In October 1986, the Secretary-General submitted, on behalf of ACC, a report⁽³⁸⁾ concerning United Nations personnel who had been detained or reported missing between 1 September 1985 and 30 June 1986. Of a total of 95 such cases reported to the United Nations Security Coordinator during that period, the organizations concerned were successful, in 76 cases, in obtaining the release of the detainee or were able to determine that no question of immunity arose. Of the remaining cases, 17 involved locally recruited staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and 2 cases involved locally recruited employees of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon. Among the developments during the period were the reported but unconfirmed execution in April 1986 of Alec Collett, a British journalist on assignment for UNRWA; a marked increase in the number of UNRWA staff detained without charge or trial; little progress in obtaining clarification from the authorities of previously reported cases; and new cases of abduction by unidentified groups. A list of staff members under detention or reported missing as of 30 June 1986 was contained in the report. (See also p. 88.)

The report also dealt with other issues relating to the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations system, such as travel restrictions (see p. 1001) and taxation of salaries. In paragraph 3 of the report, the Secretary-General expressed concern over the effect of Member States' interfering in the contractual relationship between an official and his organization and imposing restrictions on official travel of staff members.

In November, staff representatives presented to the Fifth Committee a list of staff members detained, missing, imprisoned or executed since 1973,⁽¹⁾ and urged the Assembly to establish an independent medical team under the United Nations Medical Service to visit imprisoned staff members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/205.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling Article 100 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization, which is indispensable for the proper discharge of their duties,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 39/244 of 18 December 1984 and 40/258 C of 18 December 1985,

Reiterating the obligation of the staff in the conduct of their duties to observe fully the laws and regulations of Member States,

1. Takes note with concern of the report submitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General, on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and of a number of negative developments reported therein, which together represent a deterioration of the situation with regard to the observance of the principles related to the respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

2. Takes note with particular concern of the views expressed by the Secretary-General in paragraph 3 of his report;

3. Deplores the growing number of cases where the functioning, safety and well-being of officials have been adversely affected, including cases of detention in Member States and abduction by armed groups and individuals;

4. Also deplores the increasing number of cases in which the lives and well-being of officials have been placed in jeopardy during the exercise of their official functions;

5. Calls upon all Member States scrupulously to respect the privileges and immunities of all United Nations officials and to refrain from any acts that would impede such officials in the performance of their functions, thereby seriously affecting the proper functioning of the Organization;

6. Calls upon all Member States currently holding United Nations officials under arrest or detention, or otherwise impeding them in the proper discharge of their duties, to review these cases and to co-ordinate efforts with the Secretary-General to resolve each case with all due speed;

7. Calls upon the staff of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to comply with the obligations resulting from the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, in particular regulation 1.8, and from the equivalent provisions governing the staff of the other agencies;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer of the United Nations, to continue personally to act as the focal point in promoting and ensuring the observance of the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations by using all such means as are available to him;

9. Urges the Secretary-General to give priority, through the United Nations Security Co-ordinator and his other special representatives, to the reporting and prompt follow-up of cases of arrest, detention and other possible matters relating to the security and proper functioning of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to review and appraise the measures already taken to enhance the proper functioning, safety and protection of international civil servants and to modify them where necessary.

General Assembly resolution 41/205

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Staff costs

Salaries

In 1986, ICSC continued to advise the General Assembly on staff salaries and allowances and, in its report,⁽¹⁾ recommended scales of base salaries and separation payments, with effect from 1 April 1987, for the Professional and higher categories. It also recommended revised scales of staff assessment for those categories as well as for the General Service and related categories.

ICSC continued to review the relationship between the levels of remuneration of the United Nations and the comparator, the United States federal civil service. In 1985,⁽²⁾ the Assembly had approved a range of 110 to 120 for the margin between the two services (which meant that United Nations salaries could be 10 to 20 per cent higher than United States federal civil service salaries, in addition to the cost-of-living differential), with a desirable mid-point level of 115. The comparison was based on the net remuneration of officials of the two services with dependent spouses and no children, and between the headquarters of the two systems, New York and Washington, D.C. Based on a comparison of net remuneration, ICSC reported a margin of 120.9 for the period from 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986; the comparison of total compensation using the cost-of-living differential between the two cities as at May 1986 and taking into account non-expatriate elements of remuneration applicable on both sides, but not including annual leave, resulted in a margin figure of 118.8. ICSC requested the Assembly to take note of the latter figure.

As requested by the Assembly in 1985,⁽³⁾ ICSC studied the methodology used for calculating the margin based on net remuneration. In doing so, it discussed the establishment of grade equivalencies between United Nations officials and United States federal civil service employees in New York; the cost-of-living differential factor between New York and Washington; the inclusion of bonuses and performance awards to the United States Senior Executive Service in the margin calculation; and margin comparisons based on average remuneration for each grade, rather than on calculations carried out on the basis of remuneration at step 1 on both sides, as had been the case since 1976.

Noting that, proportionately, the United States employed more staff at the lower grade levels in New York and more at higher grade in Washington, ICSC concluded that establishing grade equivalencies between the two services in New York would create technical and administrative difficulties; it decided that grade equivalencies between the United Nations common system jobs and those of the United States federal civil service in Washington, should continue to be established. Comparisons should be carried out on the basis of the net remuneration of the two civil services in New York; as there was no differential between the remuneration of United States federal civil service employees in New York and Washington, the remuneration amounts for employees in Washington should be used for those in New York.

ICSC agreed by majority that the cost-of-living differential between the two cities should not be taken into account in margin calculations, saying that, since pay in the comparator did not vary from one location to another, except in Alaska, Guam, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the United States Virgin Islands, reducing the margin by the cost-of-living differential distorted the actual relationship between remuneration of the comparator and the United Nations; therefore, to effect a technically valid remuneration comparison, that differential must be excluded. Other ICSC members felt that if the differential were not taken into account, the margin comparison would be misleading; the comparison should be carried out based on real remuneration, not nominal amounts. If the cost-of-living difference were to be removed, the margin range approved in 1985 would have to be changed and, to be consistent with the decision to exclude the cost-of-living differential, the post adjustment in both cities would have to be the same.

ICSC further decided that only that part of bonuses and performance awards which formed part of the base pay of the United States federal civil service employees should be taken into account, and that average salaries applicable at each grade for staff in the two civil services should be used for net remuneration margin calculations. The Commission requested its secretariat to prepare a document for its next session which would enable it to review total compensation comparisons based on non-expatriate elements of remuneration applicable to United Nations staff from the Professional and higher categories and to United States federal civil service employees in comparable positions.

For General Service and related categories, ICSC recommended that the new scale of assessment, for implementation with effect from 1 January 1987, be used for determining gross salaries at each duty station as of the date of the first salary revision. It also recommended transitional measures whereby existing gross salaries, and therefore rates of pensionable remuneration, would be maintained if the new rates of staff assessment applied to the revised net salaries were to produce lower gross salaries; the transitional arrangements would remain in effect until existing gross salaries were overtaken as a result of subsequent revisions to the relevant salary scale.

In an October statement on the administrative and financial implications of ICSC's recommendations,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General projected net savings of $137,000 (additional expenses totalling $2,087,000 offset by cost reductions of $2,224,000). With regard to the revised scale of staff assessment for the Professional and higher categories, recommended in conjunction with ICSC's review of and recommendation on pensionable remuneration, it was on average 12 per cent lower than the scale currently in effect. As a consequence, ICSC had determined revised gross salaries by reverse application of the proposed staff assessment rates to net base salaries. Since the revised scale of base salaries recommended by ICSC did not increase net remuneration, the financial implications related only to a reduction of approximately $21,370,000 in staff assessment and a decrease of the same amount in income.

With regard to the revised scale of staff assessment for staff in the General Service and related categories, the Secretary-General stated that the revised rates were on average only slightly lower than the current rates; however, at the higher dollar income brackets which would apply at certain duty stations, for example New York, Geneva and Vienna, the revised rates were some 4 per cent lower. The cost implications for the United Nations of the revised rates in connection with projected increases in salary scales in 1987 were estimated as follows: there would be a reduction of some $220,000 in anticipated expenses of the Organization for its contribution to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund over what would have arisen under current rates; there would be a decrease of some $1,530,000 in staff assessment, with a corresponding decrease in income.

The estimated decrease of a total of $22,900,000 under staff assessment, to be offset by a reduction in an equal amount of income, would have implications on the Tax Equalization Fund and would require action to be taken at the earliest opportunity to consolidate an appropriate number of points of post adjustment into the net base salary of staff in the Professional and higher categories; it was the Secretariat's intention to present the relevant information to ICSC at its March 1987 session for review and recommendations. In accordance with existing practice, ICSC's decisions and recommendations would be reflected in the first programme budget performance report for 1986-1987. ACABQ, in November 1986,⁽⁴⁾ concurred with that approach.

Comments of staff representatives. Comments on ICSC's recommendations were made by FICSA.⁽⁵⁾ Stating that the staff had not been consulted on the methodology for determining the new scale of assessment for the Professional and higher categories, FICSA proposed deferring consideration of its implementation until the Assembly's 1987 regular session.

Noting the level of the net remuneration margin at 120.9 and stating that Professional salaries were frozen system-wide based on the Assembly's decision to maintain a defined margin range, FICSA reiterated that it was of utmost important that the calculation of the margin be done with precision and expressed regret that no attempt had been made to define and quantify the margin components. FICSA was concerned that modifying the margin calculation methodology and eliminating the cost-of-living differential contradicted the basic principle of the post adjustment system—equalization of purchasing power among duty stations; any modification of methodology could be seen only within the context of a margin range defined in terms of the same methodology. Since ICSC agreed to disregard the cost-of-living differential, it became imperative to re-examine the question of the desirable range for the margin, which was established based on 1976-1984 margin figures that had taken into account the cost-of-living differential. Other elements of the margin calculation methodology which ICSC had agreed to modify must also be considered in recalculating the margin range, such as the use of average salaries rather than salaries at step I. FICSA noted that ICSC intended to revert to those issues in 1987; it was of the view, however, that modifications in the margin calculation methodology should be introduced only once a margin range had been established using the same parameters.

Concerning a margin based on comparison of total compensation, FICSA requested the Assembly to instruct ICSC to pursue and complete its total compensation studies and include expatriate benefits in that comparison; in FICSA's opinion, a comparison based on total compensation was most appropriate for measuring the margin. The inclusion of expatriate benefits was justified in view of the expatriate nature of service in the United Nations, where over 90 per cent of Professional staff were expatriates.

FICSA supported ICSC's recommendation to implement a new scale of staff assessment for General Service and related categories, with effect from 1 January 1987, as and when the salary scales for those categories were adjusted. It also supported the transitional measures proposed by ICSC as protection of serving staffs acquired rights.

CCISUA said that ICSC's decision to eliminate the cost-of-living differential, a major factor in calculating the margin, failed to respect the nature of the post adjustment system and arbitrarily changed the methodology without coming to terms with the basic fact that New York was considerably more expensive to live in than Washington, D.C.; if a comparison were made between the two services in Washington, the margin would be considerably lower. (6)

Recommendations of the Group of 18. The Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) (see p. 1021), in its report to the General Assembly, (7) recommended that the mandate of ICSC, responsible for establishing standards in matters dealing with personnel management, be modified so that it could also monitor implementation of such standards and report thereon to the Assembly (recommendation 53).

With regard to total entitlements (salaries and other conditions of service) of staff members, the Group stated that they had reached a level which gave reason for serious concern and should be reduced; in particular, the elimination of the education grant for post-secondary studies and the establishment of a four-week annual leave system for all staff members should be considered for prompt implementation (recommendation 61).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/207.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the twelfth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission,

Stalling the establishment of the Commission by General Assembly resolution 3357(XXIX) of 18 December 1974 for the regulation and co-ordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Taking into account the differences in the nature and functions of the international civil service and the comparator civil service,

Noting that, as regards the broad principles for the determination of the conditions of service of the staff, the role of the International Civil Service Commission, under article 10 (a) of its Statute, is to make recommendations to the General Assembly,

Recalling that by its resolution 40/244 of 18 December 1985, the General Assembly approved the range of 110 to 120, with a desirable mid-point of 115, for the net remuneration margin, on the understanding that the margin would be maintained at a level around the desirable mid-point of 115 over a period of time, and considering that the margin range should be maintained for some time,

Noting that in its discussions in 1986 on recommendations ultimately to be placed before the General Assembly, the Commission, inter alia, agreed that remuneration comparisons should be carried out on the basis of the net remuneration of the two civil services in New York, and that the cost-of-living differential between New York and Washington, D.C., should not be taken into account in margin calculations,

Noting also that in paragraph 70 of its report, the Commission noted that the decisions made at its twenty-fourth session would result in significant changes in the margin calculation methodology, the level of the margin and the margin range itself,

Noting that the Commission, when reporting on the margin, has always taken into account the cost-of-living differential between Washington, D.C., and New York,

Requests the International Civil Service Commission to review, taking into account the views expressed at the current session of the General Assembly, the issues dealt with in paragraph 69 (b) and (c) of its report, and to submit to the Assembly at its forty-second session its recommendations on the methodology for calculating the margin based on net remuneration;

II

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to examine the total entitlements (salaries and other conditions of service) of both services with a view to determining the feasibility and usefulness of a comparison and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

2. Approves, with effect from 1 April 1987, for staff in the Professional and higher categories, the revised scale of staff assessment, the revised base salary scale and the scale of separation payments, as contained in annexes I, X and XI of the report of the Commission and consequently approves, with effect from 1 April 1987, the amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution, to replace, for staff in the Professional and higher categories, the present scale of net and gross salaries and the scale of staff assessment;

III

1. Approves, with effect from 1 January 1987, the introduction of the revised scale of staff assessment for staff in the General Service and related categories, as well as the manner of application, including the transitional arrangements, as recommended by the International Civil Service Commission in paragraphs 139 and 140 and annex XIII of its report;

2. Approves, with effect from 1 January 1987, the amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution, to replace the present scale of staff assessment for staff in the General Service and related categories;

IV

1. Takes note of the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission contained in paragraph 209 of its report, outlining measures for the recruitment of women;

2. Invites each organization of the common system to collect and analyse statistics regarding the relative time spent by women and men in each grade of the Professional and higher categories and to submit to the Commission proposals for removing obstacles to equality in promotion prospects for women and men and invites the Commission to co-ordinate these proposals with a view to making recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-third session and to other legislative organs of the common system;

V

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on further progress in performance appraisal and the recognition of merit of staff;

2. Reiterates its request to the Commission to undertake a study of the mobility of Professional staff in the United Nations common system, including the frequency and average length of their assignments at different duty stations, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

VI

1. Recalls section IV of its resolution 40/244, concerning the maintenance and strengthening of the United Nations common system;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and, through him, the other executive heads of organizations participating in the United Nations common system, to ensure that all necessary measures are taken to promote uniform and co-ordinated action in the common system regarding conditions of service;

3. Stresses the importance of ensuring that the governing organs of the specialized agencies do not take, on matters of concern to the common system, positions conflicting with those taken by the General Assembly;

4. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to continue reporting on the implementation of its decisions and recommendations by participating organizations;

5. Requests, through the Secretary-General, the executive heads of organizations participating in the United Nations common system to inform their respective governing bodies of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations Regulation 3-3

Replace subparagraphs (i) and (ii) of paragraph (b) by the following text:

"(b) (i) The assessment shall be calculated at the following rates for staff whose salary rates are set forth in paragraphs 1 and 3 of annex I to the present Regulations:

General Assembly resolution 41/207

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/951) without vote, 8 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.14), following informal consultations; agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 22-26, 28, 41, 42, 44; plenary 101.

Several countries disagreed on the applicability of the cost-of-living differential between Washington, D.C., and New York. Australia stated that, in the interest of fairness and transparency, the cost-of-living differential should be removed from net remuneration margin calculations. However, Argentina regarded section I of the resolution as a clear indication to ICSC that eliminating the differential was unacceptable, while Brazil felt that a clear message was sent to ICSC that the differential was a necessary element in calculating the margin.

Algeria said if the text had been put to a vote, it would have had difficulty supporting it, as it did not recommend a satisfactory solution to the problem of the differential which, Algeria hoped, in future ICSC would take duly into account. The United States felt that although there was indeed a difference in the cost of living between New York and Washington, the comparator civil service had one uniform national pay scale, regardless of location; it was, therefore, technically inaccurate to add an adjustment factor to the comparator salaries in the margin calculation. The USSR said the ICSC decision not to take the cost-of-living differential into account was correctly based on the practice of the comparator civil service.

Separation payments

Based on the approved adjustment procedures and a 5 per cent movement in the weighted average of post adjustments (WAPA) index over the base date of 1 September 1979, an increase in the scale of separation payments became due with effect from 1 April 1986. Taking into account views expressed by ACC and FICSA, ICSC(1) concluded that a revised scale of separation payments should be promulgated with effect from 1 April, which was estimated to lead to an increase in separation payments of some $1.6 million per annum system-wide. The 1 January 1986 WAPA index of 93.5 became the new base for future calculations of the movement of WAPA. ICSC agreed that the next upward adjustment to the scale of separation payments would take place when the index reached a level of 105, and a downward adjustment would be made when the index registered a drop of 5 per cent, that is, reached a level of 88.8, as compared with 1 January 1986. It also decided that the adjustment mechanism for calculating WAPA should be modified effective 1 January 1986.

In his statement on the administrative and financial implications of ICSC's decisions,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General said the United Nations would apply the revised scale as promulgated but, in the light of the current financial crisis, the actual payments would not be effected until 1987; the cost to the 1986-1987 budget was estimated at $610,000.

The General Assembly, by resolution 41/207, approved the revised scale of separation payments, with effect from 1 April 1987.

Emoluments of top-echelon officials

The question of emoluments of top-echelon officials, last reviewed by the General Assembly in 1984,⁽⁸⁾ was considered in 1986 by ACABQ, which submitted its recommendations to the Assembly in December.⁽⁹⁾ The new methodology recommended by ICSC in 1986 for determining pensionable remuneration for staff in the Professional and higher categories (see p. 1070) would link pensionable remuneration to net remuneration (net base salary plus post adjustment); consequently, there would be no direct link between pensionable remuneration and gross salary. Those developments, ACABQ said, suggested that a stronger case existed for linking changes in the Secretary-General's maximum retirement allowance to changes in net remuneration rather than to changes affecting gross salary. Moreover, ICSC proposals with regard to the scales of staff assessment would not take effect until 1 April 1987; the current incumbent would become entitled to a maximum annual retirement allowance of $81,650 upon the completion of a full term at the end of December 1986. Under the circumstances, the current maximum entitlement allowance should be maintained, as should the amounts of retirement allowance for a former Secretary-General and the widow of a former Secretary-General. It was further recommended that the method of determining the Secretary-General's maximum annual retirement allowance be re-examined, either when further changes were made in the Secretary-General's salary or at the 1989 Assembly session, whichever was earlier.

On 1 April 1987, it would be necessary to revise the gross salary of the Secretary-General from $163,300 to $131,161 as a consequence of the reverse application of the new staff assessment rates to the current "with dependants" rate of the net base salary ($85,000). Similarly, the gross salaries of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) and the UNDP Administrator should be reduced from $159,115 to $119,429. The extrapolation procedure used to determine the amounts of pensionable remuneration for the Director (D-2), ASG and USG levels in the scale of pensionable remuneration, if applied also to the DIEC Director-General and the UNDP Administrator, would yield a rounded amount of $126,900. ACABQ recommended that the levels be set at that amount with effect from 1 April 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/209, section X.

Salary and retirement allowance of the Secretary-General and salary and pensionable remuneration of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme

[The General Assembly . . .]

Having considered the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Concurs with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning the gross salary and retirement allowance of the Secretary-General, contained in paragraphs 4 and 5 of its report;

2. Also concurs with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning the gross salary and pensionable remuneration of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, contained in paragraphs 6 and 8 of its report;

3. Approves the amendment to annex I to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations with effect from 1 April 1987, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Amendment to annex I to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations

In paragraph 1, the salary figure for the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation shall read $US 119,429.

General Assembly resolution 41/209, section X

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) without vote, 8 December (meeting 44); draft by ACABQ (A/41/7/Add.ID; agenda item 110.

Post adjustment

In 1986, ICSC dealt with various issues relating to the post adjustment system. In making its recommendations to the Assembly⁽¹⁾ it considered the report of its Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions (ACPAQ) on its eleventh session (London, 1-9 May)⁽¹⁰⁾ which contained an outline of the Committee's examination of various issues pertaining to the post adjustment system—cost-of-living methodology, the problem of duty stations with low or negative post adjustment classifications, the separation of the effects of inflation and currency fluctuations, and the elimination of post adjustment at the base.

ICSC noted that ACPAQ's recommendations on the methodology for the conduct of the cost-of-living surveys sought to achieve a balance between the need for statistical accuracy and for simplicity in data collection and analysis procedures, and to provide simplified methods that could be used quickly and effectively in cases of high inflation and/or substantial devaluation of the local currency. ICSC approved the recommendations on the item with some modifications. It similarly approved the procedure recommended by ACPAQ relating to access to cost-of-living survey data and the consultation process between the ICSC secretariat and the organizations and staff, indicating that its intent was to make the survey process as transparent as possible.

The Commission decided that, with effect from 1 January 1987, pension contributions should be treated as a separate component of the post adjustment index (PAI) and that 5 per cent of net base salary should be added to the out-of-area component, to account for out-of-area non-consumption expenditures. It noted that the separate treatment of the pension contribution and the inclusion of non-consumption commitments in the out-of-area index would lead to an increase in PAIs for duty stations with a very low post adjustment classification and a corresponding decrease at locations with a very high post adjustment classification. The financial implications of its decision, ICSC noted, were estimated at $200,000 per annum system-wide; in the long run, however, the solution was expected to be cost-neutral.

In response to a 1985 Assembly request⁽²⁾ ICSC considered the issue of possible elimination of the post adjustment in New York and requested ACPAQ to continue its study of the matter.

ICSC also noted that, owing to the regressivity built into the post adjustment system, exchange rate fluctuations directly affected take-home pay; two organizations (WIPO and UPU) had already taken steps independently to remedy the situation, while a third (GATT) was considering similar action. The Commission decided to introduce, on an interim basis and with effect from 1 September 1986, a procedure recommended by the organizations, similar to one it had approved in 1982⁽¹¹⁾ to minimize the variations of take-home pay expressed in local currency resulting from fluctuations in the value of local currencies in relation to the United States dollar. Under the procedure, a remuneration correction factor (RCF) was established for a given duty station, adding or subtracting multiplier points to the post adjustment classification otherwise applicable. The procedure should be used at the six headquarters locations other than New York, in European countries with fully convertible currencies and in Japan, as those were all countries where exchange rates had been subject to both upward and downward movements. The cost of the proposal, ICSC noted, would be $1.8 million for one year at the June 1986 exchange rate; should the United States dollar strengthen sufficiently in future in relation to other currencies, the measures would however result in savings for the organizations. ICSC requested ACPAQ to continue its study of the issue with a view to developing a long-term universal solution.

At duty stations where special measures had been applied but where post-devaluation inflation had been lower than anticipated, a part of the benefit provided by the special measures should be eliminated, ICSC decided; where appropriate, mini-surveys should be used to determine the excess post adjustment. Before application of the corrective measures, two months' notice should be given to the organization and staff concerned.

In his statement on the administrative and financial implications of ICSC's recommendations and decisions⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General said that, based on exchange rates applicable in October, the additional cost for the United Nations regular budget was estimated at $490,000 for 1986 and $1,470,000 for 1987. In view of the current financial crisis and consistent with other economy measures taken, it was intended to apply the RCF arrangements at Geneva and Vienna only from 1 January 1987; consequently, the additional cost for the 1986-1987 budget was estimated at $1,470,000.

The Secretary-General estimated the impact of ICSC's decision—that, with effect from 1 January 1987, the pension contribution factor should be treated as a separate component in the computation of PAI and that 5 per cent of net salary should be added to the out-of-area component—on the 1987 budget at $7,000.

In November 1986,⁽¹⁾ ACABQ stated that in response to inquiries with regard to RCF it had been informed by representatives of the Secretary-General that 16 duty stations were involved. The application of the RCF procedure for September and October 1986 had entailed positive adjustments at seven duty stations and negative adjustments at seven others, while for two stations the post adjustments remained unchanged.

Administrative Tribunal judgement on class 12 of the post adjustment

The United Nations Administrative Tribunal, at its April-June 1986 panel session, heard an appeal by six staff members concerning the validity of suspension of class 12 of the post adjustment for New York. Following a 1984 request by the General Assembly⁽¹⁴⁾ to take the necessary measures to suspend implementation of the increase in post adjustment of New York for December 1984 and to take whatever measures were required in respect of post adjustment levels at other duty stations to ensure equivalence of purchasing power as soon as possible at all duty stations in relation to the level of net remuneration in New York, ICSC had ratified in March 1985 a decision, made in December 1984, to implement the Assembly's request. As a consequence, the Secretary-General continued to apply post adjustment class 11 in New York, and increases in post adjustment that would have become due on 1 January 1985 in Washington, D.C., and in Yugoslavia and on 1 February 1985 in Iraq, if the New York post adjustment had not been frozen, were also not implemented.

Taking up the six staff members' appeal, the Tribunal rejected interventions by other staff members on the basis that its decision would be applied not only to the six applicants but to all similarly situated staff members. On 6 June, the Tribunal delivered Judgement No. 370 holding that the suspension implemented by ICSC at the Assembly's request was valid, but only from 1 April 1985, i.e., upon its March 1985 ratification. The Tribunal held that the means by which ICSC's December 1984 decision had been taken did not comply with certain procedural requirements and had no legal force. It ordered payment of remuneration at the class 12 level for the four-month period from 1 December 1984 to 31 March 1985, or the payment of damages equivalent to the difference between that amount and the class 11 post adjustment that had actually been paid.

On 9 September 1986, the Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements declined the application by one of the applicants in the Tribunal proceedings to request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on the validity of the Tribunal's judgement; Judgement No. 370 therefore became final.

The Secretary-General, in a November 1986 report,⁽¹⁵⁾ said the Organization was legally bound to implement judgements of the Tribunal when they became final and that it was his obligation to pay the amounts ordered. It was his intent to pay damages equivalent to the difference between class 12 and class 11 post adjustment for the months in question. However, in the light of the Organization's current financial situation, he would delay actual payment until 1987. The financial implications of paying the damages for four months in New York, three months in Washington, D.C., and Yugoslavia, and two months in Iraq would total $1,524,300 under the regular budget for 1,968 staff affected, and $602,600 from other funds, including UNDP, UNICEF, UNHCR and extrabudgetary funds of the United Nations, for another 771 staff.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly on 11 December 1986 adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/209, section VIII.

Judgement No. 370 of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal related to the suspension of class 12 post adjustment in New York

[The General Assembly . . .]

Approves the proposal of the Secretary-General to charge the additional expenditures resulting from Judgement No. 370 of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal against the overall balance of appropriations for the biennium 1984-1985 to be retained as a result of the suspension of regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

General Assembly resolution 41/209, section VIII

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 135-10-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) by recorded vote (79-10-1), 1 December (meeting 39); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 35, 36, 38, 39; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Singapore.

In Committee, the USSR and the United States introduced a draft resolution⁽¹⁴⁾ by which the Assembly would have recalled its 1984 resolution⁽¹²⁾ and requested the Secretary-General to study the feasibility of limiting the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to deal with applications involving the common system and financial implications in excess of $200,000. The United States later requested that consideration of the draft be deferred to a subsequent Assembly session.

The Committee then approved the Secretary-General's proposal to charge the additional regular budget expenditures of $1,524,300 against the overall balance of appropriations for 1984-1985 to be retained as a result of the suspension of financial regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) (requiring unspent appropriations to be returned to Member States). Expressing regret at the Committee's having to take such a decision, the USSR said the judgement was totally devoid of logic and it could not agree with the Secretary-General's method for implementing it. Bulgaria viewed the use of the Special Account to finance the implementation of the judgement as inappropriate.

The United Kingdom said that it had not welcomed the Tribunal's decision, which frustrated the 1984 resolution requesting suspension of implementation of the post adjustment increase, but, recognizing that the decision was the result of due legal process, it voted in favour of the Secretary-General's proposal. The United States said the Tribunal had reached a decision and the Assembly had no choice but to comply; however, it was concerned about Tribunal judgements that had serious financial implications for Member States. Algeria felt that the United Nations was legally bound to implement Tribunal judgements when they became final.

Health insurance

In an October 1986 report⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General proposed a revised medical insurance plan for locally recruited staff in the General Service and related categories with contracts of three months or more at certain duty stations away from United Nations Headquarters (it would not apply at Bangkok, Geneva, London, Mexico City, Paris, Rome, Santiago, The Hague, Vienna and Washington). Family coverage would be available for a spouse and unmarried children under the age of 25 who were not engaged in full-time employment. After-service coverage would also be available to former staff members (and their eligible family members) upon retirement from service at age 55 or above. The introduction of after-service health coverage for locally recruited General Service staff had been approved by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽¹⁶⁾ following a recommendation of ICSC.⁽¹⁷⁾

As to financing the revised plan, the cost was estimated at 7 per cent of net local salary costs at the duty stations concerned—with participants contributing on average 1.25 per cent (corresponding to one half of the projected additional costs of the new plan) and 5.75 per cent to be borne by the Organization, as compared to 4.5 per cent for the existing plan.

The existing plan would cost an estimated $700,000 in 1987 for the regular budget. In order to finance the revised plan—which would cover the same number of staff members (1,400), with 120 former staff members expected to join immediately and 25 more during 1987—additional costs of $500,000 under the regular budget would be required in 1987, shared equally between the Organization and the participants. Of the additional amount of $250,000 for health insurance coverage, $155,000 relating to active staff would be dealt with in the adjustment of common staff cost ratio to be incorporated in the first performance report of the programme budget for 1986-1987. With regard to the portion relating to retirees ($95,000), the Secretary-General anticipated that it could be met from the overall resources already appropriated for after-service health insurance in the programme budget under the section covering miscellaneous expenses (general insurance) of administration and management.

ACABQ⁽¹⁸⁾ concurred with the financial arrangement proposed by the Secretary-General. It also noted that, as the proportion of retirees covered by the revised plan increased, it might be necessary to increase premiums; representatives of the Secretary-General had confirmed that any increase would be shared equally between the Organization and participants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 41/209, section III.

Health insurance coverage for locally-recruited staff in the General Service and related categories at designated duty stations

[The General Assembly . . .]

Approves the arrangements proposed by the Secretary-General in his report on health insurance coverage for locally-recruited staff in the General Service and related categories at designated duty stations:

General Assembly resolution 41/209, section III

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 132-10-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) by recorded vote (88-8-3), 12 November (meeting 24); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 110.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States.

Abstaining: Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom and the United States said that, while in principle they had no objection to the proposed change, they questioned the wisdom of increasing costs at a time of financial crisis.

Kenya asked how the list of duty stations where other health insurance plans were offered had been drawn up, since it did not include Nairobi, where two important United Nations bodies were located.

Pensions

During 1986, the principal of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF), providing retirement, death, disability and related benefits for staff upon cessation of service with the United Nations, increased from $4,122,009,634 to $5,055,100,094, with the number of participants reaching 54,289. Investment income during the year amounted to $913,648,397 ($907,794,014 net). From that amount, the Fund paid $372,266,720, including 8,619 retirement benefits amounting to $190,051,297. In addition, it paid 8,654 early and deferred retirement benefits, 3,016 widows' and widowers' benefits, 4,582 children's benefits, 520 disability benefits and 43 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, it also paid 3,434 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements.

The 21-member Pension Board (see APPENDIX III), the Fund's administering body, held its thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth (special) sessions, respectively, from 10 to 20 June 1986 at Copenhagen, Denmark, and from 3 to 5 September at Geneva.⁽¹⁹⁾ In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Board carried out a further study of the method of calculating the lump-sum commutation (cash withdrawal in place of anticipated future periodic benefits), considered the question of whether inequalities existed in the benefits payable to participants who separated on different dates and, if so, whether steps were needed to eliminate or reduce such inequalities, reviewed the operation of the two-track pension adjustment system (two formulas for calculating the impact of cost-of-living and currency exchange-rate fluctuations on pension benefits) and examined the question of the rate of contributions paid by and for the account of participants subject to maximum retirement benefit limits. The Board also studied the question of pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories, considered the management of the Fund's investments (see p. 1074) and reviewed the assumptions recommended by the Committee of Actuaries for use in the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1986.

The Board recommended, among other things, that, in reference to calculating the lump-sum commutation of benefits, article 28 (g) of the Fund's Regulations be amended to limit the lump sum so that it should not exceed the amount payable to a participant retiring after 35 years' service, with a final average pension remuneration equal to the top step at the P-5 level, and that the "cap" of 120 per cent with regard to currency exchange-rate fluctuations be maintained in the two-track pension adjustment system, but that the situation continue to be monitored.

In response to another 1985 Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ ICSC carried out a comparative study of the levels of pension benefits and the ratios of pensions to salaries under the United Nations pension scheme and that of the comparator country (United States). In its 1986 report,⁽¹⁾ ICSC recommended that the Assembly approve: a range for the United Nations/United States pensionable remuneration margin of between 110 and 120, with a desirable mid-point of 115; a methodology for determining the pensionable remuneration of United Nations officials in grades P-1 through D-2 and at the ASG and USG levels; scales of staff assessment for implementation from 1 April 1987; a scale of pensionable remuneration amounts for the Professional and higher categories for implementation from 1 April 1987; and an interim adjustment procedure for adjusting pensionable remuneration amounts between comprehensive reviews. ICSC drew the Assembly's attention to the fact that, if the recommended scale of pensionable remuneration were approved, it would represent a reduction in costs of some $11.83 million per annum for all organizations and all sources of funds.

Following consideration of the reports of the Pension Board and ICSC, ACABQ reported in November.⁽²¹⁾ It noted that the Pension Board's Committee of Actuaries had expressed concern about rising rates of early retirement and a decrease in the average age at retirement. It also noted that, in order to take account of recent trends, the regular valuation with regard to future growth of the Fund's participant population as at 31 December 1986 would assume that there would be no growth. That would lead to an increase in the actuarial imbalance of the Fund of about 1.18 per cent of pensionable remuneration, from 3.01 to 4.19 per cent. ACABQ recommended approval of a supplementary estimate of $900,000 for UNJSPF administrative expenses, which would bring total administrative expenses to $17,895,700 for 1986-1987.

ACABQ observed that areas of disagreement existed between the Pension Board and ICSC, one of which concerned the latter's recommendation regarding the range of the pensionable remuneration margin (see above), which the Board believed should be grossed-up to a range of 112 to 124. The second disagreement concerned the ICSC decision to base calculations to determine its recommended scale of pensionable remuneration on 96 per cent of the net United Nations remuneration in New York, while the Board believed that 100 per cent of net remuneration should have been used. The Board further disagreed with the ICSC position that a pensionable remuneration amount of $97,507 for both ASGs and USGs was reasonable, believing that the pensionable remuneration for the USG level should continue to be higher than that for the ASG level. ACABQ believed that a speedy resolution of disagreements between ICSC and the Board was essential to achieve a stable pension system with a benefit scheme that was broadly understood and acceptable.

In October,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a statement adopted by ACC in which it viewed with concern the absence of common conclusions by ICSC and the Board; ACC considered that ICSC and the Board should be requested to consult on their divergent conclusions and formulate joint recommendations to the Assembly.

Comments of staff representatives. In October,⁽³⁾ FICSA proposed to defer a decision on the establishment of a methodology for determining pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories until, at the earliest, the 1987 regular Assembly session to permit the preparation of a technically sound methodology. CCISUA, in November,⁽⁴⁾ said it opposed ICSC's proposal for across-the-board reductions in pensionable remuneration and said the tendency to link the United Nations pension scheme to that of the United States posed serious problems; it expressed concern at the apparent disregard of ICSC for the considerations put forward by ACC and the Pension Board, in particular the attempt to impose an arbitrary margin range on pensionable remuneration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/208.

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/246 of 18 December 1984 and 40/245 of 18 December 1985, in which it requested the International Civil Service Commission, in co-operation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, to review the methodology for the determination of pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories, for monitoring the level of pensionable remuneration and for the adjustment of pensionable remuneration in between comprehensive reviews,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1986 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, chapter II of the report of the International Civil Service Commission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recognizing the importance of encouraging a trend towards actuarial balance of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund,

I

Pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories

Bearing in mind chapter II of the report of the International Civil Service Commission, section III.C of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and section B of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Convinced that the establishment of clearly defined criteria for the determination of pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories and the introduction of a new scale based on such criteria would contribute to a period of stability, which is essential for the common system,

Further convinced that in order to achieve this goal full co-operation between the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and adequate reflection of the views of all parties concerned are necessary,

Recognizing that there is a need, within the framework of the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission, to take into account the observations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board,

Having examined the ratios of pension benefits to final net remuneration and the levels of pension benefits, on a gross and net basis, for United Nations officials and officials of the comparator service,

Taking into account the following elements relating to the structure of a scale of pensionable remuneration for the common system:

(a) The introduction of a new scale of pensionable remuneration should not, except for the transitional measures, have any significant adverse actuarial impact on the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

(b) The scale of pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories should be determined in relation to pension benefits earned after twenty-five years of service and should take into account:

- (i) Income replacement ratios of net pension benefits (calculated as gross pension minus staff assessment) to net remuneration for United Nations officials in New York at different grades and steps;
- (ii) Income replacement ratios of gross pension benefits to net remuneration for United Nations officials in New York at different grades and steps;
- (c) The scale should not create distortions upon promotion;

(d) Pensionable remuneration for the Under-Secretary-General level should continue to be higher than that for the Assistant Secretary-General level,

1. Approves, for implementation with effect from 1 April 1987 for all participants in the Professional and higher categories in the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, the scale of pensionable remuneration that is set out in the appendix to the annex to the present resolution;

2. Approves the procedure for adjusting pensionable remuneration in between comprehensive reviews, as described in paragraph 40 of the report of the International Civil Service Commission;

3. Approves the transitional measures in respect of final average remuneration as recommended in section III.C.5 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board;

4. Amends accordingly, with effect from 1 April 1987, article 54 (b) and supplementary article C of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as set forth in the annex to the present resolution, without retroactive effect;

5. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, in co-operation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, to monitor regularly the pensionable remuneration for staff in the Professional and higher categories of the United Nations and that of the United States federal civil service employees in comparable grades, and to report thereon to the General Assembly as appropriate;

6. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to undertake, in full co-operation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, a further comprehensive review of the methodology for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories, for monitoring the level of the scale and for its adjustment in between comprehensive reviews and to present its recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

II

Other pension matters

Bearing in mind the views expressed in the Fifth Committee on lump-sum commutation,

1. Takes note of section III.D.1 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board with respect to the method of calculating the lump-sum commutation of benefits, including the recommendation on the imposition of a limit on the amount that may be received by a participant through the commutation of a portion of his periodic benefit, and of the related views of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraphs 17 and 18 of its report;

2. Approves with effect from 1 April 1987 and without retroactive effect:

(a) The amendment to article 28 (g) of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution, together with any required consequential renumbering of paragraphs and cross-references in the Regulations;

(b) A new supplementary article D, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Takes note of section III.D.2 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board on inequalities of benefits caused by different dates of separation and of the related views of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraph 19 of its report and requests the Board to keep the situation under review;

4. Takes note of section III.D.3 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board with respect to the review of the two-track pension adjustment system, and of the related views of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraph 20 of its report, and requests the Board to continue to monitor the two-track pension adjustment system;

5. Takes note of section III.F of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and of the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in this regard, as contained in paragraph 23 of its report, and approves, with effect from 1 April 1987, and without retroactive effect, the changes in paragraphs 14 to 16 of the pension adjustment system as set out in paragraph 103 of the report of the Board;

6. Defers until its forty-second session further consideration of the question of the increase in the rate of contribution to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

7. Requests the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to continue studying measures designed to improve the actuarial situation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

III

Composition of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board

Recalling its request contained in section III of its resolution 40/245,

Takes note of the decision of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the results of the review of the size and composition of the Board and in this context requests the Board to include in its report its views on observer participation and related costs;

IV

Emergency Fund

Authorizes the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund, for a further period of one year, by an amount not exceeding $100,000;

V

Administrative expenses

1. Approves additional expenses of $900,000 (net) for the biennium 1986-1987, chargeable directly to the

2. Requests the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to continue reporting on the fees paid to the institutional advisers:

Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

"(b) In the case of participants in the Professional and higher categories, the pensionable remuneration effective 1 April 1987 shall be that set out in the appendix hereto. Thereafter, the scale of pensionable remuneration for such participants shall be adjusted

(ii) If his age on 31 March 1987 is 55 or more, the actuarial equivalent of one third of the benefit that would have been payable to him had he retired on 31 March 1987 and had attained on that date the age at his actual date of separation."

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/952) without vote, 8 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.15), following informal consultations; agenda item 119.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 22, 24-26, 28, 41, 42, 44; plenary 101.

The Federal Republic of Germany said that it had joined in the consensus despite reservations, because it would like a period of stability in the area of pensionable remuneration. Australia had joined the consensus without reservation; the revised scale of pensionable remuneration should provide stability for the next few years, although a number of methodological problems remained. Argentina expressed doubts about the pension scale, which reflected a political compromise, the legal consequences of which had not been fully thought out; there had not been adequate co-operation between ICSC and the Pension Board. Brazil regretted that the two bodies had not co-operated fully. Italy said that economy measures should not be made at the expense of the elderly and stressed the need for full co-operation between ICSC and the Board. Sweden hoped that the two bodies would co-operate more smoothly in the future. Algeria, which had difficulty in understanding the technical reasoning on which the pension scale was based, said that technical work on conditions of service and scales of pensionable remuneration should be performed by ICSC and the Board.

The United States commended ICSC and the Board for the restraint demonstrated in their proposals; it had preferred the ICSC proposals, which would have saved the common system $11 million, but, as a compromise, had accepted the scale developed in the Fifth Committee, saving close to $9 million. The USSR found the ICSC scale unacceptable and regarded the adopted scale—to which it had agreed only because of the savings—as a transitional measure pending the adoption of a still lower scale.

Denmark had always supported the acquired rights of Pension Fund participants; since the definition of those rights should be determined by the competent tribunals, it had reservations regarding the Board's conclusions concerning acquired rights.

