I. INTRODUCTION

1. The Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme held its forty-second session at the Palais des Nations at Geneva from 7 to 11 October 1991. The session was opened by the outgoing Chairman, His Excellency Mr. Emeka Ayo Azikiwe (Nigeria). He extended a special welcome to Her Royal Highness, Princess Martha Louise of Norway, whose concern for humanitarian work was an inspiration to all who worked in this field.

2. In his opening statement, Mr. Azikiwe referred to the changing international political climate, and to the hopes and uncertainties it brought with it. He emphasized that the plight of refugees continued to grow: since the Committee's last session their numbers had increased, particularly in the developing countries, creating large-scale emergencies and intense suffering. New and imaginative responses were needed. He welcomed, in this context, the efforts currently under way towards achieving enhanced coordination and efficiency by the international humanitarian agencies.

3. Referring to visits he had made to refugee camps in various African countries, he stressed that the resources made available were inadequate to cover the activities of the programmes of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). He described the commitment he had witnessed of UNHCR field staff and paid special tribute to the new High Commissioner's inspiring leadership in confronting the exceptional challenges of the current year.

4. New methods and common approaches were called for, based on past experience and reflections, with a view to offering effective durable solutions to so many thousands of refugees and displaced persons. There was reason to hope that with the advent of a new era, more efforts would go to prevention, and there would be closer links between durable solutions and protection. Mr. Azikiwe also referred to the useful work of the Working Group on Solutions and Protection, as reflected in its report. He paid tribute to the efforts of those involved in its preparation.

5. Responses to the problems of poverty and development were an integral part of the solutions to be found, as were questions of human rights and their safeguards. As long as violations occurred, refugee flows would continue.

6. In conclusion, Mr. Azikiwe emphasized the importance of securing additional accessions to the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees. There might also be a need to bring the provisions of the Convention in line with UNHCR's broadened mandate. The promulgation of regional instruments should also be encouraged in view of their valuable contribution to the protection of refugees. The important role of non-governmental organizations both in supplying relief materials and in undertaking studies in areas of direct concern to UNHCR must also be gratefully acknowledged.

D. Opening statement by the Chairman of the Executive Committee

16. In his opening statement, Mr. Bernard de Riedmatten (Switzerland) acknowledged with thanks the excellent work performed by the outgoing Bureau. He also warmly welcomed the High Commissioner's recent appointment, expressing admiration for the manner in which she had risen to the many challenges posed by the current year's events.

17. Reflecting on the organization as he had known it personally some 30 years earlier, the Chairman noted how radically circumstances had changed since then. From its initial role of providing protection and assistance to refugees in the aftermath of the Second World War, UNHCR was today confronted with massive population movements of diverse and complex origins. In some situations, refugees in the traditional sense might only account for a minority. Yet the international community could not be indifferent to the consequences and human suffering associated with those movements.

18. He drew attention, however, to two grounds for optimism. The recent political changes could be expected to generate conditions for a favourable outcome of certain refugee problems and make voluntary repatriation possible: it was the responsibility of the international community to ensure that such expectations became realities. Secondly, attention was currently focused on the need to review and improve the mechanisms implemented by the international community in providing humanitarian relief in emergencies: in this context, UNHCR was taking an active part in the discussions on this topic. Opinions might diverge within the international community on some of these issues and on appropriate solutions. Yet he felt confident that the Executive Committee would adopt a constructive attitude, mindful of how vital they were for many thousands of men, women and children throughout the world.

19. In concluding his statement, the Chairman pledged his full commitment to the work ahead, safe in the knowledge that he could count on the full support of the Committee, the High Commissioner and her staff as well as the non-governmental organizations, in the shared effort towards finding solutions.

II. GENERAL DEBATE

(items 4-9)

20. The High Commissioner's opening statement to the Executive Committee is reproduced in the annex to the present report. The full account of the deliberations of the Committee, including the statements or other interventions made by delegations on all the agenda items of the meeting, and the closing statements by the Chairman and High Commissioner, are contained in the summary records of the session (A/AC.96/SR.463-470).

