Foreword

THIS VOLUME is much more than a random collection of dry facts—it is one more chapter in a vital and dynamic record. Like all good records, the Yearbook of the United Nations has its own drama and significance, and this may be particularly so for this volume in which the first signs of the prelude to the end of the cold war are already perceptible.

The year 1986 saw certain specific events that were immediately recognized as having consequences which would continue and expand in future years. The adoption of a declaration on the right to development was given practical meaning by a special session of the General Assembly on Africa, which revealed an evolving but already far-advanced agreement among Member States on the fundamentals of economic and social development. There was also the beginning of the effort to achieve a cease-fire in the war between Iran and Iraq.

These are but two among many examples contained in this Yearbook, of the United Nations at work in support of the goals, ideals and hopes of humanity. This volume is for any reader who wishes to know how the nations of the world make use of the United Nations to feed children, end conflicts, protect refugees, promote human rights and preserve the environment. He or she will find here accounts of people helping people, of diplomacy, and of successes and set-backs. Yet through all the crowded happenings and complex issues, the trend of the international efforts and events is clearly towards a world of peace, justice and human dignity to which we are committed under the United Nations Charter.

About the 1986 edition of the Yearbook

The 1986 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS has been designed as a reference tool for use by all who might need readily available information on a particular activity of the United Nations system. It covers, during a calendar year, the main activities of the United Nations (Part One) and those of each related organization in the United Nations system (Part Two).

The book is subject-oriented. Part One, containing 49 chapters, is divided into five major sections: political and security questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, and administrative and budgetary questions.

Each chapter is divided into a hierarchy of topics. The assignment of headings implies no editorial judgement about the relative importance of a topic.

Structure and scope of articles

Presented under each topical heading is a summary of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities, and the views of States in written communications. The 1986 edition also gives the position of those States explaining their votes in the principal organs of the Organization. Such explanations are generally given when a recorded vote was taken. At the end of each chapter or subchapter is a list of REFERENCES, linked by numerical indicators to the text. These references indicate document symbols, previous Yearbook volumes supplying additional information, and previous resolutions and/or decisions by the principal United Nations organs. The Yearbook covers the following:

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, with information on their adoption, are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. Where mention is made of other resolutions and decisions, highlighted in bold-face type, the full text or summary can be found by using the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS at the end of this volume. Major reports. Most 1986 reports of the Secretary-General, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly. The document symbols of all reports cited appear in the REFERENCES.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For all major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given on contributions and on expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund, and cover the 1986 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized under the most relevant topic.

All substantive debates in the Security Council have been analysed and their main points can be found under the pertinent topic(s). Users wishing details on the position of individual States in the principal organs of the United Nations or any of their main/sessional committees should refer to the meeting numbers to be found at the end of the summaries of procedural action following resolution/decision texts.

Related intergovernmental organizations. Part Two of the Yearbook briefly describes the 1986 activities of each specialized agency, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, based on information prepared by them.

Texts

The Yearbook reproduces the texts of all resolutions and decisions of a substantive nature adopted in 1986 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving: date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text. The texts of resolutions and decisions of a purely procedural nature are not reproduced, but are summarized and their numbers given in bold type.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references; they have no official standing.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1986 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities in a number of ways.

By subject: Broad subjects may be located in the table of contents on pages vii-xiv. Each chapter opens with an introduction highlighting the main developments. Where a main topic is subdivided, shorter introductions may precede such subchapters. Cross-references give chapters for related information. The SUBJECT INDEX may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each.

By body: Although the Yearbook is oriented mainly by subject rather than by body, surveys of the work of many bodies appear under the topic of their main concern. For the principal organs, APPENDIX IV gives the agenda for each 1986 session. The members, officers, and date and place of sessions of each body are given in APPENDIX III. The SUBJECT INDEX lists bodies by the key word(s) of their formal title: "Apartheid, Special Committee against".

By resolution and decision number: A numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1986 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text, appears in the final pages of this volume.

Resolution/decision texts appear in an article together with the circumstances of their adoption. Other related resolutions or decisions may be listed where applicable.

Other information: The 1986 report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization is reproduced, beginning on page 3. A list of Member States, with their dates of admission to the United Nations, comprises APPENDIX I. The Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice, is in APPENDIX II. An INDEX OF NAMES follows the SUBJECT INDEX.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Part One of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1986 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/41/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-first session, beginning with A/41/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/Q- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1986/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1986 sessions, beginning with E/1986/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1986/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1983, with 101 (decision 1986/101).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2181(LIII) of the fifty-third session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme
UNITAR/-	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/CEPAL/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/CN.14/-, E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.86.V.4; E/F/R.86.II.E.8; E.86.IX.3.

United Nations

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 9 September 1986. The Assembly took note of it on 3 November (decision 41/410).

In 1985, the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations was marked with a far-reaching and rigorous examination of the role the Organization has played during 40 years of epochal change. While opinions differed as to the strengths and weaknesses in the performance of the Organization, there was notable unanimity in acknowledging the continuing validity of the principles of the United Nations Charter and the need to strengthen the United Nations so that it might better meet the needs of the future. In my own statement to the Commemorative Session I suggested that the impressive observance of the anniversary had set the stage for a fresh beginning in efforts to overcome stalemates on major issues and in strengthening that structure for international co-operation which is the United Nations. I cautioned, however, that devotion to the principles of the Charter needed to express itself in concrete action and not only in rhetoric.

Regrettably, in marked contrast to sentiments expressed during the fortieth anniversary, 1986 has witnessed the United Nations subjected to a severe crisis challenging its solvency and viability. Precisely at the time when renewed efforts have been called for to strengthen the Organization, its work has been shadowed by financial difficulties resulting primarily from the failure of Member States to meet obligations flowing from the Charter. It is essential to lift this cloud so that the United Nations can, both now and in the longer term, be that strong constructive force in world affairs that is vitally needed in our increasingly interdependent world. The strengthening and revitalization of the present structure of multilateral institutions is critical to the resolution of problems confronting the international community relating to peace, security and development. To ignore this necessity is to imperil the future prospects of a better world.

Various factors have contributed to the present difficulties of many multilateral organizations. We are still adjusting to the new and uneasy distribution of forces in the world resulting from the Second World War, from the revolution of decolonization, from demographic and technological changes, from the mixed patterns of global development and, of course, from the advent of nuclear weapons. The United Nations is representative of this complexity, often simplistically explained in terms of the "North" and "South", "East" and "West" or the "Third, Second and First Worlds". The United Nations should be, and is, a central element in bringing, through peaceful means, the necessary adjustments in the precarious relationships involved. The intractability of many problems, however, and the altered structure of the world community have given rise in some quarters to a sense of considerable frustration and even a misplaced nostalgia for earlier and simpler times. A trend has been evident towards unilateralism and away from the emphasis on multilateral problem-solving characteristic of the post-War period.

The United Nations system has not always been effective in counteracting such tendencies. Nor has there been the kind of intense international crisis, such as we last faced in 1973, which reminds Member States of the crucial value of the United Nations in times of Great Power confrontation. Yet in a world where the destinies of all countries are almost certain to become ever more closely linked, there can be no substitute for an effective multilateral system in the maintenance of international peace and security and in the co-operative management of global problems. It is in looking ahead at the characteristics of the future world society as they are now emerging that we can most clearly perceive the increasing need for effectively structured multilateral co-operation.

For this reason, I believe that the present time should be propitious for renewal and revitalization of the international system. The upheavals and fundamental changes of the post-War decades have begun to settle into a more discernible and coherent pattern. For all the differences of ideology and practice, we are witnessing the emergence of a widening constituency of basically pragmatic Governments with a firm grasp of the economic, social and technological characteristics of our time as well as of its more traditional political and military aspects. I believe that this constituency can, and will, play an important part in the rationalization and strengthening of the multilateral system. This, moreover, by unanimous decision of the General Assembly, is the International Year of Peace, a major purpose of which is to encourage the strengthening of the United Nations as a central element in assuring peace in the coming decades.

In this perspective, I believe it useful to look ahead, in this final report of my five-year term as Secretary-General, and to examine the performance and the potential of the United Nations in terms of those present problems which are likely to endure and of the new demands which the future will pose.

If we are to rise to the challenge of the future, it is surely of the highest importance to bring to an early end those conflicts which have long brought terrible tragedy to the countries and people directly involved and inhibited the growth of international confidence needed for the resolution of broader global problems.

Let us look briefly at the conflict situations of 1986:

In the Middle East, despite efforts from many sides to advance the search for a just and lasting settlement, there is at present an alarming absence of a generally acceptable and active negotiating process. Experience shows all too clearly that such a stalemate encourages resort to extremism and risks the recurrence of wider violence. A way must be found to initiate, as soon as possible, a negotiating process with the participation of all concerned. I still believe that the machinery of the United Nations, suitably adapted if necessary, can be a useful and acceptable framework for this purpose. There is now a wide measure of agreement that peace in the Middle East can best be achieved through a comprehensive settlement that would cover all aspects of the conflict, including the question of Palestine. This, and the common ground in the various proposals that have been made, should provide the basis for substantive negotiations.

The United Nations has, of course, been intensively engaged in the Middle East in an effort to maintain some degree of stability and thus promote the achievement of a settlement. This effort has not been without heavy cost. During the current year, the United Nations peace-keeping force in Lebanon has pursued its duties under constant and growing danger. Brave soldiers have lost their lives as they carried out their mission of peace. I wish to pay tribute to the dedication, fortitude and discipline of the contingents of all the peace-keeping forces in the region and to express appreciation to all the countries that have contributed soldiers and logistic support to these operations. These forces serve a vital purpose: they serve to reduce and mitigate violence and to create, or preserve, conditions in which peace may be sought. Their sacrifices impose an obligation on all of the parties concerned to work constructively and compassionately for stability and peace in the region, an obligation that includes refraining from hostile actions and co-operating unreservedly with the peace-keeping forces in the service of the mandates entrusted to them by the Security Council. It is particularly important at this difficult time that these peace-keeping operations should continue to receive the support of the Security Council—in particular, of all its permanent members. I would add that the vital work of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East has also had to be carried out under extremely difficult circumstances. The work has gone ahead, however, as it must, and continues to merit, and need, the financial support of all States.

The United Nations continues to be engaged in intensive efforts towards a negotiated solution of the situation relating to Afghanistan. While valuable progress has been made, I must emphasize that delays in the successful conclusion of these negotiations can only aggravate the suffering of the Afghan people. Political decisions of considerable importance have to be taken if this diplomatic process is to yield positive results. Such results would also favourably affect a far wider range of international relationships.

The Secretary-General's long-standing good offices on the Cyprus problem have reached a critical stage. It has not been possible, however, to take the steps towards a settlement that were suggested in the draft framework agreement that I presented to the parties this past spring. Various recent events and the absence of forward movement have regrettably contributed to an increase of tension on the island. The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus plays a vital role in keeping this under control. To assure this role as long as it may be required, it is essential that a satisfactory solution be found to the Force's financial difficulties. Meanwhile, I expect to meet with both sides during the forthcoming weeks and I sincerely hope that we will find a way to build upon the enormous amount of work devoted to the search for an overall solution of this problem.

The United Nations has also been extensively involved in the efforts undertaken at various levels to resolve the question of Kampuchea and improve the situation in South-East Asia as a whole. These efforts have not so far met with success, although the humanitarian assistance extended by the Organization has done much to alleviate the plight of the Kampuchean people. Last year, I visited the region with the objective of encouraging progress towards a comprehensive political settlement. Since then, some convergence has emerged on the basic objectives of such a settlement, but significant differences persist on the ways to achieve them and on the procedure for negotiations. I believe that there can be no military solution. Confrontation must ultimately give way to a process of genuine negotiations without pre-conditions. I am also convinced that, with the co-operation of those concerned, the good offices of the Secretary-General can be used to facilitate the initiation of this process and contribute to the restoration of peace and stability in this region that has endured such long suffering.

The situation in Central America has steadily deteriorated with the increasing intrusion of conflicting ideologies, the attempts to impose unilateral solutions to the problems of the region and the resort to force. The tireless efforts of the Contadora Group, with the more recent backing of the Support Group, have helped in preventing the outbreak of a generalized conflict, but agreement which would bring peace to the region is yet to be achieved. I believe that only by insulating the Central American situation from the East-West conflict and seeking a Latin American solution that takes account of the economic and social needs of the area can a genuine settlement be achieved. This requires the support of all countries with interests in the region.

The prolonged war between Iran and Iraq, with its mounting and fearful toll of young lives, is a source of deep distress and of perilous tensions in the region. It poses, too, an ever-present risk of expansion. The United Nations has been able to lessen to some extent the cruellest aspects of this conflict. It has not, however, found the means to bring the war to an end. I recall with gratitude, in this connection, the dedicated service of the late Olof Palme who did all in his power as representative of the Secretary-General to restore peace. Unflagging efforts must continue towards that objective, but far-sightedness on both sides constitutes a decisive and inescapable condition for the success of such efforts.

The United Nations is frequently criticized for failing to prevent or end the conflicts I have mentioned, as well as the many others that have broken out since its establishment. Such criticism often fails to take account of the most useful work done by the United Nations in helping to limit the expansion of conflict and in providing the possibility for negotiations or debate, which can reduce the inclination towards armed exchange. Still, there is no doubt that the inability of the United Nations to avoid, or resolve, many of the armed conflicts between Member States seriously affects the credibility of the Organization in the eyes of the public on whose support the vitality of the United Nations ultimately depends. No serious assessment of the potential of the Organization for the future can omit this basic shortcoming and the reasons for it.

I have sought in my previous annual reports to the General Assembly to suggest measures which might make the United Nations—and one must speak in this regard primarily of the Security Council—more effective in dealing with the threat, as well as the reality, of armed conflict. Essentially two requirements must be met: first, the permanent members of the Security Council, especially the two most powerful, must perceive that, notwithstanding bilateral differences and distrust, it is in their national interest to co-operate within the Security Council and, within this framework, to apply their collective influence to the resolution of regional disputes. Secondly, all Member States must perceive in far greater measure that the existence of an authoritative and representative international organ capable of maintaining peace and security is in their individual as well as the common interest and that, therefore, its decisions must be respected.

Both of these aims, of course, would be achieved through universal compliance with the provisions and intent of the Charter. We have thus seen the fortunate outcome when, recently, two Member States, France and New Zealand, in faithful accord with Chapter VI of the Charter, turned to the United Nations Secretary-General for assistance in resolving a dispute that had seriously disrupted their relations. Earlier, in the spirit of this same Chapter, two permanent members of the Security Council, China and the United Kingdom, in statesmanlike fashion, reached a far-sighted agreement on the future of Hong Kong. I believe, too, that the co-operative efforts of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations in seeking a settlement to the Western Sahara problem, as recommended by the General Assembly in resolution 40/50 of 2 December 1985, show the value of expanded collaboration between regional organizations and the United Nations in dealing with regional disputes.

The General Assembly, of course, also has an important role in developing the conditions for regional and global peace. In order to enhance its effectiveness in the years that lie ahead, some modification in the Assembly's own working methods may be desirable. It is, I believe, the general experience that the important purposes of the Assembly under the Charter are seldom served by intemperate rhetoric or excessive repetition. The Presidents of the General Assembly who met on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary agreed on most practical suggestions which the Assembly should seriously consider and act upon.

The common well-being of the world's population will depend heavily in the remaining years of this century on the success achieved in global development and in the reduction of the disparity in the conditions of life within the international community. The adverse effects of inadequate development will not be limited in the future to the poorer countries. It will be increasingly universal. For instance, we see at present the wide impact of the external debt problem. Solutions are needed in the interest of creditor and debtor nations alike. The problem has unavoidable human dimensions in both. To take another example, it is already evident that high population growth in areas of limited employment opportunities will encourage, and even impel, massive migration to areas offering better expectations. In an eventuality of this nature the stability of the developing and developed countries become ever more interdependent.

As this interdependence is increasingly recognized, it has resulted paradoxically in some ambivalence with regard to multilateral economic co-operation. Many countries feel that greater interdependence results in diminished control over their own destinies. The balance of interests among domestic groups can be, and has been, disturbed by the very rapidity with which interdependence has grown. These currents are reflected in the difficulties being encountered by multilateral organizations in dealing with the very serious problems of the global economy. But the problems of interdependence will neither go away nor lend themselves to unilateral handling. If the world economy is to return and hold to the path of healthy and well-spread growth and development, policy and systemic measures are necessary in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt and trade.

These measures can only be successfully planned and implemented on a multilateral basis. Therefore the role of multilateral organizations is bound to be of critical importance. This imposes on them a heavy responsibility to combine their capacities in co-ordinated programmes. The Economic and Social Council, in accordance with its mandate under the Charter, needs to take the lead in assuring the co-ordinated application of resources to the most urgent economic problems on both a global and regional basis. I would emphasize in this connection that, while there are specialized forums to deal with sectoral issues, the role of the United Nations is unique and important: it provides a universal forum in which these issues can be considered in an interrelated manner within a comprehensive context; and it can provide, if correctly utilized, the necessary political impulse for concerted action by States.

In order to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to exercise clear leadership in the economic area, it would be extremely helpful if Member States could agree on a practical means of identifying those issues which are relatively more important and timely for intergovernmental consideration. In this way the dissipation of attention and resources that occurs at present in repetitive deliberations in the United Nations on an ever-expanding range of issues could be avoided. I would suggest, with this in mind, that consideration be given to convening a short ministerial session of the Economic and Social Council to identify the subjects in the economic field that should receive priority attention during a given period of time. Should such a meeting be held, I believe it will be useful to keep in mind the large degree of consensus which now exists on practical ways of revitalizing development and accelerating growth. Specific policies and measures which would achieve these objectives should be identified and agreed upon. In this regard, I am gratified to note that Governments are proceeding constructively in preparations for the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

The recent special session of the General Assembly on the critical economic situation in Africa showed in a most positive way the results that can be achieved through multilateral co-operation when commonly agreed objectives are brought into a cohesive multilateral approach. The necessary follow-up action to this session must be pursued energetically by Governments as well as intergovernmental bodies. If this is done, there is every reason to expect that the present disparity between growth rates in Africa and the other regions of the world will be substantially reduced before the end of the century. In opening up this prospect the United Nations has decisively demonstrated both the special potential of multilateral co-operation on a broad problem transcending national boundaries and its capacity, as a universal organization, to mobilize such co-operation now and in the future.

The continuing technological revolution has brought change to almost all aspects of human existence. It provides hope that the essential global development to which I have alluded can be achieved. But it also raises the profound question of whether the international community has the aggregate ability to manage safely, and to common advantage, the inventions of the human mind. The United Nations needs here to pursue three broad objectives: to assist in bringing the relevant new technologies to all countries where they can be of use in promoting development; to encourage the widest possible co-operation in dealing with the dangers as well as the advantages inherent in technological advances; and to provide the multilateral structure for the management of possible adverse consequences of the new technologies, which may affect the international community as a whole. There have been promising multilateral achievements in each of these areas. They should be pursued and expanded.

The International Atomic Energy Agency, which throughout its existence has demonstrated the effectiveness of multilateral co-operation in promoting and monitoring the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, this year is playing an essential role in enhancing international co-operation in the field of nuclear safety to prevent nuclear accidents or mitigate the effects should such an accident occur. Government experts completed by consensus this August two draft conventions on early notification and emergency mutual assistance for adoption at a special session of the General Conference of IAEA. There have been suggestions that the role and activities of IAEA in nuclear safety be strengthened and expanded. I believe this merits early, positive consideration. Not unrelated is the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, which will take place in March of 1987 under the favourable auspices of recently intensified contacts on this subject.

New technologies have brought with them the reality of human activities in outer space and on the deep sea-bed, which until recently were largely isolated from human use. The very absence of national borders affords a special opportunity for multilateral understandings on the peaceful utilization of these vast areas in ways that will serve the common good. It is noteworthy in this connection that this year, for the first time in several years, substantial progress was made in the development of an international political and legal framework for using outer space for global development. The set of legal principles relating to remote sensing from space, which will be before the present session of the General Assembly for adoption, should promote the use of space technology for developing and protecting our natural resources and ensure that all countries have access to that technology for their own economic and social advancement. This agreement represents a small but encouraging step towards a spirit of co-operation in a field which has been primarily a scene of confrontation and distrust for some years.

In a comparable way, the International Sea-Bed Authority, for which preparations are going forward, can make possible the utilization of new technology for the future exploitation of the mineral resources of the deep sea-bed to the common global advantage.

Outer space and the deep sea-bed have until now been kept free from nuclear deployment. This is a major achievement of multilateral diplomacy and, I would add, of human wisdom. It should under no circumstances be jeopardized.

The operational agencies of the United Nations, while generally experiencing reduced resource availability, have continued to bring the benefits of technology to the developing countries. The significant increase in the number of development programmes and projects executed at the request of Member States by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, especially in areas at the frontier of technology, is a welcome indication of the importance attributed by Member States to moving ahead in this area. It is generally recognized, I believe, that transnational corporations can also play a positive role in bringing advanced technology to developing countries. There continues to be a need, however, for a multilaterally agreed code of conduct to assure that the interests of the host countries as well as of the corporations are protected. Member States are now close to agreement on a text. I would urge that the necessary final effort for agreement be made quickly on a fair and mutually advantageous basis.

These examples of United Nations activity relating to modern technology suggest its future potential in accomplishing the three objectives I have listed. Our purpose must be sustained and unswerving: technological advances must be so used as to serve peaceful ends and to meet the widest possible human needs.

The advent of nuclear weapons very evidently represents something more than one aspect of a technological revolution. Nuclear weapons have defined a new age of profound anxiety. As long as they exist, nuclear weapons will entail the risk of totally unacceptable destruction to life and to human achievement. The goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons, on which all Member States have agreed, must be upheld and energetically pursued. Pending its realization, the risk inherent in the existence of nuclear weapons must be progressively decreased through drastic reduction in the numbers and destructive content of nuclear arms; through limitations on their deployment and further development; and through the complete prohibition of nuclear testing.

It is evident that only the nuclear-weapon States themselves, especially the two most powerful, can take the basic decisions required for the limitation and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons. Through the possession of these weapons, they have assumed a grave responsibility towards humanity as a whole, which, through their use, could be destroyed. I believe that, in welcoming the continuing high-level discussion between the Soviet Union and the United States on various aspects of nuclear disarmament, the international community can justifiably expect that they will be pursued with a full sense of this awesome responsibility.

Given their importance for the entire world community, issues of nuclear disarmament also require multilateral study and negotiation just as do those in the non-nuclear field. The question of nuclear testing, in particular a comprehensive test ban, must continue to be dealt with on a priority basis in the Conference on Disarmament. Negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the complete prohibition and destruction of chemical weapons merit, and are, I believe, receiving high priority. I shall not review here the many other disarmament questions of vital importance that are on the Conference's agenda. Rather, I should like to put forward for the consideration of the Assembly the following points with regard to the role and capacity of the United Nations over the coming years in this most crucial field:

The Conference on Disarmament affords a uniquely representative negotiating forum, which is essential for the completion of multilateral disarmament agreements. It will serve the world well in the future, as it has in the past, if it continues to receive the high-level attention and expert participation of Member States.

The work of the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs in defining common attitudes, mobilizing support and providing analyses in the disarmament field will also remain of high importance. There is, however, a risk to which I have pointed before, that the impact of the Assembly's efforts will be reduced through lack of focus and inadequate economy in their execution. The United Nations influence will be enhanced if discussions in its various disarmament forums can be so organized as to minimize duplication and reduce the number of resolutions.

As indicated in my last annual report, the ability of the Organization to assist in verification and compliance arrangements should be explored both in the nuclear and non-nuclear fields. As a related step in the interest of international security, I would suggest that consideration be given to the establishment of a multilateral nuclear alert centre to reduce the risk of fatal misinterpretation of unintentional nuclear launchings or, in the future, the chilling possibility of isolated launchings by those who may clandestinely gain access to nuclear devices.

Finally, a further means of achieving practical disarmament is through agreements on the expansion of denuclearized areas and of areas not used for military purposes. Any moves in the opposite direction, which would bring military deployment where it does not now exist, can only have adverse implications for disarmament prospects and for international security.

When the United Nations was founded, the majority of the world's population was still under colonial rule. Now only a tiny minority remains in this status. The United Nations, throughout its history, has done much to facilitate the decolonization process and to assist the newly independent countries to assume control of their affairs and to begin the demanding tasks of social and economic development. Through the Trusteeship Council the United Nations has, additionally, presided over the self-determination of 10 Trust Territories. I hope that it will be possible for the eleventh and last to emerge soon from trusteeship.

The task of decolonization is thus well advanced, but still not complete. Some of the remaining colonial Territories are, or could become, the cause of serious international conflict. In cases where bilateral negotiation does not succeed, the United Nations will continue to afford the best means of resolving differences, working as appropriate with the relevant regional organization.

The most urgent remaining problem of decolonization is certainly that of Namibia, for which the United Nations bears direct responsibility. All the conditions for implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia laid down by the Security Council have been met. The United Nations has long been prepared to carry out its extensive role in the transitional arrangements. Yet, Namibia is still unjustly denied the right of self-determination because of illegal perpetuation of control by South Africa, which continues to insist on the extraneous linkage to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. A concerted effort needs to be made to gain the co-operation of South Africa in the immediate implementation of the United Nations plan. The problems of southern Africa are deep and varied. The United Nations will need to assist in their alleviation for many years to come. The particular problem of Namibia, however, is ripe for solution now. Delay can only increase instability and violence in the region and unnecessarily prolong the suffering of Namibia's inhabitants.

The first task of the United Nations in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms as called for in the Charter was to define these rights and freedoms in authoritative form. This process has been extraordinarily comprehensive and successful. The focus of United Nations activities in this field has gradually moved from definition to the promotion of respect for the rights as defined. It must be expected that this movement will continue and expand during the remaining years of the century. With the coming into effect of the International Covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and on Civil and Political Rights (the latter with its Optional Protocol), the capacity of the United Nations to pursue this sensitive but important task has increased substantially. I believe that a human rights mechanism that will be able gradually to bring wider respect in practice for the rights which Member States have, de jure, long accepted is now functioning within the United Nations.

I am pleased to note in this connection a slowly growing tendency towards co-operation by Governments within the framework of the emerging supervisory system. Two recent positive steps warrant mention: the adoption in 1984 of the Convention on Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment providing, as it does, for an additional monitoring mechanism; and the taking root of the institution of special rapporteurs appointed by the Commission on Human Rights to look into specific country situations and alleged violations such as disappearances, summary executions, torture and religious intolerance. For example, a Special Rapporteur on Religious Intolerance has been charged to examine in all parts of the world incidents inconsistent with the provisions of the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion or Belief. This is the direction of the future.

For the present, however, we still face the reality of widespread and egregious infringement of human rights, a reality that casts shame on our era. No form of infringement is more widely encompassing or abhorrent than that of apartheid.

Apartheid is, in reality, far more than a problem of human rights abuse. It is a problem with tenacious racial, political and economic roots—one that jeopardizes the stability and security of an entire region. Only the total elimination of apartheid will restore peace to South Africa and to southern Africa as a whole. The General Assembly and the Security Council have on many occasions advocated practical measures to accelerate the process of dismantling apartheid. While some progress has been made, it is far too slow and restricted. The United Nations as an organization, and its Member States individually, need to exert every possible influence to persuade the South African authorities that time is running out for a negotiated settlement which could serve the best interests of all the inhabitants of South Africa and, indeed, of that region as a whole. In the meantime, not surprisingly, the demand for additional measures, including sanctions, has gained momentum. A process of consultations has begun in this connection in the United Nations. It is essential for the international community to intensify the pressure for peaceful change. Additionally, there is need to strengthen, through concerted action, the States of the region that are victims of South African acts of harassment and destabilization. They must be helped to overcome their vulnerability and reduce their economic dependence on South Africa.

The emergence of a new distribution of forces to which I referred at the beginning of this report has brought with it the need and opportunity for profound social adjustment as well as the social tensions associated with societies in flux. The United Nations throughout its history has been deeply involved in encouraging recognition of emerging needs—to protect the environment, to respect the equality of women, to recognize and respond to the needs of children, to develop a global perspective on population growth. In the coming years the United Nations will be challenged to sustain the leadership it has provided in these areas and to further the very substantial progress that has been made. There will need to be continuing investment in the skills, institutions and processes that can enable us to cope with complexity and rapid change. Within the Secretariat some structural adjustment may need to be undertaken to tighten management and co-ordination of programmes in the social area.

The refugee flow has been a particularly disturbing result of the political, economic and social changes of recent years. At present, over 10 million refugees remain under the care or protection of the United Nations. This is a mammoth service to desperately needy people and to international stability as well. As political systems mature and regional conflicts are resolved, I would hope that the number of refugees will decline. Even if the refugee problem abates somewhat, however, the United Nations may well be called upon to deal with new problems connected with mass migration for economic and related reasons to which I alluded earlier. Intensified, well-directed development strategies now, of course, could lessen the likelihood of this eventuality or reduce its potential dimensions.

While neither terrorism nor illegal traffic in narcotics is new, both problems have assumed proportions that reflect extreme societal tensions. Both result from a profound confusion of moral values and are encouraged by disorientation in a world made insecure by conflict and deprivation of rights, by poverty and despair. They threaten not only the health and safety of individuals but also the stability of governmental structures and the very fabric of societies. Not all the causes of these two grave phenomena can be dealt with by multilateral means. Yet they are both problems that transcend frontiers and have direct relevance to international security. They are accordingly being addressed with increased attention within the United Nations.

During the past year both the Security Council and the General Assembly took the very important step of condemning terrorism in all its forms, thus authoritatively denying to it any justification under any circumstances. These resolutions express authoritatively a universal consensus against the victimization of innocent people, involved in no way as partisans in a political struggle, through cruel, unjustifiable and counterproductive acts. Continuing and intensified international co-operation will be needed, however, to combat this evil. I would again, in this connection, urge all Member States that have not yet done so to ratify the conventions adopted in the United Nations on particular aspects of terrorism, such as the taking of innocent hostages and to continue to build on, and widen, the basis for action.

The United Nations has also taken important steps to combat drug abuse and illicit traffic in drugs. There has been a heartening response to my proposal that the United Nations convene, in June 1987, the first global conference to deal with all aspects of drug abuse and illicit trafficking. Preparatory work is under way to ensure that agreement is reached on practical and concerted action to be taken by the international community, Governments, non-governmental organizations, communities and even individuals. Some steps have already been taken. In July, the United Nations convened the first interregional meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies dealing with drug-related problems. The draft of a new convention, aimed at improving international co-operation and filling existing gaps in international law to combat illicit trafficking in drugs, has been completed by the competent unit of the United Nations and is now in the hands of Governments. The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control is rapidly expanding its assistance to Member States and international agencies in their efforts to combat cultivation, traffic in, and abuse of illegal drugs. This scourge has become so deadly and widespread that further forms of co-operative international efforts may well be needed. While I fully recognize the sensitivities involved, I wonder, for example, if Member States have yet adequately considered the possibilities of a strengthened global enforcement capability, which might reduce the need for Governments to rely on other types of control.

In the preceding sections of this report I have described the contribution I believe the United Nations can make to solving the problems we shall face as we move into the next millennium. If the United Nations is to make that contribution, it will have to have a solid foundation of commitment and support from Member States. The intergovernmental machinery and the secretariat which services it must be structured and administered in a way to maintain the confidence of Member States. The Organization must be financially sound and provided, in accordance with the relevant Articles of the Charter, with the resources needed to implement the mandated programmes.

These conditions are not met at the present time. This year the United Nations has confronted the most severe financial crisis in its history, the immediate cause of which is the failure of a number of Member States to meet their financial obligations under the Charter. It is not yet clear whether the United Nations will remain solvent throughout the remainder of the year. If it does, this will in no way mean that the financial crisis will have been overcome. On the contrary, it must be anticipated that 1987 will begin with a larger accumulated deficit than 1986 and with reserves still depleted.

It is, I believe, necessary to look squarely at the underlying causes of the financial problem. They are first and foremost political and for this very reason have implications for the Organization far beyond the state of its finances. Differences of views concerning programmes of work of the United Nations have prejudiced not only the budgetary process but also the readiness of some Member States to place reliance in the United Nations as a major instrumentality for positive regional and global change. The resolution of serious political conflicts long on the United Nations agenda, to which reference has been made earlier, would serve greatly to reduce the differences with regard to the budget. In the absence of such basic political change, Member States need to make greater efforts, in a manner consonant with the Charter, to accommodate differences through compromise and restraint in reaching broad agreement on budget programmes and priorities. Any change in procedures related to the budget that might facilitate such broad agreement encompassing, also, the amount of resources required, would be a major step towards assuring the capacity of the United Nations to deal effectively over the coming years with the broad range of problems that can only be resolved through multilateral means.

While the underlying causes of the budgetary problem of the United Nations are political, the structural and administrative efficiency of the United Nations is also unquestionably an important factor. There have been frequent allegations that the Organization is too large, unnecessarily complex and excessively expensive. The General Assembly at its fortieth session established the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to conduct a thorough review of the administrative and financial matters of the United Nations with a view to identifying measures for further improving the efficiency of its administrative and financial functioning, which would contribute to strengthening its effectiveness in dealing with political, economic and social issues. The analyses and recommendations of this Group will certainly receive the careful attention of the Assembly and will, I hope, lead to a stronger Organization enjoying wider confidence among Member States. For my part, I believe that at the present time, when the future of the United Nations so evidently depends on greater support, commitment and utilization by all Member States, certain points need to be made:

A functioning world organization exists. It consists of intergovernmental machinery and an international secretariat to service it. The intergovernmental machinery has grown and become ever more complex in response to new global problems. The Secretariat has also grown, primarily as a result of the demands of the more extended intergovernmental machinery it must service. This growth has been rapid and, to an extent, excessive both in numbers and rank. Some orderly reduction at all levels is needed. Beyond that, however, unless there is some parallel consolidation and rationalization of the intergovernmental machinery and a dearer sense of priorities in mandated programmes, reduction of Secretariat staff cannot but have an adverse effect on the services expected by intergovernmental bodies and the membership as a whole.

The Secretariat embraces a remarkably integrated international staff that has repeatedly shown the capacity to meet the most demanding situations and to provide, on a sustained basis, highly competent service to the Organization. During the past year staff members have demonstrated loyalty and fortitude in accepting economy measures directly affecting their well-being. To maintain the effectiveness of the United Nations over the coming years, I consider it crucial to maintain employment conditions that will allow the United Nations to attract and retain employees of the highest competence, efficiency and integrity. To seek to solve the Organization's financial difficulties at the expense of staff entitlements would be extremely short-sighted and counter-productive, and would have widespread adverse implications for the common system. The mandate of the International Civil Service Commission to advise the Assembly on the conditions of service throughout the system should be respected.

Respect for the status of international civil servants is essential to a Secretariat that will enjoy the confidence of Member States. There should be no distinction among staff members based on nationality. As provided in the Charter, staff members, in turn, must refrain from any action that might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

There is need for improved management of the Secretariat at all levels. A principal task for the Secretary-General in the coming years will be to assure that management skills are given high priority in recruitment and in training.

Good management will require greater mobility of staff, and an effective system of career development. This must be accompanied by improved prospects for women in the Secretariat. The General Assembly has set the goal that, by the year 1990, 30 per cent of professional posts subject to geographic distribution should be occupied by women. At present we have reached just under 25 per cent. Progress towards the 30 per cent goal has been made more complicated by the financial necessity to freeze recruitment and defer promotions, but its attainment must be seen as a matter of high importance for the future.

It will be of much importance to maintain a constructive relationship between staff, through their elected representatives, and management, and a climate of mutual confidence. This is of special value in a period of difficult financial retrenchment.

The re-examination of structure, staff and procedures, which is taking place, should be carried forward with these points in mind. If this is done, there is a good prospect of a tighter, less costly Secretariat in the years ahead. Member States, for their part, will need to act to rationalize the intergovernmental machinery and the application of priorities; they will also need to accept the implications of any staff reduction. The present year has demonstrated anew and in very stark terms, however, that the overriding element in the financial, as well as political, viability of the United Nations is compliance by Member States with the provisions of the Charter. For a good many years, the financial situation of the United Nations has been difficult because of the failure of a number of Member States to meet the financial commitments that are an inherent and binding part of United Nations membership. The debilitating effect of this long-lasting emergency was not seen as critical because, until this year, to the extent that it applied to the regular programme budget, the deficit could be covered by reserves. This year the very operation of the United Nations has been placed in jeopardy because, with reserves depleted, it has been confronted with the likelihood of the withholding by the principal contributing State of a substantial portion of its assessed contribution to the regular budget. From the experience of the present year it is all too evident that without a strong and reliable financial foundation, anchored in respect for the Charter, the United Nations can be crippled in meeting the needs and opportunities of the coming years. This would surely be contrary to the interests of the entire membership and of the peoples of the world.

I should like to conclude this report with some personal observations on the role of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the post which I have been privileged to occupy during the last five years, and on the Organization itself.

It is the Secretary-General's duty to offer guidance and assistance in all the areas discussed in this report. He must try to present concepts and approaches that will evoke a convergence of views among Member States on political issues and be active, through the various forms of good offices, in seeking to prevent conflicts and to resolve disputes. In the vast field of global economic and social problems, the Secretary-General should project a vision of the future and indicate the priorities by which that vision might be made a reality. He must seek to bring about the implementation of the relevant decisions of the various intergovernmental bodies. As Chief Administrative Officer, he must guide and control the Secretariat so as to provide the best possible service to the Organization and its Member States.

In these manifold activities, the Secretary-General needs not only to be guided, himself, by the principles of the Charter; he must also uphold them publicly as spokesman for the concept of a just and peaceful world which the United Nations embodies—a world in which States will act within an accepted legal order with respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law. He needs either to speak out publicly or to work through quiet diplomacy, as most useful in his judgement, on those issues which can prejudice the goals established by the founders of the United Nations. In all situations, the Secretary-General has to proceed with and through the Member States, which alone can provide him with the political support and authority he needs to operate effectively.

In my years in this Office, I have had the deep satisfaction of receiving strong and consistent support from the membership. Many tasks accorded to me imply a high degree of confidence in the role of the Secretary-General. I believe that some positive results have been obtained although not, certainly, to the extent I would have liked. I feel compelled, however, to express some concern over a tendency to view the Secretary-General in some circumstances as somehow separate and apart from the rest of the Organization. To express full confidence in the Secretary-General while failing to give the necessary support to the Security Council or to work constructively in the General Assembly to bring conflicting positions into greater consonance is fundamentally contradictory. Such a dichotomy cannot be conducive to the realization of the full potential of the Secretary-General's position or, far worse, that of the Organization as a whole. I am convinced that the continuing and enhanced effectiveness of the United Nations depends above all on the readiness of Member States to see the whole of the United Nations as the necessary structure for dealing with the transcendent problems of an interdependent world.

For my part, I have found in the countries and cities, in the academic institutions and the public organizations that I have visited as Secretary-General, truly remarkable support for the United Nations and faith in its purposes. There is an evident longing that it succeed in its mission of peace. I have found at the same time that the extent of knowledge of the activities in which the United Nations is engaged is insufficiently appreciated and that there is sometimes a distorted image of the manner in which the Organization operates. Persistent, tendentious criticism of the United Nations by relatively small groups has affected confidence in the effectiveness, if not the goals, of the Organization. There is today a need for a more vigorous and determined defence by those who believe, as I firmly do, that the complex problems of an increasingly interdependent world can only be solved with the help of effective multilateral action—that the safety net which the United Nations constitutes for the world's security should not be allowed to become tattered. If the hopes and aspirations which the peoples of the United Nations enshrined in the Charter are to be fulfilled, multilateralism, as embodied in the United Nations, needs its champions; they must speak more boldly and knowledgeably. Such champions are to be found not only amongst the Governments of Member States. They exist in all walks of life, including academic institutions and the world media. I wish, in this connection, to refer specifically to the many non-governmental organizations which share the goals and, in many instances, the work of the United Nations. I am convinced that, in the coming years, the United Nations will need to place even greater emphasis on close communication and co-operation with these organizations. They constitute an essential extension of the capacity of the United Nations to reach its global constituency.

In ending this closing report of my term, I would like finally to state that the United Nations system, while imperfect as any human undertaking must be, offers almost unlimited potential for the creation of a strong and durable foundation for peace and for the well-being of the world's population. I believe it to be of the utmost importance for all nations that this instrumentality be constructively supported and wisely utilized, and that the provisions of its Charter be universally respected, in the interest of a safe and harmonious passage to the next millennium.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

Disarmament

The year 1986 was marked by intense disarmament activity, both within and outside the United Nations, largely continued from the previous year, or earlier in the case of most international and multilateral efforts.

For its part, the General Assembly adopted 65 resolutions and two decisions on arms limitation and disarmament, deciding to convene in 1988 a third special session on disarmament.

The International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, which was to have met in Paris in July/August 1986, was rescheduled for New York in 1987. In September, at Geneva, the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction reaffirmed the significance of the instrument.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa became operational in 1986, and the Assembly decided in December to establish a regional centre in Latin America in 1987.

Major disarmament bodies continued work on much the same topics as in previous years. The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-nation disarmament negotiating forum at Geneva, continued work on, among other things, a comprehensive programme of disarmament and prevention of an arms race in outer space. The Assembly, in December, requested the Conference to commence negotiations on a draft convention on the non-use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances and to establish a subsidiary committee to carry out multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions. The Disarmament Commission, a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, formulated draft guidelines on confidence-building measures and made progress in its work on a set of governing principles in freezing and reducing military budgets.

Outside the United Nations framework, the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe agreed in September on ways to improve confidence-building. The USSR and the United States held a summit meeting in October at Reykjavik, Iceland, where they agreed in principle on a number of aspects, but not on the entire package, regarding nuclear and space arms issues.

General aspects

Communications. In 1986, the Secretary-General received a number of communications, from countries individually or in groups, calling for arms control and disarmament. Many of the communications dealt with the ongoing USSR-United States negotiations. (Communications on other specific topics are dealt with under the appropriate heading in this chapter.)

On 15 January,⁽¹⁾ the USSR proposed a three-stage programme for eliminating nuclear weapons by the year 2000; announced a three-month extension of its unilateral moratorium, which had expired at the end of 1985, on all nuclear explosions; and called for the non-deployment of weapons in outer space, elimination in Europe of all intermediate-range ballistic and cruise missiles of the USSR and the United States, complete elimination of chemical weapons and agreed reductions in conventional weapons and armed forces. Highlights of those proposals were reiterated in a 20 February message from Mikhail S. Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR, to participants in the Conference on Disarmament.⁽²⁾ Support for the proposals was expressed by Mongolia on 20 January⁽³⁾ and by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 31 January.⁽⁴⁾ In a foreign policy report to the Twenty-seventh Congress of the Communist Party of the USSR, on 25 February,⁽⁵⁾ the General Secretary said the United States had responded to the proposals with reservations and conditions which blocked progress.

In a joint message of 28 February⁽⁶⁾ the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania called on their counterparts in the USSR and the United States to refrain from nuclear testing in the period leading up to the next anticipated summit meeting and reiterated their offer of assistance in verification. In his 13 March response⁽⁷⁾ the USSR General Secretary announced that the USSR would extend its moratorium beyond 31 March, until the first nuclear explosion by the United States. That pledge was repeated on USSR television on 29 March.⁽⁸⁾

On 21 March,⁽⁹⁾ China's Premier Zhao Ziyang called for, among other things, a simultaneous and balanced reduction and on-the-spot destruction of medium-range nuclear missiles deployed in Europe and Asia by the USSR and the United States, and prohibition of space and chemical weapons under international agreements; China also declared that it had not conducted nuclear tests in the atmosphere for many years and that it would no longer conduct atmospheric tests in the future.

An underground nuclear explosion, reportedly conducted on 10 April in Nevada by the United States, was protested by the USSR on 11 April⁽¹⁰⁾ and by Mongolia on 15 April.⁽¹¹⁾ The USSR declared itself released from its unilateral moratorium in order to safeguard its own security and that of its allies. In a 1 May reply⁽¹²⁾ to an 8 April message by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, the USSR General Secretary again protested against the provocative United States acts of nuclear explosions on 10 and 22 April in Nevada.

Japan transmitted the text of the 5 May Tokyo Declaration entitled "Looking forward to a better future",⁽¹³⁾ in which the participants at the Tokyo Economic Summit (Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States) (4-6 May) expressed support for balanced, substantial and verifiable reductions in armaments.

Reporting on a nuclear accident at the Chernobyl atomic-power station, the USSR General Secretary stated in a 14 May televised address⁽¹⁴⁾ that the world's accumulated nuclear arsenals were "the stuff of thousands upon thousands of disasters far more terrible than Chernobyl"; in addition, he announced an extension of the USSR moratorium on nuclear testing until 6 August. The Prime Minister of Greece⁽¹⁵⁾ responded to the Chernobyl accident on 8 May by calling for the freezing of nuclear tests, transparency of control of all reactors, automatic information exchange on developments occurring in nuclear plants, and cessation of breeder reactor construction.

On 31 May,⁽¹⁶⁾ claiming that the United States had announced on 27 May its refusal to comply with the USSR-United States strategic arms limitation agreements, the USSR declared that, as soon as the United States exceeded the established level of armaments or otherwise violated the agreements, it would consider itself free from the related commitments under the 1972 Interim Agreement on Certain Measures with respect to the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms and the 1979 SALT II Treaty, also limiting strategic offensive arms. On 28 July, at Vladivostok,⁽¹⁷⁾ the USSR again called for the elimination of the medium-range missiles in Europe and proposed disarmament and security measures for Asia and the Pacific. Later, it transmitted the text of an interview given by its General Secretary to a Czechoslovak newspaper on 8 September,⁽¹⁸⁾ focusing on the USSR moratorium on nuclear explosions.

In the Mexico Declaration, adopted on 7 August at Ixtapa,⁽¹⁹⁾ and in letters addressed to the leaders of the USSR and the United States, the leaders of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania suggested that their experts meet to discuss implementation of the six-nation proposal and other possible ways to facilitate test-ban verification. In his 23 August response,⁽²⁰⁾ the USSR General Secretary accepted the proposals for verification assistance, provided that the other party did likewise, agreed to the experts meeting, and expressed readiness to work towards the banning of armaments from outer space.

In an 18 August statement on USSR television,⁽²¹⁾ the General Secretary declared the extension of the USSR moratorium on nuclear explosions until 1 January 1987, asserting at the same time that the United States had conducted 18 nuclear explosions since the moratorium had been declared on 6 August 1985—the fortieth anniversary of the atomic explosion over Hiroshima. Mongolia,⁽²²⁾ on 25 August, welcomed the USSR declaration.

At a press conference at Reykjavik, Iceland, at the conclusion on 12 October of the USSR-United States summit meeting,⁽²³⁾ and in two USSR television addresses—on 14⁽²⁴⁾ and 22 October⁽²⁵⁾—the USSR General Secretary stated that his country had proposed a mutual agreement on non-withdrawal for the next 10 years from the 1972 Treaty it had signed with the United States on the limitation of anti-ballistic missile systems (ABM Treaty), prohibition of an outer-space ABM defence system (except for research and tests conducted in laboratories), and complete elimination by the end of 1996 of strategic offensive weapons. He announced that agreement was reached, at the summit, on the reduction of strategic arms and medium-range missiles, but not on the prohibition of the development and testing of space weapons. He asserted that the United States position was dictated by the military-industrial complex that profited from the arms race; that the United States wanted to exhaust the USSR economically through an arms race involving the most costly space weapons; and that the United States strategic defence initiative (SDI) had become the main obstacle to ending the arms race, eliminating nuclear weapons and progressing towards a nuclear-free world.

On 13 October, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States, summing up the Reykjavik talks,⁽²⁶⁾ said SDI was a non-nuclear defence that guaranteed security for the United States; that the United States had proposed to proceed in the coming 10 years with SDI research, development and testing, in conformity with ABM Treaty provisions; and that, with all ballistic missiles eliminated by the end of that period, the United States could proceed to deploy advanced defences, permitting the USSR to do likewise.

On 21 November,⁽²⁷⁾ the USSR transmitted the text of an appeal by its Supreme Soviet for a nuclear-free world, addressed to the parliaments and peoples of the world, in which it reiterated its disarmament proposals. On 27 November, the leaders of India and the USSR, meeting at New Delhi, issued a Delhi Declaration on principles for a nuclear-weapon-free and non-violent world.⁽²⁸⁾

On 18 December,⁽²⁹⁾ the USSR cautioned that it would resume nuclear testing after the first nuclear explosion conducted by the United States in 1987, alleging that, while its moratorium had been in effect, the United States had conducted 20 officially announced and 4 unannounced nuclear-weapon tests.

The Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, Morocco, 6-10 January)⁽³⁰⁾ adopted resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, nuclear-weapon-free zones and the security of non-nuclear-weapon States.

The States parties to the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance, in a statement transmitted by Bulgaria on 9 April,⁽³¹⁾ and in a communiqué by their Foreign Ministers (Bucharest, 14 and 15 October), transmitted by Romania,⁽³²⁾ expressed support for creating nuclear- and chemical-weapon-free zones in the Balkans, and in Central and northern Europe. Support for creating chemical- and nuclear-weapon-free zones was also expressed by Bulgaria,⁽³³⁾ in the Balkans, and by the German Democratic Republic,⁽³⁴⁾ in Central Europe; Romania⁽³⁵⁾ favoured a chemical-weapon-free zone in the Balkans. The Warsaw Treaty's Political Consultative Committee (Budapest, Hungary, 10 and 11 June)⁽³⁶⁾ stressed the defensive nature of their alliance and proposed—to all other European countries, Canada and the United States—a series of disarmament measures aimed at a 25-per-cent reduction in the land forces and tactical air forces of both alliances in Europe by the early 1990s.

The Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April)⁽³⁷⁾ declared that, in view of the importance of disarmament for the survival of humanity, the agreed and planned United Nations programmes in that field should be kept intact despite the Organization's current budgetary problems. In the Harare Appeal on Disarmament,⁽³⁸⁾ adopted at the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September), the participants called on the USSR and the United States to seek substantive agreements in disarmament, including the prevention of an arms race in outer space and a moratorium as a first step towards a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty. On 4 November,⁽³⁹⁾ the USSR transmitted the comments of its General Secretary on the appeal. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of non-aligned countries to the forty-first session of the General Assembly (New York, 2 October)⁽⁴⁰⁾ urged the two major Powers to take into account, at the Reykjavik summit, the vital interests of all peoples of the world.

Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted the Delhi Statement,⁽⁴¹⁾ adopted on 19 January by the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues, chaired by Sweden's Prime Minister Olof Palme. The so-called Palme Commission supported the USSR disarmament proposals of 15 January, considered that creating a nuclear battlefield-weapon-free corridor in Europe would foster confidence-building, and discussed regional security measures in the third world. Subsequently, the Commission, at the close of its Budapest meeting (24-26 October),⁽⁴²⁾ urged the USSR and the United States to continue the process begun in Reykjavik and to strengthen the ABM Treaty. Support for the USSR's 15 January disarmament proposals was expressed also by the International Seminar on the Struggle for Peace and Progress (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 7-9 June), organized by the World Peace Council.⁽⁴³⁾

Mexico transmitted the resolutions adopted at the Seventy-fifth Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Mexico City, 7-12 April),⁽⁴⁴⁾ in which the participants appealed to parliaments of all States to support the earliest possible verifiable elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons and the reduction of conventional armaments. Romania transmitted appeals for disarmament and peace, made by its Grand National Assembly on the International Year of Peace (4 April),⁽³⁵⁾ the Third Congress of Workers (4-6 September)⁽⁴⁵⁾ and the National Council for Science and Education (30 October).⁽⁴⁶⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In his 1986 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General welcomed the continuing high-level discussion between the USSR and the United States on various aspects of nuclear disarmament. At the same time, he urged exploration of the United Nations ability in assisting in verification and compliance arrangements, and suggested that consideration be given to establishing a multilateral nuclear alert centre to reduce the risk of fatal misinterpretation of unintentional nuclear launchings. A further means of achieving practical disarmament, he believed, was through agreements on expanding denuclearized zones and areas not used for military purposes.

Comprehensive approaches to disarmament

In 1986, the international community generally reaffirmed that the United Nations had a central role and primary responsibility in the disarmament field. In addition to the activities of various intergovernmental disarmament bodies, this section deals with a number of measures taken to follow up on the decisions adopted at the 1978 and 1982 special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, as well as developments relating to a proposed world disarmament conference.

As the Second Disarmament Decade passed its half-way mark, the Secretary-General, as requested by the Assembly in 1985,⁽¹⁾ submitted a report in October 1986⁽²⁾ containing the replies received from eight Governments and the 12 member States of the European Community (EC) on measures taken to implement the Assembly's 1980 Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade.⁽³⁾

UN disarmament bodies and their activities in 1986

United Nations disarmament efforts continued in 1986 mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary organ of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, at its 1986 session in New York, held eight plenary meetings between 5 and 23 May.⁽⁴⁾ It also met on 1 December to organize its work and elect officers for 1987.

Its agenda included items on aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament; reduction of military budgets; South Africa's nuclear capability; review of the United Nations role in disarmament; curbing the naval arms race; and elaboration of guidelines for confidence-building measures.

The Commission established a Committee of the Whole, which in turn set up a contact group to deal with aspects of the arms race and elaboration of a general approach to disarmament negotiations. The group held eight meetings between 7 and 21 May under the chairmanship of Miguel A. Alborno (Ecuador), using as a basis for its work the 1985 compilation of proposals for recommendations on that item, taking also into consideration a working paper submitted by a group of socialist States on "Basic issues of nuclear and conventional disarmament". Unable to reach consensus on a complete set of recommendations, the group recommended that the Commission continue efforts in 1987; the 1986 compilation of proposals was annexed to the Commission's report to the Assembly.

In addition, the Commission established a working group for each of the other agenda items, except for the naval arms race and confidence-building measures, on which the Commission held consultations in seven and eight meetings respectively. Details of the Commission's discussion of these questions can be found elsewhere in this chapter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 4 December, adopted resolution 41/86 E without vote.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking into account the relevant sections of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979, 35/152 F of 12 December 1980, 36/92 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, 38/183 E of 20 December 1983, 39/148 R of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 F of 16 December 1985,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes that the Disarmament Commission has yet to conclude its consideration of some items on its agenda, but notes also with appreciation that the Commission has transmitted to the General Assembly for consideration draft guidelines for the appropriate type of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level, and that progress has also been achieved on other items;

3. Recalls the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

4. Stresses the importance for the Disarmament Commission to work on the basis of a relevant agenda of disarmament topics, thereby enabling the Commission to concentrate its efforts and thus optimize its progress on specific subjects in accordance with resolution 37/78 H;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations, at its 1987 substantive session, on the outstanding items on its agenda, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly as well as the results of its 1986 substantive session;

6. Requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1987 and to submit a substantive report, containing specific recommendations on the items included in its agenda, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the forty-first session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-member multilateral negotiating body, met at Geneva from 4 February to 25 April and from 10 June to 29 August 1986.^(c) Holding 49 formal and 35 informal meetings, it considered a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

The Conference re-established ad hoc committees—on chemical weapons, on 6 February; radiological weapons, on 4 March; and prevention of an arms race in outer space, on 24 April. The Conference President noted on 6 February that there was no need to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament and that its Chairman would continue to preside over that subsidiary body. Details on those questions are discussed elsewhere in the chapter.

The Conference continued to consider, but did not take action on, the possibility of increasing its membership by four States—two to be nominated by the group of 21 (the non-aligned and neutral States within the Conference—Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire) and one each by the socialist and the Western States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the report of the Conference on Disarmament (41/86 M and P) and a third on participation in the Conference's work by non-members (41/86 J).

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/86 M by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December 1981, 37/78 G of 9 December 1982, 38/183 I of 20 December 1983, 39/148 N of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 M of 16 December 1985,

Recalling also the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and on the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Reaffirming that the establishment of ad hoc committees offers the best available machinery for the conduct of multilateral negotiations on items on the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament and contributes to the strengthening of the negotiating role of the Conference,

Deploping the fact that, despite the repeated requests of the General Assembly and the expressed wish of the great majority of members of the Conference on Disarmament, the establishment of an ad hoc committee on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament was once again prevented during the 1986 session of the Conference,

Deploping also the fact that the Conference on Disarmament has not been enabled to set up ad hoc committees under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", and on the prevention of nuclear war,

Noting with satisfaction that further progress has been made in the negotiations on the elaboration of a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

1. Expresses its deep concern and disappointment that the Conference on Disarmament has not been enabled, this year either, to reach concrete agreements on any disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years;

2. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work, to further its mandate more earnestly through negotiations and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in particular those relating to nuclear disarmament;

3. Once again urges the Conference on Disarmament to continue or to undertake, during its 1987 session, substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and other resolutions of the Assembly on those questions;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to provide the existing ad hoc committees with appropriate negotiating mandates and to establish, as a matter of urgency, the ad hoc committees under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and on the prevention of nuclear war;

5. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, without further delay, negotiations with a view to elaborating a draft treaty on a nuclear-test ban;

6. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its work with a view to completing negotiations on a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Spain, Turkey.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said that in recent years the language of the drafts on the subject had become unbalanced and it regretted that the sponsors had failed to discuss the text with all Conference members. Australia, asserting that the text drew selectively from arguments made in drawing up the 1986 report of the Conference and that that approach was not acceptable because it was inevitably distorted, said action on the report should be by consensus.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/86 P also by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant portions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in particular paragraph 120,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, should play a central role in the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which the Conference adopted by consensus,

1. Takes note of the report on the 1986 session of the Conference on Disarmament;
2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;
3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

^a Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

^b Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The sponsors' oral revision of the text deleted an operative paragraph by which the Assembly would have called on the Conference to continue, in 1987, working on all its agenda items, taking into account the 1978 Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁾ including the priorities contained in paragraph 45.

Explaining its vote, Brazil felt that the draft, even after revision, remained flawed because it did not explicitly mention the priority issues of disarmament as agreed upon in the 1978 Final Document. Yugoslavia stressed that the Assembly could and should point to the priority issues of disarmament and request the Conference to conduct negotiations on them. Mexico said the text did not refer to a number of factors essential to the work of the Conference which were contained in the first text on the report (see resolution 41/86 M, whose sponsors were justified in expressing concern that the Conference had been unable to reach concrete agreements on any disarmament issues to which the United Nations had assigned priority; it was also relevant to call on the Conference to provide the existing ad hoc committees with appropriate negotiating mandates. Burma and Nigeria supported the text as procedural in nature; the latter, along with Bolivia and Peru, which preferred the first draft because it was clear and unequivocal about the Conference's mandate and its central role in disarmament, expressed regret that the two texts could not be merged. Argentina believed that a resolution on the report of the Conference should be adopted by consensus in the same way as that on the report of the Commission, which also reflected divergent viewpoints. The USSR noted that although the report of the Conference was a consensus document, it reflected divergencies among member States as to whether or not the Conference should start negotiations on certain priority items—that was the difference reflected by the two texts; therefore, it was necessary to have an answer from the Assembly to such questions and to know what the majority of States thought in that regard.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 4 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 J, reiterating the right of non-members of the Conference on Disarmament to participate in the work of the Conference.

Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/148 L of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 J of 16 December 1985,

Noting with concern that the problem identified in the above-mentioned resolutions has not been alleviated,

Firmly convinced that all States have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations,

Bearing in mind paragraph 28 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it affirmed that all States have the duty to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament and that all States have the right to participate in disarmament negotiations, as well as paragraphs 120 (g) and (h) of the Final Document,

Recalling further its resolution 38/183 F of 20 December 1983, in which it called upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially, inter alia, to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war,

1. Reiterates once more the right of all States not members of the Conference on Disarmament to participate in the work of the plenary sessions of the Conference on substantive questions;

2. Urges States members of the Conference on Disarmament not to misuse the rules of procedure of the Conference so as to prevent States not members from exercising their right to participate in the work of the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Burma, Canada, Ethiopia, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of India, Iran, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Burma, Iran, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom said it was up to the Conference on Disarmament to decide on the question in accordance with its rules of procedure. New Zealand and Sweden upheld the right of all States to be heard but did not support the request to the Secretary-General in paragraph 3, the former saying that such a report would not facilitate a solution, and the latter asserting that a further report would add little to the Conference report itself.

France had reservations on paragraph 2, which it felt might be interpreted as inviting member States of the Conference to renounce the rules concerning decision-making; it preferred that the Assembly express the wish that Conference members respond favourably to non-members' requests for the right to speak in plenary meetings. Israel, although voting in favour, said it objected to Iraq's motive in introducing the draft, which, it said, was to abuse the purposes of the Conference and raise matters not appropriate for that body.

Disarmament Commission consideration. In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾

the Disarmament Commission⁽⁴⁾ continued consideration of the United Nations role in disarmament, by establishing, on 6 May, Working Group II to deal with the topic. The Group held two formal and seven informal meetings between 7 and 21 May under the chairmanship of Paul Bamela Engo (Cameroon), using the 1985 paper on topics for appropriate recommendations as a basis for its work. In connection with its work, the Group had before it the views of 32 Member States submitted in 1985⁽⁸⁾ and one in 1986,⁽⁹⁾ as well as a paper, prepared by its Chairman but later withdrawn, containing findings, recommendations and proposals on various related topics. A number of suggestions for possible recommendations were put forward.

On 21 May, the Working Group recommended by consensus that work on the topic should continue in 1987 as a matter of priority.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 41/59 O without vote.

Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/151 G of 17 December 1984 and 40/94 O of 12 December 1985,

Bearing in mind that the primary purpose of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security,

Reaffirming its conviction that genuine and lasting peace can be created only through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter of the United Nations and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example, leading ultimately to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming further that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Recognizing the need for the United Nations, in discharging its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament, to play a more active role in the field of disarmament in accordance with its primary purpose under the Charter to maintain international peace and security,

Taking into account the part of the report of the Disarmament Commission relating to this question,

1. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its consideration of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament as a matter of priority at its next substantive session, in 1987, with a view to the elaboration of concrete recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, taking into account, inter alia, the views and suggestions of Member States as well as the aforementioned documents on the subject;

2. Requests further the Disarmament Commission to submit its report on the subject, including findings, recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament: report of the Disarmament Commission".

Follow-up to the General Assembly's special sessions on disarmament

In 1986, the General Assembly adopted 28 resolutions and one decision under the two agenda items concerning the follow-up to its two special sessions devoted to disarmament: the first held in 1978 as the Assembly's tenth special session⁽¹⁰⁾ and the second held in 1982 as the twelfth special session.⁽¹¹⁾ At the 1978 session, the Assembly had adopted a Final Document,⁽⁶⁾ and in 1982, a Concluding Document.⁽¹²⁾

This section deals with a resolution on the convening of the third disarmament special session in 1988 (41/60 G), and six others concerning general follow-up questions: guidelines for confidence-building measures (41/60 C), the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe (41/86 L), follow-up to the tenth special session (41/86 O), international co-operation for disarmament (41/86 K), the United Nations disarmament fellowship programme (41/60 H) and verification (41/86 Q). Others adopted under the two agenda items and dealing with various specific issues are discussed elsewhere in the chapter.

1988 special session

As recommended by the First Committee, the Assembly, on 3 December, adopted without vote resolution 41/60 G, thereby deciding to convene its third special session on disarmament in 1988.

Convening of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the decision, contained in paragraph 66 of the Concluding Document of its Twelfth Special Session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, concerning the convening of the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Reaffirming its resolution 38/73 I of 15 December 1983, in which it decided that the third special session devoted to disarmament should be held not later than 1988,

Recalling its resolutions 39/63 I of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 I of 16 December 1985,

Reaffirming the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and its conviction that disarmament remains one of the essential objectives of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern at the continuation of the arms race, which aggravates international peace and security and also diverts vast resources urgently needed for economic and social development,

Reiterating its conviction that peace can be secured through the implementation of disarmament measures, particularly for nuclear disarmament, conducive to the realization of the final objective, namely, general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

1. Decides to convene its third special session on disarmament in 1988 and to establish an open-ended Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament;

2. Requests the Preparatory Committee to prepare a draft agenda for the special session, to examine all relevant questions relating to that session and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session its recommendations thereon;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the agenda and other relevant questions relating to the third special session on disarmament not later than 1 April 1987;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the replies of Member States relevant to paragraph 3 above to the Preparatory Committee and to render to it all necessary assistance, including the provision of essential background information, relevant documents and summary records;

5. Requests the Preparatory Committee to meet for a short organizational session before the end of the forty-first session of the General Assembly in order, inter alia, to set the date for its substantive session;

6. Further requests the Preparatory Committee to submit its progress report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled: "Third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament: report of the Preparatory Committee for the Third Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament".

Confidence-building measures

Disarmament Commission consideration. In response to a 1984 General Assembly request,⁽¹³⁾ the Disarmament Commission(4) in 1986 formulated draft guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for their global or regional implementation.

The text resulted from informal consultations held during eight meetings between 7 and 21 May. An exchange of views on whether the draft guidelines should be accompanied by an illustrative catalogue of specific, individual measures indicated that such a catalogue might contradict the finding in the guidelines that confidence-building measures had to be tailored to specific circumstances, particularly in a regional differentiation, and that a catalogue could not be adopted as long as some major definitional issues in the guidelines were unresolved. Nevertheless, it was felt that a structured compilation of measures suggested for inclusion in the catalogue would be useful in facilitating later consideration of the issues.

The text, containing alternative formulations for two issues relating to assessment of results and to information, was approved by the Commission on 23 May and annexed to its report to the Assembly. It was understood that Member States reserved their final assent to the guidelines until such time as they were completed and could be assessed in their entirety.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/60 C by recorded vote.

Consideration of guidelines for confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the ultimate goal of confidence-building measures is to strengthen international peace and security and to contribute to the prevention of all wars, in particular nuclear war,

Mindful of the importance of confidence-building for the peaceful settlement of existing international problems and for the improvement and promotion of international relations based on justice, co-operation and solidarity,

Stressing the potential of specific confidence-building measures to create favourable conditions for progress in the field of arms limitation and disarmament,

Bearing in mind that confidence-building measures may serve the additional objective of facilitating verification of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Welcoming the draft guidelines for confidence-building measures contained in the report of the Disarmament Commission as particularly appropriate to serve this important objective,

Expecting that new developments in the field of disarmament and growing positive and concrete experience with confidence-building measures will facilitate further elaboration of the text,

Takes note of the "Draft guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level" reproduced in the report of the Disarmament Com-

Against: Nona

The amendments had the Assembly simply take note of the draft guidelines rather than commend them and annex them to the resolution, as originally suggested. Singapore made an oral sub-amendment, proposing that the draft guidelines be commended to all Member States with a view to their preliminary implementation. In the preambular part, in addition to drafting changes, the amendments were: to add "justice" in the second paragraph and "additional" in the fourth; to insert "limitation" instead of "control" in the third paragraph; and to insert "all wars, in particular nuclear war" instead of "war" in the first paragraph.

The First Committee took the following action by recorded votes: rejected Singapore's sub-amendment by 41 to 40, with 15 abstentions, and approved the amendments to the preambular part by 125 to 1, with 1 abstention, and to the operative part by 83 to 31, with 3 abstentions.

Several States explained their reservations on the amended text. Although France associated itself with the consensus, it did not accept the full wording, particularly that of the fourth preambular paragraph. The Federal Republic of Germany felt the text had lost a lot of its moral value, a view shared by the Netherlands which would have preferred an agreement on stronger language.

The USSR noted the understanding reached in the Commission that States reserved their final ascent until the guidelines were completed.

Security and co-operation in Europe

The representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe—meeting at Stockholm, Sweden, since 17 January 1984—adopted, on 19 September 1986, the Final Document of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, aimed at strengthening confidence and security in Europe and at giving effect and expression to the duty of States to refrain from the threat or use of force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 4 December, adopted resolution 41/86 L without vote.

Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,

Reaffirming the importance of continued efforts to build confidence, to lessen military confrontation and to enhance security for all,

Stressing that confidence- and security-building measures designed to reduce the dangers of armed conflict and of misunderstanding or miscalculation of military activities will contribute to these objectives,

1. Welcomes the adoption by the Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe of the Document of the Stockholm Conference, which contains concrete, militarily significant, politically binding and verifiable confidence- and security-building measures;

2. Considers that the Document of the Stockholm Conference will contribute to furthering the process of improving security and developing co-operation in Europe, thereby contributing to international peace and security in the world as a whole.

Follow-up to the 1978 special session

Note by the Secretary-General. In September 1986,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted information received from the USSR, in response to a 1985 General Assembly invitation⁽¹⁵⁾ for States engaged in disarmament and arms limitation negotiations outside the United Nations framework to keep the Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament informed on the status of such negotiations (see also p. 29).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 O, as recommended by the First Committee.

Prior to the Assembly's action, the German Democratic Republic had submitted to the Committee a draft entitled "Obligations of States to contribute to effective disarmament negotiations".⁽¹⁶⁾ That draft would have had the Assembly, among other things, appeal to nuclear-weapon States to enter into a dialogue on strengthening peace and achieving disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and call on the Conference on Disarmament to proceed to negotiations on nuclear disarmament and prevention of nuclear war and an arms race in outer space. Following negotiations, the text was merged with that of a draft introduced by Yugoslavia and also sponsored by 20 other States. The German Democratic Republic became a sponsor of that text—as did Burkina Faso and Ecuador—and announced that it would not insist on putting its draft to a vote.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 34/83 C of 11 December 1979, 35/46 of 3 December 1980, 35/152 E of 12 December 1980, 36/92 M of 9 December 1981, 37/78 F of 9 December 1982, 38/183 H of 20 December 1983, 39/148 O of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 N of 16 December 1985 and its decision S-12/24 of 10 July 1982,

Deeply concerned that no concrete results regarding the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session have been realized in the course of more than eight years since that session, that in the mean time the arms race, particularly in its nuclear aspect, has gained in intensity, that there has been further deployment of nuclear weapons in some parts of the world, that annual global military expenditures are estimated to have reached the staggering figure of $1,000 billion, that mankind is faced with a real danger of spreading the arms race into outer space, that urgent measures to prevent nuclear war and for disarmament have not been adopted and that continued colonial domination and foreign occupation, open threats, pressures and military intervention against independent States and violations of the fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations have taken place, posing the most serious threat to international peace and security,

Convinced that the escalation of the nuclear-arms race, in both the quantitative and qualitative dimensions, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Further convinced that international peace and security can be ensured only through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and that, in this respect, the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States have the primary responsibility,

Believing that the preservation of the existing bilateral, regional and global system of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and the strict observance of such agreements by their parties are important elements of disarmament efforts at all levels,

Noting with great concern that no real progress in disarmament negotiations has been achieved in the course of several years,

Stressing once again that the active participation of Member States in effective disarmament negotiations is necessary for discharging their responsibility to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, that all States have the right to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament, that it is more than ever imperative in the present circumstances to give a new impetus to negotiations on disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament, at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future and that all States should refrain from any actions which have or may have negative effects on the outcome of disarmament negotiations,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Stressing that the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which was unanimously and categorically reaffirmed by all Member States at the twelfth special session as the comprehensive basis for efforts towards halting and reversing the arms race, retains all its validity and that the objectives and measures contained therein still represent one of the most important and urgent goals to be achieved,

1. Expresses its grave concern over the acceleration and intensification of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, which increase the danger of nuclear war and constitute a threat to the continued survival of mankind;

2. Calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take urgent measures in order to promote international security on the basis of disarmament, to halt and reverse the arms race and to launch a process of genuine disarmament;

3. Invites all States, particularly nuclear-weapon States and especially those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, to take urgent measures with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, as well as to fulfilling the priority tasks set forth in the Programme of Action contained in section III of the Final Document;

4. Calls upon the two leading nuclear-weapon States to pursue their negotiations with renewed determination and taking into account the interest of the entire international community in order to halt the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, reduce substantially their nuclear arsenals, prevent the arms race in outer space and undertake effective measures of nuclear disarmament;

5. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to proceed urgently to negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and on the prevention of nuclear war, to intensify negotiations on the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to elaborate drafts of treaties on a nuclear-test ban and on a complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

6. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to intensify its work in accordance with its mandate with a view to making concrete recommendations on specific items on its agenda;

7. Invites all States engaged in disarmament and arms limitation negotiations outside the framework of the United Nations to keep the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament informed on the status and/or results of such negotiations, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session".

International co-operation for disarmament

In 1986, as in previous years, the Assembly called for the implementation of its 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament.⁽¹⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 K, as recommended by the First Committee.

International co-operation for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Stressing again the urgent need for an active and sustained effort to expedite the implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament of 11 December 1979 and its resolutions 36/92 D of 9 December 1981, 37/78 B of 9 December 1982, 38/183 F of 20 December 1983, 39/148 M of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 I of 16 December 1985,

Stressing the vital need to proceed to concrete measures towards halting the arms race and attaining disarmament, particularly in the nuclear field, for the preservation of peace and the strengthening of international security,

Bearing in mind the vital interests of all States in the adoption of concrete effective disarmament measures, which would, inter alia, release considerable material, financial and human resources to be used for peaceful purposes and particularly for overcoming economic underdevelopment, especially in the developing countries,

Stressing the importance of the appeals and proposals of the group of six States from five continents and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and of their unswerving efforts to achieve genuine disarmament,

Convinced of the need to strengthen constructive international co-operation based on the political goodwill of States for successful negotiations on disarmament, in accordance with the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Stressing that international co-operation for disarmament should, as a matter of priority, be aimed at averting nuclear war through the gradual elimination of nuclear weapons, the discontinuation of nuclear-weapon tests and the prevention of an arms race in outer space and at confidence-building as an indispensable component of relations among States,

Believing that the two nuclear-weapon States that possess the most important nuclear arsenals should jointly take the lead and show a good example in curbing the nuclear-arms race while mutually refraining from launching weapons into outer space,

Conscious that in the nuclear space age the reliable security of all countries can be ensured only by political means, through the joint efforts of all States,

1. Invites all States to increase co-operation and to strive actively for meaningful disarmament negotiations on the basis of reciprocity, equality, undiminished security and the non-use of force in international relations, so that they may prevent qualitative enhancement and quantitative accumulation of weapons, as well as the development of new types and systems of weaponry, especially weapons of mass destruction;

2. Stresses the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in fulfilling its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of refraining from the dissemination of any doctrines and concepts endangering international peace and justifying the unleashing of nuclear war, which lead to the deterioration of the international situation and to the further intensification of the arms race and which are detrimental to the generally recognized necessity of international co-operation for disarmament;

4. Declares that the use of force in international relations as well as in attempts to prevent the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples constitutes a phenomenon incompatible with the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament;

5. Reiterates its profound conviction that outer space should be excluded from the sphere of military preparations and used exclusively for peaceful purposes, for the benefit of all mankind;

6. Appeals to States that are members of military groupings to promote, on the basis of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and in the spirit of international co-operation for disarmament, the gradual mutual limitation of military activities of these groupings, thus creating conditions for their dissolution;

7. Calls upon all Member States and the international organizations concerned to continue to cultivate and disseminate, particularly in connection with the World Disarmament Campaign launched by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament;

8. Calls upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially, while observing the principle of undiminished security, to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war.

Fellowship programme

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October 1986⁽⁸⁾ that, due to the Organization's current financial situation and in accordance with Assembly decisions at its resumed fortieth session in April 1986, the 1986 United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament had been adjusted to accommodate 20 fellows from as many countries for three and a half months (23 July-7 November), instead of 25 fellows for some six months as in previous years. (See also ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I.)

The programme consisted of lectures, seminars, research, observing the meetings of the Conference on Disarmament at Geneva and the First Committee in New York, and a visit to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) at Vienna. The fellows also visited the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the USSR and the United States, at the invitation of those Governments.

Since its establishment by the Assembly in 1978 at the first special session on disarmament,⁽⁶⁾ the programme had trained 175 government officials from 93 countries in developing expertise relating to disarmament.

Reporting also on the modalities and guidelines for the new regional disarmament training programme, as requested by the Assembly in 1985,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General proposed that regional courses, not to exceed one week, would be organized annually on a rotational basis between the regions, with up to 15 participants selected by him from officials nominated by their Governments. He noted that the Assembly had provided appropriations for 1986-1987, taking into account that the Governments concerned would be expected to contribute towards the costs.

As regards the new United Nations advisory services programme in disarmament and security issues, the Secretary-General proposed that the Governments or intergovernmental organizations requesting such services would be expected to assume responsibility for a considerable part of the expenses involved, and that he would make full use of expertise available in the Organization and from Member States and research institutes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 41/60 H by recorded vote.

United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 H of 16 December 1985,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained one hundred and seventy-five government officials from ninety-three countries, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly developing countries, under the programme, including the new disarmament training and advisory services, will enhance the capabilities of Member States to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

3. Approves the modalities for implementation of the new disarmament training programme as contained in the Secretary-General's report;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America for inviting the fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

5. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the operations of the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services.

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Dominican Republic, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Indonesia, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Morocco, Nepal, New Zealand, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zaire, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 40; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

In explanation of vote, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed misgivings on additional financial implications of the new training programme, while reiterating their support for the fellowship programme. Japan hoped that attention would be paid to the current financial constraints of the Organization. The United Kingdom supported the draft on the understanding that paragraphs 2 and 3 would impose no additional budgetary commitments. The United States reiterated its objection to additional expenditures associated with implementing new programmes.

Verification

Responding to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in July 1986 a report with later addenda,⁽²¹⁾ containing the views of 16 individual Member States and of the 12 EC members on verification principles, procedures and techniques to promote the inclusion of adequate verification in arms limitation and disarmament agreements, and on the United Nations role in verification.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Two draft resolutions on verification were submitted to the General Assembly's First Committee in 1986. In addition to the text that was later revised and approved, a draft submitted by Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia⁽²²⁾ would have had the Assembly spell out some parameters for verification measures and procedures, including issues such as participation of States and the principle of undiminished security. The two sponsors subsequently decided not to put their text to a vote and joined in sponsoring the other draft.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 4 December, adopted resolution 41/86 Q without vote.

Verification in all its aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/152 O of 16 December 1985, Conscious of the urgent need to reach agreements on arms limitation and disarmament measures capable of contributing to the maintenance of peace and security,

Convinced that, if such measures are to be effective, they must be fair and balanced, acceptable to all parties, their substance must be clear and compliance with them must be evident,

Noting that the importance of verification of and compliance with agreements is universally recognized,

Reaffirming its conviction, as expressed in paragraph 91 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, adopted by consensus at that session, its first special session devoted to disarmament, that in order to facilitate the conclusion and effective implementation of disarmament agreements and to create confidence, States should accept appropriate provisions for verification in such agreements,

Reiterating its view that:

(a) Disarmament and arms limitation agreements should provide for adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned in order to create the necessary confidence and to ensure that they are being observed by all parties;

(b) The form and modalities of the verification to be provided for in any specific agreement depend upon and should be determined by the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement;

(c) Agreements should provide for the participation of parties directly or through the United Nations system in the verification process;

(d) Where appropriate, a combination of several methods of verification as well as other compliance procedures should be employed,

Recalling that:

(a) In the context of international disarmament negotiations, the problem of verification should be further examined and adequate methods and procedures in this field should be considered;

(b) Every effort should be made to develop appropriate methods and procedures that are non-discriminatory and that do not unduly interfere with the internal affairs of other States or jeopardize their economic and social development,

Believing that verification techniques should be developed as an objective means of determining compliance with agreements and appropriately taken into account in the course of disarmament negotiations,

1. Calls upon Member States to intensify their efforts towards achieving agreements on balanced, mutually acceptable, comprehensively verifiable and effective arms limitation and disarmament measures;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General containing the views and suggestions of Member States on verification principles, procedures and techniques, and encourages all States that have not already done so to communicate to the Secretary-General, not later than 31 March 1987, their views and suggestions on verification principles as invited by the Assembly in its resolution 40/152 O;

3. Urges individual Member States and groups of Member States possessing verification expertise to consider means by which they can contribute to, and promote the inclusion of, adequate verification measures in arms limitation and disarmament agreements;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider at its 1987 session, in the context of pursuing general and complete disarmament under effective international control, verification in all its aspects, including principles, provisions and techniques to promote the inclusion of adequate verification in arms limitation and disarmament agreements and the role of the United Nations and its Member States in the field of verification, and to report on its deliberations, conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the Disarmament Commission at its substantive session in 1987 a compilation of the views received from Member States on this issue;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Verification in all its aspects" under the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session: implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session".

General and complete disarmament

In 1986, the General Assembly adopted 15 resolutions (41/59 A to O) under the agenda item on general and complete disarmament. Four of those resolutions, covered in this section, concerned objective information on military matters (41/59 B), the contribution of the United Nations system to arms limitation and disarmament (41/59 D), compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements (41/59 J) and naval disarmament (41/59 K).

Information on military matters

Report of the Secretary-General. In pursuance of a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General issued a report in July 1986 with a later addendum,⁽²⁴⁾ containing information received from 11 Member States on measures they had taken to contribute to greater openness in military matters and, particularly, to improve the flow of objective information on military capabilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/59 B by recorded vote.

Objective information on military matters

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 105 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which encourages Member States to ensure a better flow of information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information concerning armaments and to concentrate on the danger of escalation of the arms race and on the need for general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Recognizing that the adoption of concrete, confidence-building measures on a global, regional or subregional level would greatly contribute to a reduction in international tension,

Emphasizing that the need for such measures at the regional and subregional levels is of special importance,

Believing that the adoption of such measures would contribute to greater openness and transparency, thus helping to prevent misperceptions of the military capabilities and the intentions of potential adversaries, which could induce States to undertake armaments programmes leading to the acceleration of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and to heightened international tensions,

Believing that objective information on the military capabilities, in particular of nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, could contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements and thereby help to halt and reverse the arms race,

Recalling its resolutions 37/99 G of 13 December 1982, 38/188 C of 20 December 1983 and 40/94 K of 12 December 1985,

Aware of the existence, under the auspices of the United Nations, of an international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, and that annual reports on military expenditures are now being received from an increasing number of States,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a better flow of objective information on military capabilities could help relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States on a global, regional or subregional level and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements;

2. Urges those global, regional and subregional organizations that have already expressed support for the principle of practical and concrete confidence-building measures of a military nature on a global, regional or subregional level to intensify their efforts with a view to adopting such measures at the earliest possible date;

3. Urges all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to consider implementing additional measures based on the principles of openness and transparency such as, for example, the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, with the aim of facilitating the availability of objective information on, as well as objective assessment of, military capabilities;

4. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report prepared in conformity with resolution 40/94 K;

5. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General before 30 April 1987 the measures they have adopted to contribute to greater openness in military matters in general and in particular to improve the flow of objective information on military capabilities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 116-0-26 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) by recorded vote (88-0-30), 12 November (meeting 41); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.10); agenda item 60 (i).

Sponsors: Australia, Belgium, Botswana, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, New Zealand, Norway, Samoa, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia,* Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran,* Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mexico, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Oman, Poland, Seychelles, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, India held that progress in disarmament depended on political will and not on availability of information on military matters. The USSR added that an information exchange should not be dissociated artificially from concrete disarmament measures. Brazil felt the draft addressed issues extraneous to disarmament proper and pertinent mainly to the relationship between the two military alliances. Yugoslavia, cautioning against overestimating the effects of a lack of objective information, supported the text as one possible way of promoting confidence among States.

UN system and disarmament

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1986, the Secretary-General submitted, in pursuance of a 1984 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ information received from five specialized agencies, IAEA and a number of departments and programmes in the United Nations system on activities carried out or envisaged by them to promote arms limitation and disarmament.⁽²⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/59 D by recorded vote.

Contribution of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament

Recalling its resolutions 38/188 J of 20 December 1983 and 39/151 E of 17 December 1984,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament and should, accordingly, step up its activity in this field,

Convinced that all avenues should be effectively utilized for promoting the cause of disarmament in all its aspects,

Reaffirming further that the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system have a valuable contribution to make in this regard, while taking duly into account the relationship between disarmament and their respective areas of competence,

Taking note of various activities conducted by the United Nations agencies in pursuance of resolution 39/151 E as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on this matter,

1. Reaffirms its invitation to the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue, within their areas of competence, the activities aimed at promoting the cause of arms limitation and disarmament;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to continue to co-ordinate such activities and to submit an updated report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Contribution of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahamas, Belize, Brazil, Chile, China, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Liberia, Paraguay, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Uruguay.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom, speaking for the 12 EC member States, said that, rather than encouraging the specialized agencies to engage in activities likely to detract from their specific mandates, the Assembly should make maximum use of the existing United Nations disarmament machinery. Holding largely the same view, Venezuela added that the activity of specialized agencies and other bodies should be conceived in a way that would support and strengthen the work of those bodies that had specific competence in the disarmament field.

Compliance

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Two draft resolutions on compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements were submitted to the First Committee in 1986. A draft⁽²⁷⁾ sponsored by the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR would have had the Assembly call on States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of their provisions, to safeguard the integrity of those agreements, and to refrain from actions which could lead to undermining or circumventing such agreements. Following consultations, that text was withdrawn, and Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland joined in sponsoring the other draft, which had been revised.

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/59 J, as recommended by the First Committee.

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/94 L of 12 December 1985,

Conscious of the abiding concern of all Member States for preserving respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful in particular of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements on arms limitation and disarmament if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements,

Stressing further that any weakening of confidence in such agreements diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing in this context that, inter alia, full confidence in compliance with existing agreements can enhance the negotiations of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Believing that compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is, therefore, a matter of interest and concern to the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations could play in that regard,

Convinced that resolution of non-compliance questions that have arisen with regard to agreements on arms limitations and disarmament would contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications of non-compliance with those obligations for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Further calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of non-compliance questions, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Member States with assistance that may be necessary in this regard.

Naval armaments and disarmament

Disarmament Commission consideration. For its 1986 consideration of the naval arms race and disarmament, the Disarmament Commission⁽⁴⁾ had before it an April report of the Secretary-General, with later addenda,⁽²⁸⁾ containing the views of 10 States on the 1985 expert study on the naval arms race, naval forces and naval arms systems.⁽²⁹⁾ The views of three other States⁽³⁰⁾ were received after the end of the Commission's session. Other documents before the Commission included three working papers—one by China and two by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR—and the response of Bulgaria and Mexico⁽³¹⁾ to the Assembly's 1985 invitation⁽³²⁾ for views on holding multilateral negotiations on limiting and reducing naval armaments and extending confidence-building measures to seas and oceans.

Substantive, open-ended consultations were held in seven meetings between 13 and 21 May under the leadership of Ali Alatas (Indonesia), resulting in the "Chairman's paper" on the topic.⁽³³⁾ It was stated in the paper, among other things, that disarmament measures, including those in the maritime field, should be balanced and not diminish the security of any State, that such measures should be embodied in separate legal instruments in harmony with the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, and that appropriate universal and non-discriminatory verification procedures were essential for their proper implementation. Against that background, participants began consideration of measures as outlined in the 1985 study and grouped under the headings of quantitative restraints, qualitative or technological restraints, geographic and/or mission restraints and confidence-building measures. The participants in the consultations felt that the Commission should consider the item further in 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/59 K by recorded vote.

Naval armaments and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/188 G of 20 December 1983, by which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study on the naval arms race,

Recalling also its resolution 40/94 F of 12 December 1985, by which it requested the Disarmament Commission to consider the issues contained in the study on the naval arms race, both its substantive content and its conclusions, taking into account all other relevant present and future proposals, with a view to facilitating the identification of possible measures in the field of naval arms reductions and disarmament, pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, as well as confidence-building measures in this field,

Having examined the report of the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission on the substantive consideration of the question of the naval arms race and disarmament during the 1986 session of the Commission, which met with the approval of all delegations participating in the substantive consultations and which, in their view, could form the basis of further deliberations on the subject,

1. Notes with satisfaction the report on the substantive consideration of the question of the naval arms race and disarmament by the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its forthcoming session in 1987, the substantive consideration of the question and to report on its deliberations and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to inscribe on the agenda for its 1987 session an item entitled "Naval armaments and disarmament";

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Naval armaments and disarmament".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: India.

In explanation of vote, India said disarmament efforts should not be confined to a narrow category of weapons such as naval armaments, and that further consideration of the item in the Disarmament Commission would detract from what it viewed as more immediate and higher priority areas of disarmament. Bulgaria regretted that the draft did not include ideas that it considered useful, but felt that it provided a good basis for continuing the collective efforts aimed at achieving general and complete disarmament.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

Despite intensive efforts, the Conference on Disarmament could not complete in 1986 a draft comprehensive programme of disarmament, which, having been envisaged in paragraph 109 of the Final Document(6) of the General Assembly's first (1978) special session devoted to disarmament, had been considered annually since 1980. In view of the 1985 Assembly request⁽³⁴⁾ for submission of the draft to its forty-first session, the Conference decided to resume work at the beginning of its 1987 session with a view to completing the draft programme and submitting it at that time.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1986, the Conference's Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament held 21 meetings between 20 February and 25 August under the chairmanship of Alfonso Garcia Robles (Mexico). In addition to the documents of previous sessions relating to the topic, the Committee had before it two new working papers—submitted by a group of socialist countries and by the USSR—and a draft text for the programme, submitted by France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Committee based its work on the 1985 version of the draft programme⁽³⁵⁾ and again established contact groups to resolve existing differences on some parts of the text—the introduction and chapters on measures and stages of implementation, and machinery and procedures. It reported that, while the relevant texts continued to reflect points of differences, the areas of disagreement had been narrowed and, in some cases, considerable progress had been made towards harmonizing positions. Progress was reported in areas such as nuclear weapons, conventional weapons and armed forces, related measures, and machinery and procedures; areas of differences included stages of implementation and time frames. Taking into account the progress achieved in 1986, the Committee recommended the resumption of work at the beginning of the Conference's 1987 session, in order to complete the draft programme and submit it to the Assembly before the closing of its forty-first session.

The Ad Hoc Committee's report was adopted by the Conference on 28 August as part of its report to the Assembly.⁽⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, in December, adopted decision 41/421 without vote.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, having recalled its resolutions 38/183 K of 20 December 1983, 39/148 I of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 D of 16 December 1985, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament to submit to the Assembly at its forty-first session a complete draft of the comprehensive programme of disarmament; having examined the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament concerning its work during the 1986 session of the Conference, which is an integral part of the report of the Conference; and having noted the recommendation contained therein that work on the elaboration of the programme should be resumed at the beginning of the 1987 session of the Conference for the purpose of completing it during the first part of that session and submitting a complete draft of the programme to the Assembly at that time; decided to keep open agenda item 62 (d) in order to allow the Conference to conclude the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament during the first part of its 1987 session and to submit a complete draft of the programme to the Assembly at that time.

General Assembly decision 41/421

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/842) without vote, 10 November (meeting 37); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.62); agenda item 62 (d).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bulgaria, China, Hungary, Indonesia, Mexico, Mongolia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 34, 37; plenary 96.

Joining the consensus on the draft, the United States expressed its appreciation for the common understanding that the Assembly's forty-first session would not be resumed exclusively to consider the item on the comprehensive programme and thus avoid additional financial implications.

Proposed world disarmament conference

In 1986, as in previous years, no agreement was reached among the nuclear-weapon States on convening a world disarmament conference—an idea first endorsed by the General Assembly in 1965⁽³⁶⁾ and taken up annually since 1971. In a new development, however, the Assembly asked the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference to hold consultations with nuclear-weapon and all other States, in order to remain informed of their positions on the convening of a conference (resolution 41/61).

Ad Hoc Committee consideration. The Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held two sessions in New York in 1986: four meetings between 7 and 11 April and three others between 7 and 10 July. Its annual report to the Assembly⁽³⁷⁾ contained the updated views of the five nuclear-weapon States on the convening of a conference. The Committee also informed the Assembly that, through its Chairman, it had maintained close contact with the representatives of those States so as to remain informed of their attitudes.

China reiterated that it remained ready to support the idea, if the majority of Member States favoured a conference to discuss how the two super-Powers should take the lead in drastically cutting their armaments.

France, in the continued absence of consensus on the question, had no objection to the Ad Hoc Committee's examining the possibility of spacing out its meetings. The United Kingdom believed that, in the current international climate, preparations for the conference were not useful and continued to doubt the usefulness of further Committee meetings. The United States continued to consider it premature to convene a conference in the absence of agreement on both the conditions necessary for, and the substantive issues to be considered at, a conference; further, in view of the budgetary crisis facing the United Nations, the Committee should suspend its activities until the political and financial climate improved sufficiently to permit a conference to be convened successfully.

The USSR maintained that it would be timely to convene a world forum, which might work out effective ways and means of curbing the arms race and achieving genuine disarmament. It expressed readiness, without any pre-conditions, to consider constructively any other proposals by members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) or non-aligned and neutral States, and called on the other nuclear Powers to act similarly and to avail themselves of the opportunities that a conference would offer for negotiations.

In its conclusions, the Ad Hoc Committee reiterated that the idea of a world disarmament conference had wide support, though with varying degrees of emphasis and differences concerning conditions and aspects related to its convening, including the deteriorating international situation, and that no consensus on convening a conference under current conditions had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States, whose participation was widely deemed essential. It suggested that the Assembly might renew its mandate and request it to consider any relevant comments and observations which might be made to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Introducing the draft resolution on behalf of the sponsors, Sri Lanka pointed out that, instead of asking the Ad Hoc Committee itself to maintain contact with nuclear-weapon States as in previous years, the 1986 text would have the General Assembly recommend that the Committee Chairman undertake consultations with nuclear-weapon and all other States. Accordingly, the question of convening the meetings of the Committee would be deferred to the 1987 Assembly session.

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/61, as recommended by the First Committee.

World Disarmament Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977, 33/69 of 14 December 1978, 34/81 of 11 December 1979, 35/151 of 12 December 1980, 36/91 of 9 December 1981, 37/97 of 13 December 1982, 38/186 of 20 December 1983, 39/150 of 17 December 1984 and 40/154 of 16 December 1985,

Reiterating its conviction that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its conviction that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could provide the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,

Recalling that, in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it decided that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 23 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December

1980, the General Assembly considered it pertinent also to recall that in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session it had stated that at the earliest appropriate time a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

1. Notes with satisfaction that, in paragraph 14 of its report to the General Assembly, the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference stated the following:

"Having regard for the important requirements of a world disarmament conference to be convened at the earliest appropriate time, with universal participation and with adequate preparation, the General Assembly should take up the question at its forty-first regular session for further consideration, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of resolution 36/91, adopted by consensus, in particular paragraph 1 of that resolution, and resolution 40/154, also adopted by consensus";

2. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;

3. Recommends that the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee undertake consultations with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States, as well as with all other States, in order to remain currently informed of the development of their positions on the question of convening a world disarmament conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the results of those consultations;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference".

Nuclear disarmament

No major progress was made in nuclear disarmament at the multilateral level in 1986. The General Assembly continued to address a variety of subjects related to nuclear questions, which resulted in a series of resolutions on: nuclear arms limitation and disarmament (resolutions 41/59 F and L, 41/60 E and I, 41/86 A, F and N), prevention of nuclear war (41/60 F, 41/86 B and G), cessation of nuclear-weapon tests (41/46 A and B, 41/47, 41/54, 41/59 N), strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States (41/51, 41/52), nuclear-weapon-free zones (41/45, 41/48, 41/49, 41/55 A and B, 41/93), and international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Among other things, the Assembly again requested the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on a draft convention on the non-use of nuclear weapons, and urged all States members of the Conference to promote the establishment of an ad hoc committee to carry out multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions.

Outside the United Nations framework, the bilateral negotiations, begun in early 1985, between the USSR and the United States on nuclear and space arms continued, highlighted by a summit conference at Reykjavik, Iceland, in October.

During the year, the Secretary-General received, from States and intergovernmental groups, communications concerning nuclear disarmament (see p. 13).

Prevention of nuclear war

In 1986, the General Assembly, by adopting three resolutions on the prevention of nuclear war, requested the Conference on Disarmament to consider elaborating a legally binding international instrument laying down an obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons (41/86 B), to establish in 1987 an ad hoc committee on the prevention of nuclear war (41/86 G), and to commence negotiations on a draft convention on the non-use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances (41/60 F).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(1) considered the item on the prevention of nuclear war from 17 to 21 March and from 7 to 11 July 1986. It had before it working papers on the topic submitted by Argentina, Bulgaria and China. As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (see p. 17) for an ad hoc committee that would consider all relevant proposals, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 B, as recommended by the First Committee.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in accordance with paragraph 20 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority and that this commitment was reaffirmed by the Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document, it is stated that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States, should consider as soon as possible various proposals designed to secure the avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons, the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives, where possible through international agreement, and thereby ensure that the survival of mankind is not endangered,

Reaffirming that the nuclear-weapon States have the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament and for undertaking measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war,

Convinced that it is possible and necessary for mankind to block the way to a nuclear catastrophe and that the renunciation of the first use of nuclear weapons is a most urgent measure to this end,

Welcoming the joint statement issued by the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on 21 November 1985 and, in particular, the conviction expressed therein that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Taking note of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, in which all nuclear-weapon States are called upon to enter early into an internationally binding commitment not to be the first to use or to threaten to use nuclear weapons,

1. Considers that the solemn declarations by two nuclear-weapon States made or reiterated at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, concerning their respective obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, offer an important avenue to decrease the danger of nuclear war;

2. Expresses the hope that those nuclear-weapon States that have not yet done so would consider making similar declarations with respect to not being the first to use nuclear weapons;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider under its relevant agenda item, inter alia, the elaboration of an international instrument of a legally binding character laying down the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war".

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Israel, Samoa.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote against.

In explanation of vote, Australia stated that a priori and unverifiable declarations could not prevent nuclear war; until nuclear disarmament was achieved, other arrangements, including nuclear deterrence, were required. Sharing that view, Denmark said the draft advocated a biased and simplistic solution. Colombia said the non-first-use proposal simply weakened the United Nations Charter provision on the non-use of force.

New Zealand said it did not support resolutions that lacked balance and were declaratory in nature; the drafts that became resolutions 41/86 B and 41/60 F promoted the non-first-use of nuclear weapons, while ignoring the need for balanced reductions in conventional forces.

Sweden stated that an international instrument should deal solely with the concept of non-first-use of nuclear weapons and exclude extraneous elements; it believed that the establishment of a rough parity in conventional forces on a lower level would facilitate the non-first-use commitments. India said the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should be forsworn completely pending nuclear disarmament.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 4 December adopted resolution 41/86 G by recorded vote.

Prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing nuclear-arms race,

Deeply concerned by an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Considering that removal of the threat of nuclear war is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reiterating that it is the shared responsibility of all Member States to save succeeding generations from the scourge of another world war, which would inevitably be a nuclear war,

Recalling the provisions of paragraphs 47 to 50 and 56 to 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the procedures designed to secure the avoidance of nuclear war,

Recalling also that at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was stated that nuclear weapons were more than weapons of war, they were instruments of mass annihilation, and that at the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, it was stated that the accumulation of weapons, in particular nuclear weapons, constituted a threat to the survival of mankind and that, therefore, it had become imperative that States abandon the dangerous goal of unilateral security through armament and embrace the objective of common security through disarmament,

Recalling further its resolutions 36/81 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 I of 9 December 1982, 38/183 G of 20 December 1983, 39/148 P of 17 December 1984 and, in particular, its resolution 40/152 Q, of 16 December 1985, in which it expressed its conviction that, in view of the urgency of this matter and the inadequacy or insufficiency of existing measures, it is necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war, and once more requested the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war,

Having considered that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1986 session relating to this question,

Noting with grave concern that the Conference on Disarmament was once again unable to start negotiations on the question during its 1986 session,

Taking into account the deliberations on this item at its forty-first session,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all peoples of the world,

Also convinced that the prevention of nuclear war is a problem too important to be left to the nuclear-weapon States alone,

1. Notes with regret that, despite the fact that the Conference on Disarmament has discussed the question of the prevention of nuclear war for several years, it has been unable even to establish a subsidiary body to consider appropriate and practical measures to prevent it;

2. Reiterates its conviction that, in view of the urgency of this matter and the inadequacy or insufficiency of existing measures, it is necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war;

3. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures which could be negotiated and adopted individually for the prevention of nuclear war and to establish for that purpose an ad hoc committee on the subject at the beginning of its 1987 session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Prevention of nuclear war".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey.

In explanation of vote, Australia said the text should have given due recognition to the fact that the issue of nuclear-war prevention could not be dealt with in isolation, but in the context of preventing all wars; it hoped that the Conference would identify possible areas for detailed examination of the issue.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 3 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/60 F, reiterating its request to the Conference on Disarmament to initiate negotiations on a convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons. A draft convention, originally submitted in 1982⁽²⁾ and resubmitted annually since that time, was annexed to the resolution as a suggested basis for the negotiations.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Conscious of an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that a prohibition of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling that in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1986 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 40/151 F of 16 December 1985,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to this Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Convinced that this Convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to this Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

Article 2

This Convention shall be of unlimited duration.

Article 3

1. This Convention shall be open to all States for signature. Any State that does not sign the Convention before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may accede to it at any time.

2. This Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the five nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of this Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of the entry into force of this Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 4

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Government of the signatory and acceding States.

In witness whereof, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at ____ on the ____ day of ____ one thousand nine hundred and ____.

Approved by First Committee (A/41/841) by recorded vote (107-17-4), 12 November (meeting 41); 13-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.49); agenda item 61 (f).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Romania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Greece, Ireland, Israel, Japan.

China supported the thrust of the draft, even though it felt that certain formulations in the preamble and the main part of the draft convention needed further consideration. Sweden supported the idea of an international legal instrument, but it had reservations about the interpretation of the Charter given in the draft's sixth preambular paragraph since, if nuclear-weapon use were uncontestedly a violation of the Charter, there would be no need for another international legal instrument.

New Zealand's explanation of vote also applied to the draft that became resolution 41/86 B (see p. 35).

Climatic effects of nuclear war

The financial difficulties of the United Nations in 1986 compelled the Secretary-General to defer until 1987 the meeting of the Group of Consultant Experts to Carry Out a Study on the Climatic and Potential Physical Effects of Nuclear War, including Nuclear Winter, which, according to a 1985 Assembly request,^(c) was to start work on the study for Assembly consideration in 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 H, as recommended by the First Committee.

Climatic effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, after referring specifically to the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons, it declared, in paragraph 18, that removing the threat of a world war—a nuclear war—is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Noting that the conclusions of some of the studies compiled in the report of the Secretary-General,^(c) in conformity with resolution 39/148 F of 17 December 1984, confirm that nuclear winter and other climatic effects of nuclear war pose an unprecedented peril to all nations, even those far removed from the nuclear explosions, which would add immeasurably to the previously known dangers of nuclear war, without excluding the possibility of all the Earth being transformed into a darkened, frozen planet, where conditions would be conducive to mass extinction,

Recalling that, by its resolution 40/152 G of 16 December 1985, the General Assembly recognized the necessity of systematic research on the subject and requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study on the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, and to transmit the study to the Assembly for consideration at its forty-second session,

1. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the compilation of excerpts of scientific studies on the climatic effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, prepared in accordance with the request made in its resolution 39/148 F;

2. Regrets that, owing to the current financial crisis of the United Nations, the Secretary-General had to defer until 1987 the meeting of the Group of Consultant Experts to Carry Out a Study on the Climatic and Potential Physical Effects of Nuclear War, including Nuclear Winter, requested in its resolution 40/152 G;

3. Once again requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Group of Consultant Experts chosen by him, bearing in mind the advisability of wide geographical representation and of their qualifications in a broad range of scientific fields, to carry out a study on the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, which will examine, inter alia, its socio-economic consequences and would take into account the report of the Secretary-General and the source documents from which the compilation was prepared, together with any other relevant scientific studies;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit the study to the General Assembly in due time for consideration at its forty-third session, in 1988;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Climatic effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter: report of the Secretary-General".

4 December 1986 Meeting 96 140-1-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/842) by recorded vote (119-1-10), 12 November (meeting 41); 5-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.36/Rev.D; agenda item 62.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, India, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 37, 41; 5th Committee 36; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, the United States said the issue merited a study by qualified investigators in a manner free of political overtones—a task it did not feel the proposed study could accomplish; further, the draft had financial implications. Japan also stressed that such studies should be conducted in a balanced, objective and scientific manner.

Nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament

No major substantive progress was achieved in 1986 within the Disarmament Commission, the Conference on Disarmament and the General Assembly towards nuclear-arms limitation. The October summit conference between the USSR and the United States, at Reykjavik, resulted in their agreeing in principle on certain aspects but not on the whole package of nuclear and space arms issues before them.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament⁽¹⁾ considered an item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament" in plenary meetings from 17 to 28 February and from 16 to 27 June 1986, and in nine informal meetings. It was, however, unable to agree on the establishment of an ad hoc committee under the item.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In the First Committee, the German Democratic Republic submitted a draft resolution entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects",⁽⁵⁾ which would have had the Assembly call on the Conference on Disarmament to proceed without delay to negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament. The German Democratic Republic subsequently withdrew the draft, stating that important elements had been incorporated into another draft, which it joined in sponsoring (see below).

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 4 December, adopted resolution 41/86 F by recorded vote.

Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 11 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the Assembly stated that the nuclear-arms race, far from contributing to the strengthening of the security of all States, on the contrary weakens it and increases the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war and that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 47 of the Final Document, the Assembly expressed the belief that nuclear weapons pose the greatest danger to mankind and to the survival of civilization, that it is essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons, and that the ultimate goal in this context is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that in the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was stated that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, had heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations, and that it was also stated that nuclear weapons were more than weapons of war, that such weapons were instruments of mass annihilation,

Noting further that in the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, it was stated that the idea that world peace could be maintained through nuclear deterrence, a doctrine that lay at the root of the continuing escalation in the quantity and quality of nuclear weapons, was the most dangerous myth in existence,

Believing that all nations have a vital interest in negotiations on nuclear disarmament because the existence of nuclear weapons in the arsenals of a handful of States directly and fundamentally jeopardizes the vital security interests of both nuclear and non-nuclear-weapon States alike,

Welcoming proposals on the complete elimination of nuclear weapons throughout the world,

Considering that it is necessary to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons of all types and versions and their delivery systems as a first step in the process which should lead to the achievement of substantial reductions in nuclear forces, and welcoming in this context the Joint Declaration issued on 22 May 1984 by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, which was reaffirmed in the Delhi Declaration and the Mexico Declaration issued by the leaders of those States on 28 January 1985 and 7 August 1986, respectively,

Noting that in the Conference on Disarmament, at its 1986 session, several proposals were presented for the consideration of practical measures,

Regretting, however, that the Conference on Disarmament was unable to reach agreement on the establishment of an ad hoc committee on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament,

Convinced of the imperative need to take constructive action towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

1. Affirms that the existence of bilateral negotiations on nuclear and space arms in no way diminishes the urgent need to initiate multilateral negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament;

2. Believes that efforts should be intensified with a view to initiating, as a matter of the highest priority, multilateral negotiations in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

3. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish an ad hoc committee at the beginning of its 1987 session to elaborate on paragraph 50 of the Final Document and to submit recommendations to the Conference as to how it could best initiate multilateral negotiations of agreements, with adequate measures of verification, in appropriate stages for:

(a) Cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems;

(b) Cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(c) Substantial reduction in existing nuclear weapons with a view to their ultimate elimination;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on its consideration of this subject;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament".

Approved by First Committee (A/41/842) by recorded vote (113-15-5), 11 November (meeting 40); 17-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L33/Rev.D; agenda item 62 (i)).

Sponsors: Argentina, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Poland, Romania, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 36, 40; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Denmark, Greece, Israel, Japan, Spain.

Explaining its vote, Australia said the text failed to express the kind of relationship which it felt should exist between bilateral and multilateral efforts towards nuclear disarmament, and underestimated the importance of the former. The United Kingdom considered the bilateral negotiations between the two States—possessing some 95 per cent of the world's nuclear weapons—to offer the most realistic hope of halting the nuclear-arms race and initiating a balanced and verifiable nuclear-arms reduction. Greece would have voted in favour but for what it felt was an over-simplified qualification, in the fourth preambular paragraph, of the doctrine of deterrence as the most dangerous myth in existence.

Prohibition of nuclear weapons

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 L by recorded vote, as recommended by the First Committee, requesting the Conference on Disarmament to pursue consideration of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981, 37/99 E of 13 December 1982, 38/188 E of 20 December 1983, 39/151 H of 17 December 1984 and 40/94 G of 12 December 1985, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1986 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for both parts of its session held in 1986 contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices also would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) by recorded vote (128-1-6), 11 November (meeting 40); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L58); agenda item 60 (g).

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Cameroon, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Philippines, Romania, Samoa, Sweden, Uruguay.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France.

Abstaining: Argentina, Brazil, China, India, United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote, India said the draft sought to separate the question of the cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes from that of nuclear weapons; in its view, production in both areas should be stopped simultaneously. Argentina held that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons should not be divorced from the general issue of nuclear disarmament. The USSR voted affirmatively on the understanding that the topic should be examined during a multilateral exchange of views on nuclear disarmament, which it proposed should start immediately, among all nuclear Powers.

USSR-United States nuclear-arms negotiations

In September 1986,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly information received from the USSR in response to its 1985 invitation⁽⁷⁾ for information on the progress of the USSR-United States bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations.

The USSR and the United States held a summit meeting in mid-October at Reykjavik, where there was general agreement on the reduction of strategic arms and medium-range missiles, but not on the prohibition of the development and testing of space weapons (see also p. 14).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the Assembly adopted, on the recommendation of the First Committee, three resolutions—41/59 F and 41/86 A and N—on the bilateral negotiations.

The Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/59 F without vote.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the most acute and urgent task of the present day is to remove the threat of a world war—a nuclear war,

Recalling and reaffirming the statements and provisions on nuclear disarmament set forth in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and in particular, the provisions that "effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority", contained in paragraph 20, and that "In the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility", contained in paragraph 48,

Bearing in mind that the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America agreed in their joint statement issued at Geneva on 21 November 1985 that "a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought" and the common desire they expressed in the same statement calling for early progress in areas where there is common ground, including the principle of 50 per cent reductions in the nuclear arms of the Soviet Union and the United States appropriately applied,

Also noting that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have held further bilateral negotiations on various issues of disarmament,

Further noting that the Conference on Disarmament has not played its due role in the field of nuclear disarmament,

Bearing in mind that the Governments and peoples of various countries expect that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America will reach agreement on halting the nuclear-arms race and reducing nuclear weapons, so as to start the process of nuclear disarmament,

1. Expresses its deep concern that negotiations on nuclear disarmament should yield concrete results at the earliest possible time;

2. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, to discharge their special responsibility for nuclear disarmament, to take the lead in halting the nuclear-arms race and to negotiate in earnest with a view to reaching early agreement on the drastic reduction of their nuclear weapons;

3. Reiterates its belief that bilateral and multilateral efforts for nuclear disarmament should complement and facilitate each other;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 41/59 F

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) without vote, 11 November (meeting 40); draft by China (A/C.1/41/L.28/Rev.D; agenda item 60).

On 4 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/86 A by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

Noting its resolutions 38/183 P of 20 December 1983, 39/148 B of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 B of 16 December 1985,

Noting with satisfaction that at their meeting at Geneva in November 1985 the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America committed themselves to the objective of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on Earth,

Noting that in their joint statement of 8 January 1985 the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America agreed that the subject of the negotiations was a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms, both strategic and intermediate-range, with all these questions considered and resolved in their inter-relationship,

Noting that at the further meeting at Reykjavik in October 1986, although no comprehensive agreement was reached, intensive discussion of far-reaching arms-control understandings took place,

Noting also that a large measure of agreement was reached on a number of issues,

Noting further with satisfaction that the two sides remain committed to further progress in their bilateral negotiations, building on what has been achieved so far,

Expressing its appreciation to the two Governments concerned for their readiness to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in those negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Believing that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility, and with full account taken of the security interests of all States, it is possible to achieve far-reaching and effectively verifiable agreements,

Firmly convinced that an early agreement in these negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America in their endeavours, taking into account both the importance and complexity of their negotiations,

1. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking the attainment of their agreed objectives in the negotiations, in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament;

2. Urges the two Governments to make early progress, in particular in areas where there is common ground;

3. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support for the bilateral negotiations and their successful conclusion.

4 December 1986 Meeting 96 88-0-56 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/842) by recorded vote 157-0-66, 14 November (meeting 45); 18-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.3), orally revised; agenda item 62.

Sponsors: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Rwanda, Spain, Swaziland, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 45; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger,* Norway, Oman, Panama,* Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.*

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Maldives, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Romania, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, the USSR said the sponsors disregarded its position and had failed to portray objectively the results of the Reykjavik meeting and the status of the bilateral negotiations on nuclear and space armaments; it regarded as negative any departure from, or attempts to revise, the understandings reached. Yugoslavia viewed the draft as expressing the position of only one group of countries.

Mexico considered the draft unbalanced, and felt that the first, fifth and seventh preambular paragraphs, as well as paragraph 2, should have been deleted. Venezuela also had difficulties with the seventh preambular paragraph, saying it had not received the type of information on the negotiations as called for. Sharing that view, Uruguay added that a number of paragraphs were the subject of controversy falling outside the Assembly purview. France warned against prejudging the results of the negotiations and suggested that the international community refrain from premature manifestation of satisfaction and insist on the need for a balance of conventional forces at reduced levels.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, resolution 41/86 N was also adopted on 4 December by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/18 of 18 November 1985,

Recalling also the Harare Appeal on Disarmament, adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries on 6 September 1986,

Gravely concerned over the continuing escalation of the arms race, especially in nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, despite the fact that this increases the risk of nuclear war and endangers the survival of humanity,

Convinced that the alternative today in the nuclear age is not between war or peace, but between life and death, which makes the prevention of nuclear war the principal task of our times,

Further convinced that international peace and security can be ensured only through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament,

1. Appeals to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to conduct, pursuant to their special obligations and responsibilities as leading nuclear-weapon States, their bilateral negotiations with the greatest resolve with a view to achieving agreements on concrete and effective measures for the halting of the nuclear-arms race, radical reduction of their nuclear arsenals, nuclear disarmament and the prevention of an arms race in outer space;

2. Invites the two negotiating parties to keep the General Assembly duly informed of the progress of their negotiations.

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

The United States, recalling that it had put forward a number of proposals aimed at the objectives mentioned in the draft as objectives of the bilateral negotiations, said its preamble contained references to certain documents which it considered unbalanced and formulations that it could not support.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

In December 1986, the General Assembly adopted five resolutions relating to a nuclear-test ban. The Assembly again requested the Conference on Disarmament to establish in 1987 an ad hoc committee to carry out multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions (41/46 A), and to set up immediately an international seismic monitoring network for verification of compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty (41/47). Pending the conclusion of such a treaty, it invited the United States to join the moratorium on nuclear explosions (41/54), and called on the States conducting nuclear explosions to inform the Secretary-General within one week of such action (41/59 N). Further, the Assembly recommended the convening of a conference to consider amendments to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water⁽⁸⁾—also known as the partial test-ban Treaty—that would convert it into a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty (41/46 B).

In 1986 communications to the Secretary-General concerning nuclear-weapon tests, the USSR announced four successive extensions of its August 1985 unilateral moratorium: in January the moratorium was extended until 31 March; in March it was extended until the United States carried out a test; in May until 6 August; and in August until the end of the year (see p. 13).

In related developments, the USSR and the United States agreed, in July 1986, to start bilateral talks on the verification issues related to nuclear testing.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The question of a comprehensive ban, which had never appeared as a separate item on the Disarmament Commission's agenda, none the less received heightened attention at the Commission's 1986 session. In the Commission's report,⁽⁹⁾ its recommendations on the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests included seven drafts, all within brackets, indicating that agreement had not been reached on them. The texts referred to negotiation or conclusion of a treaty, examination of specific issues with a view to the negotiation of a treaty, and extension of the partial test-ban Treaty to include underground tests and relevant verification provisions; two alternative texts called for a moratorium on all test explosions pending the conclusion of a treaty.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the question of a nuclear-test ban from 17 to 28 February and from 16 to 27 June 1986.⁽¹⁾

The Conference again could not agree on the mandate of an ad hoc committee on the nuclear-test-ban issue, with the group of 21 and the socialist States calling for such a body to initiate multilateral negotiations on a nuclear-weapon test-ban treaty, and the Western States asserting that no consensus existed on the mandate.

Working papers submitted to the Conference in 1986 included those by: a group of socialist States, on negotiations on a treaty; Australia, on establishment of a global seismic monitoring network; Norway, on utilization of small-aperture seismic arrays in a global seismological network; Sweden, on verification; and the USSR, on seismic verification. The Conference also had before it statements transmitted by several countries, including a document on verification measures proposed by the leaders of six States in the Mexico Declaration of 7 August (see p. 14) and a statement by a group of socialist States condemning the 10 April nuclear explosion by the United States.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held its twenty-first (10-21 March)⁽¹¹⁾ and twenty-second (21 July-1 August)⁽¹²⁾ sessions at Geneva under the chairmanship of Ola Dahlman (Sweden), submitting progress reports on each session.

In addition, the Group submitted in July 1986, and the Conference subsequently took note of, its fourth main report⁽¹³⁾ and the summary of that report,⁽¹⁴⁾ covering the results of a test—termed the Group of Scientific Experts' Technical Test 1984—which had developed and successfully tested with the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) procedures for the regular transmission of Level I data (basic parameters of detected seismic signals, for routine reporting) from temporary national facilities to experimental international data centres; 75 seismograph stations in 37 countries contributed seismic Level I data to the technical test. The report contained eight chapters (introduction, organization and method of work, overview, participating seismograph stations and temporary national facilities, Level I data extraction experience, WMO/Global Telecommunication System data transmission experience, evaluation of procedures employed at experimental international data centres, conclusions and recommendations) and seven appendices containing detailed, technical material.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted five resolutions on a nuclear-test ban. A number of delegations explained in single statements their votes on two or more texts (see p. 49).

Two of the resolutions were adopted under the title of "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions". Resolution 41/46 A was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than thirty years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than fifty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to the attainment of which it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on eight different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Recalling that the Secretary-General, addressing a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 12 December 1984, after appealing for a renewed effort towards a comprehensive test-ban treaty, emphasized that no single multilateral agreement could have a greater effect on limiting the further refinement of nuclear weapons and that a comprehensive test-ban treaty is the litmus test of the real willingness to pursue nuclear disarmament,

Taking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States which act as depositaries of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in article 1 of that Treaty to conclude a treaty resulting in the permanent banning of all nuclear-test explosions, including all those explosions underground, and that such an undertaking was reiterated in 1968 in the preamble to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, article VI of which further embodies their solemn and legally binding commitment to take effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Bearing in mind that the same three nuclear-weapon States, in the report they submitted on 30 July 1980 to the Committee on Disarmament after four years of trilateral negotiations, stated, inter alia, that they were "mindful of the great value for all mankind that the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon test explosions in all environments will have" as well as "conscious of the important responsibility placed upon them to find solutions to the remaining problems", adding furthermore that they were "determined to exert their best efforts and necessary will and persistence to bring the negotiations to an early and successful conclusion",

Noting that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration adopted on 21 September 1985, called on the nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty to resume trilateral negotiations in 1985 and on all the nuclear-weapon States to participate in the urgent negotiation and conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, as a matter of the highest priority, in the Conference on Disarmament,

Recalling that the leaders of the six States associated with the five-continent peace and disarmament initiative affirmed in the Mexico Declaration, adopted on 7 August 1986, that they "remain convinced that no issue is more urgent and crucial today than bringing to an end all nuclear tests", adding that "both the qualitative and the quantitative development of nuclear weapons exacerbate the arms race, and both would be inhibited by the complete abolition of nuclear weapons testing",

Bearing in mind that the multilateral negotiation of such a treaty in the Conference on Disarmament must cover all the various interrelated problems that it will be necessary to solve in order that the Conference may transmit a complete draft treaty to the General Assembly,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

3. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

4. Urges once more the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to abide strictly by their undertakings to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to expedite negotiations to this end;

5. Appeals to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular to the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to promote the establishment by the Conference at the beginning of its 1987 session of an ad hoc committee with the objective of carrying out the multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions;

6. Recommends to the Conference on Disarmament that such an ad hoc committee should comprise two working groups dealing, respectively, with the following interrelated questions: contents and scope of the treaty, and compliance and verification;

7. Calls upon the States depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by virtue of their special responsibilities under those two Treaties and as a provisional measure, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear-test explosions, either through a bilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria, which should include appropriate means of verification;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 135-3-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/834) by recorded vote (110-3-14), 13 November (meeting 43); 11-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L35); agenda item 47.

Sponsors: Finland, Indonesia, Ireland, Kenya, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Turkey.

Uruguay expressed the hope that a unilateral moratorium would mark the beginning of a process leading to a multilateral test-ban treaty. New Zealand would have preferred a more comprehensive call for a moratorium. Australia stated that a moratorium would be no substitute for tackling the unresolved issues before a legally binding, verifiable and durable treaty could be achieved.

Speaking similarly, the Netherlands said the language in the draft prejudged procedural decisions to be taken by the Conference on Disarmament; it considered as positive, however, the amended title and the disappearance in the 1986 text of certain formulae in respect of verification. Canada also commended the draft's sponsors for their positive attitude. Denmark felt that the text, despite some elements to which it could not fully subscribe, reflected a movement in the right direction, and expressed hope that an ad hoc committee would be established. Similarly, Brazil could not support the linkages and assumptions made in the text, but considered as positive the recommendation to establish the committee. Norway regretted that the text referred only to the three depositary Powers of the partial test-ban Treaty and omitted mention of the other two nuclear Powers.

India believed that the scope of the envisaged treaty was at variance with that generally accepted for such a treaty; also, it could not accept the linkage suggested between a comprehensive test ban and the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT).⁽¹⁵⁾ Burma was unable to associate itself with texts relating to NPT, to which it was not a party.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/46 B, also by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination, proclaimed since 1963 in the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to continue negotiations to this end,

Bearing also in mind that in 1968 the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons recalled such determination and included in its article VI an undertaking by each of its parties to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arm race at an early date,

Recalling that in its resolution 2828(XX) of 19 November 1965, adopted unanimously, it had stressed that one of the basic principles on which the treaty to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons should be based was that such treaty, which was then to be negotiated, should embody an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations of the nuclear and non-nuclear Powers,

Recalling also that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration adopted by consensus on 21 September 1985, expressed its deep regret that a comprehensive multilateral nuclear-test-ban treaty had not been concluded so far and called for the urgent negotiation and conclusion of such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority,

Noting that article II of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water provides a procedure for the consideration and eventual adoption of amendments to the Treaty by a conference of its parties,

1. Recommends that the States parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertake practical steps leading to the convening of a conference to consider amendments to the Treaty that would convert it into a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

2. Requests that States parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the progress of their efforts.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

Austria and Denmark did not consider amending the partial test-ban Treaty to be the most appropriate way to achieve a comprehensive test ban. Norway agreed, adding that it would be more productive to devote all efforts to advance practical work towards resolving the outstanding issues on a comprehensive test ban. New Zealand also did not think the approach to be realistic and urged the Conference to proceed to practical work. The Netherlands felt the approach advocated would detract from a more realistic one and was tantamount to a denial of 25 years of negotiations on a comprehensive test ban. Australia preferred the approach reflected in resolution 41/47 (see below), as did Argentina, which observed that the five nuclear-weapon States were represented in the Conference on Disarmament. Burma felt that paragraph 1 contained ambiguities; further, it did not want to prejudice the outcome of the practical steps to be taken with regard to the convening of a conference of States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty.

Brazil supported the draft in the hope that it would encourage compliance with commitments undertaken by the nuclear-weapon Powers under the Treaty; it remained committed to the multilateral negotiation of a non-discriminatory universal nuclear-weapon-test ban.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/47, also by recorded vote.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Convinced of the consequent urgent need for an end to the nuclear-arms race and the immediate and verifiable reduction and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Convinced, therefore, that an end to all nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and further nuclear proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to limit and reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons.

Noting that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are engaged in nuclear and space talks and in consultations on the entire scope of issues relating to nuclear testing, and expressing the hope that those talks and consultations will lead to both early and concrete results,

Noting also recent initiatives, including the proposals by the leaders of the six States associated with the five-continent initiative, to promote an end to nuclear testing,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve the discontinuance of all nuclear tests in all environments for all time is through the conclusion of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty open to and capable of attracting the adherence of all States,

Reaffirming the responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of fundamental importance;

2. Urges, therefore, that the following actions be taken in order that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty may be concluded at an early date:

(a) The Conference on Disarmament should commence practical work on a nuclear-test-ban treaty at the beginning of its 1987 session;

(b) States members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, and all other States, should co-operate with the Conference on Disarmament in order to facilitate and promote such work;

(c) The nuclear-weapon States, especially those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, should agree to appropriate verifiable, interim measures with a view to realizing a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(d) Those nuclear-weapon States that have not yet done so should adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

3. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take immediate steps for the establishment, with the widest possible participation, of an international seismic monitoring network with a view to the further development of its potential to monitor and verify compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) In this context, to take into account the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including the exchange of wave-form data, and other relevant initiatives by individual States and groups of States;

(c) To initiate detailed investigation of other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report on progress to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 137-1-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/835) by recorded vote (117-1-16), 13 November (meeting 43); 26-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L72); agenda item 48.

Against: France.

Abstaining: Angola, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, China, Cuba, Guatemala, India, Israel, Malawi, Nicaragua, Portugal, Sudan, United Kingdom, United States,

Before acting on the draft as a whole, the First Committee, by separate recorded votes, approved paragraph 2 by 96 to 1 (France), with 35 abstentions, and paragraph 3 by 101 to none, with 30 abstentions.

The United Kingdom, voting in favour of paragraph 2 and abstaining on paragraph 3 and the draft as a whole, felt that all the technical and practical problems involved in establishing an international seismic monitoring network must be resolved before proceeding with the proposal mentioned in paragraph 3 (a). The United States opposed the idea in paragraph 2 that the Conference on Disarmament should begin work on a multilateral treaty; it considered that paragraph 5 perpetuated what it considered the mistaken impression that a test-ban treaty was one of the most urgent arms control items, when reducing nuclear weapons and eliminating the nuclear threat were far more urgent.

A number of other States explained their abstentions on paragraph 2. India stated that it limited the Conference's mandate, which, in its view, should focus on the need to commence negotiations. Indonesia stressed that what was needed was not merely the commencement of practical work but concrete negotiations within the Conference. Similarly, Argentina regretted that the draft did not refer explicitly to the immediate initiation of negotiations in the Conference. Brazil viewed the text as contenting itself with collateral measures and no longer contemplating a negotiating mandate for the Conference. Sri Lanka had serious reservations on the paragraph because it appeared to dwell too much on interim measures. Cuba added that the proposal for an international seismic monitoring network would only have meaning within the context of a nuclear-test-ban treaty. Burma felt paragraph 2 lacked specificity. Venezuela expressed reservations on paragraphs 2 (a) and 3 (a) and (c), saying that the only activity the Conference should undertake was the immediate commencement of substantive negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty, and that the activities requested in paragraphs 3 (a) and (c) did not appear to be in keeping with the Conference's function as a negotiating body.

Denmark considered the text, compared with others submitted on the topic, to offer the most constructive and realistic approach towards concluding a treaty.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly also adopted resolution 41/54 by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/88 on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the growing threat of nuclear war,

Recalling that over the past three decades the need for cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon testing has been in the focus of attention of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming its conviction that the conclusion of a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests by all States would constitute an indispensable element for the success of efforts to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons and to prevent the expansion of existing nuclear arsenals and the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries, thus contributing to the achievement of the final goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons under appropriate verification,

Stressing once again that the elaboration of such a treaty is the task of the highest priority and should not be made dependent on the attainment of any other measure in the field of disarmament,

Recalling the proposals contained in the Delhi Declaration adopted by the heads of State or Government of six States on 28 January 1985, and their joint message of 28 February 1986 addressed to the leaders of the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this subject, in particular resolution 40/88 of 12 December 1985,

Emphasizing the importance of verification measures, including those proposed by the leaders of six States in the Mexico Declaration which they adopted at Ixtapa on 7 August 1986,

Deeply deploring that the Conference on Disarmament has been unable to carry out negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on such a treaty,

Deeply deploring that appeals to refrain from nuclear testing have remained unheeded,

1. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to proceed promptly to negotiations on all aspects of this matter, including adequate measures of verification, with the aim of preparing without delay a draft treaty that would effectively ban all test explosions of nuclear weapons by all States everywhere and would contain provisions, acceptable to all, preventing the circumvention of this ban by means of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes;

2. Resolutely urges all States, and especially all nuclear-weapon States, to exert maximum efforts and exercise political will for the elaboration and conclusion without delay of such a treaty;

3. Invites the United States of America—pending the conclusion of such a treaty—to join the moratorium on nuclear explosions declared unilaterally and extended several times by one nuclear-weapon State;

4. Expresses its hope that all other nuclear-weapon States will also consider joining in such a moratorium;

5. Invites all interested States to agree without delay to establish an international network for monitoring and verifying compliance with such a moratorium joined by other nuclear-weapon States;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/54 on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 123-3-26 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/838) by recorded vote (90-3-26), 13 November (meeting 43); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.8); agenda item 55.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam.

Recorded vote in Assembly has follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Samoa, Spain, Tunisia, Turkey.

Before action was taken on the draft in the First Committee, two proposals for amendments and a sub-amendment were withdrawn by their sponsors. Ireland⁽¹⁶⁾ had proposed replacing the reference to nuclear-weapon tests (third preambular paragraph) and test explosions of nuclear weapons (paragraph 1) by "nuclear-test explosions", and ending paragraph 1 with "everywhere". Cuba orally proposed adding a new preambular paragraph "emphasizing the pressing need to negotiate and conclude a comprehensive multilateral nuclear-test-ban treaty prohibiting all nuclear-weapon tests by all States in all environments for all time"—to which Ireland proposed an oral sub-amendment deleting "weapon" before "tests".

In explanation of vote, Côte d'Ivoire held that in the current climate of mistrust, unilateral actions were unlikely to contribute substantially to the cessation or prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests. Brazil said previous texts had objectively addressed in a balanced manner, in the appropriate body, a comprehensive test ban, but, as from 1985, the initiative had begun to highlight views to which it could not subscribe. Australia, noting that the text referred throughout to nuclear-weapon tests, said it preferred a treaty that banned all nuclear explosions in all environments for all time, and added that the verification régime should be agreed before or together with the substantive limitations at issue, but not afterwards. Similarly, New Zealand said the text did not take sufficient account of the need to ensure that a test-ban treaty would not be circumvented through resort to peaceful nuclear explosions; it also had reservations about setting up a seismic monitoring network following, not preceding, an agreed moratorium by all nuclear-weapon States. Norway considered it impossible in practice to work out an arrangement for conducting peaceful nuclear explosions that would preclude the acquisition of military benefits; a global seismological network should apply to both a moratorium and a comprehensive test ban. The Netherlands felt that the draft contained provisions that prejudged procedural decisions to be taken by the Conference on Disarmament and its fourth preambular paragraph failed to take into account the approach involving parallel reduction of nuclear tests and arsenals; a moratorium would not lead to a verifiable agreement on eliminating nuclear tests. It considered positive, however, the call made for the establishment of an international seismic network. Austria expressed readiness to join in such a network.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 N by recorded vote.

Notification of nuclear tests

The General Assembly,

Noting the repeated calls by the General Assembly for the urgent conclusion of a treaty to ban all nuclear explosions in all environments for all time,

Expressing its conviction that, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the States concerned should provide all other States with information on all nuclear explosions conducted by them,

Convinced that the provision of such data by all States conducting nuclear explosions would supplement and contribute to the improvement of independent monitoring capabilities and thereby facilitate the early conclusion of a verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

1. Calls upon each of the States concerned to provide to the Secretary-General within one week of each nuclear explosion:

- (a) The date and time of the explosion;
- (b) The exact location of the explosion in terms of geographic co-ordinates and depth;
- (c) The geological characteristics, including the basic physical properties of the rock, of the site of the explosion;
- (d) The estimated yield of the explosion;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make this information immediately available to all States and to submit to the General Assembly annually a register of the information provided on nuclear explosions during the preceding twelve months.