Pension Fund investments

In its annual report,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Pension Board stated that as at 31 March 1986 the market value of the Fund's assets was $5,613 million, $1,687 million more than a year earlier. The investment return of 41.5 per cent for the year was the highest ever. (The considerable variations in the results from one year to the next reflected short-term market conditions and exchange-rate fluctuations.) The structure of the investment portfolio was widely diversified, consisting of 59 per cent in equity, 30 per cent in bonds, 8 per cent in real estate-related investments and 3 per cent in short-term investments and cash reserves. To obtain currency diversification, funds were invested in 21 different currencies; as at 31 March 1986, $2,230 million, or 40 per cent of the investments, were in currencies other than the United States dollar. The Fund was invested in 42 countries, including 20 developing ones. Of the $733 million development-related investments, 78 per cent had been made through international and regional development institutions and the rest directly in individual countries.

In his annual report on the Fund's investments,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General examined, among other things, investment conditions, return and diversification. He concluded that the year ending 31 March 1986 had been a good one for the Fund and considered that the policy of diversification and careful selection of investment instruments was the best way to preserve the Fund's principal and enhance its investment return.

In resolution 41/208, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Administration of justice

Report of the Group of 18. In its August 1986 report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Group of 18 observed that the system of administration of justice as currently constituted was cumbersome. To render it more efficient and less costly, the Group recommended simplifying the system's procedures and immediate implementation of the ACABQ recommendation, approved by the Assembly in 1985,⁽²⁾ that the Secretary-General analyse the problem and indicate steps taken or envisaged to achieve the desired simplification (recommendation 60).

(For Assembly action on the Group's recommendations as a whole, see resolution 41/213.)

JIU report. In September 1986,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General forwarded to the Assembly a JIU study on the administration of justice in the United Nations, in view of the critical situation stemming from excessive delays in the delivery of justice, particularly in New York. The study addressed delays mainly at the Administration level, that is, in the Office of Personnel Services (OPS), where the administrative functions relating to the appeals procedure were concentrated. An annex to the report indicated that 94 cases were pending before the Joint Appeals Board as at 31 March, each reported to have cost the Organization, at that stage of the procedure, an average of $24,000, or a total of over $2.2 million.

The study analysed the essential components of the existing formal recourse system, comprising special procedures for narrowly defined situations and general review procedures applicable to any administrative decision or even to the failure to take a decision without restrictions on the subject covered; and the phases of recourse—the pre-judicial, for matters requiring informal mediation and conciliation through the Panel on Discrimination and Other Grievances, or review by the Joint Appeals Board, whose competence was only to advise the Secretary-General; and the judicial, where recourse could be had to the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and, in exceptional cases, to the International Court of Justice (ICJ).

Previous proposals for reform were examined, such as creating a separate office for administration of justice within the Secretary-General's Executive Office, of an Ombudsman's office to resolve staff-management disputes informally,⁽⁴⁾ and of a two-stage judicial appeal through a claims court, with possible recourse to the Tribunal. Legal costs were also considered, including costs to be borne by the appellant whose claim had not been sustained by the Board or the Tribunal.

The study cited the mediation process and the functioning of a true judicial body, the Tribunal, as the main merits of the existing system. It underscored, however, the absence of a clear distinction between the conciliatory and judicial procedures and characterized the Board as a primitive procedure, rendered somewhat obsolete by the Organization's growth and the evolution of a career concept in the international civil service. It noted that the administrative procedures as set up placed OPS in a position to play a double role as defendant and applicant. It considered it inappropriate that the Organization should be charged with the task of providing counsel—through a Panel of Counsel of qualified staff members appointed by the Secretary-General—in claims against the Organization itself and so felt that the Panel's composition and functions should be reconsidered.

JIU recommended the creation of an Office for the Administration of Justice within the Secretary-General's Executive Office to separate the function of the administration of justice from the Administration and thereby ensure objectivity (recommendation 1); the creation of a one-person Office of Ombudsman, with secretarial assistance, for conciliation and mediation, to replace not only the Panel on Discrimination and Other Grievances but also the Board (recommendation 2); the introduction of two jurisdictions—a Claims Court to constitute the first instance and the Tribunal the second (recommendation 3); and amendments to the United Nations Staff Regulations and Staff Rules to discourage their improper application, including disciplinary penalties for ill-founded decisions, and to prevent abuse of staff rights and privileges by imposing costs on litigants and penalizing submission of unjustified claims (recommendation 4).

Under these proposed structural changes, a staff member would take his case to the Office of Ombudsman for conciliation, failing which he would be at liberty to take his case to the Claims Court for a judicial solution; if the Court's decision was against the appeal, whether in whole or in part, he could resort to the Tribunal.

The Secretary-General commented⁽⁵⁾ that, as recommendation 1 appeared to be based on the concept of an office separated from the Secretariat's administration, adding another office under his immediate responsibility would detract from the time he needed for broader issues. Also, it was not clear how OPS could play a double role, since its provision of administrative support to the Panel of Counsel could not transform OPS into an applicant. However, the criticism concerning its function of reviewing the Board's reports and making recommendations on the final disposition of cases through the Legal Counsel and the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management had some validity.

Consideration could thus be given to transmitting those reports directly to the Under-Secretary-General.

Recommendation 2, which coincided in some respects with the Secretary-General's own proposals for an Ombudsman institution (see p. 1077), appeared not to have taken account of factors making decentralized arrangements necessary for the effective functioning of such an institution. He envisaged the institution as a separate procedure from the formal Board procedure, rather than as a first step to precede initiation of any formal recourse, and the Ombudsman's role as advisory, with competence to make recommendations to the highest level of the Administration.

The Secretary-General considered the two-instance judicial system in recommendation 3 inadvisable and recalled his 1984 proposal⁽⁶⁾ for the creation, not of a judicial instance below the Tribunal, but of a joint panel composed of the Presidents of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the ILO Administrative Tribunal with a chairman appointed by the ICJ President. The panel would review challenged Tribunal judgements and dispose of most cases currently submitted to the extremely restricted Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements (see p. 1077). He nevertheless stressed that—under the appeal procedure established by staff regulation 11.1 and staff rule 111.2—staff members might, after a definitive decision had been taken on the Board's advice, resort to the Tribunal, a true judicial body whose decisions were generally final and binding; thus there could be no question that the existing recourse system provided mechanisms to ensure the safeguard of staff members' rights under their terms of appointment.

As to recommendation 4, the Secretary-General recalled his own recommendation, in his 1985 report on the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal,⁽⁷⁾ that for cases devoid of merit "the Tribunal be authorized to impose costs, limited to no more than one month's net emoluments, if it considers such a step appropriate". Alternatively, consideration could be given to introducing a filing fee, refundable if sufficient grounds existed for filing an application. The same procedure could be contemplated in the Committee on Applications for Review. A machinery could be set up to handle allocation of costs. As to provisions to discourage improper application of regulations and rules, including disciplinary measures or penalties, staff rule 112.3 and staff regulation 10.2 were applicable for the purpose.

In sum, the Secretary-General felt that the basic structure of the current recourse system—an essentially administrative advisory instance, which might be followed by recourse to a truly judicial instance, the Tribunal, normally the end of the line for a dispute—should remain. It might be enhanced, however, by auxiliary mechanisms such as the proposed Ombudsman institution.

The staff of the United Nations Secretariat⁽⁸⁾ were in general agreement with JIU. They believed, however, that the Claims Court in recommendation 3 should be a tribunal empowered to take binding decisions by majority vote, appealable to the Tribunal by either the Administration or the staff member. They disagreed with the proposal relating to the Panel of Counsel, on the grounds that outside legal counsel unfamiliar with the internal legal system or staff representatives not necessarily skilled in arguing cases before a legal body could not perform the functions of counsel as well as the Panel.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1985 General Assembly request⁽⁹⁾ to streamline the appeals procedures, the Secretary-General reported in November 1986⁽⁵⁾ that he had recently approved a number of measures for a more efficient and cost-effective administration of justice. They were designed (a) to ensure the review of each contested decision under the procedure prescribed by staff rule 111.2 and delivery of a substantive reply to the staff member; (b) to avoid duplication in the review of cases by the various formal recourse bodies; and (c) to simplify the internal procedures before the Joint Appeals Board through such expeditious and informal handling of cases as the summary review of appeals devoid of merit, resort to oral proceedings rather than to lengthy written presentations by the parties, brief Board deliberations with a one-month time-limit and reports no longer than five pages.

The Secretariat staff,⁽⁸⁾ although noting a reduction in the backlog of cases, none the less felt that fundamental changes had to be made to restore confidence in the system of administration of justice. The inability to find lasting solutions at the mediation phase, the enormous backlog of appeals, recent developments in disciplinary cases, and the Administration's option to reject all or any part of a recommendation by the Board or the Joint Disciplinary Committee were shortcomings demanding that the system be changed rather than bolstered or streamlined.

UN Administrative Tribunal

Activities of the Tribunal. The United Nations Administrative Tribunal delivered 18 judgements during 1986 in cases brought by staff members against the Secretary-General of the United Nations or the executive heads of other organizations in the United Nations system to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related regulations and rules. They concerned such personnel management matters as compensation and/or damages, suspension of the class 12 post adjustment in New York (see p. 1068), payment of special post allowance, promotion, right to parking, reimbursement of medical expenses and of tax on pension, interpretation or revision of judgements rendered, and rescission of disciplinary measures.

The Tribunal met in annual plenary session in New York on 7 November 1986 and held two panel sessions—28 April to 6 June (Geneva) and 13 October to 7 November (New York). In keeping with past practice, it submitted a note to the General Assembly outlining its activities for the year⁽¹⁰⁾

The Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements—established under article 11 of the Tribunal's statute, amended by the Assembly in 1955⁽¹¹⁾ to include that article—held its twenty-seventh⁽¹²⁾ and twenty-eighth⁽¹³⁾ sessions in New York, from 27 to 29 January and from 4 to 9 September 1986, respectively. Of the five applications for advisory opinion from ICJ in respect of challenged judgements considered at those sessions, the Committee rejected one as untimely and found the other four as having no substantial basis under article 11 of the Tribunal's statute. The Committee formally announced these decisions at meetings held in public on 28 January and 9 September.

Pending before the Tribunal were 22 cases out of 23, brought in accordance with FICSA's legal defence strategy adopted in 1985⁽¹⁴⁾ against repeated and unfavourable changes in the conditions of service and the pension system of the United Nations system: eight cases contested the freeze in the New York post adjustment allowance as a result of a 1983 ICSC decision⁽¹⁵⁾ to take no action on post adjustment classifications of the main duty stations; eight arose from a 1984 Assembly decision⁽¹⁶⁾ to reduce the scale of pensionable remuneration of Professional staff; and six contested reductions in pension entitlements.

Co-ordination with the ILO Administrative Tribunal

Efforts continued in 1986 to enhance co-ordination between the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the ILO Administrative Tribunal, the two such tribunals of the common system. They exchanged views on the substance of their jurisprudence at Geneva in April,⁽¹⁰⁾ regularly exchanged texts of judgements and summaries, and pursued a plan to index their jurisprudence and to develop a common key word system.

The Secretary-General reported in September⁽¹⁷⁾ that ILO had continued to consider the further development of the statutes and rules of its Tribunal and their harmonization with those of the United Nations Tribunal, setting up a working group to consider the extent and significance of the 1984 draft amendments⁽⁶⁾ to the statutes and rules of both tribunals. The ILO Governing Body took no action on the group's report or on the ILO Director-General's parallel proposals; on its recommendation, however, the June 1986 International Labour Conference amended paragraph 1 of article III of the ILO Tribunal's statute to increase the number of deputy judges from three to four, the better to tackle its growing case-load.

As the draft amendments to the statute of the United Nations Tribunal and other related proposals⁽⁶⁾ had not been discussed by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General saw no reason to revise them.

The Secretary-General's report was the latest in a series prepared since the Assembly in 1978⁽¹⁸⁾ requested a study on the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal for the entire common system. It was submitted under the agenda item on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Its consideration was deferred by virtue of Assembly decision 41/447 of 5 December 1986, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee,⁽¹⁹⁾ deferring until 1987 consideration of the item on co-ordination.

Office of Ombudsman

Report of the Secretary-General. The establishment of an office of Ombudsman in the United Nations was the subject of a November 1986 report⁽⁵⁾ by the Secretary-General. Prepared in response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the report was a follow-up to the conclusion of his 1985 study⁽²⁰⁾ that the establishment of such an office appeared feasible. In presenting a consolidated review of the issue, the report addressed the purpose for which the Assembly in 1984⁽²¹⁾ first called for the study, the ACABQ recommendations as approved by the Assembly in 1985⁽²⁾ for streamlining the appeals procedures, and recommendation 2 of JIU (see p. 1075).

The report put forward specific proposals for instituting the office. Its proposed structure and the modalities to make possible the effective discharge of its role took account of the need for access and direct personal communication between staff and Ombudsman, the need for the Ombudsman's close proximity to the problem, and the number of complaints that could arise from some 14,800 staff members distributed among 129 duty stations. Indications were that the case-load in the first year could be substantially higher than the 100 to 150 cases handled yearly by the panels on discrimination and other grievances.

Designed to solve problems through discussion and conciliation, the Ombudsman institution was to be established within the statutory framework of the Charter of the United Nations, specifically Article 97, providing for a chief administrative officer of the Organization in the person of the Secretary-General, appointed by the Assembly. Hence, as in the case of the other recourse bodies in the Secretariat, the Ombudsman's role must necessarily be advisory to the Secretary-General. The institution should replace the current panels on discrimination and other grievances.

In addition to a full-time Ombudsman at Headquarters, a part-time one should be designated for each of the other seven major duty stations—Addis Ababa, Baghdad, Bangkok, Geneva, Nairobi, Santiago and Vienna—to whom staff at the station and those administered by it would have recourse. The Headquarters Ombudsman would have competence in respect of staff serving at or administered by Headquarters and of complaints referred by part-time Ombudsmen for follow-up at the highest level of the Administration, and would provide guidance to the other Ombudsmen and co-ordinate the overall functioning of the institution.

The Ombudsmen would be designated by the Secretary-General following consultations with staff. The Headquarters Ombudsman, who should be experienced in personnel administration or labour relations and be familiar with the rules and procedures of the United Nations common system, would serve for a specified non-renewable period. The part-time Ombudsmen, chosen from among serving staff members for their administrative experience and negotiating skills, would function as such as part of their official duties.

Cases where questions of fair and equitable treatment were at issue would come under the purview of the Ombudsman, who could decline to deal with any case deemed unjustified or more appropriately considered through the formal recourse procedures. The proceedings, to be conducted informally and with dispatch, would be confidential and no reference thereto would be included in any personnel record or in any formal recourse procedure.

Appropriate mechanisms to avoid duplication could be established so that the Ombudsman's dealings with a case would terminate upon resort to the formal recourse procedures. In that event, no records of the Ombudsman's recommendations or actions would be cited to or be receivable by any appeals body.

The Ombudsman institution would constitute a separate organizational unit within the Department of Administration and Management. Its minimum staff requirements, to be met through post redeployment, would consist of three posts, at levels D-2, P-3 and G-4.

The Secretariat staff⁽⁸⁾ who generally supported the Secretary-General's proposals, disagreed with him on two points. They felt that in order for the Ombudsman's independence from the Administration to be fully guaranteed, the office must be placed outside the personnel system itself (as in the case of JIU), in order to function free of administrative interference, and report directly to the Secretary-General and, if necessary, to the General Assembly. The Ombudsman should be permitted to call on volunteers (as Ombudsman panels in other organizations were permitted to do) for assistance in conducting investigations.

By decision 41/462 of 11 December 1986, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee⁽²²⁾ the General Assembly deferred until 1987 consideration of the Secretary-General's report.

Travel

JIU report. In February 1986,(1) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by JIU, following up action on its recommendations to improve the organization and methods for United Nations-financed travel by its staff and other officials, endorsed by the Assembly in 1982.(2) The report noted that the recommendation for contracting commercial travel agency services through competitive bidding had been implemented in New York and at Geneva, resulting in improved service and substantial financial benefits to the Organization, and that other field offices had begun to take similar action. However, the main recommendations calling for an in-plant travel unit to serve organizations located in New York, with eventual extension to other major duty stations, or a United Nations-owned and -operated travel agency had been pursued with insufficient resolve, or not at all.

JIU thus recommended that the Secretary-General submit to the Assembly in 1986 a comprehensive report on measures taken as of the time of reporting to implement the 1982 recommendations. The report should give the outcome of investigations into the possible institution of either of the two main recommendations mentioned, including the time frame for implementation should the conclusion be positive, or the legal, economic, financial, managerial and moral reasons should it be negative. It should indicate whether advantage had been taken of opportunities to reduce costs, such as direct or block purchase of tickets from air carriers and participation in various carrier incentive schemes, and indicate obstacles, if any, to using such cost-saving devices.

The report should give a thorough assessment of the results of the three-year contract with Don Travel Service Inc. in New York, entered into on 1 November 1983⁽³⁾ including the net financial benefit to the United Nations based on an audit of the agency's income and an evaluation of the quality of service rendered. It should also indicate whether, as recommended in the current JIU report, the contract with Don Travel had been extended for no longer than one year pending a decision on all the issues and whether the three-year contract with Thomas Cook S.A. at Geneva, entered into on 1 April 1985, had been terminated. The latter recommendation was made in view of the fact that the travel agent had connections with South Africa in violation of a 1981 General Assembly resolution.⁽⁴⁾

The Secretary-General, commenting⁽⁵⁾ on the JIU report, cited ongoing efforts to reduce expenditures for official travel, including stringent control of staff participation in conferences and meetings, a 20 per cent overall reduction in official travel and significant reductions in the number and duration of conferences and meetings. As a result, the cost of official travel processed at Headquarters had decreased by 17 per cent between the first six months of 1985 and the first six months of 1986. Other United Nations offices had achieved similar reductions.

Research into the alternatives proposed by JIU in the light of current legal constraints and conditions prevailing in the travel industry yielded several facts. Were the United Nations to negotiate rebates, it would, under the United States Federal Aviation Act, be party to an arrangement by which the travel agent or air carrier would be in violation of the law. Neither an agreement with an airline for full or partial services nor combined travel agent-airline services would be desirable in New York, where competition between airlines was considerable and where one single airline could not meet all of the Organization's needs. Based on the travel agent's statements of income and expenditures, the United Nations would stand to lose a considerable amount of money from an in-plant arrangement, whereas it was currently paid a yearly sum of $350,000 in rental and other fees by the full-service travel agent. A travel agency owned and operated by the Organization, even if accredited by the Airline Reporting Corporation, would not be granted endorsement by the International Airline Travel Agent Network unless at least 80 per cent of its business was done with the general public, nor, as a consequence, would it be granted sales commissions by the airlines.

Although the options recommended by JIU were for the time being neither cost-effective nor in certain respects legally feasible, the Secretary-General pointed to the preceding year's rapid and drastic changes in the travel industry. The United Nations would thus use the one-year extension of its contract with Don Travel to study those options further, in particular in-plant arrangements, block purchase of tickets, management fee contracts and direct arrangements with airlines. An audit of that travel agency had been arranged and an evaluation of the quality of service was under way. It was difficult to analyse the feasibility of instituting in-plant arrangements or of owning and operating a travel agency in the absence of experience at Headquarters and before completion of the proposed study. Immediate termination of the contract with Thomas Cook S.A. was not practical, but it would be terminated upon selection of a suitable option.

Staff travel and travel to General Assembly sessions

Report of the Secretary-General. In his annual report on implementation of General Assembly resolutions on limiting first-class travel of United Nations officials,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee of 56 cases in which first- or business-class air travel had been allowed in exercise of his discretion during the year ended 30 June 1986, under circumstances in which a less costly mode was not considered appropriate. The total additional costs incurred as a result of those exceptions was $38,060. The corresponding number of cases in the preceding reporting period was 60 and the costs $46,433.

By resolution 41/209, section IV, of 11 December 1986, adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report until 1987.

Report of the Group of 18. Among the recommendations in the August 1986 report of the Group of 18⁽⁷⁾ were two concerning official travel: one called for limiting reimbursement of travel costs for representatives of Member States attending the General Assembly to the least developed countries (recommendation 6); the other called for reducing the current level of official travel by 20 per cent and, as a rule, for limiting first-class travel to the Secretary-General (recommendation 38).

(For Assembly action on the Group's recommendations as a whole, see resolution 41/213.)

Other UN officials

Experts and consultants

Report of the Group of 18. The Group of 18 observed in its August 1986 report⁽¹⁾ that the amount spent on consultants currently exceeded $8 million per biennium. While it might be beneficial to use consultants on a diversified geographical basis for certain tasks and on an ad hoc basis, the amount spent on such services was too high and should be reduced immediately by 30 per cent. In particular, the practice of hiring retired staff members should be abolished (recommendation 35).

By resolution 41/213, the General Assembly decided that the Group's recommendations should be implemented in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee. The Committee, in its report⁽²⁾ on those recommendations, stated that the Group's intention was that the 30 per cent reduction proposed in recommendation 35 should apply to the original appropriations approved by the Assembly for this purpose for the current (1986-1987) biennium.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1985,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General in April 1986 submitted a report⁽⁴⁾ to the Council through CPC on the United Nations use of consultant services and adherence to guidelines governing such use. The report included data showing that, in the preceding eight years, there was a downward trend in the rate of expenditure for consultants and experts. A review of the hiring record for 1984-1985, together with a sampling of assignments, indicated that the consultancies were for tasks identified in that biennium's programme budget.

The report stated that, despite evidence of reasonable success in applying the guidelines, a more disciplined and consistent application was required and gaps in the administrative instruction on the guidelines permitting lapses in application needed to be filled. Several measures for improvement were advanced, including a periodic audit of programme implementation to ensure that the tasks performed by consultants related to those provided for in the programme budget; development of a computerized data-base system containing a roster of consultants classified by area of speciality, level of competence and seniority, nationality, region of origin and performance evaluation, as well as a file on end-products, including use and repository of each; and a data-gathering system for evaluating the usefulness of past consultant services on which to base decisions on future requests in proposed programme budgets.

By decision 1986/179 of 23 July 1986, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

CPC action. CPC, which considered the Secretary-General's report in May 1986,⁽⁵⁾ felt that all relevant aspects of the hiring and use of consultant services had not been covered. Completion of a complementary report to the General Assembly, to include information on whether due regard had been paid to the importance of selecting consultants on as wide a geographical basis as possible, should be advanced so that the Economic and Social Council could be fully informed when it considered the question at its July session.

CPC agreed with the report's assessment and conclusions and suggested that, for a continued reduction of expenditure for consultant services, the proposed programme budget should adequately describe the tasks for which consultants were required and explain why they could not be performed by regular staff. It urged the Secretariat to ensure that no task that could be performed by regular staff was assigned to consultants and that the guideline on hiring only highly qualified consultants was strictly observed. While noting with approval efforts towards setting up a roster of consultants, CPC was of the view that there should not be a central roster but a separate one for each Secretariat department.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1986 submitted a further report⁽⁷⁾ analysing data on the use of consultants and participants in ad hoc expert groups during the 1984-1985 biennium. The statistical data, tabulated with corresponding data for the previous (1982-1983) biennium, covered total expenditures for both consultants and participants, their distribution by region of origin, the purposes and work periods for which consultant services were engaged and summary data on their contracts.

Expenditures for consultants (2,162 individuals and 67 institutions) under the regular budget and extrabudgetary funds totalled $13,169,000, representing a combined decrease of 17.5 per cent from the total for 1982-1983; those for participants in ad hoc expert groups (1,762 persons) totalled $3,738,700—$3,446,000 under the regular budget and $292,700 under extrabudgetary funds, or an increase of 16.2 per cent and a decrease of 11.1 per cent, respectively, compared with 1982-1983 figures.

Other conclusions were drawn from the statistical analysis in relation to the application of each of the six guidelines laid down by the Assembly in 1974.⁽⁸⁾ The highest proportions of consultant services contracted for were 40.4 per cent for special analytical studies, followed by 14.5 per cent for advisory services (against 56.4 per cent and 9.1 per cent in 1982-1983). The highest proportion of work period called for was 49.5 per cent for 1 month and under; the lowest was 1 per cent for 6 to 12 months (compared to 50.9 per cent and 5.3 per cent in 1982-1983).

The consultants' levels of education were given in an annex, regarding which the report stated that application of the guideline on academic background could be judged fully only on an individual basis. Another annex showed that nationals of 129 Member States were invited to participate in ad hoc expert groups, of which 100 were developing countries in Asia and Africa (compared with 125 and 95 in 1982-1983). The consultants selected were nationals of 113 Member States, 81 of which were developing countries in Asia and Africa (compared to 104 and 75 in 1982-1983). Consideration was being given to including the work performed, particularly special analytical studies, in the computerized data base of the Information Systems Unit of the Programme Planning and Co-ordination Office.

The report also presented data on former staff over 55 years old re-engaged in 1985, classified by age group and sex, number of work-months for which they were engaged and level of remuneration, as well as by work assignment of those in receipt of pension benefits who earned more than $12,000 as temporary staff or individual contractors without again becoming UNJSPF participants. The largest groups under the last classification were in language functions as editors, interpreters, proof-readers and translators. The report noted that, based on the importance of those functions in the Secretariat's work, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management had indicated to the Fifth Committee in 1982 that the $12,000 limit would not be applied to former staff so re-engaged. The report further noted that the Secretary-General continued to believe that he must be able to engage former staff members in language functions without any limitation as to their maximum remuneration in any calendar year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 41/209, section IV.

Chapter IV

Other administrative and management questions

In 1986, the General Assembly continued to adopt decisions to foster administrative efficiency with respect to conferences and meetings, conference-servicing, documentation, United Nations premises, information systems and postal matters. It authorized implementation of related measures proposed by the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations (Group of 18) and economy measures proposed by the Secretary-General to help alleviate the immediate cash shortfall facing the Organization.

In renewing the mandate of the 22-member Committee on Conferences for one year, the Assembly requested that it submit recommendations to broaden its terms of reference with a view to becoming a permanent intergovernmental body (resolution 41/177 B). Besides authorizing meetings requested by several subsidiary organs during its forty-first (1986) session (decision 41/403), it authorized modifications, proposed in the interests of economy, to the approved 1986 calendar of meetings (decision 40/472 A). It approved the revised 1987 calendar, similarly modified (resolution 41/177 A), and subsequently authorized further modifications to it (decision 41/466). By the last two decisions, it also authorized curtailment of meeting records for 1986 and 1987.

The Assembly requested the Committee on Conferences to secure further improvements in the utilization of conference-servicing resources and adopted guidelines governing planning missions for meetings and conferences held away from Headquarters to ensure that pre-conference planning resulted in maximum savings and efficiency (resolution 41/177 C). It extended for a further three years the curtailment of meeting records for subsidiary organs, with certain exceptions, and took action to limit other documentation (resolution 41/177 D).

Furthermore, the Assembly adopted a new regulation limiting the general liability risk of the United Nations resulting from acts or omissions occurring within the Headquarters district (resolution 41/210). It decided that additional requirements for conference services at Vienna should be reflected in the final performance report on the 1986-1987 programme budget (resolution 41/209, section VII), and approved the 1987 budget estimates for the International Computing Centre (resolution 41/209, section II). It also requested the Secretary-General to economize on operational expenses for the issue of special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa so as to increase net revenue (resolution 41/204 B).

Also in 1986, two studies, of the interpretation services and of the storage problem in the United Nations system with recommended solutions, were submitted to the Assembly by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU). Estimates to repair the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), damaged by a 1985 earthquake, were approved. Meanwhile, action continued to co-ordinate information systems and to follow up on the JIU recommendations on system-wide computer use.

Conferences and meetings

In 1986, the Committee on Conferences considered the pattern of meetings of specific organs. It examined a number of modifications to the approved 1986-1987 calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations⁽¹⁾ designed to achieve savings and thereby alleviate the current financial crisis of the Organization, in addition to considering requests for inter-sessional departures from the 1986 calendar. It reviewed the record on the utilization of conference-servicing resources and on the frequency of planning missions for meetings away from Headquarters. (For the Committee's consideration of matters relating to the control and limitation of documentation, see p. 1089.)

The Committee met in New York for an organizational meeting on 20 February and for a substantive session from 25 to 29 August.⁽²⁾ As it had done in 1985, it was able to reduce its session from the customary two weeks to one, owing to its having adopted a biennial approach to its work.⁽³⁾

In its report to the Assembly, the Committee submitted four draft resolutions and a draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1987. The texts served as the bases for Assembly resolutions 41/177 A-D (see below).

Mandate of the Committee on Conferences

In view of the expiration on 31 December 1986 of the term of office of its current members, the Committee on Conferences, at its August session, recommended a draft resolution by which the General Assembly would extend the Committee's mandate for a further three years, from 1 January 1987, and would request the appointment of 22 Member States to serve on the Committee for the same period.

In the mean time, the Group of 18, in an August report to the Assembly⁽⁴⁾ (see p. 1021), recommended that the Committee be strengthened and given broader responsibilities (recommendation 1). The measures suggested to bring this about called for ensuring the highest level of membership on the Committee and for entrusting it with monitoring implementation of Assembly recommendations on all organizational aspects of conferences, meetings and related documentation; monitoring publications policy; preparing the calendar of conferences and meetings in close co-operation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ); harmonizing the working procedures of all conference services; and planning and co-ordinating conferences and meetings, in particular by staggering them throughout the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1986, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/177 B.

Renewal of the mandate of the Committee on Conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3351(XXIX) of 18 December 1974, 32/72 of 9 December 1977, 35/10 A of 3 November 1980 and 38/32 B of 25 November 1983,

Considering the need for strengthening the Committee on Conferences in order to enable it to fully discharge its functions,

1. Decides to renew the mandate of the Committee on Conferences for a one-year period from 1 January 1987;

2. Requests the President of the General Assembly, after consultations with the chairmen of the regional groups, to appoint twenty-two Member States, on the basis of an equitable geographical balance, to serve on the Committee on Conferences for a one-year term beginning on 1 January 1987;

3. Requests the Committee on Conferences, taking into account the views expressed during the forty-first session of the General Assembly, to consider, as a matter of priority, at its organizational and substantive sessions in 1987, the possibility of changing its terms of reference and becoming a permanent intergovernmental body and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 41/177 B

5 December 1986

Meeting 99

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/933) without objection, 26 November (meeting 37); draft by Committee on Conferences [A/41/32 & Corr.1], as amended by Chairman [A/C.S/41/L10]; agenda item 115.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 4, 8-10, 37; plenary 99.

The text incorporated amendments made in the Fifth Committee to add the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 3; and to replace the words "for a further three years" by "a one-year period" in paragraph 1, and "a three-year term" by "a one-year term" in paragraph 2.

By resolution 41/213 of 19 December, the Assembly decided that the recommendations as agreed upon and as contained in the report of the Group of 18 should be implemented by the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations organs and bodies, in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee and subject to certain qualifications. The Committee, in its report⁽⁵⁾ on the Group's recommendations, had observed that the objective of recommendation 1 was to increase harmonization of the working procedures of conference services and to improve implementation of decisions by legislative organs on all organizational aspects of conferences, with full respect for the mandates of other such organs and the Secretariat's responsibilities, and in accordance with a 1985⁽¹⁾ Assembly resolution on the pattern of conferences. The "highest" level of membership referred to in the recommendation should be regarded in terms of expertise.

Calendar of meetings

The Committee on Conferences considered the question of the treatment of the calendar of conferences and meetings of the Economic and Social Council in the context of the pattern of meetings of the proposed Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see p. 716), a subsidiary organ of the Council. Following the Chairman's oral report on discussions held on the matter between the Secretariat and the Council, the Committee on Conferences took note of his statement that the Council would continue to take all necessary decisions on its calendar during its sessions, which would be reflected in the draft calendar submitted by the Committee to the General Assembly; and that inter-sessional departures from the approved calendar involving the Council's subsidiary organs should be considered by the Committee in accordance with its mandate and in consultation with Council officials.

The Committee also discussed the future pattern of meetings of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies based on a report by the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁾ drawing attention to a problem caused by the Board's need to discuss ACABQ's proposals on the proposed annual budget of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR). Owing to the timing of the budgetary process of UNIDIR, its budget could be examined by ACABQ only in early September, making the resultant proposals available for the Board's review in the second half of that month when the Assembly session was in progress and subsidiary organs were prohibited to meet at Headquarters, except by explicit authorization of the Assembly.⁽¹⁾ Thus the Board was always obliged to seek such authorization to meet at that time.

Following deliberations on the problem, the Committee took action on the Board's 1987 meeting (see p. 1085) and decided that any meeting in 1988 and thereafter would be subject to review in the light of the situation prevailing at the time.

Report of the Group of 18. The Group of 18⁽⁴⁾ observed that the number, frequency and duration of United Nations conferences and meetings had reached a level that posed difficulties for all Member States, particularly for those with limited personnel resources, to participate fully. Too often the resources allocated to conferences and meetings were not put to maximum use, and the volume of documentation had surpassed the limit of what could be studied and constructively used by Member States.

To correct the situation, the Group, in addition to calling for a strengthened Committee on Conferences with broader responsibilities (see p. 1083), recommended a significant reduction in the number of conferences and meetings and a shortening of their duration without negatively affecting the Organization's substantive work (recommendation 2). To that end, the Economic and Social Council should be invited to hold an annual session. The Assembly and the Council should ask their subsidiary bodies to review their agendas and meeting schedules with a view to moving towards biennialization. Those bodies should provide a more realistic assessment of their requirements for conference-servicing resources to minimize wastage; and organs found to have underutilized resource entitlements should reduce the duration of their sessions. The 1985 Assembly request⁽¹⁾ that no more than five special conferences take place in a given year should be strictly implemented.

The Group further recommended strict enforcement of the principle reaffirmed by the Assembly in 1985⁽¹⁾ that United Nations bodies meet at their respective established headquarters (recommendation 4).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 41/213, the General Assembly decided that the Group's recommendations as agreed upon should be implemented in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee. The Committee⁽⁷⁾ had stated that, in view of Article 72 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Assembly should invite the Economic and Social Council to consider holding an annual session as called for in recommendation 2. Implementation of recommendation 4 should be in line with the principle referred to, subject to the exceptions approved by the Assembly.

Calendar for 1986

In his April 1986 report on the current financial crisis of the United Nations⁽⁷⁾ (see p. 1018), the Secretary-General proposed—among other special measures to alleviate the immediate cash shortfall facing the Organization—specific changes to the approved calendar for 1986. These included curtailment of the General Assembly's forty-first (1986) regular session by three weeks, and the meetings of the Economic and Social Council and of the Trusteeship Council by one week, as well as the incorporation of the Assembly's 1986 special session on the question of Namibia with its regular session. Besides the proposed curtailment and merger of a number of other meetings, eight others were proposed for deferral to 1987 (see p. 1085).

No requests for additions to or changes in the approved 1986 calendar involving financial implications were submitted during the year.

However, the Committee informed the Assembly President, by letters of 2,⁽⁸⁾ 10⁽⁹⁾ and 24 September⁽¹⁰⁾ and 19 November,⁽¹¹⁾ of a number of requests from subsidiary organs to meet in New York during the Assembly session. The Committee recommended that the meetings be authorized, on the understanding that they would be accommodated as facilities and services became available so as not to impede Assembly activities. On 21 October,⁽¹²⁾ the Committee itself requested authorization to meet in order to discuss the technical aspects of the recommendations of the Group of 18 which bore directly on the Committee and the meetings programme (see above).

The meetings, including those requested in the second letter as endorsed by the General Committee in September,⁽¹³⁾ were authorized by Assembly decision 41/403 below.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/472 A of 9 May 1986, the General Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to proceed according to his proposals,⁽⁷⁾ with due regard to the following: the Assembly itself would consider the proposed curtailment of its 1986 session in the light of the financial situation prevailing at that time, and the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council would take decisions most appropriate to their work; the Assembly, after opening its 1986 session on Tuesday, 16 September, would adjourn until the following Monday so that the special session on Namibia would be held in that period, including Saturday.

Later, the Assembly, acting on the recommendations of the General Committee and the Committee on Conferences, adopted decision 41/403.

Meetings of subsidiary organs during the forty-first session

At its 3rd, 14th, 48th and 80th plenary meetings, on 20 and 29 September, 23 October and 21 November 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences and of the General Committee, decided that the following subsidiary organs should be authorized to hold meetings during the forty-first session:

- (a) Advisory Committee of the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;
- (b) Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;
- (c) Committee on Conferences;
- (d) Committee on Relations with the Host Country;
- (e) Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People;
- (f) Special Committee against Apartheid;
- (g) Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories;
- (h) United Nations Council for Namibia;
- (i) Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

General Assembly decision 41/403

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/41/2501 without vote, 16 September (meeting 1); proposals by Committee on Conferences (A/41/595 & Add.1-4); agenda item 8.

Calendar for 1987

A draft revised calendar of United Nations conferences and meetings for 1987, compiled as of 31 August 1986, was considered by the Committee on Conferences in August.⁽²⁾ The draft reflected a number of changes to the approved 1987 calendar⁽¹⁾ already made in the course of 1986, including those resulting from General Assembly decision 40/472 A, such as the deferral of meetings scheduled for 1986 to 1987, the voluntary curtailment by a number of organs of their meetings, and a reduction by the Economic and Social Council of the number of meetings for its first regular session to only 45.

The Committee agreed to indicate in the draft, by means of footnotes, the bodies whose meetings were deferred to 1987, as follows: for those whose mandates were due to expire in 1986, their 1987 sessions were to be subject to confirmation by the Assembly when it considered the relevant agenda item at its 1986 session; for the remainder, the Assembly might wish to consider the effect of the deferral on the agenda and length of the 1987 session of the body concerned. The entry on the Commission on Transnational Corporations was to be accompanied by a footnote to the effect that the Council, at its 1987 organizational session, would decide on the appropriate timing of the Commission's resumed session.

The Committee also recommended that the Assembly authorize the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, on an exceptional basis, to meet during the second half of September 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/177 A without vote.

Report of the Committee on Conferences

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Conferences;
2. Approves the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1987 as submitted by the Committee on Conferences;
3. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make adjustments in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1987 that may become necessary as a result of action and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;
4. Authorizes the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, on an exceptional basis, to meet during the second part of September 1987;
5. Invites the Committee on Conferences to review at its substantive session in 1987 the pattern of meetings of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies for 1988 and thereafter in the light of the prevailing situation.

General Assembly resolution 41/177 A

5 December 1986 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/933) without objection, 26 November (meeting 37); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/41/32 & Corr.1); agenda item 115. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 4, 8-10, 37; plenary 99.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a November 1986 report,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, to make the best use of resources during the Organization's financial crisis, alterations needed to be made in the timing, venue and possible duration of conferences and meetings listed in the revised 1987 draft calendar submitted by the Committee on Conferences to the Assembly, without, however, postponing any beyond 1987.

Following the Assembly's approval of the revised 1987 calendar, the Secretary-General in December proposed a number of modifications,⁽¹⁵⁾ as well as the scheduling of other meetings resulting from resolutions adopted by the Assembly during its 1986 regular session. The modifications were based on a Secretariat review of the calendar aimed at spreading meetings throughout 1987 more evenly, thereby optimizing the use of regular staff and minimizing the hiring of temporary assistance to service conferences and meetings. There were 13 modifications, including suggestions for the Assembly to endeavour to keep the duration of its forty-second (1987) session to 10 weeks, the Trusteeship Council to curtail its session by one week (1-5 June) and ACABQ to reduce its 1987 meetings as it had in 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In its report on the Secretary-General's proposed economy measures to alleviate the Organization's current financial crisis,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Fifth Committee noted, among other things, that the suggested curtailment of the General Assembly's 1987 session would be a matter for the Assembly to decide at that session, when it should have before it detailed information on the savings achieved as a result of adjustments made to its 1986 session. The proposal to curtail the Trusteeship Council's meetings should be addressed to the Council, in accordance with Article 90 of the Charter of the United Nations. The proposal to shorten the 1987 ACABQ meetings should take account of the ACABQ Chairman's statement⁽¹⁷⁾ to the Committee that its spring meetings could not be shortened due largely to the need to consider the proposed 1988-1989 programme budget and the proposed voluntary fund budgets for a number of agencies; and that, unless the Assembly's work programme itself changed, no alterations to its 1987 meetings could be foreseen.

Following consideration of the reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee, the Assembly President reaffirmed that the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer, needed flexibility in dealing with the financial crisis. He said he had received assurances that: the Secretary-General would endeavour to limit the impact of economy measures on the general level of programme delivery since, in principle, programmes, once approved, should be implemented; he would continue to examine alternative methods for making economies; and the proposed measures were short-term and emergency in nature.

By decision 41/466 of 11 December 1986, the Assembly, in the light of the President's statement which, it recognized, could modify some decisions previously taken, agreed that the Secretary-General might proceed along the lines of his proposals, taking the Fifth Committee's report into account.

Conference and meeting services

The Committee on Conferences⁽²⁾ continued in 1986 to consider ways to improve the use of conference-servicing resources. It noted a marked improvement, as shown by statistics gathered in 1985 and early 1986 in respect of United Nations organs meeting in New York, Geneva and Vienna, which indicated a reduction in the percentage of unused resources for a number of bodies between 1980 and 1985. While welcoming that development, the Committee recommended that it maintain contact with those bodies whose record remained unsatisfactory, with a view to seeking further improvements.

The Committee also reviewed the related question of the frequency of planning missions for meetings held away from Headquarters, especially those dispatched to cities where conference facilities already existed. A May report by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁸⁾ prepared in response to a 1985 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ listed the planning missions performed in 1985 and early 1986, with their composition, purpose, destination and cost, and explained why Secretariat units had accompanied the missions. It proposed supplementary guidelines to ensure that pre-conference planning resulted in maximum cost-effectiveness and efficiency. Based on its review, the Committee recommended a set of draft guidelines that were later approved and annexed to the resolution subsequently adopted by the Assembly (see below).

On 3 December, the Fifth Committee considered the Secretary-General's consolidated statement of programme budget implications of conference-servicing costs for the 1986-1987 programme budget in the light of the calendar of conferences and of Assembly decisions taken in the course of 1986,⁽¹⁹⁾ together with a related oral report by the ACABQ Chairman.⁽¹⁷⁾

The additional appropriation of $5,775,300 requested for 1987—$4,271,000 for Headquarters and $1,504,300 for Vienna—was examined by ACABQ, which took account of previous levels of estimated conference-servicing requirements, net appropriations requested and the corresponding ACABQ recommendations. It also took account of its findings on previous occasions that resources provided for travel and subsistence in respect of special meetings had not always been required in the amounts requested; and that changes in the duration or venue of meetings had led to reductions. In the circumstances, ACABQ recommended that the additional appropriation requested be reduced to $2,800,000—$2 million for Headquarters and $800,000 for Vienna.