III. DECISIONS AND CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

A. Conclusions and decisions on international protection

1. General conclusion on international protection

21. The Executive Committee,

(a) Notes with concern the persistent and complex dimension of today's refugee problems and observed that, although significant progress has been made over the past 40 years in resolving these problems, the protection of refugees remains an ongoing, difficult challenge in need of solution-oriented approaches;

(b) Welcomes the continuing readiness of States to receive refugees and offer them protection, as well as to make available considerable resources to meet the needs of refugees, thus demonstrating their strong and continuing humanitarian commitment at the national and international levels;

(c) Emphasizes the primary importance of non-refoulement and asylum as cardinal principles of refugee protection and encourages States to intensify their efforts to protect the rights of refugees, to prevent them from becoming the object of armed attacks in camps or settlements, to avoid unnecessary and severe curtailment of their freedom of movement, to ensure conditions of asylum compatible with recognized international standards, and to facilitate their stay in countries of asylum, including through the issue of necessary personal documentation and permission to return after travel abroad;

(d) Expresses concern about the lack of adequate international protection for various groups of refugees in different parts of the world, including a large number of Palestinians, and hoped that efforts would continue within the United Nations system to address their protection needs;

(e) Encourages UNHCR, both at Headquarters and in the field, actively to promote greater support and understanding of UNHCR's policy and activities on behalf of refugee women, including with UNHCR's implementing partners and all appropriate national or international forums where protection problems of refugee women or girls are at issue;

(f) Commends the High Commissioner for the Guidelines on the Protection of Refugee Women, 1/ requests that these guidelines be made an integral part of all UNHCR protection and assistance activities and calls for a progress report on implementation of the guidelines at the forty-third session of the Executive Committee and urges the High Commissioner to maintain the position of Senior Coordinator for Refugee Women;

(g) Reaffirms Conclusion No. 59 (XL) on refugee children adopted at the fortieth session of the Executive Committee and reiterates the importance of providing adequate protection and assistance to ensure the safety and development of refugee children and, in this connection, welcomes the High

Commissioner's decision to establish a new post of Coordinator on Refugee Children;

(h) Reiterates that the current size and complexity of the world refugee situation require vigorous promotion of existing protection principles, as well as full and open debate on new directions for protection and on further development of the law, paying particular attention to the responsibilities of States to resolve refugee situations and, especially with respect to countries of origin, to eliminate causes of refugee flows;

(i) Calls upon the High Commissioner in this regard actively to explore new options for preventive strategies which are consistent with protection principles, the ways in which State responsibility and burden-sharing mechanisms might be strengthened and public information strategies could be used to complement protection activities;

(j) Requests the High Commissioner to reinforce efforts to encourage or promote voluntary repatriation of refugees and their safe reintegration in the countries of origin, and urges States to facilitate these efforts, including by ensuring respect for the voluntary nature of any repatriation movement and by allowing their citizens to return in safety and dignity to their homes without harassment, arbitrary detention or physical threats during or after return;

(k) Welcomes the recent accessions by Romania and Poland to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, appeals to States which have not yet acceded to these instruments to do so, thereby promoting international burden-sharing and facilitating the handling and resolution of refugee situations, and encourages all States actively to support the efforts of the High Commissioner to promote universal accession;

(l) Expresses appreciation to the High Commissioner for the interim report on implementation of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, and calls upon all States which have not yet done so to respond to the questionnaire on implementation circulated by the High Commissioner;

(m) Acknowledges the value of reporting by States Parties on implementation of their responsibilities under the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol and requests UNHCR to accord public access to States' replies to the aforementioned questionnaire with the agreement of the States concerned;

(n) Notes that growing misuse of asylum procedures could compromise the institution of asylum and the maintenance of fair and efficient refugee status determination procedures, and recalled Conclusion No. 46 (j) (XXXVIII) which called upon States to ensure that measures to discourage abusive use of asylum procedures have no detrimental effect on the fundamental principles of international protection, including on the institution of asylum;

(o) Recognizes that the establishment of and access of all asylum-seekers to fair and efficient procedures are important elements in a coherent international strategy for the management and resolution of refugee situations and recalls in this connection Conclusion No. 8 (XXVIII) on

Determination of Refugee Status, Conclusion No. 15 (XXX) on Refugees without an Asylum Country, Conclusion No. 30 (XXXIV) on the Problem of Manifestly Unfounded or Abusive Applications for Refugee Status or Asylum and Conclusion No. 58 (XL) concerning the Problem of Refugees and Asylum-Seekers who Move in an Irregular Manner from a Country in which They Had Already Found Protection;

(p) Agrees, in view of the importance of the notion of safe country and the fact of ongoing consideration on it in other forums, that the Subcommittee of the Whole on International Protection should continue discussion of the notion, with a view to reaching conclusions on the matter;