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) by recorded vote (107-1-23), 13 November (meeting 43); 11-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L67); agenda item 60.

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Cameroon, Fiji, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sweden.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: France.

Abstaining: Angola, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Madagascar, Mexico, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Poland, Sao Tome and Principe, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zimbabwe.

Explaining its vote, India was not convinced that the notification would serve any purpose in seeking nuclear disarmament. Brazil, Bulgaria and Cuba said what was needed was not notification but ending nuclear tests. On the other hand, Sri Lanka observed that although the draft might appear to emphasize procedures to monitor tests rather than efforts to ban them completely, the second preambular paragraph clearly stated that the exercise was to be adopted pending a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, while Burma felt that compliance by all States would facilitate its early conclusion.

The USSR felt that notification must be viewed only as a temporary measure for confidence-building during negotiations on the nuclear-test ban by all nuclear Powers. While not ruling out the possibility of confidence-building through reciprocal information exchange, the United States could not support a text aimed at facilitating the early conclusion of a comprehensive test ban. The United Kingdom and the United States said they already released information routinely on nuclear-test explosions.

Argentina believed the draft would help provide the United Nations with important information. Belgium considered the provision of data to contribute to transparency, and added that the data provided by States might be furnished to the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts for examination and interpretation; the Group's work would be enhanced if the nuclear Powers demonstrated their interest in the matter. Norway said the Norwegian Seismic Array, one of the world's largest seismological observatories, distributed to similar institutions in more than 30 countries monthly bulletins containing data on detected and located seismic events.

A number of countries gave general explanations of vote pertaining to all five texts. France stated that a ban must not be seen as a precondition or given priority over a substantial reduction in the nuclear arsenals of the two most heavily armed Powers; France was conducting nuclear tests to maintain its deterrent force at the minimum level of credibility indispensable for its security. The Federal Republic of Germany did not support the texts that favoured moratoria; it continued to advocate legally binding, reliably verifiable undertakings of interested parties; a comprehensive test ban should not be regarded as a substitute for substantial reductions in existing nuclear arsenals. Japan stressed the importance of resolving verification questions so as to ensure compliance with treaty obligations; it intended to begin in December 1986 an experimental exchange, with interested countries, of more accurate data on seismic wave-forms. Uruguay held that small countries outside the area of nuclear confrontation were in no position to assess the value that measures adopted by the super-Powers might have in the strategic nuclear field; it hoped the unilateral moratorium would become a bilateral one between the super-Powers and lead on to a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of nuclear tests.

Nuclear-weapon freeze

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions (41/60 E and I), calling for a freeze on nuclear armament. A number of States explained in single statements their positions on the texts (see p. 51).

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/60 E by recorded vote.

Freeze on nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 A of 13 December 1982, 38/73 B of 15 December 1983, 39/63 G of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 E of 16 December 1985 concerning a freeze on nuclear weapons,

Convinced that in this nuclear age lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Further convinced that the highest priority objectives in the field of disarmament have to be nuclear disarmament and the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction,

Recognizing the urgent need to halt the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons,

Recognizing further the urgent need for a negotiated reduction of nuclear-weapon stockpiles leading to their complete elimination,

Noting with deep concern that nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any action in response to the call made in the above-mentioned resolutions,

1. Once again calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree to a freeze on nuclear weapons, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Freeze on nuclear weapons".

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, China, Iceland, Japan, Spain.

Explaining its vote, New Zealand regretted that the text did not refer to the need for adequate measures of verification and to a comprehensive nuclear-test ban. Similarly, the Netherlands felt the text contained an inadequate, open-ended definition of the scope and remained silent on the subject of verification.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/60 I also by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/151 C on a nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that, on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth and stressed that mankind is therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament, or face annihilation,

Bearing in mind that in the Delhi Declaration issued on 28 January 1985, the heads of State or Government of six States Members of the United Nations, coming from five different continents, stated: "A halt to the nuclear-arms race is at the present moment imperative. Only thus can it be ensured that nuclear arsenals do not grow while negotiations proceed", that in the Mexico Declaration adopted on 7 August 1986 it was stressed that they "continue to urge that what has so far been a unilateral moratorium by one of the two major nuclear States should soon become at least a bilateral moratorium", and that at the same summit a document was issued on verification measures to facilitate the immediate halting of nuclear tests,

Believing that it is a matter of the utmost urgency to stop any further increase in the awesome arsenals of the two major nuclear-weapon States, which already have ample retaliatory power and a frightening overkill capacity,

Noting that at the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, the heads of State or Government called upon the leaders of the two States to pursue without delay and in a spirit of goodwill the objectives they set themselves at Geneva,

Welcoming the unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing declared by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in August 1985 and extended by it on four different occasions, the last time until 1 January 1987,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step towards preventing the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that at the same time it would provide a favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze,

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim, either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards the comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

(i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate measures and procedures of verification, such as those that have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva and those contemplated in the document on verification measures issued at the Mexico Summit on 7 August 1986;

(c) It would be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation when other nuclear-weapon States join in such a freeze, as the General Assembly urges them to do;

2. Requests the above-mentioned two major nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report or two separate reports to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-second session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/60 I on a nuclear-arms freeze".

In explanation of vote, Australia saw a freeze as a first step, to be followed by negotiations on reduction and eventual elimination of nuclear weapons; stressed that a freeze should take into account the need for mutuality, balance and verification; and welcomed the absence in the text of critical references to nuclear deterrence, which it regarded as an interim step to the goal of complete nuclear disarmament and the only option currently available to avert nuclear conflict. New Zealand said the preamble contained questionable assertions, that it disagreed with the characterization of the freeze as the most effective first step, and that it was disappointed that the test ban called for in paragraph I(a) was not truly comprehensive. The Netherlands said that stressing a freeze, in the light of recent USSR-United States developments, would give a wrong signal and advocate less than what could be attainable; that a freeze would sanction regional instabilities and affect security interests; and that the text failed to take account of recent bilateral negotiations concerning verification.

Speaking on the two texts, France objected to the freeze concept itself, saying that it would be difficult to verify, would sanction existing imbalances and affect security interests, and reduce the interest of those benefiting from a freeze in negotiating on arms reduction; it asserted that nuclear-arms reduction should begin with the two major nuclear Powers, focusing first on the definition and the establishment of a satisfactory balance. Japan also said a freeze would be difficult to verify and, unless immediately followed by a balanced reduction in nuclear weapons, could lead to the preservation of a real or perceived nuclear superiority by one side or the other. Norway voted in favour of both texts on the understanding that they recognized the need for a freeze to be balanced, mutual and verifiable in order not to upset stability. The United Kingdom considered that bilateral negotiations offered the best hope of halting the arms race.

Strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(¹) considered, from 7 to 11 April and 28 July to 1 August, effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons—also known as negative security assurances. Consultations on the topic did not lead to the re-establishment of a subsidiary body, while the views expressed in debate remained largely unchanged as to the scope, substance, form and nature of the envisaged assurances.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In two resolutions adopted in December on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly reaffirmed the urgent need to agree on effective international arrangements on negative security assurances (41/51, 41/52). Some countries explained in single statements their positions on the two texts (see p. 53).

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/51 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States, and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent nuclear conflagration,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of such weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the determination of non-nuclear-weapon States in various parts of the world to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories and to ensure the complete absence of such weapons in their respective regions, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and being anxious to encourage and contribute to the attainment of this objective,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its numerous resolutions on this subject, as well as the relevant part of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament considered in 1986 the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons", as reflected in its report, and that disappointment was expressed at the lack of progress on that item.

Noting further that this consideration revealed the existence of a general readiness to continue a substantive dialogue on the issue,

Recalling the proposals submitted on this subject to the General Assembly and in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention, and the widespread international support for the conclusion of such a convention,

Welcoming once again the solemn declarations made by some nuclear-weapon States concerning non-first use of nuclear weapons, and convinced that if all nuclear-weapon States were to assume obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, that would be tantamount in practice to banning the use of nuclear weapons against all States, including all non-nuclear-weapon States,

Considering that the non-nuclear-weapon States having no nuclear weapons on their territories have every right to receive reliable international legal guarantees against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms once again the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons and to find a common approach acceptable to all, which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

2. Considers that the Conference on Disarmament should continue to explore ways and means of overcoming the difficulties encountered in carrying out negotiations on this question;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue active consideration on this subject, including through the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons as soon as practicable, at its 1987 session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Brazil, Burma, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Greece, Grenada, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Malawi, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sudan, Sweden, Uruguay.

In explanation of vote, Japan said it found the draft lacking in balance and objectivity, particularly in some of the preambular paragraphs and references to specific modalities. New Zealand also considered the text unbalanced in its approach to important security questions.

Also on 3 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/52 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 B of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/155 of 12 December 1980, 36/95 of 9 December 1981, 37/81 of 9 December 1982, 38/68 of 15 December 1983, 39/58 of 12 December 1984 and 40/86 of 12 December 1985,

Further recalling paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament* urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Noting the proposals submitted under this item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note of the decision of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Fez, Morocco, from 6 to 10 January 1986, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Further noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including in particular those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

*The Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Brazil, India, United States.

In explanation of vote, Japan expressed reservations on paragraphs 2, 3 and 5 that referred to specific modalities of negative security assurances, feeling that they might prejudice the work of the Conference.

Abstaining on the two texts, Argentina, Brazil and India questioned the value of negative security assurances, as assurances could be reliable only if progress were made in nuclear disarmament. Argentina stressed the moral and political obligation of nuclear-weapon States to non-nuclear-weapon ones. Brazil said the nuclear-weapon Powers had offered other nations only unilateral declarations of guarantees, which, with one exception, were virtually no guarantees at all. India asserted that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons were the only real and credible security assurances.

Nuclear non-proliferation

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

The international community continued to discuss in 1986 the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, as well as implementation of a treaty establishing such a zone in Latin America. References were also made to informal proposals for such zones in the Balkans and northern and Central Europe. In addition, interest was expressed in the South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone Treaty, prepared by the South Pacific Forum in 1985⁽¹⁷⁾ and which entered into force on 11 December 1986;⁽¹⁸⁾ as at 31 December 1986, the Treaty had eight parties.

In a related 1986 action, the Assembly declared the South Atlantic a zone of peace and co-operation (resolution 41/11).

Communications. Among communications on disarmament addressed to the Secretary-General during the year, support for creating a nuclear-weapon-free zone was expressed by Bulgaria, for the Balkans; the German Democratic Republic, for Central Europe; and the USSR,⁽¹⁹⁾ for Asia and the Pacific. The States parties to the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance, in statements transmitted by Bulgaria and by Romania, expressed support for creating nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Balkans and in Central and northern Europe, respectively (see p. 15).

Africa

In 1986, the General Assembly, continuing its annual tradition, had on its agenda the question of implementing the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity in 1964.⁽²⁰⁾ In addition to a resolution on implementing the Declaration (41/55 A), the Assembly, in 1986 as in previous years, adopted a text on the nuclear capability of South Africa (41/55 B).

Throughout the year, South Africa's military and nuclear relations with other States were kept under consideration by various other United Nations bodies (see p. 132).

Disarmament Commission consideration. As in the past, the Disarmament Commission⁽⁹⁾ established in 1986 Working Group III to consider, in response to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ South Africa's nuclear capability. Under the temporary chairmanship of Davidson L. Hepburn (Bahamas), the Group held five meetings as well as informal consultations between 12 and 21 May, using its 1984 working paper⁽²²⁾ as a basis for discussion. Unable to agree on draft conclusions and recommendations on the issue, the Group recommended that the Commission continue consideration of the question in 1987.

Reports by the Secretary-General. In February 1986,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to the Assembly's 1985 resolution on South Africa's nuclear capability,⁽²¹⁾ in which the Assembly requested the Council to take action aimed at, among other things, prohibiting all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

In August,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the IAEA Director General had prepared a report, in response to a 1985 request of the IAEA General Conference, containing updated information on South Africa's nuclear resources and activities to the extent known to the Agency. Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was the IAEA report and a 1986 resolution adopted by the General Conference (thirtieth session, 29 September-3 October) on South Africa's nuclear capability.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions relating to the denuclearization of Africa—implementation of the 1964 Declaration (41/55 A) and the nuclear capability of South Africa (41/55 B). A number of States explained in single statements their positions on the two texts (see p. 56).

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/55 A by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December 1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, 39/61 A of 12 December 1984 and 40/89 A of 12 December 1985, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability",⁽²²⁾ undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, as well as of the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Noting the actions taken recently by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields,

Expressing regret that despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission has, once again, in 1986, failed to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

1. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Expresses once again its grave alarm at South Africa's possession and continued development of nuclear-weapon capability;

4. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime that enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist régime that may enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

6. Demands once again that the racist régime of South Africa refrain from manufacturing, testing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

7. Appeals to all States that have the means to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons, and to publicize any information in that regard;

8. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek towards the implementation of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 150-0-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/826) by recorded vote (126-0-7), 11 November (meeting 39); draft by Benin, for African Group (A/C.1/41/L.25, part A); agenda item 56.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 37, 39; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, Israel, Malawi, United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote, Finland, on behalf of the Nordic countries, expressed reservations on paragraph 7. The USSR asserted that the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa should meet the recognized principles of international law, in particular the principle of free navigation on the high seas.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/55 B, also by recorded vote.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981, 37/74 B of 9 December 1982, 38/181 B of 20 December 1983, 39/61 B of 12 December 1984 and 40/89 B of 12 December 1985,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in paragraph 12 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by racist régimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, presented an increasingly dangerous and challenging obstacle to the world community, faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Noting with regret the non-implementation by apartheid South Africa of resolution GC(XXIX)/RES/442, adopted on 27 September 1985 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its twenty-ninth regular session,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability",⁽²²⁾ undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity,

Expressing regret that despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission has, once again, in 1986, failed to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

Alarmed that South Africa's unsafeguarded nuclear facilities enable it to develop and acquire the capability of producing fissionable material for nuclear weapons,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has continued its acts of aggression and subversion against the peoples of the independent States of southern Africa.

Strongly condemning the continued military occupation by South African troops of parts of the territory of Angola in violation of its national sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, and urging the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angolan soil,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite repeated appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of these States have, by a ready recourse to the use of the veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the implementation of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Stressing the need to preserve peace and security in Africa by ensuring that the continent is a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, in particular its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

2. Further condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime of South Africa, in particular the decision by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

3. Reaffirms that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

4. Expresses its full support for the African States faced with the danger of South Africa's nuclear capability;

5. Commends the actions taken recently by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields;

6. Demands that South Africa and all other foreign interests put an immediate end to the exploration for and exploitation of uranium resources in Namibia;

7. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime;

8. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider as a matter of priority during its session in 1987 South Africa's nuclear capability, taking into account, inter alia, the findings of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on South Africa's nuclear capability;⁽²³⁾

9. Requests the Security Council to conclude expeditiously its consideration of the recommendations of its Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

10. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 139-4-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/826) by recorded vote (117-4-12), 11 November (meeting 39); draft by Benin, for African Group (A/C.1/41/L.25, part B); agenda item 56.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 37, 39; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal.

In the First Committee, Israel's request—that the reference to it be deleted from the eleventh preambular paragraph because it had no nuclear collaboration with South Africa—was rejected by a recorded vote of 76 to 23, with 26 abstentions. Australia objected to the singling out of States by name and to the seventh preambular paragraph containing what it felt were unsubstantiated assertions about South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability.

Several countries explained, in single statements, their votes on the two texts. France said they failed to distinguish between the peaceful and military uses of nuclear energy, and the expression of views on South Africa's nuclear capability went beyond what it thought to be useful. The United Kingdom, saying it had no nuclear collaboration with South Africa, asserted that all States had an internationally recognized right to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy; further, both texts contained judgements that were insufficiently substantiated or more properly matters for the Security Council.

Finland, on behalf of the Nordic countries, considered that the texts failed to take into account the proper division of competence between the Council and the Assembly, that they inapappropriately and selectively named countries, and that the Assembly should call on Governments rather than on private citizens and enterprises for action. Argentina, which supported the complete elimination, particularly geographical non-proliferation, of nuclear weapons, had reservations with regard to IAEA safeguards, and also to NPT. Albania supported both texts, without prejudice to the views it had maintained on the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

Speaking on the zone concept in general, Japan felt that the establishment of such a zone should result from the initiatives and consensus of the States in the region and nuclear-weapon States, and should strengthen the peace and security of the region and beyond.

Latin America

Since the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) by five nuclear-weapon States by 1979,⁽²⁵⁾ only one item concerning that Treaty remained on the General Assembly's agenda: the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I, concerning the application of the Treaty to territories in the region for which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility, such as the colonial Powers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/45 by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/79 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979, 35/143 of 12 December 1980, 36/83 of 9 December 1981, 37/71 of 9 December 1982, 38/61 of 15 December 1983, 39/51 of 12 December 1984 and 40/79 of 12 December 1985 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the four States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Considering that it would not be fair if the peoples of some of those territories were deprived of such benefits without being given the opportunity to express their opinion in this connection,

Recalling that three of the States to which the Additional Protocol I is open—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America—became parties to the Protocol in 1969, 1971 and 1981, respectively,

1. Deplores that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations which the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once more urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times and which appears all the more advisable, since France is the only one of the four States to which the Protocol is open that is not yet party to it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/45 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Abstaining: Argentina, Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, France, Guyana, Mali.

In explanation of vote, France objected to having its action called into question, when certain countries in the actual zone of application of the Treaty had not signed or ratified it, nor had they applied to themselves the clause that admitted the Treaty's entry into force even before all countries of the region had become parties; France would act in due course in the light of the status of ratification of the Treaty itself. Cuba said it could not renounce its right to defend itself with appropriate weapons as long as the only nuclear Power in the hemisphere maintained a hostile and aggressive attitude towards it and occupied part of its territory.

Middle East

In response to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in July 1986 with a later addendum,⁽²⁷⁾ containing the views of six States—Botswana, Dominican Republic, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Mexico—on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/48 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984 and 40/82 of 12 December 1985 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63(d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing further the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous to build on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Invites those countries, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with the relevant paragraph of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

4. Further invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and spirit of the present resolution;

6. Extends its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report containing the views of parties concerned regarding the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

7. Takes note of the above-mentioned report;

8. Requests those parties that have not yet communicated their views to the Secretary-General to do so;

9. Welcomes any further comments from those parties that have already communicated their views to the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

General Assembly resolution 41/48

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/817) without vote, 11 November (meeting 39); draft by Egypt (A/C.1/41/L.19); agenda item 49.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 35, 39; plenary 94.

Israel reiterated that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East could take place only through direct and free negotiations among the sovereign States of the region, as it believed had been the case in Latin America and the South Pacific. Oman hoped that all States of the region would view the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in terms of the need for stability and a just peace and for the solution of all the problems in the region. Jordan rejected introducing nuclear weapons into the region.

Brazil said the zone's establishment should not be related to the adherence to NPT, which it considered to be a discriminatory and unbalanced instrument that had allowed the nuclear-weapon States to proliferate such weapons. India had reservations about the inadequacy of partial measures in nuclear disarmament, and about IAEA safeguards and the application of the so-called full-scope safeguards. Argentina likewise reiterated its reservations about NPT and the IAEA safeguards. The United States called for compliance with existing international obligations prohibiting attacks against nuclear facilities.

Israeli nuclear armament

The question of Israeli nuclear armament was included in the agenda of the 1986 General Assembly session at the 10 October request of Oman, on behalf of the Group of Arab States.⁽²⁸⁾ In the explanatory memorandum annexed to the request, Oman referred to a number of sources claiming to have established that Israel had nuclear-weapon capability and possessed between 100 and 200 atomic bombs.

In April,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to a 1985 resolution,⁽³⁰⁾ in which the Assembly requested the Council to ensure that Israel placed all its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards and to investigate Israel's nuclear activities and the collaboration of other parties in those activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/93 by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is 40/93 of 12 December 1985,

Recalling resolution 40/82 of 12 December 1985, in which, inter alia, it called upon all countries of the region that had not done so, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981 in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Aware of the grave consequences that endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Deeply concerned over the continuing development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons;

2. Requests once more the Security Council to take urgent and effective measures to ensure that Israel complies with Security Council resolution 487(1981) and places all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Reiterates its request to the Security Council to investigate Israel's nuclear activities and the collaboration of other States, parties and institutions in the nuclear field;

4. Reiterates its request to the International Atomic Energy Agency to suspend any scientific co-operation with Israel which could contribute to its nuclear capabilities;

5. Calls upon all States and organizations that have not yet done so to discontinue co-operating with and giving assistance to Israel in the nuclear field;

6. Reaffirms its condemnation of the continuing nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities in the light of the latest available information, and to update the Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament and submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

Approved by First Committee (A/41/848) by recorded vote (92-2-42), 11 November (meeting 40); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.23); agenda item 144.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 40; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Burma, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Lesotho,^a Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

The Assembly adopted, by separate recorded votes, paragraphs 3 (90 to 28, with 28 abstentions), 4 (81-37-26), 5 (83-34-27) and 6 (88-22-35). The First Committee had likewise approved those paragraphs: 3 (89-23-19), 4 (79-27-21), 5 (79-27-20) and 6 (81-21-25).

In explanation of vote, Israel, reiterating that it would not be the first to introduce nuclear weapons into the Middle East, stated that it had been singled out from all others which had comparable scientific capability. Listing its objections to specific paragraphs, Israel said: paragraph 3 asked the Council to investigate on the strength of newspaper speculations; paragraph 4 denied it the right of membership in IAEA; paragraph 5 ran counter to United Nations objectives of fostering international co-operation; and paragraph 6 ignored its declarations and alleged that it had nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Australia, explaining its negative votes on all those paragraphs, said it was outside the Security Council's competence to investigate Israel's nuclear activities or to examine Israel's relationship with IAEA; the requests in paragraphs 4 and 5 could have implications for Israel's rights and privileges as an IAEA member; and the alleged nuclear collaboration with South Africa, or alleged nuclear-weapon capability of Israel, had never been substantiated satisfactorily.

The USSR asserted that Israel should be condemned for its refusal to assume obligations not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, or to place its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards.

South Asia

In a 1986 report to the General Assembly,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had been in contact with the States of South Asia with regard to the Assembly's 1985 request⁽³³⁾ that he assist in promoting a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region, but there had been no request by the States concerned for assistance. In the course of those contacts, the view had been expressed that he should continue to be available for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/49 by recorded vote, on a recommendation of the First Committee.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984 and 40/83 of 12 December 1985 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting with appreciation the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, regarding the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and explore the best possibilities to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 107-3-41 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/836) by recorded vote (90-3-37), 17 November (meeting 46); draft by Pakistan (A/C.1/41/L.20), amended, and orally sub-amended, by Maldives (A/C.1/41/L.75); agenda item 50.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 36, 46; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bhutan, India, Mauritius.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Seychelles, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Before acting on the text as a whole, the First Committee approved, by recorded votes, several amendments proposed and further orally revised by Maldives. By 77 votes to 2, with 44 abstentions, it approved amendments to the preamble, including the addition of qualifications to the South Asian States mentioned in the fourth preambular paragraph, and deletion of two paragraphs in which the preceding resolutions on the topic had been summarized as calling for all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region. By 78 votes to 2, with 44 abstentions, the Committee eliminated "and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested" from the target of the Assembly's urging (paragraph 2), and requested the Secretary-General, instead of rendering "such assistance as may be required", to communicate with States and explore the best possibilities (paragraph 4).

India said any such zone must be part of a nuclear-disarmament programme, the idea of a zone must emanate voluntarily from all the States of the region, and such a zone must involve a well-defined and distinct geographical and political unit; given the escalation of external nuclear and other arms deployment in South Asia, it would be unrealistic to hope that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone would provide the States of the region with a credible and reliable security guarantee.

Japan held that the establishment of such a zone should be based on the initiative of the countries in the region and agreed to by all concerned. Sri Lanka and the United Kingdom added that the zone concept should take into account the particular characteristics of each region. Brazil, Indonesia and Sweden asserted that no agreement existed among all the States of the region on establishing a zone.

Prohibition or restriction of other weapons

Divergent approaches persisted in 1986 towards an envisaged convention banning chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, and towards the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new weapons of mass destruction. In addition to conventional disarmament, the international community remained concerned about a possible arms race in outer space.

Chemical and biological weapons

In 1986, as in previous years, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (41/58 B, C, D), reflecting the persisting differences in approach to an envisaged convention banning chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, but all urging the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its negotiations on a convention.

In September, the parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction⁽¹⁾ reaffirmed the Convention's validity when they held their Second Review Conference at Geneva. In December, the Assembly urged universal adherence to the Convention (41/58 A).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament⁽²⁾ continued negotiations on a convention banning chemical and biological weapons from 24 March to 4 April and from 14 to 25 July 1986.

New documents on verification problems were submitted by Australia, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, as well as by Finland and Norway, both non-members of the Conference. In addition, Belgium submitted a document on the order of elimination of chemical-weapon stocks, Canada on identification of chemical substances, Japan on some quantitative aspects of a convention, Pakistan on fact-finding under a convention, and the United States on a disposal programme for stockpiles. Canada submitted a handbook for investigating allegations of chemical/biological-weapon use and a compendium of the Conference documentation on chemical weapons during 1983-1985. The United States submitted an amendment to its draft convention, designed to allow for special on-site inspection of private facilities used in providing goods and services to Governments in addition to government-owned facilities. Both the USSR and the United States transmitted the joint statement issued at their November 1985 summit meeting.

As agreed in 1985,⁽³⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons resumed negotiations on a convention, from 13 to 31 January 1986.

Re-established by the Conference on 6 February for the 1986 session, the Ad Hoc Committee held 14 meetings between 19 February and 20 August under the chairmanship of Ian Cromartie (United Kingdom), who also held a number of informal consultations. The Committee set up three working groups to consider, respectively, definitions and criteria, and permitted activities; elimination of stocks and production facilities; and national implementation, consultation and fact-finding. The report of the Ad Hoc Committee—later incorporated into that of the Conference⁽²⁾ to the General Assembly—appended a preliminary structure of a convention, indicating the stage reached in the negotiations during the 1986 session.

The Ad Hoc Committee recommended to the Conference on Disarmament that further elaboration of the convention be based on, or take into account, the appendix to the 1986 report of the Ad Hoc Committee, as well as the reports of the working groups and other relevant existing and future documents of the Conference. It also suggested that open-ended consultations be held in November and December 1986; that the Committee resume its work for a session of limited duration in January 1987; that the Chairman hold informal consultations on specific issues in preparation for the resumed session; and that the Committee be re-established with its 1986 mandate at the outset of the Conference's 1987 session.

Communications. In January 1986,⁽⁴⁾ Bulgaria and Romania transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a Declaration-Appeal, signed at Bucharest, Romania, on 22 December 1985, by their leaders, calling for the establishment of a chemical-weapon-free zone in the Balkans. On 30 May,⁽⁵⁾ the USSR denounced what it called NATO's chemical rearmament plans and called for intensified efforts at drafting a multilateral convention on chemical weapons. Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic continued to advocate their 1985 proposal⁽³⁾ for a limited zone free of chemical weapons in Europe.⁽⁶⁾ (See also p. 13.)

During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of Communications on alleged use of chemical weapons in Afghanistan and Kampuchea, and in the context of the ongoing conflict between Iran and Iraq (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VII).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1986, five draft resolutions were submitted to the Assembly under the agenda item on chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons. Three, concerned with negotiations on a future convention, were adopted on 3 December as resolutions 41/58 B, C and D; a fourth, dealing with the Second Review Conference of the parties to the Convention on biological weapons, was adopted as resolution 41/58 A; and a fifth—submitted by France,⁽⁷⁾ on co-ordinating national measures designed to monitor the export of chemical substances liable to be used in producing chemical warfare agents—was withdrawn.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/58 B by recorded vote, as recommended by the First Committee.

Prohibition of chemical and bacteriological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 75 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,⁽⁸⁾ which states that the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and their destruction represents one of the most urgent measures of disarmament,

Convinced of the urgency of the earliest conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, which would significantly contribute to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Emphasizing the need for the extension of international co-operation in the field of chemical industries for peaceful purposes,

Bearing in mind that the conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction would contribute to the achievement of this goal,

Stressing the continuing importance of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925,

Determined, for the sake of all mankind, to exclude completely the possibility of the use of chemical weapons, through the earliest conclusion and implementation of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all types of chemical weapons and on their destruction, thereby complementing the obligations assumed under the Geneva Protocol of 17 June 1925,

Appreciating the work of the Conference on Disarmament during its 1986 session regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons and the progress achieved in negotiations,

Deeming it desirable for States to refrain from taking any action that could delay or further complicate negotiations and to display a constructive approach to such negotiations and the political will to reach an early agreement on the chemical weapons convention,

Emphasizing the need to stop a further increase of arsenals of chemical weapons and to refrain from the deployment of such weapons on the territories of other countries, as well as the necessity of withdrawing chemical weapons deployed abroad to within the national boundaries of States to which they belong,

Expressing profound concern at decisions on the production of new types of chemical weapons, as well as at their intended deployment,

Welcoming the agreement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to accelerate the efforts to conclude an effective and verifiable international convention on the general and complete prohibition of chemical weapons and the destruction of existing stockpiles of such weapons,

Taking note of proposals and initiatives on the creation of chemical-weapon-free zones in various regions aimed at facilitating the complete prohibition of chemical weapons and at contributing to the achievement of stable regional and international security,

Welcoming the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, which stresses the urgency of a chemical weapons ban,

1. Reaffirms the necessity for the speediest elaboration and conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

2. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify the negotiations in order to submit a draft convention on the complete ban on chemical weapons to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Reaffirms its call to all States to conduct serious negotiations in good faith and to refrain from any action that could impede negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons and specifically from the production of new types of chemical weapons, as well as from deploying chemical weapons on the territory of other States;

4. Appeals to all States to facilitate in every possible way the conclusion of such a convention;

5. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare.

Approved by First Committee (A/41/839) by recorded vote (83-12-31), 10 November (meeting 37); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.12); agenda item 59.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 37; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, India, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Morocco, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay.

In explanation of vote, Australia felt the draft was deficient in that it singled out new types of chemical weapons for non-production and non-deployment, called in paragraph 3 for action that was not verifiable, and did not refer to the prohibition of chemical-weapons use; the text was incompatible with what it felt was the correct description of the scope of the convention contained in the two other texts. Greece, which supported the idea of a chemical-weapon-free zone in the Balkans pending conclusion of a convention, believed that the text would prove counter-productive by constraining the negotiating parties. Brazil felt that favouring measures such as chemical-weapon-free zones and singling out certain types of chemical weapons for restrictions would not facilitate negotiations. New Zealand considered the text unbalanced in its treatment of the two major military alliances.

Referring to the two texts that became resolutions 41/58 B and C, Argentina declared it did not support a discriminatory or partial approach that would create non-proliferation régimes or areas of limitation not covered by a convention.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/58 C by recorded vote, as recommended by the First Committee.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/92 C of 12 December 1985,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington, on 10 April 1972,

Reiterating its concern over reports that chemical weapons have been used and over indications of their emergence in an increasing number of national arsenals, as well as over the growing risk that they may be used again,

Noting international efforts to strengthen relevant international prohibitions, including efforts to develop appropriate fact-finding mechanisms,

Recalling its resolution 40/94 L of 12 December 1985, in which, inter alia, it pointed out the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements on arms limitation and disarmament,

Reaffirming its dedication to protecting mankind from chemical and biological warfare,

1. Calls for compliance with existing international obligations regarding prohibitions on chemical and biological weapons, and condemns all actions that contravene those obligations;

2. Strongly endorses the ongoing efforts to ensure the most effective prohibitions possible on chemical and biological weapons;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to pursue vigorously and accelerate its negotiations on a multilateral convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction;

4. Calls upon all States, pending the elaboration of such a convention, to co-operate in efforts to prevent the use of chemical weapons and in efforts to establish facts in cases of reports of such use, and to be guided in their national policies by the need to curb the spread of chemical weapons.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Congo, Cuba, Ethiopia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

¹ Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, Viet Nam said paragraph 4 invited the danger of the resolution being misused to slander or to create artificial obstacles to negotiations on eliminating chemical weapons. The USSR felt the text lacked balance. For Cuba, it represented a partial approach to the problem and disregarded the obstacles the production of binary weapons placed in the way of negotiations. Brazil said efforts should concentrate on a comprehensive ban and on the complete elimination of such weapons from existing arsenals, rather than highlight partial measures.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/58 D without vote.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Pro-

ocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Taking note of the Final Document of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by consensus on 26 September 1986, and in particular of article IX of the Final Declaration of the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which incorporates, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, and noting that following the precedents set in 1984 and 1985, consultations are continuing during the inter-sessional period, thus increasing the time devoted to negotiations,

Convinced of the necessity that all efforts be exerted for the continuation and successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

1. Takes note of the work of the Conference on Disarmament during its 1986 session regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons, and in particular appreciates the work of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons on that question and the progress recorded in its report;

2. Expresses again none the less its regret and concern that notwithstanding the progress made in 1986 a convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges again the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of high priority, to intensify, during its 1987 session, the negotiations on such a convention and to reinforce further its efforts by, inter alia, increasing the time during the year that it devotes to such negotiations, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, with a view to the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest possible date, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons for this purpose with the 1986 mandate;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the results of its negotiations.

Second Review Conference of the parties to the Convention on biological weapons

The Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction⁽¹⁾ met at Geneva from 8 to 26 September 1986.

The Convention had been opened for signature on 10 April 1972 and entered into force on 26 March 1975; its first Review Conference had met in 1980.⁽²⁾ Preparations for the Second Review Conference had been made by the Preparatory Committee, which held one session at Geneva from 28 April to 2 May 1986, with the participation of 58 States parties to the Convention.

Of the 102 States parties at the time of the 1986 Review Conference, 63 participated: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bhutan, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Mexico, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire. Four signatories (Egypt, Iraq, Morocco, Sri Lanka) and one observer State (Algeria) attended, as did three non-governmental organizations.

The Conference elected Winfried Lang (Austria) as its President. It established a committee of the whole to review the Convention's articles, preamble and purposes, as well as the question of a future review of the Convention; a drafting committee to prepare the draft final document and declaration; and a credentials committee.

On 26 September, the Conference adopted by consensus a Final Document,⁽³⁾ reaffirming the significance of, and the need to strengthen, the Convention. The Conference also decided to hold in 1987 an ad hoc meeting of scientific and technical experts to finalize the modalities for exchanges of information and data.

By the end of 1986, 107 States had become parties to the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 41/58 A without vote.

Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Recalling its resolution 39/65 D of 12 December 1984, in which it noted that, at the request of a majority of States parties to the Convention, a second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention would be held in 1986,

Recalling that the States parties to the Convention met at Geneva from 8 to 26 September 1986 to review the operation of the Convention with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Convention, including the provisions concerning negotiations on chemical weapons, were being realized,

Noting with satisfaction that, at the time of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, there were more than a hundred States parties to the Convention, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

1. Notes with appreciation that on 26 September 1986, the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction adopted by consensus a Final Declaration;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of relevant parts of the Final Declaration;

3. Calls upon all signatory States that have not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those States that have not yet signed the Convention to join the States parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention and to international confidence.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

Divergent approaches persisted in 1986 towards the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new weapons of mass destruction. Socialist States and many non-aligned countries continued to stress that if any new kind of such weapons was invented and deployed, it would be a serious threat to international peace and security. Western States held that there were currently no indications that new types of weapons of mass destruction were imminent; thus there was no need for new action by the Conference on Disarmament.

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions aimed at banning new weapons of mass destruction—one on the general subject of new weapons (41/56) and two on radiological weapons (41/59 A and I).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament⁽²⁾ considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" from 14 to 18 April and from 4 to 8 August 1986.

A number of informal consultations were held, but no consensus was reached, on a proposal to convene a group of experts with a view to identifying new types of weapons of mass destruction and making, as necessary, recommendations on undertaking specific negotiations on the identified types of such weapons. A proposal was put forward to ban the development of non-nuclear weapons based on new physical principles whose destructive capacity was close to that of nuclear arms and other means of mass destruction.

The Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons, re-established by the Conference on 4 March, held 17 meetings between 7 March and 11 August under the chairmanship of Carlos Lechuga Hevia (Cuba), who also held a number of informal consultations. As in the past, the Ad Hoc Committee continued examining questions relating to "traditional" radiological weapons and those relating to prohibiting attacks against nuclear facilities. It set up three contact groups to deal, respectively, with scope and definitions, peaceful uses and cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and verification and compliance. Working papers were submitted by Argentina (scope of the envisaged radiological weapons convention) and Pakistan (suggestions on the question of attacks on nuclear facilities).

In its report to the Conference, the Ad Hoc Committee concluded that considerable differences of substance and approach continued to exist regarding both issues, and recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the Conference's 1987 session. On 28 August, the Conference adopted the Ad Hoc Committee's report as part of its own report to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted three resolutions aimed at banning new weapons of mass destruction.

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/56 by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/74 of 10 December 1976, 32/84 A of 12 December 1977, 33/66 B of 14 December 1978, 34/79 of 11 December 1979, 35/149 of 12 December 1980, 36/89 of 9 December 1981, 37/77 A of 9 December 1982, 38/182 of 20 December 1983, 39/62 of 12 December 1984 and 40/90 of 12 December 1985 concerning the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraph 39 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which both qualitative and quantitative disarmament measures are important for halting the arms race and efforts to that end must include negotiations on the limitation and cessation of the qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction, and the development of new means of warfare,

Recalling the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements and that efforts aimed at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction should be appropriately pursued,

Expressing once again its firm belief, in the light of the decisions adopted at the tenth special session, in the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting that in the course of its 1986 session the Conference on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons",

Convinced that all ways and means should be utilized to prevent the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Determined to prevent the creation, as a result of developments of modern science and technology, of weapons based on new physical principles and having a destructive capacity close to that of nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction,

Taking into consideration the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Reaffirms the necessity of prohibiting the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to keep constantly under review, with the assistance of a periodically convened group of experts, the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons with a view to making, when necessary, recommendations on undertaking specific negotiations on the identified types of such weapons;

3. Calls upon all States, immediately following the identification of any new type of weapon of mass destruction, to commence negotiations on its prohibition with the simultaneous introduction of a moratorium on its practical development;

4. Once again urges all States to refrain from any action that could adversely affect the efforts aimed at preventing the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

5. Calls again upon all States to undertake efforts to ensure that ultimately scientific and technological achievements may be used solely for peaceful purposes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its forty-second session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 38; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Chad, Chile, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Haiti, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Senegal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Explaining the abstention of the 12 EC members, the United Kingdom said that no new types of weapons of mass destruction appeared imminent, and hence there was no need for the Conference on Disarmament to take the elaborate action envisaged; moreover, the text suggested an extension of the definition of new weapons of mass destruction beyond that established by the United Nations in 1948 and subsequently endorsed in the 1978 Final Document.⁽⁸⁾

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 A without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/94 D of 12 December 1985,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1986 session that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Takes note also of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1987 session;

3. Recognizes that the work done by the Ad Hoc Committee in 1986 was useful in terms of the mandate entrusted to it;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its negotiations on the subject with a view to a prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Also requests that the Secretary-General transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

The Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 I by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/99 C of 13 December 1982, 38/188 D of 20 December 1983, 39/151 J of 17 December 1984 and 40/94 D of 12 December 1985 on, inter alia, the conclusion of an agreement prohibiting military attacks against nuclear facilities,

Gravely concerned that military attacks against nuclear facilities, though carried out with conventional weapons, could be tantamount to the use of radiological weapons,

Recalling also that Additional Protocol I of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 prohibits attacks on nuclear electricity generating stations,

Deeply concerned that the destruction of nuclear installations by conventional weapons causes the release into the environment of huge amounts of dangerous radioactive material, which results in serious radioactive contamination,

Firmly convinced that the Israeli attack against the safeguarded nuclear facilities in Iraq constitutes an unprecedented danger to international peace and security,

Recalling further International Atomic Energy Agency resolution GC(XXVII)/RES/409 of 1983, which urges all member States to support actions in international forums to reach an international agreement that prohibits armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes,

1. Reaffirms that military attacks of any kind against nuclear facilities are tantamount to the use of radiological weapons, due to the dangerous radioactive forces that such attacks cause to be released;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to reach, as early as possible, an agreement prohibiting military attacks against nuclear facilities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 111-3-38 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) by recorded vote (90-3-35), 10 November (meeting 38); draft by Iraq (A/C.1/41/L.40/Rev.1); agenda item 60 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-33, 38; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Burma, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Spain, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Before taking action on the draft as a whole, the First Committee approved paragraph 1 by a recorded vote of 75 to 4, with 44 abstentions. In explanation of vote, France asserted that the question of attacks against nuclear facilities should be dealt with in the framework of humanitarian law, not disarmament; therefore, it could not subscribe to the juxtaposition made in the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 1 between radiological weapons and attacks against nuclear facilities. Australia, which saw the need for an international agreement on the topic, considered paragraph 1 lacking in technical precision and accuracy. Venezuela had reservations regarding the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 1, adding that the assertions contained in the latter could influence the ongoing work in the Conference.

Conventional weapons

Increasing concern was expressed in the General Assembly in 1986 over the fact that, since 1945, more than 150 wars had been fought with conventional weapons, resulting in at least 20 million deaths and immense destruction.

In December, the Assembly requested the Disarmament Commission to consider in 1987 the question of conventional disarmament based on the recommendations and conclusions of the 1984 study on the topic⁽¹⁾ (resolution 41/59 C); and urged States to adhere to the Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons (41/50). The Assembly adopted three other texts, concerning conventional disarmament in general (41/59 G), conventional disarmament on a regional scale (41/59 M) and confidence-building measures and conventional disarmament (41/59 E). Some delegations explained, in single statements, their position on conventional disarmament in general (see p. 70).

Conventional disarmament

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 G by recorded vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and particularly its paragraph 81, which provides that together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should be resolutely pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, and which stresses that States with the largest military arsenals have a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions,

Also recalling that the same document declares, inter alia, that priorities in disarmament negotiations shall be: nuclear weapons; other weapons of mass destruction, including chemical weapons; conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects; and reduction of armed forces, and that it stresses that nothing should preclude States from conducting negotiations on all priority items concurrently,

Further recalling that the same document states that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority, and that real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis,

Aware of the dangers to world peace and security originating from wars and conflicts fought with conventional weapons, as well as of their possible escalation into a nuclear war in regions with a high concentration of conventional and nuclear weapons,

Also aware that with the advance in science and technology, conventional weapons tend to become increasingly lethal and destructive,

Believing that resources released through disarmament, including conventional disarmament, can be used for the social and economic development of people of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Bearing in mind its resolution 36/97 A of 9 December 1981 and the Study on Conventional Disarmament conducted in accordance with that resolution,

Bearing in mind also the efforts made to promote conventional disarmament and the related proposals and suggestions, as well as the initiatives taken by various countries in this regard,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the efforts aimed at resolutely pursuing the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament;

2. Believes that the military forces of all countries should not be used other than for the purpose of self-defence;

3. Urges the countries with the largest military arsenals, which bear a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions, and the member States of the two major military alliances to continue negotiations on conventional disarmament in earnest, with a view to reaching early agreement on the limitation and gradual and balanced reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons under effective international control in their respective regions;

4. Encourages all States, while taking into account the need to protect security and maintain necessary defensive capabilities, to intensify their efforts and take, either on their own or in a regional context, appropriate steps to promote progress in conventional disarmament and enhance peace and security;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider, at its substantive session in 1987, issues related to conventional disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

Against: None.

Abstaining: India, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

In explanation of vote, India said the primary objective of disarmament was to end the nuclear-arms race; disarmament measures must be comprehensive and universal, and a regional disarmament agreement must be based on arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region and take into account the region's characteristics. The Federal Republic of Germany said it was its understanding that both nuclear and conventional disarmament measures must be sought and equally applied.

France felt paragraph 3 would have been more appropriate if it avoided formal mention of the two major military alliances. The United States said the need for reliance on nuclear weapons would be less, were it not for what it saw as the considerable conventional force advantage of the USSR and the Warsaw Treaty member States; it asserted that NATO member States pursued mutual, balanced force-reduction negotiations. The United Kingdom welcomed the attention given to conventional disarmament, and added that the NATO members considered collective security, as provided for in Article 51 of the United Nations Charter, as the best means for their defence.

Follow-up on a 1984 study

In an August report, with later addenda,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the views of seven States on the 1984 study on conventional disarmament.⁽¹¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 C without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/94 C of 12 December 1985, in which the Secretary-General was requested to prepare a report for the General Assembly at its forty-first session containing further views of Member States received regarding the Study on Conventional Disarmament,

Recalling the many statements made at its fortieth session in which growing concern was expressed by Member States regarding the conventional arms race and in which the importance also of conventional disarmament measures was reiterated,

Recalling also the consideration by the Disarmament Commission at its 1986 session of its agenda item 4 (b) concerning nuclear and conventional disarmament and the wide support expressed by Member States for greater attention to be given to conventional disarmament,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing further views received from Member States regarding the Study,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the Disarmament Commission at its substantive session in May 1987 a compilation of the views received from Member States regarding the Study on Conventional Disarmament;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider, at its forthcoming session in 1987, the question of conventional disarmament, fully taking into account the recommendations and conclusions contained in the Study, as well as all other relevant present and future proposals, with a view to facilitating the identification of possible measures in the field of conventional arms reductions and disarmament, and to report on its deliberations to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 41/59 C

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) without vote, 13 November (meeting 44); draft by Denmark (A/C.1/41/L.17/Rev.2); agenda item 60 (c).

Three States expressed reservations regarding paragraph 2. Democratic Yemen said it understood the draft did not prejudice the work of the Commission or imply acceptance of all the study's recommendations. Similarly, India and Indonesia supported the text on the understanding that the Commission would accommodate the request without adding the topic as a separate agenda item.

Commenting on all the texts on conventional disarmament, Cuba asserted that the topic could not be considered separately from the priorities of nuclear disarmament and prevention of an arms race in outer space; in its own case, it would step up its defence capabilities as long as the United States remained hostile. India said all five drafts detracted from the accepted priorities of disarmament.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocols

In 1986, the number of States parties remained at 25⁽¹³⁾ to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and its three Protocols dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Convention and Protocols entered into force in December 1983.⁽¹⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 41/50 without vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982, 38/66 of 15 December 1983, 39/56 of 12 December 1984 and 40/84 of 12 December 1985,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly at its fortieth session,

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Further notes with satisfaction that, consequent upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

4. Notes that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols;

5. Requests the Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Regional approach

In September 1986,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no Government had requested him for technical services or assistance regarding measures of conventional disarmament on a regional scale, as provided for under a 1985 Assembly resolution on the topic.⁽¹⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 41/59 M by recorded vote.

Conventional disarmament on a regional scale

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/94 A of 12 December 1985, by which, inter alia, it urged Governments, where the regional situation so permitted and on the initiative of the States concerned, to consider and adopt appropriate measures at the regional level with a view to strengthening peace and security at a lower level of forces through the limitation and reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons, under strict and effective international control, taking into account the need of States to protect their security, bearing in mind the inherent right of self-defence enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and without prejudice to the principle of equal rights and of the self-determination of peoples, in conformity with the Charter, and taking into account the need to ensure balance in each phase and to avoid impairing the security of any State,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 40/94 A of 12 December 1985 relating to conventional disarmament on a regional scale;

2. Reiterates the primary responsibility of the militarily significant States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, for halting and reversing the arms race, and the priority assigned to nuclear disarmament in the context of the advances towards general and complete disarmament;

3. Expresses its firm support for all regional endeavours, as well as unilateral measures, directed to strengthening a climate of mutual confidence that will make possible regional agreements on arms limitation in the future;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to make available to the interested Governments, upon their request, such technical services and assistance as may be useful in measures of conventional disarmament on a regional scale;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament on a regional scale".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Angola, Ethiopia, Ghana, Iraq, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam.

In explanation of vote, a number of countries, among them France, stressed that the priorities established in the 1978 Final Document⁽¹⁸⁾ should be respected. Brazil and the Federal Republic of Germany stated that concurrent priority should be given to both nuclear and conventional disarmament. Sharing that view, Australia expressed reservations concerning the implicit endorsement given to unilateral disarmament. Belgium supported a regional approach to disarmament, but did not agree with paragraph 2.

The USSR called for a speedy reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons in Central Europe, with similar reductions in Asia and the Pacific, and for reciprocal withdrawal of all foreign forces to their own territories. Viet Nam said the text did not address the two essential requirements for regional conventional disarmament measures—incorporation of such measures in a political process and removal of outside threat.

Confidence-building measures and conventional disarmament

The representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe—meeting at Stockholm, Sweden, since 17 January 1984—adopted, on 19 September 1986, the Final Document of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe (see also p. 23).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the First Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/59 E by recorded vote.

Confidence-building and security-building measures and conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,

Recalling the obligation for States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations, and recalling the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the achievement of increased security and stability in Europe through a balance at lower levels of armed forces and conventional weapons as an objective of great importance,

Reaffirming the importance of continued efforts to build confidence, to lessen military confrontation and to enhance security for all,

Stressing that confidence- and security-building measures designed to reduce the dangers of armed conflict and of misunderstanding or miscalculation of military activities will contribute to these objectives,

Mindful of the positive role that the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe has for consolidating security and co-operation on that continent and in the whole world,

Noting the agreed aim of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe to undertake in stages new effective and concrete actions designed to make progress in strengthening confidence and security and in achieving disarmament,

Convinced that military forces should not exceed levels necessary for all States to protect their security,

Conscious of the need for a broad and comprehensive approach to security, taking into account the specificity of regional environment,

Convinced that efforts aimed at lessening military confrontation and furthering disarmament are in the common interest of all States,

Considering that the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should be pursued, aiming, in Europe, at a balance at a lower level of armaments, within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, under strict international control,

Affirming further that agreement on and implementation of confidence-building measures could significantly contribute to promoting openness in the field of military activities, to the creation of a climate of confidence in international relations and to preparing for progress in disarmament,

Bearing in mind the principles of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

1. Believes that there is need for strengthening stability and security at a lower level of forces by the verifiable limitation and reduction of armed forces and of conventional weapons within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament and by an increased openness in this context;

2. Notes that conventional disarmament is part of the wider objective of general and complete disarmament and that measures designed to achieve regional disarmament with the concurrence of all States concerned can play a useful role in reducing tensions and strengthening security;

3. Believes also that increased confidence can improve the basis for effective, adequate and effectively verifiable measures of conventional disarmament aimed at enhancing the security of all States and that the implementation of such disarmament measures can, in turn, result in increased confidence;

4. Welcomes the concrete, militarily significant, politically binding and verifiable measures adopted on 19 September 1986, within the framework of the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, at the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, covering the whole of Europe and designed to reduce the dangers of armed conflict and of misunderstanding or miscalculation of military activities;

5. Considers that, by their scope and their nature as well as by their full implementation, these measures will be an important contribution to the strengthening of confidence and security throughout Europe, thereby promoting international peace and security;

6. Highly appreciates the agreement reached at Stockholm as a valuable example of finding solutions to important problems of a military nature;

7. Expresses the hope that after the adoption of confidence- and security-building measures at Stockholm, steps will be agreed upon in order to make further progress in strengthening confidence and security and in achieving disarmament in Europe;

8. Invites all States, with full account to be taken of specific regional conditions, to consider the achievement of lessening confrontation by confidence- and security-building measures, which contribute to reducing the danger of surprise attacks, diminishing the possibility of misunderstanding or political pressure through the use of military strength and reducing misinterpretations that could worsen crises and eventually lead to conflict.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

An oral amendment by Peru, accepted by the sponsors, added the last preambular paragraph. The approved text was a revised version of a draft entitled "Confidence-building and conventional disarmament", submitted by Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain and the United Kingdom.⁽¹⁸⁾ The revised text also took into account another draft entitled "Confidence-building and conventional disarmament in Europe",⁽¹⁹⁾ put forward by Poland and subsequently withdrawn.

In explanation of vote, a number of countries—among them, China, Democratic Yemen and Viet Nam—observed that measures applicable to Europe might not necessarily work in other regions, where conditions and priorities differed. Algeria felt the initiatives in the European context might prejudice the desired results when applied to a region such as southern Africa. Ethiopia said there was no single global prescription on confidence-building measures, and Japan observed that the situation in the Asian-Pacific region was quite different from that in Europe. Afghanistan added that the text stressed conventional disarmament, while remaining silent on other important issues.

Brazil stated that although the draft contained some positive elements, it implied a dangerous shift of emphasis away not only from disarmament in Europe, but also from nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war. India felt the text had been extrapolated from the Stockholm Conference and the sponsors had introduced elements going beyond what was discussed at the Conference, and it contained language used in the context of military blocs in Europe; further, India feared that increased emphasis on conventional disarmament could deflect attention from the accepted priorities of disarmament. Nigeria, which also considered that the draft contained references extraneous to the Stockholm document, voted in favour on the understanding that the text dealt with conventional weapons and excluded all elements of nuclear weapons. Mongolia said the results of the Stockholm Conference were not limited to two political-military alliances, and the proposed measures could be implemented in all regions of the world.

Peru regretted that the sponsors had deleted a reference to the regional approach to disarmament.

Arms race in outer space

The international community remained concerned in 1986 about preventing an arms race in outer space and ensuring its peaceful use for the benefit of humanity (see also p. 91). The question of outer space was discussed by the USSR and the United States at their summit meeting at Reykjavik in October (see p. 14).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1986, the Conference on Disarmament⁽²⁾ considered the item on prevention of an arms race in outer space from 3 to 14 March and from 30 June to 4 July.

The Ad Hoc Committee, re-established by the Conference on 24 April, held 16 meetings between 25 April and 19 August under the chairmanship of Luvsandorjiin Bayart (Mongolia), with a mandate to continue examining and identifying relevant issues through substantive and general consideration.

New documents submitted under the item included two by Canada—a compendium of working papers and statements, and a working paper on terminology relevant to arms control and outer space; a proposal by Pakistan on an international instrument to supplement the ABM Treaty; and a working paper by Venezuela on a draft definition of space strike weapons.

While in the view of Western States the Ad Hoc Committee continued to do useful work on the elucidation of the existing legal régime concerning outer space, socialist States stressed the increasing urgency of the issue and the need for specific negotiations. Non-aligned and neutral countries reaffirmed their view that outer space was the common heritage of mankind and underscored the necessity of preventing the militarization of space. Since there was general recognition of the importance and urgency of the topic and readiness to contribute to that objective, the Committee recommended that it be re-established by the Conference with an adequate mandate at the beginning of the 1987 session.

On 28 August, the Conference adopted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee as part of its own report to the Assembly.

UNIDIR study. The United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR),⁽²⁰⁾ on instruction by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies acting as its Board of Trustees and guided by a steering group of experts, completed, in August 1986, a draft study dealing with the prospects and consequences of an arms race in outer space and the means for its prevention. A draft of the study was submitted to the Advisory Board in May, and a revised draft in September. The Board, at its September session, discussed both versions and decided that UNIDIR should reconvene, at an early date, the group of experts and the authors of both versions in order to finalize the study.

In addition, UNIDIR published in 1986 a study on military activities in space, in the framework of international law, limiting its use for military purposes and prohibiting the use of force in outer space⁽²¹⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1985 Assembly request,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General issued a report in August 1986 with a later addendum,⁽²³⁾ containing the views submitted by 23 individual Member States and one on behalf of the 12 EC member States on the possibility of enhancing international co-operation in preventing an arms race in, and promoting the peaceful uses of, outer space.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Reflecting the divergent approaches to the topic, four draft resolutions were submitted in the Assembly's First Committee. Three of them—sponsored, respectively, by China, by Western and other States and by Eastern European and other States—were not acted on at the request of the sponsors; a fourth, sponsored by 24 mainly non-aligned States, was approved.

The draft by China⁽²⁴⁾ would have had the Assembly request the Conference on Disarmament to initiate negotiations without delay on an international agreement or agreements on the prohibition and destruction of outer-space weapon systems, and urge the USSR and the United States to negotiate on preventing an arms race in outer space and to keep the Conference informed of progress.

The draft by Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Turkey and the United Kingdom⁽²⁵⁾ would have had the Assembly request the Conference on Disarmament to intensify substantive work on the topic and call for intensified bilateral negotiations at Geneva on effective and verifiable bilateral agreements on preventing an arms race in outer space, reducing nuclear arms and strengthening international stability.

The draft by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR⁽²⁶⁾ would have had the Assembly request the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question in all its aspects and to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate to negotiate an agreement or agreements.

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 41/53.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming further the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, have undertaken, in article III, to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming, in particular, article IV of the above-mentioned Treaty, which stipulates that States parties to the Treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the Earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner,

Reaffirming also paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it is stated that, in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its resolutions 36/97 C and 36/99 of 9 December 1981, as well as resolutions 37/83 of 9 December 1982, 37/99 D of 13 December 1982, 38/70 of 15 December 1983, 39/59 of 12 December 1984 and 40/87 of 12 December 1985 and the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Gravely concerned at the danger posed to all mankind by an arms race in outer space and, in particular, by the impending threat of the exacerbation of the current state of insecurity by developments that could further undermine international peace and security and retard the pursuit of general and complete disarmament,

Mindful of the widespread interest expressed by Member States in the course of the negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty in ensuring that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Noting the grave concern expressed by the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at the extension of an arms race into outer space and the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, and also to the Committee on Disarmament,*

Convinced that further measures are needed for the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Recognizing that, in the context of multilateral negotiations for preventing an arms race in outer space, bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America could make a significant contribution to such an objective, in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Noting with satisfaction that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have continued since 1985 on a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms, both strategic and intermediate-range, and in their relationship, with the declared objective, endorsed in the joint statement of their leaders of 21 November 1985, of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Anxious that concrete results should emerge from these negotiations as soon as possible,

Taking note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

Welcoming the re-establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space during the 1986 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, to continue to examine and to identify through substantive and general consideration issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Recalls the obligation of all States to refrain from the threat or use of force in their space activities;

2. Reaffirms that general and complete disarmament under effective international control warrants that outer space shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it shall not become an arena for an arms race;

3. Emphasizes that further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, taking into account all relevant proposals including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space at the 1986 session of the Conference and at the forty-first session of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1987 session, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit aimed at reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

10. Calls upon all States, especially those with major space capabilities, to refrain, in their activities relating to outer space, from actions contrary to the observance of the relevant existing treaties or to the objective of preventing an arms race in outer space;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to convey to the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, in its capacity as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, the wish of the Member States for the early completion of the Institute's study on disarmament problems relating to outer space and the consequences of extending the arms race into outer space;

12. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

*The Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Abstaining: United States.

Before acting on the text as a whole, the General Assembly adopted paragraph 8 by a recorded vote of 140 to 1 (United States), with 12 abstentions. The paragraph had been similarly approved in the First Committee by 116 to 1 (United States), with 12 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, the United States said it did not believe that a basis currently existed for multilateral negotiations on outer-space arms control; it added that the Harare Declaration (see also p. 15) mentioned in the text was one-sided and biased with respect to vital security and disarmament issues. Italy—speaking also on behalf of Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom—said paragraph 8 did not take due account of the substantive discussions in the Conference on Disarmament and the wording tended to prejudice their outcome. Australia believed the text provided a basis for the future work of the Conference.

Other disarmament issues

The international community continued to consider the question of disarmament for the benefit of development, focusing its attention on issues such as the reduction of military budgets, economic and social consequences of the arms race, and military research and development.

The International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development—scheduled for Paris in 1986—was postponed at the host country's request, and the General Assembly decided to convene it in New York in 1987.

In 1986, the General Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to complete preparatory work for the Conference on the Indian Ocean in order to enable its convening no later than 1988.

Reduction of military budgets

After six years of work, the Disarmament Commission reached agreement in 1986 on a set of principles to govern actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets—except for one concerning transparency, information disclosure and comparability. The Assembly requested the Commission to conclude work in 1987 on that last outstanding issue (resolution 41/57).

Disarmament Commission consideration. In May 1986, the Disarmament Commission(1) again considered two aspects of reducing military budgets: harmonizing views on their gradual, agreed reduction and reallocating resources being used for military purposes to economic and social development; and examining and identifying ways to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures in a balanced manner.

Working Group I, re-established by the Commission on 6 May to consider the question for the sixth consecutive year, held 10 meetings between 7 and 21 May under the chairmanship of Gheorghe Tinea (Romania). It based its discussion on a 1985 working paper on principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets.(²) After resolving outstanding issues and achieving consensus on all paragraphs except two, the Group decided to merge the two into one; as a result, the Group produced a 15-paragraph text containing one paragraph in brackets (paragraph 7), signifying the absence of agreed formulation for it. Proposals for that paragraph—dealing with transparency, information disclosure and comparability—were submitted by a group of countries (Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, United Kingdom, United States) and, individually, by the German Democratic Republic, Pakistan, Sweden and the USSR. The text of the 14 paragraphs, along with the proposed texts for paragraph 7, was included in the Group's report.

On 23 May, the Commission adopted the report of Working Group I as part of its annual report to the General Assembly, thereby transmitting to the Assembly the set of principles and recommending that, unless another solution was achieved, the Commission should continue its discussion in 1987 to arrive at an agreed text of paragraph 7.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in August a report(3) containing the views of Australia, Finland, the Netherlands (on behalf of the EC States members), Norway, the Philippines, Sweden and the United States on the 1985 expert study(4) on the construction of military price indexes and purchasing-power parities for comparison of military expenditures. In addition, he submitted in September, with later addenda, his annual report on military expenditures in standardized form reported by 20 States.(⁵) As in previous years, a majority of the responding States used the standard reporting instrument, consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/57, as recommended by the First Committee.

Reduction of military budgets

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Reaffirming once again the provisions of paragraph 89 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, according to which the gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities for the reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that the freezing and reduction of military budgets would have favourable consequences on the world economic and financial situation and might facilitate efforts made to increase international assistance for the developing countries,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, all Member States unanimously and categorically reaffirmed the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, as well as their solemn commitment to it,

Recalling also that, in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second United Nations Disarmament Decade, it is provided that during this period renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources thus saved to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling further the provisions of its resolution 34/83 F of 11 December 1979, subsequently affirmed in its resolutions 35/142 A of 12 December 1980, 36/82 A of 9 December 1981, 37/95 A of 13 December 1982, 38/184 A of 20 December 1983, 39/64 A of 12 December 1984 and 40/91 A of 12 December 1985, in which it considered that a new impetus should be given to the endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditure, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Considering that the identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets and the other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

Noting that the Disarmament Commission, at its substantive session in 1986, agreed upon the above-mentioned principles except one, on which various alternatives were proposed by Member States,

1. Declares again its conviction that it is possible to achieve international agreements on the reduction of military budgets without prejudice to the right of all States to undiminished security, self-defence and sovereignty;

2. Appeals to all States, in particular to the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

3. Reaffirms that the human and material resources released through the reduction of military expenditures could be reallocated for economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets" and, in this context, to conclude, at its substantive session in 1987, its work on the last outstanding paragraph of the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of freezing and reduction of military budgets, and to submit its report and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Draws anew the attention of Member States to the fact that the identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets could contribute to harmonizing the views of States and creating confidence among them conducive to achieving international agreements on the reduction of military budgets;

6. Urges all Member States, in particular the most heavily armed States, to reinforce their readiness to co-operate in a constructive manner with a view to reaching agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

General Assembly resolution 41/57

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/827) without vote, 12 November (meeting 41); 10-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.37/Rev.D; agenda item 58).

Sponsors: Austria, Colombia, Finland, Indonesia, Ireland, Nigeria, Romania, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay.

Although joining in the consensus, India did not believe that all Member States were equally responsible for the high level of global expenditure on the arms race.

Disarmament and development

In June 1986, the General Assembly, acting on the request of France, decided to postpone until 1987 the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development—which had been proposed in 1984⁽⁶⁾ and originally scheduled to meet in Paris from 15 July to 2 August 1986 (decision 40/473). In December, the Assembly decided that the Conference would be convened in New York in August/September 1987, following one more session of the Preparatory Committee earlier that year (decision 41/422).

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 11 March, underlined the importance of the Conference and affirmed the need to recognize the adverse effects of the arms race on the enjoyment of human rights (see p. 781).

Communications. Several 1986 communications dealt with the reduction of arms expenditures and allocating the resources thus saved for economic and social development. Among them, the President of Brazil⁽⁷⁾ observed in April that a significant portion of humanity survived on little else than the mere hope of keeping on living, while military expenditures were approaching $1 trillion annually, adding to the dangers which threatened the survival of all. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bolivia and Peru, in a 3 June joint communiqué signed at La Paz, Bolivia,⁽⁸⁾ called for the conclusion of agreements on limiting arms expenditures so as to free resources needed for development. Romania reported that a referendum of 23 November,⁽⁹⁾ held as suggested by its Council of State, showed absolute support for a 5 percent reduction in the national armaments, armed forces and military expenditures before the end of 1986, and that Romania's President had appealed to the countries in Europe and to Canada and the United States for similar reductions.

Work of the Preparatory Committee. The 54-member Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development held two sessions in New York in 1986 (second session, 1-11 April; third, 2-13 June), focusing on identifying elements that could be included in a draft final document of the Conference.⁽¹⁰⁾

At its April session, the Committee considered the three substantive items on the provisional agenda for the Conference⁽¹¹⁾—review of the relationship between disarmament and development, implications of the level of military expenditures for the world economy and the international economic and social situation, and ways of releasing additional resources for development through disarmament measures.

In June, the Committee—based on the work of an open-ended consultative group which held nine meetings between 4 and 11 June—adopted by consensus, and annexed to its report, the elements that would serve as the basis for elaborating the final document of the Conference. Among documents before the Committee was a joint declaration unanimously adopted by the panel of eminent personalities in the field of disarmament and development, which was convened by the Conference Secretary-General in New York from 16 to 18 April.⁽¹²⁾ Expressing the belief that the growing international concern about issues of human survival and well-being transcended national boundaries and ideological barriers, the panel suggested a number of steps towards implementing a mutually reinforcing relationship between disarmament and development.

The Committee also considered in June a request made by France, in a letter of 22 May to the Secretary-General,⁽¹³⁾ that the Conference, which had been scheduled to meet in Paris from 15 July to 2 August 1986,⁽¹⁴⁾ be postponed until 1987; France believed that further efforts were needed to reach consensus and secure the participation of all the major military Powers with a view to making the Conference a success.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On the Preparatory Committee's recommendation⁽¹⁰⁾—reiterated by its Chairman in a 13 June letter to the Secretary-General⁽¹⁴⁾—the General Assembly, at its resumed fortieth session on 20 June, decided to postpone the Conference until 1987 (decision 40/473).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

By a letter of 24 October⁽¹⁵⁾ to the First Committee Chairman, the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee transmitted the recommendations made by its officers for the dates and venue of the Conference and the dates of the 1987 session of the Preparatory Committee. Those recommendations were subsequently reflected in a draft decision proposed by the First Committee Chairman (see below).

In December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted decision 41/422 without vote.

International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development

At its 96th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, on the basis of the recommendations contained in the report of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development and in conformity with its decision 40/473 of 20 June 1986, decided:

(a) To hold the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development at United Nations Headquarters from 24 August to 11 September 1987;

(b) To convene the Preparatory Committee for one more session from 21 April to 1 May 1987;

(c) To request the Member States and the Secretary-General of the Conference, based on the information in the report of the Preparatory Committee, concerning the results so far achieved in the substantial and organizational preparation for the Conference, to continue and intensify their participation in the final stage of the preparatory process, especially in making available their views and proposals on substantive issues, in order to ensure the best possible success of the Conference.

General Assembly decision 41/422

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/844) without vote, 14 November (meeting 45); draft by Chairman (A/C.1/41/L.78); agenda item 65.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 45; 5th Committee 36; plenary 96.

Among those that explained their position, the United States, which did not participate in the First Committee action on the draft, questioned the procedure used in dealing with the matter and stated that it would not participate in the Conference or in its preparations.

Economic and social consequences of the arms race

In 1985, the General Assembly⁽¹⁶⁾ had requested the Secretary-General to bring up to date, with the assistance of a group of experts and making appropriate use of UNIDIR in a consultative capacity, the 1982 report entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures,⁽¹⁷⁾ which, in turn, had updated a 1977 report on the topic.⁽¹⁸⁾ However, because of the financial difficulties of the United Nations, work on the report was deferred until 1987.

In December 1986, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit the updated report in 1988 (resolution 41/86 I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 I, as recommended by the First Committee.

Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/150 of 16 December 1985, Regretting that, owing to the financial difficulties of the United Nations, the Secretary-General had to defer until 1987 the updating of the report entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures, requested in paragraph 1 of resolution 40/150,

Deeply convinced that, in undertaking further measures that might be required to face the financial difficulties of the Organization, due attention should be given to the pressing need for all Governments and peoples to be informed about the problems created by the arms race and about the need for disarmament, which is of vital interest to all peoples and for which the United Nations has a central role,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to bring up to date the report entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures under the conditions provided in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of its resolution 40/150;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the updated report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session and to inform the Assembly at its forty-second session on the progress achieved in implementation of the present resolution.

4 December 1986 Meeting 96 138-1-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/842) by recorded vote (119-1-13), 11 November (meeting 40); draft by Romania (A/C.1/41/L.39); agenda item 62 (n).

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/41/7Add.10; 5th Committee, A/41/916; S-G, A/C.1/41/L.76, A/C.5/41/48.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 35, 40; 5th Committee 36; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Explaining its vote, the United States said it remained convinced, as in 1985, that an update of the report was both unnecessary and financially unwarranted.

Australia said it was no simple matter to assess the economic and social consequences of the arms race, when divergent views existed on how the data on the topic should be interpreted; further, it expected that the compilation of up-to-date statistics in preparing for the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development (see p. 77) would also constitute an updating of the report. In a similar vein, the United Kingdom believed that, to avoid duplication of work and to utilize resources better, the updating of the report should wait until after the Conference. Japan stated that due regard should be paid to the views submitted by States on streamlining and updating the United Nations disarmament studies (see p. 89).

Military research and development

The Group of Governmental Experts on Military Research and Development, having held six sessions since 1983, had reported to the General Assembly in 1985 that it could not reach consensus on a draft report on the topic due to one outstanding sentence having to do with the provision of official information on military use of research and development.⁽¹⁹⁾

In 1986, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to present the available material with an indication where consensus could not be reached (resolution 41/59 H).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/59 H by recorded vote, as recommended by the First Committee.

Comprehensive study on the military use of research and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 37/99 J of 13 December 1982, by which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study on the military use of research and development, with a view to preventing a qualitative arms race and to ensuring that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes,

Recalling also resolution 39/151 F of 17 December 1984 by which it took note of the progress report of the Secretary-General and requested the Secretary-General to continue the study and to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General containing a letter from the Chairman of the Group of Governmental Experts on Military Research and Development informing the Secretary-General, inter alia, that the Group had continued the efforts to reach agreement on its draft report but that, although the area of disagreement was narrow, it had not been possible to reach agreement on the draft report as a whole;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to present available material with an indication where consensus could not be reached.

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 137-1-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/840) by recorded vote (116-1-17), 10 November (meeting 38); draft by Sweden (A/C.1/41/L.31); agenda item 60.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 38; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Viet Nam.

Explaining its vote, the United States said the draft ran counter to the principle of consensus among group members that should govern the preparation and adoption of study reports; no parts of a document could be regarded as finally agreed until all of them had been agreed. The USSR said the work on the study could not be completed because agreement could not be reached on matters of fundamental importance; the fact that the area of disagreement was narrow did not give the study any particular status. The United Kingdom said the procedure suggested in the draft was tantamount to allowing a selective application of agreed ground rules; the fact remained that there was no agreed report.

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

In 1986, the General Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to complete preparatory work for the Conference on the Indian Ocean in order to enable its convening at Colombo, Sri Lanka, no later than 1988 (resolution 41/87).

Activities of the Committee on the Indian Ocean. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions in 1986 (New York, 24 March-8 April, 14-25 July)⁽²⁰⁾ as it continued to study practical measures for achieving the objectives of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.⁽²¹⁾ While the General Assembly, in 1985,⁽²²⁾ had authorized the Ad Hoc Committee to hold three 2-week sessions in 1986, it merged two of them in accordance with the Assembly's May 1986 decision (40/472 A) on the financial crisis facing the United Nations.

In the course of 13 formal and a number of informal meetings, the Committee discussed the Conference's provisional agenda, rules of procedure, participation, stages, level of representation and draft final document. An open-ended Working Group, established in 1985 and convened for the first time in 1986, held nine meetings and discussed, under the chairmanship of Nihal Rodrigo (Sri Lanka), substantive issues concerning the establishment of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean.

Two divergent views persisted on the convening of the Conference. Most non-aligned and Eastern European countries—favouring the convening of the Conference at Colombo no later than 1988—stressed that progress had been made in some areas of preparatory work and that progress in other areas depended on the political will of some members of the Ad Hoc Committee. The Western States continued to insist that an amelioration of the prevailing political and security climate in the Indian Ocean region was essential for the Conference's success and that its mere convening would not automatically create a zone of peace.

On 25 July, the Committee adopted its report, including a draft resolution for consideration by the Assembly. The draft, as approved by the Committee, differed in a number of ways from a text proposed in July by Sri Lanka on behalf of the Committee's non-aligned members.⁽²³⁾ Among other things, the non-aligned text would have had the Assembly emphasize that active participation in the Conference by the Security Council's permanent members and the major maritime users as well as the co-operation of those States with the littoral and hinterland States were essential for the success of the Conference. The text approved by the Committee contained, in paragraph 5, an understanding that was not in the non-aligned draft.

Communications. Non-aligned countries, in three documents transmitted to the Secretary-General in the course of the year—adopted at the Ministerial Meeting of their Co-ordinating Bureau (New Delhi, 16-19 April),⁽²⁴⁾ their Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government (Harare, 1-6 September)⁽²⁵⁾ and their meeting of Foreign Ministers and heads of delegation to the forty-first session of the General Assembly (New York, 2 October)⁽²⁶⁾—reaffirmed their determination to continue efforts at achieving the goals contained in the 1971 Declaration, reiterated their conviction that the presence in the Indian Ocean area of great-Power military presence violated the Declaration, and viewed with alarm and great concern the continuous escalation of such presence in the area.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/87, the draft of which had been recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee and approved by the First Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981, 37/96 of 13 December 1982, 38/185 of 20 December 1983, 39/149 of 17 December 1984, 40/153 of 16 December 1985 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling further the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling its decision, taken at its thirty-fourth session in resolution 34/80 B, to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo during 1981,

Recalling also its decision to make every effort, in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area and progress made in the harmonization of views, to finalize, in accordance with its normal methods of work, all preparations for the Conference, including the dates for its convening,

Recalling further its decision, taken at its fortieth session in resolution 40/153, concerning the convening of the Conference at an early date not later than 1988,

Recalling the exchange of views in the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean in 1986,

Noting the exchange of views on the adverse political and security climate in the region,

Noting further the various documents before the Ad Hoc Committee,

Convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Considering that any other foreign military presence in the area, whenever it is contrary to the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, gives greater urgency to the need to take practical steps towards the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering further that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Calling for the renewal of genuinely constructive efforts through the exercise of the political will necessary for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Deeply concerned at the danger posed by the grave and ominous developments in the area and the resulting sharp deterioration of peace, security and stability which particularly seriously affect the littoral and hinterland States, as well as international peace and security,

Convinced that the continued deterioration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area is an important consideration bearing on the question of the urgent convening of the Conference and that the easing of tension in the area would enhance the prospect of success being achieved by the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and exchange of views of the Committee;

2. Takes note of the discussions on substantive matters in the Working Group established in accordance with the Ad Hoc Committee's decision of 11 July 1985;

3. Emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace adopted in 1971;

4. Notes that the Ad Hoc Committee has been unable, during its four weeks of work in 1986, to complete preparatory work relating to the convening of the Conference on the Indian Ocean, and urges the Committee to continue its work with vigour and determination;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, taking into account the political and security climate in the region, to complete preparatory work relating to the Conference on the Indian Ocean during 1987 in order to enable the opening of the Conference at Colombo at an early date soon thereafter, but not later than 1988, to be decided by the Committee in consultation with the host country, with a clear understanding that if preparatory work is not completed in 1987 serious consideration will be given to ways and means of more effectively organizing work in the Ad Hoc Committee to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

6. Emphasizes that the Conference called for in resolution 34/80 B and subsequent resolutions and the establishment and maintenance of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace require the full and active participation and co-operation of all the permanent members of the Security Council, the major maritime users and the littoral and hinterland States;

7. Decides that preparatory work would comprise organizational matters and substantive issues, including the provisional agenda for the Conference, rules of procedure, participation, stages of the Conference, level of representation, documentation, consideration of appropriate arrangements for any international agreements that may ultimately be reached for the maintenance of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace and the preparation of the draft final document of the Conference;

8. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee at the same time to seek the necessary harmonization of views on remaining relevant issues;

9. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to consult the Secretary-General at the appropriate time on the establishment of a secretariat for the Conference;

10. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions, and requests the Committee to intensify its work with regard to the implementation of its mandate;

11. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold two preparatory sessions in 1987 each of a duration of two weeks for completion of preparatory work;

12. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the Conference a report on its preparatory work;

13. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his consultations on the participation in the work of the Committee by States Members of the United Nations which are not members of the Committee, with the aim of resolving this matter at the earliest possible date;

14. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records, in recognition of its preparatory function.

Information and studies

Efforts to generate interest in disarmament objectives continued through Disarmament Campaign activities, research and studies. The General Assembly considered that more attention should be paid to the involvement of children and youth in Campaign activities (resolution 41/60 A) and decided to hold in 1987, as in 1986, a pledging conference for the Campaign (41/60 B). The Assembly again stressed the mass media's role in publicizing Disarmament Week (41/86 D).

The Assembly welcomed the establishment in January 1986 in Togo of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa (41/60 D) and decided to establish a centre in Latin America in 1987 (41/60 J).

The financial difficulties facing the Organization led to the scaling down of the 1986 United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament (see p. 26), and to the deferring of the work on two studies mandated by the Assembly in 1985—on the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter (see p. 37), and on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures (see p. 79). The study on deterrence was concluded in 1986 and the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to arrange for its publication (41/86 R). The Assembly reaffirmed the value of disarmament studies and the need for a thorough appraisal of the subject (41/86 C).

World Disarmament Campaign

In 1986, the World Disarmament Campaign—launched by the General Assembly in 1982 at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament⁽¹⁾—continued to generate public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1986,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the United Nations activities for the Campaign, including information materials, special events and publicity programmes. The Department for Disarmament Affairs organized a regional conference at Tbilisi, USSR, an expert meeting at Erice, Italy, and a symposium at Florence, Italy. Special meetings and briefings for NGOs included a four-day forum on disarmament and development (New York, April), and a regional conference on global security and the United Nations (Vienna, June). The Department of Public Information continued to inform the public of the United Nations activities in the disarmament field, by disseminating printed/audio-visual materials and organizing events at Headquarters and at information centres throughout the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/60 A, as recommended by the First Committee.

World Disarmament Campaign: actions and activities

The General Assembly,

Aware of the growing public concern at the dangers of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and its negative social and economic consequences,

Noting with satisfaction the successful implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign and its positive impact on the mobilization on a large scale of world public opinion on behalf of peace and disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 36/92 J of 9 December 1981, 37/100 H of 13 December 1982, 38/73 F of 15 December 1983, 39/63 A of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 D of 16 December 1985,

Welcoming the voluntary contributions made to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund to carry out the objectives of the Campaign,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on the progress and implementation of the programme of activities of the Campaign,

Convinced that the United Nations system, Member States, with respect for their sovereign rights, and other bodies, in particular non-governmental organizations, all have their role to play in achieving the objectives of the Campaign,

Expressing its satisfaction over the great number of various activities carried out within the framework of the Campaign in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament,

1. Reaffirms the usefulness of further carrying out actions and activities that are an important manifestation of the will of world public opinion and contribute effectively to the achievement of the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign and thus to the creation of a favourable climate for making progress in the field of disarmament with a view to achieving the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

2. Reaffirms also the importance of carrying out the Campaign in accordance with the priorities in the field of disarmament established in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, taking into account that the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, the adoption of effective measures for nuclear disarmament, the prevention of an arms race in outer space and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority;

3. Calls upon Governments of all States to recognize and respect the mass peace and disarmament movements as an important factor of current world politics contributing to the promotion of a new political approach required by the realities of the nuclear and space age;

4. Urges Governments of all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, in formulating their policies in the field of disarmament, to take into account the main demands of the mass peace and disarmament movements, in particular with regard to the immediate cessation and prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests, with a bilateral moratorium by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on all nuclear explosions being the first step towards this end, and the prevention of an arms race in outer space and its termination on Earth, and invites them to inform the Secretary-General annually of the actions taken to that end;

5. Recommends that, in carrying out the Campaign, due regard should be given to important dates and anniversaries related to international peace and security;

6. Considers it necessary, the future of mankind being at stake, that more attention should be paid to the active involvement of children and youth in Campaign activities;

7. Invites once again Member States to co-operate with the United Nations to ensure a better flow of accurate information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament, as well as actions and activities of the world public in support of peace and disarmament, and to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing the programme of activities of the Campaign, to give wider publicity to the work of the General Assembly in the field of disarmament, paying due attention, in particular, to the proposals of Member States and the action taken thereon;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 114-3-36 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/841) by recorded vote (80-3-35), 11 November (meeting 39); 7-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.16); agenda item 61 (c).

Sponsors: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 39; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Portugal, Rwanda, Singapore, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Uruguay.

In explanation of vote, Japan, although appreciating the Campaign's importance, said the draft set out arbitrarily priority issues in disarmament; it found the text's overall tone biased and subjective. Speaking on behalf of the 12 EC member States, the United Kingdom said they considered paragraph 7 to be a blatant call for censorship and suppression of freedom of speech, and viewed with concern the idea of involving children for political purposes, no matter how worth while. Australia, while supporting those aspects bearing directly on the Campaign, thought the draft also contained unnecessary or contentious elements, especially in paragraph 4.

Financing

In his September report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that a decline in voluntary contributions pledged to the Trust Fund for the Campaign had necessitated adjustments in the programme of activities for 1986.

The Fourth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held in New York on 28 October, with 67 delegations participating.

The pledges made at the Conference or at other times during the year were earmarked as follows: for the Campaign, Australia ($A 30,000), Austria ($10,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), Cuba ($5,000), Finland (50,000 markkaa, subject to parliamentary approval), Greece ($10,000), Indonesia ($5,000), Saudi Arabia ($10,000), Seychelles ($300), Sri Lanka ($5,000), Sweden (100,000 kronor) and Zaire ($500); for UNIDIR, Australia ($A 20,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), the Federal Republic of Germany, (10,000 marks), and the USSR (200,000 roubles); and for the Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, Norway ($10,000), Senegal ($1,000) and Togo (7 million CFA francs).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/60 B by recorded vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/152 I of 12 December 1980, 36/92 C of 9 December 1981, 37/100 I of 13 December 1982, 38/73 D of 15 December 1983, 39/63 D of 12 December 1984 and 40/151 B of 16 December 1985, as well as the reports of the Secretary-General of 17 September 1981, 11 June 1982, 3 November 1982, 30 August 1983, 4 October 1985 and 19 September 1986,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign by the United Nations system during 1986 and the activities contemplated for 1987, as well as its main financial aspects,

Having also examined the part of the report of the Secretary-General dealing with the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the 1986 United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign, held on 28 October 1986,

1. Reiterates its commendation of the manner in which, as described in the above-mentioned reports, the World Disarmament Campaign has been geared by the Secretary-General in order to guarantee "the widest possible dissemination of information and unimpeded access for all sectors of the public to a broad range of information and opinions on questions of arms limitation and disarmament and the dangers relating to all aspects of the arms race and war, in particular nuclear war";

2. Recalls that, as was also agreed by consensus in the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it is likewise an essential requisite for the universality of the Campaign that it receive the co-operation and participation of all States;

3. Endorses once more the statement made by the Secretary-General on the occasion of the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign to the effect that such co-operation implies that adequate funds be made available and that consequently the criterion of universality also applies to pledges, since a campaign without world-wide participation and funding will have difficulty in reflecting this principle in its implementation;

4. Reiterates its regret that most of the States that have the largest military expenditures have not so far made any financial contribution to the Campaign;

5. Decides that at its forty-second session there should be a fifth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States that have not yet announced any voluntary contribution will do so;

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund should not be earmarked for specific activities since it is most desirable that the Secretary-General enjoy full freedom to take the decisions he deems fit within the framework of the Campaign previously approved by the General Assembly and in exercise of the powers vested in him in connection with the Campaign;

7. Notes with appreciation that the Secretary-General has given permanent character to his instructions to the United Nations information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials to local languages;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the Campaign by the organizations of the United Nations system during 1987 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1988;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 144-0-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/841) by recorded vote (114-0-9), 11 November (meeting 39); 11-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.18); agenda item 61 (c).

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 37, 39; plenary 94.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote, France objected to paragraph 4, and asserted that its contribution of $1.2 million to UNIDIR over the years constituted a very important contribution to the Campaign. The Federal Republic of Germany regretted that the text failed to reflect two principles on which the Campaign rested—voluntary participation and universality. The Netherlands felt that the Campaign activities tended to lead one-sidedly to the mobilization of public opinion in a certain direction, when emphasis should be placed on the accessibility of United Nations material on disarmament, for which no additional funds or voluntary contributions seemed necessary; having doubts about the effectiveness of the Campaign, it would not make financial contributions.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on regional centres for peace and disarmament—one welcoming the opening of a centre in Africa (41/60 D) and the other establishing one in Latin America (41/60 J). Some delegations explained, in a single statement, their positions on both texts (see p. 86).

Africa

As agreed by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽³⁾ the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa was established on 1 January 1986, at Lomé, Togo.

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in October⁽⁴⁾ that the financial crisis of the United Nations had made it impossible to realize any savings from the regular budget for financing the Centre; an exceptional one-time allocation of $140,000 had been made from extrabudgetary resources to enable the Centre to commence its operations. Further, the Secretary-General established a trust fund within the Secretariat, to which three Member States (Cameroon, Senegal, Togo) and one NGO had pledged voluntary contributions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 3 December, adopted resolution 41/60 D without vote.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

Recalling its resolution 40/151 G of 16 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries held at New Delhi from 16 to 19 April 1986, in which the ministers reaffirmed the need to strengthen the role of regional bodies in mobilizing support for the World Disarmament Campaign and the realization of its objectives and, in that context, welcomed the establishment at Lomé of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa,

Taking into consideration the report of the Secretary-General on the Regional Centre,

1. Welcomes the establishment on 1 January 1986 of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa;

2. Also welcomes the promptness with which the Secretary-General has taken the necessary administrative steps to ensure the functioning of the Centre, and requests him to continue to give the Centre all necessary support;

3. Thanks Member States and international, governmental and non-governmental organizations that have already made contributions towards the functioning of the Centre;

4. Again appeals to Member States and international, governmental and non-governmental organizations to make voluntary contributions to the Centre;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/60 D

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/41/841) without vote, 11 November (meeting 39); draft by Benin, for African Group (A/C.1/41/L.32); agenda item 61 (g). Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 37, 39; plenary 94.

Japan said it had joined in the consensus on the understanding that such centres would be financed by existing resources and voluntary contributions and, therefore, would not place an extra burden on the United Nations budget.

Latin America

The ministerial-level participants at the twelfth regular meeting of the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System (Lima, Peru, 16 and 17 October 1986)^(c) requested the Secretary-General to establish, at Lima, a United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/60 J on 3 December, without vote.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/63 J of 12 December 1984, in which it requested the Secretary-General to provide assistance to such Member States in the regions concerned as might request it with a view to establishing regional and institutional arrangements for the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, on the basis of existing resources and of voluntary contributions that Member States might make to that end,

Mindful of the Lima Communiqué adopted by the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System at its twelfth regular meeting, held at Lima on 16 and 17 October 1986, in which the foreign ministers, ministers and heads of delegation of the Latin American and Caribbean countries reaffirmed their support for the establishment at Lima of a United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations to take the necessary steps,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, 38/73 J of 15 December 1983 and 39/63 F of 12 December 1984 on regional disarmament,

Bearing in mind resolution 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, which established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa,

1. Decides to establish, as at 1 January 1987, in accordance with resolution 39/63 J on the World Disarmament Campaign, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America, with headquarters at Lima, on the basis of existing resources and of voluntary contributions that

Member States and interested organizations may make to that end;

2. Decides also that the Centre shall provide, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities of the Member States of the Latin American region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, and for the promotion of economic and social development through appropriate reutilization of available resources, and shall co-ordinate the implementation of regional activities in Latin America under the World Disarmament Campaign;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures to ensure the establishment and functioning of the Centre, including, to that end, the possible utilization of the existing United Nations infrastructure at Lima with a view to the full employment of available resources;

4. Invites Member States and interested organizations to make voluntary contributions to the Centre;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/60 J

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote

Peru, which introduced the draft on behalf of its sponsors, expected the Centre to be financed by voluntary contributions, while taking full advantage also of the currently available resources, including the existing infrastructure at Lima.

Speaking on the two texts on regional centres, Australia felt that the centres' functions, particularly dissemination of World Disarmament Campaign materials, duplicated the current Secretariat activities; it expressed concern that the maintenance of the centres might claim a significant proportion of the Campaign funds, which it preferred to see allocated to where they were most needed and effective. The United States supported regional approaches to arms limitation but had serious concerns about establishing new United Nations institutions away from Headquarters; it noted the commitment made in the texts that both centres would be supported solely by voluntary contributions from Member States and on the basis of existing resources; it also expected the two centres to be supported equally.

Disarmament Week

Annual observance of Disarmament Week—spanning a week starting on United Nations Day, 24 October—was marked at Headquarters on 29 October 1986 at a special meeting of the General Assembly's First Committee, where statements were made by the Assembly President, the Secretary-General and representatives of the five regional groups.

In his annual report on the Week,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in August the replies received from 11 Member States, as well as from the United Nations system and international NGOs, on their activities to promote the Week's objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 4 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/86 D.

Disarmament Week

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned about the escalating arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race, which represents a serious threat to the very existence of mankind,

Stressing the vital importance of eliminating the threat of a nuclear war, ending the nuclear-arms race, bringing about disarmament for the maintenance of world peace and creating a comprehensive system of international peace and security,

Emphasizing anew the urgent need for and the importance of wide and continued mobilization of world public opinion in support of halting and reversing the arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race, in all its aspects,

Taking into account the aspirations of the world public for halting the arms race on Earth and preventing it in outer space and for eliminating nuclear weapons and other types of weapons of mass destruction, as well as the new initiatives to this end,

Mindful of the world-wide mass anti-war and anti-nuclear movement,

Recognizing the important role of the mass media in mobilizing world public opinion in support of disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction the broad and active support by Governments and international and national organizations of the decision taken by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding the proclamation of the week starting 24 October, the day of the foundation of the United Nations, as a week devoted to fostering the objectives of disarmament,

Recalling the recommendations concerning the World Disarmament Campaign contained in annex V to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in particular the recommendation that Disarmament Week should continue to be widely observed,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/71 D of 14 December 1978, 34/83 I of 11 December 1979, 37/78 D of 9 December 1982, 38/183 L of 20 December 1983, 39/148 J of 17 December 1984 and 40/152 E of 16 December 1985,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up measures undertaken by governmental and non-governmental organizations in holding Disarmament Week;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States and international and national governmental and non-governmental organizations for their energetic support of and active participation in Disarmament Week, in particular in holding the 1986 Disarmament Week in close connection with the celebration of the International Year of Peace;

3. Expresses serious concern over the continued escalation of the arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race, and the imminent danger of its extension into outer space, which gravely jeopardizes international peace and security and increases the danger of outbreak of a nuclear war;

4. Stresses the important role of the mass media in acquainting the world public with the aims of Disarmament Week and measures undertaken within its framework;

5. Invites all States, in carrying out appropriate measures at the local level on the occasion of Disarmament Week, to take into account the elements of the model programme for Disarmament Week, prepared by the Secretary-General;

6. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency to intensify activities, within their areas of competence, to disseminate information on the consequences of the arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race, and requests them to inform the Secretary-General accordingly;

7. Also invites international non-governmental organizations to take an active part in Disarmament Week and to inform the Secretary-General of the activities undertaken;

8. Further invites the Secretary-General to use the United Nations mass media as widely as possible to promote better understanding among the world public of disarmament problems and the objectives of Disarmament Week;

9. Requests Governments to continue, in accordance with resolution 33/71 D, to inform the Secretary-General of activities undertaken to promote the objectives of Disarmament Week;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 33/71 D, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

Approved by First Committee (A/41/842) by recorded vote (89-1-22), 11 November (meeting 39); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.14): agenda item 62 (j).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 1st Committee 3-32, 39; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Explaining their votes, France and the Federal Republic of Germany said they considered it inadvisable and inappropriate for the United Nations to invite the specialized agencies or IAEA to disseminate information on matters outside their spheres of competence. Japan found the draft to have deviated further from previous consensus language, and considered the new language in the second and fourth preambular paragraphs to be misleading.

Disarmament studies and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The 24 -member Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies held two sessions in New York in 1986 (fourteenth, 5-9 May; fifteenth, 22-26 September),(7) and discussed the United Nations studies on disarmament, implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign and the current disarmament situation. It also continued to act as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR.

In view of the financial situation of the United Nations, the Board adjusted the Institute's 1987 draft programme of work and reduced the proposed budget. In so doing, the Board recommended a subvention of $98,500 from the United Nations regular budget, as the absolute minimum of support needed by the Institute. The recommendation was transmitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee by the Secretary-General;(8) it was also considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.(9)

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In October 1986, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of UNIDIR for the period from September 1985 to September 1986.(10) Ongoing activities included studies on disarmament and outer space (see p. 73), disarmament and development, arms-transfer dependence, verification, nuclear commerce, confidence-building measures in Africa and military balance in Europe.

In his report on the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR,(7) the Secretary-General discussed the difficulties facing the Institute-staffed by a Director, a Deputy Director and two General Service personnel-due to the absence of its Director, Liviu Bota, who did not return to his duties at Geneva following his visit, in late December 1985, to Bucharest, Romania, for consultations. Efforts to obtain his return had been unsuccessful. In March 1986, a letter of resignation signed by Mr. Bota was received at United Nations Headquarters, but the Secretary-General decided that, as set out in the Staff Rules, the resignation should be submitted in person in order to be acceptable; he subsequently informed the Board of his intention to take up the matter personally with the Foreign Minister of Romania at the end of September. The Board agreed to support the Secretary-General in seeking a solution satisfactory to all concerned.

On 31 December 1986, Mr. Bota's contract as Director of UNIDIR expired.

General Assembly consideration. At the Assembly's forty-first session, a draft resolution entitled "Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research" was submitted by Australia, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, the Netherlands, Norway, Samoa, Sweden and the United Kingdom.(11) The draft, as orally revised, would have had the Assembly regret the inability of UNIDIR to fulfil its functions in the absence of its Director, support the efforts of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Board to rectify the situation, call on the Government concerned to co-operate in the efforts and request the Secretary-General to report in 1987 on actions taken.

On 17 November, the First Committee(12) rejected-by a recorded vote of 42 to 38, with 22 abstentions-a proposal by Romania that no decision be taken on the matter.

The Committee then adopted a series of amendments proposed by Romania(13) to the 9-nation draft. By a recorded vote of 36 to 31, with 36 abstentions, the Committee agreed to insert a new preambular paragraph referring to a provision of the United Nations Staff Regulations prohibiting international civil servants from engaging in activities incompatible with the proper discharge of their duties with the Organization; replace the call to the Government concerned with calls to all concerned to find a satisfactory solution, "taking into account the rights and interests of all parties" and through a proper application of the Staff Regulations and other international legal instruments; and dispense with the Secretary-General's report. By a recorded vote of 41 to 28, with 33 abstentions, the Committee agreed to replace the paragraph regretting the Institute's inability to fulfil its functions due to the Director's absence with one expressing concern about his absence.

Australia, on behalf of the sponsors, said the amendments had changed, fundamentally and unacceptably, the thrust and purpose of the original draft; the draft having been amended, they were no longer sponsors. The First Committee then rejected-by a recorded vote of none in favour to 34 against, with 54 abstentions-the draft as revised and amended.

UN disarmament studies programme

In 1986, only the study on deterrence was concluded, while two other studies which the Assembly had asked the Secretary-General in 1985 to carry out-on the climatic and potential physical effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter (see p. 37), and on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures (see p. 79) - were deferred because of the United Nations financial difficulties. (See also ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I.) No new studies were initiated in 1986.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General in 1986 to present available material, indicating where consensus had failed, from the report on the military use of research and development, which a group of experts had drafted but failed to agree on in 1985 (see p. 79).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In February 1986, (14) the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to the Assembly's 1985 call for the Council to initiate due procedures, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, for halting the arms race.(15)

In June, the Secretary-General submitted a report, with later addenda,(16) containing the views and proposals submitted by 19 Member States individually and by one on behalf of the 12 EC member States on how United Nations work regarding disarmament studies could be further improved.

In an August report, with a later addendum,(17) the Secretary-General transmitted the views of 12 Member States on the 1985 study on concepts of security.(18)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 4 December, adopted without vote resolution 41/86 C.

United Nations disarmament studies

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/152 K, adopted by consensus on 16 December 1985.

Noting the related discussions that have taken place in the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies during 1986,

1. Reaffirms the value of United Nations disarmament studies and the need for a thorough appraisal of the subject;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the views of Member States contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Invites those Member States that have not yet done so to communicate to the Secretary-General, by 1 April

1987, their views and proposals on how the work of the United Nations in the field of disarmament studies can be further improved;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the replies received in 1987 to the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies and to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "United Nations disarmament studies".

Study on deterrence

In 1986, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report prepared by the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Study on Deterrence.(19) The Group-experts appointed in pursuance of a 1984 Assembly request,(20) from Argentina, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Sweden, the USSR and the United States-held two sessions in 1985 and one in 1986 (10-21 March), under the chairmanship of K. Subrahmanyam (India).

As recommended by the Advisory Board and endorsed by the Assembly in 1984, the study covered differing views and their supporting arguments, without attempting to arrive at joint conclusions and recommendations. Entitled "Deterrence: its implications for disarmament and the arms race, negotiated arms reductions and international security and other related matters", the study comprised three parts-individual contributions by the experts, a summary of arguments and counter-arguments on the individual papers (by the experts from the non-aligned, socialist and NATO countries, respectively), and a compilation of the respective points of view of the experts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/86 R, as recommended by the First Committee.

Study on deterrence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 39/423 of 17 December 1984, by which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study under the title "Deterrence: its implications for disarmament and the arms race, negotiated arms reductions and international security and other related matters",

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing the study,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Study on Deterrence which assisted him in the preparation of the study;

2. Commends the study to the attention of all Member States;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution.

Parties and signatories to disarmament agreements

In September 1986, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements, ⁽²¹⁾ based on information received from the States depositories of those instruments. Listing the parties to and signatories of agreements as at 31 July 1986, the report also contained similar information on the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, and the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (see p. 70), of which the Secretary-General was the depository.

As at 31 December 1986, the following numbers of States had become parties to the multilateral agreements covered in the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which the were initially signed or opened for signature).⁽²²⁾

(Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (1925): 110 parties

The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 33 parties

Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963): 115 parties

Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1967):(23) 87 parties

Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (1967): 31 parties

Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968): (24) 136 parties

Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (1971):(25) 77 parties

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1972):(26) 107 parties (see also p. 64)

Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (1977):(27) 51 parties

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

In 1986, the General Assembly adopted principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space—a set of 15 legal principles governing remote sensing activities for the benefit of all countries in improving natural resources management, land use and environmental protection (resolution 41/65).

The Assembly urged, in resolution 41/64, that all countries have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space, that an international space information service be established, and that the United Nations support the creation of regional training centres linked to institutions implementing space programmes and organize a fellowship programme for developing countries.

By resolution 41/66, the Assembly called on States to consider ratifying or acceding to the 1974 Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.

International co-operation in outer space continued to be considered by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space), which held its twenty-ninth session (New York, 2-13 June), and by its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and Legal Sub-Committee.

Science, technology and law

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-third session in New York from 10 to 21 February 1986.⁽¹⁾ It continued to consider remote sensing of the Earth by satellites and enhancing the safety margin of space objects with nuclear power sources on board, reviewed the progress made in the development of space transportation systems, and examined technical questions related to the geostationary orbit (see below). The Sub-Committee recommended the establishment of a working group of the whole so that, beginning with its 1987 session, it could evaluate the implementation of the recommendations relating to international co-operation of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82).⁽²⁾ It noted, in that connection, that the developing countries had expressed disappointment at the lack of financial resources to implement UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

The Committee on outer space, at its June session,⁽³⁾ took note of the Sub-Committee's report.

UN Programme on Space Applications

In 1986, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications continued to provide fellowships and technical advisory services, organize training courses and meetings of technical experts, promote co-operation between developed and developing countries, and process space-related information.⁽⁴⁾

Two one-year (1986/87) fellowships in microwave technology were offered by Austria at the Technical University of Graz; three one-year fellowships were offered by the European Space Agency (ESA) at the European Space Research and Technology Centre (Noordwijk, Netherlands), the European Space Research Institute (Frascati, Italy), and the European Space Operations Centre (Darmstadt, Federal Republic of Germany) in communications engineering, remote sensing and meteorology, respectively; and five long-range fellowships were offered by the German Democratic Republic for training in space science and technology.⁽⁵⁾

Under technical advisory services, an expert in remote sensing education was recommended to Mosul University in Iraq, which had decided to establish a programme on the topic. A mission was undertaken to Accra, Ghana, for consultations with the Association of African Universities on the development of indigenous capability in remote sensing technology. A mission to Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, pursued consultations on a remote sensing information programme for Africa, with the Pan-African Documentation and Information Service and the Cartography and Remote Sensing Unit of the Economic Commission for Africa. Those consultations, as well as communications established with the Fishery Committee for the Eastern and Central Atlantic on the combined use of satellite meteorological data and remote sensing techniques, aimed at developing human resources in the field of remote sensing technology for food production and resources management in Africa.

A consultation was held with the State Science and Technology Commission of China, on developing a satellite television training programme for teachers, farmers, technicians, health personnel and administrators.

A specialist in remote sensing was made available to a meeting of experts from 13 Arab countries (Tunis, Tunisia, 18-25 November), organized by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The participants agreed to co-operate regionally in the use of remote sensing technology for natural resources development.

Three training courses and three expert meetings were conducted. The eleventh training course on remote sensing applications in agricultural statistics-developed jointly by the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), France and Italy-was held (Montpellier, France, and Rome, Italy, 5-30 May), with 22 participants from 22 countries. A United Nations/ESA training course on drought assessment and vegetation monitoring using meteorological satellite and other space-related data (Maspalomas, Canary Islands, Spain, 22 September-3 October) was given, in co-operation with FAO, France and Spain, with 17 participants from 15 countries attending. The third training course on remote sensing applications to operational agrometeorology and hydrology, sponsored by the United Nations, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), FAO and ESA (Quito, Ecuador, 21 October-7 November), was attended by 24 participants from 14 countries.

The United Nations/ECLAC meeting of experts on regional co-operation in space science and technology and its applications (Cartagena, Colombia, 16-20 June), attended by 35 experts from 13 Latin American and Caribbean countries and 10 organizations, recommended that Member States of the ECLAC region develop bilateral/multilateral programmes including joint scientific experiments, establishment of advanced space-related university studies, support for the Asociación de Empresas de Telecomunicaciones del Pacto Andino, exchange of research findings, data and information, and support for non-governmental and professional associations. A meeting of experts on space technology applications in the Indian Ocean region (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 15-19 September), attended by 57 participants from 20 countries and 12 organizations, recommended the establishment of a regional co-operation programme on remote sensing and the improvement of maritime communications. A meeting on the applications of space science and technology within the framework of educational systems (Mexico City, 13-17 October) was attended by 46 educators and experts from 15 countries and 12 organizations.

The United Nations collaborated with the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) of the International Council of Scientific Unions and other international organizations in co-sponsoring a workshop on remote sensing of interest to developing countries (Toulouse, France, 7-9 July). The workshop brought together scientists from developed and developing countries to exchange ideas and experiences in remote sensing technology, including infrastructure requirements. In addition, the United Nations co-operated with COSPAR in publishing, in 1986, the proceedings of a 1984 workshop (Graz, Austria) on promoting space research in developing countries.

Voluntary contributions to the United Nations Programme on Space Applications were received in 1986 from Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, the USSR and the United States.

The Expert on Space Applications, in June, urged Member States to give strong support to the Programme, especially because funds allocated under the regular United Nations budget had been severely cut. Under that budget, $216,600 was approved for the Programme's 1986-1987 activities, but the 1986 allotment of $106,400 had been reduced to $49,100 as a result of the Organization's financial crisis. Although $110,200 had been approved for 1987, no information on the exact allocation for that year was available.

The Committee on outer space⁽³⁾ noted the progress made in implementing the Programme and expressed its appreciation to the Expert for his effective implementation of the Programme within the limited funds available. In resolution 41/64, the General Assembly endorsed the 1987 Programme, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued to stress the necessity of ensuring effective co-ordination of outer space activities within the United Nations system,⁽¹⁾ and the Committee on outer space⁽³⁾ endorsed the Sub-Committee's view that the support of UNDP and other international funding institutions should be sought in implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

Convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, the eighth Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (Vienna, 1-3 October)⁽⁵⁾ felt that the co-ordinating machinery had worked satisfactorily and that there were no major questions to be addressed. It examined the draft of a report of the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁾ on co-ordination of outer space activities for 1987 onward, in areas such as remote sensing, communications, meteorology and air navigation.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, in 1986, reiterated its concern about the gap between the resources needed and those available for the activities recommended by UNISPACE-82.⁽²⁾ It recalled that, in accordance with UNISPACE-82 recommendations and a 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁷⁾ new and expanded activities were to be funded mainly by voluntary contributions of States in money or in kind as well as through the rearrangement of priorities within the United Nations regular budget.

In a September 1986 report⁽⁸⁾ on implementation of the UNISPACE-82 recommendations, the Secretary-General provided information on the progress made in such areas as inter-agency and regional co-operation, studies, the Programme on Space Applications, information, strengthening the Outer Space Affairs Division of the Secretariat, and voluntary contributions.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The importance of the timely availability of remote sensing data and analysed data at reasonable cost was emphasized by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.⁽¹⁾ The continuing remote sensing programmes of the USSR and the United States and the remote sensing satellite systems planned by Brazil, Canada, France, India, Japan and ESA were noted. Some planned satellites would provide new capabilities, including higher resolution images and radar systems capable of gathering data under all weather conditions. The satellite-operating and a number of other countries were operating or developing ground stations for direct data reception. Almost 100 countries had used satellite remote sensing data for applications in agriculture, forestry, geology, hydrology, oceanography, fisheries, environmental monitoring, mapping and land-use planning.

The Committee on outer space⁽³⁾ agreed that the Sub-Committee should continue to consider the item on a priority basis in 1987.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The use of nuclear devices as sources of power for spacecraft was given further consideration by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, (1) which agreed that attention should be given in developing and implementing new space systems to enhancing the safety margin of space objects with such devices on board. The Sub-Committee discussed the topic without re-establishing a working group as in previous years. Some delegations felt the working papers considered by the 1985 Working Group on Nuclear Power Sources⁽⁹⁾ deserved further evaluation, adding that the Sub-Committee should focus on questions such as notification of unplanned re-entry, emergency procedures and assistance to States. Differing views were expressed on the need for definitions and terminology associated with nuclear power sources in outer space-the subject of a 1986 working paper submitted by Canada.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Committee on outer space⁽³⁾ endorsed the agreement reached in the Sub-Committee that attention should be given to enhancing the safety margin of space objects with nuclear power sources on board, that information should be provided promptly on malfunctioning objects with a risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to the Earth's atmosphere, and that States should receive guidance on preplanning of area monitoring and countermeasures in case of radioactive contamination of their territory by such objects. There was a divergence of views on whether a working group should be reconvened, or whether the Sub-Committee itself should proceed, to carry out the remaining work.

Space transportation

Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space were considered by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee,⁽¹⁾ which particularly noted developments in related programmes in China, India, Japan, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and ESA.

The Committee on outer space⁽³⁾ endorsed a Sub-Committee decision to continue considering those systems in 1987.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee⁽¹⁾ continued to study the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit, in which satellites for communications and other purposes maintained a position some 36,000 kilometres above the Equator. Some delegations reiterated the need for legal regulations to ensure equitable access to such orbit, while others were opposed to the adoption of a priori plans for its use. The Committee on outer space⁽³⁾ agreed that the Sub-Committee should continue consideration of the topic in 1987.

Other questions

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee⁽¹⁾ continued its consideration of the life sciences, including space medicine, and heard presentations in 1986 by the USSR and the United States on developments in space biomedical research. Their studies dealt with, among other things, cardiovascular function under various conditions, as well as the development of programmable pacemakers and new medical instruments. A special presentation and reports were also made by COSPAR and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) on progress made in the geosphere-biosphere programme, which studied long-term climatic and other environmental changes. The Sub-Committee also noted the work of WMO on its tropical cyclone programme and asked to be kept informed of the programme's development.

Of reports submitted to the Sub-Committee in 1986, a report by COSPAR(11) discussed progress in space research, including studies of the Earth's surface, meteorology and climate; studies of the Earth-Moon system, planets and small bodies of the solar system; studies of the Earth and planets, including reference atmospheres; and space plasmas in the solar system. IAF studied space technology and applications(12) relating, among other things, to space transportation, communications, Earth observations, materials processing and space law.

A progress report on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space was submitted to the Committee on outer space by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU).(13) In accordance with a 1966 General Assembly resolution,(14) information was also provided to the Committee by several States on their national and international space activities in 1985(15) and 1986.(16) Among the States were Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Pakistan, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United States.

A working paper on ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes(17) was submitted to the Committee by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, which called for banning weapons from outer space, promoting wide-ranging international co-operation in the peaceful exploration of space, and strengthening the international legal and institutional basis for its exploration.

In a working paper on the Committee's future work,(18) Australia, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States proposed that, in view of the financial crisis confronting the United Nations, the Committee recommend reducing the length of future sessions of its Legal Sub-Committee (see below) to correspond more to those of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and the Committee itself.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action regarding space science and technology, see resolution 41/64 on p. 98.

Space law

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-fifth session at Geneva from 24 March to 11 April 1986.(19) It continued to consider the following: legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of agreeing on a set of principles; the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; and matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit.

Legal aspects of remote sensing from satellites

In 1986, a Working Group, re-established by the Legal Sub-Committee(19) to consider the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from outer space, held 5 meetings and a number of informal consultations between 24 March and 1 April, and completed formulation, by consensus, of a draft set of 15 principles on the topic.

The principles concerned definition of terms (I), objectives of remote sensing (II), international law (III), respect for sovereignty and rights of sensed States (IV), international co-operation (V), regional agreements (VI), technical assistance (VII), the United Nations role (VIII), notification to the Secretary-General (IX), protection of the environment (X), information on natural disasters (XI), access to data by sensed States (XII), right of consultation (XIII), State responsibility (XIV) and resolving disputes (XV). The number of principles had been reduced to 15 from the original 17, with the consolidation of former draft principles VII and XIII on notification to the United Nations of planned sensing activities into principle IX, and the elimination of former draft principle XV on the need for prior approval by a sensed State before data on its natural resources could be disseminated by a sensing State.

On 11 April, the Sub-Committee noted the completion of the work, first recommended by the General Assembly in 1974;(20) some delegations made statements, interpreting the contents of the principles or reserving the right to express their views later (see below). In June, the Committee on outer space(3) endorsed the draft principles and recommended their adoption by the Assembly

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/65 without vote.

Principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3234(XXIX) of 12 November 1974, in which it requested the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee to consider the question of the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, as well as its resolutions 3388(XXX) of 18 November 1975, 31/8 of 8 November 1976, 32/196 A of 20 December 1977, 33/16 of 10 November 1978, 34/66 of 5 December 1979, 35/14 of 3 November 1980, 36/35 of 18 November 1981, 37/89 of 10 December 1982, 38/80 of 15 December 1983, 39/96 of 14 December 1984 and 40/162 of 16 December 1985, in which it called for a detailed consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles relating to remote sensing,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its twenty-ninth session and the text of the draft principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space, annexed thereto,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, on the basis of the deliberations of its Legal Sub-Committee, has endorsed the text of the draft principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space,

Believing that the adoption of the principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space will contribute to the strengthening of international co-operation in this field,

Adopts the principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from space

Principle I

For the purposes of these principles with respect to remote sensing activities:

(a) The term "remote sensing" means the sensing of the Earth's surface from space by making use of the properties of electromagnetic waves emitted, reflected or diffracted by the sensed objects, for the purpose of improving natural resources management, land use and the protection of the environment;

(b) The term "primary data" means the raw data that are acquired by remote sensors borne by a space object and that are transmitted or delivered to the ground from space by telemetry in the form of electromagnetic signals, by photographic film, magnetic tape or any other means;

(c) The term "processed data" means the products resulting from the processing of the primary data, needed in order to make such data usable;

(d) The term "analysed information" means the information resulting from the interpretation of processed data, inputs of data and knowledge from other sources;

(e) The term "remote sensing activities" means the operation of remote sensing space systems, primary data collection and storage stations, and activities in processing, interpreting and disseminating the processed data.

Principle II

Remote sensing activities shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic, social or scientific and technological development, and taking into particular consideration the needs of the developing countries.

Principle III

Remote sensing activities shall be conducted in accordance with international law, including the Charter of the United Nations, the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, and the relevant instruments of the International Telecommunication Union.

Principle IV

Remote sensing activities shall be conducted in accordance with the principles contained in article I of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, which in particular provides that the exploration and use of outer space shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and stipulates the principle of freedom of exploration and use of outer space on the basis of equality. These activities shall be conducted on the basis of respect for the principle of full and permanent sovereignty of all States and peoples over their own wealth and natural resources, with due regard to the rights and interests, in accordance with international law, of other States and entities under their jurisdiction. Such activities shall not be conducted in a manner detrimental to the legitimate rights and interests of the sensed State.

Principle V

States carrying out remote sensing activities shall promote international co-operation in these activities. To this end, they shall make available to other States opportunities for participation therein. Such participation shall be based in each case on equitable and mutually acceptable terms.

Principle VI

In order to maximize the availability of benefits from remote sensing activities, States are encouraged through agreements or other arrangements to provide for the establishment and operation of data collecting and storage stations and processing and interpretation facilities, in particular within the framework of regional agreements or arrangements wherever feasible.

Principle VII

States participating in remote sensing activities shall make available technical assistance to other interested States on mutually agreed terms.

Principle VIII

The United Nations and the relevant agencies within the United Nations system shall promote international co-operation, including technical assistance and co-ordination in the area of remote sensing.

Principle IX

In accordance with article IV of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space and article XI of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, a State carrying out a programme of remote sensing shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations. It shall, moreover, make available any other relevant information to the greatest extent feasible and practicable to any other State, particularly any developing country that is affected by the programme, at its request.

Principle X

Remote sensing shall promote the protection of the Earth's natural environment.

To this end, States participating in remote sensing activities that have identified information in their possession that is capable of averting any phenomenon harmful to the Earth's natural environment shall disclose such information to States concerned.

Principle XI

Remote sensing shall promote the protection of mankind from natural disasters.

To this end, States participating in remote sensing activities that have identified processed data and analysed information in their possession that may be useful to States affected by natural disasters, or likely to be affected by impending natural disasters, shall transmit such data and information to States concerned as promptly as possible.

Principle XII

As soon as the primary data and the processed data concerning the territory under its jurisdiction are produced, the sensed State shall have access to them on a non-discriminatory basis and on reasonable cost terms. The sensed State shall also have access to the available analysed information concerning the territory under its jurisdiction in the possession of any State participating in remote sensing activities on the same basis and terms, taking particularly into account the needs and interests of the developing countries.

Principle XIII

To promote and intensify international co-operation, especially with regard to the needs of developing countries, a State carrying out remote sensing of the Earth from outer space shall, upon request, enter into consultations with a State whose territory is sensed in order to make available opportunities for participation and enhance the mutual benefits to be derived therefrom.

Principle XIV

In compliance with article VI of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, States operating remote sensing satellites shall bear international responsibility for their activities and assure that such activities are conducted in accordance with these principles and the norms of international law, irrespective of whether such activities are carried out by governmental or non-governmental entities or through international organizations to which such States are parties. This principle is without prejudice to the applicability of the norms of international law on State responsibility for remote sensing activities.

Principle XV

Any dispute resulting from the application of these principles shall be resolved through the established procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

General Assembly resolution 41/65

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by SPC (A/41/751) without vote, 28 November (meeting 39): draft by Austria, for SPC working group (A/SPC/41/L.29 & Corr.1): agenda item 72. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: SPC 33-38; plenary 95.

A number of countries presented their interpretation of the principles as they spoke in explanation of their position on the text.

Colombia would have preferred the draft to be more explicit in regard to access by sensed States to the benefits accruing from remote sensing; it hoped the vast technological gap between the developed and developing countries would not be widened further, placing the sensing States in a new category of privilege. Yugoslavia felt that some of the principles adopted did not satisfy the interests of the developing countries, and expressed the hope that remote sensing would be performed in the interests of all, as stipulated in principle II. Algeria believed the text should have been more detailed as regards the rights of the sensed State, the requirement of prior consultation and access to data. Viet Nam declared that several principles needed further clarification, especially those regarding the rights of the developing countries over their respective territories and natural resources, the benefits from remote sensing activities and the international responsibility of the sensing State for damage caused by such activities. Zaire noted a degree of dichotomy in the text, between the concept of freedom to exploit and that of State sovereignty; it had reservations on principles I and IV.

Turkey said the principles would serve as a useful basis for co-operation in remote sensing, although principles IV, IX and XII could have been improved. Sweden felt that the principles laid a firm basis for the development of remote sensing activities and the use of operational remote sensing satellites.

Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands and the United States emphasized with regard to principle XIV that the international responsibility of States engaged in remote sensing activities did not go beyond the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,⁽²¹⁾ or of international law in general. Canada declared its understanding that the principle would not extend State responsibility to the distribution of processed data.

The USSR said the resolution, and principles IV and XIV in particular, should be interpreted as meaning that the sensing State would guarantee that its remote sensing activities over other territories—whether pursued by the Government or by non-governmental agencies under its jurisdiction—would be carried out in conformity with the agreed principles. The USSR considered the adoption of the principles as a first stage, to be followed by efforts to formulate an international agreement.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United States considered the principles to be recommendatory in nature and not legally binding; further, the latter two added that the embodiment of the principles in a new legal instrument such as a treaty was neither necessary nor desirable.

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in spacecraft

On 24 March 1986,(19) the Legal Sub-Committee re-established a Working Group, which, in response to a 1985 General Assembly request,(22) undertook the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. The Working Group had before it a 1986 working paper submitted by Canada,(23) proposing a set of draft principles on safety assessments and notification, guidelines and criteria for safe use, notification of re-entry, assistance to States, and responsibility and liability of States.

Following discussions and informal consultations, the Group, on 3 and 4 April, agreed on the texts of two draft principles, relating to notification of re-entry of a space object with a nuclear power source on board, and to assistance to States.

The Committee on outer space(3) endorsed the texts of the two draft principles. There was lack of unanimity in the Committee on whether the Legal Sub-Committee should give priority to the elaboration of further principles. Some suggested that efforts be made to define safety criteria to prevent accidents, or norms for international liability for direct, indirect and delayed damage. The Committee recommended that the Sub-Committee should continue consideration of the item in 1987 with the aim of reaching consensus on other principles.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee re-established a Working Group on 24 March(19) to continue consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of ITU. The Working Group noted that the World Administrative Radio Conference, in 1985,(24) had declared itself not competent to deal with specific principles concerning the equatorial countries' claim of sovereignty/jurisdiction over the corresponding segments of the geostationary orbit superjacent to their territories, as well as the preservation of such segments for the utilization of the orbit by all States, particularly the developing countries.

The Group had before it working papers submitted in 1986 by the German Democratic Republic,(25) on principles governing the activities of States in the utilization of the geostationary orbit, and by Kenya,(26) on draft basic provisions on the delimitation and definition of outer space and the legal status of the geostationary orbit.

Differing views were expressed on the need or urgency for the definition and delimitation of outer space. Some delegations stated that such definition was necessary because the legal regimes applicable to airspace and outer space were fundamentally different. Some believed that delimitation of outer space should be the object of a legally binding international instrument: some felt that a 1983 USSR working paper,(27) proposing a definition and delimitation of outer space through a multilateral agreement establishing the upper limit of airspace, provided a good basis for further work. Others saw no current need for definition and delimitation, saying that such efforts would not help to secure the sovereignty, security or integrity of States and that no practical reason for them had as yet been demonstrated.

On the geostationary orbit, some delegations felt it was a limited natural resource, as recognized by UNISPACE-82 and the 1982 ITU Convention(28) Some delegations stated that the Legal Sub-Committee could develop the international legal framework for the rational and equitable utilization of the geostationary orbit. Some principles mentioned in that regard declared that the geostationary orbit was an integral part of outer space, subject to relevant provisions of the outer space Treaty,(21) and not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty; that States should have an equal right to utilize the orbit; and that the placing of space objects in the orbit should create no right of ownership or any preferential right over the respective orbital positions of those objects.

Other delegations held that there was a need to establish a sui generis legal régime for the geostationary orbit, taking into account the interests of developing countries and the special rights of the equatorial countries so as to ensure equitable access, the preservation of that limited resource and the reduction of existing technical and scientific inequalities. Some others asserted that current ITU arrangements-of first come, first served-with respect to orbital positions and related frequencies benefited the technologically advanced countries, and that it was therefore necessary to promote equitable use of the geostationary orbit by all countries.

The Committee on outer space ⁽³⁾ recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue to consider the item in 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/64.

International co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/162 of 16 December 1985,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and of the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law, for the advancement and preservation of the exploration and peaceful uses of outer space,

Gravely concerned at the extension of an arms race into outer space,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international co-operation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Aware of the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socio-economic advancement of mankind, in particular the peoples of developing countries,

Taking note of the progress achieved in the further development of peaceful space exploration and application as well as in various national and co-operative space projects, which contribute to international co-operation in this field,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its twenty-ninth session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space* to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties;

3. Notes that the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its twenty-fifth session, in its working groups, continued:

(a) Its detailed consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of finalizing the draft set of principles relating to remote sensing;

(b) Its elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space;

(c) Its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit, without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union and taking into account the letter dated 16 October 1985 from the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that the Legal Sub-Committee at its twenty-sixth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries:

(a) Continue the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space through its working group;

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit, without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union;

(c) Consider the choice of a new item for the agenda of the Legal Sub-Committee, including the proposals made by the Group of 77 and others, with a view to making a recommendation to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in order to reach consensus during its thirtieth session;

5. Notes that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its twenty-third session continued:

Its consideration of the following items on a priority basis:

(i) United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system;

(ii) Implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space; In this context, it was noted that it was particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:

a. All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;

b. Data banks at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of co-ordination;

c. The United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres at the regional level, linked, whenever possible, to institutions implementing space programmes; necessary funding for the development of such centres should be made available through financial institutions;

d. The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or post-graduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability

- of opportunities for such exposures on other bilateral and multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;
- (iii) Questions relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites;
- (iv) Use of nuclear power sources in outer space;
- (b) Its consideration of the following items:
 - (i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;
 - (ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit;
- 6. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its twenty-fourth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:
 - (a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:
 - (i) United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system;
 - (ii) Implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;
 - (iii) Questions relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites;
 - (iv) Use of nuclear power sources in outer space;
 - (b) Consider the following items:
 - (i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;
 - (ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit;
 - (iii) Matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine;
 - (iv) Progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; in this regard the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation should be invited to submit reports and arrange a special presentation;
 - (v) Matters relating to planetary exploration;
 - (vi) Matters relating to astronomy;
 - (vii) The theme fixed for the special attention of the 1987 session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee: "Space communications for development"; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation should be invited to arrange a symposium, with as wide a participation as possible, on the theme "Space communications for development", to be held during the first week of the Sub-Committee's session, after the adjournment of its meeting, to complement discussions within the Sub-Committee;
- 7. Considers, in the context of paragraph 6 (a) (ii) above, that it is particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:
 - (a) All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;
 - (b) Data banks at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of co-ordination;
 - (c) The United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres at the regional level, linked, whenever possible, to institutions implementing space programmes; necessary funding for the development of such centres should be made available through financial institutions;

(d) The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or post-graduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability of opportunities for such exposures on other bilateral and multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;

8. Endorses further the recommendation of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, beginning with its twenty-fourth session, should establish a Working Group of the Whole to evaluate the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, with a view to improving the execution of activities relating to international co-operation, particularly those included in the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, and to propose concrete steps to increase such co-operation as well as to make it more efficient;

9. Endorses the recommendation of and the agreements reached in the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, endorsed also by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, with respect to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, as contained in paragraphs 45 to 47 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its twenty-ninth session;

10. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1987, as proposed to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space by the Expert on Space Applications;

11. Emphasizes the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space as early as possible;

12. Reaffirms its approval of the recommendation of the Conference regarding the establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms of co-operation and their promotion and creation through the United Nations system;

13. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments that made or expressed their intention to make contributions towards carrying out the recommendations of the Conference;

14. Invites all Governments to take effective action for the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

15. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international co-operation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes;

16. Takes note of the views expressed and documents circulated during the twenty-ninth session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and during the forty-first session of the General-Assembly concerning ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes;

17. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

18. Notes that the Secretariat, as requested by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, has sought the views of Member States on how far the five studies, mentioned in paragraph 34 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its twenty-ninth session, that have already been carried out have benefited them in putting into practice the findings of these studies, bearing in mind that such information could enable the Committee to evaluate further the usefulness and desirability of conducting further studies;

19. Endorses the decision of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to grant, at its request, permanent observer status to the International Maritime Satellite Organization (INMARSAT);

20. Affirms that the interference that satellite systems to be newly established may cause to systems already registered with the International Telecommunication Union shall not exceed the limits specified in the relevant provision of the International Telecommunication Union Radio Regulations applicable to space services;

21. Requests all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters to co-operate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

23. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their co-operation with the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

24. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

*Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (resolution 2222(XXI), annex); Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space (resolution 2345(XXII), annex); Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects (resolution 2777(XXVI), annex); Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space (resolution 3235(XXIX), annex); Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (resolution 34/68, annex).

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by SPC (A/41/751) without vote, 28 November (meeting 38); draft by Austria, for SPC working group (A/SPC/41/L.28): agenda item 72. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: SPC 33-38; plenary 35.

Canada said its support of the text was based on the understanding that the endorsement of the Committee's report, in paragraph 1, covered all recommendations, whether or not they were listed in the resolution.

Spacecraft launchings

In 1986, six countries (Canada, Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, USSR, United States) provided information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁾ and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,⁽²⁾ which had entered into force on 15 September 1976.

Convention on registration of launchings

As at 31 December 1986, there were 35 States parties to the Convention on Registration, including Pakistan which ratified it on 27 February and Australia which acceded to it on 11 March.⁽³⁾

The question of the review of the Convention was included in the agenda of the 1986 Assembly session on the Secretary-General's proposal,⁽⁴⁾ who acted in accordance with a provision of the Convention that called for such a review 10 years after the instrument's entry into force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/66.

Question of the review of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation in the field of the exploration and peaceful uses of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, and of promoting the law in this field of human endeavour,

Taking note with appreciation of the work accomplished by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in particular that of its Legal Sub-Committee,

Believing that a mandatory system of registering objects launched into outer space, in particular, assists in their identification and contributes to the application and development of international law governing the exploration and use of outer space,

Recalling that the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies affirms that States parties to that Treaty shall bear international responsibility for their national activities in outer space and refers to the State on whose registry an object launched into outer space is carried,

Recalling further that the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects establishes international rules and procedures concerning the liability of launching States for damage caused by their space objects,

Note that to date thirty-five States have ratified or acceded to, and five more States have signed, the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, which was opened for signature on 14 January 1975 and which entered into force on 15 September 1976,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of the review of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space", as called for in article X of the Convention,

1. Recognizes that, in view of the considerable increase of activities in outer space, effective international rules and procedures concerning the registration of objects launched into outer space continue to be of great importance;

2. Reaffirm, in this respect, the importance of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space and the registration, pursuant to the Convention, of all objects launched into outer space;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so, particularly those conducting space activities, to give urgent consideration to ratifying or acceding to the Convention in order to assure its broad application;

4. Also urges international intergovernmental organizations that conduct space activities to declare, if they have not yet done so, their acceptance of the rights and obligations provided for in the Convention, pursuant to article VII;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources, a report on the past application of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space and to submit it to the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its twenty-sixth session, for the information of the Member States.

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by SPC (A/41/751) without vote, 28 November (meeting 38); draft by Austria, for SPC working group (A/SPC/41/L.30); agenda item 137.

Chapter III

Law of the sea

The considerable influence of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea was already apparent in all aspects of the law of the sea, even though the instrument had not come into force, the Secretary-General stated in 1986. Ratifications of the Convention increased from 25 to 32 during the year.

An understanding, which provided a basis for resolving the overlapping claims by States to mining sites in the deep sea-bed "Area" (the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction), was adopted in September by the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

The Commission also adopted a declaration, stating its rejection of any action which was incompatible with the Convention, deploring the fact that the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom had issued licences for the exploration of parts of the international sea-bed Area, and asserting that such actions were illegal.

By resolution 41/34, the General Assembly noted the progress made by the Preparatory Commission in its work and called on States to desist from actions that undermined or defeated the purpose of the Convention.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

During 1986, the number of ratifications of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea increased to 32,⁽¹⁾ with the addition of Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Kuwait, Nigeria, Paraguay, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia. The Convention was to enter into force 12 months after receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

Adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in April 1982⁽²⁾ the Convention had closed for signature on 9 December 1984, having received a total of 159 signatures.⁽³⁾

By a 30 September letter to the Secretary-General,⁽⁴⁾ Zimbabwe transmitted the final documents adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September), in which the participants expressed concern at the actions of some developed countries and declared that any unilateral action by a State or group of States through a parallel regime inconsistent with the Convention would have no validity. In that regard, they condemned the 1984 agreement on seabed matters,⁽⁵⁾ signed by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, as usurping the common heritage of mankind.

Developments relating to the Convention

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ reported in October 1986⁽⁷⁾ on developments relating to the Convention and the implementation of that resolution. The report was divided into two parts: part one contained an overview of the Convention's impact on State practice and on the mandates and activities of international organizations concerned with marine affairs, decisions of the International Court of Justice and other tribunals, and information on other developments relating to the law of the sea; part two outlined the activities of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea (see p. 105).

Noting the wide support received, as well as influence exerted, by the Convention, the Secretary-General noted that States had enacted national legislation and concluded agreements, particularly with respect to maritime zones falling under their jurisdiction—the territorial sea, the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf—and the delimitation of maritime boundaries between States with opposite or adjacent coasts. The Convention's provisions entitling coastal States to extend their territorial seas up to 12 nautical miles had become part of the general practice of some 100 States; some States with claims that had exceeded that limit had modified their legislation to conform to the Convention. Further, the Convention had settled a long-standing controversy about the breadth of the territorial sea, claims for which varied from 3 to 200 miles.

The number of States that had promulgated laws and decrees establishing exclusive economic zones and exclusive fishery zones of up to 200 nautical miles had increased from 79 in 1985 to 86 in 1986. International law as reflected in the Convention and the practice of States had sanctioned a new international rule to the effect that a coastal State had sovereign rights to explore, exploit, conserve and manage the natural resources found in the exclusive economic zone.

The Convention provided that the continental shelf comprised the sea-bed and subsoil of the submarine areas extending beyond the limit of the territorial seas throughout the natural prolongation of its land territory or to a distance of 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of territorial sea was measured. Eighteen States—an increase of two over 1985—had adopted that formula in their legislation on the continental shelf.

As States continued to implement the new law of the sea—including the concept of the exclusive economic zone—as embodied in the Convention, conflicts arose. Among recent cases submitted to third-party procedure for settlement were the dispute between Canada and France over filleting within the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, the delimitation of the maritime frontier between Guinea-Bissau and Senegal, and the land and maritime frontier between Honduras and El Salvador.