By a recorded vote of 91 to 13, with 8 abstentions, the Fifth Committee approved the amount, which was later included in the increase of $21,939,900 for conference services approved by the Assembly on 11 December 1986 as part of the revised budget appropriations for the 1986-1987 biennium (resolution 41/211 A).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/177 C without vote.

Improved utilization of conference-servicing resources

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the improvement in the utilization of conference-servicing resources by a number of subsidiary organs over the past few years,

Aware of the continuing need to ensure the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources for the benefit of all who use them,

1. Invites the Committee on Conferences to maintain its communications with United Nations organs, especially those which still utilize inadequately the conference-servicing resources allocated to them, with a view to securing further improvements;

2. Adopts the guidelines for the dispatch of planning missions in respect of meetings and conferences held away from United Nations headquarters locations, as contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Takes note with gratitude of the offer of the Austrian Government to place at the disposal of the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, conference space at the newly constructed Austrian Conference Centre, free of charge, for meetings that cannot be accommodated within the conference facilities of the Vienna International Centre and recommends to the Committee on Conferences that it duly take into account this kind offer during the future planning of conferences and meetings for those organizations whose headquarters are at Vienna.

ANNEX

Guidelines for the dispatch of planning missions in respect of meetings and conferences held away from United Nations headquarters locations

1. The guidelines contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 37/14 B of 16 November 1982 shall be considered to apply not only to special conferences of the United Nations, but also to other meetings, conferences, seminars and symposia scheduled to take place away from United Nations conference locations.

2. As a general rule, no planning mission shall be dispatched to a venue where United Nations conference facilities are located; nor shall any planning mission normally be dispatched to a venue that has previously been the site of a meeting or conference comparable to that being planned.

3. Upon completion of its task, the planning mission shall report to the Conference Management Committee, which shall include in its report to the Committee on Conferences an analysis of the savings and improvements in efficiency achieved by the mission.

5 December 1986 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/933) without objection, 26 November (meeting 37); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/41/32 & Corr.1), as amended by Chairman (A/C.5/41/L.10); agenda item 115.

Interpreters

In September 1986, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report⁽²⁰⁾ analysing the interpretation services in the United Nations system and possibilities for the more efficient use of existing resources. It focused on: the nature and cost of those services, the supply of and demand for interpreters, the balance between the use of regular-staff and freelance interpreters, efforts at inter-organizational co-operation and the critical underlying issue of orderly conference calendars, and potentials for use of modern technologies.

The report noted that the number of regular-staff and freelance interpreters, which had grown from a handful in the late 1940s to roughly 170 in the mid-1960s, currently totalled some 640, providing year-round services system-wide at a cost of some $78 million per biennium. The supply for such increased demand alternated between shortage and over-supply, and the addition of new official languages and requirements for specific language combinations posed difficulties. Freelance interpreters, although scattered worldwide, were not necessarily available where they were needed. Also, the services of an interpreter averaged more than $300 a workday and those of a six-language team, $2,000 for a three-hour meeting. Thus, JIU felt that firm management control was needed for maximum cost-effective utilization of available resources and made recommendations accordingly.

JIU called for the regular inclusion in the agenda of the biennial Inter-agency Meeting on Language Arrangements, Documentation and Publications of an item under which problems of supply and demand, as well as trends, for interpretation and other language services would be considered (recommendation 1). The organizations using significant numbers of regular-staff interpreters—the United Nations, FAO, IAEA, UNESCO and UNIDO—should regularly present to an oversight committee summary data analysing actual staff interpreter work-loads and consider action to attract and utilize local freelance interpreters (who cost about $100 less a day and were paid only for days worked) (recommendation 2). Each organization should regularly provide the oversight committee with summary statistics on the proportion of late, cancelled and unscheduled meetings to identify problem areas and consider action for the improved utilization of conference resources (recommendation 3). The Secretary-General and the Assembly, in reviewing the Organization's current financial crisis, should consider measures to cut costs in addition to improving resource use (recommendation 4).

Finally, because the United Nations had the largest conference and interpretation programmes, the Secretary-General should (a) reassess the latest cost factors and technical developments in video-conferencing to determine whether it had become financially feasible to begin using remote conference interpretation servicing, (b) try to apply computer-assisted management processes, at least for the most time- and cost-consuming management functions currently performed manually by senior interpretation staff, (c) review the duties and status of staff interpreters at the lower grade levels at the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and (d) consider gradually increasing the number of passive languages (languages from which interpretation was done) required of interpreters so as to increase their versatility (recommendation 5).

Conference services at the Vienna International Centre

On 25 November 1986, the Fifth Committee had before it a report by the Secretary-General⁽²¹⁾ estimating that a total of $783,100 was required in addition to the $7,885,700 already appropriated under section 29B.5 (Conference and library services, Vienna) of the 1986-1987 programme budget. The additional amount, estimated on the basis of work-load statistics available for 1986 and actual 1986 expenditures, was needed to bring the United Nations budgeted resources in line with its actual conference-servicing requirements, in accordance with interim arrangements agreed upon in 1985⁽²²⁾ for a meetings-and-interpretation service jointly administered by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the United Nations at the Vienna International Centre.

ACABQ, in a related report⁽²³⁾ also before the Committee, said it was difficult to assess the effect of economy measures that might be imposed on activities at the Centre in 1987, such as shortening or cancelling meetings or conferences. Moreover, requirements for conference services there had to be seen in the context of overall appropriations for such services under section 29 of the programme budget. Therefore, it was ACABQ's opinion that the requested amount was not required and that any additional requirements were to be reflected in the final performance report on the 1986-1987 programme budget to be submitted to the Assembly in 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/209, section VII, without vote.

Conference services at Vienna

[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on conference services at Vienna and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides that the additional requirements in this respect, if any, should be reflected in the final performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

General Assembly resolution 41/209, section VII

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) without objection, 25 November [meeting 36]; oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 110.

Austrian Conference Centre

By a note verbale transmitted to the Committee on Conferences in January 1986,⁽²⁴⁾ Austria informed the Secretary-General that the new Austrian Conference Centre would become operational on 1 May 1987; it would place at the disposal of the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency and UNIDO the Centre's conference facilities free of charge for meetings that could not be accommodated at the Vienna International Centre. The offer, to supersede existing arrangements for the use of the Hofburg Congress Centre, included personnel for the technical operation of the facilities, as well as heating, electricity and normal cleaning.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 41/177 C, the General Assembly took note with gratitude of the Austrian Government's offer and recommended that the Committee on Conferences take account of it during the future planning of conferences and meetings for organizations headquartered at Vienna.

This provision⁽²⁵⁾ introduced by the Fifth Committee Chairman following informal consultations, had been incorporated as paragraph 3 to the draft resolution before its approval by the Committee. The paragraph had originally been proposed, and later withdrawn, by the USSR⁽²⁶⁾ as an amendment to the draft of resolution 41/177 A.

Documents and publications

Publications policy

At its April/May 1986 session⁽¹⁾ the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) had before it a 1985 JIU report on publications policy and practice in the United Nations system, together with the related comments of the Secretary-General, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and ACABQ⁽²⁾ CPC considered the report in connection with the question of recurrent publications (see below), without, however, taking action on it.

Documents limitation

Two categories of documentation—summary records and recurrent publications—continued to be reviewed in 1986 in efforts to keep their production within reasonable limits. The policies laid down by the General Assembly on the control and limitation of documentation were set forth by the Secretary-General in a note of 3 April,⁽³⁾ which took account of policy decisions adopted by the Assembly up to the end of 1985.

Activities of the Committee on Conferences. In keeping with the biennial approach to its work, the Committee on Conferences⁽⁴⁾ concentrated in 1986 on matters relating to the control and limitation of documentation. It continued to explore the feasibility of using abbreviated summary records and, as decided by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽⁵⁾ reviewed the question of the provision of summary records. It also touched on the reduction of the number and length of communications circulated as United Nations documents.

The Chairman orally reported that, of the 10 subsidiary bodies that replied to his request for comments on three sample abbreviated meeting records transmitted to them, all but one were in favour of retaining the summary records in their current form. Their main argument was that the proposed abbreviated form would not adequately reflect the views of speakers and that summary records were the basis for the future work of some organs. In view of such negative reaction, the Committee decided to recommend to the Assembly that it was neither possible nor desirable to institute an abbreviated form of summary record.

The Committee further took up the situation resulting from Assembly decision 40/472 A on the Secretary-General's proposals⁽⁶⁾ to alleviate the immediate cash shortfall facing the United Nations. Besides changes to the 1986 calendar of meetings (see p. 1084), those proposals included discontinuing in 1986 verbatim and summary records for all bodies entitled to receive them, except for verbatim records for the Assembly's plenary meetings and First Committee, the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council, the Military Staff Committee, the Conference on Disarmament, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (when hearing witnesses) and the Administrative Tribunal (when holding hearings); and summary records for the General Committee and other Main Committees of the Assembly, the International Law Commission, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee, the plenary meetings of the Trade and Development

Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

It was also proposed that the Assembly might request the treaty bodies (established under human rights conventions) serviced by the United Nations—the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Human Rights Committee—as well as the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to dispense with summary records, including records of meetings of the States parties to the conventions.

The Committee, which recalled that changes resulting from Assembly decision 40/472 A were short-term measures, made a series of recommendations concerning summary records. These called for: extending for a further three years the experimental arrangements established by the Assembly in 1982⁽⁷⁾ according to which no subsidiary organ of the Assembly should be entitled to summary records, with the exception of those bodies listed in the Assembly resolution below; discontinuing summary records for pledging conferences and meetings of ad hoc bodies establishing the announcement of voluntary contributions; a reconsideration of the need for summary records by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the UNICEF Executive Board, the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme and the UNDP Governing Council; and the possible dispensing of verbatim records by the Military Staff Committee. A reaffirmation of the 1983 Assembly recommendation⁽⁸⁾ that Member States communicate their positions with maximum brevity was also recommended.

The Committee decided to take up the matter of communications circulated as United Nations documents at a future session pending a detailed report on the subject by the Secretariat.

In addition, the Committee Chairman orally reported on implementation of the 32-page limit for reports of subsidiary organs, laid down by the Assembly in 1982.⁽⁹⁾ He stated that, in February 1986, he issued to organs whose 1985 reports had exceeded 32 pages a reminder of the need for maximum cost-efficiency, with suggestions for shortening reports without prejudicing their essential content; reports so far submitted in 1986 were shorter.

Report of the Group of 18. The Group of 18⁽¹⁰⁾ recommended that Member States should co-operate in significantly curtailing the practice of requesting the circulation of communications as official documents, which cost an estimated $2 million a biennium to process and distribute. It called in this connection for strict adherence to a relevant 1979(10) Assembly decision on documentation (recommendation 7).

(For General Assembly action on the Group's recommendations as a whole, see resolution 41/213.)

CPC action. At its April/May 1986 session,⁽¹⁾ CPC considered the 1985 report of the Secretary-General on recurrent publications of the United Nations.⁽¹¹⁾ It noted that references to the programme budget were given as justification for many of the publications cited, instead of the authorizing resolutions or decisions, that no recurrent publication had as yet been recommended for termination, and that readership surveys by author departments were under way in order to obtain end-user comments on the usefulness and quality of the publications.

CPC decided to ask the Secretary-General to request intergovernmental bodies authorizing recurrent publications to review those publications in the light of the criteria set forth by the Assembly in 1983(8) with a view to terminating those that did not meet the criteria or to reducing their volume and periodicity, as appropriate. To facilitate the reviews, the Secretary-General was to provide an updated report, to include information on the legislative mandate for each publication; the total print run, broken down into the number for official and departmental distribution, sales copies and stock; the results of readership surveys; annotations by the Secretary-General indicating which publications could be discontinued and why; and any other relevant information.

A report on the results of the reviews was to be submitted to CPC in 1987. It was to contain information on the recurrent publications recommended to be retained, discontinued or reduced in frequency and volume, and include justification given for retaining any publication that the Secretary-General had considered for discontinuance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1986, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 41/177 D without vote.

Control and limitation of documentation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2292(XXII) of 8 December 1967, 2538(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 3415(XXX) of 8 December 1975, 34/50 of 23 November 1979, 35/10 B of 3 November 1980, 36/117 of 10 December 1981, 37/14 C of 16 November 1982, 38/32 E of 25 November 1983 and 40/243, section III, of 18 December 1985,

1. Decides to extend for a further three years the experimental period established by resolution 37/14 C, during which no subsidiary organ of the General Assembly shall be entitled to summary records, with the exception of the following:

- (a) Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;
- (b) Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People;
- (c) International Law Commission;
- (d) Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;
- (e) Special Committee against Apartheid;
- (f) United Nations Commission on International Trade Law;
- (g) United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Invites governing bodies of United Nations organs and programmes, namely, the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund, the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, to reconsider their need for summary records;

3. Decides further that pledging conferences and meetings of ad hoc bodies established for the announcement of voluntary contributions by States shall no longer receive summary records;

4. Invites the Military Staff Committee to consider dispensing with verbatim records;

5. Reaffirms its recommendation to Member States and specialized agencies that, when preparing their replies to questionnaires or submissions of agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, they take into consideration the aim of achieving maximum brevity in setting out their positions;

6. Recalls paragraph 30 of section III of its decision 34/401 of 21 September, 25 October, 29 November and 12 December 1979, by which it called on Member States to refrain, to the extent possible, from requesting the circulation of any individual communications as documents of the General Assembly and in lieu thereof, where circulation of such documents is desired, to request, as far as possible, such circulation under the cover of a note verbale in the official languages in which they submit them;

7. Requests the Committee on Conferences to examine the matter of the number of communications from Member States that are circulated as United Nations documents and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 41/177 D

5 December 1986 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/933) without objection, 26 November (meeting 37); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/41/32 & Corr.1); agenda item 115. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 4, 8-10, 37; plenary 99.

Meeting records for 1987

The Secretary-General proposed⁽¹²⁾ that the economy measures adopted with respect to meeting records for 1986 (see p. 1089) should continue to apply in 1987, with minor adjustments: deletion of the Military Staff Committee from the bodies entitled to verbatim records; addition of the Credentials Committee and the plenary meetings of the Economic and Social Council among those entitled to summary records; and the exclusion of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board. He further proposed that, as in 1986, the treaty bodies supervising implementation of human rights instruments might again be asked to dispense with summary records in 1987. Transcriptions of archival recordings of formal meetings of intergovernmental bodies could be made as and when required and as funds became available for those entitled to meeting records.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Fifth Committee noted in its report⁽¹³⁾ that a number of bodies, besides those proposed by the Secretary-General, were to be provided summary records by decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. They were: the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean (Assembly resolution 41/177 D), as well as the treaty bodies (resolution 41/121) and the Commission on Human Rights (Council decision 1986/141).

The Fifth Committee also noted that the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples could be provided verbatim records on an as-available basis or transcriptions from sound recordings when work-load permitted.

By decision 41/466 of 11 December, the Assembly agreed that the Secretary-General might proceed along the lines of his proposals, taking the Committee's report into account.

In response to a CPC recommendation approved by the General Assembly in 1985,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Committee on Conferences⁽⁴⁾ in 1986 took up the question of the external printing and binding (done outside the United Nations) of Assembly and Security Council documents, in particular as it concerned the 1986-1987 printing programme.

The Committee had before it a report by the Secretary-General⁽¹⁵⁾ showing proposed estimated requirements for external printing for the 1986-1987 programme budget of $1,430,300 for the Assembly and $912,400 for the Council. These showed an increase from the previous biennium of $261,600 and $500,000, respectively, owing to the printing of Assembly verbatim records in all six official languages of the United Nations—Arabic (in respect of the Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council), Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish—and to an increase from 14,000 to 26,000 pages in the Security Council documentation as well as to the cost of issuing the Council's official records in Arabic. As later reduced by ACABQ and approved by the Assembly, the estimated requirements were $1,350,000 for the Assembly and $670,000 for the Council.

The report stated that the Publications Board subsequently undertook extensive consultations with the Office of Financial Services and with departments and offices having publications programmes, in an effort to reduce external printing expenditures in 1986 and thereby alleviate the current financial crisis. The resulting deferrals, reductions and alternate methods of production of certain items in the 1986 publications programme amounted to total anticipated savings of $36,170—and to projected savings of $1,376,055 in the global printing account. Budgetary and external typesetting plans for the 1987 publications programme remained as originally approved.

In taking note of the report, the Committee on Conferences expressed appreciation to the Department for International Economic and Social Affairs for its efforts to reduce expenditure for external typesetting.

Report of the Group of 18. The Group of 18⁽⁶⁾ recommended that the Department of Conference Services be rationalized to make it more efficient; current external printing arrangements were to be made more cost-effective and the publications programme streamlined so as to reduce the overall number of publications, improve their quality and maximize the sale of successful ones (recommendation 34).

(For General Assembly action on the Group's recommendations as a whole, see resolution 41/213.)

Mailing lists

At its April/May 1986 session⁽¹⁾ CPC took note of an oral report by the Secretary-General, made in response to a 1985 CPC request, on the question of mailing lists and registers maintained by the United Nations. It took particular note of his statement that written guidelines for the establishment and use of such lists, in existence for many years, had recently been updated and issued as an administrative instruction. CPC, however, felt the guidelines were inadequate, given the swift advances in technology and the potential threat to the rights of individuals whose names appeared in those lists through the collation, disclosure and transfer of information about them.

CPC therefore recommended that the Secretary-General draw up new guidelines to ensure a balance between the need to maintain such lists and registers and the rights of individuals. He was to study the desirability of having individuals give permission for their personal details to be held, establish safeguards against unauthorized access or disclosure and report on the matter in 1987.

UN premises

Report of the Group of 18. Among the recommendations made by the Group of 18(1) for implementation without delay was one to the effect that construction of United Nations conference facilities should be undertaken only when sufficient resources were available, bearing in mind the desirability of decentralizing United Nations activities wherever appropriate (recommendation 5).

In addition, the Group recommended that, concurrent with the reduction in the overall size of the Secretariat (see p. 1022), there should be a reduction in the requirements for rented premises and that optimum utilization of space should be pursued; Member States and other users occupying office space on United Nations premises should pay rent based on current commercial rates (recommendation 36).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 41/213 of 19 December, the General Assembly decided that the Group's recommendations should be implemented in the light of the findings of the Fifth Committee. Concerning recommendation 5, the Committee⁽²⁾ drew to the attention of the Assembly that it had approved two projects relating to the construction of United Nations conference facilities yet to be completed, noting in that regard the principle that programmes, once approved by the Assembly, should be implemented.

Headquarters

Insurance

Based on existing arrangements, the proposed requirements for general insurance coverage at United Nations Headquarters for 1987, under section 28K of the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987, had been estimated at $1,118,400: $455,000 for general liability, $591,400 for property and $72,000 for other insurance. ACABQ had requested that the estimates be considered at the General Assembly's 1986 session in the context of a report by the Secretary-General that would take account of actual developments in the insurance market in 1986, the latest rate projections for 1987 and the outcome of studies on alternatives to commercial insurance.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General, in an October 1986 report,⁽³⁾ revised the total estimate to $1,018,400 as a result of his proposals to introduce, with effect from 1 June 1987, a self-insurance scheme for general liability insurance estimated at $355,000 for the first year, to continue the existing commercial arrangements for property insurance and to renew the commercial coverage for other insurance at the original estimated costs of $591,400 and $72,000, respectively. A balance of $12,200 from the 1986 appropriation reduced the revised estimate to $1,006,200.

ACABQ(4) concurred with the Secretary-General's proposals, recommended approval of the revised estimate and recommended that his 1987 report to the Assembly on implementation of the self-insurance scheme should include up-to-date rate projections for 1988. On 12 November 1986, the Fifth Committee, by a recorded vote of 81 to 9, with 3 abstentions, approved the additional appropriation of $1,006,200. Kenya, explaining that it voted affirmatively despite the considerable increase in the costs of insurance, said it appreciated the Secretary-General's efforts in securing the most economic insurance coverage but called for continued exploration of cost reduction through the use of offshore companies.

In conjunction with the proposed self-insurance for general liability coverage and in keeping with a 1950 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁾ relating to the Headquarters Agreement between the United Nations and the United States (as host country), the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve a new draft regulation, as set out in the annex to his report, to limit the general liability risk at Headquarters. That recommendation was subsequently endorsed by ACABQ and the Fifth Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1986, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 41/210 without vote.

Limitation of damages in respect of acts occurring within the Headquarters district

The General Assembly

Adopts, within the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 481(V) of 12 December 1950, and for the purpose of placing reasonable limits on the amount of compensation or damages payable by the United Nations in respect of acts or omissions occurring within the Headquarters district, the following regulation:

1. In any tort action or in respect of any tort claim by any person against the United Nations or against any person, including a corporation, acting on behalf of the United Nations, to the extent that the United Nations may be required to indemnify such person, whether such person is a member of its staff, an expert or a contractor, arising out of any act or omission, whether accidental or otherwise, in the Headquarters district, no person shall be entitled to:

(a) Compensation or damages for economic loss, as defined herein, in excess of:

(i) The limits prescribed for death, injury or illness in the Rules Governing Compensation to Members of Commissions, Committees or Similar Bodies in the Event of Death, Injury or Illness Attributable to Service with the United Nations applied mutatis mutandis;

(ii) Reasonable amounts for damaged, destroyed or lost property;

(b) Compensation or damages in excess of $100,000 for any non-economic loss;

(c) Any punitive or moral damages.

2. As used in this regulation:

(a) "Economic loss" means the reasonable cost of repairing or replacing property, and, in respect of death, injury or illness, any reasonable past, present and estimated future:

(i) Health care expenses;

(ii) Rehabilitation expenses;

(iii) Loss of earnings;

(iv) Loss of financial support;

(v) Cost of homemaker services;

(vi) Transportation expenses;

(vii) Burial expenses;

(viii) Legal expenses;

(b) "Headquarters district" means the district by that name as defined in section 1 of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, of 26 June 1947.

General Assembly resolution 41/210

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/954) without vote, 25 November (meeting 36); draft contained in annex to Secretary-General's report (A/C.5/41/11), as orally revised; agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 24, 36; plenary 101.

The adopted text included oral revisions made by a representative of the Secretary-General in the Fifth Committee which inserted, in paragraph 1, the words "to the extent that the United Nations may be required to indemnify such person" and replaced the original wording of "whether as a member" with "whether such person is a member".

Storage

The problem of storage in the United Nations system for two categories of items—printed (documents, records) and non-printed stocks (office supplies, equipment, furniture)—was the subject of a JIU study(6) in 1986. Its purpose was to explore ways of resolving the increasing demand for storage space and mounting costs entailed by existing arrangements in terms of staffing, rentals, transportation to and from warehouses, and piecemeal operations dictated by the acute shortage of space.

The study found that, whereas non-printed stocks were maintained at a fairly constant level, ever-increasing stocks of printed matter posed a critical storage problem for some United Nations entities. The causative factors identified included the slow application of regulations to reduce documentation, the lack of guidelines to limit print runs and printed stocks, the lack of modern machinery and technology for mass storage and quick retrieval of documents, records processing in numerous units rather than in common registries, and storing in scattered areas (for example, in 35 different locations on 10 different floors of the United Nations Office at Geneva, and in two warehouses outside the Headquarters premises in New York).

The Office at Geneva, Headquarters and two specialized agencies, FAO and UNESCO, were found to be experiencing the most serious storage difficulties. Other specialized agencies—ICAO, IMO, ITU, WHO, WMO, WIPO and UNIDO—and UNICEF were also facing some difficulties. ILO, UPU and IAEA, as well as UNEP, had no current difficulties.

Based on investigations and a survey, JIU felt that limitation of documentation, relocation of space and even new construction, while necessary in some cases, did not completely solve the problem and that the best solution lay in introducing modern technology and machinery such as digital storage, in particular the optical-disc-based system. Such a system would make possible, among other things: a mass on-line storage and archiving system and linkage to it of a documents control system; the storage of publications and fragile archive documents; quick information retrieval, transmission and exchange; and production of information on different media. Potential future extensions included the eventual system-wide unification of terminology, facilitating the creation of common registries, filing and administrative services, electronic (paperless) publishing and computer-aided training.

It was proposed that the system be tested at Geneva. The costs involved in installing a minimum configuration (computer, disc drive, scanner, display unit, printer), an expanded configuration (computer, two disc drives, three scanners, four display units, four printers) and the same configuration plus a juke-box (a robotized device which could store and read up to 100 discs) were estimated at $200,000, $350,000 and $550,000, respectively.

JIU advanced a series of recommendations which included calling for the strict application of resolutions designed to limit documentation and the introduction of two-column printing with smaller print; strict regulations governing stock review and disposal of surplus mimeographed documents, records and publications; the creation of common registries and a central archive under the jurisdiction of trained archivists; the removal of stocks warehoused at Park Avenue and Long Island City in New York to the Headquarters garage; and immediate implementation of an already agreed-upon space re-allocation at Geneva to allow consolidation of storage areas.

Also called for were the introduction of compactus equipment, microform storage, computer-based systems and other applications of automation for storage purposes; authorization of the proposed project to test an optical-disc-based system at the Geneva Publications and Library Services, where storage facilities were most deplorable; and the acquisition, based on the results of the test project, of systems that could interface existing and future technologies.

In addition, it was recommended that, to finance the test project (acquisition, installation, maintenance and operating costs), a redeployment of resources within the approved 1986-1987 programme budget should be authorized; that, to remove the warehoused stocks to the Headquarters garage, an agreement should be concluded with the landlord of the Park Avenue warehouse—who had expressed interest in buying out his contract with the United Nations, due to expire in 1993, for about $2 million—to secure the buy-out money for the purpose; and that an appeal should be launched to Member States for advance contributions to the regular budget or voluntary contributions for the purpose of introducing the optical-disc-based system.

Drinking-water in conference rooms

By a letter of 28 November 1986,⁽⁷⁾ the Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee transmitted a draft decision to his counterpart in the Fifth Committee, by which the General Assembly would request the Secretary-General to reinstate with immediate effect, in accordance with past practice and within existing resources, the supply of drinking-water in all conference rooms.

The Fifth Committee⁽⁸⁾ forwarded the draft to the Assembly and informed it that should it adopt the draft, whose financial implications were estimated at $100,000, no additional appropriation would be required. The Assembly took no action on the draft.

Santiago

In October 1986, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁹⁾ that portions of the ECLAC headquarters at Santiago, Chile, had sustained serious damage due to an earthquake on 3 March 1985. These included three of the four hanging bridges connecting the main ring-shaped office floor to a three-storey service building within the ring, which were rendered unusable; and a portion of the west-side ground floor plaza, including some temporary offices in that location.

Based on studies conducted by teams of engineers, consultants and seismic analysts, the repair of the bridges and associated structures, calculated to take six months, was estimated at $130,000, in addition to an estimated $50,000 for the design and specifications, which would take four months to complete. The modifications for the rehabilitation of the ground floor plaza and conversion of the temporary office space into a permanent facility, also to take six months, were estimated at $230,000; the related drawings and specifications would take two months to complete.

ACABQ⁽¹⁰⁾ which received confirmation that all of the envisaged repair work would be completed before the end of 1987, recommended approval of the estimates, totalling $410,000, under section 32 of the 1986-1987 programme budget.

Information systems and computers

Co-ordination of information systems

In 1986, the work programme⁽¹⁾ of the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems (ACCIS), the ACC subsidiary body created in 1983,⁽²⁾ concentrated on three areas: development of information resources of the United Nations system, giving high priority to the establishment of a Register of Development Activities (see below) and to updating the 1985 Directory of United Nations Data Bases and Information Systems; development of tools for improving the information infrastructure, such as computer-mediated communication services, indexing vocabulary and a compendium of existing access policies to United Nations data bases; and basic co-ordination services including advisory services and publication of the ACCIS Newsletter.

The work programme, together with the 1988-1989 budget of ACCIS, was approved by ACC in October 1986. It had been approved earlier by the ACCIS steering committee by authority delegated to it by the Organizational Committee, acting on ACC's behalf, which also decided against a 1986 session for ACCIS, as an economy measure dictated by the current financial crisis of the Organization.

Register of development activities

Report of ACC. The status of the Register for Development Activities, a mechanism under development by ACCIS since 1984⁽³⁾ whereby information on development activities of the United Nations system was to be collected, stored, retrieved and disseminated, was the subject of a report⁽⁴⁾ approved by ACC for submission to CPC at its April/May 1986 session.

Prepared in response to a 1985 invitation of the Economic and Social Council to proceed with the Register's early implementation,⁽⁵⁾ the report stated that a prototype of the Register was demonstrated to an ACCIS technical panel in January 1986 and to its steering committee in February. The prototype, which covered a fairly representative sample of data, was intended to determine agency capacity to participate in the Register, the operating costs to agencies of providing data to it on an ongoing basis, and the usefulness of the actual technical design in satisfying the information needs of Member States, which were the users at the national level.

The precise modalities for funding the Register's operation remained to be determined. Consideration was being given to partial funding from the ACCIS budget through subsidies, with the major portion to be borne by participating organizations, individually or through contributions to a special fund. Locating the project in UNDP, which had the infrastructure and experience in operating similar information systems, was also considered. Input to the prototype as at 7 April was as follows: data submitted as requested by the panel—United Nations, UNDP, UNICEF, WFP, ILO and WHO; data submitted in printed form for conversion to machine-readable form—UNCHS and IMO; and data limited to UNDP-funded projects—FAO. ITU did not participate.

To assess the Register's utility to Member States, the panel was to discuss the presentation format of the prototype to demonstrate how data could be aggregated and analysed for a variety of purposes according to specific needs. Arrangements were under way to make such presentations at technical meetings attended by specialists from both developed and developing countries, considered the best forums for reaching users. In the mean time, an information packet describing the prototype was in preparation for submission to CPC.

The report stated that there was no indication that a data base similar or comparable to the proposed Register existed within the United Nations system.

CPC action. CPC⁽⁶⁾ took note of the report with a request that ACC submit to it a further progress report on the Register in 1987, to contain information on cost, funding, assessment of utility to Member States and agency participation, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1985.⁽⁵⁾ It recommended that ACC ensure comprehensive coverage of development activities in the Register and full participation in it.

Other activities. During 1986, the United Nations continued to operate several information systems concerned with special aspects of development. These included a comprehensive information system on transnational corporations (see p. 527), the Global Environmental Monitoring System, the Global Resource Information Data Base and the International Referral System for sources of environmental information (see p. 652).

Budget of the International Computing Centre

In September 1986,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee the 1987 budget estimates of the International Computing Centre at Geneva, as reviewed by the United Nations and 14 other participating organizations and programmes. The United Nations share of the total estimated amount of $6,922,200 was $1,497,500.

Recommending approval of the estimates, ACABQ⁽⁸⁾ stated that the United Nations share would be met from resources already appropriated in the 1986-1987 programme budget and that no additional requirement was expected even if the exchange rate between the Swiss franc and the United States dollar fluctuated.

On 11 December 1986, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly approved the estimates by resolution 41/209, section II.

Computer use

In July 1986,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General forwarded to the General Assembly the comments of five of the specialized agencies which had been surveyed by JIU for a 1985 report⁽¹⁰⁾ on management issues involved in the changing use of computers in the United Nations organizations at Geneva. The agencies were in general agreement with the recommendations and reported steps being taken or to be taken to implement them.

In October,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his own comments. He endorsed the view on the aims of the computer and information system activities of the United Nations and concurred with the finding that efforts to improve co-ordination and compatibility of information systems needed to be strengthened. Special efforts had been made to bring policy direction in computer development into sharper focus. A Technological Innovations Board had been set up to oversee and co-ordinate the introduction and utilization of office automation technology throughout the Secretariat. The impact of new technological developments in communications links between duty stations, enabling joint development of computer systems and interaction of diverse users with Headquarters, required adaptation of existing arrangements and practices in documentation and information systems to take full advantage of the benefits from the automation of conference servicing and availability of data bases to overseas offices and regional commissions. To assist in planning future developments in this rapidly changing field, special attention would be given to the effective use of emerging information processing, storage and retrieval technology, on which a report would be presented to CPC in 1987.

While concurring with the main thrust of recommendation 1, on each organization setting up a central planning and control mechanism, the Secretary-General noted that the complexities inherent in United Nations programme planning and control affected the overall development of information systems and that the Programme Planning and Budgeting Board was a major part of the overall co-ordinating, planning and review mechanism. Moreover, advances in computer systems coupled with newly established direct communications links had enabled the Management Services Division at Headquarters and the Management Systems Service at Geneva to address common problems related to existing and new computer-based systems. As to the reporting called for in recommendation 2, an evaluation of the electronic data processing programme at Headquarters would be presented to CPC in 1987, as would a comprehensive report on computer resources and requirements in the regional commissions.

The Secretary-General would determine the feasibility and utility of setting up an inter-agency computer working group proposed in recommendation 3 and would take account of the qualifications specified in recommendation 5 when recruiting staff for information management. The first part of recommendation 7, on the control of systems development, was closely related to recommendation 1 in that it dealt with the oversight of work programmes and their accomplishment; on the question of centralization versus decentralization of staffing between Headquarters and major United Nations duty stations, it was anticipated that the enhanced communications systems would engender close working relationships between Headquarters and the regional commissions and overseas offices similar to that existing between Geneva and Headquarters and permit joint computer systems development.

Finally, the Secretary-General said that the United Nations had initiated a study with the ITU Secretary-General on the question of the use of a common network by the United Nations and the specialized agencies referred to in recommendation 8.

UN Postal Administration

In 1986, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $12 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations; that from stamps used for postage from Headquarters was retained by the United States Postal Service under an agreement between the United Nations and the United States. Similarly, revenue from stamps used for postage from the United Nations Office at Geneva and from the Vienna International Centre was retained by the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively, in accordance with agreements between the Organization and Switzerland and Austria.

Six commemorative stamp issues, one definitive stamp and two souvenir cards were released during the year.

The first commemorative issue, on the theme "Africa in Crisis", was released on 31 January in denominations of 22 United States cents, 1.20 Swiss francs (SwF) and 8 Austrian schillings (S).

The second, commemorating the "United Nations Development Programme", was issued on 14 March in denominations of 22 cents, SwF 0.35 and S 4.50. A SwF 0.05 definitive stamp was issued on the same date.

"Philately—The International Hobby" was the subject of the third issue, released on 22 May in denominations of 22 and 44 cents, SwF 0.50 and 0.80, and S 3.50 and 6.50. A souvenir card accompanied the issue.

The fourth stamp issue, commemorating the "International Year of Peace", was put out on 20 June, in denominations of 22 and 33 cents, SwF 0.45 and 1.40, and S 5 and 6. A souvenir card was also issued.

The fifth issue was a group of 16 stamps in the commemorative "Flag Series"—the seventh group in that series—released on 19 September in denominations of 22 cents each.

The sixth and final commemorative, paying tribute to the "40th Anniversary of WFUNA" (World Federation of United Nations Associations), was issued on 14 November in miniature sheets of four stamps each in denominations of 22, 33, 39 and 44 cents; SwF 0.35, 0.45, 0.50 and 0.70; and S 4, 5, 6 and 7.

First-day covers for the various issues in 1986 were serviced in the numbers indicated below:

Africa in Crisis	260,743
United Nations Development Programme	627,223
Philately—The International Hobby	499,189
International Year of Peace	443,069
Flag Series	1,442,284
40th Anniversary of WFUNA	286,498
Definitive: SwF 0.05	58,908

Special postage stamps

In response to a 1985 request by the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1986 an interim financial report on the issue of special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa,⁽²⁾ as part of an overall analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations (see p. 1019).

The Secretary-General stated that, as planned, 3.8 million stamps on the crisis, in three denominations, were issued on 31 January in New York, Geneva and Vienna (see above). Gross sales had been estimated at approximately $1.2 million and net revenues, at approximately $600,000. Notwithstanding the extensive publicity campaign undertaken by UNPA in co-operation with the United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa, the sales results had been disappointing. As at 30 June, gross sales amounted to only $818,613. Operating expenses totalled $630,224, yielding a profit of $188,389. It appeared unlikely that the total net revenue on the issue would exceed $300,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly on 11 December 1986 adopted resolution 41/204 B.

Issue of special postage stamps

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 40/242 of 18 December 1985,

Recognizing that, pending a comprehensive settlement of the differences that have given rise to the financial emergency of the Organization, partial or interim steps could enhance the liquidity of the Organization and alleviate its financial difficulties to some extent,

Noting with satisfaction that the project on the issue of special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa is well under way,

1. Recalls that it decided, by its resolution 39/239 A of 18 December 1984, to place one half of the revenue earned therefrom at the disposal of the Secretary-General for the implementation of objectives as detailed in the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by the General Assembly on 3 December 1984, and to place the remaining half in a special account;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to economize on the operational expenses of the project on the issue of special postage stamps with a view to increasing the net revenue and to submit a financial report to the General Assembly at its forty-second

11 December 1986 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/41/949) without objection, 4 December (meeting 41); 15-nation draft (A/C.5/41/L.17); agenda item 112.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Portugal, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago. Meeting numbers. GA 41st session: 5th Committee 37, 38, 41; plenary 101.

PART TWO

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

Activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) were influenced by the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukrainian SSR on 26 April 1986, which underscored the international dimension of nuclear safety. The event gave the world its first real encounter with a severe nuclear power plant accident. Until then, nuclear power plants world-wide had, over three decades, accumulated some 4,000 reactor years of good safety and environmental records; the 1979 accident at Three Mile Island in the United States had involved no injuries or significant releases of radioactivity to the environment.

Within months of the Chernobyl accident, IAEA gathered almost 600 of the world's leading nuclear power experts for a post-accident review meeting (Vienna, 25-29 August). That forum enabled Soviet specialists to report on the problems at Chernobyl and gave the experts the opportunity to exchange views on future action.

In September, two international conventions, one on early notification of a nuclear accident and the second on assistance in the case of a nuclear accident or radiological emergency, which had been drafted by a 62-member governmental expert group (Vienna, 21 July-15 August), were adopted by the IAEA General Conference at a special session (Vienna, 24-26 September). The convention on early notification entered into force on 27 October 1986.

In addition to activities relating to the Chernobyl accident, IAEA continued to foster research and development in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and the exchange of scientific and technical information; established and administered safeguards to verify that nuclear materials intended for use in civil programmes were not used for military purposes; and established or adopted health and safety standards.

In 1986, at Vienna, the thirtieth session of the IAEA General Conference was held from 29 September to 3 October and the Board of Governors met six times: in February, May, June, September, October and December.

The membership of IAEA increased to 113 on 1 August 1986 when Zimbabwe joined the Agency.

Nuclear safety and radiation protection

At the invitation of the Government of the USSR, the IAEA Director General, accompanied by two senior experts in nuclear power and nuclear safety, held discussions in May 1986 with Soviet authorities on actions that might be taken within the framework of IAEA to gain experience from the Chernobyl accident and to facilitate consideration of the national and international nuclear safety measures required.

In immediate response to the accident, IAEA facilitated an international data exchange aimed at defining areas affected by radioactive releases, thus establishing informal contacts with radiation protection authorities in most European countries to obtain a more complete picture of the extent of the affected areas.

A data base was started in support of a global assessment of radiological consequences of the accident, to be carried out by the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation in 1987-1988. Initial assessments carried out by affected countries other than the USSR indicated that average doses in those countries during the first year after the accident were only a fraction of the average annual dose due to natural background radiation, with the most exposed groups incurring less than 10 times the average annual dose.

At its special session, the General Conference considered measures to strengthen international co-operation in nuclear safety and radiological protection. In addition to adopting the two conventions (see above), the Conference reached a significant consensus on certain basic policy questions: that nuclear power would continue to be an important source of energy for social and economic development; that each country was responsible for securing the highest level of safety in its nuclear energy activities; that there was scope for further international co-operation in nuclear safety; and that IAEA had the central role to play in encouraging and facilitating such co-operation.

In November, the Expert Working Group on International Co-operation in Nuclear Safety and Radiation Protection made recommendations for an expanded nuclear safety and radiation protection programme designed to strengthen international co-operation in improving nuclear power safety. In December, the Board of Governors approved the expanded programme for 1987.

With the increasing emphasis on operational safety at nuclear installations, IAEA operational safety review teams were invited to six nuclear power plants (in Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Mexico, the Netherlands, the Republic of Korea and Sweden). The missions covered management, personnel training and qualification, radiation protection, plant chemistry and emergency response capability. Technical observers from developing countries also took part in the missions so as to gain experience. The IAEA Incident Reporting System was expanded and strengthened and missions were sent to assess safety at 12 research reactors in eight countries.

The shift from the preparation to the implementation of Nuclear Safety Standards (NUSS) documents continued; the last of the NUSS guides was issued, member States were helped in interpreting NUSS documents in connection with licensing and work relating to severe accident management was accelerated. In the field of probabilistic safety assessment (PSA), IAEA continued to assist member States in using PSA techniques to analyse several nuclear accidents.

Work on the development of occupational radiation protection guidance continued, with increased emphasis on advisory missions to assess and upgrade the quality of protection at specific facilities in various member States. Support in radiation protection was provided for 78 technical co-operation projects and 25 missions. Radiation protection advisory teams visited 10 member States (Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Iceland, Kenya, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, Zaire, Zambia) to help define long-term goals for technical co-operation. Other missions were organized to Algeria, China, Iraq, Jordan, Malaysia, the Niger and Portugal. Further publications on the safe transport of radioactive materials were prepared and routine personal monitoring services were provided.

Nuclear power

The total installed nuclear power-generating capacity in the world increased by about 8.9 per cent during 1986, reaching 273.7 gigawatts (electrical) by the end of the year. At that time, there were 397 nuclear power plants in operation, accounting for more than 15 per cent of the world's electricity generation and representing an accumulated operating experience of more than 4,200 reactor years.

The Chernobyl accident produced an upsurge in public and political opposition to nuclear power in many countries, but did not cause the immediate cancellation of any programmes. During 1986, the only power reactor permanently shut down was the Chernobyl unit involved in the accident, 23 new plants came on line, and the construction of two reactors (in the United States) was cancelled and that of one (Philippines) suspended. There was no general upturn in the ordering of new nuclear plants or in construction starts. Regarding advanced nuclear systems, the highlight in 1986 was the grid connection of the Super Phénix fast breeder reactor in France. The main IAEA activities in 1986 were energy, electric system and nuclear power planning missions to developing member States; training courses focusing on energy and electricity demand analysis and on electric system planning; and the provision to developing member States of up-to-date tools and methodologies for electric system and nuclear power planning. A senior expert group was established in 1986 to study mechanisms to assist developing countries in promoting and financing their nuclear power programmes. Support was provided for 35 technical co-operation projects in infrastructure planning, where there was a shift away from general guidance towards specific assessments and the formulation of concrete plans for manpower development.

