritance referred only to adoption and were incompatible with Islamic law, and article 24 meant that adoption would have no validity if the national law of the child and his religious, social and cultural background were not taken into account. Canada stated that the phrase in article 19 regarding any other act for illicit placement of children covered abduction only in cases where a child was abducted for foster placement or adoption. Mexico said that cases where the nationality of a minor to be adopted differed from that of prospective adoptive parents should be dealt with in accordance with the law of the forum of the judge handling the adoption. The United States said article 9 did not reflect a preference for the release of identifying information about a child's biological parents; article 20 appeared to accept intercountry adoption by proxy, which was unacceptable to the United States because it was concerned that the special precautions contemplated would be insufficient to protect children in such cases. Regarding article 23, the Federal Republic of Germany said that adoption should always be possible when it was in the child's interest.

Youth

The main focus of 1986 United Nations activities concerning youth—approximately 942 million persons aged 15 to 24 years—was on follow-up to International Youth Year (IYY), observed by the Organization in 1985.(1) At the 1985 World Conference for IYY, the General Assembly had endorsed a set of guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up concerning youth which provided, for the first time, an international strategy for future activities. Thus in 1986, the United Nations monitored the educational, political, social and employment conditions of young people in order to ensure that the momentum of IYY was maintained at all levels.

The Economic and Social Council, in May, called on Governments, organizations and the United Nations system to implement the guidelines and to consider means of improving co-ordination and information regarding youth (resolution 1986/13).

In December, the General Assembly urged Governments to strengthen their youth programmes and policies and requested the Secretary-General to promote the inclusion of youth-related projects in United Nations programmes, specifically on such themes as communication, housing, culture, youth employment and education (resolution 41/97). The Assembly also called on States, organizations and United Nations bodies to continue giving priority to the implementation of measures for securing youth the right to education and work, and invited national youth co-ordinating bodies to give priority in the activities to be undertaken after IYY to the enjoyment by youth of human rights (resolution 41/98). Further, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to use the existing structures of co-operation between youth and the United Nations system and to determine how communication channels could be attuned to youth-related activities (resolution 41/99).

Follow-up to International Youth Year (1985)

Different aspects relating to the follow-up to International Youth Year (1985) were taken up by United Nations organs in 1986. The Economic and Social Council considered such aspects as co-ordination and information, while the General Assembly looked at youth policies and programmes and the right of young people to education and work (see p. 825) and communication channels between the world body and young people (see p. 828).

Co-ordination and information

In April,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, responding to a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽³⁾ described progress made in facilitating the co-ordination of youth activities in the context of IYY and of the follow-up of future youth programmes by intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the United Nations system. The report, based on information received from those sources, reviewed achievements in co-ordination and information at all levels. The involvement of those organizations as well as Governments and national committees had focused attention on youth issues, development of programmes and implementation of plans and strategies, and on the participation of youth itself, the report stated. It emphasized that a continuing co-ordinating approach was essential to ensure that youth issues remained part of United Nations work. Areas in which such an approach was necessary included: assistance to Member States in achieving the goals of IYY; research on the needs and aspirations of youth; promotion of youth participation in development and in United Nations events; programmes for youth employment and training; technical assistance projects; dissemination of information; and communication channels between the United Nations and youth.

ACC consideration. The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its October 1986 session,⁽⁴⁾ recommended that a fifth meeting of the informal inter-agency working group at the technical level on youth-related activities be convened. Accordingly, the group met at Geneva from 27 to 29 November with the participation of ILO, FAO, WHO, UNESCO, UNICEF, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Volunteers. The group emphasized that inter-agency co-operation on youth should continue to encourage co-ordination, information sharing and joint activities.

Emphasis was given to assessing youth issues and trends; undertaking in-depth research and analysis of policy measures to assist Governments in implementing youth programmes; encouraging technical assistance projects; encouraging national co-ordination mechanisms to continue beyond IYY; and promoting better working relationships between the United Nations system and the NGO community—a point which had also been made at the working group's fourth (April) meeting when the group considered strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1986/13 without vote.

Co-ordination and information in the field of youth

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolutions 1979/27 of 9 May 1979, 1980/25 of 2 May 1980, 1981/25 of 6 May 1981, 1982/28 of 4 May 1982, 1983/26 of 26 May 1983, 1984/44 of 25 May 1984 and 1985/30 of 29 May 1985,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 34/151 of 17 December 1979, 36/28 of 13 November 1981, 37/48 of 3 December 1982, 38/22 of 22 November 1983, 39/22 of 22 November 1984 and resolution 40/14 of 18 November 1985, adopted by the General Assembly, acting as United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year,

Considering it necessary to disseminate among young people the ideals of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, human solidarity and dedication to the objectives of progress and development,

Welcoming the results achieved in the process of preparing for and observing the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace at the local, national, regional and international levels,

Convinced that the timely and significant impetus generated by the activities of the International Youth Year should be maintained and reinforced with appropriate actions for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth endorsed by the General Assembly acting as the United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year,

1. Takes note of the conclusions contained in the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and information in the field of youth;

2. Calls upon all United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional commissions, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth and to consider at their meetings appropriate ways and means for improving co-ordination and information in the field of youth;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth to all States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, as well as to other international organizations concerned, in accordance with paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 40/14;

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General continue to direct the attention of the competent United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to the need for continued co-ordination and information in the field of youth, in keeping with the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

5. Requests the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to co-ordinate the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth in the entire United Nations system, in accordance with its mandate;

6. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1987 the achievements in co-ordination and information in the field of youth, under the item entitled "Social development", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/14.

Youth policies and programmes; the right of youth to education and work

In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report⁽⁵⁾ on progress made in bringing young people into the mainstream of development. Compiled in response to a 1985 Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the report considered the impact of IYY and implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up.

The Secretary-General concluded that progress had been made during IYY in bringing the problems of youth and their social consequences to the attention of the Governments and the peoples of the world. The primary significance of IYY was an increased global awareness of the situation of youth. On the part of decision-makers, as well as the general public, there seemed to be a more extensive appreciation of the position of youth, their specific needs, aspirations and creative potential. An important element of that new awareness was that many stereotypes of youth had been superseded. Young people were increasingly seen as real agents of development rather than passive recipients of it. The Year had also provided a framework, particularly in some developing countries, for initiating a unified national youth policy. However, the financial resources necessary to translate such policies into action were not readily available, because of constrained economic growth and, in some cases, reduced investment in social development in favour of other areas of expenditure.

The report pointed out that the United Nations system was co-ordinating IYY national initiatives and actions, which helped to translate national concern into an international consensus embodied in the guidelines. The instruments for follow-up were already in existence, with CSDHA as the international focal point, the regional commissions of the United Nations co-ordinating activities at that level, and various programmes being carried out at the national level. Adequate follow-up to the Year, the report said, would entail appraising the use of the guidelines; supporting national committees that had continued beyond 1985; collecting and disseminating information and co-ordinating research on youth (see p. 824); strengthening technical co-operation activities, the United Nations Youth Fund (see p. 829) and United Nations inter-agency co-operation on youth policies and programmes; and intensifying collaboration with NGOs.

It was suggested that a comprehensive review of the situation of youth might be conducted every four years and, to maintain the momentum generated by IYY, that a certain day be observed every year as International Youth Day.

On 14 May,⁽⁷⁾ the USSR transmitted a letter to the Secretary-General stating that its celebration of IYY had revealed potential for improvement of the working, living, studying and leisure conditions of youth and for increasing their activity at work and in society; the USSR Commission on the Celebration of IYY had promoted the realization of that potential.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, two resolutions and a decision on youth and follow-up to IYY were adopted by the General Assembly. Each action was taken on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/97 without vote.

Policies and programmes involving young people: Participation, Development, Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 40/14 entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace", adopted on 18 November 1985 by the General Assembly acting as United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year,

Recognizing the profound importance of the direct participation of youth in shaping the future of mankind and the valuable contribution that youth can make in all sectors of society, as well as its willingness to express its ideas concerning the building of a better and more just world,

Considering it necessary to disseminate among youth the ideals of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and human solidarity,

Convinced that youth should be continuously encouraged to contribute its energies, enthusiasm and creative abilities to the observance of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the task of nation-building, the realization of the right to self-determination and national independence, the respect for sovereignty and non-intervention in the internal affairs of each State, the political, civil, economic, social and cultural advancement of peoples and the promotion of international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions play an important role in promoting international co-operation in the field of youth and that they should continue to give more attention to the role of young people in the world of today, to their ideas and initiatives and to their demands for the world of tomorrow,

Convinced that the preparation for and observance in 1985 of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace have offered a useful and significant opportunity for drawing attention to the situation and the specific needs and aspirations of youth, for increasing co-operation at all levels in dealing with youth issues, for undertaking concerted action programmes in favour of youth and for improving the participation of young people in the study, decision-making processes and resolution of major national, regional and international problems,

Bearing in mind that the International Youth Year has served to mobilize efforts at local, national, regional and international levels in order to promote the best educational, professional and living conditions for young people, to ensure their active participation in the overall development of society and to encourage their participation in the preparation of new national and local policies and programmes in accordance with the experience, conditions and priorities of each country,

Conscious that the International Youth Year has contributed to strengthening the rights, the ability and the willingness of young people to participate in all activities relevant to them and to promote their own interests,

Expressing its satisfaction at the results obtained at local, national, regional and international levels during the preparation for and observance of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Convinced that the timely and significant impetus generated by the activities of the International Youth Year should be maintained and reinforced with appropriate follow-up action at all levels,

Recognizing that the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth provide a conceptual framework for a long-term strategy in that field,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the evaluation of the results of the International Youth Year,

1. Takes note of the conclusions contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the International Youth Year and on the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

2. Calls once again upon all States, all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, in accordance with their experience, conditions and priorities;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States that continue to maintain the national committees and other appropriate co-ordination mechanisms that were set up at the national level on the occasion of the International Youth Year, and invites all States to proceed in the same manner, in accordance with their specific conditions, to ensure the proper implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to promote intensively the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of the United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, specifically on such themes as communication, housing, culture, youth employment and education;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor closely and co-ordinate all youth-related projects and activities within the United Nations system using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs as a focal point, and to report in concrete terms on their implementation;

6. Urges, in this context, all Governments to take the necessary measures, in co-operation with United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular youth organizations, to strengthen their focus on youth programmes and policies;

7. Requests the Commission for Social Development to examine during its 1987 session specific youth issues as follow-up to the International Youth Year;

8. Stresses again the importance of the active and direct participation of youth and youth organizations in the projects and activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels in the field of youth at all stages of implementation;

9. Invites Governments again to consider the regular inclusion of youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings;

10. Emphasizes the importance of improving the active use of the channels of communication between the United Nations system and youth organizations, at both the national and international levels;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving young people: Participation, Development, Peace" and to review, in this framework, the implementation of the present resolution, on the basis of a specific report of the Secretary-General on the subject.

Efforts and measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/29 of 13 November 1981, 37/49 of 3 December 1982, 38/23 of 22 November 1983, 39/23 of 23 November 1984 and 40/15 of 18 November 1985, in which it, inter alia, recognized the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work,

Recalling also its resolution 34/151 of 17 December 1979, by which it decided to designate 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Recognizing that in many countries the majority of young people, under prevailing critical social and economic conditions, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their right to education and to work,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with special regard to the right to education and to work,

Aware of the fact that insufficient education and the unemployment of young people limit their ability to participate in the development process, and, in this regard, emphasizing the importance of secondary and higher education for young people, as well as access for them to appropriate technical and vocational guidance and training programmes,

Expressing its serious interest in consolidating and building further on the results of the International Youth Year in order to contribute, inter alia, to the increasing participation of young people in the socio-economic life of their country,

1. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations, interested United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to continue to give priority to the formulation and implementation of effective measures for securing the exercise by youth of the right to education and to work, in conditions of peace, with a view to resolving the problem of unemployment among youth;

2. Requests the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council and all other relevant United Nations bodies to give adequate consideration on a regular basis to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work;

3. Invites national co-ordinating bodies and bodies implementing policies and programmes in the field of youth to give appropriate priority in the activities to be undertaken after the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace to the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

Policies and programmes involving youth

At its 97th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, having adopted resolution 41/97 entitled "Policies and programmes involving young people: Participation, Development, Peace" and resolution 41/99 entitled "Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations", decided to examine at its forty-second session, under the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth", the following subjects:

(a) Implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

(b) Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations.

Strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations

The scope of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, trends and developments connected with those channels and the role of the Secretariat in strengthening them were considered in a September report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁸⁾

The report, submitted in response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁹⁾ stated that improving communication channels would continue to be a priority, since they would enhance the ways of meeting the main challenge at all levels of following up and consolidating the achievements of IYY. The report proposed that national mechanisms which had been set up to accomplish IYY's objectives be retained as channels of communication; the activities of the Interregional Adviser on Youth Policies and Programmes be reoriented to reflect the increased emphasis on communication in the context of youth involvement in national development; efforts to make use of, improve and extend existing channels be encouraged; and special attention be focused on developing information materials on United Nations work for youth and youth organizations. In addition, the newly enhanced inter-agency mechanism for co-operation developed through the informal inter-agency working group at the technical level on youth-related activities should be encouraged to maintain linkages with NGOs with a view to strengthening communication channels.

Earlier, the fourth meeting of that group (Vienna, 28 and 29 April) had recommended that co-operation between the United Nations system and the NGO community should be enlarged in order to reach regional and national youth organizations.

Other activities. In 1986, CSDHA continued to publish the quarterly Youth Information Bulletin, which served as a principal communication channel highlighting youth issues. Also published was a study describing the impact of trends and problems connected with the global economic and social crisis during the first half of the 1980s on young people.⁽¹⁰⁾ It attempted to foretell the prospects for youth in the year 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/99.

Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, in which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and also recalling its resolution 40/17 of 18 November 1985,

Bearing in mind the importance of the existence of effective channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations as a necessary instrument for the information of young people and their participation in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies at the national, regional and international levels, and also for informing the United Nations of the problems facing youth with a view to finding solutions to such problems,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations,

Convinced that the effective and efficient functioning of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels forms a basic prerequisite for the adequate information of young people and their active involvement in the work of the United Nations,

Convinced further that the participation of youth representatives from Member States in international conferences and meetings dealing with youth-related issues can enhance and strengthen the channels of communication through the discussion of such issues, with a view to finding solutions to problems confronting youth in the contemporary world,

Recognizing that the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth provide a constructive framework for a long-term strategy in the field of youth,

1. Calls upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines relating to the channels of communication adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17, not only in general terms but also by concrete measures reflecting the issues of importance to young people;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue in this respect to make use at the national, regional and international levels of the already existing structures of co-operation between youth and the United Nations system in accordance with the additional guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, contained in the annex to resolution 36/17;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop specific ways and means to determine how the channels of communication could effectively be attuned to youth-related projects and activities of United Nations organs and specialized agencies, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

4. Calls upon national youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and, where such mechanisms do not exist, recommends that national co-ordinating committees of the International Youth Year should continue to act as channels of communication;

5. Decides to consider at its forty-second session the item entitled "Policies and programmes relating to youth" on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General.

UN Youth Fund

The Trust Fund for IYY—renamed the United Nations Youth Fund in 1985⁽¹⁾—continued to support youth-related projects in 1986.⁽¹²⁾

The Fund provided assistance to young people in developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries. It concentrated on such areas as small-scale youth research projects; infrastructure development; ecology; training and job development; basic health care; and planning and communication activities of governmental organizations and NGOs. As of 31 December 1986, 12 States had made financial contributions directly to the Fund, while other contributions in cash or kind had been received from NGOs and the public; proceeds from the use of the IYY logo had provided additional income. The Fund's balance totalled approximately $360,000, of which about $280,000 had been committed to the full or partial funding of 32 projects.

Aging persons

The International Plan of Action on Aging was adopted in 1982 by the World Assembly on Aging⁽¹⁾ and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.⁽²⁾ The Plan was a response to demographic conditions that had gradually developed in the previous four decades—a great increase in the number of persons 60 years old and over. The elderly, estimated to be some 375 million in 1980, were expected to increase to 1.1 billion by the year 2025, approximately 14 per cent of the world population.

The United Nations continued in 1986 to consider the question of aging persons. The Assembly, by resolution 41/96, urged Governments to intensify their efforts to implement the Plan of Action. It requested the Secretary-General to promote the training of personnel in that area, and urged him to strengthen and co-ordinate United Nations programmes on aging. He was also asked to continue monitoring progress in the Plan's implementation and to review the world aging situation every six years.

Implementation of the Plan of Action

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ submitted in October 1986 a report⁽⁴⁾ on the question of aging, including implementation of the Plan of Action, activities undertaken by the United Nations system, and the views of Member States, specialized agencies and NGOs. The report was to have been submitted to the Economic and Social Council's April/May 1986 session for its comments. However, due to time constraints preventing completion of a comprehensive report, an interim report was presented to the Council at that time.⁽⁵⁾ summarizing progress in the preparation of the final report.

The October report stated that activities concerned with aging were carried out by six United Nations organizational units—Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, whose subprogramme on aging was carried out by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA), United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), Economic Commission for Europe, Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, Economic Commission for Africa—and three specialized agencies—ILO, UNESCO and WHO. CSDHA served as the focal point for all matters related to aging within the United Nations system, had primary responsibility for promoting and implementing the Plan and managed the Trust Fund (see below).

Information exchange was organized by way of two periodicals: the annual Periodical on Aging, begun in 1984, and the Bulletin on Aging, two issues of which were published in 1986.

The total current value of activities on aging (1986-1987) was estimated to be $5,217,000. Overall, after major growth in 1982-1983 as compared with 1980-1981, the number of activities in each biennium had remained about the same. The largest increases in both number and resources had been registered in subprogrammes financed from the regular budget, from four in 1980-1981 to 18 in 1986-1987 and from $1.5 million to $3.2 million in the corresponding periods. Much of the increase had been accounted for by the regional commissions, which in 1980-1981 had no subprogrammes with aging components but currently had six, by UNESCO, which had expanded its activities in terms of life-long education and participation of the aging in cultural life, and by WHO, whose activities had increased.

Financially, WHO accounted for the largest component of United Nations activities on aging. Taking 1980-1981 as a baseline, WHO's expenditures had grown some 115 per cent, mostly in a subprogramme on the health of the elderly. The second-largest set of activities was accounted for by DIESA, whose subprogramme was executed by CSDHA. The subprogramme's objectives were to assist Governments in designing and implementing national legislation, policies and programmes within the Plan of Action.

In addition, the Population Division conducted demographic research on aging and its social and economic consequences, giving increased attention to the older population in producing biennial estimates and projections of population growth for all countries and regions.

A total of 41 technical co-operation projects on aging had been executed since 1980, some 50 per cent funded by UNFPA and 40 per cent by the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging. Projects had an average duration of 1.8 years, and expenditures were small; the average budget of 22 1984-1985 projects was $61,000. About half of the projects were conducted by NGOs; those having the largest number from 1980 to 1986 were Opera Pia International for Active Aging (five projects) and the International Centre for Social Gerontology (three).

Twenty-eight replies had been received from Member States, one from a United Nations specialized agency and nine from NGOs to a request from the Secretary-General for their views on ways to implement the Plan of Action. One State supported the establishment of a United Nations programme on aging with a structure similar to that of UNICEF. The specialized agency and four NGOs supported creating a new programme on aging; the other States disagreed, with most urging implementation of the Plan within existing resources.

The report concluded that the development of human resources, including elderly people, required greater attention and that the stage had been set for continuing activities under the Plan of Action. Additionally, consideration might be given to: reviewing the world aging situation every six years; regional preparations of specific, updated guidelines for action; strengthening technical assistance programmes; a mechanism for all concerned organizations to address the question; and further global consultations on aging in the early 1990s.

implementation at its April⁽⁶⁾ and October⁽⁷⁾ sessions. In April, it discussed the preliminary work done on the analysis of the activities of the United Nations system on aging,⁽⁸⁾ and, in October, it decided to include the question in its 1987 work programme since any 1986 Assembly action could have implications regarding co-ordinating the activities of the United Nations system.

Other consideration. The seventy-fifth Inter-Parliamentary Conference⁽⁹⁾ (Mexico City, 7-12 April) adopted a resolution on the health and well-being of the elderly, in which it called on parliaments and Governments: to ensure that the question was incorporated in their national development plans; to continue to make efforts to implement the Plan of Action; to adopt measures responding to the economic and social implications of aging; and to consider regional and subregional meetings on the Plan.

A workshop on planning for the needs of the elderly in Zimbabwe (Harare, 15-18 December) adopted recommendations on social development, education and culture, income and security and health. A strategy for improving the living arrangements of the elderly was also outlined. It advocated expansion of public housing; provision of subsidies and other financial assistance to households that accommodated elderly relatives; recognition of the needs of the elderly by planners and architects; upgrading of rural housing in the context of self-help and rural development; and transport subsidies.

Proposed institute on aging

The need for regional and interregional institutes on aging was stressed by the 1985 Inter-regional Seminar to Promote the Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging,⁽⁹⁾ and by the General Assembly, in December 1986 (see below), which requested the Secretary-General to promote training centres to train required personnel, especially personnel from developing countries; and urged him to give priority to providing advisory service to those countries, and to encourage the exchange of information through the expansion of the existing United Nations network.

Malta, further to a September 1985 communication in which it had reiterated its proposal for the establishment of a United Nations institute on aging and had requested a feasibility study on this proposal, invited the holding of an expert group meeting in Malta. Accordingly, the Expert Group Meeting on the Feasibility of Establishing an Institute on Aging met at Valletta from 15 to 19 December.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Meeting concluded that fresh initiatives were needed to stimulate renewed interest in implementing the Plan of Action. It therefore recommended that the need for training, research and exchange of information expressed in the Plan be met by establishing an institute or institutes on aging, based on voluntary contributions. It said that the main objective should be to facilitate implementation of the Plan in the developing countries as well as an exchange of skills and information between the developed and developing countries and between the developing countries themselves. The Meeting recommended that its report be brought to the attention of the 1987 session of the Commission for Social Development.

UN Trust Fund

The United Nations Trust Fund for Aging supported nine projects in 1986(11) in developing regions of the world, relating to the assessment of needs, policy formulation, research, training and seminars. At the national level, the projects included a workshop on planning for the needs of the elderly in Zimbabwe (see above); evaluation of the socio-economic situation of the aging in Argentina; and the development of services for the elderly in Lebanon. Regional projects included training courses in gerontology in Argentina, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Jamaica, Mexico and Uruguay; a needs assessment survey of the urban elderly in Latin America and the Caribbean; and a Conference on Gerontology for Latin America and the Caribbean (Bogota, Colombia, 9-13 June). Global-level projects included the promotion of co-operatives for the aging; the development of care for the aging; and the Expert Group Meeting on the Feasibility of Establishing an Institute on Aging (see above).

Despite calls for strengthening the Fund's resources, contributions declined to $8,000 in 1986, compared with about $60,000 in the 1984-1985 biennium. At the 1986 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, three pledges totalling $22,500 were made. As at 31 December 1986, the Fund's balance was $249,859, while pending requests amounted to nearly $2.5 million.

To consolidate the managerial and substantive aspects of the Fund, the managerial responsibilities were transferred from the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs in New York to the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna.

To promote a United Nations programme on aging, a new trust fund was established in July(4) on the basis of a donation of $7,000 by the Dominican Republic. In addition, a pledge of $10,000 was made by the American Association of Retired Persons. The fund was established until 31 December 1987 on the understanding that it would be examined together with other funds as part of a broader review of aging activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, acting on the Third Committee's recommendation, adopted without vote resolution 41/96.

Question of aging

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the International Plan of Action on Aging, which was endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, in particular the recommendations concerning data collection and analysis, training and education, research and exchange of information contained therein,

Recalling its resolution 37/51, in which it endorsed the recommendation contained in the Plan of Action that the Commission for Social Development should be designated as the international body to review the implementation of the Plan of Action every four years and to make proposals for updating it as considered necessary,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/29 of 29 November 1985, in which it stressed the importance of the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging, particularly in assisting Governments, at their request, in formulating and implementing policies and programmes on aging,

Emphasizing once again the importance of regional meetings to consider the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action, as demonstrated by the African Regional Conference on Aging, held at Dakar in December 1984,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging and in particular the United Nations system-wide programmes on aging,

Appreciating the positive views of Member States, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General, on the strengthening of the existing United Nations programmes on aging for the further implementation of the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action,

1. Urges Governments to intensify their efforts, within the context of their own national priorities, cultures and traditions, to implement the recommendations contained in the International Plan of Action on Aging;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in compliance with the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action, to promote and encourage, within available resources or through voluntary contributions, training centres to train required personnel in the field of aging, especially personnel from developing countries, who would in turn train others;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to renew his efforts to give priority attention to the provision of advisory services to developing countries that request them, to the extent feasible under the regular funding of the programmes on aging, and to encourage the exchange of information through the expansion of the existing United Nations network;

4. Again requests the Secretary-General to respond favourably to the request of the African Regional Conference on Aging for assistance in establishing an African gerontological society;

5. Urges the Secretary-General, in compliance with the views of Member States as reflected in his report, to maintain and strengthen the existing programmes on aging and to strengthen the United Nations system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes on aging, with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs continuing to serve as focal point in the United Nations system for activities relating to aging;

6. Reaffirms its endorsement of the International Plan of Action on Aging and requests the Secretary-General, within the existing programme, to continue to monitor progress in the implementation of the Plan of Action and in the analysis of global trends on a multi-dimensional basis, and the Commission for Social Development to continue its quadrennial review as provided for in the Plan;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, as recommended in his report, to review the world aging situation every six years on the basis of a comprehensive study identifying the major trends and suggesting concrete measures for action;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to promote the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging within its existing structure so that it may continue to provide assistance to developing countries, at their request, particularly through the funding of catalytic and innovative projects;

9. Invites Governments and non-governmental organizations to continue and, where possible, to increase their contributions to the Trust Fund, and calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Trust Fund;

10. Calls upon other United Nations funding organizations to support the Trust Fund in providing assistance for projects that fall within their mandate;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a progress report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Question of aging".

General Assembly resolution 41/96

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/798) without vote, 31 October (meeting 32); 13-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.16/Rev.1); agenda item 85.

Sponsors: Austria, Bangladesh, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Indonesia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mauritania, Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Suriname.

Related resolution: ESC 1986/26.

Also on 4 December, the Assembly, by decision 41/424 adopted without vote, deferred until its 1987 session consideration of a twice-revised draft resolution on implementing the Plan of Action⁽¹⁾ By that text, the Assembly would merge the new trust fund established in July⁽⁴⁾ with the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging. It would be named the United Nations International Fund for Aging; be administered by UNDP; and included among the programmes for which contributions were pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

Chapter XX

Refugees and displaced persons

In 1986, the overall refugee situation in the world remained serious, even though new refugee influxes were offset by organized or spontaneous repatriation, mainly in Africa, and to a limited extent in Latin America and Asia. As efforts continued to promote repatriation, local integration and resettlement, as appropriate, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued working towards an approach that combined effective emergency response, prompt establishment of basic services such as health, sanitation and education, and early action to establish income-generating activities leading to self-reliance. Regarding international protection, serious problems affected the rights or safety of refugees, such as restrictive measures to combat irregular movements of refugees travelling in search of refuge in other continents, violation of the rights to life and safety through piracy and military and armed attacks, refolement and expulsion of asylum-seekers.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said that over 10 million refugees remained under the United Nations care and protection. Expressing hope that the number would decline as regional conflicts were resolved and other causes were removed, the Secretary-General noted the need for intensified, well-directed development strategies to help lessen the likelihood of future mass migration and reduce its potential dimensions.

Pakistan continued to host the world's largest single refugee population: an estimated 5 million Afghans were in Pakistan and Iran. In South-East Asia, resettlement in third countries remained the main durable solution for refugees in camps, although an increasing number of Indo-Chinese long-stayers awaiting resettlement caused concern. Under the Orderly Departure Programme, 18,418 Vietnamese were reunited with family members abroad. Towards the end of 1986, an understanding was reached between Ethiopia, Djibouti and Somalia that permitted the voluntary repatriation of Ethiopians. Voluntary repatriation programmes were also carried out for Ugandan refugees from the Sudan and Zaire, Argentine and Uruguayan refugees, as well as refugees from other Latin American countries. UNHCR also provided assistance to some 120,000 refugees in Central America and Mexico.

As before, assistance to Palestine refugees was provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (see p. 339).

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme in October adopted a Geneva Declaration on the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol, calling on States that had not done so to accede to the instruments.

In December, the General Assembly called on States to promote durable solutions and to contribute to the UNHCR programmes (resolution 41/124). It also called for emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad (41/140), humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti (41/137), and assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia (41/141) and to refugees in the Sudan (41/139) and in Somalia (41/138). The Assembly also called for aid to student refugees in southern Africa (41/136) and to South African and Namibian refugee women and children (41/123). The Assembly requested intensified support for the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made in 1984 at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (41/122).

The Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees submitted its final report, and the Assembly endorsed its Group's conclusions and recommendations (41/70).

The 1986 Nansen Medal—named for Fridtjof Nansen, first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—went to the people of Canada in recognition of outstanding services rendered to refugees.

Jean-Pierre Hocké assumed his functions as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on 1 January 1986.

Programme and finances of UNHCRProgramme policy

Executive Committee action. At its thirty-seventh session (Geneva, 6-13 October 1986), the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme(1) recognized that the exercise of the High Commissioner's international protection function had become increasingly complex due to the growing number and changing composition of current movements of refugees and asylum-seekers. It stressed the importance of Governments providing full support in the search for durable solutions, and noted with appreciation the efforts made by UNHCR to arrange for consultations between concerned Governments in order to deal with problems relating to specific refugee groups and, in particular, the problem raised by the movement of refugees and asylum-seekers from one region to another.

The Executive Committee welcomed the increased share of UNHCR budgetary resources allocated to durable solutions and the High Commissioner's continued efforts to promote voluntary repatriation, and appealed to Governments to provide adequate resettlement quotas with flexible selection criteria.

The Executive Committee expressed grave concern that the basic rights of refugees continued to be disregarded, as evidenced by the military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements, and by the large numbers of refugees subjected to detention. It stressed the importance of accession to relevant international legal instruments in view of the magnitude and the seriousness of the refugee problem. The Committee called on the High Commissioner to continue to give due attention to the specific protection needs of refugee women and children.

Regarding development projects for refugees and returnees, the Executive Committee urged the High Commissioner to intensify efforts to promote such activities in co-operation with the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other organizations specialized in development assistance. Further, it requested Governments of asylum countries to consider formulating and implementing in their regional or national development plans, with the assistance of the international community, development-oriented programmes addressed to refugees and local populations.

In meeting refugee needs, UNHCR continued co-operating with other United Nations organizations, in particular with the World Food Programme (WFP) in providing food aid, with the World Bank and the International Labour Organisation in promoting self-reliance and income-generating or employment opportunities, and with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in responding to primary health care, water supply and basic sanitation needs. Ways of incorporating a number of established refugee settlements into the normal development process were being studied by UNHCR and UNDP. UNHCR collaborated closely with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) in responding to the African emergency, with the World Health Organization (WHO) in developing a primary health care programme, and with the United Nations Fund for Population Activities in promoting family-planning programmes. It also co-operated with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, the Organization of American States, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the European Parliament and the Council of Europe, as well as liberation movements and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in 1986 to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council a note on operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including UNHCR.⁽³⁾ The Secretary-General pointed out that, even though UNHCR was not directly involved in development assistance or operational activities for development, equitable assistance and durable solutions for refugees were possible in many cases only through development-oriented support. He stressed that UNHCR would make every effort to help developing countries surmount economic, social and environmental difficulties resulting from the presence of large numbers of refugees and/or returnees.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 July 1986, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1986/152, transmitted the High Commissioner's report for 1985/86⁽⁴⁾ to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the High Commissioner, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted on 4 December resolution 41/124 without vote.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-seventh session, and having heard the statements made by the High Commissioner on 7 and 11 November 1986,

Recalling its resolution 40/118 of 13 December 1985,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner,

Noting with satisfaction that, following recent accessions, one hundred and one States are now parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, and endorsing the Geneva Declaration thereon adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-seventh session,

Deeply concerned that refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner continue to face distressingly serious problems in all parts of the world,

Particularly concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers continue to be seriously jeopardized on account of military or armed attacks and other forms of brutality,

Stressing the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this essential function, particularly in view of the continued and persistent violations of the basic rights of refugees and asylum-seekers,

Emphasizing that there is a need to assist, on as wide a basis as possible, the efforts of the High Commissioner to promote speedy and durable solutions to the problems of refugees,

Emphasizing also that voluntary repatriation or return remains the most desirable solution to the problems of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

Emphasizing further the importance for the international community to continue to provide assistance and resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution may be in sight, particularly in regions where countries of first refuge continue generously to receive refugees arriving by land or by sea,

Commending States that, despite severe economic and development problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons into their territories,

Welcoming the valuable support extended by Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out his humanitarian tasks,

Taking note of the observations of the Board of Auditors on financial management matters of the Office of the High Commissioner and the response to them by the High Commissioner,

Welcoming the continuing and increasing co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and other bodies of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Commends the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his staff for the dedicated and efficient manner in which they discharge their responsibilities and pays tribute to the four staff members who lost their lives in the course of their duties during the past year;

2. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for Governments to continue to co-operate fully with his Office in order to facilitate the effective exercise of this function, in particular by acceding to and implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement;

3. Appeals to all States that have not yet become parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees to consider acceding to them in order to enhance their universal character;

4. Condemns all violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated by military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements and other forms of brutality and the failure to rescue asylum-seekers in distress at sea;

5. Welcomes the fact that arrangements introduced by the High Commissioner have increased significantly the rescue of asylum-seekers in distress at sea and that preventive measures have resulted in a decline in the number of refugee boats attacked by pirates;

6. Urges all States, in co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner and other competent international bodies, to take all measures necessary to ensure the safety of refugees and asylum-seekers;

7. Notes with deep concern that large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers in different areas of the world are currently in detention or subject to similar restrictive measures and welcomes the conclusions on this subject adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-seventh session;

8. Recognizes the importance of fair and expeditious procedures for determining refugee status or granting asylum in order, inter alia, to protect refugees and asylum-seekers from unjustified or unduly prolonged detention or stay in camps, and urges States to establish such procedures;

9. Urges all States to support the High Commissioner in his efforts to achieve durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to his Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, including assistance to returnees, as appropriate, or, wherever appropriate, through integration into countries of asylum or resettlement in third countries;

10. Recognizes the importance of finding durable solutions to refugee problems and recognizes also that the search for durable solutions includes the need to address the causes of movements of refugees and asylum-seekers from their countries of origin, and takes note of the final report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

11. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries that, despite limited resources, continue to admit, on a permanent or temporary basis, large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, and, reaffirming the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing, urges the international community to assist receiving countries in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden created by the presence of those refugees and asylum-seekers;

12. Recognizes with appreciation the work done by the High Commissioner to put into practice the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, as initiated at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, and urges him to continue that process, wherever appropriate, in full co-operation with appropriate international agencies, and, further, urges Governments to support these efforts;

13. Emphasizes the essential role of development-oriented organizations and agencies in the implementation of programmes that benefit refugees and returnees and urges the High Commissioner to strengthen his co-operation with those organizations and agencies;

14. Commends all States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that facilitate the attainment of durable solutions and contribute generously to the High Commissioner's programmes;

15. Notes with satisfaction the efforts undertaken by the High Commissioner to identify and meet the special needs of refugee women and children and urges him to continue these efforts;

16. Calls upon Governments to contribute, in a spirit of international burden-sharing, to the High Commissioner's programmes with the aim of ensuring that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner are met.

General Assembly resolution 41/124

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/880 & Corr.1) without vote, 19 November (meeting 50); 38-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.56); agenda item 99 (a).

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Finland, France, Gambia, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 39-43, 46, 48, 50; plenary 97.

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR voluntary funds expenditure in 1986⁽⁵⁾ amounted to $441.5 million as compared with $459 million in 1985. Of the total, some $281 million was spent on General Programmes and $160 million on Special Programmes and other trust funds. Total income for 1986 was $449.9 million.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee⁽¹⁾ expressed concern over UNHCR's continuing financial difficulties and noted a shortfall of $46.8 million under the General Programmes and of $15.7 million under the Special Programmes as at 1 October 1986. It emphasized the need for realistic programme and budget planning.

Contributions

Contributions in cash and kind in 1986 totalled $422 million. Paid contributions in cash totalled $287.3 million, while outstanding pledges amounted to $62 million. Contributions in kind were $35 million with an additional $38 million in outstanding pledges. In addition, $111,111 was received from the Netherlands and $2 million from the European Economic Community for a World Bank income-generating project for refugees in Pakistan. Contributions in cash and kind from government sources totalled some $362 million in 1986. Intergovernmental organizations provided $52 million, and NGOs and private sources made donations valued at $8.5 million.

At its 1986 session,⁽¹⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee approved a target of $360.4 million (not including the $10 million for the Emergency Fund) for 1987 General Programmes, urging Governments to make funds available to ensure that the needs of refugees and displaced persons were fully met.

Accounts of voluntary funds for 1985

The audited financial statements on the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended

31 December 1985 showed a total expenditure of $459 million and total income of $435.4 million.⁽⁶⁾

In July 1986,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the synthesis of the main observations contained in the reports of the Board of Auditors on the audit of various United Nations funds; comments relating to UNHCR concerned, among other things, performance evaluation of consultants, property management and procurement monitoring. Commenting on the Board's observations, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in September,⁽⁸⁾ stated that, while taking into account that UNHCR operated under unusual or emergency circumstances, it was important to ensure that the flow of cash and goods was managed and monitored properly.

In October,⁽¹⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee took note of the accounts and reports and welcomed the High Commissioner's efforts to improve financial control and management of programme implementation.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 41/176, accepted the financial report and the Board's audit opinions, concurred with ACABQ's observations and requested the High Commissioner to take the required remedial action.

Administration

In October,⁽¹⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee expressed support for the High Commissioner's initiatives to reorganize UNHCR in order to improve its efficiency and effectiveness, particularly with respect to activities in the field. It intended to discuss in 1987 progress made to improve the organization and working methods in support of field activities.

Activities for refugees

Assistance

During 1986,⁽¹⁾ UNHCR continued to co-operate actively with concerned Governments and the international community in efforts to meet the humanitarian needs of refugees throughout the world. The promotion of durable solutions—voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement—remained the primary and long-term objective of the assistance programmes. UNHCR responded to requests for emergency assistance for many new arrivals and continued to pursue care and maintenance programmes for refugees for whom no immediate solution could be foreseen. Whenever feasible, relief-oriented programmes also included measures aimed at promoting basic self-sufficiency activities among refugees.

In 1986, General Programmes expenditure totalled $281.1 million, including $3.2 million obligated from the Emergency Fund and used mostly in Africa—$500,000 for Sudanese refugees in the Keffa region of Ethiopia, $414,534 for returnees in Ethiopia, $440,762 for returnees in Ethiopia from Djibouti, $500,000 for Mozambican refugees in Malawi, and $870,040 for Mozambican and Angolan refugees in Zambia. An amount of $488,522 assisted newly arrived Nicaraguan refugees in Honduras. UNHCR continued to strengthen its emergency preparedness and response capabilities.

The provision of intermediate assistance to refugees in the form of care and maintenance (food, shelter, water, health services and sanitation, education, counselling) continued in 1986. As in the previous year, the largest care and maintenance programme was for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, for which $48.3 million was obligated under the 1986 General Programmes, $11.2 million of that amount going towards income-generating and self-sufficiency activities. Other countries where major care and maintenance programmes were implemented included Costa Rica, Honduras, Somalia and Thailand.

UNHCR'S primary objective remained the promotion of durable solutions, and over $89.9 million was obligated under the General Programmes to that end. UNHCR promoted voluntary repatriation movements, notably in Africa, Asia and Central and South America; in 1986, close to a quarter of a million refugees returned to their country of origin, the vast majority doing so spontaneously. Resettlement in third countries remained the principal durable solution for Indo-Chinese refugees—some 51,137 were resettled in 1986, as were an additional 18,418 Vietnamese under the Orderly Departure Programme. Expenditure on local integration activities in 1986 totalled some $70.3 million, while resettlement assistance amounted to approximately $15 million.

Elementary education continued to be provided in local government schools or in specially established settlement schools. UNHCR had over 108 world-wide programmes in post-primary, vocational/technical and academic education. Some $10.4 million was spent to enable 14,500 refugee students to study at the secondary and tertiary levels—28 per cent of them took technical training courses, 57 per cent attended secondary schools and 15 per cent were enrolled in universities.

Special counselling and community work programmes continued in Thailand and Malaysia and were also extended to Indonesia to assist the recovery of refugees who were victims of pirate attacks. Assistance to handicapped refugees continued with the provision of medical facilities and services in asylum countries. In 1986, the needs of some 10,755 refugees (as against 5,700 in 1985) were met at a cost of $940,027, obligated under General Programmes. In addition, 28 disabled refugees, who could not be treated locally, were referred to medical centres abroad at a cost of $41,471 under Special Programmes. In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee⁽²⁾ welcomed the admission of larger numbers of disabled refugees into countries of resettlement.

The annual amount of food aid to refugees, including that from WFP, totalled some $200 million; some $75 million in food aid was channelled through UNHCR in 1986.

The UNHCR Executive Committee noted with concern that the basic rights of refugees continued to be disregarded and that, in particular, they were being exposed to violent acts, arbitrary detention and refoulement. The Committee stressed the importance of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees and urged the High Commissioner to promote development activities in co-operation with the World Bank, UNDP and other development assistance organizations.

In 1986, UNHCR expenditure on assistance activities in Africa totalled $181.2 million, of which $79.8 million was spent on local settlement activities, $747,400 on resettlement, $22 million on voluntary repatriation and $79.2 million on relief and other assistance—the Sudan and Somalia receiving the most assistance with allocations of $58 million and $52 million, respectively.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, a total of $35.3 million went for assistance activities, of which $17.2 million was spent on local settlement, $223,100 on resettlement, $1.7 million on voluntary repatriation and $16.2 million on relief and other assistance. Honduras and Mexico received the highest amounts—$14 million and $9 million, respectively.

In Europe and North America, UNHCR expenditures totalled $10.3 million, of which $2.3 million was spent on local settlement, $2.1 million on resettlement, $689,400 on voluntary repatriation and $5.3 million on relief and other assistance—Yugoslavia and Italy received the most assistance with allocations of $2.5 million and $2.4 million, respectively.

In Asia and Oceania, total assistance expenditures amounted to $68 million, of which $7.4 million was spent on local settlement, $13.5 million on resettlement, $1.7 million on voluntary repatriation and $45.3 million on relief and other assistance—Thailand and the Philippines received the most assistance with allocations totalling $26.4 million and $7.6 million, respectively.

In South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, total UNHCR expenditures amounted to $94 million, of which $59 million was spent on local settlement, $318,900 on resettlement, $5,200 on voluntary repatriation and $35 million on relief and other assistance—Pakistan and Iran received the most assistance with totals of $77.3 million and $8.2 million, respectively.

UNHCR promoted greater public awareness and understanding of the world-wide refugee problem through the distribution of information materials. It also organized an itinerant media seminar in Central America and a round table, "Helping refugees—contributing to peace". The magazine Refugees was published monthly in English, French and Spanish, and special editions were issued in German, Italian and Japanese.

Africa

In 1986, the overall number of refugees in Africa remained relatively stable with the influxes being offset by repatriation movements in several areas: political developments in Uganda and security problems in parts of the Equatoria region of the Sudan led to the return of some 130,000 Ugandan refugees from neighbouring countries, the great majority from the Sudan; in the organized repatriation, some 11,000 Chadians returned from the Central African Republic and several thousand others returned spontaneously from the Sudan; in the Sudan, limited continuing influxes from Ethiopia and Uganda were substantially offset by the spontaneous repatriation of some 170,000 refugees, mostly Ethiopians and Ugandans as well as some Chadians; and although the influx of refugees from Ethiopia into northern Somalia increased in the first half of 1986, organized repatriation to Ethiopia began in December from Djibouti and Somalia.

However, in southern Africa, conflict and insecurity within Mozambique, exacerbated by drought in some areas, resulted in an increasing exodus of Mozambicans to neighbouring countries, with some 250,000 Mozambicans requiring UNHCR assistance—150,000 in Malawi, 5,000 in Swaziland, 30,000 in Zambia and 65,000 in Zimbabwe. During the year, UNHCR assisted some 43,000 South African refugees in various countries in southern Africa and some 76,000 Namibian refugees, the great majority of whom were in Angola and Zambia.

While most African States continued liberal practices of asylum, economic difficulties and consequent social tensions increased the impact on national infrastructures of both assisted and spontaneously settled refugees. UNHCR continued to promote voluntary repatriation and resettlement of African refugees within Africa; a durable solution was sought in third countries when neither voluntary repatriation nor local integration was feasible. Of the 2,682 African refugees resettled outside the continent in 1986, 1,017 went to the United States, 584 to Canada and 181 to Australia.

UNHCR worked closely with the United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa to ensure that its emergency programmes were properly co-ordinated within the United Nations system.

During 1986, total UNHCR expenditure in Africa amounted to $193.5 million, of which $86.8 million was obligated under General Programmes and $103.9 million under Special Programmes.

JIU report. In May 1986, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the role of UNHCR in Africa, focusing on developments during 1984-1985.⁽³⁾ The report dealt with a regional overview, international protection and assistance programmes, and provided conclusions and recommendations. It noted that the number of refugees in the region had averaged over 3 million a year since 1980, and was estimated to represent more than 30 per cent of the aggregate world refugee population registered by UNHCR in 1985.

JIU stated that at the height of the latest refugee emergency in Africa, UNHCR had provided significant relief to those in distress and assistance to host Governments in coping with large-scale refugee situations; UNHCR emergency relief operations in the region in 1984 and 1985 were focused on over 1.2 million displaced persons, and relief requirements for them rose from $9 million in November 1984 to over $100 million in June 1985. The UNHCR response to emergencies was found to be tardy.

In the area of international protection, the report called for UNHCR's continuing attention to areas such as national asylum policies, resettlement openings in Africa, the co-ordination of relief activities with other international agencies, and the establishment of secure mechanisms for the proper control and distribution of all relief aid under its supervision. In that regard, it called for extensive follow-up and implementation of the 1979 Arusha Conference recommendations⁽⁴⁾ on refugee protection and provision of assistance, as well as a clear demarcation of the roles of UNHCR and OAU. It also called for reviving the momentum of the Programme of Action of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,⁽⁵⁾ which had been overshadowed by the emergency operations.

The capacity of the UNHCR field offices in administering and co-ordinating programmes, and in maintaining adequate financial and management control, was hindered by the socio-economic difficulties of many African countries especially those hosting large numbers of refugees, poor transport and communications networks, armed conflicts, ineffectual governmental co-ordinating roles and a scarcity of qualified human resources. A lack of systematic collaboration and information exchange among UNHCR field offices further contributed to weakening the impact of UNHCR's operations in Africa.

Among JIU's recommendations were: the dispatch of a fact-finding mission to the front-line States to study ways of relieving them of refugee pressure and a high-level meeting in Africa devoted to the plight of South African and Namibian refugees; co-ordination of national refugee policies and consolidation of international refugee law against mass expulsions of so-called illegal immigrants; expanded efforts to explore resettlement opportunities especially for urban refugees, intensified emphasis on refugee education and training to facilitate their local integration and self-reliance, and expansion of small enterprise projects for refugees; and a reorganization of field offices and decentralization of headquarters staff to the field to ensure better administration of activities.

In September, the Secretary-General submitted his comments⁽⁶⁾ on the JIU report; he agreed that the magnitude of the problems required a major and expanded effort from the international community and from UNHCR. The Secretary-General corrected some facts and figures used by JIU, provided supplementary information and concurred with most of JIU's recommendations, some of which, he noted, were already under implementation.

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, by decision 41/427, took note of the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments.

Follow-up to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

At the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (ICARA II) in 1984,⁽⁷⁾ the international community in a spirit of solidarity had sought to launch a process of burden-sharing on a strategy for solving the problems of refugees in Africa.

At the special session of the General Assembly on the critical economic situation in Africa, in May/June 1986, the plight of 5 million refugees and returnees, together with the adverse effects that the refugee burden continued to impose on the frail economies of host countries, were again considered as matters of high priority for many African States; the need to accelerate implementation of the ICARA II recommendations was reaffirmed (resolution S-13/2).

In July, the High Commissioner orally reported to the Economic and Social Council on follow-up to ICARA II; on 22 July, the Council took note of that report (decision 1986/166).

Also in July⁽⁷⁾ the OAU Council of Ministers appealed to all potential donors to sustain and increase their contributions for the implementation of ICARA projects, thanked OAU member States that had offered transit or resettlement facilities to South African refugees, and called on OAU member States receiving refugees or returnees to integrate the related programme formulation and implementation into their national plans in order to ensure the continuous viability and funding of such programmes. It also appealed to the international community to strengthen the financial capacity of UNHCR and voluntary agencies so as to ensure that the relief and rehabilitation needs were met.

In a September report⁽⁸⁾ on assistance to refugees in Africa, submitted in response to a 1985 General Assembly request⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the follow-up to ICARA II. He noted that, because of the 1986 emergency caused by famine and drought and their lingering effects, many ICARA II projects had been modified or delayed in implementation; UNDP and UNHCR co-operated closely in implementing the ICARA II recommendations and in promoting the complementarity of refugee aid and development aid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/122 without vote.

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its resolutions, particularly resolution 40/117 of 13 December 1985, relating to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees in Africa,

Mindful that the fundamental purpose of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984, was to launch collective action by the international community aimed at achieving lasting solutions,

Gravely concerned at the persistent and serious problem of large numbers of refugees on the African continent,

Aware of the heavy burden borne by African countries of asylum on account of the presence of these refugees and its consequences for their economic and social development, and of the great sacrifices made by them, despite their limited resources,

Deeply concerned that the refugee situation has been severely affected by the critical economic situation in Africa, as well as by drought and other natural disasters,

Bearing in mind the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, adopted by the General Assembly at its thirteenth special session, the special session devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa, which refers in particular to the need for the speedy implementation of the recommendations of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

Recognizing that the efforts of the countries of asylum require the concerted support of the international community to meet the needs for emergency relief, and for medium-term and long-term development aid,

Taking note of the declarations, decisions and resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 28 to 30 July 1986, and of the resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of that organization at its forty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 26 July 1986, on the situation of refugees in Africa,

Emphasizing the collective responsibility of sharing the urgent and overwhelming burden of the problem of African refugees through effective mobilization of additional resources to meet the urgent and long-term needs of the refugees and to strengthen the capacity of countries of asylum to provide adequately for the refugees while they remain in those countries, as well as to assist the countries of origin in rehabilitating voluntary returnees,

Reiterating once again the vital importance of the complementarity between refugee aid and development assistance,

Deeply concerned that many of the projects submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa have yet to be funded and implemented,

Desirous of ensuring the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation to African host countries, which are the biggest donors, for their generous contribution and continuous efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees in spite of their critical economic situation;

2. Reiterates its appreciation to all donor countries, the organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, regional organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their initial support and response to the projects submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

3. Urges the international community to maintain the momentum created by the Conference and to translate into reality the projects submitted as well as the principles of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Conference;

4. Emphasizes the vital importance of the complementarity of refugee aid and development assistance and of achieving durable solutions to the problem of refugees in Africa and the necessity of providing assistance for the strengthening of the social and economic infrastructures of African countries receiving refugees and returnees;

5. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to keep the situation of refugees in Africa under constant review so as to ensure that adequate assistance is available for care and maintenance and for bringing about durable solutions;

6. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to increase its efforts to mobilize additional resources for refugee-related development projects and, in general, to promote and co-ordinate with the host countries and the donor community the integration of refugee-related activities into national development planning;

7. Calls upon all Member States and organizations of the United Nations system concerned, as well as relevant regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their support for the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Declaration and Programme of Action, to monitor, in consultation and close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme, the follow-up to the Conference;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/122

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/880 & Corr. 1) without vote, 19 November (meeting 50); draft by Cameroon, for African Group (A/C.3/41/L.46); agenda item 99 (b).

Chad

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1986 a report⁽¹¹⁾ on emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad. He reported that a November 1985 national reconciliation policy and general amnesty, as well as improved climatic conditions, had favoured the return of refugees; during the first half of 1986, some 80,000 people had returned from Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Nigeria and the Sudan. However, environmental degradation and hostilities in the northern region had left uncertain the fate of a large number of displaced persons. Relocation projects, set up to deal with the massive displacement of the drought-stricken Sahelian population, had witnessed a gradual decrease in the number of persons receiving assistance during the first part of 1986. Although generally well-implemented, the relocation projects failed to integrate most of the nomadic populations of Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti and northern Kanem prefectures; some 60,000 displaced persons from the region were considered to be in need of assistance.

Assistance provided or planned for displaced persons and returnees included: a farming project, financed and executed by FAO; an integrated rural development project in the Ouaddai region, financed by the ICARA II fund and aimed at facilitating the return from the Sudan and the relocation of Chadian refugees; and rural development projects supported by UNICEF with the Office of Rural Development of the Ministry of Agriculture.

UNHCR proposed to send a technical mission to Chad in October to evaluate the situation and living conditions of the Chadian repatriates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/140 without vote.

Emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 39/106 of 14 December 1984 and 40/136 of 13 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the drought and the invasion of locusts and predators, which are compounding the already precarious food and health situation in Chad,

Conscious that the large number of voluntary returnees and displaced persons as a result of the war and the drought in Chad poses a serious problem of integrating them into society,

Bearing in mind the many appeals made by the Government of Chad for international emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad, who are victims of the war and of natural disasters,

1. Endorses the appeals made by the Government of Chad concerning emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

2. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support, by generous contributions, the efforts being made by the Government of Chad to assist and resettle the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the action undertaken by the various bodies of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies with a view to mobilizing emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

4. Again requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/874/Add.1) without vote, 21 November (meeting 53); 28-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L.54), orally amended by Sweden; agenda item 12. Sponsors: Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Gambia, Greece, Guinea, Haiti, Indonesia, Japan, Mali, Niger, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 39, 48, 53; plenary 97.

The sponsors accepted an oral amendment by Sweden to characterize the returnees as "voluntary" throughout the text.

Related resolution: GA 41/198.

In explanation of vote on resolutions concerning Chad, Djibouti (see below) and Somalia (see p. 843), the United States expressed reservations that the texts did not reflect changes that had taken place over the past year—notably, that the drought was largely over and that famine and new refugee flows had decreased. It asserted that the inter-agency missions called for in some of the texts only duplicated work already done; that inter-agency co-operation accomplished little if Governments did nothing to integrate refugee-related and national development programmes; and that there should be clear understanding that UNHCR handled refugees, while UNDRO handled displaced persons and disaster victims.

Israel said it had joined in the consensus on the draft resolutions on Chad, Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan (see p.845), even though it did not have diplomatic relations with some of the States concerned.

Djibouti

In an August 1986 report on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,⁽¹²⁾ submitted in pursuance of a 1985 Assembly request,⁽¹³⁾ the High Commissioner stated that voluntary repatriation remained the most feasible durable solution and that assistance continued to focus on care and maintenance projects and the development of counselling services for refugees.

A significant achievement during the year was the resumption of registration in September and the subsequent relaunching of the voluntary repatriation programme in December; under the tripartite agreement between Djibouti, Ethiopia and UNHCR, the formal large-scale repatriation programme had ended at the end of 1984.⁽¹⁴⁾ By 31 December 1986, some 1,100 refugees in Djibouti had registered for voluntary repatriation, of whom 437 returned to Ethiopia. A total of 108 persons were resettled elsewhere. At the end of the year, the Government estimated that there were 14,287 refugees in Djibouti.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/137 without vote.

Humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/134 of 13 December 1985 on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti, as well as all its previous resolutions on this question,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,

Deeply concerned about the plight of the refugees and displaced persons in the country, which has been aggravated by the devastating effects of the prolonged drought,

Aware of the heavy economic and social burden placed on the Government and people of Djibouti as a result of the presence of refugees and of the consequent impact on the development and infrastructure of the country,

Appreciating the determined and sustained efforts made by the Government of Djibouti, despite its modest economic resources and limited means, to cope with the growing needs of the refugees,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to implement appropriate and lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti,

Appreciating the assistance provided by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti and appreciates his efforts to keep their situation under constant review;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to implement adequate and lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies for their assistance to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti;

4. Urges the High Commissioner to intensify his efforts to mobilize, on an emergency basis, the necessary resources to implement lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

5. Calls upon all Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to support the determined and constant efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the urgent needs of the refugees and to implement lasting solutions in respect of their situation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Ethiopia

In an August 1986 report on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,⁽¹⁵⁾ submitted in pursuance of a 1985 Assembly request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General noted that UNHCR continued to provide basic relief assistance to Sudanese refugees registered at the Itang camp in the Illubabor region of western Ethiopia, pending durable solutions; by the end of 1986, some 121,000 persons were registered in the Illubabor region. UNHCR provided relief assistance to 155,000 of the most needy among the estimated 400,000 returnees in the Hararge region; the programme benefited from a special appeal launched in February by UNHCR for $13.4 million, including some $7 million for food. In addition, the nature of the recovery and rehabilitation programme in the region was being studied. Under other programmes, refugees received assistance for lower secondary education as well as guidance on education, employment, local integration and resettlement.

In mid-1986, a new influx of southern Sudanese into the Keffa region, south of Illubabor, began; by the end of the year, some 11,000 refugees were receiving emergency relief assistance. By June 1986, an estimated 65,000 Ethiopians of Tigrayan origin had returned spontaneously from eastern Sudan.

Towards the end of 1986, an understanding was reached between the authorities that permitted the start of voluntary repatriation movements of refugees from Somalia to Ethiopia; by 31 December, some 8,000 refugees in Somalia had registered for voluntary repatriation, of whom 640 had returned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/141.

Assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its resolutions, in particular resolution 40/133 of 13 December 1985, as well as all those of the Economic and Social Council, on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the increasing number of voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia,

Deeply concerned at the situation of displaced persons and voluntary returnees in the country, which has been aggravated by the devastating effect of the prolonged drought,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia in caring for displaced persons and victims of natural disasters, as well as for voluntary returnees and refugees,

1. Commends the efforts made so far by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as by the specialized agencies, in mobilizing humanitarian assistance to assist the efforts of the Government of Ethiopia;

2. Appeals to Member States and to international organizations and voluntary agencies to render adequate material, financial and technical assistance to the Government and people of Ethiopia in their efforts to provide relief and rehabilitation to displaced persons, voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia;

3. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his efforts in mobilizing humanitarian assistance for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1987, of the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Israel.

In explanation of vote, the United States said it did not support the policies of the Government of Ethiopia which, it said, had caused loss of lives and suppression of human rights and had aggravated refugee flows across frontiers and within Ethiopia; the international community could be expected to assist the victims of man-made disasters only if the Governments responsible corrected the causes of those disasters. Israel and the United Kingdom recognized the need for humanitarian assistance, but felt Ethiopia had politicized the issue. The Federal Republic of Germany stated that the term displaced persons applied only to victims of natural disasters or conflict and not to persons in resettlement programmes. France voted in favour of the draft on the understanding that it did not apply to programmes for displaced persons within Ethiopia.

Somalia

Pursuant to a 1985 Assembly request⁽¹⁷⁾ the High Commissioner submitted in August 1986 a report⁽¹⁸⁾ on assistance to refugees in Somalia. As in the past, UNHCR programmes benefited from the active support of several United Nations agencies and some 20 NGOs and voluntary agencies. Basic food supplies continued to be provided by WFP and other donors. The material assistance programme continued to focus on health services, water-supply systems, shelter and domestic needs, transport and logistics, education, construction, community development and income-generating and agricultural projects. During the first part of 1986, only basic care and maintenance projects were implemented due to funding difficulties; normal activities were resumed later on a reduced scale. Little progress was made towards local settlement or self-sufficiency because of the limitations of Somalia's natural resources. In search of durable solutions, the UNHCR Technical Support Service undertook a mission in June to evaluate UNHCR activities in agriculture, income-generation, community development and family-life programmes, self-help construction, health and water supply.

The influx of refugees from Ethiopia into northern Somalia increased in the first half of 1986. To meet the needs of some 122,000 refugees who arrived in 1985 and the early part of 1986, an appeal was issued in February under the UNHCR Special Programme of Emergency Relief Assistance in Africa for $15.4 million, followed by an August appeal for a total assistance requirement of $22.8 million for the 18-month period ending on 30 June 1987.

Following discussions between the Governments of Ethiopia and Somalia, the voluntary repatriation of refugees from the Gedo region began in December 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/138 without vote.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981, 37/174 of 17 December 1982, 38/88 of 16 December 1983, 39/104 of 14 November 1984 and 40/132 of 13 December 1985 on the question of assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on assistance to refugees in Somalia, in particular section IV of that report,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees in Africa,

Deeply concerned about the heavy burden that has been placed on the fragile economy of Somalia by the continuing presence of large numbers of refugees,

Aware of the additional burden imposed by the new influx of refugees and the consequent urgent need for additional international assistance,

Concerned about the continuing and serious shortfalls in the provision of food assistance, which have resulted in dangerous ration restrictions, epidemics related to malnutrition, other shortages and extreme hardship in refugee camps in Somalia,

Concerned also that continuing funding difficulties have necessitated a reduction in normal activities, entailing reductions in staff and programmes, as well as the cancellation of some long-term agricultural projects,

Recognizing from the recommendations contained in the report of the High Commissioner that there remains an urgent need for increased assistance in the provision of food, water and medicines, in the areas of transport and logistics, shelter and domestic items, construction, the strengthening of health and educational facilities, and the expansion of the number of self-help schemes and small-scale farming and settlement projects necessary for the promotion of self-reliance among the refugees,

Conscious of the continued consequences of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Somalia as a result of the continued presence of refugees and new refugee flows and the consequent impact on national development and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of Somalia is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees, in spite of the limited resources and the fragile economy of Somalia;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner for their continued efforts to mobilize international assistance on behalf of the refugees in Somalia;

4. Takes note with satisfaction of the assistance rendered to refugees in Somalia by various Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum and timely material, financial and technical assistance to the Government of Somalia in its efforts to provide all necessary assistance to the refugees and to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to restore its original programmes to their normal scale;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant United Nations agencies, to dispatch a high-level inter-agency mission to Somalia to review existing refugee programmes, taking into account the country's extremely limited resources and the burden that the presence of the refugees places on its economy and vital public services, and to prepare a comprehensive programme of assistance, combining both refugee-related humanitarian and developmental needs, for eventual submission to the international community;

7. Requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1987, of the refugee situation in Somalia;

8. Also requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

Pursuant to a 1985 Assembly request⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General dispatched a high-level inter-agency mission to the Sudan from 8 February to 13 March 1986 to assess the assistance needs as well as the impact of refugees on Sudan's economy and public services. The mission's report, annexed to an April report of the Secretary-General⁽²⁰⁾ provided a strategy for a comprehensive programme of assistance for the Sudan to help it deal with the situation arising from the presence of over 1 million refugees.

The mission reported that the emergency situation brought on by the drought of 1981-1985 was not over and that, despite a national grain surplus from the harvest following good rains in 1985, 5 million people, one quarter of the total population, were affected by local crop failures; hundreds of thousands more had not recovered from the devastation of the severe drought. There were still large areas of suffering, with famine conditions persisting in northern Darfur, northern Kordofan, the Red Sea Hills and areas of southern Sudan. The mission observed that the burden of hosting large numbers of refugees had been overwhelming; international assistance programmes tended to provide minimal essentials to refugees and to assume that all ancillary national facilities and services would be made available free of charge by national and local authorities. The areas most seriously affected by refugee influx included education, health and sanitation, transport, water resources and the environment. The social tensions and costs associated with hosting refugees had become a serious concern.

The mission stressed that a durable solution to the refugee problem could not be divorced from general rural development and that assistance to refugees should aim at helping them become self-supporting and capable of contributing to the Sudan's economy. It recommended that emergency relief be provided in a manner directly supportive of recovery and long-term development and that special attention be paid to the needs of those displaced and dispossessed as a result of the famine. Observing that great numbers and geographical dispersion of refugees made it difficult to deal with the situation through a traditional refugee-related project approach, the mission recommended implementing a number of integrated urban-rural development programmes as focal areas for development of refugee-impacted regions.

The High Commissioner's appeal for relief and recovery in 1986 was estimated at some $39.8 million for eastern Sudan and $12 million for the western region. The proposed projected allocation for the annual programme in 1986 was estimated at $21.7 million. In total, the programme for 1986 amounted to nearly $74 million. During 1986, limited but continuing influxes from Ethiopia and Uganda were offset by the spontaneous or organized repatriation of some 170,000 refugees, mostly Ethiopian and Ugandan. By year's end, UNHCR was assisting some 45,000 Chadians, 330,000 Ethiopians (200,000 being recent arrivals) and 80,000 Ugandans. Government figures indicated that at least an additional 600,000 refugees had been settled spontaneously.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/139 without vote.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/181 of 15 December 1980, 36/158 of 16 December 1981, 37/173 of 17 December 1982, 38/90 of 16 December 1983, 39/108 of 14 December 1984 and 40/135 of 13 December 1985 on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of refugees in the Sudan and the report of the inter-agency mission annexed thereto,

Appreciating the measures which the Government of the Sudan is taking in order to provide shelter, protection, food, education, and health and other humanitarian services to a very large and persistent number of refugees in the Sudan,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the people and Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices they are making in caring for the refugees and the need for adequate international assistance to enable them to continue their efforts to provide assistance to the refugees,

Gravely concerned at the serious social and economic impact of the massive presence of refugees, as well as its far-reaching consequences for the country's development, security and stability,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in the Sudan,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations of the inter-agency mission to the Sudan, particularly the suggestion that the international community should explore new and effective approaches to ensure that the burden of dealing with refugees is shared more equitably,

Recognizing the need to view refugee-related development projects within local and national development plans,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 40/135 and welcomes the report of the inter-agency mission annexed thereto;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of the Sudan is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees, in spite of the effects of the drought and the serious economic situation it faces, and stresses the need for additional resources to lessen the impact of the presence of refugees on the economy of this least developed country;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the massive presence of refugees in the country on its security, stability and development, as reflected in the report of the inter-agency mission;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the shrinking resources available for refugee programmes in the Sudan and the serious consequences of this situation on the country's ability to continue to act as host and provide assistance to refugees;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in following up on the report of the inter-agency mission and furthering the integration of developmental and refugee aid, to take steps to ensure that continued joint inter-agency expert planning for the Sudan takes place, as suggested by the mission in its report;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees;

8. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to provide the Government of the Sudan with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Student refugees in southern Africa

Pursuant to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ the High Commissioner reported on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa—Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe—from 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986.⁽²²⁾

During the first half of 1986, 80 South African refugees registered in Botswana. UNHCR sponsored five South African refugees at primary level, 13 at secondary level and one for vocational training, as well as two Namibian students at secondary-school level, all within Botswana. In addition, 52 South Africans and 56 Namibians received educational assistance from various intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, with more than half of them studying outside Botswana, their country of asylum; one South African and three Namibians were studying at the secondary-school level at Dukwe refugee settlement.

South African refugees in Lesotho decreased from 11,500 in 1985 to an estimated 3,000 to 4,000 during the first half of 1986. Of the 336 registered with UNHCR, some 200 received assistance, including education. Some 42 South Africans were enrolled in primary schools, half of them UNHCR-sponsored and the other half sponsored by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Another 118 refugees were enrolled at the secondary level, of which 17 were registered refugees. At the post-secondary level, 50 South African students, of whom 17 were registered refugees, were enrolled at technical and commercial schools, mainly outside Lesotho. South African students at university level numbered 201, of whom 13 were registered as refugees. In addition, 411 students were receiving educational assistance in Lesotho and abroad, of whom 121 were registered refugees. Since the beginning of 1986, new arrivals, the majority of whom were affiliated with national liberation movements, were relocated to the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia for educational placement and security reasons. A few were evacuated to Kenya.

While the total number of refugees in Swaziland substantially increased due to an influx from Mozambique, the number of South African refugees showed no substantial increase from the 6,800 previously reported. The number of South African refugees who received educational assistance from UNHCR increased from 167 to 198; of those, 48 were at primary-school level and 150 at secondary level. South African and Namibian refugees receiving educational assistance from other United Nations agencies and NGOs numbered 51.

In Zambia, there was no significant increase in the number of South African refugees; the majority of the 3,000 refugees were affiliated to the African National Congress. The number of Namibian refugees in the country was about 7,500. UNHCR sponsored 67 refugee children (15 Namibians, 48 South Africans) at the primary-school level, and 149 persons of all nationalities (one from Namibia) at the secondary level. Other educational assistance from intergovernmental organizations and NGOs was granted to 690 refugees, of whom 662 were from Namibia and 28 from South Africa. The number of Namibian refugees pursuing secondary and vocational studies outside Zambia and under UNHCR sponsorship grew to 636.

In Zimbabwe, the number of urban refugees, mostly South African, declined from 470 to 226 as a result of naturalization and resettlement. UNHCR sponsored two South African refugee students at primary level, 10 at secondary level and 13 for vocational training; two Namibian refugees were sponsored at secondary level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/136 without vote.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/138 of 13 December 1985, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the High Commissioner on the assistance programme to student refugees from South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa have been successfully completed,

Noting with concern that the discriminatory and repressive policies which continue to be applied in South Africa and Namibia cause a continued and increasing influx of student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure which the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation which they have extended to the High Commissioner on matters concerning the welfare of these refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, which were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and all other competent United Nations bodies, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance so as to facilitate and expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

9. Calls upon agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

10. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1987, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

South African and Namibian refugee women and children

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/123 by recorded vote.

Measures of assistance provided to South African and Namibian refugee women and children

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on measures of assistance provided to women inside South Africa and Namibia and to women outside South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as a result of the practice of apartheid,

Recalling its resolutions 34/93 K of 12 December 1979, 35/206 N of 16 December 1980 and 36/172 K of 17 December 1981 on women and children under apartheid,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/25 of 23 May 1986 on measures of assistance provided to South African, Namibian and refugee women,

Noting with regret that during the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, the status of women living under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia deteriorated,

Concerned about the special needs of women and children forced to flee from South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as a result of the practice of apartheid,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/25 on measures of assistance provided to South African, Namibian and refugee women;

2. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to intensify their support for and solidarity with refugee women and children outside South Africa and Namibia and in front-line States, in particular:

(a) To provide for the widest possible dissemination of information about the situation of refugee women and children;

(b) To provide legal, humanitarian and other assistance to refugee women and children and their families who are victims of apartheid;

(c) To provide assistance to women in the national liberation movements to enable them to attend major international conferences and seminars and to undertake speaking tours further to promote international solidarity with the oppressed women;

(d) To support the projects and activities of the southern African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, particularly those involving refugee women and children;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure close co-ordination between United Nations bodies, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Centre for Social Development and

Humanitarian Affaire, the Centre against Apartheid, the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Council for Namibia, as well as the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, with a view to maximizing publicity on the situation of refugee women and children;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to include in its programme of work for 1988 the organization of a seminar on the special needs of South African and Namibian refugee women and children and ways of increasing measures of assistance to them, in co-operation with other relevant United Nations bodies;

5. Decides to consider the measures of assistance provided to South African and Namibian refugee women and children under the item entitled "Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees" of the provisional agenda of its forty-second session.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 147-1-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/880 & Corr. 1) by recorded vote (127-2-8), 19 November (meeting 50); draft by Cameroon, for African Group (A/C.3/41/L.47), orally revised; agenda item 99 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 39-43, 46, 48, 50; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom.

Explaining its vote, the United States expressed regret that there had not been a consensus on the resolution and that it had been drafted in such politicized terms that it could only be prejudicial to those whom it was intended to assist. The United Kingdom shared that view.

France also asserted that the refugee problem was essentially humanitarian and should not be politicized.

Related resolutions: ESC 1986/25, GA 41/39 E.

Europe and North America

In Europe, the countries receiving the most asylum-seekers continued to be the Federal Republic of Germany (99,650 people), followed by France, Sweden and Denmark. Italy and Turkey granted transit facilities. The number of asylum-seekers in Europe increased from 170,000 in 1985 to over 200,000 in 1986. The arrival of increasing numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, particularly through irregular channels and not directly from countries of origin, led to the adoption in some countries of new legislation and the application of restrictive measures at borders and airports. In parallel with those developments, legal assistance activities for refugees and asylum-seekers were strengthened in a number of countries.

In North America, Canada and the United States continued in 1986 to act as major resettlement countries, admitting a total of 18,000 and 62,500 refugees, respectively. The majority originated from first-asylum countries in South-East Asia, Europe and Africa, where no other durable solution was feasible.

UNHCR expenditure in North America and Europe totalled $16.8 million in 1986, of which $12.8 million was under General Programmes and $0.8 million under Special Programmes.⁽¹⁾

Latin America and the Caribbean

At the end of 1986, 120,200 refugees were receiving UNHCR assistance in Central America and Mexico. Since the registration in Honduras of some 7,000 newly arrived Nicaraguan refugees of Indian origin in April, no significant influx occurred in the region. In Costa Rica, 20,700 refugees were assisted and the local integration of Salvadorian and Nicaraguan refugees continued. In Honduras, there were an estimated 21,000 Salvadorians, 530 Guatemalans, 8,200 Nicaraguan Ladinos and 16,000 Miskito and Sumo Nicaraguans; despite the 1986 repatriation of 1,770 Nicaraguans and 963 Salvadorians, the level of material assistance remained unchanged. In Mexico, the estimated number of refugees remained at 175,000, the majority being Salvadorians; a census showed that there were 39,400 Guatemalan refugees.

The number of repatriates continued to increase, particularly in the case of Guatemalans in Mexico, Salvadorians or Nicaraguans in Honduras and Haitians in the Dominican Republic. Repatriation of Argentinian and Uruguayan refugees also continued.

The refugee population in other countries in the region stood at 30,600, nearly half of whom were in Guatemala.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNHCR expenditure amounted to $33.4 million, of which $35.1 million was under General Programmes and $2.5 million under Special Programmes.⁽¹⁾

East and South Asia and Oceania

The number of Indo-Chinese refugees in camps and centres in asylum countries in East and South Asia and Oceania registered a 9 per cent decrease from the 1985 figure and stood at 145,227 at the end of 1986. Among first-asylum countries, Thailand continued to host the largest number—85,818 Lao, 26,949 Kampucheans and 7,023 Vietnamese. Other countries and territories in the region hosted 25,437 Vietnamese boat people; a total of 2,591 refugees were rescued at sea, of whom 1,249 benefited from the Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers (RASRO) scheme, while 292 persons were disembarked and resettled under the Disembarkation Resettlement Offers (DISERO) scheme. There were also some 280,000 Indo-Chinese refugees in China and an estimated 20,000 Kampucheans benefiting from UNHCR assistance in Viet Nam. Some 90,000 Filipino refugees continued to be hosted in Sabah province, Malaysia.

Resettlement in third countries remained the most viable solution for most Indo-Chinese refugees; between 1975 and the end of 1986, nearly 1.1 million had found new homes in third countries. Two refugee processing centres, at Bataan, Philippines, and Galang, Indonesia, provided temporary accommodation to Indo-Chinese refugees bound for resettlement in third countries; the Galang centre was closed at the end of the year to new arrivals. A total of 51,137 Indo-Chinese—comprising 25,094 Vietnamese, 16,658 Lao and 9,385 Kampucheans—were resettled during the year. Under the Orderly Departure Programme set up in 1979, 18,418 persons left Viet Nam for family reunion abroad. Kampucheans and Lao who returned to their home countries benefited from UNHCR assistance to facilitate their integration. (See also p. 206.)

The UNHCR Executive Committee,⁽²⁾ at its October 1986 session, expressed concern about the number of long-stayers among the Indo-Chinese refugees in camps in South-East Asia and called on Governments that were not doing so to participate in the resettlement effort and to admit those refugees without links to a third country. The Executive Committee also commended UNHCR for promoting the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam, noted the valuable support for the DISERO and RASRO schemes, and recommended that Governments participate in those efforts to provide resettlement places in a spirit of burden-sharing.

In Papua New Guinea, the number of Irian Jayans remained stable at 11,000: 1,135 persons returned voluntarily to Irian Jaya, the easternmost province of Indonesia, and some 1,100 Irian Jayans arrived in September and December. UNCHR assistance consisted mainly of care and maintenance to the camp population along the Indonesian/Papua New Guinea border.

During 1986, total UNHCR expenditure in the region stood at $73.4 million, of which $62.6 million was under the General Programmes and $10 million under Special Programmes.

South-West Asia,

North Africa and the Middle East

During 1986, UNHCR obligated $59.7 million under General Programmes and $37.5 million under Special Programmes to assist over 5 million refugees in South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East.

In Pakistan, the population of Afghan refugees, estimated at 2.9 million, continued to represent the world's largest single concentration of refugees; over 75 per cent of that population were women and children. UNHCR assistance programmes in Pakistan were geared to the provision of supplies and services as well as activities towards self-help and self-reliance. A UNHCR/World Bank income-generating project for refugees and the local population generated 55 million work-days of employment in its pilot phase in 1986, 80 per cent of which benefited Afghan refugees.

In 1986, a total of $5 million was obligated for the health, water and sanitation needs of some 2.2 million Afghan refugees in Iran, which was visited by a joint UNHCR/WFP mission and a WHO consultancy mission visited during the latter part of the year.

Despite the precarious situation in Lebanon, the UNHCR regional office in Beirut continued to assist some 2,900 refugees in that country.

In Yemen, UNHCR provided basic assistance to 1,800 refugees of Eritrean origin living on the Red Sea coast.

In Cyprus, UNHCR continued to co-ordinate aid to persons displaced as a result of the 1974 events (see p. 246).

Refugee protection

Concerted international action was considered the sole means of creating conditions to solve refugee problems, thereby facilitating the High Commissioner's task of providing international protection.

As in previous years, UNHCR continued in 1986 to provide refugees and asylum-seekers with various measures of protection, against a growing trend among countries to be restrictive in granting asylum. The principle of non-refoulement—whereby refugees and asylum-seekers would not forcibly be returned to countries where they faced persecution or other danger—was respected almost universally. Some countries, however, resorted to expulsion or detention. The physical protection of refugees continued to be of great concern to UNHCR, as deaths and injuries resulted from military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements, as well as attacks on refugees in urban centres, notably in Africa, the Middle East and Asia. A UNHCR/Thai Government Anti-Piracy

Programme continued to deal with piracy attacks against asylum-seekers at sea.

While many States had enacted legislation to remove or lessen restrictions on the exercise of economic and social rights by refugees, some, particularly those with the largest refugee populations, introduced restrictions, rendering it more difficult for refugees to obtain educational opportunities or employment or enjoy other economic rights.

In 1986, UNHCR intensified its efforts to ensure the promotion, advancement and dissemination of principles of refugee law through emergency management training courses and training sessions held at UNHCR headquarters and in the field. Seminars, courses and lectures were organized for government and NGO officials.

The Sub-Committee of the Whole on International Protection⁽²³⁾ of the UNHCR Executive Committee, at its eleventh meeting (Geneva, 30 September, 1 and 3 October 1986), discussed, and made recommendations to its parent body on, accession to international legal instruments on refugee protection, detention of refugees and asylum-seekers, and military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements.

The Executive Committee, in October⁽²⁾ adopted several conclusions on those topics. Recognizing that UNHCR's international protection function had become increasingly complex due to the growing number and changing composition of current movements of refugees, it emphasized the importance for Governments to help provide durable solutions; noted with concern that military or armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements had continued; and expressed the opinion that the detention of refugees and asylum-seekers should be resorted to only on grounds prescribed by law, such as verification of identity, determination of refugee status or protection of national security or public order.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November 1986, Denmark introduced in the General Assembly's Third Committee a draft resolution on international procedures for the protection of refugees⁽²⁴⁾ proposing at the same time that the consideration of the text be deferred until the 1987 Assembly session in order to allow for consultations. By the draft, the Assembly would request the Secretary-General, with UNHCR's co-operation, to draw up a report evaluating the costs involved in setting up enough United Nations refugee-processing centres to deal with the existing flow of refugees and indicating the number of refugees that each Member State, according to its population, population density and gross national product, might be able to receive. Member States were then to be invited to comment on the report.

On 4 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee⁽²⁵⁾ adopted decision 41/428, by which it deferred until 1987 consideration of the draft resolution.

International instruments

As at 31 December 1986, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽²⁶⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 98 States as a result of the 1986 accession by Equatorial Guinea and Papua New Guinea and the succession by Tuvalu. The 1967 Protocol⁽²⁷⁾ to the Convention also had 98 States parties as a result of the 1986 accession by Equatorial Guinea, Papua New Guinea and Venezuela and the succession by Tuvalu.⁽²⁸⁾ While the majority were parties to both instruments, some were parties to only one; the number of parties to one or both instruments, therefore, totalled 101.

The UNHCR Executive Committee at its October session⁽²⁾ adopted the Geneva Declaration on the 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol, in recognition of the fact that the number of States which had acceded to those instruments had reached 101. In so doing, the Committee called on all States that had not done so to consider becoming parties to the Convention and the Protocol, and hoped that, by the fortieth anniversary of the Convention's adoption, accession by all United Nations Member States would have taken place.

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1969 OAU Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San Jose, Costa Rica.

As at 31 December 1986, there were 34 States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons⁽²⁹⁾ and 14 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.⁽³⁰⁾

International co-operation to avert new refugee flows

In 1986, the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, established by the General Assembly in 1981(1) to review the problem and develop recommendations, concluded its work and submitted its final report.⁽²⁾ The Group conducted its study between April 1983 and May 1986, holding eight 2-week sessions in New York, including two sessions in 1986 (3-14 March, 21 April-2 May). The report comprised an introduction, an analysis of the Group's mandate, the circumstances causing new massive flows of refugees, appropriate means to improve international co-operation to avert such flows, and conclusions and recommendations.

The Group concluded that massive flows of refugees resulted from a number of complex and often interrelated political, economic and social problems related to, and influenced by, the overall international situation. In view of its complex nature and magnitude, as well as its potentially destabilizing effects, averting massive flows was a matter of serious concern to the international community as a whole, requiring improved co-operation at all levels, in particular in the framework of the United Nations, in observance of the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of sovereign States. The Group felt that measures aimed at strengthening international security and developing good-neighbourly relations would contribute to improving international co-operation in averting massive refugee flows.

The Group recommended that the Assembly call on Member States: to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence, and from intervention in the internal affairs, of any State; to uphold the peaceful settlement of international disputes; to promote civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights; and to co-operate with one another and with the United Nations in a fuller and more timely manner for preventing new massive flows and to turn to the principal United Nations organs at the earliest possible stage of the development of such situations (paragraphs 66, 67 and 69 of the report).

The Group also recommended that the Assembly encourage the Secretary-General to make full use of his competences and, acting within the limits of financial and personnel resources available to the Secretariat, to ensure the availability of relevant information within the Secretariat for effective action (paragraphs 70 and 71 of the report). In the selection of the projects, the Group recommended that the relevant economic assistance agencies and other bodies of the United Nations should consider, in consultation with the States directly concerned, giving greater support to those projects that could help avert new massive refugee flows resulting from the impact of social and economic factors or natural causes in a given region (paragraph 72).

Communications. In 1986, Iran addressed a number of letters to the Secretary-General concerning the movement of Iraqi nationals into Iran, requesting that they be circulated under the Assembly's agenda items on international co-operation to avert new flows of refugees and on UNHCR. On 14 July,⁽³⁾ 30 October,⁽⁴⁾ 19 November,⁽⁵⁾ 1 December⁽⁶⁾ and 10 December,⁽⁷⁾ Iran alleged that Iraqi nationals had entered Iran at the border region of Orumiyeh, West Azarbaijan province; alleged border crossings by Iraqis at other points were reported in letters dated 23 July,⁽⁸⁾ 20 November⁽⁹⁾ and 4 December.⁽¹⁰⁾ Other communications dealt with the situations in South-East Asia and Cyprus (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapters VII and VIII).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly on 3 December adopted resolution 41/70 without vote.

International co-operation to avert new flows of refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/124 of 11 December 1980, 36/148 of 16 December 1981, 37/121 of 16 December 1982, 38/84 of 15 December 1983, 39/100 of 14 December 1984 and 40/166 of 16 December 1985 on international co-operation to avert new flows of refugees,

Having considered the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

1. Commends the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees for the work it has accomplished by consensus, as reflected in its report;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report;

3. Calls upon Member States to respect, for the purpose of improving international co-operation to avert new massive flows of refugees, the recommendations and, in particular, to comply with those contained in paragraphs 66, 67 and 69 of the report;

4. Urges the main organs of the United Nations to make fuller use of their respective competences under the Charter of the United Nations for the prevention of new massive flows of refugees, as envisaged in paragraph 68 of the report;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to discharge the functions and responsibilities described in paragraphs 70 and 71 of the report;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring the report to the attention of Member States and, in view of paragraph 72 of the report, of all the relevant organizations, organs and programmes of the United Nations system.

General Assembly resolution 41/70

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/41/755) by consensus, 14 October (meeting 7); 28-nation draft (A/SPC/41/L.5), orally amended by Ethiopia; agenda item 76.

Chapter XXI

Drugs of abuse

Drug abuse had reached such dimensions that it affected virtually all countries and occupied priority attention at the highest level, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) noted in 1986. Illicit production and manufacture of drugs took place in a growing number of countries worldwide; they were financed and master-minded by criminal organizations with international links and with accomplices in financial circles. Condemning drug trafficking as a criminal activity, the General Assembly requested all States to pledge their political will in a concerted and universal struggle to achieve its complete elimination (resolution 41/127).