(q) Underlines the possibility of use of the cessation clauses of the 1951 Convention in situations where a change of circumstances in a country is of such a profound and enduring nature that refugees from that country no longer require international protection, and can no longer continue to refuse to avail themselves of the protection of their country, provided that it is recognized that compelling reasons may, for certain individuals, support the continuation of refugee status, and calls upon UNHCR to explore in the Subcommittee of the Whole on International Protection the application of the cessation clauses;

(r) Reaffirms Conclusion No. 50 (1) (XXXIX), reiterates its call to States actively to explore and promote measures favourable to stateless persons, including accession to the international instruments pertaining to stateless persons, and, in this connection, believes it would be useful for United Nations human rights bodies to address statelessness issues, including the problem of arbitrary deprivation of nationality and the content of the right to a nationality;

(s) Notes with appreciation the efforts of the High Commissioner to promote refugee law through existing resources, drawing on external private funding, and calls upon the High Commissioner to strengthen the Office's training activities, in particular through training courses directed to Government officials and others working directly with refugees and asylum-seekers;

(t) Notes with concern the precarious security situation prevailing in some areas where refugees are located which has also put the staff of UNHCR at considerable risk and calls upon States to protect the security of international and local staff working in their countries on behalf of refugees;

(u) Welcomes the convening of the World Conference on Human Rights and calls upon the High Commissioner to participate actively in the preparations for and the proceedings of the Conference, bearing in mind particularly that the matter of human rights and mass exoduses merits further serious consideration;

(v) Calls upon the High Commissioner to continue to contribute, as appropriate, to the deliberations of international human rights bodies.

2. Decision on the report of the Working Group on Solutions and Protection

22. The Executive Committee,

Accepting with appreciation the report of the Working Group on Solutions and Protection to the forty-second session of the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme, 2/

23. The Executive Committee,

Reaffirming the link between international protection and resettlement as an instrument of protection and its important role as a durable solution in specific circumstances,

(a) Calls upon Governments in a position to assist, to establish refugee admission ceilings, in the context of international burden-sharing;

(b) Requests States when setting refugee admission ceilings to include an adequate contingency provision which could be available depending on need to address rapidly evolving situations;

(c) Recognizes that rapidly evolving situations can result in fluctuating resettlement requirements from one year to another and that admission ceilings should be adaptable to such developments;

(d) Recognizes the need for rapid and flexible response to UNHCR resettlement requirements in particular for vulnerable groups and emergency protection cases subject to refugee admission requirements of receiving States;

(e) Acknowledges the utility of close consultation with UNHCR in the resettlement activities of the Office;

(f) Recognizes that in reviewing UNHCR resettlement requests the protection element inherent in such requests should be taken into account;

(g) Emphasizes that UNHCR pursues resettlement only as a last resort, when neither voluntary repatriation nor local integration is possible, when it is in the best interests of the refugees and where appropriate.

B. Conclusion on refugee women

(d) Urges all States to assist the High Commissioner in assuring an adequate and effective emergency preparedness and response capability, especially by providing all necessary support to UNHCR for this purpose and, in the case of emergencies, by taking immediate measures to facilitate a timely response;

(e) Requests that UNHCR discuss with those non-governmental organizations with proven expertise in particular sectors, the establishment of stand-by agreements to be used rapidly to establish implementing-partner relationship in emergency situations;

(f) Encourages the High Commissioner to continue to work closely with the Secretary-General so he can assure that the United Nations is in a position to respond in a coordinated and effective fashion to complex, humanitarian emergency situations;

(g) Invites the High Commissioner to keep the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters regularly informed about the implementation of the content of this decision.

C

31. The Executive Committee,

Noting the contents and proposals in the conference room paper entitled "Voluntary Repatriation: Resource Mobilization for Voluntary Repatriation Movements and Reintegration Assistance", 17/

Stressing that opportunities for voluntary repatriation as the preferred durable solution should be utilized to the fullest and urging States to facilitate efforts towards this goal,

Realizing that one of the factors that often limits the maximum utilization of these possibilities for voluntary repatriation is the unavailability of timely funding,

(a) Calls upon the High Commissioner to explore with Member States and other donors, especially in the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters, the range of options for addressing this problem, such as the possibility of including the costs associated with imminent voluntary repatriation movements in the 1993 General Programmes budget;

(b) Calls upon UNHCR to promote in this regard further regional approaches to voluntary repatriation;

(c) Requests the High Commissioner to present to the next meeting of the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters a list of priority areas where voluntary repatriation is being encouraged and is likely to succeed, including an estimate of the associated costs.