IAEA advisory teams visited Bangladesh, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey and Venezuela. The Agency received visits by members of national counterpart teams from Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, Turkey and Venezuela.

Several publications on nuclear power were developed, including an update of Nuclear Energy and Its Fuel Cycle: Prospects to 2025, in co-operation with the Nuclear Energy Agency (NEA) of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development; the 1986 edition of Nuclear Power: Status and Trends; and Energy, Electricity and Nuclear Power Estimates for the Period up to 2000.

At the end of 1986, the IAEA Power Reactor Information System contained data for about 3,100 years of power reactor operation and on about 20,700 outages. Data received in 1986 for the report on operating experience with power reactors in member States during 1985 showed a slight increase in nuclear power plant load and availability factors (the world-wide averages were 69.5 per cent and 70.8 per cent, respectively, in 1985, as against 68.7 per cent and 70.1 per cent in 1984). It was found that the power reactor performance records of the member States and utilities which, in the past, had demonstrated outstanding or steadily improving performances were generally better than before—confirmation of the conclusion that factors specific to the country in which a plant was located or to the organization operating it had the most important influence on plant performance.

Nuclear fuel cycle

IAEA continued to collect and disseminate, in co-operation with NEA, up-to-date information on world uranium resources and supply, on uranium exploration and production activities and on nuclear fuel cycle requirements and facilities. Technical assistance in uranium exploration and resource development continued to be provided to developing countries; 31 such projects in 25 countries were supported. Uranium production was running in 1986 at a level below reactor consumption, and exploration was at a low level. Existing and committed production was sufficient for requirements only up to the early 1990s, with consequent concern about long-term uranium supplies.

In the field of fuel performance, emphasis was placed on materials reliability under high burn-up, abnormal and accident conditions and on improvements in fuel utilization and fabrication. As regards the back end of the nuclear fuel cycle, the main emphasis was on technical, environmental, economic and safety aspects of transport and on the short- and long-term wet and dry storage of spent fuel.

Radioactive waste management

In response to the needs of developing countries, preparations were made for the start, in 1987, of a waste management advisory programme aimed at providing more comprehensive and better co-ordinated assistance. With many nuclear reactors reaching the end of their operating lifetimes, the IAEA programme on decommissioning and decontamination assumed greater importance.

Recommendations were issued relating to the mining and milling of uranium and thorium ores, to the management of wastes from nuclear power plants and to the dumping of wastes at sea. Tentative guidance on principles for exemption from regulatory control were issued, together with an interim progress report on an initial application of those principles.

Support was provided for 15 radioactive waste treatment and disposal technical co-operation projects in Algeria, Bangladesh, Chile, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and Turkey.

Food and agriculture

IAEA continued to assist member States in improving their agriculture and food production through the application of isotopes, ionizing radiation and related techniques. Research, technical co-operation projects and training courses continued in areas including soil fertility, irrigation and crop production, plant breeding and genetics, animal production and health, insect and pest control, agrochemicals and residues and food preservation.

Over 180 technical co-operation projects were carried out in 60 developing member States; there were also 13 regional and interregional projects. Research was co-ordinated through 43 programmes involving 450 research contracts and agreements.

Twenty-six countries participated in the work of the International Consultative Group on Food Irradiation. The Group focused on the promotion of international trade in irradiated foods, training, feasibility studies and public education. Guidelines on the use of irradiation as a quarantine measure and as a method for ensuring the hygienic quality of foods were prepared by the Group, as were marketing and public relations strategies.

Life sciences

In collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO) and other international organizations, IAEA continued to assist member States—particularly developing countries—in the application of nuclear techniques in medicine, biology and health-related environmental research. It also continued to promote greater responsibility and accuracy in radiation dosimetry for medical and industrial purposes.

Research co-ordination meetings evaluated the results of research programmes on early diagnosis of tropical parasitic diseases; nuclear procedures for diagnosis of thyroid disorders; imaging procedures for liver diseases; maintenance of nuclear instruments; techniques for the radiation-sterilization of tissue grafts for clinical use; and dietary intakes of trace elements measured by nuclear and other techniques.

Training provided by IAEA included a seminar for developing countries in Africa on the quality control of nuclear medicine imaging instruments (23-27 November) and an interregional training course on nuclear applications in parasitology (1 October-5 November), both held at Cairo, Egypt. An interregional training course on nuclear medicine (Moscow, 1 September-25 October) was followed by a study tour of several nuclear medicine centres in the USSR and the German Democratic Republic. Other courses dealt with nuclear techniques in health-related environmental research and monitoring (Lucas Heights, New South Wales, Australia, 28 April-30 May), uterine cancer brachytherapy (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 6-26 October) and the preparation and use of bulk reagents for radioimmunoassay of thyroid-related hormones (Bangkok, Thailand, 8-19 December).

The Scientific Committee of the network of Secondary Standard Dosimetry Laboratories (SSDL) held its first meeting in May and recommended that IAEA dosimetry measurement standards be calibrated at the International Bureau of Weights and Measures. The Committee also proposed a programme for improving the coherence and accuracy of SSDL reference instrumentation.

Some 120 radiotherapy departments, mainly in Asia and the Pacific and Latin America, participated in the cobalt-60 postal dose intercomparison service being conducted by IAEA and WHO; the improvements in dosimetry accuracy observed during the previous few years were found to have persisted. During the first year of operation of the international high-dose assurance service, 79 dose checks were performed for 26 radiation processing facilities in 17 member States.

As a result of an intercomparison exercise involving 72 institutes in 32 member States, a new biological reference material relating to the determination of minor and trace elements in human diets was certified and made available under IAEA's analytical quality control services programme. The Agency also published a technical report on nuclear-based techniques for the in vivo study of human body composition.

Physical sciences and laboratories

The Agency continued to promote exchange of information and to assist member States with the application of nuclear techniques in experimental physics, analytical and radiation chemistry, non-destructive testing, radiation processing, industrial process control, geology, mining and hydrology.

Co-ordinated research programmes and contracts covered modular nuclear instruments based on the Eurocard System (a system for the supply of circuits on cards which could be easily inserted into and removed from instruments); the use of nuclear techniques in the study of pollutant transfer in the environment; borehole logging and on-line analysis using X-ray fluorescence and neutron activation analysis; the development of new and improved isotope hydrology techniques; ground-water problems; geothermal resources exploration; and the dating of old ground-water.

Training was provided on the use of neutron generators; fusion; isotope hydrology techniques—with an IAEA/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization seminar for Asia and the Pacific held at Jakarta, Indonesia; and the use of isotope techniques in hydrology—with courses held in Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala and Morocco.

An advisory group of 21 experts from 12 European and North American countries, on the application of isotope techniques in studies of the hydrogeology of fractured and fissured rocks, emphasized the need for integrated studies and the importance of defining the problems before applying the techniques.

During 1986, IAEA fulfilled more than 600 requests from 40 member States for experimental and evaluated data, data processing computer codes and publications. It continued to publish the quarterly Bulletin on Atomic and Molecular Data for Fusion and the Computer Index of Neutron Data.

The IAEA Laboratory at Seibersdorf, Austria, continued to provide practical support to IAEA's agricultural, life sciences, physical sciences and safeguards programmes. It also promoted the transfer of advanced techniques to developing member States through co-ordinated research, assistance with technical co-operation projects and the training of young scientists and technicians. Following the Chernobyl accident, a programme on the monitoring of fall-out radioactivity in the environment and in food was initiated.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy), jointly operated by IAEA and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, continued to address physics problems of immediate practical relevance and of a more fundamental nature through colleges, workshops and other activities relating to physical processes and mathematical modelling. Of over 3,650 scientists who took part in the activities of the Centre in 1986, 60 per cent were from developing countries.

A new seat agreement entered into force in October between IAEA and Monaco, where the International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity was located. Work continued on the preparation of additional temporary laboratory facilities.

Technical assistance

During 1986, technical assistance in the form of expert services, equipments, fellowships and training courses involved 854 projects, of which 95 were completed and four were cancelled. A total of 937 fellows and visiting scientists underwent individual training and 972 participants attended 71 training courses.

Of the assistance delivered in 1986, the largest portion (21 per cent) related to the application of isotopes and radiation in agriculture. Other important fields were nuclear safety (17 per cent), reactor technology (16 per cent), industry and hydrology (13 per cent) and nuclear physics (10 per cent).

Total new resources for technical co-operation activities in 1986 increased by 9 per cent over the previous year, reaching $39.3 million. The IAEA Technical Assistance and Co-operation Fund, derived from voluntary contributions of member States and additional income, accounted for 70.8 per cent of total available resources, extrabudgetary funds for 14.5 per cent, the United Nations Development Programme for 8.9 per cent and assistance in kind for 5.8 per cent.

By region, the leading sectors were agriculture in Africa; industry and hydrology in Asia and the Pacific and in Latin America; nuclear engineering and technology in Europe; and nuclear safety in the Middle East. Most interregional assistance was in the field of nuclear safety, which ranked second after agriculture as the most important sector for the programme as a whole.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

In 1986, as in previous years, the secretariat, in carrying out the IAEA safeguards obligations, did not detect any anomaly which would indicate the diversion of a significant amount of safeguarded nuclear material—or the misuse of facilities, equipment or non-nuclear material subject to safeguards under certain agreements—for the manufacture of any nuclear weapon or explosive device, or for any other military purpose, or for purposes unknown. It was considered reasonable to conclude that nuclear material under IAEA safeguards in 1986 remained in peaceful nuclear activities or was otherwise adequately accounted for. Extensive safeguards activities in 1986 resulted in more than 2,050 inspections carried out at 595 nuclear installations in 53 non-nuclear-weapon States and four nuclear-weapon States.

At the end of 1986, there were 164 safeguards agreements in force with 96 States. A project agreement concluded with Thailand for the supply of nuclear fuel for a research reactor entered into force in September. A safeguards agreement was concluded with Albania covering all its nuclear material and facilities. Safeguards agreements pursuant to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons^{*} (NPT) were concluded with Belize, Brunei Darussalam, Equatorial Guinea and Tuvalu, but did not enter into force. In July, Portugal acceded to the 1973 safeguards agreement between the non-nuclear-weapon States of the European Community, the European Atomic Energy Community (EURATOM) and IAEA.

Negotiations commenced for the conclusion of a safeguards agreement pursuant to the offer by China to place some of its civilian nuclear installations under Agency safeguards. When that agreement entered into force, there would be safeguards agreements in force with all five nuclear-weapon States. Discussion of a trilateral safeguards agreement between Spain, EURATOM and IAEA was initiated.

During 1986, four non-nuclear-weapon States became party to NPT—Colombia, Malawi, Trinidad and Tobago and Yemen. The number of States party to the Treaty at the end of 1986 was 136, including three nuclear-weapon States.

Safeguards were applied in 41 non-nuclear-weapon States under agreements pursuant to NPT or to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), and in one non-nuclear-weapon State pursuant to the Tlatelolco Treaty. Thirty-nine safeguards agreements were in force with the following nine non-nuclear-weapon States not party to either NPT or the Tlatelolco Treaty: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, India, Israel, Pakistan, South Africa and Spain. Safeguards were applied in eight of them pursuant to those agreements. At the end of 1986, there were 485 nuclear facilities under safeguards or containing safeguarded nuclear material in non-nuclear-weapon States and 414 locations outside facilities containing small amounts of safeguarded material, in addition to two non-nuclear installations. There were nine facilities in nuclear-weapon States under IAEA safeguards pursuant either to voluntary-offer agreements or to safeguards transfer agreements.

In a resolution adopted on 3 October 1986, the IAEA General Conference again demanded that South Africa immediately submit all its nuclear installations and facilities to Agency safeguards. It asked member States to end all nuclear co-operation with South Africa, in particular to end any assistance concerning the nuclear fuel cycle and the transfer of technology and all purchases of uranium from South Africa; demanded that South Africa stop the plundering and illegal mining, utilization, exploitation and sale of Namibian uranium; and requested the IAEA Board of Governors to recommend the suspension of South Africa's membership in IAEA at the 1987 Conference session if, by that time, that country had not complied with the relevant Conference resolutions.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System, with 74 participating countries and 14 international organizations, had a bibliographic data base on nuclear literature to 1,056,900 records by the end of 1986.

The fifth edition of the World Survey of Activities in Controlled Fusion Research, which covered the activities of 275 research institutes in 39 member States and four international organizations, was published as a special supplement to Nuclear Fusion, and presented at the Eleventh International Conference on Plasma Physics and Controlled Nuclear Fusion Research, held at Kyoto, Japan.

Committee on Assurances of Supply

The Committee on Assurances of Supply held its eighteenth to twentieth sessions in January, April and November 1986. It continued to consider principles of international co-operation in the field of nuclear energy, and agreed that further consideration could be given to the matter at its next session, following the March/April 1987 United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy.

Secretariat

At the end of 1986, the IAEA secretariat had 1,994 staff members—746 in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 78 countries), 1,109 in the General Service category and 139 in the Maintenance and Operatives Service category.

Budget

The regular budget for 1987 was $145,913,000, of which $136,378,959 was to be financed from contributions made by member States on the basis of the 1987 scale of assessment, $4,894,000 from income from work for others and $4,640,041 from other miscellaneous income.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

In 1986, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued activities in its six major programme areas: promotion of policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; development of human resources; improvement of working and living conditions and environment; promotion of social security; strengthening of industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) co-operation; and the advancement of human rights in the social and labour fields. The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical co-operation activities, research and publishing.

The ILO membership remained at 150.

Meetings

The seventy-second session of the International Labour Conference, held at Geneva from 4 to 25 June 1986, was attended by some 1,800 delegates from 140 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the ILO Governing Body, the report of the Director-General, focusing on major issues ahead in the changing world of work, and the twenty-second special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference adopted an International Labour Convention and Recommendation on safety in the use of asbestos. It also adopted nine resolutions, including one concerning development, foreign debt and the social objectives of ILO, and another concerning workers' access to education and the role of ILO.

A tripartite Conference committee again examined the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by member States, and reviewed in particular the application of ILO standards on equal remuneration.

The Twelfth Conference of American States Members of ILO (Montreal, Canada, 18-26 March), attended by tripartite delegations from 30 countries, reviewed regional developments in the field of labour over the preceding seven years and discussed labour relations and development, including rural development, taking into account the problems of indigenous populations, the drift of the rural population to cities and its integration in the urban informal sector.

The Preparatory Technical Maritime Conference (Geneva, 5-16 May)—attended by representatives of Governments and shipowners' and seafarers' organizations from 39 countries—discussed seafarers' welfare at sea and in port, social security, health protection and medical care, repatriation, and a mechanism for updating the ILO Convention on minimum standards in merchant shipping. The Conference adopted proposed conclusions for final discussion at the seventy-fourth (maritime) session of the ILO Conference in 1987.

Two industrial committees met during the year. The tenth session of the Petroleum Committee (Geneva, 9-17 April) adopted conclusions on occupational safety and health, and on manpower planning and development. The eleventh session of the Iron and Steel Committee (Geneva, 3-11 December) adopted conclusions on policies for maintaining social development through collective bargaining, legislation and adequate social security protection to cope with structural change, and on productivity improvement and its effect on the level of employment and working conditions in the industry.

Working environment

Activities carried out under the International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment continued to follow the orientation provided by the 1984 ILO Conference resolution, encompassing occupational safety and health, general conditions of work and work-related welfare facilities. Emphasis was placed on tripartite activities and co-operation with employers' and workers' organizations.

During the year, tripartite subregional seminars on the improvement of working conditions and environment were held in Angola, Fiji and Trinidad and Tobago. National seminars on the same theme took place in Côte d'Ivoire and Venezuela. Two regional seminars for Asia and the Pacific, on safety and health in construction and on practical measures to combat child labour, were held at Bangkok, Thailand.

Support was extended, mainly in the field of occupational safety and health, to employers' and workers' organizations in Argentina, China, Malaysia, Pakistan, Thailand and Uruguay. In Latin America, a seminar on construction safety for employers' organizations was held in Argentina and a round table on the welfare facilities and services provided by trade unions was held in Venezuela. In addition, an interregional seminar on work-related welfare facilities for trade unionists from English-speaking African and Asian countries was held in the USSR, in co-operation with the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions of the USSR.

Two meetings of experts were held to finalize ILO codes of practice, one for the protection of workers against ionizing radiation (Geneva, 16-23 September), and the other on safety, health and working conditions in the transfer of technology to developing countries (Geneva, 30 September-7 October).

Training activities included an Asian regional seminar on safety in coal mines, held in India, and a technical workshop on occupational health and safety for French-speaking Africans, held in Senegal. National training programmes on safety and health subjects were organized in China, Greece, Indonesia, Pakistan, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania. Technical co-operation projects completed in 1986 included assistance to national institutions in Greece, Indonesia, Poland and Thailand. Other projects were in progress in Brazil, India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan, Singapore, Thailand, Turkey and Zimbabwe. Technical advisory missions visited Colombia, India, Mauritius, Nigeria and Pakistan.

Collaboration was maintained with the World Health Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Atomic Energy Agency. ILO continued to play an active role in the International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS) and hosted the 1986 meeting of the IPCS Programme Advisory Committee in Geneva.

The International Occupational Safety and Health Information Centre (CIS) continued to enlarge its data base in English and French, to publish CIS Abstracts and to maintain computer-searchable files.

Publications concerning the working environment included The Cost of Occupational Accidents and Diseases, Protection of Workers against Radio-frequency and Microwave Radiation and a new edition of Conditions of Work and Quality of Working Life: A Directory of Institutions. French and Spanish versions were issued of Introduction to Working Conditions and Environment. Child labour was the subject of two complementary publications: Child Labour: A Briefing Manual and Annotated Bibliography on Child Labour. Two issues of Conditions of Work: A Cumulative Digest were also published.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme (WEP), through action-oriented research, technical advisory services and other field activities, addressed the employment and development problems of underprivileged groups such as the rural poor and workers of the rapidly growing urban informal sector. Guided by the Declaration of Principles and Programme of Action adopted at the 1976 World Employment Conference, WEP continued to account for approximately one third of ILO's total technical co-operation activities, mainly in special public works programmes, manpower and employment planning, labour market information, appropriate technology, rural development, women workers, refugees and population. Advisory missions at country and regional levels remained important programme elements. Regional employment teams continued to carry out much of WEP's activities, providing advisory services and training courses to a large number of countries.

In response to the economic crises and the increase in open unemployment of the 1980s, WEP devoted a major part of its policy analysis and advice to achieving greater equity in structural adjustment programmes. Employment and poverty monitoring, direct employment creation and income generation for vulnerable groups, linkages between macro- and micro-economic interventions, technological change and labour market problems were among the areas covered. At the end of 1986 total technical co-operation projects executed by WEP exceeded $30 million.

Field activities

In 1986, ILO spent over $106 million on technical co-operation activities (an increase of about 17 per cent over 1985) to promote employment, develop human resources and social institutions, and improve living and working conditions.

Most of this expenditure ($47.2 million) continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The ILO regular programme provided $10.6 million, while expenditure funded from multi-bilateral arrangements and other special programmes increased to $41.9 million. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) accounted for $6.6 million.

A breakdown of expenditure on technical co-operation by activity and source of funds, and by country, territory, region or organization, is shown in the tables below.

Educational activities

In 1986, vocational training remained the largest single component of the ILO technical co-operation programme. Approximately 65 projects in urban areas and 35 in rural areas were operational during the year. Major vocational training projects were concluded in Algeria, Cape Verde and Nigeria. New projects included those started in China, India, Mozambique, Nepal and Trinidad and Tobago.

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced labour and social studies, held its twenty-first international internship course on active labour policy development from 15 April to 4 June. Attended by 27 participants from 15 countries in Latin America and Europe, the course dealt with social policy issues, including international labour standards, industrial relations, and environment and labour policy.

The Institute initiated two new programmes in 1986. The first, on new industrial organization, was to identify emergent forms of industrial organization that would reconcile economic aims, such as efficiency and innovative capacity, with social goals—wages, employment and occupational advancement. The second programme, on the labour market, concentrated on improving understanding of how labour market structures in developing countries affect access to jobs and incomes.

Three numbers of the Institute's journal Labour and Society (in English and French) were published.

In 1986, the ILO International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, conducted 71 courses and seminars attended by 1,525 participants from 142 countries and administered, executed and monitored 650 individual fellowships. New management training programmes covered management and organization development for municipal councils; improving the performance of manufacturing enterprises; and the conservation, marketing and transport of agricultural products. Management courses and seminars represented 24 per cent of the Centre's total activity during the year. Other programmes responded to training needs in more traditional sectors, such as small business development, management of training institutions and co-operative development.

Tripartism was promoted through a high-level workshop—organized jointly with ILO's Industrial Relations and Labour Administration Department—on labour management co-operation for training and retraining in the context of new technologies. The workshop, attended by participants from developed and developing countries, was financed by the United States Department of Labor.

Group training courses and seminars took place in Burma, Colombia, Egypt, Fiji, Senegal and Sri Lanka.

Publications

Published ILO research covered a wide range of topical social and labour questions. New volumes issued in 1986 included: Adjustment and Economic Performance in Industrialized Countries: A Synthesis; Annotated Bibliography on Working Time; The Cost of Occupational Accidents and Diseases; Economically Active Population Estimates and Projections: 1950-2025 (third edition); Employers and the Environmental Challenge; Ethanol, Employment and Development: Lessons from Brazil; Improve Your Business (handbook and workbook); International Trade, Employment and Structural Adjustment: The United States; Job Evaluation; Labour Inspection: A Workers' Education Manual; Management Consulting: A Guide to the Profession (second revised edition); The Manager's Guide to International Labour Standards; New Cargo-Handling Techniques: Implications for Port Employment and Skills; Psycho-social Factors at Work: Recognition and Control; Social and Economic Effects of Petroleum Development

Programmes in Non-OPEC Developing Countries: Synthesis Report; Structural Adjustment in Japan, 1970-82; Trade, Employment and Industrialisation in Singapore; Unemployment and Labour Market Flexibility: The United Kingdom; Workers' Participation: A Voice in Decisions, 1981-85.

The forty-sixth (1986) issue of the Year Book of Labour Statistics was also published. Regular periodicals and technical series included the bimonthly International Labour Review, the quarterly Social and Labour Bulletin and the biannual Legislative Series.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 2,835. Of these, 1,321 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,514 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories.

Of the Professional staff, 544 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

The International Labour Conference in June 1986 decided to allocate, as an exceptional measure, $26.7 million from the 1984-1985 cash surplus to Part IV (effects of exchange rate adjustments) of the 1986-1987 budget of $253.1 million.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The 49-member Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the organization's governing body between biennial meetings of the FAO Conference, held its ninetieth session at Rome, Italy, from 17 to 28 November 1986. The Council, noting the dramatic increase in grasshopper and locust activity in many parts of Africa and the threat that these pests posed to crops and to the goal of food self-sufficiency, urged that national and regional control facilities be strengthened to counter that threat and called on the FAO Director-General to initiate, in consultation with Governments and international organizations, long-term arrangements for migratory pest control and plant protection.

In addition, the Council noted with concern the environmental consequences of the April 1986 nuclear accident that occurred at Chernobyl, Ukrainian SSR, and urged that internationally agreed standards be set regarding the radio-nuclide contamination of food.

During 1986, FAO held five regional conferences to enable member nations to assess problems specific to their regions and to identify priorities for the next biennium. The conferences also promoted co-operation among countries and reviewed FAO's performance within each region.

At the Conference for the Near East (Istanbul, Turkey, 17-21 March), representatives of 26 Governments called for closer collaboration with FAO in programmes to increase cereals production, improve planning skills and integrate rural women into agricultural and rural development. The Conference stressed the need for better food security in the region and recommended training in all aspects of seed production.

At the Conference for Europe (Istanbul, 28 April-2 May), representatives of 28 Governments of the region and two observers—Canada and the United States—discussed ways of adjusting production and farm commodity prices; increasing developing country exports to Europe, as well as complementarity in the exchange of commodities between Europe and the third world; transboundary air pollution; the role of crop protection policies in relation to food safety and environmental control; and the development of aquaculture in Europe.

At the Conference for Asia and the Pacific (Rome, 8-17 July), representatives of 29 Governments discussed increased assistance in food security; measures to increase the supply of credit to small farmers; promotion of labour-saving technologies for farm operations normally carried out by women; and increased support for aquaculture development. The Conference concluded that while the region had made progress in food and agricultural development, some 300 million people remained undernourished, mainly because of poverty.

At the Conference for Latin America and the Caribbean (Bridgetown, Barbados, 5-13 August), representatives of 30 Governments discussed the role of rural women, assistance to small farmers, problems affecting small island States of the Caribbean, aquaculture and livestock development. The Conference requested FAO to conduct a study of the potential and long-term prospects for agricultural development and to propose a plan of action to seek solutions for the region's economic crisis and persistent poverty in rural areas.

At the Conference for Africa (Yamoussoukro, Cote d'Ivoire, 2-11 September), representatives of 49 countries endorsed a Programme of Action for African Agriculture, a strategy prepared by FAO to eliminate the threat of famine from Africa's future. Based on a 1986 FAO study, "African agriculture: the next 25 years", the Programme called for measures to stimulate economic recovery and reverse the decline in food and agricultural production. The Conference asked for FAO assistance in developing irrigation systems and traditional food crops and in combating locust and grasshopper outbreaks. Other priorities identified were early implementation of a rinderpest campaign, biogas development in rural areas, continuation of FAO's Agricultural Rehabilitation Programme for Africa and expansion of technical co-operation among African countries.

During 1986, FAO membership remained unchanged at 158 countries.

World food and agricultural situation

In 1986, global food production increased by 2 per cent over 1985, with cereal production rising to an estimated 1,860 million metric tons (tonnes). In the developing countries, food production increased by 2.9 per cent, with significant gains of 2.6 per cent in Africa and 5.2 per cent in the Near East. In Eastern Europe and the USSR, food production increased by 6 per cent but declined by 0.8 per cent in the developed market economies.

Global agricultural output in 1986 fell by 8 per cent, the biggest decline since 1970. Huge losses—involving mainly the production of coffee (due, in part, to a drought in Brazil), cotton and tobacco—were registered in Latin America (nearly 17 per cent) and in North America (23 per cent).

As food production increased in developing countries, per capita food supplies and food security improved in most regions of the third world. However, exceptional food shortages continued in several countries, including Ethiopia, Mozambique and the Sudan. In addition, a number of countries reduced their domestic food subsidies in response to the requirement to make structural adjustments to ease the problem of paying off their long-term debts. As a result, basic food needs were not met in many third world countries.

As agricultural production fell, world trade in agriculture deteriorated, in particular for developing countries whose earnings depended on the sale of agricultural commodities, the prices of which reached new lows. Production increases in many countries added to already large surpluses, and intense competition for export markets led to increased export subsidies and intensified import restrictions. Trade volume remained practically the same but agricultural terms of trade declined sharply. Most agricultural exporters not only earned less than in 1985, but were also able to buy much less with what they earned. In an effort to improve world agricultural trading, in August, at Cairns, Australia, 14 countries—Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Fiji, Hungary, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and Uruguay—issued the Cairns Declaration, in which they committed themselves to fight for the abolition of farm export subsidies. In September, the eighth round of trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, known as the Uruguay Round, sought to liberalize agricultural trade by reducing import barriers and encouraging discipline in applying subsidies to agriculture.

Activities in 1986

Rehabilitation and relief operations. In 1986, FAO led efforts to save Africa's cereal crops from devastation by the most widespread grasshopper and locust plagues in 50 years. In August, FAO set up, at its Rome headquarters, the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations to direct a $50 million campaign which included spraying missions and training of local personnel. FAO monitored outbreaks, alerted donor countries to the threat and coordinated the campaign, which covered the entire continent and helped save more than 90 per cent of crops in the Sahel alone.

Through its Agricultural Rehabilitation Programme for Africa, FAO helped to channel some $175 million into 25 countries to supply farmers with seed and fertilizers, repair irrigation systems and rebuild cattle herds. By late 1986, some 250 projects or sub-projects had been financed—including 114 directly funded and implemented by FAO, and 85 executed by donor countries, African Governments, other United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations. Some 90 projects had been successfully completed.

The FAO Office for Special Relief Operations—which responded to requests for emergency assistance in restoring agricultural production damaged by natural disasters, crop pests or livestock diseases—carried out 57 such operations in 1986, including one to help rebuild fishing communities in Viet Nam destroyed by typhoons in 1985.

Field programmes. The majority of field projects continued to be directed towards improving crop production. Other activities focused on rural development, natural resources, livestock, forestry, fisheries, policy analysis, research support and nutrition. In 1986, 1,620 field projects were under way representing an expenditure of $280 million funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other aid programmes, including various trust fund arrangements with both donor and recipient countries. In addition, 886 projects were carried out under the technical co-operation programme, financed from FAO's own budget, for a total of $35.1 million. In all, $315 million was committed to FAO's field programmes during the year. International financing institutions approved 40 projects for a total cost of $3 million, of which $1.7 million was in external loans. FAO's Investment Centre was involved in preparing 149 projects in 68 countries and mounted 207 missions during the year.

The regional distribution of field projects in 1986 was 1,041 in Africa, 614 in Asia and the Pacific, 354 in the Near East, 307 in Latin America, 75 in Europe and 115 on an interregional or global scale.

Environment. In 1986, FAO's Committee on Forestry approved the Tropical Forestry Action Plan (TFAP)—elaborated in consultation with the World Bank, UNDP and the World Resources Institute—which provided a framework for international action aimed at halting the destruction of the world's tropical forests. As central TFP coordinator, FAO promoted national and regional forestry strategies and plans and took part in several activities, among them: a forestry mission to Kenya organized by the World Bank; a multidonor team visit to Cameroon, organized with UNDP; and missions to Bolivia, Côte d'Ivoire, the Dominican Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Panama, Peru and Somalia. FAO provided direct assistance to Costa Rica, Honduras and Malaysia in preparing forestry plans. It also received requests from Mexico and Venezuela to review national plans and from the Latin American Forestry Commission to organize a regional round table on TFAP.

A study on the state of the watersheds in Asia and the Pacific—published in 1986—comprising information collected in 18 countries and covering an area where almost 50 per cent of the world's population lives, led to a proposed $13 million three-year project to help develop and launch a Regional Co-operative Action Programme to remedy accelerated degradation due mainly to lack of socio-economic development. Efforts to halt desertification in the Sahel continued, with one project in the Niger planting more than 1 million trees on degraded farmland.

FAO increased its support for development of alternative energy systems suitable for small-scale rural operations. Among many energy projects, FAO experts assisted in the development of rice-husk gasifiers, solar driers and wind-driven pumps and helped to implement a biogas development programme in Madagascar.

Also during the year, the United Nations Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution endorsed a report containing a set of guidelines elaborated by a working group led by FAO to assess the impact of sewage, detergents, mercury, arsenic pesticides and chlorine dumped into the oceans. The report described parameters and processes relevant to assessing the effect of waste-disposal pollutants on marine organisms, ecosystems and human health. The new guidelines were sent to Governments.

Radioactive contamination. Following the nuclear accident at Chernobyl, FAO, in association with the International Atomic Energy Agency, organized a panel of food and radiation experts from eight countries which drew up interim recommended radiation levels below which trade in food need not be interrupted. They proposed the adoption of International Radio-nuclide Action Levels for Foods, based on safety standards recommended by the World Health Organization and the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

Crops. Wheat production increased most among cereals (3.8 per cent) with gains in both developed and developing countries. Pulses rose by 7.5 per cent and meat and milk production in developing countries increased by 3.3 per cent and 2.7 per cent, respectively. Global stocks of cereal increased in 1986 by about 80 million tonnes, reaching a new record level of some 400 million tonnes, which represented 24 per cent of world annual consumption—a level well above the 18 per cent considered by FAO to be sufficient to maintain world food security.

Following preliminary studies in eastern and southern Africa, FAO expanded its activities on traditional crops—staples important in maintaining village-level food security—to the rest of Africa and to Latin America and the Caribbean. Activities ranged from training sessions for extension staff to pilot projects for peasant farmers; many activities directly involved rural women, who were usually responsible for growing traditional staples.

As part of the activities related to the International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides—drawn up by FAO and endorsed in 1985 by its members—FAO began surveying existing regulations, training plant protection personnel and developing a series of "agrochemical pictograms", in collaboration with the International Group of National Associations of Agrochemical Manufacturers, for warning labelling of pesticides destined for illiterate users.

FAO's Fertilizer Programme marked its twenty-fifth year in 1986 with operations in 25 developing countries. During the year, it assisted in 3,500 field trials to test various doses and combinations of fertilizers; it also assisted in more than 12,000 field demonstrations, where recommended fertilizers and other modern farming techniques were applied to small plots.

Fisheries. For the ninth consecutive year, fish production increased, to more than 85 million tonnes in 1986. Aquaculture (fish farming) provided an increased share of total fish production and augmented food supplies in many Asian countries. In Africa, partly because drought continued to affect inland fisheries, fish production remained stagnant.

The five-point strategy approved by the 1984 World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development^a provided guidelines for FAO's activities. Expanded support was given to aquaculture projects, including a regional scheme for the South Pacific island States. Nine FAO regional fisheries bodies covered geographically 50 per cent of total waters, and 20 non-FAO bodies, mostly based in developed countries, were responsible mainly for marine waters.

Hauls of tuna and tuna-like species from the Indian Ocean rose from 275,000 tonnes in 1980 to an estimated 500,000 tonnes in 1986, owing to an influx of long-distance fleets. Concerned about the possible depletion of tuna stocks and the effects of commercial fishing on artisanal fishing communities in the region, FAO helped to reactivate the Committee for the Management of Indian Ocean Tuna, a subsidiary of the Indian Ocean Fishery Commission. FAO informed the Committee's 33 member nations about trends in world tuna production and trade, and assisted in studying the Ocean's principal tuna species and fishing areas. It also provided legal advice to nations of the region and helped to train fisheries ad-

Fishermen and fishing communities were featured as the main theme of World Food Day (16 October) to increase awareness of their contribution to food and nutrition, and mobilize efforts to improve their productivity and living conditions.

Legal advice. FAO's Legal Office assisted some 35 developing countries during the year on legislation covering fields from agrarian reform to wildlife conservation. It agreed to send a team of animal husbandry experts and a lawyer to help six west African countries harmonize laws on cattle movements across their borders, a problem that worsened following droughts that disrupted normal migration patterns.

Price policies. During the year, FAO sponsored workshops on price policies, in north Africa and in Asia and the Pacific, and began work with five Asian countries on a new approach to agricultural marketing and development, with emphasis on competitive marketing channels.

The landless. A study on landlessness—as one of the most serious agrarian problems emerging in the developing world—was begun in 1986, when graduates of Sri Lanka University began living for 12 months in eight rural villages, where they followed the lives of 600 landless families. The graduates examined the causes of landlessness, the socio-economic conditions under which the families lived and their means of survival. Through this study and similar research in Turkey, FAO hoped to define more accurately landlessness and help Governments identify policies and programmes most likely to alleviate the problem.

Rural migrants. During the year, FAO's Economic and Social Policy Department worked with research institutes in eight cities which had grown at an unusually fast pace—Yaoundé (Cameroon), Bogota (Colombia), Abidjan (Côte d'Ivoire), Jakarta (Indonesia), Manila (Philippines), Dakar (Senegal), Caracas (Venezuela) and Kinshasa (Zaire)—on the impact of population changes on local food supplies. With nearly 500 million people in the developing world expected to move from rural to urban areas between 1980 and 2000, researchers started building a demographic profile of each city, examining trends in food consumption and expenditure among the urban population, as well as government policies affecting agriculture that might have accelerated the migration of the rural poor.

Information. In 1986, FAO continued to expand and integrate its data-base systems containing information ranging from the world's physical resources to agricultural statistics. FAO's files on agricultural information and statistics were consolidated into a single data base, AGROSTAT, including data compiled since 1961 on supplies and utilization of crops, livestock, fishery and forestry products, producer prices and population.

One of the measures implemented in 1986 to improve the FAO Global Information and Early Warning System for Food and Agriculture, which alerts Governments to emerging food shortages, was the development of Africa Real-Time Environmental Monitoring Using Imaging Satellites (ARTEMIS). Expected to be operational by 1988, ARTEMIS is a computer-based environmental monitoring system using satellite imagery to detect signs of drought, crop failure and locust plagues.

Also under development was a computerized Geographic Information System combining FAO's inventories of the world's physical resources. In 1986 it was used to produce a map of Africa's irrigation potential and to pinpoint oyster and mussel farming areas in the Gulf of Nicoya on Costa Rica's Pacific coast.

Also in 1986, FAO's data base Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Abstracts (ASFA) became available on compact disk. Covering the years 1982-1986, each disk contained the equivalent of 20,000 pages of ASFA, giving access to references in some 125,000 publications.

A series of monographs describing the chemical properties, traditional uses and pharmaceutical value of 40 tropical-forest species used as traditional medicine in Africa and Latin America was published by FAO's Forestry Department.

Funding

FAO funds come from three main sources: contributions by member nations, national trust funds and UNDP. While the FAO Conference had approved in 1985 a budget of $437 million for 1986-1987, its biennial work programme was affected by financial problems caused by a decline in the value of the United States dollar—the currency on which FAO's budget is based—United States legislation reducing the country's allocation to FAO, delays in payment of contributions by several member States affected by economic recession, and falling interest rates reducing FAO's income from deposits.

To avoid a cash flow crisis, the Director-General proposed and the FAO Council approved, in November, savings amounting to $16.4 million, including delays in filling vacant posts and the cancellation of many publications and meetings.

Secretariat

At the end of 1986, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 3,400, of whom 1,121 were in the Professional and higher categories. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 2,978: 1,363 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,615 in the General Service category. Of the 297 associate experts working with FAO, 39 were at headquarters and 258 in the field or regional and country offices.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued throughout 1986 its activities aimed at promoting co-operation among nations through education, natural and social sciences, culture and communication.

The fortieth anniversary of UNESCO on 4 November was marked by major events at and away from headquarters. In December, the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), to be observed under the auspices of UNESCO, was proclaimed.

In 1986, the membership of UNESCO remained unchanged at 158.

Education

In 1986, UNESCO continued to focus on education for development. Its major programmes were on: education for all; the formulation and application of education policies; and education, training and society.

In December, the General Assembly approved UNESCO's 1985 appeal to proclaim an international literacy year and encouraged UNESCO to prepare a plan of action to eradicate illiteracy by the year 2000.

UNESCO's action to combat illiteracy was linked primarily to major regional projects. It was based on developing literacy training for adults and on stemming illiteracy at the source by generalizing and renewing primary education. Major regional programmes in Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean were strengthened through seminars, research projects, technical missions and training programmes. In May, a regional meeting of experts to draw up a plan of action for the eradication of illiteracy in Asia and the Pacific finalized a regional programme for universal provision and renewal of primary education. Preparatory work was undertaken on establishing a programme for the Arab States.

Activities concerning adult education focused on strengthening UNESCO's role as an international centre for information on adult education, training adult educators, interaction between adult education and work and adult education and the exercise of civic rights and responsibilities. The quarterly newsletter Adult Education—Information Notes was published in the six official languages.

Seminars were held, and studies and technical missions were undertaken, to reduce disparities in education between rural and urban populations. Experimental projects and seminars focused on promoting the role of village schools. Training programmes for agricultural and technical specialists aimed at increasing the contribution of general and specialized education to the socio-economic development of rural areas.

Action to promote equal access to education for girls and women included meetings and seminars to identify obstacles. Projects, seminars and training programmes focused on literacy instruction and education in civics for women; access by girls to primary, secondary, technical and vocational education; and higher education in science and technology.

Activities for disabled persons emphasized the training of personnel and the production of educational and audio-visual materials. For refugees and national liberation movements, priority was given to operational activities and training teachers. Action on behalf of migrant workers and their families focused on the production of training materials.

UNESCO contributed in 1986 to the formulation and application of education policies and the strengthening of national capacities for educational planning, management, administration and economics. The fortieth session of the International Conference on Education (Geneva, 2-11 December), with 492 participants, adopted recommendations concerning the improvement of secondary education, as well as education in the fight against acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

In the area of research and educational innovation, UNESCO published in 1986 the thirty-seventh (1985) volume of the International Yearbook of Education in English and a second revised edition of the trilingual Directory of Educational Research Institutions (English/French/Spanish).

Activities dealing with the interaction between education and society aimed at improving the teaching of science and technology, promoting physical education and sport, and integrating training and research activities.

development during the year. Over 3,000 specialists, many from developing countries, were trained in basic sciences, informatics and biotechnology, in collaboration with national universities and institutions and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The education of engineers and technicians continued to receive high priority, as did activities relating to new and renewable sources of energy, with emphasis on the development of learning packages in both areas.

The importance of informatics for development, and the imbalance in equipment and informatics application between developed and developing countries, led UNESCO to launch the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme, which became fully operational in 1986. The first session of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Informatics Programme (Paris, 21-23 October) established a clearer definition of the general trend of the Programme, which sought to accelerate the training of specialists, facilitate the introduction of informatics in education, encourage research in and through informatics and help produce software for education and research.

In December, the UNESCO regional office for science and technology in Latin America and the Caribbean at Montevideo, Uruguay, established an Ibero-American network on education in the engineering sciences to promote pilot projects, conducting studies and set up data bases.

The International Geological Correlation Programme, involving some 4,000 scientists from 130 countries, continued to stimulate international collaboration in the earth sciences through its 51 research projects in 122 countries. The geology for development project continued to focus on studying pre-Cambrian Africa, and multidisciplinary regional projects analysed the geological structure and mineral potential of the continent. The programme on geological applications of remote sensing continued stimulating research on geological interpretation of data from second-generation space-borne sensors, with its two projects focusing on areas of Africa and Latin America. Activities concerning natural hazards included projects aimed at establishing or reinforcing hazard-monitoring network systems, particularly earthquakes and volcanoes, in various parts of the world. Post-disaster investigations were conducted on several occasions.

Under the Man and Biosphere Programme, implementation of the Action Plan for Biosphere Reserves continued, with expansion of the network of biosphere reserves and various research and training activities.

The International Hydrological Programme continued its third phase (1984-1989). Post-graduate courses in hydrology and water resources were sponsored, mainly for participants from developing countries, and several seminars, training courses and workshops were offered.

The Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission continued its programmes, which included ocean dynamics and climate, ocean science in relation to living and non-living resources, marine pollution research and monitoring, ocean mapping, ocean observation and warning systems, and marine data and information exchange.