The United Nations had taken important steps to combat drug abuse and illicit drug traffic, the Secretary-General stated in his 1986 report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), and his proposal for a first global conference on drug abuse and illicit trafficking, to be held in 1987, had received a heartening response. Preparatory work was under way to ensure that agreement was reached on practical and concerted action to be taken by the international community, Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), communities and even individuals. The Assembly requested States to give the highest priority to the holding of the conference (resolution 41/125).

Acting as preparatory body for the conference, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in February, made 13 recommendations to the Economic and Social Council, including a provisional agenda, provisional rules of procedure and conference participation.

At its ninth special session, also held in February, the Commission considered matters pertaining to the implementation of drug treaties and recommended for adoption by the Council two resolutions and three decisions. The Commission also continued preparation of a draft convention against illicit drug trafficking. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to the 1987 conference on progress achieved in that regard (resolution 41/126).

INCB—responsible for evaluation and overall supervision of implementation of drug control treaties—continued its review of governmental annual estimates of licit narcotic drug requirements, limiting the manufacture and trade in narcotic drugs to medical and scientific purposes, and monitored the licit movement of psychotropic substances. It also provided a comprehensive survey of the drug control situation in the world and recommended action.

Taking into account INCB's position that licit opiates were not ordinary commodities whose production, manufacture and distribution could be regulated by normal economic considerations, the Economic and Social Council urged Governments to exercise restraint in the production of opiate raw materials for medical and scientific needs and called on importing countries to obtain their requirements of such materials from traditional supplier countries (resolution 1986/9). Following a 1984 INCB recommendation, the Council urged strengthened control of international trade in the psychotropic substance secobarbital (resolution 1986/8).

The Narcotics Laboratory Section of the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs continued to assist national narcotics laboratories to identify and analyse seized drug samples. It also trained scientists from 13 countries.

The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC)—depending entirely on voluntary contributions—assisted Governments, at their request, in financing projects to reduce illicit supply of and demand for drugs. In 1986, the Fund's increased financial resources allowed it to intensify its activities, assisting 95 projects in 31 countries.

Drug abuse and international control

In a September 1986 note,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General gave a brief overview of the 1986 programme of action to implement the 1981 International Drug Abuse Control Strategy.⁽²⁾ The 1986 programme, the last year of a basic five-year programme of action, had been approved by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽³⁾ following its review by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs; it was undertaken within regular United Nations budget resources and from extrabudgetary financing.

In accordance with the programme of action, the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs took initiatives to increase the number of States parties to the international drug control treaties, i.e., the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs and its 1972 Protocol, and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances (see p. 873). The Division contacted Governments that had not become party to those treaties with an offer to assist them in overcoming difficulties perceived as impediments to adherence; model forms of accession, as well as information regarding the procedure for becoming a party, were provided to a number of States.

The Division responded to several requests from the World Health Organization (WHO) in 1986 concerning data collection and preparation of reports for special meetings. In accordance with the provisions of the drug control treaty system, data were collected on six substances recommended for international control by the WHO Expert Committee on Drug Dependence. The Division continued to collaborate closely with WHO in the application of revised procedures for the review of dependence-producing psychoactive substances for possible international control.

As at 1 October 1986, annual reports for 1985 on the functioning of the international treaties on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances had been received from 80 countries and territories, and a total of 59 legislative texts from 13 States had been edited and published. Following a 1985 Commission request, a note was sent to all Governments to obtain a full list and the texts of national laws on drug control; as at 1 October 1986, 52 Governments had forwarded to the Division 177 legislative texts that had not been previously published.

Since May 1984, the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs had been responsible for overall co-ordination of United Nations drug control-related activities. To facilitate collaborative efforts, he had held consultations with representatives of United Nations agencies and programmes; two ad hoc inter-agency meetings were held in 1986 under his chairmanship, in February at Vienna and in September in New York. He also organized an informal working group on drug control, which included representatives of agencies, programmes and intergovernmental organizations.

In October 1986,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on international co-operation in drug abuse control, prepared on the basis of information provided through the Division of Narcotic Drugs. The report, which had been requested by the General Assembly in 1979,⁽⁵⁾ gave an overview of the activities of 14 United Nations bodies: the Division of Narcotic Drugs, INCB, UNFDAC, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute, UNDP, WFP, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, ICAO, WHO, UPU and UNIDO (for details, see below).

There had been a marked increase in public awareness and official concern about the perils of growing drug abuse and illicit trafficking, the Secretary-General stated; that concern had reached the very highest government levels and had led to more pressing demands for co-ordination and more effective action at the international level. In response, the United Nations intensified its drug control-related programmes and activities during the year.

The General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's note and report by decision 41/431 of 4 December.

Related resolution: GA 41/127.

Division of Narcotic Drugs. The Division of Narcotic Drugs continued to discharge its responsibilities deriving from existing drug control treaties and mandates set out by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs; the Division's work programme encompassed carrying out the Secretary-General's responsibilities under the drug control treaties and functioning as the Commission's secretariat and executive arm. The Division carried out projects in connection with the basic five-year programme of action of the 1981 International Drug Abuse Control Strategy (see above). It provided training in laboratory techniques as well as scientific documents and reference books relevant to the identification and analysis of drugs. The Division's Reference Collection was continually developed as an international source for scientific, technical, legal and general information on drugs of abuse under international control; added during 1986 were almost 4,000 scientific and reference publications and documents. The Division's computerization of information from Governments and other official sources was extended and improved; work continued on the development of a more extensive data bank on all social and legal aspects of drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking.

With financial support from UNFDAC, the Division continued to provide technical assistance in drug law enforcement to a number of Governments; such assistance was mainly devoted to improving telecommunications, increasing mobility, specialized training, improving computerization of record-keeping and encouraging greater co-operation between drug law enforcement agencies of Member States. During 1986, country programmes being implemented by the Division included those in Burma, Colombia, Cyprus, Egypt, Jordan, Mauritius, Pakistan, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka and Turkey.

The Division's drug enforcement training activities included seminars, workshops, production, collection and distribution of training material, fellowships, study tours and advisory services. In those activities, the Division co-operated closely with the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), the Customs Co-operation Council (CCC), the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), the Colombo Plan Bureau, the South Pacific Commission and the South American Agreement on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. Certain joint activities were also undertaken to develop or reinforce specific strategies for drug law enforcement; the Division, Interpol and CCC were developing training modules for specialized drug law enforcement techniques. The Division assisted in holding the sixth regional course in drug identification and concealment methods (Cook Islands, June). It also provided training materials to a regional seminar for Latin America and the Caribbean (Madrid, Spain, March), and to an international seminar on drug problems in Asia and the Pacific, held at the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Tokyo, August).

The Division organized and served as the secretariat of the first Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA) (Vienna, 28 July-1 August) (see p. 867); the meeting adopted specific recommendations for the improvement of international co-operation and co-ordination against illicit drug traffic. At the regional level, the Division continued to service regular sessions of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East (see p. 871), and annual meetings of HONLEA, Far East Region.

In addition to various ad hoc publications, the Division published and distributed world-wide two recurrent publications: the quarterly Bulletin on Narcotics presented original material and research findings in Arabic, English, French and Spanish; selected articles in Russian and summaries of all articles in Chinese were also issued. In 1986, issues focused on the nature and extent of drug abuse problems and social responses, and regional and interregional responses to drug abuse. The Division also published regularly an Information Letter which reviewed developments of general interest in the international drug control community, with coverage of the specialized agencies' activities; because of the financial crisis of the Organization, the number of issues had been curtailed for 1986.

Requests for services from the Division's Film Library were being received in growing numbers. Audio-visual material was being made available on a continuing basis to assist in training programmes, public awareness campaigns and other activities aimed at providing greater understanding of drug abuse, its consequences and possible countermeasures.

International Narcotics Control Board. Under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic

Drugs and its 1972 Protocol, as well as under the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, INCB was required to present to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs a yearly account of its work. The annual INCB report analysed the drug control situation world-wide and suggested possible remedial measures. In order to further the aims of the treaties, INCB maintained dialogue with Governments through regular consultations and special missions; as a result, several countries strengthened their legislation, particularly on psychotropic substances, or acknowledged the need for effective drug control efforts.

In accordance with its mandate under the 1961 Convention and Assembly and Council resolutions, INCB had the responsibility to monitor the situation closely in respect of supply and demand of opiates for legitimate needs. It also monitored the control of the licit movement of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

With financial assistance from UNFDAC, the Board continued in 1986 to arrange training programmes, at its headquarters at Vienna, for drug control administrators from developing countries on the implementation of treaty provisions relating to the parties' co-operation with INCB.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control. The 1986 programme of UNFDAC reflected an intensification of activities in Asia, an expansion of the operations in Latin America—particularly in the countries of the Andean subregion—and the implementation of new projects in Africa and the Caribbean. Due to the Fund's efforts to encourage countries to assess their needs from a global perspective, new initiatives and a more visible presence of the Fund in the most critical areas of the world, which helped raise awareness of drug-related problems and requirements for comprehensive intervention measures, UNFDAC received increased contributions from Member States and private sources.

The Fund was complying with an increasing number of requests from Governments for their direct involvement in the execution of projects; such government execution required a closer monitoring of activities by Fund headquarters and its field adviser offices. None the less, UNFDAC continued to rely on the technical competence of concerned United Nations agencies. It was expected that those new execution modalities would result in significant savings with regard to administrative support costs and a more direct correlation between project activities and drug control elements. The presence of UNFDAC field advisers in countries where major assistance programmes were under way proved to be highly beneficial in project planning, execution, supervision, co-ordination and evaluation. In addition to field advisers already serving in Bolivia, Burma, Colombia, Pakistan, Peru and Thailand, the Fund assigned in April 1986 an adviser to Ecuador.

The total UNFDAC budget for 1986 amounted to $21.4 million, compared to $18.7 million in 1985. During the year, the Fund provided support for the formulation and implementation of 66 projects in 30 countries; in addition, support was given to 25 general technical co-operation projects designed for the common benefit of various countries and regions, with activities covering research, information collection and dissemination, organization of scientific meetings and seminars, centralized training and fellowships. Of the Fund's total resources, 51 per cent went to the reduction of illicit supply, including rural development and social actions; 24 per cent to the strengthening of control measures; 13 per cent to the reduction of illicit demand; and 1 per cent to research.

A drug control master plan was formulated in Argentina. In Bolivia, a $20.5 million five-year programme of agricultural diversification and agro-industrial development for the Yungas of La Paz Province, approved in 1984, was restructured during two UNFDAC missions in February and April 1986 with a view to ensuring a direct impact on the reduction of coca cultivation; a $1.2 million social welfare and community mobilization project, to be executed by a non-governmental organization, was to complement the programme. In August, a $4 million drug law enforcement project was approved, and preparatory work was under way to integrate ongoing and planned activities with a global, multi-faceted prevention and public opinion shaping programme.

In June, a new phase (1986-1991) programme agreement foreseeing a total Fund contribution of $10.5 million was approved for Burma; the programme comprised activities in agriculture, livestock, health, social rehabilitation, education, information and law enforcement, to be implemented by various government ministries and United Nations agencies.

Following a 1985 agreement with Colombia, the Fund was carrying out six projects amounting to $3.7 million in preventive education, treatment of drug-dependent persons, integrated rural development/crop substitution and drug law enforcement; the Fund also supported establishment of a data bank for the National Council on Narcotic Drugs.

In May 1986, a memorandum of understanding was signed between Ecuador and UNFDAC in which the Ecuadorian authorities agreed to eliminate illicit coca cultivation within five years; in exchange for that commitment, the Fund was to support implementation of a $10 million master plan formulated in 1985, under which four multiyear projects were approved at the end of the year for prevention of drug abuse, treatment and rehabilitation of drug-dependent persons and the control of licit and illicit drugs.

In Pakistan, of the four UNFDAC-supported projects that had become operational in 1985, the Buner development project and the prevention and drug dependence treatment and rehabilitation projects were being carried out; difficulties were experienced, however, with the two major projects, i.e., the Dir district development project ($14.5 million) and the special development unit for opium growing areas ($2 million) in the aftermath of incidents in surrounding areas. Following Fund missions in April and July, the situation improved and project implementation resumed under normal conditions. In June, UNFDAC agreed to meet Pakistan's request for additional assistance of $600,000 for the Buner development project, intended to facilitate a gradual take-over of project activities by provincial departments.

In the area of Quillabamba in Peru, UNFDAC supported a two-year $1 million crop substitution and community development project, under which a large number of small-scale development activities were carried out, benefiting co-operatives and farmer associations that agreed to reduce or abandon their coca plantations in exchange for the assistance provided. In the Tingo María area, the Fund was financing two rural development projects in the amount of $3.2 million over two years, focusing on agricultural diversification and agro-industrial development, which were a follow-up to the recent establishment—with Fund support—of an industrial plant for cacao processing. The Fund also supported prevention and treatment activities in Peru during 1986.

In Thailand, UNFDAC was supporting a highland development project with $5.6 million over five years. A second large-scale highland development project, estimated at $1.85 million over five years, was approved in July 1986; the project was jointly financed with UNDP, UNICEF and UNFPA. Three further highland development projects—amounting to $7.4 million—were under preparation and were expected to start in early 1987. In July 1986, the Fund approved a project for the development of testing and training centres to help improve Thailand's drug dependence treatment system. Five other projects—requiring approximately $1.6 million over five years—in the training of primary health care workers, hill tribe treatment and rehabilitation, vocational and social reintegration of drug addicts, development of the first Thai therapeutic community, and assessment of psychotropic drug utilization were under preparation.

In addition to those activities, the Fund financed or was considering providing assistance to projects—ranging from assistance for law enforcement agencies and the legal system to preventive education and treatment and rehabilitation—in Afghanistan, Argentina, the Bahamas, Benin, Brazil, China, the Congo, Cyprus, Egypt, India, Jamaica, Jordan, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe. The Fund's disbursements for those projects was estimated at over $7 million.

In 1986, UNFDAC significantly expanded its support for drug control programmes in African countries. It developed new programmes in Benin, Mauritius, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. UNFDAC assistance included projects aimed at drug abuse prevention, training for police and customs officials, and the provision of laboratory equipment for identifying confiscated substances. A course in diversion control was conducted by Interpol in Kenya (September) for English-speaking countries, with a similar course for French-speaking countries to follow. English-speaking countries in West Africa were included in a training courses series in Nigeria.

In Asia and the Pacific, three regional projects were formulated in Thailand on the Fund's initiative and approved for funding by UNDP; two of them concentrated on regional training courses in drug law enforcement and rehabilitation of former drug addicts, and the third related to the organization of regional seminars on replacement of opium poppy cultivation. Funds were provided to CCC for a workshop to develop practical guidelines for greater co-ordination of enforcement efforts (Hong Kong, October 1986). UNFDAC also supported the sixth regional training course in drug identification and concealment methods and provided funds for an international seminar on drug problems in Asia and the Pacific (see also p. 855).

For Latin America and the Caribbean, UNFDAC agreed to support a two-year $600,000 project, to be executed by Interpol, for the establishment of a telecommunications system in the Caribbean and Central America for narcotics control and related law enforcement activities. An UNFDAC mission visited the headquarters of the Caribbean Community in September to discuss plans for the elaboration of a master plan for the region. With UNFDAC support, a regional seminar was to be convened by the Andean Parliament in late 1986. Funds were provided to INCB for a training seminar for drug control administrators from Latin American and Caribbean countries (Madrid, March). UNFDAC also extended support to the South American Agreement on Narcotic and Psychotropic Substances for three regional training courses: on treatment and prevention (Argentina, August), drug law enforcement (Peru, September) and preventive education (Venezuela, October).

The upward trend in recent years in the number and level of contributions to UNFDAC was reinforced by the sizeable resources received in 1986. Contributions pledged in 1986 totalled $29.8 million: $8.5 million was contributed by one Government in support of the third phase of the programme in Burma; two grant agreements were signed with one donor country for development assistance programmes in the Andean subregion ($6 million) and in Argentina ($800,000); a $1.1 million additional contribution was pledged by one Government for the Fund's rural development/coca substitution project in Colombia; a $5 million grant agreement was signed with one Government for the special development and enforcement plan in Pakistan; $725,000 was contributed by one Government for a highland project in Thailand; and an $830,000 contribution was pledged by one Government for two drug demand reduction projects in Thailand.

Repeated appeals for new contributions were made in 1986 by UNFDAC during official missions, in particular to Denmark, Italy, Norway, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, through informal meetings with government representatives and during various international conferences and meetings. Renewed contacts were pursued with United Nations agencies—in particular the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)—and with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, such as the Organization of American States (OAS), the Council of Europe, Interpol, CCC, Norwegian Church Aid, the International Order of Good Templars (Sweden), the Italian Centre of Solidarity, the World Federation of Therapeutic Communities, Diakonia and the Friedrich Naumann Foundation (Federal Republic of Germany).

UNDP activities. The Office of Projects Execution (OPE) of UNDP was one of the main executing agents for UNFDAC projects. UNDP itself financed some projects and its field offices were actively involved in other UNFDAC-financed projects. Among them was a $455,000 project in Indonesia on demand reduction and based on institutionalized co-operation between government and NGOs, ensuring also community participation; a major expansion of the project was under discussion. UNFDAC was financing and OPE was executing a $20.3 million project in Pakistan that included crop substitution, preventive education and treatment and rehabilitation. With UNDP financing, WHO was executing another drug rehabilitation project. Implementation of a master plan for the opium-growing areas of northern Thailand started; the project was financed by UNFDAC, with inter-agency support from UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP. Three inter-country projects totalling $1 million were approved by UNDP, covering training in law enforcement and drug rehabilitation and seminars on crop substitution.

Under the largest project in Bolivia ($20.5 million), which was carried out in the Yungas Valley by OPE and financed by UNFDAC, farmers were encouraged gradually to replace coca with coffee; in April 1986, all 53 communities, with a total population of about 10,000, agreed to stop growing coca in return for assistance in obtaining clean water supply, new and improved roads and elementary schools.

In Colombia, OPE was collaborating with the Government in implementing Fund-financed programmes totalling $2.9 million, which covered crop substitution, a mass media campaign and training of educators. In Peru, OPE was executing two UNFDAC-financed rural development projects in Quillabamba and Tingo Maria.

Following consideration of a report by the Administrator on UNDP drug abuse control activities,⁽⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council on 27 June⁽⁷⁾ urged continued close co-operation between UNDP and UNFDAC. The Council requested the Administrator to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General with respect to the 1987 conference and to continue to support his efforts to enhance programme and project co-ordination throughout the United Nations system.

WHO activities. In 1986, WHO prepared and published several reviews of the extent of drug abuse-related health problems and made specific proposals. Two reports, on action related to international drug control treaties and on abuse of narcotic and psychotropic substances, were presented to the January 1986 Executive Board session. The thirty-ninth World Health Assembly in May adopted a resolution on substance abuse.

WHO organized a Conference of Ministers of Health on Narcotic and Psychotropic Drug Misuse (London, March), which was attended by 30 countries plus two country observers. Guidelines for policy formulation and evaluation of drug misuse-related health problems were finalized at a multidisciplinary advisory group meeting (Bangkok, Thailand, November). WHO also developed guidelines for assessment and revisions of national legislation on treatment of alcohol and drug problems; following the meeting of a WHO advisory group, which reviewed the material produced in collaboration with investigators from more than 30 countries, a text providing guidelines and drug prevention strategies was prepared.

Several UNFDAC-financed country programmes executed by WHO continued or started in 1986 in Afghanistan, the Bahamas, Burma, China, Colombia, Egypt, Jamaica and Peru; negotiations were under way concerning projects in Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan and Sri Lanka; proposals for projects to be conducted in Thailand were developed. A number of country missions were undertaken to review the country programmes, develop plans for new activities, participate in training courses and other country-level activities. WHO staff and consultants also visited many countries to identify drug problems, discuss national policies, assess measures being undertaken for the prevention and management of drug dependence and drug-related health problems and promote information exchange between countries in the region; regional offices also supported activities in that respect.

A manual and guidelines for primary health care workers on drug- and alcohol-related problems and a report on the role of methadone in the management of opioid dependence was submitted for publication in 1986. A manuscript on adverse health consequences of cocaine and coca paste smoking was published, and guidelines for the identification of populations at risk for drug abuse were finalized in November. A draft manual and guidelines for teaching on drug and alcohol dependence in medical and health institutions, prepared in collaboration with 98 experts, was submitted for publication. A global study on the law and treatment of drug- and alcohol-dependent persons was completed.

A working group on drug-related problems in adolescents was held (Tokyo, 25-28 February) to review the situation in the region. At an advisory group meeting on the adverse health consequences of volatile solvents/inhalants (21-25 April), various recommendations for action were made.

Studies on the circumstances of first drug contacts and of initiation into drug use were being undertaken in India, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and Thailand to facilitate preventive efforts aimed at young persons. An evaluation of seven WHO interregional training courses for physicians on prevention and treatment of drug-dependent persons, held between 1979 and 1985, was being undertaken; a number of training courses were also held to facilitate the development of national programmes on drug-related health problems.

A WHO consultant visited selected countries in the western Pacific in order to collaborate with national experts in the preparation of educational materials to be used for drug abuse prevention and control programmes.

Together with the Council of Europe and the Commission of European Communities, the WHO Regional Office for Europe carried out a project on the effect of health education specifically concerned with drug abuse in a number of pilot areas. A consultation on acquired immuno-deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, among drug abusers was held (Stockholm, Sweden, October); topics to be discussed included prevention, care, diagnosis of problems and policy development. A consultation was held (Edinburgh, United Kingdom, 27-30 May) on key issues in assessing alcohol- and drug abuse-related problems. A review of non-voluntary treatment in a selected number of countries was being carried out.

In January, the WHO Executive Board examined in detail revised guidelines for review of dependence-producing psychoactive substances. The third programme planning working group for the review of dependence-producing psychoactive substances for international control, at a March meeting at Geneva, proposed a set of guidelines for the selection of substances for review by the Expert Committee on Drug Dependence. A meeting on the chemical and pharmacological specifications of substances for control under the international drug control treaties was held (Geneva, 4-8 August). A multidisciplinary team visited China (12-29 August) for consultation with staff of the Institute of Pharmacology, Beijing Medical College and authorities. A seminar on the rational use of anxiolytic and hypnotic drugs was conducted at Jilin (18-23 August).

A group met in London (15-29 September) to examine the role of medical schools in rational prescribing of psychoactive substances, and a WHO publication entitled Prescribing Psychoactive Drugs: Educating the Professionals was being published. At a meeting in Moscow (29 September-3 October), the rational use of psychotropic drugs was discussed, with special emphasis on tranquilizers in non-psychiatric settings.

The twenty-third meeting of the Expert Committee on Drug Dependence (Geneva, April) recommended five substances for international control; the WHO Director-General concurred with the recommendations and the Secretary-General was informed accordingly.

ILO activities. ILO continued to put increasing emphasis on international drug abuse control activities; its activities received an additional impetus from the tenth ILO Asian Regional Conference (Jakarta, Indonesia, December 1985) where a special committee studied rehabilitation, also in relation to the drug problem. The ILO Governing Body, at its February/March 1986 session, at which a paper was presented providing a breakdown of ILO's ongoing and planned drug abuse control activities, took account of preparations for the 1987 conference. The twelfth conference of American States members of ILO (Montreal, Canada, March 1986) also addressed the problem of coca cultivation and stressed the need for formulation of programmes to introduce profitable alternative crops in an integrated rural development approach.

Among the projects in which ILO participated was an UNFDAC-funded large-scale multi-agency project in Burma, the second phase of which was completed in May 1986; ILO had responsibility for the social welfare (rehabilitation) sector. Following a review and programming mission in late 1985, a third phase was formulated, implementation of which commenced in June 1986. Regional projects in which ILO was involved included a three-year UNDP-financed vocational and social reintegration programme for drug-dependent persons in Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand which commenced in January 1986. Two three-week courses, to be held annually, were held in 1986 in Malaysia: for drug rehabilitation centre managers/service providers (4-22 August) and for drug rehabilitation programme planners (3-21 November). ILO agreed to develop a curriculum on drug rehabilitation and to provide lecturers for an UNFDAC-financed one-week training session in November, organized by the International Council on Alcohol and Addictions in collaboration with Zimbabwe.

UNESCO activities. UNESCO attempted to assist in the solution of problems posed by particular drugs in given regions, especially by means of epidemiological research and sociological surveys; its activities were essentially aimed at integrating a pluridimensional concept of the "quality of life" into school and out-of-school education. With that goal in mind, UNESCO organized a training seminar (San José, Costa Rica, July). It also supplied or provided assistance for the production of audio-visual and written educational material. On UNESCO's request, the International Council for Educational Media was drawing up an inventory of drug-related audio-visual documents (films and video programmes) prepared by national education institutes. UNESCO also assisted member States by supplying basic documentation on drug abuse prevention, especially to those countries already implementing operational projects. In Ghana and Senegal, multidisciplinary research was carried out; in 1986, UNESCO sent consultant missions to both countries to assist national authorities to plan project implementation. Similar projects were prepared in Benin and Togo.

Among the assistance provided by UNESCO in Latin America and the Caribbean was a national project in Peru to reduce the demand for drugs through preventive education. In Jamaica, UNESCO collaborated in a WHO-executed drug abuse prevention project. In 1986, a working group met within the framework of the Subregional Network for Educational Innovation and Development in the Caribbean to define a plan of action for education on drug abuse prevention. A drug control-related project was launched in Burma to combat the use of opium and its derivatives.

ICAO activities. In accordance with a 1985 decision by the Council of ICAO, the Air Transport Committee reviewed the need for guidance material in the facilitation field related to ICAO's role in international co-operative efforts to suppress narcotic trafficking, and the Air Navigation Commission made a study to determine to what extent and how civil aviation was being used in the transport of illicit drugs; the Commission agreed to develop material to assist States in suppressing illicit transport.

The Council in June considered a preliminary legal study prepared by the ICAO secretariat on the subject of misuse of civil aviation, dealing with all aspects of ICAO's role in efforts to combat illicit drug transport by air. As a contribution to the preparation of a draft convention against illicit drug traffic (see p. 867), the ICAO Secretary-General transmitted to the Division of Narcotic Drugs an informal synopsis of views expressed in the different ICAO bodies and an informal draft text for possible inclusion in the draft convention.

At its twenty-sixth (September/October 1986) session, the ICAO Assembly adopted unanimously a resolution on the role of ICAO in suppressing illicit drug transport by air. It endorsed ICAO's action taken in that regard since early 1985 and urged the ICAO Council to continue expeditiously its efforts in that matter. The Assembly also requested the Council to encourage contracting States to utilize the provisions in the annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation to counter the movement of illicit drugs by air, and called on contracting States to assist airlines to adopt effective means of preventing their aircraft, equipment and facilities from being used for drug trafficking. The ICAO Secretary-General requested States to report to ICAO any measures taken or intended for countering the movement of illicit drugs by air.

Other activities. In resolution 1986/10, the Economic and Social Council urged the Secretary-General to accord priority to developing specific proposals for the co-ordination of international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action, adopted in 1985 by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, including illicit drug trafficking and abuse⁽⁸⁾ In the light of Congress recommendations, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs intensified collaboration with the United Nations drug abuse control programmes, contributing to the preparation of a draft convention against illicit drug traffic. The Centre assisted the secretariat of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, to be held in 1987, in the preparation of an outline of future activities by identifying practical objectives related to drug issues in the Centre's programmes on the aging, disabled, women, the family, youth and crime prevention and criminal justice. It initiated work on the third United Nations survey of crime trends (1980-1985) (see p. 621).

The United Nations-affiliated institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice continued to conduct international training courses and seminars on issues related to crime and drug problems. The Asia and Far East Institute on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders conducted an ad hoc international seminar on drug problems in the region (see p. 614).

The United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) was undertaking in 1986 two research projects in support of the 1987 conference—an international survey on drug-related penal measures and a comparative study on drug abuse in the context of development: prevention, treatment and rehabilitation; concerning possible collaboration on the latter, which received major financial support from UNDP, consultations were held with WHO and ILO. The results of both projects were considered by a scientific panel convened by the Institute (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 10 and 11 July; and Rome, Italy, 8 and 9 December); the reports were to serve as background documents for the 1987 conference.

The so-called "poppy clause", designed in co-operation with UNFDAC, was the primary focus of WFP's contribution to control of international drugs; while not strictly designed as crop substitution projects, the poppy clauses implied a specific disincentive to project participants to continue to grow illicit crops. Arrangements of that kind were in operation in the north-west frontier area of Pakistan, where WFP had three projects: assistance to the Tarbela and Mangla watersheds ($19.3 million); rural development ($20.6 million); and watershed management in Dir and Swat districts ($5.9 million).

FAO continued to participate in the multidisciplinary programmes financed by UNFDAC in Burma and Pakistan, and was associated with UNDP's OPE in implementing the agricultural diversification and agro-industrial development project in the Yungas of La Paz, Bolivia.

The CCC-UPU Contact Committee, at its eleventh meeting (Berne, Switzerland, 20 and 21 February), agreed that UPU and CCC should find a joint basis for the modalities of training postal workers in detecting packages containing narcotics.

UNIDO was involved in implementing over 20 projects at a value of approximately $6.5 million, mainly in Africa and Asia, aimed at enabling developing countries to utilize their plant raw materials for developing new plant-derived pharmaceuticals and allied formulations, and essential oils and perfumery chemicals. A project in India dealt with upgrading technology for the extraction of alkaloids from opium.

Agro-industrial assistance to the Naranjillo cocoa-processing plant at Tingo Maria, Peru, was continued by a new cocoa production and processing project, to stimulate the production of cocoa beans and thus reduce local production of coca; the project was implemented with FAO assistance and financed by UNFDAC.

The International Maritime Organization (IMO) also agreed to contribute to international efforts to combat illicit drug trafficking more effectively. The Facilitation Committee, at its March 1986 session, recommended circulation of interim guidelines on the prevention of drug smuggling on ships engaged in international traffic; the distribution of such guidelines was subsequently approved by the IMO Council in June.

Proposed international conference (1987)

Following a 1985 General Assembly request⁽⁹⁾ preparations were taken during 1986 to convene in 1987 a ministerial-level International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking. As requested by the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council invited in February 1986 the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to act as preparatory body for the Conference. At its first session, also held in February, the preparatory body made a series of recommendations which were adopted by the Council in May. The Assembly requested the preparatory body to complete its work in February 1987, particularly the drafting of a comprehensive outline of future activities, for adoption by the Conference.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February 1986, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1986/114.

Preparatory body for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

At its 4th plenary meeting, on 7 February 1986, the Economic and Social Council, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 40/122 of 13 December 1985, by which the Assembly decided to convene in 1987 an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking:

(a) Decided to invite the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to act as the preparatory body for the Conference and invited the widest possible participation of all States;

(b) Decided further that in the preparatory body all States should participate in the decision-making process;

(c) Recommended that every effort should be made to arrive at decisions on matters of substance by general agreement;

(d) Decided to extend by one week the ninth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, which is to be held at Vienna from 10 to 14 February 1986, so as to enable the Commission to consider the agenda and the organizational arrangements for the Conference;

(e) Requested the Commission to submit its report on these matters to the Council at its first regular session of 1986.

Economic and Social Council decision 1986/114

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by Venezuela, based on informal consultations; agenda item 2.

Preparatory body session (February). At its first session as preparatory body (Vienna, 17-21 February 1986),⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission on Narcotic Drugs made 13 recommendations for the Conference, on: the provisional agenda; participation; provisional rules of procedure; election of officers; appointment of Credentials Committee members; allocation of agenda items; organization of work; opening and closing dates for the list of speakers; adoption of the Conference report; officers to be elected by the Main Committee; pre-session documentation; general preparatory activities and substantive preparations; and second session of the preparatory body.

The recommendations for substantive preparations included a request to the Secretary-General that he prepare a draft outline of future activities to be circulated by 1 December for consideration at the second session of the preparatory body in 1987; Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs should forward their comments by 1 August; in preparing that outline, the Secretary-General should be requested to take into account those comments, together with the results of preparatory meetings to be convened in 1986, such as: the WHO Conference of Ministers of Health on Narcotic and Psychotropic Drug Misuse, hosted by the United Kingdom; the seminar for drug control administrators and law enforcement officers in Latin America and the Caribbean, organized by INCB and hosted by Spain; the Inter-regional HONLEA organized by the Division of Narcotic Drugs; the Interregional Conference on the Involvement of Non-Governmental Organizations in Prevention and Reduction of the Demand for Drugs (see p. 863) organized by Sweden, the NGO planning committee for activities related to the 1987 conference, and the United Nations Secretariat; and the Inter-American Specialized Conference on Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, organized by OAS.

The Secretary-General should be requested to structure the outline along issue-oriented lines, as recommended in the provisional agenda, identifying national, regional and international activities; he should be requested to ensure, through the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs, continuing close co-operation and co-ordination among United Nations organizations and bodies in preparing for the Conference, especially the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the INCB secretariat and UNFDAC; Governments should be invited to establish national focal points to co-ordinate preparations, informing the Secretary-General of those focal points by 1 September; Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations should be invited to consider promoting public awareness of the Conference's aims; arrangements should be made by international organizations, in particular FAO, ILO, UNESCO and WHO, United Nations bodies and units, such as UNFDAC, UNSDRI and INCB, intergovernmental organizations, such as INTERPOL, as well as NGOs, such as the International Council on Alcohol and Addictions, to prepare within their mandates action-oriented documents and submit them to the preparatory body.

Recommendations regarding the comprehensive outline of future activities included: to intensify concerted efforts by governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to combat drug abuse, illicit trafficking and related activities, leading to the further development of national strategies that could be a basis for international action; to heighten awareness of the effects of drug abuse; to strengthen and expand mechanisms for exchanging information and developing education and rehabilitation programmes; to promote strict implementation of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances; to achieve harmonization of and reinforce legislation, treaties and legal instruments and develop co-operation in dealing with drug abusers; to develop a comprehensive programme of integrated rural development and crop substitution in order to eradicate illicit sources of raw materials for drugs; to control more effectively drug production, distribution and consumption, underlining the central role of INCB; to strengthen United Nations co-ordination of drug abuse control activities and enforce co-operation between Member States; to support United Nations initiatives and programmes, including the elaboration of a convention against illicit drug traffic; and to consider whether existing mechanisms should be improved or complemented.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1986/128 of 21 May, took note of the preparatory body's report, adopted its recommendations and decided to convene the preparatory body for a second session in 1987, for a period not exceeding one week, immediately following the thirty-second regular session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1986 report,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on Conference preparations. In accordance with the request of the preparatory body, approved by the Economic and Social Council, the Conference secretariat, assisted by a team of specialist consultants, had prepared a draft outline of future activities, to be presented to the 1987 Conference. The outline, which took into account the results of the various meetings held in preparation for the Conference (see above), was designed to be a handbook encompassing the various disciplines involved in drug-abuse control and a compendium of practical activities for the use of government agencies, professional associations, academic institutions, NGOs, community and civic groups, parents, individuals, United Nations entities and other intergovernmental organizations.

The structure of the outline, the Secretary-General stated, reflected the view of the preparatory body that no single aspect of the drug problem should be considered in isolation and that prevention of demand, supply reduction and control, suppression of illicit demand and the treatment and rehabilitation of drug-dependent persons should be analysed to identify areas in which action needed to be taken and to suggest specific action. The outline was also designed to identify targets for objectives attainable up to the year 2000. It consisted of four sections encompassing the main elements involved in any drug-control programme, covering the topics included in the Conference agenda: prevention and reduction of illicit demand; control of supply; suppression of illicit trafficking; and treatment and rehabilitation.

The draft outline was circulated in April to United Nations entities, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and Member States; comments received as at 10 September were taken into account in the draft outline being prepared for circulation by the requested date of 1 December, while comments received later were to be summarized for submission to the preparatory body, which, at its February 1987 session, would consider the first draft together with the comments received and would give advice thereon to the Secretary-General of the Conference. The final draft of the outline was to be circulated at least 90 days before the opening of the Conference, i.e., by mid-March 1987.

Other preparatory activities included the appointment of the Secretary-General of the Conference on 17 December 1985 and the establishment of a Conference Management Committee, composed of representatives of relevant United Nations departments, and of a trust fund to receive funds from the commercial use of the Conference emblem and governmental and non-governmental contributions. Several background papers and leaflets were prepared or planned.

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Co-ordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse

Control discussed preparations for the conference in February 1986 at Vienna, and at special meetings held in New York in May and September, which were attended also by the regional commissions, Interpol and GCC. In addition, an informal working group of the Secretariat and United Nations organizations met on several occasions to discuss Conference preparations. The results of those meetings, held under the auspices of the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs acting in his capacity as co-ordinator of United Nations drug control-related activities, were considered by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and its subsidiary body, the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters). The meetings also provided opportunities for exchanging information on projects and programmes related to Conference preparations and follow-up.

The number of national focal points established as at 24 October was 33.

Communication. On 28 October⁽¹⁾ Sweden transmitted the report of the Interregional Conference on the Involvement of Non-Governmental Organizations in Prevention and Reduction of the Demand for Drugs (Stockholm, 15-19 September), held in preparation for the 1987 Conference. The report was to be introduced to the preparatory body at its February 1987 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/125 without vote.

International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

The General Assembly,

Concerned that the alarming and destructive effects of drug abuse and illicit trafficking remain a threat to national stability and to the well-being of mankind and therefore constitute a grave threat to the security and development of many countries,

Recalling its resolution 40/122 of 13 December 1985, by which it decided to convene in 1987, in response to the initiative of the Secretary-General, an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking at the ministerial level, at Vienna, with the mandate to generate universal action, and as an expression of the political will of nations to combat the drug menace and a means of tackling the serious and complex international drug problem in all its forms,

Noting with appreciation the important work done by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as the preparatory body for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking at its first session held at Vienna from 17 to 21 February 1986,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1986/128 of 21 May 1986,

Taking into consideration that in response to the threat posed by the drug problem, the international community has adopted numerous declarations and initiatives, interregional and regional, multilateral and bilateral, in order to condemn and combat the problem and to achieve its total eradication,

Commending the valuable contributions of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking to the preparatory work for the Conference and noting the continuing efforts of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, the International Narcotics Control Board, the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the regional commissions in this regard,

Welcoming the commitment of the Secretary-General to cover the cost of holding the Conference through absorption within the regular budget for the biennium 1986-1987, without prejudice to ongoing initiatives, programmes and work of the United Nations in the field of drug control,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of preparations for the Conference,

1. Requests all States, in reaffirmation of the commitment of the international community and as an expression of their political will to combat the threat posed by drug abuse and illicit trafficking, to give the highest priority to the holding of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking at Vienna in 1987 and to participate actively in the Conference in order to stimulate comprehensive world-wide co-operative action to combat the drug problem in all its forms at the national, regional and international levels;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as the preparatory body for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking on its first session, and of the recommendations contained in that report, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1986/128, in which it decided, inter alia, that the preparatory body for the Conference should convene for its second session immediately following the thirty-second regular session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

3. Requests the preparatory body for the Conference to complete its work when it next meets at Vienna, in February 1987, particularly the drafting of the comprehensive multidisciplinary outline of future activities relevant to the problems of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, based on comments and modifications proposed by Governments, so that the Conference may consider it for adoption;

4. Further requests the preparatory body for the Conference to report on its work to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1987;

5. Reaffirms the importance of the contribution of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and requests all States and all United Nations organs and organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to co-operate fully with the Commission and with the Secretary-General of the Conference in order to ensure effective preparations for the Conference and its success;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, particularly with regard to the results of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, for consideration under the relevant agenda item.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/851) without vote, 13 November (meeting 45); 60-nation draft (A/C.3/41/L17/Rev.2), orally revised; agenda item 100.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 31-35, 43, 45; plenary 97.

Supply and demand

Narcotic raw materials for licit use

The question of excessive stocks of opiate raw materials was yet to be resolved, INCB stated in its report for 1986;⁽¹³⁾ opium stocks in India remained high at 2,116 tons at the end of 1985, and stocks in Turkey, where 17,000 tons of poppy straw had been destroyed during that year, were still at 37,500 tons.

In response to a 1984 Economic and Social Council request that INCB monitor implementation of the Council's resolutions aimed at re-establishing and maintaining a world-wide balance, as well as reducing excessive stocks of opiate raw materials⁽¹⁴⁾ the Board had published in 1985 a special report⁽¹⁵⁾ on the supply and demand of opiates for licit requirements. The general observations in that report regarding the balance between supply and demand remained valid; estimates for 1986-1987 confirmed the trend that global production and demand were in approximate balance.

The movement of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes was controlled by INCB under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs (see p. 873).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May 1986, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/9 by recorded vote.

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984 and 1985/16 of 28 May 1985,

Recalling also the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 36/168 of 16 December 1981,

Bearing in mind that the treaties establishing drug control systems are based on the concept that the number of producers of opiate raw materials for export should be limited in order to facilitate effective control,

Taking into account the position of the International Narcotics Control Board that licit opiates are not ordinary commodities the production, manufacture and distribution of which can be regulated solely by normal economic considerations,

Bearing in mind that the maintenance of world-wide balance between the licit supply of opiates and the legitimate demand for those opiates for medical and scientific purposes constitutes an important aspect of the international strategy and policy on drug abuse control,

Bearing in mind also that all Governments have a collective responsibility and should show solidarity and that international co-operation is a fundamental precondition for all activities intended to achieve improved drug control,

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1985 on demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs,

Concerned that large stocks of opiate raw materials held by the traditional supplier countries impose heavy financial and other burdens on them,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the countries that have taken measures towards implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions;

2. Urges the Governments of those countries that have not already done so to take urgent and effective steps to implement the above-mentioned resolutions;

3. Urges the Governments that have recently begun or expanded production of opiate raw materials for export of opiates to exercise restraint to the maximum extent possible;

4. Calls upon importing countries, in so far as their constitutional and legal systems permit, to obtain their licit requirements of opiate raw materials from traditional supplier countries;

5. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to monitor the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in 1987;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/9

21 May 1986 Meeting 16 29-0-21 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/89) by recorded vote (23-0-20), 15 May (meeting 13); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1986/23); agenda item 13.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bangladesh, Belgium, Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, Costa Rica, Egypt, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Iraq, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, USSR, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, Guyana, Iceland, Indonesia, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Peru, Philippines, Senegal, Spain, Sweden, Uganda, United Kingdom.

The United States said it supported the text since it reflected the continuing international problem of oversupply of illicit opiates and the need for measures to balance the supply of licit opiates with actual demand; its support, however, did not reflect a change in its policy of importing 80 per cent of its requirements from traditional and 20 per cent from non-traditional sources.

Illicit traffic

Illicit production and manufacture of drugs—financed and master-minded by criminal organizations with international links and accomplices in financial circles—took place in a growing number of countries, INCB stated in its report for 1986.⁽¹⁵⁾ In certain regions, drug trafficking was closely interconnected with other major criminal activities, which included trafficking in weapons, and were associated with subversion and international terrorism. The vast sums of money generated by illicit trafficking were concealed by being "laundered" through legitimate enterprises. That whole process undermined economic and social order, spread violence and corruption, and imperiled the very political stability and security of some countries.

Seizures of heroin, cannabis and cocaine, which continued to be the principal drugs in illicit traffic, rose dramatically during 1986, according to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;⁽¹⁶⁾ a notable trend was the increase in the incidence of individual seizures involving unusually large quantities. A very disturbing trend was the emergence of "crack"—a smokeable form of cocaine noted for its potency, high potential for addiction and relatively low street price; also of concern was the increasing availability of crude, low-priced, but potent, forms of heroin which, together with "crack", had so far been confined almost exclusively to the Americas, although "crack" recently began to appear in Western Europe and other parts of the world.

Illicit trafficking in psychotropic substances also grew during 1986; abuse of amphetamines was an increasing worry to drug control authorities in Western Europe, particularly in Scandinavia.

To deal better with the growing problem of illicit drug trafficking, many Governments introduced new legislation during 1986; the predominant features of most of that legislation were wider powers for depriving convicted drug traffickers of their assets, provision for more severe penal sanctions, application of increasingly drastic policy measures and better provisions to facilitate the conclusion of bilateral agreements.

Communications. A series of communications concerning the campaign against drug traffic were received during the year by the Secretary-General.

On 9 June,⁽¹⁷⁾ Bolivia and Peru transmitted a joint communiqué signed at La Paz on 3 June regarding action to fight drug traffic. In a communiqué of 18 July,⁽¹⁸⁾ Bolivia characterized drug traffic as a crime against humanity which called for urgent, concerted, direct and courageous action by all countries. Bolivia also referred to several multilateral and bilateral agreements it had signed against drug production and trafficking, among them the Rio de Janeiro Programme of Action to Combat Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs of April 1986 and the 1983 Conventions between Bolivia and the United States which were extended in 1986.

By a 27 June letter transmitted on 29 July,⁽¹⁹⁾ the President of Panama rejected what he called defamatory remarks by the United States media, alleging "laundering" of drug money; the purpose of those allegations, he said, was to undermine Panama's stability and internal peace and the independence of its foreign policy. The Panamanian Council of Ministers, by a 30 September resolution transmitted on 3 October,⁽²⁰⁾ objected to action by the United States Senate to make its domestic legislation contingent on an investigation of alleged human rights violations and of drug and arms trafficking by the Defence Forces of Panama, calling such action an intervention in Panama's internal affairs.

On 18 August,⁽²¹⁾ Bolivia transmitted a resolution on illicit drug trafficking, adopted by the Latin American Parliament (Sub-Committee on Trafficking in Drugs and the Informal Economy) at Santa Cruz de la Sierra on 19 July, which appealed to the international community to use the means available within each country's legal order to identify capital originating in drug trafficking, and called for an encouragement of co-ordinated international action to find more effective laws to combat drug trafficking and dependence. Also on 18 August,⁽²²⁾ Bolivia transmitted the text of the "Rodrigo Lara Bonilla" Agreement (named after the Colombian Minister of Justice assassinated by drug traffickers in 1984) on co-operation in preventing abuse of, and suppressing illicit traffic in, narcotic drugs, signed at Lima on 30 April by the member countries of the Cartagena Agreement (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela).

At a regional meeting at Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, from 8 to 10 October, the Ministers of Justice and Attorneys-General from Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Jamaica, Mexico, Panama, Peru, the United States and Venezuela signed a declaration against drug trafficking and drug dependency, which was transmitted by Mexico on 16 October.⁽²³⁾ Peru, as Chairman of the twelfth regular meeting of the Latin American Council (Lima, 16 and 17 October), transmitted on 21 October a communiqué issued by the States members of the Latin American Economic System, expressing deep concern at the problems caused by drug consumption and drug trafficking, and reiterating the will to struggle against that crime.⁽²⁴⁾

The heads of State or Government of seven major industrial nations and the representatives of the European Community, in a Declaration adopted at the Tokyo Economic Summit (4-6 May),⁽²⁵⁾ stated that they resolved to pursue international action to eliminate drug abuse.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/127 without vote.

International campaign against traffic in drugs

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the common concern that exists among peoples of the world regarding the devastating effects of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, which jeopardize the stability of democratic institutions and the well-being of mankind and which therefore constitute a grave threat to the security and an obstacle to the development of many countries,

Taking into consideration that the problem of illicit drug traffic negatively affects all producer, consumer and transit countries, and that there is an urgent need to take joint measures to combat it, including all aspects relating to illicit supply of, demand for and traffic in drugs,

Recalling its resolutions 39/142 of 14 December 1984 and 40/121 of 13 December 1985 and other relevant resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs adopted to advance the international campaign against traffic in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Considering that, despite the efforts made, the situation continues to deteriorate, owing, inter alia, to the growing interrelationship between drug trafficking and transnational criminal organizations that are responsible for much of the drug traffic and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and for the increase in violence, corruption and injury to society,

Acknowledging once more that the eradication of this scourge calls for acknowledgement of shared responsibility in combating simultaneously the problems of illicit demand, production, distribution and marketing, and that action designed to eliminate illicit drug cultivation, trafficking and consumption should be accompanied, where appropriate, by economic and social development programmes,

Recognizing that transit routes used by international drug traffickers are constantly shifting, and that an increasing number of countries in all regions of the world, and even entire areas because of their strategic geographical location and other considerations, are particularly vulnerable to the illicit transit traffic,

Considering that co-operative regional and international action is required to reduce the vulnerability of States and regions to the illicit transit traffic and to provide necessary support and assistance, particularly to countries hitherto unaffected,

Commending the work of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board and the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, as well as the positive action of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in allocating funds to integrated rural development programmes, including substitution of illegal crops in the most severely affected areas,

Bearing in mind the recommendations adopted at the first Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, held at Vienna from 28 July to 1 August 1986, which was convened pursuant to General Assembly resolution 39/143 of 14 December 1984 to examine in depth the most important aspects of the problem, including proposals that might be considered in the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recognizing the importance of adherence to existing international legal instruments, including the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, the urgent need to encourage Member States that have not yet done so to ratify these instruments and the need for States that have already ratified them to implement fully their obligations under these instruments,

Taking note with appreciation of the efforts undertaken to date to implement its resolution 40/122 of 13 December 1985 on the convening in 1987 of an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, at the ministerial level,

1. Condemns unequivocally drug trafficking in all its illicit forms—production, processing, marketing and consumption—as a criminal activity and requests all States to pledge their political will in a concerted and universal struggle to achieve its complete and final elimination;

2. Urges States to acknowledge that they share responsibility for combating the problem of illicit consumption, production and transit and therefore to encourage mutual collaboration in the struggle against drug trafficking, in accordance with the relevant international and national norms;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt appropriate preventive and/or punitive measures of a political, legal, economic and cultural nature so as to bring about social awareness of the pernicious effects of illicit drug use, and individual and collective rejection of all kinds of practices that facilitate such illegal use;

4. Invites States to use all possible means to discourage practices and domestic and foreign interests that promote the increased illicit production and consumption of drugs;

5. Urges the Governments of countries facing problems of drug abuse, particularly those most seriously affected, as part of their national strategy, to give priority to funding programmes that aim to create in society a deep respect for its own health, fitness and well-being and, taking into account cultural and social factors, to provide appropriate information and advice for all sectors of their communities with regard to drug abuse, its harmful effects and the ways in which appropriate community action can be promoted;

6. Recommends that concerted efforts be made to promote co-operation and co-ordination among States, particularly in the areas of communications and training, with a view to alleviating the problems associated with illicit transit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

7. Recommends also that the Economic and Social Council request the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to consider convening, within available resources, a sessional working group to facilitate the exchange of information on experience gained by States in combating the illicit transit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

8. Encourages Member States and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, subject to observance of the principles of national sovereignty and jurisdiction, to provide economic assistance and technical co-operation to the developing countries most affected by the illicit production of, traffic in and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in order to combat this problem;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and to the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking for their valuable efforts in implementing General Assembly resolution 40/122;

10. Acknowledges the work of bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the drug-control bodies, in assisting efforts and initiatives designed to increase international co-operation, and recommends that this work be intensified;

11. Takes note of the recommendations of the first Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies and requests, in the light of comments from Governments and United Nations bodies, that they be considered by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-second session, so that the specific measures required for their implementation may be identified with a view to their inclusion, for possible adoption, in the report to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its next session;

12. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to continue to make the necessary arrangements for holding, within the framework of advisory services, interregional seminars on the experience gained within the United Nations system in integrated rural development programmes that include the substitution of surplus and/or illegal crops in affected areas, including the Andean region;

13. Invites all States that have not already done so to become parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and, in the mean time, to endeavour to comply with the provisions of these instruments;

14. Acknowledges the vital role played by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and calls upon Member States to contribute and/or increase their contributions to the Fund;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "International campaign against traffic in drugs".

General Assembly resolution 41/127

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Drug law enforcement

The first Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies was held at Vienna from 28 July to 1 August 1986.⁽²⁷⁾ The Secretary-General had been requested to convene such a meeting first in 1982⁽²⁷⁾ and again in 1984;⁽²⁸⁾ in 1985,⁽²⁹⁾ the Assembly took note of his decision to convene it in 1986.

The Meeting was attended by representatives of 83 States and observers from 10 intergovernmental organizations and 3 NGOs. The United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs served as the secretariat of the Meeting. The agenda had been prepared by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its ninth special session in February;⁽³⁰⁾ according to it, the Meeting was to examine in depth the most important aspects of drug traffic and to recommend actions that might be taken to: facilitate the preparation of a draft convention on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; enhance interregional co-ordination and co-operation; reduce the vulnerability of States affected by transit drug traffic; identify links between drug traffic and other organized crime; take countermeasures to drug smuggling by sea and by air; and initiate a long-term training strategy.

The Meeting adopted by consensus 19 recommendations which were included in a September report of the Secretary-General.⁽³¹⁾ They concerned the proceeds of drug trafficking; legislation on chemicals, solvents and precursors; drug liaison officers; mutual assistance with regard to extradition and other criminal matters; strategies against organized criminal activities; co-operation in combating drug-linked offences; controlled deliveries of drugs; drug identification; application of drug control measures to free trade zones; surveillance of private vessels, vehicles and aircraft; enforcement on the high seas; co-operation between law enforcement agencies and international carriers to prevent delivery of illicit drugs; support for UNF-DAC; further development of drug strategies; national funds to combat illicit drug trafficking; training policies for law enforcement officers; technical assistance for strengthening law enforcement; assistance to drug transit countries; and support for a regional HONLEA in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Draft convention against illicit traffic

The draft text of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances was prepared and circulated on 8 August 1986, in accordance with a 14 February Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution.⁽³²⁾ The Commission had been requested by the General Assembly in 1984⁽³³⁾ to initiate preparation of a draft convention, which was to be considered by the Commission at its February 1987 session and then submitted to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking.

The draft convention, as prepared by the Secretary-General, consisted of 14 articles corresponding to the elements recommended for inclusion by the Commission; the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1986/113 of 7 February 1986, had requested the Commission to decide on those elements and had requested the Secretary-General to prepare a draft on their basis, with a progress report to be submitted to the Commission in 1987. The elements recommended by the Commission included definitions; identification, tracing, freezing and forfeiture of proceeds of drug trafficking; strengthening of the obligations concerning extradition for offences relating to drug trafficking; measures to monitor or control specific chemicals, solvents and precursors used in illegal drug processing or manufacture; measures, including sanctions, to ensure that commercial carriers were not used to transport illicit drugs; means of co-operation among countries and national law enforcement agencies for the exchange of information and expertise, the establishment of joint communication links and training assistance; strengthening co-operation among countries to provide mutual legal and judicial assistance in cases relating to drug traffic, and promotion of mutual assistance in investigative and prosecutorial matters; strengthening of co-operation in suppression of drug trafficking on the high seas; controlled delivery; adequacy of sanctions for offences relating to drug trafficking; measures to curtail the illicit and uncontrolled cultivation of narcotic plants, including prevention, crop substitution and eradication; extension of controls in free trade zones and free ports; prevention of receipt, possession and transfer of equipment for illegal manufacturing, compounding or processing of drugs; and prevention of the use of the mails for illegal drug transport.

In his note transmitting the text of the draft convention, the Secretary-General requested that comments and/or textual changes should reach him by 30 October 1986; following receipt of replies from Governments, the Secretary-General was to compile the comments and proposed changes and circulate them for consideration by the Commission in 1987. The Secretary-General gave an overview of the preparation of the draft convention in a September 1986 report⁽³⁴⁾ and a brief progress report in October, when reporting on preparations for the 1987 Conference (see p. 862). The draft convention was also on the agenda of the first Interregional HONLEA (see above).

INCB, in response to the Commission's request,⁽³²⁾ prepared for inclusion in the draft convention provisions on measures to control specific chemicals.

The General Assembly, by decision 41/429 of 4 December, took note of the Secretary-General's September report, which had been requested by the Assembly in 1985.⁽³⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 41/126 without vote.

Preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984, 40/120, 40/121 and 40/122 of 13 December 1985 and other relevant provisions,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse of 14 December 1984, in which it is stated, inter alia, that the eradication of trafficking in narcotic drugs is the collective responsibility of all States and that States shall utilize the legal instruments against the illicit production of and demand for, abuse of and illicit traffic in drugs and adopt additional measures to counter new manifestations of this crime,

Bearing in mind the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984, the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984 and the Lima Declaration of 29 July 1985, in which profound alarm was expressed at the seriousness of the problem,

Taking note of the recommendations adopted at the first Interregional Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, held at Vienna from 28 July to 1 August 1986, which was convened pursuant to resolution 39/143 to examine in depth the most important aspects of the problem, including proposals that might be considered in the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Noting also the adoption by the Organization of American States of the Inter-American Programme of Action against the Illicit Use and Production of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Traffic Therein at the Inter-American Specialized Conference on Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 22 to 25 April 1986,

Recognizing that the preliminary draft convention prepared by the Secretary-General in compliance with Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 1(S-IX) of 14 February 1986 constitutes a positive step in 'the preparation of the convention and that the elements included in the draft correspond to many of the interests of the international community in its efforts to confront the problem of illicit drug trafficking,

Emphasizing the importance of the contribution that will be made by the convention in supplementing the existing international instruments on the subject, such as the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

1. Expresses its appreciation to and commends the Secretary-General for his effective response to the request made in paragraph 4 of Commission on Narcotic

Drugs resolution I(S-IX), entitled "Guidance on the drafting of an international convention to combat drug trafficking", in which the Commission requested that a preliminary draft of a convention be prepared containing the elements specified in paragraph 3 of that resolution and that the draft be circulated to members of the Commission and other interested Governments;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Member States that responded to the request contained in paragraph 5 of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution I(S-IX), in which they were invited to submit their comments on and/or proposed textual changes to the draft, and urges all Member States that have not yet done so to comply with this request as soon as possible;

3. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, through the Economic and Social Council, to continue at its thirty-second regular session its work on the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in the most expeditious manner, so that it may be effective, and widely acceptable, and enter into force at the earliest possible time;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Drug Trafficking, to be held in 1987, a report on progress achieved in the preparation of a new convention against illicit drug trafficking;

5. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to ratify and to accede to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Regional issues

INCB observed in its 1986 report(13) that circumstances did not permit it to undertake any missions during the year to appraise first hand the drug control situation in various regions and countries. In analysing the drug control situation worldwide, as well as in particular regions and countries, it had to rely on information provided by Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, and other international organizations, including Interpol.

Africa

An improvement in reporting on the drug situation in Africa required the strengthening of national legislation and control machinery, better monitoring of drug imports and retail distribution, and increased trained personnel, INCB stated in its report; surveys to determine the extent of drug abuse were necessary to develop programmes to prevent and reduce abuse.

Cannabis was produced in many African countries and abused throughout the continent, and large quantities were trafficked abroad, primarily from Morocco, but also increasingly from countries south of the Sahara. Heroin, until recently virtually unknown in Africa, was currently abused in Mauritius and Nigeria, which also served as transit points for heroin from Asia and intended for Western Europe and North America. Other transit countries, such as Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana, where large seizures of heroin had taken place, were also particularly at risk of becoming centres of abuse. Another recent development was the appearance of cocaine, suggesting that traffickers were seeking to establish smuggling routes from South America through Africa to other regions; cocaine abuse had already begun in some countries. Trafficking in psychotropic substances was substantial and increasing, and abuse was becoming more and more serious.

According to INCB, a growing number of countries-among them Botswana, Côte d'Ivoire, Malawi, Nigeria and Swaziland-were strengthening their drug control legislation.

In 1986, UNFDAC significantly expanded its support for drug control programmes in African countries; it developed new programmes in Benin, Mauritius, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. UNFDAC assistance included projects aimed at prevention of drug abuse, training of police and customs officials, and provision of laboratory equipment to identify confiscated substances. The deteriorating situation called for active support from the international community. International assistance was also being provided to improve countries' compliance with drug control treaties; INCB assistance consisted essentially in providing training for national officials.

The Americas

Drug trafficking volume was very large and widespread illicit consumption of various drugs—often taken in combination—remained a serious public health concern in the United States, INCB noted in its report for 1986. The price of drug abuse in the country amounted to billions of dollars each year in increased health care costs, lost productivity and related crime and violence.

The drug causing the greatest concern was cocaine, which was estimated to be used regularly by between 4 million and 5 million Americans; the current method of taking cocaine was to smoke a purified form of the substance known as "crack", which was mass marketed at a relatively low price. The cocaine originated in Latin America, while heroin originated in Mexico and South-West and South-East Asia, and synthetic narcotics and psychotropic substances were for the most part manufactured in the United States.

Enforcement actions during the year led to the seizure of over 500 clandestine laboratories, 60 per cent of which were involved in the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine, as well as the eradication of domestically grown cannabis both manually and by aerial spraying of herbicides. In addition, the United States continued to participate in the international campaign against illicit production, trafficking and abuse of drugs, providing substantial support, both through UNFDAC and under bilateral and regional arrangements, and supporting programmes in some 30 other countries.

In October 1986, the President of the United States signed into law the Anti-Drug Abuse Act adopted by Congress, which would permit intensified action to achieve drug-free work places, drug-free schools, effective drug abuse treatment, expansion of international co-operation, strengthened law enforcement and increased public awareness and prevention.

Illicit trafficking and drug abuse remained also a serious problem in Canada, where cannabis-the most commonly abused drug-and hashish, mainly produced abroad and smuggled into the country, continued to be widely available. Cocaine abuse was increasing, particularly in metropolitan centres, but "crack" abuse had not reached a high level. Heroin-originating mostly from South-West and South-East Asia-was widely available, and diversion from licit supplies of various opiates, as well as some benzodiazepines, occurred mainly in metropolitan areas. The clandestine manufacture of LSD and amphetamines remained a serious problem.

The Government was pursuing a national programme to contain drug abuse and counter trafficking, concentrating on dismantling major trafficking operations and on the identification and tracing of assets relating to trafficking. A special narcotics interdiction task force was created and teams of customs officials were located at key ports of entry. In October, Canada announced that it would become a party to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.

In Mexico, efforts were intensified to fight drug cultivation and trafficking. With the help of the Mexican army, some 25,000 poppy plantations-covering an area of 2,400 hectares-and 24,000 cannabis plantations on 3,000 hectares were destroyed in 1986. Cocaine seized during the year totalled some 5.5 tons, twice the amount of 1985. In an effort to help contain drug transit, the army, air force and navy were carrying out support operations.

In some countries of the Caribbean and Central and South America, illicit drug-related activities took on new dimensions as criminal syndicates challenged the authorities. The very distortion of national economies by money from drug trafficking and alliances between traffickers and guerrillas presented a serious threat to regional security. In Bolivia and Peru-the two major world producers-large areas continued to be cultivated with coca-bush, and illicit cultivation emerged in other parts of the region. In their fight to control drug abuse, several countries launched campaigns to eradicate coca-bush and cannabis cultivation and-strengthen drug control legislation. In Colombia, where the Government launched a national education campaign and enacted in February a new drug control statute, extensive areas of cannabis cultivation were destroyed and over 500 cocaine-processing laboratories were dismantled. A number of such laboratories were also destroyed in Peru where, in August 1986, the authorities conducted a major offensive against clandestine airstrips and coca-processing laboratories.

Drug traffic also increased in Brazil, which was the only major manufacturer in South America of specific chemicals and served as an entry point for chemicals originating in the United States and Europe; enforcement operations were directed at restricting trafficking of those chemicals to neighbouring countries. Vigorous counteraction against coca cultivation was undertaken in Ecuador, where the ready availability of specific chemicals used for cocaine manufacture posed a serious threat.

During 1986, UNFDAC activities intensified in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Fund's support for various multiyear regional programmes totalled $53.8 million. The dimensions of the drug problem in the region required large-scale and sustained assistance for Governments' efforts if a significant impact was to be made. With UNFDAC support, a training seminar for administrators in charge of drug control and law enforcement in 21 countries of Latin America and the Caribbean was organized jointly by INCB and the Government of Spain (Madrid, 10-20 March).

The Inter-American Specialized Conference on Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, held under OAS auspices (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 22-26 April), urged member countries to strengthen the operational capabilities of their customs and police services and to investigate the source of funds of notorious drug traffickers. The Conference also endorsed the establishment of strict controls on the manufacture, importation and exportation of precursors and specific chemicals required for the illicit production of drugs.

In October, Colombia, Peru and Venezuela inaugurated the first police-to-police radio communications centre, to facilitate fast and reliable links between law enforcement agencies.

Asia

East and South-East Asia. Extensive eradication of illicit poppy cultivation—a major source of illicit opium—in Burma and Thailand where 13,000 hectares and 1,700 hectares had been destroyed, respectively, reduced production of opiates in East and South-East Asia. Large seizures, particularly in Hong Kong and Thailand, further diminished opiate supplies. Some mobile heroin laboratories along the Thai/Burmese border were dismantled; as a result, traffickers shifted their operations elsewhere. There were attempts to smuggle into the region opiates originating in the Near and Middle East. As far as cannabis was concerned, illicit cultivation remained widespread.

Heroin abuse in some countries of the region seemed to have stabilized, as Governments reinforced preventive education and rehabilitation programmes and intensified law enforcement. The discovery of the first amphetamine laboratory in Thailand in 1986 was an indication of growing abuse of that drug, INCB reported. Following consultations, Thailand and Burma agreed to strengthen their co-operation in combating drug traffic.

UNFDAC was supporting drug control programmes in the region, and bilateral co-operation involving a number of countries was also well established. The members of ASEAN were endeavouring to unify their counter-attacks against drug trafficking and, under United Nations auspices, regional meetings of the heads of narcotics law enforcement agencies were held. Several countries were studying their legislation with a view to enabling authorities to confiscate traffickers' assets.

South Asia. In India, heroin abuse was spreading in all parts of the country, but particularly in major urban centres like Bombay and New Delhi; a survey was being conducted in nine major cities to determine the extent of abuse. Programmes aimed at preventing abuse and treating dependent persons were being developed and enforcement was being directed at reducing the availability of drugs at the street level.

Situated between major sources of illicit drugs, India was also used as a transit country for traffic in heroin from the Near and Middle East and South-East Asia. Acetic anhydride, originating in India, was smuggled to certain neighbouring countries for use in heroin manufacture, some of which was trafficked back to and through India. Seizure data suggested that opium was trafficked mainly internally, a portion of the drug being diverted from licensed growing areas. Enforcement operations throughout the country netted enormous seizures, mainly of heroin, cannabis and methaqualone. Enhanced co-operation at the operational level between India and other countries in neighbouring regions was a prerequisite for more effective action to reduce trafficking.

In Nepal, large-scale trafficking of cannabis continued, abuse of drugs, particularly heroin, was spreading and nationals of the country became increasingly involved in international heroin trafficking; as a result, Nepal amended in 1986 its legislation to increase penalties for trafficking.

Europe

Eastern Europe. The majority of countries in Eastern Europe were parties to both the 1961 and 1971 Conventions (see below). While drug abuse did not constitute a serious public health problem, in some countries there was growing concern at instances of abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances diverted from local sources, reported INCB.⁽¹³⁾ Situated between regions where illicit opium poppy and cannabis plants were primarily grown and where illicit demand for and abuse of narcotic drugs were particularly widespread, the Eastern European countries were confronted with the problem of fighting transit traffic; to deal with that problem, customs inspection facilities were being strengthened in a number of countries. Other counteraction measures included the joint training of customs officers, exchange of information between law enforcement agencies and periodic consultations among the countries concerned.

Western Europe. All countries in Western Europe—with the exception of Malta and San Marino—were parties to the 1961 Convention, but some were not parties to the 1971 Convention. Data collected by drug enforcement services showed a stabilization and, in some instances, a decline in drug-related deaths. In some countries, the average age of victims was reported to have increased, as was the average age of known drug-dependent persons. In several countries, heroin abuse remained at a high level, while in others, it appeared to be stabilizing or decreasing; the abuse of cocaine on the other hand was reported to be widespread and increasing in some countries.

Despite signs of stagnation and even decrease in cannabis and heroin abuse, quantities seized in Europe were higher. In 1986, some 1.75 tons of heroin were seized, the highest quantity ever seized in one year; at 1.4 tons, cocaine seizures were also at a record high. Over 60 per cent of the heroin seized between 1984 and 1986 originated from, or transited through, South-West Asia, while most cocaine was seized at international airports after arriving via direct air routes from South America.

Near and Middle East

The five-member (Afghanistan, Iran, Pakistan, Sweden, Turkey) Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, a subsidiary body of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, held its twenty-first session at Vienna on 6 February 1986.

The Commission, on 14 February,⁽³⁶⁾ requested the Division of Narcotic Drugs to develop mechanisms to identify more precisely the sources of opium seized from illicit traffic in the region; to provide support for aerial surveys to identify more accurately areas of illicit opium cultivation, and for fellowships, study tours and workshops to facilitate exchange of experience; and to develop studies on the possibility of using satellite interpretation to identify any remaining illicit opium poppy cultivation. The Commission also asked UNFDAC to consider ways to support the activities of the Sub-Commission members.

According to INCB,⁽¹³⁾ large quantities of opiates and cannabis resin seized in the Near and Middle East indicated the existence of extensive areas of illicit poppy cultivation and of a substantial heroin manufacturing capacity. If an effective attack was to be mounted against opium production, a systematic survey of areas in which illicit poppy cultivation was believed to be taking place remained essential; it was also essential that Governments placed special emphasis on intra-regional and interregional action to dismantle trafficking organizations and seize their assets. Similarly, INCB urged Governments concerned to co-operate with a view to dismantling the numerous heroin laboratories in the region and to preventing the availability of acetic anhydride for such manufacture.

During 1986, UNFDAC continued to support the efforts of several Governments in the region to curb illicit production, trafficking and abuse. In Afghanistan, it approved a project for the treatment of drug-dependent persons. A treatment and rehabilitation project already under way in Egypt was extended to the end of 1986, and a law enforcement project was initiated to provide Egypt's police with telecommunications equipment, training and advisory services. A two-year project supporting the Jordanian police was also initiated. In Pakistan, five ongoing projects aimed at rural development, illicit crop eradication, and prevention of drug abuse and treatment of abusers continued to be implemented. In Turkey, a project to extend a telecommunications system for law enforcement to four more provinces was approved, as was a project aimed at maintaining and strengthening control of the production of poppy straw for medical use. Bilateral projects, complementing UNFDAC efforts, were also carried out in some countries.

Conventions

As at the end of 1986, 115 States were parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, adopted in 1961;⁽³⁷⁾ the number of parties to the Protocol of 25 March 1972⁽³⁸⁾ or to the Convention as amended by the Protocol stood at 76; and 85 States were parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,⁽³⁹⁾ with Malaysia, Qatar, Somalia and the United Kingdom adhering in 1986.⁽⁴⁰⁾

Strengthened treaty obligations were needed to counter new challenges posed by the existing highly sophisticated trafficking, INCB said in its report for 1986.⁽¹³⁾ Until a new treaty capable of attracting widespread ratification could be concluded, parties to the 1961 and 1971 Conventions remained obliged to take effective measures to stop illicit trafficking. Some States parties to the Conventions had not enacted the necessary enabling legislation and regulations to enforce the Conventions' provisions within their territories; such action should receive priority attention, INCB said. Moreover, decisions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs placing drugs under international control should be promptly followed by national action; failure to do so not only violated treaty obligations, but also undermined effective control.

The control system as embodied in the 1961 Convention and strengthened by the 1972 Protocol required prior authorization for cultivation, production, manufacture, conversion and compounding of preparations, wholesale trade and retail distribution, as well as exports and imports of drugs. The premises in which those operations took place had to conform to certain conditions and safeguards, and all persons engaged in such operations were subject to governmental control and had to be adequately qualified. Records were required to be kept to show the quantities produced and manufactured, as well as every acquisition and disposal. Each international transaction had to be approved by the authorities of both the importing and exporting countries. Finally, detailed accounting of all movements of narcotic drugs had to be periodically reported to the national authorities and to INCB so that the licit trade could be monitored and diversions detected.

On the other hand, the 1971 Convention did not establish for psychotropic substances as comprehensive a control system as that in force for narcotic drugs. In response to INCB recommendations, a number of additional measures to strengthen the system were being voluntarily carried out by most Governments. Those measures established for psychotropic substances, which were more liable to abuse and therefore controlled under Schedule II (see p. 874), a simplified system of estimates for medical requirements, based on that which proved effective for narcotic drugs. The publication of annual medical requirements, provided currently by 160 countries and regions, constituted valuable guidance to exporting countries so that exports could be limited to the medical needs of importing countries and excessive manufacture avoided. To monitor international trade and facilitate the detection of diversions, additional voluntary measures requesting that statistics on imports and exports be provided quarterly to INCB had also met with wide acceptance.

INCB recommended steps which Governments could take to facilitate the working of the control system; the Board itself had put into effect a number of measures to ease the tasks of national authorities under the treaties. It urged countries without special administrations responsible for applying the Conventions' provisions and for effectively co-ordinating the activities of the various ministries or departments concerned with drug control to establish such administrations. National legislation and regulations to enforce the Conventions' provisions should receive priority attention, and decisions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs placing drugs under international control should be promptly followed by national action. INCB also stressed the urgent need for the international community to provide assistance to developing countries for establishing or strengthening national drug control administrations and to train and retain adequate staff.

Following consideration of a report by the Secretary-General⁽⁴¹⁾ on proposals for a draft convention on illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (see p. 867), the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its 1986 special session,⁽⁴²⁾ recognized the urgent need for an instrument dealing specifically with illicit traffic, since existing drug control treaties did not deal effectively with a problem which had assumed the dimensions of a world-wide threat to the health and well-being of peoples, as well as to the social fabric and the structure of society.

The Commission also adopted at its special session a resolution⁽⁴³⁾ commending WHO for refining its guidelines for the review of dependence-producing psychoactive substances for international control (see p. 874), and for developing an effective mechanism to fulfil its role under the 1961 and 1971 Conventions.

1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs

In an effort to simplify and consolidate international drug machinery, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs was adopted in 1961; it entered into force in 1964. Under the Convention, the cultivation of plants grown as raw material for natural narcotic drugs was placed under control; existing controls on production of opium and its derivatives-morphine, heroin and codeine-were continued, and coca-bush and cannabis were placed under international control, obliging

Governments to limit production of those drugs to amounts needed for medical and scientific use. The Convention also introduced new obligations related to medical treatment and rehabilitation of addicts and prohibited traditional practices, such as opium smoking and eating, coca-leaf chewing and hashish smoking, and the use of cannabis for non-medical purposes. The Convention was strengthened by the 1972 Protocol, which came into force in 1975. Underscoring the need for increasing efforts to prevent illicit production, the Protocol required prior authorization for the cultivation, production, manufacture, conversion and compounding of preparations, trade, distribution and import/export of drugs; it also highlighted the need for treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers as an alternative to, or in addition to, imprisonment for those who had committed a drug offence.

The international drug control system as it related to the movement of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes continued to operate in a generally satisfactory manner, INCB noted in its report for 1986.⁽¹³⁾ A loophole, however, was created by a number of countries not co-operating adequately. Of the 185 countries and territories in the world-parties and non-parties to the Convention—135 provided information on narcotic drugs and co-operated with INCB in helping control narcotic drugs. Available information showed that, at the national level, diversion of narcotic drugs from licit channels, in respect of both wholesale and retail trade, remained minimal, particularly in view of the substantial amounts of such drugs used for medical and scientific purposes. None the less, attempts to divert narcotic drugs frequently occurred but were thwarted, because of both the vigilance of national authorities and the international control mechanism. To allow the treaty network to operate with maximum effectiveness, INCB urged States not parties to adhere to the Convention at the earliest possible time.

The Board considered that the time had come to bring all species of Papaver from which opiates could be extracted within the scope of the 1961 Convention.

1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances

About 140 countries-both parties and non-parties to the 1971 Convention-had provided information on international trade in psychotropic substances, INCB said in its 1986 report.¹³ In addition, more than 60 Governments had furnished detailed import and export data on Schedules III and IV substances.

Because of the differences in risks in using the wide variety of substances placed under control by the Convention and their widely varying therapeutic values, four separate schedules were developed. Schedule I, which imposes the strictest controls, lists substances, including hallucinogens, whose use, manufacture, distribution, export/import or possession is virtually prohibited except for scientific and very limited medical purposes. Schedules II, III and IV, which include amphetamines, barbiturates and common non-barbiturate sedatives such as Valium and Librium, dictate that parties must apply specific control measures to limit the manufacture, export, import, distribution, stockpiling, possession, trade in and use of those substances to medical and scientific purposes; licensing for trade, manufacture, distribution or possession is required and prescriptions may be written by physicians in line with sound medical practice.

INCB pointed out that since 1979 the number of psychotropic substances under international control had increased threefold, whereas its resources had been substantially decreased because of the financial crisis of the United Nations. As a result, some of the Board's tasks had to be deferred, and its decisions about whether to defer carrying out some monitoring activities on particular drugs would take into account the relative danger posed to public health by abuse of the drugs concerned; high priority would be accorded to Schedule II substances, as, for the time being, resources did not permit it to carry out fully all controls for all substances recently included in Schedules III and IV, notably in respect of analysing data received from Governments to ascertain trends and possible diversions from licit international trade.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its ninth special session in February 1986, considered notifications from WHO on the scheduling of 17 substances and on the termination of a number of exemptions of preparations granted by France and the United States; the notifications were transmitted by a note of the Secretary-General.⁽⁴⁴⁾ The Commission decided by vote⁽⁴⁵⁾ to include in Schedule I seven psychotropic substances: cathinone; 2,5-dimethoxyamphetamine (DMA); paramethoxyamphetamine (PMA); 3,4,5-trimethoxyamphetamine (TMA); 2,5-dimethoxy-4-ethylamphetamine (DOET); 5-methoxy-3,4-methylenedioxyamphetamine (MMDA); and 3,4-methylenedioxymethamphetamine (MDMA). Three substances, fenetylline, levamphetamine and levomethamphetamine, were included in Schedule II, and cathine in Schedule III. Included in Schedule IV were N-ethylamphetamine, fencamfamin, fenproporex, mefenorex, propylhexedrine and pyrovalerone.

By a resolution adopted at the same session,⁽⁴³⁾ the Commission commended WHO for refining its guidelines for the review of dependence-producing psychoactive substances for international control, most recently discussed by the WHO Executive Board at its January session; it endorsed those guidelines, taking into account the amendments proposed at that session. It endorsed in particular WHO's efforts to clarify the procedures, criteria and plans for the selection of substances for future review, and its efforts to document fully all recommendations forwarded to the Secretary-General for presentation to the Commission, giving particular attention to the degree of seriousness of public health and social problems, and urged all Governments and other interested parties to provide full and accurate information on substances under consideration by WHO.

By another resolution,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Commission requested Governments to comply with article 3, paragraph 3, of the 1971 Convention, which obliged parties to notify the Secretary-General of exemptions granted by them, and requested them to consider not granting exemptions from the export and import requirements provided by article 12. It invited Governments to furnish all the information needed by WHO for evaluation purposes and by the Commission for taking a decision on cases when termination of an exemption was recommended by WHO. It recommended that where the exempted preparations were only for use within the country granting the exemption, and where the country assured WHO that to the best of its knowledge the exempted preparations were not subject to abuse, WHO should not conduct an in-depth evaluation but continue to keep records on such exemptions for future monitoring purposes. It further recommended that WHO defer the evaluation of exemption notifications until such time as a substantial number of such notifications were presented to the Secretary-General, allowing the simultaneous and comparative evaluation of those notifications. It requested the Economic and Social Council to include in the provisional agenda of its 1987 session an item on the study of the provisions of article 3 of the Convention in order to explore the possibilities for the simplification and improvement of the expensive and complicated mechanisms used for the handling and evaluation of exemption notifications.

The Council, by decision 1986/125 of 21 May, approved the inclusion of the item and agreed that a note by the Secretary-General on that subject should be prepared for the Commission.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/8 without vote.

Strengthening of the control of international trade in secobarbital, a psychotropic substance listed in Schedule III of the 1971

Convention on Psychotropic Substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the International Narcotics Control Board in its report for 1984 recommended-and that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs supported the recommendation—that additional voluntary action should be undertaken by Governments to strengthen the impact of the controls which the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances imposes upon substances listed in Schedules III and IV.

Recalling also, in that connection, Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/15 of 28 May 1985.

Noting with deep concern the increasing flow of diverted secobarbital into both industrialized and developing countries,

Recognizing that the present controls over the import and export of secobarbital ought to be made stronger to further prevent its diversion,

Considering that the import and export data currently being provided to the International Narcotics Control Board on secobarbital are incomplete,

1. Urges all Governments to extend the system of import and export authorizations provided for in article 12, paragraph 1, of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to cover international trade in secobarbital and other Schedule III substances, to the extent consistent with their domestic laws, as previously requested by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1985/15;

2. Stresses that it is important that all Governments voluntarily provide to the International Narcotics Control Board, to the extent possible, complete reports on trade in secobarbital and other Schedule III substances;

3. Requests all importing countries to voluntarily furnish to the International Narcotics Control Board, to the extent possible, estimates of annual medical and scientific requirements for secobarbital;

4. Further requests parties to the 1971 Convention to notify all the other parties, through the Secretary-General, as provided for in article 13 of the Convention, if they prohibit the import of one or more of the substances listed in Schedule III;

5. Invites Governments of exporting countries to consult the International Narcotics Control Board before authorizing shipments of secobarbital and other Schedule III substances whenever questions arise as to the authenticity of import requests or when the amounts in question appear excessive with respect to the legitimate medical requirements of the countries concerned;

6. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to provide data, at the thirty-second session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, on the voluntary use of import and export authorizations, and on its success in obtaining national estimates of legitimate medical requirements for secobarbital.

Organizational questions

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its ninth special session at Vienna from 10 to 14 February 1986.⁽⁴²⁾ It also held its first session as the preparatory body for the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (see p. 861).

By decision 1986/127 of 21 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its special session.

International Narcotics Control Board

INCB held two sessions in 1986, at Vienna: its thirty-ninth from 20 to 30 May and its fortieth from 20 to 31 October. By decision 1986/126 of 21 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the INCB report for 1985.⁽⁴⁷⁾

Chapter XXII

Statistics

During 1986, the Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to carry out its work programme, covering four major kinds of activities: the improvement of statistical methodology; the collection, compilation and dissemination of international statistical data; support for technical co-operation activities in statistics and statistical data processing; and the promotion of co-ordination in international statistical work. The scope of the Office's work encompassed subject-matters such as energy, environment, industry, national accounts, prices, international trade, demographic and social statistics and human settlements. The Secretary-General issued a number of reports on statistical activities for consideration by the twenty-fourth session of the Statistical Commission in 1987. The Commission, which meets biennially, did not meet in 1986.

UN statistical bodies

ACC Sub-Committee

The Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (twentieth session, Geneva, 9-13 June 1986)(1) considered co-ordination questions related to work being planned or carried out by the organizations of the United Nations system. They included service statistics, international economic classifications, revision of the System of National Accounts (SNA), trade and transport statistics, price statistics, including the International Comparison Project (ICP), energy statistics, social statistics and indicators, environment statistics, and tourism and migration statistics.

The Sub-Committee also considered the National Household Survey Capability Programme and the Living Standards Measurement Study. In addition, it reviewed data dissemination policy and work done in the international statistical organizations on preparing, using and publishing estimates, discussed co-ordination of statistical data bases and issues surrounding the use of microcomputers for statistical purposes and co-ordination of information systems in the United Nations, and noted a call by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) for supportive action by the United Nations system in strengthening that region's statistical services. Further, it discussed preparations for the 1990 World Population and Housing

Census Programme, reviewed matters to be discussed at the 1987 session of the Statistical Commission and drew up the draft provisional agenda for its own 1987 session.

Organizations using and servicing COMTRADE (the commodity trade statistics data base) expressed concern about the possible transfer of the Commodity Trade Statistics Unit and/or processing of trade statistics and storage from the United Nations Office at Geneva to New York. The Sub-Committee regretted that moves towards such a transfer had been made without consulting the users and requested that the United Nations authorities be informed of their concern that the system remain undisturbed, particularly during a critical period of international trade negotiations.

Economic statistics

Energy, environment and industry statistics

A 1986 report by the Secretary-General on energy statistics(2) outlined progress made by the Statistical Office in that area since the 1985 session of the Statistical Commission.

An ad hoc expert group on methods for the collection and compilation of statistics on new and renewable sources of energy met at Rome, Italy, from 29 September to 3 October. The group considered technical papers on biomass, draught-animal power, and solar and wind energy statistics, and adopted conclusions and recommendations on those issues. The meeting ended phase III of the Statistical Office's work programme in that area and thus concluded the project.

The Office also continued work on energy price and cost statistics and units of measurement and conversion factors, on which publications were under preparation.

It increased its co-operation with organizations within and outside the United Nations system in the energy statistics area. Co-operation with the ESCAP Statistical Division increased, specifically in the areas of development and improvement of energy data and information systems, and its training programme in rural energy statistics. In the latter area, the Statistical Office was involved in carrying out two workshops in China on the compilation of overall energy balances (Luoyang, Henan Province, 8-12 April; Shanghai, 14-18 April).

Under its data collection and dissemination programme, the Office continued to work on its annual publications, Energy Balances and Electricity Profiles and the Energy Statistics Yearbook.

With regard to the Office's future work programme, the report noted that an increasing number of countries had recognized the need to collect energy data systematically before energy planning could be seriously pursued. Elements for a technical assistance programme in that area included: provision and training of energy statisticians to act as liaison with government departments and research institutions; establishment of an information system for energy sources data; co-ordination of surveys and inclusion of energy-related questions in household, agriculture, transport and industry surveys; and training of energy statisticians, emphasizing tools such as energy balances, profiles for new and renewable sources of energy and topics related to energy statistics in value terms.

