Foreword

THE EVENTS OF 1993 DEMONSTRATED the compelling urgency for the United Nations to promote three underlying goals of its efforts: peace, development and democracy. They are interlocking and mutually reinforcing.

The United Nations peace operations in the field, most prominently in Cambodia, El Salvador, Somalia and the former Yugoslavia, ranged beyond the traditional notion and definition of peace-keeping, as they took on political, social, humanitarian and environmental dimensions. The concept of development also adopted an integrated approach; it was no longer merely a matter of economic policy and resources. Development meant political, social and cultural nation-building and took into account the educational and environmental imperatives of our time.

Democracy has re-emerged as another hallmark in the conduct of international affairs. Just as peace is a prerequisite to development, democracy is essential for sustainable development. State after State has found the immense value of popular participation in the development process, of democratization of national institutions and of the protection of the fundamental human rights of all citizens.

The globalization of international affairs presents the Organization with unique opportunities to take practical and urgent measures designed to advance the purposes and principles of the Charter. It also requires a profoundly renewed approach to information gathering and dissemination so as to engage the highest confidence of the international community in the United Nations. I trust that, as a faithful record of United Nations activities, this volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations will contribute significantly to a better knowledge and appreciation of the cooperative international endeavours to promote peace and construct a sustainable future for humanity.

About the 1993 edition of the Yearbook

The YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS stands as the single most comprehensive and up-to-date reference tool on the activities of the United Nations. The Department of Public Information of the United Nations remains committed to a timely annual publication of the Yearbook in order to ensure that the research community and the general public receive detailed and current accounts of the work of the United Nations. The efforts to ensure a timely publication of the Yearbook, however, pose the problem of having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. As a result, all Security Council resolutions in the present volume are provisional, as the final texts were not available at the time of going to press.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented, dealing with political and security questions, regional questions, economic and social questions, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Various chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications. The document symbols of all major reports cited appear in the REFERENCES, which are listed at the end of each chapter or subchapter and linked by numerical indicators to the text.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1993 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details are also provided of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1993, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given, wherever available, on contributions and expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund and cover the 1993 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topic. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1993 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the United Nations system.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1993 edition, like the previous volumes, has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities by the use of the table of contents, the SUBJECT INDEX and the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS. The Yearbook also contains five appendices. APPENDIX I comprises a roster of Member States; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1993; and APPENDIX V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1993 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/48/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-eighth session, beginning with A/48/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.I/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1993/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1993 sessions, beginning with E/1993/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/1993/C.1/- and E/1993/C.2/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, its Economic and Social Committees; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1993/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 1993/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2196(LX) of the sixtieth session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.93.II.A.2; E/F/R.93.II.E.7; E.93.X.1.

I. Introduction

1. A year ago the United Nations, its Member States and the peoples of the world recognized that a new opportunity had presented itself. The cold war being over, the United Nations could play the pivotal role in establishing world order and progress that had been assigned to it by the drafters of the Charter.

2. The past 12 months leave no doubt that the opportunity has been grasped in a positive way. The vast potential of the world Organization has been recognized and has begun to be employed in the establishment of a more stable world order: as a strengthened voice for the poorest countries, as deliverer of humanitarian relief, as guardian of human and minority rights, as rescuer of States in crisis and as an instrument for repairing a damaged global environment. In virtually every area, as the present report will show, there have been substantial achievements. But there have been serious set-backs and shortcomings as well. This mixed record is to be expected in view of the comprehensive agenda that we are facing, both in quantitative terms and in the light of its complexity.

3. Beyond the gains and losses inflicted by reality, however, troubling questions of will and purpose have been exposed. The pattern of the past 12 months displays three realities: the comprehensive nature of the global challenge, the indispensability of the United Nations and the gap that has been revealed as the demands of Member States on the Organization are not matched by the resources provided.

4. The comprehensive reality is most clearly revealed through three objectives: peace, development and democracy. They are interlocking and mutually reinforcing.

5. In mid-1992, in my report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", I discussed the need to view efforts for peace as a continuum over time. From preventive diplomacy to peacemaking and peace-keeping, to post-conflict peace-building, the cycle continues through perpetual rounds. Increasingly we have learned that working for peace provides us with no place of rest.

6. The past 12 months have demonstrated that peace operations involve interrelated functions. United Nations operations in the field, most prominently in Cambodia, El Salvador, Somalia and the former Yugoslavia, have had to range far beyond the accepted notion and definition of peace-keeping. Virtually every one of the departments and established functions of the United Nations may now be involved in operations for peace. The second generation of peace-keeping is certain to involve not only military but also political, economic, social, humanitarian and environmental dimensions, all in need of a unified and integrated approach.

7. Development is now understood to involve many dimensions; it is no longer merely a matter of economic policy and resources. Political, social, educational and environmental factors must be part of an integrated approach to development. Without development on the widest scale, the young will be restless, resentful and unproductive. People will fight for resources, and creativity will be misdirected.

8. A new, workable and widely agreed concept of development still eludes us. Until it is achieved, the United Nations will continue to face a sequence of conflicts.

9. There can be no flowering of development without the parallel advance of another key concept: democratization. Peace is a prerequisite to development; democracy is essential if development is to succeed over the long term.

10. The real development of a State must be based on the participation of its population; that requires human rights and democracy. To ensure such an achievement, democratization must not only take hold inside a State, but among States in the international community. And democracy within States can be fully sustained over time only if it is linked to expanding democratization among States and at all levels of the international system.

11. Without peace, there can be no development and there can be no democracy. Without development, the basis for democracy will be lacking and societies will tend to fall into conflict. And without democracy, no sustainable development can occur; without such development, peace cannot long be maintained.

12. And so it has become evident that three great concepts and priorities are interlinked, and they must be addressed at every level of human society. We can see in recent events the relationship between the individual, the State and the global society in which we all now participate. In the course of the modern era one or another of these three has tended to be the primary focus, to the relative neglect of the others.

13. At one time the individual was seen as having little need for State institutions. At other times the State has been exalted as the supreme object of human effort and sacrifice. And at still other times, the demise of the State has been predicted and an almost transcendental globalism has been promoted as the ultimate goal of life. We are fortunate today to see before us, in the theatre of history, a more integrated vision. The individual has been reaffirmed as the creative source of economic progress, political expression and artistic and intellectual achievement. States and their sovereignty are increasingly recognized as indispensable building-blocks of international order and problem-solving. Cooperative global integration is now an inescapable fact and requirement for all the world's peoples. This is anything but Utopian; it is an effort to address compelling problems by practical methods, to produce the cooperative community that can manage global change.

14. The globalization now taking place requires a profoundly renewed concept of the State. Between the isolated individual and the world there must be an intermediate element, an organized community that enables the individual to participate in the life of the world. This element is the State and its national sovereignty. They respond to the need of all human beings for identification. In a world both impersonal and fragmented, such a need is greater than it ever has been in history.

15. Individuals find identity in nations. And nations should find identity in universalism. There is no international community if there are no nations. So the opposition between nationalism and globalization is to a large extent false.

16. In Chapter I of the Charter of the United Nations the founders proclaimed the intention "to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights . . . of peoples". This is the foundation of a well-ordered internationalism. National sovereignty is the art of rendering unequal power equal. Without State sovereignty, the very instrument of international cooperation might be destroyed and international organization might itself become impossible. States are not the only actors in the international arena; they must be part of regional associations and global organizations. Together they provide the framework for collective security and cooperative progress.

17. Thus from every angle of vision—chronological, practical, functional, conceptual, individual and institutional—we come to one conclusion: humanity's project is now truly universal, and to cope with it we must fashion comprehensive and integral projects, policies and efforts.

18. The character of the challenges and realities I have outlined here makes it clear that the world Organization—the United Nations—is indispensable. Only the United Nations has the universal character, the global convening power and the extensive networks which cover virtually every international function in the service of all peoples.

19. As I have prepared this annual report on the work of the Organization, I have tried to do so in a way that reflects the comprehensive approach the times require. The sections proceed from the measures of coordination needed to strengthen the United Nations as an organization, to the development work of the Organization, to activities to strengthen societies against breakdown, to efforts to halt or contain conflict, to peace-keeping operations and peacemaking efforts, to building for a stable future of peace. In the new United Nations all these aspects must be coordinated to bring them into a coherent mission.

20. I believe that this report provides a fair reflection of the work carried out by the various departments of the Secretariat and by other component parts of the United Nations system. If the work carried out in the economic and social sectors appears to be less focused than the work of the Organization in the fields of peace and security, this is, in my view, an inevitable consequence of the proliferation of intergovernmental bodies and organizations in the economic and social sectors and the lack of an effective coordinating mechanism. I invite further reflection on how that gap could be filled.

21. It will be evident, from the detailed contents of each section of this report, that the reach of the international community at this time exceeds its grasp. United Nations Forces increasingly find themselves thrust into areas of conflict where major Powers are not willing to venture themselves and are reluctant to make the hard choices posed by a new era of challenges to peace. And the United Nations is struggling to keep a focus on development when the poorest countries no longer hold the same interest for the rich as they did in the previous decades of ideological competition.

22. Yet, all too often, the eyes of the media are focused on some aspects of the Organization's work to the exclusion of others. As presented in the media, the work of the United Nations appears to centre around the multiple tasks of peace-keeping operations to the near exclusion of other activities. And as regards the media's concern with peace-keeping, the operations in Somalia and Bosnia and Herzegovina dominate reports. One of the aims of this annual report is to correct this distorted view of the Organization's work. Though activities for development may not be as glamorous as peace-keeping operations, they are just as important and, indeed, provide the foundations for global security and stability. Nor are some peace-keeping operations more important than others. The United Nations attaches equal importance to all conflicts.

23. Global organizations, and especially the United Nations, are being called upon to do a growing share of the public's international work. But it must always be remembered that the Member States are the motive and supporting force of the world Organization. Clearly, the United Nations cannot resolve the major problems on the international agenda in the absence of the political will, sufficient support and continuing commitment which each particular endeavour requires.

24. The achievements of the past year vastly outweigh the set-backs. Common concern has become more evident and effectively expressed. The readiness to rely upon the United Nations is heartening and gives reason for growing hope that the world Organization will fulfil its original purpose and, beyond that, prove able to adapt to the new challenges of this changing time in history. It is my hope that this annual report, by examining each area of action with a careful eye, will help to reveal the areas which require far greater effort by the Member States and by the United Nations system itself.

25. Thus while recent accomplishments deserve great credit, they do not provide a sense of true satisfaction. The United Nations renaissance remains in question. The international community stands at a turning-point. There is an undeniable disparity between the vision and the reality. This must be faced squarely by the States Members of the world Organization and the peoples they represent. This report should serve as a stimulus to greater realism, engagement, effort and political creativity. All are essential if the present turning-point is to lead to a successful next stage in shaping the common future.

26. This is the longest report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization in many years. Yet it still does not do justice to the myriad activities undertaken by the United Nations in the course of the past year. The necessary reform of the Organization's Secretariat has been added to the multiplication of tasks and the emergence of new functions demanded by the Member States. This annual report attempts to reflect, in as factual and comprehensive a manner as possible, the scope and size of the tasks faced by the Organization in the previous year, yet a detailed catalogue of our work would require a report two or three times the size. In view of the growth in our responsibilities, a burden that we willingly accept, the annual report has grown in size and detail.

27. My hope is that the report does justice to the men and women who have, in the course of the year, given their time and effort in the service of the United Nations. The end of the cold war offers a valuable opportunity to revitalize the international civil service. In this connection, the General Assembly may wish to consider whether some personnel rules should be revised and whether the conditions of service should be improved to attract the best qualified candidates, particularly at the senior level, to serve in the Organization. I would like to see a system that rewards achievement while insisting on accountability for inadequate performance.

28. By presenting a comprehensive overview of the work of the United Nations, I wish also to underscore the competence, dedication and industry of the staff of the Organization, who have continued to give of their best while their workload has increased substantially. I pay tribute to the men and women who strive to tackle some of the world's most intractable problems with energy and creativity, sometimes paying with their lives, and who seek to bring the world closer to the promise of our Charter.

II. Coordinating a comprehensive strategy

"To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends."

Charter of the United Nations, Article 1, paragraph 4

A. Organs of the United Nations

29. The world is being changed by powerful forces that no State, or even group of States, has the capacity to manage by itself. The United Nations, as an Organization, is therefore embarking on a programme of far-reaching reform to enable it truly to become the instrument of world peace and development that its founders envisioned half a century ago. No organ of the United Nations can fail to be affected by this far-reaching reform process.

1. General Assembly

30. The General Assembly is playing an increasingly practical role in world activities. Its workload has remained consistently heavy over the past four sessions, with expanding activities in some areas. The total number of meetings held by the Assembly, its General Committee and Main Committees each year from the forty-fourth to the forty-seventh sessions has remained fairly constant: 436, 412, 418 and 420, respectively. However, the number of meetings held by working groups of the plenary and of the Main Committees during the same period showed a sharp increase. During the forty-fourth session, working groups met 52 times; during the forty-seventh session, they met 77 times. The number of informal meetings held by the Main Committees grew in even more dramatic proportions: from 193 during the forty-fourth session to 313 during the forty-seventh session.

31. Although the number of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly during this period decreased, resolutions were increasingly adopted without a vote or by consensus. During the forty-seventh session, out of 295 resolutions, 75 per cent were adopted without a vote; by comparison, during the forty-fourth session, out of 336 resolutions, only 65 per cent were adopted without a vote (see figure 1).

32. The expanding role of the United Nations in the area of peace-keeping was reflected in the activities of the General Assembly. The number of agenda items dealing with the financing of peace-keeping and other field operations more than doubled between the forty-fourth and forty-seventh sessions, from 6 to 14.

33. From the forty-fourth to the forty-seventh session, the participation of heads of State and Government in the general debates of the General Assembly increased from 14 to 21 per cent. During that same period, the number of Members of the United Nations increased from 159 to 184.

34. During the main part of its forty-seventh session, the General Assembly considered a wide variety of issues. The resolutions adopted concerned, inter alia, the convening of an international peace conference on Somalia, specific actions regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and follow-up action to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The Assembly commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, which has thus far been signed by 148 Member States. The General Assembly requested Member States to submit their views on a possible review of the membership of the Security Council. The Assembly also decided, as a first step in rationalizing its work, to reduce its Main Committees from seven to six.

35. The work of the General Assembly could be further streamlined. It should be noted that many resolutions, particularly but not exclusively those affecting the economic and social areas, do not address policy issues, but are in the nature of work programme decisions (taking note of a report and requesting the Secretary-General to prepare another report). I suggest that in the interests of efficiency the resolution format be reserved for General Assembly actions that address policy matters and formulate recommendations for action by Member States and the international community. A simpler format could then be adopted for work-programme decisions in the economic and social areas. This system would also bring some order of priority to the agenda of the General Assembly. The agenda is also in need of some rationalization. For example, nine items on the agenda of the forty-seventh session were not discussed at all.

36. I should also like to suggest that, in view of the thousands of documents produced at the United Nations each year, Member States carefully review the need for every report. There are many documents requested by the General Assembly on a recurrent basis that add little or no useful information to the report of the previous year.