In the marine sciences, specialists from developing countries were helped to improve their scientific skills and research through participation in training courses, meetings and seminars, and through fellowships and travel grants. UNESCO projects on coral reefs, mangrove areas, coastal lagoons and coastal ecosystems continued throughout the year.

Other activities dealt with urban systems and urbanization, the natural heritage and environmental education and information.

In 1986, UNESCO continued emphasizing the development of social and human sciences.

UNESCO's contribution to the celebration of the International Year of Peace (1986) represented a major new direction for its social science programme, providing an opportunity to investigate factors likely to contribute to the strengthening of peace. In this connection, UNESCO organized a round table at its headquarters, attended by leading figures from academic, literary and political circles. To celebrate the Year and as a follow-up to International Youth Year (1985), UNESCO organized a meeting in Ghana of young people from rural areas in 32 countries to promote peace, disarmament and development. The organization also contributed to the eleventh General Conference of the International Peace Research Association (Brighton, United Kingdom, 13-18 April) and organized a special week for the promotion of international education.

The UNESCO Associated Schools Project (ASP) continued to promote international education at the national, regional and international levels. In 1986, the project involved some 1,987 institutions in 91 countries. Regional seminars of ASP national co-ordinators were held in Asia and Latin America to elaborate regional strategies to develop the project further. A European seminar on the occasion of the International Year of Peace for pupils participating in ASP was held in Paris from 3 to 6 November.

Four pilot projects were launched in Asia, Africa, the Arab States and Europe to prepare material on the relationship between peace, disarmament, security and development, and on the dangers of nuclear war, for use in training literacy and adult education personnel.

In the area of higher education and training, 19 specialists, meeting at a UNESCO international consultation in Athens, Greece, considered ways to provide students with knowledge relating to peace and respect for human rights. During the year, UNESCO lent support to: the International Congress on Peace sponsored by the Legal Research Institute of the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (Mexico City, 10-14 March); the Congress of Teachers for Peace organized by the Municipality of Vitoria-Gasteiz, Spain (10-15 November); the International Conference on Higher Education and Peace Education organized by the University of Chulalongkorn, Thailand (December); and a seminar on peace, human rights and relevant legal instruments organized by the UNESCO Centre in Porto, Portugal (12 and 13 December). The 1986 UNESCO Prize for Peace Education was awarded to Professor Paulo Freire (Brazil).

Concerning human rights, research activities centred on: human rights as defined in existing universal international instruments; ways of improving the human rights of disadvantaged social groups; and technological and scientific progress and human rights. UNESCO co-operated with the International Sociological Association and prepared, with its research committee on sociology of education, papers dealing with the right to education in various member States and regions for a meeting of the World Congress of Sociology held in August at New Delhi, India. The 1986 UNESCO Prize for the Teaching of Human Rights was awarded to Professor Héctor Fix-Zamudio (Mexico).

On the issues of prejudice, intolerance, racism and apartheid, activities included studies and workshops on combating prejudice and intolerance through research and education, teacher training and exchange and revision of school textbooks to eliminate discriminatory features; UNESCO organized an international meeting (Beijing, China, 1-4 September) of 16 university researchers to discuss co-ordination of social sciences research, training and documentation on apartheid in southern Africa and other regions, and to elaborate a five-year research plan on apartheid. UNESCO co-published Endgame in South Africa? The Challenging Structures and Ideology of Apartheid.

The major thrust of population activities was to provide technical support to national, regional and interregional projects, mainly in training, research and planning of communication strategies.

Activities for and concerning youth aimed at encouraging research about young people in different parts of the world; promoting the dissemination and exchange of information; and assisting with the drafting and the implementation of programmes to increase the participation of youth in social life.

The status of women programme included the compilation of statistics on the participation of men and women in meetings organized by UNESCO or with its assistance, to draw to the attention of the UNESCO secretariat and member States the need for more vigorous efforts to achieve a better balance. UNESCO also focused on developing co-operation with the United Nations system, with a view to co-ordinating the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.^a Activities to promote the development of philosophy and the human sciences included financial and intellectual assistance, meetings and grants to international professional NGOs. UNESCO co-operated with the International Council for Philosophy and Humanistic Studies in its activities, particularly in the publication of the journal Diogenes.

Culture

On 8 December 1986, the United Nations General Assembly proclaimed 1988-1997 the World Decade for Cultural Development, to be observed under the auspices of UNESCO. The Decade's four main objectives were acknowledging the cultural dimension of development, affirming and enriching cultural identities, broadening participation in culture and promoting international cultural co-operation.

Implementation of the international campaigns for the safeguarding of cultural heritage was pursued throughout 1986. Activities were carried out in each of the 21 campaigns in progress and in relation to eight others approved by the UNESCO General Conference.

The World Heritage Committee, established under the 1972 Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, held its tenth session (Paris, 24-28 November 1986). It inscribed 31 additional sites on the World Heritage List, thus raising to 247 the number of cultural and natural properties protected by the Convention, to which 93 States were parties at the end of 1986. Efforts continued to promote public awareness of the Convention's objectives and to encourage contributions to the World Heritage Fund, which supports training activities and restoration work on World Heritage sites.

The production of general and regional histories and cultural studies continued. In 1986, the first volume of the General History of Africa was published in Chinese and the second volume in Arabic and Chinese. An abridged edition of the first volume was published in French. In order to promote mutual appreciation of cultures, major literary works were translated and published in the UNESCO Collection of Representative Works. The quarterly Museum was produced in English, French, Russian and Spanish.

Regarding artistic creativity, training courses and research seminars on music, crafts, fine arts and the theatre were organized in 1986, with the co-operation of NGOs and cultural foundations. A directory of artistic training centres in Asia and the Pacific (1986) was published in co-operation with the Asian Cultural Centre for UNESCO (Tokyo). UNESCO provided support and financial assistance for the World Encyclopaedia of Contemporary Theatre, art and film festivals, training courses in artistic creation and seminars to promote the arts. Regional and international training grants and fellowships continued to be awarded to scholars in this area.

Communications

In 1986, UNESCO continued its efforts to improve the national and international flow of information, primarily by strengthening developing countries' communications infrastructure, training of communications personnel, production of communications equipment and improvement of media content. It also continued to study the role of communications in society, in particular the socio-cultural impact of new technologies. Under this programme, 24 interdisciplinary case-studies, carried out on the socio-cultural, economic and legal aspects of new communications technology, covered all regions and involved specialists from 33 member States. In addition, an information network was launched, including the publication and distribution of five editions of a newsletter summarizing research activities on new communications technologies, aimed at improving exchanges between the Latin American region and North America.

A second international round table on a new world information and communication order (Copenhagen, Denmark, 2-7 April) was attended by 25 participants from 25 countries, as well as 33 observers. Four national case-studies were carried out on the media's potential contribution towards combating famine, ecological hazards, sickness and poverty. UNESCO co-published with the University for Peace a study on the media's contribution to world security and peace.

Attention continued to be given to promoting women's access to, and participation in, communications through training programmes and co-operation with NGOs and women's groups.

The Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) (seventh session, Paris, 14-20 January 1986) approved financial contributions to 61 communication projects. IPDC continued to support regional and national news agencies, regional broadcasting unions and media training.

Advisory missions were organized to assist in preparing projects for the development of community radio, news agencies, television and newspapers, and in the formulation of book and communications policies.

Training programmes and materials on communications continued to expand, with the participation of national, regional and subregional institutions. In 1986, IPDC assisted a communications training and career development programme for women in Africa and provided further funding to the ARABSAT satellite system for equipment and consultative assistance. It also supported the National Distance Teaching System in Ecuador and a project for broadcast training and development in the Pacific. Some 100 fellowships in news agency operations, television studio techniques, television production, radio engineering and broadcasting, printing technology, journalism, camera work and film production were provided to participants from developing countries.

Other activities in 1986 included: technical support aimed at increasing the endogenous capacity of developing countries; training for communications specialists and for archivists in film and tape preservation techniques; and campaigns to promote the reading habit.

General Information Programme

The General Information Programme continued to carry out activities aimed at facilitating access to specialized information, promoting the flow of such information and expanding member States' capacity to store, exchange and use information needed for development. It covered, in co-operation with member States, most of UNESCO's activities in scientific and technical information, libraries and archives.

The Programme encouraged the development of tools for processing and transferring information to ensure the application of information-handling standards. It provided support to member States for adapting a Common Communication Format as a national exchange format and established an International Network of Terminology. It also continued its efforts in the areas of bibliographic control of serials and terminology standardization.

The Programme also continued to support projects relating to the development and use of data bases through the application of modern technologies and normative tools, such as microcomputer-based software packages. Projects on the computerization of information services and libraries were launched in many countries and further support was given to the Integrated Library and Information Services projects. Regional co-operation was pursued to strengthen regional information networks and programmes in Asia and the Pacific and in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Action for development

Activities continued under the programme on principles, methods and strategies of action for development. National training seminars on community participation in development, techniques of evaluation and planning methods, including the concerns of women, were organized in various regions. Several regional and subregional workshops dealt with the integration of cultural dimensions in planning and the use of science and technology indicators in socio-economic planning. Publications were issued dealing with concepts and methods of development planning. A meeting of experts (Paris, 17-21 November 1986) analysed the relationship of poverty, progress and marginalization.

In 1986, individual training was provided to 2,489 persons and group training benefited another 44,840. During the year some $18.7 million was spent on the acquisition and use of equipment for projects in developing countries.

Technical assistance

Participation Programme

Allocations approved by the Director-General for 1986-1987 under the UNESCO Participation Programme, through which member States and organizations participate in technical assistance activities, amounted to $11,243,315.

The amounts (in United States dollars) by sector and by region were as follows:

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments was 2,940, drawn from 135 nationalities. Of these, 1,123 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,817 were in the General Service category.

Of the Professional staff, 495 were serving in the field, as were 301 General Service staff.

The 1985 session of the UNESCO General Conference approved a budget of $307,223,000 for the period 1986-1987. However, after the withdrawal from the organization of two member States, the Executive Board adjusted the budget to $289,339,000. The level of the Working Capital Fund was fixed at $15,000,000 and the total assessment on member States (after reducing miscellaneous income) at $255,850,980. Amounts allocated (in thousands of United States dollars) are shown in the table below:

UNESCO REGULAR BUDGET	Amount
Programme operations and services	209,305
Programme support services	28,607
General policy and direction	25,516

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The thirty-ninth World Health Assembly met at Geneva from 5 to 16 May 1986 and approved a global report on the first evaluation of strategies to achieve health for all by the year 2000, as set out in the 1982 action plan.^a The evaluation pinpointed the challenges member States and the World Health Organization (WHO) would face during the rest of the century. The Assembly urged member States to make full use of their strategy reports in guiding national health policies and to strengthen district health systems based on primary health care. Regarding the economic aspects of the implementation of the health-for-all strategies, the Assembly, recognizing that the widespread economic crisis had resulted in cuts in health budgets, appealed to developed countries and international organizations to increase their assistance to developing countries. It also called on developing countries to increase technical co-operation among themselves.

The Assembly endorsed a revised WHO drug strategy and urged all concerned parties to assume their responsibilities in carrying it out. It asked member States to implement the International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes and to accelerate national programmes to achieve the goal of immunizing all the world's children by 1990. The Assembly also called on member States to pursue health objectives as an integral part of policies for sectors such as agriculture, environment, water and housing.

Among other programme and operational topics considered by the Assembly in 1986 were: nursing and midwifery personnel; a comprehensive health plan for Central America and Panama; strategies to prevent mental, neurological and psychosocial disorders; misuse of narcotic and psychotropic substances; prevention and eradication of iodine deficiency disorders; and the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS).

In 1986, the membership of WHO remained at 166, with one associate member.

Co-ordination with other organizations

WHO continued its collaboration with bilateral and multilateral agencies, funding agencies within the United Nations system, the World Bank, private foundations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and commercial enterprises to mobilize health for all. WHO also participated in emergency assistance being provided by the United Nations system, concentrating on promoting the preparedness and capacity of member States to cope with health emergencies and natural disasters. Among its emergency actions in 1986, WHO contributed to the international community's response to the nuclear accident at Chernobyl, Ukrainian SSR (see p. 584). In connection with the International Year of Peace (1986), the WHO management group of scientists specializing in the effects of nuclear war on health and health services met to discuss the results of research and revised a report on the subject.

Strategy for health for all

In 1986, the WHO Director-General launched an initiative to develop a health-for-all leadership to narrow the gap between policy and action. A task force worked out a strategy and an initial plan of action for 1986-1987. Some 250 senior officials from over 40 countries participated in six intercountry colloquia (Cuba (1), Mozambique (1), Thailand (2), Yugoslavia (2)) on leadership development for health for all and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Health system infrastructure

Health system development

In 1986, work continued on the tenth revision of the International Classification of Diseases, with the assistance of eight WHO collaborating centres. Following a meeting of the Health Systems Research Advisory Group (Geneva, April) to review research proposals and advise on future directions for the programme, members of the group co-operated with Botswana, Kenya and Mauritius in their research activities. Regarding health legislation, international meetings were held in Africa (Brazzaville, Congo, October) and Europe (Montpellier, France, August). In addition, WHO joined the United Nations in supporting an international expert meeting on legislation to provide equal opportunities for disabled persons (Vienna, June).

Primary health care systems

In October 1986, a seminar for the western Pacific region at Tokyo discussed planning and managing health facilities. An interregional meeting on the maintenance and repair of health care equipment (Nicosia, Cyprus, November) led to the formulation of a global plan to serve as a guide for action and for the mobilization of resources. Senior health and municipal officials from 16 cities in five WHO regions attended a UNICEF/WHO interregional consultation on primary health care in urban areas (Manila, Philippines, July). An interregional conference on community health workers as pillars for health for all (Yaounde, Cameroon, December) reviewed experiences of participants from 16 member States. Delegates from 35 countries adopted a Charter for Health Promotion at the first International Conference on Health Promotion (Ottawa, November), jointly organized by the WHO Regional Office for Europe, Canada and the Canadian Public Health Association.

Health manpower

A lack of adequate and realistic planning for health manpower development, resulting in acute shortages of trained personnel in some member States and an over-supply of highly skilled personnel in others, led to the convening of a conference on "Health manpower out of balance" (Acapulco, Mexico, September). Sponsored by the Council for International Organizations of Medical Sciences and WHO, the conference recommended relieving the problem through information exchange and research, and by restricting the number of medical school graduates.

Public information and education for health

In 1986, WHO collaborated with member States in strengthening the information, education and communication capabilities of health professionals and made media representatives aware of the interrelationship of positive health, economic development and social harmony. In this connection, workshops and seminars were held in many countries and efforts were made to strengthen audiovisual facilities and the production of promotional and educational films. World Health Day 1986 (7 April) stressed the importance of sports and exercise for healthy living.

Research promotion and development

Since the adoption of the Declaration of Alma-Ata (USSR, 1978)^b—setting forth eight elements of primary health care through which the goal of health for all was to be achieved by the year 2000—WHO had recognized the importance of the relation between health and other sectors, with emphasis in research on the socio-economic determinants of health, including such factors as food and education policies, housing conditions and communications. The 1986 World Health Assembly underlined this reorientation in research when it decided to change the name of the Advisory Committee on Medical Research to Advisory Committee on Health Research.

Health promotion and care

General health protection

In 1986, the World Health Assembly adopted a resolution on implementation requirements of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in the health sector, as an outcome of the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.^c The WHO Director-General established a steering committee on women, health and development to support the planning of activities as an integral part of various programmes.

WHO issued a second edition of "Guidelines for training community health workers in nutrition". Guidelines were also prepared for nutrition curriculum development at different levels of the health system during an intercountry consultation for the eastern Mediterranean region (Alexandria, Egypt, December). WHO formally established in 1986 its international breast-feeding data bank as part of a global nutritional surveillance programme; it contained information on the prevalence and duration of breast-feeding, collected in over 1,000 surveys and studies in 126 countries over 20 years.

As part of its safety measures and accident prevention policies, WHO jointly sponsored with the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the World Rehabilitation Fund an international conference on musculoskeletal injuries at the workplace (Copenhagen, Denmark, May).

Health of specific population groups

A WHO/UNFPA/UNICEF-sponsored European Parliamentarians' Forum on Child Survival, Women and Population: Integrated Strategies (The Hague, Netherlands, February) addressed the need for action to meet family planning needs. A study on identifying low-birth-weight infants at risk concluded, and another on monitoring children's physical growth and psychosocial development began at nine WHO centres in six countries.

In the area of reproductive health and family planning, technical guidelines were prepared, for publication, on the role of barrier methods and spermicides and on the managerial aspects of vasectomy services. A WHO scientific group reported on the mechanism of action, safety and efficacy of intra-uterine devices (Geneva, December).

The health of agricultural workers was the subject of an interregional workshop (Sofia, Bulgaria, May). Scientific monographs were published on early detection of occupational diseases and occupational exposure to pollens, as was a WHO manual on the epidemiology of occupational health. The effects of occupational health hazards on reproductive function were reviewed in 1986.

Protection and promotion of mental health

A review of the needs and programmes in all WHO regions revealed a considerable increase in awareness of mental health issues, but leadership skills in mental health remained scarce, particularly in developing countries. In November, a WHO-sponsored consultation at Montreal, Canada, developed guidelines for mental health policy formulation. WHO convened a consultation of experts (Geneva, July) who agreed on a protocol for a project to promote healthy behaviour in adolescence. The first phase of a multi-centre project on the effects of bereavement on the health of the elderly was completed.

Narcotic and psychotropic drug misuse was addressed at a conference of ministers of health (London, March), jointly sponsored by WHO and the United Kingdom. Drug abuse control programmes funded by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) continued in several countries. A working group discussed drug-related problems in adolescence (Tokyo, February), and a comparative study of legislative approaches to the treatment of drug- and alcohol-dependent persons was published. AIDS among drug users in Europe, Canada and the United States was the subject of a consultation (Stockholm, Sweden, October).

Environmental health

The World Health Assembly in 1986 emphasized water supply and sanitation as one of the essential elements of primary health care. Data on water supply and sanitation services at the mid-point of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) were collected and analysed during 1986. In April, a study group on technology for water supply and sanitation in developing countries meeting at Geneva reviewed significant advances in the light of those countries' needs.

Activities concerning protection against radiation and other physical factors were dominated by the nuclear accident at Chernobyl. WHO responded immediately by convening a meeting (Copenhagen, May) to facilitate the exchange of information; the participants, experts in meteorology, radiation protection, biological effects, reactor technology, emergency procedures, public health and psychology, provided guidance for immediate application.

The WHO/ILO/UNEP International Programme on Chemical Safety continued to evaluate risks to health from chemicals during infancy and early childhood. In December, an FAO/WHO expert consultation at Rome addressed food safety problems associated with rapid urbanization. A working group on the health impact of irradiated foods (Munich, Federal Republic of Germany, November) reviewed identification methods.

Diagnostic, therapeutic and rehabilitative technology

In May, a study group on the WHO basic radiological system, meeting in Zimbabwe, recommended establishing training courses in Africa for radiologists, radiographers, X-ray technicians and maintenance workers. During 1986, the WHO Expert Committee on Biological Standardization approved new requirements for vaccines for mumps, rabies and hepatitis B. In April, more than 160 scientists met at Geneva to discuss the safety of blood and blood products and antibody screening issues in relation to AIDS (see below). The fourth International Conference of Drug Regulatory Authorities (Tokyo, June), sponsored by WHO and Japan's Ministry of Health and Welfare, contributed to consolidating WHO's role as a focus for information exchange on the efficacy and safety of pharmaceutical products. Field-testing of the methodology developed by WHO to estimate drug requirements with greater accuracy was completed and applied to epidemiological research in Botswana, Lesotho and Zimbabwe.

Disease prevention and control

Immunization

In 1986, immunization coverage in seven of the 25 largest developing countries—Algeria, India, Indonesia, Iran, Nigeria, United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam—showed an improvement by 25 to 100 per cent over the previous year, rapidly approaching that of the industrialized countries. In developing countries (excluding China), immunization was preventing more than 1 million deaths yearly from measles, neonatal tetanus or pertussis and over 175,000 cases of poliomyelitis.

Malaria

The overall world malaria situation in 1986 showed no significant improvement. Of the total world population, 48 per cent (2,318 million people) lived in areas where malaria risk persisted but organized control was being pursued, and 8 per cent (405 million) were living in areas (mainly in tropical Africa) where malarial endemicity remained basically unchanged. About 100 million clinical cases occurred each year, with 250 million people becoming infected.

Other parasitic diseases

In March, a WHO expert committee, meeting at Geneva, concluded that the prevention and control of major intestinal parasitic infections were feasible, effective and promotional for other health programmes. A report by the WHO Expert Committee on the Epidemiology and Control of African Trypanosomiasis provided guidance on choosing the most appropriate technology for a primary health care approach to trypanosomiasis control. In April, the WHO Expert Committee on Onchocerciasis (river blindness), meeting at Geneva, estimated that 85.5 million persons lived at risk of infection in endemic areas. In 1986, the Onchocerciasis Control Programme in West Africa was extended to savannah areas of Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Senegal and Sierra Leone.

Diarrhoea/ diseases

By the end of the year, 99 per cent of the developing world's population lived in countries with a well-formulated plan for controlling diarrhoeal diseases and more than 2,000 staff were trained in management and supervision of control programmes. UNICEF continued to provide oral rehydration salts and promote self-sufficiency in producing them.

AIDS

In 1986, WHO co-operation with member States in combating AIDS intensified in response to a dramatic increase in the number of reported cases and countries reporting the disease. Following the second meeting of participating and interested parties for the prevention and control of AIDS (Geneva, June), WHO mobilized resources to provide its programme with a critical mass of personnel. In November, the Director-General declared AIDS to be a global health priority and reaffirmed WHO's commitment to preventing and controlling it.

Cancer

Cancer incidence and mortality rose in 1986, as a result primarily of an increase in the average age of the population, increased tobacco use and an improvement in controlling other major health problems. In 1986, approaches were available for preventing one third of all existing cancers. In countries where people had smoked for many years, 80 to 90 per cent of all cases of lung cancer and 30 per cent of all cancer deaths were attributed to tobacco. In South-East Asia, approximately 90 per cent of the more than 100,000 new cases of oral cancer each year were caused by tobacco-chewing and smoking. The 1986 World Health Assembly called for a global public health approach and immediate action to combat the tobacco pandemic. The Assembly requested the Director-General to strengthen collaboration with organizations of the United Nations system and NGOs, to support national smoking-control programmes and to ensure that WHO played an effective global advocacy role in tobacco and health issues.

The WHO publication Cancer Pain Relief, issued in 1986, encouraged the medical profession to place greater emphasis on palliative care for cancer patients and to disseminate widely the knowledge of possible pain-relieving measures.

Cardiovascular diseases

In 1986, WHO's cardiovascular disease programme fostered activities to identify and test improved strategies and methods for preventing cardiovascular diseases and for reducing risk factors in the population. Trends and determinants (risk factors and medical care) in cardiovascular diseases were monitored through the MONICA project. Designed to span the decade 1984 to 1993, the project reported the incidence, determinants and mortality occurring from major cardiovascular diseases in a population of more than 10 million of both sexes, aged 25 to 64 years. The first MONICA congress (Augsburg, Federal Republic of Germany, February/March) was held for the project's 41 collaborating centres located in 26 countries.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,456 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,435 staff members, drawn from 127 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 3,021 were in the General Service category. Of the total number, 91 were in posts financed by UNDP, UNEP, UNFAC and UNFPA.

Budget

The thirty-eighth (1985) World Health Assembly had approved an effective working budget of $543.3 million for the 1986-1987 biennium.

Agriculture and rural development

Continuing its commitment to agriculture and rural development, the Bank made 31 loans in fiscal 1986 amounting to $3,761.7 million to 20 countries. Brazil received $852 million, of which $500 million helped to make the agricultural-credit system more market oriented, reduce rural-credit subsidies and reform trade and pricing policy for key agricultural commodities. Of $506 million provided to India, $375 million went to a loan-refinancing programme for agricultural investments and to an agricultural credit system. Argentina received $350 million for the first phase of a government programme to encourage increased agricultural production and exports.

Development finance companies

The Bank made 12 loans totalling $1,324.7 million in fiscal 1986 to assist development finance companies in 11 countries. Turkey received $300 million to support its financial sector adjustment programme. India received $250 million for industrial policy reforms aimed at increasing exports. Of $218 million provided to Pakistan, $148 million was channelled to ten financial institutions to promote private industrial investment and strengthen financial markets. A loan of $200 million was made to Morocco for the second phase of its economic adjustment programme.

Education

During fiscal 1986, the Bank granted nine loans totalling $577.7 million for education projects in six countries. Malaysia received two loans totalling $200.3 million, to improve the quality of education and to train technicians and skilled workers, under an industrial training project. Indonesia received two loans totalling $151.1 million to develop a nucleus of well-trained scientific and technical manpower and to support a long-term development programme focusing on institutional and management development. A loan of $150 million was made to Morocco for a programme of construction and equipping schools, teacher training, foreign fellowships and studies on educational activities.

Energy

Twenty-two energy projects—in oil, gas, coal and power—were assisted in 18 countries during fiscal 1986 at a cost of $2,423.2 million. Brazil received $500 million to help finance the country's 1986-1989 power-sector rehabilitation. A loan of $485 million to India helped meet the electricity demand in its northern and western regions by installing 1,500 megawatts of thermal power-generating capacity. Four loans totalling $402 million were made to Turkey, of which $200 million helped to develop the country's indigenous energy resources through the financing of the 420-megawatt Kayraktepe hydropower station on the Goksu River.

Industry

The Bank made six loans for the industrial sector amounting to $757.2 million to four countries during fiscal 1986. The two largest loans were both to India totalling $502.2 million, $302.2 million of which supported the construction of a qualified fertilizer-manufacturing plant owned and operated by the Indian Farmers Fertiliser Cooperative Limited; the remaining $200 million helped modernize cement plant facilities. Of two loans totalling $125 million received by Hungary, $100 million went to restructure the country's industry to help it achieve international competitiveness. Zaire received $110 million to finance part of the foreign-exchange costs of Gecamines' five-year (1986-1990) rehabilitation programme, aimed at maintaining production capacity while raising productivity and reducing costs.

Non-project

Three non-project loans totalling $900 million were made during the fiscal year. Mexico received $400 million to rehabilitate and reconstruct urban areas damaged by 1985 earthquakes,^a and to improve construction standards and planning. Chile and Côte d'Ivoire received $250 million each to support their structural adjustment programmes.

Population, health and nutrition

Five loans amounting to $166.6 million were made in fiscal 1986. Brazil received $59.5 million to benefit the health of the rural poor and increase the efficiency of basic health services in four north-eastern states. A loan of $36.5 million was granted to Colombia to improve access to basic health services for 3.7 million people living in its poorest areas, and to provide access to piped water and waste-disposal facilities to 250 communities. Indonesia received $33.4 million for a nutrition and community-health project aimed at reducing infant, child, and maternal mortality and improving nutrition. China received $15 million for a rural health and preventive medicine project and Côte d'Ivoire received $22.2 million for nursing schools and field training programmes.

Small-scale enterprises

Five loans totalling $264.5 million were granted for small-scale enterprises during fiscal year 1986. Turkey received $100 million for relending through financial institutions, to eligible sub-borrowers in the small and medium-scale industrial sector. Indonesia received $64.5 million to increase non-oil exports by making available more long-term credit for export-oriented investments. Chile received $40 million to provide credit through financial intermediaries to small and medium-scale industrial enterprises.

Technical assistance

During fiscal 1986, four countries received loans for technical assistance amounting to $60.1 million. Brazil received $29 million to help strengthen public-sector planning and management capabilities in the areas of information, research, investment planning, budgeting, programme implementation and operational control, including supervision of State enterprises. A loan of $18.5 million to Argentina helped to develop and strengthen economic policies and decision-making, reduce the public-sector deficit, increase domestic resource mobilization, increase the efficiency of public-sector investment and enterprises and improve export and industrial policies and procedures. Botswana received $7.6 million to help promote the economic diversification of the town of Selebi-Phikwe and lessen its dependence on a nearby copper/nickel mine. A $5 million loan to Nigeria went for technical assistance to strengthen industrial policy and to undertake studies to restructure the country's industrial sector.

The largest element of technical assistance continued to be that financed as a component of loans for other purposes. During the year, those technical assistance components totalled $1,051.7 million in 183 operations, compared with $1,345.2 million in 229 operations during 1985. While financing during 1986 increased for agriculture and rural development, industrial development and finance, non-projects, power, telecommunications, transportation, urban development, and water supply and sewerage, it declined for education, energy and population, health and nutrition.

The Bank continued to serve as executing agency for projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). At the end of 1986, the number of projects in progress stood at 150, for a total allocation of $218.5 million, compared with 117, for an allocation of 170.6 million, on 31 December 1985. Among the larger new UNDP-financed projects were investment-planning and management for water supply and sanitation in Ethiopia, public enterprise reform studies in Zaire, planning assistance to Chad, river-development planning studies in Senegal, economic management in China, as well as an umbrella project (under which there are numerous sub-projects) there, consultant support to a Bank-assisted gas project in Bangladesh, strengthening irrigation planning and design capability in Nepal, improved water-delivery systems in Egypt, and interregional and global projects for biomass gasifiers and windpump evaluation.

Telecommunications

The Bank made one loan of $24.5 million to Côte d'Ivoire for the physical, institutional and financial rehabilitation of the Office National des Télécommunications.

Transportation

Fifteen loans totalling $1,253.8 million were made to 12 countries during fiscal 1986 for the development of transportation systems. A loan of $300 million was granted to Indonesia to upgrade national and provincial roads and bridges. China received two loans, one for $160 million to increase railway capacity and improve railway operations and efficiency, and the other for $130 million to increase the capacity of the Tianjin port and to train port personnel. Of the two loans to the Republic of Korea, totalling $208 million, $141 million was to increase the capacity of the port at Pusan.

Urban development

In fiscal 1986, ten loans totalling $944.5 million for urban projects were made to six countries. Indonesia received $275 million to finance mortgage-lending commitments for some 200,000 housing units. Two loans totalling $190 million were granted to Mexico, $150 million of which was for financing construction in rapidly growing medium-sized cities. Of the three loans received by Brazil, totalling $179.5 million, a $100 million loan was to assist flood-damaged urban municipalities in the northeastern region and in the planning capacity for flood protection and control.

Water supply and sewerage

Eleven loans totalling $507.3 million were made to ten countries in fiscal 1986. A $70 million loan granted to the Syrian Arab Republic supported sewage treatment facilities in urban areas to benefit some 1.7 million people. The Philippines received $69 million to help expand water supply in the Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System service area. Of two loans to Chile totalling $66 million, $60 million was to provide water and sewerage services for some 830,000 people in Santiago.

Economic Development Institute

Fiscal 1986 was the second year of the Economic Development Institute's (EDI) five-year plan designed to strengthen its work on development policy issues and place more emphasis on national economic management, sectors, public enterprises and projects. To promote these objectives, EDI again organized a wide range of seminars, courses and training activities.

Of the 105 courses and seminars held, 15 were senior policy seminars for decision makers and 21 were for senior staff of training institutions in developing countries. Ten of the 15 senior policy seminars were addressed to sub-Saharan Africa, three to Latin America, one to Asia, and one to countries of the Middle East and North Africa. Most focused on sectoral issues, such as agricultural pricing, financing of education, population policy and the efficient use of transport facilities. Nearly half of the 69 direct training activities dealt with managing the overall economy or particular sectors and subsectors. The remainder were concerned mostly with project analysis and management. Of the 3,300 participants attending EDI courses and seminars about 1,600 came from smaller or poorer countries, many of which were in sub-Saharan Africa.

In 1986, the number of training activities substantially exceeded the 83 that were projected in the five-year plan, reflecting expanded co-operation with overseas partner institutions and with other sources of financing for training.

Co-financing by national and international aid agencies for programmes directed or co-directed by EDI grew from about $2.3 million in fiscal 1985 to nearly $4 million in fiscal 1986. The bulk of the increase was accounted for by UNDP, the Canadian International Development Agency and the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

Co-financing

Conditions contributing to annual fluctuations in co-financing totals were especially pronounced in 1986 in planning export-credit flows, which were directly linked to capital-goods imports by borrowers, and in private co-financing envisaged, which remained affected by difficult market conditions. The Bank's contribution during fiscal 1986 amounted to $3,629.4 million for 113 projects, a decline of more than $1,000 million over fiscal 1985. Of this total, co-financing with official development agencies remained the largest source—$2,541.5 million in 102 projects. This form of co-financing provided development-oriented lending, highly concessional terms and long maturities. During fiscal 1986, private co-financing amounted to $579.5 million for four projects.

Operations of the Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa, totalling $782 million, were approved in fifteen countries. The Special Facility's resources increased during the year by the addition of three direct contributors—Belgium, Ireland, United States—and one special joint financier—Belgium.

Financing activities

During fiscal 1986, the World Bank borrowed the equivalent of $10,609 million, consisting of new medium- and long-term borrowings plus incremental short-term discount-rate and Central Bank Facility borrowings outstanding on 30 June 1986. The total was made up of $3,266.3 million in United States dollars, $1,871.4 million in Swiss francs, $1,854.1 million in Japanese yen, $1,731.3 million in deutsche mark, $719.4 million in Netherlands guilders, $399.6 million in European currency units, $147 million in Canadian dollars, $134.7 million in French francs, $130.5 in pounds sterling, $113.5 million in Belgian francs, $53.2 million in Danish kroner, $52.1 million in Austrian schillings, $51.1 million in Australian dollars, $29.5 million in Norwegian kroner, and $27.1 million in Luxembourg francs.

Of the 98 medium- and long-term borrowing operations conducted by the Bank, 84 were in the private sector and accounted for $8,543 million, or 80 per cent of the total funds borrowed. The other medium- and long-term issues, totalling $1,550 million, or 15 per cent of the funds raised, were placed with official sources. Short-term borrowings outstanding as at 30 June amounted to $3,948 million.

As at 30 June 1986, the Bank's outstanding obligations totalled $69,897 million—an increase of $19,593 million over fiscal 1985—denominated in 20 different currencies and currency units.

During fiscal 1986, the Bank continued to engage in currency swaps as a means of increasing its access to low nominal-cost currencies. It executed 51 currency-swap transactions aggregating $1,927 million—$1,225 million into Swiss francs, $349 million into deutsche mark, $261 million into Netherlands guilders, and $92 million into Japanese yen.

Capitalization

For the fiscal year ending 30 June 1986, the value of the Bank's capital stock was expressed on the basis of the special drawing right (SDR) in terms of United States dollars as computed by the International Monetary Fund on 30 June, when the value of the SDR was set at $1.17757. The subscribed capital of the Bank, as at 30 June, totalled SDR 65,836 million, an increase of SDR 6,888 million from fiscal 1985.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues, generated primarily from loans and investments, increased by $1,286 million or 23 per cent, to a total of $6,815 million in fiscal 1986. Net income was $1,243 million, up $106 million from the previous record high of $1,137 million in fiscal 1985. As in the previous year, sustained high net income was largely a result of high returns on the Bank's liquidity and low borrowing costs.

Expenditures totalled $5,571 million, an increase of 26.9 per cent over the previous fiscal year. Administrative costs amounted to $427 million, up by $33 million.

The Bank's General Reserve amounted to $4,918 million at the end of fiscal 1986.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1986, the staff of the World Bank numbered 6,002, of whom 3,806 were staff in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 113 nationalities.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), is a multilateral development institution that promotes private investment and assists private enterprises in its developing member countries. Its capital resources are provided by its 128 member States—including 107 developing countries—which collectively determine its policies and activities.

During the fiscal year ending 30 June 1986, the second year of IFC's current five-year programme, the Board of Directors approved 85 investments in 39 developing countries and one world-wide in scope, totalling $1,156 million. Of that amount, $710 million was to be invested for IFC's own account and $446 million would be syndicated, or sold, to other investors. Compared to the 1985 fiscal year, the total approved investments increased by $218.8 million, from $937.2 million, and investments net of syndication rose $100.7 million, from $609.3 million. Of the total dollar amount, $1,070 million was for loans and $86 million for equity investments. Of the equity, $4 million was approved for the exercise-of-rights issues by firms in which IFC already had equity investments. Thirteen of the loans, totalling $139 million, involved corporate restructuring.

IFC estimated that the total capital costs of projects it would help to finance would be more than $3,588 million. In other words, for every $1 invested by IFC for its own account, others would invest about $4.

Loans were made at market rates. The typical United States dollar fixed-rate loan was priced at 10.37 per cent for a period of 7 to 8 years with a grace period of 4 years. The maturities of IFC loans, set to conform to the nature and needs of each project, ranged from 7 to 12 years.

Of the projects approved during the year, 42 per cent of the investment finance went to Asia, 32 per cent to Latin America, 16 per cent to Europe and the Middle East, and 10 per cent to Africa. The largest proportion, 30 per cent, of investment was for projects relating to fertilizers, chemicals and petrochemicals; 19 per cent was for energy and minerals; 16 per cent for other manufacturing; 9 per cent for tourism and services; 8 per cent for capital markets and financial services; 7 per cent for wood, pulp and paper; 6 per cent for agribusiness; and 5 per cent for cement and steel. Some $254.7 million of the investments was taken up by government-related financial institutions of industrial countries which specialized in aiding private enterprises in developing countries.

During the year, IFC approved investments in Grenada, Mozambique and Seychelles for the first time. It also approved investments in two other countries in which it had not invested for the previous three years. Thirty-three investments, with a total value of $295 million, were located in countries with an annual per capita income below $800. In 1986, more than 26 per cent of the loans were priced at variable rates, with 43 per cent of United States dollar-denominated loans so priced.

Supplementing its loans, equity and equity-like instruments, IFC provided a broad range of other financial services, including underwritings, guarantees, stand-by arrangements and swaps. Technical assistance activities were generally provided free of charge. However, to bring itself in line with market practice, IFC began to charge fees for special service activities, generating some $3.9 million in income for IFC in fiscal year 1986.

The Corporation continued to seek out commercial banks and other financial institutions to join in loan syndications and parallel financing. During the year, some $446 million in loans by IFC was syndicated with such institutions. Syndications processed with commercial banks included new funding for projects in Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Colombia, Egypt, India, Thailand and Zimbabwe. Many of the larger projects involved energy development.

In 1986, under its five-year financial and operational plan covering the fiscal years 1985 to 1989, IFC provided new financial services to its developing member countries, while continuing its main role of assisting in the financing of private sector projects. The newly established Foreign Investment Advisory Service aimed to help members review and adjust their policies, regulations and investment promotion strategies affecting foreign direct investment. Funding from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) supported regional advisory programmes in Africa and Asia. With regard to financial markets, IFC established several equity lines and credit lines with banks and venture capital companies to help small and medium-sized businesses in Argentina, Côte d'Ivoire, Kenya and Pakistan, and launched the Emerging Markets Growth Fund to invest in publicly listed shares in certain developing countries. In institutional development, IFC began a promotional campaign to increase awareness of investment opportunities in developing countries among corporations and financial institutions in Europe, Japan and North America. Other activities included the application of new financial services and instruments and measures enabling developing countries to benefit more from innovation in financial markets.

Also under the five-year programme, corporate restructuring assistance was provided to 15 companies to reflect economic policy adjustments made by their Governments. Concerning African initiatives, the Board of Directors approved loans of equity investments totalling $117 million for 24 business ventures. In May, IFC, in co-operation with UNDP and the African Development Bank, launched the Africa Project Development Facility to help African entrepreneurs and companies develop sound business ventures and find financing for their investments. With regard to energy, IFC initiated, appraised and negotiated the exploration of energy resources for its members, among them Argentina, Colombia, Ghana, Tunisia and Turkey. IFC was also involved in the appraisal and financing of oil projects in Argentina, Egypt and Yemen, and in the development of a coal project in Colombia. The Board of Directors approved $193 million for energy-related projects.

While continuing to borrow most of its funds from the World Bank, IFC borrowed $350 million from international capital markets, meeting a portion of its needs, by raising funds through seven private placements. During the year, IFC also borrowed $150 million in various currencies from the World Bank. On 26 December 1985, the IFC Board of Governors approved the Board of Directors' resolution to increase IFC's capital stock to $1,300 million with the authorization of $650 million in new shares.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA) was established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to provide assistance for the same purposes as the Bank, but primarily to poorer developing countries and on easier terms. Though legally and financially distinct from the Bank, IDA shares the same staff.

The funds used by IDA—called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans—come mostly from subscriptions in convertible currencies from members, general replenishments from its more industrialized and developed members, and transfers from the Bank's net earnings.

During the fiscal year 1986 (1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986), IDA continued to promote economic development, concentrating on countries with an annual per capita gross national product of less than $791 (in 1984 dollars). More than 50 countries were eligible under that criterion. Credits are interest-free, with a service charge to cover administrative costs of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and 0.5 per cent on undisbursed balances. After an initial grace period of 10 years, the credits are then repayable over 50 years.

Unlike the World Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are re-lent by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. Therefore, IDA terms assist Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

At the end of fiscal 1986, IDA cumulative resources totalled $39,177 million.

The bulk of IDA funds for lending is provided by its Part I (industrial) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements. Negotiations for the eighth replenishment of resources to provide IDA with funds for fiscal 1988-1990 were launched when the IDA Deputies (representatives of 31 donor countries) met in Paris (27 and 28 January). They met four more times in 1986 (Washington, D.C. 7 and 8 April; Paris, 15 and 16 July; Washington, D.C., 23-25 September; and Rome, 15 December) to discuss the size of the replenishment, burden-sharing, terms of IDA lending and allocations among country groups.

The donors agreed on a basic eighth replenishment of $11.5 billion, with normal burden-sharing arrangements. In addition, the following countries agreed to supplement their basic contributions: Canada, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Switzerland, United Kingdom. These supplementary resources brought the total funds available to IDA during the eighth replenishment period to $12.4 billion.

The United States and Japan maintained their seventh replenishment shares of 25 per cent and 18.7 per cent, respectively, while Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Republic of Korea, Spain and Sweden increased their shares.

Japan made its 18.7 per cent share and special contribution of $450 million contingent on an increase in its shareholding in the World Bank. Similarly, Italy, Canada, the Netherlands and the Republic of Korea conditioned increases in their IDA contributions on increases in their Bank shareholdings. The United States, which was authorized to subscribe to a certain amount of unsubscribed shares, indicated that it would release some of these shares to the Bank—contingent on progress made in amending the Bank's Articles of Agreement to increase to 85 per cent the majority of the total voting power required to amend the Articles further.

Membership of IDA rose to 135 in 1986 after the admission of Kiribati on 2 October.

Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa

During the year, Special Facility operations, totalling $782 million, were approved in 15 countries: Burundi, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Niger, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Togo, Zaire, Zambia. Structural-adjustment credits, together with reconstruction-imports credits, accounted for approximately 45 per cent of commitments. Sector-adjustment credits accounted for 40 per cent of commitments, while the remainder helped finance rehabilitation projects. Disbursements under the Special Facility, including $17.4 million from special joint financing, amounted to $119.1 million.

The Special Facility's resources increased during the year by the addition of Belgium, Ireland and the United States as direct contributors and by the addition of Belgium as a special joint financier.

Lending operations (credits)

By 30 June 1986, IDA had made cumulative net commitments totalling $39,822 million. Commitments in fiscal 1986 amounted to $3,139.9 million, of which $1,414.8 million went to six countries in South Asia and $717.8 million to 11 countries in eastern and southern Africa. India was the largest borrower with six credits amounting to $625.1 million, followed by Bangladesh, also with six credits ($463 million), and China with four ($450 million).

Agriculture and rural development

As in previous years, in fiscal 1986, credits for agriculture and rural development accounted for the largest portion of IDA lending; 32 credits totalling $1,015.7 million were committed in 23 countries.

Of credits totalling $471.1 million made to India, $399 million assisted in the construction and/or upgrading of irrigation and drainage systems in several states. China received two credits amounting to $150 million, of which $90 million helped develop aquaculture, orchards, agroprocessing and livestock enterprises in Fujian and Hunan provinces.

Other credits were for agricultural research and development, agro-industry, irrigation and drainage, fisheries, forestry and livestock.

Development finance companies

IDA extended seven credits totalling $124.5 million in fiscal 1986 to assist development finance companies. A credit of $28.5 million went to Ghana to support the Government's medium-term adjustment programme, which included policy reforms designed to streamline industrial capacity. China received a $25-million credit to support improvement in investment efficiency through imports of technology.

Other credits helped support efforts to promote private industrial investment and strengthen financial markets in Pakistan, to finance investments in small-scale enterprises in Rwanda, and to support rehabilitation and expansion investments of private and public sector enterprises, including technical assistance, in Sri Lanka. Zaire and Zambia received credits to upgrade their industrial sectors.

Education

Credits totalling $251.5 million for education projects were received by seven countries and the western Africa region during fiscal 1986.

China received $120 million to help 60 provincial universities and the State Education Commission expand enrolment and improve the quality and management of higher-education programmes. A $40.2-million credit to Pakistan was committed to improve the quality and expand the capacity of its vocational training system and to help meet requirements for skilled and semi-skilled manpower in industrial and rural sectors.

Other credits were extended to improve the quality of primary and secondary education, vocational training and teacher training.

Energy

Ten countries received credits totalling $381.8 million for energy-related projects in fiscal 1986.

Bangladesh received two credits totalling $135 million, of which $79 million helped expand the supply of electricity and finance the installation of electricity-distribution networks in rural areas. The remainder was committed to support the transmission and distribution system of the Bangladesh Power Development Board. Ethiopia was granted a $62-million credit to help establish a least-cost expansion programme for the power subsector and implement high-priority projects, including institution-building assistance to the Ethiopian Electric Light and Power Authority.

Industry

IDA extended three credits totalling $63.9 million for industry-related projects in fiscal 1986.

A credit of $50 million went to Zaire to support the Société Financière de Développement in its ongoing assistance to productive sectors, particularly private investments in manufacturing and agro-industries.

Other credits supported mining in Guinea and fertilizer and chemical operations in Zambia.

Non-project

IDA committed $421 million for nine non-project credits during fiscal 1986. Bangladesh received $200 million to help finance general imports. A $55-million credit was extended to Bolivia in support of the economic stabilization and structural reform programmes it had initiated in 1985. Zambia received $50 million to finance the minimum level of imports needed to sustain the country's recovery programme, including technical assistance.

Population, health and nutrition

Seven countries received credits totalling $252.9 million for projects in population, health and nutrition. A $78-million credit was extended to Bangladesh to support its family planning and maternal/child health programme. China's Ministry of Public Health received $65 million to help finance its rural health and preventive medicine project. India received $51 million to support a project aimed at reducing fertility and infant, child and maternal mortality.

Small-scale enterprises

Nepal was extended a credit of $10 million to assist cottage and small industries through term finance, and to strengthen public and private areas providing them with marketing, raw materials and training.

Technical assistance

Credits totalling $77.8 million were provided to five countries for technical assistance in fiscal year 1986. Of two credits totalling $20.3 million extended to Madagascar, $10.3 million went to train accountants, auditors, managers and procurement officers and to modernize the management and operation of public and private enterprises. China received $20 million to prepare projects to be financed by the World Bank or IDA, and to help prepare and implement investment projects and administer technical assistance. Of the two credits extended to Kenya totalling $17.5 million, $11.5 million helped to finance public sector institutions deliver key services and formulate and implement agricultural policy.

Other technical assistance supported petroleum and gas exploration activities, agricultural policy and services, macro-economic analysis and management.

Telecommunications

Two credits totalling $25.9 million were granted for telecommunications projects. Senegal received $22 million for a second project designed to improve operational efficiency and maintenance and increase system utilization. The Lao People's Democratic Republic was extended a $3.9-million credit to finance part of an investment programme emphasizing system rehabilitation and management improvement for posts and telecommunications during 1986-1990.

Transportation

IDA granted 10 credits totalling $244.4 million for transportation projects during fiscal 1986.

A credit of $70 million was granted to China to increase its railway capacity and improve railway operations and efficiency. A $50-million credit supported a programme to reduce transport constraints in the United Republic of Tanzania, including measures such as rehabilitating roads and equipment, assisting the trucking industry, training and technical assistance. Mali received $48.6 million to support a fifth highway project comprising a road maintenance and rehabilitation programme, an institution-building programme and reconstruction of the Bamako-Bougouni road.

Urban development

In fiscal 1986, four credits totalling $ 173 million were granted for urban development. Pakistan received $70 million to finance a project demonstrating the feasibility of new approaches to provide services to the urban poor and to improve basic urban services. India received $62 million to improve the planning, management and financing of urban growth in Gujarat State and to reduce deficits in urban shelter, infrastructure and services in participating cities.

Water supply and sewerage

Four countries received credits totalling $97.5 million for water supply and sewerage in fiscal

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

The world economic and financial situation changed substantially in 1986. Economic growth in the industrial countries slowed, real primary commodity prices continued to decline, external imbalances widened, protectionist actions intensified and the external financial situation of many developing countries deteriorated further. Although the rate of growth of 3.25 per cent for world output in 1986 was similar to that in 1985, the momentum of growth was weaker than expected. The shortfall in growth mainly reflected developments in the industrial countries, where the growth of real output slowed from 3.25 per cent in 1985 to 2.75 per cent in 1986. The growth performance of developing countries scarcely changed from 3.3 per cent in 1985 to 4.0 per cent in 1986.

On the positive side, while output in the industrial countries had been weaker than expected, it had nevertheless continued to rise at a moderate pace, making the recovery one of the longest in the post-war period. Moreover, inflation and interest rates declined significantly in most industrial and developing countries, and the correction to the pattern of exchange rates among major currencies, initiated in 1985, continued. A further positive development was the relatively smooth adjustment of oil-exporting developing countries to the adverse shifts in their terms of trade.

Against this background, IMF in 1986 continued to pay considerable attention to the issue of surveillance over the exchange rate policies of its members. In a major review of surveillance concluded on 12 February 1986, the IMF Executive Board endorsed a number of broad proposals put forward by the Group of 10 (industrial countries) and the Group of 24 (developing countries) and considered a number of proposals to strengthen surveillance. It expressed support for improving the analytical basis of surveillance, and strengthening the multilateral setting and the influence of the consultation process.

In May, steps were taken to reduce potentially destabilizing current account imbalances. The seven major industrial countries (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States), meeting at their twelfth economic summit (4-6 May, Tokyo), renewed their commitment to close and continuous co-ordination of national economic policies and established a new Group of Seven finance ministers to work together more closely and frequently. In their communiqué, known as the Tokyo Economic Declaration, the seven called on the ministers to review collectively economic objectives and forecasts, and proposed that they use a set of indicators of economic policies and performance. The participants also reaffirmed their intention to cooperate with IMF in strengthening multilateral surveillance and stressed the continued importance of a case-by-case approach to international debt problems. They also called for the early launching of a new round of trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Structural adjustment facility

In response to the particularly difficult economic and financial situation facing low-income developing countries, IMF established, in March 1986, a structural adjustment facility within the General Department of the Fund. The facility provided loans on concessional terms to low-income countries facing protracted balance-of-payment problems and undertaking comprehensive efforts to strengthen their balance-of-payments positions. Arrangements under the facility required adopting a three-year structural adjustment programme. The policy framework for the three-year period was developed with the assistance of the staffs of IMF and the World Bank, working in close collaboration. The initial resources made available under the facility, measured in special drawing rights (SDRs)—the Fund's unit of account—were SDR 2.7 billion derived from repayments of Trust Fund loans.

At its inception, 62 countries were eligible for assistance under the facility. However, the two largest, China and India, indicated that they did not anticipate acute or persistent balance-of-payments needs and did not intend to use the facility. In August 1986, Burundi became the first country to avail itself of the facility. By the end of the year, arrangements were in effect with nine countries. A total of SDR 192.3 million was committed under these arrangements, of which SDR 81.8 million was disbursed during the year.

Access to IMF resources

The Fund's policy of enlarged access to its resources enabled it to provide borrowed resources to members whose balance-of-payments deficits were large in relation to their quotas and which needed resources in larger amounts and for longer periods than were available under regular credit tranches. The Executive Board reviewed the enlarged access policy on 1 December 1986 and decided to continue it in 1987 with access limits kept unchanged at 1986 levels. Access would be subject to annual limits of 90 or 110 per cent of quota, three-year limits of 270 or 330 per cent of quota, and cumulative limits of 400 or 440 per cent of quota. Access in individual cases—which in exceptional circumstances could exceed these limits—were determined primarily on the basis of the seriousness of the member's balance-of-payments need, the strength of its adjustment efforts and its ability to repay the Fund.

Financial assistance

The Fund in 1986 provided financial assistance amounting to a total of SDR 3.9 billion, about the same as in 1985. Of the total, SDR 3.8 billion was disbursed from the Fund's General Resources Account and SDR 0.1 billion was provided under the structural adjustment facility (see above).

There was a decline of SDR 0.2 billion in total purchases from the General Resources Account in 1986, as compared with the previous year. This reflected, in part, the achievement of external viability of some countries under earlier adjustment programmes and the fact that some members were precluded from access to the Fund resources because of overdue obligations to the Fund. Of the purchases in 1986, 77 per cent were in the upper credit tranches (above 25 per cent of a member's quota) which required substantial justification, were subject to the observance of performance criteria and were made available in instalments. Purchases under stand-by arrangements totalled SDR 2.7 billion, compared with SDR 2.6 billion in 1985, while those under extended arrangements amounted to SDR 0.3 billion, as against SDR 0.4 billion in 1985. At the end of 1986, there were 30 stand-by arrangements and one extended arrangement in effect between the Fund and its members, with a total approved value of SDR 5.1 billion.

Purchases under the compensatory financing facility, designed to compensate for temporary shortfalls in export receipts or for sharp increases in cereal import costs that were beyond the control of members, were 0.6 billion in 1986, some 40 per cent below the level of the previous year. For the second consecutive year, there were no purchases under the buffer stock financing facility, which supports members' contributions to Fund-approved international buffer stocks set up to stabilize certain commodity prices.

In 1986, emergency purchases from the Fund, which helped members to meet foreign exchange needs arising from natural disasters, totalled SDR 0.3 billion.

Reserve tranche drawings, representing the use of reserves held by members with the Fund, more than doubled to SDR 0.4 billion in 1986. Such drawings did not constitute purchases from the Fund and were not subject to repurchase or repayment requirements.

For the first time since 1979, repurchases exceeded purchases in 1986, resulting in a reduction of outstanding Fund credit of SDR 1.9 billion. Repurchases amounted to SDR 5.7 billion during the year, compared with SDR 3.6 billion in 1985. The high level of repurchases underscored the revolving character of Fund resources and reflected the substantial purchases made in the early 1980s, particularly after the onset of the debt crisis in 1982.

IMF-World Bank collaboration

Co-operation between IMF and the World Bank intensified in 1986, especially with respect to those countries receiving loans under the structural adjustment facility. The facility calls for a member country to develop a medium-term policy framework with the assistance of the staffs of the Fund and the Bank.

IMF-Bank collaboration continued with respect to other countries in which both institutions were actively involved. In 1986, IMF staff participated in 17 Bank missions while Bank staff participated in 15 IMF missions. There were also many instances where IMF and Bank missions overlapped, in which the two institutions collaborated in the field.

Liquidity

The Fund's liquid resources comprised usable currencies and SDRs in the General Resources Account, supplemented, when necessary, by borrowed resources. Usable currencies were the largest component, comprising currencies of members whose balance of payments and gross reserve positions were considered sufficiently strong for their currencies to be sold through the quarterly operational budgets. The stock of usable ordinary resources remained broadly unchanged, relative to a year earlier, at SDR 38.4 billion at the end of 1986. Borrowed resources available to finance the policy on enlarged access totalled SDR 6.7 billion at the end of 1986, compared with SDR 4.5 billion in 1985.

During 1986, the Fund borrowed SDR 0.8 billion and repaid SDR 2.0 billion, resulting in a net decrease of SDR 1.2 billion in total outstanding borrowing to SDR 13.5 billion at the end of 1986. All new borrowing was undertaken to finance the enlarged access policy whereas repayments were in respect of borrowings under both enlarged access and the supplementary financing facility.

In December 1986, the Fund entered into a new borrowing agreement with Japan, allowing the Fund to draw an amount equivalent to SDR 3 billion during a period of four years from the date of the first drawing. The period was subject to a maximum two-year extension if warranted in the light of the Fund's liquidity and borrowing requirements.

SDR activity

Total transfers of SDRs decreased to SDR 15.7 billion in 1986 from SDR 15.9 billion in 1985. As a result of transferring SDR 5.6 billion to its members and receiving SDR 4.4 billion from them, IMF holdings declined by SDR 1.1 billion. In transfers, IMF provided SDR 2 billion to members making purchases in support of their economic adjustment programmes and paid SDR 2.6 billion to its credit members in remuneration, loan payments, and interest payments. It sold SDR 1 billion to members that needed to acquire SDRs against payment of other members' currencies in order to pay IMF charges. IMF received SDR 2.6 billion in charges, SDR 1.5 billion in repurchases and some SDR 0.3 billion in quota subscriptions by new members and interest on its SDR holdings.

Transactions and operations in SDRs among members and official institutions authorized to hold SDRs increased to 5.7 billion in 1986, from SDR 5 billion in 1985. These transfers comprised SDR 3.4 billion of transactions entered into voluntarily, SDR 1.5 billion in transactions with designation, and SDR 0.8 billion in other operations. Under transactions with designation, participants having sufficiently strong international financial positions were designated by the Fund to provide a usable currency in exchange for SDRs used by other participants for balance-of-payments reasons.

Policy on arrears

In 1986, IMF continued to experience delays in the payment of financial obligations by its members. Although the number of members (eight) in arrears for six months or more at the end of 1986 was the same as a year earlier, the amounts overdue increased substantially to SDR 1 billion compared to 0.6 billion at the end of 1985. During 1986, three members were declared ineligible to use the general resources of the Fund in view of their overdue obligations to the General Resources Account. Earlier declarations of ineligibility with respect to two members remained in effect. Those five members in ineligible status accounted for almost 80 per cent of the total overdue obligations to the Fund at the end of 1986.

In view of the problem of overdue obligations, the Executive Board took some steps during the year to strengthen the Fund's financial position. It raised the net income target from 5 per cent to 7.5 per cent of reserves. The increase was financed jointly by a higher rate of charge on the use of the Fund's ordinary resources and a lower rate of remuneration on remunerated reserve tranche positions. The Board also decided that the shortfall in income resulting from the deferral of charges due from members in arrears for six months or more would be compensated by further upward adjustments in the rate of charge and reductions in the rate of remuneration. Partly as a result of these measures, and after a retroactive reduction in the rate of charge from 6 per cent to 5.89 per cent at the end of the year, the Fund recorded a net income of SDR 86 million for the financial year 1986-1987 (ending 30 April 1987), compared with SDR 78 million for 1985-1986.

In February, a system of special charges on overdue obligations was instituted to recover direct financial costs to IMF resulting from members' late payments of obligations.

Publications

Publications issued by IMF in 1986 included the Annual Report of the Executive Board, the Annual Report on Exchange Arrangements and Exchange Restrictions, Balance of Payments Statistics (monthly and Yearbook), Direction of Trade Statistics (monthly and Yearbook), Government Finance Statistics Yearbook, International Financial Statistics (monthly, Yearbook and two supplements) and the World Economic Outlook.

Periodicals included the quarterlies Staff Papers and Finance and Development (published jointly with the World Bank), the IMF Survey (published 23 times a year) and the monthly IMF Memorandum. Also published were explanatory pamphlets on the workings of IMF, and papers on subjects of interest to the international financial community.

Membership

During 1986, membership of IMF rose to 151 in 1986 with the admission of Kiribati on 3 June, and Poland on 12 June.

Secretariat

As of 31 December 1986, the total full-time staff of IMF—including permanent, fixed-term and temporary employees—was 1,950, drawn from 102 nationalities.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) facilitates the safety and efficiency of civil air transport. As an intergovernmental regulatory organization, its objectives are set down in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944) which prescribe standards, recommended practices and procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations.

ICAO estimated total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be some 178 billion tonne-kilometres during 1986, an increase of more than 6 per cent over 1985. The airlines carried in excess of 950 million passengers, also more than 6 per cent more than in 1985. The number of seats offered increased at a greater rate than passengers carried, reducing the estimated passenger load factor to 65 per cent, one point less than in 1985. Air freight increased by over 8 per cent to some 43 billion tonne-kilometres. Airmail traffic increased by 1 per cent.

During the year, the ICAO Council held three regular sessions. In February, the Council condemned Israel for its interception of a Libyan civil aircraft (see also p. 309). It later adopted new procedures to be employed by States relating to the interception of civil aircraft within their own airspace. The Council also considered a request from Israel relating to threats by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya against the safety of civil aviation. Work continued on ICAO's role in combating the illicit transport of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances by air.

The ICAO Assembly, which meets triennially, held its twenty-sixth session at Montreal, Canada, from 23 September to 10 October 1986.

In 1986, membership of ICAO rose to 157 with the admission of the Cook Islands on 19 September.

Activities in 1986Air navigation

During 1986, ICAO's efforts in air navigation continued to be directed towards updating and implementing ICAO Specifications and Regional Plans. The Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical annexes to the Chicago Convention, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS) contained in three PANS documents. Regional Plans set forth air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

The Specifications in seven annexes and in two PANS documents were amended. Amendments were also made to Regional Plans.

Eight air navigation meetings covering a wide range of subjects recommended changes to ICAO Specifications. To promote their uniform application, ICAO made available guidance material—new and revised technical manuals and ICAO circulars—to assist States in establishing and maintaining an up-to-date and effective aeronautical infrastructure.

ICAO regional offices assisted States in implementing Regional Plans. Their work was supplemented by that of experts sent to advise States on installing new facilities and services and on operating existing ones.

During the year, special attention was given to: aircraft airworthiness and operations; environmental protection; accident investigation and prevention; transport of dangerous goods; illicit transport of drugs; helicopter operations; personnel licensing and training; aviation medicine; aerodromes; telecommunications; rules of the air and air traffic services; search and rescue; meteorology; aeronautical charts and information services; audio-visual training aids; future air navigation systems; and safeguarding international civil aviation against acts of unlawful interference.

Air transport

ICAO continued in 1986 its programmes of economic studies, collecting and publishing air transport statistics, and promoting greater facilitation in international air transport.

The panel on fares and rates (Montreal, November/December) initiated work on defining a tariff, baggage allowances and charges, abusive use of computer reservation systems, electronic filing of tariffs and States' requirements for information on conferences of the International Air Transportation Association (IATA). A technical advisory group on machine-readable passports (Montreal, June) updated ICAO specifications on such passports and discussed problems that had arisen from their introduction. Workshops were held on airport and route facility management (Nairobi, Kenya, July; Prague, Czechoslovakia, December); aviation forecasting and economic planning (Lima, Peru, April); international fares and rates (Bahrain, January; Tunis, Tunisia, February; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, May); and statistics (Lima, April). A facilitation area meeting discussed problems in the Asia and Pacific region (Bangkok, Thailand, November).

ICAO publications in 1986 included the triennial review of the economic situation of air transport covering the period 1975-1985, a study of air passenger and freight transport development in Asia and the Pacific, a revised edition of the manual on route air navigation facility economics, the 1985 edition of the manual of airport and air navigation facility tariffs, the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on world civil aviation statistics, a study of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport in 1984 and a survey of international air transport fares and rates in 1985.

ICAO continued to co-operate closely with other international organizations such as IATA, the Airport Associations Co-ordinating Council, the Customs Co-operation Council, the World Tourism Organization and the Universal Postal Union. It also continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

Following a 1982 conference to amend the 1956 Danish and Icelandic joint financing agreements for air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands, and in Iceland, the two agreements as amended were provisionally applied from 1 January 1983. By the end of 1986, the protocols of amendment had been accepted by 16 of the 20 Governments that are parties to the agreements.

Legal matters

The Legal Committee did not meet in 1986. However, the ICAO Assembly adopted its Legal Commission's recommendations and decisions regarding the Committee's general work programme. In the light of a decision of the twenty-third (1980) Assembly session, reconfirmed by the 1986 Assembly, that only problems of sufficient magnitude and practical importance requiring urgent international action should be included, the Committee's work programme contained the following items: development of an instrument for the suppression of unlawful acts of violence at airports serving international civil aviation; implications of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea^a for the application of the Chicago Convention; liability of air traffic control agencies; study of the legal instruments of the Warsaw System (the 1929 Warsaw Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air, as amended by the Protocols of 1955, 1971 and 1975); and preparation of a draft instrument on the interception of civil aircraft.

The Assembly adopted a resolution calling on the Council to include in the Committee's work programme a proposal presented by 38 States for the development of an instrument for the suppression of unlawful acts of violence at airports serving international civil aviation and to accord the item the highest priority. It also called on the Council to convene during the first part of 1987 a meeting of the Legal Committee to prepare such a draft instrument, with a view to adopting it at a conference before the end of 1987. In November, the Council approved the Committee's work programme and decided to convene a session of the Committee's special sub-committee established by the Committee's Chairman to consider the matter at Montreal from 20 to 30 January 1987 and to convene the twenty-sixth session of the Legal Committee from 28 April to 13 May 1987.

The Assembly decided that the ICAO Secretary-General should continue to monitor the work of the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and bring to the Council's attention subjects requiring study by the Legal Committee without duplicating that work.

The following conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were ratified or adhered to during 1986:

Technical assistance

During 1986, ICAO provided technical assistance to 95 States; in 46 of these, there were resident missions consisting of one or more experts. In addition to resident expertise, assistance was provided in the form of equipment, fellowships and scholarships and through short missions by experts.

Six new large-scale projects, each costing more than $500,000, for which ICAO was the executing agency, were approved by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Two large-scale projects were financed under trust fund assistance.

ICAO employed 549 experts (some in two or more programmes) from 36 countries during all or part of 1986, 399 on assignment under UNDP and 150 on trust fund projects (including eight under the associate experts programme). There were also 31 United Nations Volunteers. The number of experts in the field at the end of 1986 was 216, as compared with 282 at the end of 1985.

A total of 1,379 fellowships were awarded in 1986 (1,177 in 1985), of which 1,311 were implemented.

Equipment purchases and sub-contracts continued to represent a substantial proportion of the technical assistance programme. Forty-eight Governments or organizations had registered with ICAO under the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. The total for equipment and sub-contracts committed during 1986 amounted to some $17 million.

The following countries and Territories were aided:

Leone, Swaziland, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

America: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bolivia, Brazil, Cayman Islands, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Honduras, Netherlands Antilles, Panama, Peru, Saint Lucia, Trinidad and Tobago, Turks and Caicos Islands, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Asia/Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, China, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Indonesia, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tonga, Viet Nam.

Europe, Mediterranean and the Middle East: Algeria, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Greece, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Oman, Poland, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Included in the above were the following, aided under trust fund arrangements: Argentina, Bolivia, Brunei Darussalam, Gape Verde, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Iraq, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Maldives, Nigeria, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO Secretariat stood at 887: 325 in the Professional and higher categories, drawn from 73 nationalities, and 562 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 218 persons were employed in regional offices. In addition, there were 125 in the Professional category serving as technical experts on UNDP field projects.

Budget

Appropriations for the 1986 financial year totalled $39,107,000. Modifications were approved by the ICAO Council and are reflected below (in United States dollars):

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services. It also furthers the development of international collaboration and participates, at the request of its members, in various forms of postal technical assistance.

In 1986, UPU membership remained unchanged at 168.

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU and normally meets every five years. The most recent Congress (the nineteenth) took place at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, in 1984 and the twentieth was scheduled to meet at Washington, D.C., in 1989.

The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union based on proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies, and of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities. The Acts in force since 1 January 1986 were those of the 1984 Hamburg Congress.

Executive Council

At its 1986 session, held at Berne from 22 April to 8 May, the 40-member Executive Council—which carries out the work of UPU between Congress sessions by maintaining close contact with postal administrations, exercising control over the International Bureau (the UPU secretariat), promoting technical assistance and working with the United Nations and other organizations—considered administrative matters and examined studies concerning international mail referred to it by the 1984 Congress.

Among other questions reviewed by the Council were expedited mail service; rate-fixing for letter-post items; basic airmail conveyance rates; postal financial services; postal shipment of scientific specimens containing hazardous substances; customs treatment of postal items; and transit charges and terminal dues.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The Consultative Council for Postal Studies continued in 1986 its studies of various technical, economic and operational problems affecting postal administrations of UPU member States, including matters of particular interest to new and developing countries.

The annual meeting of the Council (Berne, 20-31 October) dealt mainly with the launching of studies in the 1984-1989 work programme and the application of available resources. In addition, the Council's working parties, symposia and committees studied questions relating to the 1984 Declaration of Hamburg—which stressed that UPU must "actively participate in strengthening the international postal service as a whole and in improving the standard and speed of international mail circulation and postal exchanges"—and expedited mail service. During the year, work continued on preparing the fifth edition of the Multilingual Vocabulary of the International Postal Service. The Council also dealt with technical co-operation and electronic mail services.

International Bureau

Under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, the International Bureau—the UPU secretariat—continued to serve the postal administrations of member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

During 1986, the Bureau co-ordinated, published and disseminated international postal service information. At the request of postal administrations, it also conducted inquiries and acted as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them.

As at 31 December 1986, the number of permanent and temporary staff members employed by the UPU secretariat was 139, of whom 56 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 47 countries) and 83 in the General Service category. Also, as French remained the sole official UPU language, 15 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services.

Technical co-operation

In 1986, technical co-operation provided by UPU was financed for the most part by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP);

UNDP/UPU project expenditures amounted to some $2.3 million. Assistance was also provided through the UPU Special Fund (voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States) and the regular budget. Total expenditures from these two sources in 1986 amounted to approximately $1.5 million. In addition, postal administrations provided assistance on a bilateral and multilateral basis.

UPU participated in the programming work concerning countries which had submitted their programmes to the June session of the UNDP Governing Council. Regional and interregional programmes concerning postal services were carried out under UNDP in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, the Caribbean and Latin America. Sixty-two expert missions were undertaken and 186 fellowships were awarded. Assistance in the form of equipment was provided for projects in Bangladesh, Chad, the Congo, Guinea, Liberia, Madagascar, the Philippines, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and Thailand.

The Special Fund and the regular budget funded missions by experts and consultants, scholarships for training, instruction materials and equipment. During 1986, 32 consultants carried out technical missions in 48 postal administrations and 64 fellowships were granted for training courses and technical meetings.

Fellowships and training courses were also offered by several countries during the year.

Budget

Under UPU's self-financing system, contributions are payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. At its 1986 session, the Executive Council approved a budget of 24,761,900 Swiss francs for 1987 (see table).

	Amount fin Swiss francs)
Income
Contributions from member States	22,497,420

Total	24,761,900*

* Equal to $15,191,349 on the basis of 1.63 Swiss francs = $US 1.00.

Each member State chooses its class of contribution, on a scale of 0.5 to 50 units. For 1987, the Executive Council fixed the amount of the contributory unit at 22,980 Swiss francs on the basis of a total of 979 units. The following table gives assessments by class of contribution.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

During 1986, membership of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) rose to 161 with the admission of Kiribati on 3 November.

Administrative Council

The forty-first session of the Administrative Council of ITU, held from 16 to 27 June 1986 at Geneva, reviewed administrative and financial matters, considered reports on ITU activities and examined the development of telecommunications in developing countries. The Council also approved a financial plan aimed at offsetting a short-fall in income for the period 1981-1983.

The Council set up a panel of experts to review the long-term future of the International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB), one of ITU's four permanent organs. It also drew up an agenda for the second (1988) sessions of the World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC) on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit and the planning of space services utilizing it and of the Regional Administrative Radio Conference to establish a plan for the broadcasting service in the band 1,605-1,705 kHz (kilohertz) in Region 2 (the Americas).

Administrative radio conferences

At its first session (Geneva, 14 April-1 May), the Regional Administrative Radio Conference for services in the frequency band 1,605-1,705 kHz in Region 2 adopted, for submission to the second session, a technical report covering: definitions, symbols and units; radiation characteristics of transmitting antennas; technical criteria for interservice sharing; planning; guidelines for an agreement; and preparatory work for the second session. It also established guidelines for inter-session work to be carried out by the Region's administrations and by ITU technical secretariats.

The Regional Administrative Radio Conference for the planning of VHF/UHF (very high frequency/ultra-high frequency) television broadcasting in the African broadcasting area and neighbouring countries (Nairobi, Kenya, 22 September-9 October) prepared the technical bases for establishing a new regional frequency assignment plan for television broadcasting to replace the existing plan drawn up in 1963. In addition to establishing the technical criteria and proposing a planning method for the broadcasting service, the Conference examined compatibility problems relating to other services operating in the same frequency bands. The Conference adopted a report, providing instructions and guidelines for the work to be carried out by ITU's permanent organs, including studies in wave propagation and planning exercises in preparation for its second session, expected to take place in 1989.

International consultative committees

During 1986, the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) began a new study period—1986 to 1990—with the meeting of its sixteenth plenary assembly (Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, 12-23 May). The assembly reviewed CCIR's organization and working methods, as well as technical co-operation matters, and approved a work programme for the four-year study period. Questions were approved for study in that period and arrangements were set for future administrative radio conferences. In addition, the assembly approved 160 new or revised recommendations on system characteristics and performance standards for radio communication and technical bases for use of the frequency spectrum. The work programmes of the study groups for the new period began in interim working parties in preparation for 1987-1988 study group meetings. Technical bases prepared by CCIR were provided to 1986 administrative radio conferences and a CCIR special study group prepared technical bases for the 1987 WARC on mobile services. CCIR also participated with the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) in their joint Regional Plan Committee for Asia and Oceania and in ITU seminars and technical co-operation activities. By the end of 1986, 11 of the 20 volumes containing reports and recommendations forming the basis for standardization of radio communications had been published.

Activities of CCITT study groups and working parties focused on preparing recommendations and replies to questions referred to them by the eighth (1984) plenary assembly. Technical experts, at 452 meetings, prepared several new draft recommendations or modifications of existing recommendations. In addition to participating in the selection of experts for technical co-operation development projects, CCITT special autonomous groups carried out studies on questions of interest to developing countries. The results were expected to be completed for submission to the 1988 plenary assembly.

International Frequency Registration Board

The major activities of IFRB during 1986 included follow-up action on decisions of: the 1984 Regional Administrative Radio Conference for FM (frequency modulation) sound broadcasting in bands 87.5-108 megahertz in Region 1 (Africa and Europe) and certain countries of Region 3 (Asia and Australasia); the 1985 Regional Administrative Conference for the planning of the MF (medium frequency) maritime mobile and aeronautical radio-navigation service in Region 1; the first (1985) session of the WARC on the use of the geostationary-satellite orbit; the first (1984) session of the WARC on high-frequency broadcasting; and the 1981 Regional Administrative MF Broadcasting Conference for Region 2.

Other IFRB activities included the publication of 17,522 monitoring reports by administrations concerning broadcasting stations; special monitoring campaigns resulting in more than 75,000 observations of short-wave stations; participation in conferences; organization of seminars; preparations for the 1987 WARC on mobile services; and examination of, and recording in the Master International Frequency Register, 86,192 frequency assignment notices received from member countries. At the end of 1986, the Register contained particulars of some 1,024,500 assignments, representing about 4,279,900 records.

Technical co-operation

Under various ITU programmes of technical co-operation in developing countries during 1986, 602 expert missions were carried out, 1,053 fellows were undergoing training abroad, and equipment valued at $6,239,810 was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. Total assistance amounted to $27.2 million.

The following countries and Territories were aided:

The Americas: Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago.

Asia and the Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, China, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Tokelau, Tonga, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, Viet Nam.

Europe and the Middle East: Albania, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Greece, Hungary, Jordan, Kuwait, Oman, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Yemen.

The three main objectives of ITU technical co-operation continued to be: promoting development of regional telecommunications networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia, the Pacific, the Middle East and the Mediterranean Basin; strengthening telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and developing human resources required for telecommunications.

ITU continued to promote development of regional telecommunication networks and their integration into the world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with objectives established by the World Plan Committee and regional plan committees.

The Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTEL), with its basic structure designed to interconnect countries without transit beyond the continent, continued to make steady progress in 1986; apart from the Central African subregion, all PANAFTEL structures had been installed. In addition to the land and submarine cable network, 41 of the 45 countries south of the Sahara had satellite earth stations. Work progressed on operational agreements on co-ordination, tariffs and maintenance. Studies were carried out on establishing regional and subregional offices to deal with international accounting for telecommunication services. ITU assisted telecommunications administrations in Africa to formulate master plans for their operations. In addition, PANAFTEL maintenance was emphasized, as was the need for plans to improve maintenance. By the end of 1986, 26 countries had approved such plans and were initiating their implementation.

Substantial progress was made in preparing a feasibility study on the implementation of a regional telecommunication satellite system for the Regional African Satellite Communication System.

In the Americas, a large number of projects were under way during the year to strengthen administrative and planning services. While there was no ITU-executed project aimed at the development of a regional network, ITU continued to foster the development of the network by supporting national and regional organizations responsible for such activities. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and ITU jointly organized a seminar (Santiago, Chile, May) on the economic and social impact of telecommunications on development in the region. ITU co-operated in the activities of the Inter-American Telecommunications Conference, the Regional Technical Committee for Telecommunications in Central America and the Latin American and Caribbean Broadcasting Union.

Through a regional project, ITU assisted six of the Asian and Pacific region's least developed countries—Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Nepal and Samoa—in upgrading telecommunication networks and services in rural areas. A satellite feasibility study for inter-atoll telecommunications in Maldives was completed, as was a master plan for development of telecommunication services in Samoa. Plans for village-level development began in Nepal and assistance was given to the Lao People's Democratic Republic in commissioning a rural radio concentrator and a VHF pilot rural telecommunication system.

Under a UNDP/ITU regional programme, ITU organized two training courses in 1986 on fibre optic technology and on computer-aided network planning. ITU organized a training course in amateur radio administration, in association with Japan, the Japanese Amateur Radio League and the International Amateur Radio Union; it also co-operated with China in organizing an international seminar on land mobile services.

Assistance to countries in the South Pacific was provided through a regional project which aimed to establish reliable telecommunications services for island countries in the area. Under the project, technical assistance was provided for installing a computerized billing system in a number of countries, developing a computerized management system, upgrading maritime communications and introducing commercial accounting practices and systems.

Training projects in Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Federated States of Micronesia, Papua New Guinea and Sri Lanka included assistance in digital network planning and switching, upgrading of training centres (for computer-based training laboratories, satellite terminals for distance education and improved infrastructure for the management of training resources), radio frequency management, monitoring and rural telecommunications and maintenance.

At the end of 1986, all projects of the 1978 Middle East and Mediterranean telecommunication network plan (MEDARABTEL) had been implemented in the 29 member administrations. The first phase of the European regional project to introduce new and appropriate international telecommunication technologies, as well as modern tools and methods for maintenance and operations, was completed in December. The translation and Arabization of telecommunication terms ended in September. Assistance was provided to the ARABSAT satellite system to locate an orbital position for a third satellite.

National projects were also geared towards strengthening technical capabilities and were carried out in Albania (planning and installation), Bulgaria (research), Cyprus (frequency management), Democratic Yemen (planning, installation, maintenance and management), Greece (management), Kuwait (planning), Qatar (development of sound broadcasting and television), Saudi Arabia (development of training management) and Yemen (management and operations).

Training activities

Under the project on course development in telecommunications in 1986, 147 people attended training development workshops. By the end of 1986, 500 training courses were available through the ITU sharing system and 485 were being developed. Information was collected for an updated version of the Catalogue of Telecommunication Training Opportunities, containing information on more than 700 courses open to trainees. Regional meetings for co-ordinating training activities were held by countries in eastern and southern Africa, Europe and the Middle East, and by French-speaking African countries.

Publications

In 1986, the Telecommunication Economics Unit of the Technical Co-operation Department published a report, "Information, telecommunications and development", summarizing existing research results. Another publication, Investing in Telecommunications, proposed action for a sound development strategy and contained guidelines for investing in telecommunications and sources for funding.

Publications issued in 1986 by ITU in either trilingual or separate English, French and Spanish editions included:

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the total staff of ITU numbered 750 officials (excluding staff on short-term contracts). Of these, nine were elected officials, 588 had permanent contracts and 153 had fixed-term contracts; 70 nationalities were represented in the posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The following budget for 1986 was adopted by the Administrative Council in 1985:

	Amount fin Swiss francs)
Income
Contribution by members and private operating agencies	102,049,000
Contribution by UNDP and funds-in-trust for technical co-operation administrative expenses	6,474,000
Sales of publications	8,994,000
Total	117,517,000
Expenditure
Administrative Council	666,500
Common headquarters expenditure	84,945,000
Conferences and meetings	12,856,500
Technical co-operation	15,755,300
Publications	8,993,490
Total	123,216,790

Each member of ITU chooses the class of contribution in which it wishes to be included and pays in advance its annual contributory share to the budget (see Annex I below). Classes vary from 1/8 (only for least developed countries) to 30 units.

The amount of the contributory unit for 1986 was 232,200 Swiss francs; the unit for 1987 was to be 231,800 Swiss francs.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The membership of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) as at 31 December 1986 remained at 154 States and 5 Territories.

During the year, WMO carried out its activities in accordance with the programmes and budget adopted in 1983 for the period 1984-1987 by its highest body, the World Meteorological Congress, which meets at least once every four years. The 36-member Executive Council meets annually to supervise the implementation of programmes and regulations.

Activities in 1986World Weather Watch

The World Weather Watch (WWW), the basic programme of WMO, continued to provide in 1986 global observational data and processed information required by member States for operational and research purposes. Its essential elements were the Global Data-Processing System (GDPS), which provided for the processing, storage and retrieval of observational data and made available processed information; the Global Observing System (GOS), whereby observational data were obtained; and the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), which offered telecommunication facilities for the rapid collection, exchange and distribution of observational data and processed information.

The activities of GOS continued under its two sub-systems, one surface-based and the other space-based, which were directed towards improving the operation of GOS at the global, regional and national levels. The surface-based sub-system provided conventional data from regional basic synoptic networks, other observational networks of stations on land and at sea, aircraft meteorological observations, and climatological, agricultural meteorological and special stations. In the space-based sub-system, meteorological satellites in both near-polar-orbiting and geostationary systems took direct observations. GOS provided member States with both quantitative information, derived from instrument measurements, such as atmospheric pressure, humidity, air temperature and wind velocity, and qualitative information aimed at describing phenomena by providing information on the state of the sky, forms of clouds and types of precipitation.

Meteorological satellite systems operated by member States continued to provide valuable information. Progress was achieved in developing observation systems involving new technology to improve global coverage of observational data, especially from the oceans and other remote and data-sparse areas. Two important elements for improving GOS—the aircraft-to-satellite data relay system for automatic meteorological observations from wide-bodied commercial aircraft and the Automatic Shipboard Aerological Programme for upper-air observations from merchant ships and drifting-buoy systems—were expected to remain operational until 1989.

With regard to GDPS, attention focused on the regional structure of data processing, including the preparation of co-operative projects to establish specialized meteorological centres and computer networks. GTS comprised 237 established point-to-point circuits in addition to radio broadcasts and satellite dissemination systems.

Ocean affairs

In 1986, WMO continued to promote marine meteorological services over the high seas and coastal areas and the application of marine climatological information for planning marine activities. The Advisory Working Group of the Commission for Marine Meteorology reviewed progress in the Commission's activities and began planning for the Commission's tenth (1988) session. The Commission continued work on implementation of the WMO Wave Programme, improvement in the quality, quantity and timeliness of marine climatological data, expansion of marine meteorological services in developing countries, further development of a global digital sea-ice data bank, marine telecommunications and the WMO Second Long-term Plan.

In addition to marine activities co-ordinated by the Commission, other ocean-related activities, such as observations of surface and sub-surface temperature, salinity and currents, were carried out by the Integrated Global Ocean Services System, a joint WMO/Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission programme.

Aviation

At its eighth session, the WMO Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology (Geneva, 4-14 November) reviewed the status of the World Area Forecast System and adopted the Aeronautical Meteorology Programme for the next four years.

It considered the value of air reports and the monitoring and quality control of aeronautical observational data and forecasts. Noting the rapid development in the application of modern forecast techniques, the Commission resolved to establish a working group on advanced techniques applied to aeronautical meteorology. It emphasized specialized training in aeronautical meteorology and co-operation with other WMO bodies and international organizations, particularly the International Civil Aviation Organization. An amendment to the WMO Technical Regulations introduced provisions relating to the transmission of wind-shear information beyond the aerodrome, criteria for issuing selected special reports, inclusion of cloud information in aerodrome forecasts, flight documentation for short-haul flights, format of the SIGMET message, meteorological bulletin headings and changes in units of measurement and method of referencing time.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

Effective forecasting and warning systems continued to be provided through five regional tropical cyclone bodies. In 1986, the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme, which provided guidance for the performance of meteorological instruments and methods of observation, emphasized regional and global intercomparisons of instruments. Activities aimed at updating regulatory material, developing algorithms for automated surface and upper-air measurements and formulating new standards for maintaining high-quality data.