In a report on environment statistics,(3) the Secretary-General described the Statistical Office's methodological work which had focused on preparing a manual of environment statistics for compiling selected high-priority statistics in human settlements and natural resources. He also reported that discussions of work programmes and plans in environment statistics were in progress with the regional commissions and other United Nations organizations to avoid duplication of efforts and to develop joint programmes.

With regard to the Statistical Commission's 1985 request(4) that the Office develop an international programme of collection and dissemination of environment statistics, the report stated that such a programme would be developed when a sufficient number of developing countries had established environment statistics programmes. In the mean time, the Office was exploring the possibility of including in its publications tables on selected environment statistics to be compiled from international sources.

With regard to future work, it was proposed that the Office should focus, in the short term, on completing the manual of environment statistics, and, in the long term, it would update and translate the Survey of Environment Statistics: Frameworks, Approaches and Statistical Publications and develop international data collection and dissemination.

The Secretary-General, in another report,(5) introduced draft recommendations for a statistical programme for household and small-scale industries. The report described the background for the recommendations, including their relationship to existing international recommendations, summarized the comments of a 1983 expert group which had reviewed a preliminary draft of the document, outlined the main features of the draft and submitted points for the Commission's consideration.

National accounts and balances

A December 1986 report by the Secretary-General(6) dealt with progress made in revising the United Nations System of National Accounts. A series of regional meetings—10 held in 1985-1986—to discuss studies on the topics identified in the consolidated work programme concluded and the next phase of the programme, consisting of global expert group meetings, began. Two such meetings were held in 1986: one on the SNA structure (Geneva, June), which recommended general guidelines for the SNA revision and the preparation of handbooks, and the other on price and quantity comparisons (Luxembourg, November), which recommended approaches to technical issues regarding national accounting in constant prices. Also held were an interregional seminar on the SNA review for developing countries (Geneva, June) and a workshop for the statistically least developed countries (Mexico, February).

A conceptual framework for comparing SNA and the System of Balances of the National Economy (MPS) was the subject of a November report by the Secretary-General,(7) which discussed issues of intersystem comparisons and ongoing work on illustrative calculations of SNA/MPS aggregates. The report identified areas in both systems where differences could be reduced or eliminated, and attention was focused on analysis of definitions, concepts and classifications employed in production, consumption and capital formation accounts and balances. Another November report(8) described the links between SNA and related statistics, particularly balance-of-payments statistics, government finance statistics and money and banking statistics. In addition, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission a report by the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance on the improvement of a methodology for compilation of MPS.(9)

Price statistics

The Statistical Office continued its co-ordinating role in the International Comparison Project-involving comparisons in price statistics, used for assessing the relative economic development of countries. A September 1986 report(10) described the progress of phase V of the project—begun in 1985 with 60 participating countries—regarding methodology, co-ordination and the financial difficulties encountered, and proposed a provisional timetable for the remainder of the phase as well as preliminary considerations for the next phase. The final results of phase IV of ICP were published in 1986 in two separate volumes.(11)

International economic classifications

The Secretary-General submitted in September 1986 a report⁽¹²⁾ outlining the work on the Integrated System of Classifications of Activities and Products, which formed the basis for the harmonization of international economic classifications. An expert group meeting on that issue was held in New York from 28 April to 2 May to advise the Secretariat on how to improve further the complete drafts of the third revision of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities and the Central Product Classification and to discuss the second part of the classifications dealing with the production of non-transportable goods and services. The report described the two drafts and the progress made in the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System of the Customs Co-operation Council and the revision of the Standard International Trade Classification.

Social and demographic statistics

Social indicators

The Statistical Office continued its work on the framework for integration of social, demographic and related statistics, on development of methods for statistics and indicators on women and special population groups, such as disabled persons, youth, elderly and children, and on compilation of related statistics; methodological publications were issued on health, education and housing,⁽¹³⁾ disabled persons⁽¹⁴⁾ and criminal justice.⁽¹⁵⁾

In co-operation with the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, an expert group meeting on measurement of women's income and their participation and production in the informal sector was held at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 13 to 17 October 1986. The meeting considered methods of measuring the informal sector and valuing women's production in both formal and informal sectors in terms of SNA. Meanwhile, a compilation of statistics and indicators on the situation of women was being prepared.

Population and housing census

Preparations for the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme, scheduled to be carried out in 1985-1994, were the subject of an August 1986 report of the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁶⁾ In the methodological area, the Statistical Office, in collaboration with the International Labour Office, regional commissions and other interested organizations, prepared draft supplementary principles and recommendations for population and housing censuses for the Statistical Commission's 1987 session. The supplementary recommendations focused on economic topics, tabulations in entirety, migration and special population groups. The report also summarized the types of technical co-operation activities that had been undertaken for the successful implementation of the 1980 census and discussed needs and priorities in carrying out the 1990 round of population and housing censuses, taking into account emerging new technologies for data processing and other developments relating to censuses.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

An August 1986 report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁷⁾ reviewed the progress made by the National Household Survey Capability Programme, a technical co-operation project bringing together national donors and international agencies to assist developing countries in producing socio-economic and demographic statistics needed for their development plans.

Living Standards Measurement Study

The World Bank, in an October 1986 report,⁽¹⁸⁾ reviewed the primary objectives of the Living Standards Measurement Study, aimed at identifying ways to monitor changes in living standards. Information was provided on methodology, including questionnaire and survey design recommendations. Also discussed were some of the lessons learned from completed work.

Other statistical activities

Technical co-operation

Information on the technical co-operation programmes in statistics of the United Nations system and several bilateral agencies during 1983-1986 was summarized in a report by the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁹⁾ Estimated 1986 expenditures for the United Nations system on technical co-operation in statistics totalled at $43.5 million, compared with $41.8 million in 1985.

The report also dealt with current training activities and emerging issues in statistical data processing, including the role of microcomputers.

Special issues

Communication between national and international statistical agencies and data base development were dealt with in a December report,⁽²⁰⁾ which summarized recent developments in the statistical data bases of international statistical agencies and suggested possible measures to improve data communication between national and international agencies.

Programme implementation

The Secretary-General submitted an overall review, of the statistical activities of the United Nations system, the World Tourism Organization and the Inter-American Statistical Institute for the period 1984 to mid-1986,(21) describing major achievements, new activities and those cancelled or modified significantly.

Chapter XXIII

Institutional arrangements

In 1986, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) continued work towards harmonizing and co-ordinating the programme activities of the United Nations system. This task was carried out mainly through evaluation, cross-organizational analyses of programmes and reviews of medium-term plans, and the Joint Meetings of the two Committees. The focus of analysis during the year was on the system's activities in economic and social research and policy analysis. Discussions at the Joint Meetings centred on the United Nations preparedness for emergency situations.

To enhance their effectiveness, the two Committees examined their own functioning. ACC adopted further steps to streamline its machinery, while CPC undertook an in-depth examination of its work as the main United Nations organ for planning, programming and co-ordination. CPC recommended a series of measures for improvement, which the Economic and Social Council subsequently endorsed.

A series of recommendations to streamline the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations, especially in the economic and social sectors, and thereby facilitate co-ordination of activities was put forward in April by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) (see p. 1021). The General Assembly decided in December that the recommendations should be implemented, subject to certain qualifications (resolution 41/213).

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, an intergovernmental organization, continued to be pursued, as was co-operation with non-governmental organization (NGOs). The Secretary-General, in his 1986 report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), said that multilateralism, as embodied in the United Nations, needed its champions. He expressed his conviction that the United Nations should develop even closer communication and co-operation with those organizations, for they were an essential extension of the capacity of the United Nations to reach its global constituency.

In other organizational and institutional arrangements, the Economic and Social Council adopted its work programme for 1986-1987 and the General Assembly approved the biennial programme of work for 1987-1988 of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

In connection with the new status of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the Council recommended to it for approval a draft annex modifying the standard clauses of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies as appropriate for UNIDO.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Report of the Group of 18. To enhance co-ordination within the United Nations system, the Group of 18, in its report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ called for streamlining the machinery for inter-agency co-ordination and for maximum use of flexible ad hoc arrangements to meet specific requirements (recommendation 9). It recommended that the executive heads of ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, the World Bank, IMF, IAEA, GATT, UNIDO and UNCTAD meet in yearly session under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General, assisted by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) and the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs, to discuss major economic and social policy questions and to improve co-ordination of their programmes and report biennially to their governing bodies (recommendation 10).

The Group further recommended that the central co-ordinating role of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for operational activities be reaffirmed and that the authority of resident co-ordinators with respect to non-UNDP programmes be clarified (recommendation 11). Field representation of the various programmes should be reviewed with a view to merging field offices whenever feasible (recommendation 12). The formats of programme budgets, including those of administrative budgets of United Nations affiliates, should be harmonized (recommendation 13), as should the presentation in programme budgets of resources pertaining to the regional commissions (recommendation 28).

Other reports. In keeping with a 1985 General Assembly resolution on co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system,⁽²⁾ a representative of the DIEC Director-General, on behalf of the Secretary-General, orally reported on 11 July 1986 to the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Economic and Social Council on progress made in implementation of the resolution.

The Council, by decision 1986/178 of 23 July, took note of the oral report.

On 24 October, the Director-General himself orally reported on the subject to the Second Committee of the Assembly. Stating that efficiency, responsiveness and cost-effectiveness should be the key words in examining the question of policy co-ordination at the intergovernmental or intersecretariat levels, he stressed that co-ordination was not an end in itself and could not be applied to all fields of activity. It was necessary to select subject areas in which the benefits of co-ordination clearly outweighed its costs and to avoid duplication of effort.

The Director-General further stressed that the paramount consideration must be to harness the enormous potential of the United Nations system in a collective effort to respond effectively to the needs of Member States; development, a complex phenomenon involving interaction of the economic, social, political and cultural sectors, required co-ordination based on a partnership between Governments and secretariats; and co-ordination would be made easier if broad consensus could be reached among Governments on questions of development assistance. In this context, informal consultations were probably more important than rigid structural mechanisms, especially on questions on which consensus needed to be reached.

The Director-General stated that the Secretary-General would report in 1987 on action taken to implement the recommendations of the Group of 18 relating to the intergovernmental machinery aimed at enhancing co-ordination (see p. 891); the Secretary-General would be guided by the need to ensure greater cohesion and complementarity in the work of the various parts of the United Nations and between the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The Director-General also said that ACC had taken steps to improve dialogue among the executive heads of the system's organizations on major policy issues related to development and international economic co-operation.

By decision 41/453 of 8 December, the Assembly took note of the Director-General's oral report.

ACC activities

In 1986, ACC considered the question of development and international economic co-operation, continuing its dialogue on the economic and social implications of growth strategies and the impact of adjustment policies. It asked its Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives to study the long-term conditions for balanced economic growth (see p. 391) and to consider what follow-up should be given to the evaluation of implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

ACC addressed a number of programme, operational, and management and institutional policy issues. Of note among its activities in the area of programming was the finalization of an inventory of arrangements for system-wide programme co-ordination. The inventory, to be issued as an ACC document, contained a description of ACC subsidiary bodies; bilateral and other multilateral co-ordinating arrangements among organizations; and, for each co-ordination mechanism, information on the establishing authority and date of establishment, its mandate, areas of collaboration, meeting and reporting procedures, and participating organizations.

Other programme issues concerned past, current and future cross-organizational programme analyses (COPAs) (see p. 887) and medium-term plans of the United Nations system (see p. 887); implementation of the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan, the water situation in Africa and other matters relating to water resources development (see p. 575); priority areas for work and research in nutrition, including the co-ordination of a major initiative to expand nutritional surveillance (see p. 637); co-ordination of demographic estimates and projections and of ongoing and future statistical activities (see p. 878); and the introduction of several initiatives to make deliberations and activities relating to science and technology for development more pertinent to Member States (see p. 603).

ACC undertook development of methods for monitoring and reviewing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women (see p. 786), examined implementation of the action plans on aging (see p. 830) and for crime prevention, and strengthened co-ordination of activities on behalf of youth (see p. 824) and of the disabled (see p. 637). It co-operated in the preparatory work for a forthcoming international conference on drug abuse (see p. 861), an international year of shelter for the homeless (see p. 674) and an interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes.

The main operational issue on which the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)) of ACC focused its attention was aid co-ordination at the country level, especially in respect of implementation of the Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (see p. 446). The improvement of project delivery and a wider engagement of NGOs in the mobilization and effective utilization of resources were pursued, as was the preparation of a compendium of co-ordination arrangements for operational activities (see p. 417).

The full range of management and institutional policy issues implicit in the administration of the United Nations common system was kept under review by the two components of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ)—on personnel and general administrative questions (PER) and on financial and budgetary questions (FB). This included pensions and pensionable remuneration of staff, scale of separation payments, the post adjustment system and human resources management, as well as financial and budgetary issues: standardization and comparability in budgetary and administrative practices, system-wide arrangements for the currency payment of salaries and allowances of international staff, financial difficulties created for the United Nations system by delayed payments and withholdings of assessed and voluntary contributions by Member States, problems arising in respect of projects financed by World Bank loans and credits of the International Development Association, and procurement practices.

In an effort to establish a concerted approach to the problem of apartheid, ACC requested its Organizational Committee and CCAQ(FB) to study problems stemming from relations between the system's organizations and certain banks and financial institutions collaborating with South Africa.

In addition, ACC issued comments on the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the reform of the United Nations, on system-wide cash management, on the status of internal evaluation in organizations of the United Nations system, on the system-wide integration and use of evaluation (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II), and on field representation in the system (see p. 417).

In a continuing effort to rationalize its work and improve the functioning of its subsidiary machinery, ACC took steps to define the role and functioning of its main subsidiary bodies and to reduce the number and frequency of meetings. It concluded that a commitment by the organizations to make full use of the machinery and to reinforce its decision-making capability would improve its functioning and productivity. This would help ACC to provide effective support to the work of intergovernmental bodies and to respond better to the concerns of the international community.

The foregoing activities were described by ACC in its annual overview reports for 1985/86 (covering the period May 1985 to April 1986⁽³⁾ and for 1986 (covering the period May to December).(4) ACC met during the year in an organizational session (New York, 12-14 February), a special session (Geneva, 30 June) and a regular session (New York, 22 and 23 October). It adopted 30 decisions(5) relating to the topics mentioned above and to ACC machinery; the first seven decisions, however, were adopted by the Organizational Committee, as authorized by ACC, in view of a decision not to hold a first regular session in 1986.

The principal subsidiary bodies of ACC met as follows:

Organizational Committee (Geneva, 9-11 April, 26 and 27 June and 3 July; New York, 13, 14 and 24 October); CCAQ(PER) (sixty-fourth session, Geneva, 24-28 February, and Nairobi, Kenya, 3-12 March; sixty-fifth session, New York, 30 June-18 July); CCAQ(FB) (sixty-fourth session, Vienna, 10-14 March; sixty-fifth session, New York, 15-19 September); CCSQ(OPS) (first regular session, Geneva, 18-21 March; second regular session, New York, 1-3 October); CCSQ(Programme Matters) (PROG) (first regular session, Geneva, 2-4 April; second regular session, New York, 6-8 October).

ACC bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, fourteenth session, Geneva, 21-24 January; Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, seventh session, Geneva, 29-31 January, and ad hoc meeting, New York, 16-19 December; ad hoc inter-agency meetings on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control, Vienna, 15 February, and New York, 3-5 September; Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, fifth session, Geneva, 19-21 February; fourth inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, Vienna, 5-7 March; inter-agency meeting on the follow-up to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women and on the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, Vienna, 6-8 March; Task Force on Rural Development, fourteenth meeting, Geneva, 12-14 March; Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group on Nutrition, twelfth session, Tokyo, 7-11 April; Joint United Nations Information Committee, thirteenth session, Geneva, 7-12 April; informal working group on preparations for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, New York, 6 May; Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, twentieth session, Geneva, 9-13 June; Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, seventh session, Geneva, 8-12 September; inter-agency consultation on the follow-up to the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, Geneva, 22 and 23 September; inter-agency meeting on outer space activities, Vienna, 1-3 October; Steering Committee of the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems, New York, 10 October; Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Working Group on Demographic Estimates and Projections, New York, 3-5 November; informal inter-agency working group on youth at the technical level, Geneva, 27 and 28 November.

Report for 1985/86

On 21 May 1986, CPC⁽⁶⁾ took note of the ACC annual overview report for 1985/86. In so doing, it stressed that future activities of CCSQ(OPS) should continue to be guided by decisions taken by the intergovernmental organs of the United Nations system, in particular those taken by the General Assembly, and recommended that ACC continue to rationalize its work and streamline its machinery.

By decision 1986/179 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council also took note of the report.

CPC activities

In 1986, CPC met in New York for an organizational meeting on 31 March and for its twenty-sixth session from 28 April to 23 May.⁽⁶⁾

CPC devoted most of its session to programme questions, especially in relation to the programme performance of the United Nations for the 1984-1985 biennium. In taking note of the Secretary-General's report on the subject, which introduced methodology changes, it recommended further measures to enhance the utility of future programme performance reports (see p. 1040). CPC considered the Secretary-General's reports on: United Nations public information activities and the triennial review of implementation of the 1983 CPC recommendations on the work of the Secretariat's Department of Public Information (see p. 366), the evaluation of the News Service of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs (see p. 368), the triennial review of the 1982 CPC recommendations on the mineral resources programme (see p. 575) and the evaluation of the population programme (see p. 633). CPC decided to abide by its evaluation timetable up to 1992 and, as suggested by the Secretary-General,⁽⁷⁾ scheduled for consideration in 1994 an evaluation of social development activities.

Also considered were the proposed revisions to the 1984-1989 medium-term plan and the question of statements of programme budget implications; the use of consultant services; and an ACC progress report on the Register of Development Activities, mailing lists and registers maintained by the United Nations, and recurrent publications (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapters II, III and IV, respectively).

CPC made recommendations concerning the ACC report for 1985/86 (see above), the agenda and improvement of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (see p. 886), a number of reports on COPAs (see p. 887) and a proposed system-wide medium-term plan (see p. 887).

Also in 1986, CPC took steps to improve its work under its mandate, as set forth in a 1976 Economic and Social Council resolution(s) and approved by the General Assembly.⁽⁹⁾ The steps were taken in the light of proposals by the Secretary-General⁽¹⁰⁾ to improve the manner in which CPC conducted its reviews of the medium-term plan and proposed programme budget, the procedures of CPC and the Secretariat services to it. While CPC saw no need to recommend any modification of its terms of reference, it adopted a series of decisions to enhance the discharge of its responsibilities.

CPC decided that its review of the medium-term plan should focus, at the technical level, on the methodological aspects of the plan's preparation and, at the political level, on the conformity of the plan's orientation with the outlook and trends derived from the decisions of legislative bodies, as well as on the conformity of the programmes and subprogrammes with legislative mandates. At the resource level, the review should be carried out in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation.⁽¹¹⁾ As to its review of the programme budget, CPC decided, on an experimental basis, to adopt a broad management approach, taking account of such factors as trends in new activities programmed and in the allocation of resources between broad categories, the relative priorities of a specific programme, the programme budget's contribution to the objectives of the medium-term plan, timeliness, efficiency of implementation, and COPAs showing the relationship between the medium-term plan and the programme budget.

CPC recommended that the Assembly, in its consideration of the United Nations plans and programmes, set priorities in accordance with the Regulations Governing Programme Planning and that the Secretary-General suggest priorities in the light of decisions adopted by intergovernmental organs and conferences. Not only should the plans fully reflect CPC's conclusions and recommendations arising from COPAs, but the Council's subsidiary bodies should also be apprised of them. Specific recommendations were also made for the further development and more effective use of the co-ordination instruments—COPAs, system-wide medium-term plans, the ACC annual overview reports and the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC.

CPC further recommended that the Main Committees of the Assembly pay greater attention to the results of CPC's deliberations and that a closer relationship between CPC and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) be established. On procedural matters, CPC called for continuing the practice of holding its organizational session four weeks before its regular session and, as a rule, for including in its report only its conclusions and recommendations, stated as precisely as possible. Documentation was to be improved in terms of quality, focus, form and timeliness.

Secretariat services to CPC, namely, the systematic follow-up of its recommendations by the relevant sectoral, functional and regional intergovernmental bodies, were to be improved. As suggested by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretariat should bring to the attention of those bodies CPC's conclusions and recommendations following their endorsement by the Assembly. They should be listed paragraph by paragraph, with the implementing offices or agencies properly identified, and transmitted by a memorandum indicating that overall guidance and co-ordination would be provided by the DIEC Director-General and the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/51 on 22 July 1986.

Report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session,

I

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session and endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Emphasizes once again the importance of the programming and co-ordinating functions carried out by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination;

II

Improvement of the work of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination under its mandate

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the improvement of its work under its mandate;

2. Welcomes, in particular, the recommendations relating to the review of the medium-term plan and the programme budget, convinced that their implementation will contribute to the effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations;

3. Reiterates the importance of setting priorities in the plans and programmes of the United Nations in accordance with the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, endorses the recommendations of the Committee on priority setting, and urges the Committee to continue to improve priority setting in the United Nations in accordance with its role, as set out in its mandate;

4. Endorses, in particular, the recommendations of the Committee on general and specific measures to improve the relevance and effectiveness of co-ordination within the United Nations system, on the implementation of the conclusions reached by the Committee upon consideration of analyses of the state of co-ordination in given areas, and on better integration of planning, programming and co-ordination;

5. Stresses the importance of an adequate mechanism to ensure that the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee are systematically followed up by the appropriate sectoral, functional and regional intergovernmental bodies and, in that context, requests the Secretary-General to implement fully the measures referred to in paragraph 48 of the report of the Committee;

III

Proposed revisions and addendum to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989;

2. Notes with satisfaction the addition to the medium-term plan of chapter 31, containing a new major programme on programme planning and co-ordination, as revised by the Committee;

3. Reiterates that the medium-term plan should continue to serve as the framework for the formulation of biennial programme budgets;

IV

Statements of programme budget implications

1. Notes that rule 31 of the rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council provides that the Secretary-General shall prepare and provide to the Council an estimate of the programme budget implications of implementing any proposal involving the expenditure of United Nations funds;

2. Welcomes the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination that the Economic and Social Council, starting with its first regular session of 1987, should, for a trial period of two years, be provided with statements of programme budget implications of the draft resolutions before the Council in the format established for such statements submitted to the General Assembly;

V

Programme performance and evaluation

1. Notes with satisfaction the changes in the methodology introduced in the report on programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1984-1985 and requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts towards further improvement;

2. Stresses the importance of programme performance reports, evaluations and cross-organizational programme analyses, as endorsed by the competent intergovernmental bodies, as instruments for promoting efficiency and for integrating the programming and co-ordination processes;

3. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination that, in programme areas where a major conference is to be held, the programme should be evaluated sufficiently in advance of the conference for the findings and recommendations to be taken into account in the preparatory work for the conference; if a programme is evaluated after a conference has taken place, such an evaluation should be made only after the programme has been revised in the light of the results of the conference and enough time has elapsed for its impact to be assessed;

VI

Cross-organizational reviews of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and cross-organizational programme analyses

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the cross-organizational programme analysis on economic and social research and policy analysis in the United Nations system;

2. Stresses, in particular, the need for research on current and emerging issues of international co-operation in the economic and social fields and the need to improve further the quality of research activities and products;

3. Stresses also the need for a closer relationship and better complementarity between the studies undertaken within the regular programmes of the organizations and the research activities of the United Nations University and of the autonomous research institutes of the United Nations system;

4. Invites its subsidiary bodies to examine ongoing and planned research activities within their areas of competence and to formulate their requests for studies in the light of such information and of emerging issues of international concern, and further invites them to consider, where appropriate and feasible, explicitly relating their draft resolutions to the medium-term plan;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To enhance the quality and relevance of research activities in the United Nations by, inter alia, implementing the measures recommended in paragraphs 186 and 187 of the report of the Committee;

(b) To increase, through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, the flow of information on the research activities and research findings of the organizations of the United Nations system;

(c) To submit to the Council, on a biennial basis, a summary of the main research findings of the system on major global economic and social trends, policies and emerging issues;

6. Requests the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to follow up the system-wide recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on economic and social research and policy analysis;

7. Decides to review the implementation of its recommendations on this subject at its second regular session of 1988 on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General to be submitted through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

8. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the cross-organizational review of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and the cross-organizational programme analysis in the area of science and technology for development be merged into a single report of the Secretary-General to be submitted to the Council at its second regular session of 1987, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

9. Decides to consider at its second regular session of 1987 the methodology, format and role of the existing analytical instruments for co-ordination, including cross-organizational programme analyses, cross-organizational reviews of the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system and system-wide medium-term plans, on the basis of the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, in the context of its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on all aspects of co-ordination requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/177 of 17 December 1985;

10. Reaffirms that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination has the responsibility for making recommendations to the Council on the subjects and timing of analytical studies pertaining to issues of co-ordination.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/51

22 July 1986

Meeting 38

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/126) without vote, 16 July (meeting 15); 6 nation draft (E/1986/C.3/L.12), orally amended in Council by Egypt following informal consultations; agenda item 20.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Liberia, Netherlands, Yugoslavia.

Before the resolution's adoption, paragraph 3 of section II had been orally amended by Egypt to delete a phrase qualifying CPC's recommendations on priority setting as being fully congruent with its terms of reference and to add the final phrase urging CPC to continue to improve priority setting.

Organization of work

At its April/May 1986 session, CPC recommended that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly correct an anomalous situation regarding the duration of its twenty-seventh (1987) session. The anomaly had arisen from a 1984 Council recommendation,(12) approved by the Assembly,(13) extending the CPC sessions, on an experimental basis, from four to five weeks' duration in 1985 and 1986.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, the Council, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1986/52.

Duration of the twenty-seventh session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1984/61 C of 26 July 1984, in which it recommended that the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth sessions of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should each be of five weeks' duration, on an experimental basis, in order to allow the Committee adequate time for the discussion, inter alia, of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 39/238 of 18 December 1984, in which the Assembly approved the decisions of the Economic and Social Council contained in its resolution 1984/61,

Having considered the recommendation contained in paragraph 55 of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session,

Recommends that the twenty-seventh session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be of five weeks' duration.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/52

22 July 1986 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/126) without vote, 16 July (meeting 15); 5 nation draft (E/1986/C.3/L.13); agenda item 20.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, India, Liberia, Netherlands, Yugoslavia.

Financial implications: S-G, E/1986/C.3/L.14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 41/203 of 11 December 1986, the General Assembly, having considered the report of CPC(6) and the Council's recommendation, decided that the 1987 session of CPC should be of five weeks' duration.

CPC membership

On 19 December 1986, during consideration by the General Assembly of the agenda item on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations (see p. 1024), Bolivia introduced a revised draft resolution(14) intended to facilitate the review by CPC in 1988 of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1990-1995. Bolivia subsequently requested that consideration of the draft be deferred until 1987.

By the draft, the Assembly would have increased the membership of CPC from 21 to 36 Member States according to the following geographical distribution of seats: 10 for African States, 8 for Asian States, 7 for Latin American and Caribbean States, 7 for Western European and other States, and 4 for Eastern European States. Election of the new members would have been scheduled for 1987.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

CPC action. In April, CPC agreed with an ACC proposal that the topic of the twenty-first (1986) series of Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC should be a review of the preparedness of the United Nations system for emergency situations and its co-ordination aspects and links to longer-term development, in the light of experience gained from the emergency operations in Africa.

Reaffirming the important role of the Joint Meetings as an instrument of co-ordination, CPC urged continued efforts to improve the Meetings' effectiveness and functioning. It stressed the need for a critical and constructive dialogue between the two Committees and the need to choose the topic for the next year at the current Meetings to allow the proper preparation of documentation.

Activities of the Joint Meetings. CPC and ACC held the twenty-first in their series of joint Meetings at Geneva on 1 and 2 July 1986.⁽¹⁵⁾ The debate on the topic, agreed upon by the two Committees (see above), was based on a background paper prepared by ACC. It focused on such key elements of emergency operations as information, mobilization of resources, co-ordination of relief assistance, and linkage of assistance to rehabilitation and longer-term development (see p. 484).

Also considered was the functioning of the Joint Meetings. The Chairmen of the two Committees noted that further changes, including in the participants' own perceptions of the role and utility of the Meetings, were required. Improvements should include the careful choice of topic and a sharper focus of deliberations through thorough preparation for the Meetings.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/50 on 22 July 1986.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twenty-first series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees,

1. Notes the progress made at the twenty-first series of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in establishing a useful and constructive dialogue between the two Committees;

2. Stresses that further improvements are needed for the Joint Meetings to accomplish their objectives;

3. Takes note of the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twenty-first series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees, which includes the conclusions reached by the Chairmen and the views expressed on the preparedness of the United Nations system for emergency situations and its co-ordination aspects and links to longer-term development;

4. Decides, as agreed by the members of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, that the topic for the twenty-second series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees shall be "Co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development and its contribution to meeting the economic and social objectives of the developing countries".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/50

22 July 1986 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/126) without vote, 16 July (meeting 15); draft by Liberia (E/1986/C.3/L.11), orally revised at suggestion of USSR; agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 41/203 of 11 December, the General Assembly accepted the topic for the 1987 Joint Meetings as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (see above), and urged ACC and CPC, in order to reinforce a useful and constructive dialogue between them, to continue to improve the Meetings.

Cross-organizational programme analyses

In 1986, ACC and CPC examined progress in the follow-up to the COPA of activities in human settlements (see p. 676). CCSQ(PROG) participated in preparing a report on the scope and general approach of a proposed COPA on science and technology for development, on which CPC took action (see p. 603); it was similarly involved in a proposed COPA of activities relating to the environment. The question of a COPA on the advancement of women was treated in a CPC letter to the President of the Economic and Social Council on the procedure and timing for the selection of topics for future analysis or review (see p. 787).

The main focus of examination during the year was a COPA of activities in economic and social research and policy analysis in the United Nations system, undertaken by the Secretariat at CPC's request.⁽¹⁶⁾ A summary of the findings, as contained in a report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁷⁾ showed that research on economic and social questions was carried out by a large number of organizations in response to a wide variety of mandates, that it focused more on sectoral than on global issues and that its role needed to be better defined.

The report made suggestions for improvement, among them that the central legislative bodies, in elaborating mandates, should make a distinction between issues requiring research and agenda items requiring only supporting documentation. Since existing mandates derived from recent resolutions and resolutions dating to the early days of the Organization, a review of the agenda of those bodies was desirable. The structure of programmes should be re-examined to improve the design, organization and monitoring of research activities. A closer relationship should be established between the system's autonomous research institutions and research units, and their work programmes should be related to a central agenda for research and research priorities.

Having examined the findings of the report, CPC made three series of recommendations. The first called for the Council to have before it, every other year, a summary of the main research findings in global economic and social trends and policies; and to invite its subsidiary bodies to examine ongoing research and emerging issues and to relate their draft resolutions to implementation of programmes in the United Nations medium-term plan. The second series, designed to improve the flow of information and research findings system-wide, called for the designation of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library as the central repository for research products, for the enhancement by ACC of co-operation in and co-ordination of research activities and for regular and systematic information exchange between the system's research units and secretariats. The third series, designed to make research in economic and social issues responsive to the needs of intergovernmental bodies, called for a clarification of research activity in relation to other United Nations activities as part of preparations for the programme budget for the 1988-1989 biennium and for the 1990-1995 medium-term plan, as well as for a better linkage between complementary and related activities.

Also in 1986, CPC took note of a report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁸⁾ on the results of past COPAs and expressed concern at the lack of effective follow-up to its conclusions and recommendations. While agreeing that these should be framed with greater specificity and clarity to facilitate their implementation and monitoring, CPC stressed that responsibility for ensuring effective follow-up rested primarily with the Secretary-General and the executive heads. It asked that its recommendations be systematically brought to the attention of the intergovernmental bodies and to the organizations, through ACC. The question of follow-up should be included regularly in ACC's work programme and made part of its annual report or reported on separately.

CPC expressed concern that requests for future analyses were increasingly being made outside its framework. It therefore recommended that the Economic and Social Council reaffirm CPC's clear responsibility for making the final recommendation on the topics and timing of future analyses. In general, the question of scope would be decided on a case-by-case basis. The report should contain a summary of the factual material on which an analysis was based, a critical assessment of the facts and precise and objective conclusions. It should incorporate any diverging views from the specialized agencies.

By section VI of resolution 1986/51, the Council endorsed the CPC conclusions and recommendations on the COPA of economic and social research and policy analysis. It stressed the need for research on current and emerging issues of international co-operation in the economic and social fields, the need to improve the quality of research activities and products, and the need for better complementarity between studies undertaken by organizations and the research activities of the United Nations University (UNU) and of the system's autonomous research institutes. It also decided to consider in 1987 the methodology, format and role of the existing analytical instruments for co-ordination, on the basis of CPC's recommendations.

Medium-term plans

In 1986, CCSQ(PROG) participated in the preparation of a proposed cross-organizational review (CORE) of medium-term plans of the United Nations system in science and technology (see p. 603), concerning which CPC took a decision at its April/May session (see p. 604).

In addition, CPC considered a report of the Secretary-General on a draft system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995 (see p. 795). The draft plan had been prepared by ACC for submission to the Economic and Social Council through CPC.

Economic and Social Council

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met twice in 1986: in New York on 1 May(¹) and at Geneva on 2 July.(²) At both meetings, it heard requests from NGOs with consultative status to address the Economic and Social Council or its committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. Three NGOs were recommended to be heard at the Council's April/May session and eight at its July session. The Council, which agreed to the requests on 5 May and 3 July, received statements from five NGOs(³) concerning specific areas of its work.

According to a note by the Secretary-General(⁴) the NGOs in consultative status with the Council numbered 762 as at 5 May 1986. (There were 758 listed as at 31 December 1985.(⁵)) They were divided into three groups: category I—organizations representative of major population segments in a large number of countries, involved with the economic and social life of the areas they represented; category II—international organizations having special competence in a few of the Council's areas of activity; and organizations on the Roster—considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the Council's work.

Intergovernmental organizations

Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation

In a May 1986 report(⁶) to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, the Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 Assembly request(⁷) provided up-to-date information on co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation.

The report stated that UNIDO had continued co-operation with the Agency in joint training programmes on development of small and medium-sized industries, management and quality control in small-scale enterprises, industrial research, industrial repair and maintenance, industrial information, project identification and industrial planning. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) had provided support to the Agency's affiliate institution, l'Ecole internationale de Bordeaux, in the organization of training courses and seminars in the French language for high-level officials of State trading organizations of developing countries. Co-operation with UNDP had been mainly in science and technology. The United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development had provided technical inputs for the Conference of Ministers of Research and Higher Education organized by the Agency.

The report identified as potential areas for further co-operation with the entities mentioned the recruitment of experts in industrial development, the entire UNCTAD work programme on technology, particularly the energy sector, and drinking-water supply and sanitation. New and renewable sources of energy and environmental protection, in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), were also identified. Exploratory talks were under way with other United Nations bodies and with the Secretariat on specific projects of interest to both organizations.

The report was taken note of by the Council on 23 July, by decision 1986/179, and by the Assembly on 8 December, by decision 41/453.

Organization of Ibero-American States for Education, Science and Culture

On 21 July 1986, the Economic and Social Council, having considered a draft decision(⁸) on the application of the Organization of Ibero-American States for Education, Science and Culture to participate in the Council's work, adopted without vote decision 1986/156 by which it decided, in accordance with rule 79^a of its rules of procedure, that the organization might participate, on a continuing basis, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of the organization's activities.

^a Rule 79 of the Council's rules of procedure states: "Representatives of intergovernmental organizations accorded permanent observer status by the General Assembly and of other intergovernmental organizations designated on an ad hoc or a continuing basis by the Council on the recommendation of the Bureau, may participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of the activities of the organizations."

Other organizational matters

Work programme for 1986-1987

At its 1986 organizational session, held in New York from 4 to 7 February, the Economic and Social Council considered its draft basic programme of work for 1986-1987 as submitted by the Secretary-General,⁽⁹⁾ draft decisions on the agenda for its first and second regular 1986 sessions and on other items proposed by its President on behalf of the Bureau,⁽¹⁰⁾ as well as reports for inclusion in its work programme.

On 7 February, the Council adopted decision 1986/110 without vote. Before its adoption, the 1986 work programme was revised to include four subparagraphs by which the Council decided: to consider at its first regular session the possibility of identifying an issue or issues on its agenda for in-depth consideration at the first regular 1987 session; to defer until its first regular 1986 session the selection of a topic or topics for priority consideration at its second regular session; that the Secretary-General's report on the critical economic situation in Africa should be considered by the General Assembly at its special session in May; and that the JIU report entitled "Some reflections on reform of the United Nations" and the comments on it should be considered at the second regular session under the item on international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system.⁽¹¹⁾

By other provisions of section I of the decision, the Council approved the basic programme of work and provisional agenda for its 1986 first and second regular sessions, and allocated items to its sessional committees and plenary meetings. It decided to undertake an in-depth review of the reports of the Commission on Human Settlements and the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development; to review the reports of the World Food Council, the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and the UNU Council, but not to consider draft proposals thereon, except specific recommendations requiring action; and not to consider the part of the report of the UNDP Governing Council on the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, except for recommendations requiring action.

The Council further decided to consider under the item "Regional co-operation" the question of the joint programme of the regional commissions to promote interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, with emphasis on the operational aspects, and to invite the executive secretaries to recommend other items of common interest to all regions. It requested the Secretary-General to draw attention, in his reports to the Assembly through the Council, to matters requiring Council action. It decided to consider the question of science and technology for development as its topic for the CORE of the medium-term plans of the United Nations system to be considered at its second regular 1987 session. It asked its subsidiary bodies, in drawing up their work programmes, to adhere to the biennial work programme of the Second Committee of the Assembly and that of the Council, and to act, as required, on the 1985 Assembly resolutions and decisions.

By section II of the decision, the Council took note of a list of questions for inclusion in its 1987 work programme.

The Council held its first regular session in New York from 29 April to 23 May and its second regular session at Geneva from 2 to 23 July. The Second (Social) Committee and the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights met during the first session; the First (Economic) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees met during the second session.

Agenda of 1986 sessions

On 4 February 1986, the Economic and Social Council adopted a five-item agenda for its organizational session, having considered background information on each item,⁽¹²⁾ and included for consideration two questions, concerning a reconvened special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations⁽¹³⁾ and a draft annex to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies relating to UNIDO (see p. 893).

At the opening of its first regular session on 29 April, the Council adopted the agenda for that session—listing the same 15 items approved on 7 February by decision 1986/110—as annotated,⁽¹⁴⁾ with two additional questions relating to the sessions of the Commission on Transnational Corporations⁽¹⁵⁾ and to the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia.⁽¹⁶⁾ It also approved the organization of its work,⁽¹⁷⁾ as orally revised.

On 21 May, the Council decided that, at the second regular session, the question of "the inter-related issues of money, finance, resource flows, debt, trade, raw materials and development" should be discussed as a priority under the item on international economic and social policy; and to give special focus, under the item on operational activities for development, to the comprehensive policy review of such activities (decision 1986/121). On the same date, it also decided to consider at its first regular 1987 session the possibility of identifying an issue or issues included in its agenda for in-depth consideration at that session (decision 1986/122).

By decision 1986/151 of 23 May, the Council approved the draft provisional agenda for its second regular session⁽¹⁸⁾ as orally revised, together with the proposed organization of work, in the light of clarifications made by the Secretary and the President of the Council. By decision 1986/152 of 2 and 4 July, the Council adopted the agenda of its second regular session, based on an annotated provisional agenda.⁽¹⁹⁾ By the same decision, the Council decided to transmit the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the 1986 Assembly and to consider, under the agenda item on international co-operation and co-ordination, the question of a proclamation of a world decade for cultural development, on the understanding that the Council would simply transmit the draft plan of action to the Assembly. (For the agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

Calendar of meetings

In 1986, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1986/101 of 7 February, waived, on an exceptional basis, rule 2^b of its rules of procedure in order to reschedule its first regular 1986 session from 29 April to 23 May instead of from 6 to 30 May. The Council also changed the venue of the meetings of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to Geneva (decision 1986/102), set the schedule of that Committee's first session (decision 1986/123) and decided to reconvene the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations (decision 1986/109).

As a result of a General Assembly decision to convene the seventh session of UNCTAD at Geneva from 9 to 31 July 1987, changes were made to the dates of the Council's second regular 1987 session and to the 1987 session of the UNDP Governing Council (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1986, the General Assembly, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 41/188.

Sessions of the Economic and Social Council and of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme in 1987

The General Assembly,

Having decided to convene the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Geneva from 9 to 31 July 1987,

Recognizing the resulting need for appropriate adjustments in the dates and programmes of work of other principal and/or subsidiary bodies of the United Nations,

1. Requests the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1987, to suspend, on an exceptional basis, rule 2 of its rules of procedure to enable its second regular session of 1987 to be held from 23 June to 9 July at Geneva, and to convene a resumed second regular session, not exceeding three days, in September in New York;

2. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, at its organizational session, to reschedule its annual session for 1987, which should be held from 26 May to 19 June in New York, and the session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, which should be held between 18 and 22 May 1987.

General Assembly resolution 41/188

8 December 1986 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/41/930Add.2) without vote, 28 November (meeting 36); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C2/41/L.72), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 2nd Committee 25, 27, 28, 33-36; plenary 100.

Limitation of documentation

In April 1986⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretariat reported on the state of preparedness of documentation for the first regular session of the Economic and Social Council, and in May⁽²¹⁾ for its second regular session. The reports were submitted pursuant to 1979 Council resolutions⁽²²⁾ on the limitation of documentation and its circulation in all working languages six weeks in advance of Council sessions and those of its subsidiary bodies.

The reports noted that, to allow adequate time for policy and other clearances and editing, documents for the first session should have been submitted by 11 February and circulated by 18 March, and, for the second, submitted by 16 April and circulated by 21 May. A table on the status of documentation, annexed to each report, showed the documents that failed to make the circulation dates; explanations for the delay were to be provided by the responsible offices.

Financial implications of resolutions and decisions

In July, the Secretary-General submitted a summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1986.⁽²³⁾ The estimated costs for 1986-1987, excluding conference-servicing costs, totalled $1,445,300. This figure was subject to change in the light of a review by the Assembly to determine how much of the costs might be absorbed within appropriations.

By decision 1986/184 of 23 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

As later approved by the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, a net addition of ^bRule 2 of the Council's rules of procedure states: "Subject to rule 3 (governing requests to alter the date of a regular session), the organizational session shall be convened on the first Tuesday in February, the first regular session on the first Tuesday in May and the second regular session on the first Wednesday in July. The second regular session shall be adjourned at least six weeks before the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly."

$581,100 was made to the 1986-1987 budget to cover several 1986 Council actions having financial implications. This amount was approved by the Fifth Committee on 13 November 1986 by a recorded vote of 93 to 1, with 12 abstentions, based on a recommendation of ACABQ⁽²⁴⁾. In examining the Secretary-General's report revising his initial submission for the budget as a whole⁽²⁵⁾ ACABQ had recommended that the total amount of $752,400 requested by the Secretary-General be reduced by $171,300.

Additional requirements that might be necessary for 1986 would be sought by the Secretary-General in the context of the final performance report for the 1986-1987 biennium, under a 1985 Assembly resolution⁽²⁶⁾. Conference-servicing costs were dealt with separately (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Report for 1986

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session and two regular sessions in 1986 was summarized in its annual report to the General Assembly⁽²⁷⁾. Parts of the report were considered by the plenary Assembly, others by the Second, Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural), Fourth and Fifth Committees.

In December, the Assembly adopted without vote three decisions by which it took note of the chapters of the report as follows: on 8 December, chapters I, II, III (sections D to F, H and I), IV, VI, VIII and IX, following consideration of part I of the Second Committee's report⁽²⁸⁾ (decision 41/449); on 11 December, chapters I, IV (sections A to C), V (sections A, C and E), VI (sections B and C) and VII to IX, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee⁽²⁹⁾ (decision 41/461); and, on the same date, chapters I, II, V (section C), VI (section D), VIII and IX (decision 41/465), considered in plenary meetings.

Other institutional arrangements

Report of the Group of 18. The Group of 18, in its report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ observed that the magnitude and complexity of the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations, particularly in the economic and social sectors, was such that recommendations for fundamental structural reforms required a comprehensive review of the current situation. It thus recommended that an intergovernmental body, designated by the Assembly, undertake a study of the intergovernmental structure as a matter of priority, and present its findings and recommendations to the Assembly not later than at its 1988 session (recommendation 8).

The study should include a comparative analysis of agendas, calendars and work programmes of the Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council and related subsidiary bodies, in particular UNCHS, UNCTAD, UNDP, UNFPA, UNHCR, UNICEF, UNEP and WFC, together with their support structures.

The study should identify measures to rationalize and simplify the intergovernmental structure by consolidating activities and merging existing bodies where there was duplication or overlapping; develop criteria for the establishment and duration of subsidiary bodies and define their areas of responsibility in precise terms; improve the reporting system so as to reduce the number of reports and eliminate duplication of documentation; and strengthen, on a continuous basis, co-ordination of activities in the economic and social sectors under the Secretary-General's leadership. The study should also consider the establishment of a single governing body to manage and control, at the intergovernmental level, United Nations operational activities for development.

Pending such a study, the Group recommended a number of changes for implementation without delay, among them the streamlining of the procedures and methods of work of the Assembly and its subsidiary organs, particularly its Main Committees (recommendation 3). In this connection, emphasis should be placed on: rationalizing the agenda by grouping or merging related items and by inscribing certain items at an interval of two years or more; allocating agenda items so as to ensure the best possible use of Committee expertise and resources; reducing the number of resolutions and requests for reports in resolutions; and utilizing meeting services fully. The Group suggested that the meetings of the Fourth Committee and the Special Political Committee could be held in sequential order and that, as a rule, the Assembly should not create new subsidiary organs without discontinuing existing ones.

With respect to United Nations activities in the economic and social sectors, the Group identified problems of duplication, of communication and co-ordination created by the multiplicity and dispersion of offices functioning in those sectors, and of insufficient responsiveness to changing regional and global realities on the part of offices responsible for research, analysis and operational activities.

The Group pointed to several avenues for solutions, including a review—in which GATT should participate—of the tasks performed by the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), UNCTAD, UNDP, UNEP, UNHCR, UNCHS, UNICEF and WFP; an evaluation of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development (CSTD) and of its possible integration with DIESA and DTCD; enhancement of the co-ordinative authority of the DIEC Director-General; and the possible establishment at a single location of all offices dealing with economic and social matters (recommendations 25 and 26).

Other recommendations called for the possible reassignment of the technical servicing functions of the Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters to the Department of Conference Services and of its substantive and co-ordinative functions to DIESA (recommendation 29); for an examination of the structures and activities of the regional commissions with a view to furthering multilateral, subregional and inter-regional co-operation (recommendation 27); for the rationalization of the work of offices administering emergency, humanitarian and special economic assistance programmes to minimize duplication (recommendation 23); and for UNDP to consider taking over the functions of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) (recommendation 24).

The Group recommended that CPC, with the assistance of JIU and other bodies, co-ordinate and monitor implementation of the recommendations relating to the intergovernmental machinery and its functioning, and report to the Assembly in 1987 (recommendation 70).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Fifth Committee, in its report⁽²⁾ on the Group's recommendations, made the following comments. It stated that the sequential order of the Fourth Committee and the Special Political Committee referred to in recommendation 3 should be during each General Assembly session, and the number of meetings accorded to each should be in conformity with its work programme. The provision referring to new subsidiary organs should be governed by Article 22 of the Charter of the United Nations, but the decision to create a new subsidiary organ should be taken only after it was determined that a task could not be performed by an existing one with a similar mandate. The Fifth Committee reiterated the right of Member States to present resolutions they deemed necessary.

The study called for in recommendation 8 could be undertaken by the Economic and Social Council or CPC, and the views and co-operation of the intergovernmental organs concerned with United Nations operational activities for development should be sought. Recommendations 9 to 13 should be viewed in the light of the Group's observation that, since it was asked to consider only administrative and financial matters, the relationship between the Organization, including its subsidiary bodies and the specialized agencies, as well as system-wide co-ordination and co-operation, fell outside its mandate. In addition, recommendation 9 should be addressed to the relevant Charter organs.

The Committee was unable to find a clear indication in recommendation 10 as to whether the intent was to establish a new co-ordinating body in addition to, or instead of, ACC. It noted, however, that the discussion proposed was already being undertaken at the ACC regular biannual sessions and that ACC believed the recommendation's objective could be further achieved by recourse to subject-oriented sessions and functional groups, instead of to the new mechanism as proposed.

In addition to noting the differences in the nature and functions of UNDRO and UNDP, the Committee suggested that the Secretary-General should participate in the consideration referred to in recommendation 24. As to recommendation 25, the Committee stated that GATT would be the only organization external to the United Nations to be invited to participate in an internal review; that the latest evaluation of the activities of CSTD be taken into account should its possible integration into DIESA and DTCD be considered; that, as the functions of the DIEC Director-General were specified in Assembly and Council resolutions, it was the Secretary-General's opinion that no further legislative authority was required; and that, should consideration be envisaged on the matter of establishing all entities dealing with economic and social matters at a single location, it should be made in observance of relevant Assembly resolutions.

The Committee noted that the suitability of the activities of the regional commissions was a matter to be determined primarily by the Member States concerned and that the commissions should be consulted on any action with regard to recommendation 27. As to recommendation 29, the Committee recalled that the Assembly at its 1984 session had noted a JIU report commenting favourably on the Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters.

On 19 December 1986, the Assembly, by section I of resolution 41/213, decided that the recommendations as agreed upon and as contained in the report of the Group of 18 should be implemented by the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations organs and bodies in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee and subject to the following: the study called for in recommendation 8 should be carried out by the Economic and Social Council, assisted as required by relevant organs and bodies, in particular CPC; CPC should evaluate the implementation of the recommendations relating to the intergovernmental machinery, as indicated in recommendation 70; and, in the implementation of recommendation 24, the provisions of Assembly resolution 41/201 should be duly taken into account.

Work programme of the Second Committee of the General Assembly

In 1986, a draft biennial work programme for 1987-1988 for the General Assembly's Second Committee⁽³⁾ was before that Committee for consideration and approval. It was submitted in accordance with practice established by the Assembly in 1984⁽⁴⁾ to improve complementarity between the work of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee,⁽⁵⁾ the General Assembly adopted decision 41/458 on 8 December 1986, by which it approved the Committee's biennial programme of work for 1987-1988, annexed to the decision.

Before adoption of the decision, the Secretary of the Committee had orally corrected and revised the draft programme of work. The revisions included the deletion from the 1987 programme of a sub-item on long-term trends in economic development and the addition of an item on the external debt crisis and development.

UNIDO

An arrangement that remained to be completed in connection with the conversion of UNIDO to a specialized agency in 1985⁽⁶⁾ was the transmittal to it of a draft annex to the 1947 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies,⁽⁷⁾ by which the Convention's standard clauses would be modified as appropriate for UNIDO. The draft annex was to be recommended by the Economic and Social Council, as called for by section 35 of the Convention in respect of each newly established specialized agency. Accordingly, the Secretary-General submitted the required draft annex⁽⁸⁾ to the Council for its consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1986/112 of 7 February 1986, the Council deferred consideration of the draft annex until its April/May session. On 23 May, the Council, by decision 1986/131, amended the draft annex to delete a paragraph relating to section 32 (on differences arising out of the interpretation of the Convention's application) of the standard clauses.

On 23 July, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1986/70.

Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies: draft annex relating to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 179(II) of 21 November 1947, by which the Assembly approved the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and submitted it to the specialized agencies for acceptance and to every Member of the United Nations and every other State member of one or more of the specialized agencies for accession,

Noting that the General Assembly considered it desirable that any specialized agency thereafter brought into relationship with the United Nations should derive its privileges and immunities exclusively from that Convention,

Noting that the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency, provides in paragraph 2 (a) of article 21 that in the territory of any member of that organization that has acceded to the Convention in respect of the organization, the legal capacity, privileges and immunities provided for in that Constitution shall be as defined in the standard clauses of the Convention as modified by an annex thereto approved by the Industrial Development Board,

Noting that section 35 of the Convention provides that the Secretary-General shall transmit to any specialized agency not mentioned by name in the Convention a draft annex recommended by the Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account the draft annex to the Convention recommended by the Industrial Development Board for consideration by the Council,

Recommends to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization the following draft annex:

"ANNEX

"United Nations Industrial Development Organization"

"In their application to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (hereinafter called "the Organization") the standard clauses shall operate subject to the following modifications:

"1. (a) Experts (other than officials coming within the scope of article VI) serving on committees of, or performing missions for, the Organization shall be accorded the following privileges and immunities so far as is necessary for the effective exercise of their functions, including the time on journeys in connection with service on such committees or missions:

- "(i) Immunity from personal arrest or detention and from seizure of their personal baggage;
 - "(ii) In respect of words spoken or written or acts done by them in the performance of their official functions, immunity from legal process of every kind, such immunity to continue notwithstanding that the person concerned is no longer serving on committees of, or employed on mission for, the Organization;
 - "(iii) The same facilities in respect of currency and exchange restrictions and in respect of their personal baggage as are accorded to officials of foreign Governments on temporary official missions;
 - "(iv) Inviolability for all papers and documents relating to the work in which they are engaged for the Organization;
 - "(v) For their official communications, the right to use codes and to receive documents and correspondence by courier or in sealed bags.
- "(b) In connection with subparagraphs (iv) and (v) of paragraph 1 (a) above, the principle contained in the last sentence of section 12 of the standard clauses shall be applicable.

"(c) Privileges and immunities are granted to experts of the Organization in the interests of the Organization and not for the personal benefit of the individuals themselves. The Organization shall have the right and duty to waive the immunity of any expert in any case where in its opinion the immunity would impede the course of justice, and it can be waived without prejudice to the interests of the Organization.

"2. The privileges, immunities, exemptions and facilities referred to in section 21 of the standard clauses shall also be accorded to any Deputy Director-General of the Organization."

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/70

23 July 1986

Meeting 38

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/126Add.1) without vote, 17 July (meeting 16); draft contained in note by Secretary-General (E/1986/45), as amended; agenda item 20.

Before the Council adopted the draft annex, its Third Committee had further amended the text by adding the words "relating to the work in which they are engaged for the Organization" to subparagraph 1 (a) (iv).

Industrial financing

In 1986, the General Assembly had before it a draft resolution on mobilization of financial resources for industrial development⁽¹⁾ which had been brought forward from 1985. (10) Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly, on 5 December 1986, adopted decision 41/443, by which it transmitted the draft to UNIDO.

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

General questions relating to colonial countries

In 1986, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) continued to consider the implementation by international organizations of the Assembly's 1960 Declaration as well as foreign economic and military interests impeding its implementation.

In addition to the general question of decolonization, the Committee examined situations in the following individual Territories: Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see next chapter); Namibia (see Chapter III of this section); American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, East Timor, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, Turks and Caicos Islands, United States Virgin Islands, Western Sahara (see Chapter IV of this section). The questions of Puerto Rico and New Caledonia were also considered.

In July, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed the need for assistance by the United Nations system to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements (resolution 1986/48).

The General Assembly, acting on recommendations by the Committee on colonial countries, called on all States to terminate any investment in Namibia or loans to South Africa (41/14), requested the United Nations system to withhold from South Africa any form of co-operation and assistance (41/15), and condemned all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration that were detrimental to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned (decision 41/405). The Assembly also requested the Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration (resolution 41/41 B) and to consider the question of New Caledonia at its 1987 session (41/41 A), and called for wider dissemination of information on decolonization (41/42). In addition, the Assembly requested the administering Powers of Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs) to transmit information as prescribed in the United Nations Charter, as well as information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned (41/13). States were again invited to make offers of study and training facilities to inhabitants of those Territories (41/28).

In his 1986 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General observed that when the United Nations was founded, the majority of the world's population was under colonial rule. The Organization had done much to facilitate the decolonization process and to assist the newly independent countries to assume control of their affairs and to begin the demanding tasks of social and economic development. Through the Trusteeship Council, the United Nations had, additionally, presided over the self-determination of 10 Trust Territories. The Secretary-General expressed hope that it would be possible for the eleventh and last to emerge soon from trusteeship.

The 1960 Declaration on colonial countries

The right of peoples to self-determination was reaffirmed in a number of communications in 1986. Among them, the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, meeting at the ministerial level (New Delhi, India, 16-19 April)⁽¹⁾ as well as the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September)⁽²⁾ termed as colonial the situations in Namibia, New Caledonia, Puerto Rico, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Micronesia and other NSGTs, and called for immediate implementation in those cases of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽³⁾ and other United Nations resolutions. The Ministers urged colonial Powers to cease exploitation of those Territories, and urged all States to intensify their support for national liberation movements struggling for self-determination and independence.

Committee on colonial countries

In 1986, the Committee on colonial countries considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration.⁽³⁾ The Committee held two sessions at United Nations Headquarters—on 18 March, and from 4 to 15 August and on 10 September.⁽⁴⁾

Its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance held 19 meetings as well as a number of informal meetings between 19 March and 20 June; the Sub-Committee on Small Territories held 20 meetings and additional informal meetings between 25 March and 5 June. On the basis of their recommendations, the Committee took action on implementation of the Declaration by international organizations, on dissemination of information on decolonization and on reports on the Territories supplied by their administering Powers and by visiting missions of the Committee (see Chapter IV of this section).

On 15 September 1986, by decision 40/326, the Assembly deferred action to fill a vacancy in the Committee created by the withdrawal of Australia in January 1985.⁽⁵⁾

Implementation of the Declaration

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on implementation of the 1960 Declaration, the General Assembly, on 2 December 1986, adopted resolution 41/41 B by recorded vote. (See also Chapter III of this section, on Namibia.)

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 40/57 of 2 December 1985, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolution S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 on the question of Namibia and taking into account the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, as well as the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted by the Conference,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of Africans, particularly in Namibia, by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory, and its intransigent attitude towards all efforts being made to bring about an internationally acceptable solution to the situation obtaining in the Territory,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly in respect of Namibia where desperate attempts by South Africa to perpetuate its illegal occupation have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the people,

Strongly condemning the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, have continued to collaborate with the Government of South Africa in its domination of the people of Namibia,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration, particularly in Namibia, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the illegal occupying régime therefrom,

Conscious that the success of the national liberation struggle and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Expressing its regret at the decision of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland not to take part in the related work of the Special Committee and noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of the United Kingdom has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under the administration of the United Kingdom,

Keenly aware of the pressing need of the newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, those activities of foreign economic and other interests contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the violations of the right to self-determination and basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories and continuous policies and practices to suppress legitimate national liberation movements—is incompatible with the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1986, including the programme of work envisaged for 1987;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system within their respective spheres of competence, to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

8. Strongly condemns all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon the States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

9. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa until the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence within a united and integrated Namibia, including Walvis Bay, has been restored, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories, to refrain from establishing new ones and not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia and, in respect of the other Territories, requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to pose a threat to international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of visiting missions to those Territories whenever the Special Committee deems it appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in decolonization, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerns the oppressed people of Namibia;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants and, in particular, urges the Government of the United Kingdom to resume its participation in the work of the Special Committee at its 1987 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide or continue to provide to the newly independent and emerging States all possible assistance in the economic, social and other fields;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Portugal.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom deplored the criticism voiced against its decision to cease participation in the Committee in the belief that the colonial era, as far as the remaining British dependencies were concerned, was over. The United Kingdom would continue to transmit information on the Territories to the Secretary-General, as required under Article 73 e of the Charter; it rejected the assertion in the text's penultimate preambular paragraph that its non-participation had a "negative impact" on the Committee's work. Oman also disagreed with that paragraph, adding that it was a sovereign right of any Member State to make such a decision.

Portugal could not accept the selective and discriminatory references to a United Nations Member State, particularly when certain countries not mentioned in the text were preventing others from fulfilling their obligations under the Charter. Norway, speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, also expressed reservations with respect to the text's reference to the United Kingdom, in view of the fact that the latter had clearly stated that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities under Article 73 e of the Charter. In addition, the Nordic countries had reservations on paragraphs 4 and 10. Austria stated that it understood paragraph 4 to refer exclusively to struggle by peaceful means. Turkey found paragraph 10 lacking in balance. The Netherlands had reservations on what it saw as unbalanced formulations and implications in paragraphs 2, 4, 7, 8 and 10; on unwarranted criticism of a Member State in the penultimate preambular paragraph and in paragraph 13; and on the fourth preambular paragraph containing a reference to resolution S-14/1 on Namibia, on which it had abstained.

Implementation by international organizations

Report of the Secretary-General. By a June report with a later addendum,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly summaries of information submitted by 14 specialized agencies and institutions associated with the United Nations, in response to several 1985 Assembly requests—on action taken in implementation of the Declaration⁽⁷⁾ and on action taken or envisaged with regard to Namibia.⁽⁸⁾

Those providing information were the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Maritime Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Food Programme. The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) also responded.

Report of the President of the Economic and Social Council. In a June report,⁽⁹⁾ the Council President reviewed his continuing consultations with the Acting Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries concerning implementation of the Declaration by the United Nations system. They noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report,⁽⁶⁾ an increasing number of organizations had extended or formulated programmes of assistance from within their own budgetary resources, in addition to intensifying their collaboration with UNDP as an executing agency. They considered it imperative, however, that efforts be intensified to provide moral and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of Namibia and South Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted by roll-call vote resolution 1986/48, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Having heard the statements of the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, including in particular General Assembly resolution 40/53 of 2 December 1985 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/59 of 26 July 1985,

Deeply concerned that the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration have not been fully achieved as regards the peoples under colonial and alien domination, particularly those struggling in Namibia and South Africa under the repressive rule of the racist régime of Pretoria,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to assist in the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Noting with deep concern that South Africa continues to present a serious threat to international peace and security owing to its practice of apartheid, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its acts of aggression and destabilization against the front-line and neighbouring States,

Strongly condemning the continuing breach by South Africa of the obligations assumed by it under the Charter of the United Nations and its persistent non-compliance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the denial of full political and civil rights to the majority of the population of South Africa is the result of the continuation of a colonial situation in that country,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from the illegal occupation of their country by the racist minority regime of South Africa,

Appreciating that progress has been maintained through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the extension of assistance to refugees from southern Africa,

Deeply concerned that the action taken thus far by the organizations concerned in the provision of assistance to the people of Namibia is still far from adequate to meet their urgent and growing needs,

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements concerned, and commending the initiative taken by that organization in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Taking into account the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, held in Paris from 16 to 20 June 1986,

Bearing in mind that the year 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the termination by the General Assembly of the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the World Bank, the International Finance Corporation and the International Monetary Fund, to contribute to the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render increased assistance to the people of Namibia, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Council for Namibia, in particular in connection with the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in view of the deteriorating situation in South Africa and the acts of aggression and destabilization by the apartheid régime against States in the region, to increase their assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States and to the liberation movements in South Africa;

6. Also requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to take, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa until that Government restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

7. Further requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as will totally isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid;

8. Condemns the persistent non-compliance of the Government of South Africa with United Nations resolutions and decisions, in particular Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 containing the United Nations plans for the independence of Namibia, and declares illegal and null and void its installation on 17 June 1985 of a so-called interim Government at Windhoek;

9. Deeply deplores the persistent collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration;

10. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures for co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

11. Notes with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the membership of various organizations within the United Nations system and urges those which have not yet granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

12. Notes with satisfaction also the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to make such arrangements without delay, including arrangements to defray the cost of the participation of those representatives;

13. Recommends that all States should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

14. Urges those specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made and action to be taken by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

15. Also urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions;

16. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussions on the subject at the second regular session of 1986 of the Economic and Social Council;

17. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue consultations on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and to report thereon to the Council;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1987;

19. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/48

22 July 1986 Meeting 38 38-1-9 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/120) by roll-call vote (38-1-9), 10 July (meeting 10); 14-nation draft (E/1986/C.3/L.2); agenda item 22.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, China, Djibouti, Egypt, Indonesia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Yugoslavia.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Spain, United Kingdom.

The Council adopted the sixth preambular paragraph by 36 in favour to 2 against, with 7 abstentions; the twelfth preambular paragraph by 33 to 1, with 11 abstentions; and paragraph 9 by 33 to 2, with 11 abstentions. The Third Committee had approved the sixth and twelfth preambular paragraphs, respectively, by 38 to 2, with 6 abstentions, and 35 to 1, with 12 abstentions; and paragraph 9 by 35 to 2, with 11 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, the United States felt that adopting a punitive approach which harmed the innocent and the guilty alike only reduced the United Nations influence in the region; it believed that the South African economy and economies of the region were progressive anti-apartheid forces to be encouraged, not destroyed. Further, it expressed reservations on the references to IMF, noting that the Fund was barred by its own charter from engaging in discussion of, or action based on, a member's political system. Similarly, Australia and Canada asserted that references to IMF did little to advance the possibility of consensus or the usefulness of the resolution. In addition, Italy, on behalf of the six Western European countries members of the Council, expressed reservations on the twelfth preambular paragraph, and asserted that they did not consider the situation in South Africa to be a decolonization problem.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries continued in August 1986⁽⁴⁾ to consider the role of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies in implementing the 1960 Declaration. It endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance which, among other things, took note of information from the World Bank that it had made no loans to South Africa since 1966 and that all links with regard to previous loans had ended.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 41/15, which had been drafted by the Committee on colonial countries and recommended by the Fourth Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, and its resolution 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as all other relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly on this subject, including in particular resolution 40/53 of 2 December 1985,

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981 and 40/97 of 13 December 1985 on the question of Namibia,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia and the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Final Political Declaration and the Final Economic Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of the Non-Aligned Countries held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, the final documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 16 to 19 April 1986, and the resolution on the question of Namibia adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 25 February to 4 March 1986,

Aware that the struggle of the people of Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its crucial stage and has sharply intensified as a consequence of the stepped-up aggression of the illegal colonialist regime of Pretoria against the people of the Territory and the increased support rendered to that regime by its allies, coupled with efforts to deprive the Namibian people of their hard-won victories in the liberation struggle, and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community decisively to intensify concerted action in support of the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization, for the attainment of their goal,

Concerned that the policy of "constructive engagement" with the apartheid regime of South Africa, as well as economic and military collaboration maintained by some Western countries and Israel with Pretoria, has only encouraged and strengthened the racist regime in its continued illegal occupation and massive militarization and exploitation of Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the continued imperialist and neo-colonialist support for South Africa's oppressive and aggressive policies in Namibia and with respect to independent States in southern Africa, in particular the front-line States, as exemplified by the discussions and resolutions of the Security Council,

Conscious of the worsening of the situation in southern Africa because of South Africa's racist policies of oppression, aggression and occupation, which constitute a clear threat to world peace and security, and condemning the continuing breach by South Africa of the obligations assumed by it under the Charter of the United Nations and its persistent non-compliance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and the peoples of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence,

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the people of the Territory through their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, still remain inadequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of the Namibian people,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Expressing its firm belief that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system on the one hand and the Organization of African Unity and the South West Africa People's Organization on the other will help these agencies and organizations to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Recalling its resolution 40/97 C of 13 December 1985 requesting all specialized agencies and other organizations and conferences of the United Nations system to grant full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance it has extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connection with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation also to the Governments of the front-line States for the steadfast support extended to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in their just and legitimate struggle for the attainment of freedom and independence despite increased armed attacks by the forces of the racist regime of South Africa, and aware of the particular needs of those Governments for assistance in that connection,

Commending the continued substantial contribution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the effective support it provides to the liberation movements in educating the populations of colonial Territories concerning self-determination and independence,

Noting the support given by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977,

Deploping the continued links with and assistance rendered to South Africa by certain specialized agencies in the financial, economic, technical and other fields in contravention of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, thus enhancing neo-colonialist practices in the system of international relations,

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and the Government of South Africa in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular resolution 37/2 of 21 October 1982,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance that is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the termination of the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia by the General Assembly,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question;

2. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute, within their sphere of competence, to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold from the racist regime of South Africa any form of co-operation and assistance in the financial, economic, technical and other fields and to discontinue all support to that regime until the people of Namibia have exercised fully their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia and until the inhuman system of apartheid has been totally eradicated;

7. Reiterates its conviction that the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the Territory of Namibia by the racist regime of South Africa;

8. Regrets that the World Bank continues to maintain certain financial and technical links with the racist régime of Pretoria and expresses the view that those links should be discontinued;

9. Strongly deplores that the International Monetary Fund has been assisting the racist régime of South Africa and expresses the view that the Fund should put an end to such assistance;

10. Strongly condemns the collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and South Africa in disregard of repeated resolutions to the contrary by the General Assembly, and calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration, as the Assembly is strongly convinced that the apartheid system implies a serious instability in the South African economy, including its balance of payments, and thus that the International Monetary Fund, according to its rules, should not, as long as apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa continue to exist, extend any credits to South Africa;

11. Urges once again the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

12. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples struggling for liberation from colonial rule, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

13. Requests once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States so as to enable them to achieve genuine economic independence;

14. Reiterates its recommendation that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements directly or, where appropriate, through the Organization of African Unity, and review and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

15. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings between the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures of co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

16. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

17. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the Governments of the front-line States in order to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity by the armed forces of the racist régime of South Africa directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet groups in the service of Pretoria;

18. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and organizations that have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

19. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to assist in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of colonial Territories, particularly in the development of their economies;

20. Draws the particular attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to Security Council resolution 566(1985) of 19 June 1985, in which the Council condemned the racist régime of South Africa for its installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia and declared that action to be illegal and null and void;

21. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

22. Reiterates its proposal, under article III of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund, for the urgent inclusion in the agenda of the Board of Governors of the Fund of an item dealing with the relationship between the Fund and South Africa, further reiterates its proposal that, in pursuance of article II of the Agreement, the relevant organs of the United Nations should participate in any meeting of the Board of Governors called by the Fund for the purpose of discussing the item, and urges the Fund to discuss its relationship with South Africa at its annual meeting, in compliance with the above-mentioned Agreement, and to report to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the action taken;

23. Draws the attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/118, in particular to those provisions calling upon the agencies and organizations to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and to their national liberation movements;

24. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the provisions of paragraphs 14 and 23 above, to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity where appropriate, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

26. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

27. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on their implementation of the present resolution;

28. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 41/15

31 October 1986 Meeting 52 123-4-27 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/41/747) by recorded vote (122-4-23), 22 October (meeting 18); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/41/23); agenda items 12 & 106.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 4th Committee 9, 11-18; plenary 52.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Malawi, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

In the Fourth Committee, an oral amendment by Israel to delete the words "and Israel" from the eighth preambular paragraph was rejected by a recorded vote of 72 to 49, with 24 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, objections to the arbitrary or selective condemnation of certain countries were voiced by Cameroon, Canada, Colombia, Denmark (speaking for the five Nordic countries), Fiji, France, Greece, Guatemala, Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Zaire. Voting against the amendment, Oman and the Syrian Arab Republic asserted that Israel's collaboration with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields was well known.

Serious reservations or objections were expressed by Canada, Italy, New Zealand and the United Kingdom on the draft's disregard of the autonomy of the specialized agencies. Ireland objected to the criticism of IMF and the World Bank, as did France and Japan, which stressed that the principle of the universality of the specialized agencies should be respected. Asserting that those institutions should not be politicized, the Netherlands found counter-productive the text's superfluous material and incoherent and repetitious structure. Denmark, for the Nordic countries, expressed reservations on the text's sweeping or inaccurate statements. The United Kingdom felt that the text focused on highly political matters, on South Africa and Namibia, and made no reference to other dependent Territories.

Lesotho abstained in the Committee vote because of its objection to the selective condemnation of certain countries, but voted in favour in the plenary.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

The Committee on colonial countries and the General Assembly reaffirmed in 1986 their concern that the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, obstructed the political independence of the indigenous populations.

The Committee drafted a resolution on the activities of foreign interests which it recommended for adoption by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/14 by recorded vote.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Taking into consideration the relevant chapter of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, and 40/56 of 2 December 1985 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity that impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories is in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular in Namibia, in association with the occupying régime of South Africa, constitute a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Economic Declaration and other documents of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, of the Final Document of the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia, held at New Delhi from 19 to 21 April 1985, and of the Final Political Declaration and the Final Economic Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the documents adopted by the Second International Conference on Namibia, held at Brussels from 5 to 7 May 1986, the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, held in Paris from 16 to 20 June 1986, and the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, held at Vienna from 7 to 11 July 1986,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the subject and that they have failed to implement, in particular, the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 40/52 of 2 December 1985, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those Governments that had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests that continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in the case of Namibia, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support that the racist minority régime of South Africa continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests that are collaborating with the régime in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of the international Territory of Namibia, in the further entrenchment of its illegal racist domination over the Territory and in the strengthening of its system of apartheid,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western and other countries with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field, which, by providing that régime with nuclear equipment and technology, enable it to develop nuclear and military capabilities and to become a nuclear Power, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable and incontestable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources, particularly the uranium deposits, as a result of their plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the Charter, of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27

September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, are considered to be illegal, that they contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime and that they are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia,

Recalling its endorsement of the decision by the United Nations Council for Namibia that, in the exercise of the Council's rights under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the Council would proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia, the outer limit of which shall be 200 miles, and recalling also its statement that any action for the implementation of the Council's decision should be taken in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia,

Recalling its approval of the decision of the United Nations Council for Namibia of 2 May 1985 to initiate legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States against corporations or individuals involved in the exploitation, transport, processing or purchase of Namibia's natural resources, as part of its efforts to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,

Concerned about the conditions in other colonial Territories, including certain Territories in the Caribbean and the Pacific Ocean regions, where foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and where the inhabitants of those Territories continue to suffer from a loss of land ownership as a result of the failure of the administering Powers concerned to restrict the sale of land to foreigners, despite the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in southern Africa, and emphasizing the importance of action by local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, academic institutions, mass media, solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, in exercising pressure on transnational corporations to refrain from any investment or activity in the Territory of Namibia, in encouraging a policy of systematic divestment of any financial or other interest in corporations doing business with South Africa and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with the occupation régime in Namibia,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the perpetuation of colonial domination and racial discrimination in the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, constitute a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Condemns the policies of Governments that continue to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the Territories, including, in particular, illegally exploiting Namibia's marine resources, violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and thus obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of those Territories;

6. Strongly condemns the collaboration of certain Western and other countries with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon those and all other Governments to refrain from supplying that régime, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

7. Strongly condemns the collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa of certain Western and other countries as well as transnational corporations that continue to make new investments in South Africa and supply the régime with armaments, nuclear technology and all other materials that are likely to buttress it and thus aggravate the threat to world peace;

8. Calls upon all States, in particular certain Western States, to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with that régime in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity;

9. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

10. Calls upon all States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any investments in Namibia or loans to the racist minority régime of South Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with that régime;

11. Requests all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the racist minority régime of South Africa, which uses such assistance to repress the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement;

12. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia, leading to the rapid depletion of such resources, in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people, for the creation in the Territory of an economic structure dependent essentially upon its mineral resources and for its illegal extension of the territorial sea and its proclamation of an economic zone off the coast of Namibia;

13. Reiterates that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia have been considered to be illegal under international law and declares that consequently South Africa and all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia;

14. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist régime of South Africa;

15. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests, including the activities of those transnational corporations that are engaged in the exploitation and export of the Territory's uranium ores and other resources, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, are considered to be illegal, that they contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime and that they are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia;

16. Condemns the plunder of Namibian uranium and calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose nationals and corporations are involved in the mining or enrichment of, or traffic in, Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit and prevent State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in uranium prospecting activities in Namibia;

17. Requests the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which operate the Urenco uranium enrichment plant, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulates the activities of Urenco;

18. Requests all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures, individually or collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, 36/121 B of 10 December 1981, 37/233 A of 20 December 1982, 38/36 A of 1 December 1983, 39/50 A of 12 December 1984 and 40/97 A of 13 December 1985;

19. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade co-operation with the racist minority régime of South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into any relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, that may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

20. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

21. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over their future development and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

22. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and, in respect of Namibia, the support they render to the racist minority régime of South Africa;

24. Appeals to mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts to mobilize international public opinion against the policy of the apartheid régime of South Africa and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against that régime and for encouraging a policy of systematic divestment in corporations doing business in South Africa;

25. Decides to continue to monitor closely the situation in the remaining colonial Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples, at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories and at speeding their accession to independence and, in that connection, requests the administering Powers concerned to ensure that the peoples of the Territories under their administration are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

26. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

31 October 1986 Meeting 52 125-11-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/41/726) by recorded vote (91-9-18), 7 October (meeting 8); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/41/23); agenda item 105. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 4th Committee 2-8; plenary 52.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas Bahrain, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Costa Rica, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Cameroon, Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Chile, Fiji, Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal felt it wrong to assume that all foreign economic interests impeded the self-determination of peoples or were prejudicial to the development of NSGTs. The Federal Republic of Germany said such assumption was harmful; Italy added that the assumption penalized NSGTs, by reason of their status, by ignoring their development needs. France and Japan asserted that the beneficial aspects of foreign economic activities could not be overlooked. Similarly, Ireland said that carefully promoted economic development was an important factor in bringing those Territories to independence. Finland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, said failure to distinguish between different types of economic activities would be to lose sight of the fundamental objectives of the draft. Turkey would have preferred a clear distinction.

Australia, Italy, Portugal and the United Kingdom saw contradiction between the wholesale condemnation, made in the text, of all foreign economic involvement, and the Assembly's call in other resolutions for further economic development of NSGTs. Belgium regretted that consequences harmful to indigenous populations continued to be systematically attributed to foreign investments. New Zealand said that economic interests, in some cases, impeded the progress of decolonization; however, the text had no relevance to Tokelau, under its administration, because no foreign companies were operating there.

Objection to the singling out of countries for criticism was voiced by Belgium, Chile, Colombia, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Papua New Guinea and Portugal. Canada felt that the polemical language of the text turned support for the legitimate purpose for decolonization into a diatribe against the Western States. Mongolia, on the other hand, would have preferred more specific reference to the countries supporting South Africa and stronger wording against colonial Powers.

The United Kingdom considered the text to be unhelpful and controversial. Colombia and Uruguay considered it to be lacking in balance.

Finland (for the Nordic countries) had reservations as regards paragraphs which did not distinguish between the areas of competence of the General Assembly and that of the Security Council.

Mongolia felt the text should have called for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa. The Netherlands disagreed, saying that it was committed to increasing pressure through selective sanctions. Botswana declared its inability to impose economic sanctions against South Africa; however, it would not stand in the way of action by others. Lesotho, which had abstained in the Committee vote, supported the text in the plenary while voicing its objection to imposition of sanctions and mentioning countries by name.

Belgium said the text carelessly lumped together the current situation in Namibia and the different situation that existed in other NSGTs. Australia and the Netherlands considered that, before free elections were held, no political group should be designated as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people.

Military activities in colonial countries

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,(10) the Committee on colonial countries continued to discuss in 1986 military activities and bases in colonial Territories, approving a decision on the topic on 11 August and recommending a draft decision to the Assembly for adoption. On 13 August,(11) the Acting Chairman of the Committee transmitted to the President of the Security Council the text of the 11 August decision drawing particular attention to a paragraph almost identical to paragraph 6 of decision 41/4055 (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In October, the Assembly adopted decision 41/405 by recorded vote.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 31 October 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples'. and recalling its decision 40/415 of 2 December 1985 on this subject, deplors the fact that the colonial Powers concerned have taken no steps to implement the request that the Assembly has repeatedly addressed to them, most recently in paragraph 10 of its resolution 40/57 of 2 December 1985, to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

"2. In recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, the General Assembly reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the populations of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration. Furthermore, aware of the presence of military bases and installations of the administering Powers concerned and other countries in those Territories, the Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration that are detrimental to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate such activities and eliminate such military bases in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly, in particular with paragraph 9 of the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to Assembly resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980.

"4. The General Assembly declares that the colonial Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly notes with serious concern that, in southern Africa in general and in and around Namibia in particular, a critical situation continues to prevail as a result of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory and its inhuman repression of the people of South Africa. The racist regime has resorted to desperate measures in order to suppress by force the legitimate aspirations of those peoples and, in its escalating war against them and their national liberation movements, struggling for freedom, justice and independence, the régime has repeatedly committed acts of armed aggression against the neighbouring independent African States, particularly Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe, which have caused extensive loss of human lives and destruction of the economic infrastructure.

"6. The General Assembly strongly condemns South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, particularly its persistent acts of aggression and subversion against Angola and Mozambique, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, its forced recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to reinforce its illegal occupation of the Territory and to participate in its attacks against independent African States, its illegal use of Namibian territory for acts of aggression against those States and its forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes. The Assembly calls upon all States to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. It condemns the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain countries, which constitutes a violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, and which poses a threat to international peace and security. The Assembly urges that the Security Council consider, as a matter of urgency, the report of the Committee established under its resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and that it adopt further measures to widen the scope of resolution 418(1977) in order to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Assembly also calls for the scrupulous observance of Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 enjoining Member States to refrain from importing armaments from South Africa. The Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of a series of resolutions adopted by the Council during 1985, in which the Council strongly condemned the acts of armed aggression committed by the racist regime, as well as the relevant documents adopted by the Organization of African Unity, the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia, held at New Delhi from 19 to 21 April 1985, the Second International Conference on Namibia, held at Brussels from 5 to 7 May 1986, the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, held in Paris from 16 to 20 June 1986, and the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, held at Vienna from 7 to 11 July 1986.

"7. The General Assembly demands the urgent dismantling of all military bases in the international Territory of Namibia and calls for the immediate cessation of the war of oppression waged by the racist minority regime against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative. Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to achieve their freedom and independence, the Assembly appeals to all States to render sustained and increased moral and political support, as well as assistance in all fields, to the South West Africa People's Organization to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia.

"8. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its infamous record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission while also posing a threat to all mankind. The Assembly condemns the continuing support to the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields. In this context, the Assembly expresses its concern at the grave consequences for international peace and security of the collaboration between the racist régime of South Africa and certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such collaboration and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increases its nuclear capability.

"9. The General Assembly, noting that the militarization of Namibia has led to the forced conscription of Namibians, to a greatly increasing flow of refugees and to a tragic disorganization of the family life of the Namibian people, strongly condemns the forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes and the introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians and declares that all measures by the illegal occupation regime to enforce military conscription in Namibia are null and void. In that connection, the Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the apartheid regime's oppressive policies in Namibia and South Africa to flee into the neighbouring States.

"10. The General Assembly, in recalling its resolution ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, by which it strongly urged States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally, strongly condemns the continuing collaboration of certain countries with the racist régime in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields. It calls for the termination forthwith of all such collaboration as it undermines international solidarity against the apartheid régime and helps to perpetuate that régime's illegal occupation of Namibia.

"11. The General Assembly deprecates the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories for military installations. While it has been argued that the servicing of such installations creates employment, nevertheless, the large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources for this purpose diverts resources that could be more beneficially utilized in promoting the economic development of the Territories concerned and is thus contrary to the interests of their populations.

"12. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, an intensified campaign of publicity with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"13. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee to continue its consideration of the item and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-second session."

General Assembly decision 41/405

124-13-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/41/726) by recorded vote (89-13-17), 7 October (meeting 8); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/41/23); agenda item 105.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 4th Committee 2-8; plenary 52.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Costa Rica, El Salvador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Cameroon, Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

In explanation of vote, a number of countries expressed concern over the procedural irregularity of voting on a draft dealing with a subject that was not among the agenda items allocated to the Fourth Committee. They included Australia, Canada, France, Portugal, the United Kingdom (on behalf of the 12 States members of the European Community) and Uruguay.

Objection to naming countries for criticism was expressed by Colombia and Finland (on behalf of the five Nordic countries). Turkey objected to name-calling when responsibilities could not be imputed to countries with certainty. Israel said doing so would camouflage the real collaborators. Belgium questioned the sincerity of the denunciation of military activities attributed to the West, by members of an ever-expanding military alliance.

Finland, speaking for the Nordic countries, had reservations with regard to the implicit endorsement of recourse to armed struggle. Canada considered the text's wording to be tendentious. Colombia felt the text lacked balance. Turkey said paragraphs 2, 3 and 11 could have been drafted in a more balanced way. New Zealand said the assertion that military activities necessarily impeded decolonization was too sweeping; there were no military activities in Tokelau, the one remaining Territory under its administration.

Related resolution: GA 41/102.

Information dissemination

The Committee on colonial countries considered, at four meetings held between 4 and 15 August, dissemination of information on decolonization, approving the recommendations made by its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance, including those concerning Namibia.

The Sub-Committee suggested that the Committee encourage non-governmental organizations to continue assisting colonial peoples and their national liberation movements and making efforts to counteract the hostile campaign being waged by South Africa and its Western and other allies to depict national liberation movements as terrorist organizations. It also recommended that the Committee Chairman discuss with the presiding officers of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia the holding of periodic consultations in order to co-ordinate the activities of the three bodies.

Other recommendations included: continuing information dissemination by the United Nations Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization and by the Department of Public Information (DPI); making the international community aware that United Nations recognition of the legitimacy of the liberation struggle by the people of southern Africa entailed extending moral and material support to them and their national liberation movements; updating and ensuring greater distribution of studies and monographs on decolonization; underlining in DPI activities the high priority the United Nations gave to eradicating colonialism; strengthening co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies; providing feedback reports from United Nations information centres; and requesting DPI to obtain wider coverage by the mass media, particularly in Western Europe and the Americas. The Special Committee should appeal to the mass media to regard it as their task to contribute to eliminating the remaining vestiges of colonialism and to render support to colonial peoples. Both Departments were called on to increase their speaking engagements at North American universities on the subject of decolonization, with particular emphasis on Namibia.