Other developments relating to the law of the sea reviewed in the Secretary-General's report were: peaceful uses; maritime law; environmental law; marine science, technology and ocean services; fisheries management and development; hydrography and charting; and land-locked States.

On 7 February 1986, after 10 years of negotiations, the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships adopted a convention defining the genuine link that should exist between a ship and the State whose flag it flew—a concept embodied in the Convention on the Law of the Sea, but never before expressly defined in any international instrument. The new convention provided for participation by nationals of the flag State in the ownership, manning and management of ships on its register, thus establishing some key economic criteria that gave meaning to the concept (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

The Convention on the Law of the Sea had had significant effects on the work of the International Maritime Organization (IMO), the principal international body for maritime safety and navigation and prevention of marine pollution from ships. The rate of acceptance of IMO conventions had increased, as had its membership (see PART TWO, Chapter XIV). In co-operation with the Office of the Special Representative, IMO was studying the relationships between its conventions and the Convention on the Law of the Sea. Currently, 21 out of 28 IMO conventions and protocols were in force; on 1 July 1986, the 1983 amendments to the 1974 International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea entered into force. Work continued on preparing further amendments to that Convention and to the 1966 International Convention on Load Lines which would be considered at a diplomatic conference in 1988. A number of amendments to the 1972 International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea and the International Code of Signals would be submitted to the 1987 IMO Assembly.

A universal search and rescue plan, supported by a new global maritime distress and safety system, was being prepared by IMO, in co-operation with the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Hydrographic Organization and the International Maritime Satellite Organization. Following the IMO Assembly's adoption in 1985 of a resolution on measures to prevent violence at sea, threatening ship and passenger safety,⁽⁸⁾ the IMO Maritime Safety Committee prepared security guidelines which focused on controlling access to vessels whether at sea or in port. The Committee was also considering questions of infringement of navigational safety zones around offshore structures and the removal of abandoned or disused offshore platforms.

A review of progress under the 1982 Memorandum of Understanding on Port State Control, signed by 14 European States, found that the established target had been reached as regards inspection of vessels in port on safety matters, particularly vessels carrying pollutants and hazardous and noxious cargoes.

The Tenth Consultative Meeting of Contracting Parties to the 1972 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London, October 1986) made recommendations on the dumping of radioactive wastes at sea, incineration of wastes at sea and dumping of dredged material, import/export of wastes for disposal at sea, and implications of the Convention on the Law of the Sea for the London Dumping Convention.

The Protocol for the Protection of the South-East Pacific against Pollution from Land-Based Sources entered into force on 23 September 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action with regard to the Convention, see resolution 41/34 on p. 106.

Preparatory Commission

In 1986, the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its fourth session at Kingston, Jamaica, from 17 March to 11 April, and a meeting in New York from 11 August to 5 September.⁽⁷⁾

The major issue before the Commission was the implementation of resolution II(9)—adopted in 1982 by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea on the registration of pioneer investors in deep sea-bed mining. Resolution II provided that each applicant would submit to the Authority two mine sites of equal commercial value, one of which would be selected by the Authority as a reserved site to be mined by the Enterprise (the operational arm of the Authority) or a developing country in association with the Authority. The Commission had pending applications from France, India, Japan and the USSR. During the period preceding the Commission's fourth session, the applicants held consultations at Geneva, Tokyo and, in February 1986, at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, where they reached an Understanding which provided a mechanism for resolving conflicting claims by France, Japan and the USSR to mine sites in the north-east Pacific—an area running east/west from Baja California to Hawaii and north/south between the Clarion and Clipperton fracture zones (India, whose application area was in the Indian Ocean, had no overlaps). The Understanding also dealt with the designation of mine areas for the Authority.

The consultations continued at Kingston and in New York, and involved regional and interest groups and both signatories and non-signatories with the indirect participation of United States-based consortia (through Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom). The consultations proved to be difficult since the rules relating to confidentiality of the data submitted by each applicant prevented delegations access to details necessary in understanding the complexities of the problems that had arisen.

On 5 September, the Preparatory Commission adopted unanimously a more comprehensive understanding, which provided the following: a basis for resolving the overlapping claims by the three applicants; a guarantee of a mine site of equal commercial value for the Authority in the central area in the north-east Pacific adjacent to the claims; an undertaking by the four applicants to assist the Commission and the Authority in exploring a mine site for the first Enterprise operation; an extension of the time-limit, from January 1985 as specified in resolution II to the date of entry into force of the Convention, for qualifying investments to be made in deep sea-bed mining by developing countries wishing to apply as pioneer investors; entitling potential applicants to treatment similar to that given to the first group of applicants, if the former assumed similar obligations and submitted their applications before the Convention entered into force; and providing the socialist States of Eastern Europe with the right to apply as pioneer investors for one additional pioneer area, until the Convention entered into force. The understanding set out the procedures and time-frame for registration, starting from the submission to the Secretary-General by March 1987, by each of the first four applicants, of their respective applications, revised on the basis of the understanding.

In addition, the Commission completed a reading of the draft rules of procedure for the Council of the Authority and the Legal and Technical Commission. In New York, it began consideration of the draft rules of procedure of the Economic Planning Commission and adopted a number of rules provisionally. However, rules concerning the status of observers, decision-making, financial and budgetary matters and confidentiality of information relating to mine sites were left pending. The financial and budgetary matters were to be taken up as a whole at a later stage.

No further applications for registration as pioneer investors were submitted in 1986.

Declaration. In 1985, the Commission had adopted without vote a declaration⁽¹⁰⁾ asserting that the Convention and related resolutions adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea established the only regime for exploring and exploiting the international seabed Area and that any claim, agreement or action regarding the Area which was incompatible with them was illegal and should not be recognized.

In a letter of 27 March 1986⁽¹¹⁾ to the Commission Chairman, the USSR noted that the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom had issued licences for the exploration of the resources of the international Area of the sea-bed, and declared such action arbitrary and illegal and another reminder of the need for the Commission to proceed with the registration of the first group of applicants.

The Group of 77 developing countries submitted a draft declaration to the Commission, deploring the issuance of licences by the two countries for the exploration of the Area, reaffirming the Commission's 1985 declaration, and rejecting again any claim, agreement or action which was incompatible with the Convention and its related resolutions, asserting that such actions were illegal and devoid of any basis for creating legal rights.

The Commission adopted the declaration on 11 April⁽¹²⁾ by 59 votes to 7, with 10 abstentions.

Special commissions

The Preparatory Commission's four Special Commissions continued work in accordance with their respective mandates. Special Commission 1 considered remedial measures for developing land-based producer States whose economies might be affected by sea-bed mining. Special Commission 2, preparing for establishment of the Enterprise, examined the question of manpower requirements and training. Special Commission 3, which was preparing the rules, regulations and procedures for exploration and exploitation of the deep sea-bed, considered a Secretariat paper on those questions. Special Commission 4, on the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, concluded its first reading of the rules of procedure for submission of cases before the Tribunal.

Developing land-based producer States

Special Commission 1 concentrated on the problems that might be encountered by developing land-based producer States as a result of future sea-bed mineral production. The Chairman of Special Commission 1 told the plenary Commission at Kingston that programmes or activities being implemented or developed ranged from scientific research oriented to mineral development to commercial mineral project development, from economic assistance to sustain the development process of developing countries to providing compensation for export shortfalls, from short-term cures to those aimed at promoting a well-balanced, diversified economy capable of withstanding external shocks.(13)

The Enterprise

The Chairman of Special Commission 2 on manpower requirements and training for the future Enterprise told the Preparatory Commission that, in order to formulate the basic guidelines for implementation of a training programme, it was essential that the role of the training obligation of the pioneer investors under resolution II be given practical definition, which could be done fully only upon registration.(14) Special Commission 2 also considered a study prepared by Australia on the economic viability of deep sea-bed mining of polymetallic nodules.(15)

Sea-bed mining code

Special Commission 3 continued consideration of the draft regulations on prospecting, exploration and exploitation of polymetallic nodules in the Area. Its Chairman informed the Preparatory Commission that rules relating to plans of work, fees, custody and confidentiality of data, processing of applications and the conclusion of contracts had been discussed.(16)

International Tribunal

Special Commission 4 completed its article-by-article examination of the draft rules of procedure of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. Its Chairman reported to the Preparatory Commission that it had discussed provisions covering cases where parties to a dispute were international organizations, consortia or other entities, whose components, be they other consortia or natural or juridical persons, were of more than one nationality.(17) He indicated that the exchange of views had been useful and would continue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action concerning the work of the Preparatory Commission, see resolution 41/34 on the next page.

Functions of the Secretary-General

Office of the Special Representative

The Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the United Nations core office for the law of the sea, continued to execute the central programme on law of the sea affairs, as well as service the Preparatory Commission (see above).(7)

During 1986, a number of States commenced or concluded their national process for ratification of the Convention, while there was also a trend towards implementing the provisions through national legislation. The Office responded to an increasing number of requests for specialized information, advice and assistance to facilitate ratification, clarify the implications of specific provisions, particularly regarding the rights and duties of States, assist States in the process of translating the provisions of the Convention into national policy, legislation and administrative regulations, and promote the uniform and consistent application of the Convention.

The Convention had stimulated States in developing the marine sectors of their economies as well as marine-related activities at the global and regional levels. There had been several requests for studies and for representation of the Office at the meetings of intergovernmental bodies, including the South Pacific Forum's management course for government officials, the sessions of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Off-shore Areas, and the United Nations Regional Meeting of Experts on Space Technology Applications in the Indian Ocean Region.

The Office continued to assist and co-operate with United Nations agencies and bodies, Secretariat units and the regional commissions in ocean-related matters.

It continued to develop its computerized Law of the Sea Information System, which was composed of a group of data bases. One of them, the country marine profile data base, contained 98 categories of information for each of more than 160 countries, including economic or demographic (gross national product, population, shipping tonnage, fishery export/import), geographic (land area, length of coastline, area of the exclusive economic zone), membership in regional or interest groups, limits of national jurisdiction (breadth of the territorial sea, contiguous zone, exclusive economic zone, fishery zone and the continental shelf), and membership in specialized agencies with ocean-related activities and United Nations regional commissions.

Information had been entered for a second data base, on national marine legislation data; currently, 1,060 individual national laws and regulations had been entered by title and country. A third data base was being developed on information from the documents of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction, a General Assembly body dissolved in 1973.⁽¹⁸⁾

Two issues of the Law of the Sea Bulletin (Nos. 7 and 8) were published in 1986, and several analytical studies tracing the legislative history of provisions of the Convention had been prepared.

The Law of the Sea Reference Library Collection provided reference services to delegations and permanent missions, academic institutions, individual scholars, other libraries and United Nations staff.

The first Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea—established by the General Assembly in 1981⁽¹⁹⁾ in honour of the first President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, who died in 1980, and financed by voluntary contributions—was awarded to Bala Bahadur Kunwar, a lawyer in international law and jurisprudence attached to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Nepal. The fellowship, approximately $18,000 in value, provided six months of postgraduate university study or research and a three-month internship with the Office of the Special Representative.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/34.

Law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/66 of 3 December 1982, 38/59 A of 14 December 1983, 39/73 of 13 December 1984 and 40/63 of 10 December 1985, regarding the law of the sea,

Recognizing that, as stated in the third preambular paragraph of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Convinced that it is important to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith and to refrain from any action to apply their provisions selectively, in a manner inconsistent with their object and purpose,

Emphasizing the need for States to ensure consistent application of the Convention, as well as the need for harmonization of national legislation with the provisions of the Convention,

Considering that, in its resolution 2749(XXV) of 17 December 1970, it proclaimed that the sea-bed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, as well as the resources of the area, are the common heritage of mankind,

Recalling that the Convention provides the regime to be applied to the Area and its resources,

Seriously concerned at any attempt to undermine the Convention and related resolutions of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Recognizing also the need for co-operation in the early and effective implementation by the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Noting the developments within the Preparatory Commission in 1985 and in 1986 and the significant progress made by the Preparatory Commission through its unanimous decision of 5 September 1986 to facilitate the registration of applicants as pioneer investors for deep sea-bed mining,

Noting also that the Preparatory Commission has decided to hold its fifth regular session at Kingston from 30 March to 24 April 1987 and its summer meeting in 1987 at Geneva, Kingston or New York,*

Noting the increasing needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance in the implementation of the Convention and in their developmental process for the full realization of the benefits of the comprehensive legal regime established by the Convention,

Recognizing that the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea encompasses all uses and resources of the sea and that all related activities within the United Nations system need to be implemented in a manner consistent with it,

Taking note of activities carried out in 1986 under the major programme on marine affairs, set forth in chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General as approved in General Assembly resolution 38/59 A,

Recalling its approval of the financing of the expenses of the Preparatory Commission from the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking special note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of paragraph 13 of General Assembly resolution 40/63,

1. Recalls the historic significance of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea as an important contribution to the maintenance of peace, justice and progress for all peoples of the world;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the increasing and overwhelming support for the Convention, as evidenced, inter alia, by the one hundred and fifty-nine signatures and thirty-two of the sixty ratifications or accessions required for entry into force of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention at the earliest possible date to allow the effective entry into force of the new legal regime for the uses of the sea and its resources;

4. Calls upon all States to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith;

5. Also calls upon States to observe the provisions of the Convention when enacting their national legislation;

6. Further calls upon States to desist from taking actions which undermine the Convention or defeat its object and purpose;

7. Notes the progress being made by the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea in all areas of its work;

8. Expresses its satisfaction at the important decision of the Preparatory Commission on 5 September 1986 that has created conditions for the early implementation of the régime for pioneer investors, contained in resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, thus facilitating the process of registration of applicants for pioneer investor status at the next session of the Preparatory Commission;

9. Expresses its appreciation for the effective execution by the Secretary-General of the central programme in law of the sea affairs under chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989;

10. Further expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 40/63 and requests him to continue to carry out the activities outlined therein, as well as those aimed at the strengthening of the new legal régime of the sea, special emphasis being placed on the work of the Preparatory Commission, including the implementation of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea;

11. Culls upon the Secretary-General to continue to assist States in the implementation of the Convention and in the development of a consistent and uniform approach to the new legal régime thereunder, as well as in their national, subregional and regional efforts towards the full realization of the benefits therefrom and invites the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate and lend assistance in these endeavours;

12. Approves the programme of meetings of the Preparatory Commission for 1987*;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on developments relating to the Convention and on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Law of the sea".

*In the light of General Assembly decision 41/466 of 11 December 1986, concerning the current financial crisis of the United Nations, the schedule of meetings for the fifth regular (1)Multilateral session of the Preparatory Commission was modified; it was to meet at Kingston from 30 March to 16 April 1987.

General Assembly resolution 41/34

5 November 1966 Meeting 58 145-2-5 (recorded vote)

65-nation draft (A/41/L.20 & Add.1): agenda item 32.

Sponsors: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philip pines, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica* Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: Turkey, United States

Abstaining: Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Peru, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Turkey recalled that it had voted against the Convention on the Law of the Sea because some of its provisions did not meet its interests; subsequently, it had voted against draft resolutions submitted on the item and would do so in connection with the current resolution. The United States explained its opposition to the text by saying that the Convention's Part XI, on exploitation of sea-bed resources, ran counter to its policy.

Peru stated that, although it had abstained, it recognized the historic value of the Convention and was continuing to analyse its accession, while Ecuador, which claimed sovereignty over a 200-mile territorial sea, declared it would not participate in the vote.

France welcomed the adoption by consensus of the decision of the Preparatory Commission on 5 September as an important step towards registration of the first four pioneer investors, and said it would vote for the draft resolution in the same spirit.

Chapter IV

International peace and security

In 1986, the United Nations observed the International Year of Peace (IYP), focusing on its role in promoting peace and on issues of international security and conflict resolution. The Secretary-General, in his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), declared that there could be no substitute for an effective multilateral system in maintaining international peace and security.

By resolution 41/9, the Assembly recognized the objectives of IYP as a valuable source for future dialogue and action to achieve peace. The President of the Security Council issued a statement on the Year and the Council's role in maintaining international peace and security. The Economic and Social Council considered that the efforts to achieve the IYP objectives would contribute to international peace (resolution 1986/15) and reaffirmed its commitment to promoting peace during the Year and beyond (decision 1986/115).

In other action, the Assembly urged for a peaceful settlement of disputes through more effective use of the United Nations Charter and reaffirmed the validity of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (41/90); it appealed for enhancing the United Nations role as a forum for political dialogue and negotiations (41/91) and called on States to help ensure security on an equal basis for all States and in all spheres of international relations (41/92).

The Assembly also called on States and international organizations to contribute to the implementation of the right of peoples to peace, proclaimed in a 1984 Declaration (41/10), and renewed the mandate of its Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations (41/67).

All aspects of the maintenance of international peace and security were also discussed by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Strengthening of international security

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

In December 1986, following its annual review of the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,(1) the General Assembly urged all States to seek to eliminate points of crisis and tension which threatened international peace and security.

The Secretary-General transmitted in a July 1986 report and later addendum(2) replies from Member States to a 1985 Assembly invitation(3) to submit their views on implementing the Declaration; as at 10 November 1986, six States had sent substantive replies.

Communications. In connection with the review of the Declaration's implementation, letters were received from Member States throughout the year.

On 2 April,(4) Poland forwarded a communique of the Meeting of the Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the 1955 Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Warsaw, 19 and 20 March), noting that the international situation remained strained and dangerous, expressing concern over the escalation of the arms race, and reaffirming proposals on disarmament and the consolidation of peace and international security. Romania, on 23 October,(5) conveyed the communique of a subsequent meeting of the Warsaw Treaty Foreign Ministers (Bucharest, 14 and 15 October) in which they expressed their countries' determination to continue the dialogue necessary for the creation of an adequate system of international security and peace.

Poland, on 15 July,(6) transmitted a Declaration on Security and Co-operation in Europe adopted by the Tenth Congress of the Polish United Workers Party (Warsaw, 29 June-3 July), calling for the establishment of an effective system of collective security and for a Europe-wide mechanism for preventing and easing tensions.

The USSR on 3 March(7) forwarded a statement on the basic aims of its foreign policy and outlining the principles for an all-embracing system of international security, presented on 25 February by Mikhail S. Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR, to the Party's twenty-seventh Congress. Support for a comprehensive international security system as proposed by the USSR was expressed by the Chairman of the Council of State of the People's Republic of Bulgaria at an International Meeting of Agrarian and Other Democratic Parties and Organizations (Sofia, 22 May); he also called for peaceful co-existence between States with different social systems. The speech was annexed to a 23 June letter from Bulgaria.(8) Enclosed in a 25 September letter from the USSR(9) was a statement by Mr. Gorbachev assessing the results of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe (17 January 1984-19 September 1986) as a major step towards the easing of tension and the improvement of the international political climate.

Following a visit by the USSR Foreign Minister to Mongolia from 23 to 25 January, the USSR and Mongolia transmitted on 30 January(10) a joint statement advocating the strengthening of the United Nations as an instrument for the maintenance of universal peace and security. On 15 October,(11) Mongolia conveyed its views on the implementation of the Declaration, describing it as the basis of the struggle for peace and international security and calling for an international security system that would take into account the political, economic, military and humanitarian aspects of the question.

Further communications on the implementation of the Declaration were submitted by Mongolia(12) and the USSR(13) on 4 and 5 August, respectively, with reference to aspects of Asian and Pacific foreign policy in a speech by Mr. Gorbachev on 28 July at Vladivostok (see Chapter VII of this section).

Other 1986 letters received on the subject dealt with disarmament, international economic co-operation, a nuclear test-ban treaty, nuclear-weapon tests, reduction of military budgets, or specific situations, such as Africa Liberation Day, Angola-southern Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Kampuchea-Thailand and Mozambique (see SUBJECT INDEX).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/90.

Review of the Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Noting with concern that the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security have not been fully implemented,

Recalling the duty of States not to intervene in the internal or external affairs of any State, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States and the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, Profoundly disturbed by the escalation to new levels of the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons, and the danger of its extension into outer space, by the policy of competition for spheres of influence, domination and exploitation, by the increasing recourse to the use or threat of use of force, military intervention and interference, aggression and foreign occupation, by the intensification and expansion of the scope and frequency of manoeuvres and other military activities, by the aggravation of existing crises in the world, by the continued infringement of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries, by the denial of the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial and foreign occupation and by attempts to characterize erroneously the struggles of peoples for independence and human dignity as falling within the context of East-West confrontation: thus denying them the right to self-determination, to decide their own destiny and realize their legitimate aspirations, by the persistence of colonialism, racism and apartheid supported by the growing use of military force, and by the lack of solutions to the world economic crisis in which the deeper underlying problems of a structural nature have been compounded by cyclical factors and which has further aggravated the inequalities and injustices in international economic relations, all of which pose a grave threat to global peace and security,

Aware of the increasing interdependence among nations and of the fact that in the present-day world there is no alternative to a policy of peaceful coexistence, detente and co-operation among States on the basis of equality, irrespective of their economic or military power, political and social systems or size and geographic location,

Convinced that a comprehensive and just solution to pressing international problems, such as achieving peace and security, disarmament and development, can be assured only through negotiations, based on the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in which all countries participate on an equal footing,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations as an indispensable forum for negotiations and reaching agreements on measures to promote and strengthen international peace and security,

Stressing the need for the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, particularly the Security Council, to contribute more effectively to the promotion of international peace and security by seeking solutions to unresolved problems and crises in the world,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Urges once again all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations and, to this end:

(a) To refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

(b) To refrain from supporting or encouraging any such act for any reason whatsoever and to reject and refuse recognition of situations brought about by any such act;

3. Calls upon all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take immediate steps aimed at:

(a) Promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter;

(b) Halting effectively the arms race and achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control and, to this end, to start serious, meaningful and effective negotiations with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to fulfilling the priority tasks listed in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document;

4. Invites all States, in particular the major military Powers and States members of military alliances, to refrain, especially in critical situations and in crisis areas, from actions, including military activities and manoeuvres, conceived within the context of East-West confrontation and used as a means of pressure on, threat to and destabilization of other States and regions;

5. Expresses its conviction that the gradual military disengagement of the great Powers and their military alliances from various parts of the world should be promoted;

6. Urges all States, in particular the permanent members of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to prevent the further deterioration of the international situation and, to this end:

(a) To seek, through more effective utilization of the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

(b) To proceed without delay to a global consideration of ways and means for bringing about a revival of the world economy and for the restructuring of international economic relations within the framework of the global negotiations with a view to establishing the new international economic order;

(c) To promote acceleration of the economic development of developing countries, particularly the least developed ones;

(d) To implement urgently measures agreed upon to ameliorate the critical economic situation in Africa, which is the result, inter alia, of persistent inclement climatic factors;

7. Emphasizes the role that the United Nations has in the maintenance of peace and security and in economic and social development and progress for the benefit of all mankind;

8. Stresses that there is an urgent need to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security and to enhance the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council in accordance with the Charter;

9. Emphasizes that the Security Council should consider holding periodic meetings in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises, thus enabling the Council to play a more active role in preventing conflicts;

10. Reiterates the need for the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, to ensure the effective implementation of its decisions in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Charter;

11. Considers that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, mutually reinforce each other;

12. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and for the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid,

13. Calls upon all States, particularly the members of the Security Council, to take appropriate and effective measures to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger which the nuclear capability of South Africa constitutes to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security;

14. Welcomes the continuation of the process within the framework of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and the successful conclusion of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe;

15. Reaffirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity enabling, under the conditions of interdependence, the full development and independence of all States, as well as the attainment of genuine security, peace and co-operation in the world, and stresses its firm belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of these goals;

16. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the basis of the replies received;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Belize, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Although having originally supported the Declaration, the United States explained that it opposed the assertions in the resolution that the super-Powers were primarily responsible for a deteriorating international security climate, that the nuclear-arms race had been extended into outer space and that the United Nations, a deliberative body, was a forum for bilateral negotiations. Moreover, it found unacceptable the linking of disarmament and development, the call for support to national liberation movements, the suggestion that the Security Council hold periodic meetings to review areas of tension, the reference to the need to establish a new international economic order and the notion that international relations needed to be democratized.

Introducing the text on behalf of the sponsors, Yugoslavia said the international political and economic situation showed no signs of improvement. There had been no let-up in confrontation in the bid to attain supremacy and spread one's own influence in the world; independence and secure development of many countries-non-aligned ones in particular-were in jeopardy, and bloc policies, pressure, aggression and intervention continued. Peace, security and disarmament concerned the destiny of the world and could hardly be the monopoly of the big Powers.

Implementation of the security provisions of the UN Charter

In response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(14) the President of the Assembly consulted the chairmen of the regional groups on the membership of an Ad Hoc Committee on the Implementation of the Collective Security Provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, to be set up under a 1983 Assembly resolution. (15) However, the Secretary-General reported in June 1986(16) that owing to differing opinions as to the allocation of seats, the Committee had not been constituted.

On 4 December, the Assembly, by decision 41/423, took note of a report of the First Committee.(17) The report listed communications submitted under the agenda item-most of which pertained to the Afghanistan situation (see p. 212)-and stated that no proposal was submitted.

Dialogue to improve the international situation

Communications. The talks between Mikhail S. Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR, and Ronald Reagan, President of the United States, at Reykjavik, Iceland, in October 1986 were the subject of three statements by Mr. Gorbachev on television and at a press conference, in which he discussed the maintenance of peace, ending the arms race and nuclear disarmament, and setting up a comprehensive system of international security; they were transmitted by the USSR on 14,(18) 15(19) and 23(20) October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/91.

Need for result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation

The General Assembly,

Recalling the unanimous commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the solution of international problems through dialogue, negotiation and co-operation, reaffirmed by the Member States on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, in particular during the Security Council's special meeting on 26 September 1985,

Noting with satisfaction the resumed dialogue between the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, and hoping that every effort will be undertaken by both States with a view to achieving agreements on the halting of the nuclear-arms race, on a radical reduction of their nuclear arsenals, on nuclear disarmament and on the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Deeply concerned by the escalation of the arms race, particularly in the field of nuclear weapons, and the risk of its extension into outer space, as well as by the increasing recourse to the threat or use of force in international affairs, by military intervention and aggression, and by the prevalence of tensions and conflicts, the denial of the peoples' right to self-determination and the continued existence of colonialism, racism and apartheid,

Also concerned about the lack of progress in solving global problems such as the development of equitable international economic relations, environmental protection and the elimination of hunger, poverty and exploitation,

Considering that, in the nuclear and space age, peace and security cannot be brought about through confrontation, but only through collective political efforts and at the lowest possible level of armament,

Welcoming the growing awareness that dialogue and negotiations are imperative in order to improve international relations, generate a climate of trust and resolve global issues facing humanity,

1. Culls upon States to make a consistent effort to observe fully the provisions set forth in the Charter of the United Nations in order to strengthen international peace and security;

2. Calls for the continuation, to that end, of the political dialogue and negotiations in good faith, taking into account the legitimate interests of all States, in accordance with the relevant principles of the Charter and being guided by a sincere desire for results;

3. Appeals to all Member States to enhance the role of the United Nations as a forum for political dialogue and negotiations in order to preserve peace, strengthen international security, promote arms limitation and disarmament under effective verification, develop equitable international economic relations, implement the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial rule, eradicate racism and apartheid and settle other urgent international issues;

4. Stresses the necessity for the members of the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, to take appropriate and effective measures in carrying out their primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter;

5. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, in accordance with the Charter, to facilitate dialogue and co-operation as a means to help reduce tensions, settle international conflicts peacefully and improve the international climate;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled "Need for result-oriented political dialogue to improve the international situation".

Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

China explained that it voted in favour of the text because it was better to have dialogue and negotiation than to engage in confrontation, particularly in East-West relations. It had reservations, however, with regard to paragraph 2, which, it felt, spoke in a general way about taking into account the interests of all States and which might be used to distort the rights and wrongs of principles; dialogue and negotiation must be based on the principle of safeguarding States' independence and sovereignty against external aggression and interference.

Introducing the text, the German Democratic Republic said it believed its initiative corresponded to the purpose to which practically all States felt committed and started from the growing awareness and recognition that dialogue and negotiations were indispensable for improving international relations, creating a climate of trust and solving the global issues facing mankind; that was embodied in the first and sixth preambular paragraphs. The text was a result of consultations with numerous States of various regional groups.

The German Democratic Republic was firmly convinced that political dialogue and negotiations, if conducted with a sense of responsibility in a constructive atmosphere and on a basis of equality, would contribute to improving the international situation and solving fundamental political issues. The text reflected a general assessment of the international situation and expressed the expectation that the resumed dialogue between the USSR and the United States would continue. The appeal to Member States to enhance the role of the United Nations as a forum for political dialogue and negotiations was imperative, particularly in view of the continuously tense international situation and the difficult problems facing the Organization.

Establishment of a comprehensive system of international peace and security

On 5 August 1986, (21) Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR proposed inclusion in the General Assembly's agenda of an item on the establishment of a comprehensive system of international security, covering not only the military and political but also the economic and humanitarian issues. A draft which became the basis for a resolution adopted by the Assembly was annexed to the request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/92.

Establishment of a comprehensive system of international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the tense and dangerous situation in the world and the danger of continuing down the path of confrontation and the arms race towards the abyss of the nuclear self-destruction of mankind,

Deeply concerned at the numerous threats to international peace and security resulting from the persistent violations of the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations,

ALSO concerned at the continuous escalation in the global arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race, and the consequent threat posed to the security of all States,

Conscious of the urgent need to strengthen the foundation of universal security, on the basis of the Charter and in compliance with the generally recognized norms and principles of international law,

Conscious of the growing interdependence of countries and the fact that the contemporary world has no reasonable alternative to the policy of co-operation and interaction among States pursued on the basis of equality with unconditional respect for the right of each people to make its sovereign choice of the ways and forms of its development,

Reaffirming the important role of the United Nations as an indispensable forum for conducting negotiations and achieving agreements on measures to strengthen international peace, security and co-operation and to democratize international relations,

Having in mind the necessity of strengthening international co-operation on the basis of existing consensus with a view to promoting the well-being and economic development of all countries, in particular developing countries,

Having discussed the question of a comprehensive system of international peace and security,

1. Solemnly reaffirms that the collective security system embodied in the Charter of the United Nations continues to be a fundamental and irreplaceable instrument for the preservation of international peace and security;

2. Also reaffirms the need to adhere strictly to the fundamental principles of the Charter, especially respect for the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs, non-use of force in international relations, peaceful settlement of disputes and the right of all peoples to self-determination;

3. Recognizes the invaluable role of the United Nations in the preservation of international peace and security and the harmonization of the policies of the Member States and the imperative need to strengthen and reinforce the United Nations;

4. Calls upon States to focus their efforts on ensuring security on an equal basis for all States and in all spheres of international relations;

5. Culls upon Member States to make their contribution to practical measures to ensure compliance with and implementation of the provisions of the Charter with particular regard to the crucial and interrelated areas of disarmament, crisis and conflict settlement, economic development and co-operation and the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Further calls for the implementation of resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Decides to continue consideration of this question at its forty-second session under an item entitled "Comprehensive system of international peace and security".

General Assembly resolution 41/92

4 December 1986 Meeting 96 102-2-46 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/41/906) by recorded vote (82-2-35). 26 November (meeting 59); 11-nation draft (A/C.1/41/L.89/Rev.1); agenda item 141.

Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The United States objected to the text, saying the Charter remained the best basis for maintaining international peace and security; a new system was not necessary and would undermine the Charter principles. The United States could not accept paragraphs 5 and 7 in particular and did not agree with the provisions of all the resolutions cited in paragraph 6. It was unable to accept much of the language in the first three preambular paragraphs and did not agree with the assertion in the sixth that the United Nations was an indispensable forum for bilateral negotiations.

France also saw the Charter as an irreplaceable framework for the conduct of States in international security matters and opposed the establishment of a new international peace and security system; in its view, paragraph 7 and the preambular paragraphs of the text contained dangerous implications and were vague and ambiguous.

Several countries which abstained—Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom—emphasized that the Charter should remain the basis for strengthening international security and that the best way to improve the international situation was to respect and comply with the Charter principles.

In the opinion of the Netherlands, compliance with the Charter would obviate the need for discussing the establishment of a new system, a fundamental consideration that was insufficiently reflected in the text. The Netherlands had particular reservations with regard to paragraphs 1 and 7 and the last preambular paragraph; it also could not subscribe to paragraph 6 in view of its vagueness and had reservations about some other preambular paragraphs because of their alarmist language.

It was not clear from the text, the United Kingdom remarked, whether a new system was thought necessary or not, and some preambular paragraphs contained unbalanced language; the United Kingdom also did not support all the resolutions referred to in paragraph 6.

Reservations about the language in some preambular paragraphs were also voiced by Australia, which felt that the concept of a comprehensive international peace and security system could leave the door open to the notion that it could be developed separately from the collective security provisions of the Charter.

Sweden had reservations with regard to certain elements, saying it was not certain what democratization of international relations meant, and did not share the view that non-interference was a generally recognized principle; it also was not certain of the implications of paragraph 4 and considered paragraph 5 too weak when it came to describing States' obligations to comply with the Charter.

Uruguay saw in the text a joint proposal to give new impetus to international security within the Charter framework and through active participation by all members of the international community; it pointed out, however, that the initiative must not lead to an alternative institutional structure distinct from the system established by the Charter.

China felt that the specific contents of a comprehensive peace and security system and its relation to the Charter were still unclear.

Although it interpreted the text's design as strengthening international peace and security through fully utilizing the collective security system provided for in the Charter, Pakistan had doubts about the language and concepts particularly of paragraph 7 and some preambular paragraphs.

Finland saw the text as supportive of strengthening international peace and security through the United Nations; it felt, however, that the sixth preambular paragraph defined the role of the Organization rather narrowly and had reservations in general about some of the text's concepts and formulations.

Peru regretted that the text contained no specific mention of the Final Document adopted by the Assembly at its tenth special session in 1978, devoted to disarmament,²² which had expressly established a link between international security and disarmament. With regard to paragraph 7, Peru agreed that consideration of the question should continue at the 1987 Assembly session, but pointed out that the word "creation" with regard to an international peace and security system should not be used in the Spanish text and resolution title.

Mexico suggested establishing an ad hoc body to deal with the matter and to try to draw up a comprehensive system based mainly on Charter principles and using all the basic instruments adopted since 1945.

Thailand stressed that the United Nations, as the sole universal mechanism dedicated to the maintenance of international peace and security, should be strengthened to enable it to play a more effective role in accordance with Charter principles; it welcomed the sponsors' initiative as a constructive endeavour which might contribute to fulfilling those principles.

In Cuba's interpretation, paragraph 4, when calling on States to focus their efforts on ensuring security on an equal basis for all States and in all spheres of international relations, was asking to focus efforts on economic security as well.

Review of peace-keeping operations

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, established by the General Assembly in 1965,(1) did not meet in 1986. United Nations peace-keeping forces continued to operate in Cyprus (see p. 237) in Lebanon (see p. 291) and in the Golan Heights between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic (see p. 313).

Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, on 30 January,(2) transmitted the "Delhi Statement" adopted on 19 January by the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues, whose membership comprised the Federal Republic of Germany, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Tanzania. The Commission proposed that the following measures be considered to enhance the peace-keeping role of the United Nations: a more comprehensive procedure in the Security Council for monitoring the international security situation; consistent political support of United Nations peace-keeping operations by the Council; earlier treatment of disputes and potential conflicts; better integration of regional organizations in the international peace and security system; stronger practical support, including financing, for peace-keeping arrangements; complementary strengthening of conflict control (peace-keeping) and negotiation of disputes (peace-making); and the progressive development of peace-keeping techniques.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/67.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3091(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3239(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3457(XXX) of 10 December 1975, 31/105 of 15 December 1976, 32/106 of 15 December 1977, 33/114 of 18 December 1978, 34/53 of 23 November 1979, 35/121 of 11 December 1980, 36/37 of 18 November 1981, 37/93 of 10 December 1982, 38/81 of 15 December 1983, 39/97 of 14 December 1984 and 40/163 of 16 December 1985,

Noting that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations has not been able to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session

1. Reaffirms and renews the mandate given to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

International Year of Peace

During 1986, the United Nations observed the International Year of Peace, which had been proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1985.(1) The Year was inaugurated on 1 January 1986 with a special message by the Secretary-General.

The objectives of the Year were to stimulate action to promote peace, international security and co-operation and the resolution of conflict by peaceful means; to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument for peace; and to focus attention on the basic requirements of peace, in particular problems of development, disarmament, human rights, human needs and preparation for life in peace. The programme for the Year was designed primarily to foster action at the national and grass-roots levels.

On 17 January, the President of the Security Council made a statement on behalf of the Council members.(2)

"On the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the first meeting of the Security Council and the inauguration on 1 January 1986 of the International Year of Peace, the members of the Security Council wish to reaffirm their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations which conferred on the Council the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. At the first meeting of the Council in London 40 years ago, its members assumed this special responsibility in the conviction that it would prove a new beginning of the continuing quest for lasting peace and security.

"Although peace has been preserved on a global basis for 40 years, conflicts and tensions persist. Over the course of the 2600 meetings, the Security Council has debated the most pressing issues of peace and security. The inauguration of the International Year of Peace provides an added impetus for the members of the Council to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security. They call again upon the entire membership of the United Nations to abide by their obligations under the Charter to accept and carry out decisions of the Security Council. Let us hope that 1986 and the years to come will bring the progress which is so urgently needed for the safeguarding of peace for future generations."

Communications. Letters and notes verbales in regard to IYP were received throughout 1986.

Bangladesh, on 3 January,(13) conveyed a 1 January message on the commencement of IYP.

On 23 January,(4) the USSR transmitted a statement issued on 20 January by the Commissions on Foreign Affairs of the Soviet of the Union and the Soviet of Nationalities of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, expressing the hope that the Year would open for mankind the way to a peaceful future, and on 27 March,(5) a message from Mr. Gorbachev, declaring that peoples must ensure that IYP marked the founding of an all-embracing system of international security.

On 5 February(6) and 28 August,(7) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Bangladesh, respectively, informed the Secretary-General that national committees had been formed to draw up programmes for observance of the Year. Declarations in support of IYP adopted by the national assemblies of Bulgaria, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Romania were forwarded, respectively, on 31 March,(8) 8 April(9) and 10 April.(10)

National programmes of activities and events for the Year were conveyed by: Romania, on 25 March;(11) Bulgaria(12) and Czechoslovakia,(13) 10 April; Poland, 18 April;(14) Canada, 23 June;(15) India, 31 July;(16) Venezuela, 18 August;(17)

Australia, 4 September;(18) the German Democratic Republic(19) and Suriname,(20) 11 September; Indonesia, 29 September;(21) Ireland, 1 October;(22) Hungary, 14 October.(23) Viet Nam 20 October;(24) Cyprus, 20 November;(25) Argentina, 28 November(26) and the Byelorussian SSR, 5 December.(27)

On 7 July,(28) Poland transmitted a joint statement from Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stressing the importance of the contribution of the United Nations bodies dealing with economic and social matters to IYP through improving international economic relations.

Numerous messages in support of the Year were received, including a declaration by the Sixth World Meeting of Writers (Sofia, 28-30 October);(29) an executive decree issued by Costa Rica concerning the declaration of 1 December every year to be "Army Abolition Day";(30) a letter from the Committee of the International Music Festival "Prague Spring" in Czechoslovakia;(31) messages from assemblies at Charles University and the Czech University of Technology, Prague;(32) a peace resolution adopted by the Thirteenth International Comeniological Colloquy (Uhersky Brod, Czechoslovakia, 16-18 September);(33) and an address by the Foreign Minister of Czechoslovakia to the Czechoslovak Society for International Relations and a proclamation adopted by the Society.(34)

Also transmitted were messages from the President of the Peace Council of the German Democratic Republic (Berlin, 30 January)(35) and from the Congress of Intellectuals for a Peaceful Future of the World (Warsaw, 16-19 January);(36) declarations of the Seventh General Conference of Asian Buddhists, issued on 14 February at Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic,(37) and of a mass meeting held by 2,000 civil servants, managers, workers, soldiers and inhabitants on 5 May in Pursat province, Democratic Kampuchea;(38) a letter from the Mayor of Warsaw and a declaration adopted by the National Council of the City of Warsaw;(39) an appeal for peace by a plenary meeting of the National Council for Science and Education (Bucharest, 30 October);(40) and a proposal, transmitted by Sri Lanka on 28 May, from the Naropa Institute of Boulder, Colorado, United States, for a conference on strategies for peace-making.(41)

IYP activities. In implementing the programme of the Year, action was taken at the local, national and international levels. The IYP secretariat co-ordinated implementation of the programme, maintaining liaison with organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), academic institutions and individuals. More than 300 representatives of NGOs, representing a variety of philosophical, political and religious backgrounds, inaugurated IYP at a conference called "Together for peace" (Geneva, 20-24 January).

Of major impact in implementing the programme were the efforts of the 67 national co-ordinating mechanisms established for the Year's observance; those commissions, composed of representatives of government departments and various NGOs, were instrumental in encouraging the support and participation of people of every age and every level of society. Among the events sponsored by national commissions were rallies, public meetings, art exhibits, fairs, festivals, concerts and conferences. The experiences of the national commissions also provided valuable input to United Nations efforts to co-ordinate IYP activities. Of particular importance was the consultative meeting organized by the Secretary-General (Rome, Italy, 4 and 5 July), where representatives of 44 national commissions exchanged experiences and ideas concerning implementation of the IYP programme.(42)

Among the more important international meetings and conferences that took place in the context of IYP were the Congress of Intellectuals for a Peaceful Future of the World (Warsaw, January); a seminar, "Dialogue: the universal foundation of peace" (Rome, July); a regional conference on peace and development (Brazzaville, Congo, September); the World Congress for IYP (Copenhagen, Denmark, October); and the Second World Meeting of War Veterans (Vienna, December). Two IYP-related conferences were organized under United Nations auspices: a regional conference for the World Disarmament Campaign (Tbilisi, USSR, May) and a regional conference for NGOs (Vienna, June). A graduate study programme at the United Nations Office at Geneva was devoted to the Year, and several international organizations devoted their meetings and conventions to it.

A variety of international events also took place, which allowed broad participation by people around the world, such as the First Earth Run and the Million Minutes of Peace campaign, which were organized with UNICEF on an international basis and carried out in countries around the world with the assistance of local organizing committees. Many international NGOs initiated projects for IYP either at their headquarters or through various local chapters, and in several countries NGOs played a key role in co-ordinating action at both the national and local levels. In the course of the Year, many organizations submitted statements and appeals to the United Nations and the Secretary-General sent or delivered 77 messages and statements. Several national parliaments adopted declarations supporting IYP.

Cities played an important role in encouraging local action for peace, linking communities around the world with the general programme set out for the Year. A number of religious observances were oriented towards bringing representatives from various faiths together on the basis of a common commitment to peace. Academic and fine arts projects provided a basis for co-operation and interaction. Sports groups focused on the value of peaceful competition in bringing about greater international understanding. Peace education was recognized as a particularly important dimension in the promotion of peace by NGOs, cities and schools.

Several United Nations organizations and agencies, including UNESCO, UNEP, WIPO, UNICEF, IMO, FAO, UNCHS and UPU, undertook special activities for IYP, ranging from the issuing of special publications, articles, bulletins, leaflets, IYP posters and medals, the organizing of essay, drawing or painting competitions for young people, to the holding of seminars, meetings and conferences. In a joint statement, the heads of all organizations emphasized the joint responsibility of the entire United Nations system for promoting peace.⁽⁴³⁾

Emphasizing the important role of information and communication in international co-operation, the Committee on Information at its June/July 1986 session (see Chapter X of this section) expressed its intention to contribute to the Year and to promoting peace.⁽⁴⁴⁾

Events commemorating the Year took place at United Nations Headquarters in New York and United Nations offices at Geneva and Vienna. Concerts, exhibits and meetings of NGOs were organized. An official poster, a brochure entitled International Year of Peace-Xi Safeguard Peace and the Future of Humanity, a student leaflet, a series of six postage stamps and a commemorative silver medal were issued.

On 16 September, the International Day of Peace was observed, with the Secretary-General inviting Member States to join in the traditional Peace Bell ceremony at United Nations Headquarters.

To plan future work, the Secretary-General established a Panel of Experts on Preparation for Life in Peace and requested a group of staff members from various Secretariat units to identify activities for the promotion of peace.

Events and projects for the Year were financed largely from local and national funds. Some Governments designated special funds for national IYP projects, and many projects were financed by NGOs. Owing to the limited resources available, many projects were undertaken on a voluntary basis and emphasis was placed on restraint in spending. The resources available in the Trust Fund for IYP were used for grants, information programmes, expert meetings and participation of United Nations representatives in major IYP events.

As had been decided by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽⁴⁵⁾ a second pledging conference for IYP was held in New York on 14 February 1986;⁽⁴⁶⁾ of the 55 Member States participating, 13 pledged contributions totalling $65,800.

By the end of the Year, $231,670 had been spent; the balance of $234,965 was transferred to the Trust Fund for the Promotion of Peace.

Information on IYP-related activities was provided by the Secretary-General in two reports.⁽⁴⁷⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1986/115 of 7 February 1986, the Economic and Social Council declared its support for the proclamation of IYP, reaffirmed its commitment to collaborate in promoting peace during the Year and beyond, and decided to give IYP consideration throughout 1986. The decision was proposed orally by the Council President on the basis of informal consultations.

On 22 May, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1986/15.

International Year of Peace

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/3 of 24 October 1985, solemnly proclaimed 1986 to be the International Year of Peace as a timely impetus for initiating renewed thought and action for the promotion of peace, and an opportunity for Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and others to express in practical terms the common aspiration of all peoples for peace,

Noting the call of the General Assembly for all peoples to join with the United Nations in resolute efforts to safeguard peace and the future of humanity,

Recalling the provisions of the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace approved by the General Assembly,

Recalling Council decision 1986/115 of 7 February 1986, in which the Council reaffirmed its commitment to collaborate, within the areas of its competence, to achieve positive results in international co-operation for the promotion of peace during the International Year of Peace and beyond,

Noting resolutions and decisions on the International Year of Peace adopted by the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

1. Supports the proclamation by the General Assembly of 1986 as the International Year of Peace;

2. Welcomes the efforts of Governments to achieve the objectives of the International Year of Peace;

3. Considers that those efforts, as well as the universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, will contribute to international peace and co-operation;

4. Welcomes the activities carried out by the Secretary-General to encourage the efforts of Governments in this field;

5. Calls upon Member States, as well as organs and subsidiary bodies of the United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, educational, scientific, cultural and research institutions and their communication media to commemorate the International Year of Peace in the most appropriate manner, highlighting, inter alia, the role of the United Nations in the promotion and maintenance of international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/9.

International Year of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/16 of 16 November 1982, 38/56 of 7 December 1983, 39/10 of 8 November 1984, 40/3 of 24 October 1985 and 40/10 of 11 November 1985 on the International Year of Peace,

Recalling further that, by its resolution 40/3, the General Assembly solemnly proclaimed the year 1986 the International Year of Peace, which constituted a meaningful event in the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations,

Appreciating that the promotion of peace is the basic objective of the United Nations, and that its attainment is the common ideal of all the peoples of the world,

Appreciating also that the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace has generated an enthusiastic response on the part of the international community and provides an important impetus for increased international co-operation towards the attainment of peace,

Welcoming the governmental and non-governmental action taken for the implementation of the programme of the International Year of Peace,

Welcoming further the action taken by the Secretary-General, as well as the co-operation extended by the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council and the participation of subsidiary bodies and organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the programme of the Year, pursuant to its resolution 40/10,

Considering that the Proclamation and the programme of the International Year of Peace, as well as the numerous efforts and activities which have been stimulated within the United Nations system and in the international community as a whole, have made a concrete and substantive contribution towards understanding and dialogue between nations and peoples, and to the efforts required in 1986 and beyond to achieve the goal of genuine peace,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of the International Year of Peace,

1. Conveys its thanks to the Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and to the international community for their efforts in the promotion of peace, and invites them to persevere in those efforts, inspired by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the objectives and the spirit of the International Year of Peace, and to join the United Nations in its noble purpose of ensuring that humanity reaches the threshold of the twenty-first century in the full enjoyment of a stable and lasting peace;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General and the secretariat of the International Year of Peace for their valuable efforts in promoting and fulfilling the request of the General Assembly contained in resolution 40/10 by maintaining links with national co-ordinating committees, educational institutions, the mass media and others in the activities carried out during the Year;

3. Recognizes that the ideals and objectives contained in the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace will remain a valuable source for future dialogue and action to promote and achieve peace;

4. Underscores the contribution made to the programme of the International Year of Peace and to the activities carried out during the Year by non-governmental organizations, educational institutions, the mass media and others and the importance of their future co-operation with the United Nations and the United Nations system in promoting lasting peace among peoples;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to use the Trust Fund for the International Year of Peace for the promotion of peace, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a final report on the results of the International Year of Peace;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "International Year of Peace".

Right of peoples to peace

General Assembly request, (49) submitted a report⁽⁵⁰⁾ giving the replies of eight Member States and six specialized agencies on measures taken to implement the 1984 Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace.⁽⁵¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October 1986, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/10.

Right of peoples to peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/3 of 24 October 1985 and 40/11 of 11 November 1985,

Reaffirming the strong resolve of peoples to maintain and strengthen international peace and security,

Recalling its Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace, approved on 12 November 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Calls upon all States and international organizations to do their utmost to contribute to the implementation of the right of peoples to peace through the adoption of appropriate measures at both the national and international levels;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to invite States and international organizations to inform him of the measures taken or being taken for the implementation of the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace with a view to securing this right;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session an item entitled "Right of peoples to peace".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe,

Against: None,

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Zaïre.

Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The United Kingdom, speaking on behalf of the 12 States members of the European Community, explained that their abstentions were based on doubts about the compatibility of the 1984 Declaration with the Charter and the value of such declaratory measures to the cause of peace. The United States said that it shared those views. Australia, also indicating its misgivings about the Declaration, asserted that it saw no need for paragraphs 4 and 5 of the resolution, particularly in view of their budgetary implications. Senegal wanted it clearly understood that, in its view, the right of peoples to peace should not take precedence over human rights.

Introducing the text on behalf of the sponsors, Mongolia noted that the Declaration continued to receive growing support from the world community; its implementation by all States would help strengthen international peace and security and help eliminate the threat of nuclear war. The Assembly should continue to consider its implementation every year or every two years.

Chapter V

Africa

In 1986, the United Nations continued to consider a number of political issues concerning Africa, particularly the apartheid system in South Africa, possible ways to abolish it and South Africa's aggression against neighbouring States.

The question of apartheid was discussed by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries), the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

Eight resolutions on various aspects of the apartheid policies of South Africa were adopted by the General Assembly, while the Security Council adopted two resolutions, one by which it condemned South African attacks on States in southern Africa and the other in which the Council strengthened its arms embargo against South Africa. The Council, in a statement issued on the tenth anniversary of the killings of African people at Soweto, near Johannesburg, condemned the repressive measures which perpetuated the apartheid system and the recent imposition by South Africa of a nation-wide state of emergency.

Complaints of South African aggression against Angola, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe and a border dispute between Lesotho and South Africa were considered by the Council. In May, due to the negative vote of a permanent member, the Council did not adopt a draft resolution by which it would have imposed selective economic and other sanctions on South Africa.

A dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya remained before the Council; the Organization of African Unity (OAU) continued its efforts to settle a conflict among diverse forces and achieve national reconciliation in Chad.

The sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte was reaffirmed by the Assembly. In addition, it called on Member States to intensify their support of the recommendations of the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa and appealed for contributions to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa.

At a special session on the critical economic situation in Africa (New York, 27 May-1 June), the Assembly adopted a Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

In addition, activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia continued to be surveyed by the Economic and Social Council.

South Africa and apartheid

Only the total elimination of apartheid would restore peace to South Africa and to southern Africa as a whole, the Secretary-General said (see p. 9). The General Assembly and the Security Council had on many occasions advocated practical measures to speed up the dismantling of apartheid, but progress had been much too slow and restricted. The United Nations and its Member States needed to intensify the pressure for peaceful change and to exert every possible influence to persuade South Africa that time was running out for a negotiated settlement.

In November, the Assembly, as it had for many years, adopted a series of resolutions in 1986 on the apartheid policies of South Africa.

Condemning the policies and practices of the apartheid system in South Africa, the Assembly called for the lifting of the state of emergency, the withdrawal of troops from black townships, the halting of executions of freedom fighters, the release of all political prisoners, the abrogation of bans on political organizations and the cessation of military, political and economic action by South Africa to destabilize independent African countries (resolution 41/35 A). It urged that the Security Council strengthen its arms embargo and adopt comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa (41/35 B), and, requesting States to broaden the scope of the oil embargo against South Africa, it set up an intergovernmental group to monitor oil supplies (41/35 F).

As part of the campaign for concerted international action to eliminate apartheid, the Assembly appealed to all States to consider measures to cease further investment in South Africa, to end support for trade with it, to prohibit the sale of kruggerand and other coins from South Africa, and to cease military, police or intelligence co-operation and nuclear collaboration with South Africa (41/35 H). The Assembly also demanded that Israel terminate its collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the economic, military and nuclear areas (41/35 C).

In the remaining resolutions of the series, the Assembly expressed satisfaction that a significant number of States had signed and ratified the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, which opened for signature in May (41/35 E), and requested Governments and organizations to make voluntary contributions to projects of the Special Committee against Apartheid (41/35 D) and to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (41/35 G).

With regard to the adverse consequences for human rights of political, military, economic and other assistance to South Africa, the Assembly condemned the collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and other States, as well as transnational corporations (TNCs) and other organizations (41/95).

Action on apartheid was taken by the Security Council on three occasions during the year. In February, it condemned South Africa for its threats to perpetrate acts of aggression against the front-line and other States in southern Africa, and demanded the eradication of apartheid as a step towards establishing a non-racial democratic society in South Africa (resolution 581(1986)). In June, the Council President made a statement on behalf of the Council in observance of the 1976 Soweto massacre, reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle by the oppressed people of South Africa against apartheid. In November, the Council urged States to prohibit the export of all items believed destined for the military or police forces of South Africa and requested them to refrain from co-operation with South Africa that might contribute to its manufacture of nuclear weapons (591(1986)).

A World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, to assist the South African people in eliminating apartheid and to secure the independence of Namibia, was held in Paris in June.

Public hearings that had been held during 1985 on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia were followed up by the Economic and Social Council. In May, the Council adopted a resolution (1986/1) endorsing the recommendations of the 11-member panel that conducted the hearings and requesting the Secretary-General to ensure that they were implemented. The Council also welcomed the steps taken by certain home countries of TNCs to restrict further investments in and bank loans to South Africa.

By another resolution (1986/22), the Council urged Member States and United Nations organizations to give particular attention to the education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities of women and children under apartheid.

General aspects

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council adopted unanimously on 15 September 1986,⁽¹⁾ reviewed its work and developments in South Africa and made recommendations for further action. The report covered the 12-month period beginning in October 1985; October-December 1986 was covered by its 1987 report.⁽²⁾ A summary of the findings in those reports follows; additional information is provided elsewhere in this chapter.

During the year, the Committee repeatedly drew international attention to South Africa's aggression against other African States, continued to campaign for the release of all political prisoners in South Africa, sponsored meetings and consulted with governmental leaders and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to mobilize action against apartheid, emphasized the need for assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU, and held a special meeting marking the opening for signature of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, adopted by the General Assembly in 1985;⁽³⁾ as at 31 December 1986,⁽⁴⁾ 68 States had signed the Convention and 8 States had ratified it.

The situation in South Africa was marked by an unparalleled campaign of terror, with death squads, secret assassins and arsonists used to eliminate opponents of apartheid, the Committee stated. The South African Government had twice imposed emergency measures, giving sweeping powers to its security forces. As part of the second state of emergency imposed nation-wide on 12 June 1986—a partial state of emergency had existed from 21 July 1985 to 6 March 1986—a series of press curbs had been introduced. The news media were banned from areas of unrest and could not publish the names of political detainees, give live television transmissions out of the country or publish information on the actions of security forces. Curfews were imposed in 24 areas. It was estimated that from 12 June to 29 August, 12,000 to 16,000 opponents of apartheid, including church and trade union leaders, journalists, youth and student leaders, women and leaders of community organizations, had been detained without trial and about 250 people killed.

Despite a declaration by South Africa on 31 January 1986 that apartheid was outdated, the régime continued to maintain the Population

Registration Act, the Group Areas Act, the "homelands" policy, "bantu education" and segregated health and other public facilities. Under cover of the emergency, the basic laws of apartheid were being enforced. In 1986, for instance, about 64,000 Africans were forcibly removed, compared with 40,000 in 1985; nearly 100,000 Africans were arrested for trespassing in 1986; and most residents of the "independent homelands" continued to be deprived of their South African citizenship. The removal of African communities was being achieved by a combination of intimidation, political disorganization, coercion and vigilante action.

Popular resistance against apartheid, meanwhile, had become wider in scope and better co-ordinated. According to the South African authorities, 42 policemen had been killed and 52 seriously injured in 1986; 199 so-called acts of terrorism had been carried out, compared with 86 in 1985. New civic, youth and student groups had been formed, and school, rent, bus and consumer boycotts had compelled white businessmen and local authorities to negotiate with militant local groups in the townships. Black workers had strengthened their unions, and millions had stayed away from work on the anniversaries of important days. The stay-away on 16 June, Soweto Day, was even larger than the general strike on 1 May, when an estimated 1.5 million blacks stayed away from work. In 1986, there were 793 strikes involving 424,135 black workers. Although many of the strikes lasted less than a week, those lasting more than a month showed an increase over past years.

The Committee recommended, among other things, that the General Assembly endorse the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa (see p. 123); urge the Western Powers that continued to oppose sanctions against South Africa-especially the United States and the United Kingdom-to reassess their positions; recognize that the policy of "constructive engagement", which the United States defined as the active promotion of dialogue and co-operation among the States of southern Africa, had not contributed to the abolition of apartheid; condemn actions by South Africa to destabilize independent States in southern Africa; call on those States that had not done so to end military collaboration with South Africa; affirm the need for the Security Council to adopt a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa; encourage campaigns for divestment from South Africa, as well as consumer, sports, cultural and other boycotts; reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggle by the people of South Africa to eliminate apartheid and establish a non-racial democratic State; and appeal for greater support in that struggle to be given to the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC).

A special report⁽⁵⁾ on the relations between Israel and South Africa was issued by the Committee as an addendum to its annual report (see p. 142).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a number of resolutions on the question of apartheid. By one,⁽⁶⁾ it rejected any manoeuvres by South Africa to avoid the abolition of apartheid through so-called reform measures, and condemned South Africa for its indiscriminate use of force against unarmed demonstrators, torture of political opponents and incarceration of minors. By another,⁽⁷⁾ it reaffirmed the right of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination, independence and enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories, and condemned the increased assistance rendered by the major Western countries and Israel to South Africa in the political, economic, financial and particularly the military area.

Communications. During 1986, the Secretary-General received numerous communications in regard to the apartheid policies of South Africa.

On 15 May,⁽⁸⁾ India transmitted the final documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April). In a Political Declaration, the Ministers condemned South Africa's apartheid policies and its barbarous acts of oppression, repression and discrimination, including the imposition of the death sentence on several South African opponents of apartheid. The Ministers urged South Africa to take heed of the international demands for the abolition of apartheid, appealed for greater moral, political and material support for ANC and PAC and the imposition of comprehensive, mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa, and welcomed the growing anti-apartheid movement in Western Europe, North America and the South Pacific.

Similar statements were contained in the final documents of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September) and in the final communique of the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the 1986 session of the General Assembly (New York, 2 October), forwarded by Zimbabwe on 30 September⁽⁹⁾ and on 9 October,⁽¹⁰⁾ respectively.

Other letters included: the joint communique of a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the front-line States and those of the European Community (EC) (Lusaka, Zambia, 3 and 4 February), transmitted by the Netherlands and Zambia on

6 February;(11) the Declaration of the International Conference in Solidarity with Peoples under Racial Discrimination (Tripoli, 23-27 November 1985), forwarded by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 19 February 1986;(12) a statement adopted at the Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Countries Having French as a Common Language (Paris, 17-19 February), conveyed by France on 20 February;(13) the final communiqué and resolutions of the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, 6-10 January), transmitted by Morocco on 5 May;(14) the declaration of a conference of the live African countries whose official language was Portuguese (Luanda, 28-30 April), conveyed by Angola on 12 May;(15) a 13 June statement by the Prime Minister of Malaysia issued at the conclusion of the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group's peace initiatives in South Africa, transmitted by Malaysia on 17 June;(16) and the declaration of the Foreign Ministers of the States members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Manila, 23 June), forwarded by the Philippines on 24 June.(17)

Also received were the declaration and resolutions of the International Seminar on the Struggle for Peace and Progress (Addis Ababa, 7-9 June), transmitted by Ethiopia on 25 June;(18) a statement adopted by the European Council (The Hague, 27 June), forwarded by the Netherlands on behalf of the 12 EC member States on 30 June;(19) the Declaration on Southern Africa of the Seventh Meeting of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community (Georgetown, 3 July), conveyed by Guyana on 8 July; a communiqué issued by the front-line heads of State and Government (Luanda, 21 August), transmitted by Zambia on 2 September;(21) a statement by the Foreign Ministers of the EC members issued on 16 September and forwarded by the United Kingdom on 18 September;(23) the final communiqué of the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 2 October), transmitted by Morocco on 21 October;(23) the communiqué of the Twelfth Regular Meeting of the Latin American Council (Lima, 16 and 17 October), conveyed by Peru on 21 October;(24) and a statement issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in London on 19 December, forwarded that day by the United Kingdom.(25)

Conference on sanctions against South Africa

The World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, organized by the United Nations in co-operation with OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(26) was held in Paris from 16 to 20 June 1986.(27) The Conference was attended by representatives of 131 States as well as of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, national liberation movements, intergovernmental organizations, international, regional and national NGOs and individuals (for list of participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III). It was preceded by an International Seminar on the United Nations Arms Embargo against South Africa (see p. 134) and a United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa (see p. 136), as preparatory meetings to the Conference.

The Conference aimed at assisting the South African people in eliminating apartheid, securing the independence of Namibia and restoring peace in the region. It condemned any attempt to interpret the current conflict in southern Africa as an East-West conflict and concluded that the most effective means to end apartheid was to enforce comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa. It devoted eight plenary meetings to general debate. A Commission of the Whole, established by the Conference, held six meetings, reviewing developments in southern Africa, and on 19 June submitted a report in which it discussed comprehensive mandatory sanctions, nuclear collaboration with South Africa, arms and oil embargoes, mercenaries, sporting, cultural and academic boycotts, investment, South Africa's foreign debt and South African exports. The Commission's report was annexed to that of the Conference.

On 20 June, the Conference took note of the Commission's report and adopted a Declaration by acclamation. The Conference called for the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. It recommended that the mandatory arms embargo instituted by the Security Council in 1977(28) be reinforced by calling on all States to end military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, to cease the sale of computers, radar and other electronic equipment to South Africa, to terminate investments in corporations manufacturing military equipment in South Africa, and to discourage or prevent enlistment of their nationals in the South African military forces.

Other sanctions proposed by the Conference included: an oil embargo, an embargo on investments in and financial loans to South Africa, an end to the promotion of trade with South Africa, prohibition of the sale of krugerrand, prohibition of imports from South Africa, adoption of measures to comply with Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in 1974,(29) termination of visa-free entry privileges to South Africa and of air and shipping links, and cessation of academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations. Particularly stressed was the need for an embargo on the import of uranium and other products from Namibia in accordance with Decree No. 1.

On 25 June,(30) the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitted the text of the Declaration to the Secretary-General.

The President of the Security Council sent a message on 16 June(31) to the World Conference, in which he recalled that the Council had repeatedly condemned apartheid and reaffirmed that it was a crime incompatible with the rights of man.

Other messages of support were received from Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Czechoslovakia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Togo, the USSR, Yugoslavia and Zaire; from the International Union of Students and the Senegalese United Nations Association; and from United States Senator Edward M. Kennedy and Congressmen Ronald V. Dellums and William Grey of the United States House of Representatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly adopted eight resolutions on 10 November 1986 on the apartheid policies of South Africa. Two of them-41/35 B on sanctions and 41/35 H on international action-dealt with the broader aspects of apartheid. Both were adopted by recorded vote.

Comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 40/64 A of 10 December 1985,

Recalling its relevant resolutions and those of the Security Council calling for concerted international action to force the racist regime of South Africa to start eliminating apartheid,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security, and that the United Nations has a primary responsibility to assist in efforts to eliminate it without further delay,

Reaffirming its support to the struggle of the people of South Africa for the exercise of their right to self-determination and for the establishment of a democratic, united and non-racial South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the intransigence of the apartheid régime and its escalation of violence against the oppressed people of South Africa, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its acts of aggression, internal and external state terrorism, and destabilization through political subversion and economic blackmail against independent African States,

Noting that continued political, economic, military, cultural and other forms of collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa bolster the regime in its attempt to break its international isolation, thus encouraging it to persist in its defiance of world public opinion and to escalate its repression, aggression and destabilization,

Reaffirming its conviction that the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations is the most appropriate, effective and peaceful means by which the international community can aid the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa, and by which the United Nations will discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Deploping the fact that certain Western permanent members of the Security Council have prevented the Council from adopting comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued violation of the mandatory arms embargo adopted by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 as well as the nuclear collaboration by certain Western States and Israel with the racist régime of South Africa,

Welcoming action taken by legislative bodies, municipalities and other government institutions as well as universities, churches, labour unions, and student and women's groups to promote divestment from corporations and financial institutions that are collaborating with South Africa,

1. Endorses the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa;

2. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its brutal repression and violence against the oppressed people of South Africa, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its repeated acts of aggression, state terrorism and destabilization through political subversion and economic blackmail against independent African States;

3. Condemns the policy of "constructive engagement" and similar policies of appeasement that have ignored the reign of terror by the racist régime and encouraged its illegal occupation of Namibia and aggression against independent African States;

4. Condemns the activities of those transnational corporations and financial institutions that have continued to collaborate with South Africa;

5. Calls upon the Security Council urgently to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations with a view to applying comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa and urges the Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and others that are opposed to the application of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions to reassess their position and facilitate the application of those sanctions by the Security Council;

6. Urges the Security Council to adopt measures to strengthen the mandatory arms embargo adopted by its resolution 418(1977), in accordance with the relevant recommendations contained in the Final Declaration of the International Seminar on the United Nations Arms Embargo against South Africa, held in London from 28 to 30 May 1986;

7. Requests all States that have not yet done so, pending action by the Security Council, urgently to adopt legislative and other comparable measures to ensure the total isolation of South Africa;

8. Calls upon Member States to exclude the South African regime from all organizations within the United Nations system where this has not already been done;

9. Calls once again upon the International Monetary Fund urgently to terminate credit and other assistance to the racist regime of South Africa;

10. Further calls upon all organizations within the United Nations system to ensure the total isolation of South Africa and of transnational corporations, banks, financial and other institutions that are collaborating with South Africa;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure compliance by the United Nations system with paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution 40/64 A;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind paragraph 15 of resolution 40/64 A, to undertake a study on the relationship of various specialized agencies, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system with banks and financial institutions that conduct business in or with entities in South Africa.

General Assembly resolution 41/35 B

Concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa caused by the policy of apartheid, and lately in particular by the reimposition of the state of emergency and its extension nation-wide,

Convinced that the root-cause of the crisis in southern Africa is the policy of apartheid,

Noting with grave concern that in order to perpetuate apartheid in South Africa the authorities there have increasingly committed acts of aggression and breaches of the peace,

Convinced that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of majority rule on the basis of the free and fair exercise of universal adult suffrage can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution in South Africa,

Noting that the so-called reforms in South Africa have the effect of further entrenching the apartheid system and further dividing the people of South Africa,

Recognizing that the policy of bantustanization deprives the majority of the people of their citizenship and makes them foreigners in their own country,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to take all necessary action for the eradication of apartheid, and, in particular, the need for increased and effective pressure on the South African authorities as a peaceful means of achieving the abolition of apartheid,

Encouraged, in this context, by the growing international consensus, as demonstrated by the adoption of Security Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985, and the increase in and expansion of national, regional and intergovernmental measures to this end,

Taking note of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa,

Convinced of the vital importance of the strict observance of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council instituted a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, and Security Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 concerning the import of arms, ammunition and military vehicles produced in South Africa, and of the need to make these embargoes fully effective,

Commending the national policies not to sell and export oil to South Africa,

Considering that measures to ensure effective and scrupulous implementation of such embargoes through international co-operation are essential and urgent,

Noting with deep concern that, through a combination of military and economic pressures, in violation of international law, the authorities of South Africa have increasingly resorted to economic reprisals and aggression against, and destabilization of, the neighbouring States,

Considering that contacts between apartheid South Africa and the front-line and other neighbouring States, necessitated by geography, colonial legacy and other reasons, should not be used by other States as a pretext for legitimizing the apartheid system or justifying attempts to break the international isolation of that system,

Convinced that the existence of apartheid will continue to lead to ever-increasing resistance by the oppressed people, by all possible means, and increased tension and conflict that will have far-reaching consequences for southern Africa and the world,

Convinced that policies of collaboration with the apartheid regime, instead of respect for the legitimate aspirations of the genuine representatives of the great majority of the people, will encourage its repression and aggression against neighbouring States and its defiance of the United Nations,

Expressing its full support for the legitimate aspiration of African States and peoples, and of the Organization of African Unity, for the total liberation of the continent of Africa from colonialism and racism,

1. Strongly condemns the policy of apartheid which deprives the majority of the South African population of their citizenship, fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Strongly condemns the South African authorities for the killings, arbitrary mass arrests and the detention of members of mass organizations as well as individuals, the overwhelming majority of whom belong to the majority population, for opposing the apartheid system and the state of emergency;

3. Further condemns the open and the covert aggressive actions, which South Africa has increasingly carried out for the destabilization of neighbouring States, as well as those aimed against refugees from South Africa and Namibia;

4. Demands that the authorities of South Africa:

(a) Release immediately and unconditionally Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, detainees and detainees;

(b) Immediately lift the state of emergency;

(c) Abrogate discriminatory laws and lift bans on all organizations and individuals, as well as end restrictions on and censorship of news media;

(d) Grant freedom of association and full trade union rights to all workers of South Africa;

(e) Initiate without pre-conditions a political dialogue with genuine leaders of the majority population with a view to eradicating apartheid without delay and establishing a representative government;

(f) Eradicate the bantustan structures;

(g) Immediately withdraw all their troops from southern Angola and end the destabilization of front-line and other States;

5. Urges the Security Council to consider without delay the adoption of effective mandatory sanctions against South Africa;

6. Further urges the Security Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the mandatory arms embargo instituted by it in resolution 418(1977) and of the arms embargo requested in its resolution 558(1984) and, within the context of the relevant resolutions, to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from South Africa;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to consider national legislative or other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on the apartheid régime of South Africa, such as:

(a) Cessation of further investment in, and financial loans to South Africa.

(b) An end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa.

(c) Prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa;

(d) Cessation of all forms of military, police or intelligence co-operation with the authorities of South Africa, in particular the sale of computer equipment;

(e) An end to nuclear collaboration with South Africa;

(f) Cessation of export and sale of oil to South Africa;

8. Appeals to all States, organizations and institutions recognizing the pressing need, existing and potential, of South Africa's neighbouring States for economic assistance:

(a) To increase assistance to the front-line States and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in order to increase their economic strength and independence from South Africa;

(b) To increase humanitarian, legal, educational and other such assistance and support to the victims of apartheid, to the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and to all those struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in South Africa;

9. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action for the cessation of all academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid régime of South Africa, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid,

10. Commends those States that have already adopted voluntary measures against the apartheid régime of South Africa in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/64 I of 10 December 1985 and invites those that have not yet done so to follow their example;

11. Reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the total eradication of apartheid and for the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society in which all the people, irrespective of race, colour or creed, enjoy fundamental freedoms and human rights;

12. Pays tribute to and expresses solidarity with organizations and individuals struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/35 H

10 November 1986 Meeting 64 149-2-5 (recorded vote)

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The other resolutions in the series on apartheid dealt with the situation in South Africa and assistance to liberation movements (41/35 A), relations between Israel and South Africa

(41/35 C), the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid (41/35 D), the status of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports (41/35 E), an oil embargo against South Africa (41/35 F) and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (41/35 G).

Before the voting on the draft resolutions, a vote was taken on a proposal by the United States that apartheid was an important question under Article 18, paragraph 2, of the United Nations Charter, requiring that the draft resolutions be decided by a two-thirds majority rather than by a simple majority. The proposal was rejected by a recorded vote of 113 to 20, with 21 abstentions.

With regard to resolution 41/35 B, the General Assembly decided by a recorded vote of 83 to 44, with 21 abstentions, to retain the words "and Israel" in the ninth preambular paragraph. The Assembly also retained by a recorded vote of 73 to 50, with 23 abstentions, the words "of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and others" in paragraph 5.

Several countries explained their votes on the question of sanctions. Botswana stated that it lacked the capacity to impose sanctions or take part in an oil embargo against South Africa and would therefore abstain on those resolutions, while Lesotho pointed out that it was completely surrounded by South Africa, depended on it for imports, exports and employment, and would consequently abstain from supporting sanctions.

Sweden, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), declared that they felt apartheid constituted a serious threat to international peace and security and that the Security Council should adopt effective, mandatory sanctions against South Africa to achieve the peaceful abolition of apartheid. Mandatory sanctions adopted by the Council would be the most effective instrument to that end; pending such sanctions, the Nordic countries had adopted unilateral measures against apartheid.

Voting against mandatory sanctions, the Federal Republic of Germany expressed the view that they were not an appropriate means of resolving the apartheid problem. Ireland had doubts about the wisdom of applying comprehensive sanctions at the current juncture, believing that the right policy was steady pressure for change through selective, graduated and mandatory sanctions, and Italy was convinced that effective, restrictive measures had to be based on consensus and that the goal should be to encourage such a consensus. The Netherlands feared that comprehensive sanctions would increase existing tensions, ruin South Africa economically, inflicting intolerable suffering on its people, and eliminate the chances for peaceful change. The United States declared that Governments should remain free to adopt the policies they deemed most effective for leading South Africa towards democratic government.

A number of Member States discussed their votes on the resolutions in general. Sweden, again speaking for the Nordic countries, said they agreed with the main thrust of the resolutions, but that some of them raised difficulties. First, the Nordic countries considered universality a basic principle and therefore could not accept paragraph 8 of resolution 41/35 B which called for the exclusion of South Africa from all United Nations organizations. Second, the need for peaceful solutions to conflicts was a fundamental principle of the United Nations; consequently, endorsement of armed struggle was unacceptable. Third, the Nordic countries deplored the practice of singling out individual countries or groups of countries as responsible for South African policies. Fourth, certain parts of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports encroached upon the constitutional freedoms of Nordic citizens and private organizations. Fifth, only the Security Council could adopt decisions binding on Member States.

Other countries also opposed endorsement of armed struggle. New Zealand held that firmer international action to facilitate negotiation between the parties in South Africa was needed, and the United Kingdom stressed that the EC countries remained convinced that peaceful change was possible in South Africa. Austria and Italy also held that view.

Among the States that opposed name-calling and arbitrary criticism of certain countries were Canada, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The principle of universality was violated by calls for the exclusion of South Africa from United Nations organizations, according to Ireland, the United Kingdom and the United States. The United States emphasized that exclusion would harm the oppressed majority of South Africa as much as the ruling class.

Belgium, Canada, France, Malawi, the Netherlands and the United States felt that they could not support the call for an oil embargo.

The International Convention against Apartheid in Sports was found by Canada, France, Greece, Ireland, the Netherlands and the United States to be incompatible with their constitutions or law. The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC member States, noted that sports in their countries were organized at private initiative.

With regard to resolution 41/35 H, Belgium, Canada, France, Japan and Portugal voted in favour, but noted that they had reservations about some of its provisions. Canada said it had already implemented the measures to increase pressure on South Africa, as listed in paragraph 7.

France pointed out that those measures were not necessarily the measures it might choose.

In accordance with an Assembly decision that organizations and individuals having a special interest in the item on apartheid would, at their request, be heard by the Special Political Committee, the Committee, on 22 October, heard statements by representatives of nine organizations.

On 5 November, by decision 41/412, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report.(32)

Other international action to eliminate apartheid

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the Assembly,(1) concluded that the international community had accelerated its efforts to bring pressure on South Africa and those collaborating with it.

Members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, OAU, the socialist States, the Commonwealth, the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Nordic States and other countries had undertaken measures aimed at isolating South Africa. The anti-apartheid movement—a grass-roots movement sustained by people in all walks of life—expanded its activities, not least in the major Western countries, particularly the United States, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan, which had the closest political and economic relations with South Africa.

The Special Committee denounced the misrepresentation of the struggle for freedom in South Africa and Namibia as terrorist activities and condemned any attempt to interpret the conflict in southern Africa as an East-West conflict.

Several meetings were sponsored by the Special Committee to mobilize action against apartheid. They included an International Seminar on the United Nations Arms Embargo against South Africa (see p. 134) and a United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa (see p. 136). On 27 June, the Special Committee held hearings on the situation in South Africa and student anti-apartheid action in the United States. The hearings focused on student strategies to increase general awareness of apartheid and to achieve divestment from South Africa; representatives of 29 universities and the national liberation movements of South Africa made statements.

The Chairman of the Special Committee carried out missions to discuss international action with governmental leaders. On 19 February, in Spain, the Chairman consulted with King Juan Carlos, who condemned apartheid as intolerable, and on 25 February, in Portugal, with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who reaffirmed his Government's opposition to apartheid. During a visit to Sweden to address an anti-apartheid event at the Swedish People's Parliament on 21 February, the Chairman exchanged views with the Foreign Minister on, among other things, Afro-Nordic co-operation and a 1985 Assembly resolution on public information and public action against apartheid.(33) In April, he visited the United Kingdom, conferring with members of Parliament, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and the Chairman of Barclays Bank; the latter stated that Barclays Bank would not commit new money to South Africa or be party to any formal debt rescheduling until apartheid ended. The Chairman of the Special Committee also held talks with the Minister for External Affairs of France in June and with Government officials of Pakistan and Nepal in November.

On behalf of the Special Committee, the Chairman issued statements and sent messages to Governments, organizations, universities, anti-apartheid groups and other institutions as well as individuals. In a 24 February statement, the Chairman condemned an agreement between South Africa and its creditor banks to ease South Africa's debt crisis as indirect support of its policies. In April, he sent letters to the chief executive officers of the following banks in the United States: Citibank, J. P. Morgan, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, Bank of America, Irving Trust, Chase Manhattan, Chemical Bank, Bank of Boston, Mellon Bank, Bankers Trust and Wells Fargo, urging them not to make further loans to South Africa. On 7 August, the Chairman welcomed the sanctions package adopted against South Africa by the heads of Government of Australia, the Bahamas, Canada, India, Zambia and Zimbabwe at a Commonwealth meeting (London, 4 August). On 31 July, the Acting Chairman expressed dismay that the United States Administration had recently agreed to increase textile imports from South Africa. He stated his satisfaction on 28 August with a measure adopted by the California State Legislature on divestment of state funds from companies doing business in South Africa (see below).

In further developments during the year, the European Economic Community (EEC) banned new investments in, and the importation of iron, steel and gold coins from, South Africa.(2) A ban on coal imports was not adopted because of the opposition of the Federal Republic of Germany and Portugal, which claimed that it would cause massive unemployment in South Africa. The European Parliament in October called on the EEC ministers to ban new bank loans and other loans to South Africa, imports of coal, uranium, gold, diamonds, textiles and agricultural products, purchases from companies owned by South Africa and exports of computers and oil. The United States Congress adopted the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act, banning new investments, except in firms owned by black South Africans, prohibiting new bank loans, banning coal, iron, steel, textile, uranium and agricultural imports, prohibiting United States companies from claiming credits on their United States corporate income tax for taxes paid to South Africa, and revoking landing rights for South African Airways.

At the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September), the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund (AFRICA Fund) was established. The Fund was intended to assist the front-line States to cope with problems arising in the event of sanctions against or by South Africa.

Relations with South Africa

In 1986, the General Assembly, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Commission on Human Rights and the Committee on colonial countries continued to urge that all States terminate their relations with South Africa.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee continued to monitor the implementation of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on apartheid and to promote the international campaign against apartheid.

Several Governments took punitive measures against South Africa in 1986. In January, a new law went into effect in Finland, making almost all links between Finland and South Africa illegal. In the same month, Norway adopted measures prohibiting the importation of fresh and processed South African fruits and vegetables and requiring shipowners to report to the Government all calls made to South African ports by Norwegian tankers. Denmark put into effect new anti-apartheid measures on 15 June, and the Foreign Ministers of the Nordic countries agreed at a meeting in Copenhagen, on 13 and 14 August that their countries would redouble their efforts to eradicate the apartheid system.

The Eminent Persons Group, established by the Commonwealth Summit in 1985, visited South Africa in March and May 1986 and held meetings with South African officials and black leaders, including Nelson Mandela; the Group proposed that negotiations take place between South African and black leaders following the release of Mr. Mandela and others. At a mini-summit meeting (London, August), the Commonwealth, with the exception of the United Kingdom, adopted a number of measures against South Africa.

Though the United States Administration was reluctant to take decisive action against South Africa, pressure was increasing from the Congress and in particular from the public for the Administration to reconsider its policy. Opposition to apartheid had centred in Congress around economic sanctions, while the public had focused its attention on the divestment campaign. At least 19 states, 68 cities and 119 universities had restricted the investment of public funds or the purchase of goods from corporations with investments in South Africa. In a major divestment move, the California State Senate passed legislation on 25 August requiring state pension and university funds to sell more than $11 billion worth of securities in companies doing business with South Africa.

Anti-apartheid groups in North America and Western Europe assisted in revealing violations of the arms embargo, contributed to the consumer boycott campaign, spearheaded the divestment campaign and helped to strengthen the cultural and sports boycott. For example, the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, which had headquarters in Norway, monitored infringements of the arms embargo and reported them to the United Nations. The Shipping Research Bureau of the Netherlands monitored the tankers transporting oil to South Africa. The British Anti-Apartheid Movement and the National Students' Union of the United Kingdom campaigned against Barclays Bank, which announced in November that it had sold its 40.4 per cent share in its South African subsidiary to the Anglo American Corporation of South Africa.

A campaign to force the Shell Oil Company to withdraw from South Africa was launched in Western countries and endorsed by anti-apartheid groups in South Africa. In addition, concerned stockholders in the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States had been pressing through special shareholders' meetings for discussion of Shell's withdrawal from South Africa.

The number of prominent entertainers, actors and others who visited South Africa had declined. However, pianists and singers from Brazil, Chile, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Italy, New Zealand, Puerto Rico, the Republic of Korea, the United Kingdom and the United States participated in the International Music Competition and the Third International Pianoforte Competition at Pretoria, South Africa, in January 1986.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia⁽³⁴⁾ organized an International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia (Vienna, 7-11 July) (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III), which adopted a Declaration and Programme of Action appealing to the United Kingdom and the United States to reconsider their opposition to comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa. The Conference called on all States to oppose the attempts by the United States and South Africa to link the implementation of the United Nations plan for a settlement of the Namibian question to irrelevant issues.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights urged all States that had not done so to cease any form of collaboration with or assistance to South Africa.

The Commission, on the same date,⁽⁷⁾ condemned the increased assistance rendered by the major Western countries and Israel to South Africa in the political, economic, financial and particularly the military field. It also condemned the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and other States with South Africa and urged them to cease supplying South Africa with nuclear equipment and technology. It called again on all Governments to take steps to ensure that trading, manufacturing and investing activities by their nationals in South Africa were stopped.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August,⁽³⁵⁾ the Committee on colonial countries condemned the collaboration of certain Western and other countries as well as TNCs that continued to make new investments in South Africa, and called on all States to terminate their collaboration with South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear areas. On the same date,⁽³⁶⁾ the Committee declared that the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by South Africa constituted a further effort to intimidate independent States in the region, and called on all States to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increased its nuclear capability.

The Committee, on 15 August,⁽³⁷⁾ requested all specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system to withhold financial, economic, technical and any other assistance from South Africa.

Related resolutions: GA 41/35 A-C, F and H, 41/39 A and B, 41/55 B; ESC 1986/1, 1986/22.

Communications. During 1986, several countries transmitted communications to the Secretary-General regarding their relations with South Africa.

On 26 February,⁽³⁸⁾ the Netherlands transmitted on behalf of the 12 EC member States a joint statement issued on 25 February, expressing their concern about the lack of progress towards the abolition of apartheid. They concluded that reforms proposed by South Africa fell short of the far-reaching measures required to abolish apartheid, and stressed the need for a national dialogue with South Africans excluded from the current government structure, the unconditional release of Nelson Mandela and all political prisoners, the lifting of the ban on ANC and other political parties and termination of the state of emergency.

Saudi Arabia, in a statement annexed to a 22 July letter,⁽³⁹⁾ reiterated its condemnation of the repressive measures taken by the authorities in South Africa to preserve apartheid and reaffirmed its support for the African peoples and States defending the rights of the people of South Africa and Namibia.

Zambia declared on 23 July⁽⁴⁰⁾ that it was disappointed in a policy statement on South Africa made the day before by the President of the United States. Fearing that the statement's emphasis on East-West rivalries and its negative characterization of liberation movements would embolden South Africa's intransigence, Zambia called on the United States to reconsider its policy, especially its rejection of economic sanctions.

On 19 September⁽⁴¹⁾ Japan stated that until South Africa demonstrated its intention to abolish apartheid it would prohibit the import of South African iron and steel, suspend the issuance of tourist visas for South African nationals, suspend air links with South Africa and prohibit the use of South African Airways by Japanese government officials. Previously, Japan had acted to keep its relations with South Africa at the consular level, restricted investment and financing, limited sporting, cultural and educational exchanges, prohibited the export of arms and computers to South Africa, and urged a halt in the import of kruggerand.

Australia announced, in a 4 December press release,⁽⁴²⁾ a ban on the import of coal, iron, steel and agricultural products from South Africa; it had recently imposed a ban on air links with South Africa and withdrawn visa-issuing facilities.

Report of the Secretary-General. In 1985, the General Assembly had adopted resolutions on comprehensive sanctions against South Africa⁽⁴³⁾ and on concerted international action to eliminate apartheid.⁽⁴⁴⁾ The latter resolution had requested the Secretary-General to report on its implementation. In February 1986, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid requested information from all United Nations Members on measures taken to implement both resolutions. In August, the Secretary-General submitted a report, with later addenda,⁽⁴⁵⁾ providing the replies of 37 Governments.

The following said they had no relations with South Africa: Barbados, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Haiti, India, Kenya, Mongolia, Rwanda, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yugoslavia.

Afghanistan said it fully adhered to the implementation of United Nations resolutions against apartheid.

Botswana said that its relations with South Africa were economic, but that it did not have diplomatic, cultural, military or nuclear dealings.

Canada had recently, among other things, tightened the United Nations embargo on arms to South Africa, abrogated the Canada-South Africa Double Taxation Agreement, applied an embargo on cargo and passenger flights, banned the promotion in Canada of tourism in South Africa, banned new investment in and new bank loans to South Africa, banned the import of South African agricultural products, uranium, coal, iron and steel, and closed the Canadian Embassy at Pretoria.

Denmark said that it had gradually severed its contacts with South Africa. Within the last year, it had prohibited new investments in South Africa, shut down diplomatic representation and introduced legislation that would lead to a total ban on coal imports and a general halt on all other imports from and exports to South Africa.

Japan said that, in addition to previous measures, it assisted the victims of apartheid by supporting international humanitarian and educational efforts through various United Nations funds and programmes.

Mexico said that pursuant to Assembly resolutions it had complied with the arms and oil embargoes, and did not maintain economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa, or engage in cultural, sports, academic or any other kind of exchanges. In addition, it held the view that the embargo on nuclear collaboration must be total, and had acted accordingly.

Sweden said that in 1986 it had prohibited imports of South African agricultural products, introduced a system for licensing all imports from and exports to South Africa, prohibited the assignment and lease of patents and manufacturing rights to South African and Namibian companies, and made more stringent the penalties for persons violating Swedish legislation on the arms embargo.

Sanctions and boycotts

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid urged the Security Council to consider without delay the appeals by the oppressed people of South Africa supported by the majority of States and by world public opinion for sanctions against South Africa.⁽¹⁾ The General Assembly should suggest that, as a first step, the Council determine that the policies and actions of South Africa constituted a grave threat to international peace and security in southern Africa and that comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter were imperative. The Special Committee also urged the Western Powers that continued to oppose sanctions to reassess their positions and co-operate in, rather than hinder, international action.

At the request of the Special Committee, the third register of entertainers, actors and others who had performed in South Africa was published. The circulation of the register encouraged the campaign for a cultural boycott of South Africa, particularly in the United Kingdom and the United States, the home countries of the majority of persons on the register. Anti-apartheid groups, trade unions, local authorities, cultural personalities and others had stepped up efforts to persuade those who had performed in South Africa not to perform there again.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, organized by the Council for Namibia, called in its Programme of Action for the Security Council to adopt comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa as the most effective peaceful means of forcing South Africa to withdraw from Namibia.⁽³⁴⁾ It appealed to the permanent members of the Security Council which had thus far prevented the Council from acting effectively to reconsider their position in the light of the grave situation in southern Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August,⁽³⁵⁾ the Committee on colonial countries appealed to mass media, trade unions and NGOs, as well as individuals, to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts to mobilize international public opinion against the apartheid policy of South Africa and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against it.

On the same date,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee recommended that the Security Council act against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation régime in Namibia and that the Council, which had been prevented from maintaining international peace and security in the region due to the opposition of certain Western permanent members, impose comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the request of the General Assembly that the Security Council urgently consider complete and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular the prohibition of technological assistance in the manufacture of arms; the cessation of collaboration in the nuclear area; the prohibition of loans to, and investments in, South Africa and the cessation of trade; and an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa.

On 10 March,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Commission called for the application of sanctions as proposed by the 1983 International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence⁽⁴⁸⁾ and the 1981 International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Related resolutions: GA 41/14, 41/35 A, B and F, 41/39 A, B and D, 41/101.

Military and nuclear relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid stated that South Africa's military buildup, its nuclear capability and its military and nuclear collaboration continued to be of major concern. Its 1986/87 military budget had increased more than three-fold over the 1984/85 budget in percentage terms—by 27.5 per cent over the 1985/86 figures, which had increased by 8.1 per cent over the 1984/85 figures—and accounted for 13.7 per cent of the national budget.

The defence budget, moreover, did not include the police budget, the amounts spent on defence buildings and property and on the South West Africa Territorial Force, foreign exchange received from the overseas sales of arms, defence and police expenditures in the "homelands" and "independent states", and the amount in the Special Defence Account.

With the aim of rendering the United Nations arms embargo against it ineffective, South Africa had been trying to portray itself as having achieved military self-sufficiency. For instance, it claimed to have developed four advanced military items: the Alpha-XH1, a combat helicopter; the missile-carrying Minister Class Strike Craft; the Eyrie, a pilotless aircraft used for both reconnaissance and attack; and the Cheetah, a jet fighter based on the French Mirage III. However, testimony at the May 1986 International Seminar on the United Nations Arms Embargo against South Africa refuted the self-sufficiency claims, pointing out that often what South Africa claimed to have developed was based on designs originating from other countries. According to a press report, the Alpha-XH1, like the Cheetah, was developed with French co-operation.

South Africa had also received assistance from a British company in the development of an explosive detector, which was currently being manufactured in South Africa with the co-operation of a British company. Another British firm was said to have exported to South Africa a military air defence system, reportedly with the approval of the British Government. Yet another British company was said to have been licensed by a South African defence electronics corporation as a marketing front for South Africa's military communication products, with the knowledge of the British Department of Trade and Industry. In addition to those developments which violated the United Nations arms embargo, the Government reportedly had permitted the training of South African army officers in the United Kingdom.

Intelligence exchanges between South Africa and other countries were another subject of concern. Press reports said that the United Kingdom and the United States had transmitted to South Africa sensitive information on ANC, including political intelligence and warnings of planned guerrilla attacks.

On 19 September,⁽²⁾ acting on information about a conference on the treatment of radioactive wastes in South Africa, the Special Committee sent a message to the African Group in the International Atomic Energy Agency drawing attention to South Africa's growing nuclear capability and continuing access to nuclear technology.

On 11 December, the Committee issued a statement on a number of transactions involving the sale of weapons and military equipment to South Africa. It urged Member States to halt such transactions and to abide by the Security Council's arms embargo.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly note with concern the massive military machine and repressive apparatus accumulated by South Africa as well as its nuclear-weapons capability. Considering South Africa's record of aggression, the Assembly should condemn the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain Western countries, Israel and others.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a January report⁽⁵⁰⁾ to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, examined the role of TNCs in supporting the military and nuclear sectors of South Africa. He stated that South Africa had developed an extensive domestic military production sector, based largely on licences granted by TNCs from France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States. The State-owned Armaments Corporation of South Africa (ARMSCOR) had forged a network that included more than 1,000 private companies as subcontractors, some of which were South African affiliates of TNCs.

ARMSCOR claimed to have dramatically reduced South Africa's dependence on foreign weapons. However, it was difficult to estimate the value of South Africa's military imports, in part owing to clandestine transactions; in addition, many components used by ARMSCOR were obtained on international markets through ordinary commercial transactions and were not counted as military imports, and many items produced by TNCs for the South African military had both civilian and military uses. For example, Plessey Radar Ltd. of the United Kingdom delivered a mobile control radar unit which, while designated for civilian use, was under the control of the South African Air Force. Sophisticated computers capable of military applications continued to be sold to South African business and government entities.

In some instances, South African affiliates of TNCs sold directly to the military. Subsidiaries of Philips Petroleum Company (the Netherlands) manufactured mobile radio and security systems and distributed military night-vision components. Perkins Engines Canada Ltd. and Daimler-Benz AG (Federal Republic of Germany) were part of a joint venture manufacturing diesel engines, a major military need.

TNCs had also contributed to the development of the South African nuclear sector, which included two nuclear power reactors, a research programme, a pilot uranium enrichment plant at Valindaba and a semi-commercial uranium enrichment plant under construction, also at Valindaba. They had sold equipment, including complete reactors, and construction and management services to South Africa for those facilities. For example, the two nuclear reactors at Koeberg, South Africa, were constructed by Framatome, a French consortium using technology licensed from Westinghouse Electric Corporation (United States). Framatome and Fluor Corporation (United States) maintained the Koeberg reactors under a government contract. It had been estimated that South Africa's pilot enrichment plant currently produced enough enriched uranium to build two or three nuclear bombs a year and might already have produced enough plutonium for 15 to 25 bombs. The semi-commercial enrichment plant would be capable of producing enough material to make 40 to 100 weapons per year.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia noted that the development of South Africa's nuclear capability was enhanced by its control over Namibia's uranium deposits. Namibian uranium resources were estimated at 135,000 metric tons of reasonably assured resources and 53,000 metric tons of estimated additional resources. The uranium oxide production capacity at the Rössing Mine, near the coastal town of Swakopmund, was estimated at 5,250 metric tons per year.

The development of South Africa's nuclear capability continued to be accelerated by the collaboration of certain Western States and Israel, which provided assistance in uranium extraction and processing, the supply of nuclear equipment, the transfer of technology, the provision of training and the exchange of scientists.

Meanwhile, in seeking to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia, South Africa had moved large numbers of troops into the Territory, recruited mercenaries from several countries and launched repeated acts of subversion and aggression against the front-line States (see p. 155).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and other States with South Africa and urged them to cease supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. The Commission called on Governments to end assistance to South Africa in the manufacture of arms and military supplies, particularly in the nuclear area, and welcomed the request by the General Assembly that the Security Council consider the adoption of mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular, the cessation of nuclear collaboration.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 11 August,⁽³⁵⁾ condemned the nuclear collaboration of certain Western and other countries with South Africa, and called on them to refrain from supplying it with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials. The Committee also condemned the plunder of Namibian uranium and called on all States to take measures in compliance with Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.

On the same date,⁽³⁶⁾ the Committee declared that the acquisition of nuclear-weapons capability by South Africa constituted an effort to terrorize independent States in the region, condemned the continuing support to South Africa in the military and nuclear fields, and called on certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, materials and training, which increased its nuclear capability.

Arms embargo

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee said that there had been indications of infringements of the 1977 mandatory arms embargo against South Africa. In December 1986, the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa said it had received reports that substantial shipments of weapons were about to be transported to South Africa. One report concerned the sale of 39 tons of machine-guns to South Africa by a brokerage company in Brussels, Air Charter Centre, to be sent through third-party countries; another report was related to an unspecified shipment, again from Brussels, involving a United States-owned firm called Overseas National; and a third report referred to a shipment of 20 tons of rocket-launching equipment from Switzerland to Johannesburg. In response to the World Campaign's intervention, Air Charter Centre refrained from transporting arms to South Africa.

Also in late 1986, it was reported that the State-owned Howaldtswerke Deutsche Werft AG Shipyard at Kiel, and Ingenieurkontor Lübeck, an engineering company, both of the Federal Republic of Germany, had delivered to the South African Embassy at Bonn from 1984 to 1985 microfilms of the blueprints of the U-209 submarine. In a 10 December letter, the Special Committee brought that information to the attention of the Permanent Representative to the United Nations of the Federal Republic of Germany.

On 11 December, the Committee issued a statement on impending sales of weapons and military equipment to South Africa and urged Member States to halt them.

Communication. On 29 August,⁽⁵¹⁾ Denmark stated that by a 14 July decree it had increased the maximum prison term for violations of the mandatory arms embargo from three to four years; furthermore, all profits from embargo violations were to be confiscated.

Seminar. The International Seminar on the United Nations Arms Embargo against South Africa (London, 28-30 May), organized by the Special Committee Against Apartheid in co-operation with the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, examined recent developments in the region, South Africa's military and nuclear capability, its capacity to produce and procure armaments, and the operation of the arms embargo.

In a final Declaration, which the Chairman of the Special Committee conveyed to the Secretary-General,⁽⁵²⁾ the Seminar recommended that the Security Council act on the recommendations of its Committee established by resolution 421(1977)⁽⁵³⁾ and contained in a 1980 report;⁽⁵⁴⁾ that the Committee draw up a comprehensive list of embargoed items; and that the voluntary embargo on imports of arms from South Africa, adopted by the Council in 1984⁽⁵⁵⁾ be made mandatory. Further, the Seminar proposed that States should adopt legislation to ensure that the embargo was implemented and prohibit the export to South Africa and Namibia of spare parts and arms-production technology; that the Security Council should require States to revoke licences with South Africa to manufacture arms; and that the Council should impose a mandatory ban on nuclear collaboration with South Africa as well as an oil embargo. Other recommended steps concerned the prohibition of investment in South Africa and the reporting on arms embargo violations by Member States and organizations to the United Nations.

The Chairman of the Security Council Committee established in 1977 submitted a report on the Seminar to the Council in August.⁽⁵⁶⁾

Activities of the Council for Namibia. South Africa was continuing to purchase arms, licences and technology from its allies, despite the huge buildup of its own armaments industry, according to the Council for Namibia. Its armaments procurement and production methods were shrouded in secrecy; nevertheless, available information indicated that certain Western Governments and corporations played a pivotal role in supplying South Africa with arms, components and technology.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August, ⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries condemned the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other countries, which it said constituted a violation of the arms embargo and posed a threat to international peace and security. The Committee urged that the Security Council consider the recommendations of the Committee established by resolution 421(1977)⁽⁵³⁾ and that it adopt further measures to widen the scope of resolution 418(1977)⁽²⁸⁾ to make it more effective.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 November, the Security Council acted to reinforce and make more comprehensive the 1977 arms embargo against South Africa.⁽²⁸⁾ It took this action in adopting by consensus resolution 591(1986).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 418(1977), in which it decided upon a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa,

Recalling its resolution 421(1977), by which it entrusted a committee consisting of all the members of the Council with the task of, among other things, studying ways and means by which the mandatory arms embargo could be made more effective against South Africa and to make recommendations to the Council,

Recalling its resolution 473(1980) on the question of South Africa,

Recalling the 1980 report of the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective,

Recalling resolution 558(1984), in which all States were requested to refrain from importing arms, ammunition of all types and military vehicles produced in South Africa,

Recalling further resolution 473(1980), by which the Security Council requested the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) to redouble its efforts to secure full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa by recommending measures to close all loopholes in the arms embargo, reinforce it and make it more comprehensive,

Reaffirming its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society in accordance with their inalienable human and political rights as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for further aggravating the situation and its massive repression against all opponents of apartheid, for the killing of peaceful demonstrators and political detainees, and for its defiance of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, in particular Security Council resolution 417(1977);

Reaffirming its resolution 418(1977) and stressing: the continuing need for strict application of all its provisions,

Mindful of its responsibilities under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Urges States to take steps to ensure that components of embargoed items do not reach the South African military establishment and police through third countries;

2. Calls upon States to prohibit the export of spare parts for embargoed aircraft and other military equipment belonging to South Africa and any official involvement in the maintenance and service of such equipment;

3. Urges all States to prohibit the export to South Africa of items which they have reason to believe are destined for the military and/or police forces of South Africa, have a military capacity and are intended for military purposes, namely, aircraft, aircraft engines, aircraft parts, electronic and telecommunication equipment, computers and four-wheel drive vehicles;

4. Requests of all States that henceforth the term "arms and related matériel" referred to in resolution 418(1977) shall include, in addition to all nuclear, strategic and conventional weapons, all military, paramilitary police vehicles and equipment, as well as weapons and ammunitions, spare parts and supplies for the aforementioned and the sale or transfer thereof;

5. Requests all States to implement strictly its resolution 418(1977) and to refrain from any co-operation in the nuclear field with South Africa which will contribute to the manufacture and development by South Africa of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

6. Renews its request to all States to refrain from importing arms, ammunition of all types and military vehicles produced in South Africa;

7. Calls upon all States to prohibit the import or entry of all South African armaments for display in international fairs and exhibitions under their jurisdiction;

8. Further calls upon States which have not done so to put an end to exchanges as well as to visits and exchanges of visits by government personnel, when such visits and exchanges maintain or increase South Africa's military or police capabilities;

9. Further calls upon all States to refrain from participating in any activities in South Africa which they have reason to believe might contribute to its military capability;

10. Requests all States to ensure that their national legislation or comparable policy directives guarantee that specific provisions to implement resolution 418(1977) include penalties to deter violations;

11. Further requests all States to adopt measures to investigate violations, prevent future circumventions and strengthen their machinery for the implementation of resolution 418(1977) with a view to the effective monitoring and verification of transfers of arms and other equipment in violation of the arms embargo;

12. Further requests all States, including States non-members of the United Nations, to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

13. Further requests the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, in pursuance of resolution 418(1977), to continue its efforts to secure full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa in order to make it more effective;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the implementation of the present resolution, the first report to be submitted as soon as possible but in any event no later than 30 June 1987;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 591(1986)

28 November 1986 Meeting 2723 Adopted by consensus

Draft by Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) (S/18474).

Introducing the draft, the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 421(1977) said it represented an attempt to close the loopholes and make more effective the arms embargo against South Africa. He urged that all States take both individual and collective measures to enforce the embargo.

Following the resolution's adoption, the United Kingdom stated that it had joined the consensus on the basis that the text clarified the 1977 resolution(28) rather than extending its provisions, with which the United Kingdom fully complied; paragraphs 3 and 4 should not be interpreted as restricting trade with South Africa in items intended for non-military purposes and that, with reference to the seventh preambular paragraph, it could not accept the legitimacy of armed struggle. France also emphasized that it abided strictly by all the measures related to the arms embargo, while the United States noted that the embargo, directed essentially at the South African military and police, was the kind of carefully targeted measure it had consistently supported. Pointing out that, according to the Council for Namibia, South Africa imported $2 billion worth of military equipment annually, the USSR said the resolution was a step in the right direction-the adoption of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions. Bulgaria believed that mandatory sanctions were the most effective means available to bring about the peaceful elimination of apartheid, and the Congo hoped that the Council would examine the possibility of imposing them.

Economic relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid reported that despite relatively favourable world market conditions for the South African economy, its performance showed serious signs of chronic sluggishness, mainly because of internal unrest and external pressure. Its current economic policy was based on an effort to stimulate the domestic economy. However, economic growth was constrained by the lack of productive investment, the acceleration of the rate of inflation, the partial exclusion from foreign capital markets and the reduced confidence of the business communities in the ability of the régime to solve the crisis in the country.

In 1986, the growth rate of the gross domestic product was less than 1 per cent. Gross domestic fixed investment declined by 16.5 per cent, which was significant as it showed a consistent downward trend; from 1981 to 1985 gross domestic investment declined by 21 per cent. According to official data, the average utilization of productive capacity in the manufacturing sector was 79.7 per cent in 1986, compared with 86.3 per cent in 1984. Businesses tended to invest in financial rather than productive assets, causing a sudden increase in speculative operations on the Johannesburg Stock Exchange. Inflationary pressures continued; the consumer price index rose by 18.6 per cent in 1986, compared with 16.2 per cent in 1985. Consequently, black workers' real purchasing power declined significantly, as food prices rose by 26 per cent in 1986. Unemployment remained high among blacks, amounting to 4.2 million out of a 12 million labour force.

The South African economy was heavily dependent on trade links with the rest of the world. Minerals and metals contributed preponderantly to export earnings, with gold accounting for about 40 per cent of export income. Western European and North American countries and Japan continued to be South Africa's main trading partners. Trade with Western European countries amounted to $22.6 billion in 1986, representing one third of its aggregate trade. Imports were vital to the economy. Its dependence on imported basic industrial chemicals and manufacturing was significant; approximately 80 per cent of imports represented capital and intermediate goods. Most of those products originated in Western industrial countries and could not easily be replaced by local production; given also its dependence on foreign investment and loans and its limited range of exports, South Africa remained vulnerable to international pressure.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August,⁽³⁵⁾ the Committee on colonial countries appealed to mass media, trade unions and NGOs to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against South Africa and to encourage a policy of systematic divestment in corporations doing business in South Africa.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February,⁽⁷⁾ called once again on all Governments to act in respect of their nationals and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that owned and operated enterprises in South Africa and Namibia to stop their trading, manufacturing and investing activities there. It welcomed the General Assembly's request that the Security Council consider the prohibition of loans to, and investments in, South Africa and the cessation of trade with South Africa.

Oil embargo

The United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa, organized by the Special Committee against Apartheid in co-operation with Norway (Oslo, 4-6 June), adopted a Declaration, stating that a total oil embargo represented the most important component of international action against South Africa.⁽⁵⁷⁾ Examining the shortcomings and loopholes in the current voluntary oil embargo, it stressed that an effective embargo should, among other things, prevent the sale, supply and transport of crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa, and prohibit assistance to South Africa through the provision of finance, technology, equipment or personnel for the production of hydrocarbon resources. It affirmed the need for the Security Council to adopt a mandatory oil embargo under Chapter VII of the Charter as soon as possible, and noted that the success of the embargo would depend not only on international measures but on the initiatives of private and voluntary organizations and trade unions.

On 28 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the request of the General Assembly that the Security Council consider an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa.

On 11 August,⁽³⁵⁾ the Committee on colonial countries called on those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take effective measures against the companies concerned to stop the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/35 F.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling its resolutions concerning an oil embargo against South Africa,

Welcoming the Declaration adopted by the United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa, held at Oslo from 4 to 6 June 1986, and the relevant provisions of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would complement the arms embargo in preventing aggression by the apartheid régime, its repression of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia and its attacks against neighbouring States,

Noting that while oil-exporting States have committed themselves to an oil embargo against South Africa very few major shipping States have done so,

Eking note of the recommendation of the Seminar that an intergovernmental mechanism should be established under the auspices of the United Nations to monitor compliance with the oil embargo,

Commending action taken by labour unions, student groups and anti-apartheid organizations against companies involved in the violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, and for the enforcement of the embargo,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the Declaration adopted by the United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa and commends it to the attention of all States;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the relevant provisions of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa pertaining to oil and petroleum products;

3. Urges the Security Council to take action urgently to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

4. Requests all States concerned, pending a decision by the Security Council, to adopt effective measures and/or legislation to broaden the scope of the oil embargo in order to ensure the complete cessation of the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia, whether directly or indirectly, in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate for each nation, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibility for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent access by South Africa to other sources of energy, including the supply of raw materials, technical know-how, financial assistance and transport;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to apartheid South Africa, including the provision of finance, technology, equipment or personnel for the prospecting, development or production of hydrocarbon resources, the construction or operation of oil-from-coal plants or the development and operation of plants producing fuel substitutes and additives such as ethanol and methanol;

(f) To prevent South African corporations from maintaining or expanding their holdings in oil companies or properties outside South Africa;

(g) To terminate the transport of oil to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(h) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered or owned by their nationals, that have unloaded oil in South Africa in contravention of embargoes imposed;

(i) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo;

(j) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo;

5. Decides to establish an Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa;

6. Authorizes the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with the chairmen of regional groups and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, to appoint eleven Member States as members of the Intergovernmental Group on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and to ensure representation of oil-exporting States and shipping States;

7. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, the monitoring of the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all necessary assistance to the Special Committee and to the Intergovernmental Group in the implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, to facilitate the monitoring of the oil embargo as recommended in the Declaration adopted by the United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa.

Against: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, United Kingdom, United states

Abstaining: Belgium, Botswana, Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Greece, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland.

France stated that it had reservations of an institutional nature regarding paragraph 3 and could not agree to the monitoring mechanism—an intergovernmental group—envisaged in paragraphs 5 to 8, which it felt went beyond the area of competence assigned to the General Assembly under the Charter.

In abstaining, Botswana pointed out that it lacked the capacity to impose economic sanctions against South Africa, while Malawi declared that for many reasons it could not support the resolution. Belgium held that it was up to the Security Council to impose the embargo, and Canada declared that it had already imposed an effective voluntary embargo and did not believe that the time for mandatory sanctions had arrived. Italy and the Netherlands noted that EC countries had already prohibited crude oil exports to South Africa.

Brazil expressed the hope that the proposed intergovernmental machinery would have the necessary authority to fulfil its task in an impartial manner. It noted that there was a need for new information on the supply of oil to South Africa, information that as yet had not seen the light of day, and reserved its position in regard to certain provisions of paragraph 4, specifying measures to be taken by States that might have legal effects on its national legislation. Iraq asserted that it was totally committed to an oil embargo against South Africa which should be implemented unconditionally.

Foreign investments and loans

Foreign investments made up about 10 per cent of all investments in South Africa, the Special Committee against Apartheid reported. More than 40 per cent of foreign investments represented British investments and 1,400 companies. The Federal Republic of Germany was the second largest investor, with 20 per cent and 350 companies, and the United States was the third largest, representing 17 per cent and 375 companies. About 100 of the largest United States corporations had South African subsidiaries or affiliates, and about 6,000 United States companies had business connections with South Africa.

South Africa continued negotiations with 30 major banks to reschedule all short-term payments for five years and to start repayment of capital in 1990. In March 1986, South Africa and its creditor banks agreed on a refinancing package, extending repayments on $14 billion in short-term debt that had come due at the end of 1985. South Africa was to make a 5 per cent repayment of its $8.6 billion foreign debt that matured at the end of March 1986. Following the debt accord, the South African Reserve Bank announced that it had swapped an undisclosed amount of gold as collateral for the foreign exchange needed to meet a $430 million foreign debt repayment due on 15 April.

The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly recognize that the cessation of all new foreign investments in and financial loans to South Africa would constitute an important step towards the elimination of apartheid. The Committee also asked that the Assembly condemn those TNCs which had stepped in to fill the vacuum with new investments upon the withdrawal of other corporations from South Africa.

On 28 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the request of the General Assembly that the Security Council consider the prohibition of all loans to and investments in South Africa.

Transnational corporations

Commission on TNCs. Two reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia were considered by the Commission on TNCs at its twelfth session in April 1986.⁽⁵⁸⁾

In January,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report summarizing the activities of transnational banks and TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, their role in the military and nuclear sectors and their employment practices. He stated that until recently TNCs had been reluctant to take a stand on apartheid. However, growing political unrest and the adverse effects of the extensive regulation of the economy needed to maintain apartheid had led some TNCs to change their stance, and it appeared that an increasing number were coming to assess their long-term interests as incompatible with the continuation of apartheid.

Since the summer of 1985, several TNCs had taken or were considering actions to terminate or reduce their presence in South Africa. Motorola Inc. of the United States had sold its South African manufacturing, service and distribution interests to a local firm, Altech. Alfa Romeo SpA of Italy was shutting down its auto assembly operations and seeking a local buyer. Renault and Peugeot, French automobile manufacturers, were terminating agreements under which their cars were assembled by South African companies. The Coca Cola Co. and PepsiCo Inc., United States soft drink bottlers, sold their South African operations to local business interests. Other United States firms, Apple Computer and Pan American Airways, closed their operations, while General Foods, International Harvester Co., Union Carbide Corp. and West Point Pepperell Inc. had sold their local operations.

In February,(59) the Secretary-General presented a report updating one of 1985(60) on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCS operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of United Nations decisions. The report summarized the relevant provisions of resolutions and other actions of the United Nations on the activities of TNCS in South Africa and Namibia and the measures taken by Member States.

The Commission adopted a draft resolution on the activities of TNCS in South Africa and Namibia and follow-up to the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons which had conducted hearings on those activities in 1985.(61) The draft was subsequently adopted by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,(7) the Commission on Human Rights called once again on Governments that had not done so to take measures in respect of their nationals and the companies under their jurisdiction that owned and operated enterprises in South Africa and Namibia, with a view to stopping their trading, manufacturing and investing activities there. The Commission also welcomed the 1984 decision of the General Assembly(62) to invite the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to continue to update the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting South Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted by roll-call vote resolution 1986/1.

Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and follow-up to the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, in particular resolution 1981/86 of 2 November 1981, in which it requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements for the organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia,

Recalling further its resolution 1985/72 of 26 July 1985, in which it invited all States, non-governmental organizations and all transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia to co-operate with the United Nations so as to facilitate the conduct of the hearings,

Noting with grave concern the deterioration of the situation in South Africa as evidenced by the recent increased brutality, indiscriminate killings and mass arrests of innocent persons, including children, by the authorities of the racist minority regime,

Concerned that some Governments of home countries of transnational corporations operating in southern Africa have not taken effective measures at the national level to respond directly to the concerns of the international community to prevent collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority regime in southern Africa,

1. Condemns the racist minority regime of South Africa and its brutal perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia for the fair, objective and balanced manner in which it conducted the hearings;

3. Welcomes and endorses the report and recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons as a reassuring step in the right direction towards the eradication of apartheid and the termination of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa;

4. Welcomes as an initial positive step the measures taken by certain home countries of transnational corporations to place restrictions on further investments in South Africa and on bank loans to the racist minority regime;

5. Strongly condemns those transnational corporations that continue to collaborate with South Africa in the nuclear, military and economic fields, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly;

6. Reiterates that the continued activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and their collaboration with the racist regime of Pretoria perpetuate the system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

7. Reaffirms that to eliminate apartheid and to terminate the illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist régime will require an effective, concerted programme of international action, endorsed by the whole international community, pursued in a systematic manner by Governments and other concerned bodies, and supported by monitoring and follow-up activities;

8. Urges all States, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations, transnational corporations and banks and other financial institutions to implement the recommendations made by the Panel of Eminent Persons with a view to contributing more effectively to the abolition of apartheid and the termination of the illegal occupation of Namibia in the light of the January 1987 deadline proposed by the Panel;

9. Decides that the present resolution should serve as an input to the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa to be held in Paris from 16 to 20 June 1986;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take all necessary steps to ensure the effective and urgent co-ordination and implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Panel;

(b) To report on an annual basis to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution, until the abolition of apartheid and the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia have been achieved;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the useful work of the Secretariat on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia through the collection and dissemination of information;

(b) To provide more detailed information on the profiles of transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia;

(c) To update, for submission to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its thirteenth session, the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority regime in that area and on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/1

19 May 1986 Meeting 15 34-2-6 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1986/L.14); agenda item 1.

Meeting numbers. ESC 8, 15.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Mozambique, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sweden, Turkey, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Against: United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Spain.

The Council approved operative paragraphs 3, 5, 6 and 8 by a roll-call vote of 23 to 2, with 11 abstentions.

The United States did not agree that the involvement of TNCs in the South African economy supported apartheid. It contended that the collision between the requirements of a growing industrial society and an essentially pre-industrial political ideology had accounted for many of the reforms that already had taken place. Nothing would be gained by weakening that process, which had increased black economic and political clout and in which United States and other foreign investment had played a part.

Australia, Canada and Sweden, speaking also on behalf of Finland and Iceland, said they had voted in favour of the resolution as a whole but abstained in the vote on paragraphs 3, 5, 6 and 8 because they contained some sweeping language and unbalanced references to support by TNCs for South Africa. Australia and Canada further indicated that they could not endorse all the recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons. The Federal Republic of Germany, also on behalf of Belgium, France, Italy, Spain and the United Kingdom, said they too could not endorse all the recommendations. The EC Code of Conduct for European TNCs operating in South Africa had been reinforced and progress by those TNCs in implementing the Code would favour peaceful change in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/95.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3382(XXX) and 3383(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 33/23 of 29 November 1978, 35/32 of 14 November 1980, 37/39 of 3 December 1982 and 39/15 of 23 November 1984,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Mindful of its resolution 3171(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 relating to permanent sovereignty over natural resources of both developing countries and territories under colonial and foreign domination or subjected to the apartheid régime,

Recalling its resolutions on military collaboration with South Africa, as well as Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, 421(1977) of 9 December 1977, 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and 569(1985) of 26 July 1985,

Taking into account, in particular, the relevant decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 28 to 30 July 1986, and by the Council of Ministers of that organization at its forty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 26 July 1986,

Taking note of the updated report prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa,

Reaffirming that any collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed peoples of southern Africa in their struggle for freedom and independence and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and of the international community,

Considering that such collaboration enables South Africa to acquire the means necessary to carry out acts of aggression and blackmail against independent African States,

Deeply concerned that the major Western and other trading partners of South Africa continue to collaborate with that racist régime and that their collaboration constitutes the main obstacle to the liquidation of that racist régime and the elimination of the inhuman and criminal system of apartheid,

Alarmed at the continued collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field,

Regretting that the Security Council has not been in a position to take binding decisions to prevent any collaboration in the nuclear field with South Africa,

Affirming that the highest priority must be accorded to international action to secure the full implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations for the eradication of apartheid and the liberation of the peoples of southern Africa,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist regime of South Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories;

2. Again reaffirms the right of those same peoples to dispose of those resources for their greater well-being and to obtain just reparation for the exploitation, depletion, loss or depreciation of those natural resources, including reparation for the exploitation and abuse of their human resources;

3. Vigorously condemns the collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and other States, as well as the transnational corporations and other organizations which maintain or continue to increase their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields, thus encouraging that regime to persist in its inhuman and criminal policy of brutal oppression of the peoples of southern Africa and denial of their human rights;

4. Reaffirms once again that States and organizations that give assistance to the racist régime of South Africa become accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, colonialism and apartheid perpetrated by that regime, as well as in the acts of aggression against the liberation movements and neighbouring States;

5. Requests the Security Council urgently to consider the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations against the racist regime of South Africa, in particular:

(a) The prohibition of all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa;

(b) The cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field;

(c) The prohibition of all loans to, and all investments in, South Africa and the cessation of any trade with South Africa;

(d) An embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa;

6. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to extend all possible co-operation to the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities for his updated report;

8. Reaffirms that the updating of the report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa is of the greatest importance to the cause of fighting apartheid and other violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia;

9. Invites the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as the Rapporteur may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report to the General Assembly at its forty-third session;

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as other relevant sources, in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist régime of South Africa;

(c) To intensify direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, with a view to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating his report;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance, including adequate travel funds, that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view in particular to intensifying direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid, to expanding his work on the annotation of certain selected cases as reflected in the list contained in his report and to continuing the computerization of future updated lists;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1986/145 of 23 May 1986, to make available to the Special Rapporteur two economists to help him to develop his work of analysis and documentation of some special cases mentioned in his report;

12. Takes note with satisfaction of the disinvestment measures, trade restrictions and other positive measures taken by some countries and transnational corporations and encourages them to continue in this direction;

13. Calls upon the Governments of the countries where the banks, transnational corporations and other organizations named and listed in the updated report are based to take effective action to put a stop to their trading, manufacturing and investing activities in the territory of South Africa as well as in the Territory of Namibia illegally occupied by the racist Pretoria régime;

14. Urgently requests all specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, to refrain from granting loans or financial assistance of any type to the racist régime of South Africa;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the updated report to the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, other bodies concerned within the United Nations system and regional international organizations;

16. Invites the Secretary-General to give the updated report the widest dissemination, to issue it as a United Nations publication and to make it available to learned societies, research centres, universities, political and humanitarian organizations and other interested groups;

17. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and regional, intergovernmental and other organizations concerned to give wide publicity to the updated report;

18. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to give high priority at its forty-third session to the consideration of the updated report;

19. Decides to consider at its forty-third session, as a matter of high priority, the item entitled "Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa", in the light of any recommendations which the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee against Apartheid may wish to submit to it.

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 126-10-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/41/786) by vote (108-9-16), 27 October (meeting 251; draft by Benin, for African Group (A/C.3/41/L.12); agenda item 84.

Financial implications. S.G., A/C.3/41/L.23.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 3rd Committee 4-15, 23, 25; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Cameroon, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Bhutan,^a Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Malawi, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

^a Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

In separate votes, the tenth preambular paragraph and paragraph 3 were retained in the Third Committee by 76 votes to 24, with 25 abstentions, and in the Assembly by a recorded vote of 88 to 28, with 32 abstentions.

Explaining its vote on the draft resolution, Lesotho said its explanation was applicable also to other similarly worded resolutions. It said that it was always difficult for it to vote for draft resolutions on the imposition of sanctions against South Africa because it was not in a position to impose such sanctions; under those circumstances, it would abstain in the vote on such draft resolutions or paragraphs thereof to that effect.

IMF and World Bank relations with South Africa

A number of United Nations bodies called on the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank during 1986 to sever relations with South Africa.

On 28 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights urgently requested all specialized agencies, particularly IMF, to refrain from granting any type of loan or financial assistance to South Africa. On 11 August,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries called again on IMF and its members to terminate co-operation with and assistance to the South African régime, while on 15 August,⁽³⁷⁾ it expressed the view that IMF and the World Bank should end their links with and assistance to South Africa.

Related resolutions: GA 41/15, 41/35 B, 41/39 A; ESC 1986/48.

Israel-South Africa relations

In October 1986⁽⁵⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid stated that there had been many reports confirming that military and nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa was expanding and ranged from scientific exchanges to arms production and procurement. On 13 January, National Public Radio of the United States reported that, according to a Tel Aviv University study, Israeli arms sales to South Africa were about $300 million a year.

The press reported that an important loophole in the current arms embargo against South Africa was the export to it of dual-purpose radar, computers and aircraft. Israeli and South African companies were co-operating in the development of a pilotless aircraft; while the aircraft was to be used for crop-spraying, the impact it might have on the South African military could not be underestimated.

More than 250 firms in Israel belonged to the South African-Israeli Chamber of Commerce, one of which was the steel plant of Iskoor, a joint venture of Koor Industries of Israel and the Iron and Steel Corporation of South Africa. Iskoor currently produced about half of Israel's steel.

South Africa was said to be seeking ways to avoid the impact of international sanctions and, as a result of trade discussions with Israel in August, it was reported that South Africa had agreed to maintain investments of more than $100 million in Israel. Israel had been granted fishing rights in South African territorial waters and would continue to import South African coal with cheap credits.

On several occasions, the Special Committee had reported that South Africa had used its close relationship with Israel to export goods through Israel to the United States and EEC. South Africa took advantage of facilities, including duty-free treatment, granted by EEC to Israel. South African manufacturers exported goods to Israel, which then re-exported them to western European countries with Israeli labels, qualifying them for preferential treatment.

The Special Committee again recommended to the General Assembly that it request the Secretary-

General to give particular attention to the dissemination of information on the collaboration between Israel and South Africa by the Department of Public Information and the Centre against Apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/35 C.

Relations between Israel and South Africa The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on relations between Israel and South Africa,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Taking note of the relevant provision of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Special Committee to expose the increasing collaboration between Israel and South Africa,

Reiterating that the increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist regime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, in defiance of resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, is a serious hindrance to international action for the eradication of apartheid, an encouragement to the racist régime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid and a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent and constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

1. Again strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration of Israel with the racist regime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields;

2. Demands that Israel desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the economic, military and nuclear fields, and abide scrupulously by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

3. Calls upon all Governments and organizations in a position to do so to exert their influence to persuade Israel to desist from such collaboration;

4. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for publicizing information on the growing relations between Israel and South Africa and promoting public awareness of the grave dangers of the alliance between Israel and South Africa;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to publicize, as widely as possible, information on the relations between Israel and South Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to render, through the Department of Public Information and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, all possible assistance to the Special Committee in disseminating information relating to the collaboration between Israel and South Africa;

7. Further requests the Special Committee to keep the matter under constant review and to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

General Assembly resolution 41/35 C

10 November 1986 Meeting 64 102-29-26 (recorded vote)

41-nation draft (A/41/L.26 & Corr. & Add.1): agenda item 33.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Burma, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Jamaica, Japan, Lesotho, Liberia, Nepal, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Swaziland, Uruguay.

Austria, Belgium, Italy and the United States explained that they opposed singling out one country or another in Assembly resolutions for actions committed by many, and that such a practice did not promote the cause of the oppressed people of South Africa. Malawi described the draft resolution as very strange in that if the Assembly were to speak of collaborators with South Africa it could speak of many more doing much more serious things.

Belize stated that the draft was an example of name-calling, that there were many nations that had relations with South Africa, yet only one was mentioned.

Situation in South Africa

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In 1986, (1) South Africa's crisis had deepened. The Special Committee against Apartheid said that in desperation South Africa had intensified repression, ruling with police state methods, and that escalating State violence had led to increased popular resistance.

Arrests, detentions, torture, bannings and deaths in detention were rampant. From September 1984 to August 1986, an estimated 2,600 people had been killed, mostly as a result of police and military violence. Security forces utilized dogs, whips, tear-gas, bird-shot, rubber bullets and live ammunition to disperse demonstrators. On 2 January 1986, at least 16 persons died in the Moutse area, near Johannesburg, over the issue of forced removal. Later in the same month, police killed seven Africans while breaking up a meeting of 500 miners in Bekkersdal, near Pretoria. Between 15 and 18 February, 23 persons died in police violence against protestors in Johannesburg's black township of Alexandra. About 50 people were killed and some 70,000 made homeless in violence at Crossroads and the Khay-Elitsha Township Council squatter camp during May and June. Ultra-right-wing whites, notably the Afrikaner Weerstand Beweging, repeatedly attacked and killed black township residents and also supported and supplied régime-sponsored vigilantes. News reports referred to "death squads" organized by the authorities and responsible for assassinations and disappearances of black activists.

In February, about 65 persons were placed under effective bans. In March, the Reverend George Daniel, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Pretoria, and others submitted an affidavit to the Supreme Court in Mmabatho concerning more than 50 incidents of torture and assault by the police of the Bophuthatswana "homeland". The Internal Security Act was amended to permit 180-day detention, and the Public Safety Act was amended to authorize the Minister of Law and Order to declare "unrest areas" where he thought extraordinary measures were required.

The Detainees' Parents Support Committee reported that since 1986 the number of political trials had increased steadily. Any form of popular mobilization-boycott, stay-away, street committee or "people's court" was a chargeable activity. Many trials were based on false charges of treason, arson, subversion, murder and public violence.

The South African regime continued to implement the homelands policy. Despite the opposition of residents, it incorporated the area known as Moutse into the homeland of KwaNdebele; on 12 August, the "legislative assembly" of KwaNdebele rejected the status of "independence". Some 160 persons were killed from May to August resisting South Africa's attempt to thrust "independence" on KwaNdebele.

By Proclamation 38 of 1986, the homelands were given new powers to ban organizations, speeches or publications and restrict the movement of people. They might also remove people from one area to another within the homeland and prohibit the entry of people from other areas. More than 3 million Africans had been forcibly resettled in the homelands since the 1960s. As a result, those areas suffered from severe overcrowding, hunger, malnutrition and lack of health care. Over 40 per cent of the population was malnourished. Some 55 per cent of deaths were of children under the age of five and less than 20 per cent of the children had something to eat before going to school.

Despite repressive measures, the liberation movements in South Africa intensified their armed and underground struggle. A merger of their struggle with popular resistance was reflected in an increased number of armed attacks (see p. 121).

The black labour movement was playing a greater role than ever before in the struggle against apartheid. The establishment of the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU) in December 1985, with a membership of more than 500,000, based on non-racial principles, had increased the movement's capacity for political action. COSATU included the National Union of Mineworkers and the affiliates of the Federation of South African Trade Unions, which it succeeded. According to the Director-General of South Africa's Department of Manpower, more people than ever before were involved in strikes. Twice as many workdays were lost due to strike action in January 1986 as in January 1984; an estimated 500,000 workdays were lost in the first three months of 1986. Hardest hit were the mining and manufacturing sectors.

School boycotts and other actions by black students were met with harsh measures in August. Police and army personnel were installed at some schools, fences were erected around others and students were required to carry identity cards. The National Education Crisis Committee was created to intensify the struggle against "bantustan education".

The church continued to play an active role in the movement against apartheid. Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the Reverend Allan Boesak and Beyers Naude called for sanctions against South Africa. Churches also condemned the role of the military and police in maintaining apartheid, and were supported by democratic white organizations such as the End Conscription Campaign, the Black Sash and the National Union of South African Students.

The South African regime, meanwhile, had made some changes in apartheid legislation. It had abolished the "pass laws", revised segregationist legislation concerning certain public places and announced its intention to establish a non-elective, advisory national council. Those changes were termed cosmetic by the black population, which pointed out that the objectives of the former pass laws might be achieved through other legislation such as the anti-squatter laws, public health regulations, slum-clearance laws, the Group Areas Act and the non-availability of housing.

On 12 August, the ruling National Party convened a federal Congress which reaffirmed the policy of apartheid.

The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic State; and demand that South Africa immediately release all political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela and Zephania Mothopeng, guarantee the safe return of political exiles, rescind the ban on the national liberation movements, political organizations and individuals and permit freedom of expression, assembly and political activity.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the human rights situation in South Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII), expressing deep concern at the escalation of human rights violations since the imposition of the state of emergency in July 1985, particularly the repression of opponents of apartheid, the unrestrained use of violence against unarmed demonstrators, the banning of organizations, the persecution of the trade-union movement, the emergence of abductions, disappearances and assassinations of activists, the killing and torture of captured freedom fighters, the persistence of a discriminatory educational system for black South Africans, the detention and incarceration of minors and the restrictions on the mass media in their reporting on apartheid.

The Commission rejected South African manoeuvres to avoid the abolition of apartheid through so-called reform measures, denounced the policy of "bantustanization" (confining the homes of black people to areas known as bantustans) and forced removals of the black population, and decided that its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa should continue its investigation of human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia. The Working Group prepared a progress report⁽⁶³⁾ on violations of human rights in southern Africa, including bantustanization and forced removals, bannings, detentions, torture, deaths in detention, the right to education and freedom of expression and trade-union rights.