D

32. The Executive Committee,

Having noted the documents relating to the evaluation activities of the Office, 18/

Recalling its earlier request that the Office's evaluation activities continue to be enhanced, 19/

Considering evaluation activities to be an essential management tool, improving the efficiency and effectiveness of UNHCR's programmes,

(a) Requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to assure that the evaluation function in the Office is adequately resourced, even at times of emergencies;

(b) Reiterates its belief that evaluation, both internal and external, of UNHCR activities when professionally and independently undertaken will lead to greater efficiencies in the programmes and commensurate savings of UNHCR;

(c) Requests the High Commissioner to ensure that the recommendations of the Central Evaluation Section, if appropriate, are followed up and implemented to the extent possible and to report thereon;

(d) Expresses its appreciation of summaries of UNHCR evaluation reports and asks that these summaries continue to be made available to the Executive Committee;

(e) Supports the idea of joint UNHCR-donor evaluation exercises;

(f) Calls for the establishment of baseline data concerning refugee women and refugee children in order to evaluate adequately the performance of UNHCR in implementing its policy on refugee women and refugee children.

E

33. The Executive Committee,

Taking note of the efforts made by UNHCR and relevant agencies to enhance their collaboration on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

(a) Welcomes UNDP Governing Council decision 91/17 calling for intensified cooperation between UNDP, UNHCR and other relevant agencies on, inter alia, identification and provision of integration and development assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

(b) Encourages the High Commissioner to continue with her advocacy of greater inter-agency cooperation and in particular to undertake with the UNDP Administrator steps to bring to fruition joint activities in development fields aimed at benefiting refugees, returnees, displaced persons and their host communities.

E

34. The Executive Committee,

Having taken note of the conference room paper entitled "The Fund Raising Function of UNHCR: Strategies for Raising Funds for UNHCR", 20/

Recognizing the ever-growing number of calls on the services of UNHCR to respond to refugee situations, covering a wide range of activities from emergency assistance to voluntary repatriation,

Realizing that UNHCR needs a coherent fund-raising strategy to assure the mobilization of the necessary resources for its work,

(a) Welcomes the broad outlines of such a strategy as set out in the said conference room paper, in particular the proposals for broadening the donor base of UNHCR and the clear articulation of funding priorities;

(b) Encourages UNHCR to assess assistance policies of traditional donors - in particular their regional and sectoral priorities - with a view to broadening the range of funding sources;

(c) Urges UNHCR to give priority to the formulation of an effective communications strategy that will be directly supportive of the major fund-raising objectives of UNHCR;

(d) Encourages UNHCR to explore further the potential of the private sector, while stressing the need to cooperate closely with non-governmental organizations so as to avoid competition for private sector funds;

(e) Notes with appreciation the continued very strong donor support to UNHCR at a time of unprecedented demands on the Office which require the mobilization of significant financial resources and calls upon donors to sustain their support so as to ensure the timely and full funding of current activities as well as those programmed for 1992;

(f) Reiterates the importance for the planning and implementation of activities of the early announcement of pledges, particularly at the Pledging Conference, and asks that these pledges, if earmarked, be done so in the broadest possible way in order to allow UNHCR the flexibility to allocate funds according to the most pressing needs;

(g) Requests UNHCR, in accordance with the relevant recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report 15/ to enter into consultations with donors in order to achieve greater harmonization and standardization of reporting requirements, as well as streamlining of payment procedures and thus make more efficient use of human resources;

(h) Calls upon those Governments which do not contribute to UNHCR or which could increase their contributions, and are in a position to do so, to provide financial support in the spirit of international burden-sharing.

G

35. The Executive Committee,

Having reviewed the documentation related to human resources management and administration, 21/ and the note on the review of the classification of directors' (D.2) posts in UNHCR, 22/ and the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions thereon,

Bearing in mind the importance of maintaining a qualified, independent and geographically balanced staff,

(a) Takes note of the report containing several issues of concern submitted by the Chairman of the Staff Council, 23/ in accordance with the invitation formulated by the Executive Committee at its last session;

(b) Takes note of the proposals contained in the note on the review of the classification of directors' (D.2) posts in UNHCR; 22/