Information dissemination efforts during the year included a series of United Nations activities in May in co-operation with DPI, assisted by the information centres in observance of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/42 by recorded vote.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 40/58 of 2 December 1985,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration and mindful of the continuing pressing need to take all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories in achieving self-determination, freedom and independence,

Noting with deep concern the recent measures and official censorship imposed by the racist régime of South Africa upon the local and international media with respect to all aspects of the policies and practices of apartheid and developments in Namibia,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the Special Committee in enlisting the support of those organizations in that regard,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it incumbent upon the United Nations to continue to play an active role in the process of self-determination and independence and to intensify its efforts for the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with a view to the further mobilization of international public opinion in support of complete decolonization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures, through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series, and to select from them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full co-operation of the administering Powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the activities of all United Nations information centers;

(d) To maintain a close working relationship with the Organization of African Unity by holding periodic consultations and by systematically exchanging relevant information with that organization;

(e) To enlist, with the close co-operation of United Nations information centres, the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To continue to provide verbatim records to the Special Committee, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/14 C of 16 November 1982;

(g) To continue to provide full press release coverage for all meetings of the Special Committee and its subsidiary bodies;

(h) To ensure the availability of the necessary facilities and services to that end;

(i) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, in particular the administering Powers, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands.

In view of the United Nations financial crisis, objections to sub-paragraphs (3) (f) and (g) were expressed by the Netherlands, Norway (for the five Nordic countries) and the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom further objected to the call in paragraph 2 for intensification of information work, when it believed the era of decolonization was drawing to a close. Norway, for the Nordic countries, did not approve all the specific parts of the Committee's recommendations on information dissemination; the Netherlands felt some of the recommendations sought to divert the Committee from its proper task and to use United Nations resources for a campaign of selective criticism against one particular group of countries. Portugal supported the draft, as did Oman, which stressed the importance of disseminating accurate information on decolonization.

Puerto Rico

The Committee on colonial countries considered a separate item based on its 1985 decision⁽¹²⁾ concerning Puerto Rico.

At meetings held between 12 and 14 August 1986, the Committee heard the representatives of 28 organizations, mainly from Puerto Rico. By a resolution of 14 August-adopted by 10 votes to 1, with 8 abstentions-the Committee reaffirmed the applicability of the 1960 Declaration to Puerto Rico, expressed the hope that the people there might exercise without hindrance their inalienable right to self-determination and requested the Rapporteur to report to the Committee on the implementation of its resolutions on the topic. The resolution was transmitted to the United States.

New Caledonia

The Committee on colonial countries, reviewing the list of Territories to which the 1960 Declaration applied, considered the question of reinscribing New Caledonia on the United Nations list of NSGTs. The islands of New Caledonia are situated in the south-west Pacific Ocean.

In an 11 August communiqué,⁽¹³⁾ forwarded to the Committee, the South Pacific Forum (seventeenth session, Suva, Fiji, 8-11 August), as in 1985,⁽¹²⁾ reaffirmed its support for New Caledonia's peaceful transition to independence and requested that the Territory be reinscribed on the United Nations list of NSGTs. In so doing, the Forum expressed the view that, following a change of government in France in March 1986, the new policy towards New Caledonia appeared committed to keeping the Territory under French rule rather than moving towards a form of independence. The Forum also noted that the French Government remained committed to an early plebiscite in New Caledonia, and concluded that if the results of the plebiscite ruled out the prospect of independence, it was likely to exacerbate rather than resolve problems in the Territory.

On 14 August, the Committee approved the recommendations of its Working Group that, subject to General Assembly directives, the Committee should take up in 1987 the request made by the Forum, with a view to submitting an appropriate recommendation to the Assembly at its forty-second (1987) session.

On 2 October,⁽¹⁴⁾ Fiji, on behalf of the member Governments of the South Pacific Forum which were United Nations Member States, informed the Committee's Acting Chairman that they had decided to pursue the reinscription issue in the Assembly at the current session, and that it had forwarded an explanatory memorandum to the Assembly President requesting that the text be issued as an Assembly document.⁽¹⁵⁾ The memorandum stated that the request for reinscription was based on a recognition that New Caledonia was a NSGT under the United Nations Charter and the 1960 Declaration, that it had been improperly excluded from the United Nations list, and that reinscription would assist New Caledonia in progressing towards self-determination. It was recalled that New Caledonia was one of 74 Territories enumerated in the 1946 Assembly resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ listing the Territories on which the Assembly had received information pursuant to Article 73 (e) of the Charter; and that France, which had provided such information in 1946 on New Caledonia, unilaterally ceased to transmit information on that Territory in 1947, asserting that it was up to the administering Power to determine when a Territory ceased to be non-self-governing. The memorandum also noted that the General Assembly had ruled, as regards French Somaliland (now Djibouti) and the Comoros, that those Territories not having moved to a recognized self-determination should be reinscribed; they were thus reinscribed in 1965 and 1972, respectively, before attaining independence.

The Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries⁽²⁾ in September supported the Forum's decision and strongly urged the Assembly to reinscribe New Caledonia on the NSGT list so as to ensure that the United Nations regularly reviewed the Territory's progress towards self-government and independence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, under the agenda item on implementation of the 1960 Declaration, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/41 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 66(I) of 14 December 1946, in which the General Assembly noted that information had been transmitted by Member States regarding Non-Self-Governing Territories, including information transmitted by the Government of France on New Caledonia and Dependencies, under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Aware that the Government of France has not transmitted any further information regarding New Caledonia and Dependencies since 1946,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, the annex to which contains the principles which should guide Members in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter,

Noting the decision of the Heads of Government of the member States of the South Pacific Forum, taken at their meeting held at Suva from 8 to 11 August 1986, to seek the reinscription of New Caledonia on the United Nations list of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting also the decision of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, whereby the heads of State or Government strongly urged the General Assembly, at its forty-first session, to reinscribe New Caledonia on the list of Non-Self-Governing Territories and agreed to act together in pursuing this objective,

1. Considers that, in the light of the provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) and 1541(XV), New Caledonia is a Non-Self-Governing Territory within the meaning of the Charter;

2. Declares that an obligation exists on the part of the Government of France to transmit information on New Caledonia under Chapter XI of the Charter and requests the Government of France to transmit to the Secretary-General such information as is called for under Chapter XI and in the related decisions of the General Assembly;

3. Affirms the inalienable right of the people of New Caledonia to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV);

4. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to consider the question of New Caledonia at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Requests the Government of France, as the administering Power concerned, to extend its co-operation to the Special Committee in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/41 A

2 December 1986 Meeting 92 89-24-34 (recorded vote)

31-nation draft (A/41/L.33 & Corr. 2); agenda item 19.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: plenary 90-93.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: Belgium, Chad, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Honduras, Italy, Luxembourg, Mauritania, Morocco, Netherlands, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Spain, Togo, Zaire.

Abstaining: Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bolivia, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Gambia, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Lebanon, Mali, Mauritius, Niger, Norway, Oman, Paraguay, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote, France said New Caledonia was not a NSGT as defined under the Charter, that the people there would have the opportunity to express their views during the referendum scheduled for the summer of 1987, and that if the majority of them favoured independence, France would comply with their wishes.

Canada, the Netherlands and Portugal considered it premature to take a position on the issue, adding that they were confident France would ensure the referendum was held in a free and democratic manner. Mauritania feared that the draft might disrupt the referendum. Asserting that the question of New Caledonia was complex as it pertained to the principle of the right to self-determination and to that of non-interference in the internal affairs of a State, Senegal felt the draft had fallen short of offering all the elements necessary for solving the problem; it regretted that the draft did not refer to recent contacts between the peoples of the Territory and the French authorities.

Finland's vote reflected its unreserved support for Article 73 of the Charter and for the right to self-determination. Uruguay understood the text to be procedural and not prejudging the future status of New Caledonia. Sharing that view, Sweden hoped that the procedure adopted under the resolution would not endanger constructive co-operation between the administering Power and the United Nations. Cape Verde considered it regrettable that one of the sponsors of text continued to occupy East Timor illegally. Iraq abstained in the vote for procedural reasons. Oman felt that the situation in New Caledonia was unclear, and hoped that more information would be available at future Assembly sessions.

Subsequent action. On 8 December, following up on the Assembly action, Fiji on behalf of the South Pacific Forum members that were also Member States of the United Nations submitted a request to the Acting Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, asking that the Committee take up the New Caledonia question early in 1987, immediately following the Committee's organizational meeting.⁽¹⁷⁾

The Acting Chairman informed Committee members in mid-December⁽¹⁸⁾ that Fiji had submitted the above request; that he had requested France, on 8 December, to submit information as requested in paragraph 2 of resolution 41/41 A; and that the Secretary-General had transmitted the text of the resolution to France on 18 December.

Other general questions concerning NSGTs

Scholarships

In a report covering 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the following 35 Member States had offered to make scholarships available to persons from NSGTs for academic and vocational studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malta, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia. Information about these offers was included in the twenty-fifth edition of the handbook Study Abroad, published by UNESCO.

During the period covered, 83 students, mostly not inhabitants of NSGTs, requested information and application forms from the Secretariat. Namibian students were referred to the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia. Some applicants contacted the offering States directly, or were requested to do so in the case of study opportunities in Ghana, Poland, the USSR and the United States.

Several offering States informed the Secretary-General of developments: Bulgaria offered live scholarships to inhabitants of NSGTs and 12 to Na-

Namibian students; Czechoslovakia offered 20 scholarships for inhabitants of NSGTs; the Federal Republic of Germany sponsored two students from Namibia, seven postgraduate students and 348 stipendiaries in practical and vocational training; in Malta, 11 Namibian students attended a nursing course and 19 other Namibians were expected to follow other courses. The Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR informed the Secretary-General in mid-July 1986 that 184 students from NSGTs were studying in their countries; the Ukrainian SSR reported in October that 22 students from Namibia were studying there. For the 1986/87 academic year, Ireland would grant scholarships in health administration and management to two Namibian students; Poland, three scholarships for candidates from NSGTs and two for graduate students from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; Turkey, a scholarship to a Namibian student; and Uruguay, five scholarships for candidates from NSGTs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 41/28, without vote.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/55 of 2 December 1985,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Considering that more scholarships should be made available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories in all parts of the world and that steps should be taken to encourage applications from students in those Territories,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Information to the United Nations

States responsible for the administration of Territories which had not attained full self-government continued to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General information on the Territories' economic, social and educational conditions under the terms of Article 73 e in Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter and in accordance with several General Assembly resolutions. In the 1985 resolution,(2) the Assembly requested the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments. In a September 1986 report,(3) the Secretary-General stated that he had received information with respect to the following NSGTs:

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands

On 4 March 1986,(4) Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it had nothing to add to the information provided in 1979,(5) stating that conditions in East Timor had prevented it from assuming its responsibilities for the Territory's administration (see also p. 964).

With respect to Western Sahara, the Secretary-General noted that Spain had informed him in 1976(6) that, with the termination of its presence in the Territory, it considered itself exempt from any international responsibility in connection with the Territory's administration (see also p. 964).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/13, drafted by the Committee on colonial countries.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 40/51 of 2 December 1985, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit, or continue to transmit, to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-second session.

31 October 1986 Meeting 52 149-0-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/41/746) by recorded vote (143-0-3), 22 October (meeting 18); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/41/23); agenda item 104.

Meeting numbers, GA 41st session: 4th Committee 9, 11-18; plenary 52.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, United Kingdom, United States.

The United Kingdom said it disagreed with the assertion in paragraph 2 that the Assembly should decide when a NSGT had attained a full measure of self-government; it believed such decisions should be left to the administering Power and the local Government.

Visiting missions

In August 1986, the Committee on colonial countries adopted a resolution on the question of sending visiting missions to Territories,⁽⁷⁾ stressing the need to dispatch periodic missions to facilitate full implementation of the 1960 Declaration,⁽⁸⁾ calling on the administering Powers concerned to continue to co-operate with the United Nations by permitting access to Territories under their administration, and requesting its Chairman to continue consultations with those Powers regarding such missions. Further, the Committee appealed to the United Kingdom to reconsider its decision not to participate in the Committee's work and urged it to permit access of visiting missions to the Territories under its administration.

In resolution 41/41 B of 2 December, the General Assembly called on the administering Powers to co-operate with the Committee and to permit visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants.

The Assembly also dealt with the topic in resolutions on individual Territories (see Chapter IV of this section).

Chapter II

International Trusteeship System

In 1986, progress towards self-government was made in the one Trust Territory remaining under the International Trusteeship System—the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a strategic territory administered by the United States.

In May, the Trusteeship Council requested the United States, the Territory's Administering Authority, in consultation with the four constitutional Governments within the Trust Territory—the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, Palau and the Northern Mariana Islands—to agree on a date for the full entry into force of the Compact of Free Association and the Commonwealth Covenant (resolution 2183(LIII)). The Council also considered that the United States had satisfactorily discharged its obligations under the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement and that it was appropriate to terminate the Agreement.

The Compact of Free Association with the Marshall Islands entered into force in October, and with the Federated States of Micronesia in November; the Commonwealth Covenant with the Northern Mariana Islands also entered into force in November.

On two occasions in 1986, at the request of the United States, the Council dispatched a visiting mission to observe a plebiscite in Palau, having taken decisions to that effect (resolutions 2180(S-XVI) and 2184(S-XVII)) at two special sessions (4-6 February, 20-26 November).

Of the five Council members (China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States), China did not participate in the Council's sessions.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

Constitutional developments

In 1986, the United States, which administered the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in accordance with the Trusteeship Agreement approved by the Security Council in 1947,⁽¹⁾ signed legislation enacting the Compact of Free Association or the Commonwealth Covenant with three of the four constitutional Governments within the Territory. The Compact with the Marshall Islands entered into force on 21 October, and with the Federated States of Micronesia on 3 November; the Commonwealth Covenant with the Northern Mariana Islands also entered into force on 3 November. Plebiscites were held in Palau in February and December, under the observation of visiting missions dispatched by the Trusteeship Council.

The Trust Territory, designated as a strategic area under the Trusteeship Agreement, comprised three archipelagos of more than 2,100 islands and atolls (about 100 of which were inhabited) scattered over some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The Territory, collectively known as Micronesia, had 161,211 inhabitants in 1985.

Communications. During 1986, the United States and the USSR submitted to the Secretary-General several communications.

In a 14 February letter,⁽²⁾ the United States said its President had signed legislation on 14 January enacting the Compact of Free Association between the Administering Authority and the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia. The United States recalled that the Compact, which had been approved by voters in United Nations-observed plebiscites in 1983,⁽³⁾ recognized the entities as fully self-governing, capable of conducting foreign affairs in their own name and right, including diplomatic, consular, commercial and economic relations, and the right to enter into treaties; the United States would remain responsible for their defence.

By a 23 October letter,⁽⁴⁾ the United States informed the Secretary-General that agreement had been reached on the entry into force of the Compact of Free Association with the Marshall Islands on 21 October and with the Federated States of Micronesia on 3 November, and the Commonwealth Covenant with the Northern Mariana Islands on 3 November; no agreement had been reached on similar arrangements with Palau.

The USSR transmitted two statements by the TASS news agency. In a 14 February statement,⁽⁵⁾ TASS asserted that only the Security Council was empowered under Article 83 of the United Nations Charter to decide on any change in the Territory's status, and that the United States had violated international law by enacting the Compact and forcibly transforming Micronesia into its neo-colonial possession. The statement also claimed that the Administering Authority had prevented the development of a viable economy in Micronesia and had planned to transform the region into a strategic military staging area. In a 12 November text⁽⁶⁾ containing similar assertions, TASS called the United States action unilateral, arbitrary and without legal foundation, and stated that the United Nations remained responsible for the Territory until its people attained true independence.

Trusteeship Council consideration. The United States, in a 9 April letter to the Secretariat,⁽⁷⁾ requested that the future of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands be included in the provisional agenda of the fifty-third session of the Trusteeship Council.

In letters of 16 May to the Council President, Fiji,⁽⁸⁾ New Zealand,⁽⁹⁾ Papua New Guinea,⁽¹⁰⁾ Samoa,⁽¹¹⁾ Solomon Islands,⁽¹²⁾ Vanuatu,⁽¹³⁾ and Vanuatu on behalf of the countries of the South Pacific region⁽¹⁴⁾ requested participation, without the right to vote, in the Council's discussion of the item. Australia made a similar request on 19 May.⁽¹⁵⁾

The Trusteeship Council held its fifty-third session in New York from 12 May to 30 June. Following the adoption of its agenda on 12 May,⁽¹⁶⁾ it held 20 meetings between 12 May and 4 June. It had before it the annual report for the year ending 30 September 1985 by the United States as Administering Authority for the Trust Territory,⁽¹⁷⁾ and a working paper prepared by the Secretariat⁽¹⁸⁾ outlining the conditions in the Territory.

On 16 May, the United States formally requested the Trusteeship Council to recognize that the time had come to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement. It noted that international practice and United Nations resolutions had recognized independence, free association with another State or integration into an existing State as acceptable outcomes to the process of self-determination; respect for the principle of self-determination meant that there was no single path to be imposed from the outside. The United States said the people of Micronesia-in plebiscites observed by the Council-had asked that the Agreement be terminated.

On 30 June, the Council adopted its report to the Security Council.⁽¹⁹⁾ The report, covering the period 12 July 1985 to 30 June 1986, contained conclusions and recommendations prepared by its Drafting Committee (France and the United Kingdom) and adopted by the Council on 4 June. The Council recommended that the Administering Authority complete its internal process of approval of the Compact of Free Association for Palau at the earliest possible date.

In explanation of its sole negative vote on the report of the Drafting Committee (which included the text of resolution 2183(LIII) (see below)), the USSR asserted that the conclusions and recommendations were contrary to the interests of the Micronesian people and that the resolution had been adopted undemocratically on the basis of an agreement among the Council's three Western members. France felt the Council had responded positively to the wishes of the people, and the United Kingdom said the report had taken into account the views of the freely elected representatives of the people. The Administering Authority reiterated that the Trusteeship Agreement should be terminated, adding that it was not for outsiders to stipulate arbitrary and exclusive methods for the sovereign right to self-determination of non-self-governing peoples.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, the Trusteeship Council adopted resolution 2183(LIII) by vote.

Examination of the annual report of the Administering Authority for the year ended 30 September 1985:
Trust Territory Of the Pacific Islands

The future of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trusteeship Council,

Recalling the Trusteeship Agreement for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands approved by the Security Council on 2 April 1947,

Noting that Articles 73 and 76 of the Charter of the United Nations call upon Administering Authorities of Trust Territories to assist their peoples in the progressive development of their free political institutions and towards self-government or independence,

Mindful that the peoples of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands and Palau have established constitutions and democratic political institutions providing the instruments of self-government,

Aware that political status negotiations between the Administering Authority and representatives of the Trust Territory began in 1969 with the aim of facilitating the progressive development of the peoples of Micronesia towards self-government or independence as was deemed appropriate,

Aware also that this process has been successfully completed,

Noting further the recommendation of the Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory in 1985 that termination of the trusteeship should be achieved as soon as possible,

Having heard the statements by the elected representatives of the Trust Territory Governments requesting early termination of the Trusteeship Agreement, and believing this to reflect the freely expressed wishes of the people of the Trust Territory,

Conscious of the responsibility of the Security Council in respect of strategic areas as set out in Article 83, paragraph 1, of the Charter,

1. Notes that the Peoples of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and Palau have freely exercised their right to self-determination in plebiscites observed by the visiting missions of the Trusteeship Council and have chosen free association with the United States of America in the case of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and Palau and Commonwealth status in the case of the Northern Mariana Islands;

2. Requests the Government of the United States, in consultation with the Governments of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, Palau and the Northern Mariana Islands, to agree on a date not later than 30 September 1986 for the full entry into force of the Compact of Free Association and the Commonwealth Covenant, and to inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of that date;

3. Considers that the Government of the United States, as the Administering Authority, has satisfactorily discharged its obligations under the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement and that it is appropriate for that Agreement to be terminated with effect from the date referred to in paragraph 2 above;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate as official documents of the Security Council the present resolution and all material received from the Administering Authority pursuant to this resolution.

Trusteeship Council resolution 2183(LIII)

28 May 1986

3-1

Draft by France and United Kingdom (T/L.1252); agenda items 4 and 14.

Voting negatively, the USSR said the draft was adopted undemocratically; under Article 83 of the Charter, the Trusteeship Council had no authority to alter, much less terminate, a trusteeship agreement and the Micronesian people had not been given an opportunity to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence. The United Kingdom found it difficult to understand how voting on a text could be undemocratic. The United States said that the draft was circulated under proper procedure and with ample time for consideration; all Council members had known for some time that the Administering Authority was seeking to terminate the trusteeship.

Pursuant to paragraph 4 of the above resolution, the Secretary-General transmitted the text to the Security Council in June.⁽²⁰⁾ In a 30 September letter,⁽²¹⁾ the United States indicated that, pending completion of discussions with concerned parties, no date had been set for entry into force of the Compact and the Covenant.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries)⁽²²⁾ considered the Trust Territory on 4 August and adopted conclusions and recommendations made by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. In its consideration of the question, the Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper on developments in the Territory.⁽²³⁾

The Committee reaffirmed the right of the people of the Territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Charter and the 1960 Declaration,⁽²⁴⁾ noted the Administering Authority's intention to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement and urged that it be done in strict conformity with the Charter. Recognizing that it was ultimately for the Micronesians to decide their political destiny, the Committee called on the Administering Authority: not to take any action which might impede the unity of the Territory or the rights of the people, in accordance with the Declaration, until those rights were implemented; to reinforce programmes to inform and educate the people about the options open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence; and to ensure that the existence of military bases and installations did not hinder the people from exercising that right. The Committee again expressed regret at the lack of co-operation between it and the Trusteeship Council.

Those views were incorporated in a draft resolution adopted by the Committee for General Assembly action.

In transmitting the conclusions and recommendations to the President of the Security Council on 5 August,⁽²⁵⁾ the Committee's Acting Chairman observed that the Security Council was empowered, under Article 83 of the Charter, to exercise all United Nations functions relating to strategic areas.

General Assembly consideration. On 22 October, the Chairman of the General Assembly's Fourth Committee suggested, following consultations with the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and with concerned delegations, that no action be taken on the draft resolution recommended by the latter Committee. That suggestion was adopted without objection.⁽²⁶⁾

1985 mission

The Trusteeship Council, by resolution 2181(LIII), adopted on 28 May 1986 by 3 votes to 1, took note of the report of its 1985 Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,⁽²⁷⁾ and invited the Administering Authority to take into account the Mission's conclusions and recommendations, as well as the comments made by the Council members.

The USSR, which voted negatively, said the report covered up the Administering Authority's arbitrary actions against the people of the Territory under the guise of the United Nations flag.

1986 missions

In 1986, the Council convened two special sessions at the request of the United States, deciding on each occasion to send a visiting mission to observe plebiscites in Palau on the Compact of Free Association.

February

On 8 January,(28) the United States requested the convening of a special session of the Trusteeship Council in early February to consider dispatching a mission to observe a plebiscite in Palau on the Compact of Free Association. The Council convened the sixteenth special session in New York from 4 to 6 February.(19)

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 February, the Council adopted resolution 2180(S-XVI) by vote.

Arrangements for the dispatch of a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau;

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trusteeship Council,

Aware of the plebiscite which is to be held in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, on 21 February 1986,

Having been invited by the Administering Authority to dispatch a mission to observe the plebiscite,

Considering that it would be desirable to include in such a mission representatives of countries of the region that are not members of the Trusteeship Council.

1. Decides to send a visiting mission, of approximately two weeks' duration, to Palau, the mission to begin on or about 13 February 1986 and end as soon as practicable after the declaration of the results of the plebiscite;

2. Further decides that the Visiting Mission should be composed of not more than five members, the members of the Mission to be representatives of Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland;

3. Directs the Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite, including the campaign and polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results;

4. Requests the Visiting Mission to submit to the Trusteeship Council as soon as practicable a report on its observation of the plebiscite, containing such conclusions and recommendations as it may wish to make;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities to assist the Visiting Mission in the performance of its functions.

Financial implications. SG, T/L.1248.

Report of the Visiting Mission. The Council's Visiting Mission,(29) composed of one representative each from Fiji, France and Papua New Guinea and two from the United Kingdom, was in Palau from 16 to 25 February.

The Mission concluded that the plebiscite held on 21 February represented a valid act of self-determination by the people of Palau; that the 71 per cent voter turn-out was commendably high; and that a 72 per cent positive vote testified to the importance the Palauan people attached to their future constitutional status.

By resolution 2182(LIII)., adopted by 3 votes to 1 on 28 May, the Trusteeship Council took note of the Mission's report and expressed its appreciation for the work accomplished by the Mission on its behalf.

The USSR, which voted negatively, asserted that the Mission was politically directed to hide the Administering Authority's illegal actions in the Territory, to help turn Palau into a nuclear springboard for the United States and to circumvent Palau's Constitution.

December

On 11 November,(30) the United States requested the convening of a special session of the Trusteeship Council to consider dispatching a mission to observe a plebiscite in Palau on 2 December on the Compact of Free Association. The Council convened the seventeenth special session in New York from 20 to 26 November.(31)

The Administering Authority informed the Council that the Trial Division of the Palau Supreme Court, having examined appeals by several Palau citizens challenging the February plebiscite, found that the section of the Compact relating to nuclear substances would require a 75 per cent vote in a plebiscite before it could be considered as having been ratified. The Government of Palau had appealed that decision to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court which, on 17 September, had upheld the earlier ruling of the Trial Division. On 29 October, the President of Palau had signed legislation passed by the National Congress authorizing another plebiscite to ask voters to approve specifically that particular section of the Compact.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 November, the Council adopted resolution 2184(S-XVII) by vote.

Arrangements for the dispatch of a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau,

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,

December -1986

The Trusteeship Council,

Aware of the plebiscite that will be held on 2 December 1986 in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,

Having been invited by the Administering Authority to dispatch a mission to observe the plebiscite,

Considering that it would be desirable to include in such a mission representatives of countries of the region that are not members of the Trusteeship Council,

1. Decides to send to Palau a visiting mission of approximately one week's duration to begin on or about 28 November 1986 and to end as soon as practicable after the declaration of the results of the plebiscite;

2. Further decides that the Visiting Mission to Palau should be composed of not more than four members, the members to be representatives of Fiji, France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and one other country from the South Pacific region;

3. Directs the Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite, specifically the polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results;

4. Requests the Visiting Mission to submit to the Trusteeship Council as soon as practicable a report on its observation of the plebiscite: containing such conclusions and recommendations as it may wish to make;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities to assist the Visiting Mission in the performance of its functions.

Trusteeship Council resolution 2184(S-XVII)

21 November 1986

3-1

Draft by France and United Kingdom (T/L.1254); agenda item 3.
Financial implications. SG, T/L.1255 & Corr.1.

In explanation of its negative vote, the USSR said that it opposed sending a special mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau because it was aimed at using the United Nations as a cover to impose on Palauans, by means of political and economic pressure, the status of a nuclear springboard for the United States. The United Kingdom considered the December plebiscite as another important opportunity for the Palauans to express themselves on their political future.

Report of the Visiting Mission. The Council's Visiting Mission,⁽³²⁾ composed of one representative each from Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom, was in Palau from 30 November to 6 December.

In its conclusions, the Mission noted that the voter turn-out was 82 per cent, that the people of Palau had voted freely and in accordance with their wishes, and that 65.97 per cent of the total votes cast were in favour of the Compact.

Hearings

On 13 and 14 May, the Trusteeship Council⁽¹⁹⁾ heard 11 petitioners on various issues concerning the conditions in, and the future status of, the Trust Territory.

The Sub-Committee on Small Territories of the Committee on colonial countries heard three petitioners on 16 and 20 May.⁽²²⁾

On 8 and 9 October,⁽³³⁾ the General Assembly's Fourth Committee heard four petitioners. The United States objected to the Committee's consideration of the question of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, saying that it was not before the Assembly, and that Article 83, paragraph 3, of the Charter specified in detail which bodies should deal with issues relating to strategic Trust Territories.

Petitions and communications

On 6 February, at its sixteenth special session,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Trusteeship Council considered and took decisions on one written communication and 12 written petitions; during its fifty-third session,⁽¹⁹⁾ on nine written communications and 93 written petitions; and on 21 and 26 November, during its seventeenth special session,⁽³¹⁾ on 32 written petitions and three written communications.

Other aspects of the International Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

Under a scholarship programme launched by the General Assembly in 1952,⁽¹⁾ 11 Member States had in past years made scholarships available for students from Trust Territories: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, USSR, Yugoslavia. In a report to the Trusteeship Council covering the period from 21 May 1985 to 12 May 1986, (2) the Secretary-General stated that he had requested up-to-date information, receiving response from two offering States-Poland and the USSR. The latter stated that no inhabitant from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was studying in that country.

In the Council,⁽³⁾ the USSR said that the number of specialists and the level of education in the Trust Territory could be improved if Micronesians had taken advantage of the educational opportunities available to them. The Micronesians were uninformed of such opportunities; none of the offers made by the USSR or other socialist countries had been accepted.

The United States said that Micronesians received educational assistance from several countries as well as various regional and international agencies; however, no scholarship offers had been received from the USSR. The Administering Authority imposed no restrictions on where Micronesians studied, but the tendency was to accept offers from places where courses related to their developmental needs were offered in English.

On 30 May, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report without objection.

Information dissemination

A report of the Secretary-General covering the period from 1 May 1985 to 30 April 1986⁽⁴⁾ described the distribution by the United Nations Department of Public Information of United Nations documents, official records and information materials throughout the Trust Territory. Relevant publications on the activities of the Committee on colonial countries were also distributed. An information officer from the United Nations Information Centre in Tokyo had visited the Territory in November 1985 and reported that material generally arrived on time and was favourably received.

The United States said that information on the United Nations was mailed directly from Fiji, as well as from Tokyo and New York, to government and private addresses throughout the Territory.

On 2 June, the Council,⁽³⁾ without objection, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries

At its 1986 annual session, the Trusteeship Council⁽³⁾ again considered together the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries.

During the debate, the USSR stated that the actions of the Administering Authority contradicted the Charter, the Trusteeship Agreement and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁽⁵⁾

The United Kingdom and the United States said that Article 83 of the Charter made it clear that all functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas would be exercised by the Security Council; hence the Committee on colonial countries had no jurisdiction over the Trust Territory.

Co-operation with CERD and the Decade against racial discrimination

In 1986, the Trusteeship Council⁽³⁾ considered together the question of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) and the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

During the discussion, the USSR said that the Council should co-operate with the Committee and transmit to it all information on Micronesia to ensure that the Administering Authority upheld the basic rights and freedoms of the people.

The United Kingdom, joined by the United States, said that there was no obligation for the Trusteeship Council to co-operate with the Committee; the Charter made it clear that responsibility for the Trust Territory lay with the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council. Further, the United States did not consider that the Decade appropriately belonged on the Council's agenda. France assured the Council that it had witnessed no racial discrimination on visits to the Trust Territory.

On 2 June, the Council⁽³⁾ took note, without objection, of the statements made.

Chapter III

Namibia

Throughout 1986, the United Nations maintained its efforts to achieve independence for Namibia, an illegally occupied Territory and the largest remaining under colonial rule. Activities undertaken by the United Nations Council for Namibia, the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, were therefore aimed at generating the maximum support of the international community for the Namibian people and at ending South Africa's occupation.

Accordingly, the Council held consultations with Member States to consider possible measures to be undertaken in compliance with United Nations resolutions on Namibia, the representation of Namibian interests in international forums, the provision of moral, material and political support to the people and the dissemination of information on the current situation in the Territory.

In March, South Africa proposed that 1 August 1986 be set for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978), embodying the United Nations plan for Namibian independence, provided that agreement was reached before that date on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. Angola pointed out that a number of conditions, agreed to in 1984, had not been fully met and that an abstract indication of a date to mark the resolution's implementation was not sufficient, without an indication of the sequence of complementary steps. The Secretary-General assured South Africa in June that he was ready to begin implementing the United Nations plan on 1 August and reiterated his rejection of linking independence for Namibia with the presence of Cuban troops in Angola. He recalled that the Security Council had also rejected such linkage.

In September, the General Assembly held its fourteenth special session-its third dealing with Namibia-which culminated in the adoption of resolution S-14/1, by which it reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence; demanded that South Africa immediately withdraw its illegal administration, occupation army and police force from Namibia; condemned South Africa for the installation of an interim government in Windhoek; and called on it to desist from linking the independence of Namibia to extraneous issues, such as the presence of Cuban troops in Angola. The Assembly urged the Security Council to exercise its authority and to act decisively against dilatory manœuvres and fraudulent schemes of South Africa in Namibia, through the adoption of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against it.

Later, at its regular 1986 session, the Assembly adopted a series of resolutions on Namibia. By resolution 41/39 A, it decided that the Council for Namibia should proceed to establish its administration in Namibia in 1987; reaffirmed that independence could be achieved only with the full participation of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO); and condemned South Africa for imposing an interim government and for its military buildup. It called on South Africa to desist from linking the independence of Namibia to the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, emphasizing that such linkage was incompatible with Security Council resolution 435(1978) and, in addition to delaying Namibia's decolonization, constituted interference in Angola's internal affairs. It also reaffirmed that Namibia's accession to independence must be with its territorial integrity intact and again urged the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions.

By resolution 41/39 B, the Assembly emphasized that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia were the Namibian people, represented by SWAPO, and South Africa; it rejected all manœuvres aimed at diverting attention from the central issue of decolonization by introducing an East-West confrontation. The work programme of the Council for Namibia was approved with the adoption of resolution 41/39 C. In resolution 41/39 D, the Assembly requested that Council to increase the dissemination of information relating to Namibia.

Further, the Assembly, by resolution 41/39 E, requested the Secretary-General and the President of the Council for Namibia to intensify appeals for more generous contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and decided to allocate temporarily- to the Fund $1.5 million from the regular United Nations budget for 1987.

Earlier, in May, the Economic and Social Council also condemned South Africa's installation of the interim government and denounced the forceful military conscription of Namibian men and women to consolidate oppression in Namibia (resolution 1986/23).

Namibians outside their country continued to receive assistance from various United Nations programmes, financed primarily through voluntary contributions administered by the Fund for Namibia. In 1986, the Fund spent $7.2 million; voluntary contributions by States reached $5.7 million. Funding was also provided from the regular United Nations budget, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and specialized agencies. Three main programmes were operated by the Fund—the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, which acted in relation to the future attainment of independence; and educational, social and relief assistance, dealing with the immediate needs of Namibians in their struggle for independence.

Namibia question

Activities of the UN Council for Namibia. During 1986, the United Nations Council for Namibia continued to act as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, the function assigned by the General Assembly in 1967.⁽¹⁾ Its report to the Assembly on the situation in Namibia and on its activities covered the period from 1 September 1985 to 31 August 1986.⁽²⁾ Later 1986 activities were covered in its 1987 report.⁽³⁾

The Council took part in the meetings of the Security Council from 5 to 13 February to consider the situation in southern Africa (see p. 158). It also participated in the work of other United Nations bodies whenever they dealt with Namibia or related questions. In particular, it took part in meetings of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) and the Special Committee against Apartheid and invited them to its own meetings and events. In addition, it co-operated with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. It also represented Namibia in a number of specialized agencies and other intergovernmental bodies and conferences, in order to derive maximum benefit for the Namibian people from the assistance programmes sponsored by those agencies, and to involve Namibia as actively as possible in the decision-making process.

In accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Council continued to consult with SWAPO in formulating and implementing its programme of work, while SWAPO participated in the work of the Council, its Steering Committee and other subsidiary bodies.

The Council promoted Namibian interests in international forums and represented Namibia in the meetings of the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Telecommunication Union and the International Atomic Energy Agency—all of which had granted full membership to Namibia, represented by the Council.

The Council participated in a series of meetings of OAU, between 25 February and 30 July 1986, and in the meetings and conferences of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, between September 1985 and April 1986, contributing to the elaboration of their decisions on Namibia.

To mobilize international support for Namibia's independence, the Council organized a Seminar on World Action for the Immediate Independence of Namibia (Valletta, Malta, 19-23 May). The Seminar, agreeing that obstacles to independence had been laid by South Africa's intransigence and by certain Western Powers that gave support to South Africa, condemned the policy of constructive engagement and linkage, condemned the continuing plunder of Namibia's resources by South African and Western economic interests, and expressed concern at the massive militarization of Namibia.

On 23 May, the Seminar adopted a Final Communiqué, containing a detailed programme of action for non-governmental organizations (NGOs), government officials, trade unionists, students and journalists and for the Council. The Seminar called for, among other things, the immediate imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa in accordance with Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter and urged nationally elected officials to advance the cause of Namibia's independence by pressing their Governments to expedite the unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978).⁽⁵⁾ It further called on those officials to initiate legislation to promote the adherence of their countries to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, adopted by the Council for Namibia in 1974⁽⁶⁾ (see also p. 953), and to assist it in carrying out its mandate and its programme of assistance, in particular the Nationhood Programme and the United Nations Institute for Namibia (see p. 959).

On 25 May, the Council held its annual meeting to observe Africa Liberation Day and the twenty-third anniversary of OAU. The Council also commemorated Namibia Day on 26 August and, in accordance with a 1976 Assembly resolution,⁽⁷⁾ the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and Their Liberation Movement, SWAPO. In observance of that Week (27-31 October),⁽⁸⁾ the Council held a special meeting on 27 October; messages of solidarity were received from a number of heads of State or Government and Foreign Ministers, as well as various organizations.

Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. Also in pursuance of the General Assembly's 1985 resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Council for Namibia convened an International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia (Vienna, 7-11 July 1986).⁽⁹⁾ It was attended by 349 representatives from 121 countries, representatives of 62 NGOs, representatives of United Nations organs and organizations, national liberation movements recognized by OAU, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and intergovernmental organizations, as well as eminent persons. At the conclusion of its meetings, the Conference adopted by acclamation a Final Document, containing a Declaration and a Programme of Action, which was transmitted by the Council to the Secretary-General on 18 July.⁽¹⁰⁾ Also contained in the Final Document was an appeal for Namibia's immediate independence by the eminent persons attending the Conference (see below).

By the Declaration, the Conference, among other things, condemned the South African régime for its continued occupation of Namibia and its repression of the Namibian people and demanded an immediate end to those policies. It also condemned South Africa for the militarization of the Territory, for using Namibia as a launching pad for aggression and subversion against neighbouring States and for imposing an interim government in Namibia. The Conference expressed its conviction that the United Nations plan for Namibia as embodied in Security Council resolutions 385(1976)⁽¹¹⁾ and 435(1978)⁽⁵⁾ constituted the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the question and called for its immediate implementation without pre-condition or modification. It condemned, in this connection, attempts by the United States and South Africa to establish a linkage between the independence of Namibia and extraneous issues, such as the presence of Cuban forces in Angola. The Conference rejected attempts to distort the question of Namibia by portraying it as part of a global East-West confrontation rather than one of decolonization that must be resolved in accordance with the United Nations Charter and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁽¹²⁾

Under the Programme of Action, the Conference, among other things, called on States to exert every effort towards the immediate and unconditional implementation of resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), and appealed to the United States and the United Kingdom to reconsider their opposition to the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions, the most effective peaceful means of forcing South Africa to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia.

The Conference also called for increased support for programmes of aid for Namibians, for expanded efforts by NGOs and for an intensified public information campaign on behalf of the Namibian people.

Appeal by eminent persons. On 9 July, seven eminent persons invited to the Conference issued an Appeal for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, ⁽¹⁰⁾ in which they stated that the only peaceful measure available to the international community to bring about independence based on resolution 435(1978) was the imposition of economic sanctions, and that those refusing to do so became parties to South Africa's defiance of the United Nations and to the repression in Namibia. The Conference took note of the Appeal with appreciation.

Missions. In further response to the Assembly's 1985 resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Council sent missions of consultation in 1986 to Belgium and the Netherlands (5-8 May) and to the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, France and the United Kingdom (13-23 May) to consult on new initiatives to achieve Namibia's independence.

In Belgium, the mission took note of measures adopted by the European Community (EC) on 10 September 1985, which included a ban on domestic oil sales, on new nuclear co-operation agreements, on arms transfer to paramilitary forces and on the sale of electronic equipment for military use, and the discouragement of scientific and cultural activities in South Africa. The mission stressed the need for more comprehensive sanctions. Agreeing that the measures did not go far enough, Belgium maintained that diplomatic relations with South Africa gave the possibility of exercising some pressure on the régime. Questioned about the accuracy of reports that, in August 1985, a shipment of 400 containers of grenades was sent from the Belgian port of Zeebrugge to South Africa, in contravention of a 1977 Security Council resolution,⁽¹³⁾ Belgium replied that it was investigating the matter jointly with the Netherlands and pointed out that Belgium was the first EC member to end the exchange of military attachés with South Africa. In connection with information that the 50 per cent State-owned Belgian company Synatom could be acquiring Namibian uranium, in contravention of Decree No. 1,⁽⁶⁾ Belgium said its information was that Synatom imported only gold from South Africa.

The Netherlands reiterated its rejection of the linkage question as confirmed in the joint communiqué⁽¹⁴⁾ of the meeting of Foreign Ministers of the front-line States and EC (Lusaka, Zambia, 3 and 4 February), as well as in meetings with the President of SWAPO on 4 February. The Netherlands agreed that the EC measures did not go far enough to exert the necessary pressure on South Africa and informed the mission that they would be closely monitored and assessed. Regarding an oil embargo against South Africa, the mission was informed that the September 1985 EC measure to prohibit the sale of domestic and imported crude oil was as far as the Netherlands was prepared to go, but that it wished to go further at the multilateral level.

The Federal Republic of Germany indicated that it might support a meeting of the Western contact group (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, United Kingdom, United States) which, it hoped, would reactivate the group's involvement in the peace endeavours and would result in setting the implementation process in motion again. The mission expressed concern at the establishment in the Federal Republic of so-called Namibia information offices by South Africa and requested the Government to discourage their installation. The Federal Republic of Germany responded that, though not approving such activities, it could not interfere as long as they were within the framework of the legal system.

Italy, stating that it would implement sanctions if they were imposed by the Security Council, cautioned that sanctions might harm the people they were aimed at protecting. It said it did not support armed struggle, but valued highly the political contribution being made by SWAPO towards the liberation of the Namibian people.

France said it had suspended its participation in the contact group because it believed that the group had completed its work, and the linkage issue prevented it from achieving concrete results. With regard to SWAPO's armed struggle, France stated that it supported a more peaceful solution.

The United Kingdom informed the mission that it also rejected the linkage of Namibia's independence to the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. However, the presence of those forces could not be ignored and that issue should be resolved. It did not favour sanctions since it believed they would hurt the people whom they were trying to protect.

Another mission consulted lawyers in the Netherlands and parliamentarians and NGOs in the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and Belgium (5-11 February). Among those consulted were the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid, the Holland Committee on Southern Africa, the Anti-Apart/& Movement and the Namibia Support Committee. These consultations were aimed at exchanging views on activities that would further expose the plunder of Namibia's natural resources and at discussing with the lawyers the status of their preparation for instituting domestic legal proceedings in the Netherlands under Decree No. 1 (6) After satisfying itself that good progress was being made by the lawyers, the Council decided to begin legal action in the Netherlands against those engaged in trade in Namibian products. At the conclusion of its visit, the mission recommended, among other things, that the Council support and assist information and publicity campaigns on a broader scale throughout Western Europe and North America, particularly in view of the disinformation campaign launched by South Africa. It also recommended that the Council intensify and maintain regular contact and follow-up with the Commission of EC and the European Parliament.

Communications. During 1986, a number of communications concerning Namibia were sent to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council. (See also p. 162.)

On 3 March,⁽¹⁵⁾ South Africa proposed that 1 August be set as the date to begin implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978),⁽⁵⁾ provided a firm and satisfactory agreement was reached before that date on the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. On 13 March,⁽¹⁶⁾ Angola referred to its November 1984 five-point platform for negotiating a peaceful agreement in south-western Africa⁽¹⁷⁾ and the January 1984 Mindelo (Cape Verde) agreement between itself and the United States, specifying that future action would include the disengagement of South African forces from Angola, cessation of aggression against Angola and support to the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola, cessation of hostilities between South Africa and SWAPO in Namibia, announcement of the date for the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and the announcement of the gradual withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. Angola said that none of those necessary conditions had been fully met and a mere abstract indication of a date to mark the resolution's implementation was insufficient, as it did not indicate the sequence of complementary steps and was conditional on a prior agreement on Cuban troop withdrawal, in contradiction of the Mindelo agreement. The Secretary-General, in a letter to South Africa of 12 June,⁽¹⁸⁾ indicated that he could not accept any linkage between the independence of Namibia and the presence of Cuban troops in Angola and recalled that the Security Council had rejected that linkage. He stated that he was ready to begin implementing the United Nations plan on 1 August 1986, without pre-conditions. On 28 July,⁽¹⁹⁾ South Africa said that the presence in Angola of massive Cuban expeditionary forces constituted a serious threat to the safety of the Territory, making free and fair elections impossible; despite the fact that the Angolan Government had thwarted the prospects of peace, South Africa remained ready to discuss the question of Cuban troop withdrawal.

The speedy, unconditional implementation of resolution 435(1978) was demanded by the Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Countries Having French as a Common Language (Paris, 17-19 February).⁽²⁰⁾ The same demand was put forward jointly by Angola, Cuba and the USSR (31 January),⁽²¹⁾ a meeting of the Presidents of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe (Luanda, Angola, 28-30 April),⁽²²⁾ Angola and the USSR in another joint statement (10 May)⁽²³⁾ and the Syrian Arab Republic (26 October).⁽²⁴⁾

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (21 March),⁽²⁵⁾ Saudi Arabia (22 July)⁽²⁶⁾ and India (17 July)⁽²⁷⁾ condemned South Africa's apartheid policies in Namibia.

On 5 May,⁽²⁸⁾ Morocco transmitted the final documents of the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, 6-10 January), including a resolution on Namibia by which South Africa was condemned for its apartheid policy, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its repeated aggression against the front-line States. The Ministers rejected South Africa's insistence on Cuban troop withdrawal as a pre-condition for Namibian independence and urged the Security Council to impose sanctions against South Africa.

In a 3 April communiqué,⁽²⁹⁾ Mozambique and the USSR called on South Africa to halt its aggression and to decolonize Namibia without imposing any conditions irrelevant to a Namibian settlement.

India conveyed on 15 May⁽³⁰⁾ the final documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April), reaffirming the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of their liberation struggle by all means available. The Ministers expressed dismay about the policy of constructive engagement and urged the United States to abandon it. South Africa was condemned for its continued illegal occupation; its militarization and use of the Territory for acts of aggression against neighbouring States, particularly Angola; and the installation in Namibia of a so-called interim government. They rejected the linkage concept, demanded the immediate release of Namibian political prisoners and urged States to increase all types of assistance to the liberation struggle.

The USSR, on 15 June,⁽³¹⁾ and the Foreign Ministers of the members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, on 23 June,⁽³²⁾ called for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa to eliminate the apartheid system and the illegal occupation of Namibia.

A resolution on Namibia, adopted by the International Seminar on the Struggle for Peace and Progress (Addis Ababa, 7-9 June), was transmitted by Ethiopia on 25 June. ⁽³³⁾ The Seminar condemned South Africa for its continued sabotage of the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and for its imposition of a puppet government.

In final documents adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU at its twenty-second ordinary session (Addis Ababa, 28-30 July, transmitted by Algeria on 25 September, ⁽³⁴⁾ the Assembly appealed to the international community to co-ordinate action for the independence of Namibia, setting out a series of measures in that regard, such as sanctions and provision of aid to liberation movements, while at the same time rejecting so-called linkage and constructive engagement.

India, on 26 August,⁽³⁵⁾ the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 2 October),⁽³⁶⁾ and Brazil, on 27 October,⁽³⁷⁾ reaffirmed their full support to the struggle of the Namibian people to achieve independence.

Zimbabwe, on 30 September,⁽³⁸⁾ forwarded a special appeal for the immediate independence of Namibia, adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September), urging the United States to abandon its linkage policy and urging it and the United Kingdom not to veto sanctions.

In its final communiqué, the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the Forty-first Session of the General Assembly (New York, 2 October)⁽³⁹⁾ demanded the immediate and unconditional implementation of resolution 435(1978) and urged the Security Council to apply comprehensive sanctions against South Africa.

Report of the Secretary-General. Two 1985 General Assembly resolutions on Namibia, one on the situation in the Territory⁽⁴⁰⁾ and the other on Security Council resolution 435(1978),⁽⁴¹⁾ contained a request for the Secretary-General to report in 1986 on their implementation. Thus, the Secretary-General, on 20 September,⁽⁴²⁾ forwarded to the Assembly replies received from Governments on action taken or envisaged by them towards such implementation. Replies were received from Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ireland, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, Pakistan, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August, the Committee on colonial countries adopted a decision⁽⁴³⁾ by which it reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands; condemned South Africa for its continued illegal occupation; rejected South Africa's manoeuvres to bring about a sham independence through fraudulent constitutional and political schemes; condemned persistent attempts by the United States, South Africa and other States to link Namibian independence with extraneous issues, particularly the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola; demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners; rejected the policy of so-called constructive engagement; and requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's Namibia policy.

The decision was transmitted to the Security Council on 13 August⁽⁴⁴⁾ by the Committee's Chairman, drawing the Council's attention to those paragraphs which reaffirmed that resolution 435(1978) remained the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question; called for the scrupulous observance of Council resolution 558(1984),⁽⁴⁵⁾ requesting Member States to refrain from importing armaments from South Africa; and recommended that the Council impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

In another 11 August decision⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee condemned South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its forced recruitment of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to reinforce its illegal occupation, its use of Namibian territory for aggression against independent African States and its forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes. It condemned the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain countries, as constituting a violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in 1977.⁽¹³⁾ The Committee demanded the dismantling of all military bases in Namibia and the immediate cessation of the war of oppression against the Namibian people, and urged Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to refugees forced to flee from Namibia and South Africa into neighbouring States.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

The Commission on Human Rights, by a 28 February resolution on human rights in Namibia⁽⁴⁷⁾ reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence and declared that South Africa's illegal occupation constituted an act of aggression against the Namibian people.

In another resolution of 28 February, on human rights in South Africa,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Commission renewed its request to South Africa to allow an expert group to investigate conditions in South African and Namibian prisons.

Also on 28 February⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Commission condemned the increased political, economic and military assistance by Western countries and Israel to South Africa because it constituted a hostile action against the people of Namibia and South Africa. It demanded that transnational corporations (TNCs) engaged in exploiting the resources of Namibia immediately refrain from any new investment or activities in Namibia and withdraw from it.

By a 10 March resolution on the situation in southern Africa⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Commission condemned the continued violation of the human rights of peoples under colonial domination, the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia and South Africa's attempts to dismember the Territory, and declared that this occupation constituted an act of aggression against the Namibian people and a threat to international peace and security.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1986/23 by recorded vote.

Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Gravely concerned by the delay in the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 concerning the withdrawal of South Africa's illegal administration from Namibia and the holding of elections under the supervision of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned by the perpetual suffering of Namibian women under the illegal occupation of the racist South African regime backed by the allies, and further concerned by the utilization of Namibian territory as a springboard for attacking and destabilizing neighbouring States,

1. Condemns, in no uncertain terms, the racist regime of South Africa for its installation of a so-called interim government at Windhoek;

2. Denounces the forceful conscription of Namibian men and women between the ages of 17 and 55 years into the racist army in order to consolidate and facilitate widespread repression throughout the country;

3. Rejects South Africa's insistence on linking the independence of Namibia to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola;

4. Demands that South Africa refrain from using Namibia as a base to infiltrate Angola and other independent neighbouring countries;

5. Calls upon all women of the world to support and assist all the bodies struggling to put an end to colonialism in Namibia.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/23

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 44-1-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) by recorded vote (44-1-7), 20 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom.

Explaining its abstention, the United Kingdom stated that, since the resolution had no direct implications specific to women, it should more appropriately be dealt with elsewhere; such resolutions increased the politicization of the Commission on the Status of Women (which had submitted the draft to the Council) and diminished its role as a focal organ for issues specific to women. A similar position was taken by the Federal Republic of Germany.

Related resolutions: ESC 1986/1, 1986/24, 1986/25.

Special session of the General Assembly on Namibia

As decided in 1985,⁽⁵¹⁾ the General Assembly held its fourteenth special session, the third devoted to the question of Namibia, in 1986. The first such session was held in 1967,⁽⁵²⁾ when the Territory was referred to as South West Africa, and the second in 1978.⁽⁵³⁾ At the 1986 session, which ran from 17 to 20 September, the Assembly had before it the 1986 report of the Committee on colonial countries,⁽⁵⁴⁾ as well as the report of the July International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, containing its Declaration and Programme of Action⁽⁵⁾ (see p. 925).

Also before the Assembly were several communications addressed to the Secretary-General or the Assembly President.

On 17 September,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the German Democratic Republic stated that the continued imperialist collaboration with South Africa encouraged that régime to carry on with its policies, aimed at retaining Namibia for exploitation by TNCs and using its territory for aggression against independent African States. It favoured comprehensive sanctions to force South Africa to obey international law and supported SWAPO's liberation struggle as part of the world-wide quest for peace, security and the elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid.

On 18 September,⁽⁵⁶⁾ South Africa stated that it had done its utmost for the people of Namibia, who deserved to take their rightful place in the community of nations through a process which would reflect their wishes without intimidation from any quarter. To be accused of exploiting the Territory's natural resources was ironic, since South Africa was annually requested to make up the shortfall in the Territory's exchequer. South Africa believed that the greatest immediate threat to the region was foreign intervention. It was prepared to play its part in establishing peace and stability in southern Africa and to co-operate fully with its neighbours. South Africa called on other countries of the region to assist in making that possible.

A 19 September message from the Commonwealth Secretary-General⁽⁵⁷⁾ said the task of the special session was to compel South Africa to comply fully with efforts to implement resolution 435(1978).

A 19 September letter⁽⁵⁸⁾ from the Acting President of the Council for Namibia transmitted a statement by 18 NGOs invited by the Council to participate in a meeting held the preceding day. A 16 September statement of the Lutheran World Federation was also transmitted on 19 September⁽⁵⁹⁾ by the Acting President.

On 17 September, the Assembly decided to consider at its regular (forty-first) 1986 session a consolidated report by the Credentials Committee on the credentials of representatives to that session and to that on Namibia. At both sessions, statements were made in the Committee regarding the credentials of several delegations (see p. 380).

During the debate, which took place in seven meetings, the Assembly heard statements by 90 speakers, including more than 20 Foreign Ministers. It also heard statements by its President and the Secretary-General.

The Assembly President pointed out that in recent months the situation in and around Namibia had deteriorated further. The Territory had been subjected to increasing militarization, exploitation and oppression and was being used as a springboard for aggression and subversion against neighbouring States. He appealed to all concerned to co-operate constructively to end that intolerable situation, adding that Security Council resolution 435(1978) had been internationally accepted as a framework for Namibia's peaceful transition to independence. The main remaining obstacle to independence was South Africa's refusal to fulfil its obligation under the United Nations Charter and to implement that resolution, he said.

The Secretary-General said the United Nations plan for Namibia, embodied in resolution 435(1978), had long been accepted by all sides but there had been an inordinate delay in its implementation because of the raising of extraneous and irrelevant issues. He reviewed his activities aimed at implementing the resolution, stating that all outstanding issues had been resolved but that it was not possible to proceed because South Africa continued to insist on the linkage pre-condition. The continued obstruction of the process leading towards independence, he said, not only prolonged the suffering of Namibians but also aggravated the turmoil and instability in the region as a whole.

The Congo, speaking on behalf of OAU, said there was an alarming situation in Namibia and South Africa, characterized by violence, the massacre of innocent people and material destruction. Steps undertaken by South Africa during recent years had confirmed its intention to perpetuate the colonial status of Namibia. When the 1978 resolution was adopted, there had been some justification for hope, but now the international community was almost back where it had begun. Resolution 435(1978) was, however, at least currently, the only acceptable basis for a just settlement of the problem. Its implementation could not be linked to extraneous considerations and was not part of the East-West conflict. The Congo said that South Africa was able to maintain its occupation of Namibia because of the support by certain Western and other countries and it called on those permanent Security Council members that had prevented the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa to reconsider their position. It urged the international community to support the struggle of the people of Namibia and to grant economic and technical assistance to the front-line countries—a group of States of southern Africa which shared security concerns: Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

The Acting President of the Council for Namibia noted that when the Secretary-General could report that all outstanding issues pertaining to implementation of the United Nations plan had been resolved, South Africa had insisted on maintaining its occupation, using the linkage issue as a pretext. Therefore, the debate about sanctions had grown in intensity with the Council for Namibia consistently calling on the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Two of its permanent members had, however, prevented that body from responding. Meanwhile, the natural resources of the Territory were being plundered by foreign enterprises, and those who dared to resist the racist domination were subjected to harassment, persecution, arrest, detention without trial and torture. The international community should exert maximum pressure for the implementation of the 1978 resolution by a specific date.

Zimbabwe, speaking for the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, supported the positions taken by OAU and the Council for Namibia and blamed the lack of progress towards the implementation of the resolution on the insistence by the United States that Cuban forces should be withdrawn from Angola before any further moves could be made towards Namibian independence. In this situation, Zimbabwe argued, it was important to bring the plight of the Namibian people to the fore of the international community's conscience and to increase international support for SWAPO. Noting that some progress had been made regarding the imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa, Zimbabwe said much was still to be done in order to secure mandatory and comprehensive sanctions against the régime.

SWAPO, which spoke in accordance with the Assembly's 1976 decision to invite it to participate in the Assembly's work as an observer,⁽⁶⁾ criticized the politics of eternal postponement of Namibia's independence and the introduction of the linkage pre-condition as causing untold suffering to the Namibian people, whose only demand was freedom. Meanwhile, the plunder of Namibia's natural resources by Western Powers and their TNCs continued. Putting the Namibian question in an East-West context had to be rejected, SWAPO said, as had the installation of an interim government by South Africa in Namibia. There were only two parties to the conflict, the Namibian people, represented by SWAPO, and the racist régime of South Africa. Namibians would have liked to become independent peacefully. However, as long as the South African occupation army remained, SWAPO would have no qualms about calling for support to intensify the armed struggle for Namibia's liberation.

During the debate, almost all speakers reaffirmed that the United Nations plan for Namibia, as spelt out in resolution 435(1978), was the only internationally accepted framework for achieving independence and self-determination in Namibia. Those speakers pointed out that even South Africa had accepted the resolution and that the Secretary-General had reported that all outstanding issues pertaining to its implementation had been resolved. The only remaining obstacle was the linkage pre-condition, an issue that was rejected as extraneous and irrelevant by most speakers.

Angola said there was no connection between Namibia's independence and the presence of the Cuban forces in Angola, but there was one between Namibia's illegal occupation and South Africa's aggression against Angola because Pretoria used Namibia for such attacks. Cuba quoted a statement by its President to the effect that the gradual and progressive withdrawal of Cuban combatants could begin when resolution 435(1978) was implemented, the threats of aggression against Angola had ceased and the war in Angola had ended; that withdrawal would be a sovereign decision by Angola and Cuba.

Most speakers called on the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa in order to compel it to co-operate in implementing the 1978 resolution. Such sanctions were seen as the best hope for a peaceful solution of the Namibian problem.

Turkey felt that the Council should take the initiative and prove its readiness to resort to coercive measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. Colombia favoured using the peaceful means at the United Nations disposal. Australia said that, if South Africa continued to resist, the Council should consider appropriate measures under the Charter. Brazil called for specific sanctions. Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium and Japan said they had taken unilateral steps against South Africa.

Ghana stated that the use of military force would be ideal, but, failing that, comprehensive economic sanctions should be adopted. Since the Security Council was prevented from doing so, Ghana offered a list of measures the Assembly could adopt: an arms and oil embargo, severing of air and sea lines, a boycott of TNCs active in Namibia and a call on workers not to handle imports from or exports to South Africa. Trinidad and Tobago, believing that certain specific sanctions would have considerable impact, called for a mandatory oil embargo, a ban on imports of South African bulk commodities and the severing of air links with South Africa. In the view of Bangladesh, sanctions should cover the following broad areas: military and nuclear equipment and technology; supply and transport of oil and gas; and investments, loans and financial concessions.

India, supported by Bhutan, suggested that the Council set a firm deadline for the implementation of resolution 435(1978). Bolivia proposed that the Assembly give the Secretary-General a specific mandate to begin implementation immediately and, to assist him, the Assembly should establish a United Nations operational force for Namibia; once that force had taken control of the Territory, its units could be transferred to the United Nations assistance group for the transition period envisaged in the 1978 resolution.

In Albania's view, the peaceful solutions presented by the United States and other Western Powers were not aimed at ending occupation and racial discrimination but at orienting the issue into the blind alley of compromises, thus enabling South Africa to buy more time for military action against the Namibian people while posing at the international level as favouring a peaceful solution.

Many countries condemned the exploitation of Namibia's material resources by foreign corporations. Among them were Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Chile, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Finland, Guyana, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Mexico, Mongolia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Thailand, the USSR, Viet Nam, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Most pointed out that such exploitation violated Decree No. 1 of the Council for Namibia.⁽⁶⁾ The Council's decision to begin legal proceedings in the Netherlands based on the Decree (see p. 926) was widely supported.

The vast majority of Member States rejected South Africa's installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia. That government had no popular mandate, violated resolution 435(1978) and had to be abolished, they said. Most speakers recalled that the Security Council had condemned its installation, declared it null and void and demanded that South Africa rescind it.⁽⁶⁾ Among those rejecting any attempt at an internal settlement of the Namibian question were Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Democratic Kampuchea, Finland, Ghana, Guatemala, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Nepal, Norway, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, the United Kingdom (speaking on behalf of the 12 EC members), the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia.

Numerous countries condemned South Africa's use of Namibia as a launching pad for aggressive and subversive acts against neighbouring States. Among the delegations holding that view were Angola, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cameroon (speaking for the central African States), Cuba, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Egypt (speaking for the northern African States), Ghana, Iraq, Japan, Mexico, Norway, Panama, Romania, Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom (for EC) and the United Republic of Tanzania; most of them also called for increased assistance and support for the front-line States. Additional support for SWAPO was called for by Albania, Cameroon (for the central African States), China, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt (for the northern African States), Finland, Ghana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iraq, Nigeria, the USSR, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Some States were concerned about the territorial integrity of a future independent Namibia. Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bulgaria, Chile, Colombia, the Congo, Iraq, Kuwait, Mexico, Panama, Thailand, and Trinidad and Tobago pointed out that Namibia must include Walvis Bay and Namibia's offshore islands.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 September, at its final (seventh) plenary meeting, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution S-14/1.

Question of Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Namibia at a special session,

Reaffirming that Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved in terms of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly, in particular resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967,

Gravely concerned that, twenty years after the termination by the General Assembly of the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia, the racist régime continues its illegal occupation of the Territory in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Declaring that the illegal occupation of Namibia by racist South Africa, its brutal repression of the Namibian people and its repeated acts of aggression against and destabilization of neighbouring sovereign States, including from the Territory of Namibia, constitute a breach of international peace and security,

Gravely concerned at the use of the Territory of Namibia by the racist Pretoria régime as a springboard of aggression against and destabilization of front-line States, particularly the People's Republic of Angola,

Stressing the solemn responsibility of the international community to support fully the Namibian people in their just and legitimate liberation struggle by all available means, including armed struggle, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative,

Recognizing that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the launching of the armed struggle by the South West Africa People's Organization against racist South Africa's colonial occupation,

Reaffirming the mandate of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until the Territory achieves independence, and emphasizing that the activities of the United Nations Council for Namibia, undertaken in close co-operation with the South West Africa People's Organization, should be fully supported by all Governments, specialized agencies and international organizations so as to enable it to implement its mandate,

Gravely concerned at the rapid depletion of the natural resources of Namibia, which are the inviolable heritage of its people,

Deeply concerned that the Security Council has been prevented from adopting appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, as the only remaining peaceful means of implementing Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976 and 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, by the repeated vetoes of two Western permanent members of the Council,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General to the effect that all outstanding issues pertaining to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) were resolved when agreement was reached on the electoral system in November 1985,

Taking into consideration the final documents of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, the twenty-second ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa from 28 to 30 July 1986, and the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, including the special appeal made by the Conference on the question of Namibia,

Having heard the statement of the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until genuine independence is achieved,

Having heard the statement of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people,

Having heard the statements of the representatives of the Chairmen of the Organization of African Unity and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence in an untruncated territory including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and all adjacent offshore islands in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as the subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and the Security Council;

2. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its persistent refusal to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, thus violating the principles of the Charter and defying the authority of the United Nations;

3. Demands once again that the apartheid régime of South Africa immediately and unconditionally withdraw its illegal administration, occupation army and police force from Namibia;

4. Calls upon the United Nations Council for Namibia to take immediate practical measures to establish its administration in Namibia in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967 and 40/97 A of 13 December 1985;

5. Strongly condemns once again the racist régime of South Africa for the installation of the so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985 and rejects as illegal, null and void all such fraudulent constitutional and political schemes by which the Pretoria régime attempts to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia;

6. Reaffirms its full support for the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 3111(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973 and 31/146 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976, and calls upon Member States to render it increased and sustained support and material, financial, military and other assistance to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

7. Upholds the legitimacy of the struggle of the Namibian people by every means at their disposal, including armed struggle, to repel South Africa's aggression and to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia;

8. Commends the South West Africa People's Organization for the exemplary leadership provided by it to the Namibian people for over a quarter of a century and for the sacrifices made in the field of battle;

9. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide assistance on a priority basis, within their spheres of competence, to the Namibian people through the South West Africa People's Organization;

10. Emphasizes once again that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa, which illegally occupies the Territory;

11. Reiterates its call upon the international community to extend, as a matter of urgency, all support and assistance to the front-line States in order to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity against the repeated acts of aggression by South Africa;

12. Reaffirms that the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, contained in Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), is the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia, and demands its immediate implementation without pre-condition or modification;

13. Calls upon South Africa to desist from linking the independence of Namibia to irrelevant and extraneous issues such as the presence of Cuban troops in Angola as such linkage is incompatible with the relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978);

14. Strongly rejects the policies of "constructive engagement" and "linkage", which have served to encourage the racist régime of South Africa to continue its illegal occupation of Namibia, and calls for their abandonment so that United Nations resolutions and decisions on the question of Namibia can be implemented;

15. Urges the Security Council to exercise its authority with regard to the implementation of its resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983 and 566(1985) of 19 June 1985 and to act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of racist South Africa in Namibia, through the adoption of comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter;

16. Reiterates that comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter are the most effective peaceful measures to ensure the compliance of racist South Africa with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia;

17. Strongly urges once again those States that have not done so to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with South Africa in order to isolate it totally, politically, economically, militarily and culturally;

18. Condemns the plunder by South Africa and other foreign economic interests of the natural resources of Namibia in contravention of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

19. Calls upon the Security Council to convene urgently to take action for the immediate and unconditional implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, endorsed by Council resolution 435(1978);

20. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his personal commitment to the independence of Namibia and for his efforts aimed at the implementation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urges him to continue those efforts;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as appropriate, but not later than 31 December 1986, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution S-14/1

20 September 1986 Meeting 7 126-0-24 (recorded vote)

41-nation draft (A/S-14/L.1 & Add.1), as amended; agenda item 6.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 14th special session; plenary 1-7.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Prior to the vote on the text as a whole, separate recorded votes were requested on portions of paragraphs 13 and 14. The Assembly acceded to that request by 62 votes to 55, with 20 abstentions. The President then ruled that, following past practice, the decisions under consideration would fall under a special rule^a of the Assembly's rules of procedure and therefore required a two-thirds majority.

^a Special rule F of annex III of the Assembly's rules of procedure states: "Decisions of the General Assembly on questions relating to reports and petitions concerning the Territory of South West Africa shall be regarded as important questions within the meaning of Article 18, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations."

Thus, the Assembly voted on whether to retain the phrase "the United States Administration and" after the words "Calls upon" in paragraph 13. The vote was 65 to 48, with 24 abstentions. As the two-thirds majority was not achieved, the phrase was deleted. The second vote was on retaining the phrase "pursued by the present United States Administration" after the word "linkage" in paragraph 14. It resulted in a vote of 60 to 48, with 30 abstentions. Consequently, the phrase was deleted.

In explanation of vote, the United States rejected accusations that it was responsible for lack of progress by linking the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola to the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and recalled that Angola itself, in its November 1984 platform proposal,⁽¹⁷⁾ implicitly accepted the principle that Namibian independence could be achieved only in the context of Cuban troop withdrawal from Angolan territory.

Iceland, speaking for the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden), said they could not accept formulations that implied United Nations endorsement of the use of armed struggle or that called for material or military assistance to such struggle. They deplored the inappropriate singling out of individual or groups of countries as responsible for South Africa's actions. Similar views were expressed by Australia, Austria and New Zealand. Iceland added that the Nordic countries had reservations on formulations which failed to take into account that only the Security Council could adopt decisions binding upon Member States, or which could prejudice the outcome of the political process leading to the independence of Namibia.

The United Kingdom, speaking for EC, regretted that some elements in the text had made unanimous approval impossible. Among those were the designation of one political group as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people; calls for military assistance to SWAPO; support for the armed struggle; selective and arbitrary attacks against Member States; and phrases that did not recognize that the Security Council alone was authorized to take binding decisions.

Oman said that, although it abstained in the vote on paragraphs 13 and 14 because of the naming of the United States and because of the strong language of paragraph 14 in particular, it had expressed its full support for Namibia by voting for the resolution as a whole. Mexico spoke in like manner. Togo also objected to any condemnation or reference to specific countries, as did Malawi which added that it was reluctant to support paragraphs 15, 16 and 17, mentioning mandatory sanctions.

The Bahamas said it had voted in favour of the original texts of paragraphs 13 and 14, as it felt that the concepts of linkage and constructive engagement mentioned therein were major obstacles to the freedom and independence of Namibia. But it also reiterated opposition to name-calling or selective singling out of any country and reluctance to support concepts of armed struggle and military assistance. That view was also shared by Argentina. Botswana and Lesotho, although supporting the resolution, wished to record their inability to implement any sanctions against South Africa. Canada said its abstention was for technical and procedural reasons connected with its membership of the Western contact group.

Consideration at the General Assembly's regular session and related activities

As in previous years, the Namibia question also received the close attention of the General Assembly at its regular session. The Assembly adopted five resolutions on the subject (41/39 A-E). Two of these (41/39 A and B) concerned the situation in the Territory. One (41/39 C) dealt with the work programme of the Council for Namibia, another (41/39 D) with information programmes supporting Namibian independence, and another (41/39 E) with the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November 1986, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/39 A by recorded vote.

Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966, by which it terminated the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia and placed the Territory under the direct responsibility of the United Nations,

Recalling further its resolution 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, by which it established the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Having examined also the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling further other resolutions and decisions declaring the illegality of the continued occupation of Namibia by South Africa, in particular Security Council resolutions 284(1970) of 29 July 1970 and 301(1971) of 20 October 1971, and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971,

Bearing in mind that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the termination of the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia by the General Assembly, and expressing its grave concern that, in the period of time that has elapsed, South Africa has continued its illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of resolutions and decisions of the Assembly,

Recalling also its resolutions 3111(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973 and 31/146 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976, by which, inter alia, it recognized the South West Africa People's Organization as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and granted observer status to it,

Recalling further its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981 and 36/121 B of 10 December 1981, by which it called upon States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with South Africa in order to isolate it totally, politically, economically, militarily and culturally,

Taking note of debates held in the Security Council from 13 to 15 November 1985 calling for the imposition of mandatory selective sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as those held in the Council from 5 to 13 February 1986 and on 22 May 1986 on the situation in southern Africa,

Welcoming the special communique and the final communique, adopted at the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the Fortieth Session of the General Assembly, held in New York on 1 October 1985, the Final Political Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, the communique adopted by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on 25 November 1985 regarding the situation in southern Africa following the repeal of the Clark Amendment by the United States Congress, the Political Declaration adopted at the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 16 to 19 April 1986, the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the Forty-first Session of the General Assembly, held in New York on 2 October 1986, the final documents of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, the Final Communique of the Seminar on World Action for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, held at Valletta from 19 to 23 May 1986, the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, the Programme of Action on Namibia and the Appeal for the Immediate Independence of Namibia issued by the eminent persons participating in the Conference, the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 26 July 1986, on the refusal of a Government to impose sanctions on South Africa, and the Declaration adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 28 to 30 July 1986, on the involvement of a Government in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Angola,

Recalling the debates held at its special session on the question of Namibia and resolution S-14/1 of 20 September 1986 adopted at that session,

Strongly reiterating that the continuing illegal and colonial occupation of Namibia by South Africa, in defiance of repeated resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people and a challenge to the authority of the United Nations, which has direct responsibility for Namibia until independence,

Stressing the solemn responsibility of the international community to take all effective measures in support of the Namibian people in their liberation struggle under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Noting that 1986 marks the twenty-sixth anniversary of the creation of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Reaffirming its full support for the armed struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, and recognizing that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the launching of the armed struggle by the South West Africa People's Organization against South Africa's colonial occupation,

Indignant at South Africa's persistent refusal to comply with resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983 and 566(1985) of 19 June 1985, and at its manoeuvres aimed at perpetuating its illegal occupation of Namibia and its brutal exploitation of the Namibian people,

Deeply concerned at the decision of the European Economic Community not to extend its economic sanctions imposed against South Africa on 16 September 1986 to Namibia, which is illegally occupied by the racist regime of South Africa,

Deploping South Africa's continued intransigence and insistence on irrelevant and unacceptable pre-conditions to the independence of Namibia, its attempts to bypass the United Nations and its designs aimed at perpetuating its illegal occupation of the Territory through the establishment of puppet political institutions,

Deeply concerned at South Africa's increasing militarization of Namibia, the forced conscription of Namibians, the creation of tribal armies, including the so-called South West Africa Territorial Forces, and the use of aggression against neighbouring States,

Strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for developing a nuclear capability for military and aggressive purposes,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued occupation of parts of southern Angola by South African troops, which has been facilitated by the support extended to the racist regime and to bandits of Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola to destabilize Angola,

Expressing its strong condemnation of South Africa's use of the Namibian territory as a springboard for its continuing acts of aggression against independent African States, particularly Angola, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe, resulting in loss of human life and destruction of economic infrastructures,

Reaffirming that the resources of Namibia are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the illegal colonial regime of South Africa, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, and Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, is illegal and encourages the occupation regime to be even more intransigent and defiant,

Recalling the decision of the United Nations Council for Namibia of 2 May 1985 to initiate legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States against corporations or individuals involved in the exploitation, transport, processing or purchase of Namibia's natural resources, as part of its efforts to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,

Deeply deploring the continued collaboration between certain States and South Africa in the political, military, economic and nuclear fields, in disregard of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Deeply concerned at the continued assistance rendered to the racist Pretoria regime by certain international organizations and institutions, particularly the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in disregard of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Indignant at the continuing arbitrary imprisonment and detention of leaders, members and supporters of the South West Africa People's Organization, and the killing, torture and murder of innocent Namibians, as well as other inhuman measures by the illegal occupation regime designed to intimidate the Namibian people and to destroy their determination to fulfil their legitimate aspirations for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

Noting with grave concern that the Security Council has been prevented, on account of the vetoes cast by two of its Western permanent members, from carrying out its responsibility under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Commending the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Endorses the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, and urges the international community to implement them;

3. Takes note of the important debates held in the Security Council from 13 to 15 November 1985 on the question of Namibia;

4. Further takes note of Security Council resolution 566(1985) by which the Council, inter alia, condemned South Africa for its installation of a so-called interim government in Namibia and further condemned that regime for its obstruction of the implementation of Council resolution 435(1978) by insisting on conditions contrary to the provisions of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia as embodied in that resolution;

5. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and as recognized by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV) and 2145(XXI) and in subsequent resolutions of the Assembly relating to Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle by all the means at their disposal, including armed struggle, against the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa;

6. Strongly condemns the South African regime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

7. Declares that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people in terms of the Definition of Aggression contained in General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, and supports the armed struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, to repel South Africa's aggression and to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

8. Reiterates that, in accordance with its resolution 2145(XXI), Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved in the Territory and, for this reason, reaffirms the mandate given to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence under its resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly;

9. Reaffirms its decision that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in fulfilment of its mandate and in view of racist South Africa's arrogant refusal to withdraw from the Territory, should proceed to establish its administration in Namibia in 1987, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 40/97 A of 13 December 1985 and S-14/1;

10. Reaffirms that the South West Africa People's Organization, the national liberation movement of Namibia, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people;

11. Further reaffirms that the genuine independence of Namibia can be achieved only with the direct and full participation of the South West Africa People's Organization in all efforts to implement the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

12. Commends the South West Africa People's Organization for its continued intensification of the struggle on all fronts, including the armed struggle, and for its commitment to embrace all Namibian patriots in an effort to strengthen further national unity so as to ensure the territorial integrity and sovereignty of a united Namibia, and welcomes the consolidation of unity in action by the patriotic forces in Namibia under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, during the critical phase of their struggle for national and social liberation;

13. Reaffirms its solidarity with, and support for, the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and pays tribute to that organization for the sacrifices that it has made in the field of battle and also for the spirit of statesmanship, co-operation and far-sightedness that it has displayed in the political and diplomatic arena despite the most extreme provocations on the part of the racist Pretoria regime;

14. Reaffirms that the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, embodied in Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), is the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question and demands its immediate implementation without pre-condition or modification;

15. Expresses its dismay at the failure to date of the Security Council to discharge effectively its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security in southern Africa, owing to the vetoes of two of its Western permanent members;

16. Urges the Security Council to act decisively in fulfilment of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and to take, without further delay, appropriate action to ensure that the United Nations plan, as embodied in Council resolution 435(1978), is not undermined or modified in any way and that it is fully respected and implemented;

17. Reiterates its conviction that South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations, its brutal repression of the Namibian people, its acts of destabilization and aggression against independent African States and its policies of apartheid constitute a threat to international peace and security;

18. Strongly condemns South Africa for the imposition of the so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985, declares this measure to be null and void, affirms that it constitutes a direct affront and a clear defiance of the resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978), and further affirms that this manoeuvre by South Africa of creating puppet institutions subservient to the interests of the racist regime is intended to consolidate Pretoria's stranglehold over Namibia;

19. Denounces all fraudulent constitutional and political schemes by which the illegal racist regime of South Africa attempts to perpetuate its colonial domination of Namibia, and, in particular, calls upon the international community to continue to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any regime imposed by the illegal South African administration upon the Namibian people in violation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983) and 566(1985) and of other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council;

20. Reaffirms that all such manoeuvres are fraudulent and null and void and that they must be rejected categorically by all States as called for in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

21. Declares that all so-called laws and proclamations issued by the illegal occupation regime in Namibia are illegal, null and void;

22. Strongly urges the Security Council to act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation regime aimed at frustrating the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national liberation under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization;

23. Reiterates that there are only two parties to the conflict in Namibia, namely, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and the racist regime of South Africa, which illegally occupies Namibia;

24. Further reiterates that Member States must exert all efforts to counter any manoeuvres by racist South Africa and its allies aimed at circumventing the United Nations and undermining its primary responsibility for the decolonization of Namibia;

25. Calls upon the South African regime to desist from linking the independence of Namibia to irrelevant and extraneous issues, such as the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, as such "linkage" is incompatible with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978);

26. Strongly rejects the policies of "constructive engagement" and "linkage", which have served to encourage the racist regime of South Africa to continue its illegal occupation of Namibia, and calls for their abandonment so that the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia can be implemented;

27. Welcomes and endorses the universal and categorical rejection of "linkage" advanced by South Africa between the independence of Namibia and irrelevant and extraneous issues, such as the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, and emphasizes unequivocally that such "linkage", in addition to delaying the decolonization process in Namibia, constitutes an interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

28. Welcomes and endorses the world-wide and justified condemnation of the policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa as one which, in addition to encouraging South Africa's intransigence and thereby delaying Namibia's independence, has been discredited and made bankrupt by the very actions of the Pretoria regime both within South Africa and in the southern African region as a whole;

29. Expresses its appreciation to the front-line States and the South West Africa People's Organization for their statesmanlike and constructive attitude in the efforts aimed at implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978);

30. Reaffirms its conviction that the solidarity and support of the front-line States for the Namibian cause continues to be a factor of paramount importance in the efforts to bring genuine independence to the Territory;

31. Strongly urges the international community to increase, as a matter of urgency, financial, material, military and political support to the front-line States so as to enable them to resolve their own economic difficulties, which are largely a consequence of Pretoria's policies of aggression and subversion, and to defend themselves better against South Africa's persistent attempts to destabilize them;

32. Requests Member States urgently to extend all necessary assistance to Angola and other front-line States in order to enable them to strengthen their defence capacity against South Africa's acts of aggression;

33. Calls upon Member States and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render sustained and increased support, as well as material, financial, military and other assistance, to the South West Africa People's Organization so as to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

34. Urges all Governments and the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of Namibian refugees who have been forced by the oppressive policies of the apartheid regime to flee Namibia, especially into the neighbouring front-line States;

35. Solemnly reaffirms that Namibia's accession to independence must be with its territorial integrity intact, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands, and reiterates that, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolution 432(1978) of 27 July 1978 and General Assembly resolutions S-9/2 of 3 May 1978 and 35/227 A of 6 March 1981, any attempt by South Africa to annex them is, therefore, illegal, null and void;

36. Calls upon the Security Council to declare categorically that Walvis Bay is an integral part of Namibia and that the question should not be left as a matter for negotiation between an independent Namibia and South Africa;

37. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983) and 566(1985), and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of these resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

38. Strongly condemns the continuing collaboration between South Africa and certain Western countries in the political, economic, diplomatic and financial fields, and expresses its conviction that such collaboration helps to prolong South Africa's domination and control over the people and Territory of Namibia;

39. Deplores, in this context, the establishment and operation by racist South Africa of the so-called Namibia Information Offices in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, aimed at legitimizing its puppet institutions in Namibia, in particular the so-called interim government for which the racist régime has been condemned by the Security Council and the international community, and demands their immediate closure;

40. Notes with appreciation the measures taken by some States, international organizations, parliamentarians, institutions and non-governmental organizations in order to exert pressure on the racist régime of South Africa and calls upon them to redouble and intensify their efforts to force the racist régime to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Namibia and South Africa;

41. Calls once again upon all Governments, especially those that have close links with South Africa, to support, in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, the actions of the United Nations to defend the national rights of the Namibian people until independence and to isolate the racist régime of South Africa;

42. Urges Governments not to exercise their veto in the Security Council in regard to the question of the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, and thus to respond positively to the international call to isolate racist South Africa;

43. Calls upon the members of the European Economic Community to strengthen, as a matter of urgency, the economic sanctions they recently imposed against the Pretoria régime and to extend them to include illegally occupied Namibia;

44. Strongly condemns South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people and to carry out its military attacks against independent African States and its threats and acts of subversion and aggression against those States, as well as for the forcible displacement of the Namibians from their homes;

45. Strongly condemns South Africa for its imposition of military conscription of all Namibian males between seventeen and fifty-five years of age into the occupying colonial army, in yet further sinister attempts to suppress the national liberation struggle of the Namibian people and to force Namibians to kill one another, and declares that all measures taken by racist South Africa by which the illegal occupation régime attempts to enforce military conscription in Namibia are illegal, null and void;

46. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its utilization of the international Territory of Namibia as a springboard for perpetrating armed invasions, subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States;

47. Denounces the latest acts of aggression by the racist régime against Angola, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe, declares that Pretoria's policy of aggression and destabilization not only undermines the peace and stability of the southern African region but also constitutes a threat to international peace and security, and calls upon South Africa to cease all acts of aggression against the neighbouring African States;

48. Expresses its grave concern at the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime of South Africa and declares that such acquisition constitutes a threat to peace and security in Africa while posing a danger to all mankind;

49. Condemns and calls for an immediate end to the continuing military collaboration on the part of certain Western countries with the racist régime of South Africa, and expresses its conviction that such collaboration, in addition to strengthening the aggressive military machinery of the Pretoria régime, thereby constituting a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States, is also in violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977;

50. Declares that such collaboration encourages the Pretoria régime in its defiance of the international community and obstructs efforts to eliminate apartheid and bring South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia to an end, and calls for the immediate cessation of such collaboration;

51. Calls upon all States to implement fully the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977);

52. Calls upon the Security Council to adopt the necessary measures to tighten the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Council resolution 418(1977) and to ensure strict compliance with the embargo by all States;

53. Further calls upon the Security Council to implement, as a matter of urgency, the recommendations contained in the report of the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of Council resolution 421(1977);

54. Calls upon all States to comply with Security Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and to refrain from importing arms, ammunition of all types and military vehicles produced in South Africa;

55. Condemns all collaboration with the Pretoria régime in the nuclear field, and calls upon all States that do so to terminate such collaboration, including refraining from supplying the racist minority régime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium or other nuclear materials or reactors;

56. Reiterates its call upon all States to take legislative and other appropriate measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia;

57. Strongly condemns the illegal occupation régime of South Africa for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in an attempt to intimidate and terrorize them into submission;

58. Demands once again that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained under the so-called internal security laws, martial law or any other arbitrary measures, whether such Namibians have been charged or tried or are being held without charge in Namibia or South Africa;

59. Demands that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release any who are still alive, and declares that South Africa shall be liable to compensate the victims, their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for the losses sustained;

60. Endorses the decision taken by the United Nations Council for Namibia and contained in paragraph 59 of the Final Document adopted by the Council at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Vienna from 3 to 7 June 1985, that it will, in the exercise of its rights under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia, the outer limit of which shall be 200 miles, and states that any action for the implementation of that decision should be taken in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the representative of the Namibian people;

61. Reaffirms that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people, and expresses its deep concern at the depletion of these resources, particularly its uranium deposits, as a result of their plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971;

62. Declares that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are illegal under international law and that all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future legitimate Government of an independent Namibia;

63. Calls upon the United Nations Council for Namibia, in pursuance of the relevant provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, to continue to take the necessary steps to compile statistical information on the wealth illegally extracted from Namibia with a view to assessing the extent of compensation eventually due to an independent Namibia;

64. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign economic interests operating in Namibia that are illegally exploiting the resources of the Territory, and demands that these interests comply with all the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations by immediately withdrawing from the Territory and by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration;

65. Declares that, by their incessant exploitation of the human and natural resources of the Territory and their continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits, the foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in Namibia constitute a major obstacle to its independence;

66. Once again requests all Member States, particularly those States whose corporations are engaged in the exploitation of Namibian resources, to take all appropriate measures, including legislative and enforcement action, to ensure the full application of, and compliance by all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

67. Calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in any uranium-prospecting activities in Namibia;

68. Approves the continued efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia to initiate legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States against corporations or individuals involved in the exploitation, transport, processing or purchase of Namibia's natural resources, as part of its efforts to give effect to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

69. Requests the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which operate the Urenco uranium-enrichment plant, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulates the activities of Urenco;

70. Urges the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its capacity as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, to consider the promulgation of additional legislation in order to protect and promote the interests of the people of Namibia, and to implement effectively such legislation;

71. Calls upon all specialized agencies, in particular the International Monetary Fund, to terminate all collaboration with, and assistance to, the racist régime of South Africa, since such assistance serves to augment the military capability of the Pretoria régime, thus enabling it not only to continue the brutal repression in Namibia and South Africa itself, but also to commit acts of aggression against independent neighbouring States;

72. Reiterates its request to all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures individually and collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 and 36/121 B, and resolution 37/233 A of 20 December 1982;

73. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its implementation of paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution ES-8/2 and of the relevant provisions of Assembly resolutions 36/121 B and 37/233 A, to continue to monitor the boycott of South Africa and to submit to the Assembly at its forty-second session a comprehensive report on all contacts between Member States and South Africa, containing an analysis of the information received from Member States and other sources on the continuing political, economic, financial and other relations of States and their economic and other interest groups with South Africa and of measures taken by States to terminate all dealings with the racist regime of South Africa;

74. Requests all States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia in the fulfilment of its task concerning the implementation of General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2, 36/121 B and 37/233 A and to report to the Secretary-General by the forty-second session of the Assembly on the measures taken by them in the implementation of those resolutions;

75. Declares that the liberation struggle in Namibia is a conflict of an international character in terms of article 1, paragraph 4, of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and, in this regard, demands that the Conventions and Additional Protocol I be applied by South Africa, and in particular that all captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status as called for by the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and the Additional Protocol thereto;

76. Declares that South Africa's defiance of the United Nations, its illegal occupation of the international Territory of Namibia, its war of repression against the Namibian people, its persistent acts of aggression against independent African States, its policies of apartheid and its development of nuclear capability constitute a serious threat to international peace and security;

77. Strongly urges the Security Council, in view of the persistent refusal by the racist regime of South Africa to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 539(1983) and 566(1985), and, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that regime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter;

78. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his personal commitment to the independence of Namibia and for his efforts aimed at the implementation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urges him to continue those efforts;

79. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978)

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the termination of South Africa's Mandate over Namibia and the assumption by the United Nations of direct responsibility over the Territory,

Indignant at South Africa's persistent refusal to comply with Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 431(1978) of 27 July 1978, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983 and 566(1985) of 19 June 1985 and at its manoeuvres aimed at gaining recognition for the illegitimate groups which it has installed in Namibia and which are subservient to Pretoria's interests, in order to maintain its policies of domination and exploitation of the people and natural resources of Namibia,

Reaffirming the imperative need to proceed, without further delay, with the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) which, together with Council resolution 385(1976), is the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the Namibian people to freedom, self-determination and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Strongly condemning racist South Africa for its continued denial to the Namibian people of the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence,

Reaffirming that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and on the other, the racist regime of South Africa, which illegally occupies the Territory,

Strongly condemning racist South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its manoeuvres aimed at obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978),

Recalling that the "linkage" insisted upon by South Africa of the independence of Namibia with totally irrelevant and extraneous issues, such as the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, has been rejected by the General Assembly and the Security Council and has been condemned world wide,

Reaffirming that the Cuban forces are in Angola by a sovereign act of the Government of Angola, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and that any attempts to link their presence in that country with the independence of Namibia constitute a gross and unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of Angola,

Expressing its dismay at the fact that the Security Council has been prevented by two Western permanent members from adopting effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter against South Africa in the discharge of its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling its call upon all States, in view of the threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that country in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Commending the South West Africa People's Organization for its preparedness to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and his Special Representative, including its expressed readiness to sign and observe a cease-fire agreement with South Africa, in the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, as embodied in Security Council resolution 435(1978),

Condemning the racist régime of South Africa for its installation and maintenance of a so-called interim government in Namibia, in violation of Security Council resolutions 435(1978), 439(1978) and 566(1985),

Expressing grave concern at the lack of progress in implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978), as indicated in the further reports of the Secretary-General dated 29 December 1983, 6 June 1985, 6 September 1985 and 26 November 1985, concerning the implementation of Council resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978),

Gravely concerned at the use of the Territory of Namibia by the racist Pretoria régime as a springboard of aggression against, and destabilization of, front-line States, particularly against Angola,

Recalling Security Council resolution 566(1985) by which the Council, inter alia, demanded that South Africa co-operate fully with the Security Council and the Secretary-General in the implementation of that resolution and warned that failure to do so would compel the Council to meet forthwith to consider the adoption of appropriate measures under the Charter,

Recalling its request to the Security Council, in view of the persistent refusal by the racist régime of South Africa to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, in particular resolutions of the Council, and, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that régime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter, in fulfilment of its responsibilities under the Charter and in response to the overwhelming demand of the international community,

1. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978), 532(1983), 539(1983) and 566(1985) and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of those resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and néo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

2. Reaffirms the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia pending its achievement of self-determination and national independence;

3. Reiterates that Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), embodying the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, constitute the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem, and demands their immediate and unconditional implementation;

4. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for the installation of the so-called interim government in Namibia on 17 June 1985, in defiance of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, declares this measure null and void, and calls upon the international community to continue to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any régime imposed by the illegal South African administration upon the Namibian people;

5. Demands that the racist régime of South Africa immediately rescind the aforementioned illegal and unilateral action;

6. Further demands that South Africa urgently comply fully and unconditionally with the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) and subsequent resolutions of the Council relating to Namibia;

7. Emphasizes once again that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa which illegally occupies the Territory;

8. Rejects all manoeuvres by racist South Africa and its allies aimed at diverting attention from the central issue of the decolonization of Namibia by introducing an East-West confrontation to the detriment of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence;

9. Strongly condemns and rejects the persistent attempts by South Africa to establish a "linkage" or "parallelism" between the independence of Namibia, in accordance with Security Council resolution 435(1978), and any extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, and emphasizes unequivocally that all such attempts are designed to delay further the independence of Namibia and that they constitute a gross and unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

10. Strongly rejects the policies of "constructive engagement" and "linkage", which have served to encourage the racist régime of South Africa to continue its illegal occupation of Namibia, and calls for their abandonment so that resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia can be implemented;

11. Strongly condemns the use of the veto by two Western permanent members of the Security Council on 15 November 1985, as a result of which the Council was prevented from taking effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations against South Africa, and calls upon the Western permanent members of the Council to support the imposition of enforcement measures by it in order to ensure South Africa's compliance with resolutions of the Council;

12. Strongly urges the Security Council, in view of the persistent refusal by the racist régime of South Africa to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 539(1983) and 566(1985), and, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that régime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter;

13. Requests the Security Council to meet urgently in order to exercise its authority with regard to Namibia and to undertake decisive action in fulfilment of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia, and to take, without further delay, appropriate steps to ensure that Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) embodying the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia are implemented without any preconditions;

14. Reiterates that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter are the most effective and peaceful measures to ensure the compliance of racist South Africa with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia;

15. Calls upon all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and other institutions, as well as corporations, non-governmental organizations and individuals, pending the imposition by the Security Council of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist regime of South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter, to cease all co-operation with that régime in the political, economic, diplomatic, military, nuclear, cultural, sports and other fields;

16. Welcomes the world-wide support that has been given to the call for sanctions against South Africa and commends those States that have adopted sanctions against the illegal occupation régime;

17. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his personal commitment to the independence of Namibia and for his efforts aimed at the implementation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia, particularly Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urges him to continue those efforts;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/39 B

20 November 1986 Meeting 79 133-0-25 (recorded vote)

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Nona

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Fiji,^a Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

^a Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Before voting on the draft resolutions as a whole, separate votes were requested on certain phrases. Since questions relating to reports and petitions concerning Namibia were considered an important question under Article 18 of the United Nations Charter (see footnote on p. 933), the decisions on the drafts and on any of their parts required a two-thirds majority.