On 14 March,⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Commission authorized its Chairman to appeal to the President of South Africa for the release of Mr. Mandela, Mr. Mothopeng and other political prisoners as a step towards fostering understanding among the people of South Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 1986/22.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Alarmed by the stepped-up repression and indiscriminate killing, maiming and detention of opponents of the apartheid system,

Noting the concern of women throughout the world about the continuing degradation and abuse to which African women and children are daily subjected by the white minority régime of South Africa,

Recalling that that concern was expressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which also contain proposals for various forms of assistance to be rendered to women and children inside South Africa and to those who have become refugees,

Recognizing that the inhuman exploitation and dispossession of the African people by the white minority regime is directly responsible for the appalling conditions under which African women and children live,

Further recognizing that the equality and emancipation of African women cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle for national liberation and self-determination of the indigenous people and the total destruction of the racist régime of South Africa,

1. Condemns unequivocally the South African regime for the imposition of the state of emergency, the forcible separation of black families and the detention and imprisonment of women and children;

2. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners, who increasingly include women and children;

3. Commends the tenacity and bravery of those women inside South Africa and outside who have resisted oppression, who have been detained, tortured and killed, whose husbands, children and relatives have been detained, tortured and killed and who, despite this, have remained steadfast in their opposition to the racist régime;

4. Acknowledges the efforts of those Governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals that have campaigned for and applied sanctions against the racist régime;

5. Calls upon those countries that support or collaborate with the racist regime to desist from such support or collaboration in the political, military, economic and nuclear spheres;

6. Further calls upon Governments, in view of the deterioration of the situation in South Africa, as a matter of urgency, to impose comprehensive sanctions in accordance with Security Council resolutions and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

7. Urges Member States and United Nations organizations to give effect forthwith, in consultation with the liberation movements, to the Forward-looking Strategies that deal with women and children under apartheid; particular attention should be given to education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities and the strengthening of the women's sections of the liberation movements.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/22

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 442-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) by recorded vote (44-2-6). 20 May (meeting 19); draft by Commission on the Status of Women (E/1986/24 and Corr.1,2); agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan.

Paragraph 6 was approved by recorded votes: in the Second Committee by 43 to 3, with 5 abstentions, and in the Council by 43 to 3, with 6 abstentions.

The United States said that apartheid must be dismantled in a way that did not cause additional suffering to the South African people and their neighbours; it regretted that the extreme wording of the resolution had forced the United States to vote against it. Canada expressed a similar view, and the Federal Republic of Germany said that the resolution presented a somewhat distorted picture of the issues.

Australia pointed out that, while it had supported the resolution, it had abstained on paragraph 6; it was in favour of mandatory economic sanctions, but comprehensive sanctions went beyond its current policy.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council considered the question of South Africa at two meetings in 1986. On 13 June, the Council President issued a statement in observance of the tenth anniversary of the killings at Soweto. On 28 November, the Council adopted resolution 591(1986), in which it called on States to take further steps to implement the arms embargo against South Africa.

In a 10 June letter,⁽⁶⁵⁾ on behalf of the Group of African States, Zaire requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the serious situation in South Africa. The Council met on 13 June, with Guyana, India, Romania and Zaire invited at their request to participate in the debate without the right to vote. The Council also invited, under rule 39a of its provisional rules of procedure, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

Zaire recalled the Soweto massacre on 16 June 1976(66) of black demonstrators protesting the imposition of Afrikaans as the language to be used for education in black high schools. Since then, black students and parents had continued to reject a system of separate education that gave white youth an education far superior to that given black youth. Zaire declared that the African Group felt the international community could not await further massacres to adopt measures against South Africa commensurate with the atrocities it was committing, and that it was time for the international community to support the liberation of South African blacks.

The United Kingdom and the United States regretted that the proposed Council statement did not give more emphasis to ending apartheid through peaceful dialogue and means. The USSR regretted that the statement did not go far enough on the matter of adopting effective sanctions against South Africa under the United Nations Charter. Bulgaria endorsed the imposition of mandatory comprehensive sanctions as the only way to eradicate apartheid.

After consultations with Council members, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽⁶⁷⁾

"The members of the Security Council, on the occasion of the observance of the tenth anniversary of the wanton killings perpetrated by the apartheid regime in South Africa against the African people in Soweto, wish to recall Council resolution 392(1976) which strongly condemned the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killings of the African people including schoolchildren and students and others opposing racial discrimination. They are convinced that a repetition of such tragic events would aggravate the already serious threat that the situation in South Africa poses to the security of the region and could have wider implications for international peace and security.

"They condemn the policy and all the repressive measures which only serve to perpetuate the apartheid system, in particular the recent imposition of a nationwide state of emergency and the arrest and detention of thousands of persons involved in the struggle against apartheid. They urge the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained in this respect. In particular, they call for the immediate lifting of the state of emergency in order to allow the observance of the tenth anniversary of the Soweto massacre without any provocative interference or intimidation on the part of the police and military forces.

"In this regard, the members of the Council, committed as they are to work for a just and equitable solution which will totally eradicate apartheid and avert further human suffering in South Africa, warn the South African Government that it will be held fully responsible for any violence, bloodshed, loss of life, injury and damage to property which may result from acts of repression and intimidation on the occasion of the observance of the tenth anniversary of the Soweto massacre.

"The members of the Security Council reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the total elimination of apartheid and recall previous resolutions calling upon the racist régime in South Africa to abolish apartheid and to establish a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult

⁶⁵Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

universal suffrage by all the people in a united and unfragmented South Africa.”

Meeting number. SC 2690.

Communications. During 1986, a number of States addressed communications to the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council on the situation in South Africa.

On 13 June,(68) South Africa transmitted a statement declaring that the 13 June Security Council meeting and statement on the anniversary of the Soweto massacre was calculated to fan the fires of hate, violence and revolution and constituted a misuse of the Council, particularly if the Council's primary role to maintain peace and security was kept in mind. In a 16 June message,(69) the Prime Minister of India said that the anniversary of Soweto was a reminder that South Africa's policies had not changed and that the fresh proclamation of an emergency and the assumption of draconian powers by the South African authorities had unleashed terrorism on a massive scale. On 7 January(70), Senegal conveyed the information that at Dakar it had given the name Soweto to the square in front of the National Assembly and named the main street running into the square Avenue Nelson Mandela. On 3 February,(71) it forwarded a 31 January statement by its President and current OAU Chairman on the prerequisites necessary for national dialogue in South Africa.

Japan regretted on 13 June(72) the reimposition by South Africa of a state of emergency on 12 June as a means of strengthening the oppressive measures taken to quell the riots stemming from apartheid. Referring to the state of emergency, the Foreign Minister of Tunisia in a 14 June letter(73) stated that it was imperative that the Secretary-General use his authority to arrest the escalation of violence and terror in South Africa. Democratic Kampuchea, on 13 June,(74) demanded that South Africa immediately lift the emergency as well as end the apartheid system.

On 27 August,(75) the Congo transmitted a decision adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government in July that provided for a campaign to paint a true picture of the racist régime of South Africa and recommended to all Governments and teachers that the first lesson of the school year 1986/87 be devoted to apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/35 A, Situation in South Africa and assistance to the liberation movements

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling its resolution 40/64 B of 10 December 1985,

Reaffirming that the international community, and the United Nations in particular, have a special responsibility to assist the people of South Africa and their liberation movements in their heroic struggle against apartheid and for the full exercise of their right to self-determination within a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the institutionalized and continuing escalation of the reign of repressive and increasing state terror by the racist régime, the maintenance of the state of emergency, the virtually limitless powers of the police and security forces to arrest, detain, torture and kill opponents of apartheid, the use of regime-sponsored death squads and vigilantes to spread fear as well as the establishment and operation of “reorientation camps” by the racist regime to attempt brainwashing former detainees into acquiescence,

Gravely concerned at the increasing use of capital punishment by the racist régime against freedom fighters and patriots and their execution in defiance of international protests and appeals, and alarmed that the racist régime is now applying collective death penalties as in the case of the six Sharpeville patriots sentenced for opposing the imposition of the “new constitution” in September 1984,

Noting with indignation that the apartheid regime is persisting with its policy of “bantustanization” aimed at further uprooting the oppressed People of South Africa, dispossessing it of its inalienable rights, depriving it of citizenship and fragmenting the country,

Gravely concerned, in this regard, that the Pretoria racist régime has continued its odious practice of forced removals,

Deploping the imposition of censorship and other restrictions on the media by the racist regime, in particular on press reports and the transmission of audio-visual material, aimed at concealing the ruthless atrocities perpetrated by the apartheid régime from world public opinion,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their right to choose all available means, including armed struggle, for the total eradication of apartheid,

Noting with grave concern the escalation of the aggression, state terrorism, and destabilization through political subversion and economic blackmail by the apartheid régime against independent African States,

Stressing that the racist apartheid régime is the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa, and that as long as it exists there will be neither peace in the region, nor security for any country nor true independence for Namibia, and that it must, therefore, be eradicated,

Recognizing the continued collaboration with and active support of the racist regime by certain Western and other Governments, transnational corporations, banks and other financial institutions as a major obstacle to the efforts of the oppressed people of South Africa and the international community for the total eradication of apartheid,

1. Strongly condemns once again the policies and practices of apartheid of the racist regime of South Africa, in particular its brutal oppression, repression and genocidal violence against the people of South Africa;

2. Reaffirms its full support to the people of South Africa in their struggle, under the leadership of their national liberation movements, for the total eradication of apartheid, so that they can exercise their right of self-determination in a free, democratic, unfragmented and non-racial South Africa;

3. Commends the people of South Africa and the liberation movements for their heroic and sustained struggle against the apartheid regime and reaffirms the legitimacy of their struggle as well as their right to choose the necessary means, including armed struggle, to attain their noble objectives;

4. Commends the trade unions, student associations, women's organizations and other mass organizations in South Africa that have associated themselves with the struggle of the people for the elimination of apartheid in the face of the onslaught by the regime;

5. Commends the independent African States in southern Africa for their tremendous sacrifices and for their continuing support to the people of South Africa and their liberation movements;

6. Strongly condemns the continued and increasing use of capital punishment against freedom fighters and patriots, and their execution in defiance of international protests and appeals;

7. Demands that existing death sentences against and further executions of freedom fighters and patriots be annulled and halted, and that the six Sharpeville patriots be released immediately;

8. Demands once more that captured freedom fighters in South Africa be treated as prisoners of war in accordance with Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949;

9. Further demands the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees in South Africa, including Nelson Mandela and Zephania Mothopeng;

10. Vehemently condemns the racist regime of South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its escalation of aggression, state terrorism, and destabilization through political subversion and economic blackmail against independent African States;

11. Condemns the continued collaboration with the apartheid régime by Governments of certain Western and other countries, transnational corporations, banks and other financial institutions, which gives encouragement to the racist regime in its repression of the legitimate struggle of the people and in its defiance of the demand of the international community for the total eradication of apartheid;

12. Affirms the view that the occupation of southern Angola by the racist régime was in large part facilitated by the policies pursued by the United States Administration in the region, especially its support for the armed criminal bandits of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola and its policies of "constructive engagement" and "linkage";

13. Strongly condemns the state of emergency in South Africa and requests that the international community exert maximum pressure on the apartheid régime, including comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, as the most appropriate, effective and peaceful means available for the elimination of apartheid, the liberation of Namibia and the maintenance of peace in southern Africa, in order to attain the total eradication of apartheid, and especially press on:

(a) Immediate lifting of the state of emergency;

(b) Immediate withdrawal of racist troops from and around the townships;

(c) Immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners, including those detained under the state of emergency;

(d) Immediate end to repression, violence and terror South Africa;

(e) Abrogation of bans on political organizations;

(f) Immediate and unconditional guarantee for the safe return of South African political exiles who have been arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter their own country;

(g) Cessation of all military, political and economic action aimed at destabilizing independent African States, and respect for their independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity;

14. Strongly condemns the continued forced removals of black communities by the Pretoria racist regime;

15. Appeals to all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, mass media, city and other local authorities as well as individuals urgently to increase political, economic, educational, legal, humanitarian and all other forms of necessary assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements;

16. Also appeals to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to step up material, financial and other forms of support to the front-line and other member States of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and to assist them in resisting the aggression, state terrorism and destabilization through political subversion and economic blackmail by the racist régime;

17. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity—namely, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other appropriate bodies.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan; Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Luxembourg, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Canada, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

The words "by the United States Administration" were retained in paragraph 12 by a recorded vote of 60 to 52, with 35 abstentions.

Belgium and Italy believed that the explicit endorsement of armed struggle in United Nations resolutions was inappropriate and also opposed singling out individual States or groups of States as bearing alleged responsibility for the situation in South Africa.

The Netherlands abstained because of its wish for peaceful change in South Africa, its rejection of name-calling and arbitrary criticism of certain States, and its view that the South Africa situation was not a colonial one and that therefore ANC and PAC were anti-apartheid rather than liberation movements. Canada and Ireland could not vote for a resolution favouring armed struggle, while Belize pointed out that it had abstained in the vote on paragraph 12 singling out the United States, but supported the resolution because it addressed itself to the early abolition of apartheid.

Malawi noted that it had voted in favour of the resolution but did not agree with the inclusion of paragraph 13.

Political prisoners and other detainees

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to monitor the situation facing political prisoners in South Africa and to campaign for their release. It reported⁽¹²⁾ that evidence showed that torture and ill-treatment of detainees were rampant. Several organizations in South Africa, including the Detainees' Parents Support Committee and the National Medical and Dental Association, had published reports indicating the grave effects of prolonged incarceration and torture, especially on children. In April and May 1986 alone (1)seven detainees died in police custody.

The South African Minister of Law and Order disclosed in Parliament in April the capture of several PAC lighters, including Enoch Zulu, the second in command of PAC's armed wing, who had been wanted by police since 1962.

The Special Committee, on 22 January, condemned the trial of 22 opponents of the apartheid system, including leading members of the United Democratic Front (UDF) and community-based organizations. It emphasized that in undertaking that trial South Africa stood in defiance of the United Nations which had repeatedly called on it to cease repression and release all political prisoners.

The Chairman or Acting Chairman of the Special Committee issued several statements during the year on developments in South Africa. On 2 May, the Chairman called on the international community to condemn the new Public Safety Amendment Bill. He stressed that it was by no means clear that the proposed new arrangements concerning the "pass laws" would lead to the free movement of blacks. He condemned the "homelands" system, the Group Areas Act, the Separate Amenities Act and similar laws.

On 16 May, he condemned the acts of violence and repression in the KwaNdebele homeland against black anti-apartheid protestors. Demonstrating against South Africa's decision to give what it called independence to KwaNdebele, seven Africans had been killed and scores injured. He recalled that the policy of homelands and the granting to them of fictitious independence had been repeatedly rejected by the United Nations.

The Acting Chairman expressed shock and outrage on 12 June at the newly declared state of emergency in South Africa giving absolute power to the security forces to arrest people without warrant and hold them without trial and with indemnity against any criminal or other responsibility. He appealed to the international community to take concrete measures to isolate South Africa and compel it to heed United Nations resolutions on apartheid and Namibia.

On 18 July, the Chairman issued a statement on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.⁽⁷⁶⁾ He called on those States that had not done so to sign and ratify the Convention.

On 29 July, the Acting Chairman expressed shock at attacks on the Reverend Allan Boesak, which demonstrated the arbitrary powers and brutality of South African police forces, and urged the international community to adopt measures to dissuade South Africa from such actions.

The Acting Chairman declared his shock and horror on 29 August at the massacre of 21 persons by South African police in Soweto on 26 and 27 August. Residents had been protesting police attempts to evict tenants because of their anti-apartheid rent boycott.

On 10 September, the Chairman sent a message to Zephania Mothopeng on the occasion of his recent election as PAC President while continuing to be imprisoned.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, organized by the Council for Namibia, condemned in a Declaration adopted on 11 July the detention and imprisonment of Namibians by the racist régime of South Africa and demanded the unconditional release of all political prisoners in Namibia.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries condemned South Africa for its attempts to destroy the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) through arbitrary arrests, torture, intimidation and terror. It demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners and that captured Namibian freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status under the August 1949 Geneva Conventions relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts and Additional Protocol I.⁽⁷⁷⁾

Action by the Commission On Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights on 28 February⁽⁶⁾ expressed deep concern at the escalation of human rights violations in South Africa since the imposition in 1985 of the state of emergency,⁽⁷⁸⁾ including the indiscriminate arrests, detention and torture of political activists, the widespread physical and psychological abuse of detainees and prisoners, and the detention and incarceration of minors in an inhumane penal system. It demanded that South Africa desist from its brutal repression, torture and harassment of individuals and organizations engaged in the struggle against apartheid, and decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts should continue to investigate the policies and practices which violated human rights in South Africa and Namibia.

On 10 March,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Commission condemned South Africa for its repression and indiscriminate torture and killing of workers, schoolchildren and other opponents of apartheid, and the imposition of death sentences on freedom fighters. It also condemned the arrests of the leaders and activists of UDF, the National Forum, trade unions and other mass organizations, and demanded their unconditional release. In addition, it demanded that South Africa fully respect the rights of those detained or imprisoned and observe article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁷⁾ under which no one was to be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

Communication. On 10 October,⁽⁸⁰⁾ Brazil transmitted a message to the Special Committee against Apartheid on the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners, supporting a national dialogue and hoping that all political prisoners would be released in the near future.

Capital punishment of ANC members

The Special Committee against Apartheid, on 30 April, condemned South Africa for sentencing to death six South Africans for allegedly killing the deputy mayor of the Sharpeville township.

On 8 September, the Chairman expressed shock about the death sentences imposed on ANC members Sipho Bridget Xulu and Clarence Lucky Payi;⁽⁸¹⁾ on the same day,⁽⁸²⁾ Algeria, as current Chairman of the African Groups, requested the President of the Security Council to use all means to persuade South Africa not to execute them. The sentences were carried out on 9 September.

Uganda, also as current Chairman of the African Group, forwarded a 7 April letter from ANC to the Council President,⁽⁸³⁾ requesting that he demand a stay of the death sentence imposed by South Africa on Andrew Sibusiso Zondo; Zondo was executed on 9 September.

Apartheid in sports

Continuing oppression in South Africa had caused many Governments, local authorities and sports organizations to intensify action against apartheid in sports. On 16 May 1986,⁽¹⁾ the International Convention against Apartheid in sports, adopted by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽³⁾ was opened for signature and signed by 43 Member States at a meeting of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Chairman of the Committee declared that the Convention was an important part of international action against apartheid. He emphasized that, as long as there was apartheid, there could be no free sport and that those who took part in sports in South Africa or with its teams were playing the game of the apartheid régime. As at 31 December, 68 States had signed the Convention and 8 had ratified it.⁽⁴⁾

More than 30 Commonwealth countries withdrew from the Commonwealth Games (Edinburgh, United Kingdom, 24 July-7 August) to protest the United Kingdom's refusal to impose economic sanctions against South Africa, as recommended by the Commonwealth's Eminent Persons Group.

Some contacts, especially in cricket and rugby, continued. The Acting Chairman of the Special Committee, in a 17 April statement, deplored a planned rugby tour of South Africa by a New Zealand team. He stated that such a visit would represent total insensitivity to the moral issues raised by apartheid.

In 1986, the World Boxing Association suspended South Africa from membership and the World Boxing Council announced that it would break relations for two years with any manager, promoter or agent who promoted boxing in South Africa. Furthermore, sports ministers of the States members of the Council of Europe voted to encourage sports organizations to break all links with South Africa.

The latest semi-annual Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa, was published by the Special Committee. It contained sports contacts from 1 July to 31 December 1985 and included a list of sports exchanges with South Africa arranged by sport and a list of athletes who participated arranged by country. The names of persons who undertook not to engage in further sports events in South Africa were deleted from the Register.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/35 E.

Status of the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/64 G of 10 December 1985, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa, in which States are urged to consider acceding to the Convention,

Considering that all forms of collaboration, including those in the field of sports, with racist South Africa bolster the régime in its attempts to break its international isolation,

Convinced that the Convention, together with the International Covenants on Human Rights and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, would be important instruments towards the isolation of the racist régime of South Africa,

Commending athletes who have demonstrated solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa by complying with the sports boycott of racist South Africa,

Welcoming the signing by a significant number of States of the Convention,

1. Reaffirms that the racist régime of South Africa must be isolated in all fields, including that of sports;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the significant number of States that have signed and ratified the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports since it was solemnly opened for signature, ratification and accession on 16 May 1986;

3. Appeals to those States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention without further delay;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the status of the Convention.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

New Zealand abstained because it had reservations about the appropriateness of the Convention. Nevertheless, it had taken a number of steps to discourage sports contacts with South Africa. Belgium, Canada, France, Ireland, the Netherlands and the United States explained that some of the provisions of the Convention ran counter to their constitutions or laws.

Member States of EC rejected all forms of apartheid in sports, the United Kingdom pointed out. However, sports activities were organized privately in their respective countries. Sports organizations within those countries were aware that their Governments opposed sports competitions that violated the Olympic ideal of non-discrimination.

Aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation

Various forms of aid were provided by the United Nations to the victims of apartheid through national liberation movements or directly to individuals. Legal assistance, relief and education grants were given by the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to persons who suffered persecution under repressive and discriminatory South African legislation. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa offered additional educational assistance.

National liberation movements

In 1986, assistance was provided to national liberation movements by a number of United Nations organizations, including the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). Aid to victims of apartheid and colonialism in Africa was also provided by the United Nations Commission on Human Settlements (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVI) and educational assistance by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 171).

UNDP action. The UNDP Administrator reported to the Governing Council⁽⁸⁴⁾ that in 1986 it had provided $2,787,600 in assistance to national liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by OAU-ANC, PAC and SWAPO. Of the 16 projects operational (one of which was new, approved in February 1986), nine were for education, two for health, two for agriculture, two for development planning, co-ordination and administration, and one to support the movements' attendance at Council meetings.

On 27 June,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Council decided that a programme proposal should be prepared to serve as a framework for UNDP assistance to the movements during the 1987-1991 programming cycle. It requested the Administrator to assist the movements with maximum efficiency and flexibility; to collaborate with concerned executing agencies on providing the assistance, after consulting the movements; and to report to the Council on trends, developments and other issues pertaining to that assistance.

UNIDO action. On 23 October,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO, mindful of the scarcity of resources, requested UNDP to give particular attention to UNIDO technical co-operation projects to the national liberation movements recognized by OAU. The Board requested the UNIDO secretariat to undertake a mission to Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia to formulate new UNIDO agro-industry and on-the-job training projects for 1987-1991. It renewed its appeal to UNIDO member States as well as institutions of the United Nations system, governmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the national liberation movements with food production and manpower development. Taking note of a July report of the UNIDO Director-General on technical assistance to the movements,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Board also appealed to member States to make special-purpose contributions to the Industrial Development Fund for such assistance.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the General Assembly urge all States to go beyond mere expressions of support and render effective assistance to the liberation movements recognized by OAU. The Assembly should request the Secretary-General to intensify the dissemination of information on the liberation struggle.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights appealed on 28 February⁽⁷⁾ to States, specialized agencies and NGOs to extend all possible co-operation to the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the United Nations and OAU.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 15 August,⁽³⁷⁾ expressed concern that the assistance extended thus far by specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and SWAPO, was inadequate.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

The Secretary-General reported in October 1986⁽⁸⁸⁾ that the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established in 1965⁽⁸⁹⁾ to provide legal assistance, education, relief and assistance to persons persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, made grants totalling $2,745,000 in 1986. The Fund received voluntary contributions from Governments of $2,268,797 during the year. The total income to the Fund since its inception was $24,739,426 and the total amount of grants was $24,349,389, leaving a balance of $390,037 as at 2 October 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/35 G.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 40/64 H of 10 December 1985,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Gravely concerned at the reimposition of the state of emergency, now nation-wide, in South Africa and the unprecedented repression of several thousands of opponents of apartheid, including leaders of democratic political mass organizations, community and church leaders, students and trade unionists,

Alarmed by the increasing number of political trials and detentions and the harsh sentences, including the death penalty, imposed on opponents of apartheid,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian and legal assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia is essential at this critical juncture to meet the rapidly increasing needs for such assistance,

Strongly convinced that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the growing needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for generous and increased contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and Namibia;

5. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa.

Other aspects

Public information

The Special Committee against Apartheid observed that the local and foreign media in South Africa were functioning under restrictions that proscribed filming, photographing or tape-recording in areas of unrest or reporting on actions by the security forces without the permission of the police. In view of those restrictions, the Special Committee strengthened its efforts to promote the dissemination of information on developments in South Africa and to mobilize greater international action against apartheid.

Related resolutions: GA 41/14, 41/35 C, 41/68 A.

Non-governmental organizations

The Special Committee against Apartheid declared that the role played by NGOs in international action against apartheid had been invaluable. Anti-apartheid organizations, including trade unions, students' and women's groups, churches and other religious institutions had stepped up their activities in Western countries. They had disclosed arms embargo violations, contributed to a consumer boycott campaign, spearheaded the divestment movement in universities and public institutions, and given impetus to the cultural and sports boycott.

The boycott of the Shell Oil Company in the United States was one example of co-operation by anti-apartheid organizations to pressure a TNC to reconsider its relation with South Africa. Action by anti-apartheid groups at meetings of shareholders of banks, financial institutions and other corporations was aimed at the cessation of loans to and investments in South Africa.

Related resolutions: GA 41/14, 41/35 A.

Meetings, missions and observances

In 1986, the Special Committee against Apartheid organized or co-sponsored meetings, missions and observances and was represented at conferences and events throughout the world in its effort to mobilize international support for the campaign against apartheid (see also p. 128).

Meetings. The Committee participated in the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September) and the twenty-second ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, 28-30 July). The non-aligned countries condemned South Africa for conducting State terrorism against the front-line and other neighbouring independent States and made recommendations for strengthening the front-line States against South Africa's aggression, subversion and destabilization; they also called for the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa. OAU condemned South Africa for its apartheid policies, its reimposition of the state of emergency and daily acts of terrorism against the black population. It appealed to the international community to increase its moral, political, diplomatic and material support to the national liberation movements of South Africa.

The Committee helped to organize the International Seminar on the United Nations Arms Embargo against South Africa (see p. 134), the United Nations Seminar on Oil Embargo against South Africa (see p. 136) and the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa (see p. 123).

On 6 March, the Committee met to pay tribute to Olaf Palme, the late Prime Minister of Sweden, for his contribution to the struggle against apartheid and for the independence of Namibia.

Missions. The Committee Chairman undertook a mission to Western European countries (Belgium, France, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom) from February to April, discussing with government leaders and NGOs action against apartheid in the light of the deteriorating situation in South Africa. In other efforts to promote the struggle against apartheid, he met with senior officials in Pakistan (16-18 November) and Nepal (21-23 November).

Observances. Meetings were held by the Committee in observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia (9 August) and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).

Work programme of the Committee against Apartheid

Outlining its programme for the coming year,⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee said it would follow up the recommendations contained in the Declaration of the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa. It intended to campaign for the isolation of South Africa, to monitor the implementation of existing sanctions and to mobilize support for the liberation struggle of the South African people. The Committee would continue to sponsor conferences, seminars, hearings and other activities and events that would deepen knowledge of the various aspects of apartheid. However, it stated that it was evident that continued resistance to effective action against South Africa, especially by some Western Governments, was not caused by a lack of knowledge but by strategic and ideological factors, fear of losing vested economic interests and the so-called "kith and kin" sentiment.

The programme would include missions by the Chairman and Committee members to various countries. It would strengthen contacts with intergovernmental organizations and take into account the role that parliaments and legislative institutions, trade unions, NGOs and church groups were playing in achieving support for anti-apartheid action.

The Committee requested a special allocation of $375,000 from the regular United Nations budget for 1987 for special projects it would carry out.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/35 D.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for its vigorous efforts to promote and strengthen concerted international action in support of the legitimate aspirations of the oppressed people of South Africa as a significant part of implementing relevant United Nations resolutions;

2. Endorses the recommendations contained in paragraphs 222 to 226 of the report of the Special Committee relating to its programme of work and activities to promote the international campaign against apartheid,

3. Supports the efforts of the Special Committee to give effect to the recommendations contained in the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa so as to broaden the ever-growing international consensus in favour of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions;

4. Authorizes the Special Committee to organize, co-sponsor or participate in conferences, seminars, hearings and other activities and events that will deepen knowledge of the various aspects of apartheid in order to foster as active and action-oriented a political commitment as it may deem necessary for the discharge of its responsibilities, within the financial resources allocated under the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and services for such activities;

5. Further authorizes the Special Committee to hold consultations with and to send missions to Governments, parliaments, legislative institutions, intergovernmental, non-governmental and other organizations as appropriate, in order to strengthen co-ordinated and effective action against apartheid and to promote a peaceful and speedy transition to a non-racial and democratic system in a united South Africa;

6. Decides to make a special allocation of $375,000 to the Special Committee for 1987 from the regular budget of the United Nations to cover the cost of special projects to be decided upon by the Committee in order to promote the international campaign against apartheid;

7. Again requests Governments and organizations to make voluntary contributions or provide other assistance for the special projects of the Special Committee and to make generous contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid.

Against: United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Belgium, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Portugal.

The United States believed that in some cases funds would be allocated for projects that would interfere in its internal affairs. The Federal Republic of Germany agreed with the resolution's main thrust but had reservations concerning paragraph 3, and France deplored arbitrary and unjustified criticism in the Special Committee's report of certain countries and of EC. Malawi did not feel that paragraphs 222 to 226 of the Special Committee's report,(1) mentioned in operative paragraph 2, would be helpful with regard to its stand, while the Netherlands stated that parts of the report lacked balance. Canada noted that although it voted in favour of the resolution it had reservations about providing funding for projects that did not yet exist.

Sanctions against South Africa-The Peaceful Alternative to Violent Change: A Selective Bibliography 1981-1986, Sales No. E.88.I.5.

South Africa and the front-line and other States of southern Africa

South Africa's relations with its neighbours, the so-called front-line States, continued to be a concern of the United Nations, particularly since further incidents of aggression by South Africa against some of those States were reported in 1986.

The front-line States, a loose coalition of some of the southern States of Africa (Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe) were concerned mainly with security issues, but also with the region's economic development.

The Security Council, in resolution 581(1986) adopted in February, called on all States to exert pressure on South Africa to desist from aggression against neighbouring States, and demanded that South Africa end its violence against black people and other opponents of apartheid and eradicate apartheid as the necessary step towards establishment of a non-racial democratic society.

In May, the Council considered attacks by South Africa against Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe. In June, it considered a South African attack against Angola. On both occasions, draft resolutions to have the Council condemn the attacks were not adopted due to the negative votes of permanent Council members. Also in May, by resolution 1986/24, the Economic and Social Council demanded that South Africa cease all acts of aggression against the front-line States and withdraw its troops from Angola. In December, the General Assembly urged the international community to provide financial, material and technical assistance to the front-line States and other bordering States to enhance their capacity to withstand the economic measures taken by South Africa (resolution 41/199).

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. According to the Special Committee against Apartheid,(') South Africa continued to commit acts of aggression, subversion and destabilization against neighbouring independent African States to weaken their economies and keep them dependent on South Africa, to use them as hostages to alleviate outside pressures, to dissuade them from supporting its opponents, and physically to eliminate those opponents. In fact it had increasingly used death squads to abduct and assassinate black freedom fighters in the neighbouring States.

The Committee stated that South African acts of aggression against Angola, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe represented a threat to international peace and security and underlined the need for the speedy elimination of apartheid. South African forces, which continued to be illegally stationed in southern Angola, had repeatedly carried out raids in that country and had used illegally occupied Namibia as a basing area against Angola.(2)

At the beginning of 1986, South Africa imposed a total economic blockade against Lesotho, restricting traffic in and out of that country; South Africa continued to support what it called the Lesotho Liberation Army. In November 1986, two former Lesotho cabinet ministers were reportedly murdered by a South African death squad.

During consideration by the Security Council of the situation in southern Africa in February 1986 (see p. 158), the Acting Chairman of the Committee expressed concern at the support being given by the United States to the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA), which was concentrated in southern Angola, and called on the United States to refrain from supporting insurgencies encouraged by South Africa. In May, the Chairman of the Committee, who was taking part in a Council meeting on South African aggression against Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe (see p. 165), said the aggression had been aimed at crushing the growing movement against apartheid and that it had demonstrated the hypocrisy of South Africa's talk about significant change; the Council should consider the adoption of mandatory sanctions against South Africa. A resolution proposing such sanctions was not adopted due to the negative votes of the United Kingdom and the United States. South African troops and commandos conducted raids, assassinations and kidnappings in Botswana and Swaziland in June and August.

South Africa held up the traffic of transit cargo from Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe during August, in retaliation for their support of sanctions. It also continued to undermine the economy of Mozambique and to support the Resistência Nacional de Mozambique (RENAMO), also known as the Movement of National Resistance, against its Government. On 5 November, the Committee Chairman expressed concern at the suspicious circumstances of the air crash in which Samora Moises Machel, the President of Mozambique, had been killed. In December, Mozambique accused South Africa of repeatedly violating the 1984 Nkomati Accord, a non-aggression agreement,(3) by aircraft incursions to resupply RENAMO. About 500,000 Mozambicans had become refugees in neighbouring countries.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly condemn South Africa's destabilization of its neighbours and appeal to all States not to render assistance to UNITA and other renegade groups supported by South Africa. It also recommended that the Assembly emphasize the importance of providing assistance to the independent African States in southern Africa and to the members of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) in order to reduce their economic dependence on South Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 11 August,(4) the Committee on colonial countries condemned South Africa for its persistent acts of aggression and subversion against Angola and Mozambique as well as its use of mercenaries and Namibian territory to attack independent African States. On the same date,(5) the Committee paid tribute to the Governments of the front-line and other African States for their commitment to a free and independent Namibia and their moral and material assistance to the Namibian people and SWAPO, and declared that it was imperative that the international community increase its financial, material, military and political support to the front-line States. It endorsed the efforts of SADCC to promote regional economic development and to reduce the dependence of countries of the area on South Africa, and urged support of those efforts by all States.

The Committee, on 15 August,(6) urged United Nations organizations to extend assistance to the front-line States to enable them to support Namibia in its struggle for freedom and to resist the direct violations of their territory by South Africa, or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet groups.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February, the Commission on Human Rights condemned South Africa for its destabilization policies aimed at the front-line States,(7) demanded that South Africa end its aggression against neighbouring countries, particularly Angola,(8) and rejected all policies that encouraged South Africa to escalate its aggression in defiance of United Nations resolutions.(9)

On 10 March,(10) the Commission demanded that South Africa withdraw its forces from Angola.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia condemned South Africa's repeated acts of aggression against Namibia as well as neighbouring independent African States.(11) South Africa was continuing its policy of destabilization, subversion and aggression against Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe. It had escalated its destabilization campaign against neighbouring States in an attempt to force them to cease their support for the liberation struggle in southern Africa.

The International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) called on Governments and regional and international organizations to assist SADCC to give increased support to the front-line States.(12)

Communications. In 1986, several countries addressed communications to the Secretary-General pertaining to South Africa's aggression against the front-line and other neighbouring States.

On 6 February,(13) the Netherlands and Zambia jointly transmitted a communique adopted at a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the front-line States and those of the States members of EC (Lusaka, 3 and 4 February). The Ministers noted that the dismantling of apartheid would significantly contribute to peace in the region. They condemned the aggression and destabilization carried out by South Africa against neighbouring States and, in that connection, demanded the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola.

The front-line heads of State and Government held two summit meetings on the situation in southern Africa during 1986. On 2 September,(14) Zambia forwarded a communique issued following the first summit (Luanda, 21 August). The summit condemned South Africa for the imposition of punitive trade restrictions against Zambia and Zimbabwe in particular, in reprisal for their support of the liberation struggle of the Namibian and South African peoples. It appealed for assistance to the front-line and other States in the region to enable them to withstand the steps taken by South Africa against them. The summit took note of the meeting of Commonwealth leaders in August, expressing dismay that the United Kingdom continued to oppose the adoption of economic sanctions against South Africa.

On 21 October,(15) Zambia transmitted the Declaration of the second summit (Maputo, 12 October), which condemned the attempt by certain Western Governments to promote armed bandits in southern Africa as political entities, denounced the complicity of the Malawian Government with South Africa in the terrorist campaign against Mozambique, and called on the international community, particularly the industrialized countries, to strengthen the capacity of the front-line States to defend themselves against South Africa.

The final documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April) were transmitted by India on 15 May.(16) The Ministers condemned the acts of State terrorism-sabotage, training, financing and infiltrating armed bandits and mercenaries-by South Africa against the front-line and other neighbouring States. They demanded that the United States halt military and other assistance to UNITA, reaffirmed the right of front-line and other neighbouring States to provide sanctuary to the victims of apartheid, and appealed to non-aligned Movement members and the international community as a whole to render diplomatic, political, financial and material assistance to the front-line States.

Algeria forwarded on 25 September(17) the resolutions adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its forty-fourth ordinary session (Addis Ababa, 21-26 July). In a resolution on Namibia, the Council condemned South Africa's militarization and use of Namibia as a launching pad for aggression against the front-line States and expressed appreciation to those States for their sacrifices on behalf of Namibian independence.

On 8 May,(18) Mozambique and the USSR transmitted a 3 April joint communique on the visit by the President of Mozambique to the USSR from 30 March to 1 April. The communique called for an end to South African aggression.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted by recorded vote resolution 1986/24.

Front-line States

The Economic and Social Council,

Gravely concerned about the intensified undeclared war being waged by the Pretoria régime against the independent neighbouring States,

Further concerned about the collaboration of certain countries with South Africa in its destabilization campaign, in particular the recent formalization of military assistance to the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola,

Alarmed by the suffering imposed on the neighbouring States, especially on women and children, as a direct result of the massacres and other acts of terrorism perpetrated by the South African racist army and puppet armed bandits,

Commending the front-line States for their resistance to the military pressures and economic blackmail of the Pretoria regime, aimed at forcing them to abandon their traditional support of the struggle for the liberation of Namibia and South Africa itself,

Convinced of the imperative and urgent need for the international community to render more material and moral support to those countries in conformity with the relevant United Nations resolutions,

1. Strongly condemns the South African racist régime for the unprovoked and premeditated acts of aggression against the independent neighbouring States, in particular the continued occupation of the southern part of Angola;

2. Demands that the Pretoria regime stop the recruitment, training and financing of mercenaries and armed bandits used to commit massacres and other acts of terrorism against the innocent civilian population of the front-line States, including women and children;

3. Commends the front-line States for their unwavering commitment to the liberation struggle in South Africa and Namibia and calls upon the international community to increase assistance to those States;

4. Demands an immediate cessation of all South African acts of destabilization and aggression against the front-line States and calls upon those Governments that support the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to desist from doing so;

5. Demands the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all the South African racist troops from the territory of Angola.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/24

23 May 1986 Meeting 19 43-1-8 recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1986/94) by recorded vote (42-1-8). 20 May (meeting 19): draft by Commission on the Status of Women (E/1986/24 & Corr.1.2); agenda item 11.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 29 January,(19) Sudan, on behalf of the Group of African States, requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation in southern Africa. The Council held nine meetings from 5 to 13 February.

The Council invited Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, India, Iran, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, South Africa, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and a delegation of the United Nations Council for Namibia, led by its President, were invited to participate, at their request, in accordance with rule 39^b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Also invited under rule 39 were the representatives of ANC,(20) PAC(21) and SWAPO,(22) at the request of the Congo, Ghana and Madagascar.

Togo, speaking for the African Group, stated that the situation in southern Africa was growing more disturbing each day. The situation had three aspects-South Africa's policy of apartheid, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its policy of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring States-which posed a dangerous threat to international peace and security. Incapable of controlling its internal crisis and concerned with perpetuating its occupation of Namibia, South Africa was forced to extend the conflict beyond its borders. The Security Council should demand that South Africa abolish apartheid, demand that it implement the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia in resolution 435(1978)(23) and request that Member States refrain from any act aggravating the complex regional situation. If South Africa persisted in its policies, the Council should consider adopting comprehensive, mandatory sanctions.

South Africa declared that the Council meeting should not be taking place. South African President P. W. Botha had outlined, in a 31 January speech, reforms which had taken place in South Africa and the framework for further constitutional developments. He had also emphasized that there could be no regional peace as long as neighbouring countries harboured terrorists who perpetrated violence across national boundaries and that South Africa was prepared to implement the United Nations plan on Namibia, provided agreement could be reached on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. The Council could contribute to achieving a new era, not by passing negative resolutions, but by encouraging the people of South Africa to negotiate political solutions acceptable to all.

Algeria stated that South Africa was following a policy known as total strategy, one of its major aims being the creation of a constellation of States dependent on it. Nothing was lacking: open aggression by the regular armed forces of South Africa; murder; the creation and sustenance of subversive movements; sabotage; economic blockade against land-locked countries; and blackmail through the threat of expelling migrant labour. The current situation in southern Africa was the direct result of South Africa's persistent and increased aggression.

Angola asked States friendly to South Africa to recognize that support of it could only harm their long-term interests.

The United States regretted that some States had made misleading and even untrue allegations about its policies towards the region. The real battle in southern Africa was being waged over representational government, and it hoped that South Africa could be transformed peacefully into a nation of justice and equality based on the consent of all its people. There was much in the draft resolution before the Council (see below) with which it agreed, but it was not helpful to denominate uses of force by a State as terrorism. Moreover, the draft incorrectly implied that outside assistance was the main cause of destabilization of States in the region. As for the criticism of the recent visit by Jonas Savimbi of UNITA to the United States, it was necessary to approach all parties in the settlement of disputes; Angolans must sit down and reconcile their differences.

The United Kingdom said it had been given to understand that the current debate was intended to be an exercise in preventive diplomacy, with the objective of deterring further breaches of sovereignty and territorial integrity by South Africa. Unfortunately, its timing appeared to be almost accidental and it had followed an uncharted course. It was counter-productive to use the debate to attack other Member States on unrelated issues. The United Kingdom believed the Council should have concentrated its efforts on a search for constructive and peaceful solutions. It would abstain on the draft resolution which it felt did not accurately address the evolving situation in southern Africa.

South Africa was the single source of the trouble in the region, according to the USSR. The Western Powers, particularly the United States and the United Kingdom, were shielding South Africa from effective sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. They continued to retain vast investments in South Africa and Namibia, thereby supporting apartheid economically. South Africa was attempting to impose its hegemony on the whole of southern Africa, choking Lesotho into submission by blockade and committing overt and covert aggression against Botswana, Mozambique and Angola. Savimbi, leader of the UNITA mercenaries, had recently been received in Washington by the United States Administration. The USSR condemned the utilization of regional conflicts to stoke East-West confrontation. It demanded action to compel the Western Powers to end their appeasement of South Africa and to compel that country to cease its repression of the African majority.

Many countries described the apartheid system as the root cause of the region's problems and declared that it could not be reformed, only eradicated. Among them were Algeria, Australia, Botswana, Bulgaria, China, the Congo, Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guyana, Hungary, India, Lesotho, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

While agreeing that apartheid was the cause of the problems in the region, Lesotho stressed that its geopolitical situation was unique, that it was completely surrounded by South Africa, landlocked and defenceless. South Africa twice had attacked Lesotho, and threatened more attacks to force it to refrain from providing asylum to refugees from apartheid. Lesotho hoped that the international community would press for the abolition of apartheid, the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola and the independence of Namibia, as well as find ways to protect the sovereignty of the southern African States.

South African destabilization of and aggression against the front-line and other neighbouring States were denounced by Australia, Botswana, Bulgaria, China, Denmark, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, India, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nigeria, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

The Council's adoption of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter was urged by numerous States. Denmark felt that recent developments in southern Africa had increased the need for sanctions. India was convinced that sanctions were the only effective answer to South Africa's obstinacy. Zambia said that the most potent and peaceful way of eliminating apartheid was through sanctions. Trinidad and Tobago observed that, while Council members equivocated over whether sanctions were effective or would hurt those they were supposed to assist, the South African people continued to make the supreme sacrifice of their lives to hasten the demise of apartheid.

Other States calling for sanctions were Afghanistan, Algeria, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Hungary, Iran, Nigeria, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Arab Emirates, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

A number of other issues—Namibia, the Botha statement of 31 January (see above), criticism of the United States, and refugees—were discussed during the debate. Many countries expressed their opposition to South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and its use as a springboard for invasions of and raids on the front-line and other States in the region, and their disappointment that Council resolution 435(1978) on Namibian independence had not been implemented. Botswana said that if South Africa had co-operated in implementing the resolution, the unrest that had engulfed Angola and other countries could have been avoided. Guyana said that Namibians' right to freedom had been made hostage to East-West power politics and their future linked to extraneous questions such as the presence of Cuban troops in Angola. Among the other countries demanding the independence of Namibia were Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, the Congo, Denmark, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Zambia.

Referring to the Botha speech, Denmark felt that although he had admitted that the concept of apartheid was outdated, South Africa had not demonstrated a sincere desire for fundamental change. Venezuela noted that the general and vague assertions on possible participation by the majority in running the affairs of the country had been immediately contradicted by other actions. The Sudan contended that the statement offered little but a reaffirmation of the white minority's determination to deprive the black majority of equality, justice and freedom. Zimbabwe thought that Botha was still trying to get away with obfuscation and camouflage—he would abolish the pass laws but replace them with measures facilitating "orderly urbanization". Australia noted that President Botha had made a statement of intent and reminded South Africa that actions speak louder than words.

United States policy in southern Africa was criticized by some countries. Nicaragua said that the values asserted by the United States before the cameras were counterbalanced by the reality of the black people of South Africa living under apartheid, its repeal of the Clark Amendment which had prohibited support for anti-governmental groups in Angola and the authorization of millions of dollars to be spent in killing people. The USSR charged that the United States and the United Kingdom as well were hiding their support for South Africa behind a screen of verbal condemnations and a policy of so-called constructive engagement. Zambia said it was pained that a big Power like the United States had chosen to identify itself with the racist regime of South Africa.

China, Zambia and Zimbabwe were among many registering concern about South Africa's actions and threats against refugees. Zimbabwe said South Africa did not want its neighbours to give refuge to its citizens because it regarded them as "terrorists". But those citizens were the victims of apartheid fleeing to neighbouring countries in search of refuge, and their refugee status was clearly defined by the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees.⁽²⁴⁾ The only offence those countries had committed was that they continued to abide by their international obligations.

The United Arab Emirates, describing the concept and history of apartheid, said that the word meant "apartness" and had been uttered for the first time in the South African Parliament in 1944. In 1948, more than 3 million blacks had been uprooted and scattered in remote desert regions, and in 1951, the law setting up bantustans went into effect. A number of discriminatory laws were subsequently adopted, including the Terrorism Act of 1967 and the internal security legislation of 1982. In 1983, the so-called constitutional amendments were approved, denying the black majority's right to vote and to participate in government. Parliament did not contain a single representative of South Africa's blacks, who represented 73 per cent of the population—23 million of a total of 31 million. The white minority controlled 87 per cent of the territory of South Africa and with it the arable land, mines and factories.

The Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid disagreed with those who saw in Mr. Botha's speech hope for peaceful change; apartheid could not be reformed, only eliminated. The only part of his speech that needed to be taken seriously was his threat to neighbouring countries. South Africa's neighbours had been subjected either to threats or blatant aggression, efforts to destabilize their political and economic systems, because they opposed apartheid. South Africa hoped to safeguard and perpetuate white domination by extending its hegemony to the whole region.

The President of the Council for Namibia stated that the predominant problem facing the international community was how to bring about changes in the policies of South Africa's major Western allies.

He urged the Security Council to condemn South Africa for its destabilization of the front-line and other neighbouring countries and to impose comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

On 13 February, the Security Council adopted resolution 581(1986).

The Security Council,

Having considered the request of the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations contained in document S/17770,

Bearing in mind that all Member States are obliged to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity or political independence of any State or from acting in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the tension and instability created by the hostile policies and aggression of the apartheid regime throughout southern Africa and the mounting threat they pose to the security of the region and its wider implications for international peace and security,

Gravely concerned that such acts of aggression can only serve to aggravate the already volatile and dangerous situation in the southern African region,

Reiterating its total opposition to the system of apartheid,

Reaffirming the right of all countries to give sanctuary to refugees fleeing from the oppression caused by the apartheid system,

Taking note of the communique of the Ministers of the front-line States and of the European Economic Community in which, inter alia, the Ministers condemned South Africa's policy of destabilization in all its manifestations, including the use of any direct or indirect armed actions in neighbouring States, and agreed to deny perpetrators of such actions any assistance or support,

Recalling its resolutions 567(1985), 568(1985), 571(1985), 572(1985) and 580(1985), by which, inter alia, it condemned South Africa's aggression against Angola, Botswana and Lesotho,

Convinced that the apartheid system of the racist regime of South Africa and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia are the source of tensions and insecurity in southern Africa,

Gravely concerned at the recent threats by South Africa to continue to perpetrate acts of aggression against the front-line States and other countries in southern Africa aimed at destabilising them,

Conscious of the urgent need to take effective steps for the prevention and removal of all threats to peace and security in the region posed by South Africa's recent threats to use force against countries in southern Africa,

Convinced that only the elimination of apartheid can lead to a just and lasting solution to the explosive situation in South Africa in particular and in southern Africa in general,

1. Strongly condemns racist South Africa for its recent threats to perpetrate acts of aggression against the front-line States and other States in southern Africa;

2. Strongly warns the racist régime of South Africa against committing any acts of aggression, terrorism and destabilization against independent African States and its use of mercenaries;

3. Deplores the escalation of violence in the region and calls upon South Africa to respect fully the sanctity of international borders;

4. Deplores any form of assistance given by States which could be used to destabilize independent States in southern Africa;

5. Calls upon all States to exert pressure on South Africa to desist from perpetrating acts of aggression against neighbouring States;

6. Reaffirms the right of all States in the fulfilment of their international obligations to give sanctuary to the victims of apartheid;

7. Demands the immediate eradication of apartheid as the necessary step towards the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on self-determination and majority rule through the full and free exercise of universal adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, and to this end demands:

(a) The dismantling of the bantustan structures as well as the cessation of uprooting, relocation and denationalization of the indigenous African people;

(b) The abrogation of the bans and restrictions on political organizations, parties, individuals and news media opposed to apartheid,

(c) The unimpeded return of all the exiles;

8. Demands that the racist régime of South Africa put an end to the violence against and repression of the black people and other opponents of apartheid, unconditionally release all persons imprisoned, detained or restricted for their opposition to apartheid and lift the state of emergency;

9. Deplores the racist régime of South Africa for its disregard of the principles of international law and its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations;

10. Commends the front-line States and other States neighbouring South Africa for their support of freedom and justice in South Africa and requests Member States to extend urgently all forms of assistance to these States in order to strengthen their capacities to receive, maintain and protect South African refugees in their respective countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor developments related to South Africa's threats to escalate acts of aggression against independent States in southern Africa and to report to the Security Council as the situation demands;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 581(1986)

13 February 1986 Meeting 2662 13-0-2

5-nation draft (S/17817/Rev.1).

Sponsors: Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, United Arab Emirates

Meeting numbers. SC 2652, 2654, 2656-2662.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, France, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United Kingdom, United States.

Following the vote, Togo said that it would have preferred a stronger resolution. However, the resolution adopted sent a clear message to South Africa-it must dismantle the apartheid system, and abandon its illegal occupation of Namibia and its policy of aggression against neighbouring States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/199.

Special assistance to front-line States

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the deteriorating situation in southern Africa, which has aggravated the economic problems confronting the front-line States and other bordering States, arising from the apartheid policies of the Pretoria régime, Conscious of the responsibility of the international community to address the problems of the region,

Commending the concerted and determined efforts of the countries of the region to cope with the prevailing adverse conditions by strengthening their economic co-operation and lessening their dependence on South Africa, particularly in the areas of transportation, communications and related sectors,

Reaffirming the importance of close co-operation between the United Nations and the front-line States,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 568(1985) of 21 June 1985, 571(1985) of 20 September 1985 and 581(1986) of 13 February 1986, by which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to the front-line States,

1. Strongly urges the international community to provide in a timely and effective manner the financial, material and technical assistance necessary to enhance the individual and collective capacity of the front-line States and other bordering States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa, in accordance with their national and regional plans and strategies;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system so that they may respond to such requests for assistance as might be forthcoming from individual States or the appropriate subregional organization, and further urges all States to respond favourably to such requests;

3. Appeals to all States and appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the national and collective emergency programmes prepared by the front-line States and other bordering States to overcome the critical problems arising from the situation in southern Africa;

4. Notes with appreciation the assistance being rendered to the front-line States by donor countries and intergovernmental organizations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Angola-South Africa armed incidents and South African occupation of Angola

In June 1986, the Security Council considered a complaint by Angola concerning an attack by South Africa on the port of Namibe. Because of the negative votes of permanent members of the Council a draft resolution was not adopted.

The Commission on Human Rights, the Council for Namibia and the General Assembly condemned South Africa's aggression against Angola.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,(8) the Commission on Human Rights demanded that South Africa unconditionally terminate all acts of aggression against neighbouring countries, particularly Angola, and withdraw its armed forces from Angola. It condemned South African acts of subversion against Angola.(9) It rejected the linkage advanced by South Africa and its allies between Namibian independence and irrelevant issues such as the presence of Cuban forces in Angola. On 10 March, the Commission repeated its demands.(10)

Action by the Council for Namibia. The International Conference for the Immediate Independence of Namibia, organized by the Council for Namibia in July, called in its Programme of Action on all States to oppose the attempts by the United States and South Africa to link Namibian independence to the presence of Cuban troops in Angola.(11)

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1985 Security Council resolution,(25) submitted in June 1986 with a later addendum,(26) a report regarding the Council's request to Member States and international organizations to provide assistance to Angola. Fourteen countries (Australia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Netherlands, Poland, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia) replied to a request by the Secretary-General for information on any decisions taken in pursuance of the resolution. Replies were also received from 20 international organizations and other United Nations bodies.

Communications (January-June). On 30 January,(27) India forwarded to the Secretary-General a communique adopted by the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 30 January), condemning Jonas Savimbi's visit to the United States and noting that bandits operating in southern Angola were trained, financed, armed and directed by South Africa and that South African forces themselves continued illegally to occupy parts of Angola.

On 31 January,(28) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, with regard to the meeting between Mr. Savimbi and the President of the United States, charged that the United States was unfriendly to peoples struggling for liberation and constantly worked to destabilize certain non-aligned Member States of the United Nations. Ghana, in a government statement of 3 April,(29) said reports indicated that the United States was expected to supply $15 million in military aid, including sophisticated anti-aircraft missiles, to UNITA, and that by that decision it was joining with South Africa in the perpetuation of apartheid and colonialism in southern Africa.

South Africa, in a 3 March letter,(30) declared that after 10 years a Cuban expeditionary force was still inside Angola, that UNITA was fighting for freedom in Angola, and that if the USSR succeeded in its aims in Angola, no country in southern Africa would be free from its encroachment. In addition, it conveyed a statement on Namibia which was to be made before Parliament on 4 March by the South African President, who would suggest that implementation of resolution 435(1978) begin on 1 August, provided an agreement could be reached before that date on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. On 12

June,(31) the Secretary-General replied that, in his letter of 26 November 1985,(32) he had proposed the establishment of the earliest possible date for a cease-fire and the implementation of the resolution. In making that proposal, he had emphasized that all outstanding issues relevant to the United Nations plan for Namibia had been resolved. He had also indicated that he could not accept any linkage between independence for Namibia and the presence of Cuban troops in Angola; such linkage had been rejected by the Security Council. Accordingly, he assured the South African Government that he was ready to begin the implementation of the plan on 1 August, without preconditions, subject to the co-operation of all concerned. South Africa replied on 28 July(33) that it had hoped that 1 August would be set for the beginning of the implementation of the United Nations plan, provided agreement had been reached on the withdrawal of the Cubans from Angola. However, Angola had been unwilling or unable to address that issue realistically, and had again thwarted the prospects for peace; South Africa remained prepared to begin discussions of the question at any time.

Angola, Cuba and the USSR conveyed on 14 March(34) a statement on consultations held by them (Moscow, 27 January), asserting that South Africa, through UNITA and with United States complicity, was trying to force Angola to be a vassal of South Africa, that the tension in southern Africa should be eliminated by political means, and that peace would be achieved in the region only when South Africa and the States supporting it took into account the interests of Angola and Namibia.

In a 10 May joint statement,(35) Angola and the USSR said that the situation in southern Africa called for a political settlement, requiring that South Africa end its aggression against the front-line countries and grant immediate independence to Namibia, and that the United States must refrain from providing military and other assistance to UNITA. An Angolan-USSR communique, issued at the end of a 6-10 May visit to the USSR by the President of Angola, described discussions that took place on enhancing bilateral economic and trade co-operation in such areas as energy, construction, agriculture, the mining industry, sea fishing, health protection and training.(36)

Angola transmitted three communications to the Secretary-General. In a 13 March letter,(37) its President said that the United States was not engaged in negotiations for a peaceful solution to the problems of southern Africa, but had made the Angolan issue part of a so-called East-West regional conflict in order to delay resolution of the Namibian question and extend the life of apartheid; he asked the Secretary-General to undertake measures leading to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) leading to the independence of Namibia. In a 29 April declaration issued during their meeting (Luanda, 28-30 April),(38) the Presidents of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe noted that South African attacks on Angola and Mozambique had intensified and that the United States action in receiving and supporting Savimbi encouraged terrorism and increased violence in the region. On 31 May(39) the Angolan Foreign Minister declared that, since the adoption of Security Council resolution 577(1985),(25) aggression by South Africa against Angola had intensified, that South Africa had increased its forces in Angolan territory to seven battalions, and that during May 1986 Angolan airspace had been violated almost daily and 53 people had been killed and 5 wounded in South African attacks near Xangongo, in southern Angola. The Council resolution had requested the Secretary-General to monitor the situation.

In a government statement of 8 June,(40) the USSR charged that South Africa had attacked the port of Namibe, Angola, on 5 June, damaging USSR merchant vessels and sinking a Cuban ship. The attack was also condemned by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 7 June.(41) Ghana, on 12 June,(42) stated that the attack had been made possible by the support South Africa enjoyed from certain Western Powers, and again urged the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa. On the same date,(43) Angola requested that the Council meet in connection with the South African aggression.

South Africa, on 13 June,(44) said that it had no quarrel with any of its neighbours, that its actions in Angola were aimed at ANC and SWAPO terrorists given safe haven by that Government, and that it rejected the inference in resolution 577(1985) that it had committed acts of aggression against Angola.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council considered the Angolan complaint against South Africa at three meetings from 16 to 18 June. The Council invited Angola, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Mongolia, Nicaragua, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Zaire and Zambia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Angola said that on 5 June South African troops had attacked Namibe, hit three cargo ships, sinking one, and damaged three fuel tanks. It asked if some of the Western permanent members of the Security Council were blind and deaf to events in southern Africa, where so-called negotiations had yielded nothing but escalating conflict, where borders were no longer sovereign, and where South Africa held out the promise of pathetic little reforms which its two major allies applauded. Angola appealed to the Council to condemn South Africa for its aggression against it and other front-line States, to demand the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola and to impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

South Africa said that Angola had introduced the complaint in an attempt to hide the facts concerning the current situation in Angola. The Council must be aware of the civil war raging in that country, where a Cuban expeditionary force had sustained the Government against the people's wishes for 10 years and the USSR had delivered at least $2 billion worth of military equipment in the past two years. What happened in Angola was a matter of importance for the future of southern Africa. South Africa believed that the problems of Angola should be solved by the people of Angola themselves, that there should be no foreign interference in their affairs. It had called repeatedly for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Angola. But others had a different goal: the USSR required a subjugated Angola to extend its influence along the west coast of Africa. It suggested that the Council send a mission to Angola to determine the facts for itself.

The USSR declared that the attack was one of a series intended to force the front-line States to renounce their support for those resisting apartheid, and was linked to other actions in various regions of the world carried out by the patrons of South Africa, among them, the United States and the United Kingdom. The USSR called on the Council to condemn South Africa and apply comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against it.

A number of Member States demanded the imposition of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Among them were Bulgaria, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Mongolia, Nicaragua, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam and Zambia.

Increased pressure to compel South Africa to renounce apartheid, to halt its aggression and to liberate Namibia was advocated by Denmark, Thailand and Zaire.

Venezuela urged the imposition of selective economic or other sanctions.

Australia condemned all violations of territorial integrity and appealed to South Africa to desist from aggression against its neighbours.

A draft resolution⁽⁴⁵⁾ was submitted by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago and the United Arab Emirates. It proposed, among other things, that the Council condemn South Africa for its attack and its persistent armed invasions of Angola, demand that it withdraw its forces and pay compensation to Angola for damage to life and property, request international assistance for the reconstruction of Angola's economic infrastructure, and impose selective sanctions against South Africa, as follows: suspension of all new investments there; prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa; suspension of guaranteed export loans; restrictions in sports and cultural relations; prohibition of all new nuclear contracts; and prohibition of all sales of computer equipment.

Prior to the vote, France pointed out that, like other countries, it had taken measures against South Africa at the national level, but that it did not think it appropriate to transform those voluntary steps into mandatory sanctions.

On 18 June, the Council voted on the draft resolution. The vote was 12 to 2, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago. USSR. United Arab Emirates. Venezuela.
Against: United Kingdom, United States.
Abstaining: France.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative votes of permanent members.

Statements were made following the vote. Angola felt frustrated and despaired over the usefulness of the Council, when two permanent members saw fit to defy the United Nations Charter; no amount of pontification on the evils of apartheid would carry any weight when those two Powers refused to join in the otherwise unanimous call for sanctions.

The United Kingdom recalled that it had condemned South African incursions into Angola on four occasions in 1985, that there was no doubt as to where it stood on the issue, but it remained opposed to economic boycotts because they did not work. Moreover, its aim was to bring down apartheid, not the South African economy. The United States said it found unacceptable several elements in the draft resolution. First, there was the difficulty in ascertaining the truth in a part of the world largely inaccessible to independent fact-finding; the United States, however, believed a fact-finding mission might have been worth while. Second, the United States continued to condemn cross-border violence and would go further and urge restraint by all parties. Finally, it could not go along with mandatory sanctions because they did not target apartheid but the entire South African economy and were inimical to peaceful change.

Meeting numbers. SC 2691-2693.

Communications (August). In a 15 August letter to the Secretary-General,⁽⁴⁶⁾ Angola stated that South African troops had attacked the town of Kuito Kuanavale, Kuando Kubango province, on 10 August, but were repulsed by the National Angola Forces (FAPLA); the South African forces, estimated at three battalions, had again attacked FAPLA positions on from 11 to 13 August.

On 20 August,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the USSR transmitted a TASS statement of 13 August on the Kuito Kuanavale attack, which it said was carried out by UNITA forces, supported by tanks, armoured personnel carriers and artillery of the South African armed forces; TASS noted that the attack took place in the heart of Angolan territory, some 300 kilometres from the frontier between Angola and Namibia.

South African aggression against Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe

The Security Council discussed complaints of aggression by South Africa against Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe at three meetings in May 1986. Owing to the negative votes of permanent members, a draft resolution was not adopted.

Communications (May). Numerous Member States transmitted communications to the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council in relation to attacks on 19 May by South Africa against alleged ANC bases in Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Botswana transmitted a 19 May press release⁽⁴⁸⁾ on attacks that day by South African commandos and helicopter gunships on Mogoditshane, a village near Gaborone, its capital.

Simultaneous attacks on a refugee camp in a suburb of Lusaka, Zambia, and a residential district in Harare, Zimbabwe, were also condemned. Communications were received from Algeria, on 20 May;⁽⁴⁸⁾ Antigua and Barbuda, on 23 May;⁽⁵⁰⁾ Bangladesh, on 22 May;⁽⁵¹⁾ Barbados, on 21 May;⁽⁵²⁾ Bolivia and Brazil, on 22 May;⁽⁵³⁾ Bulgaria, on 23 May;⁽⁵⁴⁾ Czechoslovakia, on 23 May;⁽⁵⁵⁾ Democratic Kampuchea, on 28 May;⁽⁵⁶⁾ Ecuador, on 22 May;⁽⁵⁷⁾ Japan, on 21 May;⁽⁵⁸⁾ Kenya, on 22 May;⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 29 May;⁽⁶⁰⁾ Pakistan, on 23 May;⁽⁶¹⁾ Portugal, on 23 May;⁽⁶²⁾ Saint Christopher and Nevis, on 23 May;⁽⁶³⁾ Uganda, on 21 May;⁽⁶⁴⁾ the USSR, on 20 May;⁽⁶⁵⁾ the United Republic of Tanzania, on 22 May;⁽⁶⁶⁾ Uruguay on 22 May;⁽⁶⁷⁾ and Yugoslavia, on 22 May;⁽⁶⁸⁾

Guyana forwarded on 26 May a message it had sent to Zimbabwe⁽⁶⁹⁾ and on 27 May messages to Botswana⁽⁷⁰⁾ and Zambia,⁽⁷¹⁾ expressing its distress, sadness and anger over the attacks.

Argentina transmitted press releases issued on 20 and 22 May condemning the South African attacks and announcing its decision to break off diplomatic relations with South Africa.⁽⁷²⁾

India transmitted a communique adopted on 22 May by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, noting with indignation and concern what it said were the unprovoked attacks of South Africa on 18/19 May.⁽⁷³⁾

The Netherlands submitted the text of a 22 May joint statement by the 12 member States of the EC, condemning the South African military actions and its threats, officially expressed, to strike again.⁽⁷⁴⁾

Senegal transmitted a 19 May statement by its President and current OAU Chairman, condemning the acts of State terrorism perpetrated by South Africa and urging the Security Council to adopt mandatory economic sanctions to put a stop to them.⁽⁷⁵⁾

On 21 May,⁽⁷⁶⁾ Senegal, following instructions from the Chairman of OAU, and on 22 May,⁽⁷⁷⁾ Zambia, following instructions from the Chairman of the front-line States, requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider South Africa's aggression. The Council held three meetings on 22 and 23 May in response to Senegal's request.

The Council invited Argentina, Botswana, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Senegal, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. Also invited, under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure,^c were the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and, at the request of Morocco, ⁽⁷⁸⁾ the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference.

Zambia presented further information on the South African attacks. It said that two unmarked South African aircraft had bombed a United Nations refugee transit centre in Makeni, 15 kilometres from Lusaka; a public bar also was hit. One refugee was killed and seven refugees and one Zambian national wounded. In the attack on Mogoditshane, Botswana, South African helicopters and ground forces fired on a Botswana defence force barracks and on a civilian housing complex. One person was killed and three wounded. South African troops attacked alleged ANC targets at two places in Harare, Zimbabwe; one person was wounded.

Senegal said that with those acts of aggression South Africa had shown its determination to silence any country that challenged its policies in southern Africa, namely, the maintenance of apartheid, the refusal to grant independence to Namibia and the systematic destabilization of neighbouring countries. Senegal urged the Council to condemn South Africa, to demand reparations from it for damage caused and to apply mandatory economic sanctions against it.

Botswana accused South Africa of treachery, pointing out that it had never stopped talking to South Africa about common border security and that the two countries had been scheduled to meet on 23 May to discuss the border problem.

Attacks on what it described as terrorist centres and facilities in Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe were acknowledged by South Africa. It recalled that it had frequently warned it would act if Governments tolerated the harbouring of terrorists engaged in hostile actions against South Africa. The South African Government had stated that apartheid was disappearing, that it accepted power sharing, equal treatment and opportunities, a democratic system of government and participation by all South Africans in government. However, it could not be expected to continue the reform process while terrorists opposed negotiations which were the key to the resolution of South Africa's internal problems.

The United States condemned the attacks and called on South Africa to examine the consequences of its latest aggression. The raids were a blow to chances for peace and to South Africa's long-term interests. It was a fact that Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe had made efforts to limit cross-border violence directed at South Africa. It was the more unjust, then, that they should be subjected to attack by the very State with which they were trying to reach peaceful solutions. As with past resolutions condemning South Africa for its violation of the territorial integrity of other States, the United States was looking for a consensus on this occasion. The Council's message to South Africa must be unanimous and unequivocal. The United States rejected a charge by Zambia that, as South Africa's alleged master, it had inspired the raids on Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

The USSR said the latest aggression by South Africa was another link in a chain of unbroken acts of aggression against independent African countries. It represented a threat to peace and security throughout the world. The policy of State terrorism implemented by the United States had served as a model for South Africa. The United States never hesitated to employ political, economic and other sanctions against countries struggling to attain national liberation or against socialist States. The USSR believed that only by eliminating apartheid in South Africa could regional peace and good-neighbourliness be established. It called on the Security Council to condemn the South African aggression and to adopt comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

The Security Council was urged to impose mandatory sanctions by Argentina, Bulgaria, China, Cuba, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, India, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Zimbabwe.

The excuse that the raids targeted "terrorist bases" was rejected by many States, including Botswana, Madagascar, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. Denmark said that South Africa had shown by its action contempt for humanitarian efforts by the three countries receiving people fleeing from persecution by the South African authorities. Such aggression could not deter African States from continuing political, moral and material support to national liberation movements of South Africa, many of those States declared.

China observed that South Africa, beset with difficulties both at home and abroad, had to resort to force against African States in the region in order to maintain its rule.

South African aggression was condemned by Iran, Madagascar and Thailand. The Congo stated that the Council's message must be directed against South Africa's policy of aggression and that it would associate itself with any Council action to that end. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not expect much from the Council because of the United States and its allies which, it predicted, would resort to the veto.

Australia stated that the South African attacks were totally unacceptable and would do incalculable harm to hopes for peaceful regional change. France was convinced that armed action by South Africa could in no way resolve the problems of southern Africa and that above all it was important to dismantle apartheid through dialogue and negotiation. The United Kingdom said the Council must condemn the South African attacks. Referring to the Commonwealth initiative for a peaceful solution in South Africa, it urged South Africa to consider seriously the consequences should it not respond to efforts to avert further violence.

A draft resolution, sponsored by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago and the United Arab Emirates,⁽⁷⁹⁾ would have had the Council condemn the South African raids and demand that South Africa pay compensation for loss of life and property damage. Stating that it was acting in accordance with provisions of the Charter, the Council would have determined that South Africa's policies and acts constituted a threat to international peace and security and decided to impose selective economic and other sanctions against it, as follows: suspension of all new investments in South Africa; prohibition of the sale of gold and all other coins minted there; supervision of guaranteed export loans; restrictions in sports and cultural relations; prohibition of all new nuclear contracts; and prohibition of all sales of computer equipment.

The United Kingdom requested a separate vote on the twelfth preambular paragraph, which would have noted that the so-called policy of constructive engagement had not succeeded, and on paragraph 6, wherein the Council would have stated that it was acting in accordance with the Charter. Trinidad and Tobago, on behalf of the sponsors, asked that the draft be voted on as a whole, in accordance with rule 32^d of the provisional rules of procedure. The President noted that since the sponsors objected to the proposal to vote on its separate parts, the Council would consider it in its entirety.

France declared before the vote that there were no grounds in the circumstances for replacing national measures by mandatory sanctions.

The draft received 12 votes in favour, to 2 against, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.
Against: United Kingdom, United States.
Abstaining: France

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative votes of permanent members.

Several countries explained their positions after the vote. The United States believed that severing economic ties would lead to severing political ties, depriving the international community of any leverage over South Africa and of any ability to work for dismantling apartheid. The United Kingdom regretted that the sponsors had not accepted its proposal for a paragraph-by-paragraph vote; if they had, a consensus resolution would have been achieved.

The USSR stated that the United States vote confirmed what the USSR had said about that Government's position on South Africa's aggressive policy towards other countries; the USSR would undertake to act in accordance with the spirit of the draft. Bulgaria indicated that it also would abide by its provisions. Denmark regretted that it had not been possible to adopt a text expressing its views. Senegal remarked that, in the light of the vote, Africa had the right to wonder whether there was any chance through recourse to the international community of seeing the South African problem settled peacefully; no matter how great its bitterness, Africa would continue to use its energies to eradicate the crime against humanity represented by apartheid.

Meeting numbers SC 2684-2686.

Communication (October). Botswana transmitted a press release of 21 October reporting that on 19 October the South African Air Force had made reconnaissance flights over the eastern region of Botswana and that on the following day its Army had crossed into the region; four helicopters had landed troops near the village of Tsetsebjwe.⁽⁸⁰⁾

Lesotho-South Africa dispute

In 1986, Lesotho addressed two letters to the Secretary-General concerning South Africa's closure of their common border.

On 6 January,⁽⁸¹⁾ Lesotho recalled that at a meeting of the Security Council on 30 December 1985 it had referred to threats by South Africa to institute tighter border control measures between the two countries. Lesotho said that as of 1 January 1986 South Africa had carried out its threats and, since then, with the exception of white people and Lesotho nationals going to work in South African mines, its nationals had not been allowed to cross the border. Denying that there were any ANC cadres or bases in Lesotho, it said that it was being punished for refusing to return to South Africa those who had fled apartheid. Two telexes of 24 December 1985 were attached: in one, South Africa declared that, in view of Lesotho's ambivalence on the issue of terrorists operating from Lesotho, tighter border controls would have to be instituted; in the other, Lesotho stated that it would interpret the imposition of stricter border controls as a further act of confrontation.

On 22 January,⁽⁸²⁾ Lesotho said that, with the border closing, supplies of petroleum products, foodstuffs and medical supplies in Lesotho had become almost depleted. South Africa had indicated that it would keep the border closed until refugees, particularly those of ANC affiliation, were removed from Lesotho. The situation of the refugees had become precarious, but none would be handed over to South Africa and none was being expelled. Lesotho sought the assistance of the Secretary-General in what had become an emergency for the small land-locked country.

South Africa, on 24 January,⁽⁸³⁾ told the Secretary-General that the border was not closed and that persons and goods were allowed to pass through. However, it had been constrained to introduce stricter border control measures as a result of the presence of ANC terrorists in Lesotho and their threat to South African internal security. Those measures took the form of closer scrutiny of goods and persons. South Africa emphasized that special arrangements had been made for perishable goods, medical supplies and persons who wished to go to South Africa for medical treatment.

Chad-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute

The territorial dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya continued in 1986, and was again considered by the Security Council.

Communications (February-November). On 14 February,⁽¹⁾ the President of Chad transmitted a message to the Secretary-General, charging that on 10 and 12 February forces of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had successively attacked Kouba-Olanga, Om-Chalaba, Kalait and Korotoro. Chadian troops had repulsed the attacks at Kouba and Korotoro, but fighting was continuing at Om-Chalaba and Kalait.

In a 17 February message to the President of the Security Council,⁽²⁾ Chad's Foreign Minister declared that, in view of the aggression by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations (see APPENDIX II), Chad had requested military intervention from France to repel the attack. In response, the French air force on 16 February had destroyed the Ouadi-Doum airfield, built by the Libyans in 1985 in Chadian territory to serve as a base for their operations against Chad. The Jamahiriya, meanwhile, had bombed the civilian airport at Ndjamen, rendering it temporarily unusable.

On 2 April,⁽³⁾ Senegal forwarded a press release issued on 28 March at Brazzaville, Congo, in connection with the efforts of OAU to arrange a meeting of national reconciliation between the President of Chad, Hisssein Habré, and the President of the Gouvernement de l'unité nationale du Tchad, Goukouni Weddey. Mr. Weddey did not respond to an invitation to attend the meeting. The current OAU Chairman, the President of Senegal, regretted that the Chadian people had let slip a chance to reach a settlement of the fratricidal conflict that was ravaging their country.

The OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Addis Ababa, 28-30 July 1986) adopted a resolution encouraging the President of Gabon, Chairman of the OAU Ad Hoc Mediation

Committee on the Chad/Libyan dispute, to reactivate the Committee and its efforts to settle the dispute.⁽⁴⁾

OAU endeavours to achieve national reconciliation and establish a lasting peace respecting the territorial integrity of Chad were supported by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September).⁽⁵⁾ The Conference urged the international community to contribute to Chad's reconstruction.

Chad, on 13 November,⁽⁶⁾ requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation in the northern part of the country, the prefecture of Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti, 550,000 square kilometres of which, it charged, were occupied by the Jamahiriya. In addition, it accused the Jamahiriya of massacring civilians in the occupied zone. In a memorandum annexed to the letter, Chad described attacks by bombers, tanks and artillery on localities, specifically Gourma, Gouro and Ounianga, and said populations had been deported, palm plantations set afire and cattle decimated.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council considered the Chadian complaint at a meeting on 18 November. It invited Chad, Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Zaïre, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. Seven speakers addressed the meeting; no action was taken.

Chad charged that for several weeks the people of Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti had been the target of attacks by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Despite the continued occupation of more than half its territory by the Jamahiriya, Chad still put its trust in action by the United Nations to find a solution. It appealed to the Council to do everything possible to bring about the withdrawal of Libyan troops.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya held that the Council was meeting for groundless reasons, that its purpose was to divert attention away from United States aggression against Libya, and that the Chadian problem was an internal problem resulting from French colonialism. Civil war had broken out in 1965 and still raged. It affirmed that it had no wish to interfere in Chad and had withdrawn its forces from Chad when requested to by the legitimate Government of that country, but had returned to assist that Government when requested. It called on other States, especially the colonial Powers, to end their intervention in Chad.

France, noting that it had set up a military assistance unit in Chad at the request of its Government to thwart the Libyan offensive, called for the restoration of Chad's territorial integrity. The Congo urged that the Security Council encourage OAU in its initiatives aimed at Chadian national reconciliation, while Zaire asked that the forces occupying the northern part of Chad be withdrawn in response to the many appeals of the United Nations and OAU.

The United States declared that since the Chadian Government had come to power in 1982 it had worked to achieve national reconciliation. However, Chad's domestic progress had been disrupted by external military aggression. Member States of the United Nations should demand that the Jamahiriya withdraw its forces from Chad. The USSR supported OAU efforts to achieve national reconciliation of the various groups in Chad, but opposed making the Council's meeting an anti-Libyan meeting. According to the USSR, the situation in Chad was the result of the interference of the Western Powers, primarily the United States and France, which were trying to increase tensions on the Libyan border.

Meeting number. SC 2721

Further Communication. On 12 December,⁽⁷⁾ Chad informed the Security Council President that since the 18 November meeting the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had escalated its aggression. It had launched an airborne and ground attack on 11 December against Chadian forces at Bardai, as a prelude to a major offensive throughout Tibesti (Zouar, Yebhi-Bou, Zoumri, Wour and Bir-Cherda). Chad charged that the invaders were using napalm bombs and poison gas.

Burkina Faso-Mali dispute

In 1986, the International Court of Justice remained seized of the question of the delimitation of part of the land frontier between Burkina Faso and Mali, which had been referred to it in 1983. On 10 January, the Court delivered an Order indicating provisional measures formed to deal with the dispute (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

Comorian island of Mayotte

Independence had been granted by France to three of the four islands in the Comoro Archipelago of the Indian Ocean, following a 1974 referendum. The inhabitants of the fourth island, Mayotte, had voted to remain associated with France.

In 1986, the question of Mayotte remained before the United Nations.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ reported in October 1986 on developments concerning Mayotte.⁽²⁾ He had requested in August that the Comoros, France and OAU provide him with information.

A number of developments had occurred, but the problem remained intact, the Comoros replied. The OAU Ad Hoc Committee of Seven had met three times to evaluate the situation, and the meetings had formulated recommendations that were adopted by the OAU Conference of Heads of State and Government as resolutions, which reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte and called on France to honour its commitment to respect the integrity of the Comoro Archipelago. On 8 July, the Ad Hoc Committee met in Paris with the French Prime Minister, who wished to continue the dialogue with OAU. The Comorian Government also met bilaterally on several occasions with the French authorities; recently, France decided not to hold a referendum in Mayotte, which was of significance since the Comorian Government asserted that the referendum held in 1974 remained valid.

France noted that in 1976⁽³⁾ it had adopted a law declaring Mayotte to be a territorial community of France. It had discussed the question of Mayotte in July 1986 with the Comoros and with the OAU Ad Hoc Committee, as a result of which the OAU Conference had adopted a resolution expressing its appreciation for the resumption of dialogue between France and the Committee. The French Government said that in the current context it did not intend to organize a referendum.

The OAU Executive Secretary transmitted a report prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee. France had said it had no special interests to protect in Mayotte and that it was aware that Africa, OAU in particular, and the international community were greatly concerned about Mayotte. The Comoros had stressed two points: the indivisibility of the archipelago and that the islands had been colonized by France as a single entity for more than a century. Ninety-five per cent of the Comorian people had voted in favour of independence in 1974 and the results should have been considered as a whole and not on an island-by-island basis. The Comorian side was still prepared for dialogue and consultations to resolve the problem. The OAU Council of Ministers, which considered the Committee's report in July, mandated the Committee to continue to seek the return of Mayotte to the Comoros.

Communications. On 5 May,⁽⁴⁾ Morocco forwarded to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted by the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, 6-10 January), deploring France's interpretation of the Mayotte problem and requesting it to respect the unity of the archipelago.

Zimbabwe, on 30 September,⁽⁵⁾ transmitted the final documents of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September), in which it was declared that Mayotte was an integral part of the Comoros. The Conference expressed regret that France, in spite of repeated promises, had not taken a single step that could lead to a solution of the problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/30 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, and 40/62 of 9 December 1985, in which it, inter alia, affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte, and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced further that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

Malagasy islands question

Debate on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India (islands north and west of Madagascar) was postponed for the sixth successive year by the General Assembly in 1986. The Assembly decided to include the item in its 1987 provisional agenda. It had not acted on the question since 1980⁽¹⁾ when it reaffirmed its first action in 1979,⁽²⁾ inviting France to negotiate the reintegration of the islands with Madagascar and calling on it to repeal the measures which infringed the sovereignty of Madagascar.

The Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September)⁽³⁾ reaffirmed the need to preserve the unity of Madagascar and, regarding the Malagasy islands, urged the parties to begin negotiations without delay in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and OAU.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 October, the Chairman of the Special Political Committee informed its members that he had held consultations with the interested parties, in particular France and Madagascar, and, in view of the ongoing periodic contacts between the two countries, it was recommended that the Committee postpone consideration of the item until 1987.⁽⁴⁾ On 3 December, acting on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly, by decision 41/416, decided to include the item in its 1987 provisional agenda.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarships were granted to 1,109 persons in 1985/86 under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. The Programme was financed by a trust fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals.

The scholarships were awarded to 760 South Africans, 342 Namibians (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and 7 Zimbabweans, according to a report by the Secretary-General covering the period from 16 October 1985 to 30 September 1986.⁽¹⁾ New awards were granted to 504 applicants, while 605 awards were extended; the new awards went to 294 South Africans and 210 Namibians.

In consultation with its Advisory Committee, the Programme had instituted a number of cost-effective measures. It entered into co-financing arrangements with the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation and encouraged universities in the United States, Canada and other high-cost countries to provide tuition waivers for South African and Namibian students. The Programme extended awards to third-year and fourth-year college students who had not obtained waivers.

Projects currently being co-financed by the Programme and the Commonwealth Fund would enable jointly sponsored students to study at institutions in Canada, India, Kenya, Malta, Sri Lanka and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Programme had developed contacts with other organizations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World University Service, the Otto Benicke Foundation, the African-American Institute, the Institute of International Education, the Intergovernmental Committee on Migrations and the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States, with the aim of co-ordinating the search for applicants, places at educational institutions and employment after graduation; facilitating the administration of awards, the exchange of information concerning living expenses, fees and availability of facilities; and avoiding duplication of effort among scholarship agencies.

The Secretary-General concluded that the Programme had made every effort to meet the needs of South African and Namibian students; he appealed to States, institutions, organizations and individuals to support it.

Financial contributions

In 1986, 25 States contributed $3,131,890 to the Programme, compared with $3,246,427 in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/27.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly.

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 40/54 of 2 December 1985,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing an account of the work of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the administration of the Programme for the period from 16 October 1985 to 30 September 1986,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered by the Programme to the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with satisfaction that educational and technical assistance for southern Africa has become a growing concern of the international community,

Fully recognizing the need at this critical juncture in southern Africa to provide educational opportunities and counselling to a greater number of student refugees in a wide variety of professional, cultural and linguistic disciplines, as well as opportunities for vocational and technical training and for advanced studies at graduate and post-graduate levels in the priority fields of study,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of the Programme is essential in order to meet the ever-increasing demand for educational and training assistance to students from South Africa and Namibia,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their continued efforts to promote generous contributions to the Programme and to enhance co-operation with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance to southern Africa;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all those that have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

4. Appeals to all States, institutions, organizations and individuals to offer greater financial and other support to the Programme in order to secure its continuation and steady expansion.

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1986⁽²⁾ on the development of cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations. 'The report covered consultations and exchange of information as well as co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa, economic and social development and press coverage.

Communication. On 25 September,⁽³⁾ Algeria transmitted to the Secretary-General the resolutions adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its forty-fourth ordinary session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 21-26 July) and the declarations, decisions and resolutions adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its twenty-second ordinary session (Addis Ababa, 28-30 July).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/8.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolution 40/20 of 21 November 1985, and the practical measures taken for their implementation, as well as its resolution 39/29 of 3 December 1984 on the critical economic situation in Africa and the Declaration annexed thereto,

Recalling also, in particular, its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 on the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-fourth ordinary session and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-second ordinary session, which were held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 26 July and from 28 to 30 July 1986, respectively,

Taking note also of the resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Organization of African Unity on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Noting further the Declaration on the Economic Situation in Africa and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, annexed thereto, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first session held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985, which was devoted mainly to the critical economic situation in Africa,

Noting also with satisfaction the support given by the international community to the special session of the General Assembly on the critical economic situation in Africa, which was held from 27 May to 1 June 1986,

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 30 September 1986,

Gravely concerned about the serious and deteriorating economic situation in Africa, in particular the effects of the prolonged drought, desertification and the adverse effects of the international economic environment on the African States,

Recalling, in this connection, the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and all specialized agencies, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Lagos Plan of Action,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in southern Africa arising from the continued domination of the peoples of the area by the minority racist regime of South Africa and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the peoples of the region and to their liberation movements in their struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Conscious of its responsibilities to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa to help them cope with the situation caused by the acts of aggression committed against their territories by the apartheid régime of South Africa,

Deeply concerned at the gravity of the situation of the refugees in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help African countries of asylum cope with the heavy social, economic and administrative burden imposed on their fragile economies,

Recognizing the important role which the various information units and departments of the United Nations system can play in disseminating information to bring about a greater awareness of the grave situation prevailing in southern Africa as well as the social and economic problems and the needs of African States and their regional and subregional institutions,

Aware of the need for continuous liaison, consultations on matters of common concern, exchange of information at the secretariat level and technical co-operation on such matters as training and research between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and commends his efforts to strengthen such co-operation;

2. Notes with appreciation the increasing and continued participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral co-operation among African States and to find solutions to African problems of vital importance to the international community, and notes with satisfaction the increased collaboration of various organizations of the United Nations system in support of those efforts;

4. Reaffirms the determination of the United Nations to work closely with the Organization of African Unity towards the establishment of the new international economic order in accordance with the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and, in that regard, to take full account of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, and of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

5. Calls upon all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, to implement fully its resolution S-13/2 on the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

6. Also calls upon all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, to give their maximum support to Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the need to give increasingly wide publicity to all matters relating to the social and economic development of Africa, in particular to General Assembly resolution S-13/2;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the timely initiative he had taken to alert the international community to the critical economic and social situation in Africa and welcomes the measures he has taken to facilitate international co-operation and co-ordination to assist Africa;

9. Expresses its appreciation also to the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the assistance so far rendered to the African States in dealing with the emergency situation as well as with the critical economic problems that exist on the African continent;

10. Calls upon all Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to increase their assistance to the African States affected by serious economic problems, in particular problems of displaced persons resulting from natural and other disasters, by implementing fully General Assembly resolution S-13/2 and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1956-1990;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to continue his commendable efforts in alerting and sensitizing the international community to the plight of African countries, in mobilizing additional assistance to Africa, in co-ordinating the activities of the United Nations system in Africa, and in monitoring the situation and presenting periodic reports thereon;

12. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, on behalf of the international community, to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance for African States experiencing grave economic difficulties, as well as for the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa, to help them cope with the situation caused by the acts of aggression committed against their territories by the apartheid régime of South Africa;

13. Expresses its appreciation to the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and other concerned international financial institutions for their response to the critical economic situation in Africa and their assistance in the organization of round-table and donor conferences in favour of the least developed countries of Africa, as well as in the implementation of those special programmes of economic assistance;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Organization of African Unity informed periodically of the response of the international community to those special programmes of economic assistance and to continue to co-ordinate efforts with all similar programmes initiated by that organization;

15. Calls upon the international community to provide generous assistance on a long-term basis to all African States affected by the economic crisis, particularly those suffering from calamities such as drought and flood, in accordance with General Assembly resolution S-13/2 and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990;

16. Reiterates the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to intensify its efforts to eliminate colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid in southern Africa;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa, and, in this connection, draws once again the attention of the international community to the need to contribute to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid established by the Organization of African Unity;

18. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned within the United Nations system to continue to expand their co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and, through it, their assistance to the liberation movements recognized by that organization;

19. Reaffirms its willingness to co-operate with the Organization of African Unity and its organs in the implementation of resolutions and decisions of mutual concern;

20. Calls upon the competent organs, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to ensure that their personnel and recruitment policies provide for the just and equitable representation of Africa at all levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional and field operations;

21. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, and non-governmental organizations to provide material and economic assistance to African countries of asylum to help them cope with the heavy burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructures by the presence of large numbers of refugees;

22. Invites Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously and effectively to the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

23. Calls upon United Nations organs-in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to associate closely the Organization of African Unity with all their work concerning Africa;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate facilities continue to be made available to facilitate continued liaison and consultations on matters of common interest as well as for the provision of technical assistance to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity, as required;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, to arrange the date and venue for the next meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of that organization and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system;

26. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations concerned within the United Nations system.

Chapter VI

Americas

The situation in Central America was considered in 1986 by the Security Council and the General Assembly, with both bodies addressing specific disputes between countries. The Assembly also dealt with the question as a whole.

The Secretary-General reported on the situation in July, including the status of regional and international peace efforts and assistance to resolve the widespread conflict and to mitigate the resultant suffering. The Assembly in November, by resolution 41/37, reaffirmed that a solution of the conflict required all States to respect international law, reiterated support for the Contadora peace activities, requested perseverance in those efforts and urged States to continue supporting them.

The Council convened four times during the year at Nicaragua's request. Early in July and in October it considered the dispute which had been the subject of a Judgment of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on 27 June in the case brought by Nicaragua against the United States. Draft resolutions by which the Council would have called for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment in conformity with relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations were not adopted due to the negative vote of a permanent Council member. However, in November, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/31, containing such a provision. Later in July and again in December, the Council considered Nicaragua's complaints of aggression against it and incidents in Central America endangering international peace. Following a September report on measures undertaken to reduce the negative effects of the trade embargo imposed against Nicaragua, the Assembly in December invited continuation of such measures and requested that the embargo be immediately revoked (resolution 41/164).

The agenda item on the observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America was deleted from the Assembly's agenda for its 1986 regular session. Earlier, at its resumed 1985 session on 15 September 1986, the Assembly, by decision 40/480, had deferred the item to its 1986 regular session.

Central America situation

Noting the deterioration in the Central America situation, with the increasing intrusion of conflicting ideologies, attempts to impose unilateral solutions to the region's problems and the resort to force, the Secretary-General, in his annual report on the Organization's work (see p. 3), believed that only by insulating the situation from the East-West conflict and seeking a Latin American solution that took account of the economic and social needs of the area could a genuine settlement be achieved.

Communications (January-3 July). The 1986 communications to the Secretary-General on the Central America situation—mostly in the form of communiques and declarations—concerned the peace efforts of the Contadora Group (Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela) and of the Contadora Support Group (Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay) established in July 1985.⁽¹⁾ Their focus was on two documents: a Message for Peace, Security and Democracy in Central America, referred to as the Caraballeda Message; and a revised draft comprehensive agreement entitled Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America, first proposed in 1984⁽²⁾ and commonly referred to as the Contadora Act. Other 1986 communications dealt with disputes between Nicaragua and several other States (see below, under the relevant subject headings).

The President of Nicaragua, by a 9 January note,⁽³⁾ addressing the Presidents of the countries of the Contadora and Support Groups, reiterated that regional peace prospects depended on an understanding between Nicaragua and the United States, to be reached through bilateral dialogue. To that end, Nicaragua put forward several proposals to facilitate the Groups' negotiating process: that a meeting be arranged between the United States Secretary of State and Nicaragua's Minister for Foreign Affairs; that a general treaty be negotiated among Central American States embodying the fundamental principles of international law, to be concluded at a presidential meeting in May; and that bilateral peace agreements be concluded between Central American States and other machinery, such as mixed commissions, be set up.

A Message for Peace, Security and Democracy in Central America was issued by the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group and its Support Group on 12 January, at the conclusion of their two-day meeting at Caraballeda, Venezuela.⁽⁴⁾ The Ministers defined the lasting foundations for peace in Central America, outlined a series of actions necessary to consolidate them, and pledged efforts to accelerate negotiations for the speedy signing of the Contadora Act.⁽⁵⁾

In a 16 January communiqué,⁽⁶⁾ Nicaragua stated that its President exchanged views with the President of Guatemala on the occasion of his inauguration, and with those of Colombia, El Salvador and Panama, as well as with the President-elect of Honduras, on inter alia the current status of the Central American negotiating process; he expressed support for the Caraballeda Message and confirmed Nicaragua's position, as contained in a 1985 declaration, ⁽⁵⁾ that a solution would be effective only when the United States ceased attacking Nicaragua, directly or indirectly, covertly or by any other means.

Two documents—the Guatemala Declaration of 14 January, signed by the Foreign Ministers of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua; and the Presidents' Declaration of 15 January, signed by the Presidents of El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Panama and the President-elect of Honduras—were transmitted by Guatemala on 17 January.⁽⁷⁾ By the first, the Ministers expressed support for the Caraballeda Message and reiterated their countries' readiness to achieve peace and stability based on the Contadora Act; by the second, the Presidents reiterated their confidence in dialogue and negotiation, and support for the Contadora peace process.

The 12-member European Community (EC), in a joint statement of 20 January,⁽⁸⁾ welcomed both the Caraballeda Message as a confirmation of the balanced and comprehensive approach of the Contadora efforts in promoting a negotiated settlement of the conflicts in Central America, and the Guatemala Declaration's endorsement of the Message. China expressed similar sentiments and pledged support for the Contadora peace efforts in a 22 January Foreign Ministry statement,⁽⁹⁾ as did Japan's Foreign Ministry in a 30 January statement.⁽¹⁰⁾

Honduras, on 21 February,⁽¹¹⁾ drew attention to its position on the Caraballeda Message, made known at the meeting of plenipotentiaries of Central America, sponsored by the Contadora Group (Panama City, 14 and 15 February): the Message gave impetus to renewing negotiations to finalize the Contadora Act, filled the diplomatic vacuum created by Nicaragua's refusal to continue negotiating unless it had a prior security agreement with the United States, and opened new political opportunities for bilateral negotiations between that country and Nicaragua.

The Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups, by a communique issued on 28 February at Punta del Este, Uruguay,⁽¹²⁾ stressed the importance of, among other things, normalizing relations between Costa Rica and Nicaragua (see p. 180), finalizing the Contadora Act and giving effect to the actions outlined by the Caraballeda Message, and repeated the imperative of ending external aid to irregular forces and insurgent movements operating in various countries in the region if order was to be restored.

In a communique issued at the end of a joint meeting (Panama City, 5-7 April),⁽¹³⁾ the Foreign Ministers of the two Groups reaffirmed that the Contadora-sponsored process of diplomatic negotiation was the only feasible means of securing political understanding and, together with the Contadora Act when signed and in force, was the basis for peace in the region; they thus invited the five Central American States (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua) to a 6 June meeting at Panama City to resolve the two outstanding aspects of the Act—control and reduction of armaments, and international military manoeuvres—so that the Act might finally be adopted and brought into force.

Nicaragua, in its response of 11 April,⁽¹⁴⁾ agreed to sign the Act at the proposed 6 June meeting once the outstanding issues had been resolved, and provided that by then United States aggression against Nicaragua had ceased completely, in keeping with the "simultaneity" provided for in the Caraballeda Message. Honduras on 11 April,⁽¹⁵⁾ reaffirmed its political will to bring negotiations on the Act to a conclusion so as to join in its signing at the meeting.

Guatemala confirmed on 16 April⁽¹⁶⁾ that, as decided by the Foreign Ministers of the five Central American States, a meeting of their Presidents—to which the President of Panama would be invited—would take place at Esquipulas, Guatemala, on 24 and 25 May; it also outlined the meeting's agenda: mechanisms for political negotiation and for regional security; creation of a Central American Parliament; restructuring for the region's economic and social integration; and intraregional trade and solving Central American debt.

The Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 16-19 April),⁽¹⁷⁾ adopted a Political Declaration, which commented on, among other matters, developments throughout Latin America. The Ministers, besides calling a halt to all hostile actions against Nicaragua and urging the United States to resume bilateral negotiations with it, welcomed the peace initiatives of the Contadora and Support Groups, particularly the Caraballeda Message, and hoped that implementation of the simultaneous action envisaged in the Message would lead to a resumption of the negotiation process essential for the peaceful solution of the Central American crisis.

The Presidents and heads of special missions of the members of the Contadora and Support Groups, by a communique issued on 8 May at San José Costa Rica,(18) made clear that Latin America was capable of solving its own problems, urged the speedy conclusion of the Contadora Act, and resolved to continue working to attain peace in the region and to join in efforts to ensure implementation of any agreements to be concluded at the forthcoming Esquipulas meeting.

Nicaragua, by an official proposal of 15 May which was submitted to the Contadora Group,(19) outlined specific and detailed commitments to be assumed for the prompt finalization of the Contadora Act, with respect to: prohibiting international military manoeuvres; ceasing the arms buildup in the region; dismantling foreign military bases, schools or related installations; withdrawing foreign military or security advisers; prohibiting arms trafficking; ending support for irregular forces and for acts of terrorism, subversion or sabotage; and establishing a regional system of direct communication.

The plenipotentiaries of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, meeting in a joint session of the Contadora Group and Central American countries (Panama City, 16-18 May), issued a joint communique on 18 May.(20) The session discussed the two outstanding issues of the Contadora Act in the light of proposals submitted by the Group, Honduras and Nicaragua and by Costa Rica and Guatemala jointly; the Nicaraguan proposal stipulated that negotiations on limitation of armaments and troop strength should take place after the signing of the Act, while the Costa Rica-Guatemala proposal, endorsed by El Salvador and Honduras, was regarded as providing maximum freedom to the five Central American States to fulfil their security needs while averting an endless arms spiral. The text of the joint proposal was transmitted on 27 May(21) by Honduras, which stated that it had been communicated to the Organization of American States (OAS). In a 29 May press release,(22) Honduras asserted that the meeting of plenipotentiaries had ended in an impasse due to Nicaragua's inflexible position and its unwillingness to negotiate comprehensively on the armaments issue.

On the eve of the Esquipulas summit on 23 May, the 12 EC members issued a joint statement,(23) stating that the moment had arrived to conclude the sustained efforts of all involved by reaching final agreement on the Contadora Act and appealing to the five Central American States to sign it.

The Presidents of those five States adopted the Esquipulas Declaration at the conclusion of their meeting (Esquipulas, Guatemala, 24 and 25 May),(24) by which they indicated their willingness to sign the Act and comply with its provisions, stating that the various proposals put forward were sufficient to facilitate its signing. They decided to hold regular meetings to address urgent problems of peace and development, to undertake efforts towards understanding and co-operation and, to that end, agreed to establish a freely-elected Central American Parliament as the focal point; to achieve peace through a democratic process that was pluralistic and participatory and without outside interference; and to review, update and give new impetus to the processes of economic and social integration of Central America.

Nicaragua, on 2 June,(25) supplemented its 15 May proposals(19) with a list of offensive weapons which it was prepared to reduce, limit, regulate or do without, adding that this represented a further effort by Nicaragua to finalize negotiations on the Contadora Act.

Costa Rica, by a 3 June communiqué,(26) noting that the Esquipulas meeting showed serious differences between Nicaragua and the other participants-Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras-agreed that the political systems of the countries of the isthmus must be pluralistic and participatory; it stressed that the Contadora mediation process should not be prolonged indefinitely but should become an effective instrument for peace in Central America; it expressed satisfaction that the Central American Governments were prepared to assume the commitments envisaged by the Contadora Act.

The positions of the five Central American States on the two outstanding issues of the Contadora Act-military manoeuvres and control and limitation of armaments-were given in detail in a document that emerged from a meeting convened to discuss those issues (New York, 29 May).(27)

In a message issued at the end of a meeting with the Central American Foreign Ministers (Panama City, 6 and 7 June),(28) the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups reported that the Contadora Act had been redrafted to take account of those positions and sent for comment to the five Central American States. They emphasized that three fundamental commitments should be accepted for the Contadora process to proceed: not to permit the use of a country's territory as a base for attacks on another, or for providing military or logistical support to irregular forces or subversive groups; not to become a member of military or political alliances threatening regional peace and security so as not to draw the region into the East-West conflict; and no Power should support irregular forces or subversive groups, or use or threaten to use force to overthrow any Government in the area. In addition, peace should be consolidated through pluralistic democracy, with majority government guaranteeing freedoms and fundamental rights of all citizens, and accompanied by economic and social development.

Earlier, Bolivia and Peru, by a joint communique signed at La Paz on 3 June,⁽²⁹⁾ reiterated their belief that a viable solution to the Central America crisis, which foreign interference aggravated and made difficult to solve, could emerge only from the joint efforts of the region's countries and from the Contadora peace negotiations.

Honduras, in a 13 June press release,⁽³⁰⁾ stated that the revised draft Act contained obligations that were unreasonable and insufficient to guarantee Honduran security. Honduras reiterated its readiness to continue to explore new formulae that would guarantee the legitimate interests of all States. The Government's position was presented to the nation by the Foreign Minister in a televised address on 4 July and in a statement by the Honduran plenipotentiary to the Contadora negotiations the texts of which were transmitted on 9 July.⁽³¹⁾ The statement explained that the revised text did not specify the limits and timetables for weapon and troop reduction, deferring negotiations on the issue until after the Act's entry into force; it set out an uncertain procedure for those negotiations, with no regard for the principles of reciprocity and simultaneity.

Nicaragua's Foreign Minister, by a 17 June note,⁽³²⁾ informed his counterparts of the Contadora and Support Groups that Nicaragua, having studied the revised draft, had always indicated its readiness to sign the Act in the spirit of the Caraballeda Message, was prepared to provide an inventory of 14 categories of military items with an accompanying "factor chart", and concurred with the three commitments specified by the Groups on 7 June⁽²⁸⁾ as necessary to advance the peace process.

Guatemala, on 3 July,⁽³³⁾ transmitted a document indicating that, on 26 June, at the end of a two-day meeting at Guatemala City, the Vice-Presidents of the Central American States, following up on the 25 May Esquipulas Declaration,⁽²⁴⁾ approved the establishment of a 25-member preparatory commission to prepare a draft treaty for the creation of a Central American Parliament, and set 14 July for the commission's installation in Guatemala City and 15 October for the draft treaty's circulation to the Central American States for comment.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1985 Security Council request,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General in July 1986 reported on the situation in Central America.⁽³⁵⁾

He stated that, since his 1985 report,⁽⁵⁾ he had maintained frequent contacts with the live Central American countries and with the Contadora Group and Support Group. During his visit to South America between 30 March and 7 April 1986, he discussed the situation with the Presidents and Foreign Ministers of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil and Uruguay, and with the Foreign Minister of Peru in February and June. On 26 June, he received a visit from the Contadora Foreign Ministers who informed him about the status of Contadora negotiations and activities since their 1985 visit⁽⁵⁾ and handed him the final version of the Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America and other relevant documents.

The Secretary-General was informed of the main changes in the new version of the Act, in particular the two points on which agreement had to be reached: military manoeuvres and the control and verification of armaments. The new formulations did not reflect the viewpoints of any State of the region, but rather represented an effort to harmonize the proposals submitted by the Central American countries. The substantive aspects of the Act having been resolved and agreed upon, only procedural and operational matters would be discussed at the next round of negotiations. The Ministers emphasized the difficulties of the Central American countries in finding formulae to reconcile their national security interests with those of the region as a whole, and with problems created by increasing military activities. In expressing concern over outside pressures on certain of the countries, they stressed that countries outside the region with interests in it should help to create a climate of mutual confidence that would preclude any unilateral solution, particularly one imposed by force.

The Secretary-General paid tribute to the Contadora Group for its efforts to bring about lasting peace in Central America, underscoring that, with the Support Group's backing, it had been a restraining force and had helped avoid an overall deterioration of the situation. In drawing attention to the ICJ ruling handed down on 27 June 1986, in the case of Nicaragua v. the United States, he pointed out that the Court had decided that it was competent to rule on the case.

The Secretary-General mentioned as positive elements in an otherwise gloomy situation the elections held in Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica, the preparation of a draft constitution in Nicaragua, the meetings of the five Central American Presidents held in Guatemala in January⁽⁷⁾ and May,⁽²⁴⁾ and the high-level meetings by those countries held with increasing frequency. He especially welcomed the decision to set up a freely-elected Central American Parliament. He regarded as a hopeful sign the announcement of a possible round of talks between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Democrático Revolucionario-Frente Farabundo Martí de Liberación Nacional, and as encouraging the convergence between the five Central American countries and the Contadora and Support Groups regarding the elements on which a comprehensive settlement of the conflicts in Central America should be based.⁽²⁸⁾

The Secretary-General appealed to the countries of the region and to those with interests there to implement those elements without delay, fully and simultaneously, and to act according to international law so as to break the continuing aggravation of the Central America crisis, the steady ideologization of the conflict and its consequent inclusion in the East-West struggle, and the threat of widespread conflict in the region. He reiterated his readiness to make any contribution towards solving the crisis.

He drew attention to the region's severe economic recession during the current decade, with the result that the inherently uneven income distribution of most of the countries had become more uneven still, and the number of those living in desperate poverty had dramatically increased. Various United Nations agencies had increased their efforts to mitigate the difficulties, spending a yearly average of some $100 million in the first half of the 1980s, in addition to assistance to the growing number of Central Americans forced to leave their countries, who numbered 121,900 by the end of May 1986. The Secretary-General considered it imperative to devise promptly a co-ordinated plan of large-scale assistance to the five countries of the region, to help them overcome their economic crisis and transform their unjust socio-economic structures, which were at the root of the region's current political crisis.

Annexed to the report were: a 26 June letter from the Foreign Ministers of Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela, providing background information on the status of the diplomatic negotiations which their Governments had been promoting since their 26 September 1985 letter;⁽³⁶⁾ the final version of the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America; a 10 February communique issued at Washington, D.C., by the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups, proposing measures for immediate action to bring about the peace, security and democratic development of Central America; and a 24 February press release on a proposal by Costa Rica to Nicaragua for the stationing of a permanent inspection and monitoring force at their common border (see also p. 180).

Communications (15 July-November). El Salvador's Vice-President and Foreign Minister, commenting on the revised Contadora Act in a 9 July note,⁽³⁷⁾ stated that the Act as redrafted failed to reflect the agreed conditions for its adoption under the 1983 Contadora Document of Objectives,⁽³⁸⁾ specifically with respect to stopping the arms race and negotiations for the control and reduction of armed troops and current stocks of weapons. El Salvador considered it essential that the Act include an effective system for the verification of all the commitments, in particular the political ones; to be effective, this required a series of agreements and a set of instruments to be embodied in the Act as the "Contadora System", involving the parties, the Contadora and Support Groups and all other nations interested in the region's peace and security.

Costa Rica's Foreign Minister, also commenting on the revised text in a 15 July letter,⁽³⁹⁾ proposed that a mandatory timetable for continuing follow-up should be drawn up and annexed to the Act to ensure verifiable fulfilment of the Act's substantive commitments; control and limitation of arms and troop strength should be negotiated and established before, not after, the Act's entry into force; and the functions of the Ad Hoc Committee for Evaluation and Follow-up of Commitments concerning Political Matters should include preparation of annual or special reports to evaluate measures adopted by the parties to enhance representative and pluralistic democracy, to co-operate with the parties to promote national reconciliation where necessary, and to follow up on the commitment to improve legal measures for genuine amnesty.

In a Declaration issued on 1 October,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora and Support Groups, noting that the Central America crisis was becoming more serious and that the risk of war was increasing, declared it imperative to abandon confrontation and stressed that preventing war was a task for all politically responsible Governments and individuals.

By a communique issued by the twelfth regular meeting of the Council of the Latin American Economic System (Lima, Peru, 16 and 17 October),⁽⁴¹⁾ the Council rejected the repeated application of coercive economic and financial measures for political or other motives, including economic embargoes and blockades against countries in Latin America, and reaffirmed the right of the peoples to select their own political, economic and social system, free from external threat and aggression.

A document titled the San Juan Declaration was issued at the end of a seminar on the crisis in Central America, held under the joint auspices of the Inter-American University of Puerto Rico and the University for Peace (San Juan, Puerto Rico, 7 November).⁽⁴²⁾ By the Declaration, the participating statesmen, politicians and academics acknowledged that the crisis was structural-rooted mainly in East-West and North-South conflicts, socio-economic imbalances, extreme social differences, lack of traditional democratic structures, and political, economic and cultural dependence-requiring far-reaching corrective action, and that the region's countries were capable of solving their problems without outside interference. The participants supported the Contadora Declaration⁽⁴⁰⁾ and Guatemala's efforts to establish a Central American Parliament.⁽³³⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At its resumed fortieth (1985) session, on 15 September 1986, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-first session the item on the situation in Central America (decision 40/479).

At that session, on 18 November 1986, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/37 without vote.

The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 530(1983) of 19 May 1983, in which the Council reaffirmed the right of all the countries of the Central American region to live in peace and security, free from outside interference,

Recalling that the Security Council, in that resolution, encouraged the efforts of the Contadora Group and appealed urgently to all interested States in and outside the region to co-operate fully with the Group, through a frank and constructive dialogue, so as to achieve solutions to existing differences,

Recalling its resolution 38/10 of 11 November 1983, in which the Assembly, inter alia, expressed its firmest support for the Contadora Group and urged it to persevere in its efforts, which enjoy the effective support of the international community and the forthright co-operation of the interested countries in and outside the region,

Recalling also its resolution 39/4 of 26 October 1984, in which the Assembly, inter alia, urged each of the five Central American Governments to speed up its consultations with the Contadora Group with the aim of bringing to a conclusion the negotiation process, and to respect fully the purposes and principles of the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America,

Recalling Security Council resolution 562(1985) of 10 May 1985, in which the Council called upon all States to refrain from carrying out, supporting or promoting political, economic or military actions of any kind against any State in the region which might impede the peace objectives of the Contadora Group,

Taking note of the various reports submitted by the Secretary-General in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 39/4,

Sharing the concern of the Latin American countries at the worsening of the situation in Central America and its possible implications for the entire region, which the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Contadora Group and the Support Group expressed in their Declaration of 1 October 1986,

Agreeing with that Declaration that the worsening of the crisis in Central America can create serious tensions and conflicts throughout the continent, and that the peace of Central America is therefore the peace of Latin America,

Bearing in mind the resolution adopted on 14 November 1986 by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States, meeting in Guatemala, which, inter alia, requested the Contadora Group and the Support Group to persevere in their valuable efforts to achieve peace in Central America, and urged all States to continue to give them their resolute support,

Convinced that the peoples of Latin America wish to achieve peace, development and justice without outside interference, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Convinced that it is imperative to avoid a war in Central America, and that this is primarily the responsibility of the Governments directly or indirectly involved in the conflict, as well as a task for all politically responsible Governments and individuals who are prepared to defend the cause of peace,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the global, comprehensive and negotiated solution of the conflict in Central America requires that all States fully respect the principles of international law enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Acknowledges the commendable efforts being made by the Contadora Group and the Support Group with a view to achieving peace in Central America;

3. Reiterates its support for the peace activities of the Contadora Group and the Support Group and requests them to persevere in their valuable efforts, and urges all States to continue to give them their resolute support;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives".

General Assembly resolution 41/37

18 November 1986 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

8-nation draft (A/41/L.34); agenda item 42.

Sponsors: Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: plenary 72-75.

Nicaragua situation

Costa Rica-Nicaragua dispute

Several 1986 communications received by the Secretary-General concerned armed incidents at the border between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, a declared intention by both to prevent such incidents, and proceedings instituted in ICJ by Nicaragua against Costa Rica. Other communications on the Central America situation as a whole also dealt with relations between the two countries (see p. 175).

Communications. The Deputy Foreign Ministers of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, by a joint agreement signed at San José on 12 March,⁽⁴³⁾ expressed the political will of their Governments to establish a permanent civilian mission to investigate and inspect frontier incidents between the two countries. They defined the mission's functions, structure and composition, security, supplies and financing, and immunities and privileges, and specified that an agreement creating the mission would be valid for one year, renewable automatically for equivalent periods.

Costa Rica's President issued a statement on 17 March⁽⁴⁴⁾ to make clear that Costa Rica had not signed any agreement with Nicaragua, but that what was put into writing was the basis for a potential agreement; he stressed that any solution of the border question would necessarily be temporary, pending conclusion of a general agreement of the kind contemplated in the Contadora Act.

Costa Rica's Acting Foreign Minister, by a 30 July note,⁽⁴⁵⁾ protested to Nicaragua's Foreign Minister an alleged mortar attack on Costa Rican territory in the Boca de San Carlos region, launched from Nicaraguan territory controlled by the Sandinist People's Army, and asked Nicaragua to investigate and punish those responsible.

Costa Rica's Foreign Ministry, in a 1 August communiqué,⁽⁴⁶⁾ stated that it had received notice on 28 July that Nicaragua had instituted proceedings against Costa Rica in ICJ, alleging its complicity in United States activities that were detrimental to Nicaragua (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I). Rejecting the accusation as unfounded, Costa Rica stressed its strict neutrality.

Costa Rica's Foreign Minister, by a 16 December note,⁽⁴⁷⁾ protested to Nicaragua that on 1 and 10 December several civilians had been shot at and wounded by Sandinist soldiers firing across the San Juan Abajo River.

Honduras-Nicaragua dispute

Further communications were received by the Secretary-General and the Security Council President in 1986 from Honduras and Nicaragua alleging hostile cross-border incidents, and Nicaragua filed a complaint with ICJ against Honduras.

Communications. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua, by a letter of 7 January,⁽⁴⁸⁾ conveyed an urgent appeal to the Foreign Minister of Honduras for the immediate and unconditional return of an AN-2 Nicaraguan aircraft it alleged had been hijacked to Honduras late in 1985, for the perpetrator's extradition and for the repatriation of Nicaraguans being held in Honduras. Honduras replied on 8 January⁽⁴⁹⁾ that arrangements were being made for the return of the aircraft that had been flown to Toncontín airport and that a decision would be taken on whether the pilot should be granted political asylum, as he had requested, or sent to a third country.

Honduras, by a press communique of 25 March,⁽⁵⁰⁾ charged that the Sandinist People's Army had made incursions into Honduran territory, in the eastern border sector in Olancho; it urged Nicaragua to withdraw its troops so as to avoid confrontation with Honduran troops which had been instructed to defend the national territory, and to avoid endangering peace between them and jeopardizing the Contadora peace efforts, adding that its troops had been transported by air with support from the United States in accordance with an agreement with that country. By a 25 March letter,⁽⁵¹⁾ Honduras denounced the incursions and again urged Nicaragua to withdraw its troops.

Nicaragua's Foreign Minister, by a 25 March communication to the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group,⁽⁵²⁾ requested that the Group establish forthwith a commission to supervise and control the Honduras-Nicaragua border territory, in view of what it said was the United States attempt to create a serious situation of tension there.

Honduras, by a press release of 29 July,⁽⁵³⁾ reported that, on the previous day, its Foreign Ministry had been notified by ICJ that Nicaragua had filed an Application with the Court's Registry that day instituting proceedings against Honduras; the political implications of this initiative were being studied, particularly in the light of efforts by Honduras to find a negotiated solution to the Central America crisis.

Nicaragua's Foreign Minister, by a note of 8 December,⁽⁵⁴⁾ protested to the Foreign Minister of Honduras an alleged violation of Nicaragua's airspace on 7 December by live lighter planes coming from Honduras and attacks on civilian and military targets, involving three of the planes that attacked positions of the Sandinist People's Army in Congojas valley, north-east of Murra in Nueva Segovia, and two others that later attacked the village of Wiwilí, 25 kilometres from the border with Honduras. The toll included 7 army personnel killed and 12 others wounded; 2 village children were also wounded.

Honduras responded on 15 December⁽⁵⁵⁾ that, contrary to Nicaragua's claim, its Air Force went into action on 7 December against the Sandinist People's Army positioned in Honduran territory in the Maquengales, Buenavista and La Esperanza zones in the district of Trojes, El Paraíso. Honduras reminded Nicaragua that it had advised of its intention to take action in defence of its national territory if the Sandinist troops were not withdrawn from Honduras; at no time, however, did it attack positions in Nicaraguan territory.

Honduras informed the Secretary-General on 16 December⁽⁵⁶⁾ that on that day Nicaragua was to begin military manoeuvres known as SUTIAVA 86 in the departments of León and Chinandega, especially in the zones of Las Manos, Guasaule, La Fraternidad and other sectors along the Honduras-Nicaragua border; it would involve 6,500 troops of the Sandinist People's Army and other Nicaraguan armed forces. Honduras viewed the manoeuvres as provocative and a threat to the small Honduran detachments guarding the frontier zone, since they would take place within 1.5 kilometres of the frontier.

On 17 December,⁽⁵⁷⁾ Honduras, referring to the capture of two of its soldiers during an attack on a Honduran observation post on 4 December by the Sandinist People's Army, stated that the body of one of them was recovered, showing he had been brutally murdered. In contrast to this crime, Honduras pointed out that, on 11 April, it had released safe and sound seven Nicaraguan soldiers captured on Honduran territory, including one who had been medically treated for his wounds before release.

Nicaragua, on 22 December,⁽⁵⁸⁾ denied the allegation as a pretext for new and more extensive acts of aggression by Honduras against Nicaragua, saying that the Honduran President had acknowledged the reappearance of one of the soldiers and that at no point had it been claimed that he had escaped from the Sandinist People's Army. It urged Honduras to accept Nicaragua's proposal to request the Secretary-General to dispatch a commission of investigation to the area of tension to recommend measures to prevent the situation worsening.

Nicaragua-United States dispute

Relations between Nicaragua and the United States continued to deteriorate during 1986.

In response to Nicaragua's complaints, the Security Council met at the beginning of July to consider a charge of United States aggression against Nicaragua; at the end of July to consider an ICJ Judgment delivered against the United States on 27 June concerning its activities with respect to Nicaragua and the United States rejection of that Judgment (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I); in October on the non-compliance with the Judgment; and in December to consider serious incidents in Central America that endangered international peace.

A number of communications addressed to the Secretary-General and/or the Security Council President in 1986 by Nicaragua and the United States, as well as by other countries, reflected the deteriorating relations. Several other communications dealing with the Central America situation as a whole also referred specifically to relations between the two States (see p. 175).

Communications (January-30 June). By a 17 January statement,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the United States Department of State said it would study the Caraballeda Message⁽⁴⁾ (see p. 175) and shortly consult about its possibilities with the Contadora Group and other Central American States; it reiterated that the United States would resume bilateral talks with Nicaragua when that country accepted the March 1985 proposal of the democratic resistance for a church-mediated dialogue, a cease-fire and a suspension of the state of emergency.

Nicaragua's Minister for Foreign Affairs, by a 29 January letter,⁽⁶⁰⁾ lodged with the United States Secretary of State a strong protest against his 28 January meeting with the heads of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, at which he reportedly expressed full support for what it termed the mercenary, terrorist organization, and asserted that the United States would not resume bilateral talks with Nicaragua. The Acting Foreign Minister, by a further letter of 19 February,⁽⁶¹⁾ lodged another protest against what it called a terrorist act perpetrated on 16 February by mercenaries under the direction of the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA); the group, which reportedly came from Honduras, ambushed a civilian truck belonging to an inter-community Christian welfare group in the Rancho Grande sector in Chinandega, killing 9 civilians, including a Swiss agronomist, and wounding 12 others.

Cuba's Foreign Ministry, by a declaration of 26 February,⁽⁶²⁾ referred to the sum of $100 million which the current United States Administration was seeking from its Congress to assist the Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries, warning that it was bound to exacerbate the situation in Central America and cut short current negotiations to solve the region's problems.

The Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, by a communique adopted in New York on 31 March,⁽⁶³⁾ expressed concern at the deterioration of the situation in Central America, stemming from grave new threats and actions against Nicaragua that were to be seen as part of a broader plan to destabilize and overthrow its Government; it condemned the escalation of aggression, military attacks and other actions against Nicaragua, demanded an immediate halt to them and to the proposed financing of mercenary groups by the United States Congress, and again urged the United States to resume bilateral talks with Nicaragua.

Nicaragua's Acting Foreign Minister, by a letter of 22 April,⁽⁶⁴⁾ lodged a protest with the United States Secretary of State against alleged acts of intimidation, coercion, threats and attempted bribery by United States officials against the Agent and Counsel of Nicaragua in the ICJ proceedings between the two States.

By a 21 May communiqué,⁽⁶⁵⁾ Nicaragua's Foreign Ministry drew attention to a United States Pentagon document made public by The New York Times, stating that the signing of the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America could lead to a large-scale military intervention against Nicaragua in the form of 100,000 United States troops to be dispatched to Central America and of strengthened United States military installations in Honduras and Costa Rica; in the circumstances, Nicaragua pledged to continue defending its sovereignty and independence.

Nicaragua's Acting Foreign Minister, by a note of 25 June,⁽⁶⁶⁾ protested to the United States Secretary of State the approval by the Congress of a request for new funds for the mercenary forces whose object it said was to destroy the Sandinist People's Revolution; it demonstrated United States contempt for Central America's peace efforts, in particular those of the Contadora and Support Groups; it was a dangerous step aggravating the Central America crisis and affecting the stability of Latin America as a whole.

The USSR official news agency TASS, by a statement of 29 June,⁽⁶⁷⁾ condemned the approval by the United States Congress of $100 million to finance what it said were counter-revolutionary bands terrorizing the people of Nicaragua and undermining that country's economy; it called the decision a dangerous escalation of the undeclared war being waged by the United States in Central America and a challenge to the entire international community. The non-aligned Movement, referring to this development in a communique adopted in New York on 30 June,⁽⁶⁸⁾ voiced concern that such funding increased the danger of direct intervention and military actions against Nicaragua and further imperilled regional and international peace and security; it appealed to the international community to act to preserve Nicaragua's right to self-determination, national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (1-3 July)

On 27 June,⁽⁶⁹⁾ Nicaragua requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to consider what it described as the escalation of the United States policy of aggression against it that threatened international peace and security. The Council held five meetings between 1 and 3 July to consider the complaint.

Meeting numbers. SC 2694-2698.

At their request, the following States were invited to take part in the proceedings without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, El Salvador, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Spain, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia

The debate focused on the approval, on 25 June, by the United States House of Representatives of $100 million in aid to the so-called contras, forces known to have been actively operating within Nicaragua and from neighbouring States to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua.

That action drew almost universal condemnation from the States participating in the debate, which viewed it as a dangerous step certain to exacerbate the conflict in Central America and imperil regional and international peace and stability. They also cited the principles of non-intervention and non-use of force and the 27 June ICJ Judgment (see p. 186), which pronounced that the United States, by its actions in respect of Nicaragua, was in breach of its obligations under customary international law. A number of States-Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Viet Nam-expressed their solidarity with Nicaragua in its light to safeguard its right to self-determination and national independence, which was being denied it by the United States. They were convinced that the conflict in Central America, including the dispute between Nicaragua and the United States, could be resolved only through peaceful negotiations.

Nicaragua asserted that the United States approval of $100 million for the contras was the latest in a long series of sustained acts of aggression begun when the United States organized the contras in 1981 to destabilize and overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. The approval signalled the beginning of a new and dangerous phase in the interventionist activities of the United States in Central America-a declaration of war against Nicaragua that could lead to a generalized conflagration in the region. To avert such an eventuality, Nicaragua called for urgent action to promote a dialogue between it and the United States and for the creation of a joint commission to solve border problems and harmonize non-aggression pacts among Central American Governments. It further called on all concerned to commit themselves to the three courses of action set out by the Contadora Group on 7 June⁽²⁸⁾ as essential to the advancement of the peace process. Nicaragua also pointed out that ICJ had confirmed the illegality of the United States interventionist policy and that Nicaragua had no military alliances with any super-Power.

The United States asserted that the source of conflict was Nicaragua's continuing support of subversion in Latin America, whose principal targets were neighbouring Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras. United States actions were in direct response to those countries' requests for assistance to meet subversive attacks and the threat posed by the relatively immense Nicaraguan armed forces. United States policy had four broad objectives: to end Nicaraguan aggression-whether through support for guerrilla groups in neighbouring countries or through conventional military attack; to sever Nicaragua's military and security ties to Cuba and the Soviet bloc; to reduce its military strength to levels that would restore military equilibrium to the region; and to fulfil the original promises of democratic pluralism and respect for human and civil rights in Nicaragua. The United States said the repressive Sandinist regime was directly responsible for the growth of the armed democratic resistance in Nicaragua, which was fighting to restore the original objectives of the Nicaraguan revolution. Continued United States support for that resistance was essential to induce the Sandinist regime to enter into meaningful negotiations. It added that there were serious questions about certain conclusions of law stated by ICJ, which was not equipped to deal with complex facts and intelligence information not available to it.

Algeria said the United States decision and all other measures threatening Nicaragua's security, sovereignty, independence and right to self-determination were contrary to international law and the Charter of the United Nations and were utterly inadmissible. Angola found it hard to believe that the United States lawmakers, had they been in possession of the facts of the situation in Nicaragua, would have voted funds for the contras, who were remnants of the murderous former Somozist National Guard.

The Congo agreed that the United States had deliberately placed itself in a state of undeclared war against Nicaragua by mining that country's ports, imposing economic and commercial embargoes on it, repeatedly violating its sovereignty and territorial integrity, and rejecting dialogue with it.

Ghana said the tragedy of Central America had its source in the insistence of the United States in treating the region's sovereign States as minors in its backyard. For Viet Nam, the behaviour of the United States stemmed from its habit of regarding the region as part of its sphere of influence and so had arrogated to itself the right to call the shots and to punish any independence-oriented country. Czechoslovakia expressed essentially the same view, asserting that interference in the internal affairs of the Central American countries had to be eliminated as anachronistic and unacceptable in the present-day world. The Lao People's Democratic Republic, along with Mongolia, stressed that the basic cause of tension and instability in Central America was not the Sandinist regime, as had been claimed, but the United States, which could not accept that regime's refusal to bow to the will that it imposed on other sovereign States.

Bulgaria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mongolia shared the view that the latest action of the United States was another manifestation of a neo-colonial policy designed to establish its global hegemony. The Syrian Arab Republic pointed out that it was unbecoming for the United States as a super-Power to resort in some instances to terrorism and sabotage in an aggressive policy of domination and hegemony. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya asked the Council to shoulder its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, lest the region slip into a devastating war.

The USSR found it difficult to understand the logic of those who paid lip-service to the struggle against terrorism but in practice were "godfathers" of counter-revolutionary bands precisely engaged in terrorism in Nicaragua, concluding that the United States was obviously intent on undermining international law and order and legitimizing the cult of force in relations among States. It called on all United Nations Members to state their views on the latest United States action, urging that it was important to do everything possible to prevent a spread of the conflict. The USSR believed that a solution to the critical Central America situation was possible only through a political settlement. It also categorically rejected fabrications about its supposed intention to use Nicaraguan territory for military and strategic purposes.

The Ukrainian SSR observed that the United States was once again acting as an enemy of political settlement in Central America, for the latest step it had taken was clearly intended to undermine the Contadora proposals. It urged the United Nations and the Council to play an important role in normalizing the situation, to adopt measures to put an end to interference in that region's internal affairs and to ensure the right of its peoples to free, democratic and independent development.

Iran denounced the United States decision as a blatant violation of the most fundamental international norms and principles, underscoring, along with Australia, that it raised serious questions of principle about the conduct of relations between sovereign States. Anticipating a United States veto on any Council draft resolution on the issue, Iran urged that, as an alternative, the Council should ask the media to invite as many of its members as possible to public discussions and debates so as to make the American public aware of the corrupt character of United States foreign policy.

Afghanistan condemned the United States for its policy of State terrorism and acts of outright banditry-the source of aggravation of the Central America situation, according to the German Democratic Republic. Afghanistan moreover stated that the current United States Administration had betrayed the letter and spirit of the nation's Declaration of Independence; it had sought to deny peoples in various parts of the world-through a policy of aggression, intervention, blackmail and pressure-what the American people had fought for and held close to their hearts: the right to self-determination and independence. The German Democratic Republic asked whether it was not time to abandon the double standard of upholding liberty, freedom and justice for others but not for Nicaragua and its freely elected Government.

The United Arab Emirates declared that the purposes for which the United States appropriated the funds in question ran counter to the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.⁽⁷⁰⁾ The United Arab Emirates also reaffirmed its rejection of threats to the independence and national sovereignty of States under the pretext of an East-West conflict, while Ghana rejected attempts to explain the problems of instability and tension in Central America as resulting from a historical confrontation between East and West in the region.

Guyana explained that Central America was engaged in a process of internal change, that its peoples were struggling to improve the quality of life and to attain fuller participation in the political process; it was therefore dangerous to misrepresent these national impulses for change and to cast them in any other mould. Guyana hoped for the voices of moderation to prevail over the clamour for intervention and belligerence and appealed for an end to all manner of hostility towards Nicaragua and the Sandinist revolution.

Yugoslavia viewed the United States decision as a dangerous precedent and an overt act of interference in the internal affairs of an independent country. It pointed out, as did the United Arab Emirates, that Nicaragua, along with all other countries, had the right to independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, to the system of government it desired, and to a life in peace without pressure, advice or interference.

Venezuela regretted the persistence of the United States in conduct that, apart from being contrary to international law, was also prejudicial to its relations with Latin American countries, which had always rejected intervention in their internal affairs. History showed that United States intervention in certain of those countries had generally resulted in the establishment of autocratic regimes, largely responsible for the political, economic and social backwardness of those countries, which the United States then had to support.

India voiced the non-aligned Movement's conviction that peace, to be enduring, must be based on the acceptance of political and socio-economic pluralism of States, on the scrupulous observance of non-interference and non-intervention, on a positive appreciation of the endemic problems of the region, and on a constructive and co-operative approach to their resolution. It was incumbent on the Council to grasp this reality and to give the urgent task of bringing peace to the region a real chance.

Australia felt that the United States decision to provide continued aid to the contras and the subsequent Nicaraguan decision to close down the opposition newspaper La Prensa left little ground for optimism. Along with Denmark, it remained committed to the observance of international law and to supporting the role of ICJ in settling international disputes, pointing to the Court's finding that certain United States actions against Nicaragua had contravened international law.

Algeria called for renewed and steadfast support for the work of the Contadora Group, which, it felt, had become irreplaceable at the current crucial moment when it was completing the redrafting of an agreement for peace and co-operation in Central America. Such support was expressed by most States, including China and France. Iran said the United States must accede to the Group's decisions, whose members were its neighbours and hence in the best position to define the terms of their relations with it. Denmark, as well as Australia, also believed there was no realistic alternative to the peace process initiated by the Contadora Group, whose efforts were based on the recognition that it was the responsibility of the region's countries to solve their differences without military pressure or other forms of coercion. Noting the Group's great patience and flexibility in negotiation and in redrafting an agreement, Australia said it was up to the countries directly involved to make reciprocal concessions and to exercise tolerance in order to carry the peace process forward. In Yugoslavia's opinion, the solution offered by the Contadora and Support Groups addressed the root causes of the problem and took into account the interests of all the countries there.

Denmark added that a lasting solution to the conflicts must be based on a commitment to democratic systems of government, free elections, freedom of the press and respect for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.⁽⁷¹⁾

China maintained that respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Nicaragua and of other countries in Central America and a cessation of outside interference would ease tension. Agreeing, Trinidad and Tobago urged all States concerned to exercise restraint and resume dialogue among them.

Democratic Yemen asked the Council to reaffirm its support for the people of Nicaragua, to put an end to the flouting of the international community by the United States and to deter its policy of aggression.

Cuba, as well as Spain, said it had always favoured a peaceful negotiated solution to the conflict and restated that a solution through weapons could only lead to a conflagration with unforeseeable consequences. The Lao People's Democratic Republic called on the United States to waste no time in renewing contact with Nicaragua to normalize relations between them. Ghana pointed out that the United States, as a founding Member of the United Nations, had a moral obligation to settle its differences with Nicaragua through non-violent means.