2. Security Council

37. In response to the new challenges to international peace and security that have come in the wake of the cold war, the Security Council has informally developed new working patterns even as calls have come for changes in its formal structure. In effect—in contrast to years past when sessions were clearly delineated in time and topic—the Council has found itself meeting almost continuously. During the period from 1 January 1992 to 31 August 1993, the Security Council held 359 sessions of consultations of the whole, totalling some 428 hours. In addition, the Council held 247 formal meetings, adopted 137 resolutions and issued 144 statements by the President (see figures 2 and 3). What has emerged is a pattern of operations akin to that of a task force dealing with situations as they arise, on an almost continuing basis.

38. As a result of these changes, the Security Council is now able to follow more closely, and in a more consistent manner than before, the variety of security threats around the world. But new problems have arisen too. It has become clear that immediate operations dealing urgently with crises around the world need to be supported by a more comprehensive understanding of the array of current challenges. I therefore favour the proposal that periodic sessions of the Council be held at the ministerial level. Informal consultations should be punctuated by more formal meetings in order both to inform, and to seek support from, the wider circle of Member States. And communications with other elements of the world Organization should be improved.

39. The Security Council is in the process of rationalizing its documentation and other procedures, while making its workings more transparent. In this regard, I welcome the decisions to make available to all Member States the tentative forecast of the programme of work of the Security Council for each month, and also to review the list of matters of which the Council is seized with a view to rationalizing it.

40. Pursuant to the request by the General Assembly in resolution 47/62 of 11 December 1992, I invited Member States to submit written comments on a possible review of the membership of the Security Council. Proposals warranting serious study are now on the table. The question of the Security Council's membership structure is of crucial importance, and I look forward to the issue being resolved by the time of the fiftieth anniversary of the Organization.

3. Economic and Social Council

41. The Economic and Social Council is perhaps the organ of the United Nations that received the least attention during the years of the cold war. With economic and social development firmly set as goals in their own right, but also viewed as necessary preconditions for lasting global peace and security, it seems clear that the Council must receive greater attention.

42. In my address to the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1993, at Geneva on 30 June, I stressed once again the importance of the Council. I also repeated a proposal that I first made last year: the Council should be invited to provide to the Security Council reports on situations in the economic and social areas which, in its opinion, constitute threats to international peace and security. I also recalled my suggestion that the Council introduce a flexible, high-level inter-sessional mechanism to respond in a timely way to new developments. I noted that these proposals had not received serious attention. I take this opportunity to reiterate them.

43. Following discussions during the high-level segment of the substantive session of 1992 of the Economic and Social Council, an ad hoc working group of the Council on enhancing international cooperation for development: the role of the United Nations was established by the President of the Council. Its aim was to complete consultations before the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly and thus to maintain the momentum of the discussions held during the high-level segment. I made available to the Assembly the position papers submitted by delegations or groups of delegations to the ad hoc working group, as well as a compendium of position papers prepared by the secretariat of the Economic and Social Council.

44. At the forty-seventh session, the President of the General Assembly established a second open-ended ad hoc working group of the plenary on agenda item 47 (Restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields) to continue discussions. The working group held meetings over a period of several months. Negotiations covered a number of significant issues, including the membership and composition of executive boards of United Nations programmes and funds and the financing of operational activities for development. The results of the group's work were officially presented to the President of the Assembly at a plenary meeting on 25 June 1993, immediately before the substantive session of 1993 of the Economic and Social Council. I am sorry to have to report that the negotiations stalled, and that no action was taken at the meeting.

45. At the substantive session of 1993 of the Economic and Social Council some progress was made towards reorienting the Council's work to the coordination of the United Nations system. At the high-level segment discussions devoted to the World Summit for Social Development, the contribution of the United Nations system to social development received considerable attention. Concern was expressed that the system should both be unified and function coherently. A number of participants expressed disappointment at the stalling of the talks aimed at restructuring the Economic and Social Council.

46. I remain hopeful that the efforts and good will of Member States in pursuing the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council and the streamlining of the responsibilities of the General Assembly and the Council will come to fruition. This is a window of opportunity for the world community, a chance that may not recur. The process of revitalizing the work of the United Nations in the economic and social fields must be put back on track. I appeal to Member States to do all they can to that end.

47. In the aftermath of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, it has become clear that Agenda 21 is the first international agreement expressing a global consensus and a political commitment at the highest levels to action on population, environment and economic advance, encompassed in a programme of sustainable development. The Conference challenged Governments to adopt long-term policies on matters of the environment and sustainable development that affect human well-being and survival. It further tested the willingness of nations to cooperate in developing global strategies for the sustainable use of resources.

48. Following the Rio de Janeiro Conference, all United Nations agencies and bodies were required to contribute to system-wide efforts for the realization of sustainable development, and to support Governments in translating sustainable development policy into action. Agenda 21 was endorsed by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

49. The Commission on Sustainable Development held its first substantive session at Headquarters from 14 to 25 June 1993. Interest in the Commission has been amply demonstrated by the active way in which Governments have sought election to membership of the Commission, by the number of ministers who attended the high-level segment of its first session and by the approximately 700 non-governmental organizations that have obtained accreditation to it. The session clearly revealed the strong determination of all parties involved, despite unfavourable prevailing economic and financial circumstances, to carry out the commitments made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

50. This positive tone was echoed in the support expressed at the meeting of the Heads of Government of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (the "Tokyo Summit") in July 1993, both for the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and for the other processes recommended by the Rio de Janeiro Conference.

51. A new Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development has been formed to ensure effective cooperation following the Rio de Janeiro Conference. The governing bodies of the various agencies and programmes have taken steps to reflect the decisions of the Conference in their work.

52. The High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development provides advice to the Secretary-General and, through him, to the Commission on Sustainable Development and other relevant United Nations bodies. I have appointed its 21 members and expect the Board to hold its first meeting in September, just prior to the opening of the General Assembly. The follow-up work to the Rio de Janeiro Conference is discussed in section III of the present report.

4. Trusteeship Council

53. The Trusteeship Council, in accordance with Article 86 of the Charter, is composed of five Member States (China, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America). Under the terms of Articles 83 and 87 of the Charter, the function of the Trusteeship Council is to assist the Security Council or the General Assembly in carrying out their responsibilities with respect to the International Trusteeship System. For more than 45 years, the Council has fulfilled its responsibilities, reviewing the situation in and dispatching regular visiting missions to Trust Territories. This year, Palau remains the only entity under the Trusteeship Agreement of 1947.

54. At its sixtieth session in May 1993, the Trusteeship Council noted that the leadership of Palau wishes to end the trusteeship at an early date and had therefore decided to hold a plebiscite—the eighth—on the Compact of Free Association with the United States of America. The plebiscite, originally scheduled for July 1993, was postponed and is now scheduled, by Executive Order of the President of Palau, to take place on 9 November 1993.

5. International Court of Justice

55. The International Court of Justice at The Hague, one of the principal organs of the United Nations under Article 7 of the Charter and, in accordance with Article 92, the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, has, in the past few years, experienced a clear increase in contentious cases as opposed to advisory opinions. In 1993, the Court had before it a record number of 12 cases, involving States from nearly every region of the world.

56. In the reporting period, judgement has been given in two cases, and in a third case an Order indicating provisional measures of protection has been made in record time, and hearings have been held on the merits of two other cases. Voluminous written pleadings have been filed within the prescribed time-limits in the other cases.

57. In September 1992, a Chamber of the Court, after considering some of the most extensive pleading, both written and oral, ever presented by Parties, gave Judgment in the case Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras: Nicaragua intervening), in which the complex and varied issues in dispute would have amply justified up to eight separate cases. In its Judgment the Chamber drew the boundary line for each of six disputed sectors of the land boundary. It also decided on the legal situation of the islands in the Gulf of Fonseca, the legal rights to the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca, the waters outside the Gulf and the effect of the Judgment for the intervening State, Nicaragua.

58. The full Court, at the end of March and beginning of April 1993, dealt with Bosnia and Herzegovina's request for the indication of provisional measures of protection at the same time that Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the case Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)).

59. As soon as possible after receiving the request and turning down a request for postponement, the Court held a hearing at which both Parties presented their observations. One week later, on 8 April 1993, the Court issued its Order, in which it called upon the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) "immediately [to] take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide". The Court also ordered that both Parties should ensure that no action is taken which might "aggravate or extend the existing dispute over the prevention or punishment of the crime of genocide, or render it more difficult of solution". In a further Order, the President of the Court fixed time-limits for the subsequent written procedure on the merits.

60. The Court in late August 1993 held hearings on a second request from Bosnia and Herzegovina and a request from Yugoslavia for the indication of provisional measures in the same case.

61. Hearings in the case Maritime Delimitation in the Area between Greenland and Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) were held in January 1993. The Court delivered a Judgment on the merits on 14 June 1993, in which it observed that the continental shelf and fishery zones are two separate and conceptually distinct zones for delimitation purposes. It noted, however, that the task for the Court, under the law applicable to the delimitation of either zone, is to achieve an "equitable solution". The Court, in its Judgment, divided the area of the overlapping claims into three zones and drew the delimitation line in each of these zones.

62. The day of the reading of the Judgment in this case was also the opening day of the hearings in the case Territorial Dispute (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Chad), which the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Chad have presented to the Court by virtue of a special agreement. After five weeks of hearings, the Court is at present deliberating its decision in that case.

63. New cases have kept the docket crowded. Cases on the Court's list during 1993, other than those referred to above, are:

- (a) Aerial Incident of 3 July 1988 (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America).
- (b) Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia).
- (c) East Timor (Portugal v. Australia).
- (d) Maritime Delimitation between Guinea-Bissau and Senegal.
- (e) Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain.
- (f) Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom).
- (g) Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America).
- (h) Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America).
- (i) Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia).

64. The incidence of cases of considerable political as well as legal importance shows that the Court exists not only to settle questions of law, but is also an integral part of United Nations peace efforts. Seen in this context, the contentious and advisory jurisdictions of the Court are seen to be complementary. It is the role of the Court as an important component of the peacemaking apparatus of the United Nations as a whole that moved me to recommend, in "An Agenda for Peace", that the Secretary-General might be authorized to take advantage of the advisory competence of the Court.

65. Under article 26, paragraph 1, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, a seven-member Chamber for Environmental Matters has been established. The members of the Chamber were elected by secret ballot to serve for an initial term of six months as at 6 August 1993.

66. There is at present a tendency to proliferate the number of international tribunals: for example, there are proposals for various regional tribunals, and for tribunals to deal with environmental disputes, with human rights issues and with the law of the sea. It should be borne in mind that an essential feature of international law is that it is a single and universal system. Accordingly, if specialized tribunals are to be created, it may be necessary to establish a common system for referrals of questions of law to the principal judicial organ of the United Nations.

6. Secretariat

67. The Secretariat will continue to address the challenge of strengthening the Organization's ability to manage the 29 peace-keeping and other field missions. Action has already been taken to establish a clearer definition of the respective responsibilities of the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peace-keeping Operations with regard to these operations. The continuing effort during the coming year will involve enhancing planning activities through greater coordination among departments, improving budgetary planning and financial operations, invigorating structures for audit, investigation and programme evaluation, introducing a comprehensive staffing plan and ensuring the security and safety of staff in the field. Efforts will be made to develop more standardized, systematic, expeditious and cost-effective means of planning, launching, managing and terminating peace-keeping operations in a changing environment.

68. Significant improvements have been made by the introduction of new computerized systems for field-related budget processing, accounting, procurement and inventory control; the enhanced delegation of administrative authority to the missions; the development of an integrated support service in the field to facilitate the interfacing of military and civilian components; and the establishment of new procedures for the staffing of field missions and field-related training.

69. Given the extraordinary demands placed on the system by the large number of requests for the United Nations to establish and maintain peace-making and peace-keeping operations, and given the importance of deploying to the field experienced United Nations staff for key administrative positions in general administration, personnel, finance and procurement, the current shortage of experienced senior administrators familiar with United Nations policies and procedures available for assignment to these field missions will be addressed as a matter of priority.

70. I paid a tribute, in my introduction to this annual report, to the staff of the United Nations.

No attempt to restructure the Secretariat will succeed unless it takes into account its most important asset, the staff. I am increasingly impressed by the dedication and professionalism of the Secretariat staff. In this period of expansion and restructuring, the commitment of staff members to the ideals of the United Nations, their willingness to work long hours under difficult conditions of service, and their flexibility to adapt to a variety of new conditions allow us to continue the day-to-day work of the Organization.

71. In the course of the year, more than 1,200 members of the staff—both Professional and General Service employees—have volunteered to serve on United Nations peace missions. Such missions frequently entail a high degree of danger and stress. Many of the functions previously carried out by these staff members have had to be borne by employees remaining at Headquarters, who thus have had to carry an even greater burden. I take this opportunity to restate my commitment to the improvement of conditions of service for all of our staff members, particularly with respect to personal security, salaries and career development opportunities.

72. Whether assigned to field missions or to other mandated programmes, the staff must be given the tools to make this an efficient and modern Organization. I am determined that training, which has been neglected in the past (when compared to other international organizations or national services), be given the place it deserves in management. The proposed programme budget for the next biennium reflects this concern. A comprehensive programme of management training, designed to develop leadership and managerial capacity within the Secretariat, has been launched with a series of management seminars for all director-level staff which will later be extended to other management levels.

73. Improving and updating the skills of the Organization's staff is a significant step. Attracting talented and qualified candidates to join the Organization is another means of ensuring that it will be able to respond to the challenges of the 1990s. Although regular long-term recruitment has been suspended owing to the requirements of restructuring and streamlining, national competitive examinations have provided an excellent tool for selecting the best talent available in a given country for junior Professional positions. Nineteen countries will be asked to provide candidates for these examinations in 1993, compared with 12 in 1992. The filling of posts earmarked for these examinations has been exempted from the temporary suspension of recruitment.

74. I intend to seek to improve the geographical distribution of posts and also to secure an input of fresh talent into the Organization. These are important considerations in the efficient management of the human resources of the United Nations.

Equally important, we must ensure that men and women can serve in conditions of equality.

75. A major effort is under way to advance the standing of women in the Organization, especially in senior-level positions. Although it is recognized that this is a long-term process, the policy is already producing tangible results. Guidelines on sexual harassment were issued during the past year as an important part of this general effort. It is also necessary to develop honourable and fair procedures to terminate the services of those staff members whose performance has failed to fulfil the promise of earlier years.

76. To train staff, to promote equality between men and women, and to select top-quality candidates from Member States are three key components of my efforts to increase the efficiency of the Organization. Yet if the conditions of service do not remain competitive, the Organization will lose some of its best elements.

77. During 1993, it became clear from work carried out by the Administrative Committee on Coordination that conditions of service of the United Nations are steadily deteriorating. They are losing their competitiveness in outside labour markets and vis-a-vis other international organizations. The General Assembly itself acknowledged that salary levels in a number of other international organizations outside the common system are higher than those of the United Nations. It is paradoxical that this should be happening at a time when many new demands are being placed on United Nations staff. At the request of the Committee, this concern is being brought to the attention of Member States and the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). I have therefore decided to study with the Committee and ICSC ways to make compensation and conditions of service competitive. I hope that, as a result of these studies, the Administrative Committee on Coordination and ICSC will present specific recommendations to improve the conditions of service of the United Nations staff by the time of the next substantive consideration of these issues at the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly in 1994.