(c) Requests that, prior to the further consideration of these proposals, the High Commissioner provide a comprehensive note on UNHCR's human-resource development strategy at the next meeting of the Subcommittee on Administration and Finance. The document could address at the same time both the classification of Directors' posts and other personnel policies, such as recruitment, mobility/rotation, status of women staff, performance evaluation, promotion criteria and Headquarters/field personnel ratio;

(d) Requests the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters, in the light of its consideration of these human resource issues, to take appropriate action, including a possible recommendation on the proposals in the note 22/ to the Executive Committee;

(e) Agrees to act upon the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters at the earliest possible opportunity;

(f) Calls on the High Commissioner to ensure that the Administration and staff promote a meaningful dialogue, particularly through use of the established joint staff-management machinery;

(g) Encourages the High Commissioner to pursue the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for the simplification and transparency of reports on UNHCR activities financed by voluntary funds as they relate to human resources in order to more comprehensively portray the situation at Headquarters and in the field among all categories of personnel;

(h) Invites the Chairman of the Staff Council to submit a report on issues of interest to the staff to the Executive Committee at its forty-third session.

ANNEX

Opening statement of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme at its forty-second session

1. May I welcome you all to this session of the Executive Committee. Allow me to extend a special welcome to Her Royal Highness, Princess Märtha Louise of Norway. This morning Her Royal Highness graciously accepted to become the Goodwill Ambassador for UNHCR. The Princess' interest in humanitarian issues is a clear reflection of the fine tradition of her family and her country. I should also like to congratulate you on your election, Mr. Chairman, as well as the Vice Chairman and Rapporteur. I look forward to continuing with this Bureau the close cooperation I have enjoyed with Ambassador Azikiwe and his Bureau. The outgoing Chairman's field trips are indicative of his own and, indeed, this Committee's close involvement and active support for refugee matters, for which I am grateful. We need it more than ever. My friend and colleague, Mr. James Ingram, Executive Director of the World Food Programme will address the meeting later today. His presence here, returning a visit I paid to the opening of WFP's Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes last May, shows the ever-closer cooperation between our two agencies.
2. Mr. Chairman, the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is a mirror of the world we live in. It is often as if the morning news sets our agenda of the day. In an age, where it is sometimes difficult to see whether news is triggered by events, or events by the news media, it is important for an institution like UNHCR to have both the capacity to respond promptly and to grasp the implications of the changes in the surrounding world. In my statement today, I would like to share with you some thoughts on how I see UNHCR in this fundamentally changed and changing world, and more particularly how UNHCR's operational capacity must be balanced by an appropriate policy formulation capability. I make my remarks after less than eight months in office - but after a period, which, in the opinion of many who have been involved in refugee matters much longer than I, has been truly unprecedented in many respects.
3. In the Persian Gulf, we have witnessed the largest and fastest refugee exodus in recent times. Less than five months after 1.5 million Iraqis fled their homes, all but some 70,000 are back. Some have been able to return to their homes, others - numbering some 500,000 - are back in their country but still displaced. A swift and volatile exodus has been followed by an equally fast but fragile return.
4. In the Horn of Africa, massive humanitarian operations have had to substitute for more constructive, economic and social development efforts. Continuing conflicts, timid democratization and tenuous peace initiatives make that region a mixture of hope and concern.
5. In Europe, the free movements of people that only recently were seen as the harbinger of political change in the East have now become the source of deep concern - sometimes fears - in the West. Growing numbers of asylum-seekers have stretched existing procedures and practices to their limits and put the institution of asylum to test. On the other hand, the countries in Eastern Europe which not so long ago were producers of refugees are now receiving them. I believe it should now be possible to look at the application of the "cessation clause" in this region. As many of these countries join the work of this Committee I welcome them, as I do their accessions or intention to accede to the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol. These acts underline the continued relevance of the refugee instruments in the post Cold War era.

6. 1991 has been a year marked, not only by exodus but also by new opportunities for returns. Last month, I signed an agreement with the Government of South Africa, paving the way for a UNHCR presence in South Africa and the safe return of exiles.

7. Right now, we are standing in the wings ready to repatriate Western Saharans to participate in the referendum on the future of the Territory.

8. In Cambodia, as the lead agency for voluntary repatriation, we are accelerating our preparations to keep pace with the rapid and positive political developments. But further action is hampered by inadequate response to the Secretary-General's appeal last year on behalf of UNHCR for $US 33 million needed for preparatory arrangements. I must take this opportunity to urge Governments strongly to make immediate and generous contributions.