World Climate Programme

The World Climate Programme, established in 1979, continued to aid nations in applying climate information to human activities, to improve the knowledge of climate processes and to warn nations of natural and man-made changes that might affect the well-being of humanity. To meet those objectives, the responsibilities were divided among four components: the World Climate Applications Programme (WCAP), the World Climate Data Programme (WCDP), the World Climate Impact Studies Programme (WCIP) and the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP).

Within WCAP, attention continued to focus on the priority areas of food, water and energy, along with work in urban climatology, human health, transportation and tourism. The first WMO training seminar in energy-meteorology was organized, with 30 participants from 22 countries taking part in the regional training workshop on the presentation and use of meteorological data for solar and wind energy development (Niamey, Niger, 17-28 November). A short-term mission on solar-radiation measurements and solar-radiation data processing, presentation and applications (Panama, 13-26 April) increased the total number of such missions to 30 since late 1981. WMO participated in the fifth session of the United Nations Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (NRSE) (Geneva, 19-21 February), and was represented at the Regional Consultative Meeting for the Mobilization of Financial Resources for the Development of NRSE in Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 25-27 November). WMO also took part in the thirteenth Congress of the World Energy Conference (Cannes, France, 5-11 October). The Congress discussed possible man-made climate changes and policy consequences for energy decision-making.

At a WMO/UNEP Symposium on Climate and Human Health (Leningrad, USSR, September), 126 participants from 28 countries participated in deliberations among meteorologists, physicians, biologists, planners and architects.

The primary objective of WCDP was to ensure the timely availability of reliable climate data in an acceptable format to support climate applications, impact studies and research. Progress was made in developing a project for the transfer of technology in processing and applying climatological data.

Activities under WCIP were carried out by UNEP in co-operation with WMO. In March 1986, the UNEP Scientific Advisory Committee for WCIP held discussions in Warsaw, Poland, on developing national climate programmes with impact components. An Advisory Group on Greenhouse Gases, established by the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU), UNEP and WMO (Geneva, 1 and 2 July), stressed the need to improve the basic understanding of the climate system and its response to natural and man-made forcing mechanisms. The Group suggested alleviating the greenhouse gas problem through energy conservation and substitution of alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons. WCIP also held a training course in agrometeorology in October at Alma-Ata, USSR.

WCRP was conducted jointly by WMO and ICSU to determine the extent to which climate could be predicted and the extent of man's influence on climate. Research continued to focus on: the physical basis and feasibility of predicting weather anomalies (on a time-scale of one to two months); variability, particularly resulting from interaction with the tropical oceans (on a time-scale of several months to several years); and long-term climate and climate trends (on a time-scale of 10 to 100 years). The activities of WCRP, aimed at implementing its research programme, included global climate analysis, research on individual climate processes, study of the tropical ocean and global atmosphere, a world ocean circulation experiment and study of climate forcings.

Research and development

The WMO Research and Development Programme continued to focus on weather prediction, tropical meteorology, environmental pollution monitoring and weather modification research. The responsibility for promoting and co-ordinating such activities lay with the Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (CAS). At its ninth session (Sofia, Bulgaria, 6-17 October), CAS continued to give high priority to weather prediction research on all time scales, re-establishing the Working Groups on Short- and Medium-range Weather Prediction Research and on Long-range Weather Forecasting Research. It discussed the development of numerical weather prediction in the tropics and called for the strengthening of the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network. An International Symposium on Short- and Medium-range Numerical Weather Prediction (Tokyo, 4-8 August), jointly sponsored by WMO and the International Union for Geodesy and Geophysics, discussed data and modelling aspects. The first WMO Conference on Long-range Forecasting: Practical Problems and Future Prospects (Sofia, 29 September-3 October) discussed methods and related research, dynamic models, verification and testing, probabilistic forecasting and forecasts and decision-making.

Continued efforts were made to implement the components of the WMO Tropical Meteorology Programme. Under the monsoon component, the WMO/CAS project on long-term Asian summer and winter monsoon studies continued to be implemented, with activity centres in the India Meteorological Department (New Delhi) and the Malaysian Meteorological Service (Kuala Lumpur) collecting, validating and archiving data from key stations in monsoon-affected regions. Both centres intensified research on numerical modelling of the monsoon. In the rain-producing system component, a seminar on local weather systems prediction for Red Sea countries (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 19-22 January) focused on the characteristics of local weather systems and improvement of prediction techniques. At a WMO workshop on rain-producing systems in the tropics and extra-tropics (San José, Costa Rica, 21-25 July), discussions were held on synoptic and mesoscale characteristics of those systems. The Steering Committee on Tropical Limited-area Weather Prediction Modelling (LAM) (Tallahassee, Florida, United States, 28 and 29 July) reviewed progress in activity centres (India, Japan and Malaysia, in addition to Florida State University) in developing regional LAMs and produced documents on simple numerical weather prediction models. Under the semi-arid zone meteorology/tropical drought component, the pilot project report and outline proposal for radiation flux studies in the tropics was published and progress was made in implementing the long-term project on research and monitoring of the moisture budget in the Sahel, with an activity centre at Niamey.

In the environment field, WMO activities focused on the Environmental Pollution Monitoring and Research Programme. A September 1986 survey showed that, as at 31 December 1985, 166 stations were carrying out the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network minimum monitoring programme and 12 stations were being prepared in 94 countries. Other activities included a course on background air pollution measurements (Budapest, Hungary), a technical meeting on aerosol monitoring held in China and the issuance of publications.

WMO continued its collaboration in projects on long-range transmission of air pollutants in Europe, mainly through operational Meteorological Synthesizing Centres in Moscow and Oslo, Norway. At a WMO Conference on Air Pollution Modelling and Its Application (Leningrad, May), 180 scientists from 30 countries considered boundary-layer meteorology, atmospheric chemistry, transport of air pollutants, model assessment and verification, urban and industrial development planning, climatology and forecasting of air pollution and air pollution monitoring as related to emission standards. Within the UNEP Long-term Programme for Pollution Monitoring and Research in the Mediterranean Sea, a pilot project began on the transport and deposit of pollutants into the Sea.

The WMO-led Working Group on the Interchange of Pollutants between the Atmosphere and the Oceans (sixth session, Paris, January) considered the role of contaminants in modifying physical, chemical and biological processes in the troposphere, at the air-sea interface and in the sea and reviewed the role of the oceans in influencing tropospheric carbon dioxide concentrations.

The main objectives of the WMO Cloud Physics and Weather Modification Programme were to promote sound scientific foundations for weather modification based on cloud physics and other investigations, and to provide the rationale underlying all aspects of weather modification. In March, the sixteenth session of the Executive Council Panel of Experts on Weather Modification/CAS Working Group on Cloud Physics and Weather Modification prepared an information document for government officials expressing interest in weather modification activities.

Hydrology and water resources development

The Hydrology and Water Resources Programme promoted world-wide co-operation in the evaluation of water resources and assisted in their development through the co-ordination of hydrological networks and services, including data collection and processing, forecasting and warnings, and supply of meteorological and hydrological data for design purposes. The three components of the programme were: the Operational Hydrology Programme; applications and services to water resources; and co-operation with water-related programmes of other international organizations.

The Operational Hydrology Programme, which provided the framework for all scientific and technical aspects of the activities in hydrology, comprised: the measurement of basic hydrological elements from networks of stations; the collection, processing and publication of basic hydrological data; hydrological forecasting; and improvement of techniques in network design. Its emphasis fell on the Hydrological Operational Multi-purpose Subprogramme, the aims of which were to provide an international and systematic framework for the integration of techniques and procedures for collecting and processing hydrological data. In co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), WMO organized workshops on: groundwater networks (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 22-28 February); microcomputers in hydrology (Christchurch, New Zealand, 17-21 March); storage and management of hydrological data (Brussels, Belgium, 12-25 September); data processing (Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 20-31 October); river flow forecasting (Nanjing, China, 17-29 November); and the application of mathematical models in operational hydrology (Bandung, Indonesia, 8-20 December).

A large part of the activities in hydrology and water resources was carried out through the Commission for Hydrology, which meets quadrennially (it last met in 1984), operating through working groups of experts. In 1986, the Commission marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of its establishment by organizing a special celebration programme (Budapest, Hungary, 11 and 12 July) in conjunction with the Second Scientific Assembly of the International Association of Hydrological Sciences.

A programme on applications and services to water resources provided technical support for the water-related activities of the Tropical Cyclone Programme and the World Climate Programme. The hydrological activities under the former programme focused on improving flood-forecasting systems. Under the World Climate Programme, work continued on the compilation and use of hydrological data in the form of grid-point or average grid-area values.

Education and training

Under the Education and Training Programme, continued effort was made to expand and accelerate assistance and advice in implementing national, regional and other international education and training programmes. The main activities were the awarding of fellowships, the strengthening of Regional Meteorological Training Centres, the organization and co-sponsorship of training courses, seminars and workshops, the preparation of training publications and other training aids, surveys of training needs and facilities, provision of advice and assistance on education and training, and collaboration with other organizations.

The WMO Executive Council's Panel of Experts on Education and Training (twelfth session, Belem, Brazil, 17-21 February 1986) paid particular attention to problems experienced by the WMO Regional Meteorological Training Centres, preliminary results of a world-wide survey of training requirements, training publications, training courses in specialized fields and fellowships. It also considered the relevant section of the WMO Second Long-term Plan.

Under fellowship funds from various sources administered by WMO in 1986, a total of 225 fellows were trained. Assistance was also provided to 72 participants in various training events; 12 such events were organized during 1986 in 11 member countries. The topics covered different areas of meteorology and operational hydrology and were tailored to meet the express needs of member countries. In addition, WMO co-sponsored or jointly supported 19 training events in 1986 along with other organizations and agencies within and outside the United Nations system, universities and education and training institutions in member countries.

In 1986, under the WMO Technical Co-operation Programme, assistance was provided to 131 countries through UNDP, the WMO Voluntary Co-operation Programme (VCP), funds-in-trust arrangements and the regular WMO budget. A major problem facing the Programme was a decrease in overhead support occasioned by the rise in the Swiss franc/United States dollar exchange rate. The Executive Council provided supplemental funds to WMO to permit the continued administration of the Programme at a reduced level. UNDP assistance was provided to 118 countries at a value of $12 million, compared to $13.5 million in 1985. Developing countries received aid to develop their meteorological and hydrological services. With water resources of vital importance to developing countries, assistance was provided to drought-stricken countries in eastern and southern Africa and agrometeorological and hydrological services continued to be strengthened in the Sahel. In 1986, under UNDP sectoral support in meteorology and operational hydrology, missions to 16 countries were undertaken at the request of UNDP resident representatives or government authorities to assist in the planning of new UNDP projects.

VCP was maintained by voluntary contributions of members, in the form of either equipment and services or cash. Support in 1986 was given mainly to the GOS element of WWW and for upgrading telecommunication centres and surface and upper-air observing stations. Many long-term fellowships for training of meteorological personnel were also awarded. The total value of the aid provided under VCP in 1986 was approximately $5 million.

Under the regular budget of WMO, 31 fellowships were awarded in 1986 and financial support was provided for participants in special training courses, technical conferences and study tours. During the year, implementation of a trust fund project with Italy began for Sahelian countries totalling $10 million over five years. Other trust funds continued with Belgium, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Switzerland and the United States. Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands each financed associate experts in the field, and Japan financed three associate experts at WMO headquarters. Ten United Nations Volunteers served in WMO-executed projects during the year. One of the most pressing problems of the meteorological and hydrological services of developing countries was the need for qualified personnel. Under the Technical Co-operation Programme, 469 fellows received meteorological or hydrological training—204 under UNDP, 171 under VCP, 58 under the regular budget and 36 under trust funds.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 44 professionals on technical assistance projects) on permanent and fixed-term contracts stood at 292. Of these, 134 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 46 nationalities) and 158 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1986 was the third year of the ninth financial period (1984-1987), for which the Ninth (1983) WMO Congress established a maximum expenditure of $77.5 million. It had authorized additional expenditures for increases in salaries and allowances consequent upon similar increases approved by the United Nations. Also, additional expenditures of no more than $500,000 were authorized, to provide for circumstances such as losses from changes in currency exchange rates and to meet unforeseen programme activities of an urgent character.

The regular budget for 1986 amounted to $23,669,500, including supplementary estimates. The 1986 budget for technical co-operation activities, financed from overhead allocations and other extrabudgetary sources, amounted to an additional $2,700,600.

At its June 1986 session, the Executive Council approved a regular budget of $21,112,500 for 1987. To that amount, supplementary estimates of $5,236,100 were added later in the year.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

During 1986, several legal instruments adopted under the auspices of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) entered into force. The 1984 amendments^a to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the 1978 Protocol (MARPOL 73/78), entered into force, as did the second set of amendments^b to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974 (SOLAS Convention).

Membership of IMO as at 31 December 1986 stood at 130 and one associate member. New members admitted during the year were Antigua and Barbuda (13 January), the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (16 April) and Vanuatu (21 October).

Activities in 1986

On 20 June 1986, Per Eriksson (Sweden) was awarded the International Maritime Prize for 1985. The Prize is awarded annually to the individual or organization judged to have made the most significant contribution to IMO's work and objectives.

The theme for World Maritime Day, which was celebrated at IMO headquarters in London on 25 September, was "Global co-operation for safety at sea and the protection of the marine environment".

World Maritime University

In March, the largest class was enrolled at the World Maritime University since its opening in 1983 at Malmo, Sweden. It consisted of 85 students, of whom 28 came from Africa, 20 from Asia and the Pacific, 19 from Latin America and the Caribbean, 17 from Arab States and one from Europe. The number of countries that had sent students to the University since its opening rose to 80. Six new countries were represented in the March enrolment—Burundi, the Congo, Guyana, Lebanon, Seychelles and Uruguay.

The University was established under the auspices of IMO to provide advanced training for senior personnel, mainly from developing countries, involved in maritime administration, technical management of shipping companies and maritime education. In December, the third class—71 students from 39 countries—graduated from the University.

Prevention of pollution

The 1984 amendments to MARPOL 73/78, which entered into force on 7 January 1986, were designed to reduce pollution of the sea by oil and affected annex I of the Convention's five technical annexes.

Meeting at IMO headquarters (13-17 October), the contracting parties to the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Dumping Convention) adopted a resolution establishing a panel of experts to consider the disposal at sea of low-level radioactive wastes. The panel was requested to examine the political, legal, economic and social aspects of radioactive waste dumping and related matters.

Ship security and safety of life at sea

At its November 1986 session, the IMO Council agreed to prepare in 1987 an international convention for the suppression of unlawful acts against the safety of maritime navigation. The decision was made in response to a joint proposal by Austria, Egypt and Italy, following the adoption in 1985 of a General Assembly resolution^c calling on IMO to study the problem of terrorism aboard or against ships, with a view to making recommendations on appropriate measures.

The second set of amendments to the 1974 SOLAS Convention, which were adopted in 1983, entered into force on 1 July 1986. The amendments mainly affected chapter III on life-saving appliances and arrangements, which was completely rewritten, and chapter VII on the carriage of dangerous goods, under which the International Bulk Chemical Code and the International Gas Carrier Code were to become mandatory to all States parties to the Convention.

Facilitation

The International Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965, was amended on 3 March 1986 at a one-day conference of contracting parties held during the sixteenth session of the IMO Facilitation Committee (3-7 March). The amendments, which entered into force on 1 October, enabled greater use of automatic data processing and other modern techniques.

During its meeting, the Facilitation Committee expressed concern over the increase in drug trafficking on ships and agreed that IMO should co-operate with the Customs Co-operation Council and the International Chamber of Shipping in developing guidelines to counter that threat.

Draft salvage convention

The Legal Committee, at its fifty-sixth (7-11 April) and fifty-seventh (27-31 October) sessions, completed the third and fourth (final) reading of the draft salvage convention which was intended to replace the 1910 Convention on Salvage and Assistance at Sea. The new convention would provide for compensation to salvors in incidents involving the risk of oil pollution. One of the features of the 1910 Convention was the principle of "no cure, no pay". The Committee recommended to the IMO Council that a conference be convened during the 1988-1989 biennium to consider the draft for adoption.

Liability for maritime claims

The Convention on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims, 1976, entered into force on 1 December 1986. Replacing a 1957 convention relating to the limitation of liability of owners of seagoing ships, the new convention substantially raised the amount of compensation available for loss of life or personal injury and for property damage (including damage to other ships or harbour works).

Publications

Among publications issued by IMO during 1986 were: a new loose-leaf edition of The International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code; a new consolidated edition of The International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974 (including the 1983 amendments); Resolutions and Other Decisions of the Fourteenth Session of the IMO Assembly (1985); and The International Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965, as amended.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the IMO secretariat employed 270 full-time staff members (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 94 were in the Professional and higher categories and 176 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 34 Professional and 14 General Service staff employed on technical assistance projects.

Budget

In 1985, the IMO Assembly, which meets biennially, adopted a budget of $30,059,000 for 1986-1987, with $14,480,000 allocated to 1986 and $15,579,000 to 1987.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

During 1986, membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) increased to 116 with the admission of Iceland, Lebanon, Lesotho and Sierra Leone. The number of States party to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property and to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works remained at 97 and 76, respectively. Benin became party to the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, bringing membership to 20. Argentina, Barbados, Oman, San Marino and the USSR became party to the Nairobi Treaty on the Protection of the Olympic Symbol, bringing membership to 32. At the end of the year, total membership in WIPO and its various Unions, taken together, was 130.

Seventeen treaties in the two main fields of intellectual property were administered by WIPO in 1986. They are listed below in order of year of adoption:

Industrial property: Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive Indications of Source on Goods; Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Marks; The Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs; Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purpose of the Registration of Marks; Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and Their International Registration; Locarno Agreement establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs; Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT); Strasbourg Agreement concerning the International Patent Classification (IPC); Trademark Registration Treaty; Vienna Agreement establishing an International Classification of the Figurative Elements of Marks; Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure; Nairobi Treaty on the Protection of the Olympic Symbol.

Copyright and neighbouring rights: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms; Brussels Convention relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite.

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it held their seventeenth series of meetings at Geneva in September 1986.

Activities in 1986Development co-operation activities

During 1986, WIPO co-operated with most developing countries and with intergovernmental organizations in their development projects relating to intellectual property, by providing assistance in the preparation of legislation, or establishment or modernization of national or regional institutions, including patent documentation and information services.

Three WIPO permanent programmes, supervised by intergovernmental permanent committees, provided the framework for development co-operation relating to industrial property, patent information and copyright and neighbouring rights.

Regarding industrial property, WIPO organized national, regional, subregional and inter-regional meetings, in co-operation with Governments and/or organizations, at its headquarters in Geneva, and at Luanda (Angola), Canberra and Sydney (Australia), La Paz (Bolivia), Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), Yaounde (Cameroon), Santiago (Chile), Beijing (China), Brazzaville (Congo), San Jose (Costa Rica), Quito (Ecuador), Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Strasbourg (France), Munich (Federal Republic of Germany), Accra (Ghana), Guatemala City (Guatemala), Conakry (Guinea), Georgetown (Guyana), Tegucigalpa (Honduras), Kingston (Jamaica), Tokyo, Nairobi (Kenya), Tripoli (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia), Mexico City, Ulan Bator (Mongolia), The Hague (Netherlands), Islamabad and Karachi (Pakistan), Basseterre (Saint Christopher and Nevis), Kingstown (Saint Vincent and the Grenadines), Madrid (Spain), Colombo (Sri Lanka), Port of Spain (Trinidad and Tobago), Moscow, Washington D.C., Montevideo (Uruguay), Belgrade (Yugoslavia) and Lusaka (Zambia). The meetings focused on industrial property and its impact on development, patent activities and licensing.

Medals and prizes for inventors and promoters of innovation were awarded by WIPO at national and international exhibitions or contests and special ceremonies held in Belgium, Bulgaria, China, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, France, Guatemala, Hungary, Iceland, Iraq, Japan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Switzerland, the USSR and Zimbabwe.

Continuing a programme started in 1975, 444 state-of-the-art search reports on technology disclosed in patent documents and related literature were provided to developing countries free of charge under agreements concluded between WIPO and contributing industrial property offices in developed countries. Most of the reports were prepared by the patent offices of Australia, Austria, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden and the USSR.

Development co-operation activities in copyright and neighbouring rights included national, regional, subregional and interregional meetings at WIPO headquarters and at San Jose, Paris, Conakry, Budapest (Hungary), New Delhi (India), Kuala Lumpur, Mexico City, Stockholm (Sweden), Zurich (Switzerland), Lome (Togo) and London.

WIPO training programmes continued to grow, with 281 fellowships in industrial property granted in 1986 to nationals of 92 developing countries and 81 fellowships in copyright granted to nationals from 39 developing countries, in addition to individuals recommended by various organizations. In the industrial property sector, 38 countries, seven intergovernmental organizations and two other institutions provided individual and group training. Concerning copyright, 20 countries and three organizations provided such training.

Industrial property

The Working Group on Links between the Madrid Agreement and the Proposed (European) Community Trade Mark held two sessions in 1986 (Geneva, January and July) and made some progress in drafting two protocols concerning the establishment of a link between the two instruments, which would make it possible to use them simultaneously. In September, during the meetings of the governing bodies, it was decided that in 1987 the Working Group should hold another meeting and the Madrid Union should decide on the desirability of convening a diplomatic conference to adopt the two protocols.

Also at Geneva in February, the Committee of Experts on Biotechnological Inventions and Industrial Property considered a report of the International Bureau—the WIPO secretariat—on the protection of biotechnological inventions and suggested studying the subject further. Subsequently, the Bureau sent questionnaires to Governments to collect information on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions, and to non-governmental organizations asking for their views.

Other expert committees meeting at Geneva in 1986 dealt with issues related to intellectual property in respect of integrated circuits, protection against counterfeiting and harmonization of certain provisions in laws for the protection of inventions. In addition, work continued on updating IPC and other classifications concerning industrial designs or registration of trade and service marks.

During 1986, 8,082 international applications were filed under the PCT in 25 receiving offices. The PCT Gazette was published fortnightly and a special issue was put out in July to consolidate general information. The total number of registrations of marks under the Madrid Agreement was 9,167. To that figure should be added 8,242 renewals under the Agreement's Nice and Stockholm Acts. Registrations and renewals therefore totalled 17,409, compared to 13,697 in 1985. The total number of changes recorded in the International Register of Marks was 18,306, as compared with 15,610 in 1985.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

Activities in copyright and neighbouring rights included the convening, jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, of a group of experts on model provisions for national laws on employed authors (Geneva, January), and committees of governmental experts on copyright aspects of audio-visual works and phonograms (Paris, June), works of architecture (Geneva, October) and works of visual art (Paris, December). In addition, an international forum on collective administration of copyrights and neighbouring rights (Geneva, May), organized by WIPO, adopted a declaration encouraging the establishment of collective administration systems wherever individual licensing was not practical.

Publications

The International Bureau continued to issue regularly the following publications, in various languages: Copyright, Industrial Property, Les Marques Internationales, WIPO Newsletter, PCT Gazette, Les Appellations d'origine and Intellectual Property in Asia and the Pacific.

WIPO also continued to update its collection of texts of intellectual property laws and regulations of all countries and of treaties dealing with intellectual property, both in their original languages and in English and French translations, in its publication Industrial Property and Copyright Laws and Treaties.

Among other publications of WIPO in 1986 were: Guide to the International Deposit of Industrial

Secretariat.

As at 31 December 1986, WIPO employed 285 full-time staff members. Of these, 102 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 40 member States) and 183 were in the General Service category. In addition, 97 experts were employed by the organization on technical assistance projects during the year.

Budget

The principal sources of the WIPO budget—approximately 99 million Swiss francs for the 1986-1987 biennium—are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services (primarily under PCT and the Madrid Agreement). Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice, Locarno, IPC and Vienna Unions and by WIPO member States not belonging to any of the Unions.

States members of the six Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) to determine the amounts of their ordinary contributions. WIPO States not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B or C) for the same purpose. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C, the lowest. The class in which a State is placed, is decided solely by the State and the rights of each are the same, irrespective of the class.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in Annex I below (the class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno, IPC and Vienna Unions). Members of one or more Unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO; the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO's International Bureau a programme on legal-technical assistance.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) completed its ninth year of operations in 1986, during which it continued to provide concessional assistance for financing agricultural projects in developing countries. The Fund aimed at increasing food production, reducing malnutrition and alleviating rural poverty. It continued to concentrate on low-income, food-deficit countries, which received most of IFAD's lending, and on the poorest farmers, aiming at providing them with the necessary production means and institutional support. Particular emphasis was given to simplifying project design, restoring agricultural capacity to sub-Saharan countries, and ways of reducing the costs of technical assistance, project administration and recurrent expenditures. IFAD also gave special attention to the issues of women in development, co-operation with non-governmental organizations and the environment.

Membership of IFAD rose to 142 in 1986, when its Governing Council (ninth and tenth sessions, Rome, Italy, 21-24 January and 9-12 December) approved the admission of Antigua and Barbuda, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Saint Christopher and Nevis. Of the current members, 20 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 110 in Category III (other developing countries).

In January, the Governing Council, made up of the entire membership, approved the Special Programme for sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification and set a three-year target of voluntary contributions of $300 million. In December, the Council adopted the 1987 budget amounting to $32.9 million and a contingency of $500,000—an increase of some $6.3 million over 1985. The Council amended the Agreement Establishing IFAD, extending the term of office of the Fund's President from three to four years. It also set up a committee to review the President's report on the future financial basis and structure of the Fund.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1986 (April, September and December), approving loans for 21 projects, including five under the Special Programme for sub-Saharan Africa, and 17 technical assistance grants, and deferring the eleventh session of the Governing Council to January 1988. The Board convened a special session in January, at which it endorsed the proposed basic framework on the special resources for sub-Saharan Africa and approved a Special Operations Facility and its 1986 work programme and budget.

Since 1979, approved loans have been denominated in special drawing rights (SDRs), an international unit of account. Dollar figures in this chapter are based on the SDR/United States dollar conversion rate at 31 December 1986 (SDR 1 = $1.22319). However, approximate amounts in United States dollars for loans approved since 1979 have been based on the SDR/United States dollar exchange rate at the time of loan negotiations.

Following approval of the 21 new projects in 1986, the total assistance provided by the Fund to 89 member countries since 1978 amounted to SDR 2,010.4 million, of which SDR 1,917 million was committed for 198 projects and SDR 93.4 million for technical assistance grants.

Of the 198 projects approved since 1978, 72 were for Africa, 53 for Asia, 37 for Latin America and the Caribbean, and 36 for the Near East and North Africa. Most loans (66.1 per cent) were made on highly concessional terms, with a service charge of 1 per cent per annum, a 50-year maturity period and a 10-year grace period. Another 26.8 per cent of the loans were made on intermediate terms (at 4 per cent, 20 years maturity and a five-year grace period) and the remaining 7.1 per cent on ordinary terms (8 per cent, 15-18 years maturity and a three-year grace period).

Resources

Initial resources and contributions to the first replenishment provided IFAD with about $2.1 billion to cover operations from 1978 to 1983. Because of delay in concluding negotiations on the second replenishment of resources, the first replenishment had to be stretched over four years (1981-1984) instead of three years. The second replenishment came into effect on 27 November 1986.

As at 31 December 1986, contributions and firm pledges to the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, which became operational in May, amounted to $197 million.

Investment

At the end of 1986, IFAD liquid assets totalled $807.2 million. Of this amount, $20.7 million was held on demand deposit and $417.4 million (51.7 per cent) was held on deposit with, or in obligations issued by, commercial banks, while the balance of $369.1 million was in bonds or similar securities issued or guaranteed by member Governments. While the maximum maturity for any of these investments was five years, the average length of the investment portfolio was 14.1 months.

The downward trend of interest rates on most major currencies began in late 1984 and continued through 1985 and 1986. Consequently, the average rate of return for 1986 was approximately 9.25 per cent versus 9.68 per cent for 1985.

The new loans approved by IFAD in 1986 totalled SDR 122.9 million ($143.8 million), including five loans of SDR 30.6 million ($35.9 million) made available from the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification. The 17 technical assistance grants came to SDR 6.1 million ($7.3 million), including two grants of SDR 1.6 million ($2 million) from the Special Programme. The total financial assistance provided in 1986 amounted to SDR 129 million ($157.8 million), as compared with SDR 136.9 million ($150.6 million) in 1985.

IFAD intensified efforts to attract project co-financing as the level of contributions to the replenishment resources was reduced. In 1986, the share of IFAD-initiated projects co-financed by other donors reached a record high of 80 per cent.

During the year, nine projects were approved for sub-Saharan Africa involving SDR 60.2 million, and dealing with agricultural development, rehabilitation of drought-affected areas, small-scale irrigation and smallholder food crops.

The five projects approved for Asia, for SDR 30.2 million, emphasized aquaculture (fishery) development and diversification of agricultural systems.

Of four loans totalling some SDR 17.3 million approved for Latin America and the Caribbean, two were for agricultural development, one for rural development and one for agricultural credit.

The three projects approved in the Near East and North Africa involving loans of SDR 23.3 million dealt with dryland farming and small-scale irrigation rehabilitation.

Regarding technical assistance, IFAD provided grants for agricultural research, project preparation and training. In 1986, support for agricultural research programmes of international and regional centres totalled $4.3 million, including two new programmes, one for the development of rain-fed rice in Bangladesh and eastern India, and another for farming systems in the: Near East and North Africa.

The Fund continued its special programming missions, which focused on macro-economic trends and government policies affecting IFAD's target groups, on the environmental implications of rural development programmes and on a subregional approach to the analysis of target groups and farming systems. In 1986, three missions were carried out in Indonesia, the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference region and the Sudan.

The tables below indicate the projects and technical assistance grants approved in 1986.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue for 1986 was $87.1 million, consisting of $68.2 million of investment income, including gains on sales of investments of $0.9 million, and $18.9 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total expenses for the year amounted to $23.4 million, compared with a budget before contingency of $27.5 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $63.7 million.

Secretariat

At the end of December 1986, the IFAD secretariat totalled 164, of whom 70 were executive or technical staff (Professional category and above)-drawn from 42 countries-and 94 were support staff (General Service category).

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

On 1 January 1986, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), established by the General Assembly in 1966 to promote the industrialization of developing countries, became the sixteenth specialized agency of the United Nations system in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations. Prior to its new status, UNIDO functioned autonomously as an Assembly organ within the United Nations system.^a Its Constitution was adopted in 1979.^b

In 1986, activities focused on three substantive areas-industrial operations, strategies and promotion. Special UNIDO programmes included the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980-1990), assistance to the least developed countries (LDCs), industrial co-operation among developing countries and the integration of women in industrial development.

The Industrial Development Board, which meets annually, held its second regular session (Vienna, 13-23 October), and its first day special session on 15 May to approve the appointment of the five Deputy Directors-General. In October, the Board considered, among other things, IDDA, industrial production and redeployment, development and transfer of technology, industrialization in LDCs, industrial co-operation among developing countries and the integration of women in development.

On the recommendation of the UNIDO Programme and Budget Committee, the Board decided to review UNIDO's finances at a resumed second session in March 1987.

As at 31 December 1986, 146 States were members of UNIDO. New members in 1986 were: Bahamas (13 November); Bahrain (4 April); Belize (27 February); Gambia (12 June); Grenada (16 January); Namibia (represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia) (21 February); Papua New Guinea (10 September); Tonga (13 August).

Industrial strategies and operations

A total of 1,693 technical assistance projects were implemented or under implementation in 1986 at a value of $99.6 million, compared with $94.5 million in 1985. Activities were funded from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) main programmes (72.4 per cent) and UNDP-administered trust funds (1.6 per cent), from UNIDO and other trust funds (22.2 per cent), and from the regular programme budget (3.8 per cent).

Africa, including African Arab States, accounted for nearly 36 per cent of project delivery; Asia and the Pacific, over 37 per cent; Arab States, excluding African Arab States, 3.4 per cent; the Americas, 10.6 per cent; Europe, 3.2 per cent; and global and interregional projects, 9.7 per cent.

Chemical industries accounted for $24.9 million of technical co-operation expenditures; engineering industries, $14.6 million; institutional infrastructure, $12.9 million; metallurgical industries, $9.1 million; agro-industries, $8.8 million; industrial planning, $6.5 million; feasibility studies, $5.7 million; training, $5.4 million; factory establishment and management, $5 million; and other activities, $6.7 million.

By project component, personnel accounted for $42.9 million (43.1 per cent); equipment, $27.5 million (27.6 per cent); fellowships and training, $14.6 million (14.7 per cent); sub-contracts, $12.1 million (12.1 per cent); and miscellaneous, $2.5 million (2.5 per cent).

UNIDO assistance to African countries concentrated on long-range industrial plans, institutional infrastructure, feasibility studies and factory establishment and management. In the Americas, agro-based industries were strengthened and, in Asia and the Pacific, engineering, chemical and metallurgical industries received special attention.

Implementation of industrial operations

Agro-industries. Under agro-industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $8.8 million in 1986, with some 60 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of the total, Africa accounted for 25 per cent; the Americas, 29.2 per cent; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 2.3 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 39 per cent; Europe, 24 per cent; and interregional/global, 2.1 per cent. A total of 200 projects were completed or being implemented.

Projects covered the subsectors of wood products and wood processing, textile production and garment making, food processing and packaging, leather and rubber products, and agro-based raw materials, by-products and waste utilization.

Chemical industries. Technical co-operation expenditures for chemical industries were $24.9 million, with about 63 per cent financed by UNDP. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 31.8 per cent; the Americas, 5.8 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 1.7 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 49.2 per cent; Europe, 4.4 per cent; and inter-regional/global, 7.1 per cent. A total of 364 projects were implemented or under implementation.

Activities were concentrated in the broad subsectors of: building materials and construction industries; petrochemical industries and basic chemicals; fertilizers; pesticides; pharmaceuticals; pulp and paper; biofuels, synthetic fuels and organic chemicals; and environmental protection in industry and industrial recycling.

Engineering industries. In engineering industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $14.6 million, of which some 86 per cent was financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 22.7 per cent; the Americas, 5.8 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 4 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 62.2 per cent; Europe, 4 per cent; and inter-regional/global, 1.3 per cent. A total of 184 projects were implemented or under implementation.

Activities focused on industrial technology and production, energy-related technology and development of human resources. The main subsectors receiving assistance were agricultural machinery and implements, electronic and electrical machinery and products, computer-related equipment, metalworking and machine tools, land-based or water-borne transport equipment, measuring and control equipment; and energy-related equipment.

Factory establishment and management. Technical co-operation expenditures for factory establishment and management amounted to $5 million, of which 90 per cent was financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 45.2 per cent; the Americas, 3.7 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 2.4 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 42.5 per cent; Europe, 4.6 per cent; and inter-regional/global, 1.6 per cent. Completed or being implemented were 54 projects.

Activities in 1986 reflected increased awareness in developing countries of the need for more sophisticated equipment and more extensive programmes to develop local skills. Assistance to LDCs, mainly to ailing industries in Africa requiring diagnosis or rehabilitation, accounted for 41 per cent of the projects. Other projects included developing computerized decision aids for industrial management and computer games for training and assistance in corporate planning, analysing market potential and building up national consultancies capable of supplying technical and managerial services to industry.

Feasibility studies. Under feasibility studies, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $5.7 million, with some 75 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 48.2 per cent; the Americas, 4.2 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 9.9 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 31.4 per cent; Europe, 0.3 per cent; and inter-regional/global, 6 per cent. During the year, 94 projects were implemented or under implementation.

UNIDO continued to promote the application of a standardized methodology for preparing and evaluating pre-investment studies; assistance also included institution-building and the organization of training programmes. The majority of pre-feasibility and feasibility studies undertaken dealt mainly with light industries destined to use domestic raw materials and meet local demand; beneficiary countries included Barbados, Benin, Burma, Chad, Indonesia, Jamaica, Mali, Panama and Zaire. Regarding institution-building, some 23 projects aimed at strengthening national capabilities in preparing and evaluating projects benefited Bangladesh, Botswana, Burma, the Congo, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Madagascar, Oman, Panama, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Zaire and Zambia. In the area of training, nine group training programmes on industrial project preparation and evaluation and on the application of the Computer Model for Feasibility Analysis and Reporting, a UNIDO software package, were carried out in eight countries and attended by 194 participants. In addition, 19 group training programmes, with 314 participants, were held in 13 countries.

Industrial planning. Technical co-operation expenditures for industrial planning amounted to $6.5 million, with 75 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Africa accounted for 67.3 per cent; the Americas, 19.3 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 2.5 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 5.9 per cent; Europe, 2 per cent; and inter-regional/global, 3 per cent. Of the 88 projects implemented or under implementation, the largest portion was in Africa, followed by Asia and the Pacific and Latin America.

UNIDO assistance consisted mainly in identifying priority industrial subsectors offering opportunities for setting up competitive industries, formulating specific plans for restructuring, developing and organizing those priority subsectors, designing coherent and efficient policy and institutional frameworks to promote industrial investment and improve the investment climate, and providing institutional support to planning organizations. In Asia and the Pacific, emphasis was placed on medium-term industrial planning problems, such as promotion of inter- and intrasectoral linkages, and on techno-economic studies to identify industrial subsectors with a higher development potential and comparative advantage. In Latin America, co-operation covered areas ranging from the collection and evaluation of industrial statistics and the organization of industrial surveys and their design to the implementation of industrial policies to improve competitiveness and the performance of public and private enterprises.

Institutional infrastructure. Under institutional infrastructure, technical co-operation expenditures totalled $12.9 million, with 86 per cent financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 52.1 per cent; the Americas, 13.1 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 6.8 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 21.3 per cent; Europe, 4.8 per cent; and inter-regional/global, 1.9 per cent. During the year, 152 projects were implemented or under implementation in 75 developing countries.

Technical co-operation was provided through co-ordinated and mutually supportive programmes in promotion and development of small- and medium-scale industries, rural industrial development, entrepreneurship development, special programmes in support of small- and medium-scale industries, institutions for industrial research and for industrial information, and quality control, standardization and metrology. Small- and medium-scale industry development was promoted with assistance at the policy-making, institution-building and entrepreneurial levels, supported in some cases by projects at interregional, regional and national levels. Other efforts focused on increasing national capabilities for promoting small- and medium-scale industries in rural areas.

Metallurgical industries. Technical co-operation expenditures in the metallurgical industries sector amounted to $9.1 million, with some 91 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 36.3 per cent; the Americas, 13.2 per cent; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 1.7 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 46.5 per cent; and Europe, 2.1 per cent. A total of 150 projects were implemented or under implementation.

Technical assistance in metallurgical projects concentrated on the production of electronic and magnetic materials and pure metals; establishment of mini-steel plants; strengthening the metal-mechanics sector, including foundry, forging, heat treatment, welding and finishing operations; testing and processing ferrous and non-ferrous minerals and ores; and the strengthening or establishment of metallurgical research and development laboratories, centres or units.

Training. Expenditures for fellowships and training components in all technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO totalled $14.6 million, compared with $13.5 million in 1985. Of that total, $9.8 million was spent on fellowships and study tours and $4.8 million on group training activities and meetings. Under the heading of training, 183 projects were completed or being implemented at a cost of $5.4 million.

The number of individual training programmes (fellowships) initiated in 1986 for managerial and technical personnel of industrial projects in developing countries was 1,598 compared with 1,725 in 1985. Of those placements, 548 or some 22 per cent were arranged in developing countries; 239 (15 per cent) of the trainees came from LDCs and 151 (9 per cent) were female.

Group training took on a new dimension in 1986 by increasing the association of developing countries, using trainers from those countries and former participants as resource persons, and conducting part of a programme in a developing country-maintenance courses held in Cameroon and France were conducted with the assistance of national trainers from Cameroon, and part of a course on railroad maintenance for French-speaking participants was held in Belgium and the other part in Côte d'Ivoire, while two parts of the course for English-speaking participants were held in Kenya and the United Kingdom.

In response to priorities set out in the UNDP regional programmes, a series of medium-term training programmes and actions were developed, envisaging direct co-operation between private, public and co-operative enterprises and involving negotiations with industries and donor countries. The areas of energy management and industrial maintenance and repair received particular attention, as did the training needs of development finance institutions, small-scale industries and agro-industries. Special attention was given to upgrading the entrepreneurial skills of women.

Industrial promotion

In 1986, activities relating to industrial investment, consultations and development and the transfer of technology were integrated to accelerate international industrial and technological co-operation.

System of Consultations. The UNIDO System of Consultations, a mechanism for achieving the goals set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,^c principally restructuring world industry and increasing the share of developing countries in world production, held two consultations in 1986: the Fourth Consultation on the Iron and Steel Industry (Vienna, 9-13 June) and the Third Consultation on the Agricultural Machinery Industry (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 29 September-3 October). Preparatory meetings were held for consultations in 1987 on the fisheries industry, the training of industrial manpower, the pharmaceutical industry and the non-ferrous metals industry.

Development and transfer of technology. In 1986, UNIDO activities relating to the development and transfer of technology continued to assist developing countries to select, acquire and develop technology, and prepare them for technological changes by strengthening their technological capabilities. Achievements included promotion of an International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology (ICGEB), regional co-operation in micro-electronics, activities related to small-scale hydropower, plant-level co-operation in the transfer of technology, and reorientation of the UNIDO Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB). Activities focused on advanced technologies, technologies for new and renewable sources of energy, technology for rural and small industries, technology acquisition, technological information and strengthening technological capabilities.

Regarding technology policies, a national seminar organized by UNIDO on technology transfer (Antananarivo, Madagascar, March) called for establishing a centre for industrial and technological research to co-ordinate research and development and ensure that successful results were passed on to industry. UNIDO also assisted in holding national seminars on computer-aided design in Iraq and on information technology in Argentina.

A variety of activities were undertaken to promote international research co-operation and strengthen the technological capabilities of developing countries. In genetic engineering and biotechnology, activities were directed towards building up national-level capability, while others related to specific subject areas, including the development of high-cellulose yeast species and research and development for producing high-protein beverages from vegetables. Co-operative research and development took place between many groups, including the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the University of Minnesota (United States), the Department of Food Technology of Korea University (Republic of Korea) and the Institute of Food Technology (Brazil). In Kuwait, activities were aimed at formulating a national programme in biotechnology. During the year, the ICGEB Preparatory Committee agreed on an interim work programme which was to be executed as a UNIDO project, with a budget of some $18 million.

Biotechnology safety guidelines relating to research, manufacture and environment were published and a co-operative programme was developed between UNIDO, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme.