Citing the ICJ Judgment, Madagascar reminded Nicaragua and the United States of their obligation to seek a peaceful solution in accordance with international law. Based on that and other available data, Madagascar said the Council could not but denounce direct or indirect intervention or interference in Nicaragua's internal affairs and must ask whether it was prepared to demand that all States respect the obligations incumbent upon them under the Charter, to ensure that interference was not automatically justified under the pretext of defending national interests, to support the principles constituting the foundation of an international society in which pluralism could also be accommodated, and not to rest content with giving a purely formal support to the Contadora efforts but, rather, to create all the political, legal and other conditions necessary for those efforts to succeed.

El Salvador saw Nicaragua's statement, that the recently authorized aid to the anti-Sandinist forces would lead to a widespread conflagration, as a veiled threat to drag neighbouring countries into a conflict that would convert it from a bilateral to a regional one. That statement was of concern to El Salvador because Nicaragua, with its war-ready army, enjoyed unusual military hegemony; the Central America crisis, at the national and regional levels, had increased in magnitude to the extent that Nicaragua had not respected the principles of international coexistence and had constantly intervened in the internal affairs of others. Its policy of aggression, in the form of support and sanctuary to groups engaged in terrorist acts in El Salvador, had made accomplices of the Sandinist Government in their escalation of violence and terrorism. The resulting instability in El Salvador had hindered the freely elected Government from fully implementing its development plan. El Salvador stressed that it had demonstrated a desire for peace through political means-at the national level through dialogue with opposition forces and at the regional level through support for the Contadora initiatives.

Communications (3-28 July). The Nicaraguan Foreign Minister, by a note of 3 July,(72) protested to the United States Secretary of State a series of attacks by mercenaries said to be trained and directed by the United States; on a farmers' cooperative at Camoapa, Chontales, on 27 June; an anti-tank mine explosion set off by a civilian vehicle on a road between Bocaycito and El Cedro in Wiwilí, on 2 July; and the strafing of the Bluefields Express on the River Escondido south-east of Ciudad Rama, on 3 July. The Minister, who placed the toll at 40 civilians killed and one injured, denounced the acts as barbarism.

The Minister registered another protest, on 24 July,(73) against alleged preparations under way at Tegucigalpa by leaders of the Fuerza Democrática Nicaragüense, which it said was the mercenary organization in the service of the United States, for terrorism and sabotage against Nicaragua; the Minister appealed to the United States to desist from involving countries such as Honduras in its plans for death and destruction.

The non-aligned Movement, by a communique of 28 July,(74) noting the June ICJ Judgment, strongly appealed to the United States to comply strictly with it and renewed its call for an immediate end to all threats, attacks and hostile actions, the financing of mercenary groups and coercive economic measures taken against Nicaragua-all designed to overthrow its legitimate Government; the Movement again urged resumed bilateral discussions and reaffirmed its support for the Contadora Group's efforts.

Consideration of the ICJ Judgment

On 27 June 1986, ICJ delivered its Judgment in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua" (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I). The Application instituting proceedings against the United States in respect of those activities had been filed by Nicaragua in 1984.(75) The text of the Judgment was transmitted by Nicaragua to the President of the Security Council on 11 July 1986,(76) while the separate and dissenting opinions to the Judgment were transmitted by the United States to the Secretary-General on 18 July.(77)

The Security Council considered the Judgment at the end of July and again in mid-October. Draft resolutions calling for compliance with the Judgment were not adopted on either occasion owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member. The General Assembly then considered the matter, adopting a resolution containing such a provision in early November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29-31 July)

Referring to the ICJ Judgment, Nicaragua, on 22 July,(78) requested that the Security Council meet to consider its dispute with the United States, which, it said, threatened international peace and security. The Council held five meetings between 29 and 31 July.

Meeting numbers. SC 2700-2704.

At their request, Afghanistan, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, El Salvador, Honduras, India, Iran, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe were invited to take part in the proceedings without the right to vote.

On 31 July, the Council voted on a draft resolution sponsored by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Arab Emirates.⁽⁷⁹⁾ The vote was 11 to 1, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

Against United States.

Abstaining: France, Thailand, United Kingdom.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member, the draft was not adopted.

By the text, the Council would have: reaffirmed ICJ's role as the United Nations principal judicial organ and a means for peaceful solution of disputes and recalled the obligation of all States to seek such solutions; urgently called for full compliance with the June Judgment; and called on all States to refrain from carrying out, supporting or promoting political, economic or military actions against any of the region's States that might impede the Contadora Group's peace objectives.

The United States voted against the draft because it painted an inaccurate picture of the true situation in Central America, it would not have contributed to a comprehensive and peaceful settlement of the region's problems, and it would have done a disservice to the international law and institutions that it purported to uphold.

The United Kingdom addressed two issues in explaining its abstention: its view that all Members of the Organization should accept the Court's compulsory jurisdiction, even as it noted the significant dissent within the Court to certain decisions contained in the Judgment; and Nicaragua's misrepresentation of the Central America problem by defining it simply as a dispute between Nicaragua and the United States. The problem, the United Kingdom said, was rooted in long-standing social and economic conditions in Central America, exploited from without by States with little respect for democracy and little desire to help restore political stability, exacerbated by cross-border incursions between Nicaragua and its neighbours, and compounded by the inability of OAS to find a solution. Nicaragua had recently taken steps in a direction opposite that of peace, the United Kingdom added.

Thailand had no difficulty with the draft's general principles; however, because no Government had been formed in Thailand following recent elections and in the consequent absence of government instructions concerning the paragraph calling for full compliance with the Judgment—which Thailand felt was not entirely devoid of political content—it was obliged to abstain. France would have liked to vote in favour of a text that had the Council's unanimous support for its approach to a peaceful solution of the region's conflicts through the Contadora peace process; however, the draft contained certain objectionable elements relating to the Judgment, both as to the Court's role and to those substantive elements that did not receive unanimous agreement.

Despite its affirmative vote, Denmark stressed that making an urgent call for full compliance with the Judgment might be said to be premature.

The President of Nicaragua opened the debate by stating that the ICJ Judgment explicitly rejected the justification of collective self-defence maintained by the United States in connection with the military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua; eloquently affirmed the principle of State sovereignty by declaring that discontent with Nicaragua's political, social, economic and cultural system gave the United States no right to intervene in its internal affairs; and ordered the United States immediately to cease and desist from all its illegal activities and to compensate Nicaragua for damages suffered. Noting a worsening of the Central America situation following the Judgment's delivery, he emphasized that all Nicaragua was asking for was support and respect for the Court's decision and for law in international relations to be upheld. Nicaragua was prepared immediately to negotiate with the United States to overcome existing problems and normalize relations between them.

The United States regretted Nicaragua's misuse of the Court by obtaining a ruling which it found useful for its propaganda war against the United States. Saying it was neither the time nor the place for an exposition of the Judgment and the compelling dissents that accompanied it, the United States felt it sufficient to state its belief that the Court had fundamentally misperceived the situation in Central America: it was wrong in many of its facts, and its conception of the relevant international law was seriously flawed in important respects. The crisis, portrayed by Nicaragua as essentially a conflict between it and the United States, was in fact a conflict between the "comandantes" and Nicaragua's own long-suffering people, victims of ever-increasing repression, and between the "Comandantes" and Nicaragua's neighbours, victims of unprovoked aggression. The real mercenaries were the Cuban military and security personnel and other "internacionalistas" imported to help maintain the repressive State.

The United States was prepared to resume direct bilateral negotiations; they must, however, be accompanied by serious talks between the Sandinistas and their neighbours and between them and their own people.

Cuba observed that Nicaragua had been compelled to resort to ICJ to secure United States compliance with the Charter. Its disdain for the Judgment, however, once again showed the United States to be the greatest violator of the Charter and of international law, whose entire fabric, woven over many years, could come unravelled owing to its attitude. Underscoring that it was unacceptable for any country, however powerful, to apply international law at its convenience, Cuba urged all to struggle to make reason and justice prevail in this case.

The Syrian Arab Republic stated that the complaint before the Council related to threats to the international legal system and to the regime of international commitments and conventions. Pointing to the United States rejection of the Court's decision and denial of its jurisdiction, it warned that, if the Council failed to end the policy of force and arrogance, all civilized values and international principles, especially that of peaceful coexistence among States, would become extinct. The Council's success in compelling the United States to abide by the Court's decision would be a success for the cause of the international legal system, for although Nicaragua was the only one affected in the case at hand, its complaint represented the aspirations of all States, particularly the small ones.

The United Republic of Tanzania said the non-participation of the United States in the Court proceedings and its rejection of the Judgment showed contempt for a United Nations organ entrusted with the preservation of world justice. In its opinion, there was great danger that such a practice could become a habit, which would be detrimental to United Nations purposes and principles and could sound the death knell for customary international law on which international relations depended. The United Republic of Tanzania called on the Council, whose task had been simplified by the Court, to request the United States, a founding Member of the Organization and a permanent Council member, to uphold basic Charter principles in the interest of peace and security in the region.

Viet Nam also deplored the United States absence from the Court and said its rejection of the Judgment, which, if it prevailed, would be a negative precedent in international relations and a serious challenge to world public opinion. Viet Nam demanded that the United States abide by the Judgment, which meant that it should cease its acts of aggression against Nicaragua and resume direct talks with it.

The Congo, referring to the United States rejection, said that in the long run no one would be able to participate in an international system from which the primacy of law had been unseated in favour of the use of force and coercion; were such a trend to gain strength, the attraction to the very notions of democracy and freedom would be weakened and would lead to all kinds of attacks on the fundamental norms for which the international community had gradually managed to win acceptance by those who were using their differences as a basis for co-operation rather than for opposition.

Zimbabwe was amazed that a super-Power would choose, in the pursuit of some narrow short-term gain, to assail the legal underpinnings of an international order that had assured its predominance in world affairs. The Council was being asked not only to show compassion to Nicaragua's suffering people, Zimbabwe said, but also to uphold the rule of law.

Czechoslovakia was gratified to note that the Court had again underlined the importance of compliance with civilized norms of inter-State relations. It fully supported the diplomatic efforts of the Latin American countries to find a just solution through the Contadora peace process, without external interference, and stressed its rejection of any attempt to countervail the process by the creation of artificial structures.

India recalled the non-aligned Movement's reiteration that the process of change in Central America could not be explained in terms of ideological confrontation between military blocs, its reaffirmation of the need to guarantee the security of the region's States so as to create a climate of stability and confidence as the basis for reaching peace and co-operation in the region, and its recognition that an immediate halt to all acts of aggression against Nicaragua was a necessary step to reach those objectives—all of which derived from the Movement's realization not only that instability in Central America was a danger to world peace and security but also that true sovereignty of States in the region would be a positive factor in the global endeavour.

Democratic Yemen believed that, to avoid further tension in the region, the United States, as a Council member, should join in the international consensus on the need to solve the problems of Central America by peaceful means through the Contadora Group. It appealed to the Council to support Nicaragua in compelling the United States to abide by the ICJ rulings and called on that country to put an end to its policy of intervention.

Bulgaria reiterated its support for Nicaragua's defence of its national independence and its inalienable right to determine its own social, economic and political development, for a political resolution of the conflict in the region and for the Contadora and Support Groups. It was Poland's hope that the Council would secure that inalienable right for Nicaragua and the rest of the region's States, strongly support the Contadora peace efforts and appeal to all parties to resume dialogue.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic noted that even the United States member of ICJ, who alone opposed the verdict to compensate Nicaragua for damages suffered, had associated himself with the Court's condemnation of his country for mining Nicaragua's harbours and encouraging the contras in acts contrary to humanitarian law. It was incumbent on the Council, it said, to give effect to the Judgment to the benefit of Nicaragua, the winning party, and to persuade the other party, if not immediately able to execute all the demands sanctioned by the Court, at least to desist forthwith from its hostile acts against Nicaragua, as noted in the Judgment. It called on the United States to join Nicaragua in the search for a peaceful solution to their differences and to the problems of peace and security in Central America and the Caribbean.

The USSR viewed the Court's Judgment as a further corroboration of the fact that in today's world the policy of pressure and military adventurism could neither settle disputes nor achieve security. The USSR emphasized that a peaceful political settlement in Central America, favoured by the overwhelming majority of States, was possible only if account was taken of the legitimate security interests of the region's countries, of the need to remove military bases, to withdraw foreign troops, and to put an end to the use of a country's territory from which to intervene in the internal affairs of another.

The USSR said that the United States, to justify its evil policy, had constantly depicted the situation in Central America as part of East-West confrontation and had accused the USSR of intervention in the internal affairs of the region's States—a tactic justifiably rejected by the non-aligned Movement. The USSR stressed that it was firmly opposed to any attempt to turn the region into an arena for such confrontation and had not created nor did it intend to create a threat to the interests of the United States and its allies in the region or anywhere else.

Iran stressed that, having attended the anniversary celebrations of the Sandinist revolution on 20 July, it observed at first hand that that revolution was a genuine national revolution, not a communist one transplanted to Nicaragua, as United States officials had claimed. It again declared its support for Nicaragua's revolutionary Government in its fight against the aggressive and inhuman policies of the United States.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that the United States persisted in acting as if it were the world's policeman—an attitude that explained its rejection both of the Judgment and of the Court's jurisdiction in the case against it. The Jamahiriya said it recognized, perhaps more than any other State, the gravity of the threat facing Nicaragua; it appealed to the Council to exercise its responsibility and put an end to the policy of arrogance, terror and blackmail pursued by the United States throughout the world.

The Ukrainian SSR called the Court's Judgment an eloquent condemnation of the activities of the United States, which missed no opportunity to dictate standards of conduct to other countries and to attempt to impose its own laws on them. It called on the Council to support the Judgment and on the States concerned—foremost the United States—to comply with it so that a favourable climate for the solution of all disputes might be established.

The Congo, saying it was committed to the logic of dialogue, called on Nicaragua and the United States unconditionally to resume talks so as to remove the main obstacle to peace in the region. For Ghana, it was the Council's solemn duty to urge them to resume a serious dialogue and all other parties concerned to work together to resolve their differences.

Madagascar emphasized that the Court had clearly recognized that the United States, by its activities with regard to Nicaragua, had violated its obligations under customary law, and had recalled to both parties their obligation to seek a peaceful solution to their disputes. The Council could only amplify those conclusions by denouncing as contrary to international law and Charter goals any interference in Nicaragua's internal affairs and resort to force in violation of its sovereignty, and by breathing new life into the efforts of the Contadora Group and the Support Group in order to facilitate a peaceful settlement of the region's problems. Afghanistan stated that the Judgment gave the Council every reason to make such a denunciation, adding that it should also demand an immediate end to all types of interference in Nicaragua and appropriate compensation for the human and material losses inflicted upon it.

China voiced opposition to acts of interference in Nicaragua's internal affairs and hoped the United States would respect the Court's ruling. It again emphatically pointed out that the key to eliminating tension in Central America lay in the removal of all outside interference, and asked the countries concerned to refrain from actions that might further aggravate the situation so as to enable the Contadora Group to achieve peace and stability.

Venezuela said the Latin American countries in general had always condemned any violation of the deeply rooted principles of self-determination, non-intervention, respect for State sovereignty, non-use of force and the peaceful settlement of disputes, whether for political or ideological or opportunistic considerations. Rather than enter into a detailed analysis of the Court's decision, Venezuela found it more important to emphasize the need for dialogue among all the parties and the Contadora Group's readiness to leave no stone unturned in its effort to achieve a negotiated solution to the region's problems.

El Salvador cited portions of the Judgment pertaining to Nicaragua's own conduct, concluding that there had been support for the Salvadorian armed opposition from Nicaraguan territory until the early months of 1981. It could not accept certain conclusions of the Judgment affecting El Salvador, since they were drawn from a partial analysis of a large problem not considered from the standpoint of the inter-related factors of the situation. Citing also instances of continuing Sandinist support and public announcements of such support for armed groups in El Salvador that were destabilizing the Government and causing vast damage to its economic infrastructure and population, El Salvador affirmed that it had been the victim of continuing Nicaraguan aggression. Like any small country unable to confront such aggression, it had been obliged, in self-defence, to seek assistance through bilateral channels. El Salvador felt it important to state that Nicaragua remained a destabilizing factor in Central America and that its ideological and political system, its relations with the United States and Sandinist commitments or indebtedness to armed groups in El Salvador did not justify Nicaragua's intervention in its internal affairs.

Honduras found it necessary to participate in the debate because of Nicaragua's request to ICJ for a ruling against it—an initiative indicating Nicaragua's attempt to turn the highest judicial organ into a political forum and to transform the Council into a propaganda apparatus. While Nicaragua had given the impression that it was the only party ready to sign the revised Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America, it must be pointed out that that Contadora initiative had encountered a number of problems owing to the intransigence of Nicaragua, which refused to accept verifiable commitments to internal reconciliation, democratization and disarmament, or to give up its alliances with anti-democratic, extra-continental Powers. Despite Nicaragua's pursuit of aggressive policies against it—training and supporting terrorist movements engaged in kidnappings, bombings, skyjackings, sabotage and other violent acts within Honduras, besides the recent Nicaraguan troop concentrations along the border between them—Honduras had taken steps to foster open and frank regional negotiations, to include Nicaragua, on formulating commitments to ensure peace and security in the region.

Communications (21 August-27 October). Between 21 August and 19 October, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua addressed four notes to the United States Secretary of State. Cuba also addressed a letter to the Secretary-General commenting on one of those notes and referring to a matter that, in turn, drew a reply from Venezuela.

The first note, dated 21 August,⁽⁸⁰⁾ protested a statement by the United States President, as reported on 19 August by Mexico City's newspaper Excelsior, to the effect that if Nicaragua failed to see the light, the only alternative would be for the freedom fighters to take over. Nicaragua regarded the statement as a direct threat to its independence and sovereignty, reminded the United States of its obligation to comply with the ICJ Judgment, and reiterated Nicaragua's readiness to resume direct and unconditional bilateral talks.

The second note, of 9 September,⁽⁸¹⁾ rejected reports from unidentified intelligence sources, as conveyed to Nicaragua's Ambassador to the United States on 8 September, that Nicaragua was planning attacks on United States diplomatic staff in Central America and other parts of Latin America. Nicaragua stated that those untenable charges were designed to implicate it in terrorist activity and thus set it up as a target for reprisals and pave the way for direct military intervention.

The third note, dated 8 October,⁽⁸²⁾ reported that, on 5 October, the Sandinist People's Army had shot down a C-123 tactical cargo aircraft transporting supplies for the mercenary forces in the area of El Tule, Rio San Juan, in southern Nicaragua. Three of the crew were killed and the fourth was captured. Investigations revealed him to be Eugene Hasenfus, one of three United States nationals on board, who had made four supply flights since July for the mercenaries from the Ilopango military base in El Salvador. The aircraft was carrying 70 AK-MS rifles and more than 100,000 cartridges, dozens of PG-7 rockets, jungle boots and other military equipment. The evidence of more direct CIA participation reflected a decision to commit the United States armed forces to military and paramilitary operations against Nicaragua, it said.

On 17 October,⁽⁸³⁾ Cuba charged that the aircraft belonged to Southern Air, a United States company reportedly in the service of the CIA, and that Ilopango was utilized, with El Salvador's approval, for covert actions against Nicaragua, with the aid of United States aircraft piloted by its nationals and counter-revolutionaries of Cuban origin, carrying identification cards issued by El Carriles, as a terrorist and mercenary of Cuban origin and one-time inspector in Venezuela's Directorate of Intelligence and Prevention Services, who "escaped" from a Venezuelan prison in August 1985. Venezuela, on 27 October, (84) rejecting any insinuation of collusion in the case, stressed that the case had been the subject of exhaustive investigation and that it was taking all steps to make sure justice prevailed.

The fourth Nicaraguan note, dated 19 October,(85) formally protested the enactment into United States law on 18 October of a bill authorizing involvement of United States military advisers with the mercenary forces, the delivery of all types of weapons and transport and the $100-million outlay for those forces. Nicaragua said the move opened a new and dangerous chapter in the Central America crisis, and placed international peace and security in imminent danger.

Nicaragua, on 23 October,(86) transmitted details of what it said were acts of aggression against it carried out, since the ICJ Judgment, by contra mercenary forces from 2 July to 6 October.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (October)

On 17 October,(87) Nicaragua requested a further emergency meeting of the Security Council, this time to consider the non-compliance with the ICJ Judgment of 27 June. In making its request, Nicaragua invoked Article 94 of the Charter providing for recourse to the Council by any party to a case in the event the other failed to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment (for full text of Article 94, see APPENDIX II).

The Council held four meetings between 21 and 28 October.

Meeting numbers. SC 2715-2718.

The Council invited the following States, at their request, to take part in the proceedings without the right to vote: Algeria, Argentina, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Iran, Iraq, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, Spain, Syrian Arab Republic, Yugoslavia.

On 28 October, the Council voted on a draft resolution sponsored by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Arab Emirates.(88) The vote was 11 to 1, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: France, Thailand, United Kingdom.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

The draft would have had the Council urgently call for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment, in conformity with the relevant Charter provisions.

The United States said its negative vote was essentially for the same reasons it had given in July (see p. 187). The draft did not focus on the real issues of the conflict and took no account of Nicaragua's own responsibility for the current situation; instead, it sought to present, in the guise of support for the 27 June Judgment, a one-sided picture of the situation in Central America and to portray it as merely a conflict between Nicaragua and the United States. The United States asserted that what was at stake was not simply a legal question, despite Nicaragua's efforts to pretend otherwise, that the reality of the situation could not be side-stepped by hiding behind an ICJ decision, much less a decision that the Court had neither the jurisdiction nor competence to render, and that no court, not even ICJ, had the legal power to assert jurisdiction where no basis existed for it.

Explaining its abstention, France would have liked the Council to be in a position to make a significant contribution to the Contadora efforts by unanimously adopting a resolution. The draft submitted, however, contained questionable references to the Judgment, both on matters of substance and of the Court's role.

Thailand, abstaining, pointed out that the Council, in convening at Nicaragua's request based on paragraph 2 of Charter Article 94, did not ipso facto recognize that a party had indeed failed to perform obligations incumbent upon it under the Judgment. The Council's initial concern should be to assist by practical means the process of achieving a peaceful settlement of the problem, bearing in mind its implications for the peace and security of all Central American countries. While the Judgment might constitute a central pillar, it was not necessarily the one needed to support possible Council action. There were certain legal principles, particularly non-intervention, which were generally recognized and valid with or without any elaboration by the Court. Thailand believed it to be more constructive for the Council to attempt practical measures to assist the Contadora and Support Groups, adding that current over-reliance on Article 94 would prove counter-productive.

The United Kingdom, also abstaining, noted it was the only permanent Council member which accepted the Court's compulsory jurisdiction, and said it fully supported ICJ and that compliance with its decisions was a clear Charter obligation. While not challenging the draft on legal grounds, it was unable to support it for its failure to take account of the wider political factors and to acknowledge that Nicaragua had largely brought its troubles upon itself.

After the vote, Denmark reiterated its conviction that the Court played an important role in the peaceful settlement of disputes and the necessity for Member States to accept its verdicts. It would be appropriate if more Members accepted the Court's compulsory jurisdiction with no understandings or reservations, as Denmark had done.

Ghana regretted the Council's inability to act in favour of the ICJ Judgment. It regarded the Council's failure to take a decision as momentous, especially for small, militarily insignificant countries, whose involvement in the United Nations was profound because it underpinned their own independence, sovereignty and national identity. Therefore, any development that undermined its existence and efficient functioning also undermined their own sovereignty. Fearing the decision was a paradigm of what could constitute regression, Ghana none the less remained hopeful that the Council and the United Nations could still promote peace and stability in Central America, improve relations between the disputing parties and uphold the objectives of the United Nations.

In the debate, Nicaragua asserted that events since the June Judgment showed that the United States remained determined to continue its war of aggression against Nicaragua-referring to the aircraft shot down on 5 October, found to be owned and operated by the United States and carrying arms and military supplies for the contras;(82) a 6 October attack on the El Diamante farm co-operative in Jinotega, where the contras burned down houses, a school, a clinic and a market; a 14 October attack on a passenger bus at La Gateada, Zelaya, by terrorist mercenaries, killing 3 of 70 passengers, wounding 15 and kidnapping 20 others; and, on 20 October, the blowing up of a bus by a mine planted by CIA mercenaries. Therefore Nicaragua asked the Council to urge the United States to implement the Judgment, which it was obliged to do as a United Nations Member.

The United States asserted that acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction was a matter of consent, not a function of United Nations membership pursuant to the Charter or the ICJ Statute-the reason why, of the 14 Council members besides itself, 11 did not accept that compulsory jurisdiction at all; the other 3 had subjected their acceptance to understandings and reservations. Since the United States did not accept the proposition that it had consented to the Court's jurisdiction in the case brought by Nicaragua, it did not believe that the item before the Council had any merit. The United States also said that its 18 October legislation providing aid to the resistance made clear that its policy towards Nicaragua would continue to be based on Nicaragua's responsiveness to continuing concerns affecting the national security of the United States and Nicaragua's neighbours, as it had detailed in July (see p. 184). Nicaragua, the United States said, was manipulating the Court, the General Assembly, the Council and other international forums founded to pursue matters far more meritorious than Sandinist propaganda. Referring to the 5 October incident, the United States said Mr. Hasenfus, the pilot, was taking part in a private initiative which had nothing to do with the United States Government; the conditions of his detention, where he had been paraded before the media for propaganda reasons, did not provide acceptable standards of due process.

Peru regarded the issue as a global one that raised questions of whether the United Nations supported the legal order for which it had been founded, whether it protected the Charter and its system of guarantees, or whether its Members had to admit that they were all exposed to the law of the mighty. It felt that United Nations inaction in the case would call into question the status of its Members as independent sovereign States and make fiction of their capacity as Members of an Organization established to consolidate law and peace.

Iraq requested to participate because it felt the matter involved important fundamental principles-the obligation of every Member State to respect the sovereignty, national independence and territorial integrity of others; the right of all States, including Nicaragua, to live in peace and security, free from outside interference; compliance with the Court's decisions; and peaceful dispute settlement. Iraq said everyone should reflect seriously on the positive implications of the Court's historic Judgment, which went far beyond Nicaragua and Central America.

Mexico voiced concern over the violation of international law, the postponement of a negotiated settlement of the Central America crisis and the consequent buildup of foreign military presence in the region. Latin America, however, had presented an alternative to war and deserved to be heard. The Contadora and Support Groups had clearly placed on record-in the revised Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America,(28) in the Caraballeda Message of 12 January(4) and in their joint Declaration of 1 October(40)-the essential conditions for peace in the region. The strength of the two Groups lay not only in the unity and harmonious combination of their efforts, but also in their authentic representation of the values and principles sustaining international relations in the American continent.

Cuba said the Council and the entire international community were duty-bound to work together to avert the worst in Nicaragua and, therefore, in Central America. It hoped the Council would bring about United States compliance with the Court's decision, which meant a halt to all United States assistance to the Somozist counter-revolution in Nicaragua.

Yugoslavia said that the Court's Judgment should be understood in the light of the principles of self-determination, independence and non-alignment, and that it was necessary to proceed with negotiations without delay, for the longer the crisis lasted, the more it threatened peace in the region and throughout the world. Observing that attempts to impose social, economic and political models or relationships of bygone times invariably met with determined resistance, Yugoslavia was convinced that negotiations on an equal footing were the only way to achieve just and lasting solutions to existing international problems.

Argentina reiterated that Contadora offered the only realistic means for a peaceful, negotiated settlement of Central America's problems and that the revised Contadora Act embodied commitments that, if accepted and carried out in good faith by all parties, could bring peace to the region. It hoped, along with Venezuela, that the joint appeal of the two Groups(40) would be heeded.

Venezuela stated that although the principle of the legal equality of States continued to be undermined by the privileged position enjoyed by permanent Council members, there was no room in the current international order for attitudes more suited to bygone times. What was currently necessary was multilateral action, and regional participation in resolving disputes affecting the region's countries, as called for by the Contadora initiatives.

The USSR condemned the dangerous steps taken by the United States to escalate aggressive activities in Central America, as detailed by Nicaragua, and demanded an end to them. The USSR said the United States must at long last heed the voice of Latin America and the views of the international community; it must show statesmanlike wisdom and give evidence through specific actions of an understanding of modern-day realities, among them pluralism in the political orientations of the world's countries, including those of Latin America.

Algeria felt that the Judgment required full respect for Charter principles governing relations among States, regardless of differences in their systems and their disproportionate means. Compliance with that requirement was what the peoples of Central America were waiting for and what the international community had the right to expect from a permanent Council member.

For Bulgaria, the issue was not merely one of giving effect to the Judgment, but was basically one of respect for and compliance with fundamental norms of international law on which the United Nations was based. In addition to non-compliance with the Judgment, the world community had subsequently witnessed further hostile acts. Bulgaria thus associated itself with the appeals for their immediate cessation and respect for the principles of non-interference and non-use or the threat of the use of force.

In Iran's view, the basic question was whether, with the attitude exemplified by the United States, there was really any future for international law or for the United Nations. Recalling that the signatories of the Charter joined the Organization in the hope that aggression would be suppressed and that the Charter and other instruments of international law would be implemented impartially and comprehensively, Iran said it was important that the Council must finally make the choice of rescuing the Organization from becoming a toy in the hands of some irresponsible Members.

Ghana stated that the Court had affirmed the sanctity of the international legal system: non-use of force, non-intervention and respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States. The Court thus underscored the primacy of law in restraining States, big or small, from unbridled pursuit of self-interest in disregard of others' rights in a diverse and interdependent world. Ghana-along with Democratic Yemen and the Syrian Arab Republic-called on the Council to urge compliance with the Judgment.

Spain said that the Charter principles and the norms of customary international law invoked in the Judgment constituted full legal obligations for all States; furthermore, according to the ICJ Statute, the Judgment calling for respect for those principles bore the full force of res judicata.

The Congo reiterated its faith in a negotiated solution to any dispute that existed between Nicaragua and the United States and urged both to resume contacts to that end. It also pointed to the Contadora and Support Groups, which had frequently indicated their availability and had provided a whole range of procedures, which, if followed, would be sufficient to ensure satisfactory results even for the most demanding political moralists.

Guatemala also called for dialogue, negotiations and agreements comprehensively to resolve the complex problem in Central America. It restated its support for the good offices of the two Groups and for the genuinely Latin American peace proposal they had put forward; it underscored the need for political will and a flexible and realistic attitude, and voiced the conviction that a regional understanding could be reached, enjoining the region's countries to be prepared to make certain sacrifices, without prejudice to their sovereignty, to produce lasting results.

Honduras said it was taking part in the debate to draw international attention to the fact that the Sandinist Government was merely using the Council and the United Nations highest judicial organ for its own political ends, with a clear propagandistic intent, to the detriment of the Court's prestige and dignity. It condemned the move as jeopardizing the peace process in Central America and called on the Council to put an end to such activity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Nicaragua, on 29 October,(89) requested the inclusion of an item on the June ICJ Judgment in the agenda of the General Assembly's 1986 regular session; annexed to its request was a draft resolution proposed for adoption. The following day, the General Committee recommended, without vote, the item's inclusion; it rejected, however, by 10 votes to 9, with 6 abstentions, a United States proposal to merge the item with that on the situation in Central America.

On 3 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/31 by recorded vote.

Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua:
need for immediate compliance

The General Assembly,

Having heard the statement made by the Minister for External Relations of the Republic of Nicaragua,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983 and 562(1985) of 10 May 1985,

Aware that, under the Charter of the United Nations, the International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations and that each Member undertakes to comply with the decision of the Court in any case to which it is a party,

Considering that Article 36, paragraph 6, of the Statute of the Court provides that "in the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court",

Taking note of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua",

Having considered the events that have taken place in and against Nicaragua since the Judgment was rendered, in particular the continued financing by the United States of America of military and other activities in and against Nicaragua,

Emphasizing the obligation of States, under customary international law, not to intervene in the internal affairs of other States,

1. Urgently calls for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 in the case of "Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua" in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed on the implementation of this resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/31

3 November 1986 Meeting 53 94-3-47 (recorded vote)

Draft by Nicaragua (A/41/L.22): agenda item 146.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Bvelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriy, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: El Salvador, Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Central African Republic, Chad, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Morocco, Niger, Oman, Paraguay, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Explaining its vote, El Salvador, besides declaring that the Assembly was not the right place to deal with the ICJ Judgment, regarded the draft proposed by Nicaragua as a manoeuvre to continue its false, one-sided portrayal of the conflict in Central America. It said that Nicaragua had raised the issue of the Judgment in every possible forum to advance its political cause; to adopt the draft would make international law the loser.

Guatemala's abstention accorded with its policy of active neutrality, which it felt was the best way it could contribute to restoring peace in Central America. Reaffirming its devotion to the Charter and to international law, as well as its respect for the Court's findings, Guatemala underscored the extreme complexity of the region's problem which had to be dealt with in all its aspects; it was basically a political one with serious economic and social implications, and failure to recognize it as such was an error of evaluation.

Costa Rica said its abstention should be seen in the light of its acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction in a complaint against it entered by Nicaragua in connection with its case against the United States. Costa Rica added that, since it wanted to respect its international obligations, it stood ready to discuss its rights before the Court.

Luxembourg did not vote negatively because the text recognized the validity of ICJ judgments: international law, however imperfect, was the only defence against arbitrary international action and violence; nor did it vote affirmatively, believing it inadvisable to consider the Judgment in isolation from a general review of the situation in Nicaragua, including the Contadora peace proposals, which called for concessions by all parties to the conflict in Central America.

Jordan accepted the Court's jurisdiction and, were it not for its belief that some of the text's language could delay agreement between the parties, it would have voted affirmatively.

Several States voted positively to stress the primary importance they attached to respect for the rule of law in international relations, but nevertheless registered certain reservations.

Ecuador, in deciding on its vote, said it tried to disregard the substance of the resolution because of its eminently political implications.

For the Netherlands, the resolution fell short of making an unequivocal contribution to furthering respect for the Court by failing to stress that all United Nations Members should accept its compulsory jurisdiction; although it favoured more frequent use of the Court, its prestige would be threatened if misused for short-term political gains.

Maldives would have preferred a text based on actual arguments against the party not accepting the Court's authority, rather than one based entirely on a statement made by the other party; also, the text lacked the clarity and detail that would have made it more meaningful with respect to upholding the Court's authority and credibility.

Canada voiced concern that the text pointed only to the United States, and not others, including Nicaragua, which also intervened in the internal affairs of other States in the region. Canada added that it was mindful of the complexities of the questions before the Court, and also that Nicaragua, while citing the Court's integrity, had not maintained the same judicial standards in its popular anti-Somozist tribunals, which were the subject of comment by Amnesty International in its 1986 report.

Related resolution and decision: GA 41/164; 41/470.

Communications (November/December). The USSR, on 16 November,(90) stated that events in Central America were taking an increasingly dangerous turn, owing to the United States recent open and stepped-up interference in Nicaragua's affairs. It cited the financing of mercenary counter-revolutionary bands and the provision to them of weapons, plans for direct participation in their activities of United States military personnel, and the manipulation of domestic and international public opinion by official United States propaganda to create an atmosphere conducive to direct military action against Nicaragua. Indicating its readiness to promote conditions favourable for a political settlement within the framework of the Contadora peace process, the USSR also reaffirmed solidarity with and continued assistance to the people of Nicaragua.

The Foreign Minister of Nicaragua, in a note to the United States Secretary of State transmitted on 21 November,(91) protested against the massing of United States naval forces off the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua, between 13 and 20 November, with some units sailing within 100 kilometres south-east of Puerto Cabezas on 19 November; the extensive use by the United States Air Force of various airstrips in the region, in particular in Panama; and a planned attack on the Honduran town of Danli, so as to blame Nicaragua for it and thus provoke a conflict between the two countries.

The same Minister, on 3 December, addressed similar letters to the United States Secretary of State(92) and to the Foreign Minister of Honduras,(93) in which he denounced what was described as provocative and intimidatory manoeuvres, begun on 30 November and reportedly scheduled to last until 13 December, involving the movement of United States troops, aircraft and heavy war materiel towards the Honduras-Nicaragua border along the road from Danli, and the participation of the Honduran Army in those manoeuvres.

Mongolia, in a 27 November statement,(94) condemned what it called the stepped-up aggressive actions of the United States against Nicaragua and confirmed its support for the constructive efforts of the Sandinist Government in easing tension and for the Contadora peace proposals.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (December)

On 9 December,(95) Nicaragua requested a further urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider what it said were serious incidents occurring in Central America endangering international peace and security. The Council met on 10 December.

Meeting number. SC 2728.

At their request, Honduras and Nicaragua were invited to participate in the Council's deliberations without the right to vote.

Nicaragua said that, despite the Assembly's call for full and immediate compliance with the June ICJ Judgment, and despite the Contadora efforts for a negotiated, peaceful political solution to the crisis in Central America, recent events showed that the situation was worsening daily and that the possibility of a wider war continued to be stubbornly pursued by the United States as a pretext for direct aggression against Nicaragua aimed at overthrowing the legitimate Government. Nicaragua cited air attacks on civilian and military targets in its territory launched, it said, from bases in Honduras, joint United States-Honduras military manoeuvres and the United States naval presence near the Nicaraguan coast accompanied by air espionage, and referred to a dangerous fabrication about Nicaraguan troops being in Honduran territory. Nicaragua had come before the Council to alert the international community against the new escalation of aggression. It again appealed to the United States to cease fanning the flames of war in Central America and heed the ICJ ruling.

Honduras asserted that Nicaragua's responsibility for the worsening situation owing to its acts of aggression against Honduras had been duly reported and confirmed by the international press. In addition to a considerably worsening border situation, the presence of elements of the Sandinist People's Army within Honduran territory had become virtually permanent. Honduras found it inconceivable that such a presence could continue without the knowledge of Managua, if not on instructions from it, stressing that since the beginning of the year, it had been asking Nicaragua to withdraw its troops, especially when over 2,000 Sandinist troops violated Honduran territory in March, and again in November and December. The most recent cross-border attacks, on 4 and 5 December, on a military observation post at Las Mieles, with the consequent capture of two Honduran soldiers, and on the villages of Maquengales, Buena Vista and La Esperanza and other villages in El Paraiso, had forced Honduras to remove the invading soldiers, with the help of United States resources; the Honduran Air Force had been instructed not to halt its defensive action until the last Sandinist soldier left. Honduras could have requested the current Council meeting but did not do so because the Central American countries had formally undertaken not to have recourse to any other body or forum while the Contadora process was under way. In support of its assertions, Honduras offered to make available to the Council, on request, evidence yielded by its mopping-up operations.

The United States voiced disbelief that the Sandinistas had again sought to convene the Council for what it said was a false and cynical complaint, calling it an act of duplicity and arrogance to attack one's neighbour, lie about it at every opportunity, and then accuse a third party of perpetrating or master-minding the entire event. The United States clarified that, at the request of Honduras, it had agreed to transport Honduran troops and supplies in nine unarmed United States helicopters from the vicinity of Tegucigalpa to the Jamastran airfield, and that Nicaraguan allegations of other United States involvement were absurd. The issue before the Council was not one between Nicaragua and the United States, however Nicaragua might seek to portray it as such: it was Nicaragua's blatant aggression against its neighbours. The United States assured the Council that it would be prepared to continue its prompt assistance to the victims of Sandinist aggression.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(96), all States were invited by the Secretary-General to provide information on actions of co-operation in the economic and technological spheres in Central America, in particular to reduce the negative effects of the trade embargo and other measures which had been imposed against Nicaragua.

The Secretary-General prepared a report on 15 September 1986 containing 10 replies received as of that date; subsequent addenda to the report, issued in October, contained three replies.(97)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly, acting on a recommendation by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 41/164 by recorded vote.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 and 40/185 and 40/188 of 17 December 1985,

Reaffirming the sovereign and inalienable right of Nicaragua and the other States in Central America to determine their own political, economic and social systems, and to develop their international relations according to their peoples' interests, free of outside interference, subversion, direct and indirect coercion or threats of any kind,

Deeply concerned at the fact that the trade embargo against Nicaragua still persists and has been extended and broadened as from May 1986,

Considering the Judgment of the International Court of Justice, dated 27 June 1986, by which the Court decided that the country that imposed the embargo had a duty immediately to cease and to refrain from said act,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the trade embargo against Nicaragua,

1. Invites all States members of the international community to continue to promote concrete forms of co-operation in Central America, in particular to help reduce the negative effects of the trade embargo adopted against Nicaragua;
2. Deplores the continuation of the trade embargo contrary to General Assembly resolution 40/188 and the Judgment of the International Court of Justice, and requests once again that those measures be immediately revoked;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

²Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

During the Second Committee consideration of the draft, the United States proposed that the draft, together with the Secretary-General's report, be referred to the Assembly for consideration in plenary meetings under the agenda item on the situation in Central America. The proposal was rejected by 65 votes to 33, with 21 abstentions. It then introduced a number of amendments(98) to the preambular and operative sections of the draft, which it subsequently withdrew, stating that it would not participate in the consideration of the question.

An operative paragraph proposed for insertion after paragraph 2 would have had the Assembly deplore also the continued suspension of civil liberties in Nicaragua in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,(71) and request that the suspension be immediately revoked and a genuine dialogue begun with the internal opposition in Nicaragua.

Several paragraphs proposed for insertion in the preambular section would have had the Assembly (1) recall also its resolution 39/4,(99) in which it encouraged the efforts of the Contadora Group and appealed to all interested States inside and outside the region to co-operate with it through a frank and constructive dialogue; (2) reaffirm the sovereign right of each country to choose its own trading policies and partners; (3) express deep concern also that the declaration of 15 October 1985 to suspend basic civil liberties in Nicaragua would not contribute to economic and social development, international co-operation, or the goals of national reconciliation embodied in the Contadora process; (4) recall article XXI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), by which trade measures considered by a party to be necessary for the protection of its essential security interests were expressly permitted; and (5) take note of the conclusions of the GATT panel, which considered the Nicaraguan complaint on that issue but concluded that the trade embargo could not be considered a nullification or impairment of benefits to Nicaragua under the General Agreement. A phrase was proposed for addition to the fifth paragraph to indicate that the Secretary-General's report (6) contained the replies of only 11 countries in response to his request for information.

Sub-amendments to the United States amendments were introduced by Canada,(100) the Federal Republic of Germany,(101) Ghana,(102) Mexico(103) and Peru.(104)

Ghana suggested deletion of the proposed operative paragraph, while Mexico wanted to reword it to deplore also "the continued financing of military and other activities in and against Nicaragua which impede its economic and social development and violate the fundamental rights of the Nicaraguan people".

As to the proposed preambular paragraph (1), Peru wanted to replace "its resolution 39/4" by "Security Council resolution 530(1983)"(105) and to add at the end, "as well as Security Council resolution 562(1985)"(34) which called on all States to refrain from carrying out, supporting or promoting political, economic or military actions of any kind against any State in the region which might impede the peace objectives of the Contadora Group; it suggested that "trading policies and partners" in amendment (2) be replaced by "development policies and strategies", whereas the Federal Republic of Germany wanted to replace "and partners" by "in accordance with international obligations". Peru also suggested replacing "only 11 countries" by "Governments of Member States" in amendment (6). Mexico wanted to change "declaration of 15 October 1985 to suspend basic civil liberties in Nicaragua" in amendment (3) to "the trade embargo against Nicaragua" and "goals of national reconciliation" to "goals and objectives"; and replace "article XXI" in amendment (4) with "all relevant articles".

Mexico also wanted to replace the second part of amendment (5) after "issue" by "and which, inter alia, stated that trade embargoes, such as the one imposed by the United States, ran counter to the basic aims of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, namely to foster non-discriminatory and open trade policies, to further the development of less developed contracting parties and to reduce uncertainty in trade relations". Canada's sub-amendment would have had the Assembly merely take note of the conclusions of the GATT panel.

Explaining its negative vote in the Assembly, the United States said its non-participation in the vote in the Committee and withdrawal from further consideration of the issue was to express displeasure with the procedures used by the text's co-sponsors to deny the United States the right to a fair hearing on matters it considered vital to balanced consideration of the issue. The text overlooked the reasons for the embargo, the United States added, and by ignoring Nicaragua's human rights and civil liberties violations and by refusing to consider its interference in its neighbours' internal affairs, the text did not give full and fair consideration to the issues involved. The United States observed that Nicaragua and two other sponsors of the text, Algeria and Democratic Yemen, maintained trade embargoes as part of their current political policies; other co-sponsors actively advocated them.

Other explanations of vote were given in the Assembly and the Committee or in both those bodies.

Israel felt it ludicrous that, after 41 years of existence, the United Nations should vote on a specific embargo under pressure from countries which thought they were in the right simply because of their numerical strength, stressing that if Nicaragua—which had the audacity to submit the draft when it maintained a similar embargo against Israel—wished to contest the principle of trade embargoes, it should start by renouncing their use.

Among those explaining their abstentions, Japan said trade embargoes had deep political implications, while Ecuador pointed out that it did not maintain diplomatic relations with Nicaragua, but that its vote did not alter its position as to coercive measures. Canada said it had questioned the appropriateness of addressing the trade embargo against Nicaragua in the Second Committee, since it failed to see what constructive contribution the Committee could make to the Assembly's consideration of the issue in the context of the debate on Central America. It regretted the impossibility of considering the draft in informal negotiations, the unnecessary fragmentation of the question at the United Nations and the resulting politicization in the proceedings over the draft, with the result that the important issues of human rights and interference in neighbouring countries did not receive proper attention.

The United Kingdom, speaking for the members of the European Economic Community (EEC), said they did not vote negatively because they wished to contribute to the establishment of peace and economic development in Central America. The Netherlands, which had abstained for the same reasons given by the United Kingdom, did not consider the text conducive to furthering the cause of a negotiated solution to the Central America situation. It pointed out that the appeal in the text, while based on the Court's Judgment, was less than faithful to the Court's consideration of the case: the reference to the principle of non-intervention suggested that the Court had based its decision with respect to the trade embargo on that principle; in fact the Judgment stated that it was unable "to regard such action on the economic plane . . . as a breach of the customary-law principle of non-intervention".

The Netherlands further stated that resolution 41/37 had already called for compliance with the Judgment so that it was unnecessary in the current text to register another such call—a duplication that Canada also observed. Spain also said that through the Assembly resolutions on the Contadora process, under the agenda item on the situation in Central America, there had been consideration of the overall situation in the region.

A number of States—Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain and the United Kingdom, on behalf of EEC—shared the view that every Member had as much right to submit draft resolutions to the Committee as it had to submit amendments to express its views and to have such amendments considered and acted upon. They therefore regretted the resort to tactics, procedural or otherwise, to prevent the exercise of that right, as the sponsors of the draft had done, leading the United States to withdraw its amendments. Had they been put to the vote, Australia added, it would have abstained on most of them because they either were designed to change the sense of the draft or did not accurately refer to general principles of international behaviour; however, it would have supported the proposed operative paragraph and the proposed preambular paragraph (3). Norway also said it would have been able to support some of the amendments.

Panama-United States

The President of Panama, by a letter of 27 June 1986 (106) drew the Secretary-General's attention to what he said was an aggressive media campaign recently begun in the United States, including a senator's public statements, discrediting the Commander-in-Chief and other high-ranking officers of Panama's Defence Forces in connection with drug trafficking and money laundering. The President asserted that the campaign was timed to prevent implementation of the Panama Canal treaties (1977 Panama Canal Treaty and 1977 Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal) from being implemented and was designed to harm the Central Bank of Panama and undermine that country's struggle to maintain its sovereignty.

Arms transfer to Chile

Chile addressed a letter to the President of the Security Council on 26 August 1986,(1) informing him that on 6, 13 and 14 August, Chile's national defence and security forces discovered at Carizal Bajo, Huasco Bajo, Palo Negro and Cerro Blanco, in the northern coastal area of Chile, a massive quantity of weapons and war materiel which had been smuggled into the country and that Chile had formally requested international co-operation to determine the origin of the weapons, which did not correspond to weapons used by Chile's armed forces. The letter annexed a detailed list documenting the type, quantity and place of discovery of the weapons, as well as 20 photographs of them.

Chapter VII

Asia and the Pacific

The United Nations considered a number of matters of important international concern in Asia and the Pacific in 1986, including the situations in Afghanistan and in Kampuchea, and the Iran-Iraq war.

Meanwhile, the United Nations Command continued monitoring the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.

The United Nations was extensively involved in efforts to resolve the Kampuchea question but significant differences persisted, the Secretary-General noted (see p. 5). As armed incidents continued to occur both within Kampuchea and around its borders, the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea continued consultation missions with Governments in South-East Asia to help seek a settlement. The Secretary-General also maintained close contacts to that end. In October, the Assembly reaffirmed its past resolutions on Kampuchea, reiterated the principal components of a just and lasting solution and requested the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work (resolution 41/6). Other border incidents in South-East Asia-affecting China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam-also continued to be reported throughout the year.

The prolonged Iran-Iraq war was a source of deep distress and perilous tensions in the region, and posed an ever-present risk of expansion; efforts had to continue to bring that war to an end, the Secretary-General stressed. The Security Council convened four times during the year to consider the conflict and adopted two resolutions-one providing a possible basis for the initiation of negotiations (resolution 582(1986)), the other calling on the parties to implement that resolution without delay (resolution 588(1986)). Following a report by a specialist mission dispatched to Iran in February to investigate allegations of the use of chemical weapons by Iraq, the Council, in March, issued a declaration strongly condemning their continued use. In December, it issued a statement expressing concern over the widening of the conflict through the escalation of attacks on civilian targets, on merchant shipping and on oil installations of the region's littoral States.

Turning to Afghanistan, the Secretary-General said the United Nations was continuing efforts to negotiate a settlement and valuable progress had been made, but important political decisions had to be taken if the diplomatic process was to yield positive results. The negotiations had been resumed based on understandings that emerged from consultations with the parties in May by the Secretary-General's Personal Representative. In November, the Assembly reaffirmed the right of the Afghan people to determine their own future (resolution 41/33). Meanwhile, Afghanistan and Pakistan continued to charge each other with acts of aggression.

East Asia

Korean question

During 1986, the President of the Security Council received the report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement. He also received communications from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea relating to the situation on the Korean peninsula.

Communications. Early in 1986, communications regarding military exercises conducted by both sides were sent to the Security Council President.

In a statement of 11 January,⁽¹⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea announced that, to create a favourable climate for a north-south dialogue, it had decided to refrain from conducting large-scale military exercises as of 1 February and to stop all military exercises for the period of the dialogue, and called on the United States and the Republic of Korea to do likewise. Responding on 10 February,⁽²⁾ the Republic of Korea stated that the call for suspension of the exercises was just another propaganda offensive by the Democratic People's Republic to deceive world public opinion by promoting a peace-loving image, while conducting secret military exercises.

On 10 February,⁽³⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea charged that the United States and the Republic of Korea had ignored its call and started the "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercises, which it described as a rehearsal for an attack against the northern half of the peninsula.

Report of the United Nations Command. A report of UNC concerning the maintenance in 1985 of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement⁽⁴⁾ was submitted on 31 May 1986 by the United States⁽⁵⁾ on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 Security Council resolution. ⁽⁶⁾

The report stated that in 1985 the Korean People's Army (KPA) and the Chinese People's Volunteers (CPV) had committed no fewer than 11,000 substantiated violations of the Armistice Agreement. One of the most serious incidents occurred on 20 October, when an armed KPA boat-infiltrating the waters contiguous to the Republic of Korea-was intercepted by Republic of Korea naval vessels, given several signals to stop which it ignored and, following an exchange of fire, sunk.

At a meeting of the Military Armistice Commission (MAC)-set up to supervise the Agreement's implementation and settle through negotiations any violations of it⁽⁴⁾-on 21 March, UNC explained that the purpose of the annual defensive "Team Spirit" exercise was to meet the threat posed by the offensively postured military forces of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. It described in detail the North Korean troop and military equipment buildup.

UNC outlined the initiatives it had taken to reduce military tensions, including mutual notification of major training exercises and exchange of observers; an invitation to observe the "Team Spirit" exercise; a proposal to establish a joint special investigative team, including representatives from the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland), to conduct impartial investigations of serious incidents occurring in the demilitarized zone (DMZ); and a proposal that both sides resume submitting agenda items for MAC meetings so that they might be better prepared for productive negotiations.

In addition, UNC put forward at an MAC meeting on 6 December four new key proposals: that negotiations between the two sides be based on strict compliance with the Armistice Agreement; that both adhere strictly to the number and types of armed guard personnel at Panmunjom, in the DMZ, as set forth in the Agreement; that a system of frequent, no-notice, mutual inspections be instituted to ensure that no heavy and automatic weapons or excess guards were introduced into the Joint Security Area; and that both sides agree to a mutually acceptable area in the DMZ for redemilitarization, a step-by-step method leading towards redemilitarization of the entire DMZ, and a verification system in the zone to ensure compliance with the Agreement.

The report noted that the Democratic People's Republic had made two proposals: that both sides remove all military installations from the MAC headquarters area and cease military exercises during south-north meetings. UNC responded that to agree to the first proposal would place its forces at a military disadvantage, since the area was bordered on three sides by KPA/CPV forces. UNC maintained that the conduct of military exercises was not germane to the provisions of the Agreement; what was necessary to reduce tension was mutual notification of, and exchange of observers at, major military exercises.

Commenting on the report in a letter of 9 July,⁽⁷⁾ the Democratic People's Republic described it as replete with distortions and fabrications designed to conceal the aggressive plan of the United States in the peninsula; it declared that the so-called United Nations Command was in fact a United States military command, which was aggravating tension and plotting to unleash a war.

Further communications. Between June and September, the Council President received further communications.

In a report of 17 June, transmitted by the Democratic People's Republic,⁽⁸⁾ the KPA Supreme Command said the situation in the peninsula was one of heightened tension and imminent war, brought about by a policy of confrontation pursued by the United States and the Republic of Korea; it urged that the three military authorities hold talks to ease tensions and establish detente so that the north-south dialogue, suspended on 20 January 1986, might be resumed. On 23 June,⁽⁹⁾ the Democratic People's Republic reiterated its January 1984 proposal for talks with the United States and the Republic of Korea to negotiate a peace agreement among them that would replace the Armistice Agreement, as well as a declaration of non-aggression between the two Koreas; it also proposed, as on many previous occasions, to make the peninsula a nuclear-free zone of peace.

Responding on 16 July,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Republic of Korea said that those proposals were a propaganda ploy to mislead world public opinion and that mutual trust could only be restored through the existing channels for inter-Korean dialogue, which had been boycotted by the North.

By a letter of 30 July,⁽¹¹⁾ the Democratic People's Republic reiterated its hope for detente and asserted that its peace proposals enjoyed worldwide support. The letter contained two enclosures: a Korean Central News Agency report on how the proposed tripartite talks had been rejected and a denunciation of the United States and the Republic of Korea for that rejection.

By a 5 September communique,⁽¹²⁾ the KPA Supreme Command drew attention to the fact that its army and security forces were engaged in economic construction despite prevailing tension in the peninsula; it suggested that a similar gesture from the other side would encourage further steps for peace.

Other matters concerning Korea

The President of the Security Council received a 25 February letter⁽¹³⁾ from the Republic of Korea, relating to the downing of a Korean Air Lines aircraft in 1983,⁽¹⁴⁾ expressing indignation at a statement made by the USSR before the Council on 6 February 1986 which, the Republic of Korea said, claimed falsely that the airliner had deliberately deviated from its course to carry out a spy mission.

South-East Asia

Kampuchea situation

The situation in and around Kampuchea and the country's representation in the United Nations continued to be considered by the Organization in 1986.

On 17 March, Democratic Kampuchea put forward an eight-point proposal to resolve the situation in Kampuchea. The Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea dispatched two missions of consultation in June and July to live countries in pursuance of its mandate to assist in seeking a settlement. The President of the International Conference also undertook a tour in January and February of four member countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN). In October, the General Assembly, by resolution 41/6, reiterated its view of the principal components of a settlement: withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea; restoration of the country's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and of the people's right to determine their own destiny; and a commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in Kampuchea's internal affairs.

Communications. The majority of communications received by the Secretary-General during the year on various aspects of the Kampuchea situation and related issues were from the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. Communications on the subject were also received from China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Viet Nam.

In a statement of 30 December 1985,⁽¹⁾ Democratic Kampuchea, referring to an announcement by Viet Nam that it would withdraw its forces from Kampuchea provided Pol Pot was removed, declared that Pol Pot promised to stop all military and political activities from the first day after Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam signed an agreement on the withdrawal of Viet Nam's forces from Kampuchea. Democratic Kampuchea proposed that one fourth of Viet Nam's total troop strength be withdrawn every quarter in 1986, to make the withdrawal complete by year's end, and that United Nations observers or forces were needed to supervise the withdrawal.

On 22 January,⁽²⁾ Democratic Kampuchea gave an assessment of the situation in Kampuchea at the end of 1985, stating that the struggle of national resistance forces against the Vietnamese aggressors had moved forward and that international pressure on Viet Nam to withdraw had increased, as expressed by the voting pattern on a 1985 General Assembly resolution.⁽³⁾

By a communique of the Twelfth Conference of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam (Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, 23 and 24 January 1986),⁽⁴⁾ the Ministers welcomed what they called the accomplishments of the forces of revolution and peace of the three Indo-Chinese countries, their growth and cohesion, and their solidarity with the USSR and other socialist countries. It was reaffirmed that the withdrawal of Viet Nam's forces from Kampuchea would continue during 1986 and be completed in 1990. The People's Republic of Kampuchea declared its readiness to begin talks with the Khmer opposition to bring about national reconciliation. The Ministers said that a settlement of the international aspect of the Kampuchean question should go hand in hand with the cessation of military assistance to the Pol Pot clique and other Khmer reactionary forces, of their use of Thai territory for refuge, and of military hostilities conducted by foreign countries against the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

Democratic Kampuchea, in a 27 January statement,⁽⁵⁾ described the Vientiane meeting as a manoeuvre aimed at legalizing Viet Nam's aggression against Kampuchea and misleading world public opinion. In an 8 February statement,⁽⁶⁾ Democratic Kampuchea, stating that in the meeting's communique Viet Nam had not departed from its stand that sought to achieve a fait accompli in Kampuchea, reaffirmed its readiness to negotiate with Viet Nam, directly or by way of proximity talks, a comprehensive settlement of the Kampuchean problem. Democratic Kampuchea reiterated its view of the problem and the way to a settlement in a 7 March statement.⁽⁷⁾

Two statements, both by Khieu Samphan, President of the Democratic Kampuchea party, and Son Sann, Vice-President, were issued on 12

February.⁽⁸⁾ One statement confirmed that the party regarded Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as President of Democratic Kampuchea, that he would be regarded as President of Kampuchea after Viet Nam's withdrawal and that the National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Co-operative Cambodia (FUNCINPEC) was a national political force in the struggle against Viet Nam. In the second statement, the party confirmed the current and future role of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF) in that struggle.

On 22 February,⁽⁹⁾ Democratic Kampuchea denounced what it called Viet Nam's deception and often-repeated argument that, were it to withdraw from Kampuchea, China would use its influence on that country; it asserted that, on the contrary, Kampuchea would remain independent, neutral and non-aligned.

On 1 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ referring to Thailand's demand, on behalf of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), that Viet Nam respond positively to Democratic Kampuchea's proposal for negotiations, Viet Nam said it had rejected the same proposal by Thailand in 1985⁽¹¹⁾ because it distorted the situation in Kampuchea and because of its obduracy in clinging to the genocidal Pol Pot clique.

By a statement of 5 March,⁽¹²⁾ a member of the Co-ordination Committee for Health and Social Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea condemned the Vietnamese aggressors for what he charged was their continued use of chemical and biological warfare to exterminate the Kampuchean people.

Two documents—a press communique and an eight-point peace proposal both dated 17 March—were transmitted by Democratic Kampuchea.⁽¹³⁾ The communique, issued by the Council of Ministers, reviewed the military situation, outlined measures for a more efficient conduct of the struggle against Viet Nam, denounced what it called the intensification by the Vietnamese of chemical and biological warfare against the Kampucheans, and appealed to the international community to prevent the extermination of the people of Kampuchea. The peace proposal, among other things, called for negotiations with Viet Nam for the withdrawal of its troops in two phases, under United Nations supervision; after the first phase, negotiations between the Heng Samrin faction (the regime in Phnom Penh) and the Coalition Government to set up a quadripartite coalition, with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as President and Son Sann as Prime Minister; free elections, also under United Nations supervision; a guarantee of Kampuchea's neutrality by the United Nations with an observer group on the spot for a period of two or three years; and the conclusion of a treaty of non-aggression and peaceful coexistence between an independent, neutral Kampuchea and Viet Nam.

On 14 April,⁽¹⁴⁾ Democratic Kampuchea, charging that Viet Nam was continuing to seek a military victory, said that only negotiations based on its peace proposal could lead to a settlement. A 28 April letter⁽¹⁵⁾ transmitted excerpts from a 15 April statement by Khieu Samphan, Democratic Kampuchea's Vice-President, describing the situation in Kampuchea as of mid-April. He said Viet Nam's war effort was at an impasse while the Kampuchean struggle was developing favourably and there was world-wide support for the eight-point peace proposal; he appealed for continued condemnation of crimes committed by the Vietnamese against Kampucheans—such as artificially created famine, chemical and biological warfare, mass deportations to the western borders and replacement of displaced populations with Vietnamese settlers.

An ASEAN statement of 28 April, transmitted on 6 May by the Philippines,⁽¹⁶⁾ supported Democratic Kampuchea's peace proposal, reaffirmed ASEAN's resolve that the Kampuchea problem must be solved by the Kampuchean people themselves, and called on Viet Nam to reconsider its rejection. Appreciation for ASEAN's efforts with regard to Kampuchea was expressed in a joint statement by the 12-member European Community (EC), transmitted by the Netherlands on 27 May.⁽¹⁷⁾

A 21 May statement by the Department of Defence of Democratic Kampuchea and a 28 May press communique from its Co-ordination Committee for Defence⁽¹⁸⁾ drew attention to Viet Nam's recent troop rotation conducted under the apparent guise of partial troop withdrawal and to the sending of troop, tank and heavy artillery reinforcements by Viet Nam to Kampuchea.

By a declaration of 5 May, issued at the conclusion of a mass meeting to mark the International Year of Peace (1986) (see p. 115),⁽¹⁹⁾ Democratic Kampuchea stressed its desire to bring a speedy end to the war through its peace proposal.

On 30 May,⁽²⁰⁾ Democratic Kampuchea alleged that on 29 May Viet Nam's army of occupation subjected the refugee camp of Ta Ngoc in the Thai province of Prachin Buri to a 40-minute artillery barrage, killing 20 people and wounding 30 others, mostly women and children. Referring to the incident, ASEAN, in a joint communique on the Kampuchea situation, issued at Manila, Philippines, on 24 June and transmitted by Singapore on 8 July,⁽²¹⁾ condemned Viet Nam, called on it to desist from such premeditated and violent actions, and reiterated its call for a political settlement.

In a statement of 19 July,⁽²²⁾ Democratic Kampuchea rejected what it termed the so-called economic and cultural agreement concluded on 17 July and propagated by the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and the regime in Phnom Penh.

By a press communique of 31 July,⁽²³⁾ Democratic Kampuchea reported on a meeting of its Co-ordination Committee for Defence which had reviewed military operations against the Vietnamese army during the rainy season months of June and July, noted increased co-operation among the resistance forces, and exchanged views on military plans for the remaining months of the rainy season.

On 12 August,⁽²⁴⁾ Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a document entitled "An Indo-Chinese Federation under Viet Nam's domination: real strategic objective of the invasion and occupation of Kampuchea". The document stated that the strategy, conceived at the founding of Viet Nam's communist party in 1930, included annexation of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the invasion of Kampuchea and its settlement by Vietnamese nationals numbering 700,000 to date.

On 30 July,⁽²⁵⁾ Democratic Kampuchea charged Viet Nam with pursuing a genocidal policy by starving the Kampuchean people to death and bringing in Vietnamese nationals to live in their place. While claiming better living conditions for Kampucheans in areas under its control, Viet Nam, through its puppet regime, yearly declared acute food shortages and appealed to the international community for food relief, which never reached the Kampuchean people but was distributed to the Vietnamese armed forces, Democratic Kampuchea alleged.

A communique of 18 August, issued by the Thirteenth Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam

(Hanoi, 17-18 August), transmitted by Viet Nam,⁽²⁶⁾ stated that the evolution of the situation during the past eight years in South-East Asia had set off the two opposing positions on the question of Kampuchea and of peace and stability in the region: on the one hand, the three countries' demand for the removal of the Pol Pot clique and their proclamation of Viet Nam's total withdrawal from Kampuchea by 1990; on the other, Democratic Kampuchea's eight-point proposal⁽¹³⁾-tantamount to a demand for the elimination of the People's Republic of Kampuchea-and recognition of the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, which was none other than the Pol Pot clique. Such a proposal, the Conference said, was unacceptable. It concluded that normalizing relations with China and Thailand would contribute to regional peace, while declaring it was prepared to co-operate with other ASEAN countries of the region to achieve that objective.

Democratic Kampuchea's Council of Ministers, by a communique of 11 August⁽²⁷⁾ reviewed the Kampuchea situation, attributed the difficulties facing Viet Nam to its war of aggression, appealed to its leaders to reconsider their position on Democratic Kampuchea's peace proposal, and reiterated the Council's gratitude to the countries supporting that proposal.

On 19 August,⁽²⁸⁾ Democratic Kampuchea criticized a 28 July foreign policy speech by Mikhail Gorbachev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR (see p. 209), in which he spoke of a desire to improve relations with various countries in Asia and the Pacific, but continued to support Viet Nam's war of aggression in Kampuchea, a policy which, Democratic Kampuchea said, revealed the USSR's expansionist strategy in the region.

On 20 August,⁽²⁹⁾ Democratic Kampuchea declared that Viet Nam, at a loss for diplomatic manoeuvres, had staged an "Indo-Chinese Foreign Ministers' meeting" ⁽²⁶⁾ in an attempt to split the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and to break international support for the Kampuchean people's just struggle.

Commenting further on that meeting,⁽²⁶⁾ Democratic Kampuchea, on 31 August,⁽³⁰⁾ said the meeting's communique had shown no flexibility on Viet Nam's part; the meeting had been directed entirely by Viet Nam; and Viet Nam's announcement that it would withdraw its forces from Kampuchea by 1990 was merely a deceitful propaganda statement.

In a 29 August statement by the Co-ordinating Committee on Press and Information of Democratic Kampuchea on the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September),⁽³¹⁾ the Committee restated Democratic Kampuchea's position regarding two issues: first, that Viet Nam's aggression in Kampuchea violated the Non-Aligned Movement's principles and the United Nations Charter; second, that the decision at the 1979 sixth non-aligned Conference to keep Kampuchea's seat vacant violated the consensus rule, and hence must be declared null and void and the seat restored to the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

By a declaration issued at Beijing on 10 September,⁽³²⁾ the Council of Ministers of Democratic Kampuchea expressed gratitude to China for its support of Kampuchea's struggle for national independence and survival; it noted China's reaffirmation that China-USSR relations could not be normalized as long as the USSR continued to support Viet Nam's aggression; and it thanked ASEAN for calling for the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and appealed to the United Nations to continue pressing for their withdrawal. The Council reaffirmed its support for a political settlement based on the Declaration of the 1981 International Conference of Kampuchea,⁽³³⁾ United Nations resolutions and Democratic Kampuchea's recent peace proposal. It also called on those Eastern European countries that had supported Viet Nam to end their assistance.

On 12 September⁽³⁴⁾ and on 9⁽³⁵⁾ and 10 October,⁽³⁶⁾ Democratic Kampuchea transmitted three documents on the situation in Kampuchea. The first provided excerpts from official statements and the media in 1986; the second, entitled "The pursuit of Vietnamization in Kampuchea", was excerpted from an unofficial English translation of an article in the February 1986 issue of Etudes, a French review; the third alleged Viet Nam's torture and ill-treatment of political prisoners and prisoners of conscience in Kampuchea, as excerpted from a document issued in September 1986 by Amnesty International.

In a memorandum by the United Kingdom of 23 September,⁽³⁷⁾ issued as a companion piece to its speech on behalf of the 12 EC members before the Assembly on that day, the 12 expressed their concern on a number of issues, among them the intractable conflict in Kampuchea, its continued occupation by Viet Nam, and Viet Nam's policies that inflicted suffering on Kampuchea and serious difficulties on the ASEAN countries; they urged Viet Nam to reconsider proposals to resolve Kampuchea's problems, while stressing that it must be free of foreign troops and of any prospect of a return to the appalling activities of the Khmer Rouge.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam, by a joint statement issued in New York on 15 October,⁽³⁸⁾ said the General Assembly agenda item⁽²⁵⁾ entitled "The situation in Kampuchea" misrepresented the real causes of the prolonged instability there and was an attempt to make the public forget that the Pol Pot clique, in less than four years, had exterminated nearly half of its compatriots. A correct solution, they asserted, should guarantee the withdrawal of Viet Nam's forces, as well as the removal of the perpetrators of genocide and the realization of national reconciliation without the danger of renewed genocide and external interference. Including the item in the agenda without the consent and participation of the People's Republic of Kampuchea-the sole legitimate representative of the Kampuchean people-constituted gross interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign State, they stated, and they would therefore not take part in the debate, would vote against the related draft resolution (see p. 207) and would consider null and void any resolution adopted.

A similar position was taken by the People's Republic of Kampuchea in an 18 October message, transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic.⁽³⁹⁾ It said the ritual Assembly resolutions on Kampuchea reflected the strategic interests of their sponsors and were adopted without the participation of the authentic representatives of the Kampuchean people, who eight years earlier had exercised their right to self-determination and installed the current Government; the pseudo-coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, made up of a handful of criminals, was a judicial fiction prolonging its usurpation of the Kampuchean right at the United Nations.

Troop reinforcements dispatched from Viet Nam to Kampuchea during September and October were detailed by the Military High Command of the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea in a press communique of 31 October.⁽⁴⁰⁾

The People's Republic of Kampuchea, in a 5 November letter⁽⁴¹⁾ drew attention to what it said was a serious and sustained conflict caused by new aggressive acts by Thailand at certain points on the Thai-Kampuchean border inside Kampuchean territory; Thailand had been asked to stop interfering in Kampuchea's internal affairs and to open discussions to resolve issues of common interest.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1986/146 on the right of peoples to self-determination, the Economic and Social Council endorsed a March resolution of the Commission on Human Rights, reaffirming that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived Kampucheans of their right to self-determination and currently constituted the primary violation of human rights in Kampuchea. The Council also expressed concern at the unresolved dilemma of some 250,000 Kampuchean civilians stranded in Thailand as a result of armed attacks by those forces on civilian encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border since 1984 and at the more than 1,000 landmines recently found planted in Thai territory near that border, which had claimed the lives of 25 Thai civilians and had injured another 130.

Activities of the Committee of the Conference on Kampuchea. The lo-member Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea met in 1986 on 5 March, 2 June and 12 September. In accordance with its mandate to assist in seeking a comprehensive political settlement,⁽³³⁾ it also undertook two missions of consultation: one to Mexico (4-6 June) and another to the Philippines, China, Thailand and Austria (23 June-2 July). Details of these and other activities were contained in the Committee's report of 24 September.⁽⁴²⁾

The report stated that the missions had held extensive consultations with the Governments concerned on the prospects for a comprehensive Kampuchean political settlement, in the light of developments since adoption of the 1985 Assembly resolution.⁽³⁾ The missions reiterated that the purpose of the consultations was to reflect the international community's continuing concern in regard to Kampuchea and to obtain the widest possible support for a settlement. They stressed that one of the Committee's objectives was to encourage negotiations leading to implementation of the Declaration⁽³³⁾ adopted by the 1981 International Conference on Kampuchea.

The first mission briefed the Mexican authorities on recent developments. They expressed concern over the continuing conflict and its implications for peace and security in the region. They were of the view that a peaceful settlement could be achieved through a balanced dialogue between the parties.

In its discussions with the Foreign Ministers and other senior officials of ASEAN at Manila and with Chinese and Thai officials in Beijing and Bangkok, respectively, the second mission focused on the eight-point peace proposal put forward by Democratic Kampuchea⁽¹³⁾ which was supported by all. The ASEAN Ministers hoped Viet Nam, which had rejected the proposal, would reconsider it. Chinese officials stated that there could be no military solution to the problem and that they favoured a political settlement based on foreign troop withdrawal. At Bangkok, the mission was briefed on the situation along the Thai-Kampuchean border and other regional developments. The Thai authorities pointed out that the proposal had two main objectives: the withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea and the holding of general elections that would give the Khmer people a genuine opportunity to decide their own future.

On 9 July, at Vienna, the mission briefed the President of the International Conference on its consultations, while he reported on his tour of Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand and Indonesia (21 January-5 February) and Viet Nam, which he visited in his capacity as Austria's Foreign Minister (5-7 February). He said that all sides had appeared seriously interested in achieving a political solution to the question of Kampuchea, and although differences remained as to its elements and the modalities for negotiation, some common ground existed for progress. He would continue to seek contacts with the parties to promote a settlement. The Committee also stressed its determination to continue its consultations and to encourage negotiations to that end.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 14 October report on the situation in Kampuchea,⁽⁴³⁾ submitted pursuant to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General said he, too, had continued, in the framework of his good offices, to seek a peaceful solution. He had maintained close contact with the States most directly concerned and other interested parties, meeting in February and again in May, in New York, with the designated interlocutor of ASEAN on the issue. His Special Representative, Rafeeuddin Ahmed, met in May in New York with the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of Viet Nam. The Secretary-General later held further discussions in New York with the Presidents of Democratic Kampuchea and the Philippines, the Prime Minister of Malaysia, the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Thailand, the Deputy Foreign Minister of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and a member of the Council of Ministers of Viet Nam.

At the request of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative went to South-East Asia at the end of June, meeting with the ASEAN Foreign Ministers in Manila and then visiting Viet Nam, Thailand and Indonesia.

The Secretary-General had followed the developments in the region and closely discussed the proposals for a settlement made since the beginning of the year, including Democratic Kampuchea's peace proposal.⁽¹³⁾ In the light of those discussions and the clarifications provided by the parties concerned, he felt that further efforts were needed to bridge the significant differences that persisted on the procedure for negotiations and on the implementation of the main elements of a settlement which, he was convinced, could only be reached through genuine negotiations without preconditions.

Kampuchean humanitarian assistance programmes continued to be implemented by the Secretary-General. They were funded largely by voluntary contributions from Member States for operations in Thailand, in Kampuchea, and along the border. In seven years of operation, the programmes had channelled more than $1 billion in aid to the Kampuchean people. Those who had sought refuge along the Thai-Kampuchean border and those in the only remaining holding centre (Khao-I-Dang) operated by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in Thailand had remained totally dependent on assistance. Of some 228,000 Kampuchean refugees granted temporary asylum in Thailand and received into UNHCR-assisted camps, as many as 210,000 had been resettled since 1975; another 2,100 accepted for resettlement were awaiting departure for third countries.

Most of the nearly 250,000 Kampuchean civilians who sought refuge in Thailand following the upsurge of hostilities in late 1984 and early 1985 remained in evacuation sites operated by the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO). The relative calm currently prevailing along the border had enabled UNBRO to consolidate its operations and achieve improvements in public health, nutrition and social welfare. The Secretary-General said it was encouraging to note that voluntary repatriation of Kampucheans was receiving special attention, with emphasis on safe passage, humane reception and successful reintegration in their homeland.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 21 October 1986, adopted resolution 41/6 by recorded vote.

The situation in Kampuchea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983, 39/5 of 30 October 1984 and 40/7 of 5 November 1985,

Recalling further the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1(I) adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea, which offer the negotiating framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/7,

Deploing that foreign armed intervention and occupation continue and that foreign forces have not been withdrawn from Kampuchea, thus causing continuing hostilities in that country and seriously threatening international peace and security,

Noting the continued and effective struggle waged against-foreign occupation by the Coalition with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as President of Democratic Kampuchea,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1986/146 of 23 May 1986 on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation,

Greatly disturbed that the continued fighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced an additional large number of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing further that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Seriously concerned about reported demographic changes being imposed in Kampuchea by foreign occupation forces,

Convinced that, to bring about lasting peace in South-East Asia and reduce the threat to international peace and security, there is an urgent need for the international community to find a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem that will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Reiterating its conviction that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the States of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22, 35/6, 36/5, 37/6, 38/3, 39/5 and 40/7 and calls for their full implementation;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea are the principal components of any just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on its activities during 1985-1986 and requests that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference;

4. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene when necessary and to carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate;

5. Reaffirms its decision to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time, in accordance with Conference resolution 1(I);

6. Renews its appeal to all States of South-East Asia and others concerned to attend future sessions of the Conference;

7. Requests the Conference to report to the General Assembly on its future sessions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult with and assist the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee and to provide them on a regular basis with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

9. Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in following the situation closely and requests him to continue to do so and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

10. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other humanitarian organizations, national and international, that have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to provide emergency assistance to those Kampucheans who are still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the holding centres in Thailand;

11. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as are necessary;

12. Urges the States of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

13. Reiterates the hope that, following a comprehensive political solution, an intergovernmental committee will be established to consider a programme of assistance to Kampuchea for the reconstruction of its economy and for the economic and social development of all States in the region;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea".

General Assembly resolution 41/6

21 October 1986 Meeting 44 115-21-1 3 (recorded vote)

60-nation draft (A/41/L.2 & Add.1); agenda item 25.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/41/735. Among communications received by the Secretary-General on the subject was a statement of 23 August from Democratic Kampuchea,⁽⁴⁶⁾ drawing attention to what it termed the arbitrary decision of the Chairman of the sixth (1979) summit Conference of the Non-Aligned Movement that had since prevented Democratic Kampuchea from participating in the Movement. It characterized that decision as being in violation of the Movement's consensus rule and of its task to defend the principles of non-aggression and non-interference in the affairs of States. It accused Viet Nam of manoeuvring to prevent discussion of the Kampuchea situation at the forthcoming eighth summit.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 12; 15 May 1986.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

in favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: Afghanistan, Albania, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Benin, Cape Verde, Finland, Guyana, India, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Madagascar, Mexico, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

India abstained because it did not believe the approach embodied in the resolution would promote a political solution; it felt that the problem should be solved according to the framework accepted by the eighth non-aligned summit Conference (see p. 209).

Although voting affirmatively, Brazil had reservations concerning the fifth preambular paragraph, stressing its belief that the problem could be solved not by military means but through genuine negotiations; it would not subscribe to language that prejudged the outcome of the exercise by the Kampuchean people of their right to self-determination.

Ireland, referring to the same paragraph, said its affirmative vote did not imply any change in its position regarding Kampuchean representation; it pointed out that when the question was last raised with the presentation to the Assembly of the 1982 Credentials Committee report, Ireland, as in previous years, had abstained.

Participation and representation of Democratic Kampuchea in UN bodies

In 1986, the question of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea was raised twice in the Credentials Committee, with respect to the General Assembly's thirteenth special session, on 29 May, and with respect to the fourteenth special and forty-first regular sessions, on 16 October.

A number of States expressed different opinions with regard to the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea. Those opinions were voiced in both the Credentials Committee and in the General Assembly (see p. 379).

Democratic Kampuchea's credentials were accepted by virtue of General Assembly resolutions S-13/1 and 41/7 A, approving the Credentials Committee report for the Assembly's thirteenth special session (44) and the Committee's first report (45) for the fourteenth special and forty-first regular sessions.

Among communications received by the Secretary-General on the subject was a statement of 23 August from Democratic Kampuchea,⁽⁴⁶⁾ drawing attention to what it termed the arbitrary decision of the Chairman of the sixth (1979) summit Conference of the Non-Aligned Movement that had since prevented Democratic Kampuchea from participating in the Movement. It characterized that decision as being in violation of the Movement's consensus rule and of its task to defend the principles of non-aggression and non-interference in the affairs of States. It accused Viet Nam of manoeuvring to prevent discussion of the Kampuchea situation at the forthcoming eighth summit.

A note verbale of 21 October⁽⁴⁷⁾ from Afghanistan affirmed its recognition of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as the legitimate representative of the Kampuchean people. The so-called Democratic Kampuchea was no more than a group of individuals thrown out by the very people they claimed to represent and should in no way be allowed to continue its usurpation of Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations.

The participation and representation of Kampuchea were also raised in several other communications (see p. 205).

International security in South-East Asia

In 1986, the Secretary-General received a number of communications dealing with the general aspects of relations among the countries of South-East Asia.

Bangladesh, on 23 January, transmitted the documents issued at the conclusion of the first meeting of heads of State and Government of the South Asian Regional Co-operation Countries (Dhaka, 7 and 8 December 1985). The meeting established the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation, to promote peace, stability, amity and progress in the region, and to co-operate with organizations with similar aims.

In a communique of the Twelfth Conference of Foreign Ministers of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam (Vientiane, 23 and 24 January),⁽⁴⁾ the Ministers declared their readiness to begin talks with Thailand, based on peaceful coexistence and re-establishing good-neighbourly relations, on the repatriation of Kampuchean refugees currently in camps which should be relocated far from the Thai-Kampuchean border and placed fully under the supervision of humanitarian organizations, and on the question of Thai nationals captured on Kampuchean territory. They reaffirmed their support of Viet Nam's effort to resume talks with China to normalize their relations.

The USSR, on 23 April,⁽⁴⁹⁾ stated that in advocating a comprehensive system of international security and development of co-operation, it took full account of the interests of the Asian and Pacific countries. Certain circles in the United States and Japan, however, envisaged the future of those countries in no other terms than confrontation and thus were attempting to establish a "Pacific Community", eventually to be transformed into an exclusive regional grouping or into yet another militaristic bloc; such a course, if not halted, could seriously aggravate tension in the region. The USSR proposed instead: bilateral and multilateral consultations to resolve contentious issues and a separate conference of Pacific countries to consider security matters; adoption of confidence-building measures and reduction of naval fleets in the Pacific Ocean; the establishment of nuclear-free zones in the region; and discussion of the development of commercial, economic, technological, scientific and cultural co-operation.

On 14 July,⁽⁵⁰⁾ Japan commented that the USSR's allegations concerning itself and the United States were groundless, but agreed that promoting co-operation among the countries of Asia and the Pacific, utilizing their vast potential for development, would contribute to peace and prosperity. Japan stressed that such co-operation should not have a military character and that initiatives from ASEAN and other developing countries and the private sector should be respected.

A joint communique issued on 3 April by the USSR and Mozambique,⁽⁵¹⁾ following a 30 March to 1 April visit by Mozambique's President to the USSR, called for solving the problems of South-East Asia by a dialogue between the countries of the region, as proposed by the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam.

The Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 16-19 April), in a political declaration,⁽⁵²⁾ expressed concern over the continuing conflicts and tensions in South-East Asia. The Ministers reaffirmed support for the principles of non-interference and non-use of force, as well as the right of Kampucheans to self-determination. Warning that tensions in and around Kampuchea could escalate, the Ministers urged all States of the region to negotiate and establish a durable peace. The political declaration of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 1-6 September)⁽⁵³⁾ contained similar statements.

In a foreign policy speech at Vladivostok on 28 July,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR stated that part of USSR foreign policy was aimed at integrating Asia and the Pacific in a comprehensive system of international security. It would make USSR bilateral relations with the region's countries more dynamic and, in particular, invigorate the USSR's ties with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam. The USSR was ready to discuss additional measures for good-neighbourliness with China and for better relations and mutually beneficial co-operation with Japan and the United States. Mongolia, on 31 July⁽⁵⁵⁾, said it regarded those proposals as a sound basis on which to promote co-operation with the countries of Asia and the Pacific.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consultations on the question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia, the General Assembly on 7 October 1986 adopted without vote decision 41/404, deferring consideration of the item and including it in the provisional agenda of its forty-second (1987) session.

China-Viet Nam dispute

Between January and March 1986, the Secretary-General received an exchange of communications from China and Viet Nam, each charging the other with aggressive acts along their common border and elsewhere.

The Commission for the Investigation of the Chinese Expansionists' and Hegemonists' War Crimes against Viet Nam, by a communique of 8 January, transmitted by Viet Nam,⁽⁵⁶⁾ accused China of continuing a hostile policy against Viet Nam through sabotage and border-nibbling, maintaining large concentrations of troops and war-planes near Viet Nam's border, and creating a permanent state of confrontation in the area. The Commission cited 150 land-grabbing attacks in 1985, heavy artillery barrages across the border into Viet Nam, armed incursions by land and sea, airspace intrusions, and more than 100 incidents of river mine explosions. It placed the toll at 92 Vietnamese killed, 167 wounded and 30 others abducted into China, 500 dwellings, three schools and more than 20,000 hectares of agricultural and timber lands destroyed, and more than 1,000 livestock slaughtered or taken to China.

China insisted, on 11 February 1986,(57) that it was Viet Nam which was intensifying aggression against Kampuchea and creating tension along the China-Viet Nam border, stating that it had intensified provocations against China's Yunnan and Guangxi border areas and, in the past two months, had shelled Chinese territory, killing more than 100 Chinese and damaging many houses and production facilities. Retaliatory actions by China's frontier guards had been taken entirely in self-defence.

On 10 March,(58) Viet Nam recalled its 1979 three-point proposal for a settlement(59) and subsequent overtures for establishing peace along the China-Viet Nam border which it said China had persistently evaded. It charged that since the early 1970s China had colluded with the United States at the expense of Viet Nam. If China really desired peace and improved relations, it should end its hostile policy against Viet Nam and engage in talks to settle their mutual problems. Viet Nam had already made a public commitment to withdraw its forces from Kampuchea by 1990. However, China had demanded immediate, unconditional withdrawal, while it maintained the right to support the genocidal Pol Pot clique, thus opposing the Kampuchean people's revival, jeopardizing Viet Nam's security and perpetuating instability in South-East Asia.

Kampuchea-Viet Nam border dispute

A dispute concerning border lines between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam was the subject of communications received by the Secretary-General during the year.

On 3 January 1986,(60) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement of 28 December 1985, rejecting a so-called Kampuchea-Viet Nam border treaty between Vietnamese authorities in Hanoi and Phnom Penh. It said that the "treaty" was tantamount to abolishing the border between the two countries so as to legalize the settlement in Kampuchea of Vietnamese nationals and their continued influx. It appealed to the international community not to recognize any agreement concluded between Viet Nam and the Phnom Penh administration, which was invented to legalize Viet Nam's strategy to annex Kampuchea.

In a statement of 27 January 1986, transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic,(61) the People's Republic of Kampuchea referred to what it called Thailand's fallacious statement of November 1985(62) refuting an agreement signed between the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam concerning the dividing line between their historical waters and Viet Nam's statements of 12 November 1982(63) and of 5 June 1984(64) on the baselines defining its territorial sea and airspace, respectively. Thailand's statement, it said, constituted interference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam; it asserted that the People's Republic of Kampuchea was an independent country and the sole, legal representative of the Kampuchean people, with the right to sign any agreement or treaty with any country.

On 5 December,(65) Singapore, also referring to the agreement and statements, protested against Viet Nam's 1982 claim(63) to so-called "historical waters" in the Gulf of Thailand and over other waters based on a baseline it had defined, and against its 1984 claim to sovereignty over the airspace of those "historical waters"; Viet Nam's claims did not conform to well-established rules of international law on the matter, as reflected in article 4 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone of 1958(66) and article 7 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,(67) of which Viet Nam was a signatory. Singapore also stated that the so-called People's Republic of Kampuchea did not represent Kampuchea in any manner, as the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea was the legitimate Government. (See also below.)

Lao People's Democratic Republic-Thailand dispute

Letters from Thailand and the Lao People's Democratic Republic were addressed to the Secretary-General concerning armed incidents in their common border area.

On 18 June 1986,(68) Thailand described what it said was a savage attack by forces of the Lao People's Democratic Republic on a makeshift encampment of 142 Lao illegal immigrants, some 10 kilometres inside Thai territory, resulting in 35 Lao killed and 18 others wounded or injured. Thailand condemned the attack and reaffirmed the right to safeguard its sovereignty and territorial integrity, by every means.

Calling the accusation misleading and slanderous, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 20 June,(69) said that since its establishment Thailand had carried out countless acts of armed provocation along and across their common border and was currently engaged in spying activities. It annexed a statement of 6 June reaffirming its 1985 proposal(70) for negotiations between it and Thailand which it said should begin forthwith.

Thailand-Viet Nam dispute

Border clashes between Thailand and Viet Nam and incursions by one into the territory of the other, as well as a dispute over their territorial seas (see also above), were the subject of several communications sent by the two countries to the Secretary-General during the year.

By a statement of 21 January,(71) Viet Nam reaffirmed that its 1982 statement(63) on a baseline to measure the breadth of its territorial sea and 1984 statement on its airspace(64) were based on its legitimate interests, in conformity with international law and practice; therefore, Thailand's position, as stated in 1985,(62) was utterly unjustified. Viet Nam reaffirmed its determination to defend its sovereignty and interests.

Thailand, on 29 January,(72) complained of aggression against its sovereignty by Viet Nam's occupation forces in Kampuchea: on 23 January, artillery bombardment of marine bases well inside Thai territory, killing three Thai marines and injuring several others; on 24 January, the ambush of a Thai patrol unit 3.5 kilometres inside its territory, killing three soldiers and seriously wounding three others; and on 25 January, the explosion of land-mines planted in Thai territory, which injured five of its soldiers retrieving the bodies of those killed the previous day.

On 28 March,(73) Thailand alleged further violations of its sovereignty by Vietnamese troops, as follows: on 11 February, an armed incursion clashed with Thai defence volunteers at Ban Nong Pak Wan, Ta Phraya District and Prachinburi Province, killing two volunteers and injuring two others; on 17 February, another incursion 2 kilometres inside Thailand (south-east of Khao Ta Ngoc, Klong Had sub-district of Prachinburi Province), resulting in injury to a Thai soldier and the capture of four Vietnamese intruders; between 17 and 19 February, the discovery of caches of ammunition (Ban Paed Um, Nam Yuen District, Ubon Rajthani Province); on 20 February, Thai rangers and defence volunteers stepped on Vietnamese-planted land-mines (Ban Paed Um), killing 10 and injuring 18; on 23 February and 10 March, artillery bombardment (Ban Noen Soong, Nam Yuen District; Klong Yai District, Trat Province), injuring villagers and damaging houses and high-voltage wires; on 12 March, armed incursion (Ban Dan, Kantralak District, Si Sa Ket Province); and on 14, 18 and 21 March, artillery barrage (Ban Khao Sarapee, Aranyaprathet District, Prachinburi Province).

By a statement of 2 April,(74) the Viet Nam News Agency rejected Thailand's allegations as slander to cover up its own violations of the territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Kampuchea in support of the Khmer clique living along the Kampuchea-Thailand border.

On 30 May,(75) Thailand claimed that on the previous day Vietnamese forces had fired 15 rounds of artillery shells that landed in the middle of an UNBRO-supervised refugee camp housing some 30,000 Kampuchean civilians about 4 kilometres inside Thailand, killing 11 Kampucheans, wounding 47 others and destroying houses. That charge was rejected by a Viet Nam News Agency statement of 30 May,(76) asserting that although on-the-spot international relief workers had expressed doubt about the charge and assumed that it was the Khmer Rouge who had opened fire, Thailand's military tried to blame Viet Nam to cover up strife within the various Khmer factions and to divert public attention from the fifth partial withdrawal of Viet Nam's army volunteers from Kampuchea.

On 25 September,(77) Thailand reported an incursion, on 20 September, by some 100 Vietnamese troops about 2 kilometres from the Kampuchea-Thailand border (north-west of O-Bok pass, Ban Kruat District, Buri Rum Province). Supported by artillery fire, they were able to entrench themselves on Hill 538. Ensuing clashes injured two Thai soldiers and damaged village property. Thailand demanded that Viet Nam withdraw.

Western and south-western Asia

Afghanistan situation

In 1986, the General Assembly again took up the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security. It adopted resolution 41/33 in November, again calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and calling on all parties to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution. It expressed its support for the diplomatic process initiated by the Secretary-General, and requested him to continue his efforts.

The Secretary-General's Personal Representative undertook consultations with the parties in March, and in the mean time with the USSR and the United States. Those talks were followed by a seventh round of negotiations at Geneva between 5 and 23 May and 31 July and 8 August, during which agreement was reached on a large number of complex issues.

Communications. Numerous communications were addressed to the Secretary-General throughout the year relating to the situation in Afghanistan. The majority were from Afghanistan and Pakistan, alleging violations of airspace and territory in the form of reconnaissance flights, shellings, bombings and other acts of aggression and provocation by one against the other. Each party reported lodging repeated protests with the other, demanding an immediate end to such acts.

Afghanistan, on 7 January 1986,⁽¹⁾ alleged several provocative acts perpetrated against it by Pakistan forces: a violation of its airspace over Puzdah by a Pakistan aircraft on 1 December 1985; bombardment, with 150 rockets, of the frontier areas in Kunar Province on 30 December; and another airspace violation over Gupary, on 2 January 1986, by two Pakistan helicopters co-ordinating shellings into the Raqam area, which fired at the residential district of Pashad, south-west of As-ad Abad in Kunar-all of which killed 10 civilians, injured 11 others, and destroyed or damaged 52 houses. Pakistan rejected those allegations as baseless on 10 January.⁽²⁾

Afghanistan, on 14 January⁽³⁾ and 4 February 1986,⁽⁴⁾ reported further provocative actions against it: on 5 December 1985, the frontier areas, in particular Afridi and Shinwar, were blockaded and villages demolished and set ablaze; and on 28 January 1986, two war-planes flew reconnaissance flights into Afghan airspace over Jaji Maidan, Paktia Province, as far as 28 kilometres once and as far as 35 kilometres a second time.

Pakistan, on 4 February,⁽⁵⁾ alleged violations of its airspace and territory by Afghanistan on 27

January, involving two Afghan helicopters that fired rockets at the village of Shalozan, wounding three persons, and at Parachinar, killing one and wounding 13.

Afghanistan, by a letter of 12 February,⁽⁶⁾ protested a 5 February Pakistan reconnaissance flight over Shinkorak in Khas Kunar district, Nengrahar Province; it rejected at the same time Pakistan's claim that two Afghan helicopters had intruded into Pakistan airspace over Kharlachi village on 31 January. Pakistan, on 14 February,⁽⁷⁾ rejected the 28 January and 5 February allegations as baseless.

On 13 February,⁽⁸⁾ Afghanistan reported lodging a complaint three days earlier with the Iranian Embassy in Kabul that a group of Iranian clergymen, Afghans residing in Iran and counter-revolutionary bands had entered Afghanistan illegally to create a united Islamic front against the Government. Afghanistan demanded that Iran put an end to all forms of aggression against Afghanistan.

On 12 March,⁽⁹⁾ Afghanistan reported that, from 3 to 9 March, Pakistan forces subjected the residential area of Tsamkani, Paktia, to a barrage of some 1,500 ground-to-ground rockets and other heavy-weapons fire, killing 13 people, wounding 52, and destroying 20 houses, 40 kilometres of irrigation network, 280 tons of food and a large number of fruit trees.

Pakistan claimed, on 13 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ that 15 artillery rounds fired by Afghan forces landed in Shilman, Khyber Agency, on 28 February, killing a Pakistani soldier. Afghanistan, which had received a protest through its Islamabad Embassy on 2 March, rejected the claim on 10 March⁽¹¹⁾ as devoid of reality, following a thorough investigation of the incident.

On 17 March,⁽¹²⁾ Pakistan alleged an artillery bombardment on 12 and 14 March of areas in Kurram Agency that killed two Afghan refugees and injured three others, and also rejected as totally false Afghanistan's charge of 12 March.⁽⁹⁾ Pakistan, on 21 March,⁽¹³⁾ alleged a rocket bombardment by three Afghan aircraft, on 16 and 18 March, of Karshya post and the refugee camp of Mata Sangar near Kharlachi in Kurram Agency, killing six and wounding 22. Those allegations were rejected by Afghanistan, on 27 March,⁽¹⁴⁾ which condemned an alleged violation of its airspace on 18 March by a Pakistani aircraft flying reconnaissance over Karokoh, 60 kilometres east of Jalalabad.

Pakistan, by letters of 1⁽¹⁵⁾ and 3 April,⁽¹⁶⁾ charged that, between 22 and 30 March, certain areas in Kurram, Bajaur and Mohmand Agencies- including the refugee camp of Mata Sangar-sustained shellings by Afghan forces that left eight people dead and 34 injured. Afghanistan, on 4⁽¹⁷⁾ and 10 April,⁽¹⁸⁾ rejected the charges as a cover-up for Pakistan's aggressions against it, drawing attention at the same time to the latest of them: from 10 to 23 March, repeated shellings with rockets and cannons of frontier areas in Paktia that killed or injured over 100 civilians, destroyed 50 houses and four mosques and killed livestock; and on 30 March, a violation of Afghan airspace in the Chandar-Ghar region by two Pakistani fighter planes.

Pakistan, on 8 April,(19) rejected the alleged 10-23 March violations as false and, in turn, protested unprovoked attacks against it, as follows: on 3 and 4 April, Afghan armed forces bombarded areas in Bar Chamar Kand and Nakhtar with rockets and artillery fire, and machine-gunned a militia post on the outskirts of Chaman; on 5 April, six Afghan planes and 12 helicopters bombed and strafed the Frontier Corps posts of Dandi, Sasai and Gargat. The attacks wounded a child and two soldiers. Afghanistan rejected those charges as false on 21 April,(20) when it also reported a violation of its airspace on 11 April by four Pakistani aircraft on reconnaissance over Zhawra.

Afghanistan, on 11 April,(21) transmitted a message of 19 January from the Association of Lawyers of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, outlining the Association's aims. It also stated, among other things, that Pakistan, with United States participation, had subjected Afghanistan to aggression, subversion and terrorism through counter-revolutionary bands dispatched into the country from more than 120 training camps in Pakistan and other neighbouring countries. The Association asked the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to condemn such acts and reiterated Afghanistan's 1980(22) and 1981(23) proposals to solve the Afghanistan situation, as well as the Revolutionary Council's 1985 declaration on its goals.(24) It also welcomed the Council's new policy of opening the Government to representatives of the people who were not members of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan.

Pakistan, on 16 April,(25) reported that, on 12 April, Afghan armed forces fired 40 rounds of mortar and 76-millimetre artillery towards Chaman and the village of Murdar Baghicha, wounding a soldier and four civilians. On 22(26) and 24 April,(27) Pakistan reported further violations of its territory and airspace between 15 and 21 April, including the repeated shelling of several areas in Kurram, the village of Saidgi in North Waziristan-also bombed by four Afghan aircraft-and the village of Murdar Baghicha. The resulting casualties were six civilians dead, among them an Afghan refugee, and 15 others injured, 3 of them refugees. Afghanistan rejected these claims as groundless on 5 May(28) and demanded a halt to such slanders.

Afghanistan claimed earlier, on 23 April,(29) that a Pakistan aircraft raided Burj Kalai and other areas in Spin Buldak district, Qandahar Province, destroying a number of villages and killing four people and wounding 50.

Pakistan, on 8 May,(30) reported several incidents of shelling on 29 April and 3 May in Kurram (Lakka Tigga, Ali Mangal) and Mohmand (Nawa Pass), and two bombing attacks by four Afghan aircraft on 5 May, also in Kurram. The toll included 10 civilians killed, 8 of them Afghan refugees, live injured, three of them refugees, and extensive property damage.

Afghanistan, on 12 May,(31) rejected as groundless Pakistani claims that Afghan forces had invaded its territory on four occasions between 27 April and 3 May.

On 19 May,(32) Pakistan alleged that, between 8 and 14 May, Afghan aircraft bombarded areas in Kurram and the Domandai area in Baluchistan, destroying Kotri Post in Kurram, while shelling Peiwar Kotal, Teri Mangal and Shadal Sar northwest of Parachinar in Kurram, including the Bala Hisar Post, half of which was destroyed. Sixteen people were killed, of whom 15 were Afghan refugees; 24 were injured, among them 4 refugees.

Afghanistan, on 21 May,(33) rejected the violations claimed to have been committed by its armed forces between 5 and 13 May.

Pakistan, on 5 June,(34) reported that, between 14 and 19 May, several villages and Frontier Corps posts in Kurram sustained Afghan artillery fire and the village of Murdar Baghicha, machine-gun fire; in addition, four Afghan military aircraft were alleged to have violated Pakistan airspace over the Parachinar area, of which one was shot down and another hit; the attacks killed live people, including an Afghan refugee, and injured 22, all but 2 of whom were Afghan refugees. Following protests lodged with its Embassy shortly after the incidents were said to have occurred, Afghanistan, on 3 June,(35) rejected the allegations and other earlier ones(32) as baseless.

Afghanistan, on 25 June,(36) also rejected Pakistan's claims(37) that: the Arandu area of Chitral had come under Afghan small-arms fire on 15 June; the Domandai area near Chaman had been bombarded by six Afghan MIG-23 aircraft on 18 June; and Chakai in Bajaur and the Domandai area had come under artillery attacks on 23 June, with a total of four dead and 10 wounded.

Afghanistan, on 2 July,(38) transmitted a message commemorating the fifth anniversary of the National Fatherland Front of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, stating, among other things, that the USSR forces in Afghanistan would be withdrawn only when cessation of interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs could be guaranteed, and requesting Iran and Pakistan to reduce tension in the region.

Pakistan, on 8,(39) 25(40) and 30 July,(41) reported live incidents of shellings and rocket attacks across the border from Afghanistan into Pakistan, landing in Shilman, north of Landi Kotal, on 1 and 2 July; in Nawa Pass, on 12 July; and in the Ghakhai area, Bajaur, and in the Frontier Corps area in Chaman, on 23 and 25 July. The toll numbered two dead and 10 injured. Afghanistan, on 8(42) and 28 July,(43) denied the charges and said they were aggravating tension in the frontier areas.

Afghanistan's High Council of Religious Scholars and Clergymen in a message transmitted on 28 July,(44) asked that the Secretary-General play a role in stopping United States interference in the region, where the situation was deteriorating daily because of that interference.

Pakistan, on 18(45) and 25 August,(46) reported two artillery attacks in Shilman and on the village of Shaikh Baba, Mohmand, on 13 and 21 August, killing two people and injuring five. Rejecting those allegations on 2 September,(47) Afghanistan countercharged that, on 28 August, a Pakistani fighter plane conducted a seven-minute reconnaissance flight 6 kilometres into Afghan airspace over the Gul Ghundi and Shahidan mountains. Pakistan rejected the charge as baseless on 2 September.(48)

Afghanistan's Bakhtar Information Agency transmitted two communications on 8 September. The first was a statement(49) claiming the confiscation in Wardak, Kabul and Logar Provinces of large caches of arms, ammunition and chemical weapons, manufactured in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States. The statement charged that the organizers of the undeclared war against Afghanistan were using those weapons and attributing such use to the Afghan and USSR armed forces. The second communication was an open letter(50) condemning what it called the brutal and provocative acts, especially the use of chemical weapons, by the instigators of the undeclared war.

Pakistan, on 18(51) and 26 September,(52) charged that, on 16 September, two Afghan aircraft intruded into its airspace over Teri Mangal and six aircraft violated its airspace over Peiwar Kotal, dropping bombs and firing rockets; and that, on 23 September, two Afghan aircraft repeated a similar attack over Teri Mangal. The raids left two persons dead and 10 wounded.

On 29 September,(53) Afghanistan alleged that a Pakistani aircraft violated its airspace over the Torkham area; it also denied ground and aerial attacks cited by Pakistan as having occurred in mid-September. Afghanistan further alleged on 6 October(54) that Pakistan military and militia, with the help of United States advisers, mounted a nine-hour ground-to-ground rocket attack on 19 September from the village of Sultanazai, into the centre of Spin Buldak district, killing an Afghan soldier, 60 children and a woman, injuring 44 others and damaging a mosque. Pakistan, on 8 October,(55) rejected the charge as baseless. On 14 October,(56) it also rejected Afghanistan's allegation made that same day(57) that a Pakistani aircraft had intruded on 9 October into Afghan airspace over Band-e-Kamal Khan, Nimroz Province.

Afghanistan, on 27 October,(58) cited a violation of its airspace on 12 October by two Pakistani fighter jets that conducted a 40-minute reconnaissance flight over Orgun in Paktika. Pakistan rejected that allegation as baseless on 28 October,(59) and cited a violation of its airspace on 23 October by four Afghan fighter planes that flew over Gargat Sar in North Waziristan and fired rockets, wounding one person.

Afghanistan, on 29 October,(60) reported the shelling on 24 October of a residential area at Barikot in Kunar that killed four residents, wounded eight, and destroyed seven homes. Pakistan, on 31 October,(61) stated it had conveyed to Afghanistan its rejection of that allegation two days previously.

Afghanistan, on 4 November,(62) alleged other acts of aggression against it by Pakistan on 29 October: ground-to-ground rockets fired into the Afghan region of Sotan Zay and a machine-gun and mortar attack on border security posts at Wesh, injuring a civilian.

On 5 November,(63) Pakistan reported that, on 25 October, Afghan armed forces fired three artillery rounds that landed on the village of Gwatai, Bajaur, killing one person and wounding another.

Pakistan, by letters of 12, 20, 24 and 26 November, cited a series of continued unprovoked attacks by Afghan armed forces, mostly artillery fire that landed in the Arawali and Teri Mangal areas, on 9 and 10 November,(64) in the Teri Mangal area on 19 November,(65) and in an area south-west of Arawali on 21 November;(66) and an attack by three tank rounds on Spin Suka, north of Landi Kotal, the bombing of Saidgi in North Waziristan by four Afghan aircraft, and the shelling of Shilman on 15, 17 and 18 November, respectively.(67) The attacks took the lives of two Sepoys of the Khyber Rifles and seven Afghan refugees and wounded 10, among them a refugee.

On 2 December,(68) Pakistan rejected the charge that on 19 November its forces shelled the Afghan frontier posts of Jaji district in Paktia, wounding two soldiers and damaging the posts, as claimed by Afghanistan on 3 December.(69)

Pakistan, by two letters, dated 8(70) and 23 December,(71) reported that Afghan forces fired seven tank rounds that landed in the Landi Kotal area of Khyber Agency on 4 December and that two Afghan fighter planes dropped two bombs in the Ali Mangal area on 18 December. The first incident injured six persons; the second killed eight. Those incidents as well as those reported to have occurred in November were rejected by Afghanistan by letters of 15(72) and 31 December.(73) By the last letter, Afghanistan also reported that a Pakistani aircraft on 24 December flew a reconnaissance flight over the Boldak region in violation of its airspace.

Other communications concerned alleged interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs by certain countries.

On 3 January,(74) Afghanistan transmitted a book published by its Foreign Affairs Ministry entitled White Book: China's Interference in the Internal Affairs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. The book accused China of a clandestine war against Afghanistan, which it was waging jointly with the reactionary rulers of Egypt and Saudi Arabia, Pakistan's military and the United States Central Intelligence Agency, and, along with Iran and Pakistan, exporting into the country counter-revolutionaries whom it financed, armed and trained. China, on 21 January,(75) rejected the accusations and insisted that the Afghanistan situation was the result of a super-Power's armed invasion of that sovereign country.

Iran, by a 13 February letter(76)-referring to a pledge by the President of the United States, in his 4 February State of the Union message, to continue moral and material support to the freedom fighters in Afghanistan-declared that the United States had no right to interfere in the affairs of Muslim Afghanistan, that the only solution to the situation in that country was to let its people determine their own destiny. It demanded the unconditional withdrawal of all foreign forces from Afghanistan.

Several other communications reflected the positions of individual Governments and intergovernmental organizations.

The General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR, in a 28 July foreign policy speech,(77) announced that, having assessed the situation in Afghanistan and following consultations with that Government, the USSR had decided to withdraw six regiments before the end of 1986-a step intended to speed up a political settlement.

The United States President, by a statement of 27 December,(78) urged renewed efforts to seek a free and independent Afghanistan and asserted that, as long as the USSR and its surrogates continued to wage a war that threatened extermination of an entire people, that people would have the support of both the United States and the international community.

The Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, Morocco, 6-10 January 1986), by a resolution transmitted by Morocco on 5 May,(79) emphasized its commitment to help resolve the Afghan issue and once more demanded the immediate, unconditional withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan.

The Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April), in its political declaration,(80) called for a political settlement of the Afghan situation based on foreign troop withdrawal, on the principles of self-determination, non-intervention and non-interference, and on the right of Afghan refugees to return to their homes in safety. The Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September) made similar statements in a political declaration.(81)

The European Council, by a statement of 6 December,(82) drew attention to the continued presence of 110,000 USSR troops in Afghanistan, the massive suffering engendered by large-scale violations of human rights there, and the five million Afghans who had been forced to flee their country. The Council reiterated its call on the USSR to agree to a rapid and complete withdrawal of its forces and expressed support for the Secretary-General's search for a political settlement based on principles overwhelmingly endorsed by the international community.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1985,(83) the Secretary-General reported on 18 September 1986 on progress towards a political settlement of the Afghanistan situation.(84)

He stated that, at the round of negotiations convened at Geneva from 16 to 20 December 1985, an impasse had remained, obliging the interlocutors to adjourn without having considered the fourth draft instrument, setting out the inter-relationships between the three instruments that had been virtually completed-on non-interference and non-intervention, on the return of the Afghan refugees and on international guarantees -and the withdrawal of troops.

Consequently, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, Diego Cordovez, undertook another trip for consultations to Pakistan and Afghanistan, from 7 to 18 March 1986. Iran, where a stop was not possible, was briefed on the discussions. A set of understandings emerged from the consultations that broke the impasse. In other consultations with the USSR and the United States, the two designated guarantors, the Personal Representative was informed that the text of the instrument on international guarantees was acceptable to them, subject to an overall settlement they could support.

Based on those understandings, a seventh round of negotiations was convened at Geneva on 5 May, during which the interlocutors considered for the first time the draft instrument on interrelationships and finalized, among other things, the text of the principles and objectives of the settlement, including non-intervention and non-interference, the non-use of force and self-determination. The negotiations were suspended on 23 May at the interlocutors' request to enable them to hold consultations in their respective capitals. At that stage, two issues remained outstanding in the draft text of the instrument on interrelationships: the arrangements to ensure effective implementation of the settlement and the time-frame and modalities for withdrawal.

Those two issues were discussed during resumed negotiations at Geneva from 31 July to 8 August. On the first, the Personal Representative submitted a revised proposal taking into account that each party's determination to implement its obligations would be enhanced by the conviction that the other side was acting with equal determination. The revised proposal was the subject of preliminary discussion at Geneva and of examination by the interlocutors in their capitals. On the second issue, there was still a wide gap between the stated positions of the interlocutors, but during the May and August rounds there was some movement.

The Secretary-General said the interlocutors had become increasingly convinced that it was essential to ensure that the settlement was broadly supported and effectively implemented and were considering practical measures to that end. He recalled that on the eve of the August round, the USSR, in a move it described as designed to speed up a political settlement, had announced the withdrawal of six regiments from Afghanistan,⁽⁷⁷⁾ stressing the expectation that its unilateral step would be answered by a curtailment of outside interference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 5 November 1986, adopted resolution 41/33 by recorded vote.

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security",

Recalling its resolutions ES-6/2 of 14 January 1980, 35/37 of 20 November 1980, 36/34 of 18 November 1981, 37/37 of 29 November 1982, 38/29 of 23 November 1983, 39/13 of 15 November 1984 and 40/12 of 13 November 1985,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State,

Reaffirming further the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Gravely concerned at the continuing foreign armed intervention in Afghanistan, in contravention of the above principles, and its serious implications for international peace and security,

Noting the increasing concern of the international community over the continued and serious sufferings of the Afghan people and over the magnitude of social and economic problems posed to Pakistan and Iran by the presence on their soil of millions of Afghan refugees, and the continuing increase in their numbers,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need for a political solution of the grave situation in respect of Afghanistan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and the status of the diplomatic process initiated by him,

Recognizing the importance of the initiatives of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the efforts of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries for a political solution of the situation in respect of Afghanistan,

1. Reiterates that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned character of Afghanistan is essential for a peaceful solution of the problem;

2. Reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever;

3. Calls for the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops from Afghanistan;

4. Calls upon all parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the creation of the necessary conditions which would enable the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and honour;

5. Renews its appeal to all States and national and international organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

6. Expresses its appreciation and support for the efforts and constructive steps taken by the Secretary-General, especially the diplomatic process initiated by him, in the search for a solution to the problem;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue those efforts with a view to promoting a political solution, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the exploration of securing appropriate guarantees for the non-use of force, or threat of force, against the political independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of all neighbouring States, on the basis of mutual guarantees and strict non-interference in each other's internal affairs and with full regard for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council concurrently informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to Member States a report on the situation at the earliest appropriate opportunity;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

Afghanistan restated its objection to the inclusion in the Assembly's agenda of what it called the artificial question of Afghanistan and of any discussion of its internal affairs. The sponsors had arrogated to themselves the right to advise the Afghan people on the socio-economic and political system they should adopt, while Pakistan had grossly exaggerated the numbers of so-called refugees, not only to lend drama to the matter but also to pocket millions of dollars in refugee aid. As to the USSR forces in the country, Afghanistan again stressed that they were there at its request to repel armed aggression from outside. The text paid lip-service to the negotiating process, whereas no steps had been taken to create the atmosphere of trust and confidence essential for any negotiations to succeed. No viable solution could be expected from one-sided, biased and unrealistic resolutions.

Burkina Faso said that the draft did not seem adequately to appreciate the progress made towards a solution, as emphasized in the Secretary-General's report, and disregarded the practical gesture displayed by the highest authority of the USSR on 28 July.(77)

Believing that the resolution would not help to resolve the problem, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya felt the issue should not be placed in the context of super-Power struggles, but dealt with within Afghanistan, so that its people might determine their own future, free from foreign pressure and without imperialist forces maintaining a tense atmosphere in the region for their own selfish ends.

Its affirmative vote notwithstanding, Iran registered certain reservations: the invasion of Afghanistan by the USSR not only violated international law but was an attack on Islam and the entire Islamic world. Iran could not be satisfied with a resolution that shied away from naming the aggressor or from spelling out the fact that Afghanistan's sovereignty and independence had been violated; the issue was simplified by referring only to the internal affairs of Afghanistan, disregarding its effect on other nations. Iran added that the current Geneva talks were of no validity without the participation of the Afghan Mujahidin, the Afghan people, the real party to the negotiations.

Bolivia defended the principle of non-interference and supported the Secretary-General's search for a political settlement. Mexico said it had always defended the principle of the non-use of force against the territorial integrity of any State and two related principles, respect for the self-determination of peoples and non-intervention in the internal affairs of States. The United Nations must continue to respond firmly to the situation to avert further military escalation in the area.

Sao Tome and Principe said that, although it had always abstained on similar resolutions in the past, its positive vote was in support of the good offices of the Secretary-General, whose report raised hopes that progress towards a peaceful solution would continue.

Related resolution and decision: GA 41/148, ESC 1986/136.

Statements regarding the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan to the Assembly's sessions were made in the Credentials Committee's 1986 meetings (see p. 379).

Afghan refugees

In 1986, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued its assistance programme for Afghan refugees who remained largely concentrated in Pakistan and Iran. The programme's emphasis was on the provision of supplies and services and the encouragement of self-sufficiency. (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XX.)

Iran-Iraq armed conflict

In February 1986, Iran mounted a new offensive against Iraq. The escalation of the fighting was reflected in communications addressed to the Secretary-General by the two countries throughout the year, reporting repeated bombardments of civilian centres, chemical-weapons use, increased attacks on third-party commercial shipping in international waters in the Persian Gulf, and attacks on civil aviation. The question of the treatment of prisoners of war was also addressed in several communications.

The Security Council convened in February to consider the situation, and adopted resolution 582(1986), in which it deplored the initial acts that had given rise to the conflict and called for: an immediate cease-fire, a cessation of all hostilities, the withdrawal of troops to internationally recognized boundaries, a comprehensive exchange of prisoners of war, and Iran and Iraq to submit all aspects of the conflict to mediation. As requested by the Council, the Secretary-General subsequently reported to it on his efforts to give effect to the resolution. In October, the Council adopted resolution 588(1986), by which it called on the parties to implement its February resolution without delay and asked the Secretary-General to report again no later than 30 November. After considering his second report, the Council, in December, issued a statement reiterating its call for implementation of both 1986 resolutions.

A mission of specialists, dispatched to Iran by the Secretary-General, conducted an investigation in February/March of alleged victims and sites of chemical attacks. The Council considered the mission's report in March, and issued a declaration condemning the continued use of chemical weapons and demanding strict observance of the 1925 Geneva Protocol.

Resuming its fortieth session in September 1986, the General Assembly decided to include the item on the consequences of the prolongation of the conflict in the agenda of its forty-first (1986) session (decision 40/483), but did not discuss it, deferring consideration to its resumed session in 1987 (decision 41/470).

Communications January-18 February). On 2 January 1986,(1), Iran denied an allegation made by Iraq in a military communique of 30 December 1985 that on that date Iran had bombarded civilian areas in Mandali and Al-Ghadir; Iran said its air force had bombed an Iraqi military concentration, the nearest civilian area to which was nine kilometres away. It charged that Iraq, under cover of that false claim, had attacked the cities of Piranshahr and Mehran on 31 December 1985. On 3 January 1986,(2) Iran alleged another Iraqi aerial attack on Piranshahr on 2 January that resulted in 20 casualties. Responding on 6 January,(3) Iraq said the alleged attack had no basis in fact, and warned that Iran was using civilian centres along the border as bases for massing its forces and launching attacks against Iraq, which exposed Iranian civilians to retaliatory bombardment.

Iraq, on 28 January, (4) listed four two-plane bombing raids during January, on populated areas in the governorates of Sulaymaniyah and Arbil, as well as the community of Zamki and the towns of Khurmali and of Dirluk in Amadiyeh Province-which killed 15 civilians, wounded 44 others, and destroyed or damaged 23 houses. Iran, on 30 January,(5) called the allegations mere fabrications, adding that, if true, Iraq would have invited the United Nations team at Baghdad to visit the areas reportedly bombed.

Iran, by two letters dated 30 January, charged that, between 15 and 27 January, Iraq violated Iranian airspace over Abadan and Sanandaj, attacked a passenger bus in Chenareh, mounted aerial attacks on Abadan, Khorramshahr, Baneh, Marivan (twice) and Sardasht,(6) and subjected Marivan and Rabat village near Sardasht to a massive air raid.(7) Sixty-one civilians were killed and 162 were wounded.

Iraq transmitted two letters on 10 February, one annexing photographs(s) of the civilians injured in the January air raids(4). The other conveyed a statement(9) reporting a large-scale armed attack east of Basrah and covering the entire Shatt al-Arab sector in southern Iraq that began on the night of 9/10 February and was continuing. Iraq claimed that Iran's object was to occupy the area around Basrah and territory bordering Kuwait to enable it to threaten the Persian Gulf countries; Iraq said the Security Council should tackle the situation which was threatening the region's security.

On 12 February,(10) Iraq transmitted excerpts of a statement by Iran's President and of military communiques, broadcast over Radio Teheran on 11 and 12 February, to the effect that Iran's forces had crossed the Shatt al-Arab into Iraq, had broken through Iraqi defenses and taken the industrial port of Al Faw, cutting off Iraq's access to the Persian Gulf; Iraq itself reported that the attack killed numerous civilians and inflicted severe damage.

A communique by the Ministerial Committee of Seven of the Council of the League of Arab States (Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and Yemen) and the Secretary-General of the League was issued after a round of meetings in Baghdad on 12 February and transmitted by Iraq the next day.(11) The Committee-set up in 1984(12) to monitor developments in the war-called on Iran to halt its aggression against Iraq, and requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to end the conflict.

Iraq, on 27 February, (13) transmitted a statement broadcast by Radio Teheran on 12 February to the effect that the Supreme Council of the Islamic Revolution in Iraq viewed Iraq's request for a meeting of the Committee as a hostile act against the people of Iraq and that the Iraqi mujahidin remained determined to pursue their jihad to topple Saddam Hussein's regime. Iraq said the statement was further evidence of Iran's expansionist character.

Zambia, on 13 February,(14) declared that Iraq had shown its readiness to resolve the conflict through negotiation, and called on Iran to heed the international community's appeal to act similarly.

Iraq, on 14 February,(15) reported that, despite Iran's boasts over sparing civilians the scourge of war, its invading forces, on 9, 11 and 12 February, had subjected the town of Abu al-Khasib in the governorate of Basrah to heavy bombardment. The attacks had killed two civilians and wounded five; damaged 27 houses, a girls' school, commercial premises and an automobile; and destroyed the main water pipeline.

Also on 14 February, (16) Iraq transmitted excerpts from two Iranian military communiques, broadcast over Radio Teheran on the preceding two days, claiming that Iran had cut off Iraq's only access to the Persian Gulf in the Al Faw area and at Khawr Abd Allah, had destroyed major installations in Al Faw, and had so far "liberated" more than 700 square kilometres of Iraqi territory. On 16 February,(17) Iraq transmitted excerpts of later communiques, also broadcast over Radio Teheran, stating that Iran was keeping watch over the Khawr Abd Allah region, in the northern part of which Iraqi naval forces were trapped at Umm Qasr, and that it had "liberated" another 50 square kilometres of Iraqi territory. Iraq said the excerpts were proof of Iran's expansionist ambitions, which belied its protestations to the contrary.

On 18 February,(18) Democratic Yemen expressed concern over the recent developments in the war which, it felt, could create a pretext for imperialist and Zionist military intervention in the region, again emphasized the inadmissibility of territorial acquisition by force and called on the parties to resolve their conflict peacefully.

The Secretary-General, in a 14 February statement, reiterated that military force could not resolve issues underlying the tragic conflict and called for a cessation of hostilities to facilitate efforts towards a just and peaceful settlement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

The Security Council considered the Iran-Iraq conflict at four meetings between 18 and 24 February. It convened in response to a letter of 12 February, transmitted by Iraq,(19) from the Committee of Seven of the Council of the League of Arab States and the League's Secretary-General, calling for an urgent meeting of the Council, citing disturbing developments following Iran's 9/10 February large-scale armed aggression against Iraq's sovereignty and territorial integrity in the sector east of Basrah and the sector of the Shatt al-Arab.

The Council invited Bahrain, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and Yemen, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of the United Arab Emirates,(20) the Council also invited the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States to participate under rule 39a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

As further proposed by the United Arab Emirates,(21) the Council decided on 19 February, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom), to invite the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to participate. The United States, which had requested the vote, said it was opposed to ad hoc departures from orderly procedure, and consequently to granting the same rights of participation to non-governmental entities as those granted to Members of the United Nations. The President had stated that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37^b or rule 39, but that the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights of participation as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

On 24 February, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 582(1986).

The Security Council,

Having considered the question entitled "The situation between Iran and Iraq",

Recalling that the Security Council has been seized with the question of the situation between Iran and Iraq for almost six years and that decisions have been taken thereon,

Deeply concerned about the prolongation of the conflict between the two countries resulting in heavy losses of human lives and considerable material damage and endangering peace and security,

Recalling the provisions of the Charter and in particular the obligation of all Member States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

Noting that both the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq are parties to the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925,

Emphasizing the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Taking note of the efforts of mediation pursued by the Secretary-General,

1. Deplores the initial acts which gave rise to the conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq and deplores the continuation of the conflict;

2. Also deplores the escalation of the conflict, especially territorial incursions, the bombing of purely civilian population centres, attacks on neutral shipping or civilian aircraft, the violation of international humanitarian law and other laws of armed conflict and, in particular, the use of chemical weapons contrary to obligations under the 1925 Geneva Protocol;

3. Calls upon the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq to observe an immediate cease-fire, a cessation of all hostilities on land, at sea and in the air and withdrawal of all forces to the internationally recognized boundaries without delay;

4. Urges that a comprehensive exchange of prisoners-of-war be completed within a short period after the cessation of hostilities in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross;

5. Calls upon both parties to submit immediately all aspects of the conflict to mediation or to any other means of peaceful settlement of disputes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his ongoing efforts, to assist the two parties to give effect to this resolution and to keep the Council informed;

7. Calls upon all other States to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from any act which may lead to a further escalation and widening of the conflict and, thus, to facilitate the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 582(1986)

24 February 1966

Meeting 2666

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/17859).

Meeting numbers. SC 2663-2666.

In statements before the vote, Denmark said that whatever the shortcomings of the draft resolution, the Council should launch an urgent appeal to Iran and Iraq to co-operate fully in its implementation so that the conflict could finally be brought to an end. In Australia's view, the draft, while not fully in accord with the attitudes of either party, laid an objective foundation on which to build a settlement.

Madagascar, pointing to the intensive consultations held to take account of all viewpoints in the text, felt that the Council could do no more than propose steps and solutions advocated by the Charter and international law, together with a framework for negotiations whose content, scope and purpose were for the parties to define. It would have preferred the first three operative paragraphs to reflect more strictly a twofold concern: the lack of practical means to enforce Council decisions and the Council's obligation to place the conflict in a historical and political context.

France considered it imperative that the relevant Council resolutions and rules of international law be accepted without reservation and urgently implemented.

Iran's comments on the resolution were contained in a 24 February statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs.⁽²²⁾ Although unbalanced and inadequate on the whole issue of the war, the resolution was a positive step towards condemning Iraq as the aggressor and towards a just conclusion to the war, Iran said. It was prepared to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General in matters relating to the rules of international law and to his 1985 eight-point plan,⁽²³⁾ as well as to prevent the expansion of the war and involvement of other countries in it. Iran observed that while the Council was under an obligation to condemn Iraq strongly by name for its repeated, large-scale use of chemical weapons (see p. 232), the Council had taken a milder position on that point than in the past. The Council should also condemn Iraq's 20 February attack on an Iranian passenger plane and its attacks against neutral ships (see p. 234) and its attacks on civilian centres.

Iraq commented on 5 March⁽²⁴⁾ that the resolution contained the basic principles in the Charter of the United Nations, international law and

^bRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as a result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

State practice for the peaceful settlement of armed conflicts. It expressed readiness to implement the resolution in good faith provided Iran was ready to do the same and once agreement had been reached on the following points: step-by-step implementation of all elements, guaranteed by an established time-table; a definite time-frame for the cease-fire and withdrawal of forces; the submission of all aspects of the conflict to mediation; and well-defined procedures for the exchange of prisoners of war. Failing these conditions, Iraq could not comply with the resolution. During the debate, Iraq emphasized that the Council's tendency to focus on secondary questions, rather than a comprehensive settlement, had prolonged the war and called on the Council to shift from selective solutions.

Numerous States expressed concern over the aggravation of the situation resulting from the latest Iranian offensive. They spoke of the possible expansion of the war, currently in its sixth year, into the rest of the region, with adverse consequences for world peace and security. As Kuwait pointed out, the conflict risked creating conditions in an important and sensitive region of the world that could justify intervention by the super-Powers.

The Secretary-General of the League of Arab States said that Iraq had responded positively to all mediating efforts and peace initiatives while Iran had constantly rejected all such efforts, putting forward a series of crippling conditions to peace efforts and adamantly pursuing the war. The League had from the outset stood for opposition to aggression against any Arab State and total solidarity with the aggrieved, and for a negotiated solution to the conflict based on international law and United Nations resolutions, guaranteeing the legitimate rights of both parties. He said that the recent Iranian aggression had created a new, infinitely more dangerous situation, and called on the big Powers to move from mere expressions of concern to a practical stand which would create the conditions necessary to end the conflict.

Tunisia stressed that the initiative of the Arab States in bringing the matter before the Council was in no way indicative of hostility towards Iran, nor was it a prejudgement of the situation, but was to bring about the immediate cessation of hostilities.

For Yemen, the matter was a straightforward one of blatant aggression, acknowledged by Iran itself; therefore no Council investigation or fact-finding was necessary. It asked the Council to call on the belligerents to declare an immediate cease-fire and withdraw their forces to their internationally delimited borders, and to send United Nations observers to monitor compliance.

Jordan felt it imperative for the Council not to allow its role to be thwarted or to become hostage to one party's position, especially to a position based on the use of force as a means to settle disputes. Saudi Arabia urged a firm stand with regard not only to Iran's latest escalation of the war, but also to its continued disruption and thwarting of efforts to end it. Bahrain said there was a need for those States enjoying a certain ascendancy in the world to live up to their responsibilities for the consolidation of peace rather than merely mouthing pious hopes. Oman called for swift action by the international community and for new steps by the Secretary-General commensurate with the gravity of the situation. The Council could not at this stage merely put out the flames of war, Morocco said; it was duty-bound to use all its powers to provide lasting stability. China expressed the same view, as did the United Arab Emirates, which said that partial solutions were not a basis for a comprehensive peaceful settlement.

Egypt reaffirmed its support for past United Nations resolutions to end the conflict and asked the Council to adopt measures to implement them.

Thailand said that while Iran's absence deprived the Council of the opportunity to hear both sides, it still had to discharge certain duties and obligations under the Charter; the immediate concern should be to end the fratricidal blood-letting.

The United Kingdom believed that effective Council action must have as its clear objective the agreement of both sides to a series of related steps: an immediate cease-fire so as to end the slaughter; withdrawal of all forces to the borders recognized before the outbreak of hostilities; and the opening of negotiations, directly between the parties or under United Nations auspices. United Nations personnel, authorized by the Council and organized and controlled by the Secretary-General, would supervise and monitor the cease-fire and withdrawal. The Secretary-General would exercise mediatory efforts; the Council would stand ready to give support and exercise good offices as required. No issue, such as the bombardment of civilian centres, the use of chemical weapons, interference with freedom of navigation, safety of civil aircraft or the ill-treatment of prisoners of war, should be allowed to delay efforts to end the fighting.

The USSR, stressing its concern over dangerous pockets of tension and conflict in its immediate vicinity, repeated that the disputes between the parties should be resolved at the negotiating table, not on the battlefield. It continued to oppose attempts to use the conflict as a pretext for outside interference in the internal affairs of States of the region.

The United States said it continued to seek the earliest possible end to the conflict, with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of both sides intact. Expressing concern over the possible expansion of the conflict to neighbouring States, it again said that it would regard such an adverse development as a major threat to United States interests in the region.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that its experience had confirmed that the Council had become useless with respect to carrying out its role, owing to the irresponsible practices of the United States-its use of the veto and its insistence in paralysing the United Nations so that it might become the world's policeman. The Jamahiriya advised the Council that, before demanding anything from Iran, it must implement its resolutions on Palestine and impose sanctions against Israel; the same applied to South Africa. France, the United Kingdom and the United States said that the Jamahiriya's statement was unacceptable because it was intemperate, disrespectful to the Council and an abuse of the right to participate under rule 37 of the Council's rules of procedure. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, by a letter of 27 February,(25) reaffirmed its statement and characterized the language of the three permanent Council members as exceeding the bounds of propriety; their invoking the rules of procedure was an attempt to deprive non-members of the Council of the right to express their views.

Communications (19 February-6 October). On 19 February,(26) during the Council's deliberations, Iran transmitted a letter criticizing the Council for having taken no decisive action in the past against Iraqi aggression. It declared that countering aggression was an absolute necessity for the maintenance of international peace and security; hence, Iran's military measures against Iraq's aggression were not only necessary but also sanctioned by the Charter. Iran welcomed any proposal to prevent interference by other countries in the conflict. It believed that the Council's April 1985 declaration,(27) which it regarded as a step towards understanding, together with aspects of the Secretary-General's eight-point plan, (22) constituted a framework for a just conclusion of the conflict.

In letters of 20 February, Mongolia,(28) India(29) and Yugoslavia(30) expressed concern over the renewed escalation of the conflict and appealed to both Iran and Iraq to stop the fighting, India offering to assist in evolving a phased programme of de-escalation.

Iran, also on 20 February,(31) reported an Iraqi air raid the day before on the city of Rabat that left 24 civilians dead and 27 severely injured; Iran asked that the United Nations team at Teheran visit Rabat to document yet another Iraqi violation of humanitarian law.

The 12-member European Community (EC), by a statement of 25 February, transmitted the following day by the Netherlands,(32) called on Iran and Iraq to respect the sovereignty of neighbouring States and not to interfere with third-party commercial navigation in international waters or with civil aviation in the area. Affirming their support of the Secretary-General's renewed appeal for a cessation of hostilities, they urged both parties to co-operate with him and the Council to achieve a settlement.