9. Some solutions are going almost unnoticed. In Central America, for instance, refugees have been returning home in large numbers, thanks to regional peace initiatives and the CIREFCA process. During my trip to Central America later this month, I shall be closing the last refugee camp for Nicaraguans in Costa Rica.

10. We are establishing a presence in Eritrea as a prelude to significant returns from the Sudan. The peace agreement in Angola makes it realistic to plan for the return of 300,000 refugees early next year. Negotiations are continuing for a lasting solution to the Rwandese refugee problem. A Tripartite Commission, composed of Burundi, United Republic of Tanzania and UNHCR, is planning for the return of some 94,000 refugees to Burundi. Tripartite discussions between Laos, Thailand and UNHCR are expected to lead to the voluntary return of some 55,000 Laotians over the next few years, while returns to Viet Nam now exceed 13,000.

11. The outflow from Viet Nam has subsided considerably, with the notable exception of arrivals to Hong Kong. However, the stalemate in finding a dignified and humane solution to those determined not to be refugees has hampered further progress. Consultations on this important subject are continuing and I am hopeful that a consensus can be reached soon so that all those who have not qualified as refugees can return home in safety and dignity.

12. In Afghanistan, notwithstanding the security situation, some 200,000 refugees have returned from Pakistan this year. Likewise, despite continuing insecurity, Liberian refugees are returning to their country. I do hope that political initiatives will lead to more orderly solutions to this problem which is weighing heavily on the countries neighbouring Liberia.

13. New refugee emergencies, actual repatriation operations or prospective return movements, as well as ongoing care and maintenance programmes, have created the highest ever UNHCR programme requirements. At the end of last year, we expected total expenditure in 1991 to be at the level of some $US 560 million. Today, the projected total needs for 1991 amount to $US 982.5 million. A year of unprecedented needs has been matched by an equally unprecedented response. As of today, donors have made available $US 785 million in voluntary contributions. I am deeply thankful for this support. I see it not only as a sign of confidence in UNHCR but also as a clear commitment on the part of the international community to participate in an effort of solidarity and burden-sharing to alleviate the plight and promote solutions for the some 17 million refugees under our care. The contribution of the countries of asylum to this international effort is immeasurable.

14. Greater support brings with it greater expectations and greater demands. I am acutely conscious that our performance must measure up to the confidence which the international community has placed in us. You will appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the strains on a bureaucracy that in the course of 15 months has had three High Commissioners and, within a period of 18 months, has gone through a retrenchment exercise followed by around 60 per cent increase in activity. The administrative and management requirements to respond to the record needs this past year have been staggering.

15. I have been impressed by the tolerance, patience and commitment of UNHCR staff and their families during these turbulent times. Many of them risk their personal safety in difficult field situations. Some have paid dearly for it. Mr. Chairman, I should like to record a special tribute to six Somali and Ethiopian colleagues who lost their lives during the recent upheavals in their countries. There is no doubt that UNHCR's effectiveness depends heavily on the commitment and contributions of a motivated staff, guided by a competent group of senior managers at the appropriate level as I have recommended in the note on the review of the classification of the directors' posts. I am eminently aware of the legitimate concerns in areas of staff welfare and job satisfaction. There are a range of personnel issues that need to be addressed but which have gone unattended as we have concentrated on meeting the demands of an exceptional year. I am determined to take a comprehensive look at these issues in the coming months.

16. Mr. Chairman, as the 40th Anniversary Year of UNHCR draws to a close, issues of migration and refugees have become an increasingly important and essential component in formulating a more open and just world order. The ending of the Cold War has placed before us new challenges. On the one hand, there are risks of further displacement as nationalistic, ethnic and religious tensions flare up. On the other hand, there are immense opportunities for solutions in the changing climate of multilateralism. At the same time, stagnant refugee situations of Afghans, Mozambicans and Liberians, fester, eroding human dignity and impeding regional peace. At this time, I believe that UNHCR must chart a forward-looking strategy which focuses on prevention and solutions and addresses the totality of the refugee problem from exodus and relief to return and reintegration. My strategic plan has three aims.