78. In this context, I must again stress the importance of a genuinely integrated, geographically balanced, independent international civil service of the highest calibre providing Member States with effective and integrated support. As part of my efforts to reinvigorate the international civil service, to preserve the integrity and independence of the staff, and to enhance career opportunities, I have been studying a new approach to higher echelon appointments. Taking into account the views of Member States as reflected in General Assembly resolution 47/212 B of 6 May 1993, I intend to make proposals about the senior structure of the Organization during the forty-eighth session of the Assembly in the context of my submission on high-level posts in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995.

79. In conjunction with streamlining in the administrative area, internal controls and audit mechanisms have been strengthened in 1993 as requested by Member States in different forums. Improvements involve better documentation of internal controls, follow-up on audit recommendations, whether external or internal, review of the staffing of the Division responsible for internal audits, and better planning of audit coverage. Improved internal controls will bring greater managerial accountability, which is crucial for more efficient organization.

80. In August 1993 I announced the creation of a new post of Assistant Secretary-General for Inspections and Investigations. The incumbent will head an independent Office for Inspections and Investigations that will incorporate various units dealing with audit, management advisory services, evaluation and monitoring, currently within the Department of Administration and Management. The new Assistant Secretary-General will report directly to me and will work closely with the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management. This appointment is the first step towards the establishment of a higher level post with broader audit, evaluation and investigation authority.

81. With the implementation of the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS), greater monitoring and audit capabilities will be available through electronic audit trails than ever before. IMIS is a major step in standardizing and rationalizing the management process in the Organization across duty stations. The Organization will be able, for the first time, to have access to timely, up-to-date and comprehensive information on its resources and their utilization. The use of IMIS by other programmes and organizations in the United Nations system could also promote greater transparency and compatibility of information across organizations, leading to standardization in administrative matters.

82. The heightened role of the United Nations as a focus for multilateral international dialogue has intensified the demand for conference services in the Secretariat. The enhanced activity of the Security Council and its subsidiary bodies, the establishment of a number of new intergovernmental or expert organs, and the increasing practice of holding formal meetings and informal consultations concurrently led to an increase of over 10 per cent in conference-servicing workloads in 1992 and to even higher projections for 1993. Despite the provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on limiting conference activities, the number of meetings, both those scheduled in the approved calendar of conferences and those unforeseen, has continued to increase.

83. To the extent possible, the challenge has been met with measures to enhance productivity in conference services, mainly through the introduction of more advanced technology and coordination with substantive secretariats. The need to contain conference-servicing costs has, however, caused some interpretation and documentation services to be curtailed.

84. Reliance on automation to increase individual productivity is not limited to conference services. Most areas of the Secretariat are undergoing significant changes in this respect. There is greater reliance on a global network of computers and telecommunications that are being upgraded.

85. Together with the reform of management practice, steps are being taken to enhance the effectiveness of the economic and social sectors of the Organization. In my statement to the General Assembly on 2 November 1992, at the opening of the debate on the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, I spoke of the need to rebuild "a unity of purpose for the economic, social and environmental sectors of the Organization" as one of the key objectives of my efforts.

86. In furtherance of that objective, my aim has been to define the functions of the various parts of the Organization and to determine how those functions can most effectively be carried out by the Organization itself and within the United Nations system of specialized agencies and institutions. The core of my managerial strategy has been to secure a more rational distribution of responsibilities between Headquarters and the United Nations centres at Geneva, Nairobi and Vienna, as well as among global, regional and field structures. This should provide a clearer sense of purpose for each of the United Nations programmes and sharpen the substantive focus of each of the centres. Clear lines of responsibility in a simpler structure, together with steps to eliminate duplication and overlapping, will greatly improve coordination.

87. Two broad principles govern my approach to the distribution of responsibilities between Headquarters and other parts of the economic and social structures of the Organization. The first is that responsibility for each sector or set of issues coming within the purview of the United Nations should, to the extent possible, be clearly assigned to, and the necessary critical mass for dealing with them concentrated in, a single unit or entity within the Secretariat, without duplication and as part of an organization-wide strategy. The second, related, requirement is that the provision of substantive support for central intergovernmental bodies should be regarded as a priority activity for all economic, social and environmental entities of the United Nations in their respective sectors, coordinated from Headquarters. Conversely, Headquarters capacities on cross-sectoral issues should be placed at the disposal, and help to orient the deliberations, not only of the central intergovernmental organs, but also of the governing and other intergovernmental bodies in each of the entities away from Headquarters.

88. In proceeding to the second phase of restructuring on the basis of these guidelines, I took careful account of the experience gained in the first phase, which I initiated shortly after taking office early in 1992. A key element of that phase was the establishment in New York of a single Department of Economic and Social Development. I saw this as a first step, in order to create new synergies among the three pillars of Headquarters work: system-wide coordination and policy guidance, research, analysis and studies on important global economic and social issues, and technical cooperation activities in developing countries. This initial phase of the restructuring would prepare the ground for a second phase encompassing all of the economic and social sectors of the Organization.

89. The process of restructuring the work, and often the offices, of over 1,000 people employed in the economic and social fields at Headquarters placed considerable demands on the staff. In the face of these challenges, the consolidated Department of Economic and Social Development was nevertheless able to bring about fruitful synergies between the operational staff on the one hand, and the research and analysis staff on the other, bringing fresh perspectives and new energy to a number of areas of work.

90. In the light of this experience, and taking into account the work of a high-level panel of advisers and discussions in the General Assembly, I took steps in December 1992 that constitute a second phase of the reform effort in the economic and social sectors of the United Nations. These steps entailed the creation of three new departments focusing, respectively, on policy coordination and sustainable development, economic and social information and policy analysis, and development support and management services.

91. As a result, the balance at Headquarters between Secretariat structures in the political, humanitarian, economic and social fields has improved. Organizational units now have clear and distinct terms of reference and clear lines of responsibility, and services to central intergovernmental bodies have been improved and integrated. In addition, there is now a greater capacity in terms of data and statistical support for national as well as international policy-making, and technical cooperation is more focused.

92. The redeployment to New York, in the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, of the relevant functions and activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna and the World Food Council secretariat in Rome should enhance the capacity of the United Nations for coherent policy development and provide more effective and better coordinated substantive support to central intergovernmental bodies. Overall, these measures will result in a more integrated approach to development.

93. The dispersion of different aspects of United Nations activities in the closely interrelated areas of trade, finance, investment, technology and services inevitably diluted the impact of these activities. The consolidation of these activities in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development will eliminate these overlaps and create a broader base for enhancing the quality of substantive support provided to the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, as well as to the Trade and Development Board and its subsidiary bodies. In addition, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the United Nations Environment Programme located at the United Nations Office at Nairobi have been placed under common management. This will facilitate synergies among the two programmes and result in some savings.

94. In 1993, the United Nations Office at Geneva has had to address and resolve a twin problem of substance and structure. A key priority has been to improve the management of the Office and its responsiveness to new demands, particularly in United Nations operational activities. Within the United Nations Office at Vienna, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme is responsible for confronting the crucial problems of crime and drugs. The United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, also within the United Nations Office at Vienna, has concentrated on direct support of Governments through technical cooperation activities and training. I take this opportunity to restate my commitment to maintaining Vienna as one of the principal United Nations centres.

95. The Administrative Committee on Coordination plays a crucial role in providing a sense of unity of purpose for the United Nations system as a whole. I have therefore paid particular attention to that Committee, of which I am Chairman. A thorough review of the workings of the Committee and its subsidiary structure was undertaken this year.

96. In the first instance, the functioning of the Administrative Committee on Coordination was reviewed and a series of guidelines agreed upon.

I intend to submit to the Committee for discussion any programme or proposal, of a general or system-wide nature, whose significance or content seem to me to require prior consultation with the agencies concerned and their subsequent cooperation in follow-up and implementation. I shall keep the Economic and Social Council fully apprised of the outcome of these consultations.

97. The executive heads, as members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, for their part undertook to carry out the necessary consultations within the framework of the Committee when launching, on their own initiative, any operation—such as the organization of an international or world conference on a subject that involves the mandates and interests of a number of United Nations organizations—the implementation of which will require contributions by several or all of the members of the Committee. They also agreed to inform their deliberative organs of major impending initiatives within the United Nations system of particular relevance to their organizations or in which their organizations are expected to participate.

98. The complexity of the subsidiary structures of the Administrative Committee on Coordination has been greatly reduced. The new structures of the Committee are centred around two consultative committees—the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions and the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions—and on the new Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development. The new structures will provide a forum in which policy issues affecting system-wide aspects of the management of human and financial resources can be discussed in a coordinated fashion. They will also allow closer interaction between policies and operations. They reflect the importance of the concept of sustainable development as an integrating framework for the activities of the system.

99. I am convinced that the commitments I have outlined, together with the new spirit prevailing in the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the specific reforms which have been introduced, will greatly enhance inter-agency cooperation in support of development.

100. At the same time, I must remind Member States that they, too, have a responsibility to help to improve coordination within the system. These responsibilities must be exercised at two levels. First, at the level of the central intergovernmental bodies within the United Nations itself, Member States must develop system-wide strategies and policies and provide effective guidelines for the work of the secretariats represented in the Administrative Committee on Coordination. My earlier remarks on the reform of the Economic and Social Council are relevant in this context.

101. Second, Member States must take coherent and consistent positions in the governing bodies of the various organizations. One glaring example of their failure to do so hitherto is the persistence of differences in the conditions of service adopted by Member States for the international staff serving in the Bretton Woods institutions on the one hand, and the rest of the system on the other. Further examples of divergent policy directives exist throughout the spectrum of substantive and operational issues before the various governing bodies. The Administrative Committee on Coordination stands ready to do its part to help to overcome these differences and to adopt mutually reinforcing policy stances throughout the system.

B. Interim offices

102. I undertook in my last annual report to focus attention on activities in the field and to bring greater unity to the United Nations presence at the country level. I have established interim offices in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. My aim has been the creation of an integrated approach to the provision of the services that the United Nations system can offer, and the coordination of inter-agency activities in response to the requirements of Member States. Consultations on the establishment of integrated offices are currently under way in Cambodia, Eritrea and the Russian Federation.

103. These measures are intended to facilitate access to the United Nations system for Member States, especially newly independent States and other States in transition, that wish to seek its assistance in various areas of activity. They are also intended to improve the capacity of the United Nations to respond appropriately to the specific socioeconomic, environmental, political and humanitarian requirements of such countries.

104. The interim offices have already begun to play an effective role in responding to the needs of their host Governments, both in development activities and in supporting the transition process that these countries are undergoing. The interim offices have facilitated the Organization's humanitarian and emergency relief activities. In those countries where I have been given a mandate to help to resolve actual or potential conflicts, the interim offices have been of great value as a channel of communication with the Government concerned and as an instrument for the dissemination of information about the United Nations.

105. In all these activities, the interim offices have succeeded in strengthening the image of the United Nations as an integrated system whose component parts are able to work together, in support of host Governments, in response to the special and urgent requirements of countries in transition. This has been achieved with the full cooperation and assistance of the funds, programmes and offices of the United Nations system. The Administrative Committee on Coordination has welcomed my decision to work for a more unified field presence. The representatives of some of the specialized agencies, which are not yet taking part in these arrangements, have indicated a wish to be associated with them.

106. In devising a new model for United Nations representation in those countries, it is not my intention to disturb or replace existing mechanisms for coordination. On the contrary, the intention is to build on what has already been achieved. I intend to apply to other countries, as needed, the approach that is evolving in the countries where interim offices have been established. My aim is to develop a more effective, unified United Nations presence at the country level.

C. Ensuring an adequate financial base

107. The conjunction of the persistent difficulties of a number of Member States in meeting their financial obligations and the unprecedented level of expenditures for mandated activities (see figure 4) is expected to cause major financial difficulties for the Organization by the autumn of 1993.

108. The unprecedented growth in the demand for the services of the United Nations has stretched financial resources to the breaking-point. In January 1993, assessed contributions payable by Member States amounted, in rounded figures, to $1.6 billion for the regular budget. The cost of peace-keeping missions is expected to rise from $1.4 billion in 1992 to an estimated $3.6 billion by the end of 1993 (see figure 5).

109. I must report with great concern and deep regret that, owing to the failure of many Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time, the cash flow situation, with regard both to the regular budget and to United Nations peace-keeping operations, remains critical. As of 26 August 1993, only seven Member States had paid their assessed contributions to the regular budget and peace-keeping operations in full.

110. If this pattern continues, the regular budget will need to borrow internally from other funds as from September 1993. Several peace-keeping operations have experienced severe cash shortages. In order to be able to respond to the needs of these operations, temporary advances have had to be made from the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund which was established by the General Assembly in resolution 47/217 of 23 December 1992. In order to meet its various other obligations, including the payment of salaries, the Organization had to resort to a variety of short-term measures such as borrowing from funds having available cash.

111. The proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 will be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session. It proposes a modest growth of 1 per cent in the level of resources, primarily in the areas of preventive diplomacy, peace operations, peace-building, human rights and the coordination of humanitarian assistance. This programme budget reflects the interest of Member States in strengthening these activities. It is my hope that all Member States will reach broad agreement and adopt this programme budget by consensus as they have done in the last several bienniums.

112. On 2 August 1993, with total cash reserves sufficient for less than two months of operations, I decided to send an urgent letter to the heads of State and Government of Security Council members and of all Member States with outstanding contributions, outlining the gravity of the financial situation. I stated that the financial situation was so precarious that it threatened the capacity of the Organization to finance new undertakings, and that even existing operations would be in jeopardy. On 26 August I told the Fifth Committee that the Organization's cash flow situation had become so serious that I had been compelled to take economy measures affecting conference services, including the servicing of the Security Council, the General Assembly and their committees and subsidiary bodies. Specifically, I made it clear that it would not be possible for meetings to be serviced, except in emergencies, during the evening, at night or during weekends. I also warned that, unless there was an improvement in the situation, further economy measures would have to follow.

113. At my request, the Ford Foundation convened an independent international advisory group of experts in September 1992 to examine the financing of the United Nations, with a view to creating a secure financial base for the Organization over the long term. The group met three times between September 1992 and January 1993 and published its report, entitled "Financing an Effective United Nations", in February 1993. The report is comprehensive and contains many valuable recommendations. I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my profound thanks and appreciation to the chairmen and members of the group for their work, and also to the Ford Foundation for sponsoring it. I have sent the report to Member States and am also transmitting it to the General Assembly for consideration at its forty-eighth session.

114. In spite of these unfavourable circumstances, indeed partly because of the strained cash situation, the Administration has pursued its efforts to enhance its productivity. The increased productivity of the United Nations during the past year is reflected in the remainder of this report.

D. Preparing for the fiftieth anniversary

115. The Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, established by the General Assembly in decision 46/472 of 13 April 1992, held five meetings. Agreement was reached by consensus on a theme for the anniversary: "We the peoples of the United Nations . . . united for a better world". The Preparatory Committee also established a working group to prepare a solemn declaration for the observance.