Iran, by one of two letters dated 28 February,(33) drew attention to repeated Iraqi violations of its airspace, especially over Bakhtaran and Marivan, and to Iraq's threats to bombard deep inside Iran using weapons acquired from the USSR, an apparent indication of its intention to renew its war of the cities. The second letter said Iraqi warplanes carried out its threats by bombing the city of Baneh that same day, killing 18 civilians and wounding 30; Iran warned of a decisive response if such inhumane acts continued.(34) Iran further reported on 2 March(35) that an aerial bombardment that day in the vicinity of Sardasht killed three civilians and wounded seven; meanwhile, the toll of wounded at Baneh had reached 52. On 3 March,(36) Iran reported that a similar attack near Baneh on 27 February had wounded three persons.

Iraq, on 3 March,(37) charged Iran with the continued use of border towns as bases from which to attack Iraq, thus making those towns targets of Iraqi bombing raids.

Iran, on 4 March,(38) alleged that Iraq bombarded the civilian quarters of the city of Shadegan that day, killing 12 civilians and wounding 72; it said the incident was another indication of Iraq's intention to escalate its war of the cities and warned of retaliation in kind. Iraq contended, also on 4 March,(39) that the Shadegan bombing target was a military camp housing Iranian troops, military supplies and fuel storage tanks; Iran's baseless accusations were intended to distract international attention from its invasion of Iraqi territory and its continual shelling of populated areas with long-range artillery.

Iraq, on 6 March,(40) reproduced excerpts of several military communiques broadcast over Radio Teheran between 25 February and 1 March, detailing the successes of Iran's Wa-al-Fajr IX operation on the northern front, indicating the capture of strategic heights in the mountainous region of Sulaymaniyah. Iran replied on 20 March(41) by quoting from 1980 Iraqi communiques, detailing the advance of Iraqi forces into western and south-western Iran shortly after the outbreak of hostilities that year.(42)

On 7 March,(43) Iraq warned of Iranian preparations to attack its cities, and said it was incumbent on the United Nations to be aware of the facts and to act with determination to curb Iran. On 11 March,(44) Iran referred to the bombardment of Shadegan(38) and requested that a United Nations team investigate the matter; it said that, as long as Iraq observed international humanitarian laws and refrained from attacking Iran's civilian population, it should not fear retaliation in kind.

Iran reported on 13 March(45) that Iraq had again bombarded Rabat the previous day, killing three civilians and wounding 15.

Iraq recalled on 17 March(46) its repeated warnings of the consequence of going along with Iran's exploitation of the step-by-step method of resolving the conflict to gain time to prepare for repeated large-scale invasions of Iraq. It called on the Security Council to place Iran decisively before its commitments under the Charter: either Iran accepted those commitments, or the Council, in the discharge of its responsibilities, should take appropriate measures.

The Council of the League of Arab States, by a resolution adopted at its eighty-fifth session (Tunis, Tunisia, 24-26 March), transmitted by Iraq on 27 March,(47) condemned the Iranian armed aggression against Iraq and the Iranian threat to the Arabian Gulf region, reaffirmed full solidarity with Iraq in the defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, and resolved to remain in session to monitor developments.

Iran reported on 7 April(48) that Iraq bombarded the city of Paveh with cluster bombs twice on 4 April, killing eight civilians, injuring 10, and causing extensive property damage; Iran requested a United Nations on-site inspection and report. In reply, Iraq on 9 April(49) asserted that its planes had hit the following targets: the Iman Hasan oil-pumping station and an oil tanker; a naval target off the Iranian coast; tents, caravans and several command posts in the Panjween sector; artillery deployed in the south of the country; eight vehicle stations and four large hangars in a sector opposite Panjween; and supply and communication lines.

On 16 April,(50) Iran reported that a mass grave, containing the bodies of more than 40 Iranian civilians, had been discovered on 10 April at Hovayzeh in Khuzestan province, which was undergoing reconstruction. The civilians were reportedly captured, beaten and then executed when Iraq destroyed the city. Iran asked the United Nations and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to take measures to prevent the recurrence of such crimes. Iraq denied the allegation on 30 April,(51) saying no evidence existed to support it.

Iraq, on 28 April,(52) cited an Agency France Presse report of a Radio Teheran broadcast on 17 April stating that the President of the so-called Supreme Council of the Islamic Revolution in Iraq set up headquarters in the Iraqi port of Fao the previous day and that a number of Iraqi military and other volunteers had registered with various Supreme Council offices for service in the Iranian-occupied territories of Iraq; the report, also broadcast in Farsi, provided irrefutable proof of Iran's expansionist aims, the reason for its obstinate continuation of the war.

Iran, on 30 April,(53) reported rocket bombardments of the city of Bakhtaran and the nearby village of Rahimabad, killing 34 people; it requested the Secretary-General to investigate those bombardments of civilian centres.

Iraq, on 6 May,(54) transmitted an article published in the 4 May issue of The Observer (London), according to which Israeli and European arms dealers were rushing war supplies to Iran, whose armies had been left dangerously ill-equipped by the collapse of a $2.5 billion arms deal. Iran had criticized the United States the previous week for sabotaging the deal. However, 2,500 United States-manufactured heavy anti-tank guided missiles, of 10,000 purchased from European stocks, had already reached Teheran, and deliveries of 20 long-range armed military transport planes, purchased from a major European aircraft manufacturing group, were scheduled to begin in June.

On 7 May,(55) Iraq claimed that it had successfully bombed Teheran's main oil refinery that day; it added that Iran, in keeping with its diversionary practices, initially claimed that Iraq had bombed the centre of Teheran, but later acknowledged that the refinery had also been bombed and then claimed that Iraq had simultaneously bombed civilian population centres at Marivan. Iran, on 9 May,(56) confirmed the bombing of Marivan, as well as of Bakhtaran, describing the bombings as indiscriminate; it said that the United Nations team stationed in Teheran had inspected the cities and would report on its findings.

Iran, on 14 May,(57) transmitted a report by the Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) from Bakhtaran on the expulsion from Iraq on 12 May of some 200 Muslim Iraqis who were abandoned in the mountainous areas of Iraq's Sulaymaniyah province and had to trek 12 kilometres to the Iranian border.

In another 14 May letter,(58) Iran claimed that four Iraqi jet fighters attacked a railway station in the town of Haft Tappeh that day, hitting a civilian passenger train; 72 persons were reported killed and 285 wounded. Iraq, on 20 May,(59) labelled the claim false, asserting that its target was not a train full of civilians but the Haft Tappeh station where troops and war materiel were being transported to the Dahlaran area to supply six Iranian divisions being concentrated for an attack on Iraqi Forces.

Iraq, by a communique of 17 May,(60) announced that in view of Iran's occupation of the Al Faw triangle, it had occupied the Iranian town of Mehran, from which it would withdraw on either of two conditions: Iran's acceptance of the unconditional withdrawal of both parties to internationally recognized frontiers, or its withdrawal from the triangle; otherwise, Iraq would hold Mehran until a comprehensive peace was achieved. Iran, responding on 7 July,(61) announced that it had retaken Mehran.

Iran, by letters of 22(62) and 30 May,(63) transmitted a 20 May IRNA report from Orumiyeh, West Azarbayjan, and another of 27 May from Sanandaj, telling of the arrival in Iran of seven Muslim Iraqis and four other Iraqi citizens seeking asylum.

Iraq, on 27 May,(64) alleged that an Iranian aircraft raided residential areas in Sulaymaniyah on 25 March, killing 12 civilians; in addition, Iranian forces, using long-range artillery, shelled the suburbs of Khanaqin and around Khormal and Biara.

Iran on 16(65) and 24 June,(66) said Iraq's allegations that it had subjected the Abu al-Khasib region to continual shelling on 6 June and had attacked civilian areas in Basrah on 21 June were baseless. Given that falsity, Iran doubted that Iraq could request United Nations teams for an evaluation.

Iran, on 25 June,(67) said that Iraq's Air Force Commander, in a 23 June interview by the daily Al-Qadessia, had warned not only of impending attacks on Iranian military targets and economic and technical installations but also of indiscriminate Iraqi attacks on sea and air targets; he had therefore advised foreign firms and international airlines operating there to halt services. Iran asked the United Nations and the International Civil Aviation Organization to prevent those threats from becoming a reality.

Iraq's Foreign Minister, by a letter of 29 June,(68) reported that, on the morning of 27 June, Iran, on the pretext of targeting economic installations, fired ground-to-ground missiles at the residential areas of Kirkuk, resulting in heavy loss of life and property damage. Iran, on 8 July,(69) denied the attack as alleged, but acknowledged a missile attack on Kirkuk's oil installations; at the same time, it accused Iraq of attacking the village of Seydiyeh near Ahwaz and the city of Rabat on 29 June, killing five civilians, wounding 28, and levelling eight residential units.

Iran thanked the Secretary-General on 8 July for the positive and humanitarian attitude shown by a statement he had issued on 3 July and declared its readiness to honour the moratorium of 12 June 1984.(71) (Iran was referring to a press conference given by the Secretary-General on 30 June at Geneva, the transcript of which was published on 3 July, in which he touched on Iran's approach to his eight-point proposal as one of his priorities, starting with non-use of chemical weapons, non-attacks on civilian targets, and so forth.)

Iran stated on 14(72) and 23 July that six Iraqi Muslims had crossed into Iran seeking asylum-two from the Orumiyeh border region, on 5 and 6 July, and four from the Sanandaj border, on 16 July-as reported by IRNA.

On 15 July, Iran alleged an Iraqi air raid on the village of Nassiran in the area of Housian on 9 July and on other villages in Ilam province on 10 July; and on 25 July,(75) it requested the Secretary-General's immediate intervention to prevent further Iraqi attacks on Iranian cities, underscoring that, since 10 July, Piranshahr, Bostan, Abadan and Marivan had been raided and that an attack on the village of Sharifabad south-east of Teheran, on the morning of 25 July, alone had left more than 60 civilians dead or injured.

Iraq claimed, by a letter of 28 July,(76) that Iran had just bombarded the city of Basrah with 10 long-range artillery shells and had also bombed the town of Amarah; one civilian was killed and 34 were injured. The letter enclosed a list of 21 artillery attacks on Iraqi civilian centres during July. In addition, Iraq alleged on 31 July that on the two preceding days Iran shelled Basrah and bombed Sulaymaniyah while bombing caravans in Arbil governorate and the Ramqi housing complex at Halabjah. The casualties included three civilians killed and 23 injured.

Iraq reported on 2 August(78) that Iran's so-called War Information Committee, in a 1 August statement broadcast over Radio Teheran, urged Iraqis to evacuate residential areas to avoid impending air raids and rocket and artillery attacks; the Speaker of the Iranian Parliament issued the warning a day earlier to the inhabitants of Amarah, Baghdad, Basrah, Kirkuk and Nasiriyah-the cities to be attacked-and the President confirmed the planned strike on Baghdad in a sermon on 1 August.

Also on 2 August,(79) Iraq transmitted an open letter from its President to the rulers of Iran, emphasizing Iraq's logistical superiority that would ultimately tilt the war in its favour, and its determination to defend its territory. There was no other path, the letter stressed, than the path to peace, which could be achieved only by withdrawal to internationally recognized frontiers, a complete exchange of prisoners and an agreement of non-aggression and non-intervention.

During August, Iraq gave accounts of a series of bombardments of its populated areas by Iran, some based on communiques from the General Command of its Armed Forces. It reported on 4 August(80) the shelling of Basrah on the two preceding days and on 7 August(81) the shelling of the town of Sirwan the previous day; 77 civilians were killed and 171 wounded.

Iraq further reported on 8,(82) 9,(83) 12,(84) 13(85) and 14 August (86) the artillery bombardment of Basrah on each of those dates, as well as of the residential areas of Diyala and Maysan on 8 August, a missile attack on Baghdad on 12 August, violations of Iraqi airspace by enemy aircraft attempting to attack the residential areas of Aqrah, the Bahlakah housing complex in Ain Kawah and Sulaymaniyah on 9, 11 and 13 August, respectively; the attacks killed 31 civilians and wounded 134. Iraq, by a letter of 14 August,⁽⁸⁷⁾ said the 12 August missile attack on Baghdad had been aimed at the city's residential area on the pretext of attacking its Doura oil refinery. Also on 14 August,⁽⁸⁸⁾ Iraq claimed that it shot down two Iranian F-5 aircraft which were attempting to attack residential areas in Sulaymaniyah.

In the mean time, the 12 EC members, by a joint statement of 6 August, transmitted by the United Kingdom,⁽⁸⁹⁾ voiced concern over the increases in attacks by both parties and over threats to escalate them further; urged both to honour the undertakings given to the Secretary-General in June 1984⁽⁷¹⁾ to cease deliberate attacks on civilian targets; appealed anew for respect of Council resolution 582(1986); and urged them to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the search for a settlement.

Iran, on 12 August,⁽⁹⁰⁾ called the Iraqi allegations of the shelling of Sirwan⁽⁸¹⁾ totally groundless, pointing out that Sirwan, a Kurdish-speaking district, constituted the strongest opposition to Saddam Hussein's regime; Iraq itself had in all likelihood bombed the area to silence that opposition and then accused Iran of it.

Iraq, on 15 August,⁽⁹¹⁾ said it welcomed, as it had always done, the Secretary-General's efforts aimed at ending the war; however, since Iran bore full responsibility for the strikes against residential areas, United Nations efforts should be aimed at compelling it to embark on a course of peace; Iraq was obliged to strike back at Iran as long as it occupied parts of Iraqi territory.

On 18 August,⁽⁹²⁾ Iran welcomed an appeal by the Secretary-General on 14 August (made through a spokesman, in New York) to refrain from attacks on civilian areas; it had accordingly refrained from retaliatory attacks against economic and industrial targets in Iraq since the Muslim celebration of Eid-al-Adha (one of two main Muslim religious festivals of the year). Iran would entirely halt its attacks in return for a halt of Iraq's attacks on Iranian civilians.

Iraq declared on 19 August⁽⁹³⁾ that, contrary to those claims of restraint, Iran had continued to subject Basrah to long-range shelling every day, from 15 to 18 August, as well as the residential areas of Abu al-Khasib and Aziz, the township of Shib, and Qal'at Salih-all coinciding with the Eid-al-Adha celebrations. The shellings reportedly killed two civilians and injured 24 others. Iraq reported further incidents of long-range shelling of civilian targets on 19, 20 and 21,⁽⁹⁴⁾ 26,⁽⁹⁵⁾ 28 and 29 August⁽⁶⁾, in the following areas: Basrah, Abu al-Khasib, and the villages of Tawilah and Khurmal; six people were reported killed and 46 wounded.

The President of the Security Council, by a letter of 29 August to the Secretary-General,⁽⁹⁷⁾ voiced the Council's concern at the dangerous situation that would be created by a further escalation and expansion of the conflict, especially the threat to neighbouring States and widening attacks on merchant shipping and on civilian targets in Iran and Iraq; the Council's members reiterated their view that resolution 582(1986) remained the most relevant basis for a settlement, as well as their endorsement of the Secretary-General's continuing efforts to end the conflict.

Iraq, by a letter of 31 August,⁽⁹⁸⁾ transmitted a number of statements on war operations by Iran's high-level officials, among them a 29 August sermon by the Speaker of Parliament, declaring that Iran was mobilizing its forces and resources in preparation for a new and decisive offensive against Iraq.

Iraq replied to the Iranian speaker's statement by a letter of 1 September,⁽⁸⁸⁾ advancing several proposals to end the conflict: (1) an agreement of non-aggression, to be concluded under United Nations auspices and to be guaranteed by the permanent Council members, or by 30 States to be chosen by Iran and by another 30 to be chosen by Iraq, or by the Organization of the Islamic Conference; or, (2) an agreement of good-neighbourliness and non-aggression among the Persian Gulf States, including Iran and Iraq, with a provision that, in the event of an attack by one State against another, the rest of the parties to the agreement would commit themselves to use all means available, including armed force, to stop the aggression.

Iraq, on 1 September,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ reported that Iran had resumed bombarding civilian targets, shelling Basrah with heavy long-range artillery from 29 to 31 August, injuring six civilians. Iran, on 4 September,⁽¹⁰¹⁾ denied the allegation and that of 29 August,⁽⁹⁶⁾ saying they were to justify Iraq's resumption of indiscriminate bombardment of Iran's civilian areas.

Iraq wrote on 2 September⁽¹⁰²⁾ that Iran had carried out its threats⁽⁹⁸⁾ on 1 September, launching a major offensive on Iraq's Fifth Army Corps at Haj Umran in northern Iraq and engaging the Sixth Army Corps at ports in southern Iraq. Three Iraqi military communiques described the offensive and Iraq's counter-attacks to repulse it, estimating enemy losses at 3,000 dead and 6,000 injured.

Excerpts of a 2 September speech by Iran's Speaker of Parliament, transmitted by Iraq on 4

September(103) described the new Iranian offensive as a prelude to absolute victory and accused the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September 1986) of creating a political climate favourable to Iraq. In its political declaration, the Conference again appealed to both States to cease hostilities forthwith.(104)

Iraq reported on 5(105) and 8 September(106) that Basrah sustained intense shelling, from 3 to 8 September, as did the residential areas of Qasbat Sayed on 3 September and the Zemqui housing complex in Halbaja district on 3 and 4 September. The shellings killed 19 civilians and wounded 54. Iraq warned of a strong response in due time.

Iraq, by a 5 September letter,(107) stated that Iraq's armed forces had repulsed the 1 September Iranian offensive; it asked the Security Council to settle the conflict through peaceful negotiations. By another letter, dated 9 September,(108) Iraq drew attention to the heavy loss of life and material damage caused by the artillery bombardment of Basrah on 8 September, adding that the next day ICRC, during its tour of the affected areas, witnessed a further bombardment of the residential districts; Iraq said it could not conceal the feeling that the United Nations had ceased to play its proper role with the adoption by certain circles of a policy of appeasement in respect to Iran.

On 10 September,(109) Iraq summarized the destruction resulting from Iran's repeated shelling and aerial bombardment of residential areas during the period 7 August to 9 September. The following cities or villages were bombarded: Baghdad, Basrah, Diyala, Halbaya, Abu al-Khasib, Al-Izhar, Al-Shahabi, Al-Bayara, Al-Atwila, Khormal and Sayyid Sadiq; the casualties included 143 civilians killed and 437 wounded, while 220 dwellings were destroyed, and 13 schools, 19 commercial premises, a mosque, four hospitals and 107 private cars were damaged.

Iran, on 10 September,(110) reported that, on the preceding day, the civilian quarters of Rabat and the village of Kahriz were raided by Iraqi warplanes, causing death to 17 civilians and injury to 18. Iran said it had invited United Nations experts in Teheran to visit the area, adding that a strong condemnation by the international community of Iraq's recent attacks against civilian areas and its use of chemical weapons was long overdue. On 15 September,(111) Iran said it was still awaiting a reply to its request for an investigation of the attack on Rabat.

A ground-to-ground missile attack on one of the most densely populated areas of Baghdad on the early morning of 12 September was the subject of two letters of the same date from Iraq. The first letter(112) reported the incident and casualties: 21 civilians killed and 81 others wounded. The second letter(113) quoted a spokesman for the General Command of the Armed Forces of Iraq as declaring that, while Iraq's forces had undertaken not to bombard residential areas in Iran, a plan of retaliation had been drawn up and a date for its implementation had been set.

Iraq, on 16 September,(114) reported Iran's bombardment of Basrah for three days, from 13 September, and of the environs of Khanaqin and Sayyid Sadiq; three persons were wounded.

Iran, on 18 September,(115) listed 15 incidents of the bombardment of its civilian areas by Iraq, between 1 and 11 September, indicating the date, time, place and number of casualties of each for a total of 41 killed and more than 323 wounded.

Reviewing the public statements made daily by the highest officials of Iran threatening fresh military aggression against Iraq, the monitoring Committee of the Council of the League of Arab States, on 30 September,(116) requested the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting to consider the situation and to ensure implementation of resolution 582(1986).

Iran, by a letter of 2 October,(117) criticized certain Governments for attempting to manipulate the Council by claiming new developments in the war which it said had been imposed on Iran; it reiterated that it was prepared to co-operate with the Secretary-General to explore means to prevent a widening of the conflict and to guarantee regional security.

On 6 October,(118) Iran transmitted a 29 May confidential letter to the Secretary-General stating that the Iraqi war against Iran had reached a complex stage due to outside interference, which international forums were not prepared to confront. As it feared that a solution to the war was not soon to be attained, the immediate goal was to prevent it from widening. Accordingly, Iran was committed to developing relations with countries of the region despite the aid given by some to Iraq. Iraq, however, by its provocations and manoeuvrings, had reinforced the anxiety that confining the war might prove difficult. Iran said that an impartial representative on the scene would be useful in adjusting the situation.

By a 2 October communique, transmitted by Morocco on 21 October,(119) the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference called for continued efforts to bring about an honourable and just peace to the Iran-Iraq conflict, based on Islamic principles and international law.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

Responding to the 30 September request of the Committee of the Council of the League of Arab States,(116) the Security Council held five meetings between 3 and 8 October to consider the Iran-Iraq situation.

The Council invited the following, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Chad, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nicaragua, Oman, Peru, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Tunisia, Uruguay, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia. At Oman's request, as Chairman of the Arab Group at the United Nations,(120) the Council also invited the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States to participate, under rule 39^c of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Also at Oman's request,(121) the Council decided on 3 October, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom), to invite a PLO representative to participate. The invitation, though not made pursuant to rule 37^d or rule 39 of the rules of procedure, conferred on that representative the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

The United States, which had requested the vote, restated its opposition to the granting of hearings to persons speaking on behalf of non-governmental entities, except on the basis of rule 39 (see p. 219).

On 8 October, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 588(1986).

The Security Council,

Having considered the question entitled "The situation between Iran and Iraq",

Noting that the Council has been seized with this question for over six years and that decisions have been taken thereon,

Deeply alarmed about the prolongation and intensification of the conflict resulting in heavy losses of human lives and considerable material damage and endangering international peace and security,

Noting the obligation of Member States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or from acting in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

Recalling the provision's of the Charter of the United Nations and in particular the obligation of all Member States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

Recalling further that, under the Charter, Member States have conferred on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and to this end have agreed to accept the role of the Security Council in the settlement of disputes,

Commending the efforts of the Secretary-General in the search for a peaceful settlement of the conflict,

1. Calls upon the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq to implement fully and without delay resolution 582(1986) adopted unanimously on 24 February 1986;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts with the parties to give effect to the above-mentioned resolution and to report to the Council no later than 30 November 1986;

3. Decides to meet again to consider the report of the Secretary-General and the conditions for the establishment of a durable peace between the two countries in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of justice and international law.

Security Council resolution 588(1986)

8 October 1986 Meeting 2713 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18383).
Meeting numbers. SC 2709-2713.

The States participating in the debate viewed with increasing concern the widening of the Iran-Iraq armed conflict and its implications for the Persian Gulf region and the world at large. They voiced frustration that all efforts and initiatives to settle the conflict, already in its seventh year, had met with an impasse. They deplored the losses in lives and resources, and stressed that the only way to a solution was through negotiations. They once again appealed to the two parties, in particular to Iran, to stop the fighting and pressed the Council to exert new efforts to bring about a positive response or urgently to explore other avenues for constructive action.

The United Nations Secretary-General said that the current Council meetings took on a special significance because of the sharp escalation in attacks on commercial vessels from third countries and the widening area in which they occurred (see p. 234), with potential repercussions that could draw in Powers from beyond the region. The vital question was what new efforts could be deployed to secure a negotiated settlement. Six Council resolutions remained without satisfactory implementation, for while Iraq had been willing to comply with them, Iran had not, on the grounds that the Council had not dealt with its fundamental grievances. The Secretary-General said he had repeatedly urged Iran to present its case before the Council. His own efforts, including his 1985 eight-point plan,(23) had failed to achieve substantive progress towards ending the war. None the less, repeated requests from many quarters that he take new initiatives made it necessary for the Council to establish a basis on which both sides would find it possible to co-operate with the United Nations and promote the prospects for a settlement.

Iraq called attention to what it called Iran's fierce campaign for continuing the war and to its publicly announced preparations for yet another invasion. Iraq had accepted the Council's mandate under the Charter to solve the dispute by peaceful means; but Iran had rejected it and used the United Nations rostrum for prevarication and deceit to enable it to continue the war in pursuance of its expansionist aims. Iraq urged the Council to assume the responsibility of implementing the resolutions it had adopted for peace.

^dSee footnote b on p. 220.

The Secretary-General of the League of Arab States declared that Iran's determination to pursue the war posed a serious challenge to the international community and the United Nations. It was time for the Council to go beyond the stage of speeches and implement the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter on the peaceful settlement of disputes, and to examine the conflict and its impact on international peace as a whole.

A similar call was made by Kuwait, which said that more than any other State it felt an overwhelming sense of the menace of the war's exacerbation and the consequences for security in the region; the Committee of Seven had again brought the conflict before the Council because they were anxious for peace and good-neighbourliness with Iran.

A number of States-among them, China, Egypt, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and Zambia-along with the League's Secretary-General, appealed to Iran to reconsider its position and respond favourably to the international community's appeals. Oman added that continuing the war served only the interests of the enemies of Iran and of the peoples who cherished peace, security and justice. Tunisia said Iran's positive response would finally spare its own people and Iraq's, as well as the Persian Gulf region, the horrors of war and the unpredictable consequences of escalation. Thailand enjoyed diplomatic relations with both parties and wished to see them take a negotiated route towards resolving their differences.

Egypt said it had also warned against the spreading of the military confrontation to the entire region and warned that it would not tolerate such a situation; it asked for prudence and moderation to bring about a climate conducive to a peaceful solution.

Senegal, as a member of the Non-Aligned Movement and of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its peace committee, said that it could not remain indifferent to the dangerous conflict and that it intended to continue its efforts to restore harmony between the two fraternal countries.

Peru pledged its support to any initiative that might bring peace closer. Bangladesh, which said it would have sinned by silence if it did not add its voice to those urging peace, pointed to the world's many poor and hungry and appealed to Iran and Iraq to use their resources to wage, not war, but peace and development.

Speaking for the Arab Group, Oman emphasized that although there had been no noteworthy progress towards bringing the parties to the negotiating table, the United Nations remained the best hope for finding a solution.

Yugoslavia commented that to be discouraged because all attempts at mediation had brought no result would be perilous; it was incumbent on the Council to spare no effort to end the war. Mauritania, Senegal and Zambia were among those which shared that view, as did Argentina, which stressed that the parties' arguments, including those related to the conflict's origins and to respecting the rules of war, were not to be underestimated but that they could not justify a continuation of the war. Saudi Arabia expressed similar views, observing that destruction and ruin did not redress wrongs. Chad, noting that Iraq's readiness to comply with resolution 582(1986) had been met with Iran's response that it would not extend its hand again to the people of Iraq until they were freed from Saddam Hussein's grip, said such disregard of the international community's decisions had the potential for an escalation with unforeseeable consequences.

Jordan, which could not understand Iran's persistence in continuing the war, felt that the international community should not continue to be held hostage to such intransigence, adding that, should it continue to defy calls for a settlement, the community would have no choice but to act collectively through the Council and individually as States to compel Iran to respond positively. Yemen said Iran's rejection of a cease-fire posed a challenge to the Council and that efforts to end the war should be redoubled. Morocco called military escalation by a Member State inadmissible and intolerable; it was time to define responsibility for the war's prolongation and to use every measure towards a peaceful solution.

Rwanda recognized that the Charter had conferred a difficult duty on the Council: to maintain peace where it was enjoyed, consolidate it where it was fragile and restore it where it was breached. Despite its powers under the Charter, the Council's task was made difficult without the collaboration of the States involved and further complicated by the introduction of considerations other than peace and security.

Cuba said it would never falter as long as there was a chance to restore peace between Iran and Iraq; the interests of their peoples and those of the region should take precedence over any consideration. Similarly, Mexico asserted that the geographical and cultural affinities linking the two countries and their peoples' desire to live in peace and achieve prosperous development should override any peripheral considerations, including the origins and causes of the conflict.

Bulgaria appealed for an immediate end to what it called a senseless conflict, with full respect for the independence, sovereignty and legitimate interests of the States involved. The German Democratic Republic viewed the war as not only doing great harm to Iran and Iraq but also greatly endangering stability in the Gulf region because reactionary imperialist forces were using the conflict as a pretext for increasing their interference and military presence there.

Guyana and Denmark said that Iran and Iraq had before them the Secretary-General's constructive eight-point plan, which provided a promising beginning, and both must now realize their interest in co-operating towards a settlement. Denmark pointed out that it and its EC partners, in view of the importance of oil supplies from the region, had called on both parties to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring States and not to interfere with third countries' commercial navigation in international waters.

The USSR restated its belief that the conflict should be resolved at the negotiating table, not on the battlefield. It had supported all of the Council's decisions on the matter, and most recently resolution 582(1986), which created a positive basis for a political solution, and to that end it had used and would continue to use its influence and authority.

Australia also regarded that resolution as the best available basis for a settlement: it was objective and impartial, offering both parties a fair and honourable starting-point for negotiating a settlement. Sharing that view were Denmark, Madagascar and Venezuela. Uruguay asked both parties to exert every effort to implement that resolution.

Nicaragua said non-alignment was a reality that required the Non-Aligned Movement not to tolerate bloodshed among fraternal peoples, such as Iran and Iraq; it exhorted the entire international community to persevere in its efforts to find the appropriate mechanisms for a settlement.

The United Arab Emirates, noting that the Council had convened in a fresh attempt to resolve the dilemma facing the international community, said it would continue its efforts towards that goal until peace was restored.

France expressed alarm over the tragic chain of violence and said that it had constantly invited the two belligerents to make peace and had supported all related efforts, including those of the Secretary-General.

The United Kingdom, describing the conflict as a great human tragedy, stressed its opposition to chemical-weapons use, the growing number of attacks by both sides on civilian targets, and recurrent attacks on third-country vessels. It urged Iran to reflect urgently on the opportunity resolution 582(1986) offered for peace; although it was right to be concerned about how the conflict was begun, it was even more important to be concerned about ending it.

The United States repeated that it would view an expansion of the war to neutral third parties as a major threat to its interests. It hoped that the moderate and balanced language of resolution 588(1986), would be respected by Iran and Iraq and that even though Iran was not present in the Council it would seriously consider the resolution, not as an arbitrary criticism, but as an appeal for a renewed effort to end the war.

Communications (6 October-22 December). Iraq, on 6,(122) 7(123) and 8 October,(124) reported the long-range shelling of Basrah from 5 to 8 October, the aerial bombardment of the town of Kut, in Wasit, and the shelling of Qasbat-Khawrmal, on 5 and 6 October, respectively. Iraq further reported that, on 13 October,(125) Iran had threatened a 48-hour bombardment of Basrah, starting that day, with a warning that civilians immediately evacuate the city; on 14 October,(126) Basrah was bombarded as threatened; and, on 16 October,(127) Basrah, as well as the outskirts of Khurm, had been bombarded the day before. In all, 29 civilians were killed and 84 wounded.

Iran wrote on 15(128) and 16 October(129) that Iraq bombarded the civilian centres of Haft Tappeh and an inhabited area of northern Dezful in Khuzestan on 14 and 15 October, respectively; the bombings killed 15 civilians and wounded more than 60.

Iraq, on 16 October,(130) claimed that on 15 October a squadron of its planes attacked the Iranian military airbase of Shiraz and destroyed 23 C-130 military aircraft; it also called attention to a Radio Teheran broadcast, as reported by Reuters, that Iran was preparing an assault on economic and military areas in Baghdad and elsewhere in Iraq in retaliation for the Iraqi attack on an Iranian passenger plane (see p. 235). Iraq warned of dire consequences should Iran carry out its threat.

Iraq, on 17 October,(131) reported that a ground-to-ground missile had struck a residential district of Baghdad on the previous night, killing six civilians and wounding 64; Iraq called blatantly false Teheran Radio's claim that the missile had destroyed a cable-and-wireless communications building. On 20 October(132) Iraq stated that, two days earlier, Iran shelled the towns of Halabjah and Bayarah, and the residential community of Kanaro in Khurm, in northern Iraq, killing two civilians and wounding 16 others.

On 21 October,(133) Iran reported that, on the previous day, Iraq bombarded an empty cargo train near Andimeshk, north of Ahwaz, killing five civilians and critically wounding 15. Iran warned that in view of the continuous Iraqi attacks on its civilian centres and in the absence of a mechanism to uphold international law, it might be forced to revise its humanitarian policy-of targeting only strategic economic and industrial centres-and retaliate in kind.

Iraq reported on 30 October⁽¹³⁴⁾ that Basrah and the towns of Halabjah and Badrah were heavily shelled that day, killing 14 civilians and wounding 66. It further wrote on 31 October⁽¹³⁵⁾ that Iranian aircraft that morning had bombed the residential quarters of Wasit and that long-range artillery had shelled Basrah and Halabjah. One civilian had been killed and 52 wounded.

Iran stated in a 30 October letter that, on 26 and 27 October, 66 Iraqis-mainly from the Kurdish area of Sulaymaniyah and including several Iraqi army deserters-crossed the Orumiyeh border in West Azarbayjan into Iran, seeking asylum.⁽¹³⁶⁾ In another letter of the same date, Iran said that, on 29 and 30 October, Iraq raided the city of Bakhtaran, strafing civilians, as well as a township north of Shooshtar in Khuzestan on 30 October; 36 civilians were killed and more than 68 wounded.⁽¹³⁷⁾

Iraq wrote on 3 November⁽¹³⁸⁾ that Basrah and Sayyid Sadiq were subjected to artillery shelling on 1 November, as was Halabjah that day and the next. Three civilians were killed and 33 wounded.

Also on 3 November,⁽¹³⁹⁾ Iran claimed that a recent television interview with several captured Iraqi pilots had revealed that four Iraqi Mirages which had raided Iran's Sirri Island in August had refuelled at the Kuwait international airport on their return flight; that Iraqi helicopters routinely used Kuwaiti airspace to ferry supplies to Iraqi troops; that military hardware was unloaded at Kuwaiti ports and trucked to Iraq; that Iraqi planes refuelled in Kuwait's Bubiyan Islands; and that, under an Iraq-Kuwait agreement, Iraqi planes flew over Kuwait's airspace on bombing missions. Kuwait replied on 5 November⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ that to use the statements of prisoners of war to support allegations was preposterous and could not be regarded as evidence.

Iraq reported further strikes on purely civilian centres in two letters-one, of 15 November,⁽¹⁴¹⁾ which spoke of an air raid on the hospital of Maysan governorate, the shelling of Basrah and the districts of Qurna and Mandali that day, and a missile attack on Baghdad the previous day, and another letter, of 17 November,⁽¹⁴²⁾ which gave accounts of air raids that day on Arbil and Sirr Qal'ah district in Diyala, and also of the shelling of Basrah and the townships of Halabjah, Badrah and Mandali. The raids were said to have killed 25 civilians and wounded 176.

Iran wrote on 17 November⁽¹⁴³⁾ that Iraqi war-planes bombed a township in Bakhtaran, killing 26 persons and severely injuring 100; the bomb site of the attack was visited by foreign reporters and was filmed and photographed, refuting Iraq's claim that it only attacked industrial and economic centres.

Iran reported on 19⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ and 20 November⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ that more Iraqi Muslims had fled to Iran: a group of 20, from Baghdad and Kirkuk, crossed over at Orumiyeh in West Azarbayjan on 15 November, and a group of seven soldiers as well as a family of four who entered through the western and north-western borders on 17 November.

Iraq alleged more strikes on its residential and civilian centres by five letters, dated and occurring as follows: 21 November,⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ the shelling of Basrah and Qurna on that day; 24 November, a missile strike on Baghdad two days before;⁽¹⁴⁷⁾ 24 November,⁽¹⁴⁸⁾ the shelling of the suburbs of Khanaqin (23 November), the bombing of residential areas in Nineveh and the shelling of Basrah, Qurna, Mandali, Halabjah, Shirwan and Khurmal (24 November); 25 November,⁽¹⁴⁹⁾ the shelling on the previous evening and that day of Basrah, Qurna, Mandali and Khanaqin and Bayarah; and 26 November,⁽¹⁵⁰⁾ another missile strike on Baghdad the night before. The attacks reportedly killed 72 civilians and wounded 177.

Iran wrote on 25 November⁽¹⁵¹⁾ of Iraqi aerial attacks on the preceding two days of civilian targets in Bakhtaran and Islamabad, and of Bandar-e-Imam and Sarbandar in Khuzestan, killing 157 civilians and wounding more than 80.

On 26 November⁽¹⁵²⁾ Iran wrote of the bombing of Dezful and Andimeshk on the previous day. The civilian toll in that attack, reported by Iran on 4 December,⁽¹⁵³⁾ was 249 killed and 510 wounded. In condemning the attack on 28 November,⁽¹⁵⁴⁾ Iran expressed regret that its retaliatory action against Iraq's strategic and industrial installations had resulted in civilian casualties; because it wished meticulously to observe international law, it declared its readiness to avoid such token retaliatory measures which were aimed only at dissuading Iraq from attacking civilian populations.

The flight of several groups of Iraqis across the border into Iran to seek asylum-74 Muslims on 30 November, 15 families of the Assyrian Christian sect on 2 December, and another 15 Muslims in the previous few days-were reported by Iran on 1⁽¹⁵⁵⁾, 4⁽¹⁵⁶⁾ and 10 December.⁽¹⁵⁷⁾

Meanwhile, on 3 December,⁽¹⁵⁸⁾ Iraq claimed that Iran, persisting in its strikes at residential areas, had shelled Sayyid Sacliq that day, killing seven civilians and wounding 21.

Iran, on 6 December,⁽¹⁵⁹⁾ stated that Iraq launched a heavy aerial attack on Ahwaz earlier that day, killing and wounding hundreds of civilians, destroying more than 50 residential areas, and turning vast sections into rubble; Iran expected the Secretary-General to send a special representative to the site to report on the consequences of the Organization's failure to uphold the authority of international humanitarian law.

On 8 December⁽¹⁶⁰⁾, Iran charged that further attacks had occurred on 5 December—on Haft-Tappeh in Khuzestan, Rabat in West Azarbayjan and Marivan—killing 35 civilians and injuring 31.

Iraq enumerated, also on 8 December,⁽¹⁶¹⁾ attacks on its civilian population between 6 and 8 December: aerial bombardment of the city of Zakho, shelling of Basrah (twice) and of Khormal and Sayyid Sadiq; civilian casualties numbered 26 dead and 77 injured. On 9 December,⁽¹⁶²⁾ Iraq enumerated the Iranian shells that had hit Basrah, the dead and wounded, and property damaged between 18 October and 22 November.

Iran, on 16 December,⁽¹⁶³⁾ charged Iraq with escalating its strikes against civilian populations as it reported the bombing of four residential areas in Dorood, Lorestan province, on the previous day, leaving 22 civilians dead and 48 injured. It reported on 21 December⁽¹⁶⁴⁾ an attack that day on Bakhtaran, carried out during the hours when the streets were most populated. On 22 December,⁽¹⁶⁵⁾ Iran said that attack had killed 103 civilians and injured 800; it asked the Secretary-General to act quickly to halt such attacks.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 588(1986), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a 26 November report⁽¹⁶⁶⁾ on his efforts to give effect to the resolution. He stated that, on its adoption on 8 October, he sent identical cables to Iran and Iraq requesting the position of their Governments, and suggesting, as a possible option, the reactivation of his 1985 eight-point plan. The text of his cables and the responses to it were annexed to the report.

Replying on 13 October, Iraq reaffirmed its position as contained in its letter of 5 March⁽²⁴⁾ (see p. 220): there should be an immediate cease-fire, a cessation of all hostilities, withdrawal of troops to the internationally recognized boundaries and exchange of prisoners of war within a short period. Subsequently, all aspects of the conflict should be submitted to mediation or other means of settlement. Iraq also stated that it did not consider the eight-point plan a balanced and practicable means for achieving a settlement and referred to its position, as explained in the Secretary-General's 1985 report.⁽²³⁾

Iran's position, conveyed on 25 November, was that paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 582(1986) fell short of explicitly identifying Iraq as the aggressor, or of measures to prevent Iraq from further using chemical weapons, attacking civilians and third-party vessels, threatening civil aviation and otherwise violating international law. Paragraph 3 was inoperative because Iraq's objective of toppling Iran's Islamic regime had not changed and, further, Iraq had abrogated the 1975 Algiers Agreement providing for the peaceful settlement of disputes between them; therefore, Iran was determined not to sign any agreement with the current Iraqi regime. It was prepared to extend the co-operation called for by paragraph 4, within the framework of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949 (third Geneva Convention); it had always welcomed the provisions of paragraph 7. Regarding the eight-point plan, Iran considered that it could serve as a suitable basis for future efforts.

The Secretary-General concluded that the positions showed no degree of coincidence that would provide a basis for giving effect to resolution 582(1986).

He also drew the Council's attention to efforts he had taken to end the attacks on merchant shipping, which had continued and even escalated (see p. 234). Besides pointing to the expansion of the area in which the attacks were occurring, namely, near the territorial waters of the littoral States, the Secretary-General observed that another source of risk arose from the recent raids on oil installations of some of those States.

Despite the impasse, he reiterated that the Council must persevere in establishing a basis for Iran and Iraq to co-operate in a peaceful settlement. For his part, he pledged to maintain contacts with both parties to identify any opportunity to promote a cessation of hostilities.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (December)

The Security Council met on 22 December to consider the Secretary-General's report. Following consultations, the President, on behalf of the Council members, made the statement below:⁽¹⁶⁷⁾

Meeting number: SC 2730.

"The members of the Security Council take note of the report of the Secretary-General and express profound concern at the serious situation which continues to exist between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq. They reiterate their call for the implementation of Council resolutions 582(1986) and 588(1986) and for the resolution of the prolonged conflict by peaceful means. They again emphasize the obligation of Member States to settle their disputes, by peaceful means and, in this context, to co-operate with the Security Council. In this regard, the members of the Council urge the Secretary-General to continue with his efforts and call upon the parties to co-operate with him.

"The members of the Council continue to deplore the violation of international humanitarian law and other laws of armed conflict. They express their deepening concern over the widening of the conflict through the escalation of attacks on purely civilian targets, on merchant shipping and oil installations of the littoral States. They call for respect, in accordance with international law, for the territorial integrity of the States of the region and for the right of free navigation and commerce, as well as for the operation of off-shore installations."

Commenting on the statement by a letter of 24 December(168), Iran said it did not reflect a careful consideration of the Secretary-General's report, which noted that the positions of the two parties showed no degree of coincidence; hence, the Council's call for implementation of resolution 582(1986) was unrealistic. That resolution and resolution 588(1986)—adopted on the initiative of Arab States supporting Iraq's aggressive régime—did not espouse impartiality. Moreover, the Council's emphasis on the peaceful settlement of disputes without reference to the principle of non-aggression whose violation by Iraq was at the root of the current conflict reflected a selective treatment of the United Nations Charter. Iran reminded the Council that, according to Article 1 of the Charter, "suppression of acts of aggression" preceded peaceful resolution of conflicts.

On 25 December,(169) Iraq stated that the Council, instead of making a real effort to exert pressure on the transgressor to comply with Charter provisions, had merely issued a general statement that added nothing to the situation. That encouraged Iran to persist in its aggression, in disregard of the commitments binding on it. Iraq asked the Council and the Secretary-General to condemn Iran's aggression and make it bear responsibility for continuing the war, human and material losses and threats to regional and international stability, peace and security.

Further communications. By a 23 December letter,(170) Iran reported the bombing of the city of Bakhtaran and of the city of Islamabad-e-Gharb in Bakhtaran Province on 21 and 22 December, respectively. Also on 23 December,(171) it reported another raid on Bakhtaran when a United Nations team was inspecting the 21 December bombings (see above). Iran placed the toll at 275 civilians dead and more than 990 injured.

Iraq said on 23 December(172) that on the previous day, Iran had again shelled Basrah and the towns of Khanaqin and Halabjah; and on 24 December(173) that on 23 December it had bombed residential quarters in Sulaymaniyah and a primary school in Khanaqin, and on 24 December had shelled Badrah. The attacks reportedly killed 13 civilians and wounded 129.

On 24 December(174), Iraq quoted a sermon said to have been delivered by Iran's President and broadcast by Teheran Radio on 5 December, urging continuation of the war until the Iraqi regime was brought down.

Iraq, on 25 December,(169) reported that on the previous day Iran mounted a large-scale assault in southern Iraq. On the same day,(175) Iraq drew attention to recent official statements by Iran's high-level officials, including a 21 December Teheran Radio broadcast about an "Iraqi opposition conference" intended to determine Iraq's future in accordance with the Iraqi people's aspirations, which demonstrated the expansionist nature of the Iranian regime.

Iraq reported on 29 December(176) that on that day and during the previous two days, Iran had shelled Basrah and Khanaqin, wounding seven persons.

Use of chemical weapons

Communications (January-18 February). The use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict was the subject of numerous 1986 communications addressed to the Secretary-General.

Iran reported on 31 January(177) that on 26 January Iraq shelled the Eyn-e-Khowsh area in south-west Iran with chemical artillery, in violation of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 (prohibiting the use in war of chemical weapons) which both sides had agreed to observe; on account of Iran's preventive measures, there were no casualties. Iran expected that the international community would condemn Iraq's continued violation of international humanitarian law and act to prevent further violations.

by a statement transmitted on 1 February(178) rejected an Iranian military communique of 31 January, also transmitted, stating that on 30 January, Iraq had dropped a chemical bomb in the Khorramshahr zone of operations, poisoning five Iranian soldiers. On 20 February,(179) Iran said it had confirmed the attack and that Iraq's rejection of the facts was a desperate attempt to divert attention from its violations of international law.

Iran, on 4 February,(180) charged Iraq with five incidents of chemical-weapons use in the Chilat area on 31 January, leaving no casualties. On 12 February,(181) however, it reported nerve and mustard gas attacks by air that day against Iranian forces in the southern fronts; 10 people were known dead and 700 to 800 were injured. Iran urged the immediate dispatch of United Nations chemical experts to the area.

Iraq's Minister of Culture and Information, by a 13 February statement,(182) claimed that for some time Iraq had been monitoring Iranian preparations to use chemical weapons against it, and that Iran had actually done so earlier that day and the day before; Iran, having recently suffered heavy losses, was under the delusion that by such a manoeuvre it could extricate itself from its predicament. Also on 13 February,(183) Iraq said that after it had thwarted Iran's 9 February offensive on Basrah and the Shatt al-Arab zone, Iran began a campaign alleging Iraqi chemical assaults against it so as to justify its own use of such weapons against Iraq.

Iran, by a 13 February statement,(184) said that since the Iraqi chemical attacks in January, it had become evident that Iraq was paving the way for using chemical weapons on a large scale; it again requested the immediate dispatch of United Nations chemical experts to the area.

On 14 February,(185) Iran reported that due to the apparent acquiescence of international organizations, Iraq had used chemical bombs against Abadan twice on 13 February, leaving 20 people dead and many more poisoned. Iran requested that United Nations experts stationed in Teheran visit the area. On 17 February, Iran added that it would guarantee the team's safety.(186) The same day,(187) Iran advised that the first group of victims were being flown to London, Frankfurt (Federal Republic of Germany), Stockholm (Sweden) and Brussels (Belgium) and requested the Secretary-General to dispatch physicians either to those cities or to Teheran to where there were many more victims, including Iraqis.

Iran expressed surprise on 18 February(188) that the United Nations had by then not replied to its urgent requests for an investigation and report to the Security Council.

Specialists' report. Immediately on the adoption by the Security Council of resolution 582(1986) on 24 February (see p. 220), the Secretary-General assembled a mission of three specialists in Vienna. They visited Iran from 26 February to 3 March, where they carried out on-site collection and examination of evidence of alleged chemical-weapons use; a fourth specialist helped to compile the mission's report in Switzerland. The report, subsequently supplemented by later addenda, was transmitted to the Security Council by the Secretary-General on 12 March. (189)

The report stated that the combined clinical and analytical data proved beyond doubt that the chemical agent yperite (mustard gas) had been used on many occasions against Iranian forces by means of aerial bombs; no evidence was found that artillery shells containing mustard gas had been used; also on some occasions nerve gas had been employed.

The data supporting the specialists' conclusion were derived from the examination of 82 hospital patients and cursory observation of 720 others, and analysis of soil samples and munitions debris found in three survey areas near Abadan, which the specialists inspected on 28 February, using the latest version of the British-designed Chemical Agent Monitor. The conclusion was bolstered by the testimony of nine Iraqi casualties evacuated from the Al Faw area, among them a pilot who had been shot down. The victims exhibited ocular lesions ranging from mild to severe conjunctivitis with intense palpebral oedema, nausea, vomiting, diarrhoea, intense photophobia, skin lesions including large vesicles filled with amber fluid, cutaneous detachment over wide areas, pigmentation gradually darkening until it became black, respiratory distress and leukopenia.

Referring to the report on 17 March,(186) Iraq said Iran had rejected the Council's unrestricted and unconditional jurisdiction over conflicts that presented a threat to international peace and security, because it had made its acceptance of that jurisdiction conditional and optional. That Iranian position was aimed at providing the practical requirements at the international diplomatic level to keep the international Organization occupied with dealing with some aspects of the war so that Iran could continue it for the sake of territorial expansion at the expense of Iraq and the States of the Arabian Gulf region.

Iran, on 18 March,(190) thanked the Secretary-General for dispatching the mission and for its well-balanced and fair report; given the clear and unambiguous evidence, it expected the international community and the Security Council to condemn Iraq for its use of chemical weapons.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council considered the mission's report on 21 March. As a result of its consultations, the President made the following declaration on behalf of its members:(191)

Meeting numbers: SC 2667.

"The members of the Security Council, seized with the continuing conflict between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, have considered the report of the mission of specialists dispatched by the Secretary-General to investigate allegations of the use of chemical weapons in the conflict between Iran and Iraq.

"Profoundly concerned by the unanimous conclusion of the specialists that chemical weapons on many occasions have been used by Iraqi forces against Iranian forces, most recently in the course of the present Iranian offensive into Iraqi territory, the members of the Council strongly condemn this continued use of chemical weapons in clear violation of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 which prohibits the use in war of chemical weapons.

"They recall the statements by the President of the Council of 30 March 1984(12) and 25 April 1985,(127) and demand again that the provisions of the Geneva Protocol be strictly observed.

"At the same time, the members of the Council condemn the prolongation of the conflict which continues to take a heavy toll of human lives and to cause considerable material damage, as well as to endanger peace and security in the region.

"They express concern over the risk of an extension of the conflict to other States in the region and call upon the two sides to respect the territorial integrity of all States, including those that are not parties to the hostilities.

"The members of the Council reaffirm resolution 582(1986) of the Security Council and note that the Government of Iraq has expressed its willingness to heed the call for the immediate cessation of hostilities.

They stress the urgent need for full compliance by both parties with this resolution, which would open the way for a prompt, comprehensive, just and honourable settlement of the conflict.

"The members of the Council note that both parties have declared themselves ready to co-operate with the Secretary-General in his ongoing efforts to restore peace to the peoples of Iran and Iraq, and express their support for these efforts."

Iraq, by a letter of 23 March(192) stated that the declaration lacked balance-n failed to refer to the Charter by which international relations were determined, did not direct the call to respect the territorial integrity of all States to Iran-the party which threatens them-and ignored the recent Iranian invasion of Iraqi territory and repeated attacks against it. Iraq said the timing of the declaration was an encouragement to Iran to persist in its aggression and warned against concentrating on secondary issues rather than on ending the war. It contended that the declaration's final paragraph was incorrect, since Iran's expression of readiness to co-operate was limited to those areas that would enable it to pursue the war.

Iran, commentin on the declaration by a 27 March statement,(193) stated that had the condemnation of Iraq for its use of chemical weapons been effected three years previously when Iraq began using chemical weapons, their continued use would have been prevented. Iran urged the Council to uphold its obligation to identify and condemn the aggressor that started the war; it also declared that Iraq was currently attempting to expand the war and that the United States also was paving the way for more intervention and an increased military presence in the region.

Communications (March-December). Iran, on 3 March,(194) reported that on 20 February Iraq launched an aerial chemical attack on Abadan, wounding live civilians. Also on 3 March,(195) it reported that while the United Nations mission was investigating the use of chemical weapons against Iran, Iraq had carried out chemical bombardments on Baneh that day and on the Fatemeh Zahra Hospital on Abadan Island on 27 February.

Iran wrote, on 26 March,(196) that Iraq, in mockery of the Council's 21 March declaration,(191) launched another chemical attack against Abadan on 23 and 24 March, hospitalizing some 500 people. Subsequently, on 22(197) and 24 April,(198) Iran reported that Iraq had deployed mustard gas by artillery and aerial bombardment in the Faw/Umm-al-Qasr theatre of operations between 20 and 22 April; 30 persons were known to have been injured. Iran requested the dispatch of experts to investigate the incidents in a letter of 27 May,(199) at the same time reporting an Iraqi chemical attack three days earlier on Gougan and Amirabad, in the vicinity of Mehran, which hospitalized 50 persons.

Iran, on 5 September,(200) charged Iraq with a chemical attack the day before on Iranian forces around Haj Omran, killing one person and injuring seven. On 10 September,(201) Iran reported another attack on 8 September in the operation areas of Sheih Salah, Javanrood and Bamoo Heights.

On 15 December,(202) Iran cited a Washington Post report of that date stating that the United States had provided intelligence assistance to Iraq since 1984 which had reportedly been used to calibrate its mustard gas attacks on Iranian ground troops-a complicity, Iran suggested, that might explain United States lobbying in the Security Council against any reference to Iraqi violations of international humanitarian law.

On 26 December,(203) Iran reported an Iraqi chemical attack the day before against its troops on the eastern bank of the Shatt al-Arab.

Attacks on civil aircraft and commercial navigation

Communications (February-16 October). Iran charged, on 20 February,(204) that at 1225 hours local time on that day Iraq shot down an Iranian F-27 passenger airliner en route to Ahwaz from Teheran; all 46 persons on board were feared dead. Iran called on the United Nations to condemn the act and warned that, in accordance with the law, it would even all scores with Iraq.

In a letter of 23 February,(205) the President of Iran's Supreme Court said that among the passengers killed were 12 judges, lawyers and heads of judicial courts, eight members of the Iranian Parliament and journalists. Iraq had alleged earlier, on 21 February,(206) that the aircraft was attached to Iran's Doshantappeh Air Force Base, and cited the names and military ranks of its three crew, as well as the names and titles of three Iranian officials said to be among the passengers.

Iran transmitted the names of 39 of the passengers on 5 March,(207) stating that an Iraqi military spokesman had announced on 20 February that the Iraqi Air Force had just downed an Iranian C-130 military plane near Ahwaz-a statement repeated by Iraq in a press conference at United Nations Headquarters the same day. The announcements, Iran concluded, as well as Iraq's 21 February letter,(206) were fabrications to divert attention from its violation of the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944) by downing an easily identifiable civil aircraft.

In the mean time, on 2 March,(208) Iran reported that Iraq had fired a missile at the Liberian tanker Kastor on 27 February, killing one person, and at the tanker Kurej the following day, killing two.

Kuwait, on 28 April 1986,(209) reported that Iran had confiscated the cargo vessel Ibn El-Bitar. The vessel, owned by the United Arab Shipping Company headquartered in Kuwait and flying a Kuwaiti flag, had been intercepted some 20 miles north-east of the Omani port of Qaboos on 25 November 1985. Iran had alleged that Iraq had owned the vessel prior to the Iran-Iraq conflict and that its ownership devolved to the United Arab Shipping Company, of which Iraq was a co-founder. Kuwait affirmed that at no time had the vessel been owned by Iraq, that it had been built for Kuwait's own commercial fleet, and that the Company owned all of its ships irrespective of the flag of their country of registration. Kuwait contended that confiscation of the vessel on the grounds that Iraq was one of the Company's stockholders was unwarranted and invalid under international law.

Iran, responding on 3 September,(210) argued that, in accordance with accepted international law and practice, it had the right to seize and confiscate vessels of the belligerent; it cited section 9, page 329, of Lloyds Register of Shipping (1982-83), which showed that the Ibn El-Bitar had been registered in the Iraqi port of Basrah and carried the Iraqi flag as its national flag.

Kuwait wrote on 19 September(211) that, on 16 September, Iranian naval vessels fired several missiles at the Kuwaiti oil tanker Al-Fantas 25 miles east of Al-Khafqi, causing a fire in one of its rear reservoirs; the action was a serious escalation of the regional situation and damaged relations between Kuwait and Iran.

Iran, on 16 October,(212) reported that on the previous day Iraq bombed Shiraz Airport and machine-gunned an Iranian Boeing 737 passenger plane while its passengers were deplaning, killing three and injuring 30. Iran asked that the United Nations team in Teheran investigate the attack.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his report of 26 November to the Security Council (see also p. 231),(166) addressed the deep concern of the international community, in particular of the neighbouring regional States, over the danger of a widening of the conflict owing to the increasing number of attacks on merchant vessels. By 25 November 1986, 97 attacks had been reported during the year, compared with 61 in 1985. The casualty toll in 1986 was 34 fatalities, 40 injured and 10 missing; in 1985, the figures were 5, 20 and 2, respectively.

The Secretary-General also reported that since 1984 he had received communications from six maritime organizations protesting against the loss of life and property caused by attacks on shipping. They asked him to use his good offices to stop the attacks. The latest such appeal, annexed to the report, was cabled on 3 November 1986 by three of those maritime organizations, together with six others. He had on occasion conveyed these appeals to Iran and Iraq, and had done so most recently on 12 June. That appeal and the responses to it were also annexed to his report.

Iraq had responded, on 24 June, that it had not started attacking merchant vessels until well after Iran had eliminated free navigation in Iraqi territorial waters by armed force. It maintained that the shipment of oil from Iran was impermissible trade under international law in the context of the Iran-Iraq armed conflict, for such trade provided Iran with financial resources to continue the war.

Iran had stated in its response of 12 July that Iraq, in an attempt to internationalize the war, had been openly announcing its indiscriminate attacks on unarmed commercial vessels and oil tankers in the Persian Gulf. On the other hand, Iran had made every effort to prevent the spill-over of the war into the Gulf, while maintaining full respect for freedom of navigation.

In a report of 31 December, with later addenda,(213) prepared in pursuance of a 1984 Council resolution,(214) the Secretary-General submitted details of incidents regarding shipping, such as attacks, seizures and boardings, in the Persian Gulf throughout 1986. Of the 103 incidents listed, all were reported by the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and one was also reported by Kuwait. The number of incidents—the highest in a single year, with sharply increased casualties—showed that the various calls for restraint had not been heeded. Therefore, the Secretary-General stressed once again the grave risk inherent in the existing situation and the need for an early end to the conflict.

Treatment of prisoners of war

Communications (March-September). Several communications received by the Secretary-General concerned the treatment of prisoners of war (POWs).

Iraq, on 6 March,(215) charged Iran with barbarous treatment of Iraqi POWs, alleging that Teheran Radio had announced on 5 March that groups of POWs had been paraded through the towns of Borujerd and Arak. Other groups captured in the recent Wa-al-Fajr VIII military operation were to arrive in Teheran and the Revolutionary Guards were calling on the public to turn out and chant revolutionary slogans at them. To use POWs for such propaganda purposes, Iraq asserted, was at variance with the third Geneva Convention of 1949.

Iran, on 11 March,(216) denied the allegation, stating that, of necessity, the POWs had to travel through some cities en route from the front to the prison camps, and that all humanitarian and Islamic principles were observed during such transfer.

Iraq, by a letter of 11 September,(217) asked for the condemnation of the shooting by Iran of a group of Iraqi chiefs and officers whom it had taken prisoner when it landed forces on the island of Haqi Mainur earlier that day. Iraq, on retaking the island, found the prisoners bound hand and foot, some dead and others wounded.

Chapter VIII

Mediterranean

In 1986, political problems in the Mediterranean continued to focus on Cyprus and the tense situation surrounding relations between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States, which erupted into armed attacks in late March and in April. The Security Council took up the situation in March and again in April when, after two sessions, it considered but did not adopt a draft resolution by which it would have condemned a United States attack against the Jamahiriya. However, in November, the General Assembly condemned the attack. With regard to security and co-operation in the Mediterranean, the Assembly expressed concern over the increasing tension there and urged States to reduce it and promote peace in the area.

Concerning Cyprus, the Secretary-General believing that the differences between the Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots could be bridged by a decisive effort—presented to them in March a draft framework agreement for a solution to the Cyprus problem. Since both sides held differing views on that draft and it was not possible to take the steps towards a settlement as suggested in the document, the Secretary-General reviewed the situation with the leaders of both sides in September and sent a high-level mission to Cyprus, Greece and Turkey in November to explore ways of moving forward. At year's end, he remained convinced that a solution was possible, if both sides showed their good will and determination to create a more positive atmosphere.

Expressing its strong support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission, the Security Council twice extended the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP). To assure UNFICYP's vital role in keeping tension on the island under control, the Secretary-General noted that it was essential to find a satisfactory solution to the Force's financial difficulties (see P. 4).

Cyprus question

Throughout the year the Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices, entrusted to him by the Security Council. In March, he presented to the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities a draft framework agreement which he said preserved all the points on which agreement had been achieved since August 1984, suggested solutions to remaining divergences in a manner that, in his judgement, protected the interests of both communities, and proposed procedures for negotiating outstanding issues, including withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces, guarantees and the three freedoms-of movement, of settlement and the right to property.

In April, President Spyros Kyprianou of Cyprus informed the Secretary-General that, before the Greek Cypriot side could express its views on the draft framework agreement, agreement had to be reached on withdrawal of Turkish forces and settlers, effective international guarantees and the application of the three freedoms. The Turkish Cypriot leader, Rauf R. Denktas, said his side accepted the draft and could not accept any other procedure.

In September, the Secretary-General met separately with the two leaders in New York and, in November, sent two high-level members of his staff to Cyprus, Greece and Turkey. In Cyprus, the two parties maintained their earlier positions.

In December, the Secretary-General stated that despite the fact that his efforts had not yielded the results he had hoped for, he remained convinced that it should be possible for the two sides to negotiate all the issues to permit the establishment of a bicomunal, bi-zonal federal republic, while preserving the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus.

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNFICYP—on 13 June (resolution 585(1986)) and on 11 December (resolution 593(1986))—which continued its peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks.

Although the Cyprus question was on the agenda of the General Assembly in 1986, it was not discussed.

Cyprus and Turkey addressed letters to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the situation throughout 1986. Those from Turkey forwarded letters from the Turkish Cypriot community signed by Kenan Atakol, as "Minister for Foreign Affairs and Defence of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", by Ozer Koray as "representative" of that "Republic" or by Resat Caglar as its "deputy representative".

Communications (17 January-10 June). Cyprus again protested on 17 January(1) what it described as Turkey's systematic colonization of occupied areas of Cyprus and its attempts to change the island's demographic structure by bringing in some 60,000 settlers from mainland Turkey. Citing a Turkish press report, Cyprus alleged that settlers were brought in, replacing those who had left, as a labour force which would be turned into a voting force for the Turkish Cypriots. On 23 January,(2) Cyprus, expressing concern over the settlers' contribution to the economic and social welfare of Cyprus, cited additional Turkish press reports which stated that they were drug smugglers, thieves, down-and-outs and even murderers and had been responsible for increased crime; in addition, others came as soldiers and settled there following their demobilization. According to Cyprus, the press reports expressed further concern that the occupied area eventually would lose its Turkish Cypriot character and that the Turkish population settling there, in numbers much greater than those of the educated Turkish Cypriots forced to leave, would constitute the majority.

Calling those allegations false and malicious, Mr. Koray, on 11 March,(3) asserted that the Turkish Cypriot side had not attempted to change the island's demographic structure; attempts to occupy Cyprus by Greece between 1963 and 1974 included not only infiltrating some 20,000 mainland Greek troops and officers but also armed violence aimed at suppressing or completely eliminating the Turkish Cypriots. In addition, Mr. Koray said that since 1974 Greek Cypriot efforts to Hellenize Cyprus had given rise to political and social instability and that crime had increased in the Greek Cypriot community.

On 21 January,(4) the USSR proposed holding a representative international conference, within the framework of the United Nations, as a way of ensuring a solution to the Cyprus problem. According to the proposal, the conference could result in the signing of a treaty or other document calling for: the island's demilitarization, including foreign troop withdrawal and the elimination of foreign military bases; international guarantees of the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Cyprus; and respect by all parties for its status as a non-aligned State. The proposal also stated that guarantees of independence should rule out any future outside interference in the affairs of Cyprus and recommended that the guarantors be permanent members of the Security Council or the Council as a whole, as well as Greece and Turkey and certain non-aligned countries. Participants in the conference, the USSR said, could be Cyprus (with representation of each of the two communities), Greece, Turkey and all

Council members; other States, in particular from the non-aligned group, could also be invited.

Cyprus, on 7 February,(5) drew attention to statements it said Mr. Denktas had made which indicated that the Lefkoniko airport in Turkish-occupied Cyprus and the new Kyrenia port, which had been financed by Turkey, would be used for military purposes; the Turkish Cypriot side had denied those charges, maintaining that the airport would be used solely for civil aviation. Cyprus asserted that the increased and modernized illegal military presence of Turkey in Cyprus seriously threatened its non-aligned status and endangered peace and security in the eastern Mediterranean. Replying on 19 March,(6) Mr. Koray said the statements had been misquoted and the charges that Gecitkale (Lefkoniko) airport and Girne (Kyrenia) harbour were constructed solely for military purposes were far from the truth; the facilities were designed to meet Turkish Cypriot needs regarding trade and communications. It was Cyprus which had spent money on military equipment, Mr. Koray added, and he also took strong exception to the description of the presence of Turkish troops as illegal.

On 22 April,(7) Cyprus drew attention to a 6 April statement by the so-called Prime Minister of the illegal Turkish entity, in which he said that if Greek Cypriots clashed with Turkish Cypriots, then Lefkoniko airport and the seaports in the occupied area would be used by the Turkish armed forces. Cyprus stated that the Turkish side continued to ignore its protests concerning Lefkoniko-which Cyprus claimed had no passenger facilities-and Kyrenia, and that allegations about militarization and acquisition of armaments by Cyprus were unfounded. On 6 May,(8) Mr. Koray said it was not true that there were no passenger facilities at Gecitkale, and that the Greek Cypriot side was trying to deny the right of self-defence to Turkish Cypriots, as well as the right to be free, happy and prosperous. Referring to a 23 April speech by the Greek Prime Minister, who was reported to have said that Greece would intervene, exhausting all its capabilities, if Greek Cypriots were threatened, Mr. Koray said that the statement attempted to divert attention from the real issue confronting Greece, which was responsibility for the rejection by the Greek Cypriot side of the Secretary-General's draft framework agreement (see below).

On 20 February, (9) Cyprus protested three alleged violations of its airspace on 18 February by Turkish air force jet lighters originating from southern Turkey,

On 11 March,(10) Mr. Atakol alleged that the Greek Cypriot House of Representatives was planning to legalize the Ethnike Organosis Kypriakou Agonos (EOKA), whose sole aim had been the annexation of Cyprus to Greece.

On 13 May,⁽¹¹⁾ Cyprus drew attention to Turkish Cypriot press reports of 8 May which it believed revealed the true intentions behind the Turkish expansionist policy in Cyprus. It cited a statement made by the so-called Prime Minister of the illegal entity that the only way to do away with borders in the middle of the island would be to advance to the shores of the south. In another publication, Cyprus stated, he was quoted as saying that duties befell Turkey to propagate the seventeenth Turkish State and adding that Turkey was acting with the knowledge of that duty. The Turkish Cypriot community responded to these allegations on 24 June (see p. 242).

On 5 June,⁽¹²⁾ Cyprus, referring to Mr. Koray's 6 May letter,⁽⁸⁾ said that the Turkish Cypriot side was attempting to present the problem of Cyprus as an intercommunal difference and that Turkey was to blame for the dire economic conditions of the Turkish Cypriot community in the occupied areas since, by segregating the people by force, it had taken that community away from the trunk of general economic growth of the rest of the country.

On 9 June,⁽¹³⁾ Cyprus objected to a statement made by the Turkish Prime Minister, in which he contended that the Greek Cypriots had immigrated to Cyprus during the Ottoman period and later during the British administration. Cyprus interpreted the allegation to mean that Cyprus was more Turkish than Greek. Cyprus also protested municipal elections on 1 June in the occupied areas in which a candidate of the New Birth Party, formed by Turkish settlers, was elected Mayor. Cyprus believed that no adequate expression of political will could take place in those areas because of Turkey's invasion and military presence, the illegal expulsion of the majority of the inhabitants and the implantation there by Turkey of numerous settlers.

On 10 June,⁽¹⁴⁾ Cyprus alleged three instances of violations of its airspace on 4 June by Turkish air force jet fighters originating from southern Turkey, thereby adding to Turkey's continuing aggression and occupation of 40 per cent of Cypriot territory; Cyprus said those acts were proof of Turkey's expansionist goals and disregard for international law. Mr. Koray responded to the charges on 10 July (see p. 242).

In its final communique, the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, Morocco, 6-10 January)⁽¹⁵⁾ expressed support for the Turkish Cypriots in trying to achieve equal status with the Greek Cypriots and to regain their legitimate rights. The Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 16-19 April)⁽¹⁶⁾ in its Political Declaration deplored the separatist actions by the Turkish Cypriot leadership, including the so-called referendum and elections of 1985.⁽¹⁷⁾ On 12 May,⁽¹⁸⁾ Cyprus transmitted the text of paragraphs on Cyprus adopted by the Ministerial Meeting.

Report of the Secretary-General (May/June). Reporting to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering 1 December 1985 to 31 May 1986, the Secretary-General summarized UNFICYP's activities⁽¹⁹⁾ (see p. 245) and his good offices mission.⁽²⁰⁾

The Secretary-General stated that, to overcome the differences remaining between the two sides at the end of 1985, he had arranged a series of lower-level discussions. Subsequently, his aides had met with representatives of each side separately on three occasions, most recently in Nicosia during the week of 3 March. These talks revealed many points of convergence, and indicated ways of overcoming remaining divergences and of dealing with outstanding issues.

The Secretary-General said that, since he believed that the differences between the two sides could be bridged by a decisive effort, he had presented to both sides on 29 March a draft framework agreement on Cyprus for their consideration. The draft, he said, preserved all the points on which agreement had been achieved since August 1984, suggested solutions to the remaining divergences in a manner which he felt protected the interests of both communities and proposed procedures for negotiation of those issues which had yet to be resolved, including withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces, guarantees and the three freedoms—freedom of movement, freedom of settlement and the right to property. The Secretary-General stressed that acceptance of the draft would allow all outstanding issues to be tackled as an integrated whole, in that neither side would be ultimately committed to an overall solution until all issues had been resolved to its satisfaction.

Annexed to the report on his good offices mission was the draft framework agreement, as well as the subsequent correspondence between the Secretary-General and President Kyprianou and Mr. Denktas.

On 20 April, the Secretary-General received a letter from President Kyprianou stating that before the Greek Cypriot side could express its views on the proposed document, agreement had to be reached on withdrawal of the Turkish forces of occupation and settlers, effective international guarantees and the application of the three freedoms. Towards that end, he requested the Secretary-General to convene an international conference to deal with the first two issues or, if that proved impossible, a high-level meeting to deal with all three.

Mr. Denktas by a letter of 21 April set out views and considerations in the light of which the Turkish Cypriots accepted the draft framework agreement. In a further letter on 27 April, he stated that the Turkish Cypriot side could not accept any procedure other than that contained in that draft.

On 8 May, the Secretary-General told President Kyprianou that his two proposals were not viable since the Turkish Cypriot side had indicated that it would not accept any procedure other than that contained in the draft framework agreement. The Secretary-General emphasized, however, that the procedure therein provided for those issues to be dealt with without delay at high-level meetings.

The Secretary-General recalled that, in the 8 May message and in a meeting he had with the Foreign Minister of Cyprus on 29 May, he had reiterated that the procedures proposed in the draft framework agreement provided each side with every opportunity to ensure that the negotiations proceeded in a manner that took full account of their concerns and that the concept of an integrated whole meant that the parties' ultimate commitment to an overall solution would depend on the resolution of all issues to their mutual satisfaction. He also recalled that, in line with the draft, a transitional government could be established only after an agreement on all issues had been achieved. He also repeated that the issues of troop withdrawal, guarantees and the three freedoms would be included from the very outset in the agenda of joint high-level meetings which would begin when a favourable response had been received from both sides.

On 10 June, another letter was received from President Kyprianou giving his assessment of the underlying issues of the Cyprus problem, describing the fundamental importance for the Greek Cypriot side of the three issues he set out on 20 April, and commenting on various aspects of the draft framework agreement. Again he proposed that an international conference or high-level meeting should consider those issues. He stated that when substantive decisions had been taken for their resolution, it should be possible to assess the results of the meeting or the conference and the content of the draft.

The Secretary-General reported that the continued presence of UNFICYP was indispensable in helping maintain calm on the island and recommended that the Council extend the Force's mandate for a further six months. The Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom concurred with his recommendation, while Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community indicated that their stand would be expounded in the Council.⁽²¹⁾

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had continued to help the needy on the island (see p. 246). Details were also given about the Force's increasing financial difficulties (see p. 246). He also noted that the Committee on

Missing Persons in Cyprus, having held 12 formal meetings, had reached an advanced stage of investigation on the 168 individual cases on which the members had decided to concentrate their initial efforts (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII).

Further communication (12 June). On 12 June,⁽²²⁾ Cyprus noted that documents it believed were necessary to understand developments in the Cyprus problem had not been included in the Secretary-General's report, particularly a 20 March letter from President Kyprianou and an aide-mémoire confirming the Greek Cypriot positions, concerns and priorities discussed at the lower-level meetings beginning on 3 March. President Kyprianou stressed that the success of the Secretary-General's efforts depended on the resolution of the main outstanding issues—the withdrawal of Turkish troops and settlers, the question of guarantees and the effective implementation of the three freedoms. The aide-mémoire addressed Greek Cypriot concerns relating to the international personality of Cyprus, its defence and legislature, deadlock-resolving machinery in the Legislature and in the Council of Ministers, territorial adjustments, a timetable and guarantees and procedures for considering allegations of non-implementation of confidence-building measures. Cyprus stated that certain points that appeared in the draft framework agreement were not mentioned in the aide-mémoire, either because they were not discussed in any of the meetings or because it was stated that the April formulation was to remain unchanged.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 13 June to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend UNFICYP's mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation, under rule 39^a of its provisional rules of procedure, to Ozer Koray.

On that day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 585(1986).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 31 May and 11 and 12 June 1986,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1986,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1986;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1986;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 585(1986)

13 June 1986 Meeting 2688 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18151).
Meeting numbers. SC 2688, 2689.

After the vote, Cyprus said it had approved the text because it contained the basic provisions for stationing United Nations troops in Cyprus, which was necessary due to the continuing Turkish occupation there and the Secretary-General's ongoing initiative. The problem, it asserted, was one of foreign invasion and continuing occupation by Turkey of approximately 40 per cent of the territory of a small non-aligned country, usurpation of lands, the inhuman expulsion of thousands of people from their ancestral homes and massive violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all Cypriots. Cyprus felt that the constitutional provisions of the draft framework agreement were unworkable; formulations of the territorial question had been changed radically, with little resemblance to previous formulations, and contradicted the 1984 Vienna working points.⁽²³⁾ In addition, Cyprus voiced concern over the integrated-whole concept which it believed would have left the Greek Cypriot side bound by an unworkable constitutional arrangement, without benefiting from corresponding commitments of the other side on issues which concerned Greek Cypriots. Cyprus said that it had proposed discussing the withdrawal of troops and settlers, the guarantees and the three freedoms in an effort to maintain the negotiating process. Cyprus found it unacceptable that its 20 April proposal was not viable simply because Mr. Denktas might have rejected it. Cyprus also regretted that the Council had not forced Turkey to comply with its resolutions.

Greece said that a solution had always been seen as being based on a package of several elements. The interdependence of those elements was such that it was impossible for either side to commit itself to part of the package without knowing the whole. Greece noted that throughout the long process of negotiations only the new constitutional structure for Cyprus and the territorial issue had been discussed, while the withdrawal of Turkish troops, guarantees and the three freedoms had never been explored. Similarly, it said, the draft framework agreement dealt mostly with various constitutional aspects of the Cyprus problem. Greece asserted that the draft took into account all points of interest to the Turkish Cypriots but it bypassed those of the Greek Cypriots and was incomplete and unbalanced. Greece feared that the integrated-whole approach, if ever accepted, would end up as a euphemism for Greek Cypriot concessions through salami tactics. It supported President Kyprianou's proposal for an international conference or high-level intercommunal meeting and believed that the Council should deal with the withdrawal of Turkish troops as an absolute priority.

Speaking on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community, Mr. Koray said that it rejected the resolution unequivocally. It objected to the reference in paragraph 3 to the present mandate which it felt was incompatible with current radically changed conditions and circumstances. It believed that a reappraisal of UNFICYP's mandate was long overdue and it could not acquiesce to the Government of Cyprus as mentioned in the third preambular paragraph, since the portrayal of such an illegal, unconstitutional entity was abhorrent to Turkish Cypriots. The Turkish Cypriot side also objected to "other relevant resolutions" in the fourth preambular paragraph since it had either rejected in toto or accepted, subject to reservations, those resolutions. Concerning the reference in paragraph 2 to the Secretary-General's mission of good offices, the Turkish Cypriots understood that that mission had emanated from a 1975 Council resolution⁽²⁴⁾ and, if that was so, it fully supported it. Despite rejecting the resolution, Mr. Koray said his side accepted UNFICYP's presence. As to the draft framework agreement, Mr. Koray believed that, if concluded and adhered to in good faith by the two sides, it could lead to a bicomunal and bi-zonal federal settlement based on the equal political status of the two peoples. Mr. Koray said that owing to its non-acceptance of that document, the Greek Cypriot side had lost another golden opportunity and all hoped it would assume a positive attitude towards a negotiated solution.

Turkey shared the Turkish Cypriot views on UNFICYP, which, it said, were based on the expectation that there would be a concrete peace-making process within an agreed framework, calling on UNFICYP for its support by performing certain functions. Turkey said that the draft framework agreement did not satisfy completely any of the parties but that it constituted the only basis on which meaningful negotiations could begin; it supported the concept of the integrated whole. Turkey felt that the Greek Cypriot side had explicitly rejected the Secretary-General's proposals and by rejecting the draft framework agreement had reneged on every point to which they had agreed during discussions with the Secretary-General and his representatives. Turkey stated that the Greek Prime Minister, Andreas Papandreou, was against the Secretary-General's proposals and had the power to impose his will on Mr. Kyprianou. With regard to the resolution, Turkey objected to it for reasons similar to those given by Mr. Koray.

Communications (13 June-3 December). On 13 June,(25) Cyprus protested the first visit of the Turkish Prime Minister, Turgut Ozal, to the Turkish Cypriot community, scheduled for 2 to 4 July, which, it felt, would seriously endanger peace in the island and defeat efforts to find a solution to the Cyprus problem. The Cyprus House of Representatives on 26 June(26) unanimously condemned the visit and called on the United Nations to take action to cancel the visit since it believed it would undermine United Nations efforts towards a peaceful solution of the problem. On 9 July,(27) Cyprus protested statements made by the Turkish Prime Minister during his visit, which, Cyprus said, indicated that he regarded the occupied areas as a province or village of Turkey and that he expected it to remain so for ever, thus confirming Turkey's partitionist and expansionist intentions. Cyprus also alleged that he had spoken about the acquisition of territory through bloodshed.

On 24 June,(28) Mr. Koray, referring to Cyprus's 13 May allegation(11) (see p. 239) regarding a statement attributed to the "Prime Minister of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" concerning what Cyprus had termed the Turkish expansionist policy, said that a 14 May press release issued by the "Prime Minister" denied the statement and expressed disappointment at the distortion. That release also pointed out that he had said that the Turkish community had no expansionist ambitions and had no other desire but to live in peace and security within its own borders. On 2 July,(29) Cyprus questioned why the denial had come not the day after the statement was published but rather six days later, after Cyprus had protested, and also noted that there had been no denial of the statement that duties befell Turkey to propagate the seventeenth Turkish State.

Also on 2 July,(30) Cyprus alleged that on 30 June seven Turkish warships performing naval exercises intercepted a passenger ship sailing under the Cypriot flag in international waters and that shortly thereafter two shells were fired which fell within 400 to 500 metres of the cruise ship's bow. Responding on 9 July,(31)) Turkey asserted that the areas where the naval exercises had taken place were broadcast publicly 15 days prior to their scheduled date. On 30 June, Turkey said, contact was immediately established with the cruise ship to remind it that firing exercises were being conducted and that it was hazardous to navigate in the area. The ship left the area, and at no time, Turkey stated, was it in danger or fired upon.

Refuting allegations by Cyprus, cited on 10 June(14) (see p. 239), that Turkey had violated Greek Cypriot airspace on three occasions, Mr. Koray, on 10 July,(32) said the military exercises had taken place within the borders and airspace of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and had not violated anyone's airspace, territorial integrity or sovereignty, and prior notification was given to UNFICYP. Turkey noted that the complaint was dated 10 June, the same date as Mr. Kyprianou's letter to the Secretary-General rejecting the draft framework agreement.

On 16 July,(33) Cyprus transmitted a 10 July resolution adopted by the European Parliament, by which it disapproved of any act that complicated the Cyprus problem and postponed a peaceful solution, such as the Turkish Prime Minister's visit and the sealing of the line demarcating Cyprus territory occupied by Turkish troops following that visit. The Parliament pointed out that Turkey should be held partly responsible for the situation created, since its troops occupied northern Cyprus. It called on the Foreign Ministers Meeting in Political Co-operation to intensify efforts to prevent developments that might endanger peace in the region. On 14 August, (34) Mr. Atakol said the Turkish Prime Minister had responded to a formal invitation-a normal practice between States that had diplomatic relations with each other. He also asserted that Mr. Ozal's visit was supportive of a peaceful and just settlement of the Cyprus dispute and did not see how it would complicate the problem. According to Mr. Atakol, the decision to close the border temporarily was a defensive act in response to what he said was deliberate provocation by the Greek Cypriot side, which had staged public demonstrations at a main crossing point, deliberately preventing all passage through that check-point.

Referring to Cyprus's 5 June(12) and 9 June(13) communications (see p. 239), Mr. Caglar said on 23 July(35) that they were rife with racist sentiments and anti-Turkish hysteria and had added new dimensions to the campaign of letters launched by the Greek Cypriot administration. He added that Greek Cypriot propaganda intensified every time there was a prospect for a solution in Cyprus.

On 27 August,(36) Cyprus charged that three Turkish F4 fighters had violated its airspace on two occasions the previous day, thus demonstrating Turkey's continuing military aggression against Cyprus. On 8 September,⁽³⁷⁾ Mr. Koray said the overflights took place within Turkish Cypriot boundaries as part of pre-scheduled military exercises of which UNFICYP had prior notification, and the Greek Cypriot administration had no constitutional, legal or moral justification to comment on Turkish Cypriot affairs.

On 10 September,⁽³⁸⁾ Cyprus protested the establishment in northern Cyprus of a so-called coalition government which included the secessionist party founded by Mr. Denktas and the party representing Turkish settlers. Cyprus said that this development raised serious doubts as to who legitimately represented the Turkish Cypriot community and with whom the Greek Cypriot side should negotiate.

On 9 October,⁽³⁹⁾ Cyprus drew attention to a statement by Mr. Denktas, reported in the press, regarding Turkey's economic aid to northern Cyprus. Mr. Denktas had said that aid to northern Cyprus sustained Turkey's strategic interests in Cyprus. Cyprus believed that the statement was a public admission of the role forced upon the Turkish Cypriot community to serve the chauvinism of Turkey.

In its Political Declaration, the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September)⁽⁴⁰⁾ reaffirmed support for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and non-aligned status of Cyprus and supported the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General.

On 22 October,⁽⁴¹⁾ Cyprus alleged that on 20 and 21 October Turkish infantry, air and marine forces had held large-scale military exercises and had repeatedly violated the airspace of Cyprus. On 6 November,⁽⁴²⁾ Mr. Koray responded that as exercises took place within the territory and airspace of northern Cyprus and with prior notification to UNFICYP, they did not infringe upon the sovereignty, territorial integrity and airspace of southern Cyprus.

On 12 November,⁽⁴³⁾ Mr. Koray objected to statements made by Cyprus in the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee which referred to the occupation of Cyprus and the forcible displacement of Greek Cypriots which, Mr. Koray said, was totally a figment of imagination. It also protested allegations of the continuation of the expulsion of Greek Cypriots remaining in northern Cyprus and of the harassment of Greeks, Maronites, Armenians and Roman Catholics there. Regarding the 1974 invasion of Cyprus, Mr. Koray said Greece was responsible and that Turkey merely exercised its right under the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee. On 19 November,⁽⁴⁴⁾ Cyprus said that any attempt by Turkey to justify its invasion under a provision of the Treaty was to be completely disrespectful of the Charter of the United Nations. Mr. Koray's reference, Cyprus stated, to the forcible displacement of 200,000 Greek Cypriots as a figment of imagination was inhuman. Cyprus said it was the threat of massacre, murders, the fear of Turkish napalm bombs and the tanks, torture, rapes and Turkish brutality that forced them to leave their ancestral homes and seek refuge in the free areas of Cyprus. Regarding Turkish allegations about forced displacement of Turkish Cypriots, Cyprus said they were only pawns in Turkey's plan to shift the population and create separate Turkish Cypriot zones where none existed. On 3 December,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Mr. Koray said it was ironic and a travesty of justice that the Greek Cypriots, who had trampled on the human rights of the Turkish Cypriots, had assumed the role of the injured party. He said that the Greek Cypriots had brought terrorism to Cyprus and, as of 1963, with Greek military assistance, had brutally raided Turkish villages and attacked the Turkish quarters of its five main towns, always targeting civilian Turkish Cypriots.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In his report to the Security Council on the operation in Cyprus covering 1 June to 30 November 1986, the Secretary-General updated UNFICYP activities⁽⁴⁶⁾ and summarized his good offices mission during that period, pointing out that he had met separately in September with President Kyprianou and Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktas. The Secretary-General stressed the importance of building on what had been achieved since August 1984 and advised them that he did not intend to revise the draft framework agreement or present a new one. In November, he sent a follow-up mission-comprising two senior Secretariat officials-to explore possible ways of moving forward. In Cyprus, the mission recalled to both sides that the Secretary-General's function was to produce ideas to help them find a solution, without imposing anything on either side, and that progress could be made only when both were in agreement. The Secretary-General reported that the two parties had maintained the positions they had expressed following submission of the draft framework agreement. While reiterating their support for his mission of good offices, both parties stressed that they remained committed to the search for a just and lasting solution and that they understood that he must continue to seek a way for the two sides to proceed with negotiations. The mission also visited Turkey and Greece to consult with the Governments.

Referring to his recommendation that the Council extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further six months, the Secretary-General stated that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom concurred, while Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community would give their position before the Council.(47)

Concerning the Committee on Missing Persons, the Secretary-General said it had held four sessions in the period under review (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII). During its visit to Cyprus, the mission discussed with both sides how further progress could best be made.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 11 December to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend the UNFICYP mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. Mr. Koray was also invited to participate under rule 39^b of the provisional rules of procedure.

The Council then unanimously adopted resolution 593(1986).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 2 and 10 December 1986,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1986,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1987;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1987;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 593(1986)

11 December 1986 Meeting 2729 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18515)

After the vote, Cyprus said that for 12 years Cypriots had been the victims of aggression, military occupation, expulsion, uprooting, attempts at secession and the violation of human rights. Turkey, it said, had consolidated further its grip on the occupied territories. Cyprus pointed out that the Secretary-General's December report had confirmed that the numbers of the Turkish army of occupation had been increased and that extensive qualitative changes had also been made to its armaments. Turkey had also constructed a vast military airport at Lefkoniko, Cyprus stated, and was continuously importing thousands of illegal Turkish settlers into the occupied areas, whose numbers had reached some 60,000, according to the Turkish Cypriot press. Cyprus believed that as long as Turkey persisted in occupying Cypriot territory, any so-called intercommunal negotiations would in fact be conducted at gun-point and offer Turkey an additional means of exerting pressure on the Greek Cypriot side, in order to make it accept that the whole island be placed under Turkey's political and military control. Turning to the draft framework agreement, Cyprus said that the withdrawal of Turkish troops and settlers, international guarantees and the three freedoms should receive priority and that the Secretary-General should pursue the matter of an international conference.

Greece, disturbed by the increase in Turkish forces and tanks in northern Cyprus, said their presence remained the stumbling-block for progress towards a solution. Statements by Turkish leaders had led Greece to believe that Turkey intended to leave at least part of its army on the island indefinitely. Maintaining that discussion of withdrawing the troops was a matter of absolute priority, Greece pointed out that the Secretary-General's report had given no indication that Turkey had envisaged any change in its position. Greece also reiterated that the priority issues were the withdrawal of Turkish troops, eventual guarantees and the three freedoms, adding that it would respond positively to any suggestion aimed at putting UNFICYP finances on a sound footing and that it continued to lend its full support to all efforts aimed at a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem.

Turkey again found unacceptable elements in the resolution and could not consent to any extension of UNFICYP's mandate on the basis therein. Repeating its support for the Secretary-General's efforts, Turkey believed that the Greek Cypriot demands and pre-conditions which it claimed were advanced to evade the draft framework agreement were illogical and unreasonable and that their sole purpose was to discard the legitimate interests of the Turkish Cypriot side. Turkey had not reinforced its forces in northern Cyprus, had no aggressive intentions and had encouraged peace and negotiations in Cyprus; it was the Greek Cypriot side's rearmament efforts and Greece's contribution to them which posed the real danger. With regard to troop strengths and level of armaments in southern Cyprus, Turkey said that three elements had to be taken into account-the Greek Cypriot National Guard, Greek support for that force and ^bSee footnote a on p. 240.

Greek mainland troops there. Turkey alleged that the National Guard had been reorganized and heavily armed through direct military purchases from various countries and Greek military assistance. It also said that apart from the regular Greek and Greek Cypriot forces, there were several private armies which had engaged in large-scale terrorist attacks against Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots belonging to different camps.

Mr. Koray also said that his side again rejected the resolution completely, giving the same reasons he had given in June (see p. 241). Despite that rejection, however, the Turkish Cypriot side remained favourably disposed to the presence of UNFICYP in northern Cyprus, and felt that the only obstacle to progress and to a negotiated overall solution was the lack of political will on the part of the Greek Cypriot side. Mr. Koray said the draft framework agreement was right for a negotiated solution, but charged that the Greek Cypriot leadership would not accept any document that embodied the principle of equal political status for both sides in Cyprus and that envisaged a bicomunal, bi-zonal republic. Had the Greek Cypriots accepted the draft agreement, it would have meant accepting the Turkish people as their equal in the body politic of Cyprus. That equality must be recognized if the chances of a negotiated settlement were to be enhanced. He maintained that the reason for failed negotiations hinged on the fact that the two communities had lived physically apart and that the Greek Cypriots had never been genuinely interested in re-establishing a joint Government with the Turkish Cypriots. Mr. Koray said that, despite their higher birth rate, the ratio of the Turkish Cypriot population had been pushed down over time, while the Greek Cypriot population had been augmented by importation of large numbers from Greece and by the settling in Cyprus, after their discharge, of mainland Greek soldiers who were there clandestinely. He asserted that there was no problem of settlers in Cyprus the way the Greek Cypriot side had portrayed it; those returning were coming back to their homeland.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 September 1986, the General Assembly, in closing its resumed fortieth session, adopted decision 40/481, by which it decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-first (1986) session the question of Cyprus. On 19 December, the Assembly, by decision 41/470 on the suspension of the forty-first session, decided to retain the question on the agenda of that session.

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights on 12 March postponed its debate on human rights in Cyprus to 1987 (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII).

Peace-keeping and humanitarian assistance

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by the Security Council in 1964,⁽⁴⁸⁾ continued throughout 1986 to supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. It also provided security for civilians in the area between the lines; discharged its functions with regard to the security, welfare and well-being of the Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus, regularly visiting Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and supported United Nations relief operations.

The area between the cease-fire lines-the buffer zone-was kept under constant surveillance by UNFICYP through a system of 143 observation posts, 58 of which were permanently manned. The number of cease-fire violations remained at a low level, while the frequency of shooting incidents increased slightly, but there were no exchanges of fire between opposing forces. UNFICYP continued to be successful in restoring the status quo ante. However, in Nicosia the troops of both sides continued to be in dangerous proximity to each other-a situation remaining of great concern to the Force since a significant number of cease-fire violations and other related incidents occurred in that area. Regarding the UNFICYP Force Commander's 1985 proposal⁽⁴⁹⁾ to establish mutually agreed military deconfrontation in Nicosia on both sides of the so-called Green Line, where no activities would be permitted and where no military-oriented construction or renovation work would take place, discussions continued with both sides. Both sides perceived that such a change in the existing military status quo might cause an imbalance and reduce the civilian population's security. Cyprus was willing to discuss the proposal, while the Turkish Cypriot side said that it was not in a position to do so. Since progress seemed unlikely, UNFICYP decided to focus on reducing tension at Nicosia's most dangerous points-one such measure involved installing improved lighting in the eastern sector of the Green Line which allowed better observation by all parties.

UNFICYP continued to monitor new civilian construction projects close to the lines in Nicosia to confirm their civilian nature and alleviate concerns of both sides.

Overflights of the buffer zone decreased, with 15 such flights by Turkish forces or civilian aircraft and 20 from the south; all overflights were protested.

In August, Cyprus protested that the strength of Turkish forces in the north had increased and that the capability of their tanks had been enhanced. UNFICYP believed that there had been such an increase and that Turkey had brought to Cyprus tanks with greater fire-power and mobility than those previously there. The Turkish authorities denied that there had been any increase in the strength of their forces but confirmed that their tanks were being upgraded as part of a programme to improve all the Turkish Army's tanks. The Turkish authorities expressed concern at the acquisition of armoured vehicles by the National Guard and by an increase in its manpower. Regarding that increase, Cyprus assured UNFICYP that its intention was to maintain a purely defensive posture.

Temporary visits to the south by Greek Cypriots living in the north continued through the good offices of UNFICYP and 961 such visits were made for family or medical reasons. Twenty-five Greek Cypriots transferred permanently to the south, leaving 699 residing in the north. UNFICYP continued visiting Turkish Cypriots living in the south and contacting their relatives in the north; 15 reunions involving 69 persons were arranged. One Turkish Cypriot moved permanently from the south to the north. Frequent contacts between members of the Maronite community residing on opposite sides of the lines continued and one Maronite transferred to the south; the number remaining in the north was 333. It was verified that all transfers were voluntary.

Cyprus protested the influx of Turkish settlers into the north and expressed the view that it was intended to destroy the demographic structure of Cyprus. Cyprus also denounced as illegal the distribution by the Turkish Cypriot side of properties located in the northern part of the island and owned by Greek Cypriots. The Turkish Cypriot side denied that settlers were arriving in the numbers alleged and said that only limited numbers of seasonal workers from Turkey were being admitted.

Emergency medical service was provided for both civilian communities. Turkish Cypriots were escorted to the south for treatment and medicines were delivered to them in the north. An anti-mosquito programme arranged by UNFICYP began in March 1986 after consultations with both parties. UNFICYP distributed 500 tons of food and other related items provided by Cyprus and the Cyprus Red Cross to Greek Cypriots in the north. Food continued to be provided by the World Food Programme to some 22,000 children and social welfare institutions.

As Co-ordinator of humanitarian assistance for Cyprus, UNHCR continued to assist the displaced and needy. The 1986 programme, providing $7.5 million to finance 19 projects and co-ordinated by the Cyprus Red Cross Society, involved constructing medical and educational facilities and a main-trunk sewer in Nicosia, overseas procurement of equipment and supplies for health, education and agriculture, and professional training, expert missions and feasibility studies. UNFICYP supported the programme by delivering 16 tons of supplies in the 12-month period.

Joint activities continued between the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot communities in the framework of ongoing projects, assisted by the United Nations Development Programme. Following the completion of the second phase of the joint Nicosia Master Plan project, design and feasibility studies were undertaken.

The UNFICYP Civilian police continued to support UNFICYP military units and operated in liaison with both the Cyprus and the Turkish Cypriot police, contributing to the protection and movement of civilians between the cease-fire lines.

This information on UNFICYP was contained in two reports by the Secretary-General to the Security Council, covering 1 December 1985 to 31 May 1986(19) and 1 June to 30 November 1986.(46) In both, he recommended that the Force's mandate be extended. The Council twice in 1986 extended the mandate for a six-month period, first until 15 December 1986 and then until 15 June 1987 (see pp. 240 and 244).

Composition of UNFICYP. As at 30 November 1986, UNFICYP had a strength of 2,328, including 38 civilian police, and was composed of contingents from eight States. Military personnel came from Austria (301), Canada (515), Denmark (341), Finland (10), Ireland (8), Sweden (374) and the United Kingdom (741). Civilian police came from Australia (20) and Sweden (18).

During the year ended 30 November 1986, one member of the Force died, bringing total fatalities to 139 since UNFICYP's inception in 1964.

UNFICYP financing

UNFICYP continued to be financed by voluntary contributions and by troop-contributing Governments. Contributions received in 1986 from 26 countries totalled $17,889,000. Estimated costs, including United Nations operational costs and reimbursement of extra costs to Governments providing contingents, totalled some $29 million. The full 12-month cost was approximately $102 million, of which troop-contributing Governments absorbed some $73 million for such items as regular pay and allowances and normal materiel expenses.

As at 2 December 1986, the accumulated deficit since the operation's inception in 1964 was in the order of $145.5 million, an increase of some $12 million in 12 months. Consequently, the claims of the troop contributors had been met only through December 1978.

On 17 April(50) and 13 October 1986,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General made renewed appeals to States for voluntary contributions to finance UNFICYP. He again stressed its indispensable contribution to international peace by maintaining calm in Cyprus, a condition essential to his mission of good offices. He expressed concern over its precarious financial situation, which continued to place an unfair burden on the troop-contributing countries. Annexed to his appeals were details on the Force's financing.

The Secretary-General suggested to the Security Council that, unless there was a more generous response to his appeals, it might wish to consider changing the future financing system to one of assessed contributions. On 10 December,⁽⁵²⁾ the troop contributors (see above) stated that there was a tendency to take UNFICYP's existence for granted, adding that neither they, nor the United Nations, could continue to tolerate indefinitely the gap between the resources available and the costs of UNFICYP. They supported the Secretary-General's assessment that the Council might wish to consider changing the system of financing.

Contributions received in 1986. Contributions received for UNFICYP as at 31 December 1986⁽⁵³⁾ were as follows: Australia, $100,000; Austria, $125,000; Bahamas, $2,000; Barbados, $2,000; Belgium, $425,300; Cyprus, $550,000; Denmark, $120,000; Finland, $37,500; Federal Republic of Germany, $1,312,600; Greece, $800,000; Iceland, $11,500; Indonesia, $5,000; Italy, $800,000; Japan, $400,000; Nepal, $800; Norway, $915,000; Pakistan, $3,000; Sweden, $200,000; Switzerland, $905,100; Thailand, $1,000; United Kingdom, $2,344,400; United States, $8,799,800; Uruguay, $2,500; Venezuela, $5,000; Yugoslavia, $20,000; and Zimbabwe, $1,500.

Other questions concerning the Mediterranean region

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya-United States relations

In 1986, relations between the United States and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya continued to deteriorate, resulting in armed attacks and incidents breaking out between the two in the Mediterranean. The United States launched two such attacks against the Jamahiriya, one in March which, according to the United States, was in retaliation for a military attack on its naval fleets stationed in the area, and the other in April in retaliation for what it said was a Libyan-backed terrorist attack on United States military personnel in Berlin. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya claimed that the United States fleets were a provocation and threat to the Jamahiriya, and, denying its support for terrorism, said the United States allegations were part of its policy of State terrorism. The incidents were taken up by the Security Council. In March, the Council adjourned without taking any action. In April, owing to the negative vote of three permanent members, the Council did not adopt a text condemning the United States attack. The attack was condemned, however, by the General Assembly, when in November it adopted resolution 41/38. In December, the Assembly, by resolution 41/89, urged all States to reduce tension and promote peace in the area.

On several occasions, the Secretary-General voiced concern over the situation. On 25 March, he expressed great concern that the military action had occurred and, on 15 April, he urged the States involved to desist from escalating tension and resolve the critical situation through means provided in the Charter of the United Nations.

Communications (January-March). Throughout the year, numerous communications were addressed to the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council on the deteriorating relations between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States. On 2 January,⁽¹⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, referring to United States and Israeli allegations of its involvement in the 1985 terrorist incidents at the Rome and Vienna airports,⁽²⁾ denied those charges and asserted that they were a pretext for provoking acts of aggression against the Jamahiriya. It pointed to three recent statements by United States officials which it said indicated that the United States was ready to exert, together with its allies, political and economic pressure on the Jamahiriya to make it stop carrying out terrorism, adding that the United States had reserved the option of military action. The Jamahiriya said that it had pointed out to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President what it said were the many acts of aggression perpetrated by the United States, the latest of which was mentioned on 3 November 1985 in The Washington Post.⁽³⁾

As current Chairman of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations, the United Arab Emirates transmitted⁽⁴⁾ a 4 January 1986 resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States, condemning what it termed the hostile United States position against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and reaffirming the Arab States' support for it in withstanding such hostility.

The Jamahiriya drew attention on 24 January⁽⁵⁾ to what it called aggressive military exercises by the United States Sixth Fleet and other United States forces off its territorial waters. It stated that the manoeuvres, termed a warning to the Jamahiriya by the United States, represented an element of destabilization and a threat to international peace in the region. While expressing its desire to abstain from any undertaking likely to upset peace in the region, the Jamahiriya asserted its right to defend its territorial waters and integrity in line with the Charter and international law.

On 4 February,⁽⁶⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in a letter dealing with the interception of one of its civilian passenger planes by Israeli lighter aircraft (see p. 309), asserted that the Mediterranean had become a target of terrorism by the United States and Israel and that States in the region were responsible for banishing the United States military presence.

In a 6 February communiqué,⁽⁷⁾ the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries condemned the threats and possible use of force against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya as endangering international peace and stability. Warning against any precipitate steps by the United States, the Bureau called on States to adhere to the principles of non-use or threat of force as set out in the non-aligned Movement's 1984 Valletta Final Declaration.⁽⁸⁾ The Bureau reaffirmed its support for the principles of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States and called on States to observe the 1981 Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States.⁽⁹⁾

On 7 February,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya protested military exercises conducted from 24 to 31 January by the United States Sixth Fleet off its coast, asserting that they: hindered civilian contacts and international communications and trade; impeded the exploitation and exploration of natural resources in the exclusive economic zone, as laid down in the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;⁽¹¹⁾ depleted the region's resources; polluted its waters; and hindered scientific research activities. The Jamahiriya proposed that a joint meeting of European States and regional non-aligned States be convened to strengthen economic, commercial and cultural links and to draw up procedures to protect and conserve the Mediterranean as a joint economic zone, free from foreign military fleets and bases and free from damage caused by military exercises.

On 27 February,⁽¹²⁾ Yugoslavia, stressing that an increased concentration of military strength had aggravated the situation in the Mediterranean, believed that no lasting peace in the Mediterranean could be reached without solving the Middle East crisis.

On 24 March,⁽¹³⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged that further provocative military manoeuvres by the United States off its coast had started on 23 March, and alleged that their resumption and what it termed the threat of aggression against its sovereignty confirmed United States hostile intentions towards Libyan territory and its territorial waters. The Jamahiriya felt obliged to prepare to apply the provisions of Article 51 of the Charter (see APPENDIX II), with full responsibility resting on the United States, since it was convinced that the Security Council, because of the United States veto power, could no longer assume its responsibilities for maintaining international peace and security.

On 25 March,⁽¹⁴⁾ the United States reported that under Article 51 its forces had exercised their right of self-defence by responding to Libyan military attacks in international waters in the Gulf of Sidra. The United States asserted that its forces had exercised great restraint and had reacted only after the Jamahiriya had launched several missiles. Two Libyan naval vessels were disabled and key components of the Sirte missile complex, from which the United States said SA-5 missiles had been fired, were also damaged. The United States protested what it called the unjustified attacks against its naval units which were operating in and/or above international waters in the exercise of the freedom of navigation under international law and in accordance with a standard notification of intent, filed with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), which covered operations beginning on 23 March and concluding on 1 April. It stated that those operations in no way had threatened the Jamahiriya's security and any further attacks against United States forces operating in and over international waters off the Jamahiriya would, if necessary, be resisted with force.

Several States requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation. Malta, on 25 March,⁽¹⁵⁾ also asked the Council to consider action that could be taken to reduce tension and restore peace and stability in the region. The USSR, also on 25 March,⁽¹⁶⁾ referred to the situation in the southern Mediterranean, while Iraq, on 26 March,⁽¹⁷⁾ on behalf of the Arab Group, asked the Council to consider United States aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

A number of other letters were received which condemned the United States actions and demanded that such actions cease. Czechoslovakia, on 25 March,⁽¹⁸⁾ called it a violation of the norms of international law and disregard of the Charter and expressed its full support for the Libyan people and their leadership. The same day,⁽¹⁹⁾ the USSR news agency, TASS, said that the action was deliberate and had occurred because the United States did not like the progressive nature of the Jamahiriya's internal reforms and its anti-imperialistic and independent course.

The next day,⁽²⁰⁾ the USSR General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party said that the USSR favoured turning the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and stood by its proposals for extending agreed confidence-building measures to the region, reducing armed forces, removing ships carrying nuclear weapons, banning the deployment of nuclear weapons in non-nuclear Mediterranean countries and securing a commitment by the nuclear Powers not to use such weapons against any Mediterranean country which did not allow them to be deployed in its territory. If the United States withdrew its fleet, the USSR would do the same and was ready to enter into talks without delay.

Also on 26 March,⁽²¹⁾ Benin issued a declaration stating that by resorting to force and acts of deliberate provocation, the United States had not shown the wisdom and balance that should characterize the action of a great Power.

On the same date,⁽²²⁾ the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries also condemned what it called the United States aggression, and demanded an urgent cessation of military operations that endangered the peace of the region, particularly the security and territorial integrity of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. It also affirmed its full support for and solidarity with the Jamahiriya.

Several other countries similarly condemned the United States and expressed solidarity with the Jamahiriya: Democratic Yemen (25 March),⁽²³⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic (26 March) (24) Bulgaria (25) and Afghanistan (31 March).⁽²⁶⁾ March)⁽²⁵⁾ and

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March)

Meeting at the request of the Arab Group,⁽¹⁷⁾ Malta⁽¹⁵⁾ and the USSR,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Security Council held four meetings between 26 and 31 March.

Meeting numbers. SC 2668-2671.

Invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iran, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia. Under rule 39^c of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, also invited was the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as requested by the United Arab Emirates on 27 March.⁽²⁷⁾

The United States accused the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya of flouting international law and the Charter by using lethal force to assert its claim in the Gulf of Sidra. United States forces engaged in a peaceful freedom-of-navigation exercise in international waters had been subjected to unprovoked and unjustified attack by Libyan forces which had launched six surface-to-air missiles against United States vessels and aircraft; the United States said that advance notice had been posted in accordance with international practice and that the exercise was publicly and widely recorded. The United States had responded to the Jamahiriya's attack by exercising its right of self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter, and it added that any further attacks would also be resisted with force. The United States rejected the Jamahiriya's efforts to subvert by force the international legal right of freedom of navigation and the responsibility of the Council under the Charter. It believed that freedom of the seas was essential to maintaining international security and the flow of commerce and stated that it was long-standing United States policy to conduct naval and air exercises in waters and airspace in every part of the globe, as did other Council members. The United States said it had been in the Gulf of Sidra 16 times since 1981, and below the line claimed as a boundary by the Jamahiriya seven times before the operation in question. The United States believed that, in view of the grave challenge to freedom of navigation in international waters posed by the Libyan actions, the Council should reaffirm the internationally accepted freedoms of navigation and overflight and condemn those nations that resorted to force to violate those norms.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya asserted that the United States had brought the situation to the brink of explosion when it entered the Jamahiriya's territorial waters and bombarded parts of its territory, and that since 1981 the United States had carried out more than 18 exercises in the area which had engaged in shows of force or had threatened its use. Since the Jamahiriya was thousands of kilometres from the United States, it could not accept the explanation that the United States had acted out of self-defence. It said the United States had arrogated to itself the right to use the open sea for military manoeuvres and to test weapons, while at the same time exploiting and pillaging the resources of the sea. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya claimed that the presence of the fleets off the Mediterranean coast, whether in international or territorial waters, was a continuous source of threat and aggression and constituted interference in the sovereign decision-making powers of those coastal countries.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said its opposition to the United States hegemonic policies and subjugation of small States through the threat or use of force had been used wrongly by the United States to justify its actions as self-defence. The acts of aggression, the Jamahiriya said, represented a threat to a group of States which had adopted political stands and national legislation which were not to the United States liking; the conflict was a problem between the world community and the United States, which had arrogated to itself the right to reject certain national legislation by declaring it dangerous and the right to oppose that legislation and to exercise its right to self-defence. The Jamahiriya said that the United States alone could not arrogate to itself the right to defend international law by the threat or use of force. It believed that the international community had to be convinced that the right to use international waters was quite different from using the gulf adjacent to the Libyan coast, since that region was the cradle of civilization and religion and its inhabitants had long lived in peace and security. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called on all coastal Mediterranean countries to support a declaration of the region as a zone of peace and co-operation and the withdrawal of all military fleets from the area. In addition, it called for continued opposition to the presence of the United States fleet in the Mediterranean.

Most speakers in the debate-among them Afghanistan, Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iran, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia-deplored or condemned what they agreed were United States provocations against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the infringement of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, and the threats and use of force. They regarded these actions as exacerbating tension in a highly explosive region and seriously jeopardizing international peace and security. China and Kuwait advocated exhausting peaceful means to settle such disputes. Malta regarded recourse to a military solution as unacceptable and appealed to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States to seek a solution to their differences through negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice, as envisaged under Chapter VI of the Charter.

A number of States, among them Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, objected to the United States arrogating to itself the role of world policeman. For instance, the USSR said that the United States made no attempt to conceal its displeasure at the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's independent, anti-imperialist policy in international affairs and its vigorous opposition to attempts by the United States and Israel to impose separate capitulationist deals on the Arabs. According to Cuba, the incident was part of a United States global policy intended to intimidate and harass countries that did not follow Washington's dictates in international affairs, but instead chose their own path of development. Bulgaria said that the ambition of such a powerful State to arrogate to itself the role of guardian of the security of regions which, like the Mediterranean, were thousands of miles away from its own shores could not but arouse the concern of the international community. The Lao People's Democratic Republic believed that the United States was trying to dominate the world with its military superiority and its war machine, indiscriminately crushing underfoot anything in its path.

Viet Nam said that the United States was trying by all means to work out a pretext for the use of force against the Jamahiriya, blaming the Jamahiriya for what it labelled as terrorism.

The Congo said the attacks against the Jamahiriya were part of the disquieting logic of military confrontation and political destabilization. It pointed out that appropriate procedures were available to settle peacefully any justified complaints of one State against another. The status of maritime spaces subject to non-exclusive rights should be determined within the framework of the 1958(28) and 1982(11) Conventions on maritime legislation and other relevant international law.

The League of Arab States, condemning the deployment of the United States warships, said the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's complaint was shared by the entire Arab world-not only because a threat to one individual Arab State constituted a threat to them all, but also because if the precedent were allowed to go unchecked, the floodgates would be opened for repeated similar events.

China expressed deep concern that the United States Navy had subjected the Jamahiriya to military threat and had aggravated tension in the Mediterranean. It asserted that the United States attack violated norms governing international relations and that both sides should resolve their differences peacefully, in accordance with the Charter.

Malta, like other States-France, the United Kingdom and the United States-could not accept or recognize the contention that the Gulf of Sidra south of a line drawn along latitude 32° 30' North was part of Libyan territory or fell under Libyan sovereignty.

The United Kingdom, on the other hand, said that there was no justification for the attack made on United States forces by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's missiles. It asserted that it was impossible to argue convincingly that United States forces were doing anything other than exercising their right to freedom of navigation in international waters and airspace in accordance with international law. The United Kingdom said that all countries had a right to traverse international waters and no country had a right to arrogate those waters exclusively to itself; that was not only illegal but provocative. It regretted that the USSR had turned an incident which stemmed directly from a fundamental principle into an East-West issue.

Similarly, France said that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's claims to sovereignty over the Gulf of Sidra were without foundation in history and were unjustified under the 1958 and 1982 law of the sea Conventions. It also considered that any threat of armed intervention designed to enforce such territorial claims had to be ruled out. France hoped that the principles of international law, especially those relating to freedom of navigation in international space, would be safeguarded peacefully to avoid military confrontations, the consequences of which were difficult to control.

The Council took no action on a draft resolution⁽²⁹⁾ received on the last day of deliberations, sponsored by Bulgaria and the USSR, by which it would have firmly condemned the armed aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya as a violation of the Charter and the norms of international law. The Council would have demanded an immediate halt to hostile actions against the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of the Jamahiriya and demanded the immediate withdrawal of United States armed forces from the area. The Council also would have considered that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was entitled to compensation for the loss of life and property damage.

Communication (12 April). Alleging that United States aircraft-carriers and other naval units were proceeding towards the Libyan coast to stage military aggression against the Jamahiriya, on the pretext of taking revenge for acts to which it said it had no links, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 12 April⁽³⁰⁾ informed the Secretary-General that it considered itself in a state of legitimate self-defence under Charter Article 51; it reserved the right to take steps deemed necessary to protect its sovereignty and safeguard its independence, including requesting the implementation of mutual defence agreements and treaties concluded by it at any level. According to the Jamahiriya, peace in the region also was threatened because North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) officials had stated that the United States could rely on support from European States if it carried out an act of vengeance against the Jamahiriya. In addition, the Jamahiriya claimed that the Council's failure to adopt deterrent measures against prior United States aggression had caused the United States to persist in its aggression and had enabled it to obtain political and military assistance from the Council's permanent members and United Nations Member States.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (12-14 April)

In response to Malta's 12 April request⁽³¹⁾ that the Security Council consider and take appropriate and urgent action to stop the repeated threat or use of force, as well as the imminent resort to armed attack in the central Mediterranean, the Council met again on 12 and 14 April.

Meeting numbers. SC 2672, 2673.

The Council invited the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Ukrainian SSR at their request to participate without the right to vote. Under rule 39^d of the Council's rules of procedure, also invited was the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as requested by the United Arab Emirates on 14 April.⁽³²⁾

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya accused the United States of aiming to commit new armed aggression on the pretext of revenge against the Jamahiriya for acts whose perpetrators had not yet been determined. Denying any connection with those acts, the Jamahiriya believed that the situation was approaching the point of explosion and the world was in jeopardy because of the United States threat. It urged the international community, through the Council, to contain the situation and condemn the use of force.

The United States said that the use of force referred to in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter applied not only to acts by armed forces but also to acts by individuals which involved placing bombs in planes or in crowded cafes. It alleged that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had threatened the use of force, not only against United States citizens, but against anyone who was allied with the United States or shared its view that the Jamahiriya's conduct was that of an outlaw regime. The United States believed that the Council would not be facing its responsibilities or easing tensions unless it went to the root cause of the problem—the murderous behaviour of the Jamahiriya and its agents.

^dSee footnote a on p. 240.

The USSR claimed that militaristic hysteria had gripped the United States in the form of a severe, anti-Libyan syndrome. It alleged that calls were being made in Washington for the Libyan leadership to be taught a lesson by military means. The Council, the USSR asserted, was responsible for averting any further escalation of events in the Mediterranean. The USSR believed it was possible to divert the blow aimed at the Jamahiriya by using preventive diplomacy to its full potential. It urged the Council to support the Jamahiriya's sovereignty and territorial integrity and to demand that the United States stop its policy of aggression and withdraw its armed forces from Libyan shores.

Malta appealed to all parties concerned to exercise the utmost restraint and prudence, to act in full conformity with the Charter, and to ensure that they undertook no measures which would create a threat to peace and security in the central Mediterranean and beyond. It believed that the situation called for immediate action by the Council under Articles 33 and 34 of the Charter. For that reason, Malta said, it had submitted a draft resolution⁽³³⁾ to have the Council call on all parties concerned to desist from all further action which could lead to the use of armed force, and entrust the Secretary-General to take immediate appropriate action with those parties to ensure that only the peaceful means envisaged by the Charter were utilized to reconcile any differences between them. The Council took no action on the draft.

Communications (14-24 April). On 14 April,⁽³⁴⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged that the United States was preparing for new aggression against it. Repeated United States allegations ascribing various terrorist acts to the Jamahiriya or to its instigation were empty charges and were but a studied policy designed to prepare the atmosphere for aggression, on the pretext of retaliation. Once again the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that it was faced with but one choice, namely to resist the anticipated aggression, in self-defence under Article 51.

The United States reported on 14 April⁽³⁵⁾ that, in accordance with Article 51, its forces had exercised the right of self-defence by responding to what it said was an ongoing pattern of attacks by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya which had openly targeted United States citizens and installations, most recently a 5 April bombing of a Berlin discothèque, killing a United States soldier and injuring a large number of its servicemen and others. The United States said it had exercised great care in restricting its military response to terrorist-related targets and had taken every precaution to avoid civilian casualties and to limit collateral damage; its objective was to destroy facilities used to carry out what it termed the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's hostile policy of international terrorism and to discourage its future terrorist attacks. The United States pointed out that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's policy of threats and use of force violated Article 2(4) of the Charter.

On the same date,⁽³⁶⁾ the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the 12 member States of the European Community condemned the terrorist attacks on the discothèque and on a Trans World Airlines aircraft and deeply deplored the loss of innocent life. Considering that States clearly implicated in supporting terrorism should be induced to renounce such support, they called on the Jamahiriya to act accordingly. They rejected threats by Libyan leaders against States which deliberately encouraged recourse to acts of violence and directly threatened Europe. Regarding the Jamahiriya and other States clearly implicated in supporting terrorism, they decided to restrict freedom of movement of their diplomatic and consular personnel, reduce their mission staff and enforce stricter visa requirements and procedures. They reaffirmed that no arms or other military equipment would be exported to the Jamahiriya and said that they would try to ensure that their nationals and industry did not seek any commercial advantage from measures in reaction to terrorist activities. The Twelve decided to inform the Arab States of their conclusions and to invite them to analyse international terrorism. In concluding, they underlined the need for restraint on all sides.

At an emergency session of the ministerial-level meeting of its Co-ordinating Bureau (New Delhi, India, 15 April),⁽³⁷⁾ the non-aligned Movement condemned the United States action and demanded that it immediately halt its military operations and compensate the Jamahiriya fully and promptly for its human and material losses. The Ministers and heads of delegation called on the Security Council to condemn the attacks and prevent their recurrence.

On 15 April,⁽³⁸⁾ the USSR, condemning and demanding an end to what it called aggressive United States action, claimed that such action confirmed its essentially aggressive approach towards independent developing countries. Such actions affected relations between the USSR and the United States, it warned.

On the same date, Burkina Faso,⁽³⁹⁾ Czechoslovakia⁽⁴⁰⁾ and Democratic Yemen⁽⁴¹⁾ condemned the United States armed attack and expressed support for the Jamahiriya.

Burkina Faso, also on 15 April⁽⁴²⁾ associated itself in advance with the initiatives which it said the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) would pursue to ensure that Africa stood firm against any attempt to reconquer the continent. The same day,⁽⁴³⁾ Burkina Faso's Revolutionary Defence Committee of Kadiogo, Ouagadougou, adopted a declaration in which it condemned the armed attacks by the United States and denounced what it referred to as the slaughter of the Jamahiriya's innocent civilians.

On the same date Bulgaria,(44) Burundi,(45) Ghana,(46) the Lao People's Democratic Republic,(47) Nicaragua,(48) Nigeria(49) and Viet Nam(50) condemned the United States armed attack, as did Madagascar(51) and Mongoliat(52) on 16 April.

Bolivia, on 16 April,(53) condemned all forms of terrorism and appealed to the parties involved in the Gulf of Sidra incident to desist from all acts of violence.

On 16 April, Tunisia⁽⁵⁴⁾ denied an alleged statement, reported on 16 April by the official Libyan news agency, Jana, affirming that the United States was using Tunisian territory and airspace for aggression against the Jamahiriya and that the passage towards its territory and the aggressive approach were directed from Tunisia.

Also on 16 April,(55) Italy reported that two explosions had occurred off the coast of the island of Lampedusa on 15 April, presumably due to missiles fired at a radar installation, and that the Jamahiriya had claimed responsibility. Strongly protesting the attack, Italy said its armed forces had been instructed to respond to threats of attack.

On 17 April,(56) the Jamahiriya protested to ICAO that on 15 April the United States Air Force had attacked its Tripoli and Benina airports, and alleged that on 17 April the United States Sixth Fleet had interfered with a Bulgarian passenger aircraft on its way from Sofia to Tripoli. The same day, the Jamahiriya said, an American military aircraft was spotted flying below a Yugoslav passenger aircraft on its way from Belgrade to Tripoli over Libyan territory, obliging the aircraft to return without landing at Tripoli. It requested ICAO to intercede to induce the United States to cease such acts and to urge it to respect its obligations as a signatory to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944).

In its Political Declaration, the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, 16-19 April)(57) also condemned the attack and called on the United States to desist from undertaking aggressive acts, including military manoeuvres in the Gulf of Sidra.

On 24 April,(58) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya drew the Security Council President's attention to a 20 April radio statement by a United States official that the Libyans knew they were a target and that their President was aware that he was not safe from further attack. The Jamahiriya asserted that the statement was an extension of what it claimed the United States President had said of the 15 April attack: "Today we have done what we had to do. If necessary, we shall do it again." The Jamahiriya cautioned that if that policy were pursued, it would have repercussions on the United States or on one of its allies. It reminded the Council of its obligations to prevent aggression and protect international peace from all threats.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (15-24 April)

In response to separate requests received on 15 April from Burkino Faso,(59) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,(60) Oman on behalf of the Arab Group(61) and the Syrian Arab Republic(62) that the Security Council consider and adopt urgent and effective measures against the armed military aggression staged by the United States against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Council held nine meetings between 15 and 24 April.

Meeting numbers. SC 2674-2680. 2682, 2683.

Invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Sudan, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia. Under rule 39^e of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, also invited were: the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as requested on 15 April by the United Arab Emirates,(63) and the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, as requested by Morocco on 21 April.(64) On 18 April, the Council decided, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom), that an invitation should be accorded to the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), as proposed by the United Arab Emirates on 17 April.(65) The Council President explained that the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on a Member State when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.^f

Before the vote, the United States reiterated its consistent position that the only legal basis to grant a hearing to persons speaking for a non-governmental entity was rule 39, and that it op-^eSee footnote a on p. 240.

^fRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

posed special ad hoc procedures whereby the Council appeared selectively to try to enhance the prestige of those wishing to speak in the Council.

On 21 April, the Council voted on a draft resolution,⁽⁶⁶⁾ submitted by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago and the United Arab Emirates. The vote was 9 to 5, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: Bulgaria, China, Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates.

Against: Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Venezuela.

Owing to the negative votes of permanent members, the draft was not adopted.

By the draft, the Council would have: condemned the armed attack by the United States in violation of the Charter and the norms of international conduct; called on it to refrain forthwith from attacks or threats thereof; condemned all terrorist activities whether perpetrated by individuals, groups or States; and called on all parties to refrain from resorting to force and to resolve their differences peacefully in keeping with the Charter.

The United States asserted that self-defence measures had become necessary after repeated and protracted efforts failed to deter the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya from ongoing attacks against the United States. On 14 April, it had struck the Jamahiriya's command and central systems, intelligence communications, logistics and training facilities-sites used to carry out the Jamahiriya's policy of international terrorism, including ongoing attacks against United States citizens and installations. It stressed that there was direct, precise and irrefutable evidence that the Jamahiriya was responsible for the Berlin bombing that killed a United States Army sergeant and a Turkish woman and injured 230 other people, among them 50 United States military personnel. It claimed that the Jamahiriya's admitted, continued policy of terrorist threats and the use of force, in violation of Charter Article 2(4), was directed not only against the United States but against its neighbours, European countries and places as far away as Northern Ireland, the Philippines and Central America; terrorism was part of the Jamahiriya's foreign policy. The United States totally rejected the draft resolution since it falsely assumed that the essential problem stemmed from actions by United States forces against the Jamahiriya. This was contradicted by irrefutable evidence and by the long list of countries which had suffered from the Jamahiriya's terrorism; the real issue was the Jamahiriya's blatant, unrepentant and continuing use of force, which was ignored in the draft-nowhere had the Jamahiriya been asked to refrain from its murderous activities.

The United Kingdom said the United States was justified in concluding that Libyan defiance of the norms of international behaviour would continue. Citing incidents of Libyan terrorism in Ireland, France and the United States, as well as in the United Kingdom, it said that State-directed terrorism was the main policy of the Jamahiriya. No one was safe from Colonel Muammar Qaddafi's murderers, the United Kingdom said, a fact well known in the Arab world, in Africa and in Ireland, and perhaps it would be well known world-wide. The United Kingdom supported the principles invoked by many regarding the need to seek a peaceful settlement of disputes and to refrain from the threat or use of force in accordance with Charter Article 2. However, it said the United States had the inherent right of self-defence, as reaffirmed in Article 51. As to the draft, the United Kingdom pointed out that it did not mention the Jamahiriya and omitted any reference to the long history of State-directed provocations and terrorism.

France shared the indignation of the United States and the United Kingdom concerning attacks perpetrated against their nationals. It believed that terrorism could not be effectively combated unless determined, tenacious and patient efforts were made, combining national measures with greater international co-operation. Although it did not associate itself with the United States intervention against the Jamahiriya, France said the draft was excessive and unbalanced, making no mention of the Jamahiriya's responsibility.

Australia believed there was substantial evidence of the Jamahiriya's involvement in international terrorism and the situation had reached the point where the United States had felt compelled to take military action; a peaceful solution would involve the Jamahiriya's termination of its involvement in terrorist activities and United States cessation of further military action against it. Australia stated that the Council had to assume its responsibilities and act constructively with the co-operation of the parties. Australia also saw the draft as unbalanced, focusing its criticism only on the United States and not directly addressing the Jamahiriya's actions which played a large part in contributing to the tensions in the region.

Denmark said the draft did not address the interrelationship between action and reaction which had been at play. Believing, beyond doubt, that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was behind terrorist acts which created tension in the Mediterranean, Denmark deplored the United States actions and felt that reaction to terrorism had to be proportionate to achieve its goal without leading to a dangerous escalation of violence.

Venezuela rejected the use of armed action and violence by individuals or groups of individuals to resolve disputes between nations. It believed that the draft's adoption would not have encouraged a peaceful solution of the dispute, nor alleviated tension in the Mediterranean; the draft did not take into account the whole background of the problem and all of its aspects, nor did it establish the link between the crucial issues that led to the conflict.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that 33 United States military aircraft, using fragmentation bombs, some of which had not yet exploded, had raided civilian targets in Benghazi and Tripoli, damaging civilian airports and aircraft, houses, schools and a centre for the handicapped. The Council, it asserted, had the responsibility to condemn speedily and unambiguously the raid and its perpetrators. It believed the gravity of this threat to peace was compounded by the fact that the raid had taken place with the support of certain States, first and foremost the United Kingdom which provided the logistics. It believed that the United States had fallen prey to the arrogance and madness of power and wanted to become the world's policeman; any party that did not agree to become a United States vassal and agent was an outlaw, a terrorist, a communist and a devil. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that although the Council had been unable to take a decision because of the United States and its allies, the entire world supported the Jamahiriya-the non-aligned, the Arab nation, the people of Africa, members of the socialist community and the Islamic nation.

The USSR saw a clear link between the armed anti-Libyan action and United States overall policy aimed at subjecting sovereign States to its diktat, at stirring up existing hotbeds of tension and creating new ones, and at destabilizing the international situation. It believed the aggression against the Jamahiriya should have been even more vigorously condemned in the draft, which should have reflected, in accordance with the norms of international law, that the Jamahiriya had a legitimate right to compensation for damage. The vetoes by the United States and its allies did not mean that the issue's consideration was not giving results, but emphasized that the Western Powers had wound up in isolation.

The vast majority of speakers addressing the Council condemned or deplored the United States actions against the Jamahiriya, saying that such actions violated the most fundamental norms and principles of international law. Others stressed that the United States, a super-Power and a permanent member of the Council, bore special responsibility for maintaining peace: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, China, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Hungary, India, also on behalf of the non-aligned Movement, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, League of Arab States, Madagascar, Nicaragua, Oman, on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, Pakistan, PLO, Poland, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia. Some of those countries, notably Burkina Faso, the Byelorussian SSR, the Congo, Ghana, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar and the Sudan, associated themselves with the position taken by the non-aligned Movement on 15 April⁽³⁷⁾ (see p. 252).

The Syrian Arab Republic asserted that the Jamahiriya was innocent in the matter of the Berlin incident; information showed that a group of West German revolutionaries was preparing an attack on the discotheque. The German Democratic Republic believed that the United States armed aggression against the Jamahiriya should not be regarded as an isolated event but should be viewed in connection with the attempts of reactionary imperialist circles to justify their policy of arms buildup and global hegemony, as well as interference in the internal affairs of other States by heating up international tensions.

Bulgaria said the aggression had been committed on the spurious and demagogic pretext of combating international terrorism and in the name of self-defence. It said that hardly anyone would condone the irresponsibility and adventurism of the United States, which, driven by a dangerous and pathological ambition to play the role of world policeman, had arrogated to itself the right to attack and punish inconvenient sovereign States either in its immediate vicinity or thousands of miles away.

Cuba said it was the hegemonic designs of the United States, its hatred of revolutions, its desire to change the course of history and its unscrupulous nature that were in evidence in its act against a country of under 4 million inhabitants. It said the United States was most cruelly applying the policy of State terrorism by involving as an accomplice to its misdeeds the United Kingdom, which had lent its territory as a staging ground for the aggressors.

Mongolia expressed a similar concern over the United States use of its aircraft based in a NATO country, proving that the NATO military bloc and American forward-based forces in Europe were used by the United States against non-aligned, developing States and national liberation movements. The Congo wondered why a small country like the Jamahiriya had become public enemy number one for the United States, a status that would be expected to be conferred on a more powerful country.

Iran, stating that the attack constituted a policy of aggression, pure gunboat diplomacy and an act of war, called for an extensive political and economic boycott of the United States.

The League of Arab States was outraged at the United States aggression and said it tended to reinforce the element of anarchy in international relations. PLO said the United States was extending its imperialist hegemony to the whole Arab region, which for some time had been going through a stage in which United States imperialism, no longer content with giving military, economic, political and diplomatic assistance to Israel, was playing a direct role in the aggression and fighting.

Ghana believed that the cause of international terrorism was the frustration felt by Palestinians and Arabs generally over the failure of the international community, especially Israel, to ensure that justice was handed down to them and that the inalienable rights of millions of Palestinians to a homeland and life in dignity were guaranteed.

Several countries expressed concern for the dangerous precedent which the United States action might set; among them were Bangladesh, Ghana, Pakistan, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, the USSR and Yugoslavia.

Algeria pointed out that Article 51 set limitations on the use of force in exercising the legitimate right of self-defence in the absence of an act of aggression, and affirmed that there was no such act by the Jamahiriya; moreover, that Article provided for the suspension of the right to self-defence while the Council was seized of the situation; the United States had the prime duty to do nothing that could hinder or destroy the Council's ongoing efforts. Ghana, Madagascar, Qatar and Uganda expressed similar views regarding the right of self-defence as set out in Article 51. Ghana added that the United States did not bother to exhaust the Charter provisions for settling disputes, citing Article 33, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations(67) and the good offices of the Secretary-General.

Several countries were disappointed at the Council's ineffectiveness in applying preventive diplomacy. Malta said that it had at all times emphasized the need for such diplomacy and the use of negotiations to avoid the use of force. It appealed to the Council to urge the parties involved to use peaceful means to reconcile their differences. The United Arab Emirates said preventive diplomacy had failed; the Council, over a two-week period, had failed to arrive at a resolution that would end United States aggression against the Jamahiriya and had also failed to take steps to prevent the most recent attack; the militarily weak countries would continue to pay the price of the Council's silence.