Recorded votes were requested on phrases in eight paragraphs in the draft that became resolution 41/39 A. In the eleventh preambular paragraph, retention of "of the United States Government", which, in that part concerning the OAU resolution, had followed "on the refusal", was rejected by a vote of 53 to 46, with 44 abstentions, as was retention of "of the United States Administration", which followed "on the involvement" in the part concerning the OAU Declaration (57-46-40). In the twenty-second preambular paragraph, retention of "by the United States of America", which followed "by the support extended", was rejected (53-47-44). In paragraph 25, retention of "the United States Administration and", which followed "Calls upon", was rejected (69-49-30). In paragraph 26, retention of "pursued by the present United States Administration", which followed "and 'linkage'", was rejected (56-51-40). In paragraph 27, retention of "the United States and", which followed "advanced by", was rejected (56-52-39). At the end of paragraph 28, retention of "and appeals to the United States Administration to desist from this policy" was rejected (64-51-32). In paragraph 42, retention of "of the United States and of the United Kingdom", which followed "the Governments", was rejected (74-43-29). In paragraph 49, retention of "and Israel", which followed "certain Western countries", was rejected (80-47-22).

Recorded votes were also requested on phrases in the text that became resolution 41/39 B. In paragraph 9, retention of "the United States Administration and", which followed "persistent attempts by", was rejected (51-50-40). In paragraph 10, retention of "pursued by the present United States Administration", which followed "and 'linkage'", was rejected (54-52-38).

A number of States explained their abstentions on resolutions 41/39 A and B. Some abstained on resolution 41/39 A because they could not endorse the support of armed struggle, as called for explicitly in paragraphs 5, 7 and 12, and the call for military assistance in paragraphs 31 and 33. Among them were Australia, Austria, Belgium, Ireland, New Zealand, Norway (speaking for the five Nordic countries), the United Kingdom (speaking on behalf of the 12 EC members) and the United States.

Several countries, including Australia, Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany, Lesotho, Malawi, New Zealand and Norway (for the Nordic countries) opposed the singling out of individual member States as being responsible for South Africa's policies. Australia, Austria, Norway (for the Nordic countries), the United Kingdom (for EC), the United States and others felt it was inappropriate to characterize SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, thereby prejudging the outcome of the political process envisaged in the United Nations plan for Namibia.

The United Kingdom (for EC) could not accept that the principle of universality of membership of the United Nations should be questioned or that the autonomy of the international financial institutions be compromised; EC rejected arbitrary and selective attacks against States or groups of States. As members of the Western contact group, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States abstained on the resolutions for procedural reasons. France said it preferred to maintain a position enabling it to assist negotiations to complete the process of Namibia's accession to independence.

Belgium regretted the condemnation and criticisms addressed to Western States in the Security Council; it believed there must be strict respect for the competence of that body. A similar view was expressed by Norway (for the Nordic countries).

Ireland objected to endorsing armed struggle and had doubts about the wisdom of calls for the imposition of comprehensive sanctions.

Criticized for linking implementation of resolution 435(1978) to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, the United States reiterated that it had not created that linkage; it arose naturally from the security situation created by the continuing presence of those troops and the concern that had caused in neighbouring States. The United States continued to oppose mandatory sanctions and it defended its policy of constructive engagement with South Africa, believing that to focus on destroying the country's economic base and to reject all dialogue would be to the detriment of black South Africans. New Zealand also objected to the call for sanctions.

Earlier, on 20 September, the Assembly had decided to consider the Namibian question directly in plenary meetings, on the understanding that hearings of concerned organizations and individuals would be held in the Fourth Committee. In September and October⁽⁶²⁾ representatives of the Lutheran World Federation, the National Lawyers Guild, the American Committee on Africa and the Africa Fund, the Southern Africa Support Project, the Namibia Support Committee, the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights under Law, the Namibia Information Service, the Drug, Hospital and Health Care Employees Union, the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization and the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and Professor A. W. Singham, Department of Political Science, Brooklyn College, New York, requested hearings. The Committee granted their requests and heard their statements between 29 September and 22 October. On 12 November, the Assembly, by decision 41/413, took note of the Fourth Committee's report on the hearings.⁽⁶³⁾

On 19 November, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided,⁽⁶⁴⁾ by a recorded vote of 96 to 4, with 11 abstentions, to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the Council for Namibia's recommendations,⁽²⁾ an additional appropriation of $4,499,800 would be required under the programme budget for the 1986-1987 biennium.

Related resolutions and decision: GA 41/11, 41/14, 41/15, 41/35 A and B, 41/41 B, 41/95, 41/101; 41/405.

Report of the Group of 18. In its report to the General Assembly⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) (see p. 1021) recommended that the support activities of the Council for Namibia and of the Office of the Commissioner for Namibia should be consolidated (recommendation 19).

By resolution 41/213 of 19 December, the Assembly decided that the recommendations of the Group of 18 should be implemented in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee⁽⁶⁶⁾ and subject to certain qualifications. In the case of recommendation 19, the Committee noted that any decision that might be taken should be clearly aimed at strengthening the efficiency of all Secretariat activities relating to Namibia without in any way limiting them.

Work programme of the Council for Namibia

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/39 C by recorded vote.

Programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Reaffirming that Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that the Namibian people must be enabled to attain self-determination and independence in a united Namibia,

Recalling its resolution 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966, by which it terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia and placed the Territory under the direct responsibility of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution S-14/1 of 19 May 1967, by which it established the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence,

Recalling its resolution S-14/1 of 20 September 1986, by which it called upon the United Nations Council for Namibia to take immediate practical measures to establish its administration in Namibia in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 2248(S-V) and 40/97 A of 13 December 1985,

Recognizing that 1987 will mark the twentieth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence,

Taking into consideration the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, the Programme of Action on Namibia and the Appeal for the Immediate Independence of Namibia issued by the eminent persons participating in the Conference,

Convinced of the need for continued consultations with the South West Africa People's Organization in the formulation and implementation of the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia, as well as in any matter of interest to the Namibian people,

Deeply conscious of the urgent and continuing need to press for the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and to put an end to its repression of the Namibian people and its exploitation of the natural resources of the Territory,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, including the recommendations contained therein, and decides to make adequate financial provision for their implementation;

2. Expresses its strong support for the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it, both as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia and as a policy-making organ of the United Nations;

3. Requests all Member States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to it under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the Assembly;

4. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia, bearing in mind that 1987 marks the twentieth anniversary of its establishment as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, shall take immediate practical measures to establish its administration in Namibia in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 2248(S-V), 40/97 A and S-14/1;

5. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the discharge of its responsibilities as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, shall:

(a) Continue to mobilize international support in order to press for the speedy withdrawal of the illegal South African administration from Namibia in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

(b) Counter the policies of South Africa against the Namibian people and the United Nations, as well as against the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia;

(c) Denounce and seek the rejection by all States of all kinds of schemes through which South Africa attempts to perpetuate its illegal presence in Namibia;

(d) Ensure non-recognition of any administration or entity installed in Namibia not ensuing from free elections conducted under the supervision and control of the United Nations, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, 539(1983) of 28 October 1983 and 566(1985) of 19 June 1985;

(e) Make a concerted effort to counter the attempts to establish a "linkage" or "parallelism" between the independence of Namibia and extraneous issues, such as the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola;

6. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia shall send missions of consultation to Governments in order to co-ordinate efforts for the implementation of resolutions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia and to mobilize support for the Namibian cause;

7. Decides further that the United Nations Council for Namibia shall represent Namibia in United Nations conferences and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences in order to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia are adequately protected;

8. Decides that Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, shall participate as a full member in all conferences and meetings organized by the United Nations to which all States or, in the case of regional conferences and meetings, all African States are invited;

9. Requests all committees and other subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council to continue to invite the United Nations Council for Namibia to participate whenever the rights and interests of Namibians are discussed, and to consult closely with the United Nations Council for Namibia before submitting any draft resolution that may involve such rights and interests;

10. Reiterates its request to all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to grant full membership to Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, so that the Council may participate as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia, in the work of those agencies and organizations;

11. Reiterates its request to all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to grant a waiver of the assessment of Namibia during the period in which it is represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia;

12. Again requests all intergovernmental organizations, bodies and conferences to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia are protected and to invite Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, to participate as a full member whenever such rights and interests are involved;

13. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its capacity as the legal Administering Authority for

Namibia, to accede to any international conventions, as it may deem appropriate in close consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization;

14. Takes note of the Final Communiqué of the Seminar on World Action for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, held at Valletta from 19 to 23 May 1986, and the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, the Programme of Action on Namibia and the Appeal for the Immediate Independence of Namibia issued by the eminent persons participating in the Conference;

15. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to promote and secure the implementation of the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the Conference;

16. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia shall:

(a) Consult regularly with the leaders of the South West Africa People's Organization by inviting them to New York and by sending high-level missions to the provisional headquarters of that organization, which will visit Namibian refugee centres whenever necessary;

(b) Review the progress of the liberation struggle in Namibia in its political, military and social aspects and prepare comprehensive and analytical periodic reports relating thereto;

(c) Review the compliance of Member States with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Namibia and, taking into account the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, prepare annual reports on the subject with a view to recommending appropriate policies to the General Assembly, in order to counter the support that those States give to the illegal South African administration in Namibia;

(d) Take all measures to ensure the full implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the initiation of legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States in accordance with paragraph 68 of resolution 41/39 A;

(e) Consider the illegal activities of foreign economic interests, particularly the transnational corporations operating in Namibia, including the exploitation of and trade in Namibian uranium, with a view to recommending appropriate policies to the General Assembly, in order to put an end to such activities;

(f) Take measures to ensure the closure of the so-called information offices created by the illegal South African occupation regime in certain Western countries for promoting its puppet institutions in Namibia, in violation of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia;

(g) Notify the Governments of States whose corporations, whether public or private, operate in Namibia of the illegality of such operations and urge them to take measures to end such operations;

(h) Consider sending missions of consultation to Governments of States whose corporations have investments in Namibia in order to persuade them to take all possible measures to terminate such investments;

(i) Contact institutions and municipalities in order to encourage them to divest themselves of their investments in Namibia and South Africa;

(j) Contact specialized agencies and other international institutions associated with the United Nations, in particular the International Monetary Fund, with a view to protecting Namibia's interests;

(k) Continue to draw the attention of States, the specialized agencies and private corporations to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, with a view to ensuring their compliance with the Decree;

(l) Organize international and regional activities, as required, in order to obtain relevant information on all aspects of the situation in and relating to Namibia, in particular the exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests, and to expose such activities, with a view to intensifying active support for the Namibian cause;

(m) Prepare and publish reports on the political, economic, military, legal and social situation in and relating to Namibia;

(n) Secure the territorial integrity of Namibia as a unitary State, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands of Namibia;

17. Decides to make adequate financial provision in the section of the programme budget of the United Nations relating to the United Nations Council for Namibia for the financing of the office of the South West Africa People's Organization in New York, in order to ensure appropriate representation of the people of Namibia at the United Nations through the South West Africa People's Organization;

18. Decides to continue to defray the expenses of representatives of the South West Africa People's Organization whenever the United Nations Council for Namibia so decides;

19. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to consult with the South West Africa People's Organization in the formulation and implementation of its programme of work, as well as on all matters of interest to the Namibian people;

20. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to facilitate the participation of the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in meetings of the Council away from United Nations Headquarters, whenever such participation is deemed necessary;

21. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia shall hold extraordinary plenary meetings in southern Africa during the week of 19 May 1987 and that these meetings shall be provided with verbatim records;

22. Decides that, in order to expedite the training of personnel required for an independent Namibia, qualified Namibians should be given opportunities to develop further their skills in the work of the United Nations Secretariat and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, and authorizes the United Nations Council for Namibia, in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, to take, on an urgent basis, necessary action towards that end;

23. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, to review the personnel requirements and the facilities of all units that service the Council, so that the Council may fully and effectively discharge all tasks and functions arising out of its mandate;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia with the necessary resources in order for it to strengthen, under the guidance of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the assistance programmes and services for Namibians, the implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, the preparation of economic and legal studies and the existing activities of dissemination of information undertaken by the Office.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Norway, speaking for the five Nordic countries, said that in the current financial crisis of the Organization, all United Nations activities, including those of the Council for Namibia, must be carefully scrutinized to secure effective and appropriate utilization of resources. The United Kingdom, for the 12 EC members, also expressed concern at the financial implications.

Information dissemination

In 1986, the Council for Namibia continued to disseminate information to Governments, opinion makers, the media, political and academic institutions and NGOs to mobilize world public opinion in support of independence for Namibia. (2) It worked with the Department of Public Information (DPI) and the Department of Conference Services in order to intensify information activities on Namibia and to give them guidance on specific projects.

The Council organized publicity programmes for its seminars, conferences and missions (see p. 924), distributed releases to the press, delegations and NGOs at United Nations Headquarters and to United Nations information centres (UNICs) around the world, and provided material to the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies. On the occasion of Namibia Day (26 August), coverage was provided for the media and a special photography exhibit was mounted at Headquarters. During the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and Their Liberation Movement, SWAPO (week of 27 October)⁽³⁾ most UNICs issued press releases and background materials. They also screened United Nations films, held lectures and round tables on Namibia, organized essay contests, exhibited United Nations posters, held press conferences and gave television interviews.

DPI continued to disseminate information through its periodicals, the UN Chronicle and Objective: Justice, and in other publications. In addition, Development Forum and the Chronicle carried special articles on the 1985 public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia⁽⁶⁷⁾ and pamphlets were produced on various subjects concerning Namibia.

The question of Namibia was featured in several radio programmes, including Perspective and the annual Namibia: Update series of six programmes, which were produced in English, French and Spanish. UNICs distributed some 100 copies of the film Free Namibia and 72 copies of Namibia: A Trust Betrayed, 25,000 publications on Namibia and over 1,000 wallsheets and posters. A 60-second television spot was produced in commemoration of Namibia Day in Arabic, English, French and Spanish. A World Chronicle television programme featured an interview with the Secretary-General of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia.

The Council organized journalists' encounters in advance of its Seminar and Conference (see p. 924). The encounters, taking the form of discussions between a Council panel and journalists and broadcasters, dealt with specific aspects of the Namibian question. They also devoted attention to the role of the media in generating greater public awareness of the Namibian cause and promoting the implementation of United Nations resolutions on Namibia.

The Council continued to expand its co-operation with NGOs and, in consultation with SWAPO, made financial contributions to a number of them for organizing seminars and conferences and providing information services. These included the National Alliance of Third World Journalists, the Namibia Support Committee, the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid, the Swedish Committee for the Isolation of South Africa, the Southern African Universities Social Sciences Conference, the Committee against Colonialism and Apartheid and the West Coast Regional Conference in Solidarity with the Struggling Peoples of Southern Africa.

The Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia served as an additional source of information on the activities of the Council. It prepared the monthly Namibia Bulletin and Namibia in the News, a weekly newsletter, and gave briefings to support groups and individuals. It also assisted the Council in publishing and disseminating United Nations booklets, brochures, buttons, pamphlets, posters and maps on specific topics relating to Namibia; acquiring, translating and distributing non-United Nations material on Namibia; distributing a comprehensive economic map of Namibia; publishing an indexed reference book on TNCs operating in Namibia; and reproducing available films on Namibia.

In addition, a briefing on the United Nations and Namibia was given to the participants in the 1986 DPI Graduate Students Intern Programme, which brought together 68 university students from 35 countries.

In its Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (see p. 925), the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia noted with satisfaction the intensified public campaign, especially in Western countries, against South Africa and called for the immediate closure of South Africa's so-called Namibia Information Offices. The Conference, recognizing the important role of NGOs in the world-wide effort to secure the independence of Namibia, appealed to them to mobilize broad political support for Namibia's national liberation by holding hearings and seminars and producing information materials, and called on individuals working in communications, information and the media to intensify the dissemination of public information on the Namibian independence struggle.

In a decision of 11 August,⁽⁴³⁾ the Committee on colonial countries requested the Secretary-General, in view of South Africa's massive publicity campaign designed to justify its illegal occupation of Namibia, to intensify his efforts to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's Namibian policy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November 1986, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/39 D by recorded vote.

Dissemination of information and mobilization of international public opinion in support of the immediate independence of Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, as well as all other resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council relating to Namibia, Underlining the fact that, twenty years after the termination by the General Assembly of the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia and the assumption by the United Nations of direct responsibility for the Territory, the racist regime of South Africa continues illegally to occupy the Territory in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Underlining that 1987 will mark the twentieth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence,

Taking into consideration the Final Communiqué of the Seminar on World Action for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, held at Valletta from 19 to 23 May 1986,

Taking into consideration also the Declaration of the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the Conference,

Gravely concerned at the total black-out of news on Namibia imposed by the illegal South African regime,

Gravely concerned at the campaign of slander and disinformation against the United Nations and the liberation struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national independence led by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative,

Stressing the urgent need to mobilize international public opinion on a continuous basis with a view to assisting effectively the people of Namibia in the achievement of self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia and, in particular, to intensify the world-wide and continuous dissemination of information on the struggle for liberation being waged by the people of Namibia under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Reiterating the importance of intensifying publicity on all aspects of the question of Namibia as an instrument for furthering the mandate given by the General Assembly to the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Recognizing the important role that non-governmental organizations are playing in the dissemination of information on Namibia and in the mobilization of international public opinion in support of the immediate independence of Namibia,

1. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in co-operation with the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, in pursuance of its international campaign in support of the struggle of the Namibian people for independence:

(a) To continue to consider ways and means of increasing the dissemination of information relating to Namibia in order to intensify the international campaign in favour of the cause of Namibia;

(b) To focus its activities towards greater mobilization of public opinion in Western States, particularly the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Federal Republic of Germany;

(c) To intensify the international campaign for the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

(d) To organize an international campaign to boycott products from Namibia and South Africa, in co-operation with non-governmental organizations;

(e) To expose and denounce collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in all fields;

(f) To organize exhibitions on Namibia and the struggle of the Namibian people for independence;

(g) To prepare and disseminate publications on the political, economic, military and social consequences of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, on legal matters, on the question of the territorial integrity of Namibia and on contacts between Member States and South Africa;

(h) To produce and disseminate radio and television programmes designed to draw the attention of world public opinion to the current situation in and around Namibia;

(i) To produce and disseminate in both the English language and the local languages of Namibia radio programmes, designed to counter the hostile propaganda and disinformation campaign of the racist regime of South Africa;

(j) To produce and disseminate posters;

(k) To ensure full coverage through advertisements in newspapers and magazines, press releases, press conferences and press briefings of all activities of the United Nations regarding Namibia in order to maintain a constant flow of information to the public on all aspects of the question of Namibia;

(l) To prepare and disseminate a thematic atlas on Namibia;

(m) To reproduce and disseminate the comprehensive economic map of Namibia;

(n) To produce and disseminate booklets on the activities of the Council;

(o) To update and disseminate widely a compendium of resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council relating to Namibia and relevant documents of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of African Unity, as well as decisions, declarations and communiques of the front-line States on the question of Namibia;

(p) To publicize and distribute the indexed reference book on transnational corporations that plunder the human and natural resources of Namibia, and on the profits they extract from the Territory;

(q) To produce and disseminate widely, on a monthly basis, a bulletin containing analytical and updated information intended to mobilize maximum support for the Namibian cause;

(r) To produce and disseminate, on a weekly basis, an information newsletter containing updated information on developments in and relating to Namibia, in support of the Namibian cause;

(s) To acquire books, pamphlets and other materials relating to Namibia for dissemination;

(t) To prepare, in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, a list of Namibian political prisoners;

(u) To assist the South West Africa People's Organization in the production and distribution of material on Namibia;

2. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to organize, in co-operation with the Department of Public Information, media encounters on developments relating to Namibia particularly prior to the activities of the Council during 1987;

3. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to redouble its efforts to inform international public opinion of developments in Namibia in order to counteract the total news black-out on Namibia imposed by the illegal South African regime, which forbids foreign journalists from entering and reporting from the Territory;

4. Further requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to exert all efforts to counteract the campaign of slander and disinformation against the United Nations and the liberation struggle in Namibia carried out by South African agents from the so-called information centres established in several Western countries;

5. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to co-operate closely with relevant intergovernmental organizations in order to increase the awareness of the international community of the direct responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the continued illegal occupation of that Territory by the racist regime of South Africa;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to co-operate with non-governmental organizations in its efforts to mobilize international public opinion in support of the liberation struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization;

7. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to prepare, update and disseminate lists of non-governmental organizations, in particular those in the major Western countries, in order to ensure better co-operation and co-ordination among non-governmental organizations working in support of the Namibian cause and against apartheid;

8. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to organize workshops for non-governmental organizations, parliamentarians, trade unionists, academics and media representatives at which the participants will consider how they can contribute to the implementation of the decisions of the United Nations relating to the dissemination of information on Namibia;

9. Decides to allocate the sum of $500,000 to be used by the United Nations Council for Namibia for its programme of co-operation with non-governmental organizations, including support to conferences in solidarity with Namibia arranged by those organizations, dissemination of conclusions of such conferences and support to such other activities as will promote the cause of the liberation struggle of the Namibian people, subject to decisions to be taken by the Council in each individual case in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization;

10. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to contact leading opinion makers, media leaders, academic institutions, trade unions, legislators and parliamentarians, cultural organizations, support groups and other concerned persons and non-governmental organizations and inform them about the objectives and functions of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization;

11. Appeals to non-governmental organizations, associations, institutions, support groups and individuals sympathetic to the Namibian cause:

(a) To increase the awareness of their national communities and legislative bodies concerning South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, the liberation struggle being waged by the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, the gross violation of basic human rights by the South African regime in Namibia and the plunder of the resources of the Territory by foreign economic interests;

(b) To mobilize in their countries broad public support for the national liberation of Namibia by holding hearings, seminars and public presentations on various aspects of the Namibian question, as well as by producing and distributing pamphlets, films and other information material;

(c) To expose and campaign against the political and economic collaboration of certain Western Governments with the South African regime, as well as diplomatic visits to and from South Africa;

(d) To intensify public pressure for the immediate withdrawal from Namibia of foreign economic interests that are exploiting the human and natural resources of the Territory;

(e) To continue and develop campaign and research work, in order to expose the involvement and operations of Western-based oil companies in the supply of petroleum products to Namibia and South Africa;

(f) To step up their efforts to persuade universities, local governments and other institutions to divest themselves of all investments in firms doing business in Namibia and South Africa;

(g) To intensify the campaign for the immediate and unconditional release of all Namibian political prisoners and the granting of prisoner-of-war status to all Namibian freedom fighters, in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and the Additional Protocol thereto;

12. Requests Member States to broadcast programmes on their national radio and television networks and to publish material in their official news media, informing their populations about the situation in and around Namibia and the obligation of Governments and peoples to assist in the struggle of Namibia for independence;

13. Requests all Member States to observe Namibia Day in a befitting manner, by giving the widest possible publicity to and ensuring the dissemination of information on Namibia, including the issuance of special postage stamps for the occasion;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to direct the Department of Public Information to assist the United Nations Council for Namibia in the implementation of its programme of dissemination of information and to ensure that all activities of the United Nations on dissemination of information on the question of Namibia follow the policy guidelines laid down by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist, as a matter of priority, the United Nations Council for Namibia in the implementation of its programme of dissemination of information;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the United Nations Council for Namibia with the work programme of the Department of Public Information for the year 1987 covering the activities of dissemination of information on Namibia, followed by periodic reports on the programme undertaken, including details of expenses incurred;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to group under a single heading in the section of the proposed programme budget of the United Nations for the biennium 1986-1987 relating to the Department of Public Information all of the activities of the Department relating to the dissemination of information on Namibia and to direct the Department to submit to the United Nations Council for Namibia a detailed report on the utilization of the allocated funds;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to direct the Department of Public Information to disseminate, in 1987, the list of Namibian political prisoners, in order to intensify international pressure for their immediate and unconditional release.

General Assembly resolution 41/39 D

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Ireland said it was unable to support the appeal to expose and campaign against political and economic collaboration of certain Western Governments with South Africa as well as diplomatic visits to and from South Africa. Lesotho and Botswana gave full support to all the resolutions, but reiterated that they were not capable of imposing sanctions against South Africa. Belgium had doubts regarding the volume of the programme planned and the real objectives of many of the concepts that it advocated.

UN Commissioner for Namibia

Activities of the Commissioner

In 1986, the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, through offices at Headquarters, Gaborone (Botswana), Luanda (Angola) and Lusaka (Zambia), continued to protect Namibian interests principally by means of the travel documents programme and by attempts to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia⁽⁵⁾ (see p. 953). During the period from 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986, the offices issued 985 new travel documents in Africa, North America and Western Europe and renewed 1,599 others. They also collected and analysed information relating to Namibia, closely followed internal political, economic and legal developments in South Africa concerning Namibia, and provided services to the Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

Pursuant to a 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Office published in 1986 a two-volume study entitled Namibia: Perspectives for National Reconstruction and Development, containing a detailed account of existing resources and the potential for development in major economic sectors, and, in an abridged version, the main conclusions and recommendations. The study was launched during the July Conference on Namibia. In response to a 1981 Assembly resolution⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Office also published, in 1986, a comprehensive economic map of Namibia. Further, it collected and analysed data on the socio-economic and legal situation prevailing in Namibia as a result of South Africa's illegal occupation.

The primary function of the Luanda office remained to serve as liaison between SWAPO's headquarters and the New York office, as well as to maintain frequent consultations with the Government of Angola. It was responsible for co-ordination with other United Nations agencies in Angola and, in this context, organized inter-agency meetings on key programme activities. It also worked on the implementation of some 30 Nationhood Programme projects and eight projects of the United Nations Fund for Namibia. Further, it provided support to the Namibia Technical Secondary School at Loudima, Congo, and to the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for Namibia, which was attended by 200 trainees, the maximum number it could accommodate. The office supported the construction of a multi-purpose recording studio for the Voice of Namibia, which was completed in 1986, and it assisted in radio-broadcasting training. It also assisted in basic training for the SWAPO Women's Council in areas such as nutrition and skills in small-scale industries.

The Lusaka office operated as a regional centre for political, administrative and information activities, providing assistance and counselling to Namibians. It maintained contact with the Government of Zambia and diplomatic missions accredited there concerning issue of travel documents and visas to Namibians. Another activity was the implementation of the Field Attachment Programme of the Commissioner, for which it acted as contact point with African Governments and organizations. It also assisted in placing Namibian trainees in government services and parastatals.

The Gaborone office maintained consultative contacts with the Government of Botswana, monitored developments in the entire southern African region and made evaluations and assessments for the New York office. In support of the Nationhood Programme and other programmes of assistance, the office took part in projects on railway transport, extension of agricultural activities and field attachments. Co-ordinating United Nations scholarships under the Fund for Namibia, it assisted in placing Namibians in educational institutions in Botswana and Kenya in the agricultural and business fields. It also administered the secondment programme for students on attachment to the Botswana Government for practical training and issued travel and identity documents to Namibians in Botswana.

Appointment of the Commissioner

On the Secretary-General's proposal⁽⁷⁰⁾ the General Assembly, by decision 41/320 adopted without vote on 11 December 1986, appointed Bernt Carlsson as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a sixth-month term beginning on 1 July 1987. Brajesh Chandra Mishra, who was first appointed in 1982⁽⁷¹⁾ was to continue as Commissioner up to 30 June 1987.

Political and military aspects

During 1986, the Council for Namibia continued monitoring the political and military aspects of the situation in the Territory. The Council's Standing Committee II submitted two reports in April, one on political developments⁽⁷²⁾ and one on the military situation.⁽⁷³⁾

South Africa continued to maintain an occupation army of over 100,000 troops in Namibia, comprising mercenaries and additional reinforcements frequently airlifted into the Territory, as well as locally recruited persons and an increasingly armed settler community. It launched repeated acts of aggression against the front-line States and pursued a campaign to destabilize the States of the region. Political repression, racial discrimination and economic exploitation characterized the occupation. South African military and police were used not only to oppose SWAPO, but also to suppress the widespread resistance of Namibian civilians to colonial domination.

Dusk-to-dawn curfews were rigidly imposed in all of northern Namibia, including the Caprivi Strip. Entire communities were forced to relocate from their homes and ancestral lands to so-called protected hamlets. In January 1986, a so-called Constitutional Council of the interim administration began drafting a "constitution", in violation of United Nations resolutions and decisions. During the year, South Africa stepped up its forced conscription campaign, with the first batch of Namibians being recruited in January 1986. The only alternatives to conscription for young Namibian males were imprisonment or exile.

The year saw much political activity in Namibia. SWAPO declared 1986 as the Year of General Mobilization and Decisive Action for Final Victory, and trade unions, student and youth groups and church, professional and women's organizations were active in organizing boycotts, demonstrations and mass displays of defiance of South Africa's occupation. On 26 January, the SWAPO Youth League organized an open air festival at Windhoek to observe the International Year of Peace. South African police forcibly broke up the celebration and arrested 60 SWAPO members. On 29 June, a number of groups, including the Namibian National Students' Organization, gathered at Katatura township. A SWAPO representative speaking at the rally called on all supporters of the national liberation movement to unite and demand the immediate implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978). Political rallies were held by SWAPO on 27 July to call for sanctions against South Africa and the resignation of the interim government in Windhoek, and on 24 August in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the launching of its armed struggle. The Central Committee of SWAPO held its eighth annual meeting at Luanda from 14 to 17 August, when it resolved to intensify the political and military struggle for national liberation and called on all Namibians, including the white community, to unite and fight for independence.

The year also marked the twentieth anniversary of the first armed encounters of SWAPO's military wing, the People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN), with South African troops. During the year, PLAN inflicted heavy damage and casualties, ambushed convoys of military vehicles, cut off vital supply lines and escalated its attacks on South African military installations and troop concentrations. On 21 June, according to a SWAPO press release, PLAN launched a mortar attack on the regional military headquarters at Oshakati in northern Namibia, killing 10 South African soldiers and wounding many others. On the previous day, PLAN had disrupted the power supply from the Ruacana hydroelectric station, Namibia's largest source of electricity. According to the same source, PLAN shot down on 27 June a South African Air Force transport plane at Oheeti, and two nights later attacked a large military base at Eenhana, killing 50 South African soldiers and setting fire to the base. A similar attack was launched on the military base in the area of Nkongo on 2 July, resulting in extensive casualties and damage to facilities and equipment. In November, PLAN forces launched mortar and machine-gun attacks on South African military bases at Okahau, Elundu and Eenhana, and in December shot down three helicopter gun-ships.

In his address to the twenty-second session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, 28-30 July), the President of Angola stated that 20,000 South African troops were massed on the Namibian-Angolan border, backed by 120 tanks, 350 heavy artillery pieces, 800 armoured cars, and 60 ground-to-air missile systems. He further stated that those ground forces were supported by 90 military aircraft and 50 combat helicopters, and that South African air forces had violated Angolan airspace 90 times in the previous six months. On 10 August 1986, South African troops invaded Angolan territory and attacked the town of Kuito Kuanavale, in the southern province of Kuando Kubango, approximately 300 kilometres inside Angolan territory. Similar attacks into Angola took place in November and December.

In its Declaration and Programme of Action⁽⁹⁾ adopted in July (see p. 925), the International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia denounced South Africa for its militarization of Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for and forced recruitment of Namibians for tribal armies, its recruitment of mercenaries and its use of the Territory as a launching pad for aggression against neighbouring African States. It condemned the detention and imprisonment of Namibians, demanded the release of all political prisoners, and called on the Security Council to adopt measures in order to ensure strict compliance by all States with the arms embargo against South Africa.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 11 August⁽⁴³⁾ denounced all manoeuvres by South Africa to bring about a sham independence in Namibia through fraudulent political schemes, condemned South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia and its recent acts of aggression against Angola, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe, condemned the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other countries, and noted that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability added another dangerous dimension to the already grave situation.

The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February⁽⁴⁷⁾ condemned South Africa for the militarization in Namibia, the use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people, the recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, the imposition of military conscription on all Namibian males between 17 and 55 years of age, the proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia, and the torture and other brutalities against the population, particularly captured SWAPO fighters, and demanded the immediate release of all Namibian political prisoners.

workers had no legal protection and frequently lived and worked in unsanitary conditions. Mining constituted almost half of the Territory's gross domestic product (GDP), but employed only 10 per cent of the labour force. Commercial agriculture provided a lucrative income for some 5,000 white farmers who owned more than 95 per cent of the marketed agricultural output. On the other hand, subsistence agriculture constituted virtually the only economic activity for the indigenous population. They produced only 2.5 per cent of total marketed agricultural output. As much as 60 per cent of Namibia's GDP was repatriated abroad as company profits before taxes; of the remainder, a large part was used as operating expenses of foreign economic interests. The Territory's per capita GDP showed one of the most inequitable distributions of income in the world; white per capita income was approximately 3,000 rand, while that of blacks was 125 rand, a ratio of 24 to 1. For blacks living on "reserves" and "homelands", the per capita figure was estimated to be considerably less.

Foreign economic interests involved in the exploitation of Namibian resources conducted their operations by means of licences illegally issued by the South African administration. They were lured to Namibia because of the unusually high profits made possible by the apartheid system, which essentially guaranteed an abundance of cheap, enslaved labour. Three principal TNCs operated in the mining sector: Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd. (CDM), a wholly owned subsidiary of De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd.; the Tsumeb Corporation, Ltd., owned by Gold Fields of South Africa and the Newmont Mining Corporation of the United States; and Rössing Uranium, Ltd., in which the Rio Tinto Zinc Corporation, Ltd. of the United Kingdom owned the majority of equity capital.

A number of South Africa-based corporations controlled the fishing industry, and firms based in Canada and the United Kingdom were involved in marketing caracul furs (persian lamb). Other major South African companies included two parastatals: the Iron and Steel Corporation of South Africa, Ltd., and the Industrial Development Corporation of South Africa, Ltd. South African corporations also controlled Namibia's fish-processing industry. Among Western European corporations operating in the mining, banking and petroleum sectors were Barclays Bank PLC, Consolidated Gold Fields, Ltd. and the British Petroleum Company (United Kingdom), Dresdner Bank (Federal Republic of Germany) and the Shell Transport and Trading Company, Ltd., part of the Royal Dutch/Shell Group. Corporations based in the United States and Canada with operations in the Territory included

Economic and social conditions

Foreign investment

The Council for Namibia continued in 1986 to consider foreign economic interests operating in Namibia, with its Standing Committee II submitting a report in June on the situation.⁽¹⁾

Namibia's economic structure was colonial in character, unbalanced and precarious, the Council pointed out. Economically, Namibia was almost totally dependent on South Africa. Foreign exchange control and external transactions were handled by the South African Reserve Bank, and goods entering or leaving Namibia were subject to South African tariffs. The Namibian labour force was governed by a system of apartheid patterned after that in South Africa. Namibian the Standard Oil Company of California, Texaco, Inc., Mobil Oil Corporation and Hudson's Bay Company.

The foreign economic interests neither reinvested their profits in Namibia for development purposes nor tried to integrate the different sectors of Namibia's economy. As a result, their activities imposed a typical colonial economy on Namibia, unbalanced, distorted and dependent on foreign imports.

Two reports on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia were submitted by the Secretary-General to the April 1986 session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

A 30 January report⁽³⁾ stated that TNCs in Namibia continued to exploit non-renewable resources of great value which belonged to the Namibian people. Though a number of States had taken measures to prohibit or discourage the activities of TNCs in Namibia, the majority of companies had chosen to continue their operations there under the auspices of the South African administration, providing support to its occupation of Namibia in a number of ways. Petroleum supplies for South Africa's military forces were made available from refineries in South Africa; Barclays Bank and Standard Chartered Bank PLC provided financial services to military personnel of the occupying forces and, more generally, taxes paid by TNCs in Namibia contributed to equipping, deploying and maintaining the South African military forces there. Concerning employment practices, the report summarized different employment codes adopted by EC and Canada for TNCs based in those areas, as well as the so-called Sullivan Principles that applied to companies based in the United States. The application of these codes seemed to have had some positive effects; however, the overall picture was unclear because of gaps in information and difficulties of verification. The report concluded that an assessment of the overall impact of TNCs on socioeconomic conditions in Namibia had to go beyond their employment practices and focus on their direct and indirect contribution to the survival of the apartheid system.

The second report, dated 4 February,⁽³⁾ was prepared in response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽⁴⁾ and updated an earlier one on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of United Nations decisions, submitted in 1985.⁽⁵⁾ Relying partly on information supplied by nine Member States and information collected from public sources, the report analysed the measures taken by home countries in response to United Nations decisions regarding investment, trade and provision of loans and technical assistance; the sale and export of arms and military technology and related materials; and the supply of petroleum products. (For subsequent action by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council, see p. 139.)

The Commission on Human Rights, on 10 March,⁽⁶⁾ condemned the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽⁷⁾ with respect to colonial Territories, particularly Namibia. On 28 February,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission called on Governments that had not done so to prevent their nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investing in South Africa and Namibia.

On 11 August,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on colonial countries called on all States to terminate investments in Namibia; reiterated that the activities of foreign economic interests and TNCs in Namibia, in violation of United Nations decisions, were illegal under international law and that such interests were liable to pay damages to the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia; and called on States to refrain from entering into any relations with South Africa, which might lend support to its continued occupation. Also on 11 August,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Committee condemned South Africa's illegal exploitation of Namibia's natural resources, noted with concern their rapid depletion and demanded that such exploitation cease forthwith. On 15 August,⁽¹¹⁾ the Committee requested United Nations specialized agencies to withhold from South Africa financial, economic and other co-operation until the Namibian people had exercised their right to self-determination and independence.

Natural resources

In its annual report,⁽¹²⁾ the Council for Namibia noted that mining constituted by far the largest sector of the Namibian economy. It was the biggest contributor to the Territory's GDP and made up to 85 per cent of its exports. Namibia possessed a wide range of minerals, including large quantities of diamonds, uranium, arsenic, lead, cadmium, zinc and copper. Significant quantities of other minerals, including gold, silver, pyrite, tin and tantalite, were also available. The recent discovery of massive gas fields off the coast had substantially increased Namibia's already extensive wealth in mineral resources.

The exploitation of Namibian gem diamond deposits, the most extensive in the world, was monopolized by CDM, which had been mining in Namibia since 1920. CDM's Oranjemund mine operated along a 100-kilometre strip of the southern desert coast. To maximize profits and accelerate the plunder of Namibian diamonds, the sea had been pushed back in some areas to allow mining in the surf zone. As a result of CDM's extensive exploitation, the diamond resources were rapidly being depleted and it was estimated that the mine would be exhausted in another 20 years. Diamond production and exports were controlled by South Africa through the Diamond Board of Namibia, and marketed through the De Beers Central Selling Organization, which buffered market fluctuations through stockpiling and selective sales. It had been estimated that as a result of the collusion between South Africa and CDM, the Territory had lost up to 1 billion rand in taxable diamond sales and over 500 million rand in revenue over the previous five years.

The Tsumeb Corporation, Ltd., was the largest producer of Namibian base metals, which were of strategic importance to South Africa and some Western countries. Almost all of the zinc, tin, lead, vanadium and tungsten extracted from the Territory went to South Africa and Western countries. The exploitation of Namibian uranium was monopolized by Rossing Uranium, Ltd., a consortium of Western and South African firms incorporated in 1970 and the world's largest producer. Rossing processed 50,000 to 60,000 metric tons of ore per day and had a production capacity of 5,250 metric tons of uranium oxide per year. Since its mine started production in 1976, the identity of buyers from Rossing had remained secret. The United Kingdom was the only country which admitted importing Namibian uranium. The sanctions package that EC adopted against South Africa in September 1985 (see p. 925) did not include uranium.

Besides Rossing, other TNCs were involved in uranium prospecting operations in Namibia, including the Anglo-American Corporation and the Union Corporation of South Africa, together with Societe Nationale Elf Aquitaine (SNEA), Compagnie francaise des petroles and Pechiney-Ugine Kuhlmann of France. SNEA, 70 per cent of which was owned by Enterprise de Recherche et d'Activites Petrolieres, a French State company, was engaged in further activities through its wholly owned subsidiary Aquitaine, under a joint venture agreement with both the Anglo-American Corporation and Total-Compagnie Miniere et Nucleaire of France. Companies from the United States, particularly Union Carbide Corporation and Newmont Mining Corporation, were also reported to be involved in prospecting for Namibian uranium. Others had registered as external companies in Namibia, including Delaware Nuclear, Inc., the Southern Uranium Corporation and Tristate Nuclear, Inc. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions published the names of vessels that in 1986 had transported Namibian uranium to the Belgian port of Zeebrugge. Seven ships were involved in this illegal trade: the Sederberg, Helderberg, Waterberg, Winterberg, Transvaal and Ortelius (all of the Belgian shipping company CMB), and the Hoorn (of the Dutch shipping company Nedlloyd).

Foreign economic interests had been prospecting for oil and gas in Namibia for many years. It was recently confirmed that a sizeable gas find rated to be among the largest in the world had been discovered in the Kudu field, with reserves estimated to be worth in excess of 8 billion rand and capable of supplying up to 65 per cent of South Africa's fuel needs for 30 years. South Africa had authorized the Southern Oil Exploration Corporation (Pty), Ltd., to develop the gas field. It had also decided to route the gas directly to Cape Town rather than to refine it in Namibia.

Major banks involved in exploiting Namibia's resources were Barclays National Bank and Standard Bank South West Africa, subsidiaries of British-based international banking groups. Another, the South West Africa Bank, had the majority of its shares registered in the name of Compagnie Luxembourgeoise de la Dresdner Bank, A.G., a company incorporated in Luxembourg and belonging to the Dresdner Bank group of the Federal Republic of Germany. The operations of banks in Namibia were exclusively directed at the needs of expatriates and South African and other foreign economic interests, and were instrumental in integrating the financial and customs systems of Namibia and South Africa. Banks provided money for the occupying South African administration and for foreign economic interests operating in Namibia, and channelled the funds of their clients, as well as their own profits, to accounts in South Africa and Western Europe.

In the agricultural sector, a substantial portion of the land in the so-called police zone, the area set aside for white settlement which comprised about two thirds of the total area of Namibia, was owned by South African individuals and corporations, both absentee owners and South African nationals living in Namibia. South African marketing boards or agencies controlled virtually all marketing of cattle, caracul pelts and wool, and South African individuals and companies controlled a major share of the meat-processing plants. The coastal waters of Namibia had long been known to be a rich fishing area; however, its pelagic fish was considerably depleted as a result of plunder by South African and other foreign economic interests. Ownership of the inshore processing industry and much of the fishing fleet was in the hands of South African companies (Ovenstone, Silverman, Du Preez) or South African-based corporate capital (Barlow Rand, Anglo-Vaal, Anglo-American, Fedfood/Federale Volksbeleggings) which repatriated their profits to South Africa and elsewhere rather than investing locally. They exploited the migrant labour system, employing thousands of migrant workers in appalling conditions, at starvation wages, and laying them off without pay as soon as each season was over.

During the year, the Council for Namibia intensified its efforts for the effective implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, which it had adopted in 1974.⁽¹³⁾ It sent consultation missions to Western Europe in February and May 1986 to exchange views with Governments on ways of securing the Decree's implementation (see p. 925).

The Vienna International Conference, in its July Declaration and Programme of Action⁽¹⁴⁾ (see p. 925), affirmed that the natural resources of Namibia were the inviolable heritage of its people; expressed concern at the rapid depletion of those resources as a result of plunder by South Africa and other foreign economic interests, in contravention of United Nations resolutions and Decree No. 1; condemned the activities of all foreign economic and other interests in Namibia as constituting one of the major obstacles to its independence; and urged all States to recognize Decree No. 1 and to take effective measures, including legislative and enforcement action, to ensure compliance with the Decree by all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction.

The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February⁽⁸⁾ condemned the activities of foreign economic interests which were illegally exploiting Namibia's resources, and demanded that TNCs comply with United Nations resolutions by refraining from any new investment or activities in Namibia, by withdrawing from the Territory and by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration.

On 11 August⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on colonial countries reaffirmed that Namibia's natural resources were its people's inviolable heritage, stating that their illegal exploitation and depletion by South Africa and foreign economic interests violated United Nations resolutions, particularly Decree No. 1. It condemned the plunder of Namibian uranium and called on States to prohibit State-owned and other corporations from dealing in Namibian uranium. The Committee requested the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, which operated the Urenco uranium-enrichment plant at Almelo, Netherlands, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the 1970 Treaty of Almelo regulating Urenco's activities.

The Committee, on the same date⁽¹⁰⁾ condemned South Africa's illegal exploitation of Na-mbia's natural resources, including its extension of the territorial sea, the proclamation of a purported exclusive economic zone off the coast of Namibia and the exploitation of the Territory's marine resources. It noted with concern the rapid depletion of Namibia's natural resources as a result of their systematic illegal plunder by South Africa and other foreign economic interests, in disregard of Decree No. 1, and demanded that it cease. It also condemned the exploitation of Namibian uranium by State-owned or State-controlled corporations, which constituted a violation by the Governments involved of binding resolutions of the Security Council and was thus in violation of Article 25 of the United Nations Charter.

Social conditions and the exploitation of labour

The Council for Namibia kept under constant review the social conditions in the Territory⁽¹³⁾ and its Standing Committee II prepared in March 1986 a report on those conditions⁽¹⁵⁾

South Africa had extended its apartheid system to Namibia and introduced inhuman measures, such as arbitrary imprisonment and detention of leaders, members and supporters of SWAPO, the killing of Namibian patriots and other acts of brutality and torture. Mass shootings of civilians, arbitrary searches, destruction of villages and detention and torture of individuals were reported. Acts of cold-blooded killings, systematic torture, abductions, rapes, detentions without trial by South African murder squads, namely the "Koevoet", the "Takkies" and the "Etango", and disappearances of civilians had become widespread. The inhuman practices of the South African army in Namibia included death by decapitation, setting fire to homesteads, kicking and beating to death, and tying explosive devices against the bodies of victims. The occupation regime continued to make use of banning orders aimed at restricting political and civil liberties. SWAPO members released from detention were placed under restriction in their homes or areas where they resided and were prohibited from leaving them, attending meetings or receiving visitors.

On 18 January 1986, a bomb explosion at the Oshigambo Lutheran High School in northern Namibia caused extensive damage. On 23 January, the main offices of the Council of Churches in Namibia were deliberately destroyed in a fire. In February 1986, the Council denounced the imprisonment and trial of seven SWAPO members, who had been charged under the so-called security legislation, and demanded their immediate release. The charges were related to their activities against the occupation regime and its agents in Namibia; the accused were refused bail and imprisoned for over one year.

Newspapers and institutions opposed to South Africa's occupation of Namibia and its puppet administration suffered constant harassment and attacks. The offices of The Namibian newspaper were attacked on at least three occasions. Reporters working for the newspaper were systematically harassed, and vehicles used by staff had their wind-screens smashed and tyres slashed.

The labour force in Namibia was divided along racial lines. Apartheid existed in the conditions of work, wages earned, the right to organize in trade unions and the types of jobs available. Black Namibians working for Western and South African TNCs were employed under a discriminatory system of wages, working conditions and living standards. There was neither protective labour legislation for the majority of workers nor statutory right to a pension, to set pay, holiday pay or maternity leave. A worker could be dismissed without prior notice and such occurrences were frequent. The nature of the migrant worker system had prevented the emergence of a significant permanent industrial labour force in Namibia. Workers returned to subsistence farming for several months each year. Owing to lack of housing and other social services, they could not move their families to their work place. In order to guarantee a constant supply of cheap black labour, great restrictions were placed on a worker's ability to seek work, live in a family setting, earn a living and organize.

Genuine trade unionism was prevented by South Africa in conjunction with other foreign interests and corporations. The effectiveness of trade unions in Namibia was heavily circumscribed through selective and discriminatory representation, through suppression of all but "co-operative" unions and through rising unemployment. In the absence of any legal framework protecting them, black workers made remarkable efforts in 1986 to organize themselves and co-ordinate their collective actions. The largest boost to unionization was the launching of potentially the most powerful trade union, the Mineworkers Union of Namibia (MUN), which brought together representatives from five Namibian mines: De Beers, Rössing Uranium, Rio Tinto Zinc, Tsumeb Corporation and CDM. The founding of MUN marked part of a concerted bid to reinforce the umbrella National Union of Namibian Workers (NUNW), which had a long-standing affiliation with SWAPO and was a member of ILO. Also under NUNW was the 6,000-member Namibian Food and Allied Union, formed in September 1986 after 38 workers' committees were established at food and food-related industries around Windhoek.

The dispossession of land, the war and the repression brought about by South Africa's occupation continued to force thousands of Namibians to seek refuge in neighbouring countries, particularly Angola and Zambia. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) estimated that there were approximately 70,000 to 80,000 Namibian refugees in neighbouring countries, creating additional expenditure in agriculture, health, education and vocational training for those countries.

International assistance

The International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, in its July Declaration and Programme of Action(1) (see p. 925), noted with satisfaction the positive role played by NGOs, parliamentarians and individuals in support of the Namibian cause. It emphasized the need for all States, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations and individuals to intensify their political, diplomatic, military and material assistance to the Namibian people and SWAPO. The Conference called on them to exert maximum pressure for the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia and to support United Nations actions, and urged them to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of Namibian refugees in neighbouring countries. Further, it appealed to Governments, institutions and individuals to contribute or increase contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia to assist the Nationhood Programme and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and appealed to them to provide scholarships, internships and other forms of training and assistance so that Namibians could acquire the skills and experience necessary to carry out administrative and technical duties in an independent Namibia.

UN Fund for Namibia

Activities of the Fund

Voluntary contributions were the major source of financing of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, which in 1986 continued to serve as the main vehicle through which the Council for Namibia, acting as its trustee, channelled assistance to the Territory. The Fund's activities were concentrated in three programmes—the Nationhood Programme and the United Nations Institute for Namibia (see p. 959), and educational, social and relief assistance.

The Nationhood Programme and the Institute were set up to prepare for the future attainment of independence, the establishment of State machinery and the assumption of administrative responsibilities by Namibians. The educational, social and relief assistance programme, in addition to providing individual scholarships, emphasized immediate needs and the welfare of Namibians in their independence struggle. Assistance in this area was administered, to the extent possible, through individual projects.

Between 1 July 1985 and 30 June 1986,^(c) 115 new scholarships were awarded and 18 students completed their courses. As of 1 July 1986, 224 students in 11 countries were studying various subjects.

Money from the Fund was used to finance vocational and technical training, to provide assistance in health and medical care, nutrition and social welfare, to acquire books and periodicals for Namibian refugee camps and SWAPO offices, and to facilitate the attendance of Namibian representatives at international seminars, meetings and conferences.

A sum was made available from the Fund for emergency assistance to be allocated by the Commissioner. The field offices of the Commissioner were given a small imprest from these emergency funds to be used in accordance with the approved guidelines for the funds. During the period under review, assistance was provided to 31 individual Namibians in need of emergency medical treatment and other forms of humanitarian assistance.

Fund expenditures in 1986 for the three programmes totalled $7,248,016, as follows: Nationhood Programme, $756,164; Institute, $3,728,538; and educational, social and relief assistance, $2,763,314.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November 1986, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/39 E by recorded vote.

United Nations Fund for Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having examined the parts of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia relating to the United Nations Fund for Namibia,

Recalling its resolution 2679(XXV) of 9 December 1970, by which it established the United Nations Fund for Namibia,

Recalling also its resolution 3112(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, by which it appointed the United Nations Council for Namibia trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia,

Recalling its resolution 31/153 of 20 December 1976, by which it decided to launch the Nationhood Programme for Namibia,

Recalling further its resolution 34/92 A of 12 December 1979, by which it approved the charter of the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and its resolution 37/233 E of 20 December 1982, by which it approved amendments to the charter,

1. Takes note of the relevant parts of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia shall:

(a) Continue to formulate policies of assistance to Namibians and co-ordinate assistance for Namibia provided by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

(b) Continue to act as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia and, in this capacity, administer and manage the Fund;

(c) Continue to provide broad guidelines and formulate principles and policies for the United Nations Institute for Namibia;

(d) Continue to co-ordinate, plan and direct the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, with the aim of consolidating all measures of assistance by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system into a comprehensive assistance programme;

(e) Continue to consult with the South West Africa People's Organization in the formulation and implementation of assistance programmes for Namibians;

(f) Report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the programmes and activities undertaken through the United Nations Fund for Namibia;

3. Decides that the United Nations Fund for Namibia, which comprises the General Account, the United Nations Institute for Namibia Account and the Nationhood Programme Account, shall be the primary source of development assistance to Namibians;

4. Expresses its appreciation to all States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, governmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have made contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia to support the activities under the General Account, the activities of the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, and calls upon them to increase their assistance to Namibians through those channels;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia to intensify appeals to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals for more generous voluntary contributions to the General Account, the Nationhood Programme Account and the United Nations Institute for Namibia Account of the United Nations Fund for Namibia in view of the increased activities undertaken through the Fund for Namibia, and, in this connection, emphasizes the need for contributions in order to increase the number of scholarships awarded to Namibians under the United Nations Fund for Namibia;

6. Invites Governments to appeal once more to their national organizations and institutions for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia;

7. Decides to allocate as a temporary measure to the United Nations Fund for Namibia the sum of $1.5 million from the regular budget of the United Nations for 1987;

8. Requests the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, in order to mobilize additional resources, to continue to formulate, in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization, projects of assistance to the Namibian people to be co-financed by Governments and non-governmental organizations;

9. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in the light of the urgent need to strengthen the programmes of assistance to the Namibian people, to make every effort to expedite the execution of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia projects and other projects in favour of Namibians on the basis of procedures that will reflect the role of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia;

10. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have contributed to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, and calls upon them to continue their participation in the Programme by:

(a) Implementing projects approved by the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(b) Planning and initiating new project proposals in co-operation with, and at the request of, the Council;

(c) Allocating funds from their own financial resources for the implementation of the projects approved by the Council;

11. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue and to intensify its field attachment programme, enabling Namibians trained under various programmes to gain practical on-the-job experience in governments and institutions in diverse countries, particularly in Africa;

12. Appeals to all Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia in order to support the field attachment programme and to meet the financial requirements;

13. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Development Programme for its contribution to the financing and administration of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and the financing of the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and calls upon it to continue to allocate, at the request of the United Nations Council for Namibia, funds from the indicative planning figure for Namibia for the implementation of the Nationhood Programme projects and for the United Nations Institute for Namibia;

14. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme to increase the indicative planning figure for Namibia for the 1987-1991 programming cycle, and, taking into consideration that Namibia remains a unique responsibility of the United Nations, to exercise maximum flexibility and understanding in financing projects funded from the indicative planning figure;

15. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided by the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the World Food Programme to Namibian refugees, and requests them to expand their assistance in order to provide for the basic needs of the refugees;

16. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have waived agency support costs in respect of projects in favour of Namibians, financed from the United Nations Fund for Namibia and other sources, and urges those that have not yet done so to take appropriate steps in this regard;

17. Decides that Namibians shall continue to be eligible for assistance through the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

18. Commends the progress made in the implementation of the pre-independence components of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, and requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to elaborate and consider policies and contingency plans regarding the transitional and post-independence phases of the Programme;

19. Commends the United Nations Institute for Namibia for the effectiveness of its training programmes for Namibians and its research activities on Namibia, which contribute substantially to the struggle for freedom of the Namibian people and to the establishment of an independent State of Namibia;

20. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate closely with the United Nations Institute for Namibia in strengthening its programme of activities;

21. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, through the United Nations Institute for Namibia, to finalize, publish and disseminate at an early date a comprehensive reference book on Namibia covering all aspects of the question of Namibia as considered by the United Nations since its inception;

22. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in consultation with the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, to finalize and publish, at an early date, a demographic study of the Namibian population;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia with the necessary resources for the performance of the responsibilities entrusted to it by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the coordinating authority for the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, as well as other assistance programmes.

Financing of the Fund

In 1986, 36 States made a total contribution of $5,740,799 to the United Nations Fund for Namibia.⁽⁵⁾ In addition, $1.5 million was allocated to the Fund for 1986 from the United Nations regular budget, as authorized by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽⁴⁾

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) also financed assistance programmes for Namibia and had established an indicative planning figure (IPF) of $7,750,000 for 1982-1986. Following a 1985 UNDP Governing Council decision⁽⁵⁾ to increase that figure for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) by 50 per cent, the Council, on 27 June 1986,⁽⁶⁾ requested the Administrator to prepare new recommendations to maximize utilization of the increase.

Fund-raising missions were undertaken by the Council for Namibia in 1986 to Western Europe, visiting Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Finland and the EC Commission from 24 to 29 April, and Austria, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the Netherlands from 1 to 4 and 11 to 14 July.⁽⁷⁾ Received at a high political level in all countries visited, the missions reminded the Governments of the pressing needs of the Namibian people, explained the purposes of the Fund and reviewed priority projects for which new contributions were sought. The Governments recognized the need to prepare the Namibian people for independence and expressed their continuing support for the Council's assistance programmes.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 11 August,⁽⁷⁾ urgently called on all States and the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to continue supporting the Fund and all the Council's programmes of assistance.

Nationhood Programme

The Nationhood Programme was launched by the General Assembly in 1976 to help Namibia prepare for independence.⁽⁸⁾ Its programmes fell into three categories: pre-independence projects, transitional projects and post-independence projects. The Programme consisted of two major components—manpower training programmes and surveys and analyses of the Namibian economic and social sectors. Implementation of the projects was made difficult by the general unavailability of reliable socio-economic data and was further complicated by the lack of access to the Territory owing to South Africa's illegal occupation. The training aspects of the projects required special attention because of the scarcity of educational opportunities under South African rule.

The Council reported that, during 1985 and the first half of 1986,⁽⁹⁾ Namibians continued their training at various institutions in a number of countries and new training activities were initiated. Twenty-two handicapped Namibians began studies in the English language and in basic mathematics in Zambia in June 1985 and were, in September, joined by another 71 students. Two students began a two-year journalism course while another started a French-language course. Six trainees commenced tailoring programmes in Kenya. At Alexandria, Egypt, nine Namibians started a one-year course in port management, while two began a four-year course in marine engineering. Five students undertook a course at the Eastern African Statistical Centre in the United Republic of Tanzania and 30 Namibians began training at the Namibian Nurses Training School. At the Vocational Training Centre at Cuacra, Angola, about 200 students continued their studies. The first group of about 80 trainees completed their training in August 1986.

UN Institute for Namibia

The United Nations Institute for Namibia, inaugurated in 1976 at Lusaka, Zambia,⁽⁹⁾ continued training middle-level skilled manpower for an independent Namibia and carrying out applied research in the various sectors of the Namibian economy. Admission to the Institute was open to all persons of Namibian origin who fulfilled the requirements of its 16-member Senate. Operating on an average annual budget of $4 million, it continued to be financed by the Council through its Fund and received additional financial assistance from UNDP and UNHCR.

In 1986, 230 new students were admitted—143 in the management and development studies programme, 30 in the teacher-training upgrading programme and 57 in the secretarial programme, for a total student body of almost 600.

In January, 141 students of the seventh graduating group were awarded diplomas in management and development studies, bringing the total number of such graduates to 548. In addition, 29 students graduated in basic education and another 20 received certificates in a special programme for magistrates.

The Institute's research programme was intended to make available basic documentation for policy formulations by the future Government of an independent Namibia. Studies were completed on manpower requirements and development implications, constitutional options, agrarian reform, a language policy for Namibia, a new legal system, the agricultural economy, a health survey of Namibia, educational policy options and economic development strategy options for Namibia. Studies under way dealt with mineral development strategy options, State succession, administrative systems and policy options.

The Namibian Extension Unit continued to expand its distance education programme for Namibians who had been denied education by the South African régime. It currently served some 40,000 Namibian adults and youths in Zambia and Angola.

Other UN assistance

UN Educational and Training Programme. In a report covering the period from 16 October 1985 to 30 September 1986,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 171) had granted 210 new scholarships to Namibians and extended 132, not including awards financed by the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

UNDP activities. In 1986, UNDP provided assistance to SWAPO through three ongoing projects in education and a new health project, according to a March 1987 report by the UNDP Administrator.⁽¹¹⁾ The educational projects were all executed by UNESCO. At the Namibia Education Centres at Kwanza Sul, Angola, and Nyango, Zambia, UNDP financed teacher salaries. The upgrading of women's role in development was the aim of the third educational project. The new project of support in community health services aimed to strengthen the capacity of SWAPO for delivering basic health services to Namibians in SWAPO-administered settlements in Angola and Zambia.

Of two formulation missions for future projects, undertaken under the direct supervision of UNDP, one, with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research providing technical expertise, was on training in development aid planning, coordination and administration, while the other dealt with assistance in agricultural development. The four projects and two missions accounted for $962,500 in UNDP inputs, thereby representing 34.5 per cent of its total expenditures for national liberation movements as a whole.

Agency assistance. United Nations specialized agencies and other organizations continued to provide assistance to colonial people, including Namibians, according to a June 1986 report⁽¹²⁾ by the Secretary-General. Updated information on the topic was contained in a May 1987 report.⁽¹³⁾

Some agencies, among them ILO and FAO, gave assistance through the Nationhood Programme. ILO focused its assistance to Namibians on overcoming discriminatory education and training and on working conditions experienced under apartheid. It also assisted in the functioning of the vocational training centre for Namibia in Angola. FAO's programmes consisted mainly of training activities, support for food production, sectoral surveys and policy analysis, as well as the conduct of occasional studies and dissemination of resulting information. The World Health Organization made, for the period under review, a total of $84,895 available for medical supplies to SWAPO and provided Namibia, as an associate member, with $352,645 for health and training purposes. UNIDO was the executing agency for assistance to SWAPO in establishing a woodworking and metalworking workshop, for pre-independence assistance in preparation of the study on national reconstruction and development in Namibia, and for an exploratory mission for a technical visit to Namibia to look into the possibility of establishing rural industry. UNHCR allocated in 1986 $1.8 million for an assistance programme in favour of Namibian refugees in the sectors of health, education, domestic needs, agriculture and construction of communal facilities. UNESCO, among other activities, organized an eight-month course in social science research methods and development studies for Namibian women at the Institute of Social Studies at The Hague, Netherlands (August 1985-April 1986).

Chapter IV

Other colonial Territories

With the dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) remaining unresolved, the General Assembly in November 1986 again requested both parties to initiate negotiations and the Secretary-General to continue his good offices mission to assist them (resolution 41/40).

In addition to that question, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) continued to examine the situations in Western Sahara and East Timor and decided to review them again in 1987. In October, the Assembly reaffirmed that Western Sahara was a decolonization matter and again requested Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to negotiate a cease-fire and a referendum for self-determination of the people of the Territory (41/16).

In addition, the Assembly took action on the questions of American Samoa (41/23), Guam (41/25) and the United States Virgin Islands (41/24), under United States administration; and Anguilla (41/17), Bermuda (41/18), the British Virgin Islands (41/19), the Cayman Islands (41/20), Montserrat (41/21) and the Turks and Caicos Islands (41/22), administered by the United Kingdom.

The Assembly adopted decisions on the questions of Pitcairn (41/406), Gibraltar (41/407) and St. Helena (41/408).

A visiting mission, dispatched to Tokelau in July, reported that its people had expressed the desire to maintain their current association with New Zealand, the administering Power. The Assembly approved the mission's report and urged New Zealand to intensify its political education programme to improve the awareness of the Territory's people of their right to self-determination (resolution 41/26).

Background papers on developments in most of the Territories were prepared for the Committee on colonial countries by the United Nations Secretariat.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

Communications. A number of letters were addressed to the Secretary-General by Argentina, the United Kingdom and others on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) situation in 1986.

Argentina charged that United Kingdom aircraft had overflown and harassed Argentine fishing vessels—on 11 and 15 August,⁽¹⁾ 1 October⁽²⁾ and 24 November⁽³⁾—outside the so-called protection zone which the United Kingdom had unilaterally set up at 150 nautical miles around the Malvinas. The United Kingdom denied those charges—in letters dated 4 September,⁽⁴⁾ 10 October⁽⁵⁾ and 15 December⁽⁶⁾—saying that the vessels were found within the zone and that its aircraft approached the ships to confirm their identity without harassing them in any way.

Conservation measures in the South Atlantic fishing grounds were the subject of a series of letters. On 22 September,⁽⁷⁾ the United Kingdom expressed its concern over a report that Argentina had concluded with the USSR a bilateral fisheries agreement purportedly applicable to the waters around the Falkland Islands, at a time when a technical study was under way by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) that could pave the way for a multilateral agreement on long-term conservation measures. On 29 October,⁽⁸⁾ the United Kingdom said the bilateral fisheries agreements which Argentina had signed with Bulgaria and the USSR were intended to prejudice matters in dispute between itself and Argentina, that it had informed the parties that those agreements were contrary to international law and that it had concluded that there was no longer a realistic prospect of achieving multilateral arrangements under FAO for the 1987 fishing season. Therefore, in the interest of responsible conservation and management, it issued a declaration, effective immediately, on the Falkland Islands Interim Conservation and Management Zone extending 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea of the Falkland Islands was measured; legislative measures for the zone were expected to be taken by the authorities in the Falkland Islands as an interim step pending internationally agreed arrangements for the south-west Atlantic fishery as a whole.

On 30 October,⁽⁹⁾ Argentina transmitted the text of a government press communiqué calling the United Kingdom's claim over the control of the fishing resources and jurisdiction over the continental shelf as juridically and politically inadmissible as it encroached on waters over which Argentina exercised rights of sovereignty and jurisdiction. On 3 November,⁽¹⁰⁾ Argentina stated that the United Kingdom's declaration marked a step backwards in the elimination of colonialism and was a violation of General Assembly recommendations on the Malvinas question; the pretext of concern for marine resources conservation was a cover for its unilateral move to improve its position in the sovereignty controversy. Annexed to the letter was the text of a 31 October note to the United Kingdom, transmitted through the Embassy of Brazil at Buenos Aires, formally rejecting Britain's claims and reaffirming Argentine sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands, the South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, and the surrounding maritime waters, sea-bed and marine subsoil. In a declaration of 17 November⁽¹¹⁾ Argentina expressed its willingness to start negotiations with the United Kingdom—with the Secretary-General's assistance—on problems between the two countries besides the sovereignty dispute, namely, trade, consular and diplomatic relations, transport and communications, and fishing resources.

On 21 November⁽¹²⁾ the United Kingdom, responding to the 30 October and 3 November letters from Argentina, stated that its 29 October declaration respected the rights that Argentina might legitimately claim under international law; that the declaration was aimed at fish-stock conservation, not at bolstering Britain's sovereignty over the Falkland Islands; that it was Argentina which had sought to use the fisheries issue to advance its sovereignty claim; and that the United Kingdom rejected Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Falkland Islands, the South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands. It added that the Interim Conservation and Management Zone, proclaimed by the Governor of the Falkland Islands on 29 October, did not extend beyond the protection zone it had set up as a defensive measure.

Peru, on 5 November⁽¹³⁾ deplored the United Kingdom's decision on the fishing zone, contending that the unilateral measure frustrated Argentina's efforts to resolve its dispute with the United Kingdom peacefully. Venezuela, on 6 November⁽¹⁴⁾ transmitted a 30 October government statement in which it declared that the latest United Kingdom decision disrupted international efforts aimed at settling the sovereignty dispute.

Argentina, on 13 November⁽¹⁵⁾ transmitted the text of an 11 November resolution adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States (OAS), at Guatemala City, in which the Council expressed its concern over the new element of potential conflict introduced by the United Kingdom's declaration, asked both parties to negotiate and to refrain from taking actions that might affect the de facto situation, and asked OAS to ask the international community to redouble its efforts to gain a settlement. On 20

November⁽¹⁶⁾ Argentina transmitted a letter dated 4 November from the FAO Director-General, confirming that FAO, within its limits of competence and mandate as a specialized technical agency, was assessing the state of fishery resources in the south-west Atlantic, as requested at the FAO Conference in 1985.

India transmitted on 15 May⁽¹⁷⁾ the final documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April), in which the Ministers again supported Argentina's right to have its sovereignty over the Malvinas restored through negotiations and reaffirmed that the massive United Kingdom military and naval presence in the area was a cause for concern to the countries of the region. That position was reiterated in a communique adopted by the Plenary Meeting of the Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 20 November) forwarded by Zimbabwe on 21 November.⁽¹⁸⁾

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries⁽¹⁹⁾ considered the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question at two meetings, on 12 and 14 August, hearing statements by Argentina and Committee members as well as a representative of the Legislative Council of the Falkland Islands and two other petitioners. The United Kingdom, the administering Power concerned, did not participate; it had informed the Committee in January that it would no longer take part in the Committee's work (see p. 967).

The Committee, on 14 August, reiterated that the way to end the colonial situation in the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) was by a negotiated settlement of the sovereignty dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom. Expressing regret that implementation of Assembly resolutions on the question had not started, the Committee urged the parties to resume negotiations and reiterated its support for the renewed good offices mission of the Secretary-General to assist them.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1985 General Assembly request⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in November 1986, a report on the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)⁽²¹⁾ in which he stated that he had exchanged views on the question with Argentina and the United Kingdom, meeting with both heads of Government and, on a number of occasions, with their Foreign Ministers and Permanent Representatives to the United Nations. Their positions remained essentially unchanged, he said, with the United Kingdom remaining committed to improving bilateral relations with Argentina over practical matters, setting aside the sovereignty issue, on which it considered that views were fundamentally opposed, and to defending the rights of the Falkland Islands to self-determination. Argentina had expressed its willingness to initiate negotiations in accordance with the 1985 Assembly resolution⁽²⁰⁾ in order to resolve the differences, including all aspects concerning the future of the Territory. The Secretary-General regretted the lack of progress and stated that time was not necessarily working in favour of overcoming the obstacles to a peaceful settlement; he remained ready to assist the parties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/40.

Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and having received the report of the Secretary-General,

Aware of the interest of the international community in the peaceful and definitive settlement by the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of all their differences, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the interest repeatedly expressed by both parties in normalizing their relations,

Convinced that such purpose would be facilitated by a global negotiation between both Governments that will allow them to rebuild mutual confidence on a solid basis and to resolve the pending problems, including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas),

1. Reiterates its request to the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to initiate negotiations with a view to finding the means to resolve peacefully and definitively the problems pending between both countries, including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his renewed mission of good offices in order to assist the parties in complying with the request made in paragraph 1 above, and to take the necessary measures to that end;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)".

General Assembly resolution 41/40

25 November 1986 Meeting 84 116-4-34 (recorded vote)

12-nation draft (A/41/L.19 & Add.1); agenda item 28.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 4th Committee 18, 19; plenary 82, 84.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belize, Oman, Sri Lanka, United Kingdom.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Belgium, Bhutan, Burma, Cameroon, Denmark, Finland, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malawi, Maldives, Malta, Nepal, New Zealand, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Thailand, Turkey, United Arab Emirates.

In the plenary debate, Argentina declared that the situation had worsened, with the United Kingdom introducing a new and alarming factor as a result of its 29 October declaration which, it charged, sought to expand British domination over the area. Stating that the sovereignty dispute with the United Kingdom dated back to 1833, Argentina said that all United Kingdom action was aimed at asserting its purported sovereignty, while everything Argentina was doing was aimed at recovering its sovereignty.

The United Kingdom asserted that the sovereignty issue had dogged attempts to make progress in Anglo-Argentine relations, that Argentina continued to reject United Kingdom efforts to re-establish contacts and rebuild mutual confidence, and that the people of the Falkland Islands should be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination. It said the fisheries declaration was made basically for conservation reasons, but also because Argentina claimed a 200-mile zone centred on the Falkland Islands and thus challenged the United Kingdom on the sovereignty question. In its view, the Argentine proposal of 17 November (see p. 962) on formal cessation of hostilities was laden with conditions; the United Kingdom remained ready to discuss everything except sovereignty and, while there was a sovereignty dispute, the essential question was that of self-determination.

In explanation of vote, Argentina said the text contained a procedural request to the two parties to negotiate on all aspects on the future of the islands; the international community had recognized the dispute as that of sovereignty. The United Kingdom said the text, despite its seductive simplicity and cosmetic appeal, was pro-Argentine in calling for negotiations on "all aspects" and thus supporting the Argentine contention that sovereignty must be discussed.

Oman expressed hope that a balanced text would be produced in the future for approval by consensus. Sri Lanka said the draft should have stressed the right of the peoples to be consulted on their future constitutional status; merely urging the two parties to resolve the conflict was insufficient.

Asserting that both parties must agree to negotiate without any pre-conditions, Lesotho said it would have liked the text not to include the phrase "including all aspects on the future of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)". Solomon Islands hoped to see a more compromising approach to working out an agenda for negotiations.

Botswana called for negotiations on solving the dispute in all its aspects, while upholding the right of the inhabitants to self-determination. Although regretting the absence of a consensus text, Sweden considered the draft to be a constructive attempt at promoting a dialogue between the parties without any pre-conditions. Kuwait considered the text balanced, as did the Netherlands, which felt the wording did not prejudice the outcome of negotiations. France favoured negotiations without prior conditions and covering all aspects of the problem; similarly, Canada considered the text to offer the most appropriate means for solving the dispute. Mongolia said the international community was entitled to require that the permanent member of the Security Council renounce its colonial policy. Jordan, Lesotho and Sweden supported the continuation of the Secretary-General's good offices mission.

On 25 November, the Assembly took note of the report of the Fourth Committee on the question (decision 41/414).⁽²²⁾ The Committee had heard on 24 November two petitioners representing the Falkland Islands Legislative Council and two others as natives of the islands.⁽²³⁾

East Timor

In 1986, the General Assembly did not consider the question of East Timor as the result of a recommendation of the General Committee (see p. 378).

Communications. On 16 January,⁽¹⁾ Mozambique forwarded to the Secretary-General a November 1985 article from what it called a publication of Tahanan Politick (TAPOL), an Indonesian opposition exile group, regarding what it labelled Indonesian colonialism in East Timor, and asked that it be circulated as a document of the Security Council.

Portugal informed the Secretary-General on 4 March⁽²⁾ that it had nothing to add to the information it had provided in 1979,⁽³⁾ as required by Article 73 (e) of the Charter of the United Nations.

Indonesia, on 31 July⁽⁴⁾ and 4,⁽⁵⁾ 13⁽⁶⁾ and 14 August,⁽⁷⁾ expressed its opposition to the appearance of petitioners before the Committee on colonial countries to discuss the question of East Timor. It said that the process of decolonization in East Timor had been carried out under the provisions of the Charter and 1960 General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV)⁽⁸⁾ and 1541(XV),⁽⁹⁾ and that, East Timor having been integrated into Indonesia in 1976, the Committee's consideration of the question would constitute interference in internal affairs of a sovereign State.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries⁽¹⁰⁾ considered the East Timor question at three meetings on 4 and 15 August 1986. It heard statements by Angola, Cape Verde, Indonesia, Mozambique, Portugal, Sao Tome and Principe and Sweden. In addition, it granted requests for hearing from petitioners and heard statements by a representative of the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN) as well as by a member of the Japanese National Diet, members of two universities, and representatives of 16 non-governmental organizations and the East Timor refugee community in Australia.

On 15 August, the Committee decided to continue consideration of the item in 1987, subject to Assembly directives.

Note by the Secretary-General. In September,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that talks were continuing between Indonesia and Portugal under his auspices, with a view to achieving a comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement of the question of East Timor. The last round of talks was held from 9 to 12 September, further meetings were scheduled and a report would be submitted in due course.

Western Sahara

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 10 March 1986,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the Western Sahara question was one of decolonization and again requested the parties to the conflict, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO Front), to bring about a cease-fire and the necessary conditions for a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara. It welcomed the efforts of the Secretary-General and the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to achieve a solution and decided to consider the situation in 1987 as a matter of priority. (See also p. 700.)

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries⁽⁷⁾ considered the Western Sahara question at one meeting each on 4 and 11 August. The Committee heard statements by Afghanistan, the Congo, Cuba, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania; a representative of the POLISARIO Front also spoke. On 11 August, the Committee decided to consider the item in 1987, subject to General Assembly directives.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1986 a report⁽⁴⁾ in which he reviewed contacts he and the OAU Chairman had made with Morocco and the POLISARIO Front between March and September 1986. The Secretary-General and the OAU Chairman concluded that the positions of the parties remained far apart on such basic questions as the arrangements for the cease-fire and the conducting of an envisaged referendum, and that it was necessary for the parties to show more flexibility in order for progress to be made.