17. My first aim is to improve UNHCR's emergency preparedness and response mechanism. In addition to building its own capacity, UNHCR is also entering into agreements with Scandinavian Governments and non-governmental organizations for access to their capacities both in terms of staff and equipment. The proposals presented to you at this session will not only enable UNHCR to respond to refugee emergencies, but can contribute also to a United Nations system-wide emergency response in case of large and complex humanitarian disasters. I have already had the opportunity to pronounce myself on this latter issue during our meeting last June, and also at the Economic and Social Council session in July. Let me simply reiterate that, based on our recent experience in the Persian Gulf area and the Horn of Africa, I see a clear need for an arrangement that fully utilizes the political and humanitarian potential of the United Nations, while assuring a coordinated operational response to complex emergencies. The goal of coordination should be to facilitate cooperation and not to add to the bureaucratic layer of control. It should be based on a stand-by arrangement for funds, personnel and equipment and should be supported by a standing inter-agency secretariat.

18. In responding to emergencies, we must not forget those who are the most vulnerable, in other words the women and children. With the example of the Coordinator for Refugee Women to inspire us, I intend to appoint a Coordinator for Refugee Children as soon as possible, thanks to the support of the Government of Norway. In the past few years, we have developed some useful policy guidelines on refugee women and children, but it is painfully obvious that the Office still has a long way to go in translating the policies into systematic, concrete action. I am committed to improving this important area of UNHCR activities.

19. Another vulnerable, yet overlooked, element in emergencies, as much as in ongoing refugee situations, is the environment. Economizing on refugee assistance in the short term may be prohibitively costly on the environment in the long run. The impact of large numbers of refugees on the environment in Malawi and Pakistan are but two examples. We need to give greater consideration to environmental issues in our assistance activities. Degradation of the environment may lead to displacement, and displacement may cause further degradation of the environment. Conversely, sustainable development may reduce displacement. I hope that next year's Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro will pay attention to the link between population movements, the environment and development.

20. My second goal is to pursue every opportunity for voluntary repatriation. In a world where most refugees are confined to over-crowded, makeshift camps in conditions as dismal - if not more dismal - than the situation they have fled, the right to return to one's homeland must be given as much recognition as the right to seek asylum abroad. Renewed confidence in the ability of the United Nations to tackle global challenges is opening up new prospects for peace around the world. The prevention and solution of refugee problems is inextricably linked to these peace-building and peace-keeping efforts. I see 1992 as the year for voluntary repatriation.

21. It is very encouraging that the prospects for the return of many refugees seem brighter today than in the past. But I am concerned about the kind of life to which they are expected to go back. In July this year I visited Ethiopia, and met many of the Ethiopians who had come back from Somalia. They had come home to escape fighting in Somalia and found themselves hungry and homeless upon return. They are back, but in the absence of prospects, the question is: for how long? Is the problem of displacement simply going to be shifted from one side of the border to the other? Are we going to be confronted with returnee emergencies just as we are now facing refugee emergencies? And at what cost to the fragile process of peace in these countries?

22. The country of origin must accept responsibility for its own citizens - both in terms of conditions which avert forced exile and also which promote voluntary return. However, large-scale repatriation can only succeed if there is a concerted international effort to create proper conditions for return. Most of the countries to which refugees are returning or will return have been devastated by war. They all have large numbers of internally displaced persons, and little or no capacity to reabsorb those who left. Returning refugees can only be properly reintegrated if there are comprehensive programmes for political, economic, and social construction or reconstruction. As such, ensuring the success of voluntary repatriation goes beyond the mandate or resources of UNHCR alone. UNHCR's short-term relief and aid to returnees must be complemented by and integrated with the national development efforts for the entire population. UNHCR is not a development agency but I am determined to act as a catalyst, sensitizing, encouraging, cooperating with development organizations, donors and, most of all, the countries concerned. I am optimistic that the concept of returnee aid and development will attract much interest and support. Firstly, the country of origin would have a clear stake in seeing its citizens return and, in the process, act as a dynamo for local, regional or national development efforts. Secondly, I trust that development organizations and lending institutions will see an interest in contributing to humanitarian solutions which might provide more stability for long-term economic development. Thirdly, donors would wish to see their resources directed towards consolidation of lasting solutions rather than protracted care and maintenance programmes in countries of asylum. Through the note on voluntary repatriation I am providing some thoughts and ideas on this subject and look forward to further reflection with members of the Executive Committee.

23. My third objective is to promote solutions through preventive measures at the source of the problem. The first step in this approach must be to define who is in need of international protection. The Working Group on Solutions and Protection has helped to clarify some of the issues. But it is important for the international community to arrive at a clear and agreed understanding of who deserves international protection. People leave their homes not because they want to, but because they have to. Refugees flee to save their lives, economic migrants to improve the prospects of life. A better understanding of the different reasons that drive people to move will help to identify the ways in which outflows could possibly be prevented. I should clarify that I define prevention not as building barriers to stop people moving, but as removing or reducing the factors which force displacement.