The United Kingdom was also concerned over the ineffectiveness of the Council in resolving the long-standing threat to peace. Yugoslavia said that, guided by experience and the duties spelt out in the Charter, the international community, the United Nations and the Council must be able to prevent situations such as the United States armed aggression, otherwise the world would embark on a path leading to lawlessness in international relations, the total absence of stability, a situation in which arms would replace reason and, ultimately, the real possibility of wider conflagration. The Congo said the Council's failure to play a role commensurate with the crisis could enable those who were most determined to make use of armed violence and to regard what might be described as the Organization's anaesthetized state as a tribute to their policy. India, for the non-aligned Movement, said that even though the Council stood paralysed as a result of the triple veto, its responsibility was not over; it was imperative that the Council discharge its responsibilities in maintaining international peace. It urged the Secretary-General to persuade the parties to exercise restraint and to resolve differences peacefully in keeping with the Charter.

Thailand, on the other hand, pointed out that the United Nations was actively preoccupied with the issue of terrorism and had managed to win some consensus on the subject. It said that crises such as the one at hand and its aftermath often served to jolt the international community from its complacency and passivity.

Communications (May-October). The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged on 8 May(68) that the United States was escalating aggression against it by persistently exerting economic, military, psychological and media pressure in an attempt to terrorize the Libyan people and to present a false image of it to the world. The Jamahiriya said the United States and its allies were determined to persist in their aggression by threatening to launch a war against the Jamahiriya on the pretext of stamping out terrorism.

On 4 July,(69) the USSR asserted that the Mediterranean had become an arena for military confrontation because of a United States policy of neo-globalism, destabilization of States with which it did not agree and suppression of national liberation movements. The USSR expressed support for the non-aligned countries' proposal to transform the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and also stood by its proposals for extending a reed confidence-building measures to the region(20) (see p. 249). In addition, the USSR was ready to enter unconditionally into talks aimed at the simultaneous withdrawal of United States and USSR fleets from the area. The elimination of weapons of mass destruction by the end of the century and reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe would also improve the situation in the Mediterranean and the world as a whole. It called on the United Nations to promote the transformation of the region into one of peace.

The High Council of Religious Scholars and Clergymen of Afghanistan on 28 July(70) condemned the United States actions and expressed its belief that the United Nations would frustrate the efforts made by the United States to fan tension and threaten peace.

On 31 July,(71) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya challenged the United States to submit to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) or to a United States or Western European court evidence that the Jamahiriya had been involved in terrorist operations in Europe. If found guilty, it would accept the court ruling, try those involved and pay reparations to those who had suffered losses. However, if found innocent, the Jamahiriya believed an international court should try the United States and its President for the terrorist act against the Jamahiriya and be made to pay reparations.

The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, 28-30 July), in its Declaration⁽⁷²⁾ on the United States attack, said that the deliberate attempt to kill Libyans violated the principles of international law, asserted that the European Economic Community had no justification to maintain sanctions against the Jamahiriya in view of the continued United States provocation, and asked that the attack against the Jamahiriya be placed on the agenda of the General Assembly's 1986 regular session. OAU offered its good offices towards defusing the tense situation.

On 27 August,(73) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya again drew attention to the military manoeuvres close to its borders and territorial waters, and to the continued presence of United States fleets. Denying that it was party to terrorist activities, it challenged the United States through the United Nations, including ICJ to furnish proof and called on the Security Council to shoulder its responsibility in the maintenance of peace.

In its Political Declaration, the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries⁽⁷⁴⁾ (Harare, 1-6 September) condemned the United States and called on it to desist from acts endangering peace, security and co-operation and to compensate the Jamahiriya for its losses. The non-aligned Movement supported the request for inclusion of the question in the Assembly's agenda. In its Economic Declaration, the Conference condemned the United States imposition of an economic boycott and the freezing of the Jamahiriya's assets in the United States as a form of economic coercion for political ends. On 17 September,(75) the Jamahiriya forwarded the relevant sections of the two Declarations. In its final communique, the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference⁽⁷⁶⁾ (New York, 2 October) also condemned the United States and called for similar measures.

On 3 October,(77) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya drew attention to an alleged statement by the United States Secretary of State at a 2 October press conference that the United States was close to war with the Jamahiriya. It asserted that the United States was fully responsible for the deterioration of the situation and that the assumption of the responsibilities placed on the Secretary-General by the Charter had become more urgent than ever.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November 1986, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/38 by recorded vote.

Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab-Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986 The General Assembly,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain from the threat or use of force in their international relations and to settle their disputes by peaceful means,

Reaffirming also the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their political, social and economic system without any interference, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Recalling its resolution 40/157 of 16 December 1985 on the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region,

Deeply concerned at the threats and aggressive provocations, and the imposition of comprehensive cultural and economic sanctions, including the freezing of assets and properties, carried out against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,

Deeply concerned also at the series of disinformation campaigns carried out against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,

Gravely concerned at the aerial and naval military attack perpetrated against the cities of Tripoli and Benghazi on 15 April 1986, which constitutes a serious threat to peace and security 'in the Mediterranean region,

Noting with concern that the Security Council has been prevented from discharging its responsibilities owing to the negative vote of certain permanent members,

Taking into consideration the Declaration adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 28 to 30 July 1986,

Taking note of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and other relevant declarations of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in this context,

Taking note also of the final communique adopted at the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held in New York on 2 October 1986,

1. Condemns the military attack perpetrated against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 15 April 1986, which constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and of international law;

2. Culls upon the Government of the United States in this regard to refrain from the threat or use of force in the settlement of disputes and differences with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and to resort to peaceful means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Calls upon all States to refrain from extending any assistance or facilities for perpetrating acts of aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya;

4. Affirms the right of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to receive appropriate compensation for the material and human losses inflicted upon it;

5. Requests the Security Council to remain seized of the matter and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 41/38

20 November 1986 Meeting 78 79-2833 (recorded vote)

27-nation draft (A/41/L.35/Rev.1); agenda item 142.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

In explanation of vote, New Zealand said that the text was unacceptable because it involved Assembly endorsement of a one-sided and unbalanced view of events, condemning the retaliation while disregarding the chain of events which led to United States action; and no reference was made to the Jamahiriya's actions which had provoked the attack. It believed the Jamahiriya's failure to heed earlier United States efforts to persuade it to desist from supporting terrorism should also have been pointed out. New Zealand, although opposing all forms of violence in international relations and acts of terrorism, regretted that the United States had taken military action, since, it explained, major acts of terrorism might justify the use of force so long as the force used was reasonable and proportionate to the danger. New Zealand said that the military action might have been justifiable as an act of self-defence but its conformity with United States rights under international law did not necessarily make it right; terrorism would not be eradicated until the situations that gave rise to it had been resolved.

Chile also saw the text as unbalanced and said it did not tackle the problem. It asserted that a resolution sponsored by the USSR on the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their political, social and economic system without any interference represented a kind of sarcasm, since failure to respect those rights was the USSR's habitual form of conduct. It added that it could not support a draft which made no mention of terrorism.

Similarly, Spain said the text reflected an incomplete picture that was out of context with the circumstances and factors that played a relevant part in the conflict, particularly in that there was no reference to the problem of international terrorism.

Several other States reaffirmed their condemnation of all forms of terrorism and their support for the resolution of conflicts by peaceful means, but had reservations on the text. Turkey said it did not encompass all the elements reflecting the position of the parties and did not take into account the distinct competence and responsibilities of the Security Council. Furthermore, it did not believe that the adoption of the draft could promote a solution to the dispute through peaceful means, a position shared by Finland.

Although Sweden supported the resolution's general thrust, it said that it focused on only one—although extremely serious—action in the dispute and contained elements, notably in the eighth preambular paragraph, which it could not accept for reasons of principle. Austria, too, felt certain paragraphs were inappropriate.

(For other questions relating to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, see p. 168 and LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I.)

Security in the Mediterranean

The views of eight States on strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region were forwarded to the General Assembly as at 5 November 1986.(78) They had been submitted in reply to the Assembly's 1985 invitation for States' ideas and suggestions on their potential contribution to strengthening peace in the region.(79)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/89 without vote on 4 December 1986.

Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/102 of 9 December 1981, 37/118 of 16 December 1982, 38/189 of 20 December 1983, 39/153 of 17 December 1984 and 40/157 of 16 December 1985.

Recognizing the importance of promoting peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and of strengthening further the economic, commercial and cultural links in the region,

Expressing concern at the persistent and increasing tension in parts of the Mediterranean region and the consequent threat to peace,

Deeply concerned at the continuing military operations in the Mediterranean and the grave dangers that these create for peace, security and general equilibrium in the region,

Considering, in this regard, the urgent need for all States to conform in their actions to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as to the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering also the necessity of intensifying efforts towards the promotion of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region,

Reaffirming the need to promote security and to strengthen co-operation in the region, as provided for in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975,

Recalling the declarations of successive meetings of non-aligned countries concerning the Mediterranean, as well as official declarations on, and contributions to, peace and security in the Mediterranean region made by individual countries,

Reaffirming the primary role of Mediterranean countries in the promotion of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region,

Recalling, in this connection, the Final Declaration adopted at Valletta on 11 September 1984 by the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and the commitments assumed by the participants with the objective of contributing to peace and security in the region,

Welcoming the efforts realized by the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to strengthen regional co-operation in various fields among themselves and between them and the European countries,

Taking note of the adoption by the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe of the Document of the Stockholm Conference on concrete, militarily significant, politically binding and verifiable confidence- and security-building measures,

Taking note of the desire of the non-aligned Mediterranean countries to launch a process of consultations with the European-Mediterranean and other European countries on peace, security and co-operation in the region,

Taking note also of the debate on this item during the various sessions of the General Assembly and, in particular, of the report of the Secretary-General on this Item,

1. Reaffirms.

(a) That the security of the Mediterranean is closely linked with European security and with international peace and security;

(b) That further efforts are necessary for the reduction of tension and of armaments and for the creation of conditions of security and fruitful co-operation in all fields for all countries and peoples of the Mediterranean, on the basis of the principles of sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, security, non-intervention and non-interference, non-violation of international borders, non-use of force or threat of use of force, the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, peaceful settlement of disputes and respect for permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

(c) The need for just and viable solutions of existing problems and crises in the area on the basis of the provisions of the Charter and of relevant resolutions of the United Nations, the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to self-determination and independence;

2. Takes note of paragraph 24 of the Document of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, which, inter alia, confirms the intention of the participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to develop good-neighbourly relations with all States of the region, with due regard to reciprocity, and in the spirit of the principles contained in the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States, so as to promote confidence and security and make peace prevail in the region in accordance with the provisions contained in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act;

3. Welcomes any further communication to the Secretary-General, from all States, of proposals, declarations and recommendations on strengthening peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

4. Urges all States to co-operate with the Mediterranean States in the further efforts required to reduce tension and promote peace, security and co-operation in the region in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Encourages once again efforts to intensify existing forms and to promote new forms of co-operation in various fields, particularly those aimed at reducing tension and strengthening confidence and security in the region;

6. Renews its invitation to the Secretary-General to give due attention to the question of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and, if requested to do so, to render advice and assistance to concerted efforts by Mediterranean countries in promoting peace, security and co-operation in the region;

7. Invites the member States of the relevant regional organizations to lend support and to submit to the Secretary-General concrete ideas and suggestions on their potential contribution to the strengthening of peace and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, on the basis of all replies received and notifications submitted in implementation of the present resolution and taking into account the debate on this question during its forty-first session, an updated report on the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region".

Chapter IX

Middle East

The conflict in the Middle East, including the problem of Palestine-viewed as a principal element-occupied much United Nations attention throughout 1986. The quest for a peaceful settlement was pursued in the General Assembly, the Security Council and other bodies, which considered various aspects of the situation, such as the Palestine question, incidents and disputes between individual Arab States and Israel, the situation in Lebanon and in the territories occupied by Israel, and Palestine refugees. The United Nations continued its two major peace-keeping operations in the region, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). The latter had pursued its duties under constant and growing danger, the Secretary-General said in his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3). Paying tribute to the peace-keeping forces, he added that they served the vital purpose to reduce and mitigate violence and to create, or preserve, conditions in which peace might be sought; their sacrifices posed an obligation on all to work constructively for stability and peace in the region.

Despite efforts from many sides to advance the search for a just and lasting settlement, the Secretary-General reported, there was an alarming absence of a generally acceptable and active negotiating process and a way must be found to initiate that as soon as possible with the participation of all concerned. The call for an International Peace Conference on the Middle East was again endorsed by the Assembly, which stressed the need to convene it without delay.

The Palestine question continued to be a concern of the Assembly and its Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights). There was a wide measure of agreement, the Secretary-General stated, that peace in the Middle East could best be achieved through a comprehensive settlement to cover all aspects, including the Palestine question.

Following consideration of the annual report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the Assembly requested the Committee to continue reviewing the situation, as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine, invited co-operation with the Committee and the Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights, and asked the Department of Public Information to continue its information programme on the question.

The Assembly also dealt with the status of Jerusalem, again determining that Israel's 1980 decision to impose its laws and administration on the city was null and void. The Security Council in January 1986 considered two incidents that took place at the Haram al-Sharif (Al-Aqsa Mosque and Dome of the Rock) in Jerusalem. A draft resolution by which the Council would have strongly deplored the provocative acts was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.

In July, the Secretary-General convened a meeting of United Nations programmes, organizations, agencies, funds and organs, also attended by the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), Arab host countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), to assess progress towards a co-ordinated programme of assistance for Palestinians. Both the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly asked for increased assistance; the Assembly also welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to send a mission to prepare the programme and, like the Council, urged that assistance to the occupied Palestinian territories be disbursed only for the benefit of Palestinians and in a manner that would not serve to prolong the Israeli occupation.

The Security Council considered the situation in Lebanon on various occasions and, in January, voted on a draft to have the Council strongly demand that Israel desist from its measures against the civilian population and reaffirm the urgent need for Israel's withdrawal. Because of the negative vote of a permanent member, the text was not adopted.

In June, the Council expressed grave concern at the intensified fighting in Beirut, especially at Palestinian refugee camps, and appealed for it to end. In December, Council members voiced serious concern at the escalating violence particularly affecting the population of the camps. They appealed for restraint in order to end those acts and alleviate the suffering.

Following violent incidents in the UNIFIL zone in mid-August, and another in early September when three UNIFIL soldiers were killed, the Council issued a statement expressing indignation and calling for reinforced security measures. The Council also expressed appreciation for the immediate dispatch of a mission to look at measures to enable the Force to carry out its mandate; the second part of the mission's task was to consult with the parties on how progress could be made towards implementing the Council's 1978 resolution calling for strict respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence, and for Israel's withdrawal, and establishing UNIFIL for the purpose of confirming that withdrawal, restoring peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority.

Following another attack against UNIFIL personnel in mid-September 1986 and an increase of violence in UNIFIL's area of deployment, the Council strongly condemned the attacks, urged all parties to co-operate and asked the Secretary-General to arrange for the Force's deployment to the southern border of Lebanon. In October, the Council expressed regret that the consultations on implementing its 1978 resolution had failed to yield results and called on the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts towards that end; the Council again urged the parties concerned to support UNIFIL fully and called for an end to any military presence in southern Lebanon not accepted by the Lebanese authorities.

The Council also called on all countries to assume their financial responsibilities towards UNIFIL, since the shortfall of $242.6 million continued to pose a very serious problem for the financial management of the Force. Calling again for voluntary contributions, the Assembly appropriated about $112 million for UNIFIL operations from 19 April 1986 to 18 January 1987 and authorized commitments of $145 million for the following 12 months.

For the first time since UNIFIL's inception in 1978, the Security Council unanimously extended the Force's mandate. In 1986, the mandate was extended twice, for three and then six months. The mandate of UNDOF was also renewed twice during the year. The Assembly appropriated $35.7 million for UNDOF's operation from 1 June 1986 to 31 May 1987 and authorized commitments of up to $17.4 million for the following six months. UNDOF continued to supervise the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights area and to ensure that there were no military forces in the area of separation. The Assembly, as well as the Commission on Human Rights, dealt with the situation in the Golan Heights since Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration there. The Assembly again declared that decision illegal and null and void.

The 1981 bombing by Israeli aircraft of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad was again the subject of an Assembly resolution. Considering that Israel had not committed itself not to attack or threaten nuclear facilities in Iraq or elsewhere, the Assembly called on Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards. It reaffirmed that Iraq was entitled to compensation for damages and requested the Conference on Disarmament to continue negotiations on an agreement prohibiting military attacks on nuclear facilities.

The interception in early February by Israeli fighter planes of a Libyan civilian aircraft with a Syrian delegation on board was considered by the Security Council. The Council voted on a draft resolution by which it would have condemned Israel for the act and would have warned that, if such acts were repeated, it would consider adequate measures. The text was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

The situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed Middle East conflicts was again considered by the Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices). Israel's policy in the territories resulted in an escalation of violence, the Committee concluded, following which Israel adopted its so-called iron-fist policy marked by new security arrangements, which again led to an aggravation of tension between the Israel Defence Forces and the population.

The Assembly dealt with specific aspects of the Committee's report. It demanded that Israel desist from certain policies and practices, that it comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention), that it desist from changing the territories' legal status or composition, that it rescind its action against Palestinian detainees and release them immediately, that it rescind the expulsion of Palestinian leaders and that it ensure the freedom of educational institutions.

The Security Council met in December to consider the worsening situation in the territories. It deplored the Israeli army's firing on students, called on Israel to abide by the fourth Geneva Convention and release any persons detained as a result of events at Bir Zeit University, and called on all parties to exercise maximum restraint and avoid violence.

Relief operations in Lebanon again dominated the work of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) in 1986. In addition, UNRWA continued assisting those refugees in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, providing education, health and relief services.

Middle East situation

Attaining a just and lasting peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israel conflict continued to be elusive, the Secretary-General observed in October 1986,⁽¹⁾ and no agreement had been reached on convening an International Peace Conference on the Middle East as recommended by the General Assembly. There had been bilateral contacts between leaders of the various interested parties, but there was an alarming absence of a generally accepted and active negotiating process, he said.

The highly volatile situation continued and a general sense of insecurity persisted which, combined with heavy military expenditures, hindered economic and social progress. Tension continued and violent incidents frequently occurred in the territories occupied by Israel and beyond. The United Nations endeavoured to provide a measure of relief to the local populations, especially Palestinian refugees, and through peace-keeping operations exerted its best efforts, sometimes in difficult circumstances, to help maintain quiet in sensitive areas such as the Golan Heights and southern Lebanon. However, those were essentially temporary arrangements. For as long as a peaceful settlement was not reached, the situation would remain unstable. There was a grave danger that if the deadlock was allowed to persist, major hostilities would break out again as had happened several times in the past.

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 41/162 A, dealt with the wider aspects of the Middle East situation. Reaffirming its conviction that the question of Palestine was the core of the conflict in the region, it declared again that peace in the Middle East was indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution under United Nations auspices and on the basis of United Nations resolutions.

Under the agenda item on the Palestine question (see p. 269), the Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement of the call for an international peace conference (resolution 41/43 D).

Communications. In connection with the Middle East situation, a number of communications were addressed during the year to the General Assembly and Security Council Presidents and to the Secretary-General. A variety of aspects were covered in the following documents adopted by intergovernmental bodies, usually forwarded by the host countries: the final communiqué and resolutions adopted by the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, Morocco, 6-10 January 1986);⁽²⁾ the Political Declaration adopted by the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 16-19 April)⁽³⁾ a resolution adopted by the Seventy-fifth Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Mexico City, 7-12 April)⁽⁴⁾ the Political Declaration of the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-6 September);⁽⁵⁾ and the final communiqué of the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 2 October).⁽⁶⁾

Among the points made by these bodies on the Middle East situation in general were the following. The Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers reaffirmed that the Palestine question and the Middle East problem must be treated and solved as an indivisible whole, and any solution involving only some of the parties to the conflict or limited to only some of its causes was not acceptable. The Co-ordinating Bureau of the non-aligned countries reaffirmed its solidarity with the Arab countries which were victims of Israeli aggression and condemned any treaty that violated or infringed on the rights of the Arab nation and the Palestinians; it called for effective measures, including sanctions, by the Security Council to oblige Israel to end its occupation of Arab and Palestinian territories. The inter-Parliamentary Conference considered that a just and lasting Middle East peace should be pursued through implementation of United Nations resolutions and called on parliaments and Governments to support the early convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East; it affirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and demanded Israel's withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories. The heads of State or Government of non-aligned countries expressed concern over the deterioration of the situation in the Middle East as a result of continued Israeli occupation of Palestine, and reaffirmed their support to the Arab States and PLO; they requested effective steps by the United Nations, including sanctions, to force Israel to withdraw from the occupied territories. The Co-ordination Meeting of Foreign Ministers emphasized the importance of holding a Middle East peace conference and stressed that efforts must be made for the conference to be held in 1987.

A number of letters were received from Israel. On 25 February,⁽⁷⁾ it reported what it called defamatory attacks against it and the Jewish people during the 1985 General Assembly session when, it alleged, anti-Semitic and anti-Israel slander had reached new levels. On 4 June 1986,⁽⁸⁾ Israel complained about Iran referring in the Security Council on 23 May to the "Zionist base" as a cancer to be eradicated, thus descending to genocidal incitement.

On 15 April,⁽⁹⁾ Israel submitted what it said was a calendar of Middle East violence, listing bombings, kidnappings, assassinations, explosions, coups, hijackings and other incidents from December 1985 to March 1986, which in Israel's view continued to characterize the region's politics. On 11 July,(10) it updated that list from 1 April to 30 June, reiterating that the hostility towards Israel was merely a specific product of generic intolerance.

Israel charged, on 18 April,(11) that the previous day security guards at London's Heathrow airport had discovered a bomb carried by a woman about to board an El Al flight to Tel Aviv; had the device exploded, approximately 340 passengers would have been killed. Israel called on the international community to condemn that outrage and act immediately to prevent its recurrence. That call was repeated on 30 May(12) when Israel highlighted further terrorist incidents including two bombs on planes: one on a Trans World Airlines plane en route from Rome to Athens, killing four persons (2 April), and another in Sri Lanka, when a bomb exploded on an Air Lanka plane, killing 16 people (3 May). On 17 September,(13) Israel charged that Arab terrorists had entered a synagogue at Istanbul, Turkey, and fired at worshippers, slaughtering 21, thereby laying bare the anti-Semitic nature of Arab terrorism.

On 13 October,(14) Oman transmitted a letter from the Arab Group refuting Israel's remarks as misleading and concealing the criminal acts of Zionist terror; Israel was seeking to lay responsibility for its terrorist actions, several of which were cited, on the Arab people.

Reports of the Secretary-General. It was vitally important that the international community not lose sight of the inherent dangers, the Secretary-General stressed in his October report on the Middle East situation;(1) it should intensify its search for a negotiated settlement. Given the complexity of the conflict and its many interrelated aspects, a just and lasting peace could best be achieved through a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects and involving all concerned, including PLO, he believed. There was wide agreement within the world community that a settlement should be based on three considerations: withdrawal of Israeli forces from Arab territories occupied since 1967; acknowledgement of and respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the region and their right to peace within secure and recognized boundaries; and a satisfactory solution of the Palestinian problem based on the recognition of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights, including self-determination, and a solution of the question of Jerusalem.

The positions of the parties directly concerned were still far apart, the Secretary-General noted, and the major Powers, whose support was essential for setting up any lasting peace, were also divided. It was urgently necessary to find a negotiating procedure acceptable to all. Meanwhile, it was of great importance that the parties avoid any actions that could increase tension. Despite the absence of a consensus on the convening of an international peace conference in accordance with the Assembly's guidelines, the idea of a conference appeared to be gaining wider support.

The Security Council could be used to further the search for a settlement, the Secretary-General suggested. It had a universally recognized responsibility for the Middle East problem and had, under the United Nations Charter, the authority to take decisive measures, while its procedures enabled all the parties concerned to participate in any consideration. The Council's effectiveness, however, depended largely on the agreement and co-operation of the major Powers.

Few international issues were as complex and potentially dangerous, or involved so directly the United Nations relevance and credibility, as the Arab-Israel conflict, whose persistence underscored the need and urgency for a comprehensive settlement, the Secretary-General concluded.

Annexed to a July report, with a later addendum, by the Secretary-General(15) were the replies from nine countries, received by 19 September 1986, on their implementation of three 1985 Assembly resolutions on various aspects of the Middle East situation: in two of them,(16) the Assembly had called on States to adopt a number of measures concerning military, economic, diplomatic and cultural relations with Israel; by the third,(17) it had called again on States which had transferred their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem to abide by United Nations resolutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1986, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 41/162 A on the situation in the Middle East.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 F of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 38/180 A to D of 19 December 1983, 39/146 A to C of 14 December 1984 and 40/168 A to C of 16 December 1985,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 516(1982) of 1 August 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, 521(1982) of 19 September 1982 and 555(1984) of 12 October 1984,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 14 March 1986, 16 July 1986 and 29 October 1986,

Reaffirming the need for continued collective support for the decisions adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982 reiterating its previous resolutions regarding the Palestinian question and its support for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and considering that the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 C and other relevant resolutions related to the question of Palestine, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region,

Welcoming all efforts contributing towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations, reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming also all relevant United Nations resolutions which stipulate that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing Israeli policies involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Stressing once again the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve an early comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palstinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirming that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A to D of 11 December 1984 and 40/96 A to D of 12 December 1985;

4. Considers the Arab Peace Plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, and reiterated by the Extraordinary Summit Conference of the Arab States held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 7 to 9 August 1985, as well as relevant efforts and action to implement the Fez plan, as an important contribution towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981; determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital"-as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately; and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, annexation and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel, signed on 30 November 1981, and the continued supply of modern arms and matériel to Israel, augmented by substantial economic aid, including the recently concluded Agreement on the Establishment of a Free Trade Area between the two Governments, have encouraged Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and have had adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and pose a threat to the security of the region;

11. Calls once more upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, financial and technological aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms its call for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, as specified in paragraph 5 of the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/58 C of 13 December 1983;

14. Endorses the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

General Assembly resolution 41/162 A

4 December 1986 Meeting 97 104-19-32 (recorded vote)

24-nation draft (A/41/L.43 & Add.1); agenda item 37.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, El Salvador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States, Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahamas Barbados Belize, Burma, Cameroon, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica Japan Liberia, Malawi, Panama, Paraguay, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Uruguay, Zaire.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 10 by a recorded vote of 66 to 38, with 41 abstentions.

The United States, explaining its vote, said the text was polemic and condemnatory; it found paragraph 10 particularly unacceptable and had difficulties with paragraphs 13 and 14. The United Kingdom had reservations about the text and its lack of balance, saying that it did not reflect basic principles essential for a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Spain felt that paragraphs 8, 10, 12, 13 and 14 and the eighth preambular paragraph did not contribute to creating a climate for a solution. Zaire disagreed with paragraphs 8 to 11. Sweden had especially strong reservations on paragraphs 10 and 11. Ecuador also did not agree with the wording of some paragraphs.

Albania had reservations, particularly on paragraphs 13 and 14 and the second and fifth preambular paragraphs. Reservations on some provisions were also voiced by the Philippines. Peru reiterated those it had expressed about the corresponding provisions of the 1985 resolution.(18) Greece was unable to go along with certain paragraphs, especially paragraph 10. Mexico said the judgements contained therein undermined the Assembly's jurisdiction; it also disagreed with paragraph 6, as the partial agreements were an important step towards a final Middle East settlement.

Austria could not support wording which, it felt, would not only aggravate the situation but impede the search for peace, or any formulation which could be interpreted as impinging on United Nations universality; isolating Israel would not bring a solution closer. Sharing that point, Brazil felt

Israel should not be provided, under the pretext of its isolation, with justification for further acts in disregard of international law.

Belize believed that it was important to recognize the Palestinians' right to a homeland as well as to accept Israel's right to a peaceful and secure coexistence.

The Syrian Arab Republic stressed that it had not participated in the 1985 Arab Summit Conference, reiterating its 1985 position.⁽¹⁸⁾ On an international peace conference and the 1981/1982 Arab Summit Conference,⁽¹⁹⁾ Iran stated that it did not agree to Palestinians negotiating with the Zionists occupying Palestine, nor did it support versions of the 1978 Camp David accords, such as the Fez plan; it also had reservations about all terms implying any recognition of what it termed the Zionist base of terror occupying Palestine, as did the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya which recalled its reservations on any reference that could be construed as recognition of the fait accompli imposed by force.

Proposed peace conference

In 1986, the General Assembly again stressed the urgent need for constructive efforts by all Governments for the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East, as called for by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.⁽²⁰⁾ The Secretary-General continued his consultations on the convening of a conference with the Security Council and pursued contacts with the parties to the Middle East conflict, reporting that difficulties remained.⁽¹⁾ Support for the conference was expressed by a number of States following adoption in December of a Security Council resolution on the situation in the occupied territories (see p. 324), and by the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the Forty-first Session of the General Assembly (New York, 2 October), which reaffirmed that the conference would greatly contribute to a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict and would help restore stability in the region.⁽²¹⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In March 1986, (22) the Secretary-General reported on his continued efforts, in consultation with the Security Council, with a view to convening a conference, as the Assembly had requested in 1985.⁽²³⁾ He said that in January he had asked the Council President again to consult the members on the matter; in February, the President had replied that they remained concerned about the Middle East situation and almost all were in favour of the principle of such a conference. The majority felt that it should be held as early as possible, while others considered that conditions for its success did not exist and new efforts should be made in that respect. The members invited the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and consultations. In accordance with those views and the 1985 Assembly resolution, the Secretary-General intended to pursue his efforts, keeping the Council and Assembly informed.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In March 1986,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights affirmed its support for a conference and appealed for further constructive efforts by all States towards its convening without delay. It regretted the negative reaction of the United States and Israel towards such a conference, calling on them to reconsider.

Recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its annual report to the Assembly,⁽²⁵⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights (see p. 270) again stressed that the conference was an essential element in progress towards solving the Palestine question. Noting that there was overwhelming support for it, the Committee intended to continue to make the subject the focal point of its work programme and to help increase awareness of the conference's importance through contacts with Governments and NGOs. The Committee recommended that the Assembly call again on Israel and the United States to reconsider their positions and renew the Secretary-General's mandate to continue his contacts.

At the fourteenth and fifteenth United Nations seminars on the question of Palestine, organized by the Committee, the need for a conference was also reaffirmed, and support for it was expressed at regional NGO symposia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the question of Palestine, the General Assembly on 2 December 1986 adopted resolution 41/43 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/58 C of 13 December 1983, 39/49 D of 11 December 1984 and 40/96 D of 12 December 1985, in which it, inter alia, endorsed the call for convening the International Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 39/49 D and 40/96 D, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council, to continue his efforts with a view to convening the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 March 1986, in which he, inter alia, stated that "the obstacles which have so far prevented the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East as called for by the General Assembly still exist", and his report of 29 October 1986,

Expressing its regret that, owing to the negative attitude of some Member States, the difficulties regarding the convening of the Conference "have remained essentially the same", and expressing its hope that those Member States will reconsider their attitude.

Having heard the constructive statements made by numerous representatives, including that of the Palestine Liberation Organization,

Emphasizing the need to bring about a just and comprehensive settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict which has persisted for nearly four decades,

Recognizing that the persistence of the Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East constitutes a threat to security and stability in the region and to world peace, and therefore directly involves the responsibility of the United Nations,

Stressing its conviction that the convening of the Conference will constitute a major contribution by the United Nations towards the realization of a just solution to the question of Palestine conducive to the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict,

Appreciating the concern about the exacerbating situation in the Middle East as voiced in a great many statements during the general debate at the current session and at previous sessions,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General;

2. Determines that the question of Palestine is the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East;

3. Reaffirms once again its endorsement of the call for convening the International Peace Conference on the Middle East in conformity with the provisions of the resolution 38/58 C;

4. Stresses the urgent need for additional concrete and constructive efforts by all Governments in order to convene the Conference without further delay;

5. Endorses the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council, to continue his efforts with a view to convening the Conference and to report thereon to the General Assembly not later than 15 May 1987;

7. Decides to consider at its forty-second session the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution.

The United States said the terms of reference set forth for the conference in reality sought to determine its outcome; the conference envisaged in the text would not allow for a constructive examination of the Middle East question nor would it provide a supportive international context for direct negotiations between the parties.

Speaking on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC), the United Kingdom said the principle and nature of such a conference needed first to be agreed on by the parties concerned; for negotiations to have any chance of success, it was essential to avoid prejudging the form in which they might be held. Canada believed that recent events, notably summit meetings of the former Israeli Prime Minister with the President of Egypt, the King of Morocco and other world leaders, gave modest hope that an international conference might, if properly prepared, be a mechanism by which concrete progress in the peace process could be realized; however, if there was to be an international framework, it must be accepted by all concerned, including Israel. In addition, Canada voiced reservations about certain provisions of the 1983 resolution referred to in paragraph 3,(26) and had practical concerns about the impartiality and effectiveness of a preparatory committee to be negotiated within the framework of the Security Council while two of its permanent members had no diplomatic relations with one of the States directly involved. Although, like all the above speakers, Norway noted improvements in the text's wording as compared with the corresponding 1985 resolution,(23) it said there were elements which still caused it difficulties.

Finland referred to its reservations made when joining the consensus on the final documents of the 1983 Conference on Palestine;(20) reservations about those documents were also voiced by Peru.

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

In his October report(1) on the Middle East situation, the Secretary-General provided an overview of the three peace-keeping operations in the region: the two peace-keeping forces—UNDOF and UNIFIL (see pp. 313 and 291)—and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). Apart from assisting UNDOF and UNIFIL in their tasks, UNTSO maintained two observation groups of its own, the Observer Group in Beirut (see p. 283) and the Observer Group in Egypt, where about 50 observers had remained since 1979 with the agreement of the Government. In addition to liaison offices in Cairo and Ismailia, the Observer Group in Egypt maintained six observation posts in the Sinai.

Credentials of Israel

In a 7 October 1986 letter to the President of the General Assembly,⁽²⁷⁾ 20 States, members of the Arab Group at the United Nations, and PLO objected to the credentials of the delegation of Israel to the Assembly's 1986 regular session on the grounds that Israel had failed to comply with Security Council and Assembly resolutions on Palestine, the Middle East and other related issues; that it continued its annexation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and violated human rights in the occupied territories; that it continued its aggression against the Arab States and expanded the area of its aggression to Lebanon, Iraq and Tunisia; and that it continued to co-operate with the racist regime in South Africa.

On 27 October,⁽²⁸⁾ Israel responded that the Arab Group, whose letter contained unfounded, extraneous allegations, had abused the credentials procedure and sought to undermine the broad consensus on the principle of United Nations universality. Israel was pleased that in 1986, as in each of the previous four years, additional States had joined in rejecting that irresponsible action.

Before adopting resolution 41/7 A, approving the first report of the Credentials Committee,⁽²⁹⁾ the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 77 to 40, with 16 abstentions, decided not to act on an amendment to that report by Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen⁽³⁰⁾ to reject Israel's credentials. The motion to take no action was tabled by Iceland on behalf also of Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden (see p. 380).

Palestine question

The question of Palestine continued in 1986 to be a concern of the General Assembly and its Committee on Palestinian rights. In its annual report to the Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Committee stressed that the question, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, had reached a critical phase and it urged a renewed, concentrated and collective effort to find a just solution under United Nations auspices, based on United Nations resolutions, and to end the Palestinians' plight. The Committee contended that action by the Security Council was required to take into account its 1976 recommendation⁽²⁾ and those adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine⁽³⁾ recommendations which the Committee said were founded on fundamental and internationally recognized principles.

The Assembly, in December 1986, adopted four resolutions on the subject. It requested the Committee to keep the situation under review as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights adopted by the 1983 Conference⁽³⁾ (resolution 41/43 A). The Assembly invited co-operation with the Committee and the United Nations Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights (41/43 B). It asked the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) to continue its special information programme on Palestine (41/43 C) and reaffirmed its endorsement of the call for an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (41/43 D) (see p. 267).

The plight of the Palestinians, most of whom were living under occupation or in exile, remained a matter of international concern, the Secretary-General stated in his October report on the Middle East.⁽⁴⁾ The situation would remain unstable so long as a peaceful settlement-including a satisfactory solution to the Palestinian problem based on the recognition of the people's legitimate rights-was not reached. In that context, he added, the question of Jerusalem also remained of primary importance. The status of Jerusalem was again the subject of an Assembly resolution (41/162 C), by which the Assembly determined that Israel's 1980 decision to impose its laws and administration on the city was null and void.

Various United Nations bodies continued to provide assistance to Palestinians. The Economic and Social Council (resolution 1986/49) and the Assembly (41/181) urged the international community to disburse aid only for the benefit of the Palestinians and in a manner that would not prolong the Israeli occupation.

Communications. Throughout the year, Israel, in letters to the Secretary-General, accused PLO of attacks against its citizens and against Jews around the world (see also p. 273). On 9 January 1986,⁽⁵⁾ Israel listed 27 attacks between March 1968 and November 1985 allegedly carried out by PLO, in which children were the victims, and said that in the most recent attacks, at the Rome and Vienna airports in December 1985,⁽⁶⁾ children had been intentionally chosen. On 5 January,⁽⁷⁾ Israel's Minister for Transportation had called on the International Civil Aviation Organization to adopt more stringent measures to prevent such bloodshed and to convene an international conference on the safety of civilian air traffic.

On 2 January,⁽⁸⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reiterated that it condemned such terrorism and that it had not been involved in the Rome and Vienna airport outrages as had been stated by Israel and the United States (see p. 247). On 31 January,⁽⁹⁾ the Jamahiriya stated that the United States President's having received the head of a band of Angolan rebels opposed to Angola's legitimate régime contrasted strangely with his refusal to recognize PLO or to receive any of its representatives.

On 8 May,⁽¹⁰⁾ Israel charged PLO with attempted attacks between 31 March and 4 May on a kibbutz and two civilian settlements in northern Israel, and with infiltration through the eastern sector of its so-called security zone in Lebanon (see p. 283).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution adopted on 10 March by a roll-call vote of 28 to 8, with 7 abstentions,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned Israel for non-compliance with United Nations resolutions, for its continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and for its practices against Palestinians living there. The Commission expressed concern that, until there was a just and equitable solution to the problem, the Palestinians would be exposed to grave dangers. It reaffirmed their rights to self-determination and to return to their homes and property, and affirmed their right to regain those rights by all means in accordance with Charter principles and United Nations resolutions.

The Commission reaffirmed its rejection of any "autonomy" plan, which would constitute disregard for the Palestinians' right to self-determination without external interference. It further reaffirmed that the Palestinians' future could only be decided with their full participation, through PLO as their legitimate and sole representative, in all efforts and international conferences. It reaffirmed its rejection of all partial agreements and separate treaties and its support for the convening of a Middle East peace conference (see p. 267) and called for support to PLO.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights continued in 1986 to follow developments in the Israeli-occupied territories and actions by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. The Committee brought such actions—including Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, Israeli exploitation of Arab-owned lands and other matters affecting Palestinian rights (for details, see below, under "Territories occupied by Israel")—to the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

Activities were undertaken by the Committee and, under its guidance, the Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights to expand co-operation with NGOs, in order to heighten awareness of the facts relating to the Palestine question and to create conditions favourable for full implementation of the Committee's recommendations. In accordance with its mandate, the Committee had decided to hold in 1986 regional symposia for NGOs in Latin America, North America and Europe, and an international NGO meeting; in view of the United Nations financial crisis, however, the Committee deferred to 1987 the Latin American symposium and combined the European and international meetings.

The North American NGO symposium, with 44 participants and six observers from NGOs in the United States and Canada, was held in New York (11-13 June 1986). The European symposium, with 33 participants and 13 observers, was held at Vienna (30 June and 1 July), immediately followed by the international meeting (2-4 July), which was attended by 66 participants and 16 observers from NGOs as well as observers from Governments and intergovernmental organizations. In addition, the Committee held a regional seminar for Europe (Istanbul, Turkey, 7-11 April) (the thirteenth United Nations Seminar on the Question of Palestine). The fourteenth and fifteenth seminars were held in New York (9 and 10 June) and Nairobi, Kenya (18-22 August).

The Committee was also represented at international conferences and meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the General Assembly, in December, adopted four resolutions on the Palestine question, dealing with the Committee and its recommendations, the Division for Palestinian Rights, public information and the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (see p. 267).

Resolution 41/43 A was adopted on 2 December by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 181(II) of 29 November 1947, 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3375(XXX) and 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 of 2 December 1977, 33/28 of 7 December 1978, 34/65 A and B of 29 November 1979 and 34/65 C and D of 12 December 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/169 of 15 December 1980, 36/120 of 10 December 1981, ES-7/4 of 28 April 1982, ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982, 37/86 A of 10 December 1982, 38/58 A of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A of 11 December 1984 and 40/96 A of 12 December 1985,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee contained in paragraphs 112 to 120 of its report and draws the attention of the Security Council to the fact that action on the Committee's recommendations, as repeatedly endorsed by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session and subsequently, is still awaited;

3. Requests the Committee to continue to keep under review the situation relating to the question of Palestine as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights and to report and make suggestions to the General Assembly or the Security Council, as appropriate;

4. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, including representation at conferences and meetings and the sending of delegations where such activities would be considered by it to be appropriate, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session and thereafter;

5. Requests the Committee to continue to extend its co-operation to non-governmental organizations in their contribution towards heightening international awareness of the facts relating to the question of Palestine and in creating a more favourable atmosphere for the full implementation of the Committee's recommendations, and to take the necessary steps to expand its contacts with those organizations;

6. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(III), as well as other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine, to co-operate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

7. Decides to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

Also on 2 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/43 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note, in particular, of relevant information contained in paragraphs 73 to 101 of that report,

Recalling its resolutions 32/40 B of 2 December 1977, 33/28 C of 7 December 1978, 34/65 D of 12 December 1979, 35/169 D of 15 December 1980, 36/120 B of 10 December 1981, 37/86 B of 10 December 1982, 38/58 B of 13 December 1983, 39/49 B of 11 December 1984, and 40/96 B of 12 December 1985,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by the Secretary-General in compliance with General Assembly resolution 40/96 B;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Division for Palestinian Rights of the Secretariat with the necessary resources and to ensure that it continues to discharge the tasks detailed in paragraphs 2 and 3 of General Assembly resolution 40/96 B in consultation with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and under its guidance;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the continued co-operation of the Department of Public Information and other units of the Secretariat in enabling the Division for Palestinian Rights to perform its tasks and in covering adequately the various aspects of the question of Palestine;

4. Invites all Governments and organizations to lend their co-operation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Division for Palestinian Rights in the performance of their tasks;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by Member States to observe annually on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People and the issuance by them of special postage stamps for the occasion.

A number of delegations explained in single statements their positions on resolutions 41/43 A-C. The United States said the texts endorsed the work of two biased organs, the Committee on Palestinian rights and the Division for Palestinian Rights; the partisan view of the Palestinian issue which they propagated served only those who benefited from continuation of the Middle East dispute and from imposing even greater suffering on the Palestinians.

Speaking for the EC members, the United Kingdom said they had made their positions known previously; they also would prefer that due account be taken of the financial difficulties facing the United Nations in determining the tasks of the bodies concerned. Canada said its votes were similar to those on previous corresponding resolutions. In Finland's view, the texts failed to represent the balance necessary for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement.

Singapore appealed to Israel and PLO to recognize each other's legitimate rights and to the international community to urge them to pursue a course of compromise.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had reservations about references which could be interpreted as implying that it supported the de facto situation in Palestine.

Public information activities

The Committee on Palestinian rights, in its 1986 report,⁽¹⁾ looked at the implementation of a 1985 Assembly resolution⁽¹²⁾ requesting DPI, in co-operation with the Committee, to continue its special information programme on the Palestine question.

The information programme included publications, audio-visual coverage, a fact-finding mission for journalists and national and regional journalists' encounters. United Nations information centres around the world continued to carry out information activities in connection with the Palestine question and made available United Nations publications on the subject. They also organized a world-wide observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People on 29 November 1986 (see also p. 320).

A team of seven prominent journalists and media representatives from various parts of the world visited Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic from 27 April to 15 May; visits to Israel and the West Bank were not possible since no response had been received from Israel to an official request for such visits. After the fact-finding mission had met with high-level officials and Palestinian leaders, the participants published numerous articles on returning to their home countries.

DPI again organized two regional encounters, bringing 15 high-level journalists together with experts on Palestine. The first was held at Vienna, for Europe, from 25 to 28 February, and the second took place at Lusaka, Zambia, from 12 to 15 August. DPI also held a series of national encounters in which a team of expert panelists held meetings, in the form of in-depth press conferences, with national journalists and foreign correspondents in various countries. European national encounters were held in Denmark, Greece and Hungary between 24 February and 6 March, and another national encounter was held at Nairobi on 18 August.

United Nations public information activities, particularly coverage of the work of the Committee on Israeli practices, were summarized in an October report of the Secretary-General (see p. 320).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/43 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note, in particular, of the information contained in paragraphs 102 to 111 of that report,

Recalling its resolution 40/96 C of 12 December 1985,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in compliance with General Assembly resolution 40/96 C,

2. Requests the Department of Public Information, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue its special information programme on the question of Palestine for the biennium 1986-1987 and, in particular:

(a) To disseminate information on all the activities of the United Nations system relating to the question of Palestine;

(b) To continue to update publications on the facts and developments pertaining to the question of Palestine;

(c) To publish brochures and booklets on the various aspects of the question of Palestine, including Israeli violations of the human rights of the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories;

(d) To expand its audio-visual material on the question of Palestine, including the production of a new film in 1987 and special series of radio programmes and television broadcasts;

(e) To organize fact-finding news missions to the area for journalists;

(f) To organize regional and national encounters for journalists.

Those States which explained their votes on resolution 41/43 C did so when they explained their positions on resolutions 41/43 A and B (see p. 272).

Jerusalem

In 1986, the status of Jerusalem was again the subject of a General Assembly resolution (41/162 C), by which the Assembly determined that Israel's 1980 decision⁽¹³⁾ to impose its laws and administration on the city was null and void. In January, the Security Council considered two incidents that took place at the Haram al-Sharif (Al-Aqsa Mosque and Dome of the Rock) in Jerusalem, one of the world's three principal Islamic Holy Places.

Communications. On 17 October,⁽¹⁴⁾ Israel charged that on 15 October PLO terrorists had lobbed hand-grenades at Israeli families near the most sacred site of Judaism, the Western Wall, killing one civilian and wounding 66 people—one in a series of PLO attacks on Jewish places of worship; PLO offices around the world that directed and co-ordinated international terror should be shut down, Israel said. On 21 October,⁽¹⁵⁾ Israel stated that it had apprehended the three individuals responsible; they had been recruited by PLO's Fatah wing, trained in Jordan and instructed to carry out a mass killing in a crowded holy site.

On 25 November,⁽¹⁶⁾ Qatar, Chairman of the Arab Group, transmitted a 24 November letter from PLO, stating that in Jerusalem Jewish settlers had attacked and beaten Palestinians and had fire-bombed houses and vehicles belonging to them; it asked that the United Nations act immediately to end the rampage.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, the General Assembly adopted on 4 December 1986 resolution 41/162 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984 and 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 29 October 1986,

1. Determines that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once again upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The United States believed that the status of Jerusalem should be determined by negotiations among the concerned parties and as part of an overall peace settlement. The United Kingdom recalled the importance it attached to the 1980 Council resolution(17) mentioned in the text. Iran reiterated its reservations on all terms implying recognition of what it called the Zionist terror base occupying Palestine.

Incidents at Haram al-Sharif

Under the agenda item on the situation in the occupied Arab territories, the Security Council held eight meetings in January 1986 to consider two incidents that took place at the Haram al-Sharif in Jerusalem, one of the three principal Islamic Holy Places in the world. The Council voted on a draft resolution by which it would have strongly deplored the provocative acts as violations of the sanctity of Haram al-Sharif and affirmed that they were a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive Middle East peace. The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

Communications. The Secretary-General received several communications concerning incidents in and around Holy Places in Jerusalem.

On 9 January 1986,(18) Jordan said a blatant desecration of the Al-Aqsa Mosque had taken place the day before by some 20 members of the Israeli Knesset who had entered intending to establish a Jewish place of prayer; after being driven out, the intruders called the Israeli police who attacked the Muslims present and the civilian guards.

On 10 January,(19) the United Arab Emirates transmitted a letter from PLO which held Israel responsible for the consequences resulting from that and other acts of terrorism committed by Knesset members or the Israeli police. Among those acts, PLO cited the entry into the holy sanctuary by Cabinet member Ariel Sharon on 9 January.

Israel, on 15 January,(20) called Jordan's claims distortions, saying that the Knesset members had paid two peaceful routine visits to the Holy Places of the Temple Mount; during both, co-ordinated in advance with Muslim religious authorities, extremists had incited a near-riot and threatened religious confrontation; Israeli authorities had acted with restraint and had prevented bloodshed and the spread of violence.

On 20 January, (21) Jordan charged that the previous day individuals of the terrorist organization "Kach" had stormed the Haram al-Sharif, which had already been attacked on many occasions by fanatical Jews, encouraged and protected by the Israeli authorities. The attempt to profane the Haram al-Sharif, repeated attempts to enter and pray in the Al-Aqsa Mosque, statements by Israeli leaders to the effect that Israel comprised all of Palestine, including the Haram, and the attempt by the Knesset members and by Ariel Sharon to enter the Haram confirmed Israel's designs on Muslim sanctuaries.

In connection with the incidents, Morocco transmitted three communications. A 17 January message(22) from the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference called attention to a resolution adopted by the Sixteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Fez, 6-10 January) condemning the incidents as heinous attacks and warning Israel of the consequences; it placed on the international community the responsibility for preventing such crimes. In its final communique, the tenth session of the Al-Quds Committee (Marrakesh, 21 and 22 January)(23) considered the alleged dangers facing the Al-Aqsa Mosque in view of the intrusion by Knesset members. In a 24 January letter,(24) King Hassan II, Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and of the Al-Quds Committee, stated that the Islamic countries had brought a complaint to the Security Council against Israel because of desecrations of the Mosque; the world expected from the Council decisions dictated by the gravity of the situation.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council held eight meetings between 21 and 30 January to consider the incidents at the sanctuary, as requested on 16 January by Morocco, as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference,⁽²⁵⁾ and the United Arab Emirates, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations.⁽²⁶⁾

Meeting numbers. SC 2643-2650.

The Council invited Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Cuba, Egypt, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Yemen and Yugoslavia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited the Acting Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations, at the request of the Arab Group,⁽²⁷⁾ to participate under rule 39^a of its provisional rules of procedure. Under the same rule, it invited the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, following a request by Morocco.⁽²⁸⁾

Following a request by the United Arab Emirates,⁽²⁹⁾ the Council decided on 21 January, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom), that an invitation to participate be accorded to PLO. The President stated that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37^b or rule 39 of the provisional rules, but, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

Before this action, the United States, which asked for a vote on the request, remarked that for 40 years it had supported a generous interpretation of rule 39 and would not object had the matter been raised under that rule; it opposed, however, special ad hoc departures from orderly procedure and opposed extending to PLO the same rights to participate as a Member State.

At its final meeting, on 30 January, the Council voted on a revised draft resolution, sponsored by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Arab Emirates,⁽³⁰⁾ by which it would have: strongly deplored the provocative acts which had violated the sanctity of Haram al-Sharif; affirmed that such acts constituted a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East peace; determined once more that all Israeli measures to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, as well as Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories, were a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and seriously obstructed the achievement of a Middle East peace; reiterated that all legislative and administrative measures by Israel which had altered or purported to alter Jerusalem's character and status, in particular the "Basic Law", were null and void and must be rescinded; called on Israel to observe scrupulously the norms of international law governing military occupation, in particular the fourth Geneva Convention, and to prevent any hindrance to the discharge of the established functions of the Supreme Muslim Council in Jerusalem, including any co-operation that Council might desire from countries with predominantly Muslim populations and from Muslim communities in relation to its plans for maintaining Islamic Holy Places; urgently called on Israel to implement the resolution; and requested the Secretary-General to report on its implementation before 1 May 1986. The voting was as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, France, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Thailand.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the draft was not adopted.

The United States said it had no choice but to vote against a text which it considered inappropriate, which gave the impression that Israel was to blame for the provocation of a few individuals and which was designed to use the incidents as a pretext for addressing larger issues of the status of Jerusalem and Israel's stewardship as occupying Power.

Thailand stated that its abstention reflected a wait-and-see attitude and a challenge to the Israeli authorities to make good their commitment to religious tolerance. It was essential that Israel desist from anything that would lead to a recurrence of such provocation.

The incidents seemed to be the work of a limited number of persons acting on their own initiative and it was regrettable that Knesset members were among them, France said, stressing at the same time that it accepted no unilateral initiative to change the status of Jerusalem; any agreement on that status should guarantee the right of access by all to the Holy Places whose sacred nature must be protected, be they Muslim, Jewish or Christian.

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

^bRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(l) of the Charter."

In most circumstances, the incidents would be regarded as minor, the United Kingdom believed, but the fact that they took place in Jerusalem automatically put them in a class by themselves.

China said Israel could not shirk its responsibility for the recent profanation, which was neither accidental nor an isolated incident, but part of a series of continuing acts of sabotage and provocation over nearly 20 years.

What had happened had aroused deep religious concerns throughout the Islamic world and again focused attention on the political sensitivities surrounding the status of Jerusalem, Australia remarked. Israel had a responsibility to preserve the unique cultural and religious character of the Holy City and to ensure that its Holy Places were respected; it had largely fulfilled its obligations, but the recent incidents could not be overlooked. Australia was glad that the sponsors had removed from the earlier draft tendentious references which implied Israel's connivance.

All efforts must be exerted to prevent further provocation and violence and to avoid further tension, Denmark said; it was necessary to protect and preserve Jerusalem's unique character so that peoples of all faiths had unrestricted access.

By not adopting the text, the United Arab Emirates said, the Council sent a clear message to Israel that it would cover any Israeli military action. The incidents clearly violated the fourth Geneva Convention which called for respect by the occupying State for the performance by the people of their religious beliefs.

The draft at least affirmed the just demands of Muslim Palestinians and of all Islam concerning strict respect for Holy Places, Madagascar stated. Israel's claim that the incidents were minor and had occurred during a routine visit were invalid; it must cease practices counter to international law and to human rights.

The USSR believed that Israel's actions in Jerusalem warranted categorical condemnation and that the Council should take all necessary measures to prevent a repetition.

Ghana was convinced that Israel meant purposely to establish legal and administrative sovereignty over the Holy Places in the face of mounting Arab disagreement and resentment; Israel had no legal entitlement to the area it claimed to be inspecting, and these so-called routine visits harboured in their very nature seeds of conflict.

Giving its account of the incident, Israel said the visit-not the first of its kind-was a normal function of Knesset members belonging to the Interior Committee responsible for legislation involving all the Holy Places. During the visit, the group arrived at Solomon's Stables, a site with no religious significance, at the south-east corner of the Temple Mount. A photographer accompanying the group wished to photograph some Knesset members; that served as a pretext for a pre-arranged incitement by a small group of agitators. A mob quickly heeded those incitements, surrounded the members, roughed them up and threatened them. A handful of Israeli police, acting with utmost restraint, intervened; no one was hurt, no shrine was desecrated and no property was damaged. The only assault had in fact been on the Israeli representatives.

Following the incident, Israel added, the Speaker of the Knesset and the Mayor of Jerusalem met with the Mufti of Jerusalem and set a date for another visit by the Knesset members, which took place on 14 January. Despite that prior co-ordination, there were again attempts to disrupt the visit; since then, due to Israel's policy and the actions of its law enforcement agencies, quiet had prevailed on the Temple Mount. Since the city's reunification in 1967, the holy sites had been rebuilt, rehabilitated, developed and enriched and enjoyed a steady stream of tourists; a law enacted a few days after reunification guaranteed protection of the Holy Places from violation, as well as freedom of access by members of different religions to their sacred places.

Opening the debate, Morocco, as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, said the recent events fell within the framework of the escalation of illegality and violence which was part of Israel's plan to Judaize the occupied territories and deny millions of Muslims and Christians the right to their Holy Places; the international community must respond to those acts with increased firmness in order to stem that escalation and make the occupation authorities respect mankind's most sacred values.

Many speakers made similar statements, adding that those actions were a part of Israel's plan aimed at changing the status of Jerusalem. These speakers included Afghanistan, Algeria, Guinea, Jordan, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates.

Several States felt that the incidents should not be seen in isolation, but were part of the framework of Israel's occupation of Palestine and the occupied territories. They included Cuba, India, Indonesia, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Thailand and Yemen. Cuba said the recent act showed how far the Israeli authorities were willing to go in order to obtain by might what was not theirs by right. India added that the injustice which the Arabs and Palestinians had sufferred at the hands of the Israelis in the territories over the years offered the only explanation for the widespread reaction the incident at the Mosque had evoked in many countries.

Jordan said the Israeli occupation denied millions of Arab Christians and about a billion Arab and non-Arab Muslims access to their places of worship in Jerusalem; it was urgent to seek the termination of Israeli occupation of all the Arab territories, including Jerusalem.

Algeria regarded the incidents as a pretext for intensifying repression and for expropriating and expelling citizens from East Jerusalem.

Accusing Israel of having changed the Holy City into a city of cheap, dirty, overcrowded housing, destroying its physical and stifling its spiritual character, the Syrian Arab Republic called on the Council to impose mandatory sanctions on Israel—a position shared by Mauritania and Yemen—and deprive it of United Nations membership.

The incidents at the Mosque carried grave implications for peace in the Middle East and had the potential of sparking a wider confrontation affecting the entire Muslim world, Pakistan warned; any act of sacrilege against the Mosque constituted a threat to peace. Other speakers, including Bangladesh, Ghana, India, Indonesia and Senegal, were also concerned that such acts could threaten international peace and security.

Guinea felt that Israel's depriving millions of believers of their right to their Holy Places could only do disservice to the search for a just and lasting Middle East peace.

In the view of Senegal, speaking also as the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the religious provocation had compounded the political conflict, with unforeseeable and perhaps disastrous consequences for international peace and security. Those actions were aimed at establishing permanent Israeli domination over all of Jerusalem and the occupied territories and creating a fait accompli by encouraging Arabs to emigrate.

Iraq regarded the incidents as a new link in the lengthening chain of Israeli aggression and expansion. The problem was not the problem of the Holy Places, PLO said after the vote; Israel was striking against the Palestinians and the Council was obliged to take urgent concrete measures conducive to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace and no Council member should be enabled to obstruct the road to peace.

The Zionists attempted to set the region on fire through their aggression against the Mosque, said Saudi Arabia, calling for a clear and decisive stand by the Council.

Afghanistan believed that the main factor responsible for the acts of desecration and similar actions was the Israeli occupation of the territories belonging to Palestinians and other Arabs.

Developments in Jerusalem had taken a turn for the worse, as had the situation in other parts of occupied Palestinian and Arab land, Yugoslavia noted; the status of Jerusalem had become a symbol of the struggle against alien power and will.

Israel had gone beyond occupation to violating the occupied territories' culture, values and religion, Mauritania said; Israel's withdrawal from all occupied territories and the exercise of Palestinian rights would provide true guarantees of respect for the Holy Places. Speaking in like manner, Indonesia called on the Council not to shirk its responsibilities; the recent acts of sacrilege must be viewed as part of Israel's actions in contravention of international law.

Brunei Darussalam called on the Council to take effective and urgent measures to prevent Israel from committing recurring acts of desecration. The Sudan believed that the incidents demolished Israel's claim that the Islamic Holy Places enjoyed protection; the Council should prevent a repetition and guarantee the preservation of the status and integrity of the Holy Places.

Malaysia urged the Council to ensure through decisive action that such events, which constituted a clear pattern and flowed from Israel's attitude towards Palestinian self-determination and independence, did not recur.

Qatar hoped the Council would deal with the issue in a manner commensurate with its gravity. Nicaragua also hoped the Council would act firmly in the face of the new threat by Israel to international peace and security. In Egypt's opinion, the international community was again called upon to reaffirm its position on the status of East Jerusalem and Arab rights there, namely, to reaffirm: the inadmissibility of the occupation of land through military force; the sanctity of the Haram al-Sharif and an immediate end to any provocative acts or acts that violated inherent, inalienable Arab and Islamic rights in the Haram area; the necessity of Israel's adherence to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and to international law which governed and defined the responsibilities of the occupying Power, as well as acceptance of the fact that Israel should not hamper the work of the Supreme Muslim Council responsible for Haram's affairs; and the illegitimacy of all Israeli practices aimed at changing the nature, status or demographic composition of the occupied territories, including Arab East Jerusalem.

Turkey strongly deplored the incidents; the principles enunciated by the Council in its resolutions on Jerusalem should be reconfirmed and Israel invited to comply strictly with them.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believed that as long as the international community supported Israel, there would be more violations of the sanctity of the Holy Places. The Council had the responsibility to protect Jerusalem's unique character, Bangladesh felt, and acts of desecration and profanation must be categorically deplored. The events at the Mosque were in flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention, Tunisia said, and the international community was entitled to demand that Israel respect the Council's decisions.

In Iran's view the desecration of Islamic sanctuaries should be discussed in the right religious context, not in a secular forum by a secular body.

The representative of the League of Arab States also believed that the criminal act in the Haram al-Sharif was a step within a plot aimed at seizing the Islamic sacred sites. He urged that Israel be forced to abide by Council resolutions, particularly those concerning Jerusalem. The Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference stated that the Islamic world would not tolerate the profanation and Judaization of Islamic Holy Places and would not accept repeated affronts to its religious beliefs; Jerusalem had to be returned to Arab and Islamic sovereignty.

Assistance to Palestinians

As requested by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General convened a meeting of United Nations programmes, organizations, agencies, funds and organs (Geneva, 2 July 1986) to consider economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people. The meeting was also attended by representatives of PLO and Arab host countries, as well as intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The meeting recognized the serious situation of the Palestinians and the urgency of providing increased economic and social assistance to them, as well as the important role the United Nations could play in that regard. Aid channelled through United Nations organizations should be in accordance with their various mandates. The meeting noted the concerns of PLO about the development of the programme of economic and social assistance and recognized at the same time that there were special circumstances which impeded progress. It considered that emphasis should be on developing a more systematic programme framework within which new projects and activities could be developed in the light of a better knowledge of the Palestinians' needs and requirements. It was expected that United Nations activities would be further expanded and diversified; it was also recognized that co-ordination and self-evaluation should be improved. The meeting urged that a mission to promote the development of the programme should be launched as expeditiously as possible, with its terms of reference to be carefully considered in consultation with the host Governments and PLO.

Concluding his 1986 report giving an overview of assistance to the Palestinians by various United Nations bodies,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General observed that while some identification of the needs of the Palestinians had been carried out, further information on those needs was required and resources needed to be mobilized to support proposed project activities. To facilitate the finalization of the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinians, the feasibility of fielding a mission could be explored in consultation with the relevant United Nations entities and other parties concerned.

UNDP action. The programme of assistance to the Palestinians of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had become operational in 1980. Since then, nine projects costing over $2.5 million had been completed, the Secretary-General stated in his report on assistance to the Palestinian people.⁽³²⁾ By the end of 1986, 14 projects at a total cost of about $7 million were to be completed and a total of $9.5 million authorized by the UNDP Governing Council was to be fully committed to specific projects. A new initial group of projects costing $17.3 million was contemplated for implementation during the 1987-1991 programming cycle. The Governing Council, in February 1986, approved $8 million for that cycle from Special Programme Resources.

Also in February, the UNDP Administrator visited the area and confirmed to his satisfaction that all parties directly concerned, including particularly the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza, viewed UNDP's programme of assistance as increasingly important in efforts for development and self-sufficiency. In a March report to the Governing Council,⁽³³⁾ the Administrator proposed that the programme be recognized as a continuing activity to be supported primarily from Special Programme Resources; supplementary special contributions should continue to be sought but should not be viewed as essential. The Council, in June,⁽³⁴⁾ authorized the Administrator to allocate an additional amount of up to $4 million from Special Programme Resources for assistance to Palestinians, on the understanding that any funds allocated would be budgeted before the end of 1986.

UNICEF activities. During 1986, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued to support activities of UNRWA in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, largely through the provision of vaccines, supplies and equipment. Considerable progress was made in respect of the UNICEF programme of co-operation in the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza, which consisted of three elements: primary health care, pre-school stimulation and promotion of child development centres.

Other activities. Among other United Nations bodies, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) was carrying out a study on the establishment of an industrial development bank for the purpose of providing capital and technical assistance to industrial enterprises. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), under its terms of co-operation with UNRWA, was granting fellowships to UNRWA educational personnel. Under UNESCO's 1986-1987 programme budget, provision was made for further training fellowships for the teaching staff of the universities in the occupied territories, and a special scholarship fund for students from the territories was under examination by the Director-General.

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) was undertaking several studies on the economic and social conditions of the Palestinians under occupation. It was planning the execution of three surveys related to the Palestinian people, on income and expenditure of households, a fertility survey and migration. Those surveys were to be conducted first in the Palestine refugee camps in the Syrian Arab Republic, with a mission to that country starting its work in January 1986.

In February, ESCWA, in co-operation with the Arab Labour Organization/Arab Employment Institutions (ALO/AEI), initiated a study to identify the needs with regard to technical and vocational educational institutions in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. During the second quarter of 1986, ESCWA undertook jointly with ALO/AEI a study on labour market developments there. Another study on marketing of agricultural outputs in the occupied territories was undertaken by an ESCWA consultant in May 1986. ESCWA was also participating, jointly with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), in the preparation of a study on the development of financial structures and activities in the territories.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1986/49 by roll-call vote.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/170 of 17 December 1985,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/57 of 27 July 1985,

Recalling further the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Noting that the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people requested in General Assembly resolution 38/145 of 19 December 1983 has not been prepared,

Noting the increasing need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people;

2. Notes the meeting on assistance to the Palestinian people held at Geneva on 2 July 1986 in response to General Assembly resolution 40/170;

3. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for convening the meeting on assistance to the Palestinian people;

4. Regards such a meeting as a valuable opportunity to assess progress in economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people and to explore ways and means of enhancing such assistance;

5. Urges the international community, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to disburse their aid or any other form of assistance to the occupied Palestinian territories only for the benefit of the Palestinian people and in a manner which will not serve to prolong the Israeli occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To prepare without further delay the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people requested in General Assembly resolution 38/145;

(b) To convene in 1987 a meeting of the relevant programmes, organizations, agencies, funds and organs of the United Nations system to consider economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people;

(c) To invite the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Arab host countries and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in the meeting;

7. Requests the international community, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to sustain and increase their assistance to the Palestinian people in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization;

8. Also requests that United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in the Arab host countries should be rendered in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization and with the consent of the Arab host Government concerned;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/49

22 July 1986 Meeting 38 51-1 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1986/120) by vote (41-1), 14 July (meeting 12); 12-nation draft (E/1986/C.3/L.4), orally revised: agenda item 22.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Iraq, Morocco, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Guinea, Haiti, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

The United States regretted that the Council had unnecessarily politicized the debate on the legitimate need to assist the Palestinians and challenged others to match its own efforts and funds.

Speaking on behalf of the EC member States, the United Kingdom said they would continue to provide humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians bilaterally and through EC, as well as through United Nations bodies.

Israel, stating that attempts had been made to represent it as systematically opposing assistance to the Palestinians and as hindering the flow of world aid, welcomed any assistance that could be extended for constructive purposes through proper and legitimate channels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/181 by recorded vote.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 40/170 of 17 December 1985,
Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/49 of 22 July 1986,

Recalling further the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Noting that the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people requested in General Assembly resolution 38/145 of 19 December 1983 has not been prepared,

Noting the increasing need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to send a mission to prepare the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people requested in General Assembly resolution 38/145;

3. Notes the meeting on assistance to the Palestinian people held at Geneva on 2 July 1986 in response to General Assembly resolution 40/170;

4. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for convening the meeting on assistance to the Palestinian people;

5. Regards such a meeting as a valuable opportunity to assess progress in economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people and to explore ways and means of enhancing such assistance;

6. Urges the international community, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to disburse their aid or any other form of assistance to the occupied Palestinian territories only for the benefit of the Palestinian people and in a manner that will not serve to prolong the Israeli occupation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To convene in 1987 a meeting of the relevant programmes, organizations, agencies, funds and bodies of the United Nations system to consider economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people;

(b) To invite the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Arab host countries and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in the meeting;

8. Requests the international community, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to sustain and increase their assistance to the Palestinian people in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization;

9. Also requests that United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in the Arab host countries should be rendered in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization and with the consent of the Arab host Government concerned;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/181

8 December 1986 Meeting 100 142-2-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/41/930/4dd.1) by vote (137-2), 4 November (meeting 27): 10-nation draft (A/C.2/41/L.21); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Democratic Yemen, Madagascar, Mauritania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Yemen.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 2nd Committee 19, 23-25, 27; plenary 100.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Costa Rica.

Israel said the main purpose of the text should be to encourage countries that claimed to want to help the Palestinians to provide additional resources; plans already existed to spend more than had been contributed to date and it would have been natural for the text to include a specific call on countries to contribute more. The text also wrongly implied that the situation of the Palestinians had deteriorated, and the reference in paragraph 6 to the Israeli occupation was gratuitous and out of order. Instead of calling for negotiations that might lead to positive changes, the text was trying to encourage confrontation and might create serious obstacles to progress on the Palestinian problem.

The United States and the United Kingdom, the latter speaking for the European Economic Community, expressed positions similar to those made in the Economic and Social Council (see above).

Jordan, supporting the provision of all aid to ease the sufferings of the Palestinians, pointed out that, with regard to paragraph 9, all United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in Jordan must be carried out with prior cognizance of the Jordanian Government.

Incidents and disputes between Arab countries and Israel

The 1981 bombing by Israeli aircraft of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad(1) was in 1986 again the subject of a resolution adopted by the General Assembly (41/12).

The fighting in Lebanon continued and intensified, leading to further deterioration of the situation, especially in the south. In January, the Security Council considered the situation there and voted on a draft resolution, by which it would have demanded that Israel desist from its measures against the civilian population and reaffirmed the urgent need for Israeli withdrawal. Owing to a permanent member's negative vote, the text was not adopted.

During 1986, the Council twice extended the mandate of UNIFIL—in April for three months (resolution 583(1986)) and in July for six months (586(1986)). For the first time, the vote on the extension of the mandate was unanimous.

Following a series of attacks against French UNIFIL personnel, the Council in September, by resolution 587(1986), strongly condemned those attacks and called for an end to any military presence in southern Lebanon not accepted by the Lebanese authorities. In an October statement, the Council urged full support to the Force and repeated the call for an end to any military presence in southern Lebanon.

A shortfall of $242.6 million, mainly due to a withholding of contributions, posed a very serious problem for UNIFIL operations. The General Assembly, by resolution 41/179 A, called again for voluntary contributions, and appropriated $112 million for UNIFIL from 19 April 1986 to 18 January 1987 and authorized commitments not to exceed $12 million per month for the year after that period. By resolution 41/179 B, the Assembly authorized suspension of the United Nations Financial Regulations so that UNIFIL could retain a "surplus balance" of about $4.8 million.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon was the subject of Assembly resolution 41/196.

The Security Council, in February, considered an incident in which Israeli fighter planes intercepted a Libyan civilian aircraft with a political delegation of the Syrian Arab Republic on board. The Council voted on a draft, by which it would have condemned Israel for the action and warned that it would consider taking adequate measures if such acts were repeated. The text was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

On the Syrian Golan Heights, UNDOF continued to supervise the cease-fire between the Israeli and Syrian forces and ensure that there were no military forces in the area of separation. The Security Council extended UNDOF's mandate twice during the year, each time for six months, by resolutions 584(1986) and 590(1986). The General Assembly, by resolution 41/44 A, appropriated $35.7 million for the operation of UNDOF from 1 June 1986 to 31 May 1987 and authorized commitments not to exceed $2 million per month for the following six months. By resolution 41/44 B, the Assembly suspended the United Nations Financial Regulations to enable UNDOF to retain a "surplus" of $1.5 million which would otherwise have to be surrendered.

Iraq and Israel

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/12 by recorded vote.

Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security",

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Viewing with deep concern Israel's refusal to comply with Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981, Concerned that armed attacks on nuclear facilities raise fears about the safety of present and future nuclear installations,

Aware that all States developing nuclear energy for peaceful purposes need assurances against armed attacks on nuclear facilities,

1. Culls upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards in accordance with resolution 487(1981) adopted unanimously by the Security Council;

2. Considers that Israel has not yet committed itself not to attack or threaten to attack nuclear facilities in Iraq or elsewhere, including facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Reaffirms that Iraq is entitled to compensation for the damage it has suffered as a result of the Israeli armed attack on 7 June 1981;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue negotiations with a view to reaching an immediate conclusion of the agreement on the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities as a contribution to promoting and ensuring the safe development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security".

General Assembly resolution 41/12

29 October 1986 Meeting 51 88-5-55 (recorded vote)

26-nation draft (A/41/L.14 & Add.1); agenda item 24.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, Nicaragua, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Leo People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen; Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe Against: El Salvador, Honduras, Israel, Saint Christopher and Nevis, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire.

Before the text as a whole was adopted, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 37 to 2, with 90 abstentions, a motion by Iraq that no amendment be accepted, and paragraph 2 was adopted by a recorded vote of 63 to 41, with 33 abstentions.

The Assembly had before it an amendment by Iran(2) that would have added a paragraph strongly condemning all military attacks on all nuclear installations dedicated to peaceful purposes, including the military attacks by Israel on the Iraqi facilities. Jordan proposed replacing that paragraph by one reiterating strong condemnation of the military attack by Israel on the Iraqi facilities, as well as an future attack on peaceful nuclear installations.(3) Iran then proposed to have the Assembly reiterate its strong condemnation of the military attack by Israel on the Iraqi facilities and condemn all military attacks, both of the past and of the future, on all peaceful nuclear installations.(4)

Introducing the draft on behalf of its sponsors, Iraq said they were convinced that Israel intended to repeat its aggression, having made that clear through constant threats. By slipping a refurbished model of previous resolutions into the Assembly, said Israel, Iraq attempted to bypass a decision by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to delete the subject from its agenda after Israel had given solid assurances of not making any attack on nuclear facilities devoted to peaceful purposes, while Iraq refused to do likewise.

The United States said that, in neglecting the action by the 1985 IAEA General Conference(5) during which Israel had provided the assurances called for in paragraph 2, the text called into question the judgement of a substantial number of IAEA member States; the sole intent of the text, reinforced by paragraph 5, was to arouse hostility.

Speaking for the 12 EC member States, the United Kingdom also questioned whether there was need to include the item in any future Assembly agenda after IAEA had concluded its consideration of the subject.

Norway shared that opinion, adding that paragraph 2 was inconsistent with the IAEA resolution. That paragraph obviously contradicted IAEA's text, Sweden said. Argentina found it difficult to reconcile the third preambular paragraph with paragraph 2. Israel had offered acceptable guarantees to IAEA, Uruguay believed. Mexico abstained for the same reasons as in 1985.(6)

Australia considered Israel's commitment was made in good faith, and for the matter to reappear would not serve to achieve productive results. Canada also felt that IAEA's action should have closed the discussion. In view of the time that had elapsed since the 1981 attack and the Assembly's repeated unequivocal condemnation of it, Peru believed that the text gave rise to procedural problems and was untimely.

Believing that the text's main thrust deserved an affirmative vote, Brazil intended to reassess its future position if it became clear that the item was being used to increase tensions unduly; that IAEA had accepted Israel's assurances also deserved mention.

India, stating that the text clearly expressed the international community's views, reaffirmed its position on issues such as the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons⁽⁷⁾ and full-scope safeguards.

The Syrian Arab Republic would have preferred that the text embody an unequivocal condemnation of Israel's aggression against Iraq.

Iran found the adopted text on the whole satisfactory, adding that it would vote for any resolution in favour of the Iraqi people, in defence of their property and against Zionist interventions; it regretted, however, that its amendment had not been acceptable to Iraq.

Lebanon situation

The situation in Lebanon in 1986 deteriorated further, due to continued and intensified lighting. In January, the Security Council considered the situation in southern Lebanon which witnessed, according to Lebanon, an escalation of Israeli aggression. Israel, on the other hand, held the position that southern Lebanon was used especially by Syrian forces for terrorist attacks against it. The Council voted on a draft resolution by which it would have strongly demanded that Israel desist from its measures against the civilian population and reaffirmed the urgent need for Israeli withdrawal. Owing to a permanent Council member's negative vote, the text was not adopted.

During 1986, the Security Council unanimously extended the mandate of UNIFIL—in April for three months and in July for six months. The situation was generally quiet in UNIFIL's area of operation, the Secretary-General stated in his report on UNIFIL covering the period 11 October 1985 to 9 April 1986.⁽⁸⁾ However, in the so-called security zone—a strip of land extending into part of the UNIFIL area—there had been an increase in attacks against the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) and their local allies, the South Lebanon Army (SLA). There had also been several rocket attacks against targets in northern Israel. These incidents led to counter-actions by IDF and SLA, including a major incursion into the UNIFIL area by IDF in brigade strength from 17 to 22 February, the taking and interrogation of prisoners and the indiscriminate shelling of villages in the security zone. Those counter-actions resulted in further resentment by the population leading to a further increase in violence.

The situation in and around Beirut, with particular emphasis on developments involving Israeli forces and Palestinians, was monitored by the Observer Group in Beirut, with observers from UNTSO, set up in 1982⁽⁹⁾ following the first incursion of Israeli troops into West Beirut. The Secretary-General reported in October 1986⁽¹⁰⁾ that, since the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the Beirut area in September 1983, the Group's activities had been reduced and its total strength brought down from 50 to 18.

The Security Council, in a June statement, expressed grave concern at the continuing intensification of the lighting in Beirut, especially in and around the Palestinian refugee camps, and appealed for a cessation of the fighting. In December, it expressed serious concern at the escalation of violence, particularly affecting the population of the camps. It appealed for restraint in order to end those acts of violence and for measures to alleviate the suffering.

During and immediately after the heavy lighting in Beirut between May and July, UNRWA provided emergency assistance to some 48,000 refugees, in addition to its regular operations which already imposed enormous demands on the Agency in trying to meet the refugees' needs.

Following a series of violent incidents in the UNIFIL zone between 11 and 22 August, during which two Lebanese and one member of the Irish contingent were killed and several French soldiers were wounded, and another incident on 4 September when three French soldiers were killed by a remote-controlled bomb in the sector of the French contingent, the Security Council met on 5 September. On the morning of that day, Israeli soldiers carried out a helicopter raid in the village of Zibqin in the sector of the Nepalese contingent. The Council issued a statement expressing deep sorrow and indignation at such deliberate violence; the Council members considered it essential to adopt with all urgency reinforced security measures and asked the Secretary-General to act to that effect. They also thanked the Secretary-General for immediately dispatching a mission led by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs in order to examine, in consultation with the Lebanese Government, measures to enable the Force to carry out its mandate.

Another attack against French personnel by a remote-controlled roadside bomb was carried out on 13 September. In an 18 September report,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that recent weeks had witnessed a dangerously high level of violence in UNIFIL's area of deployment; Israel's continuing occupation and the behaviour of its allies in SLA had increasingly provoked armed resistance by various groups, and UNIFIL personnel risked being caught in such retaliatory fire, as had happened at the Nepalese position on 11 September. Because of all those incidents, various measures were taken to improve the security of the troops and certain redeployments took place within the UNIFIL area.

The second part of the mission's task was to pursue consultations with the parties on how progress could be made towards implementing the 1978 Security Council resolution⁽¹²⁾ calling for strict respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence, and for Israeli withdrawal from all Lebanese territory, and establishing UNIFIL for the purpose of confirming that withdrawal, restoring peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority. The Lebanese leaders and the Syrian Government expressed unequivocal support for continued UNIFIL presence and urgent implementation of the 1978 resolution, while Israel reiterated that the only reason for its continuing military presence in Lebanon was to ensure the security of northern Israel. Given those conditions and the financial situation of the Force, which cost the international community about $140 million annually, the Secretary-General said that UNIFIL faced a major crisis. If progress in implementing the 1978 resolution was not achieved soon, the Council might be compelled to give serious consideration to the Force's withdrawal, despite the consequences. Accordingly, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council take urgent action to unblock the current impasse.

The Council met on 19, 22 and 23 September and adopted a resolution by which it strongly condemned the attacks against UNIFIL, urged all parties to co-operate with it, again called for an end in southern Lebanon to any military presence not accepted by the Lebanese authorities, and requested the Secretary-General to arrange for a deployment of the Force to the southern border of Lebanon. Reporting again on 13 October,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that there had been a marked reduction in attacks against the Force since 18 September and no further lives had been lost. As requested by the Council, further measures had been taken to enhance the security of UNIFIL personnel. Following consultations on the Secretary-General's report, the Council issued on 31 October a statement expressing regret that the consultations aimed at implementing the 1978 resolution had failed to yield results and called on him to intensify his efforts towards that end. Council members again urged full support for the Force and repeated their call regarding an end to the military presence in southern Lebanon.

The Council also called on all countries to assume their financial responsibilities towards UNIFIL. The shortfall of $242.6 million continued to pose a very serious problem for the financial management of the Force, the Secretary-General stated in an October report on UNIFIL financing.⁽¹⁴⁾ Calling again for voluntary contributions, the General Assembly appropriated $112,238,500 for UNIFIL operations from 19 April 1986 to 18 January 1987, and authorized commitments not to exceed $12,125,000 per month for the 12 months after that period. In view of the difficult financial situation of the Force, the Assembly authorized suspension of the United Nations Financial Regulations to enable UNIFIL to retain a "surplus balance" of about $4.8 million.

The Assembly invited the Secretary-General to consider the urgent need to nominate a United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon, and requested that the United Nations system expand its programme of assistance to Lebanon.

Communications. Referring to a December 1985 letter by the Syrian Arab Republic,⁽¹⁵⁾ Israel stressed in a communication of 2 January 1986⁽¹⁶⁾ that Lebanon was dominated by the Syrian Arab Republic, as recently reaffirmed by negotiations at Damascus with various Lebanese factions and militias; that domination was exploited to wage terrorist attacks against Israel. Together with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Syrian Arab Republic assisted terrorists who attacked innocent people all over the world; the Abu Nidal gang, which had taken the responsibility for the December 1985 attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports,⁽¹⁷⁾ had bases in the Republic and, with its approval, in the Bekaa Valley in Lebanon. Various official sources confirmed that those who had committed the Rome airport murders had entered Italy via the Syrian Arab Republic. Under those circumstances, Israel said, it had no choice but to take all necessary measures to defend itself and its population against terrorism.

On 11 January 1986,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Syrian Arab Republic reaffirmed that its forces were in Lebanon legitimately, having been requested by the Lebanese Government and by virtue of a decision of the League of Arab States. Israel characterized the Syrian presence as occupation and domination in order to justify its own occupation of parts of southern Lebanon, which it used as a base for oppression, persecution and displacement of the inhabitants and as a staging point for its aggression against Lebanon. Israel's allegations were attempts to justify those acts aimed at thwarting the Republic's efforts to restore security and peace to Lebanese territory, efforts which had been conducive to the parties to the conflict in Lebanon reaching agreement on a national accord for a solution to the Lebanese crisis, signed at Damascus on 28 December 1985. The Syrian Arab Republic would continue supporting Arab resistance, based on its commitment to the Arab people, particularly to those of Palestine and Lebanon.

On 23 January,⁽¹⁹⁾ Israel stressed that recent events in Damascus, Beirut and other areas in Lebanon reconfirmed the points it had made on 2 January, adding that the so-called spokesman for the Abu Nidal gang had made a recent statement issued from Damascus, in which he threatened further murder attacks in Europe.

Lebanon, on 18 February,(20) called to the Secretary-General's attention recent Israeli actions in southern Lebanon, among them alteration of international boundaries by moving a barbed-wire strip; building a new road to facilitate surveillance of infiltration into Israel; and erection of buildings used for military purposes. There had also been an increase in aggressive acts against areas adjacent to the "security zone", the most serious being the expulsion of people from the town of Kounin on 30 December 1985. Israel's actions were part of continuing preparations to pump water from the Litani River to Israel through underground pipelines. Should the Council fail to adopt a decisive resolution on such actions, they were likely to continue and be repeated in other parts of southern Lebanon.

In another letter of the same date,(21) Lebanon charged that Israel, using the pretext of the disappearance of two of its soldiers, had carried out on 17 February large-scale military operations in southern Lebanon; more than 600 troops, supported by large numbers of tanks, personnel-carriers and helicopters and aircraft, had attacked 15 Lebanese villages and reached the vicinity of the town of Tyre. Reinforcements brought the troops to over 1,000 and the number of vehicles to hundreds. Operations continued on 18 February, with the forces setting up road blocks, raiding houses and interrogating the inhabitants after assembling them in public squares. Israeli forces still occupied Shaqra, Sultaniya, Qa'q'iyat, Haris, Kafra and Haddathah. Helicopters and aircraft were terrorizing the populations of Tyre, Marjayoun, Bint Jubayl and Nabatiyah. Lebanon called for an end to Israel's actions and reserved its right to call for a Security Council meeting.

On 21 February,(22) Lebanon complained of further aggression by Israel and what it called its client forces which, Lebanon charged, had extended their operations from the so-called security zone to more than 15 kilometres inside the area of deployment of the international forces in Lebanon. From 19 to 21 February, Israel had bombarded and besieged dozens of Lebanese towns and villages to detain their inhabitants. Israeli gunboats were also taking part and dozens of civilians had been killed. Lebanon called for a rapid move by the Council to end those practices immediately and bring about an Israeli withdrawal up to internationally recognized boundaries.

Rejecting Lebanon's allegations as unfounded, Israel said on 5 March(23) that in the absence of an effective central authority in Lebanon, it had to ensure its citizens' safety. The sole purpose of the fence which extended a few hundred metres beyond the international border was not to alter the border's status but to provide security. Israel was not interested in Lebanon's territory or its water; however, security problems occasionally necessitated implementation of certain measures and a return to normalcy in the area would bring an effective end to that problem.

On 6 March,(24) Israel, again rejecting what it called misrepresentations by Lebanon, stated that IDF had merely carried out search operations for two Israeli soldiers abducted on 17 February in a security zone established in southern Lebanon; after six days of searching, the IDF units had returned, having uncovered large quantities of military supplies to be used for terrorist strikes against Israel. Israel's sole concern was that Lebanon should not be used for that purpose.

On 5 March,(25) Israel charged that terrorist killers freely operating in Lebanon had recently begun striking with particular cruelty against Lebanon's Jewish community, kidnapping nine, four of whom had been tortured and murdered. Lebanon had not taken any measures to protect its citizens, as its leadership and the many terrorist gangs were dominated by the Syrian Arab Republic which bore responsibility for the anti-Semitic outrages. Israel called on the international community to join it in holding the Lebanese Government accountable for protecting all its citizens, regardless of religion or ethnic origin; immediate action was required to prevent the remaining hostages from being murdered and to stop further kidnappings of Jews. Israel reserved its right to seek out the perpetrators.

On the morning of 27 March, Katyusha rockets had been fired at the town of Qiryat Shemona, Israel stated on 1 April,(26) one hitting an elementary school, wounding six, among them a teacher and four children. Broadcasting from Baghdad, PLO's Fatah faction had claimed responsibility for the attack, the latest in a series aimed at civilians in northern Israel. The rockets had been fired from near Shaqra, in an area over which UNIFIL had assumed control in July 1985; as the attacks from that area demonstrated, preventing PLO and Hezbollah terrorism required forces committed to and organized for the defence of the area against terrorism.

The Secretary-General replied on 11 April(27) that UNIFIL's Commander had informed him that, after a thorough search, no evidence had been found to confirm that Katyushas were fired from the vicinity of Shaqra; the Commander also indicated that, after the reported explosion in Qiryat Shemona, UNIFIL observed that IDF/SLA personnel had searched inside the enclave south of Shaqra and that the IDF liaison officer made no accusation to UNIFIL that the firing had taken place from inside the UNIFIL area.

On 26 September,⁽²⁸⁾ Lebanon charged Israel with acts of aggression against areas in Mount Lebanon, south Lebanon and the Bekaa Valley, and with continuing its military buildup along the borders with Lebanon, thereby contributing to an already explosive situation. On the same date,⁽²⁹⁾ Lebanon reported that that day an IDF/SLA unit had attacked the village of Yatar in the UNIFIL area, blowing up houses and intimidating the population.

On 29 September,⁽³⁰⁾ the United Arab Emirates transmitted a 26 September letter from PLO, charging Israel with raiding the Palestinian refugee camp at Mieh Mieh (see also p. 290). Israel planned military action along its northern border, with troops to be deployed by land, sea and air and with the Sidon area as the main target; an armoured division and a mechanized infantry battalion were already in the so-called security zone.

On 17 October,⁽³¹⁾ Lebanon reported that on 16 October Israeli fighter aircraft had bombed Sidon and the neighbouring area four times; the Israeli navy had participated and troops were landed in Lebanese territory, while helicopters fired randomly. This act resulted in heavy human and material losses. Lebanon called on the Security Council to assume its responsibilities and end the aggression and Israel's intervention in Lebanon's internal affairs.

A 16 November Israeli air raid was reported by Lebanon the following day;⁽³²⁾ six Israeli warplanes bombed the eastern outskirts of Sidon, causing a number of wounded and leaving serious material damage. On 17 November, Lebanon charged, three military helicopters carried out a second raid at the same area, firing seven missiles which destroyed a two-storey building. Lebanon requested speedy action by the Secretary-General to halt Israel's aggression in order to preserve international peace and security.

On 11 December,⁽³³⁾ Lebanon charged Israel with another act of airborne aggression, the second against northern Lebanon and the nineteenth against Lebanese territory during one year; the air attacks alone had killed more than 35 people and injured 130, apart from causing extensive property damage (see also p. 290).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution adopted on 12 March⁽³⁴⁾ by a roll-call vote of 25 to 1, with 17 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Israel for its human rights violations, aggression and arbitrary practices against civilians in southern Lebanon, including assassinations, detentions, abductions, demolition of houses, desecration of places of worship and other inhuman acts. It called on Israel immediately to end such practices and demanded its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from Lebanese territory, and called on Governments which continued to aid Israel to refrain from providing it with support which encouraged it to persevere with its aggression and expansion policy. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to monitor implementation of its resolution and to report to the General Assembly.

In a 10 March resolution dealing with various aspects of the Palestine question (see p. 270), the Commission condemned Israel's aggression and practices against the Palestinians in and outside the occupied territories, particularly against those in Lebanon.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 January,⁽³⁵⁾ Lebanon asked for an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider what it said were Israel's continuing acts of aggression and abusive practices in southern Lebanon. The Council held three meetings—two on 13 January and one on 17 January.

Meeting numbers. SC 2640-2642.

The Council invited Israel, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On 17 January, the Council voted on a draft resolution by Lebanon.⁽³⁶⁾ The vote was 11 to 1, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Bulgaria, China, Congo, France, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Denmark, United Kingdom.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the draft was not adopted.

By the text, twice revised, the Council, reaffirming the urgent need to implement its 1978⁽¹²⁾ and 1982⁽³⁷⁾ resolutions demanding Israel's military withdrawal, would have strongly deplored Israel's acts of violence and abusive measures against southern Lebanon's civilian population; reiterated its call for strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity; demanded that Israel desist from measures against civilians in southern Lebanon which impeded restoration of normal conditions in the area and threatened reconciliation efforts towards restoring peace and security in the whole country; and decided to keep the situation under review, with the Secretary-General reporting to the Council.

The United States considered the text negative and one-sided and believed that it would not bring closer peace in Lebanon or relief to the suffering. The immediate motive for Lebanon's complaint-the situation in the village of Kounin (see below)-appeared to be nearing resolution through the constructive efforts of UNIFIL, supported by the parties interested in south Lebanon's security. The text failed to deal in a fair and balanced manner with southern Lebanon's security problems, including security of the Lebanon-Israel border, and ignored the fact that there had been rocket attacks on Israeli territory launched from Lebanese soil, as well as violence in southern Lebanon.

While the text had been improved considerably through the revisions, said Australia, it lacked certain elements from earlier Council resolutions and did not take full account of all recent acts on the Lebanon-Israel border.

In Denmark's opinion, the draft did not fully guarantee effective implementation of the Council's peace-keeping undertakings; the Council must ponder on what action might be taken to further implementation of its resolutions on UNIFIL and to bring peace and normality to southern Lebanon.

The United Kingdom believed that the Council should not restrict itself to condemning those at fault on both sides of the frontier, but should try to take a constructive view of the situation through the use of the Force already in existence; it was up to the Council to support the Force.

France said the text basically met its concerns, since it reaffirmed the basic Council resolutions and reiterated the importance of respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity.

The USSR felt that the text did not put enough pressure on Israel, particularly in that there was no call for sanctions under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter; it was the Council's duty to ensure implementation of its decisions demanding Israel's withdrawal, which was the only key to the solution of the Lebanese problem.

Bulgaria spoke similarly, adding that the solution of Lebanon's problems was possible only on the basis of respecting its unity, independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

In Saudi Arabia's opinion, the draft represented the minimum called for by the situation and less than the minimum in the light of the commitments that all had assumed and the positions they had reiterated. Lebanon was the victim of aggression that was not even denied by the aggressor; if the Council failed to shoulder its responsibilities, it must bear responsibility for the consequent deterioration of the situation.

Lebanon, responding to the objection that the draft was not balanced, explained that to condemn or deplore all acts of violence would put the aggressor on an equal footing with the national resistance movement.

In addition to the calls in the draft, China said, the Council should demand the dismantling of "security zones" and the dissolution of SLA. As a victim of aggression and a small State, Lebanon could resort only to the Council, said the United Arab Emirates; the text reflected the reality in southern Lebanon stemming from repeated Israeli acts of aggression.

It was not Lebanon's internal tragedy that was its concern, Israel stressed, but that no one in Lebanon was able to control cross-border violence launched at Israel for over a decade.

Opening the debate, Lebanon gave its account of incidents between 29 December 1985 and 7 January 1986 which, it said, illustrated a deliberate escalation of Israeli aggression. On 30 December 1985, an SLAODF force had entered the village of Kounin, destroying several houses and commercial stores and burning a number of vehicles. Several hundred people fled their homes and some 30 people were detained. If the Council did not act, Lebanon warned, that inability would be used as a direct reason by Israel for continuing to ignore the Council and its resolutions and for persisting in its policy and practices.

Like the rest of south Lebanon, Kounin had been turned into a battle zone by terrorists, Israel said; reports that IDF or SLA had expelled the villagers were fabrication. On 30 December, an SLA patrol composed of villagers in that area had been ambushed near Kounin; two of its members were killed. The attackers were traced to Kounin, where it was found that the men of the village had fled, fearing they would be held responsible for the killings. Not one of them had been expelled, hurt or killed, and they were free to return to the village any time they wished. Preventing the use of the south as a base for attacks against it remained Israel's sole interest. A serious dialogue between the parties was needed to enable the people on both sides of the border to live in peace; until Lebanon freed itself from Syrian shackles, Israel would continue to do what was necessary to protect its security and the lives of its citizens.

Israel's recent aggression against Lebanon, alleged the Syrian Arab Republic, coincided with the signing of the 28 December 1985 Damascus agreement containing a draft national solution for the Lebanese crisis; Israel regarded that agreement as a great defeat because it undermined its policy designed to continue fragmenting Lebanon by fanning the flames of civil war. Israel was trying to create another West Bank in order to pursue its expansionist policies and create small sectarian States, in addition to diverting the waters in south Lebanon for the use of Israeli settlements; it tried to entrench and perpetuate its military presence in Lebanon and the myth of the security belt was only a means to increase tension, in particular in the southern part. The Council must adopt the necessary measures for implementing its earlier resolutions calling for immediate cessation of all military activities in Lebanon and withdrawal of Israeli forces to the internationally recognized boundaries. Also, the Council could impose sanctions. As long as United Nations forces could not fulfil their role of helping extend Lebanon's sovereignty up to the international border, its people had no choice but to carry on the struggle against foreign occupation.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the "Zionist entity" wanted to strip Lebanon of its Arab character and force it to abandon all Arab commitments; it had established Lebanese militias subservient to it to destabilize Lebanon and foment sedition and was deliberately precipitating clashes among members of the same people to impede the comprehensive national reconciliation achieved by the parties concerned.

Israel's "iron-fist" policy announced in March 1985 had turned into a systematic mass repression of the population of southern Lebanon, the USSR thought. With regard to the UNIFIL forces, they were not only subjected to systematic armed provocations, but had recently become the object of a vicious campaign with the purpose of disorganizing them and compelling them to leave Lebanon.

The acts attributable to Israel represented obstacles to peace and contributed to the worsening of an already tense situation not only in southern Lebanon but in the entire Middle East, the Congo felt; in order to reduce the tension, the Council must adopt a firm position, the only possible position compatible with strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, integrity and unity.

Speaking in like manner, Madagascar believed that it was no accident that Israel had decided to fan the flames of tension and support an element of agitation and disturbance intended to thwart re-establishment of the Lebanese State in its full sovereignty and unity.

Qatar hoped that the Council would respond unanimously to Lebanon's modest requests which, it felt, merely reaffirmed former Council resolutions and provisions of international law; in addition, Qatar believed, new elements should be included that would ensure the effectiveness of the resolution to be adopted.

There was only one road to peace in Lebanon, Bulgaria believed, as outlined in the Council's 1982 resolutions.⁽³⁷⁾

The United States emphasized anew its commitment to Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence, although, it said, it might differ from other Members on how best to bring about those goals.

Recent developments demonstrated that the so-called security zone and the continued presence of IDF, which were contrary to Council resolutions, did not provide Israel with the security it sought for its northern settlements, Denmark felt; the best option available continued to be the effective implementation of the mandate of UNIFIL.

A full solution to border violence between the two countries was going to require mutual respect for the security of each country within its internationally recognized borders, the United Kingdom said; both sides must act sternly against terrorists and desist from practices which adversely affected the population on either side. To achieve that, Israel should withdraw totally and cease supporting the irregular forces, while at the same time UNIFIL would be able to fulfil its mandate through effective deployment.

Morocco, too, called for Israel to withdraw. The reason for the deteriorating situation in southern Lebanon was Israel's refusal to do so, its insistence on its "security zone", its refusal to allow UNIFIL's deployment and the arming of illegitimate collaborators. By escalating terror, Israel was trying to entrench instability in Lebanon so that later it might justify its occupation and have the last word in any initiative aimed at rapprochement between the parties to the conflict.

The Council should truly discharge its responsibilities for maintaining international peace and security and adopt the following measures, China said: condemn the Israeli invasion and occupation of southern Lebanon and its bullying of civilians; insist on immediate implementation of the Council's resolutions; demand Israel's immediate and unconditional withdrawal; demand the dismantling of the "security zone", which was in fact a State within a State, and the dissolution of SLA; and ask Israel strictly to respect Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Palestinian refugees in Lebanon

Communications (April-June). From April to June, several communications were sent to the Secretary-General, urging him to try to protect the Palestinian refugees living in camps in Lebanon. PLO's communications were transmitted either by the respective monthly Chairman of the Arab Group or by other Arab States.

On 7 April,⁽³⁸⁾ PLO stated that, for the twelfth consecutive day, armed militias had attacked the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh in Beirut; during the previous nine months, hundreds of Palestinians had been killed or wounded in such attacks. Also on 7 April,⁽³⁹⁾ PLO charged that, for the second time in 10 days, Israeli aircraft had attacked civilian targets in Lebanon. On that day, they attacked the Sidon area and bombed the camps of Ein el-Helweh, Mieh Mieh and the surrounding area. A large number of Palestinian and Lebanese civilians were killed or wounded; among them were three little children in serious condition. Under the pretext of seeking out PLO fighters returning to Lebanon, Israel had embarked again on its plan for a final solution to the Palestinian problem through genocide.

Attacks on camps in Beirut by Amal militia and the sixth brigade of the Lebanese army were reported in a 2 June PLO letter.⁽⁴⁰⁾ The attacks had intensified since 16 May, PLO charged, and on 23 May the camps were surrounded and heavily bombarded with all kinds of weapons, including tanks. On 30 May, the attacks became so severe that the camps were totally isolated, with the Palestinians unable to evacuate the wounded or to receive food or medical supplies. The camps were attacked again on 2 June. All institutions and schools in the camps were shut down, and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) was unable to enter to evacuate the wounded and provide medical help. Palestinian casualties were 25 killed and more than 200 wounded. There were 1,000 displaced Palestinians from the Shatila camp; they had temporarily sought refuge in the Mar Elias camp.

On 5 June,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed grave concern over the renewed attacks. The Committee was particularly distressed to learn that, although UNRWA had provided some emergency relief to those who had fled the camps, neither it nor ICRC had been permitted to enter them to evacuate the wounded and provide medical help. Continued failure to arrive at a just solution to the Palestine question could only lead to spiralling violence, with unforeseeable consequences for international peace and security.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

Following consultations, the President of the Security Council issued on 6 June the following statement on behalf of the Council members:⁽⁴²⁾

"The members of the Security Council are gravely concerned at the continuing intensification of the fighting in Beirut, especially in and around the Palestinian refugee camps, with its high toll of casualties and material destruction.

"The members of the Security Council appeal to all concerned to use their influence in bringing about the cessation of the fighting in order to enable the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East as well as other humanitarian organizations to mount emergency operations for the benefit of the populations concerned, including the Palestinian refugees towards whom the international community has a particular responsibility.

"They reaffirm that the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon must be respected.

"The members of the Security Council endorse the Secretary-General's appeal to all parties concerned to exercise utmost restraint and to renew their efforts to end the present bloodshed."

Further communications (June-December). Further charges of attacks on the refugee camps were received by the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council. Most asked for United Nations assistance to end the attacks and protect the camps' occupants.

On 11 June,⁽⁴³⁾ PLO thanked the Council President for his statement. As a result of the efforts of the Special Envoy of the President of Algeria, of Lebanese religious authorities and national leaders, and of the endeavours of Iran, PLO said, a cease-fire agreement had been reached, but Amal gangs and the Lebanese army continued indiscriminate shelling of the camps in an attempt to break into them, resulting in the death of many innocent people. PLO again requested that the United Nations use the Observer Group in Lebanon and deploy UNIFIL to protect the Group.

On a 13 June,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights again expressed the Committee's grave concern at the persistence and intensification of the attacks against Palestinians in the Sabra, Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh camps, despite the 6 June appeal. He reaffirmed that the United Nations, particularly the Security Council, had the responsibility to guarantee the refugees' safety and he requested the Secretary-General to take urgent action.

On 30 June,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Netherlands forwarded a declaration adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the 12 EC members at The Hague on 27 June, expressing deep concern about the situation and endorsing the appeals by the Council and the Secretary-General to all concerned to exercise restraint, end the bloodshed and facilitate the work of ICRC and UNRWA.

On 16 July,⁽⁴⁶⁾ PLO stated that on 10 July Israel's air force had carried out several sorties against the Ein el-Helweh camp in southern Lebanon, resulting in several children and adults being killed or injured. It charged that, for the previous two weeks, Sidon and Tyre had been besieged by Israeli naval vessels and that an Israeli attack by sea and by land against refugee camps in the area was imminent. On 14 July, Palestinians near Beirut had come under attack from the Israeli air force and civilians were killed or injured. In both attacks, there had been massive property damage.

On 13 August,⁽⁴⁷⁾ PLO said that, for the second time in two days and the fourth time in a month, Israel's air force had attacked the refugee camps, killing and wounding many civilians, including children, and causing extensive material damage.

On 11 September,⁽⁴⁸⁾ PLO charged that on 10 September Israeli gunships escorted by F15 and F16 aircraft and naval destroyers had attacked Palestinian camps in southern Lebanon, firing barrages of rockets, particularly on Mieh Mieh, leaving three dead and several wounded, the casualties being mostly children and the elderly.

On 24 September,(49) PLO alleged that Israel had commenced massing huge military forces in southern Lebanon, with two army battalions equipped with tanks and heavy artillery being newly deployed in addition to the so-called SLA; the Israeli plan was aimed against Palestinian camps as well as Lebanese civilians.

In another letter, dated 26 September,(30) PLO charged that Israel had carried out on 25 September an act of State terrorism, when six Israeli war-planes raided the Mieh Mieh refugee camp, an attack that resulted in the death and injuries of a number of refugees and massive destruction of residences.

On 16 October,(50) PLO said that on that day Israeli jets had bombed the camps of Mieh Mieh, Ein el-Helweh and Al-Fawwar, causing heavy casualties.

On 10 November,(51) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's grave concern at the persistence and intensification of fighting in and around Palestinian camps at Tyre, Beirut and Sidon. According to reports by UNRWA and the media, fighting had broken out on 30 September at El-Buss, Burj el-Shemali and Rashadieh, near Tyre; the last two had remained under siege for two weeks and Rashadieh had again been under attack since 20 October. Refugees were unable to leave or enter and all, except El-Buss, remained inaccessible to UNRWA staff. At Rashadieh, UNRWA had been unable to deliver food or medicines since the beginning of the fighting and thousands of women, children and old people were trapped in the cross-fire. Fighting had also been reported at Burj el-Barajneh in Beirut, as well as around the Ein el-Helweh and Mieh Mieh camps near Sidon; Burj el Barajneh had been surrounded and remained inaccessible. Reiterating the Organization's responsibility to ensure the safety of those in the camps, the Chairman urged speedy action to end the suffering and hardships.

The non-aligned countries, at an urgent plenary meeting held on 8 December in New York,(52) also expressed grave concern at the escalation of fighting, called for an immediate cease-fire and appealed to all concerned and to influential parties to exercise utmost restraint and make all efforts to end the violence; it also urged them to facilitate the provision of prompt medical care to the sick and wounded (see also p. 324).

Lebanon charged Israel on 11 December(33) with further airborne aggression, this time against the Nahr el-Bared camp in the northern suburbs of the city of Tripoli, which it said left five people dead and more than 12 wounded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

Following consultations, the President of the Security Council issued on 2 December the following statement on behalf of the Council members;(53)

"The members of the Security Council, mindful of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon, express their serious concern at the current escalation of violence there, affecting the civilian population in and around the Palestinian refugee camps. The members of the Council appeal to all concerned to exercise restraint in order to end these acts of violence. They also appeal to all concerned to take necessary measures to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population. They urge all concerned to facilitate the efforts of various United Nations agencies, particularly the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide humanitarian assistance."

UNRWA activities

The situation in Lebanon remained the most serious operational problem facing UNRWA, the Commissioner-General stated in his annual report to the General Assembly.(54) Since July 1985, Palestine refugees had been affected by the continuing deterioration of the security situation, with many casualties. Hardly an area of Lebanon where refugees lived escaped the effects of lighting; those who remained in the besieged camps faced death, injury and shortages of food, water and medical supplies, and most suffered the loss of their homes and property. Sporadic Israeli air raids also caused death and destruction among refugees.

Agency operations in Lebanon were seriously affected and the safety of staff was a constant source of concern. UNRWA was prevented from bringing supplies into the camps or transporting them along the roads and was advised that those operations would be permitted only if it delivered equal amounts of food and supplies for distribution to the non-refugee population also affected by the fighting. The difficulties faced in maintaining services were at times almost insurmountable and threatened to bring operations to a halt.

In spite of that, however, UNRWA in Lebanon succeeded in keeping most of its installations open and normal services running, except when installations were under fire, had been destroyed or when access to them was prevented by battle. Once an installation was damaged, UNRWA sought other accommodation or repaired the damage while, whenever possible, continuing to provide services through alternative facilities.

In addition to regular operations, UNRWA provided emergency assistance to some 48,000 refugees displaced during and immediately after periods of heavy fighting; it also helped refugees living in camps to repair their battle-damaged shelters. By the end of September 1986, the emergency operation that had begun as a result of the fighting in Beirut between May and July could be said to be over; UNRWA began to restore its normal health services and made good progress in repairing its damaged buildings and equipment. Schools opened on time, although attendance was low for the first few weeks at Burj el-Barajneh and Shatila.

Soon, however, UNRWA was faced with the need to mount another emergency relief operation, this time in the Tyre area; tension between local militia forces and Palestinians around the Rashadieh camp led on 30 September to the outbreak of full-scale fighting and the siege of the camp. Other camps in the area—Burj el-Shemali and El-Buss—also came under siege for a short time. As in earlier operations, the immediate need was to provide essential food and medicines to the besieged civilians and food and other assistance to families that had fled to places of refuge elsewhere (Sidon, Beirut, Tripoli and the Beqaa Valley). Representations were made repeatedly to those in positions of authority in order to gain access to refugees remaining in the Tyre camps. The siege of the Rashadieh camp, however, continued and UNRWA was denied access; only occasionally, a few staff members on foot were admitted. The sieges of the two smaller camps, Burj el-Shemali and El-Buss, were soon lifted, but the camps remained surrounded by armed militia which discouraged any but the most essential movements out of the camps by the refugees. Women and children were able to bring in some supplies and most of UNRWA's services (schools, health clinics and supplementary feeding centres) functioned more or less normally. Nevertheless, the dangers the refugees faced in procuring supplies and their inability to move out of those two camps for employment convinced UNRWA that they were in need of emergency relief; supplies were therefore taken in from time to time, although not without difficulty. UNRWA also provided emergency assistance to the thousands of displaced refugees who fled the Tyre camps.

One of the main problems hampering the emergency relief operation in the south of Lebanon was that of transporting supplies from Beirut, as movement between east and west Beirut and within west Beirut was difficult and dangerous. With the outbreak of fighting around the camps in the Tyre area, movement of staff and supplies along the coastal road through Sidon to Tyre also became subject to checks, attacks and hijacking, and soon became impossible. The result was that the operation in the south was limited to the supplies already in place until special measures, made possible with the arrival of additional international staff, were instituted.

Sporadic fighting around the Beirut camps intensified after the siege of the camps in the south began and by mid-November both main camps in west Beirut were again the scenes of heavy fighting and were under siege. The situation was complicated by fighting involving Palestinians in the Sidon area, which not only further interfered with regular services but also put the refugee population increasingly in need of assistance. Those developments made it necessary for UNRWA to extend its emergency relief operation to the growing number of displaced refugees.

Peace-keeping operation

UNIFIL activities

During 1986, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNIFIL, in April and July, for a three-month and a six-month period. For the first time since its inception, the votes to extend the mandate were unanimous. In his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General said it was particularly important that, at such a difficult time, the peace-keeping operations continued to receive the support of the Council, particularly of all its permanent members.

Established by the Council in 1978,⁽¹²⁾ following an Israeli invasion of Lebanon,⁽⁵⁵⁾ UNIFIL's terms of reference were to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, to restore international peace and security and to assist the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion, launched in June 1982,⁽⁵⁶⁾ radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Following the invasion, the Council instructed the Force, as interim tasks, to maintain its positions in its area of deployment and provide protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population.

The authorized strength of UNIFIL was 7,000, but because of its reduced activities, it had some 5,800 troops as of October 1986, provided by Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Norway and Sweden. A group of observers from UNTSO assisted the Force in the performance of its tasks. The Force was pursuing its duties under constant and growing danger, the Secretary-General stated.

On 1 April 1986,⁽⁵⁷⁾ Lebanon requested the Security Council to extend UNIFIL's mandate, due to expire on 19 April, for a further six months. Despite the current situation, Lebanon was convinced that the Force continued to be an important factor for stability and the best available option for ensuring peace and security in the region.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General reported on UNIFIL's activities and on the situation in the UNIFIL area for the period 11 October 1985 to 9 April 1986.⁽⁸⁾ He stated that Israel had continued to maintain in southern Lebanon a "security zone", which was manned by the so-called SLA with the assistance of elements of IDF. Its boundaries had not been defined but were in effect determined by the positions and the patrols of IDF and SLA. It embraced all the area adjacent to the international border in which UNIFIL had previously been unable fully to exercise its functions (the "enclave"), parts of the areas of deployment of the Nepalese, Irish, Ghanaian and Finnish battalions, the whole of the area of deployment of the Norwegian battalion and extensive areas to the north of the UNIFIL area of deployment. Within the UNIFIL area, IDF and SLA currently maintained 15 positions and, where the UNIFIL area overlapped the security zone, IDF/SLA personnel imposed restrictions on the Force's movement and deployment similar to those in the enclave.

During the review period, the Secretary-General stated, the UNIFIL area outside the security zone remained relatively quiet, but within that zone the situation continued to be very tense. Armed resistance groups continued to launch frequent attacks against IDF and SLA, which carried out a number of search operations. Since the end of 1985, the situation had deteriorated further, with more violent incidents and more casualties. One major incident occurred on 17 February 1986, when two vehicles transporting IDF/SLA personnel were ambushed by unidentified armed elements near the village of Kounin in the border area between the Irish battalion sector and the enclave; two persons believed to be Lebanese were killed and two Israeli soldiers were abducted. Following the incident, an Israeli force of about three mechanized battalions accompanied by SLA members and supported by tanks and helicopter troop-carriers and gunships carried out cordon and search operations in the UNIFIL area from 17 to 22 February. UNIFIL reported that six persons, including one IDF soldier, were killed in the operations, 10 were wounded and about 140 others were taken prisoner by IDF/SLA; approximately 60 of them remained under detention.

During the operation, UNIFIL monitored the situation as closely as possible and tried to prevent violence against the local population; it observed some cases of what appeared to be unacceptable treatment of prisoners by IDF/SLA. The UNIFIL reports of those incidents were transmitted immediately to the Israeli authorities; in its reply, Israel stated that IDF had received clear instructions on how to behave towards the local civilian population and follow-up investigations had found no deviation from those instructions. UNIFIL also protested to the Israeli authorities all incidents of indiscriminate firing; in several cases, it searched houses and shops at the request of their owners who feared that explosives might have been placed in them by IDF/SLA. The Force further provided food and water and other assistance to the local population.

Throughout the operation, UNIFIL maintained close contact with the Lebanese authorities in Beirut and Lebanese local leaders in the south; it was also in touch with the Israeli military authorities and, on 18 February, the UNIFIL Commander met the Israeli Chief of Staff and asked him to call off the operation. Israeli officials stated that their sole aim was to find the captured soldiers and that they had no intention of expanding IDF deployment in Lebanon or using the operation for other purposes.

On 20 February, the Secretary-General, after summoning Israel's Permanent Representative to the United Nations, issued a statement saying that he understood Israel's concern about the two soldiers but that such incidents were bound to occur as long as Israel maintained a security zone and a military presence in Lebanon. The Secretary-General urged Israel to withdraw its forces and exercise maximum restraint vis-à-vis the civilian population. IDF called off its operation on 22 February and withdrew its forces from the UNIFIL area of deployment, leaving one armoured company near Kounin.

Following the operation, UNIFIL received reports of an increase in incidents in the border area. On 26 February, an IDF patrol was ambushed by unidentified armed elements south of Jabal Basil and an Israeli soldier was reportedly killed. On 1 March, armed elements were intercepted by IDF after crossing the border into Israel. On 6 March, two explosions near Bint Jubayl reportedly killed an SLA member and injured several others. In the afternoon, some 160 artillery, tank and mortar rounds were fired from positions in the security zone at 14 villages in the UNIFIL area and at Tyre; one person was killed and several others injured, and two schools and 29 houses were damaged. The indiscriminate shelling was strongly protested by UNIFIL to the Israeli authorities. On the night of 8/9 March, a confrontation took place between IDF and armed elements south of Zibqin, and an Israeli soldier was reported killed and several others wounded. On 27 March, Katyusha rockets were fired across the border at the town of Qiryat Shemona, reportedly injuring six people. Later that day and again on 7 April, Israeli aircraft bombed areas inhabited by Palestinians near Sidon. On 8 April, a car bomb detonated in the Norwegian battalion sector reportedly killed the driver and two local civilians and injured four SLA personnel and two other civilians.

UNIFIL continued trying to control movement in its area and to prevent persons carrying arms from entering; attempts by armed elements to do so increased during periods of tension and were particularly frequent during the IDF operation in February. Confrontations also occurred when UNIFIL denied passage to armed personnel through its check-points; a serious incident happened on 28 January when four men in a car were stopped at a check-point east of Jwayya, after trying to force their way through. Within minutes, some 40 armed men arrived and one placed his gun against the head of the soldier in charge of the check-point; in defence of his comrade, another soldier fired one shot, wounding the gunman in the leg. Subsequently, more than 100 armed men threatened UNIFIL personnel in Jwayya, and in another village some 40 armed men tried to take a UNIFIL platoon leader hostage. The situation was defused after contacts with local Amal leaders. Incidents at UNIFIL check-points also increased after the February IDF operation and, on 23 March, an Irish soldier was wounded north of Tibnin.

Further serious incidents occurred in the Fijian and Ghanaian battalion sectors. On 28 March, a temporary Fijian check-point near the village of As Siddiqin was attacked by elements using rocket-propelled grenades and small-arms fire. A Fijian soldier was injured and died the following day. Earlier on 28 March, in an unrelated incident, armed elements had established a check-point near the village of Kafr Dunin in the Ghanaian battalion sector and an attempt to have it removed resulted in an exchange of fire, during which one armed element was shot and a Ghanaian soldier was injured. Early on 29 March, two civilian cars with eight armed elements were denied passage through a Ghanaian check-point near Majdal Silm. An hour later, those in one of the cars came to another Ghanaian check-point and threatened its personnel; shots were fired by both sides and one Ghanaian soldier was hit and died later. At about the same time, three other Ghanaian positions were fired upon and a Nepalese vehicle, which happened to be passing near one position, was caught in the fire and two Nepalese soldiers were wounded. The same morning, a Ghanaian battalion supply vehicle with three soldiers was fired on at the village of Khirbat Silm, and one soldier was wounded.

Following those incidents, the UNIFIL Commander and his senior staff contacted the Amal leadership both at Beirut and in the south to defuse the situation, which to date remained calm. UNIFIL also continued its efforts to contain SLA activities in its area; SLA movement within the UNIFIL area was largely confined to participation in IDF-led operations, although SLA continued to man a number of fixed positions. Incidents of firing close to UNIFIL positions by SLA increased again in January and occurred frequently in February; all such incidents were protested to the Israeli authorities.

Over the years, IDF had built a number of fortified positions on the Lebanese side of the border and continued to improve them, building connecting roads protected by fences and in some areas also by minefields. UNIFIL reported that development to the Lebanese authorities and also raised it with Israel.

In extending assistance to the local population, UNIFIL continued to co-operate with the Lebanese authorities, as well as with UNRWA, UNICEF and ICRC. In some locations, UNIFIL escorted farmers so that they could tend their fields without being fired at from nearby security zone positions. A significant number of Lebanese were treated at UNIFIL medical centres.

In January, Brian E. Urquhart, Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, visited UNIFIL headquarters and held discussions with government officials in the region. After his retirement in February, his successor, Marrack I. Goulding, visited the Middle East in March, touring UNIFIL's area of deployment and holding extensive talks with Lebanese and Israeli officials, as well as with other interested parties.

The Secretary-General stated that UNIFIL casualties from gunfire during the mandate period up to 7 April had been three dead and 15 wounded, compared with one dead and three wounded in the preceding mandate period. That deterioration was accompanied by a severe financial crisis which, in his view, could itself threaten the Force's future.

One of the tasks laid upon UNIFIL by the Council in 1978(12) was the restoration of international peace and security, the Secretary-General said. That mandate would not be fulfilled unless the security of both Lebanon and Israel was assured. Israel had a legitimate concern over the security of its northern border, across which it had been and still was being subjected to attack. The security zone, however, was neither a legitimate nor an effective means of meeting Israel's concerns. It was not legitimate because it contravened the Council's 1978 resolution(12) and it was not effective because the continuing occupation by IDF of Lebanese territory and the often brutal behaviour of SLA built up resentment of Israel among the local population and encouraged use of the area as a base for attacking Israel.

The Secretary-General believed that Israel's interests would be advanced if it completed the withdrawal of its forces and allowed UNIFIL to deploy to the international frontier, thus permitting the Lebanese Government to begin re-establishing its authority in the area, with UNIFIL assistance. The restoration of international peace and security would also be facilitated by discussions, under United Nations auspices, between Israel and Lebanon concerning problems that might arise on their common border. If the parties were not prepared to discuss those problems based on the 1949 Israel-Lebanon General Armistice Agreement⁽⁵⁸⁾ or to resume the Naqoura talks adjourned in January 1985,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Secretary-General declared his readiness to assist in setting up acceptable arrangements.

He had repeatedly made those arguments to Israel, but it had argued that currently the Lebanese Government did not exercise effective political and military authority in the area and that UNIFIL, being a peace-keeping force, was not mandated to assume the functions of a central government and take the forceful action necessary to control cross-border attacks. Israel stated that it was neither for nor against UNIFIL's presence, but it would not agree to its deployment to the international frontier in the prevailing circumstances. The Secretary-General nevertheless continued to hope that Israel would eventually see the virtues of allowing UNIFIL to carry out its mandate.

Meanwhile, those Member States contributing troops to UNIFIL had become increasingly worried about its being prevented from fully carrying out its mandate and about the security of their personnel who ran the risk of becoming involved in the increasing hostilities. The troop contributors also had to bear the consequences of UNIFIL's financial crisis. If the recent decision of the United States to withhold its contribution after the end of the current mandate period was implemented, there would be a further drastic cut in reimbursements to troop contributors.

The Secretary-General stated that UNIFIL's future had been called into question by the recent developments, causing him to consider carefully whether—in view of the Force being prevented from fulfilling its mandate and the lack of adequate financing—he should recommend that UNIFIL be withdrawn. However, he had concluded that such a recommendation would be a mistake and that the maintenance of international peace and security required that its mandate be extended. If UNIFIL were withdrawn, there would be an immediate escalation of fighting in southern Lebanon, including fighting for control of positions currently occupied by UNIFIL, which would probably lead to an increase in attacks against Israel and to an escalation of Israeli military action against Lebanon, resulting in a further major crisis. More positively, the Secretary-General believed that UNIFIL's mandate remained fulfillable and that deployment of the Force to the international frontier was the best available way of restoring international peace and security and of ensuring the Lebanese Government's effective authority in the area. As long as that possibility existed, he concluded that it would be wrong for the Council to withdraw the Force; such withdrawal would also remove the humanitarian help UNIFIL gave to the area's inhabitants by protecting them from the worst consequences of the hostilities. Therefore, he recommended that the Council extend UNIFIL's mandate for another six months.

The Secretary-General stressed that it would not be enough simply to renew the mandate. The Council and all its members must make a determined effort to fulfil a condition identified in 1978 as being essential for the Force to be effective—that UNIFIL must have at all times the Council's full confidence and backing. In this regard, the Secretary-General appealed to all Member States to give the Force full political backing and meet their assessed share of its cost.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Security Council met on 18 April 1986 to consider the Secretary-General's report. At its request, Lebanon was invited to participate without the right to vote.

The Council adopted resolution 583(1986) unanimously

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978), 501(1982), 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 9 April 1986, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General of 1 April 1986,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of three months, that is, until 19 July 1986;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Council thereon by 19 June 1986.

Security Council resolution 583(1986)

18 April 1986

Meeting 2681

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18019).

The USSR shared Lebanon's opinion about the need to retain UNIFIL's presence which, it said, acted as a decisive factor impeding implementation of Israel's aggressive plans in respect of southern Lebanon. The USSR also declared it would henceforth take part in the Force's financing, but that decision should not be regarded as having retroactive effect as recognition of indebtedness for past years; further, UNIFIL's presence was temporary and should in no way be used as a means of freezing the situation in the interests of the Israeli aggressor.

In the opinion of the United States, UNIFIL had made an important contribution to efforts to bring stability to southern Lebanon and its disbandment would be imprudent; progress towards achieving agreed-on security arrangements could be enhanced by continuing its mission.

Although stressing its commitment to UNIFIL, France could no longer accept a virtually automatic renewal of the mandate for six months, believing that the Council should see to it that all the countries concerned shouldered their responsibilities; in order to induce them to do so, it had proposed a shorter mandate.

The United Kingdom agreed that the extension should not be automatic, although it had been ready to support Lebanon's request for a six-month extension. It did not accept, however, that the presence of the Force should be only temporary, if that meant that it might be withdrawn before its mandate had been achieved.

Australia, also acknowledging that UNIFIL's mandate should not be renewed automatically, said the interests of regional peace would be better served by UNIFIL's deployment in accordance with its mandate; there was a need to end the difficulties complicating the Force's task-if they were simply side-stepped, troop contributors could conclude that international support was not fully forthcoming and the Force's future would be in further jeopardy.

For Denmark, UNIFIL's current situation was not acceptable; unless a solution was found quickly, the cycle of violence was likely to intensify.

Bulgaria believed that Israel should immediately discontinue its occupation of southern Lebanon and comply with the Council's resolutions, since only then would it be possible for UNIFIL to implement its mandate unimpeded. At the same time, Bulgaria affirmed its position that UNIFIL's presence was only temporary and should not be used to perpetuate the occupation of southern Lebanon by Israel.

Despite the numerous problems facing the Force, Ghana thought it would be ill-advised at the time to do anything to withdraw it, as the alternative to its presence would be chaos and escalated violence.

Lebanon, recalling the Secretary-General's support for a six-month extension, said it had no desire to make the mandate permanent or routinely prolong it, but six months was essential for the Council to be able to consider the measures necessary to implement its 1978 resolutions.(59) The Council must act seriously and swiftly in the extension period, since UNIFIL's success would benefit the Council and peace-keeping efforts. UNIFIL's failure would be a disaster for southern Lebanon and the whole region.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). On 17 June 1986,(60) the Secretary-General reported on the situation in the UNIFIL area from 10 April. In some parts of that area and of the security zone maintained by Israel the number of violent incidents had declined, while in others the level of hostilities had stayed the same or increased. During the reporting period, there were 61 attacks by armed resistance groups against IDF and SLA personnel and positions. Attacks were also reported in parts of the security zone outside the UNIFIL area. IDF and SLA personnel fired frequently from positions in the security zone, directing fire in a number of cases at civilians travelling along roads or working in fields. Between 10 May and 9 June, five civilians were killed and four were wounded during such incidents.

A major trouble spot was the SLA position north-east of Yatar; because of frequent firing from that position, villagers travelling to and from Yatar could move only under UNIFIL escort, and farmers were often harassed when working in the fields. One woman was wounded on 21 April and another on 24 May. On 25 May, SLA fired eight tank rounds from that position towards Yatar and Kafra; one man was killed in the mosque at Yatar and six others were wounded. On 15 June, three more civilians were wounded at Haris and Had-dathah. The SLA position near Yatar was attacked by armed elements on 12 occasions during the reporting period, and on 14 and 15 June bombs exploded on the track leading to the position, killing one SLA member and wounding three others.

UNIFIL continued its efforts to control movement by armed persons in its area of deployment and to prevent such persons from entering it. The population in the area largely co-operated with the Force; however, on 24 May, armed elements attacked a UNIFIL night patrol travelling in an armoured personnel-carrier between Abbasiyah and Dayr Qanun An Nahr. UNIFIL also continued trying to contain SLA activities in its area and, during the reporting period, attempts by SLA to enter decreased-except in the Kafra-Yatar area-and there were frequent incidents of firing close to UNIFIL positions and vehicles by SLA.

A UNIFIL helicopter was hit on 20 May by a rifle round fired by an unidentified person northeast of Tyre, damaging a fuel tank which forced it to make an emergency landing.

On 14 April, France informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw its logistic component and offer in its place a second infantry battalion; following further consultations, France decided to withdraw only the supply, transport and engineer companies (less the bomb disposal element) from its logistic component, a total of 334 men. The Secretary-General said he was seeking to obtain replacements and to ensure that the hand-over was completed in accordance with France's wish that the withdrawal be completed by the beginning of October.

In addition to its other tasks, the French engineer company demolished 11 roadside bombs, 20 Katyusha rockets and a number of other explosives discovered by UNIFIL patrols or local inhabitants.

What remained clear, the Secretary-General stated, was that the continuing IDF presence was not the answer to the problem of peace and security in the area, but on the contrary escalated the level of violence. According to IDF figures issued on 9 June, there had been over 1,100 attacks against IDF and SLA during the past 12 months; over 500 rocket attacks had been launched, 46 of which had reached Israel; and numerous attempts had been made to infiltrate into Israel, three of which succeeded in reaching the international frontier. Those figures, he added, confirmed his judgement expressed in earlier reports that Israel's continuing military presence in southern Lebanon was self-defeating and that the right way to restore peace and security was for IDF to withdraw and for UNIFIL to be allowed to carry out its mandate as set out in resolution 425(1978).(12)

The Secretary-General said he had redoubled his efforts to achieve progress towards full implementation of that resolution and had twice sent Under-Secretary-General Goulding and the Director in that Office to the area, from 25 April to 1 May and again from 25 May to 3 June; they had discussions with government leaders in Israel and Lebanon, and visited the Syrian Arab Republic during their second mission. Their instructions were to convey to Israel the insistent wish of the Security Council that resolution 425(1978) be implemented without further delay, and to explore with those Governments how in practice progress could be made towards that end.

The Lebanese authorities said they continued to attach great importance to implementing the resolution and maintaining UNIFIL. They insisted that Israel withdraw its remaining forces immediately, that it abandon its security zone and that SLA be disbanded. They stated that the 1949

General Armistice Agreement(58) was adequate to ensure security between Israel and Lebanon. They added that those forces in Lebanon which were combating Israel's continuing military presence there would achieve their objective once that presence was ended and that they strongly opposed a return to the situation that had existed in the area before 1982. The Syrian authorities told the mission that they supported this latter view.

Israel, for its part, reaffirmed that it was not its intention to maintain a military presence in Lebanon indefinitely, that it had no territorial designs there and that its only concern was the security of northern Israel. In its view, UNIFIL under its current mandate did not have the capability to prevent hostile acts against northern Israel and, given the lack of the Lebanese Government's authority in the southern part of the country, Israel had no alternative but to make its own security arrangements by means of the security zone and its alliance with SLA. In those circumstances, Israel was not prepared to allow UNIFIL to deploy to the border; nevertheless, it was willing to consider alternative arrangements if those would be at least as effective as the security zone in protecting northern Israel. Israel also said that IDF activity north of the international frontier would be reduced in response to any reduction in hostile activities against Israel.

The positions of the parties were far apart, the Secretary-General concluded, with Lebanon demanding Israel's immediate withdrawal and stating that it would not permit a return to the situation before 1982 when Lebanese territory was used for attacks against Israel, and Israel demanding a cessation of attacks against its forces in Lebanon before it would withdraw them. There were also wide divergences of view between all concerned about what would happen to SLA after Israel's withdrawal. The task of trying to bridge that very wide gap between the parties was further complicated by Lebanon's current tragic difficulties and by the declared intention of some armed groups operating in Lebanon to use Lebanese territory as a basis for pursuing hostilities against Israel.

The Secretary-General felt that prospects for rapid progress towards implementation of resolution 425(1978) were not good, but that it was essential for the international community to continue working towards that end. The three elements in UNIFIL's mandate-withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoration of international peace and security, and return of the Lebanese Government's effective authority in the area-were so obviously in the interests of both countries that all concerned should continue to work for a solution on that basis. UNIFIL would be an essential part of any such solution; moreover, it continued to be critical for stability in southern Lebanon, where it was seen as a symbol of the legitimacy of the Lebanese Government. If it were to be withdrawn, a vacuum would be created and the ensuing competition to fill that vacuum would inevitably lead to uncontrolled violence, the Secretary-General warned, with great detriment to the welfare of the civilian inhabitants.

As a result of the consultations held during the previous two months with Lebanon and Israel, the Secretary-General concluded that, subject to the Council's deciding to renew UNIFIL's mandate, the United Nations should pursue negotiations with them in order to establish agreement on practical measures for UNIFIL to fulfil its mandate. There would be a need for sustained United Nations effort and the full co-operation of the parties concerned, as well as for the full confidence and backing of the Security Council and the troop-contributing countries; those remained the essential conditions for UNIFIL to be able to fulfil its mandate and achieve the objectives set in 1978.