116. To date, 13 Member States have notified me of the formation of national committees in support of this observance. I look forward to receiving confirmation from other Member States regarding their national committees. The fiftieth anniversary secretariat has been coordinating anniversary preparations and programme development within the system, with the support of non-governmental organizations and other partners. I regard the anniversary as a major milestone to be marked not only by celebration, but by programmes of serious reflection, education and communication.

III. Developing the global community

"To achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character . . ."

Charter of the United Nations, Article 1, paragraph 3

117. The gap between the world's richest and poorest countries is widening, yet that shocking fact is more often than not greeted by indifference. The United Nations is the special voice of the world's poorest nations. No task is greater or more urgent than to impress upon the economically leading nations that the world cannot ultimately prosper if the poorest continue to suffer and decline.

118. The ideological contest of the cold war stimulated great super-Power interest in developing countries. The reasons were not always admirable, but poor countries could benefit from that interest. Today, we see that the world, in the wake of the cold war, recognizes the importance of competition; but the end of the cold war has ended the competition to bring development to the world.

119. The message from the United Nations has been clear: macroeconomic growth should not be pursued without due consideration for such aspects of human well-being as health, education, poverty levels, income levels and income distribution, and participation in the political process and in the market-place. In short, human development, in its social and economic dimensions, must be at the centre of all development efforts.

120. I intend to set out the United Nations approach to development in full in "An Agenda for Development", a preliminary report which will be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session. An Agenda for Development will provide more than yet another development theory. As a practical document, it will set the guidelines for future United Nations action in the eco-conomic and social fields. I look forward to a lively and fruitful discussion of the preliminary report during the forty-eighth session.

A. Global development activities

1. Secretariat departments at Headquarters

121. The Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development provides substantive support for the central coordinating and policy-making functions vested in the Economic and Social Council in its high-level, coordination and operational activities segments and the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly, the Commission on Sustainable Development, the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on the Status of Women and, pending the conclusion of the current intergovernmental review, the World Food Council. The Department serves, at the expert level, the High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development and, at the inter-secretariat level, the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development and other subsidiary bodies of the Administrative Committee on Coordination dealing with both operational and programme questions. The Department will coordinate the contributions of other Secretariat entities to the work of central intergovernmental bodies in the economic and social areas, but its aim is also to broaden the base and improve the quality of support by engaging all relevant parts of the economic and social sectors of the Organization.

122. The Department will assist me in ensuring the successful implementation of Agenda 21 and other major documents adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. Considerable efforts will need to be made to ensure that sustainable development principles are adequately reflected in new or adjusted policies, in legislation, and in programme budgets and structures.

123. The redeployment to this Department of the relevant functions and activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna and the World Food Council secretariat at Rome should enhance United Nations capacity for coherent policy development and provide more effective support for central intergovernmental bodies. It should, in general, help to promote a more integrated approach to development.

124. The Department, in addition to providing subject-specific policy reports, as required, for the relevant intergovernmental bodies, will assume primary responsibility for the preparation of an annual policy report of the Secretary-General focusing on a selected number of major policy issues calling for concerted international action. That report will draw on, and be coordinated with, the work of the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other concerned entities.

125. I have also asked the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development to take on responsibility for coordinating the preparations for the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen in 1995. The Summit, which will coincide with the fiftieth anniversary of the Organization, is already the focus of much debate within the United Nations system, particularly within the Economic and Social Council. Preparatory studies for the Summit are under way on some of the major economic and social issues facing the international community. They include:

- (a) Poverty and equity issues, both inter-State and intra-State;
- (b) Unemployment, vulnerable groups and countries, and patterns of economic exclusion;
- (c) Social security issues and safety nets;
- (d) Migration and patterns of human and economic movement.

126. With respect to the advancement of women, my objective is to achieve a stronger and more unified programme. The relocation of the Division for the Advancement of Women within the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development will place its activities in the mainstream of the economic and social work of the Organization, and should assist in integrating gender issues into every aspect of our work on development. My proposal to merge the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) with the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) has been endorsed by the Economic and Social Council. It should give greater coherence to the policy, research and operational aspects of United Nations efforts for the advancement of women.

127. Taken together, these measures should help to focus preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held in Beijing in 1995. Other preparatory work for that important global forum has involved support for national and regional preparations, the coordination of United Nations system participation, the involvement of non-governmental organizations, and efforts to heighten public awareness. The Secretary-General of the Conference, Gertrude Mongella, has already conducted missions to several States Members of the United Nations to promote the goals and objectives of the Conference, and to seek support for it at all levels.

128. The question of violence against women has continued to be of deep concern. A major step forward was the drafting of the draft Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, which the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1993, urged the General Assembly to adopt. It is hoped that this work will be brought to a successful conclusion at the forty-eighth session of the Assembly.

129. The Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis has a central responsibility for maintaining and enhancing the quantitative information systems (population and statistics) of the United Nations. In addition, the Department is charged with servicing the substantive needs of the international community in the fields of economic and social policy and research. It thus provides the link between the various departments and organs at Headquarters and the regional commissions.

130. The Department also serves as the lead unit for economic and social information within the United Nations and provides statistical support to all parts of the Organization. In this regard, it will cooperate closely with the Bretton Woods institutions and other relevant organizations and will link its activities with the early-warning capabilities being developed in the political and humanitarian sectors of the Organization.

131. Since its inception in February 1993, the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis has concentrated on the development and implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts and on providing a new impetus for the collection of statistics on the environment. The Department has also undertaken considerable preparatory work for the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo in September 1994, for which, together with the United Nations Population Fund, it is providing the secretariat. In addition, two reports were made available to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993, namely, the 1993 Report on the World Social Situation and the World Economic Survey, 1993. Those reports were the culmination of more than a year of intensive efforts. Their basic structure and approach were worked out under the authority of the head of the former Department of Economic and Social Development.

132. The Statistical Commission, and the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993, adopted the 1993 System of National Accounts, a basic tool for organizing and analysing economic statistics. With the adoption of the 1993 System, an international consensus was reached on an up-to-date and near-universal language for economic dialogue among countries and groups of countries. The adoption also marked the successful culmination of a 10-year effort by the Secretariat on the System of National Accounts, which was carried out in close collaboration with the regional commissions, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, the European Community and many national experts.

133. Fresh impetus was given to work on environmental statistics. The development and implementation of integrated environmental and economic accounting will provide new tools for monitoring in this field. Further pioneering work on gender statistics continued, with a second issue of The World's Women in preparation. Priorities and an action plan were established from a global review of international statistical activities designed to improve international cooperation and statistical development with an enhanced regional dimension.

134. The work of the Secretariat in population aims to facilitate the work of the Economic and Social Council, through the Population Commission, in the formulation of policy recommendations, in the delivery of technical assistance and cooperation and in the substantive coordination of the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population.

135. The implications of the Single European Act for countries not members of the European Community, including the transitional economies and the developing countries, were explored in two issues of the Journal of Development Planning. Another issue of the same journal was devoted to examining the implications for developing countries of the economic, political and social transformations in central and eastern Europe.

136. Macroeconomic forecasts of the world economy for the period 1993-2001 and alternative policy simulations were prepared to serve as the basis for policy-oriented discussions at expert group meetings held at Ankara, Geneva and New York.

137. The Department for Development Support and Management Services is designed to sharpen the focus of United Nations technical assistance and enhance its impact on the priority needs of developing countries and countries in transition. The new Department's mandate is two-fold. On the one hand, it will act as an executing agency for programmes and projects relating to institutional and human resource development in areas such as development planning, policies and infrastructure, public administration, private sector development and enterprise management, financial management and accounting, and natural resources and energy planning and management. On the other hand, the Department will be the focal point at United Nations Headquarters for the provision of management services and implementation functions for technical cooperation.

138. With effect from 1 January 1994, the Department will incorporate, as a semi-autonomous entity, the Office for Project Services, currently located within the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). One consideration in making this change was the view, frequently voiced by Member States, that the current location of the Office within UNDP is incompatible with the primary purpose of UNDP as a central coordinating and funding mechanism. The change should also increase cost-effectiveness and eliminate duplication in the delivery of technical cooperation services by the United Nations. The incorporation of the Office for Project Services in the Secretariat also provides an opportunity for the redeployment, closer to the constituencies they are intended to serve, of relevant parts of the Organization's technical cooperation and advisory services.

139. The Department for Development Support and Management Services has, since its creation in 1993, concentrated on the thematic and cross-sectoral aspects of its work. Special attention has been paid by the Department to the integration of its activities with the Organization's work in peace-keeping and humanitarian affairs. Ongoing activities in this area include support for election administration and reconstruction efforts in a number of countries, and work on the conversion of military infrastructure and industries to peaceful civilian use.

140. The Department has taken part in the new UNDP support costs arrangements, and in discussions with the executing agencies and UNDP about how the system could be refined to make it more effective.

141. The Department for Development Support and Management Services is also giving close attention to ensuring that it plays a dynamic role as an agent for technical cooperation, particularly in the context of national execution and the programme approach. It has intensified its efforts in institution-building and human resource development, with particular attention to the strengthening of institutions in developing countries. The Department is also implementing a multisectoral approach to technical cooperation and institution-building.

2. United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

142. In the area of international trade, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) has focused on issues related to national transparent mechanisms in the context of the fight against protectionism. UNCTAD has also stressed the need for international support for the initiatives of developing countries, especially through improved market access and stronger financial flows. The link between the decreasing real price of primary commodities and the environment has been addressed in Agenda 21. Depressed commodity prices lead to overproduction to maintain foreign exchange income, a process which often leads in turn to environmental deterioration.

143. The concept of comprehensive development has had a major impact on the work of UNCTAD. Whereas in the past proceedings were usually geared to the adoption of resolutions and decisions, the reforms adopted at the eighth session of UNCTAD, in February 1992, have led to an increasing role for negotiations. The pragmatic and non-confrontational approach implicit in those reforms has facilitated the search for convergence and consensus-building. On the other hand, unless opportunities for trade and development are enhanced, tensions will build up and confrontational approaches will once again come to the fore.

144. The Special Committee on Preferences conducted an extensive exchange of views on the implementation of the generalized system of preferences and agreed to undertake a policy review of the system in 1995. Recent agreements reached by negotiations held under the auspices of UNCTAD include the International Sugar Agreement (March 1992), the Protocol extending the International Agreement on Olive Oil and Table Olives, 1986, with amendments (March 1993), and a new Convention on Maritime Liens and Mortgages (May 1993).

145. UNCTAD has enhanced its capacity to address the new challenges and opportunities that have arisen for strengthening international cooperation for development. Furthermore, with the imminent transfer to UNCTAD from United Nations Headquarters of programmes relating to transnational corporations and science and technology for development, the UNCTAD secretariat will be well placed, through improved programme delivery, to enable the concerned commissions of the Economic and Social Council, as well as the competent UNCTAD intergovernmental bodies, to discharge their respective mandates more effectively.

3. United Nations Environment Programme

146. The new leadership of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) has the responsibility of transforming its programme in recognition of Agenda 21 priorities. The seventeenth session of the Governing Council was held in May 1993. That was the first intergovernmental meeting to discuss Agenda 21 since its endorsement by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, and it provided an opportunity for Governments to agree on programmes and priorities affecting both the developing and the developed countries.

147. In supporting the implementation of Agenda 21, the Governing Council called upon the Executive Director to make every effort to strengthen, orient and adjust, as appropriate, the activities, programmes and medium-term plan of UNEP to help achieve the objectives of Agenda 21.

After receiving and reviewing in detail the UNEP programme for the bienniums 1992-1993 and 1994-1995, the Council noted that the programme would require further development to incorporate changes required by the Rio de Janeiro Conference. The Governing Council reaffirmed that Agenda 21 must be implemented in close cooperation with the Commission on Sustainable Development, and requested the Executive Director to present to the Council at its next session her estimates of the costs to UNEP of the full implementation of those parts of Agenda 21 specifically recommended for the Programme's attention. The Council stressed that high priority should be given to the needs of developing countries.

148. UNEP provided technical cooperation in the field of environmental law and institutions to the Governments of 11 African, 10 Asian and Pacific and 3 Latin American and Caribbean countries. That work was conducted in cooperation with UNDP, the World Bank and regional organizations. In addition, national environmental plans and strategies were prepared in 14 developing countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Country studies on costs and benefits of environmental management and conservation of biodiversity were carried out in six countries with different biological profiles.

149. The international environmental information system of UNEP now brings together a total of 155 participating countries. About 25,000 queries were answered in 1992. The INFOTERRA International Directory contains over 6,000 sources of environmental information. Equipment and training were provided to 30 developing countries. The Global Resources Information Database (GRID) has now linked 30 affiliated centres around the world. This enables planners and scientists to access data, monitor trends and study the interactions between environmental variables using geographic information systems and data management computer techniques. The Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS) set up a regional environmental information network to promote the exchange of environmental information in support of strategies for collective preventive or remedial action on environmental issues. Regional surveys were conducted to identify environmental and natural resources information and information management requirements and activities in the African, Asian-Pacific and Latin American regions.

150. UNEP provided assistance, through joint undertakings with the regional commissions and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to seven countries for the formulation of national plans to combat desertification. Support was also provided, jointly with other organizations, to establish networks and mechanisms for mobilizing action for the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. Through the UNEP/UNDP joint venture, the United Nations Sahelian Office continued to assist Sudano-Sahelian countries to implement the Plan of Action and to bring together additional financial and technical assistance from other bodies. In addition, UNEP cooperated with regional and subregional organizations, such as the Southern Africa Development Community and the League of Arab States, to provide assistance through them to their member countries in the implementation of the Plan of Action.

151. UNEP is cooperating closely with African Governments, non-governmental organizations and development agencies in the implementation of the programme of the Conference of African Ministers on the Environment, in the area of energy and food security, and on measures to strengthen environmental machineries, the formulation of environmental action plans and programmes, and environmental training and public awareness. UNEP continues to emphasize in its outreach programme the topic of women and the environment.

152. UNEP is providing support for 24 projects under the Action Plan for the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean, including the initial financing of the secretariat, located at the UNEP regional office for Latin America and the Caribbean. Those projects are being implemented in close association with Governments, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, regional offices of specialized agencies and other intergovernmental agencies and sub-regional organizations.

153. UNEP is also working closely with its partners UNDP and the World Bank to increase efficiency in the implementation of the Global Environment Facility (GEF). UNEP is strengthening its scientific inputs and servicing of the Science and Technology Advisory Panel; it is also taking an active part in the evaluation of GEF-funded projects and in discussions on the administration, legal framework and management of the next phase of GEF.

154. The range and variety of these programmes indicate the difficulty of acting coherently and comprehensively; clearly the level of integration which we seek and which the times demand has not yet been attained. A substantial effort has, however, been made and progress over the past year has been evident.

4. United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)

155. The global housing crisis, which affects hundreds of millions of families in both rural and urban settlements, and the social, economic and environmental impact of the unprecedented pace of urbanization in the developing regions provide the context of the work of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat).

156. The main policy direction for the activities of the Centre derives from the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted by the General Assembly in December 1988. It has also been incorporated into the human settlements programme of Agenda 21. The Strategy encourages Governments to adopt policies that enable all the actors in the public and private sectors, including non-governmental organizations, community organizations and women's groups, to contribute to the process of improving shelter and human settlements conditions, and provide adequate mechanisms to monitor progress through quantitative and policy indicators.