Communications. On 17 October,⁽⁵⁾ Morocco informed the Secretary-General of its decision not to participate in the Assembly debate on the question, asserting that the draft resolution put forward at the current Assembly session attempted to diminish the Secretary-General's cease-fire and referendum initiative by setting a number of pre-conditions.

The failure to find a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Western Sahara was deplored by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September 1986).⁽⁶⁾ The Conference urged Morocco and the POLISARIO Front to hold direct negotiations to reach a cease-fire and create the conditions necessary for a referendum under the auspices of OAU and the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Fourth Committee, in October, heard four petitioners at their request,⁽⁷⁾ including a representative of the POLISARIO Front.

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/16 by recorded vote.

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 40/50 of 2 December 1985 on the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX) on Western Sahara, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983,

Taking note with appreciation of the part of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986 concerning Western Sahara,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question of Western Sahara,

Noting with appreciation the joint good offices process initiated in New York on 9 April 1986 by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations with a view to implementing resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX) and General Assembly resolution 40/50,

1. Reaffirms that the question of Western Sahara is a question of decolonization which remains to be completed on the basis of the exercise by the people of Western Sahara of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Reaffirms also that the solution of the question of Western Sahara lies in the implementation of resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX) of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, which establishes ways and means for a just and definitive political solution to the Western Sahara conflict;

3. Again requests, to that end, the two parties to the conflict, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to undertake direct negotiations, in the shortest possible time, with a view to bringing about a cease-fire to create the necessary conditions for a peaceful and fair referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, a referendum without any administrative or military constraints, under the auspices of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations;

4. Welcomes the efforts of the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote a just and definitive solution of the question of Western Sahara, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 40/50;

5. Invites the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to exert every effort to persuade the two parties to the conflict, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to negotiate, in the shortest possible time and in conformity with resolution AHG/Res.

104(XIX), General Assembly resolution 40/50 and the present resolution, the terms of a cease-fire and the modalities for organizing the said referendum;

6. Appeals to the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to display the political will necessary to implement resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX), General Assembly resolution 40/50 and the present resolution;

7. Reaffirms the determination of the United Nations to co-operate fully with the Organization of African Unity with a view to implementing the relevant decisions of that organization, in particular resolution AHG/Res.104(XIX);

8. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

9. Invites the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to keep the Secretary-General of the United Nations informed of the progress achieved in the implementation of the decisions of the Organization of African Unity relating to Western Sahara;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to follow the situation in Western Sahara closely with a view to the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second readiness of both sides to accept the result of the referendum and the United Nations role. Brazil and Egypt shared that view. Colombia, Somalia and Zaire felt the text should have emphasized more fully the Secretary-General's initiatives and good offices. Canada commended the Secretary-General for his efforts and urged the parties involved to take advantage of the good offices at their disposal to reach a mutually acceptable solution. Sweden would have preferred a consensus text, as would the United States, which considered that the draft was heavily biased in favour of the Algerian position, failed to accommodate certain legitimate concerns of Morocco and took little account of the progress made by the Secretary-General. Turkey viewed the draft as not conforming to the expectations of all the parties concerned. Guatemala said the parties involved should be allowed to find their own solution to the dispute. Thailand abstained as it did not recognize the POLISARIO Front.

China and Oman did not participate in the Committee vote, with China urging the people of Western Sahara themselves to solve the issue and expressing support for the Secretary-General's efforts to that end.

Among those voting in favour, Australia cautioned against formulations prejudicial to the outcome of an act of self-determination. New Zealand called for such an act to be held under United Nations auspices. Finland supported the appeal made to the parties concerned. Austria and Norway believed that a political solution to the conflict fell primarily within the scope of OAU. Uruguay and the Sudan felt the draft should have reflected the progress made.

In the plenary Assembly, Costa Rica urged that the new process of indirect negotiations under the Secretary-General's good offices be given an opportunity to prove its effectiveness. Bolivia said the Secretary-General should be given a broader mandate and Senegal called for a display of political will.

Other Territories

In 1986, the Committee on colonial countries,(1) charged with overseeing the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,(2) held two sessions in New York—on 18 March, and from 4 to 15 August and on 10

September. The Committee had before it working papers by the Secretariat on the situation in the Territories under consideration.

By a letter of 30 January, the United Kingdom informed the Committee Chairman that it had decided not to participate henceforth in the work of the Committee or its sub-committees; it added that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities under the United Nations Charter towards its Non-Self-Governing Territories and that it would also inform the Secretary-General of any relevant political and constitutional developments in those Territories.

By a 4 August resolution on sending visiting missions to Territories, the Committee expressed regret over the United Kingdom's decision and urged that it permit the access of missions to the Territories under its administration.

The General Assembly, in October, adopted resolutions or decisions, most of which were based on drafts proposed by the Committee on colonial countries. The Assembly also considered the situation in New Caledonia (see p. 912).

American Samoa

In November 1986, proposed changes to the Constitution of American Samoa relating to expansion of the territorial legislature, qualifications and impeachment of public officials and judicial reconstruction were rejected by the voters in a referendum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/23.

Question of American Samoa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of American Samoa,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to American Samoa, including in particular its resolution 40/41 of 2 December 1985,

Taking into account the statement of the representative of the administering Power relating to American Samoa,

Conscious of the need to promote progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration in respect of American Samoa,

Noting with appreciation the continued participation of the United States of America, as the administering Power, in the work of the Special Committee in regard to American Samoa, thereby enabling it to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of the situation in the Territory,

Noting that a constitutional convention to consider amendments to the present Constitution was held from 30 June to 11 July 1986 and that proposals adopted would be put to the voters for approval in November 1986,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Recalling the dispatch in 1981 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to American Samoa at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to American Samoa;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to American Samoa;

4. Calls upon the Government of the United States of America, as the administering Power, to take all necessary steps, taking into account the rights, interests and wishes of the people of American Samoa as expressed freely in conditions leading to real self-determination, to expedite the process of decolonization of the Territory in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration and reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of American Samoa of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

5. Notes that, pursuant to an act of Congress, the United States Secretary of the Interior is no longer authorized to make changes unilaterally in the Constitution of American Samoa and that the people of the Territory are the final ratifying authority over the Constitution;

6. Calls upon the administering Power to respond favourably to the request of the Samoan people to appoint the Chief Justice and other members of the judiciary of the Territory themselves;

7. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power, under the Charter, to promote the economic and social development of American Samoa and calls upon the administering Power to intensify its efforts to strengthen and diversify the economy of the Territory and to make it more viable in order to reduce its heavy economic and financial dependence on the United States and to create employment opportunities for the people of the Territory;

8. Expresses the hope that the development planning process initiated by the first five-year development plan will be continued and strengthened;

9. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to ensure their right to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development with a view to creating conditions for a balanced, diversified and viable economy;

10. Urges the administering Power to continue to facilitate close relations and co-operation between the peoples of American Samoa and the neighbouring island communities and between the territorial Government and the regional institutions in order to enhance further the economic and social welfare of the people of the Territory;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the dispatch of a further visiting mission to American Samoa at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, taking into account, in particular, the wishes of the people of the Territory, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Anguilla

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 41/17 without vote.

Question of Anguilla

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Anguilla,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Anguilla, including in particular its resolution 40/48 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Noting the appointment of a Constitution Review Committee in October 1985, and the statement by the Governor of the Territory, in which he reiterated that the administering Power would only consider substantial changes to the Constitution as part of a process to move towards independence within eighteen months to two years,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory,

Noting that the economy of Anguilla continued to grow during the period under review, particularly the tourist industry, and that the Government accorded the highest priority to the development of the Territory's economic and social infrastructure and was reviewing options for the diversification of its economy in such sectors as fisheries, agriculture and small-scale manufacturing,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in funds administered by the United Nations Development Programme and in funds from other sources,

Noting the participation of Anguilla for the first time, in June 1985, in the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development,

Recalling the dispatch in 1984 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to Anguilla at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Anguilla;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Anguilla to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to Anguilla;

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in Anguilla as will enable its people to exercise freely and without interference, from a well-informed standpoint as to the available options, their inalienable right to determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of Anguilla themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration and, in that connection, reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of the Territory of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Calls upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the Government of Anguilla, to continue to strengthen the economy of the Territory and to increase its assistance to programmes of diversification;

7. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue the assistance necessary for the increased employment of the local population in the civil service, as well as in managerial, technical and other sectors of the economy;

8. Reiterates its request to the administering Power, in the light of the observations, conclusions and recommen-datations of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Anguilla, 1984, to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and other regional and international bodies, in the development and strengthening of the economy of Anguilla;

9. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to take effective measures to safeguard, guarantee and ensure the rights of the people of Anguilla to own and dispose of their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over their future development;

10. Recalls the recommendation of the Visiting Mission that the administering Power should continue to make every effort to facilitate and encourage the participation of representatives of the Territory in regional and international organizations, including the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, in order to enable them to examine political, economic and social developments in other Territories and countries similar to their own;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to Anguilla at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/18,

Question of Bermuda

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Bermuda,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Bermuda, including in particular its resolution 40/43 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Noting the planned introduction of a Private Member's Bill in the Senate of Bermuda demanding a referendum on the issue of independence to take place on 7 April 1987.

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and further strengthening its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Welcoming the role being played in the Territory by the United Nations Development Programme, specifically in programmes of agriculture, forestry and fisheries,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Bermuda;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Bermuda to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to Bermuda;

4. Reiterates that it is the obligation of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in Bermuda as will enable the people of the Territory to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration and, in that connection, reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of Bermuda of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of that right;

5. Reaffirms that, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration, it is ultimately for the people of Bermuda themselves to determine their own future political status;

6. Reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territory could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration and that it is the responsibility of the administering Power to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

7. Urges the administering Power to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve Bermuda in any offensive acts or interference directed against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration;

8. Urges once again the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue to take all effective measures to guarantee the right of the people of Bermuda to own and dispose of their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over their future development with a view to creating conditions for a diversified, balanced and viable economy;

9. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to pay special attention to the development needs of Bermuda;

10. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue the assistance necessary for increased employment of the local population in the civil service, particularly at senior levels;

11. Emphasizes the desirability of sending a visiting mission to the Territory and requests the administering Power to facilitate such a mission at the earliest possible opportunity;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a visiting mission to Bermuda at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

British Virgin Islands

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/19.

Question of the British Virgin Islands

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the British Virgin Islands,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to the British Virgin Islands, including in particular its resolution 40/44 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and further strengthening its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Reaffirming that it is the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory,

Noting that, while the service sectors of the economy of the British Virgin Islands are growing, agriculture and manufacturing have remained relatively static, and noting in that connection the continuing commitment of the territorial Government to attaining economic diversification, particularly in the areas of agriculture, fisheries and small industries, and the constraints which the Territory faces in that regard,

Welcoming the contribution to the development of the British Virgin Islands by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that operate in the Territory, as well as that of regional organizations, including the Caribbean Development Bank, and noting the further allocation of funds by the United Nations Development Programme,

Welcoming also the continued participation of the Territory in the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development, sponsored by the World Bank, and in other regional and international organizations, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and its subsidiary bodies, and noting the admission of the Territory in April 1985 to membership in the Caribbean Centre for Development Administration,

Recalling the dispatch in 1976 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to the British Virgin Islands at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the British Virgin Islands;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of the British Virgin Islands to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to the British Virgin Islands;

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in the British Virgin Islands as will enable the people of the Territory to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of the British Virgin Islands themselves to determine their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration, and in that connection reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of the Territory of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination;

6. Calls upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to intensify its efforts to broaden the base of the economy of the Territory;

7. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the Government of the British Virgin Islands, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to ensure their right to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development;

8. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to intensify measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic development of the Territory;

9. Reiterates its call upon the administering Power to continue to facilitate the participation of the British Virgin Islands in various international and regional organizations and in other organizations of the United Nations system;

10. Calls upon the administering Power, noting that nearly two fifths of the employed labour force consists of expatriates, to facilitate, in co-operation with the territorial Government, the adoption of a manpower training programme by further upgrading the educational system, in order to expand the participation of the local population in the decision-making process in all sectors and to fill managerial and technical positions with local persons;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a visiting mission to the British Virgin Islands at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Cayman Islands

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/20 on 31 October.

Question of the Cayman Islands

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Cayman Islands,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to the Cayman Islands, including in particular its resolution 40/45 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Noting with appreciation the continued contribution of the United Nations Development Programme to the development of the Territory,

Recalling the dispatch in 1977 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and Considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to the Cayman Islands at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the Cayman Islands;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of the Cayman Islands to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to the Cayman Islands;

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in the Cayman Islands as will enable the people of the Territory to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of the Cayman Islands themselves to determine their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration, and in that connection reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of the Territory of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory and recommends that priority must continue to be given to the diversification of the Territory's economy in order to provide the foundations for sound social and economic development;

7. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank, to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territory;

8. Request the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to the Cayman Islands at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Gibraltar

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 15 August,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on colonial countries, taking into account the continuing discussions between the parties concerned, decided to continue its consideration of the item in 1987, subject to Assembly directives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted decision 41/407 without vote in October.

Question of Gibraltar

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 31 October 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, noting that the Governments of Spain and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland agreed at Brussels on 27 November 1984 on a statement whereby they decided to apply, before 15 February 1985, the Lisbon Declaration of 10 April 1980 in all its parts; noting that this involved, simultaneously, the provision of equality and reciprocity of rights for Spaniards in Gibraltar and Gibraltarians in Spain, the establishment of the free movement of persons, vehicles and goods between Gibraltar and the neighbouring territory and the establishment of a negotiating process; and noting that, as regards this last point, the Brussels statement reads as follows:

" '(c) The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting co-operation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution';

"welcomes the fact that on 5 February 1985 equality and reciprocity of rights were established for Spaniards in Gibraltar and Gibraltarians in Spain, together with the free movement of persons, vehicles and goods between Gibraltar and the neighbouring territory; also welcomes the fact that the two Governments initiated, at Geneva on 5 February 1985, the negotiating process provided for in the Brussels statement and foreseen in the consensus approved by the Assembly on 14 December 1973; notes that the Ministers for Foreign Affairs met at Madrid on 5 and 6 December 1985 as part of this process; and urges both Governments to continue this process with the object of reaching a lasting solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of the relevant resolutions of the Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

Guam

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/25.

Question of Guam

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Guam,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Guam, including in particular its resolution 40/42 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United States of America, as the administering Power, relating to Guam,

Taking note of the statement by the representative of the administering Power that the Guam Commission on Self-Determination, which was appointed in February 1984, has completed its work on the draft text of a Commonwealth Act,

Taking note of the statement by the representative of the administering Power that the Department of Defense had authorized the release of nearly 2,000 hectares of land previously under its control and that it was expected that legislation to release that land would be enacted later in 1986,

Noting the potential offered for diversifying and developing the economy of the Territory, for example, in the areas of commercial fishing and agriculture, and the statement of the representative of the administering Power that the draft Commonwealth Act seeks to promote economic development by establishing a free trade zone between Guam and the United States of America,

Taking note of the statement of the representative of the administering Power that provisions of the proposed Commonwealth Act would recognize the distinct cultural identity of the Chamorro people, the indigenous inhabitants of Guam,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Recalling the dispatch in 1979 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to Guam at an appropriate time should be kept under review, particularly in the light of the plebiscite planned for 1987, referred to in paragraph 5 below,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Guam;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Guam to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to Guam;

4. Reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of Guam of the possibilities open to them with regard to their right to self-determination and calls upon the United States of America, as the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to expedite the process of decolonization strictly in accordance with the expressed wishes of the people of the Territory;

5. Takes note of the statement by the representative of the administering Power that should the Guamanian voters approve it in a plebiscite planned for 1987, the draft text of a Commonwealth Act proposed by the Guam Commission on Self-Determination will be submitted to the United States Congress for consideration;

6. Reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territory could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration and that it is the responsibility of the administering Power to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Urges the administering Power to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve the Territory in any offensive acts or interference against any other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration;

8. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power, under the Charter, to promote the economic and social development of Guam and, in that connection, calls upon the administering Power to take further steps to strengthen and diversify the economy of the Territory, with a view to reducing its economic dependence on the administering Power;

9. Reiterates that one obstacle to economic growth, and particularly to agricultural development, stems from the fact that large tracts of land are held by the United States federal authorities, and calls upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to expedite the transfer of land to the people of the Territory;

10. Calls upon the administering Power to support measures by the territorial Government aimed at removing constraints to growth in the areas of agriculture and commercial fishing and to ensure the development of those areas to the fullest extent;

11. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the right of the people of Guam to the natural resources of the Territory, including marine resources within its exclusive economic zone, and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources and requests the administering Power to take the necessary steps to protect the property rights of the people of the Territory;

12. Reaffirms the importance of continued efforts by the territorial Government, with the support of the administering Power, towards promoting the Chamorro language and culture;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to Guam at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Montserrat

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/21.

Question of Montserrat

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Montserrat,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Montserrat, including in particular its resolution 40/46 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Noting that during the period under review the Government of Montserrat reiterated the view that independence was both inevitable and desirable, provided it was preceded by Montserrat's achievement of a level of economic and financial viability sufficient to sustain it as an independent State, and reaffirmed its intention to enlist such assistance from the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and from other sources as would enable it to achieve such viability and not to seek independence without the support of the majority of the people of the Territory,

Noting with concern that during the period under review the world recession has continued to affect the territorial economy adversely,

Noting that the territorial Government has taken a series of measures with a view to upgrading the efficiency of its civil service and to that end has continued to accord high priority to the training of cadres and that, in that connection, it has continued to seek financial assistance from international funding agencies to facilitate both long-term and short-term training,

Welcoming the continued participation of the Territory in the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development, as well as in regional organizations such as the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions, including the Caribbean Development Bank,

Welcoming also the contribution to the development of the Territory by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system operating in Montserrat,

Noting with concern that Montserrat became ineligible for assistance from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as a result of the change in its membership which it had shared with former eastern Caribbean Territories and noting, in that connection, that the Territory would be eligible for readmission as an associate member under the sponsorship of the administering Power, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which withdrew from the organization in December 1985,

Recalling the dispatch in 1975 and 1982 of United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to Montserrat at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Montserrat;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Montserrat to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to Montserrat;

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in Montserrat as will enable the people of the Territory to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of Montserrat themselves to determine their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration, and reiterates its call upon the administering Power to launch programmes, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to foster an awareness among the people of Montserrat of the possibilities available to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of Montserrat;

7. Calls upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue to strengthen the economy of the Territory and to increase its assistance to programmes of diversification in order to promote balanced growth and the economic and financial viability of the Territory;

8. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the Government of Montserrat, to take effective measures to safeguard, guarantee and ensure the rights of the people of the Territory to own and dispose of the natural resources of the Territory, including marine resources within its exclusive economic zone, and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources;

9. Reiterates its call upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue the assistance necessary for the employment of the local population in the civil service, particularly at senior levels;

10. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to intensify their efforts to accelerate progress in the economic and social life of the Territory, and invites donor Governments and regional organizations to do the same;

11. Calls upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the Government of Montserrat, to take urgent steps to facilitate the readmission of the Territory as an associate member of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to Montserrat at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Pitcairn

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly in October adopted without vote decision 41/406.

Question of Pitcairn

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 31 October 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Pitcairn to self-determination in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Assembly further reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory. The Assembly urges the administering Power to continue to respect the very individual life-style that the people of the Territory have chosen and to preserve, promote and protect it. The Assembly requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question at its next session and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-second session."

St. Helena

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote decision 41/408.

Question of St. Helena

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 31 October 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The Assembly urged the administering Power, in consultation with the Legislative Council and other representatives of the people of St. Helena, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of this Territory and in that connection reaffirmed the importance of promoting an awareness among the people of St. Helena of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination. The Assembly expressed the view that the administering Power should continue to implement infrastructure and community development projects aimed at improving the general welfare of the community, including the critical unemployment situation, and to encourage local initiative and enterprise, particularly in the areas of fisheries development, forestry, handicrafts and agriculture. The Assembly, in view of the serious developments in South Africa, noted with concern the trade and transportation dependency of the Territory on South Africa. The Assembly reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering Power, together with any assistance that the international community might be able to provide, constituted an important means of developing and diversifying the economy of the Territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Assembly noted with deep concern the continued presence of military facilities on the dependency of Ascension Island and, in that regard, recalled all the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions concerning military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Assembly considered that the possibility of dispatching a United Nations visiting mission to St. Helena at an appropriate time should be kept under review, and requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of St. Helena at its next session, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly decision 41/408

1252-26 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/41/760) by recorded vote (108-2-26), 22 October (meeting 18); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/41/23); agenda item 19. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 4th Committee 9-18; plenary 52.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bo-

swana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa, Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: United Kingdom, United States,

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Samoa, Spain, Swaziland,² Sweden, Turkey.

² Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

In the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom requested a separate vote on the sixth sentence of the draft decision. The sentence, which referred to the presence of military facilities on Ascension Island, was retained by a recorded vote of 75 to 30, with 21 abstentions. The United Kingdom noted that Ascension Island was uninhabited and 700 miles distant from St. Helena and any links between the two were administrative. The so-called military facilities were only staging facilities for transport aircraft and it was difficult to see why they should be considered a threat to anyone. Further, the United Kingdom objected to a new idea introduced in the fourth sentence, and stated that St. Helena was dependent on South Africa because of geographical proximity and not because of political choice.

Tokelau

Report of the visiting mission. A visiting mission, composed of three members of the Committee on colonial countries, visited Tokelau in July 1986, in response to a 1985 invitation by New Zealand, the administering Power, and by the people of the Territory.⁽³⁾ The report of the mission⁽⁴⁾ provided information on constitutional and political developments as well as the economic, social and educational conditions in the Territory—consisting of Nukunonu, Fakaofu and Atafu atolls—outlined the mission's activities and gave its conclusions and recommendations. Annexes to the report included requests presented to the mission by the Taupulega (Council of Elders) and aumaga (village work-force) of Fakaofu for assistance from New Zealand or the United Nations, and a statement by the Fakaofu Taupulega on political developments.

The mission reported that the people of Tokelau had unequivocally expressed their desire to maintain their current status and relationship with New Zealand, which had initiated discussions on alternatives available to Tokelau in exercising its right to self-determination. The mission recommended that the administering Power continue to encourage Tokelau to pursue its political development towards assuming greater political autonomy while preserving its cultural heritage. Among the areas of importance to Tokelau's development, the mission listed transport, communications and education; noting the lack of economic resources as well as the scarcity of land in the Territory and erosion caused by the sea, the mission recommended remedial measures.

The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of Tokelau at four meetings between 12 August and 10 September 1986.(1)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/26 on 31 October without vote.

Question of Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Tokelau,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing; the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Tokelau dispatched in July 1986 at the invitation of the Government of New Zealand and of the General Fono (Council) of Tokelau,

Having heard the statement of the Chairman of the Visiting Mission,

Having heard the statement of the representative of New Zealand, the administering Power,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing exemplary co-operation of the administering Power with regard to the work of the Special Committee relating to Tokelau and its readiness to permit access by United Nations visiting missions thereto,

Aware of the special problems facing Tokelau by virtue of its isolation, small size, limited resources and lack of infrastructure,

Reiterating the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration, which fully applies to Tokelau,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Tokelau;

2. Approves the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Tokelau in July 1986, and endorses the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

3. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Tokelau to self-determination and dependence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

4. Expresses its deep appreciation to the elders, people and public service of Tokelau and to the administering

Power for the courtesies, co-operation and assistance extended to the Visiting Mission;

5. Notes that the people of Tokelau with whom the Visiting Mission consulted expressed their desire to maintain at this stage their present status and relationship with the administering Power;

6. Notes the continuing development of the General Fono (Council) of Tokelau as the Territory's highest political body, and considers that the process of devolution of authority to Tokelau's political and administrative institutions should continue;

7. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the Tokelau public service, to expand and intensify its programme of political education in the Territory so as to improve the awareness of the people of the Territory of the options available to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration;

8. Commends the people of Tokelau for their determination to manage their economic and political development in such a way as to ensure that it does not compromise or undermine Tokelau's distinct and valued cultural heritage, and urges the administering Power and international agencies to respect fully the wishes of the people of Tokelau in this regard;

9. Welcomes the assurance of the administering Power that legislation affecting Tokelau will only be passed after consultation with the General Fono (Council) of Tokelau, and commends the Fono for the role it is playing in the development of a new legal code to give due recognition to Tokelauan customs and culture;

10. Welcomes also the efforts being made to develop an education system specifically geared to the needs of Tokelau and urges that these efforts be intensified;

11. Requests the administering Power, taking into account the Visiting Mission's observations, conclusions and recommendations, to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other regional and international bodies, in the development and strengthening of the economy of the Territory;

12. Welcomes the participation of Tokelau in South Pacific regional organizations and institutions and requests the administering Power to facilitate the participation of the Territory as an associate member of various organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other regional and international bodies;

13. Expresses the view that measures to promote the economic and social development of Tokelau are an essential element in the process of self-determination and, in that connection, calls upon the administering Power, in close co-operation with the General Fono (Council), to continue to intensify and diversify its programmes of development assistance to Tokelau;

14. Notes the assistance extended to Tokelau by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization and other regional and international institutions and urges them to continue to increase such assistance to the Territory in close consultation with the Tokelau Administration;

15. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to Tokelau at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Turks and Caicos Islands

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/22.

Question of the Turks and Caicos Islands

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Turks and Caicos Islands,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to the Turks and Caicos Islands, including in particular its resolution 40/47 of 2 December 1985,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Turks and Caicos Islands and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability and develop a wider economic base for the Territory,

Noting that there was a general economic decline in the Territory during the period under review and bearing in mind the need to develop a wider economic base for the Territory,

Welcoming the continuing contribution of the United Nations Development Programme to the development of the Territory,

Recalling the dispatch in 1980 of two United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to the Turks and Caicos Islands at an appropriate time should be kept under review,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the Turks and Caicos Islands;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to the Turks and Caicos Islands;

4. Reiterates that it is the obligation of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in the Turks and Caicos Islands as will enable the people of the Territory to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is the responsibility of the administering Power under the Charter of the United Nations to develop its dependent Territories economically and socially and urges the administering Power, in consultation with the Government of the Turks and Caicos Islands, to take the necessary measures to promote the economic and social development of the Territory and, in particular, to intensify and expand its programme of assistance in order to accelerate the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the Territory;

6. Emphasizes that greater attention should be paid to diversification of the economy, which will benefit the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands, and, in that connection, takes note of the progress reported by the territorial Government regarding the development of mariculture in the Territory;

7. Recalls that it is the responsibility of the administering Power, in accordance with the wishes of the people, to safeguard, guarantee and ensure the inalienable right of the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to guarantee their right to own and dispose of the natural resources of the Territory, including marine resources within its exclusive economic zone, and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources;

8. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank, to continue to pay special attention to the development needs of the Turks and Caicos Islands;

9. Urges the administering Power, in consultation with the territorial Government, to continue to provide the assistance necessary for the training of qualified local personnel in the skills essential to the development of various sectors of the economy and the society of the Territory;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to the Turks and Caicos Islands at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

United States Virgin Islands

On 4 November 1986, general elections were held in the United States Virgin Islands for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, the 15 seats in the Legislature, also known as the Senate, and the Territory's delegate to the United States House of Representatives. The candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of the Democratic Party of the Virgin Islands won a majority in a run-off election on 16 November. Following vote recounts and party and other realignments, a coalition was formed with the Democratic Party as the majority party in the Senate. The incumbent delegate to the United States Congress was unopposed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/24 without vote.

Question of the United States Virgin Islands
The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the United States Virgin Islands,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to the United States Virgin Islands, including in particular its resolution 40/49 of 2 December 1985,

Noting with appreciation the continued active participation of the United States of America, as the administering Power, and of the representative of the territorial Government in the work of the Special Committee in regard to the United States Virgin Islands, thereby enabling it to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of the situation in the Territory, with a view to accelerating the process of decolonization for the purpose of the full implementation of the Declaration,

Taking note of the statement of the representative of the administering Power that the Territory of the United States Virgin Islands enjoys a large measure of self-government through its elected representatives, namely, the Governor, members of the Legislature and the Territory's delegate to the United States House of Representatives, and that a delegate-elected for a two-year period-participates in the House of Representatives without the right to vote although he participates and votes in the Committees,

Noting that general elections are to be held in November 1986 in the Territory,

Noting that, during the period under review, despite some set-backs to its industrialization programme, the economy of the Territory improved, and that, in particular, tourism, construction and private investment increased and the level of unemployment decreased, and taking note of the infrastructural developments taking place in the Territory,

Welcoming the continued participation of the United States Virgin Islands, as an associate member, in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and its subsidiary bodies, including the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee, and noting the continued participation of a representative of the Territory, as a member of the delegation of the administering Power, in annual meetings of the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development since 1982,

Noting the continued policy of the administering Power that representatives of the Territory should participate in forums where the Territory was the subject of discussion,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Recalling the dispatch in 1977 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of assessing the situation in the small Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending a further visiting mission to the United States Virgin Islands at an appropriate time should be kept under review, particularly in the light of the referendum referred to in paragraph 5 below and the preparations for that event,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the United States Virgin Islands;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of the United States Virgin Islands to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples? contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to the United States Virgin Islands;

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United States of America, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in the United States Virgin Islands as will enable the people of the Territory to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with resolution 1514(XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Takes note of the statement of the administering Power that the Government of the United States Virgin Islands had decided that, before a referendum on the issue was called, more time was necessary for the purpose of allowing a further opportunity to study the implications of the various future status options and that, in that connection, it stood ready to respond to the wishes of the people of the Territory concerning their future status;

6. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of the United States Virgin Islands themselves to determine their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, in that connection, calls upon the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to facilitate programmes in the Territory to foster an awareness among the people of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination;

7. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power under the Charter to promote the economic and social development of the United States Virgin Islands;

8. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to strengthen the economy of the Territory by, inter alia, taking additional measures of diversification and continuing to develop the Territory's infrastructure with a view to reducing the heavy economic dependence of the Territory on the administering Power;

9. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the Government of the United States Virgin Islands, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to guarantee their right to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development;

10. Urges the administering Power to seek a status in the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development for the territorial Government, similar to that of other dependent Territories within the Group;

11. Reiterates its call upon the administering Power to facilitate further the participation of the United States Virgin Islands in various regional and intergovernmental bodies and organizations, particularly in their central organs, and in other organizations of the United Nations system;

12. Urges the administering Power to continue to take all necessary measures to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to the United States Virgin Islands at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1986, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) considered live contentious cases, remained seized of a request for an advisory opinion and delivered two Judgments and three Orders. In November, the General Assembly urged immediate compliance with the Court's 1986 Judgment in the case of military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua (resolution 41/31) (see also

The Secretary-General, in September, forwarded to the Assembly recommendations by the Joint Inspection Unit on ways for the Court to issue some of its publications in more than the current two languages.

Judicial work of the Court

In 1986, the Court or its Chambers-meeting at The Hague, Netherlands-delivered Judgments in two cases concerning, respectively, military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua, and a frontier dispute between Burkina Faso and Mali. Three new disputes referred to it concerned border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Costa Rica and Nicaragua v. Honduras), and a land, island and maritime frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras. In addition, the Court remained seized of a request for an advisory opinion concerning a judgement of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal.

The 1986 activities of ICJ were described in two reports to the General Assembly, covering the periods 1 August 1985 to 31 July 1986⁽¹⁾ and 1 August 1986 to 31 July 1987.⁽²⁾ By decision 41/411 of 3 November 1986, the Assembly took note of the 1985/86 report.

Military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua

In 1984,⁽³⁾ Nicaragua had instituted proceedings against the United States with a request for an indication of provisional measures concerning responsibility for military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua. The Court considered various aspects of the matter in 1984 and 1985.⁽⁴⁾

On 27 June 1986, at a public sitting, the Court delivered a Judgment,⁽⁵⁾ the operative provisions of which read as follows:

The Court,

(1) By eleven votes to four,

Decides that in adjudicating the dispute brought before it by the Application filed by the the Republic of Nicaragua on 9 April 1984, the Court is required to apply the "multilateral treaty reservation" contained in proviso (c) to the declaration of acceptance of jurisdiction made under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court by the Government of the United States of America deposited on 26 August 1946;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Oda, Ago, Schwebel, Sir Robert Jennings, Mbaye, Bedjaoui and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Ruda, Elias, Sette Câmara and Ni,

(2) By twelve votes to three,

Rejects the justification of collective self-defence maintained by the United States of America in connection with the military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua the subject of this case;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(3) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America, by training, arming, equipping, financing and supplying the contra forces or otherwise encouraging, supporting and aiding military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua, has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligation under customary international law not to intervene in the affairs of another State;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(4) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America, by certain attacks on Nicaraguan territory in 1983-1984, namely attacks on Puerto Sandino on 13 September and 14 October 1983; an attack on Corinto on 10 October 1983; an attack on Potosí Naval Base on 4/5 January 1984; an attack on San Juan del Sur on 7 March 1984; attacks on patrol boats at Puerto Sandino on 28 and 30 March 1984; and an attack on San Juan del Norte on 9 April 1984; and further by those acts of intervention referred to in subparagraph (3) hereof which involve the use of force, has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligation under customary international law not to use force against another State;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard; I

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(5) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America, by directing or authorizing overflights of Nicaraguan territory, and by the acts imputable to the United States referred to in subparagraph (4) hereof, has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligation under customary international law not to violate the sovereignty of another State;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(6) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that, by laying mines in the internal or territorial waters of the Republic of Nicaragua during the first months of 1984, the United States of America has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligations under customary international law not to use force against another State, not to intervene in its affairs, not to violate its sovereignty and not to interrupt peaceful maritime commerce;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(7) By fourteen votes to one,

Decides that, by the acts referred to in subparagraph (6) hereof, the United States of America has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligations under Article XIX of the Treaty of Friendship: Commerce and Navigation between the United States of America and the Republic of Nicaragua signed at Managua on 21 January 1956;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Oda, Ago, Sette Câmara, Sir Robert Jennings, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judge Schwebel.

(8) By fourteen votes to one,

Decides that the United States of America, by failing to make known the existence and location of the mines laid by it, referred to in subparagraph (6) hereof, has acted in breach of its obligations under customary international law in this respect;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Schwebel, Sir Robert Jennings, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judge Oda.

(9) By fourteen votes to one,

Finds that the United States of America, by producing in 1983 a manual entitled Operaciones psicológicas en guerra de guerrillas, and disseminating it to contra forces, has encouraged the commission by them of acts contrary to general principles of humanitarian law; but does not find a basis for concluding that any such acts which may have been committed are imputable to the United States of America as acts of the United States of America;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Schwebel, Sir Robert Jennings, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judge Oda.

(10) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America, by the attacks on Nicaraguan territory referred to in subparagraph (4) hereof, and by declaring a general embargo on trade with Nicaragua on 1 May 1985, has committed acts calculated to deprive of its object and purpose the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation between the Parties signed at Managua on 21 January 1956;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

“(11) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America, by the attacks on Nicaraguan territory referred to in subparagraph (4) hereof, and by declaring a general embargo on trade with Nicaragua on 1 May 1985, has acted in breach of its obligations under Article XIX of the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation between the Parties signed at Managua on 21 January 1956;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(12) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America is under a duty immediately to cease and to refrain from all such acts as may constitute breaches of the foregoing legal obligations;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(13) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America is under an obligation to make reparation to the Republic of Nicaragua for all injury caused to Nicaragua by the breaches of obligations under customary international law enumerated above;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings.

(14) By fourteen votes to one,

Decides that the United States of America is under an obligation to make reparation to the Republic of Nicaragua for all injury caused to Nicaragua by the breaches of the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation between the Parties signed at Managua on 21 January 1956;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Oda, Ago, Sette Câmara, Sir Robert Jennings, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judge Schwebel.

(15) By fourteen votes to one,

Decides that the form and amount of such reparation, failing agreement between the Parties, will be settled by the Court, and reserves for this purpose the subsequent procedure in the case;

In favour: President Nagendra Singh; Vice-President de Lacharrière; Judges Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Oda, Ago, Sette Câmara, Sir Robert Jennings, Mbaye, Bedjaoui, Ni and Evensen; Judge ad hoc Colliard;

Against: Judge Schwebel.

(16) Unanimously,

Recalls to both Parties their obligation to seek a solution to their disputes by peaceful means in accordance with international law.

Separate opinions were appended to the Judgment by Judges Nagendra Singh, Lachs, Ruda, Elias, Ago, Sette Câmara and Ni. Judges Oda, Schwebel and Sir Robert Jennings appended dissenting opinions.

By resolution 41/31 of 3 November 1986, the General Assembly called for full and immediate compliance with the ICJ Judgment of 27 June. Earlier, in October, the Security Council had also considered the question but did not adopt a draft resolution containing that call, due to the negative vote of a permanent Council member (see p. 186).

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Costa Rica)

On 28 July 1986, Nicaragua filed an Application instituting proceedings against Costa Rica, complaining of specific border and transborder armed actions, of increasing frequency and intensity since 1982, organized by contras on its territory from Costa Rica (see also p. 180). Nicaragua requested the Court to declare that the acts and omissions of Costa Rica constituted breaches of the various obligations of customary international law; and that Costa Rica was duty-bound to cease and to refrain from all such acts and to make reparations for all injury caused to Nicaragua by the breaches of international obligations. Costa Rica informed the Court on 12 August that it reserved the right to present a counter-claim in due course.

By a letter of 12 August, Costa Rica informed the Court that it reserved the right in due course to present a counter-claim against Nicaragua.

By an Order dated 21 October 1986,⁽⁶⁾ the Court fixed time-limits for the written proceedings—21 July 1987 for the Memorial (written pleading) of Nicaragua and 21 April 1988 for the Counter-Memorial of Costa Rica.

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras)

On 28 July 1986, Nicaragua filed an Application instituting proceedings against Honduras. In so doing, Nicaragua alleged border and transborder armed actions, of increasing frequency and intensity since 1980, organized by contras on its territory from Honduras, assistance being given to the contras by the armed forces of Honduras, direct participation by the latter in military attacks against its territory and threats of force against it emanating from the Government of Honduras (see also p. 181). Nicaragua requested the Court to declare that the acts and omissions of Honduras constituted breaches of the various obligations of customary international law; and that Honduras was duty-bound to cease and to refrain from all such acts and to make reparation for all injury caused to Nicaragua by the breaches of international obligations.

By a letter of 29 August, Honduras declared that the Court had no jurisdiction over the matters raised by the Application. By an Order of 22 October,⁽⁷⁾ the Court decided, as agreed between the Parties, that the preliminary stage of the proceedings should be confined to the issues of jurisdiction and admissibility, and fixed the time-limits for the filing of pleadings at 23 February 1987 for the Memorial of Honduras and 22 June 1987 for the Counter-Memorial of Nicaragua.

Frontier dispute between Burkina Faso and Mali

Following incidents which had brought the armed forces of Burkina Faso and Mali into conflict in the frontier region at the end of 1985, the two Parties—which had referred to the Court in 1983⁽⁸⁾ their dispute over the delimitation of part of their land frontier—made parallel requests in January 1986 for the indication of provisional measures by the Chamber formed in 1985.(9) The Chamber held a hearing on 9 January to hear the oral observations of both Parties on the requests.

By an Order of 10 January 1986,(10) made at a public sitting, the Chamber called on the Governments concerned to ensure that no action was taken which might aggravate the dispute and to withdraw their armed forces to positions determined by mutual agreement; it also indicated that, as regards the administration of the disputed area, the situation that prevailed before the armed actions at the end of 1985 should not be modified. On the same day,(11) the Court Registrar submitted to the Secretary-General an official copy of the Order for transmittal to the Security Council.

In a letter dated 24 January, Mali transmitted to the Court Registrar a communiqué of 18 January, reporting on an agreement reached between the heads of State on the withdrawal of their respective armed forces on either side of the disputed area.

Both Parties having filed a Counter-Memorial within the time-limit (2 April 1986) fixed by the Order of the President of the Chamber in October 1985,(9) the oral proceedings took place between 16 and 26 June 1986; statements were made on behalf of Burkina Faso and Mali during 12 public sittings.

On 22 December 1986, the Chamber delivered, at a public sitting, a Judgment,(12) the operative provisions of which read as follows:

The Chamber,
Unanimously,
Decides

A. That the frontier line between Burkina Faso and the Republic of Mali in the disputed area, as defined in the Special Agreement concluded on 16 September 1983 between those two States, is as follows:

(1) From a point with the geographical co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 59' 01''$ W and $14^{\circ} 24' 40''$ N (point A), the line runs in a northerly direction following the broken line of small crosses appearing on the map of West Africa on the scale 1:200,000 published by the French Institut géographique national (IGN) (hereinafter referred to as "the IGN line") as far as the point with the geographical co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 58' 49''$ W and $14^{\circ} 28' 30''$ N (point B).

(2) At point B, the line turns eastwards and intersects the track connecting Dionouga and Diguel at approximately 7.5 kilometres from Dionouga at a point with the geographical co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 54' 24''$ W and $14^{\circ} 29' 20''$ N (point C).

(3) From point C, the line runs approximately 2 kilometres to the south of the villages of Kounia and Oukoulourou, passing through the point with the geographical co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 46' 38''$ W and $14^{\circ} 28' 54''$ N (point D), and the point with the co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 40' 40''$ W and $14^{\circ} 30' 03''$ N (point E).

(4) From point E, the line continues straight as far as a point with the geographical co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 19' 05''$ W and $14^{\circ} 43' 45''$ N (point F), situated approximately 2.6 kilometres to the south of the pool of Toussougou.

(5) From point F, the line continues straight as far as the point with the geographical co-ordinates $1^{\circ} 05' 34''$ W and $14^{\circ} 47' 04''$ N (point G) situated on the west bank of the pool of Soum, which it crosses in a general west-east direction and divides equally between the two States; it then turns in a generally north/north-easterly direction to rejoin the IGN line at the point with the geographical co-ordinates $0^{\circ} 43' 29''$ W and $15^{\circ} 05' 00''$ N (point H).

(6) From point H, the line follows the IGN line as far as the point with the graphical co-ordinates $0^{\circ} 26' 35''$ W and $15^{\circ} 05' 00''$ N (point I); from there it turns towards the south-east and continues straight as far as point J defined below.

(7) Points J and K, the geographical co-ordinates of which will be determined by the Parties with the assistance of the experts nominated pursuant to Article IV of the Special Agreement, fulfil three conditions: they are situated on the same parallel of latitude; point J lies on the west bank of the pool of In Abao and point K on the east bank of the pool; the line drawn between them will result in dividing the area of the pool equally between the Parties.

(8) At point K the line turns towards the north-east and continues straight as far as the point with the geographical co-ordinates $0^{\circ} 14' 44''$ W and $15^{\circ} 04' 42''$ N (point L), and, from that point, continues straight to a point with the geographical co-ordinates $0^{\circ} 14' 39''$ E and $14^{\circ} 54' 48''$ N (point M), situated approximately 3 kilometres to the north of the Kabia ford.

B. That the Chamber will at a later date, by Order, nominate three experts in accordance with Article IV, paragraph 3, of the Special Agreement of 16 September 1983.

Separate opinions were appended to the Judgment by Judges ad hoc François Luchaire and Georges Abi-Saab.

Frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras

On 11 December 1986, El Salvador and Honduras referred to the Court a Special Agreement-concluded between them on 24 May and which entered into force on 1 October-to submit to ICJ the land, island and maritime frontier dispute between the two countries. The Agreement defined the questions submitted for decision and provided for submission of those questions to a chamber of the Court, to be composed of three members as well as two judges ad hoc.

Review of a judgement by the UN Administrative Tribunal

In 1986, the Court remained seized of a request for an advisory opinion, received in 1984(13) from the General Assembly's Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements, on Vladimir Victorovich Yakimetz v.

Secretary-General, involving the staff member's request for further employment after the expiry of his contract with the United Nations.

As in previous similar cases, the Court decided not to hear oral statements, and the United Nations and several States having presented written statements⁽⁹⁾ were so informed by a letter of 3 November.

Organizational questions

Publications of the Court

In September 1986, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)⁽¹⁴⁾ on the publications of the International Court of Justice. The Inspector observed in the report that, since the Judgments, advisory opinions and Orders of the Court, as the main judicial organ of the United Nations, had fundamental significance for the development of international law, it was unfortunate that ICJ publications were issued only in the two official languages of the Court—English and French. Due to financial constraints, the report concentrated on analysing the possibility of publishing, within the existing funds, the Judgments and advisory opinions—among other ICJ publications—in other official languages of the United Nations to ensure widest possible dissemination.

The addendum⁽¹⁵⁾ to the report contained the comments of the Secretary-General and ICJ on the JIU recommendations, which included the possibilities for publication of paper back editions and the use of new technology in the printing process.

Chapter II

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1986, the United Nations continued work towards effective legal measures for promoting friendly relations among States. In December, the General Assembly requested the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to continue work on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States (resolution 41/74), and invited the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations to submit in 1987 a draft declaration on enhancing the principle's effectiveness (41/76). In addition, the Assembly invited a sub-committee of the Sixth (Legal) Committee to complete in 1987 the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness (41/84), and the International Law Commission to continue work on the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind (41/75) and on the non-navigational uses of international watercourses. Due to the financial difficulties facing the United Nations, the Committee on drafting an international convention against mercenary activities did not hold a session in 1986; the Assembly decided that it was to meet in 1987 (41/80).

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

In December 1986, the General Assembly again requested the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to continue work on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, and asked the Secretary-General to continue preparing a draft handbook on the topic for the Committee's consideration in 1987.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee, at its April/May 1986 session,^(*) continued work on the peaceful settlement of disputes, in addition to considering two other main items-proposals on rationalizing the existing procedures of the United Nations and ways to maintain international peace and security (see p. 999).

An open-ended Working Group of the Committee held eight meetings on the question between 8 and 16 April, at seven of which it examined a 1986 working paper by Romania⁽²⁾ containing a proposal on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations for settling disputes and preventing conflicts among States. The idea of creating a commission was originally submitted in 1983 by Nithe Philippines and Romania,⁽³⁾ and considered by the Special Committee in 1984⁽⁴⁾ and 1985.⁽⁵⁾ At one meeting, the Working Group examined a progress report by the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁾ on a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, which was being prepared at the Assembly's annual request since 1983.⁽⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/74 without vote.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States",

Recalling its resolution 37/10 of 15 November 1982, by which it approved the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, annexed thereto,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/131 of 19 December 1983, 39/79 of 13 December 1984 and 40/68 of 11 December 1985,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of conflict situations and the emergence of new sources of disputes and tension in international life, and especially at the growing tendency to resort to force or the threat of force and to intervention in internal affairs, and at the escalation of the arms race, which gravely endanger the independence and security of States as well as international peace and security,

Taking into account the need to exert the utmost effort in order to settle any situations and disputes between States exclusively by peaceful means and to avoid any military actions and hostilities against other States, which can only make more difficult the solution of existing problems,

Considering that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes should represent one of the central concerns for States and for the United Nations, and that efforts for strengthening the process of peaceful settlement of disputes should be continued,

Noting with satisfaction that the consideration by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization of the proposal on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations had constituted a positive step and revealed the existence of some elements on which general agreement may well be possible and that this should enable further progress on the proposal.

Taking note of the progress achieved in the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

1. Again urges all States to observe and promote in good faith the provisions of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes in the settlement of their international disputes;

2. Stresses the need to continue efforts to strengthen the process of the peaceful settlement of disputes through progressive development and codification of international law and through enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in this field;

3. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, during its session in 1987, to continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and, in this context:

(a) To continue the consideration of the working paper on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations with the aim of submitting conclusions thereon to the General Assembly at the earliest possible date;

(b) To examine the progress report of the Secretary-General on the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, on the basis of the outline elaborated by the Special Committee and in the light of the views expressed in the course of the discussions in the Sixth Committee and in the Special Committee, and to report to the Special Committee at its session in 1987 on the progress of work before submitting to it the draft handbook in its final form, with a view to its approval at a later stage;

5. Decides that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States shall be considered at its forty-second session as a separate agenda item, in conjunction with the item of the provisional agenda entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

General Assembly resolution 41/74

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/889) by recorded vote (107-0-7), 19 November (meeting 48); 45-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.2), orally revised; agenda item 124.

Sponsors: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Panama, Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Singapore, Sudan, Suriname, Togo, Uganda, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 6th Committee 15-21, 47, 48; plenary 95.

The draft as approved in the Sixth Committee incorporated an oral amendment by Romania to paragraph 5, following a debate on an oral proposal by Canada to have the dispute-settlement question considered under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee, and the rejection-by a recorded vote of 69 to 19, with 22 abstentions-of a French proposal to have the former considered as a sub-item of the latter. By a separate recorded vote, requested by Brazil, the Committee approved paragraphs 3 and 4 by 88 votes to 12, with 13 abstentions. The Assembly adopted paragraph 5 by a recorded vote of 117 to none, with 32 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, Australia, France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States saw no need to keep a separate item on the peaceful settlements of disputes, when the question was already dealt with under the item on the report of the Special Committee. France and the United Kingdom, joined by Japan, regretted that the Sixth Committee did not apply the recommendations of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee on the rationalization of the Assembly's procedures (see p. 1016). While voting in favour, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Sweden, on behalf of the Nordic countries, expressed disapproval of the duplication of work. The Netherlands and the Nordic countries considered it unnecessary to set up a new body for dispute settlement, such as the commission referred to in the draft. Turkey shared that view, adding that the reluctance of States to settle their disputes by peaceful means was due more to the absence of political will than to the lack of machinery. Spain regretted that the text had to be adopted by vote rather than consensus. Albania did not participate in the vote, asserting that any discussion on international conflicts and disputes must point out the roles played in them by the USSR and the United States.

Good-neighbourliness between States

On 26 September 1986, the Assembly's Sixth Committee re-established the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness, in response to a 1985 Assembly request(8) that the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness be completed in 1986. The Sub-Committee held 12 meetings in October and November, under the chairmanship of Ioan Voicu (Romania)(9). Documents before it included its 1985 report and the reports submitted by the Secretary-General in previous years, containing the views of States and intergovernmental organizations on the content of good-neighbourliness, as well as a paper submitted by Romania on elements of good-neighbourliness.

The Sub-Committee examined the possible elements for developing and strengthening good-neighbourliness, grouped into four categories to facilitate work-legal and other elements, areas of co-operation, ways and means, and action of international organizations. Despite some progress, no general agreement was achieved on the elements, and the Sub-Committee reported to the Sixth Committee that a considerable amount of work remained to be done and that the process of identifying and clarifying those elements should continue.

Communication. In January 1986,(10) Argentina and Brazil jointly submitted to the Secretary-General the text of a bilateral declaration signed on 30 November 1985 at Foz do Iguaçu, Brazil, by the heads of State concerned, requesting that it be circulated under the Assembly agenda item on good-neighbourliness.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/84 without vote.

Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as expressed in the Charter of the United Nations, to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, approved by its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Recalling its resolutions 1236(XII) of 14 December 1957, 1301(XIII) of 10 December 1958, 2129(XX) of 21 December 1965, 34/99 of 14 December 1979, 36/101 of 9 December 1981, 37/117 of 16 December 1982, 38/126 of 19 December 1983 and 39/78 of 13 December 1984, as well as its decision 40/419 of 11 December 1985,

Bearing in mind that, for various reasons, there are particularly favourable opportunities for co-operation and mutual advantage between neighbouring countries in many fields and various forms, and that the development of such co-operation may have a positive influence on international relations as a whole,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature, as well as the scientific and technological advances that have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations, have given new dimensions to good-neighbourliness in the conduct of States and increased the need to develop and strengthen it,

Taking into account the working papers concerning the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States, as well as the written replies sent by States and international organizations on the content of good-neighbourliness and on ways and means to enhance it, the views expressed by States on this subject and the reports of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness set up by the Sixth Committee,

Recalling its opinion that it is necessary to continue to examine the question of good-neighbourliness in order to strengthen and develop its content, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness, and that the results of this examination could be included, at an appropriate time, in a suitable international document,

1. Reaffirms that good-neighbourliness fully conforms with the purposes of the United Nations and shall be founded upon the strict observance of the principles of the United Nations as embodied in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and so presupposes the rejection of any acts seeking to establish zones of influence or domination;

2. Calls once again upon States, in the interest of the maintenance of international peace and security, to develop good-neighbourly relations, acting on the basis of these principles;

3. Reaffirms that the generalization of the long practice of good-neighbourliness and of principles and rules pertaining to it is likely to strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter;

4. Takes note of the report of the Sub-Committee on Good-Neighbourliness, which functioned within the Sixth Committee during the forty-first session of the General Assembly;

5. Decides to continue and complete at its forty-second session, on the basis of the present resolution and the report of the Sub-Committee, the task of identifying and clarifying the elements of good-neighbourliness within the framework of a sub-committee on good-neighbourliness;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States".

Non-use of force in international relations

In December 1986, the General Assembly invited the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations to submit in 1987 a draft declaration on the enhancement of the effectiveness of the principle, which it had asked the Committee in 1985(11) to prepare as an intermediate stage leading to a world treaty.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee, established in 1977(12) to consider proposals with a view to drafting a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations, met in New York from 20 January to 13 February 1986,(13)

As in previous years, the 35-member Committee had before it, among other things, a draft world treaty on the non-use of force, submitted in 1976 by the USSR; (14) a 1979 working paper by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom; (15) a 1981 working paper from 10 non-aligned countries (Benin, Cyprus, Egypt, India, Iraq, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Senegal, Uganda); (16) the view of Oman, submitted in response to a 1985 Assembly invitation;⁽¹¹⁾ and an informal paper by the 1982 Chairman, grouping together the suggestions made at that time.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Committee devoted four meetings to a general exchange of views, in which divergent opinions were expressed on the Committee's mandate.

An open-ended Working Group, re-established by the Committee in 1986, held 13 meetings between 28 January and 13 February, focusing on an examination of headings contained in the 1982 informal paper: peaceful settlement of disputes; role of the United Nations; manifestations, scope and dimensions of the threat or use of force; legitimate use of force; consequences of the threat or use of force; disarmament and confidence-building measures; and general prohibition of the threat or use of force. In addition to a summary of the exchange of views on various aspects of the headings, the report of the Working Group contained a list of proposals, made at its 1986 session, for inclusion in a possible future document to be worked out by the Committee. Although there was a preliminary consideration of the proposals, no final conclusions were reached concerning any of them; it was understood that the proposals in the list were preliminary in nature.

On 13 February, the Committee approved the report of the Working Group as well as its own. Since the Committee had not completed its work, it generally recognized the desirability of further considering the question.

Communications. Israel transmitted to the Secretary-General⁽¹⁸⁾ the text of a 5 January 1986 letter from its Minister for Transportation to the members of the International Civil Aviation Organization, calling for the convening of a ministerial-level conference to adopt practical measures to ensure the safety of civil aviation and airports.

Other communications dealt with the non-use-of-force question in the context of disarmament (see p. 13).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/76 without vote.

Report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 31/9 of 8 November 1976, 32/150 of 19 December 1977, 33/96 of 16 December 1978, 34/13 of 9 November 1979, 35/50 of 4 December 1980, 36/31 of 13 November 1981, 37/105 of 16 December 1982, 38/133 of 19 December 1983, 39/81 of 13 December 1984 and 40/70 of 11 December 1985,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the work of the session it held in 1986,

Taking into account that the Special Committee has not completed its work,

Reaffirming the need for effectiveness in the universal application of the principle of non-use of force in international relations and for assistance by the United Nations in this endeavour,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations;

2. Decides that the Special Committee shall complete a draft declaration on the enhancement of the effectiveness of the principle of non-use of force in international relations, including, as appropriate, recommendations on the peaceful settlement of disputes;

3. Decides that the Special Committee shall hold its session from 9 to 27 March 1987 and informal consultations at the appropriate time to enable the work to be completed;

4. Requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever it has significance for the outcome of its work;

5. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the necessary facilities and services;

7. Invites the Special Committee to submit its final report containing a draft declaration to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations".

Draft code of offences against peace and security

In December 1986, the General Assembly invited the International Law Commission (ILC) to continue work on the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind—a topic on which ILC had resumed work in 1982.⁽¹⁹⁾ The draft Code, originally prepared by ILC in 1954⁽²⁰⁾ in response to a 1947 Assembly request⁽²¹⁾ defined offences which were crimes under international law and for which the responsible individual was to be punished.

ILC consideration. The Commission considered in 1986⁽²²⁾ the fourth report submitted by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Doudou Thiam (Senegal).⁽²³⁾ The report comprised five parts:

crimes against humanity, war crimes, related offences, general principles and a set of 14 draft articles. After a general discussion of the report, ILC decided to defer consideration of the draft articles to future sessions, thereby allowing the Special Rapporteur to recast them in the light of the opinions expressed in ILC and in the Assembly's Sixth Committee. The Commission discussed again the problem of implementing the Code as it related to criminal law in space; it remained ready to examine carefully any guidance that might be furnished on various options on criminal jurisdiction.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly, in August 1986, a report with later addenda⁽²⁴⁾ containing comments received from seven Member States and one intergovernmental organization in response to an Assembly invitation for views on the 1985 conclusions of ILC.⁽²⁵⁾

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/75 by recorded vote.

Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind

The General Assembly,

Mindful of Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolution 177(II) of 21 November 1947, by which it directed the International Law Commission to prepare a draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind,

Having considered the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind prepared by the International Law Commission and submitted to the General Assembly in 1954,

Recalling its belief that the elaboration of a code of offences against the peace and security of mankind could contribute to strengthening international peace and security and thus to promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolution 36/106 of 10 December 1981, in which it invited the International Law Commission to resume its work with a view to elaborating the draft Code and to examine it with the required priority in order to review it, taking into account the results achieved by the process of the progressive development of international law,

Bearing in mind that the International Law Commission should fulfil its task on the basis of early elaboration of draft articles thereof,

Having considered chapter V of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-eighth session, in particular paragraph 185 of the report, containing the conclusions of its discussions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the subject,

Taking into account the views expressed during the debate on this item at the current session,

Recognizing the importance and urgency of the subject,

1. Invites the International Law Commission to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind by elaborating an introduction as well as a list of the offences, taking into account the progress made at its thirty-eighth session, as well as the views expressed during the forty-first session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States regarding the conclusions contained in paragraph 185 of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-eighth session, taking into account the conclusions contained in paragraph 69 (c) (i) of the Commission's report on the work of its thirty-fifth session;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to include the views received from Member States in accordance with paragraph 2 above in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind", to be considered in conjunction with the examination of the report of the International Law Commission.

General Assembly resolution 41/75

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 141-5-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/890) by recorded vote (102-5-7), 21 November (meeting 50); 26-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.16); agenda item 125.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Kenya, Mali, Mongolia, Morocco, Nigeria, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Rwanda, Senegal, Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 6th Committee 27-34, 36-44, 49, 50; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey.

In explanation of vote, France, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States objected to taking the topic from the regular work programme of ILC and placing it as a separate item on the Assembly's agenda. The United Kingdom added that the Assembly should not exert political pressure on the Commission; the United States, concurring, feared that paragraphs 2 and 3 could lead to considerable expenditure without serving any useful purpose. Similarly, Norway (also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden) and Turkey saw no reason to give the item special priority or a separate status on the agenda.

Draft convention against mercenaries

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries—which had been asked by the General Assembly in 1985⁽²⁶⁾ to complete and submit a draft convention in 1986—did not hold its sixth session in 1986 due to the financial crisis facing the United Nations.

In the course of the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications, with requests that they be circulated under the agenda item on mercenaries. Many dealt with the situations in Afghanistan (see p. 212) and in Central America (see p. 175).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/80 without vote.

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need for strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions, particularly resolutions 2395(XXIII) of 29 November 1968, 2465(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970 and 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, and its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as Security Council resolutions 405(1977) of 14 April 1977, 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, 496(1981) of 15 December 1981 and 507(1982) of 28 May 1982, in which the United Nations denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling in particular its resolution 40/74 of 11 December 1985, by which it decided to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries and to hold the sixth session of the Ad Hoc Committee for four weeks in 1986,

Bearing in mind its decision 40/472 of 9 May 1986, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the current financial crisis of the United Nations, on the basis of which the Ad Hoc Committee did not hold its sixth session in 1986,

Taking into account the statement made by the Chairman of the Sixth Committee on 28 October 1986 and the views expressed by Member States during the consideration of the item at the current session,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impede the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Bearing in mind the pernicious impact that the activities of mercenaries have on international peace and security,

Considering that the progressive development and codification of the rules of international law on mercenaries would contribute immensely to the implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Taking account of the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Committee at its previous sessions,

Reaffirming the need for the elaboration, at the earliest possible date, of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries,

1. Decides to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries to enable it to continue its work on the drafting of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in the fulfilment of its mandate, to use the draft articles contained in chapter V of its report on its fifth session, entitled "Consolidated negotiating basis of a convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries", as a basis for future negotiation on the text of the proposed international convention;

3. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to take into account the suggestions and proposals of Member States submitted to the Secretary-General on the subject and the views and comments expressed at the fortieth and forty-first sessions of the General Assembly during the debate in the Sixth Committee devoted to the consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee;

4. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall hold its sixth session for a period of three weeks, from 19 January to 6 February 1987;

5. Also decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including participation in the meetings of its working groups;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, on a priority basis, the Ad Hoc Committee with any assistance and facilities it may require to hold its sixth session in 1987;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to make every effort to fulfil the mandate entrusted to it by the General Assembly and to proceed with all deliberate speed with the drafting of a convention;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries".

Draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses

In 1986, ILC⁽²²⁾ continued work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, as recommended by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽²⁷⁾ The Special Rapporteur, Stephen C. McCaffrey (United States), submitted his second report on the topic,⁽²⁸⁾ containing his views on articles 1 to 9 (dealing with introductory articles, general principles, rights and duties of watercourse States) proposed by the previous Special Rapporteur, a review of the legal authority supporting those views, and a set of five draft articles (articles 10-14) concerning procedural rules applicable in cases involving proposed new uses that might cause appreciable harm to other States using the watercourse.

In considering the report, ILC concentrated on four issues concerning articles 1 to 9: whether it could, for the time being, defer defining the term "international watercourse"; whether the term "shared natural resource" should be used in the text of the draft articles; whether an article should contain a list of factors to be taken into account in determining reasonable and equitable use, or whether those factors should be referred to in the commentary; and whether the relationship between the obligation not to cause harm to other States using a watercourse, on the one hand, and the principle of equitable utilization, on the other, should be made clear in the text of an article.

Commission members who participated in the discussion generally favoured deferring the definition of "international watercourse", while they were divided on the other three points.

In December, the General Assembly recommended that ILC continue its work on the topic (resolution 41/81).

Chapter III

States and International Law

The United Nations remained concerned, throughout 1986, with protecting diplomats and consular missions, as it received reports of incidents threatening their security and safety. Condemning acts of violence and recommending close co-operation among States to enhance the protection and safety of diplomatic missions and personnel, the General Assembly in December asked the Secretary-General to prepare guidelines so as to strengthen the procedures for reporting such incidents and corrective measures taken (resolution 41/78).

On the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, the Assembly, also in December, reaffirmed its conviction of the essential role played by it in promoting co-operation among States (41/79).

The International Law Commission continued work with a view to elaborating legal instruments on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by courier, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, international liability for injurious consequences arising from acts not prohibited by international law, and State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts.

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1986, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations⁽¹⁾ was as follows: 148 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations⁽²⁾ with Qatar and Yemen acceding and Saint Lucia succeeding in 1986; 42 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality⁽³⁾ and 52 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.⁽⁴⁾

With Yemen acceding and Saint Lucia succeeding to the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations⁽⁴⁾ the number of parties in 1986 was 112, while 33 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality⁽⁵⁾ and 40 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes⁽⁵⁾

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents⁽⁶⁾ had 68 States parties, with the Bahamas and Egypt having acceded in 1986.

Report of the Secretary-General. Following a 1985 General Assembly request⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in September 1986, a report with later addenda⁽⁸⁾ containing information from States on serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and on action taken to bring offenders to justice. Annexed to the report was a survey of the reporting procedures (see below).

Canada reported on the hostage-taking of the Vice-Consul of the Bahamas at the Bahamian High Commission at Ottawa in April 1986 and the subsequent criminal prosecution of the offender; it also provided information on the criminal prosecution of those involved in 1982 and 1985 attacks on the Embassy of Turkey and its Counsellor, and of those who had attacked the Acting High Commissioner of India to Canada in 1984. Denmark reported that the Embassy of Peru at Copenhagen was seized by an Iranian refugee and two others in February 1986. The Federal Republic of Germany reported that police continued investigations into two incidents at Bonn: a 1984 bomb explosion at the French Embassy and a 1985 letter bomb received at the Embassy of Iran, causing injury to a staff member.

Greece listed several 1983 and 1984 incidents. In 1983, cars belonging to the Ambassador of Saudi Arabia and to the Consulate of the Syrian Arab Republic were blown up; an explosion occurred outside the Consulate of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; and the perpetrator of an attempted murder of a Jordanian diplomat was arrested. In 1984, vehicles belonging to the Iraqi Embassy were booby-trapped with explosive mechanisms; and there was an assassination attempt against the Charge d'affaires of Jordan.

Israel reported the March 1986 fatal shooting of the wife of an Israeli diplomat and the wounding of three members of the Israeli Embassy at Cairo, Egypt, when the car they were in was fired upon. Jordan reported three 1985 incidents: a bazooka attack in May against the office of its Ambassador at Rome, Italy; the July fatal shooting of the First Secretary of its Embassy at Ankara, Turkey; and the August arrest of an armed suspect in the vicinity of its Ambassador's residence at Athens, Greece.

Pakistan reported two September 1986 incidents: the killing of an officer of the Iraqi Consulate General at Karachi by the explosion of a bomb planted in his car; and the fatal shooting of the assistant military attaché of the USSR Embassy at Islamabad.

Portugal provided information on the targeting of an explosive device and rockets against the United States Embassy at Lisbon in October and November 1984; a rocket explosion in front of the South African Embassy in July 1985; and the February 1986 explosion of a car belonging to a staff member of the United States Embassy.

Turkey reported the arrest of two Israelis and two Jordanians as a result of investigations into the July 1985 assassination of the First Secretary of the Jordanian Embassy at Ankara; in addition, measures were being taken to extradite two more suspects from abroad.

The USSR charged a number of countries with failing to provide adequate security protection—the United States for acts of provocation and for enacting measures which rendered difficult the functioning of diplomatic missions in the territory, including the decision to restrict the number of staff at the USSR Permanent Mission to the United Nations in New York (see also p. 1002); the United Kingdom for breaches of the security and immunity of Soviet diplomatic missions and representatives, including attempts to examine their luggage at London's Heathrow Airport and the adoption of new parking regulations for vehicles with diplomatic number plates; Canada for taking similar steps; and the Netherlands and Italy for not providing adequate protection while the situation around Soviet missions deteriorated with hostile demonstrations and what it called terrorist acts.

The United Kingdom, responding to the USSR charges, said the action at Heathrow Airport had been taken solely in the interests of aviation security, and rejected the contention that the regulations concerning illegal parking of diplomatic vehicles contravened the 1961 Vienna Convention. In addition, the United Kingdom drew attention to incidents of harassment of its Embassy and diplomatic personnel in Moscow, including damage to vehicles owned by staff, illegal entry into staff residential premises and theft.

Australia, Belgium, Lesotho and Luxembourg informed the Secretary-General that they had no serious incidents to report. Views on measures to enhance the protection of diplomatic missions and representatives were transmitted by Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Denmark, Guatemala, Mexico, Portugal, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Venezuela.

Annexed to the report was a survey of the reporting procedures, which had been in use since the Assembly established them in 1980.⁽⁹⁾ Among the suggestions to strengthen the reporting procedures and to enhance the comprehensiveness of the information was for States to inform the Secretary-General of serious violations having occurred in a given year, or the absence thereof, as some were already doing.

Communications. On 21 May⁽¹⁰⁾ Japan transmitted to the Secretary-General documents adopted at the Economic Summit of the seven major industrialized countries (Tokyo, 4-6 May): the Tokyo Declaration on "Looking forward to a better future" and a statement on international terrorism. On 25 September⁽¹¹⁾ Afghanistan informed the Secretary-General that its Ministry of Foreign Affairs had summoned the Charge d'affaires of the Iranian Embassy to lodge a protest against a 12 August incident involving the Charge d'affaires and one employee of the Afghan Embassy, who—while leaving for the USSR by train from Teheran on an official mission—had been attacked and robbed of documents and money by five Persian-speaking masked persons. In October⁽¹²⁾ the USSR transmitted a TASS news agency statement of 18 September on the murder of a Soviet diplomat in Islamabad, accusing the Pakistani authorities of disregard for the safety of diplomats.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 41/78 without vote.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Emphasizing the important role of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as of missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, in the maintenance of international peace and the promotion of friendly relations among States and also the need for enhancing global understanding thereof,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations, in particular those aimed at ensuring the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned at the continued large number of failures to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and at the serious threat presented by such violations to the maintenance of normal and peaceful international relations, which are necessary for co-operation among States,

Alarmed by the increase of acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which endanger or take innocent lives and seriously impede the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Expressing its sympathy for the victims of illegal acts against diplomatic and consular representatives and missions, as well as against representatives and missions to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate steps, as required by international law:

(a) To protect the premises of diplomatic and consular missions, as well as of missions to international intergovernmental organizations,

(b) To prevent any attacks on diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as on representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations,

(c) To apprehend the offenders and to bring them to justice,

Noting that, in spite of the call by the General Assembly at its previous sessions, not all States have yet become parties to the relevant conventions concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Having considered the survey, prepared by the Secretary-General, of the operation of the reporting procedures provided for in paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 40/73 of 11 December 1985,

Noting the suggestions made in the survey for strengthening those procedures,

Convinced that the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in later Assembly resolutions, as well as in the survey of the Secretary-General, are important steps in the efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Desiring to maintain and further strengthen those reporting procedures,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;

3. Emphasizes the importance of enhanced awareness throughout the world of the necessity of ensuring the protection, security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials, as well as of the role of the United Nations in this regard;

4. Urges States to observe and to implement the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to take all necessary measures in conformity with their international obligations to ensure effectively the protection, security and safety of all diplomatic and consular missions and representatives officially present in territory under their jurisdiction, including practicable measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

5. Calls upon States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and, in accordance with national law and international treaties, to prosecute or extradite those who perpetrate such acts;

6. Recommends that States should co-operate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State, with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;

7. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

8. Calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of the principles and rules of international law concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General;

9. Requests:

(a) All States to report to the Secretary-General as promptly as possible serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as missions and representatives with diplomatic status to international intergovernmental organizations;

(b) The States in which the violation took place—and, to the extent possible, the State where the alleged offender is present—to report as promptly as possible on measures taken to bring the offender to justice and eventually to communicate, in accordance with its laws, the final outcome of the proceedings against the offender, and on measures adopted with a view to preventing a repetition of such violations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate to all States, upon receipt, the reports received by him pursuant to paragraph 9 above, unless the reporting State requests otherwise;

(b) To draw the attention, when appropriate, of the States directly concerned to the reporting procedures provided for in paragraph 9 above, when a serious violation has been reported pursuant to paragraph 9 (a) above;

(c) To address reminders to States where such violations have occurred and have been reported, if no follow-up report has been made pursuant to paragraph 9 (b) above by such States within a reasonable period of time;

(d) To send, in due time before the issuance of his yearly report on the present item, a circular note to all

States requesting them to indicate whether they have any such violations, as referred to in paragraph 9 (a) above, to report for the preceding twelve months;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare guidelines embodying the relevant questions that States may wish to consider when reporting; the guidelines shall be circulated to all States with a view to strengthening the reporting procedures provided for in paragraph 9 above;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite States to inform him of their views with respect to any measures needed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report containing:

(a) Information on the state of ratification of, and accessions to, the instruments referred to in paragraph 7 above;

(b) The reports received and views expressed pursuant to paragraphs 9 and 12 above;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session any views he may wish to express on the matters referred to in paragraphs 11 and 13 above;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives: report of the Secretary-General".

General Assembly resolution 41/78

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/891) by consensus, 20 November (meeting 49); 18-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.B); agenda item 128.

Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Japan, Mongolia, Nigeria, Norway, Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay.

On the same day, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/79, also without vote.

Twenty-fifth anniversary of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the development of diplomatic relations in accordance with norms of international law and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations is an important factor in building confidence, developing co-operation among States and strengthening international peace and security,

Convinced that the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 has been widely recognized as the most authoritative and universal of the international treaties codifying the norms of international law governing diplomatic relations,

Confirming the importance it attaches to the strict compliance by States with their obligations under the Convention,

Concerned, at the same time, at still persistent cases of non-compliance with obligations under the Convention,

Expressing particular concern at the terrorist acts committed against diplomatic missions and representatives and at infringements of their inviolability,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Convention, without prejudice to their privileges and immunities, it is the duty of all persons enjoying such privileges and immunities to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving State,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations has played, for over twenty-five years, and will continue to play an essential role in promoting co-operation and understanding among States, in creating normal conditions for the activities of diplomatic missions and representatives and in the progressive development of international law in this field;

2. Notes with satisfaction that at present one hundred and forty-nine States are parties to the Convention;*

3. Recommends to States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to consider doing so at an early date;

4. Stresses the importance of the process of codification and progressive development of international law in the field of diplomatic relations;

5. Calls upon all States to observe strictly the provisions of the Convention in order to create an appropriate atmosphere essential for the normal discharge by diplomatic missions of their functions;

6. Urges all States to take effective action at national and international levels to suppress terrorist and other acts of violence against diplomatic missions and representatives, to prosecute without delay the perpetrators of such acts and, in accordance with the Convention, to avoid abuses of diplomatic privileges and immunities.

*As at 3 December 1986, when the resolution was adopted, 148 States were parties to the Convention.

Status of diplomatic bags and couriers

In 1986, the International Law Commission (ILC)⁽¹³⁾ after considering the seventh report⁽¹⁴⁾ of the Special Rapporteur, Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria), on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, adopted provisionally on first reading a set of 33 draft articles on the topic.

The draft articles were divided into four sections. Part I (articles 1 to 6) dealt with general provisions. Part II (articles 7 to 23) concerned the status of the diplomatic courier and the captain of a ship or aircraft entrusted with the diplomatic bag—appointment of the diplomatic courier; documentation of the courier; nationality of the courier; functions of the courier; end of the functions of the courier; the courier declared persona non grata or not acceptable; facilities accorded to the courier; entry into the territory of the receiving State or the transit State; freedom of movement; personal protection and inviolability; inviolability of temporary accommodation; immunity from jurisdiction; exemption from personal examination, customs duties and inspection; exemption from dues and taxes; duration of privileges and immunities; waiver of immunities; and status of the captain of a ship or aircraft entrusted with the diplomatic bag. Part III (articles 24 to 29) concerned the status of the diplomatic bag—its identification, content, transmission by postal service or by any mode of transport, facilities accorded, protection, and exemption from customs duties, dues and taxes. Part IV (articles 30 to 33) contained miscellaneous provisions.

The Commission decided that the 33 draft articles should be transmitted to Governments for comments and observations, for submission to the Secretary-General by 1 January 1988.

In December, the Assembly urged Governments to respond as fully and expeditiously as possible to the ILC request (resolution 41/81).

State immunity, liability and responsibility

In response to the Assembly's 1985 recommendation⁽¹⁾ ILC, at its 1986 session⁽²⁾ continued work on three aspects of international law concerning States: jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, and State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts.

In December, the Assembly recommended that, taking into account government comments, ILC should continue its work on those topics (resolution 41/81).

Draft articles on State immunities

At its 1986 session, ILC, after considering the eighth report⁽³⁾ of the Special Rapporteur, Sompong Sucharitkul (Thailand), on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, adopted provisionally on first reading a set of 28 draft articles on the topic.

The draft was divided into five sections. Part I (articles 1 to 5) constituted the introduction. Part II (articles 6 to 10) dealt with general principles—State immunity; modalities for giving effect to State immunity; express consent to the exercise of jurisdiction; effect of participation in a proceeding before a court; and counter-claims.

The Commission deferred to the second reading the decision on whether "limitations on" or "exceptions to" State immunity was more appropriate as the title of part III (articles 11 to 20)—commercial contracts; contracts of employment; personal injuries and damage to property; ownership, possession and use of property; patents, trade marks and intellectual or industrial property; fiscal matters; participation in companies or other collective bodies; State-owned or State-operated ships engaged in commercial service; effect of an arbitration agreement; and cases of nationalization.

Part IV (articles 21 to 23) was on State immunity in respect of property from measures of constraint—State immunity from measures of constraint; consent to measures of constraint; and specific categories of property. Part V (articles 24 to 28) concerned miscellaneous provisions.

The draft articles provisionally adopted were to be transmitted to Governments for comments and observations, to be submitted to the Secretary-General by 1 January 1988.

In December, the Assembly urged Governments to respond as fully and expeditiously as possible to the ILC request (resolution 41/81).

Draft articles on State liability

In 1986, ILC⁽⁴⁾ continued work on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, basing its work on the preliminary and the second reports—submitted in 1985⁽⁴⁾ and in 1986, ⁽⁵⁾ respectively—by the new Special Rapporteur on the topic, Julio Barboza (Argentina). (5) The Commission focused its discussion mainly on the second report, as the preliminary one, not considered in 1985 due to lack of time, analysed what had been done prior to its submission.

The Special Rapporteur indicated his intention of basing his work on the schematic outline.⁽⁶⁾ A number of points, however, needed reconsideration, among them, unity of the topic; scope of the topic; and the question of obligations and their interrelated aspects, including the obligation of reparation and its basis in international law.

In the Commission discussion, it was generally understood that injury in the sense of material harm was what constituted the unity of the topic and its focus should be on activities involving risk. Differing views were expressed on the question of obligations to inform and to negotiate, and the matter was deferred for further consideration.

A number of speakers asked that in the future elaboration of the topic special account should be taken of the needs of the developing countries and what suited them, a view already expressed by the Special Rapporteur in his preliminary report.

Although ILC had not time for a full debate on the topic, due to the shortening of the 1986 session, it was decided that the Special Rapporteur, in his next report, should begin the drafting of articles developing the ideas put forward by ILC members.

Draft articles on State responsibility

In 1986, ILC continued preparing draft articles on State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts, taking up the seventh report⁽⁷⁾ by the Special Rapporteur, Willem Riphagen (Netherlands). The report was divided into two sections: five articles and an annex for part III of the topic (implementation of international responsibility and dispute settlement); and a section, neither introduced nor discussed at the 1986 session, dealing with the first stage of preparation for the second reading of part

I (origin of international responsibility), comprising written comments of Governments on 13 draft articles.

Following an exchange of views, the Commission referred draft articles 1 to 5 of part III and its annex to the Drafting Committee. However, due to the shortening of the 1986 session, the Drafting Committee was not able either to begin consideration of those draft articles or conclude its work on article 6 of part II (content, forms and degrees of State responsibility). Chapter IV

International organizations and international law

In 1986, the year proclaimed as the International Year of Peace, the United Nations remained concerned with strengthening its role in maintaining international peace and security, and the General Assembly, in December, requested the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to accord priority to that question (resolution 41/83).

The Assembly, having considered the annual report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, urged that country, the United States, to continue to prevent criminal acts, including harassment and violations of the security of missions and the safety of their personnel (41/82). The Assembly again called on States which hosted international organizations or conferences to accord to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for their functioning (41/71).

The Assembly decided to retain an item on the implementation of United Nations resolutions on the agenda of its forty-first session, to resume in 1987, and to give further consideration in the future to draft standard rules of procedure for United Nations conferences.

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

In 1986, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization continued consideration of the maintenance of international peace and security, with a view to strengthening the United Nations role in that regard and promoting co-operation among States.

Report of the Secretary-General for 1985/86

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), stated that the United Nations had been subjected in 1986 to a severe crisis challenging its solvency and viability, just when the world observed the International Year of Peace and renewed efforts were called for to strengthen the Organization as the constructive force in an increasingly interdependent world.

Criticism of the United Nations as failing to prevent or end international conflicts, the Secretary-General said, overlooked the most useful work done by the Organization in helping to limit the expansion of conflict and in providing the possibility for negotiations, which could reduce the inclination towards armed exchange. However, there was no doubt that the Organization's inability to avoid, or resolve, many of the armed conflicts between Member States seriously affected its credibility in the eyes of the public on whose support its vitality ultimately depended.

Among measures for dealing effectively with the threat of armed conflict was the suggestion of the Secretary-General that the permanent members of the Security Council co-operate within the Council and apply their collective influence to resolve regional disputes. Further, all Member States had to observe in far greater measure that the existence of an authoritative international organ capable of maintaining peace and security was in their individual as well as the common interest and that its decisions therefore had to be respected. In order to enhance the effectiveness of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General believed that its important purposes under the Charter were seldom served by intemperate rhetoric or excessive repetition.

Activities of the Special Committee

The 47-member Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ meeting in New York from 7 April to 2 May 1986, continued consideration of the maintenance of international peace and security, in addition to peaceful settlement of disputes between States (see also p. 108) and the rationalization of United Nations procedures, as requested by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽²⁾

A Working Group of the Committee devoted 13 meetings between 18 and 28 April to discussing the question of maintenance of international peace and security. In that connection, it examined the second revised text⁽³⁾ of a working paper—first submitted in 1984⁽⁴⁾ by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand and Spain—on prevention and removal by the United Nations of situations which may lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute. It also discussed a working paper⁽⁵⁾—submitted by Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland—on the role of Member States and of the United Nations in that respect. Submitting its views in response to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽²⁾ Oman supported giving priority to consideration of the topic in order to strengthen the United Nations role.⁽⁶⁾

Three Working Group meetings were held on 16 and 17 April to consider a revised working paper⁽⁷⁾ on rationalizing existing procedures of the United Nations, which was first submitted in 1985⁽⁸⁾ by France and the United Kingdom.

Other activities

Security Council consideration. At a Security Council meeting on 17 January 1986, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of its first meeting, the Council President, on behalf of the members, reaffirmed their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations, which conferred on the Council the primary responsibility for maintaining international peace and security. He stressed that the inauguration of the International Year of Peace on 1 January 1986 provided an added impetus for the Council to enhance its effectiveness, and called on all Member States to abide by their obligation under the Charter to accept and carry out the Council's decisions.

On 13 June, the Council President stated that, since June 1985, members of the Council had been engaged in consultations of the whole in connection with the issues raised in the Secretary-General's annual reports on the work of the Organization, presented to the thirty-seventh (1982) through fortieth (1985) General Assembly sessions; during that time, the members had explored possible ways of enhancing the effectiveness of the Council in accordance with the powers entrusted to it under the Charter.

ACC consideration. In September 1986, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly comments of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC)⁽⁹⁾ on a 1985 Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report entitled "Some reflections on reform of the United Nations".⁽¹⁰⁾ ACC regretted that the report was not prepared in accordance with JIU practices and the provisions of its statute⁽¹¹⁾—relating, among other things, to the scope, prior consultations, and dissemination and publicity of reports—and considered it, therefore, inappropriate to comment on the report.

Communication. On 24 November, the USSR transmitted to the Secretary-General a memorandum on the development of international law⁽¹²⁾ in which it asserted that the United Nations should play a central role in making international law evolve into a law of comprehensive security and collective State responsibility towards mankind.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 41/83 without vote.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its relevant resolutions adopted at subsequent sessions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh, thirty-ninth, fortieth and forty-first sessions, as well as of the views and comments expressed on them by Member States,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization on the work of the session it held in 1986,

Concerned that the Special Committee, since its establishment, has not yet submitted any conclusions to the General Assembly on the question of the maintenance of international peace and security,

Taking into account the work accomplished by the Special Committee on the basis of the working paper on the question of the prevention and removal of threats to the peace and of situations that may lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute,

Taking note of the progress achieved in the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Recognizing the importance that pre-session consultations among the members of the Special Committee and other interested States may have in facilitating the smooth conduct of the work of the Special Committee towards the fulfilment of its task, especially as regards the composition of the Bureau and the organization of work,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization;

2. Decides that the Special Committee shall hold its next session from 9 to 27 February 1987;

3. Requests the Special Committee at its session in 1987:

(a) To accord priority, by devoting more time, to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, and to enable it to discharge fully its responsibilities under the Charter in this field, and to work with the aim of submitting its conclusions to the General Assembly in accordance with paragraph 5 below, and in doing so:

(i) To concentrate its efforts on the question of the prevention and removal of threats to peace and of situations that may lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, on the basis of the working paper and on any other proposals specific to this question, with a view to completing its consideration thereof and elaborating appropriate conclusions thereon for submission to the General Assembly as soon as possible;

- (ii) To continue its consideration of the proposal contained in the working paper on the role of Member States and of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security;
- (b) To continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 41/74 of 3 December 1986;

4. Requests the Special Committee to keep the question of the rationalization of the procedures of the United Nations under active review;

5. Also requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever that has significance for the outcome of its work;

6. Urges members of the Special Committee to participate fully in its work in fulfilment of the mandate entrusted to it;

7. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including in the meetings of its working groups;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to render all assistance to the Special Committee;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, in accordance with paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 41/74;

10. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Publication of repertoires of practice

Pursuant to a 1981 General Assembly request⁽¹³⁾ that the Secretary-General give priority to updating the supplements to the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council and the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs, volumes I(14) and (15) of Supplement No. 5 to the Repertory, covering 1 January 1970 to 31 December 1978, were published in English. As regards the Repertoire, a Supplement⁽¹⁶⁾ covering 20 February 1975 to 19 December 1980, was published in 1986.