As before, UNIFIL continued to co-operate with the Lebanese authorities and relief agencies and to assist the local population.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). On 10 July, (61) the Secretary-General reported that the situation in the UNIFIL area had remained essentially unchanged. Tension persisted in the security zone as Lebanese resistance groups continued attacks against IDF and SLA, UNIFIL recording 27 such attacks since mid-June. There were also reports of attacks in those parts of the zone where UNIFIL was not fully deployed. In its area, the Force continued its efforts to prevent incidents and reduce the level of violence and to protect and assist civilian inhabitants. The SLA position east of Yatar remained a major trouble spot and was attacked live times during the reporting period by armed elements. Firing from the position repeatedly forced the closure of the east-west road through Haris, an important line of communication for UNIFIL.

On 21 June, an unidentified person shot a Nepalese sentry at a UNIFIL post in Yatar, wounding him seriously in the chest. On 23 June, two UNTSO military observers received light injuries when their vehicle set off a mine on the track leading to the SLA position east of Yatar. During the night of 9/10 July, in the vicinity of the UNIFIL headquarters at Naqoura, an exchange of fire took place near the border crossing at Rosh Haniqra, involving an Israeli patrol boat, IDF personnel stationed on shore and a group of armed infiltrators reported to have come ashore in a rubber dinghy. It was reported that all four infiltrators were killed and that two IDF members were killed and nine others wounded.

The Secretary-General voiced agreement with Lebanon's view-communicated to him on 7

July,(62) together with a request that the Force again be extended for six months-that UNIFIL remained indispensable for stability in southern Lebanon; he continued to believe that the international community must maintain the effort to put into effect the solution decided on in resolution 425(1978). Therefore he recommended a further six-month extension of the mandate, taking into account the administrative difficulties resulting from a mandate period of less than six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 18 July 1986, the Security Council met to consider the Secretary-General's June and July reports, inviting Israel and Lebanon, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Council adopted resolution 586(1986) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978), 501(1982), 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 17 June and 10 July 1986 and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General of 7 July 1986,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 19 January 1987;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 586(1986)

18 July 1986

Meeting 2699

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18226).

France noted with satisfaction the Secretary-General's renewed efforts and urged him to pursue them, also noting that UNIFIL's financing, while still a matter of concern, was now assured on a broader basis. In the more positive context created, it added, it was clear that the extension of the mandate could not be a mere matter of routine. Sharing that view, the United Kingdom felt that the Council had responded positively to the Secretary-General's call for a sustained United Nations effort and looked to Israel to take full account of the Council's unanimous wish to secure a rapid end to the unsatisfactory situation. It urged States, particularly permanent Council members, to meet their financial obligations to the Force.

In the view of the USSR, the Council's demands, clearly formulated in UNIFIL's mandate, remained unfulfilled because of Israel's refusal to withdraw, and UNIFIL had been deprived of any opportunity to carry out its functions; its presence should promote the speedy implementation of the essential goal to ensure Israel's unconditional withdrawal.

The best means to bring permanent stability to southern Lebanon would be agreement on long-term security arrangements relating to the Israel-Lebanon border, the United States said; in the interim, there appeared to be no real alternative to UNIFIL.

Israel viewed UNIFIL as a positive force because it introduced a measure of stability into a very unstable area with a power vacuum in terms of a central authority; by the same token, it was not within UNIFIL's capacity to carry out the policing action that would normally be expected of the Lebanese Government. Israel would welcome the opportunity to discuss with Lebanon, and with any element in Lebanon, the possibility of making security arrangements which would ensure the safety of Israeli citizens in northern Israel, but until the Lebanese Government was able to discharge that responsibility, Israel would continue to defend its citizens.

Lebanon urged Israel to implement resolution 425(1978), assuring it that the Lebanese Government would then be fully able to extend its authority and sovereignty and ensure regional security; it considered the Council's unanimous decision a positive indication of its wish to shoulder its responsibilities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (5 September)

On 5 September 1986, the Security Council met at France's request, made the previous day,(63) to consider the situation of UNIFIL. The Council invited Lebanon, at its request, to take part in the discussion without the right to vote.

Meeting number. SC 2705.

The Secretary-General said he had informed the Council through its President of violent incidents in the UNIFIL zone between 11 and 22 August, during which two Lebanese and one member of the Irish contingent were killed and several French soldiers were wounded. After 22 August there was quiet, and UNIFIL tried, with the co-operation of the Lebanese authorities and leaders of the Amal movement, to reduce tension and re-establish calm. Despite those efforts, three French soldiers were killed on 4 September by a remote-controlled bomb near the village of Joya in the sector of the French contingent. In a 4 September press communiqué, he had vigorously condemned that attack.

The Secretary-General also informed the Council that, on the morning of 5 September, some 30 Israeli soldiers had carried out a helicopter raid in the village of Zibqin in the sector of the Nepalese contingent; according to the Force Commander's preliminary report, an Israeli soldier was killed during the operation and four Lebanese villagers were taken away by the Israelis.

Those incidents, the Secretary-General continued, stressed the extremely difficult conditions in which UNIFIL soldiers must work. He had previously decided to send a mission of inquiry to consider, together with the Lebanese Government, measures to ensure that the Force was able to carry out effectively, in the required secure conditions, the mandate entrusted to it by the Council; because of the 4 September incident, he had moved up the departure of that mission and Under-Secretary-General Goulding had left New York on the same day.

The Secretary-General, stressing that he would do everything possible to avoid a recurrence of such incidents, recalled that UNIFIL soldiers were allowed to use force only in self-defence, and that the Force could carry out its mandate only if all the parties involved extended it the required co-operation and if it had the Council's unreserved support.

Following consultations among the Council members, the President made a statement on their behalf;(64)

"The members of the Security Council express their deep sorrow at the grave and distressing attacks which killed several members of the Irish and French contingents of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon. These attacks come after various serious incidents in the recent past, in particular those of 11 and 12 August 1986, in the course of which a number of members of the Force were injured. The members of the Council express their indignation at such resort to deliberate violence, which places in jeopardy the safety of the members of the Force.

"They convey their sympathy to the afflicted families and pay tribute to the qualities of composure, courage and self-sacrifice manifested collectively by all the members of the Force, in service of the ideals of peace of the Organization.

"Given the worsening of the situation in the zone in which the Force operates, the members of the Council consider it essential to adopt with all urgency measures aimed at the effective reinforcement of the security of the members of the Force and request the Secretary-General to undertake all necessary steps to that effect.

"The members of the Council express their appreciation to the Secretary-General for his immediate dispatch of a mission led by the Under-Secretary-General which is to carry out, in consultation with the Lebanese Government, an in-depth examination of the measures to be taken to enable the Force to carry out its mandate, as laid down in Council resolution 425(1978), effectively in the necessary conditions of security.

"They invite the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, as soon as possible, a report which he will prepare following the mission.

"The members of the Council unanimously express their confidence in the Secretary-General and the Commander of the Force in the current difficult circumstances."

Although it would have preferred a more balanced text, Ghana supported the statement's general objective, but believed that the major causes of the cycle of violence were the so-called security zone and the presence of Israeli forces and Israeli-sponsored armed groups; all the incidents originated principally from the population's resentment of Israel's presence.

France said the current situation, in which soldiers of an international force serving peace were cut down in a cowardly manner, had become intolerable. UNIFIL was still not in a position to carry out its mission in the essential conditions of security and effectiveness. As the most recent attacks had made the situation even more precarious and dangerous, France was pressing for the urgent adoption of measures to strengthen the security of all UNIFIL members and it expected that the Under-Secretary-General would without delay take all the necessary practical measures and that the Secretary-General would submit appropriate recommendations. It was also important, however, to undertake a general review dealing with all the substantive problems in the way of the accomplishment of the Force's mission.

The USSR stated that the tragic events again emphasized the dangerous and abnormal conditions in which UNIFIL had to operate, owing to the fact that for a long time it had been deprived of the possibility of carrying out unhampered the duties entrusted to it by the Council. It was necessary once again to state that it was the Council's duty to work for implementation as soon as possible of resolution 425(1978).

Lebanon stated that it condemned all such incidents and stressed its complete support for UNIFIL's presence and its desire to ensure the Force's safety.

Special report of the Secretary-General (18 September). On 18 September 1986,(11) the Secretary-General reported on the findings of the mission, headed by Under-Secretary-General Goulding, which had visited the area from 5 to 15 September and held extensive discussions with the UNIFIL Commander, his staff and the various parties concerned.

The Secretary-General also gave further details of recent incidents. On 11 August, two men, one a local Amal movement leader, were shot and killed by a French contingent sentry who had been threatened. That same night and the next day, Amal and other armed elements attacked French battalion positions and the UNIFIL transit base at Tyre. Sporadic attacks continued in the French sector, as well as in those of Fiji, Finland, Ireland and Nepal, until 22 August. On 21 August, an Irish lieutenant was killed by a remote-controlled bomb.

Further incidents had also occurred. On 11 September, unidentified armed elements killed two SLA personnel and wounded three others near the village of Kafra. Four SLA positions maintained by Israel then fired on the villages of Yatar, Kafra, Haris and Haddathah, hitting a UNIFIL position and injuring five Nepalese soldiers. On 13 September, a roadside remote-controlled bomb killed a French soldier and wounded three others patrolling near the village of Bafliyah.

The mission reported that many of the dangers to which UNIFIL was currently exposed resulted from a discrepancy between its terms of reference and the situation on the ground. The terms of reference included the requirement that it use its best efforts to prevent recurrence of lighting and ensure that its area of operation was not utilized for hostile activities; that requirement was based on the assumption that Israel would withdraw its forces and UNIFIL would operate with the full co-operation of all the parties. Israel's refusal to withdraw had invalidated that assumption ever since UNIFIL came into being.

A new and very disturbing development in recent weeks, the Secretary-General continued, was the series of premeditated attacks against the French contingent. No one had claimed responsibility for those crimes and the mission was unable to establish whether they represented a continuing reaction to the 11 August incident or whether they were the work of an armed group opposed either to French participation in UNIFIL or to UNIFIL as a whole and to resolution 425(1978).

The conflict between IDF/SLA and armed groups attacking the security zone, which overlapped a sizeable part of UNIFIL's area, had intensified. Such attacks almost always resulted in retaliatory action by IDF and SLA, which often included indiscriminate shelling of villages near where the attack had occurred. UNIFIL personnel risked being caught in that retaliatory fire, as had happened to the Nepalese position on 11 September.

After the mid-August clashes, the Secretary-General reported, the UNIFIL Commander had taken measures to improve the security of his troops, especially those of the French contingent. After the 21 August murder of the Irish officer, the Commander was instructed by Headquarters to alert all units of the possibility that the attack might portend a general campaign against UNIFIL and to take the necessary precautions. Further measures were implemented following the mission's discussions with the Commander and his staff. On his recommendation and that of the mission, the Secretary-General then authorized certain redeployments within the UNIFIL area to improve the security of the French contingent. It had to be recognized, however, the Secretary-General stated, that UNIFIL was widely dispersed in some 214 positions and that the measures taken could provide only partial protection. The mission urged all concerned within the area both to make every effort to identify and apprehend those responsible for the recent attacks and to intervene with those who might have influence on those responsible in order to get the attacks stopped. All the leaders to whom the mission had spoken condemned the attacks and undertook to make every effort to ensure that there was no repetition.

The second part of the mission's task was to pursue consultations with the parties on how progress could be made towards implementing resolution 425(1978). In Lebanon, all the leaders to whom the mission spoke expressed unequivocal support for continued UNIFIL presence and urgent implementation of the resolution. They insisted on the need for Israel to withdraw its forces and dismantle the security zone if the deterioration of the situation in southern Lebanon was to be arrested. They also urged that the Council assume its responsibilities in that regard. The mission suggested that, if the leaders succeeded in their current efforts at national reconciliation, the Lebanese Government might wish to deploy a small unit of the Lebanese army to the north-western part of the UNIFIL area as a first step towards the return of its effective authority in the area; that suggestion was noted, although concern was expressed at the risk that Lebanese units deployed in the south might be attacked by IDF or its allies, as had happened in 1978.

The Syrian Government also expressed unequivocal support for the 1978 resolution and for UNIFIL, blaming the current state of affairs on Israel's refusal to withdraw. Syrian leaders urged that the Council assume its responsibilities and repeated their support for the position of those in Lebanon who had expressed their determination that, if Israel withdrew and dismantled the security zone, there should be no return to the situation that had existed in the area before 1982. With regard to Israel's position, there was no indication of an early change, the Secretary-General added.

Given UNIFIL's inability to fulfil its original mandate, he said, it had been suggested that changes be made in that mandate and/or in the means provided to the Force to carry it out. The mission had discussed the question with the Force Commander. UNIFIL could not use force except in self-defence and was therefore not in a position to enforce the Council's will. Like all peace-keeping operations, its effectiveness depended on the co-operation of the conflicting parties, as well as of the troop contributors. If that co-operation was not forthcoming, the Council could in theory revise the Force's mandate or its terms of reference in a manner that would win the co-operation of all; in practice, however, the possibilities were very limited. Concerning UNIFIL's mandate, the 1978 resolution had been repeatedly reaffirmed by the Council and its provisions remained of fundamental importance to the Government of Lebanon. With regard to UNIFIL's terms of reference, as set out in a 1978 report of the Secretary-General(65) and approved by the Council,(66) he had considered various possibilities. One would be to require UNIFIL to control the movement of heavy weapons only, i.e., artillery and armour, which might reduce the risks of confrontation with armed elements but would greatly reduce the ability of UNIFIL to exercise some control over the level of hostilities in its area. The same objection, the Secretary-General said, would apply to converting the Force into an observer group. A third possibility would be to revise the Force's area of operation in order to eliminate the overlap with the security zone, which would involve a major contraction of UNIFIL's area, including complete withdrawal from the Norwegian battalion sector, and would run counter to the thrust of resolution 425(1978), thus making it unacceptable to many, including the Lebanese authorities; nor would it seem likely to reduce the risk of UNIFIL casualties, of which all but one during recent weeks had occurred outside the security zone. The Secretary-General concluded that changes in UNIFIL's mandate or terms of reference would be unlikely to resolve its current difficulties.

Concerning the means available to the Force, he believed that useful changes could be made, assuming the Council decided to maintain it and that it had the necessary resources. The Force Commander had advised that many UNIFIL check-points and positions, having been established some years earlier in different circumstances, were currently of limited operational value and in some cases difficult to defend; he had recommended that UNIFIL's deployment be consolidated by having fewer, stronger and better-located positions. He further recommended strengthening the defences of UNIFIL's positions and that the two battalions which currently did not have armoured personnel-carriers be supplied with them for their better protection.

With regard to armament, the Commander took the view that, given the need for co-operation of the local population, UNIFIL should not be provided with heavier weapons; the armament available to it should be revised to ensure greater accuracy of fire and to keep casualties to the minimum in any confrontations that might occur. UNIFIL's tactical concept should be to avoid violence by being able to deploy superior force quickly if threatened; increased holdings of armoured vehicles would provide the desired mobility, flexibility and protection.

Those recommendations, the Secretary-General believed, responded well to the situation of the Force, but as a preliminary estimate of their cost was some $30 million, it would be essential that extra finances be provided so that they could be implemented without further detriment to the already reduced reimbursement which troop contributors received.

Summing up, the Secretary-General said that UNIFIL faced a major crisis. Recent violent incidents had brought to a head difficulties which from the beginning had been inherent in its situation due to the failure of various of the parties at various times to give it full co-operation. In particular, Israel's refusal to withdraw completely from territory occupied during its 1982 invasion had led to steadily growing military activity against IDF and SLA. In spite of the international community's desire, expressed unanimously in Council resolution 586(1986) (see p. 297), that UNIFIL be permitted to implement its mandate, it had not so far proved possible to persuade Israel to withdraw; in those circumstances, it had been impossible for UNIFIL to prevent its area of deployment from being used for hostile activities and some parts had become the scene of almost continuous hostilities, with consequent dangers to the Force's personnel.

That, the Secretary-General continued, was an intolerable situation for a United Nations peace-keeping force which cost the international community some $140 million annually. Especially since the security zone was set up early in 1985,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General had repeatedly expressed the gravest concern that the situation of UNIFIL would become untenable unless early progress was made towards implementation of resolution 425(1978).

But, uncomfortable and dangerous though its position might be, the Force continued to make an important contribution to such peace and stability as existed in southern Lebanon; if it were withdrawn, there would be, the Secretary-General believed, an immediate intensification of hostilities between IDF/SLA and the various armed groups which wished to drive Israeli forces out of Lebanon and, in some cases, to attack Israel itself. The mission was left in no doubt by Israel that in that event its reaction would be severe and expansion of the security zone would not be excluded; there would thus be a grave risk of the conflict spreading and the main sufferers would be the population of southern Lebanon who would again be forced to flee.

For those reasons, the Secretary-General could not recommend the Force's withdrawal. However, if progress was not achieved soon, the Council might be compelled to consider such a withdrawal, despite the consequences. The solution was complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory and the deployment of UNIFIL to the international frontier. The only hope of progress lay in a determined effort by the Council and he recommended that its members act urgently to unblock the current impasse.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (23 September)

The Security Council met again on 19, 22 and 23 September 1986 to consider the Secretary-General's special report, in the light of which an urgent meeting had been requested by France.⁽⁶⁷⁾

The Council invited Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. The Council also invited the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, at the request of the United Arab Emirates,⁽⁶⁸⁾ to participate under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure.^c

In a 23 September telegram,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Lebanese Prime Minister stated that his Government had that day decided to draw the Council's attention to the need to reaffirm its resolution 425(1978) in particular, and to the need to implement its provisions in order to ensure Lebanon's national sovereignty and the security of its citizens, who continued to be subjected to the most offensive practices at the hands of both the Israeli occupation army and the so-called "Lahad" client forces carrying out Israel's orders; the difficulties being faced by the international forces in southern Lebanon were a result of the continued presence of the occupiers.

On 23 September, the Council adopted resolution 587(1986).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978), as well as its resolutions 511(1982), 519(1982) and 523(1982) and all the resolutions relating to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling the mandate entrusted to the Force by resolution 425(1978) and the guidelines of the Force set forth in the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 March 1978 and approved in resolution 426(1978),

^cSee footnote a on p. 275.

Further recalling its resolutions 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its other resolutions relating to the situation in Lebanon,

Solemnly reaffirming that it firmly supports the unity, territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries,

Deeply grieved over the tragic loss of human life and indignant at the harassment and attacks to which the soldiers of the Force are being subjected,

Recalling in this connection the statement made on 5 September 1986 by the President of the Council on its behalf, Expressing its concern at the new obstacles to the freedom of movement of the Force and at the threats to its security.

‘Noting, with regret that the Force, whose mandate has been renewed for the twenty-first time, has so far been prevented from fulfilling the task entrusted to it,

Recalling its resolutions 444(1979), 450(1979), 459(1979), 474(1980), 483(1980) and 488(1981), in which it expressed its determination, in the event of continuing obstruction of the mandate of the Force, to examine practical ways and means to secure full and unconditional implementation of resolution 425(1978),

Emphasizing its conviction that this deterioration of the situation constitutes a challenge to its authority and its resolutions,

1. Condemns in the strongest terms the attacks committed against the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon;

2. Expresses indignation at the support which such criminal actions may receive;

3. Pays homage to the courage, spirit of discipline and composure of the soldiers of the Force;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared after the recent mission by his representative in the region, particularly the paragraphs relating to the security of the Force and the withdrawal of Israeli military forces from southern Lebanon;

5. Takes note of the preliminary security measures decided on by the Secretary-General and requests him to take any further measures needed to enhance the security of the men of the Force in their peace mission;

6. Urges all the parties concerned to co-operate unreservedly with the Force in the fulfilment of its mandate;

7. Again calls for an end in southern Lebanon to any military presence which is not accepted by the Lebanese authorities;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for a deployment of the Force to the southern border of Lebanon, and solemnly calls on all the parties concerned to co-operate in the achievement of that objective;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it within twenty-one days on the application of this resolution.

Security Council resolution 587(1986)

Draft by France (S/18356).

Meeting numbers. SC 2706-2708.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, France, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States

Stressing its support for UNIFIL, the United States said it was clear that it was not Israel that killed and wounded UNIFIL soldiers. The text did not support the objective of Lebanon's sovereignty, unity and independence, and, by focusing exclusively on redeployment of the Force, it ignored the critical factor that had prevented the fulfilment of UNIFIL's mandate: absence of agreement among the parties on security arrangements to protect their respective interests. If the problem of restoring the Lebanese Government's authority, in which UNIFIL was to assist, could not be solved in a short time-frame, attention must be directed to ameliorating the dangers to UNIFIL that flowed from the lack of effective authority in southern Lebanon. Attacks against UNIFIL would not cease by changing its area of deployment. They occurred because of absence of Lebanese Government authority.

Stating that mere Israeli withdrawal and ending its control of a part of Lebanon was not the full answer, since other measures might be needed, the United Kingdom believed that there was no possibility of any solution without that withdrawal and UNIFIL's deployment to the international border. Sharing the latter view, Denmark said it was essential that all efforts be exerted to ensure substantial progress towards implementation of resolution 425(1978). Similarly, Australia hoped that, despite obvious difficulties, the text would go some way towards enabling the Force to fulfil its mandate. Ghana could not accept Israel's continued illegal presence. China, too, urged Israel's withdrawal and UNIFIL's deployment to the border, adding that the costs incurred in implementing the current resolution should be covered by the regular UNIFIL budget.

Bulgaria would have preferred a more explicit mention of the withdrawal of Israeli forces to internationally recognized borders; it was also not satisfied with other aspects of the text and reserved its views on the financial implications until they were known.

The representative of the League of Arab States said the cause of much of the tragedy in southern Lebanon was the fact that there was no hope of implementing resolution 425(1978); the current text was a serious attempt to rectify that imbalance.

Lebanon, which was disappointed at the lack of unanimity on the text even though it stressed resolution 425(1978) which had been submitted by the United States, noted that the Council's vote coincided with intensified Israeli aerial aggression against Lebanese mountain villages and shelling of southern villages by SLA.

Opening the debate, the Secretary-General expressed deep concern at the intolerable situation confronting UNIFIL, the seriousness of which, he said, had again been underlined some three hours earlier by a further rocket attack by unidentified armed elements against a position of the French battalion, with preliminary reports of live French soldiers wounded. Stressing that time was of the essence, he urged that effective measures be taken to enable UNIFIL to fulfil its mandate, ensure the security of its personnel and resolve its financial difficulties.

In France's view, a new phase had begun with the further deteriorating situation; the recent attacks, accompanied by demands and threats, were particularly alarming because they expressed the determination of some to call into question UNIFIL's very existence. The United Nations could not remain indifferent in the face of that tragic turn of events, when UNIFIL was pinned to the ground and condemned to retrenchment; the time had come for the Council to shoulder its responsibilities. The security measures taken or suggested were inadequate, as almost all were in effect passive defence measures. UNIFIL was prevented by criminal means from pursuing its activities; it could not act without unanimous Lebanese support, and the Council must call on all parties to offer their co-operation. That support could be mobilized only around the sovereignty and integrity of the country, which meant that no foreign armed element not accepted by the Lebanese authorities could continue to exist in southern Lebanon. If UNIFIL should again enjoy the full support of the Lebanese population, it must be able to be deployed as quickly as possible, as was envisaged in 1978, along the international border; that would effectively restore the conditions necessary to enable the United Nations to bring about respect for its entire mission of peace and humanitarian objectives. France felt that the United Nations should reconsider its mission in southern Lebanon if so essential an objective as the return of civil peace to the region was not speedily achieved.

Israel characterized the report as unbalanced, distorting the true situation, and suffering from a major omission in that it did not fully represent Israel's position or assessment of the southern Lebanon situation. It was Hezbollah, the Shiite terrorist offspring of the Khomeini revolution, which had been imported into Lebanon as a co-production of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic, that had targeted UNIFIL, in line with Iran's policy of driving out from Lebanon all alien forces as a prelude to establishing an Islamic Republic. If the French contingent could be weakened and driven out, the whole Force would collapse which would help Hezbollah in establishing complete predominance in southern Lebanon. The central point was clear: UNIFIL's precise deployment was irrelevant to that objective. Since Hezbollah saw UNIFIL as a buffer against Israel, the attacks against the Force would increase if UNIFIL were deployed to the international border and the security zone were abandoned. Israel expected of the Council unambiguous condemnation of Hezbollah and its Syrian and Iranian patrons. Blaming Israel instead and asking it to dismantle its only viable defence against those killers would be cowering before terrorism and ensuring its expansion, Israel added.

In the view of the USSR, the withdrawal of Israeli troops to the international border would create favourable conditions so that UNIFIL could finally discharge its tasks; the alternative would be merely a further escalation of tension, fraught with serious consequences for international peace and security in the region.

Full and complete Israeli withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and deployment of UNIFIL up to the international border were the solution, the Syrian Arab Republic said, calling on the Council to force Israel fully to implement resolution 425(1978) and withdraw its forces.

Israel's occupation of southern Lebanon contributed to complicating Lebanon's internal affairs and, in particular, to subjecting UNIFIL to clashes and confrontation with some local forces, the United Arab Emirates charged. Such clashes were only natural, as local militias were trying to respond to Israeli acts of aggression against civilians; in trying to prevent such incidents, as was within its mandate, UNIFIL was suffering casualties.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). As requested by the Council (see above), the Secretary-General reported again on 13 October.⁽¹³⁾ There had been a marked reduction in attacks against the Force since 18 September, he stated, and no further lives had been lost. There had been three attacks, all directed against French positions or French UNIFIL personnel, occurring during the first 10 days of the reporting period.

During that period, UNIFIL reported three serious incidents affecting the local population in its area. Information available indicated that a number of similar serious incidents took place between armed elements and IDF/SLA personnel in the security zone outside the UNIFIL area. UNIFIL was indirectly affected by lighting which began on 30 September between Amal and Palestinians in the Rashadih refugee camp south of Tyre; while the camp was outside the UNIFIL area, intermittent firing interrupted traffic on the coastal road—an important supply route for UNIFIL.

As requested by the Council, further measures were taken to enhance the security of UNIFIL personnel, among them adding reinforced shelters and improving the defences of all positions. To consolidate the Force's deployment, as suggested in a previous report, the UNIFIL Commander identified 49 positions (of a total of 169 permanent positions) that were vulnerable and/or of limited operational value; those located in the French battalion sector were already closed and the others were to be closed as soon as possible.

Precautions against attacks were taken, as well as measures to secure the areas surrounding UNIFIL positions; procedures at road-blocks were being revised to improve security and liaison at the local level was being intensified to ensure understanding of UNIFIL's role and to avoid incidents. Patrolling procedures were revised and additional measures taken to secure roads and guard against roadside bombs. Maximum use was made of armoured vehicles.

Redeployment of the French infantry battalion was completed on 26 September and a little more than half was currently stationed in Naqoura, while the remainder was deployed in the Jwayya area. Nepalese troops took over positions in the western part of the former French sector, and Ghanaian and Finnish troops in the central and eastern parts, respectively.

The Secretary-General concluded that, if better protection was to be achieved and if the Force was to carry out fully the consolidation and rationalization of its deployment, additional funds would be required; the Commander had been instructed, in consultation with the Secretary-General's Military Adviser, to study the matter, bearing in mind that the preliminary estimate of $30 million should be reduced substantially.

The Force Commander had recommended acquiring 29 armoured cars which, he believed, would help to protect UNIFIL personnel on mobile duties. In addition, he suggested that three new positions be opened, 14 further positions reinforced and one battalion headquarters relocated. Endorsing those recommendations, the Secretary-General said their estimated cost of $10.5 million was a non-recurrent expenditure; if the Council had no objection, he would seek the General Assembly's approval for the necessary budgetary appropriations.

In addition to improving the physical security of UNIFIL personnel, the Secretary-General also pursued diplomatic efforts to get the attacks stopped. It had still proved impossible to establish with certainty the identity or political affiliation of those responsible, although it had been widely alleged that they were the work of armed elements of Hezbollah. In recent weeks, he had discussed UNIFIL with senior representatives of the Lebanese Government and a wide range of other Governments, including Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic, both of which had stated their readiness to use their good offices to improve the security of UNIFIL personnel.

Efforts also continued to enable the Force to be deployed to the international border. Following the Council's 23 September request to that effect, discussions were resumed with Israel in a further attempt to achieve its withdrawal and its abandonment of the so-called security zone. Israel reaffirmed its previous position: it had no territorial ambitions; it was only protecting northern Israel; and until Lebanon had an effective Government with which it could agree on permanent security arrangements, Israel would continue working with any Lebanese party genuinely interested in preventing "terror" in southern Lebanon and northern Israel. Although recognizing UNIFIL's useful role and that it had tried to stabilize the area, peace-keeping forces were most effective in Israel's view when they served as buffers between two States sharing a commitment to pacify their common border; but that was not the case with Lebanon and peace-keepers could not be asked to combat what Israel called terrorists. Israel would continue co-operating with UNIFIL but would maintain its own security arrangements. Currently, Israel could not agree to complete withdrawal of its forces, but it remained ready to consider seriously concrete proposals by the United Nations which took account of Israel's concerns. It could not be held responsible for the current state of affairs which, Israel said, lay with Hezbollah and Governments supporting it.

Representatives of the Secretary-General also discussed deploying UNIFIL to the border with Lebanese authorities, who reaffirmed their insistence on immediate Israeli withdrawal from all Lebanese territory; if that were achieved, they would ensure that there would be no return to the situation before 1982.

In a related effort towards implementing the Force's mandate, the Secretary-General had also pursued the idea that a Lebanese army unit might be deployed to the north-western part of UNIFIL's area, as a first step towards the return of Lebanon's effective authority in southern Lebanon. Lebanese authorities had accepted in principle that elements of its army should be deployed to southern Lebanon to co-operate with UNIFIL in implementing its mandate, and details were being discussed between the Force Commander and the Lebanese Military Council.

The Secretary-General said he had instructed the UNIFIL Commander to continue examining any possibilities for further varying the size and deployment of the contingents, if that would enhance the Force's security without impairing efficiency. UNIFIL's position would, however, remain precarious as long as it was prevented from carrying out its original mandate. Efforts of the previous three weeks to achieve progress towards implementing resolution 425(1978), including deployment of UNIFIL to the international border, had been inconclusive. The situation remained exceptionally complicated and determination was required to achieve the Council's objectives.

The Secretary-General again acknowledged Israel's legitimate concern about its northern border, across which it was still subjected to attack. UNIFIL's task to restore international peace and security would not, however, be fulfilled unless the security of both Lebanon and Israel along the international border was assured. Israel's withdrawal was not only in accordance with the Council's repeated call, but also offered the best prospect of restoring security to the benefit of both.

The Secretary-General had repeatedly expressed to Israel the view that its continued military presence, combined with the behaviour of SLA, would inevitably provoke a reaction from the inhabitants of southern Lebanon, and the resulting violence would be exploited by those armed groups who, unlike the Lebanese Government and the vast majority of the inhabitants, wanted southern Lebanon to be used for attacks against Israel itself. That process had already begun and could, if not rectified, lead to a level of violence that could grow beyond UNIFIL's ability to control and of which UNIFIL itself could even become a victim.

Deploying to the border might not end all violence instantly, the Secretary-General stated, but once deployed UNIFIL would be in a position to fulfil its mandate, which would require an end to all cross-border hostility. Although UNIFIL might incur the hostility of those wanting to carry out such acts, it would be supported by almost all inhabitants and the Lebanese Government, whose authority would gradually be restored in the area. The dangerous ambiguity in UNIFIL's current situation would be removed. More than ever, the Secretary-General was convinced that that was the only way to stop the steady deterioration in southern Lebanon.

The Council continued to face the same dilemma, he continued. On the one hand, withdrawal of UNIFIL would be disastrous for international peace and security and for the inhabitants of southern Lebanon; on the other, Israel's continuing military presence prevented the Force from carrying out its original mandate and created tensions that resulted in its personnel being exposed to serious dangers. It remained the Secretary-General's view that every effort should continue to be made to persuade Israel to withdraw its forces completely; he and his staff remained ready to discuss with Israel and Lebanon how to achieve that. Although that would be difficult and complicated, he stressed that it was important that substantial progress should be made before the current UNIFIL mandate expired on 19 January 1987.

consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement on their behalf:⁽⁷⁰⁾

Meeting number. SC 2719.

"The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the report submitted by the Secretary-General in conformity with Security Council resolution 587(1986) requesting him to take any further measures needed to enhance the security of the men of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and to make the necessary arrangements for a deployment of the Force to the southern border of Lebanon.

"They express their gravest concern that the basic objectives of Council resolution 425(1978) have not yet been achieved.

"The members of the Council take note of the consultations initiated by the Secretary-General with the parties concerned and others with a view to the implementation of the mandate of the Force. While they regret that the consultations aimed at implementing resolution 425(1978) have thus far failed to yield practical results, the members of the Council request the Secretary-General actively to pursue his contacts.

"They note the new security measures decided upon since the adoption of the resolution. They request the Secretary-General to suggest any other steps he may deem necessary for increased security in connection with the movements of the Force indispensable for the fulfilment of its mandate. They approve the proposals submitted by the Secretary-General in his report and his intention to seek the approval of the General Assembly for necessary budgetary appropriation. In that connection, they call on all countries to assume their financial responsibilities towards the Force and on the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to expedite the reimbursement of the advances of funds made by the contributing countries.

"They note with interest the instructions given by the Secretary-General to the Commander of the Force to keep under continuous review all the possibilities of varying the size and deployment of contingents if that would strengthen their security without jeopardizing the effectiveness of the Force. They request the Secretary-General to study these possibilities in consultation with the contributing countries and to put appropriate measures into effect.

"In that regard, they have noted with satisfaction the intention expressed by the Lebanese authorities to deploy a regular unit of their army in the zone of the Force to work in close liaison with it in accordance with the provisions of resolution 425(1978).

"Once again, the members of the Security Council urge all the parties concerned to give full support to the Force in the fulfilment of its mandate and also call for an end to any military presence in southern Lebanon which is not accepted by the Lebanese authorities. They call on the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to secure the full and effective implementation of resolution 425(1978)."

UNIFIL financing

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1986 report on UNIFIL financing,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, as at 30 September, he had received $935.8 million for the operation of UNIFIL, out of $1,250.3 million apportioned among Member States for the periods from the inception of the Force in March 1978 to 18 December 1986. The balance due—$314.5 million—included $223 million that Member States had said they did not intend to pay and $19.6 million due from China, transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution. (71) Only $71.9 million of the unpaid amount was considered collectable, leaving a shortfall of $242.6 million.

This continued to be a serious problem, he said. Current obligations could not be met, particularly those due to the troop-contributing countries, which had never been paid on a current and full basis in accordance with agreed rates; payments were falling even farther behind. Voluntary contributions to a Suspense Account set up in 1979(72) to alleviate the financial burden on troop contributors amounted to only $34,356. If not remedied, the Secretary-General warned, the operation's functioning might be jeopardized. He appealed to all Member States to pay their assessments without delay and to consider contributing voluntarily to the Suspense Account.

For UNIFIL operations from 19 April to 18 December 1986, commitments amounted to $95,660,000 gross ($94,100,000 net) as authorized in 1985;⁽⁷³⁾ costs from 19 December 1986 to 18 January 1987 were estimated at $16,579,000 gross ($16,384,000 net), based on an average Force strength of 5,860. Those costs included $4.6 million for security measures for the areas surrounding UNIFIL positions.

For the 12-month period beginning on 19 January 1987, the Secretary-General estimated costs at $145,500,000 gross ($143,064,000 net), based on an average Force strength of 6,000. In the event that future Council decisions on UNIFIL's status would entail additional costs over the limit authorized by the Assembly, he stated, the Assembly's commitment authorization would be sought at that time if it was then in regular session; otherwise, by initial recourse to the 1985 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1986-1987,⁽⁷⁴⁾ with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). In the latter case, should the amounts required exceed the financial limit stipulated under that resolution, it would be necessary to convene a special Assembly session to consider the matter.

ACABQ recommendations. In November 1986,⁽⁷⁵⁾ ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's estimate. In a departure from past practice, the Advisory Committee noted, there was no mention in his report that its prior concurrence would be obtained for actual commitments to be entered into for each mandate period that might be approved after 18 January 1987.

Taking into account recent experience, ACABQ had no objection to allowing the Secretary-General to commit funds for UNIFIL up to the limit approved by the Assembly without the Committee's prior concurrence. It believed, however, that such commitment authority should continue to be expressed as a monthly amount rather than a lump sum for an entire 12-month period. On that basis, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve commitment authority up to $12,125,000 gross ($11,922,000) per month for the 12-month period beginning 19 January 1987.

The Advisory Committee noted the Secretary-General's intended procedures should future Council decisions entail costs exceeding limits authorized by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the financing of UNIFIL. It adopted resolution 41/179 A by recorded vote on 5 December.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 427(1978) of 3 May 1978, 434(1978) of 18 September 1978, 444(1979) of 19 January 1979, 450(1979) of 14 June 1979, 459(1979) of 19 December 1979, 474(1980) of 17 June 1980, 483(1980) of 17 December 1980, 488(1981) of 19 June 1981, 498(1981) of 18 December 1981, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 523(1982) of 18 October 1982, 529(1983) of 18 January 1983, 536(1983) of 18 July 1983, 538(1983) of 18 October 1983, 549(1984) of 19 April 1984, 555(1984) of 12 October 1984, 561(1985) of 17 April 1985, 575(1985) of 17 October 1985, 583(1986) of 18 April 1986 and 586(1986) of 18 July 1986,

Recalling its resolutions S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, 33/14 of 3 November 1978, 34/9 B of 17 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980, 35/115 A of 10 December 1980, 36/138 A of 16 December 1981, 36/138 C of 19 March 1982, 37/127 A of 17 December 1982, 38/38 A of 5 December 1983, 39/71 A of 13 December 1984 and 40/246 A of 18 December 1985,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of peace-keeping operations decided upon in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 an amount of $35,872,000 gross ($35,287,000 net), being the amount authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and apportioned under the provisions of section IV of Assembly resolution 40/246 A for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 19 April to 18 July 1986, inclusive;

II

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $59,787,500 gross ($58,812,500 net), being the amount authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and apportioned under the provisions of section IV of Assembly resolution 40/246 A for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 19 July to 18 December 1986, inclusive;

III

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $16,579,000 for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for the period from 19 December 1986 to 18 January 1987, inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $16,579,000 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 33/14 and the provisions of section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 34/9 B, section VI, paragraph 1, of resolution 35/115 A, section VI, paragraph 1, of resolution 36/138 A, section IX, paragraph 1, of resolution 37/127 A and section VII, paragraphs 1 and 2, of resolution 39/71 A, in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of $3,000 other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 19 December 1986 to 18 January 1987, inclusive;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $192,000 approved for the period from 19 December 1986 to 18 January 1987, inclusive;

IV

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon at a rate not to exceed $12,125,000 gross ($11,922,000 net) per month for the 12-month period beginning 19 January 1987, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 586(1986), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

V

1. Renews its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Invites Member States to make voluntary contributions in cash to the Suspense Account established in accordance with its resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979;

VI

Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 41/179 A

5 December 1986 Meeting 99 125-2-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/913) by recorded vote (94-2-8), 25 November (meeting 35); 22-nation draft (A/C.5/41/L.7, part A); agenda item 120 (b).

Against Albania, Syrian Arab Republic.

Abstaining: Angola, Cuba, Iraq, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Maldives, Wand, Viet Nam, Yemen.

As UNIFIL's budget was being considered only because Israel was occupying southern Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic said, Israel should assume full responsibility for the costs. Iraq believed that the aggressor should bear the cost of its own expansionism. Expressing a similar view, Cuba could not support an enterprise of dubious military value, adding that the fact that Israel did not acknowledge the authority of UNIFIL made its activities useless.

While it supported the text, the USSR stressed that the provisions would have no retroactive effect and would result in no obligation in respect of previous years; the text had major financial implications and the Secretariat's attention should be drawn to the request to administer UNIFIL with maximum efficiency and economy.

Despite its view that those responsible for the aggression should bear the cost, the German Democratic Republic said it had decided to contribute to the financing of UNIFIL in the hope of a return to normality, which would necessarily involve the withdrawal of Israeli troops.

Israel regretted that some delegations had chosen to introduce political considerations into a financial debate.

Introducing the text in the Fifth Committee on behalf of the sponsors, Ireland said they considered withholding mandatory contributions for peace-keeping operations a breach of obligations under the United Nations Charter.

Also on 5 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/179 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 18 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recognising that, in consequence of the shortfall of financial contributions, troop-contributing States are not being reimbursed to the full extent of the established rates, thus bearing considerably larger portions of the costs for their troops serving in the United Nations peace-keeping forces than those indicated by the Secretary-General in his report on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, submitted to the General Assembly at its fortieth session,

Recalling its resolutions 34/9 E of 17 December 1979, 35/115 B of 10 December 1980, 36/138 B of 16 December 1981, 37/127 B of 17 December 1982, 38/38 B of 5 December 1983, 39/71 B of 13 December 1984 and 40/246 B of 18 December 1985,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $4,763,620, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

The USSR felt, however laudable the intent, it was never financially wise to suspend the regulations.

Ireland explained that suspending them in respect of the surplus balance of $4,763,620 in the UNIFIL Special Account would prevent that amount-calculated on the basis of assessed contributions irrespective of collectability, an amount which had in fact been used fully to meet the expenses of the Force—from reducing the assessments of Member States, including those withholding contributions; the fourth preambular paragraph had been added to highlight the consequences of the shortfall.

Concern over the Force's financing was also voiced in the Security Council during 1986 (see pp. 297 and 302).

Change of Commander

Lieutenant-General William Callaghan, of Ireland, who had been the Commander of UNIFIL since February 1981,⁽⁷⁶⁾ relinquished his command in May 1986. On 17 April,⁽⁷⁷⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President that, subject to the usual consultations, he intended to appoint Major-General Gustav Hägglund, of Finland, who was serving as Commander of UNDOF, as UNIFIL Commander. On 24 April,⁽⁷⁸⁾ the President replied that the Council's members had, that day, considered the matter and agreed to the proposal.

Major-General Hägglund assumed command on 1 June.

Israel and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

The interception on 4 February 1986 by Israeli fighter planes of a Libyan civilian aircraft with a political delegation of the Syrian Arab Republic on board was considered by the Security Council. On 6 February, the Council voted on a draft resolution by which it would have condemned Israel for intercepting and diverting the aircraft in international airspace, and subsequently detaining it, and warned Israel that, if such acts were repeated, it would consider taking adequate measures. The text was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

The subject was also taken up by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) in February, Communications. On 4 February,(79) the Syrian Arab Republic charged that, at 1101 hours Greenwich mean time (GMT) on that day, in international airspace over the Mediterranean, two Israeli fighter aircraft, in a terrorist act, had intercepted a Libyan civilian aircraft carrying a Syrian delegation returning from an official visit to the Jamahiriya.

On the same date,(80) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, characterizing the incident as air piracy and State terrorism, said that United States naval units stationed off the Libyan coast, which had participated in provocative exercises against the Jamahiriya (see p. 247), had provided full information on the Libyan aircraft to the Zionist enemy.

Also on 4 February,(81) the Syrian Arab Republic requested an immediate Security Council meeting to consider the incident. The Jamahiriya, on 5 February,(82) associated itself with that call.

A number of other communications were received condemning the interception as a violation of international law and calling for deterrent measures. Tunisia, on 5 February,(83) said it was a violation of international law and a grave attack on the freedom of civil aviation. Also on 5 February,(84) King Hassan II of Morocco asked the United Nations to act so that legality might be strictly observed. If Israel's action remained without appropriate Arab and international reaction, Iraq warned on 4 February,(85) the criminal act against the Libyan airliner and its passengers would not be the last. Yugoslavia, on 4 February,(86) said that Israel's announced intention to continue such actions bore out the continuity of the policy of aggression and of State terrorism to which it kept resorting, despite the most severe opposition of the international community. Czechoslovakia, on 6 February,(87) termed Israel's act an aggressive provocation and a dangerous precedent seriously threatening the freedom and safety of international air transport.

A similar position was taken by the non-aligned countries which, in a communique of 6 February,(88)

also called on ICAO to respond appropriately and consider adequate measures to safeguard international civil aviation. A TASS statement, transmitted by the USSR on 7 February,(89) said the interception had been carried out under the hypocritical pretext of the "struggle against terrorism".

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following the request by the Syrian Arab Republic (see above), the Security Council considered the incident at three meetings from 4 to 6 February.

Meeting numbers. SC 2651, 2653, 2655.

The Council invited Algeria, the German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also invited the Deputy Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, at the request of the United Arab Emirates,(90) to participate under rule 39^d of its provisional rules of procedure.

Also at the request of the United Arab Emirates,(91) the Council decided on 6 February, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom), that an invitation to participate be accorded to PLO. The President stated that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37^e or rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure, but, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

Before that vote, the United States, which had requested it, reiterated its opposition to what it called special ad hoc departures from orderly procedure and to extending to PLO the same rights to participate as if it represented a Member State; the United States did not agree with recent practice which appeared selectively to try to enhance through a departure from the rules the prestige of those who wished to speak in the Council.

Also on 6 February, the Council voted on a revised draft resolution by the Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Arab Emirates.(92) The vote was 10 to 1, with 4 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Bulgaria, China, Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the draft was not adopted.

^dSee footnote a on p. 275.

^eSee footnote b on p. 275.

By the draft, the Council would have: condemned Israel for its forcible interception and diversion of the Libyan civilian aircraft in international airspace and its subsequent detention of the aircraft; considered that Israel's act constituted a serious violation of the principles of international law, in particular international conventions on civil aviation; called on ICAO to take due account of the Council's resolution when considering measures to safeguard international civil aviation against such acts; and called on Israel to desist from all acts endangering the safety of international civil aviation, warning that, if such acts were repeated, the Council would consider taking adequate measures to enforce its resolution.

Although opposing Israel's action, the United States said the text was unacceptable as it did not take into sufficient account the need to address practically and appropriately the overriding issue of terrorism. As a general principle, the United States opposed the interception of civilian aircraft, but believed that there might arise exceptional circumstances in which an interception might be justified; it strongly supported the principle that a State whose territory or citizens were subjected to continuing terrorist attacks might respond with force to defend itself against further attacks. A State should intercept a civilian aircraft only on the basis of the clearest evidence that terrorists were aboard, however, and the United States did not believe that Israel had demonstrated that its action met that rigorous standard. Nevertheless, because it believed that the ability to take such action in carefully defined and limited circumstances was an aspect of the inherent right of self-defence recognized in the United Nations Charter, the United States could not accept a text which implied that interception of an aircraft was wrongful per se, without regard to the possibility that the action might be justified.

Denmark regretted that a consensus had not been reached and pointed out that the text did not adequately reflect its position. Israel's act was in clear contravention of international law and constituted a serious infringement of the freedom of civil aviation, jeopardizing the lives and safety of passengers and crew; Denmark called on Israel to desist from such actions.

There was much in the text which Australia said it could support, but some references, such as that in the preamble to piracy, did not accord with its position.

In the United Kingdom's view, the interception was without justification, set a dangerous precedent, apparently in contravention of international law, and was an act endangering innocent lives—a point acknowledged in one of the text's preambular paragraphs. That applied just as much to the kinds of incidents that had taken place at the Rome and Vienna airports;(17) equally abhorrent were actions against innocents at sea. The Council should affirm that all States, including Israel, and all individuals should desist from such acts.

Although sharing the sponsors' concerns, France was unable to support formulations not reflecting the precise facts. Israel's action contravened international law and could only exacerbate existing Middle East tensions, but was taken in the particular context of serious terrorist acts recently perpetrated in several European countries and, in those circumstances, could not be assessed in the usual manner.

The USSR supported demands of the Syrian Arab Republic that the Council condemn Israel, make it bear the entire responsibility and take measures to rule out any recurrence; the act was premeditated, an open breach of the conventions on civil aviation and threatened the principle of unimpeded use of international airspace for overflights by civil aircraft.

Israel's acts of hegemonism under the pretext of retaliation against terrorism must be resolutely stopped and strongly condemned, China said; the international community and the Council in particular should adopt forceful measures to prevent any such recurrence of interception or hijacking.

In Bulgaria's view, the text contained a precise description of what took place and it felt that no argument by Israel invoking its right of self-defence could alter the nature of its act, which trampled on international law.

The Congo, stating that Israel's arguments were more embarrassing than convincing, did not agree with a theory that would make official terrorism a rule of conduct for States in their relations; the Council was faced with either strengthening the Charter and international conventions or allowing them to be violated with impunity.

The Council would put an end to such acts if it lived up to its responsibilities through unanimous agreement, the United Arab Emirates believed; the alternative to that was more dangerous than what many could conceive.

Israel's acts of aggression jeopardizing civil aircraft and innocent lives would not stop unless the Council fully assumed its responsibilities, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya remarked. The Council was called on to take firm steps to deter any further terrorist deeds; it could achieve that only if it resorted to the means provided for in the Charter—principally, depriving Israel of United Nations membership and imposing deterrent economic sanctions against it to make it heed the will of the international community and comply with the Council's resolutions.

The situation could not be addressed by the Council save through a firm resolution condemning Israel's acts, the Syrian Arab Republic said; it must proclaim that Israel bore sole responsibility for that act of international air piracy and then it must oblige Israel to cease all acts of piracy and terrorism everywhere. If the Council did not act strongly, including imposing sanctions, Israel would continue its terrorism against the Arabs; the aggression against the airliner was just the beginning of a new terrorism that could destroy the freedom and safety of international aviation.

Jordan hoped that the Council would condemn the violation by Israel of the most elementary rules and principles promulgated by the United Nations and the international community for the safety and lives of civilian passengers, and would dissuade Israel from repeating such terrorist deeds.

The States pushing for the text, Israel remarked, were those sponsoring terrorism, especially the Syrian Arab Republic and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; to adopt the text would signal to them that they could go on with their campaign of bombing, murder, hijacking, assassination and hostage-taking. Having had clear indications that a terrorist commute from Tripoli to the Syrian Arab Republic was in process, Israel said, it had decided to act. States using their planes to ferry terrorists could not expect them to be allowed to fly uninterdicted all the time. Rather than condemning victims of terrorism who did take action against terrorists, the Council must adopt a responsible approach to combating both international terrorism and States that supported terrorists.

Israel had no right to speak of terrorism or of innocent lives, as its own record was replete with terrorist acts, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya remarked, going back to 1973, when it downed a Libyan airliner, causing the death of 106 civilians;(93) the interception was but one of Israel's terrorist actions planned by its politicians. Israel might well consider Libyan support of the Palestinian revolution to be terrorism and each Palestinian camp to be a terrorist base, but the Jamahiriya did not hide its support of the Palestinians from anyone.

At the opening of the discussion, the Syrian Arab Republic explained that at 0854 hours (GMT) on 4 February a private Libyan civilian G-2 type aircraft had left Tripoli International Airport, with an official Syrian delegation, headed by the Assistant Secretary-General of the Arab Baath Socialist Party, on board. While flying in international airspace over the Mediterranean Sea, the pilot informed the Cyprus airport control centre, at 1101 hours, that two Israeli fighter aircraft were intercepting him and demanding that he accompany them; at 1103 hours, the aircraft's contact with Cyprus airport was broken off. The Syrian Arab Republic requested that measures be taken to discover the fate of the aircraft and its passengers and crew and to ensure their safety. It also asked the Council to hold Israel fully responsible and condemn it, and to demand that Israel end such acts and heed international agreements.

Israel responded that its pilots had intercepted the aircraft and brought it down to an Israeli airfield where the passengers were examined but there were no terrorists aboard. The passengers and crew were no longer in Israel. Its suspicion that there were terrorists on board had grown out of a Tripoli meeting of 20 terrorist organizations that had just ended, and at which there had been clear declarations about continuing terrorist attacks against Israel. A nation attacked by terrorists was permitted to use force to prevent or pre-empt future attacks.

Iraq pointed out that the Council had unanimously condemned Israel for similar air piracy in 1973(94) when it had intercepted a Lebanese aircraft travelling to Baghdad.

Israel was the first to use its air force to hijack a civilian airliner when, in 1954, its fighter planes hijacked a Syrian airliner, forcing it to land at Lod Airport, the United Arab Emirates added, and when the Lebanese aircraft was hijacked in 1973, the Israeli Chief of Staff said more such operations might be expected. The Council had warned Israel that if such acts were repeated, it would consider enforcement measures, the USSR recalled. Despite that warning, China said, the recent incident showed that Israel was bent on deliberate violations in disregard of the Council's resolutions and authority. Israel's acts showed that it did not feel bound by the Council's 1973 resolution,(94) Algeria said. In Bulgaria's view, the recent interception-the latest in a long series of attacks against sovereign Arab countries-was an act of war, an insolent challenge to the Arab and international communities, and a threat to international peace and security. Jordan also cited and condemned various acts of Israel endangering civil aviation, as did Morocco, which added that the most recent hijacking was further proof of Israel's determination to extend the scope of aggression to all Arab States.

Israel pointed to what it called the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's record towards terrorism and support of all known terrorist groups, charging in particular that the December 1985 attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports had been carried out with Libyan and possibly also Syrian support; the Jamahiriya used private jets to ferry terrorists and then claimed inviolability of its right to fly the international airways.

Ghana stressed that the Council should not even remotely sanction Israel's act, which potentially threatened international peace and security; however justified Israel's grievance might be, it was obliged under the Charter to abjure force and turn to the Council for assistance in seeking redress. The Council should support the many conventions protecting civil aviation and should not undermine them.

Israel openly confessed to having carried out an act of air piracy in defiance of international law and agreements, the League of Arab States noted.

The Council must impose adequate punishments to deter Israel from carrying out further criminal acts likely to endanger international peace and security, Morocco said. Similarly, Algeria felt the Council must reject Israel's attempts to spread chaos and insecurity in international airspace, act to thwart the guilty party, restore international law and revive confidence in the Council.

Israel's act contradicted all norms of peaceful coexistence of peoples and endangered the international civil aviation system, the German Democratic Republic said, underlining the urgent necessity of increased collective efforts to bring about a comprehensive, just and lasting peace. The act was further proof of Israel's policy of expansion and domination which employed State terrorism, Yugoslavia stated; urgent and decisive measures by the international community were needed in order to eliminate terrorism as a phenomenon threatening peace and security and international relations. India regarded Israel's act as yet another instance in a lengthy catalogue of aggressive policies designed to intimidate its Arab neighbours. Either the Council joined the globe's entire population against State hijacking and State air piracy, or many more incidents would inevitably take place, Iran warned.

Other action. In February 1986, the Council of ICAO (see PART II, Chapter X) considered a request from the Syrian Arab Republic related to the interception of the Libyan aircraft and adopted a resolution by which it condemned Israel's action. The Council also considered a request from Israel related to alleged Libyan threats against the safety of civil aviation.

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

In 1986, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again dealt with the situation in the Syrian Golan Heights in the light of Israel's 1981 decision(95) to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Israeli-occupied territories (see p. 317).

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), with some 1,300 troops as of 1 November 1986, provided by Austria, Canada, Finland and Poland, was deployed between the Israeli and Syrian forces on the Golan Heights in accordance with the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded in 1974.(96) A group of observers from UNTSO assisted UNDOF.

UNDOF's main functions continued to be supervising the observance of the cease-fire in the Golan Heights area and ensuring that there were no military forces in the area of separation. The Security Council extended UNDOF's mandate twice during the year, each time for six months.

Communications. On 12 March 1986,(97) Israel charged the Syrian Arab Republic with expanding its armed services to unprecedented levels, saying that its vast arsenal already included ground-to-ground and surface-to-air missiles which could easily reach Israel's major cities, and that SAM-5 missiles had been moved close to Israel's border as well as across the Syrian border with Lebanon. In addition, the Syrian arsenal currently included over 4,000 tanks, 2,500 pieces of artillery and over 600 combat aircraft, while its standing army had increased from five divisions in 1982 to nine in 1986. Further, the Syrian Arab Republic continued supporting and promoting international terrorism, with terrorists headquartered at Damascus recently increasing their activities. In the light of these developments, immediate action by the international community was necessary.

Responding on 18 March,(98) the Syrian Arab Republic said that, to achieve a strategic balance and in accordance with its right of self-defence, it had endeavoured to build up its own military strength. In reiterating its condemnation of international terrorism, particularly Zionist terrorism, the Syrian Arab Republic declared that it would continue to be keenly concerned about the distinction between terrorism and national resistance. It was determined to continue its support of the Arab resistance based on its commitment towards the Arab people in general and the people of Palestine and Lebanon in particular.

On 18 July,(99) Israel reiterated that the Syrian Arab Republic supported PLO terrorists, particularly factions based at Damascus and in Syrian-dominated areas of Lebanon. Among acts committed by those factions, Israel cited an attempt on 10 July by Palestinians to infiltrate its northern coast in a rubber dinghy, which was intercepted by an Israeli naval vessel and forced to land off Israel's border coast with Lebanon; all four Palestinians were killed in the ensuing battle. Earlier, on 26 June, at an El Al check-in counter at Barajas Airport at Madrid, Spain, 14 people were injured, two seriously, when a suitcase exploded; it could have exploded in mid-flight killing all 100 passengers aboard. Spanish investigators had uncovered important links between the person involved and the Syrian Arab Republic, Israel said, calling on the international community to condemn and prevent such acts.

Israel had attempted to use an isolated incident to divert attention from terrorism committed by its occupation forces against the Arab people of Palestine and the inhabitants of the occupied territories in the Golan Heights and in southern Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic alleged on 4 August.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ The Syrian Government had strongly condemned the Madrid attack on 9 July and had always made a distinction between national liberation movements, which it supported, and terrorism.

Peace-keeping operation

UNDOF activities

Reports of the Secretary-General. Prior to the expiration of the six-month extensions of the mandate of UNDOF, on 31 May and 30 November 1986, the Secretary-General submitted reports on the activities of the Force for the periods from 14 November 1985 to 14 May 1986⁽¹⁰¹⁾ and from 15 May to 12 November 1986.⁽¹⁰²⁾

In both reports, the Secretary-General stated that UNDOF had continued to perform its functions effectively, with the co-operation of the parties. The cease-fire had been maintained and the situation in the Israel-Syria sector had remained quiet without serious incidents.

Supervision of the area of separation was carried out through static positions and observation posts manned 24 hours a day, patrols operating at irregular intervals on predetermined routes, and temporary outposts and patrols. Under a programme undertaken by the Syrian authorities, civilians continued returning to the area of separation; UNDOF adjusted its operations accordingly so as to carry out effectively its supervisory tasks under the Agreement on Disengagement.

In accordance with that Agreement, UNDOF also continued fortnightly inspections of armament and forces in the area of limitation, assisted by liaison officers from the parties. It continued to receive the co-operation of both parties, although restricted in movement and inspection in certain areas by both sides. There had, however, been a decrease in such restrictions in recent weeks, the Secretary-General reported in November, and UNDOF continued to seek the lifting of the remaining restrictions so as to guarantee its freedom of access to all locations on both sides.

Mines continued to pose a threat to UNDOF members and to the growing population in the area of separation. UNDOF was continuing its efforts, in consultation with the parties, to make the area of operation safe. The safety of Syrian shepherds who grazed their flocks close to the separation line continued to be of concern; intensified patrolling of new mine-cleared paths and the establishment of standing patrols helped to prevent incidents. The security fence in the southern part of the area of separation also continued to be effective in reducing the number of incidents. New patrol paths were under construction in the area of separation.

Despite the quiet, the Secretary-General stated, the Middle East situation as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous. He hoped that determined efforts would be made to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by the Security Council in 1973.⁽¹⁰³⁾

He considered UNDOF's continued presence essential and recommended the Syrian Arab Republic having given its assent and Israel having expressed agreement in each report that the Council extend the mandate for a further six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1986, without debate, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 584(1986), extending UNDOF's mandate until 30 November.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

- (a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);
- (b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1986;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 584(1986)

29 May 1986 Meeting 2687 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18109).

On 26 November, again without debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 590(1986), extending UNDOF's mandate until 31 May 1987.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

- (a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);
- (b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1987;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 590(1986)

26 November 1986 Meeting 2722 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18481).

Following adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:(104)

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 25 [of the May report; 24 of the November report]: 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Composition

As of 1 November 1986, the number of troops comprising UNDOF was: Austria 540, Canada 226, Finland 405, Poland 155 and United Nations military observers detailed from UNTSO 7, making a total of 1,333. UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission also assisted as required.

UNDOF financing

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1986,(105) the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 September, he had received $699.6 million in contributions for UNDOF together with the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) for the period from inception to 30 November 1986. The unpaid balance totalled $74.5 million, of which $31.3 million represented amounts apportioned among Member States which had stated that they did not intend to pay, and $36 million represented amounts transferred to a Special Account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.(71)

There was a shortfall of approximately $7.7 million in the UNDOF Special Account in respect of the periods from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1986; the shortfall arising from the previous periods of UNDOF up to 24 October 1979 together with UNEF until its liquidation in 1980 was estimated at $59.6 million. In the circumstances, troop contributors had not been paid on time and had not been reimbursed fully in accordance with agreed rates; they had continued, the Secretary-General said, to convey to him their serious concern over the situation which placed a heavy burden on them.

For UNDOF operations from 1 June to 30 November 1986, commitments amounted to $18,282,000 gross ($17,934,498 net), as authorized in 1985.(106) For operations from 1 December 1986 on, the Secretary-General estimated monthly costs of $2,900,000 gross ($2,850,000 net).

ACABQ recommendations. In November 1986,(75) ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's estimates for the cost of UNDOF in 1986/87. Requirements for UNDOF for the 12 months from 1 December 1986 to 30 November 1987 should not exceed $34,800,000 gross ($34,200,000 net), it stated. It recommended further that the Secretary-General be permitted the usual flexibility to transfer credits between items of expenditure, should that be necessary in the interest of good management and efficiency.

On a related matter, ACABQ said it had been informed that the 1984-1985 interim accounts indicated for the Special Account for UNEF and UNDOF a "surplus" balance of $1,496,703 for 1985, representing excess of income over expenditures due to interest and miscellaneous credits accrued. However, "income" included assessed contributions irrespective of collectability. Because of the withholding of contributions by certain States, the "surplus" had in effect been drawn on to its full extent.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions—41/44 A and B—on the financing of UNDOF.

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/44 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 28 May 1975, 381(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, 408(1977) of 26 May 1977, 420(1977) of 30 November 1977, 429(1978) of 31 May 1978, 441(1978) of 30 November 1978, 449(1979) of 30 May 1979, 456(1979) of 30 November 1979, 470(1980) of 30 May 1980, 481(1980) of 26 November 1980, 485(1981) of 22 May 1981, 493(1981) of 23 November 1981, 506(1982) of 26 May 1982, 524(1982) of 29 November 1982, 531(1983) of 26 May 1983, 543(1983) of 29 November 1983, 551(1984) of 30 May 1984, 557(1984) of 28 November 1984, 563(1985) of 21 May 1985, 576(1985) of 21 November 1985, 584(1986) of 29 May 1986 and 590(1986) of 26 November 1986,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, 33/13 D of 8 December 1978, 34/7 C of 3 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980, 35/45 A of 1 December 1980, 36/66 A of 30 November 1981, 37/38 A of 30 November 1982, 38/35 A of 1 December 1983, 39/28 A of 30 November 1984 and 40/59 A of 2 December 1985,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $18,282,000 gross ($17,934,498 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 40/59 A for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1986, inclusive;

II

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $17,400,000 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1986 to 31 May 1987, inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $17,400,000 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) and the provisions of section II, paragraphs 2 (b) and 2 (c), and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 C (XXX), section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 31/5 D, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 32/4 C, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 33/13 D, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 34/7 C, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 35/45 A, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 36/66 A, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 37/38 A and section V, paragraphs 1 and 2, of resolution 39/28 A, in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of $10,000 other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1986 to 31 May 1987, inclusive;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $290,000 approved for the period from 1 December 1986 to 31 May 1987, inclusive;

III

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $2,900,000 gross ($2,850,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1987, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 590(1986), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

IV

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 41/44 A

3 December 1986 Meeting 94 110-3-21 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/919) by recorded vote (82-1-17), 28 November (meeting 38); 10-nation draft (A/C.5/41/L.11, part A); agenda item 120 (a).

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The Syrian Arab Republic insisted that the expenses of Middle East peace-keeping forces should be borne by Israel, the aggressor. A similar view was expressed by Iraq, while, for the same reason, Iran did not participate in the vote.

The USSR said there was no justification for the level of the UNDOF budget and the appropriations for certain items seemed inflated.

Also on 3 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 41/44 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 6 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 33/13 E of 14 December 1978, 34/7 D of 17 December 1979, 35/45 B of 1 December 1980, 36/66 B of 30 November 1981, 37/38 B of 30 November 1982, 38/35 B of 1 December 1983, 39/28 B of 30 November 1984 and 40/59 B of 2 December 1985,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces,

Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $1,496,703, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered into the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

Change of Commander

On 2 June 1986,(107) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that, subject to the usual consultations, he intended to appoint Major-General Gustaf Welin, of Sweden, to replace Major-General Gustav Häglund, of Finland, as Commander of UNDOF, since the latter had relinquished his post on 31 May to assume command of UNIFIL (see p. 308).

The Council President replied on 5 June(108) that the Council had that day considered the matter in informal consultations and agreed with the proposal.

Major-General Welin assumed command on 1 July.

Israel and Tunisia

On 13 January 1986,(109) Tunisia commented on Israel's November 1985 letter,(110) which had rejected the Security Council resolution condemning the October 1985 Israeli air raid on a Tunis suburb.(111) Israel's accusation that Tunisia had failed to live up to its commitment to keep the peace and was a base for terrorist operations distorted the facts, Tunisia said. The threat hanging over its own security and over that of other countries accused by Israel of harbouring PLO structures and missions could not be ignored. Israel's reply had ignored its obligation; by refusing to comply with and by excluding itself from the obligations involved in the Council's decisions, Israel was excluding itself from the Organization. The Council should not tolerate the situation and must impose its decision on Israel or else apply sanctions. Tunisia reserved the right to take any necessary action required by the situation.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In a March 1986 resolution on Palestine (see p. 270), the Commission on Human Rights condemned Israel's 1985 armed aggression against Tunisia and the PLO offices there.

Territories occupied by Israel

During 1986, the situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflicts in the Middle East was again considered by the General Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices). The Committee reviewed information gathered from a variety of sources, including oral testimony and written communications, about developments in the territories, and assessed the human rights situation with a view to deciding whether any action was required. The territories comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River (including East Jerusalem), the Golan Heights and the Gaza Strip.

The General Assembly, in December, adopted seven resolutions dealing with specific aspects of the Committee's report: it demanded that Israel desist from certain policies and practices in the territories (41/63 D); that it comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) (41/63 B); that it desist from any action which would change the legal status and composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 (41/63 C), including the Golan Heights (41/63 F); that it rescind its action against Palestinian detainees and release them immediately (41/63 A); that it rescind the expulsion of Palestinian leaders, some of whom had been in public office (41/63 E); and that it ensure the freedom of educational institutions (41/63 G).

The Commission on Human Rights, in February, also condemned Israeli policies and practices in the territories and declared once more that Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without legal validity.

In October 1986, the Secretary-General noted that there was a wide measure of agreement within the international community that a negotiated settlement of the Middle East conflict included withdrawal of Israeli forces from Arab territories occupied since June 1967. Until such a settlement was reached, it was of great importance that the parties should avoid any actions that could increase tension.

The Security Council met in December to consider the worsening situation in the occupied territories and adopted resolution 592(1986), by which it strongly deplored the firing by the Israeli army on students and called on Israel to abide by the fourth Geneva Convention and to release any persons detained as a result of events at Bir Zeit University in the occupied West Bank. The Council further called on all parties to exercise maximum restraint and avoid violent acts.

Earlier, in January, the Council also considered the situation in the territories, when it met following two incidents at the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem (see p. 274).

Communications (March-November). The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, on 24 March 1986,⁽¹⁾ informed the Secretary-General of the Committee's concern over Israel's having again refused travel permits to Palestinians living in the territories to attend a United Nations-sponsored meeting, in this case permits for representatives of the Family Welfare Society in the West Bank and the Palestine Red Crescent Society in the Gaza Strip to attend the preparatory meeting for the International Meeting on the Question of Palestine for Non-Governmental Organizations (Geneva, 6 and 7 March). In the Committee's opinion, those measures were not based on security considerations but rather aimed at barring international exposure of conditions in the territories and at preventing a meaningful dialogue among the various forces devoted to a peaceful solution, including the Palestinians themselves; such discriminatory measures violated the right to freedom of movement and could only make the search for a peaceful solution ever more difficult. On behalf of the Committee, the Chairman appealed to the Secretary-General to do all in his power to ensure that in future Israel would not prevent Palestinians from participating in meetings organized by the Committee.

On 23 June,⁽²⁾ Jordan transmitted information alleging attacks and violations by Israeli occupying authorities and settlers against the area of Tel Al-Ramida and its mosque in the occupied town of Al-Khalil (Hebron), which, Jordan said, were part of a series of operations directed against Holy Places in the Arab territories, in violation of international law governing foreign occupation and in disregard of human rights, freedom of religion and the principle of the inviolability of places of worship.

By a letter of 24 June,⁽³⁾ Jordan transmitted information on what it said were Israeli colonization activities in the occupied Arab territories (see p. 329) during May, pointing out that such a policy ran counter to international efforts aimed at bringing about a just and comprehensive Middle East solution.

On 17 September,⁽⁴⁾ Iraq transmitted a PLO letter of the previous day, charging Israel with planning to confiscate 4,000 dunums of Palestinian land to add to the Israeli settlement of Ariel, which, PLO said, was built on 30,000 dunums confiscated from Palestinian villages. Most of the 4,000 dunums were currently used as olive groves and wheat fields and their confiscation would mean the end of the livelihood of the villages of Salfit and Iskaka. With 3,000 dunums being confiscated from three other villages, land confiscated in the Nablus area during the summer of 1986 would amount to 7,000 dunums. PLO urged the Secretary-General and the Security Council to end Israel's latest offensive against Palestinians.

By a 9 October letter, forwarded by Oman on 10 October,⁽⁵⁾ PLO alleged that Israeli authorities were covering up the death of a 30-year-old Palestinian, who had been found dead near the Israeli settlement of Ramat Rahel on 15 August; Israel had refused to release the coroner's report and claimed that he had blown himself up while preparing an explosive device. This was the fifth time in the past one and a half years, PLO continued, that Israel had attributed mysterious Palestinian deaths to such a cause and in each case there had not been any clear evidence. PLO called on the Secretary-General to try to end summary executions of Palestinians.

On 12 November,⁽⁶⁾ Qatar transmitted seven letters from PLO, charging Israel with increasingly repressive measures against the Palestinians in the territories. On 3 November, PLO called on the Secretary-General to intervene to stop the deportation of the editor-in-chief of the Arab daily Al-Shaab. On 4 November, PLO charged that, during the previous evening, 50 armed Israeli soldiers had broken into the home of the Vice-President of Bir Zeit University and attacked student residences, arresting scores of Palestinian students whose whereabouts were unknown; at the same time, soldiers had attacked student residences of Bethlehem University, arresting 30 students and taking them to Al-Fara'a prison. In addition, the home of the President of the Student Council was broken into; those attacks, PLO said, came in the wake of an Israeli military order that Bethlehem University be closed for a week after students had held a memorial service commemorating the 1956 massacre of 47 Palestinian villagers from Kafr Kassem by Israeli soldiers. On the same date, PLO reported knife attacks by Israelis on three Palestinians in the Gaza Strip, which were said to have taken place on 19 and 20 October. On 5 November, PLO alleged that Israel had decided to move a potentially hazardous butane-gas storage plant in West Jerusalem to a Palestinian neighbourhood north of the city, because of pressure from Jewish residents; the proposed plant could well be a potential target for Zionist settler terrorists, PLO said. On the same date, PLO charged that, on 25 October, 30 Israeli settlers had stormed the yard of a Palestinian high school in Jerusalem's Old City, claiming that Palestinian students had thrown stones at them. Also on 5 November, PLO charged Israel with harassing a Palestinian from the Ramallah area who refused to have his land and home illegally confiscated. Similar harassment of a 70-year-old resident of the village of Sharafat whose home was demolished by Israeli authorities was reported in a letter dated 6 November.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a 20 February resolution, adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 7, with 6 abstentions,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that occupation itself constituted a fundamental violation of the rights of the population of the occupied territories and denounced Israel's continued refusal to allow the Committee on Israeli practices access. It reiterated that Committee's deep concern that Israel's policy was based on the so-called "Homeland" doctrine which envisaged a monoreligious (Jewish) State that included territories occupied by Israel since June 1967, and the Committee's affirmation that that policy not only denied the population their right to self-determination but was also a source of continuing and systematic human rights violations.

The Commission reaffirmed that Israel's continuous breaches of the fourth Geneva Convention and of the Additional Protocols to the 1949 Geneva Conventions were war crimes and an affront to humanity. It rejected and reiterated its condemnation of Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the territories, including Jerusalem, and considered all those measures and their consequences null and void. It condemned Israel's attempts to subject the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to Israeli laws, as well as all terrorist actions against the Palestinian inhabitants of the territories by Jewish gangs and other racist Zionists. It condemned Israeli policies and practices, administrative and legislative measures to promote and expand the establishment of settler colonies in the territories, and a number of other specific practices.

The Commission called on Israel to return immediately the displaced Arab inhabitants to their property in Palestine and other occupied territories, and the municipal chiefs to their municipalities so that they could resume the functions for which they had been elected. It called on Israel to release all Arabs detained as a result of their struggle for self-determination and, pending release, to accord them protection as prisoners of war, demanding that it cease all acts of ill-treatment of Arab detainees.

The Commission urged Israel to refrain from policies in the territories that violated human rights and reiterated its call to States and international bodies not to recognize the changes carried out by Israel in the territories: including Jerusalem, and to avoid any action aiding Israel in its annexation and colonization. The Commission requested the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, to recommend to the Security Council the adoption of measures against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter for its persistent human rights violations. The Secretary-General was requested to give the Commission's resolution the widest possible publicity.

By another resolution of the same date, the Commission reaffirmed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories (see p. 326). Also on 20 February, the Commission adopted a resolution on human rights in occupied Syrian territory (see p. 335).

In a 10 March resolution dealing with various aspects of the Palestine question (see p. 270), the Commission condemned Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the United Nations Charter, international law and United Nations resolutions, and demanded Israel's immediate withdrawal, adding that Israeli occupation of the territories constituted the major obstacle hindering the Palestinians' right to self-determination. The Commission condemned Israel's aggression and practices against Palestinians in and outside the territories.

By another resolution, adopted on 11 March by a roll-call vote of 28 to 6, with 5 abstentions,(8) the Commission similarly condemned Israel and its policies which, in the Commission's view, constituted grave violations of the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and United Nations resolutions; it also condemned Israel for its persistence in colonizing the territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its annual report to the General Assembly,(9) adopted on 10 September 1986, the Committee on Israeli practices presented information on Israeli policy in the occupied territories and on aspects of the situation there, including information on annexation and settlements, treatment of civilians and detainees, and measures affecting fundamental freedoms.

To examine information on the situation since its previous report of August 1985,(10) the Committee held three series of meetings: from 2 to 6 December 1985 in New York, to examine communications concerning individual cases of alleged human rights violations and hear testimonies of witnesses who had just returned from the territories where they had looked into cases of expulsion orders against a number of civilians; and from 21 April to 1 May 1986 at Geneva and Amman, Jordan, to examine information on further developments and hear testimonies of persons living in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Following an exchange of correspondence between the Committee Chairman and the Secretary-General (letters of 27 April and 8 May), a procedure was agreed to permit consultations among the Committee members in order to enable them to consider, complete and approve the report without the formal two-week session originally scheduled for August; accordingly, they met at Geneva from 8 to 10 September when they adopted the report.

The Committee agreed to address itself to Egypt, Israel, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO, to seek their co-operation. While Israel continued to withhold its co-operation and the Committee was precluded from visiting the occupied territories, the Committee followed the situation there on a day-to-day basis through reports appearing in the Israeli and Palestinian press; in addition, it examined several communications and reports from Governments, organizations and individuals in the territories.

At Amman, the Committee was received by Jordan's Minister of Occupied Territories Affairs and was presented with reports prepared by the Ministry. It also received from PLO a series of reports and statistics.

On 17 June, the Syrian Arab Republic expressed regret that the Committee's meetings were being shortened and that the Committee had not visited the Republic as scheduled, which prevented it from hearing first-hand witnesses from the Golan Heights where Israeli occupation authorities had intensified their repressive practices. On 7 August, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted a report on Israeli practices against the Syrian population of the Heights, prepared by its Foreign Ministry.

Israel's policy resulted in escalating violence, upon which Israel adopted its so-called iron-fist policy marked by new security arrangements in the territories, which again led to an aggravation of tension between IDF and the population, leading in some instances to complaints and strikes by the latter. Among Israel's repressive measures were various forms of harassment which provoked serious injuries or death to civilians, an extension of the practice of reprisal and collective punishment, and the demolition or sealing off of houses of suspects. Other measures included a further upsurge of house and town arrests, seriously hindering freedom of movement, as well as increases in expulsions and deportations. The deportation procedure implemented by the authorities left no opportunity for the deportees to examine allegations presented against them. Freedom of expression was curtailed by censorship, closure of newspapers and restriction of movement of Palestinian journalists. Freedom of education was restricted through arbitrary dismissal or deportation of school and university teachers, repression campaigns and arrests of teachers and students, as well as closing of schools and universities.

The period covered by the report had been marked by increases in arrests and administrative detention orders (see p. 328). The report also contained information on Israel's policy purporting to return municipalities in the territories to their local leaders (see p. 331).

The overall picture drawn from the information examined by the Committee revealed a further deterioration of the situation as regards the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention, the main international instrument applying to the occupied territories, continued to be disregarded. As annexation continued without respite, repressive measures and harassment imposed an increasingly heavy burden on the population, whereas arbitrary expulsion of Palestinians was swelling the hundreds of thousands still outside the territories who were denied the right to return.

The Committee again stressed the international community's responsibility to reverse that situation and appealed to the parties concerned to prevent further deterioration and to ensure an effective protection of the basic rights of the civilians in the territories.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In an October 1986 report on various aspects of the Middle East situation, ("") the Secretary-General stated that there was continued tension in the Israeli-occupied territories, with frequent violent incidents in varying form and degree. As long as a settlement was not reached, the situation would remain unstable and, if the deadlock in the peace process was allowed to persist, there was a grave danger that major hostilities would break out again.

There was a wide measure of agreement within the international community that a comprehensive Middle East settlement should include Israeli withdrawal from the territories, the Secretary-General noted; in the mean time, it was of great importance that the parties should avoid any actions that could increase tension. The Secretary-General expressed particular concern about the consequences that would flow from the establishment by Israel of additional settlements in the territories which, more than any other single factor, contributed to doubts in the minds of many about its readiness to negotiate a peace settlement that would require its withdrawal. At the same time, the Secretary-General added, peace efforts would be enhanced if there was a lessening of violent incidents, which all too frequently involved innocent lives and of which there had been some particularly terrible examples during the period under review.

In another October report,(12) submitted in response to a 1985 General Assembly resolution,(13) the Secretary-General stated that he had continued to provide the Committee on Israeli practices with facilities it required and that an additional staff member and temporary assistance staff had been made available to it. To ensure the widest circulation of the Committee's 1985 report, 10 press releases had been issued while it was being considered by the Assembly. The Committee's work had been given radio news coverage in a variety of languages, which had had to be reduced, however, owing to the suspension of short-wave broadcasts resulting from the United Nations financial emergency; references to its work were also contained in the tenth edition of Everyone's United Nations, published in June 1986, and in the Yearbook of the United Nations. In connection with the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People on 29 November, issues covered in the Committee's report were widely disseminated through a DPI pamphlet, a Committee representative participated in a commemorative meeting organized by the Information Service at Geneva, the Service provided coverage of the Committee's work, and United Nations information centres highlighted the Palestine question in their newsletters, often specifying the Committee's activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 41/63 D on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and by the principles and provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Recalling all its resolutions on the subject, in particular, resolutions 32/91 B and C of 13 December 1977, 33/113 C of 18 December 1978, 34/90 A of 12 December 1979, 35/122 C of 11 December 1980, 36/147 C of 16

December 1981, 37/88 C of 10 December 1982, 38/79 D of 15 December 1983, 39/95 D of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 D of 16 December 1985.

Recalling also the relevant resolutions adopted by the Security Council, by the Commission on Human Rights, in particular its resolutions 1983/1 of 15 February 1983, 1984/1 of 20 February 1984, 1985/1 A and B and 1985/2 of 19 February 1985, 1986/1 A and B and 1986/2 of 20 February 1986, and by other United Nations organs concerned and by the specialized agencies,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contains, inter alia, self-incriminating public statements made by officials of Israel, the occupying Power,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly and for its thoroughness and impartiality;

2. Deplores the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

3. Demands that Israel allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

4. Reaffirms the fact that occupation itself constitutes a grave violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the occupied Arab territories;

5. Condemns the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments, and condemns in particular those violations which the Convention designates as "grave breaches" thereof;

6. Declares once more that Israel's grave breaches of that Convention are war crimes and an affront to humanity;

7. Reaffirms, in accordance with the Convention, that the Israeli military occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories is of a temporary nature, thus giving no right whatsoever to the occupying Power over the territorial integrity of the occupied territories;

8. Strongly condemns the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) Annexation of parts of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem;

(b) Imposition of Israeli laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

(c) Illegal imposition and levy of heavy and disproportionate taxes and dues;

(d) Establishment of new Israeli settlements and expansion of the existing settlements on private and public Arab lands, and transfer of an alien population thereto;

(e) Eviction, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories and denial of their right to return;

(f) Confiscation and expropriation of private and public Arab property in the occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land involving the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand and the inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other;

(g) Excavation and transformation of the landscape and the historical, cultural and religious sites, especially at Jerusalem;

(h) Pillaging of archaeological and cultural property;

(i) Destruction and demolition of Arab houses;

(j) Collective punishment, mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population;

(k) Ill-treatment and torture of persons under detention;

(l) Interference with religious freedoms and practices as well as family rights and customs;

(m) Interference with the system of education and with the social and economic and health development of the population in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories;

(n) Interference with the freedom of movement of individuals within the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories;

(o) Illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories;

9. Strongly condemns, in particular, the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) Implementation of an "iron-fist policy" against the inhabitants of the occupied territories since 4 August 1985;

(b) Ill-treatment and torture of children and minors under detention and/or imprisonment;

(c) Closure of headquarters and/or offices of trade unions and harassment of trade union leaders;

(d) Interference with the freedom of the press including censorship, closure and suspension of newspapers and magazines;

10. Condemns also the Israeli repression against and closing of the educational institutions in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, particularly the prohibition of Syrian textbooks, Syrian educational system, the deprivation of Syrian students from pursuing their higher education in Syrian universities, the denial of the right to return to Syrian students receiving their higher education in the Syrian Arab Republic, the forcing of Hebrew on Syrian students, the imposition of courses that promote hatred, prejudice and religious intolerance and the dismissal of teachers, all in clear violation of the Geneva Convention;

11. Strongly condemns the arming of Israeli settlers in the occupied territories to commit acts of violence against Arab civilians and the perpetration of acts of violence by these armed settlers against individuals, causing injury and death and wide-scale damage to Arab property;

12. Reaffirms that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or legal status of the occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, are null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in the occupied territories constitutes a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention and of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

13. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from the policies and practices referred to in paragraphs 8, 9, 10 and 11 above;

14. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced Arab and Palestinian inhabitants to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, in implementation of Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967;

15. Urges international organizations, including the specialized agencies, in particular the International Labour Organisation, to continue to examine the conditions of Arab workers in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

16. Reiterates its call upon all States, in particular those States parties to the Geneva Convention, in accordance with article 1 of that Convention, and upon international organizations, including the specialized agencies, not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

17. Requests the Special Committee, pending early termination of Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the population of the occupied territories and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

18. Requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of civilians in detention in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

19. Condemns Israel's refusal to permit persons from the occupied territories to appear as witnesses before the Special Committee and to participate in conferences and meetings held outside the occupied territories;

20. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, so that it may investigate the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee that are no longer available;

(d) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present paragraph;

21. Requests the Security Council to ensure Israel's respect for and compliance with all the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and to initiate measures to halt Israeli policies and practices in those territories;

22. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to allow the reopening of the Roman Catholic Medical Facility Hospice at Jerusalem in order to continue to provide needed health and medical services to the Arab population in the city;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories".

General Assembly resolution 41/63 D

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 114-2-36 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/41/750) by recorded vote (93-2-25). 20 November (meeting 32); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar for the Arab Group, Senegal (A/SPC/41/L.23); agenda item 71.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/41/920; S-G, A/C.5/41/55, A/SPC/41/L.27. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 38; SPC 27-32; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel. United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Zaire.

Paragraph 6 was adopted by a separate recorded vote both in plenary (86 to 22, with 40 abstentions) and in Committee (73 to 18, with 25 abstentions). The Committee also approved paragraph 22 by a recorded vote of 117 to 2.

Israel regarded the text as the summum attainable in cynicism and hypocrisy, pointing out that the Arabs in the territories were becoming one of the most advanced ethnic groups in the Middle East, with high living standards attained with Israeli help; while life in the territories was far from ideal, problems arising from the conflict should not be exaggerated. Even in the most tense security situations, Israel constantly monitored itself and remedied whatever infringements it found. Speaking on all seven texts adopted under the agenda item, Israel rejected them as yet another political exercise in propaganda and warmongering, carried out in disregard of the facts, justice and common sense. Israel could not receive any committee whose mandate was based on resolutions which ultimately called for the elimination of Israel.

The United States, believing that the text was one-sided and polemical and could inflame an already embittered situation, particularly regretted charges such as the ill-treatment of children and minors under detention and objected to the expense the Special Committee imposed on the United Nations budget.

Sweden, although supporting most of the substantive provisions, in particular the condemnation of the various Israeli policies and practices in paragraphs 8 and 9, was not convinced that all their formulations were fully justified by proven facts; as the text also went beyond the Assembly's competence, it was unable to support it. Austria, despite supporting paragraph 22, abstained on the text as a whole because of certain formulations.

Peru had reservations about paragraph 9 (b). Speaking on all seven texts adopted under the agenda item, Argentina expressed reservations to certain formulations that, it felt, were in no relation to the substance of those texts and might lead to misinterpretations.

Communication (4 December). The United Arab Emirates forwarded a 4 December letter to the President of the Security Council,⁽¹⁴⁾ in which PLO charged that Israel had fired on students from Bir Zeit University, killing three and wounding one critically; 15 others had been transferred to hospitals where several were kidnapped by Israeli troops and taken to unknown destinations. Ramallah and Bir Zeit had been declared military zones, out of bounds to the press, and 500 Israeli troops were roaming the streets; at Bir Zeit University, 200 students remained under siege by Israeli troops. In view of those measures, PLO sought immediate action.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council held one meeting on 5 December and three more on 8 December to consider the situation in the occupied territories, as requested on 4 December by Zimbabwe on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Council invited Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zimbabwe, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. Also invited to participate, under rule 39^f of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, were the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, the latter at the request of the United Arab Emirates.⁽¹⁶⁾

Also at the request of the United Arab Emirates,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council decided, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (Australia, Denmark, France, United Kingdom), that an invitation to participate be accorded to a representative of PLO. The invitation, though not made pursuant to rule 37^e or rule 39 of the rules of procedure, conferred on PLO the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited pursuant to rule 37.

Before the vote, the United States reiterated its opposition to the granting of hearings to persons speaking on behalf of non-governmental entities, except on the basis of rule 39 (see p. 275).

On 8 December, the Council adopted resolution 592(1986).

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter dated 4 December 1986 from the Permanent Representative of Zimbabwe to the United Nations, in his capacity as the Chairman of the Co-ordinating

Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, contained in document S/18501,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Seriously concerned about the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Bearing in mind the specific status of Jerusalem,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Strongly deplores the opening of fire by the Israeli army resulting in the death and the wounding of defenceless students;

3. Calls upon Israel to abide immediately and scrupulously by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War;

4. Further calls upon Israel to release any person or persons detained as a result of the recent events at Bir Zeit University in violation of the above-mentioned Geneva Convention;

5. Also calls on all concerned parties to exercise maximum restraint, to avoid violent acts and to contribute towards the establishment of peace;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution not later than 20 December 1986.

Security Council resolution 592(1986)

6 December 1986

Meeting 2727

14-0-1

5-nation draft (S/18506/Rev.1).

Sponsors: Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, United Arab Emirates
Meeting numbers. SC 2724-2727.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Denmark, France, Ghana, Madagascar, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Speaking on behalf of the non-aligned countries, Zimbabwe said that at a time when maximum restraint and care were demanded to avoid unnecessary spread of violence and death the Israeli response had been to provoke more violence and inflict more death on Palestinians. The students had been demonstrating against occupation and oppressive Israeli practice, Jordan stated; Israel was attempting to disrupt and undermine academic life at Bir Zeit University because it considered education to be one element preserving the national identity of the Arabs under occupation. Continued Israeli occupation and its accompanying policies were the reasons for the increased violence and tension.

According to PLO, the Israeli army had erected some check-points outside the Bir Zeit University campus and a faculty member had been stopped for almost 90 minutes; he had insisted on his right to enter the campus. Some of his students had come to inquire about the situation. An argument had ⁵See footnote a on p. 275.

⁶See footnote b on p. 275.

ensued which resulted in the death of two people and the wounding of a third who was still in very critical condition. The faculty member had been arrested and was being held at an unknown destination; his safety and return should also be one of the Council's responsibilities. Israeli troops had broken into the hospitals and arrested students wounded in the incident. Israel planned both to evacuate and to eliminate the Arab population of Palestine.

On 4 December, several hundred students rioted outside the old campus of Bir Zeit University, Israel said. Simultaneously, other students blocked off all traffic on several roads, including the central artery leading from the Judean mountains to the coastal plain. There were other orchestrated disruptions in the Ramallah area, timed to begin at the same moment. A small IDF contingent, which rushed to the scene, was greatly outnumbered by hundreds of rioters who attacked it with rocks, metal rods and flying objects. IDF tried without success to disperse the mob with tear-gas, shots in the air and rubber bullets. The soldiers, in danger of being killed, directed fire at the rioters; regrettably, several of them were injured, two fatally. The rioters attempted to prevent ambulances and medical aid rushed in by the authorities from reaching the wounded, who were evacuated subsequently to the Ramallah hospital. Academic freedom, Israel stressed, was not a licence to riot and did not include the disruption of public order, the threats that were issued or the violence. Over the years, PLO had mounted an all-out effort to subvert the academic purpose of the universities and to turn them into centres of incitement, extremism and terror. Israel had acted at Bir Zeit to pacify a situation deliberately provoked by PLO. The 4 December incident was part of a larger effort by PLO—which had been rapidly losing ground everywhere—to restore its position; the well-orchestrated incitement had been intended to re-establish Fatah's dominance over its rival factions within PLO.

Israel's action must be condemned in the strongest possible terms and its arrogance curbed by measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, Zimbabwe said.

China believed that the Council should take urgent measures to check Israel's atrocities and demand that Israel immediately implement the fourth Geneva Convention. In the opinion of the USSR, Israel's actions called for firm condemnation and for adoption of measures necessary to prevent their recurrence.

Ghana called for a resolution which would condemn the shooting, request the release of all detainees, and call for respect by Israel of the fourth Geneva Convention, for its withdrawal from the territories and for respect of the international character of Jerusalem. In Egypt's view, the Council must reaffirm Israel's responsibility to ensure the protection of the inhabitants and their interests. Speaking for the Arab Group, Kuwait expected the Council to discharge its duties in accordance with the Charter; the time had come for the international community to put an end to Israel's expansionist policies.

The tragic developments of 4 December and the acts of violence drew attention to the urgent need to bring about a comprehensive, lasting and just Middle East settlement, said France, expressing a view shared by many speakers during the debate. Among them, Bulgaria said the very dangerous turn of events required the Organization to take urgent and effective measures to bring about a Middle East peace. Several countries, among them Bulgaria and the USSR, believed that an international conference was the best or only means to arrive at a comprehensive settlement. The Council could help calm the situation by reaching agreement on the convening of an international peace conference, Jordan stated; until that was achieved, the Council must deal with Israel's practices.

The only ones to benefit from a worsening of the current tense atmosphere on the West Bank would be extremists on both sides, the United Kingdom believed; it was incumbent on Israel to ensure that its administration was indeed as benign as it claimed.

As long as Israel did not withdraw from the territories, similar events would occur, the Syrian Arab Republic warned. The recent events contributed to an escalation of violence which was part of Israel's plan to Judaize the territories, Morocco said; more than ever, it was necessary for the international community to halt that escalation. Similarly, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States believed that the various incidents were a pattern flowing from a policy designed to establish the ultimate Israel, which incorporated the occupied territories.

Communications (8-16 December). Meeting urgently to consider developments in the territories and the situation at the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon (see p. 290), the non-aligned countries issued a communique on 8 December(18) in which they condemned Israel for its murder of defenceless students and its brutality against the population of Ramallah, Bir Zeit and other areas, and reiterated their call for United Nations action, including sanctions against Israel, so as to end its occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories.

The Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in a statement made on 7 December at Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, and transmitted by Morocco the following day,(19) strongly protested the shooting and wounding of Palestinian students at Bir Zeit University and expressed support for the call of the non-aligned and other countries for urgent Security Council action to end the repression.

The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, in a 16 December letter,⁽²⁰⁾ reported further incidents in the territories from 8 to 14 December, including shooting at Palestinian students, arrests of demonstrators, closing of the old campus of Bir Zeit University, curfews and even the storming of hospitals to arrest wounded Palestinians; since 5 December, Israeli forces were said to have arrested 580 Palestinians. In the light of those grave developments, the Chairman appealed to the Secretary-General to do all in his power to ensure that Israel implemented the Council's 8 December resolution.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Council, the Secretary-General reported on 20 December on the implementation of its resolution,⁽²¹⁾ which had been cabled to Israel immediately after adoption.

On 18 December, Israel orally informed him that it regarded the resolution as negative and one-sided, and that it considered it absurd that PLO, which had provoked the disturbances, should have caused the matter to be brought before the Council. With reference to paragraph 3, Israel stated that its continuing policy was to implement all the humanitarian principles embodied in the 1949 Geneva Conventions on a de facto basis, but it did not consider those Conventions legally applicable to the territories in question. With regard to paragraph 4, Israel stated that all those who had been arrested would be brought to trial under due process of law; figures for the numbers arrested or still in detention were not available.

Israel further informed the Secretary-General that in the week beginning 8 December further disturbances had taken place in "Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza district" resulting from "PLO elements" trying to disrupt normal civil life. IDF had exercised restraint, but had been obliged to intervene, especially to keep communications open. In some cases, rubber bullets had been used and only in the most severe cases when IDF lives had been at risk had live bullets been fired. All suspected law-breakers had been arrested; some had since been freed, others had been tried and still others were under investigation. The main trouble centres had been the universities where "PLO elements" had been particularly active; those of Bir Zeit and An Najah had been closed for one week. "Masked terrorists" had tried to disrupt normal life by forcing shop-owners to close their shops and IDF had intervened to open them at the owners' request; when "terror elements" had tried to enter Gaza schools, IDF had stopped them at the parents' request. An Israeli civilian had been stabbed in Jerusalem on 11 December, the mayor of Qabatiyeh on 14 December and an Israeli soldier in Ramallah on 18 December; in the last case, the assailants had been arrested. Investigations into other casualties caused by the disturbances were continuing. In the week starting 15 December, calm had been restored as a result of co-operation between the Israeli authorities and the local population.

The Secretary-General had received letters from other concerned parties.

On 17 December, Jordan conveyed its opinion of the resolution, saying that it approved the preambular part and paragraphs 1 to 4 and 6. Concerning paragraph 5, it felt that by calling on all parties to exercise restraint, no distinction was made between victim and aggressor or between legitimate resistance and repressive acts of violence by the occupation authorities; neither was there distinction between occupation authorities, who were responsible for protecting the civilian population under the fourth Geneva Convention, and the population subjected to attacks by Israeli religious fanatics, armed residents of Israeli settlements and Israeli military forces. Before and after the 5 December Council meeting, Israeli residents of West Jerusalem had attacked individuals and the property of Arab residents in occupied Arab Jerusalem without any serious or decisive steps being taken by Israel to halt those attacks which, as a result, became increasingly widespread and serious, putting additional pressure on the Arab population. The events at Jerusalem, Nablus, Bir Zeit, Gaza, Khan Yunis, the refugee camps and other parts of the territories demonstrated unequivocally the use of live ammunition by the occupation authorities against defenceless Arab citizens and the arbitrary behaviour of the authorities in their intention to terrorize and subjugate the population.

The disavowal by the authorities of any responsibility for protecting the population and their property should not obscure the fact that occupation itself and the population's refusal to accept it were the heart of the problem. In view of that, Jordan was of the opinion that the Council should convene an international peace conference on the Middle East, with a view to achieving a just and durable settlement through implementation of the Council's resolutions and realization of the Palestinians' legitimate rights.

In two letters of 11 December, PLO charged Israel with a number of violations of the resolution and of the Convention, saying that Israel had intensified its repression, killing four Palestinians, wounding scores of others and arresting a great number. PLO called on the Secretary-General and the Council to pressure Israel to ensure its respect for the Convention and to end its repressive measures.

Fourth Geneva Convention

The General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed again in 1986 that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), applied to the Israeli-occupied territories. The Convention, which remained the main international instrument in humanitarian law that applied to the occupied territories, continued to be disregarded, the Committee on Israeli practices concluded in its annual report.⁽⁹⁾ Israel's policy of annexation and establishment of settlements was a flagrant violation of its obligations under the Convention. The Committee's report also contained information from former prisoners who alleged that the treatment of detainees continued to contradict the Convention.

During the year, communications were sent to the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council charging Israel with infringing various aspects of the Convention.

Communications. In a 5 February letter⁽²²⁾ charging Israel with deporting three Palestinians from the territories to Israel (see p. 330), the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights said the three Palestinians could not expect to get a fair trial, as the Israeli High Court had decided to disallow defence arguments based on the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories.

Charges of Israeli practices violating the Convention were, among others, made by PLO in a 3 November letter,⁽⁶⁾ according to which the editor-in-chief of the Arabic daily Al-Shaab had been arrested and was to be deported. A number of incidents which had occurred in the territories during December—including the shooting at Palestinian demonstrators, the closing of the old campus of Bir Zeit University and schools, and arrests of hospitalized Palestinians—were cited by the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights on 16 December⁽²⁰⁾ as violations of the Convention.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution adopted on 20 February 1986 by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 9 abstentions,⁽²³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the fundamental human rights as established by international law and set forth in international instruments remained applicable in cases of armed conflict, and that the fourth Geneva Convention applied to all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge that applicability and expressed concern at the consequences, and called on Israel to abide by the United Nations Charter and the Convention. Other provisions of the resolution dealt with Palestinian detainees and prisoners (see p. 327).

In another resolution of the same date, ⁽⁷⁾ the Commission reaffirmed that Israel's continuous grave breaches of the Convention and the 1977 Additional Protocols⁽²⁴⁾ were war crimes and an affront to humanity. It reiterated its call to States, particularly those party to the Convention, not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories, including Jerusalem.

In a third resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ the Commission deplored Israeli practices in the occupied Golan Heights (see p. 335), stating that they also violated the Convention.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1986,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel in response to his February request that Israel inform him of steps taken or envisaged to implement the 1985 resolution in which the Assembly strongly demanded that Israel acknowledge and comply with the fourth Geneva Convention in the occupied territories.⁽²⁷⁾

On 3 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/63 B on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling also its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981, 37/88 A of 10 December 1982, 38/79 B of 15 December 1983, 39/95 B of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 B of 16 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 October 1986,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and the Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to the Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns once again the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel acknowledge and comply with the provisions of the Convention in the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/63 B

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 145-1-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/41/750) by recorded vote (113-1-5), 20 November (meeting 32); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar for the Arab Group, Senegal (A/SPC/41/L.21); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: SPC 27-32; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire,* Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Liberia, United States.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Before voting on the text as a whole, both the Assembly and the Committee adopted paragraph 1 by separate recorded votes, of 148 to 1, with 1 abstention, and 117 to 1, respectively.

The United States said it firmly supported application of the Convention to the occupied territories and had therefore requested the vote on paragraph 1; it abstained, however, on the text as a whole because it retarded a solution of the very problems it claimed to address. Moreover, it regarded the phrase "Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem" as being merely demographically and geographically descriptive but not indicative of sovereignty.

Although it refused to recognize non-existent sovereignties, Israel said, it would continue to apply all the humanitarian provisions of the Convention, as well as other relevant aspects of humanitarian laws and norms, on a defacto basis.

Palestinian detainees

The General Assembly in 1986 again demanded that Israel release immediately all Palestinians detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination. A similar request was made by the Commission on Human Rights.

Communication. Oman, as Chairman of the Arab Group, transmitted a 6 October letter from PLO,⁽²⁸⁾ charging Israel with subjecting Palestinian political prisoners to inhuman practices and unhealthy conditions. At the beginning of the month, PLO said, Palestinian political prisoners in Kfar Yona prison (Beit Lydd) had gone on a hunger-strike in protest against those practices and conditions, which included daily beatings, physical and verbal abuse, and the spraying of cells with tear-gas. The intentional neglect of prison conditions had caused the spread of various contagious skin diseases which posed a serious health hazard, but Israel refused to respond to requests for improved conditions and medical treatment. Other requests from detainees included a decrease in cell occupancy, the removal of sheet iron from doors and windows to allow better air circulation, the removal of metal nets in visiting areas and access to newspapers and books. To protest those conditions, the prisoners had gone on a hunger-strike, which in Hebron had started on 26 September, in Ramallah on 20 September and in Nablus on 11 September.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In its 20 February resolution⁽²³⁾ by which it reaffirmed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories, the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Israel for its ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees and prisoners and urged it to grant prisoner-of-war status to all captured Palestinian fighters. It requested Israel to release all Arabs detained as a result of their struggle for self-determination and to accord them the protection envisaged in the international instruments concerning the treatment of prisoners of war, and demanded that it cease torture and ill-treatment of Arab detainees and prisoners. The Commission strongly condemned Israel for deporting liberated Palestinian prisoners in contravention of the agreement for the exchange of prisoners, and called on it to refrain from doing so and to enable those who had been deported to return to their homeland and property. It urged Israel to co-operate with ICRC and allow it to visit Palestinian detainees in Israeli prisons.

In a resolution of 11 March⁽⁸⁾ the Commission again condemned Israel for its detention of Palestinians in the territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

In its annual report to the General Assembly⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices considered information concerning arrests, trials and sentences. It noted that, during the period covered by its report, there had been a marked increase in arrests and administrative detention orders. Many Palestinian civilians, including minors, had been the subject of sentences passed by military courts on security charges; in contrast, members of the Jewish underground and other Israelis charged with murder or mistreatment of Arab civilians had been treated with relative leniency. The report also contained information given to it by former prisoners who alleged that the treatment of detainees continued to contradict the Geneva Convention. Particularly preoccupying was the problem of detained minors submitted to humiliating practices in detention camps; other problems included overcrowding of cells, physical and psychological mistreatment and lack of adequate health services. Such bad conditions, the Committee stated, constantly gave rise to hunger-strikes.

Report of the Secretary-General. In July 1986⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported on implementation of the 1985 resolution by which the General Assembly had demanded the release of Ziyad Abu Eain and other Palestinians.⁽³⁰⁾ In reply to his February 1986 request that Israel inform him of steps taken or envisaged to implement the resolution, Israel stated on 2 July that its position had been set out during the debate on it.⁽³¹⁾ Paragraph 1, in which the Assembly called for a release of all Arabs detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and liberation of their territories, was illogical and contradicted the rule of law; it would have Israel release murderers such as Samir Kuntar, a Palestinian terrorist who in 1979 had burst into an apartment at Nahariya and murdered a five-year-old girl by smashing her head with a rock. Rejecting that paragraph, Israel said all people imprisoned by it underwent a fair trial and had been proved to be criminals through a court of law. Equating them with those seeking political redress not only emphasized the extent to which the Assembly had fallen victim to the contorted language of extremists, but also undermined the rule of law and justice.

With regard to Ziyad Abu Eain, Israel said he was a convicted murderer who had planted a bomb in the town square of Tiberias which killed two children and wounded many others. On 20 May 1985, Abu Eain had been released from jail as a result of a prisoner exchange; instead of pursuing a peaceful way of life, however, he almost immediately engaged in preparing new criminal acts and was arrested and indicted. On 24 July 1986⁽³²⁾ Israel reported that on 21 July he had been found guilty of the following: organization of and participation in subversive activities; organization of hostile propaganda and incitement to violence; conspiracy with the intent to commit a felony (hijacking of a bus); and attempts to solicit and engage others in criminal acts. Abu Eain's guilt had been established in due process of law, Israel continued, and he was sentenced to 33 months in jail with an additional 21-month conditional sentence. Therefore, Israel rejected the 1985 Assembly resolution and continued to believe that the item should be dropped from the Assembly's agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/63 A on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/79 A of 15 December 1983, 39/95 A of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 A of 16 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 July 1986,

1. Calls upon Israel to release all Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and for the liberation of their territories;
2. Notes the initial release of Palestinian prisoners on 20 May 1985;
3. Deplores the Israeli subsequent arbitrary detention or imprisonment of hundreds of Palestinians;
4. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind its action against the detainees and imprisoned Palestinians and release them immediately;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/63 A

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 108-2-34 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/41/750) by recorded vote (83-2-29), 20 November (meeting 32); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar for the Arab Group, Senegal (A/SPC/41/L.20); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: SPC 27-32; plenary 95.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Israel remarked that the text would give terrorists even more rights than were provided for in the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War by simply calling for their automatic release, regardless of charges against them. Year after year the sponsors had been endeavouring to bring the international community to condone implicitly blind terrorism by upgrading the status of terrorists from common criminals to that of regular combatants and by granting them more rights than uniformed military personnel; such measures were intended to support terrorism.

Although opposing the practice of administrative detention, the United States voted against the text, saying it gave the unacceptable appearance of condoning acts of terrorism.

Sweden was unable to support the text because of what it considered the sweeping formulation in paragraph 1, which it felt left the field open for potentially dubious interpretations. Austria also had reservations regarding that paragraph's wording.

Israeli settlements

Israel's practice of establishing or expanding settlements in the occupied territories was again the subject of a 1986 resolution, in which the General Assembly repeated its demand that Israel desist from measures designed to change the status and composition of the territories.

Communications. In several letters during 1986, Jordan informed the Secretary-General of Israeli settlement activity in the occupied territories. On 11 February⁽³³⁾ it detailed such activity during the final four months of 1985, stressing the danger of the continuation of such a policy for peace and security and for regional peace prospects. On 24 June⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General's attention was drawn to Israeli practices during May, which included the expulsion of Arab inhabitants and confiscation of their lands; that policy, Jordan added, ran counter to international peace efforts. Similar activities during July, August and September were reported in letters of 17 September⁽³⁴⁾ and 15 October⁽³⁵⁾

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

In a 20 February resolution on human rights in the territories⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Israel's measures to promote and expand the establishment of settler colonies there. In a resolution of 11 March⁽⁸⁾ it condemned Israel for persisting in its colonization of the territories.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

In its October 1986 report to the General Assembly⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices concluded that Israel's policy continued to be based on the principle that the territories occupied in 1967 were part of the State of Israel; this was at the source of Israel's annexation and settlements policy which constituted a flagrant violation of Israel's international obligations. Israel had pursued its annexation policy, continuing with the same determination as in previous years to establish and extend its settlements in the territories. The implementation of the so-called Major Jerusalem Project, aiming at annexation and Judaization of an area representing 8 per cent of the occupied West Bank, the allocation by the Knesset of substantial sums for the expansion of settlements, the inauguration of new ones, and the illegal expropriation and seizure of Arab land which had given rise in the West Bank to a vast network of fraudulent land deals all illustrated the importance Israel attached to that policy, the Committee added. The Committee's report also contained information on settlers' activities affecting the civilian population.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In October 1986⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported that no reply had been received from Israel with regard to his February request that it inform him of steps taken or envisaged to implement the General Assembly's 1985 demand that it desist from taking any action which would result in changing the status or composition of the territories⁽³⁷⁾

Also in October⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General expressed particular concern about the consequences that would flow from the establishment by Israel of additional settlements which, he believed, contributed to doubts in the minds of many about Israel's readiness to negotiate a peace settlement that would require its withdrawal from the territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/63 C on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16

December 1981, 37/88 B of 10 December 1982, 38/79 C of 15 December 1983, 39/95 C of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 C of 16 December 1985,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 October 1986,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Saint Lucia, United States.

Israel did not consider the establishment of Jewish villages to be an impediment to peace, but on the contrary as conducive to mutually beneficial coexistence between Arabs and Jews. Although the United States did not favour increased Israeli settlements in the territories, it said it abstained because the text diverted efforts into unproductive legal debate and away from the real task of promoting peace through negotiations.

Expulsion of Palestinians

In 1986, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again called on Israel to allow Palestinian officials to return, in particular the Mayor of Halhul and the Sharia Judge of Hebron, so that they could resume their functions. Israel had deported the Judge and the Mayors of Halhul and Hebron, the latter having since died, in 1980⁽³⁸⁾ on the ground that they had systematically engaged in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion, abusing their public offices.

Communications. On 6 February 1986,⁽³⁹⁾ the United Arab Emirates transmitted a letter of 4 February from PLO, bringing to the Security Council President's attention the expulsion by Israel of three Palestinian detainees, thereby contravening the fourth Geneva Convention which did not allow deportations from occupied territory.

The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, in a 5 February letter⁽²²⁾ conveyed further information concerning the deportation orders against the three Palestinians—AH Abu Hilal, member of the Executive Committee of the General Confederation of Palestinian Trade Unions; Azmi Al-Shuaibi, elected member of the El-Bireh Municipal Council (dissolved by the Israeli occupation authorities in 1982); and Hassan Abdul Jawad Farrarjeh, journalist and head of the Dheisheh refugee camp youth centre (closed by Israel in 1983). The three had withdrawn their High Court appeals against their deportation orders, the letter stated, as they felt that they could not expect a fair trial in Israel; under Israeli law, defence lawyers were not allowed to view evidence against their clients which judges believed would harm Israeli intelligence networks in the territories. Moreover, the High Court had decided to disallow defence arguments that were based on the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories. According to The Jerusalem Post of 26 January, the military government had served deportation orders on four other West Bank Palestinians; if implemented, the number of Palestinians expelled from the territories since the summer of 1985 would amount to 29. Reiterating its deep concern at those measures, the Committee said they only heightened tension and presented a serious obstacle to international action for a just and lasting Middle East solution.

Report of the Secretary-General. In July 1986⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported on implementation of a 1985 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴¹⁾ demanding that Israel rescind the expulsion of the Mayor of Halhul, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and other Palestinian leaders. In February 1986, he said, he had requested Israel to inform him of any steps it had taken or envisaged to implement that resolution and, on 2 July, Israel had reiterated its previous position⁽⁴²⁾. It charged that Muhammed Milhem, one of the expelled Mayors, currently residing in Jordan, continued to supply arms and explosives to PLO terrorists; in March 1985, he had taken part in planning attacks in the Jenin area of Samaria and, in April of that year, a special PLO terrorist unit had been sent from Yemen to the Wahdat refugee camp at Amman and placed at Milhem's disposal. A few days later, after a meeting of the PLO military council in Tunisia, Milhem and two notorious PLO terrorists, Abu Tayeb and Abu Muatassem, had met at Amman to plan an attack in Tel Aviv. The 1985 resolution, Israel added, displayed a biased and distorted picture of the events surrounding the expulsions; in the light of the described developments, it proved to be even more preposterous in its assertions and, as it was based on erroneous assumptions, it should be dropped from the Assembly's agenda.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. During its April/May visit to Amman, the Committee on Israeli practices was presented with a memorandum prepared by the Jordanian Ministry of Occupied Territories Affairs, concerning the expulsion and deportation of civilians from the territories. The arbitrary nature of the expulsion measures was emphasized, as well as the off-hand and brutal manner in which the expulsion procedure was applied to the persons concerned. The memorandum noted that 2,061 persons had been expelled by the Israeli authorities between 1967 and February 1986, 34 of them between 1985 and February 1986.

The Committee's 1986 report⁽⁹⁾ also contained information on Israel's policy purporting to return municipalities of the territories to their local leaders; such a policy, the Committee felt, had to be viewed in the general context of the historical evolution of those municipalities, whose duly elected councils had in most cases been dissolved and replaced by members of the Israeli civilian administration. Israel's appeal for the appointment of new Arab mayors, received with suspicion by the civilian population as to the real motives behind it, and followed by the killing on 2 March of the appointed Mayor of Nablus, had not resulted in any significant move.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/63 E on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 468(1980) of 8 May 1980, 469(1980) of 20 May 1980 and 484(1980) of 19 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/147 D of 16 December 1981, 37/88 D of 10 December 1982, 38/79 E of 15 December 1983, 39/95 E of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 E of 16 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 16 July 1986,

Deeply concerned at the expulsion by the Israeli military occupation authorities of the Mayor of Halhul, the Mayor of Hebron who has since died, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and, in 1985 and 1986, other Palestinians,

Alarmed by the expulsion of many Palestinian leaders from the occupied Palestinian territories by the Israeli military occupation authorities in 1985 and 1986,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

"Article 1

"The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances."

"Article 49

"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive . . .",

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its persistent refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly;

2. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling the Mayor of Halhul, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and, in 1985 and 1986, other Palestinian leaders and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinians so that they can, inter alia, resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease forthwith the expulsion of Palestinians and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire*, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Swaziland, United Kingdom, United States. *Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Recorded votes were taken on paragraph 1 in the Assembly and the Committee, resulting in its adoption by 115 votes to 2, with 34 abstentions, and 94 votes to 2, with 22 abstentions, respectively.

Israel stated that only a few individuals were affected by expulsions which were due to security imperatives, and legal processes were duly respected; the authority for expulsion orders derived from article 112 of the 1945 Defence (Emergency) Regulations in force under the British and Jordanian administrations. The Israeli High Court had ruled that expulsion orders issued to protect public order had nothing to do with deportations for forced labour and extermination which had occurred during the Second World War and which had motivated the inclusion of article 49 in the Convention, Israel added.

Although it believed that the deportations were contrary to the Convention and that the deportees should be allowed to return, the United States abstained on the text, saying it presented an unbalanced picture by not mentioning factors that contributed to such deportations.

Israeli measures against educational institutions

Both the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights condemned what they called systematic Israeli repression against Palestinian educational and cultural institutions in the occupied territories, which included the closing of universities and restrictions on academic activities. The Assembly demanded that Israel rescind such actions. The shooting of Palestinian students at Bir Zeit University in the West Bank on 4 December, when three students were killed, led to the convening of the Security Council (see p. 323).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

In a 20 February resolution on human rights violations in the territories⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned what it called systematic Israeli repression of Palestinian cultural and educational institutions, closing them or restricting and impeding their academic activities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control of the military occupation authorities and by expelling numerous faculty members of several universities for refusing to sign statements containing political positions, in defiance of their right to academic freedom.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

In its annual report⁽⁹⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices noted that freedom of education had been restricted in many ways. The information it had received denoted various violations of that freedom, such as the arbitrary dismissal or deportation of school and university teachers, repression campaigns and arrests of teachers and students, and the closing down of schools and universities. Further documentation stressed the deterioration of the educational system in the territories due to various factors, such as modification of textbooks and programmes, inadequacy of school material and buildings, overcrowding of classes and lack of teachers.

Report of the Secretary-General. In July 1986⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted information concerning implementation of the Assembly's demand made in a 1985 resolution⁽⁴⁴⁾ that Israel rescind all actions against educational institutions in the territories, ensure their freedom and refrain from hindering their operations. By a 2 July 1986 reply to the Secretary-General's February request for such information, Israel said it rejected the accusations in the resolution as baseless and contradicting the truth; since 1967, the school system in the territories had experienced unprecedented growth. While the population in those areas had increased by about 28 per cent, the total number of pupils receiving schooling, in governmental, UNRWA and private educational networks, had increased by 105 per cent, and the number of classes run solely by the Government had increased by over 100 per cent. That remarkable growth was due mainly to the development in the governmental education network during the years of Israeli administration. Illiteracy showed a remarkable decline; since 1985, the illiteracy rate had dropped to 26.6 per cent from 47.5 per cent in 1970 in Judaea and Samaria, and to 26.5 per cent from 51.1 per cent in 1970 in Gaza.

While there had been no university facilities in Judaea and Samaria in June 1967, there were close to 10,000 students currently enrolled in the five major universities established in those areas since then (Al Najah University at Nablus, Bir Zeit University, Bethlehem University, College of Islamic Studies at Hebron and College of Science at Abu Deis). An additional 5,000 students were enrolled in colleges, teacher training schools and agricultural, technical and paramedical institutions which were staffed by several thousand local Arab teachers, inspectors and administrative personnel. In the Gaza district, 4,000 students attended Al-Azhar Islamic College.

Academic activity on the university campuses was conducted without interference by the Israeli administration. In Judaea and Samaria, the curricula were those of the Jordanian educational system, and, in the Gaza district, those of the Egyptian system; matters concerning curricula were directly handled by the Jordanian and Egyptian authorities, without interference by Israel. Academic freedom, however, did not include disruption of public order by incitement, threats or violence, Israel added. Recognizing that fact, over the past year whenever such activity surfaced at several campuses, university administrators themselves had forced the closure of their own schools for limited periods; those decisions had been taken solely by university personnel and had no connection to Israel's administrative authorities. Nevertheless, when security and public order were endangered, the authorities were permitted by international law to restore and maintain public order and safety; in the event such action was taken, it was done without any relation to academic consideration.

Those facts and figures, Israel stressed, amply demonstrated its long-standing commitment and dedication to improving the educational standards of the territories' inhabitants; when compared to the dismal educational situation in surrounding countries, the distortions and misrepresentations contained in the 1985 resolution became even more apparent. In the light of those facts, the item should be dropped from the Assembly's agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/63 G on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling its resolutions 38/79 G of 15 December 1983, 39/95 G of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 G of 16 December 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 18 July 1986,

Taking note of the relevant decisions adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning the educational and cultural situation in the occupied territories,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the policy of opening fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/63 G

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 119-2-32 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/41/750) by recorded vote (94-2-24), 20 November (meeting 32); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar for the Arab Group, Senegal (A/SPC/41/L26); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: SPC 27-32; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, United Kingdom.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly and the Committee adopted paragraph 2 by recorded vote, of 102 to 2, with 45 abstentions, and 82 to 2, with 33 abstentions, respectively.

Abstaining on that paragraph, Sweden said its categorical and sweeping formulations were not totally borne out by the facts; however, it supported the text as a whole, although with some hesitation.

Israel said the text was divorced from reality; all the educational institutions mentioned had been established during the Israeli administration. In some cases, the authorities had had to act to maintain law and order; in many others, the initiative had come from the local academic authorities and had been intended only to avoid internal disturbances and violent clashes between various political factions. The United States felt that the text indiscriminately condemned alleged Israeli actions without regard to facts or policies.

Living conditions of Palestinians

As requested by the General Assembly in 1985⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported in June 1986⁽⁴⁶⁾ on the preparations for a seminar on priority development projects for improving the living conditions of the Palestinians in the occupied territories, including a comprehensive general housing programme. Pursuant to the Assembly's request, he had invited a selected group of experts to prepare and present to the seminar specific project proposals. Invitations to participate in the seminar had been sent to relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, appropriate United Nations bodies and agencies, and PLO. The seminar was tentatively scheduled to be held at Vienna from 9 to 13 March 1987.

The Assembly took note of the report by decision 41/453 of 8 December 1986.

Israeli financial and trade practices

In June 1986,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a note to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly concerning a report on Israeli financial and trade practices in the occupied territories, requested of him by those bodies in 1985. W He stated that, as part of its 1986-1987 work programme, UNCTAD was preparing a study of the financial sector in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The study, which dealt with the financial and fiscal systems in the territories, with particular reference to Israeli policies affecting them, was being carried out in association with ESCWA. It was expected to be completed by the end of 1986 and to be reported in 1987 to the Trade and Development Board. As the study would cover much of the subject-matter of the report requested of the Secretary-General, he suggested that the Council and the Assembly might wish to defer consideration of that request until the UNCTAD/ESCWA study was available and had been considered by the Board.

On 18 July 1986, the Council decided (decision 1986/155) that the report on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories should be submitted for consideration to the Assembly, through the Council, in 1987.

The Assembly, by decision 41/453 of 8 December 1986, took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Economic development projects

In May 1986, the Secretary-General reported on economic development projects in the occupied territories⁽⁴⁹⁾ In 1985, both the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly⁽⁵⁰⁾ had called for the urgent lifting of Israeli restrictions imposed on the territories' economy and had requested him to continue his efforts to facilitate the establishment of projects, which included a seaport and a citrus plant in the Gaza Strip and a cement plant in the West Bank.

In March 1986, the Secretary-General said, he had requested Israel's view and relevant information on the projects. By a 7 May letter, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, Israel replied that the 1985 Assembly resolution was biased and politically motivated; its sponsors falsely accused Israel of imposing arbitrary economic restrictions, while completely disregarding the improved economic and social conditions in the territories. Israel had undertaken numerous actions to foster economic growth there; since 1967, approximately 1,600 new industrial plants and workshops had been established in Judaea and Samaria by local entrepreneurs with the financial assistance of the Israeli Government, and many additional plants had been established without governmental financial aid. During the same period, Israel added, 870 new factories had been established in Gaza with official Israeli financial assistance. Furthermore, it said, its economic policies had facilitated the opening of new markets for industrial exports manufactured in the territories; the ports of Ashdod and Haifa remained fully open and the products of the territories continued to have free access to external markets. That had led to an accelerated development of their industrial base, manifested by the growth of industrial exports from $20 million in 1968 to approximately $270 million in 1982. Since then, the industrial development rate had continued to grow and expand to unprecedented levels.

By decision 1986/167 of 22 July 1986, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report. The General Assembly took note of it by decision 41/453 of 8 December.

Golan Heights

Again in 1986, developments in the Golan Heights—part of the Syrian Arab Republic occupied by Israel since 1967—brought action by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights.

Communications. By letters of 3 March 1986 to the Security Council President⁽⁵¹⁾ and the Secretary-General⁽⁵²⁾ the Syrian Arab Republic charged Israel with stepping up during the preceding week its repressive operations in the Golan Heights, with the aim of destroying their Syrian Arab identity and expelling the Syrian inhabitants from their land and property, replacing them with foreign settlers and settlements. Most recently, the Israeli authorities had arrested 45 Syrian citizens of the Golan Heights, which underscored Israel's aggressive and racist nature and its determination to defy the international community. Drawing attention to the dangerous situation resulting from Israel's violation of international law, United Nations resolutions and its Charter and the consequent threat to regional and international peace and security, the Syrian Arab Republic reserved its right to request a Security Council meeting so that necessary steps could be taken.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

By a resolution of 20 February⁽²⁵⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Israel for its persistent defiance of United Nations resolutions relating to the occupied Syrian territory and deprecated Israel's failure to end its occupation and cease its repressive measures and human rights violations. It deplored the inhuman treatment, terror and practices Israel continued to apply against the inhabitants of the Golan Heights by reason of their refusal of Israeli nationality and in order to force them to carry Israeli identity cards.

The Commission declared once more that Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Heights⁽⁵³⁾ resulting in effective annexation, was null and void, and called on Israel to rescind that decision. It again requested Member States not to recognize any such measures, and strongly deplored the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a permanent Security Council member which had prevented the Council from adopting appropriate measures against Israel.

The Commission emphasized that Israel must allow all evacuees from the Golan Heights to return and recover their property and residences and that total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal was a prerequisite for a just and comprehensive Middle East peace.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

Information about the situation in the Golan Heights supplied by the Syrian Arab Republic was contained in the report of the Committee on Israeli practices⁽⁹⁾ according to that information, practices by the occupying authorities included restrictions imposed on villagers with regard to cultivating their land or taking their herd to pasture, confiscation of agricultural land, interference in educational curricula, collective punishment and arbitrary detention.

Report of the Secretary-General. In July 1986⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported on action taken pursuant to a 1985 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁵⁾ calling on Israel to desist from repressive measures against the population of the Golan Heights. In a 2 July 1986 reply to his February request to Israel for information on what steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the resolution, Israel referred to its position as set out in 1981.⁽⁵⁶⁾ Replies from other Member States regarding measures they might have taken to implement the 1985 resolution had been received from Botswana, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Iraq and the Sudan, and were annexed to the Secretary-General's report. Replies from the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR were issued in September 1986.⁽⁵⁷⁾

On 3 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/63 F on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984 and 40/161 F of 16 December 1985,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 July 1986,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which it, inter alia, called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan Heights;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan Heights are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts and measures to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 41/63 F

3 December 1986 Meeting 95 142-1-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/41/750) by recorded vote (114-1-6), 20 November (meeting 32); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar for the Arab Group, Senegal (A/SPC/41/L.25); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: SPC 27-32; plenary 95.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire,^a Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Cameroon, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, El Salvador, Grenada, Liberia, Malawi, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, United States.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Under Syrian administration, Israel pointed out, the Golan region had been a peripheral one; Israeli laws had since endowed the area with normal legal guarantees and due processes, thus favouring its development. The United States could not support any text that went beyond the unanimous 1981 Security Council resolution⁽⁵⁸⁾ which had declared the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan Heights null and void and without international legal effect, and which remained the authoritative United Nations action; nevertheless, the Golan Heights was occupied territory, the fourth Geneva Convention applied there and Israel must meet its obligations thereunder.

Sweden stressed that its support of the text did not alter its opposition to the 1982 Assembly resolution adopted during the emergency special session on the Golan Heights⁽⁵⁹⁾

On 4 December, under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/162 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 29 October 1986,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982, 38/180 A of 19 December 1983, 39/146 B of 14 December 1984 and 40/168 B of 16 December 1985,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principles of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting further that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1, 37/123 A, 38/180 A, 39/146 B and 40/168 B;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Golan Heights and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Golan Heights are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights since 1967 and their annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages Israel to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) To sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

* Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The United States felt that the text did not advance the cause of peace; its language was unbalanced and harmful and, by declaring that Israel was not a peace-loving Member State, it violated the spirit of Security Council resolutions 242(1967)⁽⁶⁰⁾ and 338(1973).⁽⁶¹⁾ The United Kingdom, speaking for the EC members, expressed concern about the text's lack of balance and said it did not reflect the basic principles they considered essential for a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict; they also could not accept language criticizing a permanent Council member for having exercised its rights in accordance with the United Nations Charter. Sweden, despite supporting the text's central theme, had strong objections in particular to paragraphs 12 to 16, which, it felt, could not be reconciled with the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Council.

The Philippines said the sovereign right of States to conduct their own international affairs in accordance with the Charter should be upheld. Egypt found it difficult to agree with some elements in the text which, it believed, did not encourage the continuance of the peace process. Belize would have welcomed a text calling for the necessary action without the accompanying condemnation; paragraphs 13 and 14 sought the complete isolation of Israel, a situation which could only hurt the cause of peace. Austria did not believe that measures aimed at breaking relations with Israel and leading to its isolation would bring a Middle East solution closer; it could not support any formulation which could be interpreted as impinging on the principle of universality of United Nations membership.

Brazil considered that efforts to achieve a Middle East solution should not imply diplomatic isolation of one of the parties to the conflict, although that party had been acting in a manner incompatible with international law and the Charter; Israel should not be provided, under the pretext of its isolation from the international community, with justification for further acts in disregard of international law and accepted principles of peaceful coexistence. Ecuador believed that the text contained criteria which violated the universality principle and sought to impose decisions contravening the sovereignty of States. Bolivia was unable to support the text because of the approach reflected in certain paragraphs. Argentina regretted that the text contained—in particular in paragraphs 9, 12, 13 and 14, and in the eighth preambular paragraph—certain propositions incompatible with its own position on substantive issues of foreign policy. In Zaire's view, the language of paragraphs 13 and 14 was not likely to lead to any rapprochement among the parties to the conflict.

Greece said that, if separate votes had been taken, it would have voted against paragraph 14 and would have abstained on paragraphs 8, 13 (e) and 13 (d). Mexico would have abstained on paragraphs 12 to 14 on the grounds that they related to matters within the Council's jurisdiction. In Turkey's opinion, paragraphs 13 and 14 were difficult to reconcile with efforts to initiate a negotiating process; with regard to paragraph 8, it felt that no United Nations organ should pass a value judgement on votes cast by Member States. Peru recalled its statement in explanation of vote on the related 1985 resolution⁽⁶²⁾

Iran reiterated its reservations on all terms and provisions which implied any recognition of the Zionist base of terror occupying Palestine.

Palestine refugees

In 1986, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to assist more than 2.1 million refugees in Jordan, Lebanon (see p. 288), the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

UNRWA activities and various aspects of the Palestine refugee problem were addressed by the General Assembly, which in December adopted 11 resolutions on: assistance to Palestine refugees (41/69 A) and to displaced persons (41/69- C); the Working Group on the financing of UNRWA (41/69 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (41/69 D); Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (41/69 E) and in the West Bank (41/69 J); ration distribution to Palestine refugees (41/69 F); refugees displaced since 1967 (41/69 G); revenues from refugee properties (41/69 H); refugee protection (41/69 I); and a proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (41/69 K).

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

UNRWA continued to provide education, health and relief services to Palestinian refugees living in and outside camps. Among them, 1,812,127 were eligible for all Agency services, while the remainder were eligible for limited services only. In addition, the Agency distributed food rations provided by Jordan to some 193,000 persons displaced as the result of the 1967 hostilities and the occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Less than one third of the refugees were registered as living in camps; persons displaced as a result of hostilities in 1967 and a small number of other unregistered persons also resided in camps. The Agency maintained its own schools, training institutions, clinics and health centres, and procured and distributed food rations to needy refugees. Its operations were administered from its headquarters at Vienna and Amman and from five field offices in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, with liaison offices in New York and Cairo.

During its years of operation, the focus of UNRWA's activities had gradually changed from relief assistance to education, including vocational training, public health care and basic welfare service. In 1986, education accounted for the largest part of UNRWA's expenditure ($116.3 million under the General Fund, and $5.7 million under project funds); the corresponding figures for health services were $28.3 million and $8.9 million, and for relief services, $22.4 million and $1.1 million. Direct relief assistance was provided in 1986/87 to only some 5 per cent of the refugee population.

The situation of the refugees in the occupied territories remained a matter of concern, the UNRWA Commissioner-General stated in his report covering the Agency's activities from 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987;⁽¹⁾ in all the territories there was still heavy pressure on UNRWA services, with more refugees using its health services and an increasing number claiming assistance as special hardship cases, a demand UNRWA was unable to meet. The most serious operational problem facing UNRWA remained the situation in Lebanon, which imposed enormous demands on it in trying to meet the needs of the refugees (see p. 290).

The safety of UNRWA staff in the areas of Lebanon where UNRWA operated was a constant source of concern; staff trying to bring services and supplies to refugees in the camps and in their places of refuge were the most exposed, but even those working in the main offices were frequently in danger. For those reasons, it was necessary not only to maintain the sub-office at Larnaca, Cyprus, but also to make other temporary arrangements for office accommodation from time to time. From 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986, five UNRWA employees were killed in Lebanon, bringing the total since the 1982 Israeli invasion to 22 staff members killed, 17 wounded and 8 missing, among them Alec Collett, a British journalist working under contract with UNRWA, kidnapped in 1985,⁽²⁾ whose fate remained unknown.

There was no improvement with regard to access to UNRWA staff in detention; the Agency continued to have access to them in the West Bank but not in the other areas of its operations. From July 1985 to June 1986, there was a marked increase in the number of staff arrested and detained without charge or trial and UNRWA remained unable to obtain adequate and timely information on the reasons; in the absence of such information, it was unable to ascertain whether the staff members' official functions were involved or to ensure that their rights were observed.

Conditions in the Gaza Strip also deteriorated, the UNRWA Commissioner-General stated, urging the international community to give serious consideration to what could be done to ease conditions, which included serious shortages of adequate housing, growing unemployment and the increasing salinity of water supplies.