157. Similarly, the applied research and training activities of Habitat have focused on improving the capacity of Governments, especially at the local level, and low-income communities to face the challenges of human settlements management and development. Equally important is the identification of low-cost and environmentally sound technological options for human settlements infrastructure and services. Directly addressing the critical need to make an early contribution to the continuum of relief, rehabilitation and development activities of the United Nations system, Habitat has also played a notable role during the year in human settlements and rehabilitation efforts in Afghanistan and Cambodia.

158. The decision by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session to convene a second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in 1996 is a clear recognition of the need for new concerted action by the international community to address the issues of environmentally sustainable human settlements development in a rapidly urbanizing world. Habitat, which will provide the secretariat for the Conference, will have a major responsibility for the success of the Conference, in cooperation with Member States and the United Nations system.

B. Operational activities for development

159. Discussions on the reform of operational activities have been under way in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council since 1989. In 1992, in an important step forward, the General Assembly, in resolution 47/199, reaffirmed the need for reform in the field of development activities. It also stressed that development is a shared responsibility. The Assembly urged developed countries to increase their official development assistance, and emphasized that recipient Governments had the primary responsibility for coordinating, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance. Resolution 47/199 also contained important guidelines on the role of the United Nations system in development. The country strategy note, introduced by the resolution, offers a major opportunity for coordinating the response of the entire United Nations system to the priorities of developing country Governments. The programme approach is another important feature of the resolution and will play a major role in securing logical and integrated donor responses to government development priorities at the sectoral and intersectoral levels. Under resolution 47/199, the United Nations is required to assist Governments to achieve self-reliance in managing their economic and social development.

1. Technical cooperation programmes of the United Nations Secretariat

160. In 1992, the then Department of Economic and Social Development had 918 technical cooperation projects under execution, with a total delivery of $141 million, against current year budget provisions of $185 million. The work programme of the Department consisted of giving advice and assistance to developing countries in national economic and social development planning, and providing expertise on energy policy, water resources projects, mineral resources, cartography, remote sensing and infrastructural work, public administration and finance, statistics, population policies, and transnational corporations, in addition to support services for other development agencies. The Department also participated in programmes relevant to the notion that political progress and economic development are inseparable and must be pursued simultaneously.

161. A large-scale effort to assist in the national election held in Angola, in September 1992, focused on the coordination of foreign assistance and on logistical support. Other electoral missions were conducted in Albania, Ethiopia, Mali and Mozambique. Missions were also fielded to provide advice and assistance in preparing elections in El Salvador, Lesotho, Rwanda and Uganda. In this, the Department and, since December 1992, the Department for Development Support and Management Services worked closely with the Electoral Assistance Unit in the Department of Political Affairs.

162. The Department of Economic and Social Development, with the cooperation of the Beijing Commission for Science and Technology, organized in Beijing, in October 1992, a seminar on urban information systems and their application to developing countries. The purpose of the seminar was to provide a forum for discussion and dissemination of current and improved techniques in this field.

163. The Department provided secretariat services and technical background papers for the Sixth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names. In collabora-ration with the Earth Observation Satellite Company and the International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing, the Department organized a two-week seminar on Photogrammetry and remote sensing, to benefit developing countries.

164. I have followed with particularly close interest and concern the question of African development and the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/151, as updated by the System-wide Plan of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development. The goals and activities of the New Agenda were central to the work programme of the Office of the Special Coordinator for Africa and the Least Developed Countries in 1992. To advise and assist me in this work I appointed a panel of high-level personalities. I took part myself in meetings of the panel, at Geneva in December 1992 and at Rome in May 1993. I am most grateful to the members of the panel for their valuable contribution, which is ongoing.

165. The Department of Economic and Social Development organized, in cooperation with INSTRAW, an interregional workshop on women's role in the environment and sustainable development in September 1992 in Beijing. There were 120 participants and over 80 prototype project proposals were developed. The workshop was perceived as providing a key link between the Rio de Janeiro Conference and the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held in 1995. The Department also organized, in cooperation with INSTRAW and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, a regional workshop on training modules on women, water supply and sanitation, which was held in Thailand in September 1992, following a similar one held in the Gambia in 1991. The Department also responded to requests about developing national databases and reports for the 1995 Conference.

2. United Nations Children's Fund

166. In 1992, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) cooperated in programmes in over 130 countries. In addition, UNICEF expanded its programmes of support to central and eastern Europe and the republics of the former Soviet Union as mandated by the Executive Board. Programme expenditure totalled $744 million in 1992. Of that amount, 31 per cent was spent on child health, including the expanded programme on immunization and oral rehydration therapy; 22 per cent on emergency programmes; 15 per cent on planning, advocacy and prime support; 11 per cent on water supply and sanitation; 10 per cent on education, including young child development; 7 per cent on community development, women's programmes and children in especially difficult circumstances; and 4 per cent on nutrition and household food security.

167. Overall UNICEF expenditure for 1992 was dominated by emergency assistance, owing partially to the situations in Angola, Iraq, Mozambique, Somalia, the Sudan and the former Yugoslavia. For the biennium 1992-1993, the estimated expenditure of UNICEF amounts to $1.8 billion. It is forecast that the total annual income of UNICEF will exceed $1 billion by 1995. Expenditure on emergency relief is expected to decrease, with a corresponding increase in expenditure on the development aspects of the work of UNICEF, including child health and nutrition, water supply and sanitation, education, community development, children in especially difficult circumstances and women-centred programmes.

168. The goals established by the international community for UNICEF include seven overarching goals and a number of supporting goals. The overarching goals include reduction of infant mortality by one third or to 50 per 1,000 live births, whichever is the lower; reduction of mortality among children under five years old by one third or to 70 per 1,000 live births; reduction of the maternal mortality rate by half by the year 2000; reduction of severe and moderate malnutrition among children under five by half by the year 2000; universal access to safe drinking water and to sanitary means of excreta disposal; universal access to basic education and completion of primary education by at least 80 per cent of children of primary school age by the year 2000; reduction of the adult illiteracy rate (the appropriate age group to be determined in each country) to at least half its 1990 level, with an emphasis on female literacy; and improved protection of children in especially difficult circumstances. Among the supporting goals, key items include eradication of polio by the year 2000; elimination of neonatal tetanus by 1995; elimination of guinea-worm disease by the year 2000; virtual elimination of iodine deficiency disorders and vitamin-A deficiency; and access by all pregnant women to basic maternal care.

169. Since the World Summit for Children in 1990, some 142 countries have embarked on national programmes of action, often developed with UNICEF support. The World Summit for Children captured the essence of UNICEF support and advocacy when it affirmed the principle of a "first call for children", which it defined as "a principle that the essential needs of children should be given high priority in the allocation of resources, in bad times as well as in good times, at national and international as well as at family levels". This was a logical consequence of the mandates given to the Organization in relation to the goals for children and development and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

170. In June 1993, children addressed the World Conference on Human Rights at Vienna and demanded greater respect for the rights of children. A number of national programmes of action have been drawn up by developed countries. They include activities for their own children and commitments on assistance to children in developing countries. In developing countries, the national programmes of action have outlined strategies and priorities for budget allocations and provided a framework for the mobilization and coordination of development assistance.

3. United Nations Development Programme

171. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is the largest provider of grant assistance for technical cooperation in the United Nations system. It serves over 170 developing countries and territories through its network of 124 field offices. UNDP coordinates operational activities for development for the United Nations system as a whole and works closely with the regional commissions, the Secretariat and the specialized agencies, and with the Bretton Woods institutions. At the country level, the head of each UNDP office is the Resident Representative, who is usually designated as the resident coordinator of the United Nations system's operational activities for development, and is also the local representative of several other United Nations organizations and programmes. Work has continued on the integration of 18 United Nations information centres with UNDP field offices, in such a way as to preserve the functional autonomy of the centres.

172. UNDP expenditure has increased considerably over the past 10 years (see figure 6). Over the past five years, UNDP has funded programmes and projects valued at around $7 billion. The resources of UNDP derive from voluntary contributions received from developed and developing countries alike. Those external resources support national programmes in which the major share is allocated by the countries themselves. In 1992, the largest share of spending was in Africa (39 per cent), followed by Asia and the Pacific (33 per cent), Latin America and the Caribbean (7 per cent), the Arab States (7 per cent) and Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (2 per cent). The remainder was spent on interregional and global programmes, for the support of national liberation movements, and in Caribbean and Pacific multi-island programmes. In each region, some 87 per cent of UNDP resources went to least developed countries (those with a gross national product per capita of less than $750 per year).

173. The bulk of UNDP-funded activities fall within the framework of country programmes through which UNDP and the recipient Government spell out the strategy for using UNDP resources effectively. Compared with earlier cycles, the country programmes approved for the fifth programming cycle are more focused on the priorities outlined in Governing Council decision 90/34, namely, poverty alleviation, management of development, environment and natural resources management, women in development, technical cooperation among developing countries and science and technology for development. Also emphasized are HIV/AIDS, education for all, and private sector development. UNDP is experienced in both long-term technical cooperation and emergency and transitional situations. The HIV/AIDS epidemic is a major natural disaster of planetary scope, with particularly devastating consequences for developing countries. Since 1987, UNDP has provided funds to some 30 countries for national HIV/AIDS-related programmes. While continuing to show concern for those infected, UNDP, in close cooperation with the World Health Organization (WHO), has stressed the importance of preventive measures for combating the pandemic.

174. In 1992 the number of projects aimed at fostering self-reliance through capacity-building for sustainable human development increased. Those projects included guiding the development process to reach the poor and alleviate poverty; protecting the environment and regenerating the resource base for future production; designing workable strategies, action plans and policy reforms; mobilizing financial resources, both public and private; and managing the aid process to help countries make the most of limited concessional resources. The aim of UNDP was to help countries develop economies that would achieve job-led growth and increase social equity and integration. Increased attention to human development has led to a greater recognition of the importance of the political, social, cultural, environmental and institutional aspects of development previously overshadowed by the focus on economic factors. There is now a growing acceptance that development cooperation must include measures to improve governance, judicial systems and social integration and other activities designed to remove obstacles to real participation. This was the theme of the Human Development Report 1993, which UNDP sponsored.

175. Developing countries sought specific UNDP support to apply the human development concept in national strategies. Since there is no blueprint for human development, each country has taken its own course, focusing on different issues and priorities. In each case, commitment is critical, from Governments and non-governmental sectors alike. Areas of concern for the national strategies have included the collection of data on development gaps and disparities, analysis, and building consensus between policy makers and representatives of civil society, particularly between non-governmental organizations and the private sector. The aim is to offer multidisciplinary approaches to social justice in a sustainable manner.

176. The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development gave UNDP a particular mandate to support countries in their efforts to build capacity to implement Agenda 21. Together with the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Bank, UNDP manages the $1.3 billion Global Environment Facility (GEF), taking responsibility for capacity-building and targeted research projects, pre-investment activities, the GEF small grants programme for non-governmental organizations, and facilitating in-country coordination and dissemination of information.

177. Development activities are now clearly seen as helping to establish the conditions for peace. In the aftermath of conflict, developing countries are asking UNDP to assist them with the rehabilitation of war-torn areas, the return and resettlement of refugees and the demobilization and training of former soldiers. To create conditions likely to maintain peace, countries seek UNDP support for programmes to build their capacities to reconstitute the social fabric and to ensure that people can meet their basic needs.

178. At the same time, requests for assistance in fields relatively new for UNDP are being received as Governments seek to give people a say in the forces that shape their lives by increasing their participation in political processes. Support is increasingly sought to improve abilities to conduct elections, bring about democratization and ensure legal protection and human rights. In 1992 in Africa alone, UNDP contributed about $2 million to electoral assistance projects in eight countries that drew nearly $32 million in funds from the countries themselves and from bilateral donors. Countries turned to UNDP for assistance in these sensitive areas, showing their confidence in the objectivity, neutrality and effectiveness of UNDP.

179. UNDP has coordinated its activities with those of the multilateral financial institutions, including the Bretton Woods institutions and the regional development banks. The comparative advantages of UNDP include its field-based organization constantly in touch with local realities, its delivery of technical cooperation for capacity-building, and its effective and extensive cooperation with the specialized agencies. The collaboration includes joint activities at global and regional levels and the execution by multilateral financial institutions of UNDP-funded projects at inter-regional, regional and national levels.

180. UNDP cooperation with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has focused on assisting developing countries to build their capacity for sound macroeconomic policy formulation and management and establishing necessary financial institutions. For the most part, IMF has acted as executing agency for UNDP-funded projects. In addition, there have been joint training programmes in macroeconomic adjustment and the design of structural adjustment programmes.

181. At the regional and global levels, many development issues require the mobilization of resources, expertise, research networks, forums for debate and media presentation on a massive scale. UNDP has worked with the World Bank and the donor community in many areas of global concern, including the Global Environment Facility, the Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme, the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, the Urban Management Programme, the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research and the Onchocerciasis Control Programme. At the regional level, there are such joint activities as the African Capacity-building Initiative, the Social Dimensions of Adjustment and the National Long-term Perspective Studies.

182. In "An Agenda for Peace", I highlighted the role of regional organizations in peacemaking and preventive diplomacy. That role extends naturally across the spectrum of political, economic and social conflict. Long-term growth and political stability are mutually interdependent. This is recognized by the United Nations system in its inter-agency programmes, and in the work of UNDP.

183. UNDP cooperation with the African Development Bank covers a wide range of development issues, the Bank acting as executing agency for regional projects in such areas as support for women entrepreneurs, energy, and a feasibility study for the establishment of an African export-import bank. During the fourth programming cycle, UNDP-financed projects executed by the Bank amounted to $6 million.

184. UNDP cooperation with the Asian Development Bank covers almost all sectors, with particular focus on agriculture, forestry, fisheries, and natural resources. UNDP-financed projects executed by the Bank during the fourth programming cycle amounted to $21 million. The relationship is changing as a result of the growing trend towards national execution in the region, and as a result of the greater concentration of UNDP resources on fewer areas of activity.

185. For Latin America and the Caribbean, UNDP and the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) have an agreement for cooperation and coordination that has led to successful co-financing and joint programming at the national level. Since it is clear that a modern economy without a modern society will not be viable, one aim of such joint projects on human development and governance is to forestall conflict by supporting consensus-building and enhancing the responsiveness of government to civil society. A joint methodology for human development and social reform has been developed, based on consensus-building and the formulation of responsible long-term public policy. A new strategy for IDB lending to the social sector was debated at a major conference co-sponsored by UNDP and IDB, and was subsequently approved by the Bank's Governing Board.

186. In the field of the environment, IDB and UNDP helped the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean to prepare a common agenda for the Rio de Janeiro Conference that was widely used in the discussions and negotiations. Given the region's strong capacity for policy analysis and also given small indicative planning figures, the role of UNDP has also been to provide seed money and to support Governments in managing loans from multilateral financial institutions.

187. At a time when UNDP is being required to address both ongoing and new priorities in a growing number of recipient countries, it is disturbing to report that, after several years of annual increases, contributions to UNDP in 1992 fell to $1,073 million and in 1993 to an estimated $930 million (see figure 7). While I recognize that donor countries are under severe financial constraints, it is my hope that the levels of funding of UNDP will be restored, given the magnitude of the development challenge the world now faces.