Activities relating to micro-electronics included assistance to Venezuela in reviewing its programmes and preparations for a national workshop in Trinidad and Tobago. Strategies were drawn up to promote software production and exports from developing countries. A workshop was held (Sidi bel Abbès, Algeria, January) on regional silicon foundry and design centres.

Concerning solar energy technologies, a workshop on the establishment of a consultative group on solar energy research and applications (Vienna, December) called on UNIDO to establish the group as a means of enlarging international co-operation, and enhancing the effectiveness of solar energy research in developing countries and the commercialization of such research into industrial production.

Programmes continued to be implemented for the application of technologies for the rural poor. A project for developing small-scale gari (fermented cassava) manufacturing equipment for Africa was implemented with a Nigerian company. An expert group meeting on industrial cultivation and processing of marine algae (Riga, USSR, August) resulted in several project concepts for international co-operation.

The Asia and Pacific Regional Network for Small Hydropower reached its full level of implementation in 1986, with 18 participating countries, including first-time participation from the Pacific region. Its programme included promotional aspects of small hydropower technology, training, services, co-operative research and development, information exchange and consultancy. A promotional programme involving co-operation between Arab and Latin American countries culminated in an agreement on the installation, with the assistance of Peru, of a small hydropower pilot plant in Morocco that would serve as a demonstration model for the Arab region.

Technology acquisition was intensified through training programmes and seminars and workshops on contract negotiations at Cairo (Egypt), Lagos (Nigeria), Lahore (Pakistan), Teheran (Iran) and Warsaw (Poland). Training materials and guidelines were prepared on selected issues concerning contract negotiations. Co-operation among developing countries in acquiring technology was strengthened under the Technological Information Exchange System (TIES), the members of which held their annual meeting at Warsaw in November. Participants in the Computerized Registry Information System during 1986 assessed and discussed its characteristics, both as a management tool for registries and for the exchange of information within TIES and within national information systems. During the year, a TIES for the Association of South-East Asian Nations was established.

Co-operation with the Licensing Executive Society (LES) International was expanded through a UNIDOILES meeting (Vienna, November), at which selected heads of transfer of technology offices in developing countries reviewed licensing and technology transfer issues concerning biotechnology, computer software and small- and medium-scale enterprises in developed and developing countries.

The capabilities of developing countries in industrial information were strengthened through the networking of INTIB, national focal points and nodes. Assistance and advice on technology transfer, acquisition and industrial technological information was provided to 10 African countries under a project on integrated assistance to the African Regional Centre for Technology at Dakar, Senegal. An experiment to introduce on-line access to INTIB data bases using satellite transmission was provided to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The Industrial Inquiry Service received some 1,500 inquiries during 1986. In addition to regular replies to inquiries, supplementary replies were provided through the networking functions of INTIB nodes. Technological information profiles on mini-cement, mini-steel, mini-fertilizer and lime plants and a directory on planning institutions were prepared during the year. Some 10,000 requests for documents and publications were processed, and UNIDO's monthly Newsletter in English, French and Spanish was sent to more than 37,000 recipients; editions in Chinese and Russian were published in Beijing and Moscow. The Industrial Development Abstracts data base included over 16,000 entries, of which 15,400 had been published. Monitors for current awareness in micro-electronics, genetic engineering and biotechnology and new materials continued to be published.

Investment promotion. UNIDO promoted industrial investment in developing countries, identifying investment opportunities and harnessing resources in industrialized countries. Under a separate programme, UNIDO worked with the World Bank to identify and prepare technical assistance projects for financing from World Bank loans or credits from the Industrial Development Association, for subsequent execution by UNIDO. In 1986, the addition of 565 new industrial investment projects brought the portfolio of identified investment opportunities to nearly 2,400, in 72 countries.

The network of UNIDO Investment Promotion Services helped facilitate the flow of external financial, technological and managerial resources to developing countries. In addition to the Services in Cologne, Paris, Tokyo, Vienna, Warsaw and Zurich, a Service at Milan was in the process of being established, while an agreement with the Republic of Korea for a Service at Seoul was signed at the end of the year. Owing to financial constraints the New York Service terminated its operation on 15 December 1986. However, a Service was opened at Washington, D.C., in December, with a view to improving co-operation with the World Bank, the International Finance Corporation, the Inter-American Development Bank and other intergovernmental and industrial organizations there. During the year, the Paris and Tokyo Services were extended for three years and the Warsaw Service for an additional four years.

In 1986, the Services concluded the promotion of 64 industrial investment projects for developing countries, with an estimated total investment cost of $265.3 million. The Services organized 29 country presentation meetings on investment opportunity for Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Dominica, Ethiopia, Fiji, Grenada, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Zimbabwe.

The Investment Promotion Information System contained over 8,800 records on industrial investment project proposals, potential partners, development finance institutions, investment-related institutions and project sponsors.

In 14 member States of the Economic Community of West African States, 224 industrial investment proposals at a cost of $350 million were identified and subsequently promoted to prepare for individual discussions, which took place during the seventh Industrial Forum for West Africa (Dakar, 1-4 December).

In Asia, under a technical co-operation project financed by UNDP, UNIDO and sponsors from Bangladesh identified and prepared 135 industrial investment projects, which UNIDO promoted with potential partners.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, technical co-operation included identifying and screening industrial investment projects in Argentina and Bolivia, initiating a project aimed at developing a business environment in Bolivia conducive to foreign and local investment, and formulating future activities in industrial investment project promotion for Ecuador, the Netherlands Antilles and Suriname. Assistance was also provided for industrial investment to Chile, Colombia, Mexico, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Assistance to LDCs

In 1986, UNIDO's programme and project development activities concerning LDCs focused on contributing to the UNIDO country programming exercise and on identifying and developing new projects. UNIDO was involved in preparing country programmes in 11 of the 22 LDCs that completed the exercise during the course of the year.

Fifteen project formulation missions were fielded and project approvals for 1986 totalled $18.6 million, with the African region receiving $12.4 million; the Americas, $78,500; Arab States, $1.3 million; and Asia and the Pacific, $4.4 million.

As in previous years, technical co-operation focused on: manpower development; promotion of small industries, utilizing locally available resources; preparation of pre-feasibility and feasibility studies; and industrial planning and programming. Particular attention was paid to industrial rehabilitation and to the integration of women in industrial development.

Numerous industrial rehabilitation projects were executed or formulated in Burkina Faso, the Comoros, Djibouti, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Lesotho, Mali, Nepal, the Niger, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Industrial co-operation among developing countries

Technical and economic co-operation among developing countries (TCDC and ECD) in industrial development received particular attention in 1986 as an important instrument for implementing the IDDA programme (see below). The Afro-Asian industrial co-operation meeting within the framework of IDDA and ECDC (New Delhi, India, 17-21 November) recommended some 300 bilateral and 20 interregional projects and concluded numerous agreements on co-operation between institutions, firms, corporations and associations.

UNIDO continued to organize solidarity ministerial meetings in favour of LDCs in Africa. At one such meeting (Bamako, Mali, 30 September-3 October), representatives from 14 developing countries discussed 18 co-operation project proposals, resulting in numerous bilateral agreements, including a donation from China of a generator for installation at the Bamako Short-wave Broadcasting Centre. As a follow-up to a previous meeting, experts from Yugoslavia undertook, with UNIDO support, a techno-economic study for the establishment of a tannery in Burkina Faso.

At a Round-table Ministerial Meeting on Co-operation among Developing Countries in the Agricultural Machinery Industry (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 3-7 November), entrepreneurs discussed issues ranging from the exchange of technological information to joint ventures with buy-back arrangements.

Other activities during the year included: an ad hoc expert group meeting on modalities to ensure a permanent flow of information aimed at strengthening TCDC in the building materials and construction industries (Zagreb, Yugoslavia, 2-4 April); a workshop and demonstration on appropriate technology and equipment for the food-processing industry for African, Asian and Arab developing countries (Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, 13-17 May); and the organization of a study tour to China of Yugoslav experts in agro-industry.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The UNIDO General Conference, which sets UNIDO strategies and policy concepts of industrial development, in December 1985 appropriated $8.6 million under the 1986-1987 regular budget for the implementation of IDDA. Because of budgetary constraints (see below), the Industrial Development Board, at its October 1986 session, revised the IDDA allocation to $2.7 million, a decrease of 68.6 per cent. That amount covered only commitments incurred on a limited number of technical co-operation projects; the majority of projects were suspended.

In 1986, the IDDA programme of national workshops and seminars on industrial policies and strategies continued to assist policy makers, planners, industrialists and private entrepreneurs to implement the Decade's programme within the framework of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa.^d

Workshops and seminars held in the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Madagascar and Zaïre enabled these countries to review their industrialization policies, strategies and plans, and to realign them with the principles and priorities of the Decade and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). As a result of these seminars, large-scale projects to be financed by UNDP were drawn up in a number of countries.

The health sector continued to receive special attention, particularly in view of the drought and famine in Africa. Projects for the production of oral rehydration salts in Guinea and vaccines in Cameroon were given priority in the IDDA programme, despite the financial constraints. The technical advisory services programme to African countries and organizations emphasized plant maintenance and their rehabilitation and establishment, development of technological capabilities, and development of industrial manpower, energy resources and telecommunications industries.

UNIDO continued to emphasize the development and rehabilitation of agro- and agro-based industries and the provision of factor inputs to enhance food and agricultural production. Importance was placed on the development of small- and medium-scale industries and domestic entrepreneurial capabilities.

The Eighth Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Bujumbura, Burundi, 17-19 September) reviewed progress made in the industrial development of African countries, with discussions focusing on the implementation of the IDDA programme and the role of industry in the economic recovery and development of Africa. The Conference decided on measures to accelerate the implementation of the IDDA programme and the OAU and United Nations programmes for Africa. It called for the proclamation of a second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1990-2000) and decided to convene a special session in 1987.

Integration of women in industrial development

UNIDO promoted the integration of women in industrial development. Technical co-operation projects were specifically designed to upgrade the capabilities of women and to improve technologies traditionally used by them. Efforts were also made to increase their involvement at all levels in UNIDO technical co-operation activities. These efforts received new impetus through the "Guidelines on the integration of women in UNIDO technical co-operation projects and in industrial studies programmes and research", issued in March. During 1986, 137 women participated in in-plant and other group training programmes organized by UNIDO and 151 women were awarded fellowships and participated in study tours.

A sectoral analysis of women in agro-industries continued in 1986, by examining the participation of women in the fisheries industry.

A data base on women in industry was established, comprising information on over 100 countries and some 900 reports and publications, as well as addresses of national, international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Secretariat

At as 31 December 1986, the UNIDO secretariat totalled 1,402 staff members, of whom 463 were in the Professional and higher categories and 939 were in the General Service and related categories.

SIDFAs

Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) continued to assist in programming and implementing technical co-operation projects.

In 1986, the Governing Council of UNDP allocated $9.6 million to the SIDFA programme for 1987-1989. At year's end, there were 28 SIDFAs and one project co-ordinator acting as a SIDFA in the programme. Thirty-five SIDFA posts were expected to be financed in 1987 through voluntary contributions and funds available to UNDP from savings in 1986.

Junior Professional Officers assisting SIDFAs in co-ordinating and monitoring UNIDO activities numbered 76 during 1986. Training courses for them, attended by 23 Officers and donor country representatives, were held in June and November. As in 1985, the programme was supported by Belgium, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland.

Budget

For 1986, total UNIDO expenditure amounted to $165.1 million, comprising $99.6 million for technical co-operation programmes and $65.5 million for headquarters expenditures. The latter was financed largely from the regular budget ($48.9 million) and supplemented by $16.6 million derived from a 13 per cent reimbursement for overheads on technical assistance delivery.

For the 1986-1987 biennium, the UNIDO General Conference in December 1985 approved a net appropriation of $112.7 million. However, responding to an estimated loss of $21.7 million due to downward movements of the United States dollar against the Austrian schilling, the amount was reduced by $15.2 million for the biennium. In addition, UNIDO experienced serious cash problems stemming from delayed receipt and withholding of contributions of member States. To ensure financial viability, UNIDO borrowed $16 million from the United Nations. Terms of payment for the loan were subsequently rescheduled to begin in 1988 (see p. 1036).

The Programme and Budget Committee, at its second session (Vienna, 12-16 May) and at a one-day resumed second session on 16 October, discussed UNIDO's financial situation and reviewed its rules of procedure, the scale of assessments of member States, the Working Capital Fund, the format of the programme and budget for the 1988-1989 biennium and the 1990-1995 medium-term plan, as well as the Industrial Development Fund which it froze at an operational reserve of $550,000.

Technical co-operation activities were largely financed by UNDP. Other sources of financing included the Special Industrial Services programme, trust funds and self-financing arrangements, the Industrial Development Fund and other funds, such as the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC).

Chapter XVIII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana, Cuba, November 1947-March 1948) drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). Since the charter itself was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, while drawing up the charter, the members of the Conference's Preparatory Committee negotiated on tariffs among themselves, and also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)-a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations, which is the only multilateral instrument that lays down agreed rules for international trade. It entered into force on 1 January 1948 with 23 contracting parties. Since then, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

By the end of 1986, the number of contracting parties to GATT had risen to 92 with the addition of Hong Kong (April) and Mexico (August). One other country, Tunisia, had acceded provisionally. The parties conducted about 90 per cent of all international trade; 30 other countries, to whose territories GATT had been applied before their independence, maintained a de facto application of GATT pending final decisions as to their future commercial policy.

Multilateral trade negotiations

The most significant event in 1986 in GATT was the launching in September at Punta del Este, Uruguay, of its eighth "round" of multilateral trade negotiations-the Uruguay Round. The ministerial decision to launch the Round was, in part, the culmination of work begun following the 1982 GATT Ministerial Meeting."

Meanwhile, work related to the seventh "round"-the Tokyo Round-formed a central plank of GATT activities.

Launching of the Uruguay Round

Preparatory work

The Preparatory Committee for the Uruguay Round, set up in 1985,^b began its work in January 1986 under the chairmanship of the GATT Director-General.

The Committee-open to contracting parties and countries which had acceded provisionally to GATT-aimed its work at resolving the problems identified at the 1982 Ministerial Meeting^a concerning safeguards, agricultural trade, textiles and clothing, quantitative restrictions and other non-tariff measures, tropical products, the operation of the Tokyo Round agreements (see p. 1214) and disputes procedure, as well as issues which had become subject to the work of GATT after 1982, particularly trade in services and in counterfeit goods.

The Preparatory Committee held nine meetings (27-28 January, 4-5 and 25-26 February, 17-20 March, 14-16 April, 5-7 May, 9-12 and 23-26 June and 8-31 July) at GATT headquarters. At its final meeting, the Committee asked the Chairman of the Contracting Parties to convene a ministerial session of the parties.

In the course of negotiations leading to the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round (see below), three proposed drafts were submitted: one by a group of 10 developing countries; another by Colombia and Switzerland on behalf of a cross-section of developed and developing countries; and a third by Argentina.

Although all three drafts proposed the launching of a new round, they contained differences concerning, in particular, the nature of the commitment to a standstill-a freeze on any further restrictive trade measures inconsistent with GATT commitments-and a rollback-the progressive dismantling of existing trade restrictions which were inconsistent with GATT; the handling and pace of negotiations on trade in agriculture; and the extent to which trade in services should be treated within the umbrella of the trade round. Despite those differences, agreement was reached at the Ministerial Meeting on the standstill and rollback clauses and on the agricultural text.

Special ministerial session and Declaration

The Special Session of the Contracting Parties at the ministerial level was held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September and was attended by some 1,200 delegates from 78 countries. The meeting unanimously adopted the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round, consisting of aims and principles for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations on goods and services-the Uruguay Round-to be concluded within four years.

The Declaration, adopted on 20 September 1986, stressed the interrelationship between trade, money, finance and development. It emphasized the need for a new understanding on safeguards aimed at reinforcing the application of the multilateral principles of GATT with a view to further liberalization and expansion of world trade. It attempted to bring trade in agriculture and textiles into the framework of GATT. The Declaration also provided for negotiations on new issues, such as the relationship between trade flows and the protection of intellectual property rights, and decided to launch negotiations on trade in services. Participants in the negotiations committed themselves to a standstill on new trade measures inconsistent with their GATT obligations, and to a rollback programme aimed at phasing out existing inconsistent ones.

The Declaration also established two Groups of Negotiations, one on goods and the other on services, and a Trade Negotiations Committee, to oversee the Uruguay Round in its entirety. The Committee-open to all participants in the Round-held its first meeting on 27 October 1986 at Geneva. The second meeting was held on 16 and 20 December. Final organizational decisions by the three bodies were adopted on 28 January 1987; they concerned the establishment of a surveillance body to oversee the implementation of the standstill and rollback commitments and of a structure consisting of 14 negotiating groups (on tariffs, non-tariff measures, natural resource-based products, textiles and clothing, agriculture, tropical products, GATT articles, multilateral trade negotiations agreements and arrangements, safeguards, subsidies and countervailing measures, trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights including trade in counterfeit goods, trade-related investment measures, dispute settlement, and functioning of the GATT system).

Ministerial Declaration of 20 September 1986

Ministers, meeting on the occasion of the Special Session of the Contracting Parties at Punta del Este, have decided to launch Multilateral Trade Negotiations (the Uruguay Round). To this end, they have adopted the following Declaration. The Multilateral Trade Negotiations will be open to the participation of countries as indicated in Parts I and II of this Declaration. A Trade Negotiations Committee is established to carry out the negotiations. The Trade Negotiations Committee shall hold its first meeting not later than 31 October 1986.

It shall meet as appropriate at Ministerial level. The Multilateral Trade Negotiations will be concluded within four years.

PART I

Negotiations on trade in goods

The Contracting Parties meeting at Ministerial level, Determined to halt and reverse protectionism and to remove distortions to trade,

Determined also to preserve the basic principles and to further the objectives of GATT,

Determined also to develop a more open, viable and durable multilateral trading system,

Convinced that such action would promote growth and development,

Mindful of the negative effects of prolonged financial and monetary instability in the world economy, the indebtedness of a large number of less-developed contracting parties, and considering the linkage between trade, money, finance and development,

Decide to enter into Multilateral Trade Negotiations on trade in goods within the framework and under the aegis of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

A. Objectives

Negotiations shall aim to:

- (i) bring about further liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, especially less-developed contracting parties, including the improvement of access to markets by the reduction and elimination of tariffs, quantitative restrictions and other non-tariff measures and obstacles;
- (ii) strengthen the role of GATT, improve the multilateral trading system based on the principles and rules of the GATT and bring about a wider coverage of world trade under agreed, effective and enforceable multilateral disciplines;
- (iii) increase the responsiveness of the GATT system to the evolving international economic environment, through facilitating necessary structural adjustment, enhancing the relationship of the GATT with the relevant international organizations and taking account of changes in trade patterns and prospects, including the growing importance of trade in high technology products, serious difficulties in commodity markets and the importance of an improved trading environment providing, inter alia, for the ability of indebted countries to meet their financial obligations;
- (iv) foster concurrent co-operative action at the national and international levels to strengthen the interrelationship between trade policies and other economic policies affecting growth and development, and to contribute towards continued, effective and determined efforts to improve the functioning of the international monetary system and the flow of financial and real investment resources to developing countries.

B. General principles governing negotiations

- (i) Negotiations shall be conducted in a transparent manner, and consistent with the objectives and commitments agreed in this Declaration and with the principles of the General Agreement in order to ensure mutual advantage and increased benefits to all participants.

- (ii) The launching, the conduct and the implementation of the outcome of the negotiations shall be treated as parts of a single undertaking. However, agreements reached at an early stage may be implemented on a provisional or a definitive basis by agreement prior to the formal conclusion of the negotiations. Early agreements shall be taken into account in assessing the overall balance of the negotiations.
- (iii) Balanced concessions should be sought within broad trading areas and subjects to be negotiated in order to avoid unwarranted cross-sectoral demands.
- (iv) The Contracting Parties agree that the principle of differential and more favourable treatment embodied in Part IV and other relevant provisions of the General Agreement and in the Decision of the Contracting Parties of 28 November 1979 on Differential and More Favourable Treatment, Reciprocity and Fuller Participation of Developing Countries applies to the negotiations. In the implementation of standstill and rollback, particular care should be given to avoiding disruptive effects on the trade of less-developed contracting parties.
- (v) The developed countries do not expect reciprocity for commitments made by them in trade negotiations to reduce or remove tariffs and other barriers to the trade of developing countries, i.e. the developed countries do not expect the developing countries, in the course of trade negotiations, to make contributions which are inconsistent with their individual development, financial and trade needs. Developed contracting parties shall therefore not seek, neither shall less-developed contracting parties be required to make, concessions that are inconsistent with the latter's development, financial and trade needs.
- (vi) Less-developed contracting parties expect that their capacity to make contributions or negotiated concessions or take other mutually agreed action under the provisions and procedures of the General Agreement would improve with the progressive development of their economies and improvement in their trade situation and they would accordingly expect to participate more fully in the framework of rights and obligations under the General Agreement.
- (vii) Special attention shall be given to the particular situation and problems of the least-developed countries and to the need to encourage positive measures to facilitate expansion of their trading opportunities. Expedient implementation of the relevant provisions of the 1982 Ministerial Declaration concerning the least-developed countries shall also be given appropriate attention.

C. Standstill and rollback

Commencing immediately and continuing until the formal completion of the negotiations, each participant agrees to apply the following commitments:

Standstill

- (i) not to take any trade restrictive or distorting measure inconsistent with the provisions of the General Agreement or the Instruments negotiated within the framework of GATT or under its auspices;

- (ii) not to take any trade restrictive or distorting measure in the legitimate exercise of its GATT rights, that would go beyond that which is necessary to remedy specific situations, as provided for in the General Agreement and the Instruments referred to in (i) above;
- (iii) not to take any trade measures in such a manner as to improve its negotiating positions.

Rollback

- (i) that all trade restrictive or distorting measures inconsistent with the provisions of the General Agreement or Instruments negotiated within the framework of GATT or under its auspices shall be phased out or brought into conformity within an agreed timeframe not later than by the date of the formal completion of the negotiations, taking into account multilateral agreements, undertakings and understandings, including strengthened rules and disciplines, reached in pursuance of the Objectives of the Negotiations;
- (ii) there shall be progressive implementation of this commitment on an equitable basis in consultations among participants concerned, including all affected participants. This commitment shall take account of the concerns expressed by any participant about measures directly affecting its trade interests;
- (iii) there shall be no GATT concessions requested for the elimination of these measures.

Surveillance of standstill and rollback

Each participant agrees that the implementation of these commitments on standstill and rollback shall be subject to multilateral surveillance so as to ensure that these commitments are being met. The Trade Negotiations Committee will decide on the appropriate mechanisms to carry out the surveillance, including periodic reviews and evaluations. Any participant may bring to the attention of the appropriate surveillance mechanism any actions or omissions it believes to be relevant to the fulfilment of these commitments. These notifications should be addressed to the GATT secretariat which may also provide further relevant information.

D. Subjects for negotiation

Tariffs

Negotiations shall aim, by appropriate methods, to reduce or, as appropriate, eliminate tariffs including the reduction or elimination of high tariffs and tariff escalation. Emphasis shall be given to the expansion of the scope of tariff concessions among all participants.

Non-tariff measures

Negotiations shall aim to reduce or eliminate non-tariff measures, including quantitative restrictions, without prejudice to any action to be taken in fulfilment of the rollback commitments.

Tropical products

Negotiations shall aim at the fullest liberalization of trade in tropical products, including in their processed and semi-processed forms and shall cover both tariff and all non-tariff measures affecting trade in these products.

The Contracting Parties recognize the importance of trade in tropical products to a large number of less-developed contracting parties and agree that negotiations in this area shall receive special attention, including the timing of the negotiations and the implementation of the results as provided for in B (ii).

Natural resource-based products

Negotiations shall aim to achieve the fullest liberalization of trade in natural resource-based products, including in their processed and semi-processed forms. The negotiations shall aim to reduce or eliminate tariff and non-tariff measures, including tariff escalation.

Textiles and clothing

Negotiations in the area of textiles and clothing shall aim to formulate modalities that would permit the eventual integration of this sector into GATT on the basis of strengthened GATT rules and disciplines, thereby also contributing to the objective of further liberalization of trade.

Agriculture

The Contracting Parties agree that there is an urgent need to bring more discipline and predictability to world agricultural trade by correcting and preventing restrictions and distortions including those related to structural surpluses so as to reduce the uncertainty, imbalances and instability in world agricultural markets.

Negotiations shall aim to achieve greater liberalization of trade in agriculture and bring all measures affecting import access and export competition under strengthened and more operationally effective GATT rules and disciplines, taking into account the general principles governing the negotiations, by:

- (i) improving market access through, inter alia, the reduction of import barriers;
- (ii) improving the competitive environment by increasing discipline on the use of all direct and indirect subsidies and other measures affecting directly or indirectly agricultural trade, including the phased reduction of their negative effects and dealing with their causes;
- (iii) minimizing the adverse effects that sanitary and phytosanitary regulations and barriers can have on trade in agriculture, taking into account the relevant international agreements.

In order to achieve the above objectives, the negotiating group having primary responsibility for all aspects of agriculture will use the Recommendations adopted by the Contracting Parties at their Fortieth Session, which were developed in accordance with the GATT 1982 Ministerial Work Programme, and take account of the approaches suggested in the work of the Committee on Trade in Agriculture without prejudice to other alternatives that might achieve the objectives of the negotiations.

GATT Articles

Participants shall review existing GATT Articles, provisions and disciplines as requested by interested contracting parties, and, as appropriate, undertake negotiations.

Safeguards

- (i) A comprehensive agreement on safeguards is of particular importance to the strengthening of the GATT system and to progress in the Multilateral Trade Negotiations.
- (ii) The agreement on safeguards:
 - shall be based on the basic principles of the General Agreement;
 - shall contain, inter alia, the following elements: transparency, coverage, objective criteria for action including the concept of serious injury or threat thereof, temporary nature, degressivity and structural adjustment, compensation and retaliation, notification, consultation, multilateral surveillance and dispute settlement; and

 - shall clarify and reinforce the disciplines of the General Agreement and should apply to all contracting parties.

MTN Agreements and Arrangements

Negotiations shall aim to improve, clarify, or expand, as appropriate, Agreements and Arrangements negotiated in the Tokyo Round of the Multilateral Negotiations.

Subsidies and countervailing measures

Negotiations on subsidies and countervailing measures shall be based on a review of Articles VI and XVI and the MTN Agreement on subsidies and countervailing measures with the objective of improving GATT disciplines relating to all subsidies and countervailing measures that affect international trade. A negotiating group will be established to deal with these issues.

Dispute settlement

In order to ensure prompt and effective resolution of disputes to the benefit of all contracting parties, negotiations shall aim to improve and strengthen the rules and procedures of the dispute settlement process, while recognizing the contribution that would be made by more effective and enforceable GATT rules and disciplines. Negotiations shall include the development of adequate arrangements for overseeing and monitoring of the procedures that would facilitate compliance with adopted recommendations.

Trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights, including trade in counterfeit goods

In order to reduce the distortions and impediments to international trade, and taking into account the need to promote effective and adequate protection of intellectual property rights, and to ensure that measures and procedures to enforce intellectual property rights do not themselves become barriers to legitimate trade, the negotiations shall aim to clarify GATT provisions and elaborate as appropriate new rules and disciplines.

Negotiations shall aim to develop a multilateral framework of principles, rules and disciplines dealing with international trade in counterfeit goods, taking into account work already undertaken in the GATT.

These negotiations shall be without prejudice to other complementary initiatives that may be taken in the World Intellectual Property Organization and elsewhere to deal with these matters.

Trade-related investment measures

Following an examination of the operation of GATT Articles related to the trade restrictive and distorting effects of investment measures, negotiations should elaborate, as appropriate, further provisions that may be necessary to avoid such adverse effects on trade.

E. Functioning of the GATT system

Negotiations shall aim to develop understandings and arrangements:

- (i) to enhance the surveillance in the GATT to enable regular monitoring of trade policies and practices of contracting parties and their impact on the functioning of the multilateral trading system;

- (ii) to improve the overall effectiveness and decision-making of the GATT as an institution, including, inter alia, through involvement of Ministers;
- (iii) to increase the contribution of the GATT to achieving greater coherence in global economic policy-making through strengthening its relationship with other international organizations responsible for monetary and financial matters.

F. Participation

- (a) Negotiations will be open to:
 - (i) all contracting parties,
 - (ii) countries having acceded provisionally,
 - (iii) countries applying the GATT on a de facto basis having announced, not later than 30 April 1987, their intention to accede to the GATT and to participate in the negotiations,
 - (iv) countries that have already informed the Contracting Parties, at a regular meeting of the Council of Representatives, of their intention to negotiate the terms of their membership as a contracting party, and
 - (v) developing countries that have, by 30 April 1987, initiated procedures for accession to the GATT, with the intention of negotiating the terms of their accession during the course of the negotiations.
- (b) Participation in negotiations relating to the amendment or application of GATT provisions or the negotiation of new provisions will, however, be open only to contracting parties.

G. Organization of the negotiations

A Group of Negotiations on Goods (GNG) is established to carry out the programme of negotiations contained in this Part of the Declaration. The GNG shall, inter alia:

- (i) elaborate and put into effect detailed trade negotiating plans prior to 19 December 1986;
- (ii) designate the appropriate mechanism for surveillance of commitments to standstill and rollback;
- (iii) establish negotiating groups as required. Because of the interrelationship of some issues and taking fully into account the general principles governing the negotiations as stated in B (iii) above it is recognized that aspects of one issue may be discussed in more than one negotiating group. Therefore each negotiating group should as required take into account relevant aspects emerging in other groups;
- (iv) also decide upon inclusion of additional subject matters in the negotiation;
- (v) co-ordinate the work of the negotiating groups and supervise the progress of the negotiations. As a guideline not more than two negotiating groups should meet at the same time;
- (vi) the GNG shall report to the Trade Negotiations Committee.

In order to ensure effective application of differential and more favourable treatment the GNG shall, before the formal completion of the negotiations, conduct an evaluation of the results attained therein in terms of the Objectives and the General Principles Governing Negotiations as set out in the Declaration, taking into account all issues of interest to less-developed contracting parties.

PART II

Negotiations on trade in services

Ministers also decide, as part of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations, to launch negotiations on trade in services.

Negotiations in this area shall aim to establish a multilateral framework of principles and rules for trade in services, including elaboration of possible disciplines for individual sectors, with a view to expansion of such trade under conditions of transparency and progressive liberalization as a means of promoting economic growth of all trading partners and the development of developing countries. Such framework shall respect the policy objectives of national laws and regulations applying to services and shall take into account the work of relevant international organizations.

GATT procedures and practices shall apply to these negotiations. A Group of Negotiations on Services is established to deal with these matters. Participation in the negotiations under this Part of the Declaration will be open to the same countries as under Part I. GATT secretariat support will be provided, with technical support from other organizations as decided by the Group of Negotiations on Services.

The Group of Negotiations on Services shall report to the Trade Negotiations Committee.

Implementation of results under Parts I and II

When the results of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations in all areas have been established, Ministers meeting also on the occasion of a Special Session of Contracting Parties shall decide regarding the international implementation of the respective results.

Implementation of the Tokyo Round agreements

The agreements of the Tokyo Round (1973-1979), the seventh "round" of multilateral trade negotiations conducted within GATT, provided an improved framework for the conduct of world trade and were adopted as an integral part of the rules of GATT.

Tariff negotiations during the Tokyo Round resulted in agreement on import duty reductions to be effected in eight annual cuts by the industrialized countries. By the end of 1986 all contracting parties had implemented the final tariff cuts negotiated in the Round, bringing the average level of industrial tariffs in developed countries down by 34 per cent. Thus, tariff cuts worth $300 billion had been completed in the seven-year period.

In 1986, the GATT Committee on Tariff Concessions continued compiling tariff schedules in loose-leaf form to allow easier reference to changes made during rounds of tariff negotiations. By the end of the year, 39 out of a total of 63 national tariff schedules were available in this form. The Committee was also concerned with the upcoming implementation of the new Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, developed by the Customs Co-operation Council at Brussels, Belgium, which was designed to serve as a single nomenclature standard for the classification of traded goods. The introduction of the System presented GATT with the need for negotiations under Article XXVIII ("Modification of Schedules") where the change from current nomenclatures disturbed the balance of previously negotiated concessions. In 1986, a common data base, established for Article XXVIII negotiations, was made operational.

The Committee on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures continued to oversee the implementation of a code which provided a mechanism for international surveillance and dispute settlement and aimed to ensure that the use of subsidies by any signatory did not harm the trading interests of others. In 1986, the Committee established a working party to examine obstacles which contracting parties-particularly developing countries-faced in accepting the Agreement. Panel reports on the European Communities (EC) subsidies on export of wheat flour and of pasta products, and the United States definition of "industry" concerning wine and grape products, remained pending because of differences in interpretation among signatories of the Subsidies Code.

In October 1986, the International Dairy Products Council, supervisor of the International Dairy Arrangement, agreed on some minor increases in the minimum prices for several dairy products covered by the Arrangement. It was also notified by EC of further sales of "old butter", aimed at easing the pressures on the dairy market of huge surplus stocks. Among other work, the Council examined the repercussions on trade in dairy products from the 26 April 1986 accident at the Chernobyl (Ukrainian SSR) nuclear plant. It was noted that, in the absence of internationally accepted safety standards and with varying national measures, the accident at Chernobyl had caused problems for international trade in milk powders.

The Committee on Civil Aircraft, which supervised the Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft-to which there were 22 signatories at the end of 1986-discussed measures taken by member Governments to implement the 1985 Annex to the Agreement extending duty-free coverage to 32 more categories of products. On 2 December, the Committee adopted a Protocol transposing products covered by the Agreement into the Harmonized System-whose drafting had been the work of the Committee on Tariff Concessions (see above). Attention was also given to the question of violations of the Agreement.

Work also continued throughout the year in committees overseeing the agreements on customs valuation, import licensing, anti-dumping practices, government procurement, technical barriers to trade and bovine meat.

Other GAIT activities

Contracting Parties regular session

In addition to their special session (see above), the Contracting Parties held their forty-second regular session at GATT headquarters from 24 to 26 November. The Consultative Group of Eighteen-a high-level forum for discussing problems facing international trade-did not meet in 1986.

Council of Representatives

The Council of Representatives, GATT's highest body between sessions of the Contracting Parties, held two special meetings in 1986 to review developments in the trading system. It examined a total of 13 new and pending disputes between member countries on trade questions.

Balance-of-payments restrictions

During 1986, the GATT Committee on Balance-of-Payments Import Restrictions held full consultations with Argentina, Greece and the Philippines. Consultations under a simplified procedure took place with Bangladesh, Nigeria, Peru and Yugoslavia.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development, in two meetings in 1986, held an exchange of views on its possible role in the Uruguay Round. It was understood that the Committee would review the progress of the negotiations from the point of view of developing countries and that its Subcommittee on the Trade of Least-Developed Countries would examine the technical assistance needs of those countries. The Committee reviewed developments in the implementation of Part IV of the General Agreement-dealing with special treatment for developing countries-and of the "Enabling Clause"-which provided the legal basis in GATT for preferences to developing countries, as in the case of the Generalized System of Preferences programme.

Textiles Arrangement

Negotiations on the renewal of the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles, known as the Multifibre Arrangement (MFA), which regulated most of the textiles and clothing which MFA member countries in the developing world exported to those in the developed world, were concluded in 1986. On 31 July, the Textiles Committee, composed of the 43 signatories to the Arrangement, agreed on a Protocol extending MFA for five years, until 31 July 1991. Among the most significant changes in the 1986 Protocol was the extension of product coverage to include textiles made of vegetable fibres, blends of vegetable fibres and blends containing silk, under certain specified conditions. Such restraints, however, would not be applied to textiles traded in commercially significant quantities prior to 1982. The Protocol also stipulated that restraints should not normally be imposed on exports from least developed countries, small suppliers and new entrants, while exports of cotton products from cotton-producing exporting countries and wool products from developing countries, whose economies and textile trade were highly dependent on wool textile exports, should be given special consideration.

Technical assistance

In 1986, the GATT secretariat's Technical Co-operation Division organized missions to, or seminars in, Brunei Darussalam, Costa Rica, Gabon, Mauritius, Morocco, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Zambia. GATT officials also participated in seminars sponsored by regional organizations.

Training programme

From 1955 to the end of 1986, a total of 1,002 officials from 113 countries and 10 regional organizations had attended GATT commercial policy training courses. A course in English and one in Spanish were given in 1986.

International Trade Centre

Established by GATT in 1964, and jointly operated by GATT and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development since 1968, the International Trade Centre continued to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services to developing countries. The Centre worked to assist developing countries with trade promotion programmes and activities to gain self-reliance. The Centre's technical co-operation activities expanded considerably in 1986, amounting to $21 million, up from a fairly constant $15 million annually over the 1980-1985 period (see also p. 497).

Publications

Publications issued in 1986 included the annual volumes of GATT Activities, International Trade and Basic Instruments and Selected Documents, and the newsletter GATT Focus, issued 10 times a year. Also published were The World Market for Dairy Products (1986) and International Markets for Meat.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1986, the GATT secretariat employed 336 staff members-140 in the Professional and higher categories and 196 in the General Service category. In May 1986, Arthur Dunkel was reappointed as GATT Director-General for a further three-year term beginning 1 October 1986.

Financial arrangements

Member countries of GATT contribute to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of the contracting parties and associated Governments. The budget for 1986 was 59,592,580 Swiss francs. (The United Nations rate of exchange for December 1986 was SwF 1.68 = $US 1.00.)

(1)On 6 November 1985, Côte d'Ivoire had requested that its name no longer be translated, including into "Ivory Coast", and that this become fully effective on 1 January 1986.

(2)Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together-following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958-to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also secured separate membership in the United Nations: it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

(3) 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 26 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

(4)On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

(Saint Christopher and Nevis officially changed its name to Saint Kitts and Nevis on 26 November 1986; the United Nations, however, continued to use the former name throughout that year.

(6)Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar: it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

Appendix II

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 64.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, end to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends

Article 2

The Organization and its Members in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Chapter III ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs

Chapter IV THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Composition

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Functions and powers

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

- a. promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;
- b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1(b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations,

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.

2. The expenses of the Organisation shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialised agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one vote,

2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1(c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions

3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article 19

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions

Chapter V

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Composition

1. The Security Council shall consist of fifteen Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organisation, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and powers

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII, and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 25

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

¹Amended text of Article 23 which came into force on 31 August 1965.

(The text of Article 23 before it was amended read as follows:

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-Permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.)

Voting

Article 27²

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote,
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedure

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organisation.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 37

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations

Chapter VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.
2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.
2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.

3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.
2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.
3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.
2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

Chapter VII

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures

Article 47

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations ²Amended text of Article 27 which came into force on 31 August 1965.

(The text of Article 27 before it was amended read as follows:

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.)

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Chapter VIII

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organisation may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Chapter IX

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CO-OPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

- a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;
- b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and
- c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialised agencies, established by intergovernmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies

Article 59

The Organization shall make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the States concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

Chapter X

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Composition

Article 61³

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of fifty-four Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate reelection.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from twenty-seven to fifty-four members, in addition to the members elected in place of the nine members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, twenty-seven additional members shall be elected. Of these twenty-seven additional members, the term of office of nine members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of nine other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative

Functions and powers

Article 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

Article 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

2. It may co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations

Article 64

1. The Economic and Social Council may take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies. It may make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Article 66

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Article 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as fall within its competence in connexion with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies

3. It shall perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present Charter or as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

Voting

Article 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions

³Amended text of Article 61, which came into force on 24 September 1973. (The ten of Article 61 as previously amended on 31 August 1965 read as follows:

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of twenty-seven Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, nine members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from eighteen to twenty-seven members in addition to the members elected in place of the six members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, nine additional members shall be elected. Of these nine additional members, the term of office of three members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of three other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.)

Article 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organisations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.
2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members

Chapter XI
DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories, and, to this end:

- a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;
- b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;
- c. to further international peace and security;
- d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and, when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and
- e. to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighbourliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

Chapter XII

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

- a. to further international peace and security;
- b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;
- c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:

- a. territories now held under mandate;
 - b. territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
 - c. territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.
2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79, and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendments, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions

Chapter XIII

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Composition

Article 86

1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:

- a. those Members administering trust territories;
- b. such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
- c. as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.

2. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Functions and powers

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may:

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- b. accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- c. provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and
- d. take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Voting

Article 89

1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members

Article 91

Them Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

Chapter XIV

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities

THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 100

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

Chapter XVI
MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 703

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfilment of its purposes.

Articles 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Organization.

3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

Chapter XVII
TRANSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, 30 October 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

Chapter XVIII
AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109⁴

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be

(The text of Article 109 before it was amended read as follows:

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if 50 decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.)

placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

Chapter XIX RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

3. The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory States

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

Statute of the International Court of Justice

Article 7

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurists of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes

3. The conditions under which a State which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 72

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 73

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be reelected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 74

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 77

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 79

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.
2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.
2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.
3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.
4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.
5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the court.
6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.
2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.
3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.
4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.
5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.
6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.
7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.
8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

Chapter II COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.
2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.
2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.
3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.
2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:
 - a. the interpretation of a treaty;
 - b. any question of international law;
 - c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
 - d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.
3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.
4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.
5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.
6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:
 - a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
 - b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
 - c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
 - d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.
2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the Parties agree thereto.

Chapter III PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents
2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.

3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.
2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.

5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.

2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.

3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.
2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.

2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

Chapter V

AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.

On 31 December 1986, the total number of staff of the United Nations holding permanent, probationary and fixed-term appointments with service or expected service of a year or more was 15,491. Of these, 6,478 were in the Professional and higher categories and 9,013 were in the General Service, Manual Worker and Field Service categories

Of the same total, 13,691 were regular staff serving at Headquarters or other established offices and 1,800 were assigned as project personnel to technical co-operation projects. In addition, UNRWA had some 16,485 local area staff. Figures quoted do not include UNDP and UNICEF.

Appendix IV

Agenda of United Nations principal organs in 1986

This appendix lists the items on the agenda of the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council during 1986. For the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, the column headed "Allocation" indicates the assignment of each item to plenary meetings or committees

Agenda item titles have been shortened by omitting mention of reports following the subject of the item. Thus, "Question of Cyprus: report of the Secretary-General" has been shortened to "Question of Cyprus". Where the subject-matter of the item is not apparent from its title, the subject is identified in square brackets; this is not part of the title.