24. The root causes of refugee flows are ultimately related to political conflict and violation of human rights. When people feel their lives and liberties are secure, they have no reason to seek asylum elsewhere. The responsibility as well as the capacity for addressing these root causes lies with Governments and bodies other than UNHCR. But I firmly believe that UNHCR must promote and assist such a course. We must be prepared not only to switch resources as necessary from the country of asylum to the country of origin but also to develop the necessary tools for effective action to avoid refugee flows. Among these tools are: one: closer cooperation with human rights bodies and participation in wider early-warning activities. Two: developing country of origin database. We have already started work on it. Not only will it help develop action to avoid outflows but will also help us to provide advice on refugee status determination, the application of cessation clauses and the "safe country" concept. Three: closer contacts with development and lending institutions. Four: promotion of mass communication campaigns to address the expectations and misconceptions of those seeking to move. We are about to launch a new mass communication strategy in Europe, capitalizing on our experience from Viet Nam.

25. In fact, many of these tools have been tested in South-East Asia under the Comprehensive Plan for Action. They have been refined and reapplied in our approach to the problem in Albania. I see them as important elements in any strategy to address potential or actual population movements in Europe.

26. At our June meeting, I said that an important preventive measure must be to respond to the needs of the internally displaced. Their plight is as compelling as that of those who cross national frontiers. The problem, however, goes beyond the capacity of any one agency. What is needed is a coordinated and concerted response from the United Nations system, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and non-governmental organizations. UNHCR's experience, past and present, on behalf of internally displaced persons could serve as useful models for such concerted efforts. The ONUSAL operation in El Salvador could also offer interesting pioneering lessons in this regard. In my view, respect for national sovereignty should not restrict but should rather be reconciled with the protection and assistance needs of the internally displaced. We must build on principles of humanitarian law, human rights and refugee law to develop a legal framework and operational guidelines for humanitarian access to those in need.

27. In developing our strategy on prevention and solutions, let me emphasize that UNHCR should not and will not abrogate its responsibility to promote a liberal asylum policy. At a time when respect for human rights and the rule of law are gaining universal ground, I would like to see a greater emphasis - and acceptance - of UNHCR's supervisory protection role in favour of refugees. With this aim in mind, we have begun a review of our resources and structures in Europe, so that new policy priorities can be established and necessary changes introduced to assure efficiency and effectiveness. It should be underlined that in attempting to restructure our existing resources, we are determined to do our utmost to avoid incurring additional costs.

28. In this context, I believe it is crucial for UNHCR to develop a higher public profile. An effective public information strategy is an essential tool for protection. Public opinion and public policy are shaped by mass media and statements by policy makers. I am deeply concerned to sense a rising xenophobic mood in various countries, and I strongly urge all leaders to use their power and influence to combat these dangerous trends. On its part, UNHCR must contribute to a more informed and credible public debate by providing reliable facts and figures. Thus, we have already begun work within UNHCR to help improve our reporting on refugee statistics.

29. In concluding, let me summarize: our ultimate goal must be to act in such a way that people are not forced to flee or, alternatively, that solutions can be found so that people cease to be refugees. Some of these activities fall squarely within the competence of UNHCR, others require mobilization of and cooperation with Governments, other United Nations agencies, intergovernmental agencies such as IOM, regional organizations, such as the Organization of African Unity, the Arab League, the Islamic Conference, the Economic Community, Council of Europe, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Organization of American States, with ICRC, and of course with non-governmental organizations, who remain our unfailing and invaluable partners. A truly comprehensive international effort is required. I take the presence of so many of you today as a clear indication of interest and readiness to join in such efforts.

30. UNHCR was created 40 years ago in 1951 at the height of the East-West confrontation in order to protect and assist those fleeing totalitarian persecution. Eventually, the desire of people to move across borders to enjoy freer and better opportunities forced the repressive regimes in Eastern Europe to change. The crumbling of the Berlin Wall on 9 November 1989 was one of the most significant events symbolizing the end of the Cold War. The one lesson we can learn from the past is that building walls is no answer against those who feel compelled to flee. The answer should be to build bridges - between West and East, North and South, allowing democracy, human rights and prosperity to spread. As we meet in the 40th anniversary year, I commit UNHCR to a course that will lead to a more open and just world order in which many refugees will find their way back home and no one would be forced to flee.