4. United Nations Population Fund

188. The annual increase in the world's population reached a record level of 93 million. Rapid rates of population growth place a strain on economic growth and hence on development. Yet population growth can be greatly affected by development measures.

189. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) continues to promote the concept of family planning as a basic human right, based on the principle of informed and voluntary choice. According to the World Health Organization, some 910,000 conceptions occur every day. Half are unplanned. A quarter are unwanted. Some 1,370 women die every day from causes related to pregnancy or childbirth, most of them in developing countries. Thousands more nearly die. Many themselves are children. Many such tragic situations could be avoided if family planning and maternal health programmes were available.

190. One encouraging development is that an increasing number of countries are now linking population issues to national development policies and priorities. To support those countries, UNFPA took steps to enhance strategic programming, promoted the provision of requisite technical assistance, and supported national capacity-building for national execution and for coordination of population programme activities.

191. In compliance with the requirements of General Assembly resolution 47/199, UNFPA strengthened its efforts to build national capacity to manage population programmes, with the aim of enabling countries to become self-reliant in population policy and execution. The core of the Fund's successor support-cost arrangements is high-level technical assistance to help Governments assume the management of UNFPA-funded programmes and projects. The principal UNFPA mechanism for providing technical support services is the country support team, consisting of a team leader and technical advisers; those teams are designed to support not only national execution and national capacity-building but also the decentralization of authority, another emphasis given by the Assembly in resolution 47/199.

192. Low growth prospects, and indeed poor social integration policies, in many countries have increased migration from the underdeveloped to the developed world. There are today some 100 million international migrants, around 2 per cent of the world population. Of these, 17 million are refugees and a further 20 million have fled deteriorating economic and ecological conditions at home. This is causing strains in both the receiving countries—Europe alone received 15 million migrants between 1980 and 1992—and in the sending countries, strains which have resulted in a renewal of political and social tensions worldwide.

193. UNFPA continues to pay particular attention to ensuring that gender issues are reflected in all aspects of development assistance, especially in capacity-building. Women and children are often the hardest-hit victims of conflict. In situations where no conflict exists, they are often denied their importance in social construction. For women to realize to the full their potential role as agents of change, they must be able to determine the frequency and timing of childbirth and must have equal access to education and jobs.

194. The World Conference on Population and Development will be held at Cairo in September 1994. The second session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference was successfully convened in New York in May 1993, and a third session is scheduled to take place in New York in April 1994. The regional commissions are preparing the ground for a conference which will take up the challenge of people-centred development.

5. World Food Programme

195. The World Food Programme (WFP), with total expenditure in 1992 of nearly $1.7 billion, is a major source of grant assistance for developing countries in the United Nations system. Of that amount, 65 per cent was for emergency relief, 29 per cent for development projects, and 6 per cent for programme support and administrative costs.

196. The balance between emergency and development assistance provided by WFP has altered considerably in the past three years, as the growing needs of victims of natural and man-made disasters have continued to dominate its work. Previously, emergency assistance accounted for no more than a third of the Programme's annual expenditure; in 1992, with active relief operations in 48 countries, WFP handled 60 per cent of all international relief food. Commitments for relief activities in 1992 were nearly 50 per cent higher than in 1991 and nearly three times as high as in 1990. For 1993, commitments for relief activities are expected to total $1.25 billion, down slightly from the 1992 record of $1.4 billion.

197. It is estimated that in 1992 some 42 million poor people in developing countries directly benefited from WFP food aid provided in support of development activities or as relief assistance. Of that number, some 27.5 million people, including 14.4 million refugees and displaced people, received WFP relief food in the course of the year.

198. As a result of the increase in relief food aid needs in 1992, WFP handled an all-time record of 5.2 million tons of food. The cost of transporting that food totalled more than $400 million. Three fifths of all shipments of WFP food for the year were for relief, both for short-term emergencies and for long-term refugees and displaced people, compared to one third in earlier years.

199. As conflict and civil strife continue to cause suffering throughout the world, WFP has encouraged international efforts to develop the principle of safe passage of relief food aid in war zones. In a number of countries, such as Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, Iraq, Liberia, Mozambique, Somalia, the Sudan and the former Yugoslavia, conflict has hampered efforts to deliver humanitarian relief. WFP staff are often exposed to personal risk in operations to deliver food to civilians trapped by fighting.

200. In 1992, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes endorsed a more extensive and systematic application of WFP assistance to support disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation and rehabilitation measures, particularly in Africa. In several countries, including the Gambia, Malawi, Mozambique and Uganda, WFP responded to relief needs by providing food to an increasing number of beneficiaries through ongoing development projects. At the end of 1992, WFP was assisting 258 such projects, with total commitments valued at $3 billion. It is estimated that 15 million people received food through WFP-assisted development projects.

201. New WFP commitments for development projects in 1992 ($421 million, representing 1.1 million tons of food) were the lowest in value terms since 1978. This resulted from a continuing decline since 1988 in resources made available to WFP for development assistance and the need to bring commitments more into line with the expected future availability of resources. In 1993, commitments for future development projects are expected to decline further, to $300 million, representing 850,000 tons. Shipments to ongoing development projects in 1993 are expected to reach $470 million, representing 1.4 million tons, which is close to the average for the past four years.

6. United Nations International Drug Control Programme

202. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme coordinates all drug control activities within the United Nations system and acts as a point of reference for action taken by Governments. The Programme also supports technical cooperation activities which reflect its comparative advantage at the multilateral level. Its strategic priorities have been adapted to evolving drug-related trends, which are themselves driven by unprecedented developments in the political, economic and social fields. I am encouraged by the fact that, during the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly, four plenary meetings will be devoted to the issue of international cooperation against illicit drugs.

203. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme has indicated that the inter-agency meeting on international drug abuse control to be held in 1994 will focus on the theme of women, drug abuse and drug control.

C. Regional development activities

204. The regional commissions carry out important information-gathering and socio-economic analysis functions in their respective regions. They have been playing a major role in developing policy on economic integration and in clarifying economic, social, political and environmental issues relating to sustainable development. They thus provide a forum and a network for cooperation among their member States and between them and other States at the technical level. In addition, they are increasingly becoming providers of technical cooperation, especially in intersectoral areas and in areas where no other United Nations body has a comparative advantage.

205. In the restructuring process on which I have embarked I have emphasized the important contribution of the regional commissions. Steps have therefore been taken to strengthen the functions of the commissions and to increase their responsibilities. Those steps are designed to enhance the contribution of the commissions—as the regional arms of a single, integrated United Nations programme in the social and economic field—to the global work of Headquarters departments.

206. Regional commissions should function as the main centres within the United Nations system for general economic and social development in their respective regions. Decentralization should not, however, entail a fragmentation of the activities of the Secretariat; rather, it should promote complementarity and mutual reinforcement of activities and should contribute to the cohesiveness of the work of the United Nations.

1. Economic Commission for Africa

207. In 1993, the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) intensified its search for durable solutions to the continent's problems and its efforts to put Africa on the path to sustained and sustainable development by articulating policy measures that respond to the needs of African countries in the social and economic fields.

208. Among the principal activities undertaken by the ECA secretariat were the preparation for and convening of the Third African Population Conference, which was held at Dakar in December 1992. The Conference was convened in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/93, in which the Council invited the regional commissions to convene conferences to review the experience gained in population policies and programmes in their regions as part of their contribution to the preparatory activities for the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo in 1994.

209. The ECA secretariat also contributed to the report of the Secretary-General on major issues and programme activities relating to social development to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session, in February 1993. A progress report on preparatory activities for the International Year of the Family was also prepared for the inter-agency meeting on the Year held at Vienna in March 1993.

210. During the seventh meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment, which was held at Addis Ababa in March 1993, a report on the follow-up to the Rio de Janeiro Conference was presented. That report included preliminary proposals for strategies to implement Agenda 21 within the framework of the African Common Position on Environment and Development. The proposals related to the major African environmental and development concerns as expressed in the African Common Position. The comments of the Committee were brought to the attention of the ECA Conference of Ministers at its nineteenth meeting.

211. The ECA secretariat continued its efforts to promote the objectives of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) through the publication and circulation of the newsletter Equal Time, in which a number of activities undertaken by and for disabled persons were highlighted.

212. With regard to the least developed, island and land-locked countries, ECA produced a Survey of Economic and Social Conditions in the African Least Developed Countries (1991-1992). That study gives a detailed account of the structure of gross domestic product and the development of the major economic sectors (agriculture, manufacturing, mining), including an assessment of trade, balance of payments, debt and development finance flows and policies pursued in the African least developed, island and land-locked countries.

213. The Executive Secretary of ECA participated in the meetings of the panel of high-level personalities on African development. ECA drafted for the panel a paper on the role of indigenous African non-governmental organizations, as part of a report on the role of non-governmental organizations in Africa's development prepared by the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development.

214. The twenty-eighth session of the Economic Commission for Africa and nineteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers responsible for economic development and planning, which was held in May 1993, devoted much attention to the challenges of Africa's development in the 1990s and beyond. It had before it the Commission's Economic Report on Africa, 1993 and a number of technical studies prepared for its consideration.

215. The Conference endorsed several strategic objectives as the key to Africa's development in the 1990s. It considered a study on financial resource mobilization for Africa's development, in which it was estimated that about $950 billion (in constant 1990 dollars) of external resources would be required to attain, between 1993 and 2005, the growth target set by the General Assembly in the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s. In view of the gravity of Africa's external debt burden, well over 50 per cent of that amount would be consumed in servicing inherited external debt, unless steps bolder than conventional debt reduction initiatives are implemented.

216. Other development issues addressed by the Conference included human development and the advancement of women in Africa, and preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, and the World Summit for Social Development. The Conference also addressed topics related to the implementation of Agenda 21, as well as trade and investment issues in Africa.

2. Economic Commission for Europe

217. The break-up of the Soviet Union and of Yugoslavia and the separation of the Czech and Slovak Republics led to the emergence of new States, and as a result the membership of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) has increased from 34 to 53, and includes former Soviet republics in Transcaucasia and Central Asia.

218. Not only the increase in the number of members poses new challenges to ECE: the very nature of the Commission has changed. Almost half the member States are now countries in transition, some of them clearly at the stage of developing countries. In its analytical work, the ECE secretariat now has to deal with 25 countries in transition which have replaced 8 centrally planned economies.

219. In accordance with the mandate drawn up by the Commission in 1990, ECE has launched a major programme of technical assistance to countries in transition. That programme could be considerably expanded in areas such as advisory services and training, provided the decentralization process now under way strengthens the resource base of ECE. Furthermore, given the number of United Nations programmes and bodies which provide technical assistance in the ECE region, a more coordinated approach is needed to ensure that the aid provided by the United Nations is coherent, well targeted and demand-driven. The interim office concept, described in section II.B above, was developed in response to that need.

220. Specific requests for assistance have been formulated by individual ECE countries. In response to General Assembly resolutions, the Commission invited all its subsidiary bodies to identify ways and means of contributing to international efforts to assist in the mitigation of the consequences of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster and in the reconstruction of Croatia. ECE involvement in the latter endeavour is in accordance with the original mandate of the Commission to assist in the reconstruction of war-devastated zones. A coherent United Nations strategy which ensures an integrated approach to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of war-ravaged areas in the ECE region should be prepared by competent United Nations programmes without delay.

221. The Commission, at its forty-eighth session, in April 1993, defined environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation and economic analysis as its priority areas of activity. Those priorities were reflected in decisions adopted at that session on questions of environment and sustainable development, cooperation and sustainable development in the chemical industry and cooperation in the field of transport. The Commission also adopted a decision on activities designed to assist countries of the region in transition to a market economy and their integration with the European and global economy. ECE called for further economic cooperation in the Mediterranean region in the light of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, held at Helsinki in 1975.

222. The Economic Survey of Europe in 1992-1993, published by ECE, contains an in-depth analysis of the European transition countries; their output and demand; labour markets, prices and incomes; foreign trade and payments; macroeconomic policies; market reforms; and progress made in privatization. The Survey also includes a review of developments in central, eastern and south-eastern European countries, the countries of the former Yugoslavia and the former Soviet Union, and the Baltic republics, together with a discussion of Western responses to the transition in central and eastern Europe in aid and trade, analysing the financial flows and commitments of assistance, and East-West cooperation agreements and market access.

223. ECE continued to make useful contributions to global programmes of the United Nations. The Commission submitted to the Rio de Janeiro Conference a compendium of its conventions in the field of environmental protection. As a part of the preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development, ECE held a European Population Conference jointly with UNFPA and the Council of Europe in March 1993. At its forty-eighth session, the Commission decided to convene a high-level regional preparatory meeting for the Fourth World Conference on Women. It also endorsed work under way in socio-economic activities as a contribution to the World Summit for Social Development. Each year, more than 30 countries from outside the ECE region participate actively in the work of the Commission, and the results of its work are made available to the developing countries of other regions.

224. The intensive efforts of the ECE secretariat have resulted in further progress in strengthening cooperation and coordination with organizations and institutions such as the Commission of the European Communities, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the Council of Europe.

3. Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

225. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), which includes the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) and the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), focused on the promotion of sustainable growth with equity. Two major publications were produced and presented to the Commission at its twenty-fourth session, in April 1992, and were subsequently given wide distribution. The first publication, entitled Social Equity and Changing Production Patterns: An Integrated Approach, explores how the region's countries can advance simultaneously in sustainable growth with greater equity. It has been hailed by policy makers as an important conceptual contribution to development economics. The second publication was prepared jointly with UNESCO, under the title Education and Knowledge: Basic Pillars of Changing Production Patterns with Social Equity; it highlights the crucial importance of those topics for increasing levels of productivity and improved equity.

226. CELADE also helped to disseminate demographic knowledge among the Governments of the region by organizing the Meeting of Government Experts on Population and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, which was held in Saint Lucia in October 1992.

227. The fourteenth and fifteenth meetings of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean were held in Curaçao in June 1992, and at Mexico City in October 1992.

228. With regard to the integration of women into the economic and social development of Latin America and the Caribbean, ECLAC undertook preparatory activities for the Fourth World Conference on Women. ECLAC has already begun activities related to the preparation of the new regional programme of action for women in Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001, and is preparing a diagnosis of the status of women that substantively incorporates this question into the new ECLAC proposal on changing production patterns with social equity.

229. The Social Development Division concentrated its efforts on preparing technical documents for the Third Regional Conference on Poverty in Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Santiago in November 1992.

230. The Commission continues its permanent role in monitoring economic events in the region. The formal expression of its work is found in the Preliminary Overview of the Economy of Latin America and the Caribbean, published with up-to-date indicators in December of each year, and in the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and the Statistical Yearbook for Latin America and the Caribbean. ECLAC also continues to be the main forum for economic and social affairs in the region, and the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation is strengthening information management in the region.

231. The Commission has undertaken numerous technical cooperation activities, at the request of member States, to assist Governments in the formulation and implementation of policies and plans for economic and social development within the overall strategy of changing production patterns with social equity.