Implementation of UN resolutions

The General Assembly, on 15 September 1986, decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-first session the item on implementation of United Nations resolutions (decision 40/482). On 19 December, it decided to retain on the agenda of the forty-first session, to resume in 1987, seven items, one of which was the implementation of United Nations resolutions (decision 41/470).

Host country relations

The 15-member Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued its work in 1986, pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request⁽¹⁾ and at nine meetings considered various aspects of relations between the United Nations diplomatic community and the United States, the host country. Summaries of communications from Member States on the security of their missions were contained in the Committee's report to the Assembly⁽²⁾

In January, the Committee considered a December 1985 decision by the host country to impose travel restrictions within the United States on the members and their dependants of the missions of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland. In an 8 January 1986 letter to the Secretary-General⁽³⁾ those countries protested that the United States decision, effective as of 6 January, violated international legal obligations and impeded the normal functioning of the missions concerned. Similar restrictions had been announced in August 1985, applicable to United Nations staff members nationals of Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam⁽⁴⁾

In the Committee, Bulgaria called the travel restrictions unlawful, discriminatory and in contravention of international law and the legal obligations of the host country under the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations⁽⁵⁾ further, a selective approach based on reciprocity was prohibited under Article 105 of the United Nations Charter. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam considered the travel restrictions to be in contravention also of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations⁽⁶⁾ and the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations.⁽⁷⁾ The United States said the travel regulations were based on national security considerations, not on the reciprocity principle.

Viet Nam lodged a protest in February concerning acts of violence carried out against its Mission and staff by what it called a group of hooligans and anti-Viet Nam elements. It requested that those guilty be brought to account and punished by the authorities.

In notes dated 7 March, which were transmitted on 13 March to the Chairman of the Committee,⁽⁸⁾ the United States had informed the missions of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR that their combined staff size exceeded the needs arising from the pursuit of United Nations-related business, that some of the mission personnel had engaged in activities incompatible with their status and that it, therefore, had decided that the collective size of their mission staff should be reduced by 1 April 1988 to 170 permanently assigned personnel (150 for the USSR, and 10 each for the others). Personnel assigned on temporary duty status were not included in the announced ceilings. On 11 March, the Byelorussian SSR,⁽⁹⁾ the Ukrainian SSR⁽¹⁰⁾ and the USSR⁽¹¹⁾ protested against the United States action, calling it arbitrary, groundless and violating the host country's obligations under the Headquarters Agreement.⁽⁵⁾ They asserted that nothing in any existing international agreements gave the United States the right to impose numerical limits on the staff of permanent missions of Member States who were accredited not to the United States but to the United Nations.

Cuba expressed similar views, in a 17 March letter to the Secretary-General.⁽¹²⁾

The issue was discussed by the Committee at four meetings in March and June. In response to a request by the USSR, the United Nations Legal Counsel noted on 13 March⁽¹³⁾ that no case had arisen previously where the host State had called for ceilings on or reductions in the size of missions accredited to the United Nations. Any reservations the host State might have regarding the size of a mission had to be resolved through consultations and, if they failed, through dispute-settlement procedures. He concluded that the matter required consultations, in which the Secretary-General was ready to assist.

In later March letters, Czechoslovakia⁽¹⁴⁾ and Bulgaria⁽¹⁵⁾ protested against the United States warning, given to them on 7 March, that it might impose restrictions in case of a future increase in the number of the personnel of those missions.

At an urgent meeting of the Committee, convened in October at the request of the USSR,⁽¹⁶⁾ that country reported that the United States had requested on 17 September the departure of 25 Soviet Mission members. The United States reiterated that the size of the three missions concerned clearly exceeded the staffing needs for the conduct of United Nations business, that the situation constituted an abuse of the right of representation, and that it was legally justified in seeking to correct that situation. Following a discussion, the Chairman concluded that the question of the size of missions should be considered under the relevant rules of international law and that he believed it was the view of the Committee that the parties should solve the problem through consultations.

Other matters brought to the Committee's attention included two visa-related complaints against the United States: one by Afghanistan,⁽¹⁷⁾ to which the United States responded on 23 June,⁽¹⁸⁾ and another by Iran.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Committee also considered questions related to acceleration of immigration and customs procedures, exemption from taxes, and the question of privileges and immunities.

By recommendations approved on 18 November, the Committee, among other things, urged the host country to prevent, and punish those responsible for, acts violating the security of missions and safety of their personnel, to avoid actions not consistent with international law in relation to the privileges and immunities of Member States, and to review measures relating to diplomatic vehicles with a view to facilitating the needs of the diplomatic community. With regard to the staff size of certain missions, the Committee urged the parties concerned, in accordance with the suggestion of the Legal Counsel, to hold consultations with a view to reaching solutions to the matter in accordance with the Headquarters Agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/82 without vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations,

Recalling farther that the problems related to the privileges and immunities of all missions accredited to the United Nations, the security of the missions and the safety of their personnel are of great importance and concern to Member States, as well as the primary responsibility of the host country,

Noting with deep concern the continued acts violating the security and the safety of the personnel of those missions accredited to the United Nations,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Considering the issues raised by certain States Members of the United Nations in response to the request and to action by the host country to reduce the size of their missions,

Conscious of the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 87 of its report;

2. Strongly condemns any criminal acts violating the security of missions accredited to the United Nations and the safety of their personnel;

3. Urges the host country to take all necessary measures without delay to continue to prevent criminal acts, including harassment and violations of the security of missions and the safety of their personnel or infringements of the inviolability of their property, in order to ensure the existence and functioning of all missions, including practicable measures to prohibit illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts and activities against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

4. Urges the host country and the Member States that raised the issues in response to the request and to action by the host country to reduce the size of their missions to follow the path of consultations with a view to reaching solutions to this matter, in accordance with the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations;

5. Stresses the importance of a positive perception of the work of the United Nations, expresses concern about a negative public image and, therefore, urges that efforts be continued to build up public awareness by explaining, through all available means, the importance of the role played by the United Nations and the missions accredited to it in the strengthening of international peace and security;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country and to continue to stress the importance of effective measures to avoid acts of terrorism, violence and harassment against the missions and their personnel, as well as the need for any pertinent legislation adopted by the host country to be in accord with the Agreement and its other relevant obligations;

7. Decides to consider at its forty-second session the question of the composition of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country;

8. Requests the Committee on Relations with the Host Country to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

Observer status of national liberation movements in international organizations

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in September 1986 a report⁽¹⁾ containing replies received from five Governments (Barbados, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR) on their implementation of a 1984 General Assembly resolution concerning the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States.⁽²⁾ By that resolution, the Assembly as in 1980⁽³⁾ and 1982,⁽⁴⁾ had called on States to accord to those movements the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary to perform their functions in accordance with the provisions of the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character.⁽⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/71 by recorded vote.

Observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/167 of 15 December 1980, 37/104 of 16 December 1982 and 39/76 of 13 December 1984,

Recalling also its resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the resolution of the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations relating to the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States,

Noting that the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, of 14 March 1975, regulates only the representation of States in their relations with international organizations.

Taking into account the current practice of inviting the above-mentioned national liberation movements to participate as observers in the sessions of the General Assembly, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in the work of the conferences held under the auspices of such international organizations,

Convinced that the participation of the national liberation movements referred to above in the work of international organizations helps to strengthen international peace and co-operation,

Desirous of ensuring the effective participation of the above-mentioned national liberation movements as observers in the work of international organizations and of regulating, to that end, their status and the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions,

Noting that many States have recognized those national liberation movements and have granted them facilities, privileges and immunities in their countries,

1. Urges all States that have not done so, in particular those which are hosts to international organizations or to conferences convened by, or held under the auspices of, international organizations of a universal character, to consider as soon as possible the question of ratifying, or acceding to, the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

2. Calls once more upon the States concerned to accord to the delegations of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States, and accorded observer status by international organizations, the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions in accordance with the provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/71

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 125-10-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/886) by recorded vote (93-9-16), 18 November (meeting 47); 26-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.4); agenda item 121.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 6th Committee 8, 47; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Burma, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

Explaining their votes, Canada, France, Israel, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States stated that the 1975 Vienna Convention had not entered into force.

Israel observed that, as at 31 December 1985, only 23 States, none of which hosted the United Nations or its specialized agencies, had expressed their willingness to be bound by the instrument. The draft resolution called on States that were not parties to the Convention to apply its provisions to entities having none of the attributes of States, and requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of an inapplicable resolution. Only 3 of the 26 sponsors of the draft had deposited an instrument of ratification of, or accession to, the Convention; another two had signed but not ratified it. The quasi-diplomatic status demanded of a certain self-styled national liberation movement, Israel added, would only facilitate terrorist acts which had been formally denounced as crimes by the Sixth Committee.

France, Italy and the United States noted that the 1975 Convention had been adopted by a divided vote. Canada and France concurred that the Convention did not reflect current international law and deemed it inappropriate to broaden its scope of application. Canada and the United Kingdom stated that entities other than States, not in a position to guarantee good conduct, could not be placed on an equal footing with States. In a similar vein, Belgium expressed reservations to granting facilities, privileges and immunities—which the Convention granted exclusively to States—to persons not representative of a State which could be held internationally liable for their conduct.

Italy stated that none of the States which had ratified or acceded to the Convention was a principal host to international organizations; it was inappropriate for a United Nations resolution to try to enhance the status of such a controversial convention. Thailand voted in favour on the understanding that the text referred to national liberation movements recognized by the United Nations or relevant regional bodies.

The United Kingdom and the United States considered it inappropriate to take up the question again at future sessions.

Draft standard rules of procedure for UN conferences

The General Assembly, which had asked the Secretary-General in 1980⁽¹⁾ to propose draft standard rules of procedure for special conferences of the United Nations, had deferred consideration of the topic since his first report in 1981.⁽²⁾

On 3 December 1986, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, decided to give further consideration to this question at a future session (decision 41/419).

Chapter V

Treaties and agreements

In 1986, the General Assembly welcomed the adoption, at a United Nations conference held earlier in the year, of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, and expressed the hope that States would consider becoming parties to it at an early date.

As in previous years, several multilateral treaties, concluded under United Nations auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General.

Treaties involving international organizations

The United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations—convened at Vienna from 18 February to 21 March 1986 in pursuance of 1982⁽¹⁾ 1983⁽²⁾ and 1984⁽³⁾ General Assembly resolutions—adopted on 20 March a Convention on the subject, on the basis of a text finalized by the International Law Commission (ILC) in

Known as the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations⁽⁵⁾ the instrument comprised 86 articles divided into eight parts. Part I (articles 1 to 5) constituted the introduction. Part II was divided into three sections: section 1 (articles 6 to 18) dealt with the conclusion of treaties; section 2 (articles 19 to 23) was on reservations; and section 3 (articles 24 and 25) concerned entry into force and provisional application. Part III had four sections: section 1 (articles 26 and 27), observance; section 2 (articles 28 to 30), application; section 3 (articles 31 to 33), interpretation; and section 4 (articles 34 to 38), treaties and third States or third organizations. Part IV (articles 39 to 41) dealt with amendment and modification. Part V on invalidity, termination and suspension of operation, comprised five sections: section 1 (articles 42 to 45), general provisions; section 2 (articles 46 to 53), invalidity; section 3 (articles 54 to 64), termination and suspension of operation; section 4 (articles 65 to 68), procedure; and section 5 (articles 69 to 72), consequences. Part VI (articles 73 to 76) concerned miscellaneous provisions. Part VII (articles 77 to 81) was on depositaries, notifications, corrections and registration. Part VIII (articles 82 to 86) dealt with final provisions. The annex dealt with arbitration and conciliation procedures established in application of article 66.

The Convention was opened for signature on 21 March at Vienna, and subsequently in New York. As at 31 December 1986, Austria, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, Greece, Italy, Mexico, Morocco, Senegal, the Sudan, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia had signed the Convention.⁽⁶⁾

Among the resolutions adopted by the Conference, which were annexed to the Final Act⁽⁷⁾ was one requesting the Assembly to take note of and approve the provisions of paragraphs 9 and 14 of the annex to the Convention, according to which the United Nations would bear the expenses of any arbitral tribunal and conciliation commission that might be set up under article 66 of the Convention.

Ninety-seven States participated in the Conference in response to the Assembly's 1984 invitation⁽³⁾ (for participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III). Also participating were a number of organizations and intergovernmental bodies invited by the Assembly. Paul Reuter (France), ILC's Special Rapporteur on the topic, served as Expert Consultant.

Among the documentation before the Conference were the draft articles by ILC, with a list of draft articles of the basic proposal for which substantive consideration was deemed necessary⁽⁸⁾ and an analytical compilation, prepared by the United Nations Secretariat⁽⁹⁾ of comments of Governments and international organizations on the draft articles, as submitted in writing or made orally in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee between 1982 and 1985.

ACC action. In October 198⁽¹⁰⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination took note of the outcome of the Conference and urged the organizations of the United Nations system to give favourable consideration to seeking authorization from the competent organs to sign the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In May, the Secretary-General⁽¹¹⁾ proposed the inclusion in the agenda of the forty-first session of the General Assembly of an item on the Vienna Convention.

In December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted decision 41/420 by recorded vote.

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations

At its 95th plenary meeting, on 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee:

(a) Welcomed the adoption, on 20 March 1986, by the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations;

(b) Considered that the Convention should be signed on behalf of the United Nations;

(c) Expressed the hope that States, as well as international organizations having the capacity to conclude treaties, would consider taking the steps necessary to become parties to the Convention at an early date.

General Assembly decision 41/420

127-1-22 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/899) by roll-call vote (87-1-23), 26 November (meeting 55); 9-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.24); agenda item 138.

Sponsors: Austria, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Greece, Japan, Jordan, Mexico, Senegal, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 6th Committee 45, 46, 55; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France.

Abstaining: Algeria, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iran, Israel, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malawi, Mongolia, Norway, Poland, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam.

In explanation of vote, the USSR said the United Nations should not sign the Convention before the majority of its Member States had done so. Bulgaria added that if the Organization was to sign the Convention, it should declare that the signing was without prejudice to the question of financial obligations under articles 9 and 14. France also expressed opposition to the United Nations signing the Convention. Turkey said it abstained in the vote for the same reasons that had prevented it from endorsing the Convention. Norway abstained because of what it saw as a discrepancy between the provisions of article 46 of the Convention and certain provisions of the Norwegian Constitution, preventing it for the time being from becoming a party to the Convention. While not objecting to the United Nations signing the instrument, Algeria said the Convention did not take into account the positions of various delegations on the issue of dispute settlement. Tunisia stressed that the consent of States was essential in initiating the procedures for peaceful settlement of disputes. The Sudan said the United Nations should sign the Convention.

Relations between States and international organizations

In 1986, ILC,⁽¹²⁾ due to lack of time, was unable to consider the third report by the Special Rapporteur, Leonardo Díaz-González (Venezuela), on relations between States and international organizations (second part of the topic).⁽¹³⁾

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1986, some 1133 international agreements and 200 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 310 registrations of formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performs depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1986, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed in 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979 and 1980 were issued:

1017, 1053, 1057, 1060, 1063, 1069, 1075, 1077, 1078, 1079, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1084, 1085, 1088, 1089, 1090, 1091, 1092, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1097, 1098, 1105, 1106, 1108, 1110, 1111, 1115, 1116, 1117, 1130, 1132, 1139, 1188, 1189, 1192.

Chapter VI

International economic law

In 1986, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee.

In December, the Assembly, by resolution 41/77, noted with satisfaction the completion of the Legal Guide on Electronic Funds Transfers and welcomed UNCITRAL's decision to undertake formulation of model legal rules on that subject. In addition, it noted the progress made by the Commission in preparing a draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes and a legal guide on drawing up international contracts for construction of industrial works.

By resolution 41/73, the Assembly decided to consider in 1987 the most appropriate procedure for completing the elaboration of the process of codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order.

General aspectsReport of UNCITRAL

At its nineteenth session, held in New York from 23 June to 11 July 1986,⁽¹⁾ UNCITRAL considered the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, legal aspects of the new international economic order, and co-ordination of activities in the field of international trade. It also reviewed the status of conventions which had resulted from its previous work, and its programmes of training and assistance. The Commission also took note of the report of its Working Group on International Contract Practices at its ninth session (New York, 6-17 January)⁽²⁾ concerning uniform rules on the liability of operators of transport terminals. The Group continued work on the rules at its tenth session (Vienna, 1-12 December).⁽³⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/77 without vote.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its nineteenth session,

Recalling that the object of the Commission is the promotion of the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law,

Recalling, in this regard, its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, as well as its other resolutions relating to the work of the Commission,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development, including developing countries, in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its nineteenth session;

2. Commends the Commission for the progress made in its work and for having reached decisions by consensus;

3. Notes the progress made by the Commission at its nineteenth session in the preparation of a draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, and, in this connection:

(a) Takes note of the need to minimize the financial costs of adopting the Convention without sacrificing its quality or international acceptability;

(b) Requests the Commission to complete its work on the draft Convention during its twentieth session;

(c) Decides to consider the draft Convention during its forty-second session, with a view to its adoption or other appropriate action;

4. Calls upon the Commission to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions concerning the new international economic order, as adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions;

5. Reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work carried out by the Working Group on the New International Economic Order on a legal guide on the drawing up of international contracts for construction of industrial works, and notes with satisfaction the progress made in the preparation of the legal guide;

6. Welcomes the decision of the Commission to commence work on the subject of international procurement as a matter of priority;

7. Notes with particular satisfaction the completion by the Commission of the Legal Guide on Electronic Funds Transfers and welcomes its decisions to authorize the Secretary-General to publish the Legal Guide as a product of the work of the Secretariat, in all official languages of the United Nations, and to undertake work on the formulation of model legal rules on electronic funds transfers;

8. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to co-ordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, and, in this connection, recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, should continue to maintain close co-operation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

9. Reaffirms also the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and assistance in the field of international trade law and the desirability for it to sponsor symposia and seminars, in particular those organized on a regional basis, to promote such training and assistance, and, in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to those regional organizations and institutions that have collaborated with the secretariat of the Commission in organizing regional seminars and symposia in the field of international trade law;

(b) Welcomes the initiatives being undertaken by the Commission and its secretariat to collaborate with other organizations and institutions in the organization of regional seminars;

(c) Invites Governments, international organizations and institutions to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing regional seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries;

(d) Invites Governments, relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to allow the resumption of the programme of the Commission for the award of fellowships on a regular basis to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such symposia and seminars;

10. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law;

11. Recommends that the Commission should continue its work on the topics included in its programme of work;

12. Expresses its appreciation for the important role played by the International Trade Law Branch of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, as the substantive secretariat of the Commission, in assisting in the structuring and implementation of the work programme of the Commission.

General Assembly resolution 41/77

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/861) without vote, 5 November (meeting 35); 27-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.3), orally revised; agenda item 127.

Draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes

At its nineteenth session,⁽¹⁾ UNCITRAL discussed the draft Convention on International Bills of Exchange and International Promissory Notes, based on a report of its Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments which had completed its deliberations on and revision of the draft in 1985.⁽²⁾ Also before the Commission was a note by the secretariat containing the revised text of the draft Convention.⁽³⁾

The Commission adopted most articles of the draft Convention and entrusted a drafting group with further modification of some articles for clarity and with the establishment of corresponding language versions in the six official languages of the Commission. It decided to have the text of the draft Convention—as revised by it and annexed to its report to the Assembly⁽¹⁾—circulated to Governments and international organizations for their comments, with an indication of the drafting proposals not reviewed by the Commission at its 1986 session.

The draft Convention comprised 80 articles in eight chapters dealing with sphere of application and form of the instrument; interpretation; transfer; rights and liabilities; presentment, dishonour by non-acceptance or non-payment, and recourse; discharge; lost instruments; and limitation (prescription).

After informal consultations on procedures for adopting the draft Convention, three possibilities received support from delegations. The first would have UNCITRAL recommend that the Assembly convene a diplomatic conference to adopt the draft as finalized in 1986. By the second, the 1986 text would be reviewed by the Working Group prior to the 1987 UNCITRAL session, when it would be considered, approved and recommended for adoption by the Assembly without a review of its substance. The third possibility differed from the second only by omitting a review by the Working Group and asking the secretariat to complete the preparatory work, including the establishment of draft final clauses.

After adopting the second procedure, the Commission decided to dedicate two weeks at its 1987 session to an article-by-article discussion of the draft Convention, taking into account the report of the Working Group on its session scheduled for January 1987 and comments submitted by Governments. It would then transmit the text to the General Assembly with the recommendation that it be adopted as a convention without amendment of the substance.

In resolution 41/77, the Assembly decided to consider the draft Convention in 1987 with a view to its adoption or other appropriate action.

Electronic funds transfers

In 1986, UNCITRAL⁽¹⁾ continued consideration of a draft Legal Guide on Electronic Funds Transfers—a topic it had been seized of since 1982.⁽⁴⁾

The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General⁽⁵⁾ on the Legal Guide, prepared by the secretariat in co-operation with the UNCITRAL Study Group on International Payments. The report contained a summary of comments received from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and proposals for modifications based on them; it recommended the adoption and the publication of the Legal Guide. The report concluded that to the extent that the use of electronics had led to changes in banking procedures, new legal rules in the area of electronic funds transfers were needed; it discussed possible approaches and procedures for formulating such rules.

While welcoming the completion of the Legal Guide, most Commission members considered it inappropriate to adopt the text as a product of its work, without having engaged in substantive discussions on it. The Commission, therefore, authorized the secretariat to publish the Guide as a product of the work of the secretariat.

As regards future work, the Commission decided to entrust its Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments with the formulation of model legal rules on electronic funds transfers; suggested that the Group, which might be renamed the Working Group on International Payments, might begin its work by considering the legal issues set forth in the last chapter of the Legal Guide; and agreed that the model rules should be flexible and not dependent on specific technology.

In resolution 41/77, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the completion of the Legal Guide and welcomed the Commission's decisions to have it published as the work of the secretariat and to begin work on formulating model legal rules on electronic funds transfers.

Automatic data processing

In 1986, UNCITRAL took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the legal aspects of automatic data processing, with suggestions for future action to co-ordinate work in that field.⁽⁶⁾ According to the report, many international organizations were undertaking work, with focus on special areas of their own interests and needs. While a substantial degree of co-operation among those organizations already existed, an effort to increase co-ordination was deemed desirable. It was suggested that UNCITRAL might assume leadership in that effort by having the secretariat organize a meeting in late 1986 or early 1987, to which all interested international organizations could be invited.

The Commission generally approved of the course of action proposed in the report.

Training and assistance

UNCITRAL continued to co-operate and participate in regional seminars. In 1986, its secretariat co-operated with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee and the Cairo Centre for International Commercial Arbitration in holding a regional seminar on international commercial arbitration (Cairo, Egypt, 20-22 January).

The Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report on training and assistance,⁽⁷⁾ which described measures taken by the secretariat to implement UNCITRAL and Assembly decisions. The report noted that the subject-matter of the majority of the symposia and seminars reflected particular interest in the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration.⁽⁸⁾

In resolution 41/77, the Assembly reaffirmed the importance of training and assistance and invited contributions to help finance and organize seminars.

Legal aspects of the new international economic order

In 1986, legal aspects of the new international economic order continued to be dealt with by UNCITRAL and the General Assembly's Sixth Committee.

UNCITRAL consideration. The UNCITRAL Working Group on the New International Economic Order at its eighth session (Vienna, 17-27 March)⁽¹⁾ continued drafting a legal guide on drawing up international contracts for the construction of industrial works. It informed the Commission that it intended to complete work at its ninth session and present the draft chapters of the legal guide to the Commission for adoption in 1987.

With the work on the legal guide approaching its conclusion, the Commission considered possible subjects for future work in the area of the new international economic order. A note by the secretariat suggested four possible topics: contracts for industrial co-operation, joint ventures, countertrade, and procurement.⁽²⁾ There was wide support in the Commission for work in the area of procurement, considerable support for countertrade and joint ventures, and little support for contracts for industrial co-operation. The Commission decided to give priority to work on procurement, and requested the secretariat to prepare preliminary studies on countertrade and joint ventures in order to decide on priority between them.

General Assembly consideration. A September report of the Secretary-General⁽³⁾ contained the views of six Member States on the 1984 study by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) on the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order.⁽⁴⁾

In a 24 November letter to the Secretary-General,⁽⁵⁾ the USSR forwarded a memorandum on the development of international law, in which it stressed that international law in the interdependence of today's world should be aimed at formulating the legal principles ensuring the economic security of States, restructuring international economic relations on a just and democratic basis, and establishing a new international economic order.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 41/73 by recorded vote.

Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the General Assembly is called upon to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and

Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/150 of 17 December 1979 and 35/166 of 15 December 1980, entitled "Consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order", and its resolutions 36/107 of 10 December 1981, 37/103 of 16 December 1982, 38/128 of 19 December 1983, 39/75 of 13 December 1984 and 40/67 of 11 December 1985, entitled "Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order",

Bearing in mind the urgent need to adopt measures to reactivate the process of international economic co-operation and the negotiations undertaken for that purpose, particularly in view of the economic difficulties encountered by the developing countries,

Considering the close link between the establishment of a just and equitable international economic order and the existence of an appropriate legal framework,

Recognizing the need for the codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order,

Reiterating the importance of the analytical study submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

1. Urges Member States that have not done so to submit their views and comments with respect to the analytical study;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To seek proposals of Member States concerning the most appropriate procedures to be adopted with regard to the consideration of the analytical study, as well as the codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order;

(b) To include the proposals received in accordance with subparagraph (a) above in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Recommends that the consideration of the most appropriate procedure for completing the elaboration of the process of codification and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order, and of the forum that would be entrusted with the task, be undertaken by the General Assembly at its forty-second session, with a view to making a final decision after taking into account the proposals and suggestions made by Member States on the matter;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order".

General Assembly resolution 41/73

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 131-0-23 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/41/888) by roll-call vote (93-0-21), 26 November (meeting 54); 14-nation draft (A/C.6/41/L.22), orally revised; agenda item 123. Sponsors: Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Tunisia, Venezuela, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 6th Committee 47-49, 54; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

The text as adopted incorporated an oral proposal by Ethiopia to add the words "relating to the new international economic order" in paragraph 3.

In explanation of vote, Canada, Japan, the United Kingdom, on behalf of the 12 States members of the European Economic Community (EEC), and the United States expressed reservations on the concept of codification. Canada and Japan considered a codification exercise still premature. The United Kingdom for the EEC members stated that codification was impossible when there was difficulty in establishing a direct link between various internationally agreed texts and the definition of a new international economic order. The United States did not believe that rules of common law existed in the area of the so-called new international economic order, and it saw no basis for a codification of principles and norms. Further, the United States had reservations as regards some paragraphs according to which the economic difficulties of some countries deserved more attention than others. Japan and the United States considered paragraphs 2 and 3 to be inappropriate; the EEC members objected to paragraph 2.

Argentina and Chile supported the draft on the understanding that UNITAR's classification of Antarctica under the heading of common heritage of mankind served solely practical purposes and would in no way affect the legal status of Antarctica (see also p. 371).

Other legal questions

In 1986, the International Law Commission (ILC), at its thirty-eighth session at Geneva from 5 May to 11 July, continued work on the progressive development and codification of international law; the General Assembly recommended in December that the Commission continue work on all the topics in its current programme of work (resolution 41/81).

The twenty-second session of the International Law Seminar was held at Geneva. Other seminars and training courses were offered in 1986 as part of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law.

By resolution 41/5, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the progress made in enhancing co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee.

International Law Commission

ILC work programme

The 1986 ILC session (Geneva, 5 May-11 July)⁽¹⁾ was devoted mainly to considering draft articles of the following aspects of international law: jurisdictional immunities of States and their property (see p. 997); status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier (see p. 996); and the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind (see p. 989). The Commission also continued work on State responsibility (see p. 998); international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law (see p. 997); and non-navigational uses of international watercourses (see p. 992). The relations between States and international organizations (second part of the topic) (see p. 1007), although included in the agenda, was not considered at the 1986 session due to lack of time.

The Commission recognized that in 1987—the first session within the term of office of its new membership elected by the General Assembly in 1986 (see APPENDIX III)—questions related to the organization of its work would be considered, with a view to concentrating on topics on which maximum progress could be achieved during the mandate of its new members. In 1986, the ILC session was reduced from 12 to 10 weeks due to financial constraints of the United Nations; many members expressed concern that the shortening of the session could have a negative impact on the progress of ILC work.

The Secretary-General, in August,⁽²⁾ transmitted to the General Assembly the draft articles which had been provisionally adopted as a whole by ILC in 1986—on jurisdictional immunities of States, and on the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag—as well as the draft articles adopted so far on State responsibility.

Throughout 1986, ILC continued to co-operate with other juridical bodies, such as the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (see p. 1016) and the Inter-American Juridical Committee. Such co-operation included ILC representation at meetings of those bodies or their sending observers to the ILC session.

Communications. On 5 June,⁽³⁾ the Netherlands submitted to the Secretary-General—for transmission to ILC and the General Assembly—its comments on the report of ILC on the work of its 1985 session. On 24 November,⁽⁴⁾ the USSR forwarded a memorandum on the development of international law, in which it stressed the central role played by the United Nations in that regard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 41/81 without vote.

Report of the International Law Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-eighth session,

Emphasizing the need for the progressive development of international law and its codification in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to give increased importance to its role in relations among States,

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contributions to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the contemporary international community, may be suitable for progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-eighth session;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at that session;

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme;

4. Expresses its satisfaction with the conclusions and intentions of the International Law Commission concerning its procedures and methods of work, as reflected in paragraphs 250 to 261 of its report;

5. Requests the International Law Commission:

(a) To consider thoroughly:

(i) The planning of its activities for the term of office of its members, bearing in mind the desirability of achieving as much progress as possible in the preparation of draft articles on specific topics;

(ii) Its methods of work in all their aspects, bearing in mind the possibility of staggering the consideration of some topics;

(b) To indicate in its annual report those subjects and issues on which views expressed by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest for the continuation of its work;

6. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of the duration of its sessions, as presented in paragraph 252 of its report, and expresses the view that the requirements of the work of codification and progressive development of international law and the magnitude and complexity of the subjects on the agenda of the Commission make it desirable that the usual duration of its sessions be maintained;

7. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

8. Urges Governments and, as appropriate, international organizations to respond in writing as fully and expeditiously as possible to the requests of the International Law Commission for comments, observations and replies to questionnaires and for materials on topics in its programme of work;

9. Further urges Governments to give full attention to the request of the International Law Commission, transmitted through the Secretary-General, for comments and observations on the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property and on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, adopted on first reading by the Commission;

10. Reaffirms its wish that the International Law Commission continue to enhance its co-operation with intergovernmental legal bodies whose work is of interest for the progressive development of international law and its codification;

11. Expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, and appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the forty-first session of the General Assembly and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate.

UN programme for the teaching and study of international law

International Law Seminar

In accordance with a 1985 General Assembly wish,⁽⁵⁾ the twenty-second session of the International Law Seminar—for advanced students and junior professors or government officials dealing with international law—was held at Geneva from 20 May to 6 June 1986, with 24 participants, all of different nationalities and mostly from developing countries; three observers also attended.⁽¹⁾ Participants followed the work of the 1986 ILC session and heard lectures given by its members and by others. As in the past, none of the costs of the Seminar fell on the United Nations. Austria, Denmark, Finland and the Federal Republic of Germany made fellowships available to 10 participants from developing countries. Since the first Seminar in 1964, fellowships had been awarded to 240 of the 495 participants, representing 115 nationalities.

The Commission⁽¹⁾ drew attention to the fact that, unless adequate contributions were forthcoming, the shortage of funds might make the holding of the 1987 Seminar difficult.

Other activities

A number of additional training courses were offered in 1986 as part of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law.⁽⁶⁾ Under the annual fellowship programme jointly conducted by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), 20 middle-grade government legal officers and young teachers of international law attended courses at The Hague Academy of International Law (Netherlands) and participated in seminars organized by UNITAR. Several fellows also received practical training at legal offices of the United Nations and related organizations. The Secretary-General reported that, in 1986, contributions to the fellowship programme were made by Argentina, Austria, the Bahamas, Egypt, Greece, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Thailand, and Trinidad and Tobago.

UNITAR, in accordance with a 1985 General Assembly wish⁽⁷⁾ organized a two-week regional training and refresher course in international law for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 24 November-4 December), which was attended by 23 participants.

In 1986, the first award of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship—established in 1981⁽⁸⁾ for study and research in the law of the sea—was made to a lawyer in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Nepal (see p. 106).

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

In response to the Assembly's 1985 request⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1986 a report⁽¹⁰⁾ on co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee—an organization to which the Assembly had accorded permanent observer status in 1980⁽¹¹⁾

The report reviewed the activities of the Committee in the following areas: strengthening the role of the United Nations through rationalization of functional modalities; promoting wider use of the International Court of Justice; furthering the work of the General Assembly's Sixth Committee; promoting the ratification and implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; measures related to international economic co-operation for development; the question of refugees; and the question of zones of peace and international co-operation.

In June 1986, the Committee transmitted to the Secretary-General a set of recommendations on improving the functioning of the General Assembly.⁽¹²⁾ In September, Canada⁽¹³⁾ and the Netherlands⁽¹⁴⁾ expressed support for the recommendations and proposed their adoption by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October 1986, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/5 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 36/38 of 18 November 1981, 37/8 of 29 October 1982, 38/37 of 5 December 1983, 39/47 of 10 December 1984 and 40/60 of 9 December 1985,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee,

Having heard the statement of the Secretary-General of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee of 17 October 1986 on the steps taken by the Committee to ensure continuing, close and effective co-operation between the two organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Extends its congratulations to the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee on its thirtieth anniversary for its highly commendable work in promoting interregional and international co-operation supportive of the efforts of the United Nations in this regard;

3. Notes with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee towards strengthening the role of the United Nations and its various organs, including the International Court of Justice, through programmes and initiatives undertaken by the Committee;

4. Notes with satisfaction the commendable progress achieved during the past five years towards enhancing co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee in wider areas;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee".

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations financing

During 1986, the United Nations struggled to overcome a severe financial crisis, characterized by the Secretary-General as the most serious in its history.

The crisis challenged the Organization's solvency and viability; it had resulted primarily from the failure of Member States to meet their obligations under the United Nations Charter, the Secretary-General said in his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3). The underlying causes were political; differences of views about work programmes had prejudiced the budgetary process and also the readiness of some Member States to rely on the United Nations for positive regional and global change.

In May, the General Assembly, at its resumed fortieth session, adopted decision 40/472 A, by which it declared that the Secretary-General should deal with the crisis according to proposals he had made in an April report. In December, the Assembly renewed its appeal to Member States to pay their full assessed contributions early each year and requested the Secretary-General to continue to study options to alleviate the Organization's financial difficulties (resolution 41/204 A).

The Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) submitted its recommendations in August; in December, the Assembly agreed to wide-ranging measures to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning, including new guidelines for decision-making on programme budgeting (41/213).

The Assembly, by resolution 41/211 A, increased appropriations for the 1986-1987 biennium by $48,459,700 to $1,711,801,200.

Estimates of income were revised downwards by $12,720,500, to $304,745,100 (41/211 B). The amounts to be obtained from each major income source to finance appropriations for 1987 were specified (41/211 C). Member States were to be assessed $724,536,742, net of staff assessment.

With regard to apportioning United Nations expenses, the Assembly requested the Committee on Contributions to continue working on the methodology for drawing up an equitable scale of assessments (resolution 41/178).

Concerning a 1985 loan to UNIDO, the Assembly decided that the amount should be adjusted to reflect the new specialized agency's actual requirements (41/209, section VI).

Financial situation

Financial emergency

Communications. A number of communications on the financial crisis were addressed in 1986 to the Secretary-General.

On 17 April(1) the Nordic countries—Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden—transmitted a statement issued by their Foreign Ministers (Stockholm, Sweden, 9 April), declaring that lack of discipline in making payments by many Member States and the withholding of assessed contributions had created difficulties for the Organization. In addition, substantial cuts in the United States contributions were expected to affect the entire United Nations system; unilateral action in contravention of the Charter undermined the authority and work of the Organization. The Ministers hoped that at the resumed fortieth session of the General Assembly solutions would be found to the crisis.

On 19 September(2) China said that it had decided to pay its withholdings from previous years to help alleviate the financial crisis and that a cheque for $4,392,856 was being sent to the Organization. However, that action in no way should be taken to mean any change in its positions on the issues related to the withholdings.

The heads of State or Government of the member countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation (SAARC) issued a declaration after the Second SAARC Summit (Bangalore, India, 16 and 17 November), in which they expressed concern over the crisis, reiterated their commitment to the United Nations and resolved to act to prevent erosion of its role, functions and principles. The declaration was transmitted by India on 28 November⁽³⁾

Report of the Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General submitted several reports in 1986 to the General Assembly on the financial problems of the United Nations.

In April⁽⁴⁾ he reported to the Assembly's resumed fortieth session on the current situation, savings measures undertaken and proposed, and further funding requirements in 1986. He asserted that the shortfall in funds could not be absorbed without seriously prejudicing the functioning of the Organization. The crisis had its roots in disagreements with political dimensions on programmes, the utilization of resources, the budgetary process and the apportionment of the costs of the Organization. It was essential for Member States to accommodate their differences within a system for agreement on budgetary questions which would comply with the Charter.

The financial difficulties related to both peace-keeping operations and the regular budget, he said. As at 31 December 1985, the estimated deficit totalled $390.7 million: for peace-keeping, $274.4 million, and under the regular budget, $116.3 million.

The crisis had built up as 18 Member States withheld their assessed contributions from the regular budget. By the end of 1985, all reserves had been committed to meet the deficits resulting from those withholdings. As at 1 January 1986, assessed contributions outstanding from previous years (not including contributions for peace-keeping operations) stood at $242.4 million. The problem was intensified by indications that there would be a shortfall of $90.5 million to $102.5 million in the payment by the major contributor of its assessed contributions for 1985 and 1986.

With regard to peace-keeping operations, the Secretary-General observed that the liabilities represented mostly debts to Member States that had provided troops. Current peace-keeping activities remained in operation only because of the forbearance of Members that were being reimbursed far below the level due to them. In the case of the regular budget, the Secretary-General said he had so far been able to implement programmes through a variety of management techniques, including use of the Working Capital Fund, the Special Account, monies available from suspension of certain financial regulations and, when required, temporary borrowing from other internal accounts. However, reserves had been exhausted and it was no longer possible to proceed in that manner.

Since the beginning of 1986, within his competence as Chief Administrative Officer, the Secretary-General had undertaken special measures to reduce expenditures. Among them were: a 20 per cent reduction in costs related to travel, the hiring of consultants, temporary assistance and overtime; deferral of a number of alteration and maintenance projects; strict application of General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions on the limitation of documentation; a freeze in recruitment; non-extension of staff beyond the age of 60, except in certain instances; suspension of the second half of the representation allowance for staff at the D-2 level and above; suspension of the promotion process for six months; and deferment of cost-of-living adjustments in the salaries of staff in the General Service and related categories. During a review initiated in February of the 1986 portion of the biennium budget, further actions were identified: deferment of major capital expenditures, in particular the construction of new conference centres; modifications in the calendar of meetings and conferences; reduction in the acquisition of furniture and equipment; and curtailment of the 1986 publications programme and deferment of certain programme activities. All those measures were expected to yield savings of approximately $60 million.

At the same time, the Secretary-General said, it was evident from the circumstances that additional resources had to be forthcoming in 1986. He estimated that $16 million would be needed to cover the difference between an anticipated $76 million funding shortfall and the anticipated $60 million savings. He also estimated additional costs of $30 million due to the depreciation of the United States dollar. He recommended that the General Assembly call on Member States to make advance payments towards their assessed contributions for 1987, and that it endorse the appeals he had already made to States promptly to pay arrears and current assessments and to augment the Special Account through voluntary contributions.

ACABQ consideration. The Secretary-General's report was considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)⁽⁵⁾ which stated that the current crisis involved a basic underlying political difficulty and, until steps were taken to resolve that difficulty, financial crises would recur time and time again. Given the severity of the situation, ACABQ concluded that the measures proposed by the Secretary-General appeared less than comprehensive; however, they were intended merely to provide more time to consider the underlying problems. ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly urge prompt payment of assessed contributions and appeal for voluntary contributions to the Special Account; Member States also should be invited to consider advance payment of part of their 1987 assessment.

Fifth Committee conclusions. Following consideration of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee came to the following conclusions.⁽⁶⁾ It noted that the financial estimates on the measures proposed by the Secretary-General were on the whole approximately correct and that from the beginning of the budget year to the current time, the financial situation of the Organization had continued to evolve. The Committee considered that if all the favourable hypotheses envisaged by the Secretary-General failed to materialize, the cash situation would remain a cause for concern, and that the technical and methodological criteria that governed the Secretary-General's proposals could have been further refined, diversified and clarified.

The Committee considered that it would not be necessary to revise the appropriations already adopted in the 1986-1987 programme budget if the Assembly were to adopt the proposed measures—which it regarded as temporary and of an emergency nature. It also emphasized that those measures would have a detrimental effect on the programmes for 1986-1987 if the financial situation did not improve in 1986.

The Committee considered that the Secretary-General should report on those measures to the 1986 regular Assembly session. Further, it considered that the cancellation of certain staff-related measures—suspension of the payment of the second half of the representation allowance for staff at the D-2 level and above, suspension of the promotion process for six months, and deferment of the implementation of the cost-of-living adjustments in the salaries of staff in the General Service and related categories at the eight main duty stations—should not be applied retroactively.

With regard to maintenance and construction work, the Committee drew the Assembly's attention to the fact that their deferral might entail additional costs and a modification of the calendar. Concerning the non-technical substantive questions mentioned in the reports, such as the curtailment of the 1986 regular Assembly session and the special session on Namibia, the Committee deemed it opportune to leave that decision to the Assembly, in view of the links between their technical and political aspects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (May and September)

By decision 40/471 of 2 May, the General Assembly took note of the Fifth Committee's report.

Also in May, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 40/472 A.

Current financial crisis of the United Nations

At its 132nd plenary meeting, on 9 May 1986, the General Assembly, on the basis of the statement made by its President, decided that the Secretary-General should proceed according to the proposals made in his report, taking into account the report of the Fifth Committee and with due regard to the following:

(a) The proposal of the Secretary-General that the forty-first session of the General Assembly be curtailed by three weeks would be considered by the Assembly itself, at that session, in the light of the financial situation then prevailing; as regards the curtailment of the sessions of the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, those organs would take the decisions that were most appropriate in organizing their work this year;

(b) With regard to the special session on Namibia, the General Assembly, after opening its forty-first session on Tuesday, 16 September 1986, would adjourn until the following Monday, and the special session would be held in that period, including Saturday;

(c) The Secretary-General would review the other items in his report in the light of the evolving financial situation and would report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session; it was understood that no project or programme for which there was a legislative mandate would be eliminated if adequate financial resources were available.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 5th Committee 71-73; plenary 131, 132, 134.

On 15 September, the Assembly decided to include the financial crisis in the draft agenda of its forty-first session (decision 40/472 B).

Reports of the Secretary-General (October/November). In October 1986,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General presented an analysis of the financial situation, covering deficit and cash flow, suspension of certain financial regulations, payment of assessed contributions, withholdings by Member States from the regular budget and peace-keeping operations, issuance of special postage stamps to generate revenue and voluntary contributions by Member States. He estimated the deficit, projected to 31 December 1986, at $392.8 million and said that in response to his appeal for voluntary contributions to the Special Account, used to supplement the Working Capital Fund to meet the day-to-day cash needs of the Organization, two Member States contributed and one pledged a total of $10.2 million.

In two November reports, the Secretary-General discussed the financial situation and 1986 economy measures,⁽⁸⁾ and funding prospects and 1987 economy measures.⁽⁹⁾ He said the report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (see p. 1021) provided a basis for Assembly decisions that could encourage broad agreement on the programme budget and confidence in the Organization's efficiency.

While the percentage of Member States that had paid in full their assessed contributions in 1986 was higher than usual, the amount of unpaid assessments was larger than ever, mainly because the largest contributor had paid only 50 per cent of its 1986 assessment. In the face of the projected funding shortfall, the Secretary-General believed that there was no alternative to continuing the economy measures, which in 1986 had resulted in savings of almost $67 million, but which in 1987 were unlikely to cover the entire projected shortfall of $85 million.

Even with the extensive economy measures taken, the timely payment by most Member States in 1986 of assessed contributions, and the receipt of more than $35 million in arrears, previous withholdings and voluntary contributions, the United Nations had operated during the past months on the brink of bankruptcy, the Secretary-General said, and it had been barely possible to meet obligations, including salaries, on time, a situation that defeated rational forward planning and carried with it the possibility of sudden interruption of programmes and Secretariat services. The Secretary-General considered it a matter of high priority to replenish the reserves on which the Organization could draw in the event that contributions were delayed or withheld and which, because of the large deficit, were currently overcommitted. He proposed that any funds received in 1987 through the payment of arrears in excess of the expected $735 million appropriated budget accrue to reserves; he also again urged Member States to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account in order to ensure an adequate capacity to deal with temporary cash-flow shortages.

Continuation of the financial crisis was damaging to the United Nations capacity and potential, the Secretary-General continued, and placed the Organization and its programmes in jeopardy. He was convinced that administrative and budgetary reforms and a re-ordering of programme priorities were possible that would enhance the Organization's effectiveness with less cost to Member States. He stressed that this, however, in no way altered States' primary obligation to pay all their assessed contributions, and urged that all arrears be promptly paid, adding that the current crisis was destructive in character and its continuation neither in the interest of the international community nor in that of any Member State.

As one measure to deal with the financial problems, the General Assembly had decided in 1985(10) to suspend certain financial regulations in respect of surpluses arising at the end of the 1984-1985 biennium.⁽⁷⁾ Those regulations returned to Member States, as a credit against their assessed contributions in the next biennium, their share of the balance of the appropriations not required to discharge obligations. The effect of the suspension of those regulations was to increase the monies available to the Organization.

By suspending the regulations, an additional $4.2 million would be realized in 1987, the Secretary-General said; the funds would be utilized to meet day-to-day cash needs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/204 A.

Financial emergency

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 3049 A (XXVII) of 19 December 1972, 3538(XXX) of 17 December 1975, 32/104 of 14 December 1977, 35/113 of 10 December 1980, 36/116 B of 10 December 1981, 37/13 of 16 November 1982, 38/228 B of 20 December 1983, 39/239 B of 18 December 1984 and 40/241 A and B of 18 December 1985,

Mindful of the report of the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations and of the views expressed by Member States thereon in the Fifth Committee at the thirty-second session of the General Assembly,

Reiterating earlier appeals to Member States, without prejudice to their position of principle, to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account referred to in annex VI to the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Noting with concern that the short-term deficit of the Organization, although marginally reduced during the year, is expected to exceed $390 million as at 31 December 1986,

Concerned at the increasingly precarious financial situation of peace-keeping operations and its adverse impact on troop contributors, in particular on developing-country troop contributors,

Noting also with concern that delays and partial payment of assessed contributions continue to create serious cash-flow problems for the Organization,

Considering the possibility that for many Member States administrative considerations, including a calendar difference between the national fiscal year and that of the Organization, may be contributory factors in the delay in the payment of assessed contributions,

Taking note of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee,

1. Reaffirms its commitment to seek a comprehensive and generally acceptable solution to the financial problems of the United Nations, based on the principle of collective financial responsibility of Member States and in strict compliance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Urges all Member States to meet their financial obligations under the Charter;

3. Renews its appeal to all Member States to make their best efforts to overcome constraints to the prompt payment early each year of full assessed contributions and of advances to the Working Capital Fund;

4. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that pay their assessed contributions in full within thirty days of the receipt of the Secretary-General's communication, in accordance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in addition to his official communications to the permanent representatives of Member States, to approach, as and when appropriate, the Governments of Member States for the purpose of encouraging expeditious payment in full of assessed contributions, in compliance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

6. Invites Member States also to provide, in response to the Secretary-General's official communication and consistent with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, information regarding their expected pattern of payments, in order to facilitate the financial planning by the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations to keep the financial situation of the Organization under review and to report, as and when appropriate, to the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session detailed information relating to the extent, rate of increase and composition of the deficit of the Organization, the pattern of payments of Member States, the cash-flow situation and voluntary contributions received from Member States and other sources pursuant to Assembly resolutions 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965 and 3049 A (XXVII) of 19 December 1972;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to study various options to alleviate the financial difficulties of the Organization, taking into account the views expressed by Member States, to include in the study a review of the practices of other organizations of the United Nations system for achieving prompt and full payment of assessed contributions and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Financial emergency of the United Nations".

General Assembly resolution 41/204 A

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/949) without vote, 4 December (meeting 41); 15-nation draft (A/C.5/41/L.17, part A), orally revised; agenda item 112

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Portugal, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 37, 38, 41; plenary 101.

The United Nations Controller told the Fifth Committee that the Organization was on the brink of bankruptcy. There had been a reduction of about $3.2 million in the short-term deficit between 1985 and 1986, but unpaid contributions to the regular budget were expected to rise from about $242 million at the beginning of 1986 to $284 million at the beginning of 1987. By November 1986, only 68 Member States had paid their contributions in full.

China said that as projected to 31 December the withholdings by certain States from the regular budget totalled $102.3 million and for peace-keeping activities, $254.5 million. Withholdings were made in violation of the Charter. China itself had resorted to that practice in the past but, faced with the Organization's grave financial position, had paid the sums it owed. The solutions to the financial situation were stringent economies, increased earnings and scrupulous observance of the Charter.

Speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, Sweden deplored withholdings by Member States from their contributions, whatever the reasons, adding that the financial emergency was a political problem which could not be resolved in the Fifth Committee. France said it had issued instructions that its full contribution to the regular budget for 1987 be paid at the beginning of the year.

Recommendations of the Group of 18

Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ a Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, composed of 18 government representatives appointed by the President of the Assembly's fortieth session, was constituted in February 1986. The Group convened in four sessions in New York, from 25 February to 4 March, 1 to 11 April, 16 to 27 June and 28 July to 15 August.

The Group concluded that sustained growth in the United Nations agenda had led to a parallel growth in an intergovernmental machinery characterized by a proliferation of organs, committees, commissions and expert groups, which suffered from a lack of cohesion that made the task of co-ordination difficult. In the process of institutional growth, attention had not always been given to avoid overlapping of agendas and duplication of work. The United Nations Secretariat, which serviced that machinery, had undergone a parallel growth—from 1,546 posts funded under the United Nations budget in 1946 to 11,423 in 1986—while management capacity had lagged behind. The result was an overly complex, fragmented and top-heavy structure, with too many departments, offices and divisions, and an excessive number of Under-Secretaries-General and Assistant Secretaries-General. The larger agenda, designed to respond to the requirements of the international community, had led to a gradual growth in the regular budget, financed through assessed contributions from the United Nations membership, which stood at $1,663 million for the current (1986-1987) biennium, and in voluntary contributions, which stood at roughly $1,200 million a year.

In August, on fulfilment of its mandate—to identify measures to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning for the medium and long term—the Group submitted to the Assembly its report⁽¹²⁾ containing 71 recommendations on the intergovernmental machinery and its functioning; the Secretariat structure; personnel management; monitoring, evaluation and inspection; and planning and budget procedure. The majority of the recommendations were expected to be implemented within three years.

Several specific changes, however, were proposed for implementation without delay (recommendations 1 to 8). These called for strengthening the Committee on Conferences (see p. 1083), reducing the number of conferences and meetings, including those of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, observing the principle of holding meetings of an organ at its established headquarters (see p. 1084), curtailing circulation of communications as official documents (see p. 1089), constructing conference facilities only when resources were available (see p. 1092), streamlining the Assembly's procedures and work methods, a study of the intergovernmental machinery in order to simplify it (see p. 891), and limiting reimbursement of travel costs for Assembly sessions to representatives of least developed countries (see p. 1080).

A series of recommendations was aimed at facilitating co-ordination (recommendations 9 to 13), particularly in respect of the co-ordinating machinery itself, inter-agency discussion of policy questions, co-ordinating points for operational activities for development, field representation of the various programmes, and programme budget formats (see p. 880).

Another series was intended to eliminate duplication of work, dispersal of responsibility and blurred lines of authority, accountability and communication in the political sector. These called for: a review of the political departments and offices so as to consolidate and streamline the organizational structure in that sector (recommendation 16); the transfer to the Department of Administration and Management of the functions of the Office for Field Operational and External Support Activities, as well as a substantial reduction in the number of internationally recruited field service officers and their replacement with local recruits (recommendation 17); a rationalization of activities relating to the dissemination of news and political analysis in that Office and in the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs, the Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization, and the Department of Public Information (DPI) (recommendation 18); structuring of the Department of Disarmament Affairs in such manner as to better assist Member States in following disarmament negotiations and related disarmament questions (recommendation 20); a reduction in the number of staff of the Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization as a result of progress achieved in trusteeship and decolonization matters (recommendation 21); and a transfer of special economic assistance programmes currently administered by the Office for Special Political Questions to the United Nations Development Programme (recommendation 22). Consolidation of the offices in charge of activities relating to Namibia (recommendation 19) was also called for (see p. 943).

Several proposals (recommendations 23 to 27, 29 and 70) likewise called for simplifying the economic and social sectors (see p. 892), as well as the Secretariat's organizational structure (recommendations 14, 15 and 41 to 59) by reducing the overall number of regular budget posts by 15 per cent within a three-year period, and the top-echelon officials by 25 per cent within the same period or less, by specific measures concerning such aspects of personnel management as recruitment, appointment, performance evaluation, promotion and post distribution (see p. 1050), and by a serious effort on the Secretary-General's part to discourage the practice of transferring extrabudgetary posts to the regular budget (recommendation 62). Also proposed (recommendations 34 and 36) were the rationalization of the Department of Conference Services, including its publications and printing programmes, and a reduction in the requirements for rented premises concurrent with the reduction in the Secretariat's overall size (see p. 1092).

Recommendations concerning administration and other sectors included streamlining of the Department of Administration and Management (recommendation 30), abolition of the Management Advisory Service owing to its marginal usefulness (recommendation 31), consolidation of the support activities for the permanent liaison offices in New York (recommendation 33), a thorough review of the functions, working methods and policies of DPI with a view to consolidating functions and improving the quality of its activities (recommendation 37), and integration of the functions of each executive office into the department head's office (recommendation 40).

Some proposals (recommendations 32, 39 and 68) were designed to improve the planning and budgeting process (see pp. 1039 and 1042); several (recommendations 63 to 67) pertained to monitoring and evaluation and to the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) (see p. 1046); and two (recommendations 53 and 61) called for a modification of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and a reduction in staff entitlements (see p. 1063).

Other proposals (recommendations 60, 38 and 35) called for simplifying the system of administration of justice (see p. 1075), and for reducing official travel (see p. 1080), the use of consultant services and re-engagement of retired staff (see p. 1080).

Among the recommendations of the Group of 18 on which there was not full agreement were those calling for setting limits on the proportion of fixed-term versus permanent appointments in the Secretariat. Recommendations 55 and 57 were adopted without the concurrence of the experts from China and the USSR. (See p. 1051.)

The Group recommended that the Assembly take the following steps to ensure speedy implementation of its recommendations: request the Secretary-General to implement those recommendations within his purview within the time-limit set and to submit a progress report by 1 May 1987 (recommendation 69); request the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), assisted by JIU and other bodies, to co-ordinate and monitor implementation of the recommendations relating to the intergovernmental machinery, and to submit a progress report in 1987 (recommendation 70); and request the Secretary-General and CPC to report in 1989 on implementation of all the Group's recommendations (recommendation 71).

Commenting on the Group's report,⁽¹³⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) said it was a useful contribution to improving the mechanisms of multilateral co-operation. For their part, members of ACC would continue their efforts to improve the functioning of their organizations and of the United Nations as a whole.

Communications. The Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, in a 24 October letter,⁽¹⁴⁾ pointed out that the Group's recommendation 4 called for the strict enforcement of existing principles, reaffirmed by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽¹⁵⁾ regarding the holding of meetings away from established headquarters. The Committee, which conducted regional seminars and symposia, maintained that serious technical impediments existed in a blanket determination that meetings should always take place at United Nations locations unless subsidized by host Governments; such a decision would adversely affect the Committee's ability to carry out its mandated programme.

The President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, on 30 October,⁽¹⁶⁾ presented a similar view. He also referred to recommendation 19 on activities by Secretariat departments and offices relating to Namibia. The Council hoped that it would be consulted on any contemplated structural changes in its servicing and support units.

Panama, for the Latin American and Caribbean Group, transmitted on 4 December,⁽¹⁷⁾ to the Secretary-General a paper on the planning and budget mechanism of the United Nations, proposing adjustments in budgetary procedures that would enable Member States to take a more active role throughout the budget process.

Cape Verde, on 18 December,⁽¹⁸⁾ conveyed the views of the African Group on the Group's report making proposals on such questions as the involvement of Member States in the budgetary process, intergovernmental machinery, the basis of determining the level of resources and the definition of "add-ons".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After debating the Group of 18's report from 10 to 15 October, the Assembly turned it over to the Fifth Committee to undertake, within the scope of its responsibilities, a factual examination of the report and submit its findings to the plenary.

The Assembly, after receiving the Fifth Committee's report on 6 November, endorsed the President's formation, first, of a small "contact group" to help him identify areas of agreement and divergence on the experts' recommendations. This was followed by a larger "consultative group" of 27 members organized along regional lines, which was formed to seek ways to narrow the outstanding differences. Thereafter, a "negotiating group", working under the chairmanship of the Assembly President, was convened, at which an agreed text of a draft resolution was elaborated. That draft was then considered by a Committee of the Whole before presentation to the plenary.

Before reporting to the plenary, the Fifth Committee considered the practical and legal implications of adopting the Group of 18's recommendations at nine formal and 11 informal meetings between 16 October and 5 November.

The Committee's report⁽¹⁹⁾ contained comments on factors it felt should be taken into account in considering implementation of specific recommendations made by the Group. Some Committee findings were incorporated by the Assembly into resolution 41/213, including its general observation that Member States should be involved in a more structured manner in planning, programming and budgeting. Among other points raised in the Committee—and later embodied in the resolution—were the suggestions that the Economic and Social Council be charged with conducting an in-depth study of the intergovernmental structure in the economic and social fields; that ICSC be consulted regarding implementation of recommendations concerning personnel; and that the percentages cited by the Group for proposed staff cuts serve as targets to be used by the Secretary-General in formulating his plans.

Concerning the manner in which the Secretary-General would approach implementation of the recommendations on staff cuts, the Committee report quoted extensively from the Secretary-General's representative, Patricio Ruedas, Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management and Chairman of the Steering Committee established by the Secretary-General to advise him on action to be taken in connection with the Group's report.

Mr. Ruedas addressed the Committee on 24 and 27 October. The Committee noted that he said the process of reviewing and reducing posts could begin immediately and not await completion of reviews recommended by the Group. However, until the Assembly approved structural changes, the Secretary-General would need to be given the authority to implement reductions in 1987 with flexibility, within the total level of posts for the Secretariat as a whole.

Post reductions would initially be done on a pragmatic basis to match available resources with the least possible disruption to programmes and the people involved. As to savings entailed by the proposed cuts, he said it was estimated that a 15 per cent reduction in the number of posts would result in direct savings of approximately $141 million per biennium and that a 25 per cent reduction in the higher echelon would yield savings of some $3.3 million. The reduction in the number of contributors to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund would necessitate additional contributions of up to $3 million per year.

In addressing the Group's recommendations on personnel issues, the Committee also considered an October note by the Secretary-General,⁽²⁰⁾ who declared that improvement of the administrative and financial functioning of the Organization should be vigorously pursued. That effort must entail substantial reform in both the intergovernmental machinery and the Secretariat, in a manner consistent with the Charter. He stressed, however, that to seek to solve the Organization's financial difficulties at the expense of staff entitlements would be extremely short-sighted and counter-productive and would have adverse implications for the common system.

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/213.

Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/237 of 18 December 1985, by which it decided to establish the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Group and the related report of the Fifth Committee, as well as the comments on the report of the Group made by the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Expressing its appreciation to the Group for its report,

Taking fully into account the views expressed during the consideration of this item at the current session,

Recognizing the need for measures to improve the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations with a view to strengthening its effectiveness in dealing with political, economic and social issues,

Recognizing the need to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process in the Organization,

Reaffirming the requirement of all Member States to fulfil their financial obligations as set out in the Charter of the United Nations promptly and in full,

Recognizing the detrimental effect of the withholding of assessed contributions on the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,

Recognizing further that late payments of assessed contributions adversely affect the short-term financial situation of the Organization,

I

Recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations

1. Decides that the recommendations as agreed upon and as contained in the report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations should be implemented by the Secretary-General and the relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee and subject to the following:

(a) The implementation of recommendation 5 should not prejudice the implementation of projects and programmes already approved by the General Assembly;

(b) The percentages referred to in recommendation 15, which were arrived at in a pragmatic manner, should be regarded as targets in the formulation of the Secretary-General's plans to be submitted to the General Assembly for implementation of the recommendation; further, the Secretary-General is requested to implement this recommendation with flexibility in order to avoid, inter alia, negative impact on programmes and on the structure and composition of the Secretariat, bearing in mind the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity of the staff, with due regard to equitable geographical distribution;

(c) The Secretary-General should transmit to the International Civil Service Commission those recommendations having direct impact on the United Nations common system (recommendations 53 and 61), with the request that it report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, so as to enable the Assembly to make a final decision; the expertise of the Commission should be availed of in dealing with the other recommendations over which the Commission has a mandate to advise and make recommendations;

(d) The Secretary-General should take into consideration the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 35/210 of 17 December 1980, in implementing recommendations 55 and 57, to the extent they are agreed upon;

(e) The Economic and Social Council, assisted as and when required by relevant organs and bodies, in particular the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, should carry out the study called for in recommendation 8;

(f) The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, assisted as required by the Joint Inspection Unit and other bodies, shall evaluate the implementation of the recommendations relating to the intergovernmental machinery and its functioning, as indicated in recommendation 70;

(g) In the implementation of recommendation 24, the provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/201 of 8 December 1986 should be duly taken into account;

2. Requests the Secretary-General and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to report to the General Assembly as indicated in recommendations 69, 70 and 71 of the Group;

II

Planning, programming and budgeting process

1. Decides that the planning, programming and budgeting process shall be governed, inter alia, by the following principles:

(a) Strict adherence to the principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular Articles 17 and 18 thereof;

(b) Full respect for the prerogatives of the principal organs of the United Nations with respect to the planning, programming and budgeting process;

(c) Full respect for the authority and the prerogatives of the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization;

(d) Recognition of the need for Member States to participate in the budgetary preparation from its early stages and throughout the process;

2. Reaffirms the need to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process through, inter alia, the following:

(a) Full implementation of regulation 4.8 of the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, which governs co-ordination between the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(b) Implementation of the recommendations contained in paragraphs 25 to 54 of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session;

(c) Ensuring follow-up of implementation of the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

(d) Improvement of the representation of Member States in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in conformity with the provisions of paragraph 46 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977;

3. Resolves to achieve improvement in the consultative process for the formulation of the medium-term plan through:

(a) Full implementation of the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation pertaining to the medium-term plan, as contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 37/234 of 21 December 1982 and of the related Rules;

(b) Submission of the introduction to the medium-term plan, which constitutes an integral element in the planning process, to Member States for wide consultations;

(c) Consultations in a systematic way regarding the major programmes in the plan with sectoral, technical, regional and central bodies in the United Nations;

(d) Drawing up by the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, of a calendar for such consultations;

4. Approves the budget process set forth in annex I to the present resolution;

5. Reaffirms that the decision-making process is governed by the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

6. Agrees that, without prejudice to paragraph 5 above, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should continue its existing practice of reaching decisions by consensus; explanatory views, if any, shall be presented to the General Assembly;

7. Considers it desirable that the Fifth Committee, before submitting its recommendations on the outline of the programme budget to the General Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and the rules of procedure of the Assembly, should continue to make all possible efforts with a view to establishing the broadest possible agreement;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, such supplementary rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary for the improvement in the planning, programming and budgeting process;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a proposal on the date for submission of the outline of the programme budget and also on the date for final approval of the outline by the Assembly;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX I Budget process

A. Off-budget years

1. The Secretary-General shall submit an outline of the programme budget for the following biennium, which shall contain an indication of the following:

(a) Preliminary estimate of resources to accommodate the proposed programme of activities during the biennium;

(b) Priorities, reflecting general trends of a broad sectoral nature;

(c) Real growth, positive or negative, compared with the previous budget;

(d) Size of the contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources.

2. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, acting as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly, shall consider the outline of the programme budget and submit, through the Fifth Committee, to the Assembly its conclusions and recommendations.

3. On the basis of a decision by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General shall prepare his proposed programme budget for the following biennium.

4. Throughout this process, the mandate and functions of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions shall be fully respected. The Advisory Committee shall consider the outline of the programme budget in accordance with its terms of reference.

B. Budget years

5. The Secretary-General shall submit his proposed programme budget to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in accordance with the existing procedures.

6. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions shall examine the proposed programme budget in accordance with their respective mandates and shall submit their conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly, through the Fifth Committee, for the final approval of the programme budget.

C. Contingency fund and additional expenditures

7. The programme budget shall include expenditures related to political activities of a "perennial" character whose mandates are renewed annually, together with their related conference costs-

8. The programme budget shall include a contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall budget level, to accommodate additional expenditures relating to the biennium derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget or, subject to the provisions of paragraph 11 below, from revised estimates.

9. If additional expenditures, as defined in paragraph 8 above, are proposed that exceed resources available within the contingency fund, such additional expenditures can only be included in the budget through redeployment of resources from low-priority areas or modifications of existing activities. Otherwise, such additional activities will have to be deferred until a later biennium.

10. A comprehensive solution to the problem of all additional expenditures, including those deriving from inflation and currency fluctuation, is also necessary. It is desirable to accommodate these expenditures, within the overall level of the budget, either as a reserve or as a separate part of the contingency fund set up in paragraph 8 above. The Secretary-General should examine all aspects related to the question and report, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

11. Pending a decision by the General Assembly on the question dealt with in paragraph 10 above, the revised estimates arising from the impact of extraordinary expenses, including those relating to the maintenance of peace and security, as well as fluctuations in rates of exchange and inflation, shall not be covered by the contingency fund and shall continue to be treated in accordance with established procedures and under the relevant provisions of the Financial Regulations and Rules. The Secretary-General should nevertheless make efforts to absorb these expenditures, to the extent possible, through savings from the programme budget, without causing in any way a negative effect on programme delivery and without prejudice to the utilization of the contingency fund-

ANNEX II

Statement made by the President of the General Assembly at the 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1986*

I have obtained a legal opinion from the Legal Counsel of the United Nations on three paragraphs of the draft resolution. The legal opinion reads as follows:

"You have requested our opinion on the legal consequences of three draft paragraphs which are under consideration for inclusion in a resolution to be adopted by the General Assembly on the United Nations budgetary process. These three paragraphs read as follows:

" 5. Reaffirms that the decision-making process is governed by the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

" 6. Agrees that, without prejudice to paragraph 5 above, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should continue its existing practice of reaching decisions by consensus; explanatory views, if any, shall be presented to the General Assembly;

" 7. Considers it desirable that the Fifth Committee, before submitting its recommendations on the outline of the programme budget to the General Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and the rules of procedure, should continue to make all possible efforts with a view to establishing the broadest possible agreement;"

"It is our opinion that these draft paragraphs read separately or together do not in any way prejudice the provisions of Article 18 of the Charter of the United Nations or of the relevant rules of procedure of the General Assembly giving effect to that Article."

That coincides with the views expressed by all delegations.

I concur with the foregoing, and I take it that the General Assembly also agrees with it.

*Annexed to the resolution following a decision by the General Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 41/213

19 December 1986 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

19-nation draft (A/41/L49/Rev.1); agenda item 38.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cameroon, Cape Verde, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, India, Iraq, Japan, Nigeria, Pakistan, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

Japan, recalling that it had initiated the proposal in 1985 to set up the Group of 18, said the United Nations had taken an epoch-making step towards administrative and financial reform. A similar view was expressed by Indonesia, Norway and Sweden. Exercise of the authority and responsibilities of the Secretary-General, as the Organization's chief administrative officer, would be the decisive factor in the years ahead, Sweden said. Japan added that the text had to be implemented fully both to increase the Organization's efficiency and to secure its survival.

The United States said the reform measures provided hope for the future of the United Nations; their adoption was the beginning, not the end, of a process of reforming and improving the Organization in the interests of all its Member States. Central to that process was the use of consensus in establishing the framework for the United Nations budget. It was unhealthy when Member States which contributed 75 per cent of United Nations funds felt compelled to vote against or abstain on its budget in order to express their disagreement with the level or type of expenditures.

India considered the text historic because the Organization had shown once again that, given political good will, it was possible to overcome seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

A number of countries remained concerned about the budgetary decision-making process outlined in the text. Several speakers expressed the view that requiring CPC to take decisions by consensus was undemocratic in principle, while others specifically endorsed the Legal Counsel's opinion on the matter.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking also for Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said their support for the proposed reforms expressed their commitment to the United Nations as a centre for dialogue, understanding and co-operation.

The United Kingdom, on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community, said the resolution dealt with issues of major importance, represented a careful, balanced approach to intractable problems and was an essential stage in improving the functioning of the United Nations. Along with a number of other speakers, it noted, however, that consensus had been achieved only through extensive negotiation and compromise.

Speaking for the Latin American and Caribbean Group of States, Panama stated that it was unacceptable, under the pretext of reviewing the efficiency of the Organization, to attempt to detract from the democratic nature of the decision-making process provided for in the Charter. The informal practice of arriving at decisions by consensus was useful but not obligatory and should not interfere with any State's right to request a vote to achieve majority decisions when necessary.

Endorsing Panama's statement, Bolivia was none the less concerned by the trend in international forums to seek consensus, or unanimity; it believed that democracy was based on the will of the majority, as expressed by vote, while adoption by consensus, on the other hand, imposed criteria that masked delegations' positions. It found that the report of the Group of 18 had been dealt with and discussed in a way that was partial and confusing and had not made it possible for States to formulate their objections. If the text had been put to a vote, Bolivia would have abstained.

Cape Verde said the African Group could not endorse any position that would subvert the democratic process and were glad, therefore, to see their concerns reflected in the text.

Zimbabwe wished to record its view that operative paragraphs 6 and 7 of the resolution on the budgeting process had a potential for subverting the Organization's democratic principles.

Ghana commented that Member States, threatened with the spectre of a collapse of the United Nations, had worked hard to achieve what could be a milestone in United Nations history. The text introduced a system that would enable them to be involved in planning, programming and budget procedures from the beginning.

Despite the text's ambiguity, Saudi Arabia stated, it was reassured by the Legal Counsel's opinion that the normal decision-making process in the Assembly would not be hampered.

A number of countries expressed the view that efforts at reforming the Organization would be fruitless unless States fulfilled their financial obligations under the Charter. Nothing, Iraq told the Assembly, would enhance the chances of translating the resolution into reality as much as immediate action to end the delinquency by those Members that were illegally in arrears in their contributions. Oman also called for greater adherence to the Charter provisions and for support of the Secretary-General's efforts.

Bolivia did not agree with a number of the Group's recommendations and found seven of them unacceptable. Indonesia felt the recommendations on the intergovernmental machinery and on the structure of the Secretariat, needed further study. Although it had difficulty with some recommendations, Pakistan found the report a useful tool for remodelling the United Nations work and machinery and for streamlining its administrative and budgetary functioning.

Also on 19 December, the Assembly, by decision 41/468, took note of the Fifth Committee's report⁽¹⁹⁾

UN budget

Budget for 1986-1987

Appropriations

In December 1986, the General Assembly approved a $48,459,700 increase in the United Nations programme budget for 1986-1987, raising appropriations for the biennium to $1,711,801,200 and authorizing a number of expenditures over the initial level it had approved in 1985.⁽¹⁾ In approving the increase, the Assembly followed recommendations made by its Fifth Committee on the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in his first performance report on the 1986-1987 budget (see below), as well as on the programme budget implications adopted by the Assembly under items considered by other Main Committees or in respect of items dealt with in plenary meetings.

The largest increases were for the following activities: Conference and library services, $21.9 million; administration and management, $16.8 million; the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), $9.1 million; political affairs, trusteeship and decolonization, $5.1 million, of which $4.2 million was for activities relating to the Namibia question; the Economic Commission for Europe, $4.2 million; the International Trade Centre, $2.7 million; human rights, $2.4 million; the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, $2.2 million; and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, $1.6 million.

The increase resulted primarily from variations in the rates of exchange and in the impact of inflation, changes in standard costs and decisions of policy-making organs whose implementation could not be deferred to the 1988-1989 biennium, according to the first budget performance report of the Secretary-General in November 1986.⁽²⁾

Notable decreases in appropriations were approved for three regional commissions: $6 million for the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), $2.1 million for the Economic Commission for Africa and almost $1 million for the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia.

No adjustments had been made in respect of the economy measures relating to the current financial crisis, the Secretary-General said accordingly, all adjustments of budget parameters for inflation, currency and common staff cost rates were made on the same basis as would have prevailed in the absence of economy measures.

Commenting on the Secretary-General's report, the Chairman of ACABQ said in an oral report⁽³⁾ that the largest change in 1986-1987 budget requirements—$83.2 million—resulted from exchange rate variations reflecting the weakening of the United States dollar from December 1985 to November 1986. Additional requirements arising out of decisions of policy-making organs and other changes amounted to about $1 million; they included the requirements of the International Court of Justice and requirements resulting from action by the Secretary-General relating to the maintenance of peace and security, in accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁾ on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1986-1987. The increases were partially offset by a downward adjustment of $21.7 million in standard staff costs. Further downward adjustments related to inflation, which had moderated almost everywhere; a reduction of $26.1 million was therefore proposed in the provision for inflation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/211 A.

Revised budget appropriations for the biennium 1986-1987

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the biennium 1986-1987 the amount of $US 1,663,341,500 appropriated by its resolution 40/253 A of 18 December 1985 shall be increased by $US 48,459,700 as follows:

General Assembly resolution 41/211 A

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 122-13-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) by recorded vote (82-14-9), a December (meeting 44); agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 41 st session: 5th Committee 4, 12, 20, 23-26, 28, 29, 34-36, 38-40, 44; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Israel, Poland, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain.

The United States said the revised budget represented an increase of about 4.5 per cent above the previous year, an unacceptable rate, and, despite relatively modest programme growth, the total resources requested were excessive. Increases resulting from changes in currency rates should be absorbed within existing resources and implementation of the recommendations of the Group of 18 (see p. 1021) and an improved budget decision-making process were essential.

Exchange rates had moved against the United Nations, whose cash position was perilous, the United Kingdom pointed out; it was appropriate that efforts were being made to bring about greater efficiency. While real budget growth might remain much as it had been when the budget was approved, that was due at least in part to the unsatisfactory basis on which real growth was calculated, for Member States' assessments would increase in 1987 over and above the level attributable to currency and inflation movements. Additional activities should be financed by redeploying existing resources, a view shared by the USSR. The USSR also believed that additional costs resulting from inflation and currency instability should be partially offset by voluntary contributions from headquarter countries which were provided with significant income by the presence of United Nations facilities.

Australia said it was unable to support the additional appropriations; not enough priority had been attached to absorbing cost increases such as those resulting from currency fluctuations, particularly in view of the substantial undeclared gains during the previous biennium. The revised programme budget had been conceived and approved without due regard to the financial crisis or Member States' views on the recommendations of the Group of 18. Australia was opposed in principle to add-ons of any kind and objected in particular to the continued practice whereby additional expenditures in connection with ongoing or recurrent activities circumvented the biennial budget process and concealed real growth. It was also concerned at the lack of consultations on important budget questions and the manner in which they were brought to the attention of Member States at the last minute, and the lack of transparency in United Nations budget documentation did nothing to reassure them that the Organization's finances were properly managed.

Israel saw no justification for the resource level allocated for the activities of such bodies as the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories; it would continue to vote against similar appropriations until the Organization distributed its resources in a non-discriminatory manner.

Japan voiced several reservations, saying the revised appropriations added to the burden on Member States and did not reflect expenditures such as those relating to the General Service job classification, thus underestimating the real expenditure level; also, additional activities had been approved without regard to the financial crisis.

The Federal Republic of Germany held that the total budget increase came to approximately $61 million and that Member States would be assessed on a more or less fictitious level of expenditure, since the resources likely to be available would be about $100 million below the level of appropriations. France added that the revised appropriations, though lower than in the previous biennium, were still too high; noting that some $36 million of revised appropriations was attributable to exchange rate movements and inflation, it hoped that a more reliable mechanism could be worked out for estimating the precise dollar amounts required for a biennium. Belgium contended that despite the positive measures taken in budgetary matters, considerable improvements were still needed; no progress had been made on the issue of budgetary decision-making procedures or towards identifying marginal and obsolete activities whose elimination would release resources for new activities. Italy said that the role of the United Nations could only be strengthened by utilizing funds more effectively, by monitoring the distribution of tasks within departments, and by eliminating low-priority initiatives; in the current crisis, financing should be rigidly disciplined and increases in administrative costs avoided. The Netherlands strongly objected to adding on the cost of programmes or activities to the programme budget.

Concern about the disregard of ACABQ recommendations was expressed by several speakers, among them, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United States.

Finland, for the five Nordic countries, said if orderly financing of United Nations activities was to be achieved, agreement was needed on the level and content of the budget, the scale of assessments and the payment of assessed contributions. The Nordic States felt that the moderate increase in revised expenditures reflected a high degree of restraint; their reservations related to the practice by certain Member States of withholding assessed contributions and jeopardizing activities.

Nigeria described the revised appropriations as not very large and said it was unrealistic to expect the cost of currency movements and inflation to be absorbed within the budget; it voted in favour of the draft resolution in Committee but did not vote in the Assembly. Commending the Secretary-General for his efforts to contain budgetary growth, Kenya noted that the programmes revised downwards were those aimed at the developing countries. Honduras was concerned about the decrease in support for activities that benefited developing countries. Endorsing the views of Finland, Kenya and Nigeria, India said the unacceptable approach by some States which urged that expenditures be reduced so as to bring them in line with available resources was tantamount to legalizing the practice of withholding contributions; the negative impact of the financial crisis on programmes was also being ignored. Yugoslavia endorsed the positions of India, Kenya and Nigeria.

Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, Guatemala, Saudi Arabia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia were concerned at the decrease in resources for the regional economic commissions.

Speaking for the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, Panama said it was worried about the considerable reduction of more than $6 million in the budget for ECLAC, which could gravely affect its operational capacity; if the trend to reduce ECLAC's budget continued, it would have an impact on the region's statistical studies, development programme, employment rates and housing situation.

Before approving the additional appropriations, the Fifth Committee, on the recommendation of ACABQ, approved on 3 December by a recorded vote of 88 to 13, with 10 abstentions, the revised estimates proposed by the Secretary-General in his first performance report. The Secretary-General's estimates had amounted to a net additional appropriation of $36.4 million and a reduction of $13.6 million in the estimates of income for the biennium.

Voting against the revised estimates, the USSR said in principle no additional appropriations should be approved during a budget period and additional expenses resulting from inflation and exchange rate fluctuations should be absorbed through economy measures, redeployment of resources and elimination of marginal or obsolete programmes.

Amounts approved by the Fifth Committee during the Assembly's 1986 session were recalculated to take account of operational rates of exchange and projected rates of inflation. Those amounts, set out in a Secretariat note,^(c) were endorsed by ACABQ^(c) and on 3 December by the Fifth Committee, acting without objection.

Income sources

In December 1986, the General Assembly approved revised income estimates for 1986-1987 totalling $304.7 million, which was $12.7 million less than the amount approved in 1985^(c) and covered income other than that derived from assessments of Member States.

The main factors contributing to the decrease were changes in staff assessment rates promulgated by ICSC for 1987 and a decrease in revenue-producing activities, the Secretary-General reported.(2)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/211 B.

Revised income estimates for the biennium 1986-1987

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the biennium 1986-1987 the estimates of income of $US 317,465,600 approved by its resolution 40/253 B of 18 December 1985 shall be decreased by $US 12,720,500 as follows:

Financing 1987 appropriations

By resolution 41/211 C, the General Assembly specified the amounts to be obtained from each major income source to finance appropriations for 1987. Member States were to be assessed $724,536,742, net of staff assessment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly by recorded vote on 11 December adopted resolution 41/211 C.

Financing of appropriations for the year 1987

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the year 1987:

1. Budget appropriations in a total amount of $US 872,130,450, consisting of $US 831,670,750, being half of the appropriations initially approved for the biennium 1986-1987 by General Assembly resolution 40/253 A of 18 December 1985, plus $US 48,459,700, being the increase in appropriations approved during the forty-first session by resolution A above, less $US 8,000,000, being the reduction resulting from the adjustment, approved under section VI of General Assembly resolution 41/209 of 11 December 1986, to the special appropriation made by the Assembly at its fortieth session to finance a loan to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, shall be financed in accordance with regulations 5.1 and 5.2 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations as follows:

(a) $20,628,350, consisting of $18,990,050, being half of the estimated income other than staff assessment income approved for the biennium 1986-1987 by resolution 40/253 B of 18 December 1985 plus $1,638,300, being the increase in estimated income other than staff assessment income approved by resolution B above;

(b) $851,502,100, being the assessment on Member States in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/248 of 18 December 1985 on the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

2. There shall be set off against the assessment on Member States, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund in the total amount of $US 126,965,358, consisting of:

(a) $139,742,750, being half of the estimated staff assessment income approved by resolution 40/253 B;

(b) Less $14,358,800, being the estimated decrease in income from staff assessment approved by resolution B above;

(c) Plus $1,581,408, being the increase in actual income from staff assessment compared to the revised estimates for the biennium 1984-1985, approved by General Assembly resolution 40/239 B of 18 December 1985.

General Assembly resolution 41/211 C

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 123-14-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) by recorded vote (85-13-10), 8 December (meeting 44); agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 4, 12, 20, 23-26, 28, 29, 34-36, 38-40, 44; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain.

Nigeria expressed disapproval of the withholding by Member States of part of their assessed contributions. Such a practice was detrimental to the Organization's financial viability.

Report of ACABQ

In September 1986,(7) the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions reported to the General Assembly on its activities. It had met in New York (15 April-9 May) and at Geneva (13-30 May) and Vienna (2-6 June) to discuss the programme budget and related matters.

In its second to twelfth reports⁽⁸⁾ ACABQ considered and commented on revised estimates under various sections of the 1986-1987 programme budget, including those resulting from decisions of the Economic and Social Council at its first and second regular sessions of 1986 (see p. 891); conference services at Vienna (see p. 1088); administrative and financial implications of the recommendations and decisions in the report of ICSC; and other personnel-related matters (see Chapter III of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote section I of resolution 41/209, taking note of the first report of ACABQ.

Assessment of contributions

Report of the Committee on Contributions. The forty-sixth session of the Committee on Contributions was held in New York from 9 to 27 June 1986.(1)

The Committee discussed four alternative methodologies for assessment: alternative I consisting of assessments by groupings (dividing United Nations membership into three distinct groups and then determining the percentage share of the budget to be borne by each); alternative II relating assessments to factors such as permanent membership in the Security Council (for which contributions should be commensurate with the special privileges), sovereign equality (part of the budget would be borne by all Member States) and capacity to pay (to be applied to the remainder, and still the most substantial, part of the budget); alternative III, which could be grafted to alternative II, suggesting apportionment of an additional percentage of the budget to non-permanent members of the Security Council during their two-year Council term; and alternative IV, under which the budget would be divided into core and non-core parts for which different criteria for assessment would be applied. Reviewing the various proposals, the Committee stated that alternative I fell within the capacity-to-pay approach and entailed essentially technical questions, while the other proposals departed from that principle and raised issues of a political character outside the Committee's area.

The Committee also examined basic problems relating to data comparability—data sources, exchange rates used for converting national incomes into United States dollars and ways to take account of inflation rates.

Scale of assessments

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/178.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the scale of assessments,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions,

Recognizing that the capacity to pay of Member States is the fundamental criterion for determining the scales of assessments,

Recognizing the requirement of Member States, under Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly,

Taking into account the views expressed in the debate in the Fifth Committee,

1. Requests the Committee on Contributions to continue, on the basis of its mandate, its work on the methodology for drawing up an equitable scale of assessments, taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee during the debate on the report of the Committee;

2. Requests the Committee on Contributions to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-second session, a progress report on the work referred to above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Contributions with the facilities it requires to carry out the work described in the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/178

5 December 1986

Meeting 99

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/912) without vote, 19 November (meeting 28); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.5), following informal consultations; agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 5, 9, 10, 22, 23, 25, 28; plenary

Saudi Arabia said that the mandate referred to in paragraph 1 derived fundamentally from a 1985 Assembly resolution.⁽²⁾ It reiterated its proposal discussed in the Committee's report,⁽¹⁾ suggesting a graduated relief scale ranging from 85 per cent (for a very small economy with a small gross national product (GNP) at or below a certain minimum figure) to 10 per cent (for a very large economy with a large GNP at or above a certain maximum figure). Due regard should also be paid to the real capacity to pay and the need for Member States to meet their obligations under the Charter. Since the report of the Group of 18 had not addressed the question of financing the Organization's budget, it was to be hoped that the resolution would fill the gap.

Poland said it attached great importance to the principle of capacity to pay as a criterion in determining scales of assessment; it expected the Committee on Contributions, in accordance with paragraph 1 of the text, to give most of its time to improving its methodology, taking into account such elements as the low-income and debt-servicing allowance formulae.