232. ECLAC co-sponsored the Regional Preparatory Meeting for Latin America and the Caribbean (San Jose, January 1993) for the World Conference on Human Rights and provided technical support to several presidential forums, including the Meeting of Heads of State of Central America and Panama (Panama, December 1992), the Heads of State of the Rio Group (Buenos Aires, December 1992) and the third Ibero-American Summit of Heads of State and Government (San Salvador de Bahia, Brazil, July 1993).

4. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

233. On 9 April 1993, I was present when His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej officially opened the new United Nations Conference Centre at Bangkok, where the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) has its offices.

234. Regional economic cooperation is gaining ever greater momentum in the ESCAP region. At the same time, subregional organizations are being revitalized and are focusing, in particular, on the development of infrastructure within their respective subregions. The newer forms of economic cooperation are transcending the deeply embedded constraints of the cold war; the States involved in the Viet Nam war, for example, are now entering into the mainstream of development efforts in the region.

235. Under the revised intergovernmental structure, the first session of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation was convened at Bangkok in October 1992, while the first session of its Steering Group was held at New Delhi in November 1992. The Steering Group considered and adopted an action programme for regional economic cooperation in trade and investment, which was submitted, through the Committee, to the Commission at its forty-ninth session.

236. The Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference was held in Bali in August 1992. The Conference, sponsored by ESCAP and UNFPA, considered and adopted the Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development, which will serve as the basis for policy-making and programming.

237. The period since August 1992 has been one of transition for ESCAP from a sectoral to a thematic approach, in terms of both the Commission's subsidiary intergovernmental structure and its programmes. Considerable attention has been paid to evolving thematic subprogrammes on regional economic cooperation, poverty alleviation through economic growth and social development, and environment and sustainable development in response to this shift in approach. During the same period, ESCAP activities have focused increasingly on the social dimensions of development. At the forty-ninth session of the Commission, in April 1993, 3 of the 10 resolutions adopted related to areas of social concern.

238. In December 1992, ESCAP convened the Meeting to Launch the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, in Beijing. At that Meeting, the Proclamation on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asian and Pacific Region and the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, were considered and adopted.

239. The Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries held its first session at Bangkok in February 1993. The Special Body emphasized, inter alia, the importance of international trade and investment for the island economies and recommended the strengthening of finance, investment and trade links between them and the more dynamic economies of the ESCAP region. The secretariat has issued various research-oriented publications pertinent to the development of the Pacific island developing countries, including Sustainable Agricultural Development Strategies in the Pacific Island Least Developed Countries: Issues and Policy Options and The Law of the Sea in the South Pacific: A Study on the Integration of Marine Affairs Activities within Government Concerns.

240. A study of the theme topic "Expansion of investment and intraregional trade as a vehicle for enhancing regional economic cooperation and development in Asia and the Pacific", presented in part two of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1992, assessed the contribution of the trade-investment nexus to the process of industrial restructuring in the ESCAP region.

241. Measures have been taken to reinforce the functional relationship between ESCAP and various United Nations organizations and bodies with a view to undertaking a coordinated approach to problem-solving and rendering assistance to the member States. In addition to meetings held in recent months by the various inter-agency mechanisms, including the Inter-agency Committee on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, the Inter-agency Committee on Integrated Rural Development and the Inter-agency Task Force on Water for Asia and the Pacific, ESCAP has been seeking to develop greater linkages and cooperative frameworks with other regional bodies. In that context, special focus has been placed on strengthening the relationship between ESCAP and organizations such as the Association of South-East Asian Nations, the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, the South Pacific Forum secretariat, the Economic Cooperation Organization and the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation, as well as with financial institutions such as the Asian Development Bank.

5. Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

242. In the post-cold-war era, as the world moves towards global economic management, and as conflict and cooperation battle for dominance, the challenges to the region of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) increase in intensity and scope. The ESCWA region may also be considered a region in transition. It is at the crossroads between the politics and cultures of the East and the West, a region searching to assert the identity of its people, to protect its internal and external sovereignty, and to withstand internal and external pressures. A most serious challenge to the political stability of the region is the eruption of new forms of extremism. Political instability, uncertainty and unpredictability continue to plague the region and to exercise a preponderant influence on its peace, development and security prospects. These imminent challenges need to be tackled swiftly and surely.

243. The physical destruction and damage to the environment, the problems of returnees and pressures on the labour markets and the infrastructure, the instability in oil prices, the decline of recurrent financial transfers in aid and remittances, continued sanctions against Iraq and their adverse impact on neighbouring countries represent enormous challenges to the ESCWA region.

244. These crisis-related challenges come on top of long-standing structural imbalances, such as the income disparities between and within countries; the uneven distribution of energy resources at the regional level; inadequate energy supply, water shortages, desertification, and lack of food security and transport linkages in many rural and remote areas; vulnerability to fluctuations in oil prices; and external indebtedness.

245. In its desire to contribute to efforts to redress some of the worst physical and social ravages of the Gulf crisis, as well as man-made and natural disasters, the Commission at its sixteenth session, in September 1992, declared the period 1994-2003 a Reconstruction and Rehabilitation Decade for Western Asia. To streamline regional action, and in collaboration with the League of Arab States, ESCWA set up an inter-agency Joint Committee for Environment and Development in the Arab Region in April 1993. In addition, ESCWA is in the process of establishing a regional water council to coordinate activities for a more efficient use of scarce water resources. To that end, a regional inter-agency consultative mechanism was formed for water and environment which would serve as the nucleus for a regional administrative coordination committee.

246. The secretariat participated in the formulation of a plan of action to combat desertification region-wide. The Second Amman Declaration on Population and Development of April 1993 is an instrument to promote regional cooperation and to assist member States in dealing with population issues and population movements. In the area of transport, ESCWA is heavily involved in activities related to the Transport and Communications Decade in Western Asia (1985-1994). To help bridge the widening technological gap, ESCWA focused on the formulation of policies and measures to increase the effectiveness of the technology factor in the investment process. To overcome the lack of timely, reliable and replicable statistics and data, ESCWA set up the Committee on Statistics as a subsidiary body of the Commission.

247. In addition to preparing studies and convening intergovernmental and expert group meetings, ESCWA provided technical assistance and advisory services to member States to assist them in meeting challenges and formulating action-oriented policies. For example, the Commission convened an expert group meeting on the operation of enterprises under severe and fast-changing conditions. Other meetings were convened on the creation of indigenous entrepreneurship, especially to train returnees, and on unemployment as one of the major challenges facing society. Training activities were introduced as pilot projects to allow women to cope with their multiple roles and contribute to production. ESCWA also assisted in meeting the needs for rural energy through the introduction of biogas technology in selected countries of the region.

248. Under the auspices of ESCWA, a multidisciplinary task force on the Palestinian people and the occupied Arab territories was set up to deal with socio-economic issues emanating from the Israeli occupation and the implications of a peace settlement for countries of the region. The task force will also provide technical assistance to the Palestinian people.

249. The most important obstacles facing the Commission in fulfilling its mandate remain the uncertainty and political instability in the region, which have caused interruption in its activities and its relocation several times in the recent past. They have also contributed to the rifts among countries of the region and the set-backs in cooperation to which failures in the region's performance and inadequate rapport between member States and the secretariat are attributed. These in turn have caused a dwindling of extrabudgetary funding and a paucity of resources to address emerging needs and, consequently, inadequate regional coordination and harmonization in implementing projects of a regional scope.

D. Protection of human rights

1. Centre for Human Rights

250. In the course of 1993, the activities of the Centre for Human Rights at Geneva underwent a significant expansion in the five main areas of its work: research, standard-setting and prevention of discrimination; implementation of international standards; special procedures; communications; and advisory services and information.

251. On 1 January 1993, I appointed an Assistant Secretary-General to head the Centre for Human Rights, with responsibility for dealing exclusively with human rights issues, to report directly to me. The Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights is responsible in particular for developing coherent policies and strengthening coordination in the field of human rights, and he serves as a focal point for United Nations relations with regional organizations on human rights matters.

252. The World Conference on Human Rights, in June 1993, asked for an immediate increase in the Centre's resources from the regular budget. The Conference indicated clearly that those resources should support the work of the Centre in fulfilling its many urgent mandates, provide for the implementation of the fact-finding procedures of the Commission on Human Rights, ensure the functioning of the treaty bodies and provide sufficient resources to the advisory services programme to enable it to respond to requests by States for assistance. The Conference also called for increased contributions to the voluntary funds supporting advisory services and activities in favour of indigenous people and against racial discrimination. Those matters will be addressed in my budget proposals for the biennium 1994-1995.

2. World Conference on Human Rights

253. The World Conference on Human Rights, which was held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, was a turning-point in United Nations activities for the promotion and protection of human rights. The Conference was the culmination of three years of intense activity by all segments of the international community directed at reviewing past progress in the protection of human rights, identifying obstacles to further progress and charting the course of action for the coming years.

254. The Vienna Conference and its preparatory process were worldwide, in terms both of the subjects dealt with and of participation. Three regional meetings, held at Tunis, San Jose and Bangkok, preceded the Conference, as did hundreds of other meetings around the world. Representatives from 172 States took part in the discussions at Vienna together with observers from 95 international organizations, human rights bodies and national human rights institutions and from 840 non-governmental organizations. A high level of expertise, and a clear commitment to human rights on the part of the participants, contributed to the success of the debates. Long and careful exchanges of views revealed considerable common ground among the different participants. The Conference was therefore able to adopt by consensus a declaration and programme of action of historic proportions, but differences of opinion were also candidly stated.

255. The Vienna Conference reaffirmed the universality of fundamental human rights and the principle that the human person is the central subject of human rights, should be the principal beneficiary and should participate actively in the realization of human rights. But the Conference did not deal with the question solely at a theoretical level: it also called for effective action to secure the human rights of every individual on a universal basis. The Conference also recognized the right to development as a human right and the mutually reinforcing interrelationship between democracy, development and respect for human rights, and the need to assist developing countries in their democratization process. It also clearly established the link between universality and equality, and stressed the need to eliminate all discrimination based on race and similar factors. The Conference provided substantive guidance for the United Nations in its future work in this area and called for world-wide action against discrimination and in favour of tolerance.

256. There was also notable progress in two other areas. The Conference stressed that priority should be given to action to secure the full and equal enjoyment by women of all human rights: respect for women's rights must be integrated into the overall human rights programme and into development activities. Special attention must be given to protecting women and girl children from violence and other human rights violations which threaten them particularly. The Conference called for universal ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by the year 2000, and the drafting of an optional protocol to that Convention to permit individual complaints of violations of women's rights to be considered.

257. The need to act effectively to protect the rights of children, including children in especially difficult circumstances and the girl child, was another step forward. All competent organs are being asked to review and monitor progress in protecting children's rights and the year 1995 has been set as the target for the universal ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

258. Another important step forward was the recognition of the rights of persons with disabilities and of the need to take specific measures to protect vulnerable groups, including migrant workers, and to ensure that they participate in the search for solutions to their own problems. The human rights dimensions of extreme poverty and exclusion were also recognized, as was the need to deal not only with human rights violations but also with their causes. In this context the Conference called for national and international action on a priority basis to eliminate specific obstacles to the enjoyment of human rights.

259. During this International Year of the World's Indigenous People, the Vienna Conference recognized the inherent dignity and unique contribution of indigenous people, reaffirmed the international community's commitment to their well-being, and reiterated the obligation of States to ensure respect for their rights.

260. A key result of the Conference was the widespread acceptance of the need for cooperation between Governments, the United Nations, other international organizations, national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations. An effective partnership involving all those actors is essential for the effective promotion and protection of human rights.

261. The Vienna Conference recognized the increasingly important contribution non-governmental organizations can play in human rights activities, especially in relation to development and human rights. One of the most important achievements of the Conference was its success in harnessing the energies of hitherto-untapped grass-roots organizations, particularly from Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean.

262. The importance of human rights to United Nations activities in the fields of peace-making, peace-keeping and preventive diplomacy, and in social and economic development, was also amply demonstrated by the Vienna Conference. The inclusion of the human rights dimension in the planning, implementation and evaluation of programmes and projects in those areas will be important to their success and to the promotion of human rights.

263. Increased attention is to be given to implementing economic, social and cultural rights through, in particular, the drafting of optional protocols to the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the use of indicators.

264. Education was repeatedly stressed as a crucial element in building future respect for human rights. By adopting a concrete and practical approach it should be possible for human rights to be included in teaching programmes in all countries, both in schools and in programmes for those who are not in school.

265. The Vienna Conference reaffirmed that efforts to eradicate torture should be concentrated on prevention, and called for the early adoption of an optional protocol to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to allow regular visits to places of detention. It also recommended that States should abrogate legislation leading to impunity for those responsible for torture.

266. The role of the United Nations in the promotion and protection of human rights must be strengthened, renewed and revitalized if the promises of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action are to be kept. International coordination and cooperation were seen at Vienna as crucial for improving respect for human rights. United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and national human rights institutions all have important contributions to make in this overall coordinated approach.

267. The Centre for Human Rights was identified as the focal point for global cooperation for human rights. The Conference called for an annual United Nations coordination meeting at a high level as one element in this approach. Close cooperation will also have to be established with other key actors.

268. The Vienna Conference recognized that future progress would depend in large part on the availability of assistance to countries engaged in improving and strengthening their protection of human rights. An overall United Nations approach was called for, enabling States to strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law, to protect minority rights and those of indigenous peoples, and to hold democratic elections. The programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights has been given specific new and wide-ranging responsibilities in helping to improve respect for human rights.

269. The United Nations must be able to respond rapidly and professionally to allegations of human rights violations and to service adequately the machinery set up for that purpose. We must at the same time seek ways of improving the operation and impact of those mechanisms.

270. The Vienna Conference also proposed that United Nations activities in human rights be given greater focus by means of three decades for action: one relating to indigenous people, one for education and human rights and one against racism and racial discrimination. The General Assembly, in addition, has before it the Conference's proposal for a United Nations decade for human rights.

3. Implementation of human rights conventions

271. The Vienna Conference set universal ratification of the basic international human rights treaties as an important objective. In 1998 the follow-up review of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action will give special attention to the progress made towards universal ratification.

272. As at 7 September 1993, the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination has been ratified by 137 States and the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid by 97 States. Of the two 1966 Human Rights Covenants, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has been ratified by 125 States and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights by 123 States. The 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women has been ratified by 126 States, and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child by 146 States.

273. The level of ratification of other conventions is most unsatisfactory, however. So far, only 76 States have ratified the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; only 56 States have ratified the 1985 International Convention against Apartheid in Sports; only 2 States have ratified the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families; and the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by the General Assembly on 15 December 1989, has been ratified by only 19 States.

274. As Secretary-General of the United Nations, I strongly urge States to ratify all human rights treaties. To that end, I intend to open a dialogue with Member States to identify and to try to overcome the obstacles to ratification. I also believe that regional organizations have a positive role to play in making States more aware of this issue.

275. The process of democratization cannot be separated from the protection of human rights. More precisely, the effective safeguarding of human rights is possible only in a democratic framework. It is therefore not possible to separate the United Nations promotion of human rights from the global trend towards democratization.