Since the capacity to pay remained the fundamental criterion for determining the scales of assessment, Brazil said, it was to be expected that the Committee on Contributions would, among other things, try to update the upper limits of the low per capita income allowance formula, to refine the scheme to limit the variations of individual rates of assessment between successive scales of assessment and to perfect the existing relief formulae to take into account the concerns of all Member States, especially developing countries. With regard to paragraph 1, Brazil felt that the Committee should not pursue alternatives I, III and IV or the hypothesis regarding the low per capita income allowance formula.

Cuba said that the Committee should not go beyond its mandate by carrying out a study that was not based on the capacity to pay and that departed from existing methodology, as set forth in a 1985 Assembly resolution.⁽³⁾ It rejected the alternatives presented in the Committee's report and interpreted paragraph 1 of the resolution as meaning that the Committee should work on the existing methodology with a view to achieving more equitable scales of assessment.

According to Cameroon, the reference in the third preambular paragraph to the capacity to pay meant the capacity to pay as it appeared in previous resolutions. In addition, it said, the concept expressed in paragraph 1 implied that the Committee, taking into account its mandate, would reject a number of the ideas developed in its report.

Algeria felt that under the third preambular paragraph the Committee must ensure that the principle of capacity to pay was reflected in any methodology chosen to determine an equitable scale of assessments. Paragraph 1 requested the Committee to continue its work on a methodology, but that did not imply acceptance of any of the methods proposed in its report.

Portugal understood that the Committee not only would try to improve the current methodology but would also continue to study alternatives. Of the four alternatives presented in its report, only alternative I gave due consideration to the criterion of the capacity to pay; it was Portugal's understanding that the Committee would devote its time to the study of that alternative.

Budget contributions in 1986

Of the $978 million in contributions for the United Nations regular budget payable as at 1 January 1986, $720 million had been collected from Member States by 31 December, leaving $258 million outstanding (see table). Of the amount payable, assessments for 1986, due early in the year, totalled $735.6 million; the remaining $242.4 million related to previous years. Budget assessments were in accordance with scales for 1986-1988 approved by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽³⁾

At the resumption of the Assembly's 1985 session, in April 1986, the Secretary-General, in a letter of 28 April,⁽⁴⁾ informed the Assembly President that seven Members—the Central African Republic, the Comoros, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Paraguay and South Africa—were more than two years in arrears in the payment of their budget contributions. In addenda of 1 May and 20 June,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the Central African Republic, the Comoros, El Salvador, the Gambia and Paraguay had made payments, bringing their arrears below the two-year limit to maintain voting privileges, as specified in Article 19 of the United Nations Charter. On 7 October, he said that the required payment had been made by Equatorial Guinea,⁽⁶⁾ while South Africa remained in arrears totalling $24,316,300.⁽⁷⁾

Accounts and auditing

The accounts and financial statements for either the year or biennium ended 31 December 1985, as well as the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors, for the United Nations and nine voluntarily financed programmes, United Nations development and assistance were accepted in 1986 by the General Assembly. The Assembly also concurred with the observations of ACABQ.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Board of Auditors on 23 April 1986 his financial reports on the accounts for the United Nations (including the International Trade Centre, jointly sponsored by UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and the United Nations University) for the 1984-1985 biennium.⁽¹⁾

The programmes for which financial reports and audited financial statements were submitted were: the United Nations Development Programme,⁽²⁾ the United Nations Children's Fund,⁽³⁾ the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,⁽⁴⁾ the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,⁽⁵⁾ the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,⁽⁶⁾ the United Nations Fund for Population Activities,⁽⁷⁾ the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme,⁽⁸⁾ the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation⁽⁹⁾ and the United Nations Industrial Development Fund.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Board of Auditors made recommendations on a number of aspects of the financial management of those programmes. Among the topics considered were the Organization's financial situation; accounts and financial reporting; budgetary control; capital assets; cash management; computer operations; consultants and experts; expendable and non-expendable property; internal audit; payroll, staff costs and personnel issues; procurement; revenue-producing activities; technical co-operation and project activities; travel; trust funds; and fraud or presumptive fraud. A synthesis of the Board's main observations was transmitted to the Assembly in July by the Secretary-General.⁽¹¹⁾

In September,⁽¹²⁾ ACABQ commented on the Board's recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/176.

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial reports and audited financial statements for the period ended 31 December 1985 of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation and the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Concerned about the inadequate action taken by the executive heads of some of the organizations audited to remedy the serious financial management problems repeatedly identified by the Board of Auditors,

Also concerned about the frequently inadequate responses given by some of the executive heads to questions raised by the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into consideration the views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Fifth Committee on this item, in particular those views in support of measures to improve the efficiency, management and financial control of the United Nations organizations and programmes concerned,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors;

2. Endorses the comments and observations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as contained in their respective reports;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes concerned:

(a) To take without delay remedial action within their competence in response to the comments and observations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and to report to the General Assembly and the governing bodies of these organizations and programmes on ways of improving budgetary and accounting control;

(b) To review internal control procedures relating to the benefits and allowances received by United Nations staff members and to take the necessary measures to improve those procedures with a view to preventing waste, fraud and abuse and to report thereon, through the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take steps to improve the accuracy of United Nations accounting information and the timeliness with which it becomes available to the Headquarters of the Organization;

(b) To undertake an investigation of the Headquarters catering and gift-shop operations and to report thereon, through the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

(c) To take the necessary steps to improve the financial management in the area of the current arrangements for the provision of travel services;

(d) To submit to competitive bidding, upon its expiration, the contract for the maintenance and operation of electrical equipment at Headquarters;

5. Recommends that all future reports of the Board of Auditors include separate sections which:

(a) Summarize recommendations for corrective action to be taken by the organizations and programmes concerned, with an indication of relative urgency;

(b) Report on specific measures taken by the Secretary-General and executive heads of these organizations and programmes to implement previous recommendations of the Board and comment on the efficacy of such measures and the extent to which there are recurring problems;

6. Requests the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to comment in its report on the progress achieved by the Secretary-General and the executive heads of organizations and programmes concerned in implementing previous recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee;

7. Requests the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to cover in their reviews the areas relating to the adequacy and efficiency of the financial procedures and controls, the accounting system and related administrative and management areas, in accordance with regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, and to recommend measures, as appropriate, to strengthen financial and management control procedures;

8. Also requests the Board of Auditors:

(a) To monitor progress on those aspects referred to in paragraph 4 (a) above, relating to the accounting systems of the United Nations, and to comment thereon in its next report to the General Assembly;

(b) To submit to the General Assembly a concise document summarizing its principal findings and drawing conclusions for remedial action;

9. Further requests the Board of Auditors to study the possibility of submitting reports on a biennial basis and to report on this matter to the General Assembly;

10. Requests the governing bodies of all organizations subject to audits by the Board of Auditors of the United Nations to review thoroughly at their regular sessions the report of the Board of Auditors, the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the related comments made in the Fifth Committee and the remedial action planned or taken by the respective executive heads in response to the comments and observations of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee, as approved by the General Assembly;

11. Invites Governments that are represented on the governing bodies of organizations and programmes for which audited financial statements have been considered by the General Assembly to ensure that their representatives on those bodies give full consideration to the reports of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the related comments made in the Fifth Committee.

Loan to UNIDO

In 1985,(1) the General Assembly had made a special appropriation of $24 million to finance a loan to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) to meet its initial expenses as a specialized agency for 1986.(2) Established as an Assembly organ in 1966(3) to promote the industrialization of developing countries, UNIDO had been converted into a specialized agency during 1985 in accordance with a 1979 Assembly resolution.⁽⁴⁾ UNIDO became fully autonomous on 1 January 1986 (see also PART TWO, Chapter XVII).

The Secretary-General, in a November 1986 report to the Assembly,⁽⁵⁾ recommended that the appropriation be adjusted to reflect UNIDO's actual requirements ($16 million), which had been paid to it in 1986. No repayments had been made to date, although under the terms of the loan agreement UNIDO was to have repaid the United Nations $8 million before the end of 1986 and the remaining $8 million in 1987. During 1986, UNIDO had experienced financial difficulties, owing in part to late payment of contributions and in part to depreciation of the United States dollar (the currency in which its budget was denominated). Noting that the UNIDO General Conference was the only body with power to appropriate funds and that it would not meet until November 1987, the Secretary-General said the earliest date at which UNIDO might be expected to have funds available to repay the loan would be the first quarter of 1988.

However, the Chairman of ACABQ stated, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee on 24 November,⁽⁶⁾ that UNIDO should make every effort to repay at least part of the loan before the end of the biennium. ACABQ therefore recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to inform UNIDO that $8 million should be repaid in 1987, with the balance to be repaid by the end of 1988.

After the Philippines proposed that the Committee approve the Secretary-General's recommendations, a recorded vote was taken at the request of the United States. Thus, by 86 votes to 13, with 6 abstentions, the Fifth Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's recommendations.

The United States voted against the proposal because it felt the ACABQ suggestion was an acceptable compromise.

The USSR also supported ACABQ's recommendation, since to approve the Philippine proposal, it felt, would encourage the specialized agencies to display financial irresponsibility.

Belgium believed that the two recommendations differed only in their level of expectations as to the likelihood for an improvement in UNIDO's financial situation; a genuine solution required that the United Nations co-operate with UNIDO to ensure that the sums were repaid as a matter of priority.

Canada considered it necessary to keep pressure on UNIDO to repay at least part of its debt.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote section VI of resolution 41/209.

Loan to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

[The General Assembly . . .]

Decides that the amount of the special appropriation made by the General Assembly at its fortieth session to finance a loan to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization shall be adjusted to reflect actual requirements ($16 million), on the understanding that income from the repayment of the loan to that organization would be credited to income section 2 (General income) only in 1988 and on the understanding that, should its financial situation improve to such an extent that the United Nations Industrial Development Organization finds it possible to repay the loan in 1987, the Secretary-General would so inform the General Assembly and would reflect the repayment in the final performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987;

Chapter II

United Nations programmes

Further action was taken in 1986 to improve United Nations programme planning, budgeting and evaluation. The General Assembly, by resolution 41/203, revised and added to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989. Recommendations on the programme budget and medium-term plan were made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), and planning and budget procedures were also discussed by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18). Both CPC and the Group of 18 also discussed programme monitoring and evaluation. Commenting on two 1985 reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), the Secretary-General, in June 1986, gave an overview of the status of internal evaluation in the United Nations system. In October, he reported on recent developments regarding strengthening the capacity of United Nations evaluation units and systems.

Programme outputs during the 1984-1985 budget period were examined by the Secretary-General in May. CPC recommended several measures to enhance the utility of future programme performance reports. In March, the Secretary-General reported on the volume, timing, usefulness and impact of statements of programme budget implications provided to the Assembly and discussed their possible extension to other United Nations bodies. CPC recommended that the Economic and Social Council, for a two-year trial period, also be provided with such statements regarding draft resolutions under its consideration.

United Nations programmes were inspected, reviewed or evaluated by JIU in 9 reports issued during 1986. The Group of 18 made recommendations for improving the work of JIU. The Assembly deferred the item on JIU until 1987, and similarly deferred an item on administrative and budgetary co-ordination.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system was considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its annual report to the Assembly, which provided comparative data and comments on the budgets of the specialized agencies and the United Nations and related matters. In October, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) commented on standardization and comparability in budgetary and administrative practices. In July, the eighteenth ACC report on expenditures of the system in relation to programmes was presented to the Economic and Social Council. ACC also submitted its comments on a JIU review of cash management in the United Nations and four specialized agencies (FAO, ILO, UNESCO, WHO).

Programme planning and budgeting

Report of the Group of 18. The Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (see p. 1021), in its report to the General Assembly, (1) also dealt with the Organization's planning and budget procedure. Over a number of years, the Group stated, there had been disagreement on the content and level of the budget, a situation which reflected to some extent political disagreement among Member States on parts of the substantive activities included in the programme budget.

Problems were compounded by shortcomings in the planning and budget procedure, which was meant to be an integrated process through which would evolve wide agreement on activities to be financed. According to the Group, the current procedure had not fulfilled its purpose; many of the existing procedures for preparation and approval of the programme budget still corresponded to the times when the budget was formulated by object of expenditure and not in terms of programmes. Further, Member States could only give their opinion on the programme budget at a very late stage. The Group saw a need to develop procedures which would associate States more actively with the preparation of the medium-term plan and the programme budget and which would better facilitate broad agreement among States on budgetary matters, while fully preserving the principle of sovereign equality.

The medium-term plan and the programme budget should have flexibility so that priorities and resources could be adjusted to changing international circumstances and to new challenges and problems that arose. The procedures for reaching the widest possible agreement on the content and level of the budget, including the criteria for the setting of priorities and the mechanisms for applying them, were therefore particularly important.

Over the past 15 years, the Group said, the General Assembly had established principles, methods and instruments which should have made it possible to achieve satisfactory results on the budget's content and level. The six-year medium-term plan should reflect the objectives of Member States and constitute the principal policy directive of the United Nations. The medium-term plan, the programme budget and the monitoring and evaluation systems were intended as an integrated process through which wide agreement should evolve on activities. However, in terms of the programme budget, the medium-term plan did not, in reality, serve as the principal policy directive, and the regulations pertaining to the setting of priorities had not served their purpose. The current decision-making procedures with respect to priorities did not correspond to those stipulated.

In the Group's opinion, it was important to develop planning and budget procedures, facilitating agreement among Member States on the budget. To that end, it recommended that the existing regulations on priority setting be strictly applied (see p. 1042). All activities relating to programme planning and budgeting should be brought together under a coherent structure (recommendation 32).

The Group discussed planning and budget mechanisms, including the current procedure for preparing the medium-term plan and the programme budget and the structure and functioning of the intergovernmental machinery responsible for those tasks. It stated that above all it was important for States to take part in the procedure from the beginning. The programme budget currently was prepared in detail before Member States were brought into the process. A procedure must be developed, making it possible for States to exercise intergovernmental leadership, particularly in relation to the setting of priorities.

The Group considered three different proposals for such a procedure, but could not reach a consensus.

Several members of the Group favoured a solution along the following lines: The existing machinery separated consideration of the financial and administrative aspects of the budget from the review of the content of the programmes, the former being the responsibility of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and the latter of CPC. Consequently, an intergovernmental mechanism was needed to give recommendations on the medium-term plan as well as the programme budget, particularly in relation to the priorities among programmes and resource allocations.

Other members, however, felt that the proposed mechanism for consideration of the programme budget lacked clarity as to the roles of CPC and ACABQ, which would lead to conflict between the two organs; the aim should be to improve the functioning of CPC and at the same time maintain the mandate of ACABQ.

Others favoured merging budgeting and programme planning and entrusting both functions to a single intergovernmental expert body working on the basis of consensus. Before the Secretary-General started work on budget estimates, that expert body should determine the overall limit of the budget and then set priorities and co-operate with him in preparing budget estimates. Agreement was reached, however, that the internal audit function should be separated administratively from implementation and the disbursement of funds; the Internal Audit Division, now part of the Department of Administration and Management, should become an independent unit (recommendation 39).

Following consideration of the Group's recommendations, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee⁽²⁾ presented its findings saying that Members should be involved in a more structured manner throughout the whole planning, programming and budgeting process; the intergovernmental machinery must be improved and adjusted; and there was a need for early Assembly guidance on the overall level of resources and priorities. Existing rules and regulations pertaining to the setting of priorities should be strictly applied.

The Committee held that the Regulations and Rules Governing Programming Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, issued in 1984⁽³⁾ and based on regulations adopted by the Assembly in 1982⁽⁴⁾ should be fully implemented; the introduction to the plan would constitute a key element in the planning process and should be subject to wide consultation among Member States; the Secretary-General should draw up calendars for those consultations; and, in formulating the plan, United Nations sectoral, technical, regional and central bodies should be consulted.

The formulation and presentation of the programme budget being a responsibility of the Secretary-General, he should present, during the non-budget year for approval by Member States, an outline for the next biennium, with an indication of the overall level of resources. The outline should include expenditures related to political activities of a "perennial character" and their conference costs, and should include a contingency fund, expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources, to accommodate "add-ons"; if "add-ons" proposed exceeded resources within the contingency fund, they could only be included through redeployment of resources from low-priority areas, or modifications of existing activities.

As points still to be resolved, the Committee listed the decision-making process, the intergovernmental machinery, the definition of "add-ons" and the basis for determining the level of resources.

CPC conclusions and recommendations. At its 1986 session,⁽⁵⁾ CPC also reviewed the medium-term plan and the programme budget, noting that the former provided a framework for formulating the programme budget and priority setting, and discussed and recommended improvements with regard to both.

The Committee decided that for reviewing the medium-term plan, it would use the Charter of the United Nations, pertinent General Assembly resolutions, the introduction to the medium-term plan, annual overview reports of ACC, the ACC report on United Nations expenditures in relation to programmes (see p. 1048), the overview of the objectives and plans of the organizations of the United Nations system, and the results of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (see p. 886). The cross-organizational programme analyses, system-wide medium-term plans, annual overview reports of ACC and the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC were the four analytical tools with which CPC performed its co-ordination function; in addition, the Economic and Social Council carried out cross-organizational reviews of medium-term plans. Each of those instruments should be further developed and used more effectively so that CPC could discharge more effectively its co-ordination responsibilities.

The Committee decided to adopt a broader approach to the programme budget review, taking into account trends, priorities, objectives, timeliness, efficiency, and cross-sectional analyses showing the relationship between the medium-term plan and the programme budget.

In formulating the medium-term plan for 1990-1995 and the related programme budgets, CPC recommended that the Secretariat bodies concerned should define the problem addressed more systematically and in greater detail; link the objective of a subprogramme more directly to specific aspects of the problem addressed and make the objective more specific and measurable; establish a clear causal relationship between achievement of the objective and the strategy in the medium-term plan; describe outputs and services in the programme budget more precisely; and include a brief reference to the relevant subprogramme and programme element in the preface or introduction to each report or publication. CPC also recommended that the work programme contained in the proposed programme budget submitted to it be the same as that submitted to the functional or regional intergovernmental bodies concerned, which should consider it prior to its review by CPC.

The Committee also made recommendations with regard to priority setting (see p. 1042). Emphasizing the importance of integrating the programming and co-ordination aspects of its work more effectively, CPC recommended that the medium-term plan and programme budget reflect the recommendations arising from its consideration of cross-organizational programme analyses, other similar assessments of the state of co-ordination in the United Nations system and the feedback of evaluation findings. Specific proposed follow-up action should be highlighted on a section-by-section basis. The subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council should be apprised of CPC's recommendations, and should be made more aware of the contribution they should make to the preparatory procedure.

CPC examined a number of other programme questions: United Nations programme performance for 1984-1985; evaluation; proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989; cross-organizational analyses and other co-ordination questions; and reports of the JIU (see p. 1042).

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on programme performance for 1984-1985 (see p. 1044), CPC recommended that measures be taken to enhance the utility of future reports.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Emphasizing once again the importance of CPC's programming functions, the Economic and Social Council, in section II of resolution 1986/51, welcomed CPC's recommendations, convinced that their implementation would contribute to the Organization's effectiveness and efficiency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by resolution 41/213, acted on the recommendations of the Group of 18, deciding that they should be implemented in the light of the Fifth Committee's findings and reaffirming the need to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process through implementation of CPC's recommendations, among others.

By resolution 41/203, the Assembly adopted as an addendum to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 (see below) chapter 31, covering the major programme on programme planning and co-ordination, with the modifications recommended by CPC.

Medium-term plan revisions

The medium-term plan for 1984-1989, adopted by the General Assembly in 1982,⁽⁴⁾ covered the entire range of United Nations activities, both global and regional. It described those activities in major programmes or chapters covering a broad sectoral area, which themselves were broken down into programmes and subprogrammes. The activities were designated to be carried out by various organizations within the United Nations system—the Secretariat, the regional commissions and United Nations agencies. The plan, which covered political, legal and humanitarian, public information, and economic and social sectors, financial, personnel, management, technical support, conference and library services provided the framework within which the United Nations programme budgets had been or were to be prepared for 1984-1985, 1986-1987 and 1988-1989.

The first revisions to the current plan had been approved by the Assembly in 1984.⁽⁶⁾

In a July 1986 report,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General proposed further revisions, incorporating new developments and making necessary adjustments. The revisions pertained to entire programmes or individual subprogrammes. No second revision was required in 10 of the major programmes. Revisions were proposed in connection with the following major programmes: special political affairs, special political questions and special mandates; international justice and law; political affairs, trusteeship and decolonization; development issues and policies; energy; environment; food and agriculture; human settlements; industrial development; international trade and development finance; natural resources; population; social development and humanitarian affairs; statistics; and transport, communications and tourism.

A new major programme, chapter 31, on programme planning and co-ordination, was added to the plan.⁽⁸⁾ It included two programmes—programme planning, with subprogrammes on planning, programming, monitoring and evaluation; and co-ordination, with subprogrammes on analysis, harmonization of policies, plans and programmes, and development of information systems for programme and co-ordination.

The proposed revisions, with modifications in some programmes and subprogrammes, were recommended to the Assembly for adoption by CPC. As recommended by CPC in 1981,⁽⁹⁾ each chapter of the proposed revisions was submitted to the appropriate Main Committee of the Assembly. On 10 November 1986, the Fifth Committee Chairman addressed identical letters, through the Assembly President, to the Chairmen of the other Main Committees asking for their views so that they could be taken into account. While the First Committee, the Special Political Committee, the Second (Economic and Financial), Fourth and Sixth (Legal) Committees stated that they had no comments to make, the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee Chairman transmitted a 13 November decision on the Secretary-General's proposed subprogramme on the promotion and monitoring of the achievement of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, and of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies (see p. 785). The decision and the statements of the other Committees were contained in a 28 November note of the Fifth Committee.⁽¹⁰⁾

By section III of resolution 1986/51, the Economic and Social Council endorsed CPC's conclusions and recommendations on the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan, noted with satisfaction the addition of a new major programme, and reiterated that the plan should continue to serve as the framework for the formulation of biennial programme budgets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/203.

Programme planning

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-sixth session,

Having considered also Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/51 of 22 July 1986 on the above-mentioned report and also Council resolutions 1986/50 and 1986/52 of 22 July 1986 on the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and on the duration of the twenty-seventh session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, respectively,

Having considered further the views of the Main Committees of the General Assembly on the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989,

Recalling its resolutions 31/93 of 14 December 1976 and 37/234 of 21 December 1982 and Economic and Social Council resolution 2008(LX) of 14 May 1976,

Recalling further the mandate of the Board of Auditors, as stated in regulations 12.4 and 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations,

1. Adopts the revisions and the addendum to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, as well as the modifications recommended by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the other conclusions and recommendations made by the Committee at its twenty-sixth session and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1986/51, taking into account the views of the Main Committees of the General Assembly, in particular those expressed by the Third Committee concerning the promotion and monitoring of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

2. Decides that the twenty-seventh session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be of five weeks' duration, as recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1986/52;

3. Accepts, as agreed by the members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1986/50, that the topic for the twenty-second series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees shall be "Co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development and its contribution to meeting the economic and social objectives of the developing countries";

4. Urges the two Committees, in order to reinforce a useful and constructive dialogue between them, to continue to improve these Joint Meetings.

General Assembly resolution 41/203

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/941) without vote, 3 December (meeting 40); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.13/Rev.1), following informal consultations; agenda item 111.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 6, 29-33, 39, 40; plenary 101.

Israel said that it would have voted against the text, if a vote had been taken; it strongly objected to certain paragraphs in the CPC report, referring to the question of Palestine. Brazil wished it to be understood that application of the concept of timeliness would in no way prevent Member States from examining controversial or sensitive issues.

Japan and the United Kingdom declared that they had joined in the consensus with the understanding that the resolution would not prejudice discussions on the future functions of CPC.

Nigeria stressed that the text should not be interpreted as in any way changing the mandate of the Board of Auditors.

Priority setting

The Group of 18, in its report,⁽¹⁾ stated that the regulations and rules for the setting of priorities had not served the purposes for which they had been intended and the current decision-making procedures with respect to priorities did not correspond to those stipulated in the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation. The Group found the criteria established by those regulations and rules by and large satisfactory, but noted a lack of application by the intergovernmental machinery and the Secretariat. Under the current rules and regulations, priority setting in the medium-term plan took place at the sub-programme level, while resource estimates were to be provided at the major programme level. In the programme budget, priority setting took place at the programme element level only, while comprehensive resource requirements were given at the programme level, with summary information given at the subprogramme level. Consequently, there was according to the Group no clear linkage between priority setting and resource requirements either in the medium-term plan or in the programme budget, which had led to the fact that obsolete, marginally useful or ineffective activities had not always been excluded from the programme budget.

On the basis of its findings, the Group recommended that, in order to facilitate agreement among Member States on the budget content and level, the rules and regulations pertaining to the setting of priorities should be strictly applied by the intergovernmental bodies concerned and by the Secretariat and that CPC should be requested to monitor their application and report thereon to the General Assembly (recommendation 68).

CPC recommended⁽⁵⁾ that the Assembly, in considering the medium-term plan and programme budget, set priorities in accordance with the rules and regulations on programme planning. It noted that it was necessary for intergovernmental bodies to recommend priorities, and recommended that in future proposed programme budgets the Secretary-General indicate if the programme elements designated as having highest priority and those designated as having lowest priority each represented approximately 10 per cent of the resources requested for a programme.

In section II of resolution 1986/51, the Economic and Social Council reiterated the importance of setting priorities in the plans and programmes of the United Nations, endorsed CPC's recommendations and urged that CPC continue to improve priority setting in the United Nations.

Programme monitoring and evaluation

The Group of 18⁽¹⁾ considered monitoring, evaluation and inspection of United Nations activities of particular importance for administrative efficiency and the proper use of funds. It was of the opinion that more emphasis should be put on evaluation in order to increase the awareness of the bodies concerned regarding the status of implementation of the programmes adopted and their relevance, effectiveness and impact in achieving the goals set. The Group felt that it was important to improve the internal evaluation system.

At its 1986 session,⁽²⁾ CPC discussed reports concerning evaluation of a number of United Nations programmes (see p. 883). In connection with its consideration of those reports, it had before it two 1985 reports of the JIU⁽³⁾ on the status of internal evaluation in organizations of the United Nations system and the third report on evaluation in the system, both submitted in March 1986 by the Secretary-General, as well as the comments of ACC on them, transmitted to the General Assembly in April by the Secretary-General.⁽⁴⁾

In its comments, ACC concluded that the comprehensive assessment of the various evaluation experiences, the incisive analysis of particular problems and JIU's recommendations constituted a basis for improving the evaluation process. It shared JIU's concern that emphasis had not sufficiently shifted from programme inputs to programme results; responsibilities and actions for design improvement remained unclear; training to build staff understanding and capabilities was still weak; and full integration of evaluation with the overall management process, including timely and effective feedback of information on performance, remained to be achieved. In April, ACC approved its comments on the reports⁽⁵⁾

Concurring with JIU's assessment and recommendations, the Secretary-General, in a June report⁽⁶⁾ stated that in allocating the necessary resources for strengthening evaluation units and the Central Evaluation Unit (CEU), he had had to exercise utmost restraint under the prevailing resource constraints. It was intended to test the evaluation system in different programmes so as to ascertain the most efficient ways and means for meeting its long-term needs before resources were fully committed. The procedural guidelines laid down in the draft evaluation manual provided for effective integration of evaluation in the management and decision-making process. Programmed activities would be evaluated under procedures within the framework of the medium-term plan and programme budget; activities financed from extrabudgetary resources would be evaluated under guidelines established by the funding agency or by donors.

With respect to the need for effective integration of evaluation as part of a longer-term management development process to establish a streamlined, responsive and performance-oriented decision-making system, the Secretary-General said that the self-evaluation system to be initiated throughout the Organization beginning in 1986 made provision for building the evaluation function at every major stage of an activity. At the planning stage, an evaluation was required as part of the medium-term plan; at the programming stage, evaluation requirements—including identification of end-users and of means of reaching them, expected outputs and their uses, and indicators—were to be incorporated into the programme budget documentation. During implementation, continuing evaluation was required for mid-course corrective adjustments. After completion of an activity, ex post evaluation was required. The system also provided for the application of evaluation findings as part of routine management and in preparing the programme budget.

The draft manual specified procedures, formats and checklists to assist programme managers in implementing that process, as well as detailed instructions for the conduct of evaluation exercises. The guidelines provided by the manual were intended to be applied in conjunction with formal training activities and ad hoc instructions, as well as in routine consultations and co-ordinative activities among CEU, regional and sectoral evaluation units, programme planning and budget units and programme managers; that would not only facilitate the conduct of evaluation but also help maintain quality standards.

The United Nations would continue to play an active part in co-operative activities at the system-wide level to share evaluation experience and harmonize evaluation approaches, particularly concerning programme evaluation. Once the internal evaluation system was established and evaluation capacities were more fully developed, the Organization would hope to contribute to evaluation assistance for Governments, the Secretary-General said; Governments would continue to play an important role in the evaluation process, not only as end-users providing feedback for in-depth and tripartite evaluations but also as participants in programme and project formulation. In some of the regional commissions, for example, the work programme evolved through an organized process with full government participation at each stage, from working groups through the main subsidiary organs of the commission to the commission itself. As a practical step in providing assistance to Governments, the Secretary-General suggested the participation of government officials in workshops and seminars on evaluation carried out by regional and sectoral bodies.

The Secretary-General agreed with the JIU Inspector's conclusion and considered that effective implementation of his recommendations hinged largely on adequate resources for CEU, a matter which he intended to keep under continuing review.

In an October report on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations evaluation units and systems⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General gave an overview of developments since the two JIU reports. The resources assigned to evaluation had not matched the importance accorded to it by both the Assembly and himself. A freeze on recruitment and other austerity measures had made it impossible for various United Nations entities to strengthen their evaluation capacities, with the exception of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development where self-evaluation on two programmes of activity and eight sub-programmes had been initiated (see p. 514). However, evaluation findings were perhaps most needed during a period of financial crisis, to provide a basis for adjustments in the short term in the programme budget or for the longer term in the Organization's activities and priorities. In the light of Member States' views on those and related issues at the 1986 Assembly session, he would present his proposals for evaluation resources in the context of the programme budget for 1988-1989.

On 23 July, by decision 1986/179, the Economic and Social Council took note of the JIU reports on evaluation and ACC's and the Secretary-General's comments. In section V of resolution 1986/51, the Council stressed the importance of programme performance reports, evaluations and cross-organizational analyses, as endorsed by the competent intergovernmental bodies, as instruments for promoting efficiency and for integrating the programming and co-ordination processes. The Council also endorsed the recommendation of CPC that, in programme areas where a major conference was to be held, the programme should be evaluated sufficiently in advance for the findings and recommendations to be taken into account in the preparatory work for the conference; if a programme was evaluated after a conference had taken place, such an evaluation should be made only after the programme had been revised in the light of the conference results and enough time had elapsed for its impact to be assessed.

Also on 23 July, the Council, by decision 1986/177, transmitted to the General Assembly a draft resolution, sponsored by the United States,⁽⁶⁾ on evaluation and effective management of programmes of the United Nations system. By the draft, the Assembly would have expressed its support for the implementation of its resolutions regarding the need for internal evaluation, and particularly would have endorsed the recommendations in the third JIU report on evaluation. In decision 41/461, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the report of the Council, chapter VI, section C (on international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system), under which the Council had adopted the decision.

Programme performance, 1984-1985

In May 1986,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on programme performance of the United Nations for 1984-1985, examining actual outputs in relation to commitments, departures from programmed commitments in terms of reformulations, postponements or terminations, and additional outputs required by legislation or added at the initiative of the Secretariat, as well as implementation rates for outputs with lowest and highest priority. The report was based on performance reports which all Secretariat offices and departments had begun to submit on a semi-annual basis in 1985 to the Central Monitoring Unit, established on a permanent basis in 1985, of the Programme Planning and Budgeting Board.

In his general observations, the Secretary-General stated that, beginning with the 1984 report, all units had been instructed to include two additional items of information for each output reported as completed: an identifier of the output, for example, document or sales number of a report, date and venue of meeting, etc.; and the number of work-months of staff and consultants required for completion. The identifiers were being employed by the Internal Audit Division in its systematic reviews of programme performance report submissions. In that connection, it was expected that the continued participation of the Director of that Division in the elaboration of monitoring procedures and methods would enhance the effectiveness of the Central Monitoring Unit, as well as assist in establishing a systematic basis for programme audits. The work-month data accumulated from those reports would be employed in two related exercises and would constitute an essential component of the first efforts to link and compare the programme performance report with the budget performance report; the exploratory stages of that exercise scheduled to be carried out in the first half of 1986 had not been fully analysed, but it was hoped that they would lead to the adoption of further specific measures for linking the two reports and eventually to a methodology for their integration. The work-month data would also serve as an input to the process of analysis of future programme budget submissions.

With regard to further refining technical co-operation reporting, a more precise formulation of relevant sections of future proposed programme budgets was required, the Secretary-General said; also, several aspects of budgetary treatment of extrabudgetary resources needed to be addressed. In the light of discussion in CPC, the Secretariat would seek clearer and more systematic methods of preparation and reporting in the process of formulating the instructions and framework of the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989 and the programme performance report for 1986-1987.

Exact reporting continued to be difficult to achieve in other areas. One related to the outputs of secretariats of intergovernmental bodies whose primary function was negotiation, or deliberations having negotiation character, where the exact number of reports required was impossible to predict. Another arose from the fact that publications did not formally become outputs until printed and distributed; in some cases, the publication was not distributed until the biennium subsequent to that in which the substantive unit had completed its work.

A third area, the treatment of administrative and common support services, was one where improvement over current methods was possible, but where progress remained to be made and further development of standards and forms was necessary. Nevertheless, an attempt had been made in the current report to identify significant performance indicators and to structure reporting in respect of major units on those indicators, some of which were provisional and would need to be reviewed in the light of further experience. Following the establishment of equally valid indicators for other units, performance reporting was to be extended to those as well.

After considering the Secretary-General's report, CPC recommended the following measures to enhance the utility of future programme performance reports: the presentation of data and the format of tables should be further standardized; detailed explanations should be given for any significant number of outputs added to a programme at the initiative of the Secretariat; the first implementation percentage should be of outputs implemented as programmed, to be followed by the three percentages (for outputs with lowest and highest priority designations, and for those with no designation) used in the 1984-1985 report; and outputs postponed from the previous biennium should be included in the column "Programmed" of the standard tables unless such outputs had been reintroduced in the programme budget as part of a new biennial programme, as had been the case in a number of sections of the current report.

CPC also reiterated recommendations made at its 1982 and 1984 sessions that comprehensive and more precise information should be included regarding termination and postponement of planned outputs and the disposition of resources released as a result; and that the programme performance report, together with CPC's comments, should be forwarded to the relevant intergovernmental bodies. CPC recommended that the Assembly request the Board of External Auditors to include in its reports its findings concerning the audits of output delivery carried out by the Internal Audit Division; it also requested that relevant parts of the Board's report, together with the Secretary-General's comments, be brought to its attention in connection with its review of the proposed programme budget, as well as of the programme performance report.

With regard to programme implementation, the Committee, noting that in some cases outputs with highest priority designation had a low percentage of implementation, reiterated its 1984 recommendation that outputs designated as highest priority should have an implementation rate close to 100 per cent. It welcomed the Secretary-General's proposals for improvement of the formulation in future programme budgets of technical co-operation activities and those activities financed from extrabudgetary resources in order to permit refinement of reporting in programme performance reports.

CPC also made recommendations for improving the implementation rate of the Department of Public Information and three regional commissions (ECA, ESCAP and ESCWA).

The Economic and Social Council, in section V of resolution 1986/51, stressed the importance of programme performance reports. It noted with satisfaction the changes in methodology introduced in the 1984-1985 report and requested the Secretary-General to continue making further improvements.

Statements of programme budget implications

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ submitted in March 1986 a report⁽¹¹⁾ containing updated information regarding the volume, timing, usefulness and impact of statements of programme budget implications of draft resolutions being considered by the Assembly, and discussing their possible extension to other United Nations bodies. Such an extension to all bodies at once would not be practical, however, the Secretary-General stated. The number of Secretariat staff involved in the preparation of statements had been quite limited—additional staff would have to acquire the necessary skills and experience—and the current status of on-line budget information and telecommunications was insufficient to deal with an increased volume.

He recommended that the Assembly continue to receive statements of programme budget implications and suggested that a 1979 Assembly decision⁽¹²⁾ be modified to allow for 72 hours rather than 48 hours between the submission and voting of a proposal involving expenditure.

Those recommendations were endorsed by CPC, which also proposed that the Economic and Social Council, for a two-year trial period starting in 1987, be provided with statements of programme budget implications of the draft resolutions being considered. CPC also recommended that the Secretary-General provide such statements to the Assembly's Fifth Committee for draft proposals being considered by that Committee that could have programme, financial or administrative implications, including proposals submitted under the agenda item on the proposed programme budget.

By section IV of resolution 1986/51, the Economic and Social Council welcomed CPC's recommendation that, for a two-year trial period, it be provided with statements of programme budget implications.

Joint Inspection Unit

During 1986, JIU issued 9 reports inspecting, reviewing or evaluating selected United Nations programmes.

The reports concerned the following: the structure and co-ordination of the field representation of organizations of the United Nations system (see p. 417); the role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in Africa (see p. 838); co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States (see p. 383); technical co-operation activities of the International Telecommunication Union (see p. 431); management of interpretation services in the United Nations system (see p. 1087); cash management in the United Nations and four specialized agencies (see p. 1048); publications of the International Court of Justice (see p. 985); administration of justice in the United Nations (see p. 1075); and the problem of storage in organizations of the United Nations system (see p. 1093).

The activities of JIU from 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986 were described in its eighteenth report ⁽⁸⁾ and its activities during the second half of the year in its nineteenth report ⁽¹⁴⁾

The Secretary-General transmitted the JIU work programme for 1986 to the General Assembly in February. ⁽¹⁵⁾ He also transmitted a JIU follow-up report on organization and methods for official travel, along with his comments (see p. 1078).

In September, he transmitted a statement by ACC ⁽¹⁶⁾ on a 1985 JIU report on reform of the United Nations ⁽¹⁷⁾ expressing regret that, since the report had not been prepared in accordance with JIU practices, ACC considered it inappropriate to comment.

ACC had decided in June not to comment. ⁽¹⁸⁾ The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1986/179 of 23 July, took note of the report and of the comments of the Secretary-General and ACC (submitted to the Council in draft form). ⁽¹⁹⁾ The Secretary-General believed that the report merited careful examination and stated that he would provide further comments in due course. He also intended, together with his colleagues in ACC, to submit joint comments on the parts which concerned the United Nations system as a whole. ⁽²⁰⁾

In response to a 1985 CPC request, endorsed by the Council ⁽²¹⁾ and the Assembly ⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in March 1986 a report describing 28 expert bodies in the United Nations system composed of members appointed in their personal capacity ⁽²²⁾ as a follow-up to a 1984 JIU study on reporting to the Council which had recommended more extensive use of outside expertise. ⁽²³⁾

In October 1986 ⁽²⁴⁾ he forwarded, in accordance with procedures established by the Assembly in 1977, ⁽²⁵⁾ his annual report on the implementation of previous JIU recommendations of interest to the Assembly. The report included information on recommendations relating to 1985 JIU reports on UNHCR's role in South-East Asia (1979-1983) ⁽²⁶⁾ the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific ⁽²⁷⁾ the Transport and Communications

Decade in Africa ⁽²⁸⁾ Secretariat staff costs ⁽²⁹⁾ support for the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action on technical co-operation among developing countries ⁽³⁰⁾ and problems in implementing the medium-term plan of recruitment, 1983-1985. ⁽³¹⁾

Recommendations of the Group of 18. Improvements in monitoring and evaluation, including the work of JIU, were called for by the Group of 18 ⁽¹⁾ which considered it necessary to see that JIU reports were adequately dealt with at the intergovernmental level and that JIU's recommendations approved by the relevant bodies and organizations were implemented. The Group saw the need to improve the inspectors' work and some of their reports; it considered it important to ensure that they had the necessary qualifications to undertake the variety of tasks with which they were faced. The Group said it was also important to ensure that the inspectors' independence was safeguarded and that they were appointed on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, as laid down in JIU's statute.

To improve management, secure administrative efficiency and achieve greater co-ordination, the Group recommended that JIU members put more emphasis on the evaluation aspect of their work; to reflect that added emphasis on the preparation of evaluation reports to intergovernmental bodies, JIU should be renamed Joint Inspection and Evaluation Unit and its statute revised accordingly (recommendation 63). When selecting candidates for appointment as inspectors, Member States should give special emphasis to qualifications, particularly in personnel management, public administration, inspection and evaluation; the selection should also reflect different disciplines (recommendation 64). The Group also recommended that the Assembly give JIU greater guidance on its work programme (recommendation 65). The JIU reports, with summaries, should be made available to all Member States and the Assembly should invite United Nations organizations, when considering those reports, to indicate which recommendations they approved and which they did not, as it had invited United Nations organs to do in 1983 ⁽³²⁾ (recommendation 66). There should be increased co-operation between JIU and the External Auditors, the latter should put greater emphasis on management audits and other areas of importance as required by the legislative organs concerned, and internal and external audits should continue as two separate functions (recommendation 67).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, by decision 41/448, deferred consideration of the item on JIU until 1987.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the UN system

In its annual report to the General Assembly on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system, submitted in October 1986,⁽¹⁾ ACABQ provided comparative data and comments on the budgets of the specialized agencies and the United Nations and related matters, in accordance with a 1981 Assembly decision.⁽²⁾

The report contained nine tables providing comparative data on the following: total amounts of approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1978-1987; total net contributions of Member States actually payable under approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1978-1987; established posts, 1985-1987; regular budget contributions to technical co-operation activities, 1985-1987; extrabudgetary funds administered by the United Nations system of organizations, contributions and expenditures, 1984-1985; working capital funds, 1987; scales of assessment applicable in 1987; and collection of contributions, 1985-1986.

The regular budgets (or budget estimates) of the United Nations, the specialized agencies (excluding the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)) for 1987 amounted to $1,783,459,118, of which $1,678,599,955 was to be covered by assessed contributions. In addition, depending on decisions by the Assembly and the Security Council, further assessed contributions for the United Nations were likely to arise in 1987 for peace-keeping operations; for the 12-month period through October 1986 the total amount assessed for that purpose was $179.9 million.

The United Nations, the specialized agencies and IAEA estimated that their regular budget expenditures on technical co-operation in 1987 would amount to 21.7 per cent of their combined regular budgets, up from 21.3 per cent in 1985, or to a total of $387.8 million, including $52.5 million for project support costs.

The total number of established posts authorized or requested under the regular budgets of the agencies (excluding IFAD) and IAEA for 1987 was 13,367.5—31 more than in 1986; the corresponding number under the regular budget of the United Nations for 1987 was 11,167, or 7 fewer than in 1986. Accordingly, a total of 24,534.5 established posts for 1987 had been authorized or requested under the regular combined budgets, representing an increase of 0.1 per cent over the 1986 total of 24,510.5 (excluding IFAD).

In addition to those resources, the United Nations and most agencies had a substantial number of posts funded by extrabudgetary sources. As at 31 December 1985, combined regular budget and extrabudgetary posts totalled 50,589.

Two special topics were taken up by ACABQ during its consideration in 1986 of administrative and budgetary co-ordination: administration of justice and procedures for the redress of staff grievances in the individual agencies (see p. 1076), and the use by the agencies of recent technological innovations for computer-based communications (see p. 1095).

Administrative and budgetary matters were also discussed by ACC's Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary) (CCAQ(FB)) at its March⁽³⁾ and September⁽⁴⁾ sessions.

An ACC statement on standardization and comparability in budgetary and administrative practices and on greater co-ordination of staff regulations was transmitted to the Assembly in October by the Secretary-General.⁽⁵⁾

Recalling some of the main agreements worked out under its auspices in recent years with regard to the harmonization of budgeting practices and budget presentation among United Nations organizations—such as the setting of objectives for the synchronization of planning and budget periods; the establishment of a model structure for programme budgets; the definition of the nature and scope of programme budget elements, such as introduction by the executive head, technical explanatory notes, summary tables, programme narratives and tables and annexes; development of standard budget annexes and of standard classifications of fundamental building blocks used in constructing budget estimates; the formulation of common budgeting principles; the establishment of methods for estimating cost increases due to inflation; and arrangements for co-ordinating organizations' projections of cost levels for main duty stations—ACC said it recognized that those and other agreements were not universally applied in the system. It believed, however, that the agreements constituted a solid basis for harmonizing budgeting practices and improved transparency and comparability of budget documents, to the extent that those aims were compatible with individual governing bodies' needs for consistency in the presentation of successive budgets. ACC also noted with interest that the revised work programme of JIU for 1986 provided for the launching of a comparative study of the budgets of United Nations organizations, scheduled for completion in 1987; it intended to give JIU its fullest co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 41/447 of 5 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, deferred consideration of the item on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and IAEA until 1987.

Expenditures in relation to programmes

The eighteenth ACC report on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes was presented to the Economic and Social Council in July 1986.⁽¹⁾ The report, based on the inter-organization classification of programmes developed by ACC in consultation with individual Governments and other interested parties, showed in a series of tables expenditures of regular budget and extrabudgetary funds for 1984-1985 and estimated expenditures of those funds for 1986-1987.

On 23 July, the Council took note of the report in decision 1986/179.

Cash management in the United Nations and four specialized agencies

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in September 1986⁽²⁾ a JIU report on cash management in the United Nations and four specialized agencies (FAO, ILO, UNESCO, WHO), giving an overview of the functioning of Treasuries. In recent years, about $4.5 billion had flowed into the United Nations system annually, approximately $1.5 billion from assessed contributions and $3 billion from voluntary contributions. The report focused on three main areas: collection of contributions; custody of funds; and planning, placement and review of investments.

The Inspector's general conclusion was that the monies entrusted to the various agencies were managed not only with respect for the general principle of money management laid down in financial regulations, but with integrity and professionalism. There were weaknesses, however, which he addressed in a number of recommendations.

With regard to the collection of assessed contributions, he recommended that the Governments which had met all their financial obligations benefit from any surpluses to be credited to them, proportionate to the scale of contributions and in accordance with the timing of their payment during the previous budgetary period (recommendation 1). He further recommended that all Governments inform the Treasuries concerned in advance about the time, amount and method of forthcoming payments (recommendation 2).

As to bank accounts and reconciliations, he recommended that organizations develop a programme to produce the automated bank reconciliation of their major bank accounts (recommendation 3) and that they review their accounts more frequently so as to close inactive ones (recommendation 4), and that FAO and ILO, which maintained large petty-cash funds for payments to staff members, experts and delegates, arrange for a greater number of those payments to be made by the banks on the premises, thus reducing petty-cash funds to the minimum (recommendation 5). On investments, the Inspector recommended that the organizations which had not established investment advisory committees do so (recommendation 6); that organizations attempt to improve their ability to forecast their cash position by introducing a computerized system and a monitoring procedure (recommendation 7); and that CCAQ(FB) establish a standardized method of calculating investment returns (recommendation 8). As for equipment and communication systems, Treasuries should have technical equipment in accordance with their needs (recommendation 9) and every organization should develop a computerized Treasury information system (recommendation 10). The centralization of cash management should not be considered for the time being (recommendation 11).

Comments of ACC on the JIU report were transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly in October.⁽³⁾ Generally, the executive heads endorsed the Inspector's approach, stating that his report was a valuable instrument for a close review of management techniques, including computerization and inter-agency consultation and co-operation. The Secretary-General said he had no additional comments on the JIU recommendations.

Chapter III

United Nations officials

The growth of the United Nations Secretariat, paralleling the growth of intergovernmental machinery in response to new global problems, had been rapid and, to an extent, excessive, the Secretary-General said (see p. 10). Some orderly reduction of staff as well as consolidation and rationalization of the Organization were needed. He considered it crucial, for the effectiveness of the United Nations, to maintain employment conditions that would attract and retain employees of the highest competence. Seeking to solve the Organization's financial difficulties at the expense of staff entitlements, he added, would be short-sighted and counter-productive.

Staff in organizations of the United Nations system belonging to the common system of salaries and fringe benefits of the international civil service totalled 51,654 as at 31 December 1986, according to figures compiled for the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). That total represented the number of staff in the United Nations Secretariat, specialized agencies and other related intergovernmental organizations. The common system encompassed the entire United Nations system except for international financial institutions headquartered at Washington, D.C.

Of the total in the system, 22,766 were stationed at the organizations' headquarters, 20,721 were at other established offices, and 8,167 were project staff, working on technical co-operation and other operational activities in the field. By category, 18,831 were Professionals and 32,823 were in the General Service or related categories.

During 1986, the General Assembly considered numerous personnel questions, including the composition of the Secretariat and its upper echelons, desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above, improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, the United Nations pension system and the privileges and immunities of United Nations officials.

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), which made recommendations, and in certain instances decisions, affecting United Nations personnel, held its twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions, from 3 to 20 March at Nairobi, Kenya, and from 7 to 25 July in New York, respectively. On the recommendation of ICSC, the Assembly approved a revised scale of staff assessment, a revised base salary scale and a scale of separation payments for the Professional and higher categories, and a revised scale of staff assessment for the General Service and related categories (resolution 41/207).

By resolution 41/208, the Assembly approved a new scale of pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories, effective 1 April 1987, and the procedure for adjusting that remuneration in between comprehensive reviews.

Acting on other personnel issues, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to improve the recruitment of staff from unrepresented and underrepresented Member States (41/206 A), to ensure that equal opportunity was given to nationals of all Member States when making appointments to Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General posts (41/206 B) and to submit updated calculations on desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above (41/206 C). It urged him to appoint more women to senior decision-making positions (41/206 D). The Economic and Social Council similarly requested that the status of women in United Nations organizations be improved (1986/19).

The Assembly further approved the Secretary-General's proposals with regard to the job classification of the General Service and related categories (41/209, section IX); approved his proposed arrangements on health insurance coverage for locally recruited General Service staff (41/209, section III); concurred with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to reduce the gross salary of the Secretary-General, the Director General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and with other recommendations concerning their emoluments (41/209, section X); approved the Secretary-General's proposal to charge the additional expenditures resulting from a judgement of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal related to the suspension of the class 12 post adjustment in New York against the overall balance of appropriations for 1984-1985 (41/209, section VIII); and deferred until 1987 consideration of his report on the hiring and use of consultant services (41/209, section IV). Finally, the Assembly called on Member States scrupulously to respect the privileges and immunities of United Nations officials and to refrain from impeding them in the performance of their functions (41/205).

Recommendations to improve the system of administration of justice for personnel in the United Nations system were advanced by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) and by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU). Action taken in the mean time to simplify the existing appeals procedures was reported by the Secretary-General, who also made specific proposals for setting up an Ombudsman institution within the United Nations Secretariat to speed delivery of justice. Work proceeded to improve co-ordination between the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations and that of the International Labour Organisation, the two tribunals in the United Nations common system.

Reducing expenditures for official travel, as well as for the use of consultant services, was pursued by JIU and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and followed up by the Secretary-General.

In 1986, the General Assembly took action on several personnel management questions, based on information provided by the Secretary-General and bodies such as ICSC, ACABQ and ACO. Among the issues considered were staff composition, the job description exercise for the General Service staff, and privileges and immunities.

Comments on those matters were submitted in writing to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee by representatives of the Secretariat staff union and associations⁽¹⁾ the Coordinating Committee for Independent Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System (CCISUA)⁽²⁾ and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA).⁽³⁾

Recommendations of the Group of 18. The Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18)⁽⁴⁾ reported to the General Assembly in 1986 that the structure of the Organization had become too complex and top-heavy, with the regular budget supporting 28 posts at the Under-Secretary-General (USG) level and 29 posts at the Assistant Secretary-General (ASG) level; an additional 7 USG and 23 ASG posts were financed from extrabudgetary sources. A substantial reduction in the number of those posts, together with clearer lines of authority, would have a positive impact. (See also p. 1021.) The Group also found the current organizational structure fragmented, giving rise to duplication of work and making co-ordination difficult; it noted that the Secretariat had nine political and 11 economic and social departments, centres or offices, not counting the five regional commissions.

In addition to recommendations dealing with the streamlining of the Secretariat organizational structure (recommendation 14) and reduction in the number of staff members (recommendation 15), the Group made recommendations (41 to 59) on aspects of personnel management, such as recruitment, appointment (contract), performance evaluation, promotion and distribution of posts. In so doing, the Group emphasized that efficient management of the staff should rest on clear, coherent and transparent rules and regulations, to be implemented by managers, and that it was essential to acknowledge the responsibility and prerogatives of the Secretary-General as chief administrative officer of the United Nations and to hold his authority under the Charter.

By resolution 41/213 of 19 December, the Assembly decided that the Group's recommendations should be implemented in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee⁽⁵⁾ and subject to certain qualifications.

Taking into account the need to avoid any negative effect on the implementation of programmes, the Committee noted that the staff reduction percentages—15 per cent overall and 25 per cent at ASG and USG levels—represented targets to be utilized by the Secretary-General in formulating his plans for submission to the Assembly. The Committee noted the Group's emphasis on the need for greater leadership by the Secretary-General in personnel matters—improving personnel management, protecting the authority of the official in charge of personnel and instructing all other senior officials to refrain from influencing the selection of staff (recommendation 41). In the case of recommendations 43 (recruitment through national competitive examinations) and 44 (need for greater proportion of appointments at P-1 to P-3 levels), it noted the need to ensure that the examination procedures were non-discriminatory and that the efforts at increasing the proportion of junior professional level staff should aim at securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, with due regard to wide geographical representation.

With regard to recommendation 45 (three-year eligibility period for permanent appointment), the Committee noted an indication by the Secretary-General's representative that the eligibility period was currently three years or less, rather than the five-year period established by the General Assembly in 1982.⁽⁶⁾ The Committee noted the lack of consensus among the members of the Group of 18 on suggestions in recommendations 55 and 57 that at least 50 per cent of the nationals of any one Member State employed by the United Nations should be appointed on a permanent basis. (See also p. 1022.) The Committee further noted the necessity for effective training programmes geared to the needs of the Organization and ensuring optimum utilization of human and financial resources (recommendation 58). Regarding recommendation 59 (role and functions of the staff union), the Committee noted that, in the view of the Secretary-General, facilitating staff representational activities did not derogate from his managerial prerogatives; it also noted the Group's recommendation that the efficiency of the Organization would be increased if clear guidelines were established for staff union activities.

ACC statement. In a statement transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in October⁽⁷⁾ on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, ACC indicated its readiness to assist ICSC in developing greater co-ordination of staff regulations and conditions of service within the common system, keeping in mind that some accommodations had to be made for the specific needs of the specialized agencies resulting from their legislative mandates.

Staff composition

In September 1986,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General presented his annual report to the General Assembly on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat—by nationality, sex and type of appointment—for the period covering 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986. Staff members appointed for a year or more totalled 14,221 on 30 June, of whom 10,682 were paid from the regular budget and 3,539 from extrabudgetary sources.

The staff was classified into the Professional category and above, General Service and related categories, and technical co-operation project personnel.

Two major events had had considerable impact on the Secretariat's composition, the Secretary-General said. First, with the conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) into a specialized agency in 1985,⁽⁹⁾ four Member States became underrepresented following the separation from the Secretariat, as at 1 January 1986, of 347 UNIDO posts which had been subject to geographical distribution; new desirable ranges of representation were introduced on an interim basis to reflect that change. Second, the suspension of recruitment on 21 March 1986 as a result of the current financial crisis resulted in the deferment of recruitment of nationals of unrepresented and underrepresented Member States, women and successful candidates from the 1985 national competitive examinations. Measures introduced in 1984 to correct more rapidly the existing imbalances in the geographical representation of Member States and in the representation of men and women in the Secretariat were also discontinued. The Secretary-General's proposal, taken note of by the Assembly in 1985⁽¹⁰⁾ to introduce on an experimental basis a competitive examination at the P-3 level was postponed.

On 30 June 1986, there were 12 unrepresented Member States among the total United Nations membership of 159, compared with 13 on 30 June 1985; 24 underrepresented Members, compared with 15 in mid-1985; and five Members that were within their desirable ranges of representation on 31 December 1985 had become underrepresented. The increase in the number of underrepresented Member States was due primarily to the change in status of UNIDO and the suspension of recruitment.

During the reporting year, 188 appointments were made to posts subject to geographical distribution, including 34 women; the percentage of women in such posts as at 30 June 1986 was 24.7.

In another report⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a list showing—by office, department and organizational element—the name, functional title, nationality and grade of all staff members holding an appointment of one year or more on 30 June 1986.

Conditions of service of all categories of staff, pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories, and other related topics were discussed in the annual report of ICSC to the Assembly⁽¹²⁾ Following consideration of a study that examined features of the roster system, including its function, criteria for inclusion and how rosters were maintained and updated, ICSC recommended to United Nations organizations that they establish a link between the Common Classification of Occupational Groups (CCOG) and their individual roster codes by cross-referring to CCOG with a view to improved human resources planning and inter-agency compatibility; and that they maintain rosters that were realistic in size, manageable in terms of access and cost-effective. As regards national professional officers, ICSC noted the contribution made by them to technical co-operation programmes in developing countries, stressed that they should not be encouraged to believe that they were a prime source for recruitment into the international Professional category and reiterated that use of them should remain limited.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/206 A.

Composition of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, which states:

"The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible".

Recalling its previous resolutions on personnel questions, in particular resolutions 33/143 of 20 December 1978, 34/219 of 20 December 1979, 35/210 of 17 December 1980, 37/235 of 21 December 1982, 39/245 of 18 December 1984 and 40/258 A of 18 December 1985,

Noting that, despite the suspension of recruitment activities owing to the financial difficulties of the Organization, vacant posts are being filled by internal candidates through promotion,

Concerned that the targets set in the first phase of the 1986-1987 medium-term plan of recruitment were not achieved because, inter alia, of the suspension of recruitment,

1. Once again requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the role and emphasize the authority of the Office of Personnel Services of the Department of Administration and Management in recruitment and other personnel matters throughout the Secretariat and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the steps he has taken to that end;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in all questions relating to the composition of the Secretariat, to continue his efforts to implement both the letter and the spirit of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to apply, to the extent possible, the 1986-1987 medium-term plan of recruitment, with specific recruitment targets for unrepresented and underrepresented Member States and to continue to conduct appropriate consultations with Member States, particularly those seriously affected by the recruitment freeze, to ensure that the targets are met as soon as possible;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to increase the number of staff recruited from Member States below the mid-point of their desirable ranges in order to bring them closer to their mid-point;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the representation of developing countries and other countries in senior and policy-making posts, with due regard to equitable geographical distribution and in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

6. Regrets the increase in the number of unrepresented or underrepresented Member States resulting from the suspension of recruitment of external candidates, including most of the successful candidates in the 1985 national competitive examinations, and requests the Secretary-General to recruit these successful candidates as soon as possible and further to make every effort to achieve, to the extent possible, an improvement in recruitment from unrepresented and underrepresented Member States;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to lift the freeze on recruitment activities for external candidates at the earliest possible date, and at the same time requests the Secretary-General to explore alternatives to the recruitment freeze policy and to issue a report thereon no later than 21 March 1987;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts aimed at the improvement of the composition of the Secretariat by ensuring a wide geographical distribution of staff at the Professional and higher levels in all departments and main offices;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts aimed at the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat without prejudice to the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

10. Notes that the introduction, in 1986, of a national competitive examination at the P-3 level, which was proposed on an experimental basis by the Secretary-General and of which note was taken by the General Assembly in 1985, was postponed;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to examine ways and means of conducting the internal and external competitive examinations according to a comparable set of standards and criteria and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 41/206 A

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/950) without vote, 9 December (meeting 45); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/41/L21, part A), following informal consultations; agenda item 117.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 27-30, 32, 33, 35, 37, 39, 44-46; plenary 101.

Composition of the upper echelons of the Secretariat

In response to a 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽¹³⁾ which stressed the importance of having the largest possible number of Member States represented at the higher levels of the Secretariat—ascending from the Director (D-2) through ASG to USG levels—the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ that as at 30 June 1986, there were 88 posts at the D-2 level, of which 12 went to 9 States in Africa, 13 to 6 States in Asia and the Pacific, 14 to 3 States in Eastern Europe, 15 to 8 States in Western Europe, 10 to 7 States in Latin America, 6 to 5 States in the Middle East and 18 to 4 States in North America and the Caribbean. Of the 28 posts at the ASG level, 3 went to 3 States in Africa, 6 to 4 States in Asia and the Pacific, 3 to 2 States in Eastern Europe, 7 to 7 States in Western Europe, 3 to 3 States in Latin America, 1 to 1 State in the Middle East and 5 to 3 States in North America and the Caribbean. Of the 27 posts at the Director-General and USG levels, 6 went to 5 States in Africa, 7 to 6 States in Asia and the Pacific, 2 to 2 States in Eastern Europe, 7 to 7 States in Western Europe, 2 to 2 States in Latin America, 2 to 2 States in the Middle East and 1 to 1 State in North America and the Caribbean.

A total of 6 women were represented in those 143-high echelon posts: one D-2 from Africa, two (one ASG, one D-2) from Western Europe, one ASG from Latin America and two ASGs from North America and the Caribbean. Later in the year, the Secretary-General appointed two women at the USG level (see p. 1056).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/206 B.

Composition of the upper echelons of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on personnel questions, in particular resolution 35/210 of 17 December 1980, in which it, inter alia:

"Reaffirms that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State, or group of States, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that this principle is applied faithfully in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution",

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat,

Noting the suggestions made by Member States at the current session, in the course of the deliberations of the Fifth Committee on personnel questions, as well as in plenary meeting during the analysis of the report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations,

Expressing its satisfaction with the work that the Secretary-General is carrying out to improve the efficiency of the Organization,

Recalling Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, which states:

"The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible",

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in order to preserve the principle of equitable geographical distribution and the need for rotation in the composition of the upper echelons of the Secretariat, to ensure that equal opportunity is given to nationals of all Member States when making appointments to all posts at the levels of Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General in making appointments at the levels of Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General to strive to appoint only a national of a country other than that of the incumbent to be replaced in order to reinforce the principle of rotation in the upper echelons of the Secretariat, unless the Secretary-General considers that there are exceptional circumstances, in the light of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 41/206 B

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/950) without vote, 9 December (meeting 45); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.21, part B), following informal consultations; agenda item 117.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 27-30, 32, 33, 35, 37, 39, 44-46; plenary 101.

The Committee action followed an announcement by Bolivia that it would withdraw its draft proposal on the topic, on the understanding that the draft submitted by the Chairman would be approved without objection. The Bolivian draft(14) was almost identical to the text approved, except that it lacked in paragraph 2 the words "to strive" and "in the light of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations".

Geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above

In accordance with Assembly requests of 1980⁽¹⁵⁾ and 1985,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1986 proposals⁽¹⁶⁾ for the review of the system of desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above. In so doing, attention was paid to the concept of parity between the membership and budgetary contribution factors, the population factor, and the principle of equitable geographical distribution (recruiting staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible), as set out in Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter. In addition to those major factors, the desirable ranges currently in place, as determined by the Assembly in 1980,⁽¹⁵⁾ took into account the size of the base figure relating to the groups of posts covered by the system (which determined the number of posts subject to geographical distribution), as well as the degree of flexibility used to determine the upper and lower limits of the range for each Member State.

As at 30 June 1986, the number of occupied geographical posts, excluding UNIDO, was 2,740. Some specific posts were not subject to geographical distribution, nor was the system of desirable ranges applicable to posts in the General Service or other locally recruited categories.

The report discussed the options for, and implications of, establishing new ranges through application of differing weights and degrees of flexibility to the various factors. To illustrate a number of possible changes, calculated on a base figure of 3,000 posts and a population factor of 215 posts, a series of alternative ranges was presented, showing their effect at each level of assessment from 0.01 to 25 per cent.

ICSC⁽¹²⁾ discussed the topic in March and considered that, while it did not have a mandate to determine desirable ranges for the organizations in the United Nations system, it wished, before deciding on final recommendations, to receive from its secretariat more information on under- and unrepresented countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/206 C.

Desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 34/219 of 20 December 1979,

Reaffirming paragraph 3 of section II of its resolution 35/210 of 17 December 1980 by which it decided to review at its forty-first session the question of desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above, taking into account the concept of parity between the membership and contribution factors and discussions on this concept at the thirty-fifth session,

Also reaffirming its resolution 40/258 A of 18 December 1985 in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session proposals for the review of the system of desirable ranges with a view to achieving a balanced application of all factors relevant to the calculation of the desirable ranges, including the population factor,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the system of desirable ranges for the geographical distribution of staff in the Professional category and above,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit updated calculations on desirable ranges for all Member States, taking into account the views expressed by Member States at the current session and, in particular, the following criteria:

(a) The desirability of the base figure for the calculations being related to the actual number of posts subject to geographical distribution;

(b) The movement towards the establishment of parity between the membership and contribution factors;

(c) The direct allocation of posts subject to the population factor of 7.2 per cent to Member States in proportion to their population;

(d) The need for flexibility upwards and downwards from the mid-point of the desirable ranges;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to present proposals thereon to the General Assembly with a view to reaching a decision at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 41/206 C

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/950) without vote, 10 December (meeting 461; draft by Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.24), following informal consultations; agenda item 117.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 27-30, 32, 33, 35, 37, 39, 44-46; plenary 101.

The Fifth Committee Chairman had first submitted a draft⁽¹⁷⁾ later withdrawn, which would have had the Assembly recall, rather than reaffirm, the resolutions enumerated in the preamble; request the Secretary-General, in paragraph 1, to continue to examine the question of desirable ranges, and, in paragraph 2, to present proposals and recommendations in 1987. Subsequently, Bolivia, Burundi, China, India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan and Uganda submitted, and withdrew later, a draft⁽¹⁸⁾ which, as orally revised, would have had the Assembly request the Secretary-General to calculate new desirable ranges for all Member States, to apply from 1 January 1987, on the basis of a series of specific initial criteria—relating to the membership, population, contribution and other factors—which were enumerated. Further, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to report in 1987 on the implementation of those measures, and decided to review at its forty-fifth (1990) session the question of new desirable ranges, with a view to achieving a balanced application of the concept of parity.

A number of countries explained their positions on the question of parity that would give equal weight to the membership and contribution factors in deciding on desirable ranges.

Several States—among them, Canada, Denmark (also on behalf of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), France and the United Kingdom—said they would have preferred the first preambular paragraph to recall, rather than reaffirm, the 1979 Assembly resolution, section I of which, the United States pointed out, 33 States had voted against.⁽¹⁹⁾ Canada and Japan expressed similar views. Benin and Burundi felt there should have been specific reference to section I, while Algeria understood that the paragraph reaffirmed all sections of the 1979 resolution.

Viewing the concept of parity as an evolving one, Japan asserted that all three factors should be considered in detail and the specific weight assigned to the population factor should be subject to negotiation. The United States did not view the parity concept as an accepted principle, nor did the United Kingdom, which asserted that most States were seeking the highest possible desirable ranges along with the lowest possible rates of contribution; it would not favour parity unless the basis for calculating the scale of assessments became more technical and objective. The Federal Republic of Germany did not support reducing the weight of the contribution factor.

Belgium considered the movement towards parity a general trend to take into account. France understood the objective of paragraph 1 (b) to be a gradual movement towards a concept of parity; Nigeria also felt the concept could best be achieved gradually.

The Nordic countries understood paragraph 2 to mean that the Assembly would decide in 1987

what decision it wanted to take. Japan and Nigeria saw a positive element in deferring action until 1987, noting that by that time delegations would have information on the number of posts on which to base the calculation.

China, India, Indonesia, Nepal, Pakistan and Trinidad and Tobago, expecting the Assembly to decide on the question in 1987, suggested that the Fifth Committee give the question a thorough examination by taking it up first at the session; India was joined by Burundi in expecting the decision to hold good for at least five years. Algeria expected parity to be established to redress what it viewed as the inequitable system of desirable ranges currently in use. Uganda hoped that the updated calculations requested in paragraph 1 would show a real departure from the current figures. The Philippines expected the Secretary-General's report to reflect greater parity. Kenya said the concept of parity was an established principle, and understood paragraph 1 (b) as reaffirming the need to move towards that principle in an orderly fashion and paragraph 2 as referring to a final decision. Tunisia felt that the text should have identified a time frame for achieving the goal.

Burundi and Indonesia understood that the views expressed at the 1986 session, as referred to in the text, included those contained in the draft they had proposed⁽¹⁸⁾ Guinea wondered if the Assembly would have time in 1987 to discuss both desirable ranges and the proposed programme budget for the coming biennium.

Status of women in the Secretariat

In an October 1986 report on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat⁽²⁰⁾ submitted in response to a 1985 General Assembly request⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the constraints caused by the financial crisis of the Organization had presented additional obstacles to the task. There had been a considerable net loss of women in the Professional category, the recruitment freeze had made all recruitment plans and targets redundant, and career opportunities were reduced as possibilities for reassignment decreased.

The Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat—comprising high-ranking officials, including the Co-ordinator for the Improvement of the Status of Women—began work in March, holding consultations with managers and senior staff and hearing the views of staff representative bodies and advocacy groups; its first report was presented to the Secretary-General in July. The Committee's recommendations, which the Secretary-General accepted, were listed in his report, along with his observations. The Committee recommended, among other things, that efforts be made to appoint more women in the Principal Officer (D-1) category and above; that special guidelines be issued to enhance the career development of women; that exceptions to the recruitment freeze or to the quota for geographical distribution, if made at all, be granted to women; and that a vacancy management system be introduced and used to identify qualified women.

Among a number of longer-term measures recommended by the Committee were the development of a skills inventory of all women in the Organization and its integration into the data base of the Office of Personnel Services for career planning purposes; the intensification of management and supervisory training at all levels, where modules should be created relating to the status and role of women in the Organization; special efforts to provide occupational training opportunities to General Service staff; creation of a mentor system to provide newly recruited women with informal guidance and advice on the inner workings of the Organization; and reserving 50 per cent of the available posts for women in the event the national competitive examinations were resumed.

The Secretary-General noted further that the Steering Committee's immediate task ahead included the designing of a complete system for monitoring all aspects of women's employment in the Organization, thereby providing the tools needed for a continuous process of self-evaluation in the Secretariat. As regards the five work-plans he had presented to the Assembly in 1985 for the first phase of the action programme⁽²²⁾—covering recruitment, career development, training, conditions of service and grievance redress—the Secretary-General reported that the special measures introduced to absorb the impact of the financial crisis had necessitated the adjustment of the work-plans to focus on career development and training, although their thrust had been maintained.

The Group of 18 recommended that the Secretariat additionally ensure that an increasing proportion of the posts in the Professional category, particularly at the higher levels, were filled by women, in accordance with the relevant Assembly resolutions on personnel questions (recommendation 46).(4)

ICSC expressed the hope that, where exceptions could be made to the recruitment freeze, women would be selected.⁽¹²⁾ It recommended that United Nations organizations reaffirm their commitment to increasing the number of Professional women and their presence in senior policy-level posts; that those organizations that had set targets reassess them in the light of progress achieved; and that those having difficulty in recruiting women waive procedural criteria. Further, it recommended that ACC's Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions—which had organized a meeting of senior recruitment officers at Geneva in May—should report separately on women staff in all categories of its annual personnel statistics so that information would be available system-wide for monitoring purposes.

Commenting on the work of ICSC, FICSA asserted that efforts should be increased in technical organizations to search for qualified women candidates and that a staff/management body should be established to set goals and monitor progress. CCISUA added that it was regrettable that little attention had been paid to the conditions of service of women once recruited or to the problems of women in the General Service category. To give women an equal opportunity for career development, staff representatives⁽¹⁾ suggested a number of measures, including the use of vacancy announcement, an increase in the number of posts at the junior Professional level, instructing departments that at least 30 per cent of the candidates recommended for promotion be women, and re-evaluation of the standards for classification of secretaries.

During 1986, the Secretary-General appointed two women at the USG level, one to head the Department of Public Information and the other as Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1986, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1986/19.

Women in the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985 on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which the Assembly, inter alia, emphasized the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 40/258 B of 18 December 1985 on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,

Recalling further section III of General Assembly resolution 40/244 of 18 December 1985, concerning the introduction of special measures for the recruitment of women by the organizations of the common system,

Convinced that without the active support of Member States the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace concerning women in the United Nations system will not be achieved,

1. Affirms that the full participation of women in the work of the organizations of the United Nations system, especially at policy-making levels, in substantive occupations and in technical co-operation activities, is essential as a means of bringing the experience of women to bear on all aspects of the policies and programmes of the organizations that shape global development;

2. Emphasizes that the presence of more women in all substantive areas of the organizations, including technical co-operation activities, will help those organizations to attain the objective of responding more effectively and efficiently to their mandates and to their responsibilities towards society as a whole;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and, through him, the other executive heads of organizations participating in the United Nations system to improve the status of women in those organizations, particularly by strengthening their presence in policy-making positions, substantive occupations and technical co-operation activities, and by creating a climate more conducive to the advancement of women, and to establish accountable management practices to this end;

4. Calls upon Member States to continue to support the efforts of the organizations of the United Nations system to increase the participation of women at the policy-making level and in their substantive programme activities by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/19

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) without vote, 20 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without vote a resolution and a decision on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/206 D on 11 December.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 8 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also article 8 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,⁽²³⁾

Recalling further its previous resolutions on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, in particular its resolution 40/258 B of 18 December 1985,

Reaffirming its relevant resolutions on the need to increase both the overall number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution and the proportion of women at the senior and policy-making levels,

Concerned at the low proportion of women in senior and policy-making posts,

1. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to improve the status of women in the Secretariat and notes his appointment of two women at the Under-Secretary-General level;

2. Takes note of the first progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, in particular section I of the report, which contains the measures accepted by the Secretary-

General, on the recommendation of the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat, to overcome the current constraints;

3. Endorses the development of monitoring and accountability systems covering all aspects of the employment of women in the Organization and takes note of the special priority given to these matters by the Secretary-General in section III of his report;

4. Stresses the importance of the recommendations of the Steering Committee, accepted by the Secretary-General, which are aimed at enhancing the career development prospects of staff at all levels, in particular at the General Service level, and looks forward to a report on the effects of their implementation;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution with a view to achieving, to the extent possible, an overall participation rate of 30 per cent of the total by 1990, without prejudice to the principle of equitable geographical distribution of posts;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to make every effort to appoint more women to senior decision-making positions throughout the Organization on as wide a geographical basis as possible and from all groups of Member States;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on progress made in meeting the objectives of each of the five workplans set out in the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fortieth session and to make recommendations thereon for further appropriate action;

8. Reiterates its request to Member States to continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to increase the proportion of women in the Professional category and above by, inter alia, nominating more women as candidates.

General Assembly resolution 41/206 0

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/950) without vote, 9 December (meeting 45); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.21, part D), following informal consultations; agenda item 117.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 27-30, 32, 33, 35, 37, 39, 44-46; plenary 101.

On 11 December, by decision 41/463, the Assembly took note of paragraph 20 of the report of the Fifth Committee,⁽²⁴⁾ by which the Committee requested the Secretary-General to include in his 1987 report the following information for 1985-1986: the number of promotions of men and women in posts subject to geographical distribution; the distribution by department or office and by grade of women in technical co-operation posts at the beginning and end of the period; the distribution of women consultants engaged during the period; and the number of men and women participating in the work of personnel advisory boards.

The paragraph, as originally proposed by the Committee Chairman,⁽²⁵⁾ would have had the Assembly, rather than the Committee, request the information. A similar draft decision by Burundi, Canada, Denmark and Ireland⁽²⁶⁾ was subsequently withdrawn.

Related resolution: GA 41/207, section IV.

General Service staff

The Secretary-General submitted in November 1986 a report on the situation of the staff in the General Service category,⁽²⁷⁾ pursuant to General Assembly requests of 1984⁽²⁸⁾ and 1985.⁽²⁹⁾ The first part of the report provided statistical information on the staff in the General Service and related categories at the main duty stations (New York, Geneva, Vienna, Nairobi (Kenya), Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Baghdad (Iraq), Bangkok (Thailand), Santiago (Chile)). The second part gave information on policies followed in those duty stations with respect to classification of posts, recruitment, career development, training and promotion.

The number of General Service staff in the Secretariat totalled 8,605—56 per cent female and 44 per cent male—as at 31 January 1986. Occupational groups included secretarial and typing (30.2 per cent of the total), general administration (16.5 per cent), personnel management, finance, electronic data processing, language, library, printing and publishing, public information, statistics, records and mail, telecommunication, trade and craft, and security and safety.

Job classification

In November 1986, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly's Fifth Committee reports on the classification of posts in the General Service and related categories in New York⁽³⁰⁾ and Geneva.⁽³¹⁾

As regards New York, the Secretary-General stated that the classification of all posts in those categories had been completed, following a review of those posts on which agreement had not been reached before Assembly consideration in 1985, by joint staff-management review groups and subsequently by the Classification Appeals and Review Committee, which examined and established classification levels of 505 of the 666 cases brought to its attention. As a result, 2,798 regular budget posts, for 1986-1987, had been classified in the following categories: 2,254 posts in General Service (grades G-1 through G-7), 212 in Security Service (S-1 through S-7), 316 in Trade and Craft (TC-1 through TC-8) and 16 posts in the Professional category (P-1/P-2). The figure did not include 51 posts of Public Information Assistants and Tour Co-ordinators. Fifty-one per cent of the classified posts had been upgraded, 42 per cent had remained the same and 7 per cent had been downgraded.

Financial implications, relating to posts classified at levels higher than the grades of incumbents, were estimated at $3,254,000 (General Service and related categories) and $206,000 (posts converted to the Professional category), for a total of $3,460,000 for 1986-1987.

At Geneva, the initial classification phase had been completed and the Joint Committee on Classification took on the appeals process, recommending that nine posts be upgraded to the principal level of the General Service category (G-7). After consultation with the Headquarters Classification Unit, three additional posts belonging to the Library Service had been upgraded to the P-2 level. Financial implications for 1987 totalled $21,000, which was to be absorbed under existing appropriations. The reductions of 27 "temporary principal level" posts proceeded on schedule as the incumbents retired or transferred to other posts, and the number of such posts was expected to be 13 as at the beginning of 1987.

ACABQ⁽³²⁾ in submitting its views to the Assembly on the reports of the Secretary-General, expressed concern over the procedures used in, and implications of, the classification exercise in New York. Among other things, it was not convinced that a systematic attempt had been made to audit or verify job descriptions, which had been submitted by each staff member. In many cases, programme managers had not been consulted to verify the job descriptions they had certified, nor were their views sought as to the requirements of their office, and the information on how the exercise benefited a more effective career development system was not clear or specific. ACABQ, believed that, while there was justification for rejecting the whole exercise, such a course of action would make the situation worse; hence, it would not object to the Assembly's approval of the exercise as it applied to General Service posts G-1 to G-6 and to all posts in related categories. However, it recommended that all posts proposed for the G-7 and Professional levels be approved at the G-6 level until they could be examined on a case-by-case basis in connection with the proposed programme budget for 1988-1989. ACABQ had no objection to the Secretary-General's proposals with regard to Geneva.

In March, ICSC⁽¹²⁾ considered the progress in job classification in New York; reiterated its request to the United Nations that it arrange for the timely submission of draft classification standards for the General Service at Baghdad and Santiago; and promulgated, with immediate effect, the benchmark standards developed for the General Service in small and medium-sized field offices. In July, it considered the final report of the Vienna-based organizations on the development of job classification standards and promulgated the common classification standards for the General Service and related categories at that duty station.

Both CCISUAP and the Secretariat staff representatives⁽¹⁾ expressed regret that the classification exercise, intended to realign grade levels to ensure equal pay for equal work, had not been implemented in New York, while it had been implemented at Geneva since 1983, within the United Nations Children's Fund since 1985 and within UNDP since January 1986. They asserted that a statistically significant sampling of job descriptions had been evaluated to ensure that posts had been classified at the correct level; to delay implementation would be damaging to staff morale and to the efficient operation of the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/209, section IX.

Job classification of the General Service and related categories

[The General Assembly . . .]

Approves the proposals of the Secretary-General relating to the job classification of the General Service and related categories in New York and in Geneva;

General Assembly resolution 41/209, section IX

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 101-19-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954), 3 December (meeting 40), as follows: proposals for New York (A/C.5/41/30) by recorded vote (67-21-231); proposals for Geneva (A/C.5/41/34), without objection; agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 35, 40; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Austria, Barbados, Canada, Congo, Fiji, France, India, Israel, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malaysia, New Zealand, Romania, Singapore, Spain, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Uganda, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Morocco proposed that the Committee approve the Secretary-General's recommendations on job classification in New York, rather than those of ACABQ, adding that the Secretary-General should have flexibility in staff administration, and social justice and staff morale had to be upheld. The Committee adopted the proposal by recorded vote, at the request of the United States.

In explanation of vote, the United States said ACABQ had detailed the inconsistencies and inadequate job description audit process in the classification exercise; it could not accept the Secretary-General's proposals or believe that, under the existing system, 51 per cent of jobs were undergraded and only 7 per cent overgraded; and it objected to having little choice but to decide on the question under the pressure exerted by the 1985 Assembly decision⁽³³⁾ to implement the results of the exercise retroactively, effective on 1 January 1985. The United Kingdom could not agree even to ACABQ's recommendation for partial implementation of the exercise, which it said had been influenced by steps already taken by related organizations in New York and by the political difficulties inherent in further delay.

The USSR considered it unfortunate that ACABQ, which had seen justification for rejecting the exercise, had been moved by other considerations to take a different decision that was unforgivable in view of the Organization's financial straits. Still less acceptable were the Secretary-General's proposals; similar recommendations emanating previously from the Secretariat were to blame for the current financial crisis.

Faced with the dilemma of choosing between social justice and ACABQ's recommendations, Portugal voted against Morocco's proposal to discourage conducting future exercises in a similar manner. Italy would have supported the Secretary-General's proposals if they had been applied in accordance with ACABQ's recommendations; it had voted against the Moroccan proposal because it believed that the expert body's findings should not go unheeded. France shared the views expressed by Portugal and Italy. Japan supported ACABQ's recommendation as being reasonable and preserving the Secretary-General's prerogatives, while upholding the authority of Member States.

Nigeria, Trinidad and Tobago and Uganda said the Assembly had deferred a decision in 1985 so as to benefit from ACABQ observation, which it was now ignoring; Nigeria considered the ACABQ report good and helpful and the latter two delegations expressed dissatisfaction with the exercise and the manner in which it had been carried out in some organizations or programmes and not in others. Singapore shared the view, and further agreed with Nigeria that the vote on the exercise was not a referendum on the Secretary-General's authority. Canada agreed with Singapore and Trinidad and Tobago. Hoping that the Secretary-General would review his proposals and correct the anomalies in them, Zambia would abstain.

While agreeing with the views of Nigeria and Trinidad and Tobago, Algeria and Benin supported the Moroccan proposal, with Algeria believing that the Secretary-General's prerogatives should prevail over those of Member States. Egypt believed the Secretary-General should be allowed flexibility and freedom of action. Brazil shared the views of ACABQ but, believing it was impossible for the Secretariat to submit a more satisfactory report by the 1987 session rectifying the problems that had arisen in the classification exercise, supported adoption of the Secretary-General's proposals.

Reclassification of staff members in both General Service and Professional categories had to be included in the 1988-1989 programme budget, Jamaica said, and therefore it reluctantly supported all the Secretary-General's proposals. The Philippines said that to delay adoption of those proposals would be unfair to staff members, although it shared ACABQ's misgivings. While voting in favour of the Secretary-General's proposals, Kenya and Nepal hoped that ACABQ's observations would be taken into account. Ireland noted with concern the ACABQ finding that it would be difficult to reverse what had already happened; partial implementation, however, would not make matters any better. Mexico and Sweden (on behalf of the five Nordic countries) supported the Secretary-General's proposals in the interests of social justice. The Nordic countries, however, felt the proposals left a great deal to be desired and a rejection of the entire exercise, therefore, would have been a logical conclusion. Tunisia said that international civil servants had been waiting to benefit from the classification exercise and that the Secretary-General would not have made the proposals if they did not support the interests of the staff.

Career development

A new career development plan for the General Service and related categories in New York was outlined by the ASG for Personnel Services in a November information circular to staff members.⁽³⁴⁾ The plan, organized by occupational groups, would enable staff to move within as well as across such groups, which were being identified through the classification exercise. The plan's effectiveness was to be reviewed after one year of operation.

Under the plan, career development committees, established along occupational lines, would replace the existing appointment and promotion panels and become operational when the classification exercise was implemented. They would make general recommendations to the ASG for Personnel Services and review the qualifications of staff members for transfers and promotions. In addition, a vacancy announcement procedure would be introduced, career paths would be defined with the aim of affording a minimum career progression of three promotions during a staff member's career, and career counselling would be provided. The Office of Personnel Services was considering expanding the scope of the external studies programme and developing new arrangements for performance evaluation.

Staff Rules

In August 1986, the Secretary-General submitted his annual report⁽³⁵⁾ containing the texts of provisional amendments made to the Staff Rules of the United Nations since the previous report in 1985.⁽³⁶⁾ The changes—applicable to all staff except technical co-operation project personnel, staff members specifically engaged for conferences and other short-term service and special interns—concerned the special education grant for disabled children, to reflect a 1985 Assembly recommendation;⁽³⁷⁾ entitlement to reimbursement of pre-departure expenses; an installation grant in the case of service on mission assignments; additional entitlement to excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments; and composition of the Joint Disciplinary Committee. Provisional amendments applicable to staff members specifically recruited for service with technical co-operation projects concerned the education grant, travel expenses, education grant travel, and excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments.

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 41/464, taking note of the report of the Secretary-General.