IV. Expanding preventive diplomacy, humanitarian assistance and conflict resolution "... to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;"

Charter of the United Nations, Article 1, paragraph 1

A. Implementing an Agenda for Peace

276. On 18 December 1992 the General Assembly, in its resolution 47/120, welcomed my report entitled "An Agenda for Peace" and encouraged me to pursue my efforts in preventive diplomacy. The Assembly also invited me to strengthen the capacity of the Secretariat for the collection of information and analysis to serve better the early-warning needs of the Organization. The informal open-ended working group established by the Assembly has continued to discuss other recommendations contained in my report, which has also been considered by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization and the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations.

277. The Security Council held monthly meetings between October 1992 and May 1993 to examine specific proposals made in "An Agenda for Peace". Eight statements by the President were issued as part of this process. On 15 June 1993, I submitted a report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in "An Agenda for Peace". An interdepartmental task force was also set up to propose further measures for implementing those recommendations.

278. In "An Agenda for Peace", I set out some definitions of the range of peace operations undertaken by the United Nations across the world. Preventive diplomacy is action to prevent disputes from arising between parties, to prevent existing disputes from escalating into conflicts and to limit the spread of the latter when they occur. Peacemaking is action to bring hostile parties to agreement, essentially through such peaceful means as those foreseen in Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations. Peace-keeping is the deployment of a United Nations presence in the field, hitherto with the consent of all the parties concerned, normally involving United Nations military or police personnel and frequently civilians also. Peace-keeping is a technique that expands the possibilities for both the prevention of conflict and the making of peace. The concept of peace enforcement should be added here. It involves peace-keeping activities which do not necessarily involve the consent of all the parties concerned. Peace enforcement is foreseen in Chapter VII of the Charter. Peace-building is action to identify and support structures which will tend to strengthen and solidify peace so as to avert a relapse into conflict. Preventive diplomacy seeks to resolve disputes before violence breaks out; peacemaking and peace-keeping, and sometimes peace enforcement, are required to halt conflicts and preserve peace once it is attained. If successful, they strengthen the opportunity for post-conflict peace-building, which can prevent the recurrence of violence among nations and peoples. In practice, the various steps of peace operations are intertwined and may be performed simultaneously and in parallel.

B. Preventive diplomacy

279. Once an elusive and undefined concept, preventive diplomacy is now becoming understood as a vital field for practical action. New forms of preventive diplomacy have evolved in the course of the past year; such diplomacy incorporates efforts designed to prevent the occurrence of armed conflict, such as fact-finding, good offices and goodwill missions, the dispatch of special envoys to tense areas, and efforts to bring parties to a potential conflict to the negotiating table. Today, the variety of challenges faced by the United Nations has led to a more intensive and creative use of such familiar techniques.

280. I find myself frequently engaged in preventive diplomacy. Because of the nature of this work, and the requirements of the parties, such diplomacy often takes place behind the scenes. When efforts fail, the results will be seen in public. When there is success, the story must often remain untold. Preventive diplomacy takes place continuously and can range from a brief telephone conversation to the movement of military units.

281. More than 100 missions of representation, fact-finding and goodwill offices to various countries were undertaken on my behalf. I have myself travelled extensively to extend good offices and represent the Organization throughout the world. A catalogue of all the missions undertaken by myself and on my behalf would be too long to include here. Suffice it to state that, between August 1992 and July 1993, I held high-level talks in 27 countries, visiting many of them more than once. Some examples of action taken during the past year will illustrate the nature of this field of endeavour and its new dimensions.

1. South Africa: observers

282. For the first time, civilian United Nations observers have been sent to a country with the consent of the Government, to assist the authorities of that country and the conflicting parties in what is purely a domestic matter: containing the level of violence. The country in question is South Africa. This is a significant breakthrough and could serve as a useful precedent in similar situations elsewhere.

283. The Security Council, in its resolution 772(1992), authorized me to deploy United Nations observers. I appointed Angela King Chief of the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa; she took up her post on 23 September 1992. The observers, together with observers from other organizations, including the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Commonwealth and the European Community, have worked in close cooperation with the National Peace Committee, the National Peace Secretariat and the Commission of Inquiry regarding the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation to reduce tensions, contain demonstrations and stop clashes from getting out of control. There are now 49 United Nations observers in South Africa. After an initial mission undertaken on my behalf by Cyrus Vance, I designated two special envoys, Virendra Dayal and Tom Vraalsen, who visited South Africa. On the basis of their findings, I submitted on 22 December 1992 a second report on the question of South Africa, in which I noted that distinct progress had been made in implementing the recommendations set out in my report of 7 August 1992.

284. I have been in personal contact with President F. W. de Klerk, Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, Mr. Clarence Makwetu, Mr. Nelson Mandela and other South African leaders to assist in the strengthening of the structures set up under the National Peace Accord. I also addressed letters to leaders of the homelands. The decision to hold South Africa's first-ever free elections in accordance with the principles of universal suffrage opens the way for the country's transition to a democratic and non-racial society, an objective which has defined United Nations involvement in South Africa. The level of violence continues, however, to be a source of serious concern.

2. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

285. In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, for the first time ever in United Nations history, military units have been deployed as a measure of preventive diplomacy. The Security Council, in resolution 795(1992), authorized me to establish a presence of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, on the borders with Albania and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). That act of preventive deployment was taken out of concern to avert a wider Balkan war. There are currently just under 1,000 peace-keepers in the region in addition to a small group of United Nations civilian police. At the same time, the United Nations is providing emergency relief assistance to the 900,000 persons displaced by the conflict. A consolidated appeal for $78 million has been launched for this humanitarian programme.

286. Under United Nations auspices, Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia are engaged in talks intended to reduce the tensions brought about by the recognition of the independence of the latter. The Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia have presented to the representatives of Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia a draft treaty prepared on the basis of extensive consultations with the two sides. Part A of the draft treaty includes a number of special provisions designed to promote friendly relations and to set up confidence-building measures, while parts B to E set out provisions for friendship and neighbourly cooperation appropriate to the interaction of two adjoining States establishing relations for the first time.

287. At the time of the deployment of UNPROFOR, the Government of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia was gravely concerned about an external security threat. The presence of UNPROFOR and the admission to membership in the United Nations of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia have contributed to alleviating those fears. In this connection, the strengthening of UNPROFOR under Security Council resolution 842(1993) is a welcome development.

288. On 18 June the Security Council, in resolution 845(1993), urged Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to continue their efforts, under my auspices, to arrive at a speedy settlement of remaining issues between them. I have appointed Cyrus Vance to exercise good offices on my behalf.

3. Preventive humanitarian action

289. Frequently, situations of humanitarian need provide indications of impending conflict even before they develop into more serious threats to international peace and security. Early awareness of the root causes of conflict can allow appropriate preventive action to be taken. The provision of humanitarian assistance for such preventive purposes has made it possible to contain the impact of some emergencies. One such success has been the joint United Nations-Southern Africa Development Community drought emergency in southern Africa programme, under which comprehensive measures to mitigate the effects of the drought, minimize the potential population displacement and avert famine were put into place in 10 countries of the region.

290. Another type of preventive humanitarian action is the strengthening of the national capacity of disaster-prone countries. I fully support action taken to integrate disaster prevention and preparedness activities into the mainstream development projects of organizations of the United Nations system within the framework of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. For other emergencies that result from long-term economic deterioration, or slow-moving natural disasters such as drought, early humanitarian preventive action can save thousands of lives and millions of dollars in subsequent remedial action.

291. An inter-agency early-warning mechanism for examining possible situations of mass population displacement is being managed by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs. One of its purposes is to assist in determining when preventive humanitarian action may be appropriate.

C. Peace-keeping in a changing context

292. Just as preventive diplomacy and conflict resolution, familiar responsibilities of the United Nations, have taken on new dimensions, so the term peace-keeping now stretches across a heretofore unimagined range of United Nations activities and responsibilities.

293. Peace-keeping is a United Nations invention. The concept is, however, not a static one, but is ever changing; in order to succeed, and to reflect the changing needs of the community of States, peace-keeping has to be reinvented every day. Each case in which United Nations peace-keepers are involved draws upon the fund of experience, imagination and professionalism of the Organization. It is not an exaggeration to state that today there are as many types of peace-keeping operations as there are types of conflict.

294. The task of peace-keeping, like that of peacemaking, is subject to an essential constraint: for peace-keeping to succeed, the parties to a conflict must have the necessary political will. Peace-keeping, even more than peacemaking, requires the adherence of the conflicting parties to the principle of peaceful resolution of conflicts, in other words, to the Charter itself.

295. Traditional assumptions relating to the upholding of agreements, the consent and cooperation of the parties and the minimum use of force have all been under challenge from recent developments in certain peace-keeping operations. United Nations peace-keepers have been sent to areas where there are no agreements, where Governments do not exist or have limited effective authority and where the consent and cooperation of the parties cannot be relied upon. All too frequently, their work is obstructed by well-armed irregular groups and warlords who defy both their national authorities, where these exist, and the international community.

296. Some 80,000 civilian and military personnel now serve in 17 United Nations peace-keeping operations across the world (see figures 8 and 9). If additional operations and troop reinforcements at present under consideration are implemented, the total could rise to 100,000 by the end of 1993. Today, peace-keepers perform a variety of complex tasks, such as protecting humanitarian aid convoys, supporting the supervision of elections and monitoring human rights, in addition to their basic responsibility of keeping apart the warring parties. Keeping the peace, therefore, is only a step in the process of the peaceful resolution of conflicts. It should not be confused with conflict resolution. Putting a halt to armed hostilities is not in itself a solution of the conflicts. It offers temporary respite from hostilities, while the crisis is being resolved in the political, humanitarian, economic and social spheres.

297. One key aspect of the new generation of United Nations peace-keeping operations is the role of public information in promoting understanding and generating support at both the national and the international level. That support can be built only on a clear understanding of why a particular mission has been sent to a specific area, and how the mission plans to accomplish its objectives. In the atmosphere of heightened tension in conflict areas, public information activities play a vital role in facilitating the mission's work by disseminating timely and objective information, and counteracting propaganda and misinformation. Effective public information activities can also be instrumental in generating and sustaining the support of the international community for the success of the missions. In the absence of information from the United Nations there may be misunderstandings of the United Nations mandate, which can give rise to unwarranted criticism of the Organization's activities.

298. In June 1992, I was able to report that Member States were keen to participate in peace-keeping operations and that military observers and infantry were invariably available. This is no longer generally the case. Difficulties which were previously encountered only when specialized logistic units were sought now arise also in the case of infantry and military as well as police observers.

299. To deal with the increased demand for peace-keeping operations and the consequent shortage of peace-keepers, several steps have been taken:

(a) I have invited Member States to designate qualified personnel for consideration for secondment to a peace-keeping operation;

(b) A special planning team has been set up with the task of defining standard components from which different types of peace-keeping operations might be put together. The team has briefed delegations on its work and Member States have been invited to enter into discussions with the Secretariat about the components of peace-keeping operations which they would, in principle, be ready to provide;

(c) I have accepted offers by Member States to make available peace-keeping personnel on loan;

(d) It has become necessary to use the services of contractors for support activities for field operations normally performed by United Nations staff.

300. The respective roles of the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peace-keeping Operations have, as indicated in section II above, been more clearly defined. The latter Department now incorporates the Field Operations Division and is being strengthened. It will be responsible for providing Headquarters technical and administrative support for integrated operations in the field including, as appropriate, peace-keeping, peacemaking, electoral or humanitarian components. This restructuring will enhance the planning, coordination and reporting of peace-keeping operations and ensure better delivery of services to the various United Nations operations.

301. A military planning cell has been formed within the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, with military staff on loan from Member States. A situation room, staffed by military officers, has been created to enable the competent Departments to maintain a continuous link with operations in Somalia and the former Yugoslavia. I am considering an integrated situation room which would cover United Nations peace-keeping worldwide in all its aspects.

302. The growth in peace-keeping has profoundly affected the operations of the Organization (see figure 10). Every administrative entity in the Secretariat has been required to assign staff to one or more of the peace-keeping operations. As I reported in section II above, the staff members remaining have had to perform the tasks previously carried out by their absent colleagues. Demands have grown so much that it is now no longer possible to fill all the positions within the Secretariat or in the field with existing Secretariat staff, and substantial additional staff will be required, since staff on loan from Member States cannot be used to establish permanent structures.

303. I am conscious of the mounting cost of peace-keeping and the burden this entails for Member States. I welcome, therefore, General Assembly resolution 47/217, by which the Assembly authorized a Peace-keeping Reserve Fund of $150 million, which, when fully funded, will enhance the Organization's ability to respond to new crises. I hope that the General Assembly will consider favourably, at its forty-eighth session, my proposal that it appropriate one third of the estimated cost of each new peace-keeping operation as soon as it is established by the Security Council. I have also asked the Assembly to encourage the inclusion of peace-keeping contributions in national defence budgets. I should like to restate here that, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant General Assembly resolutions, financing of peace-keeping is the collective responsibility of all Member States.

304. One of the consequences of the delay in the payment of assessed contributions is that States contributing to peace operations are themselves reimbursed only after long delays. As a result, certain Member States have had to withdraw their contingents from peace-keeping operations.

305. I have proposed the setting-up of a reserve, revolving stock of equipment to be drawn on for ongoing operations. The subsequent replenishment would be charged to the accounts of specific operations.

306. The rapid rise in demand for peace-keeping operations, together with the expansion in their scope and nature, has highlighted the urgent need to develop and maintain uniform high standards for peace-keeping. Training manuals are now being prepared for troops, military observers and civilian police. The object is to create an international pool of peace-keeping personnel with comparable skills, knowledge, discipline and code of conduct, able to work together effectively at short notice.

307. An issue to which I attach the greatest importance is the safety and security of peace-keeping personnel. As the United Nations takes on more complex and riskier mandates, the safety and security of United Nations troops and other personnel have become increasingly important. Since United Nations peace-keeping operations began, 949 peace-keepers have lost their lives. More than 550 have died in ongoing missions (see figure 11). At the request of the Security Council I have prepared a report on existing arrangements for the protection of United Nations forces and personnel and the adequacy of those arrangements. I take this opportunity to reaffirm my faith in the professionalism of United Nations peace-keeping forces and my appreciation of their courage. They have performed their difficult tasks admirably, often at the cost of life and limb, in a variety of difficult and often unfamiliar circumstances. The sacrifice of those who have lost their lives will not be forgotten by the international community.

D. New departures in peace operations

308. The past 12 months have shown that it is not possible to draw clear lines between the different aspects of today's peace operations. Each of the cases which follow will highlight one or more of the aspects of peace operations in all their diversity; in some, nearly every technique and activity available has to be employed across the board.

1. Afghanistan

309. The goal of establishing peace and stability in Afghanistan is still far from being achieved. The newly established Islamic State of Afghanistan has not yet, despite considerable efforts, succeeded in developing the political and security conditions necessary for the urgent tasks of reconstruction and rehabilitation and the return of refugees. My Personal Representative, Sotirios Mousouris, as head of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan, is facilitating humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan. He also, as head of the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan, continues to monitor political developments there. It is my hope that the steps taken recently towards the implementation of the two peace accords reached over the past seven months will create the necessary conditions for a stable political process and the peaceful reconstruction and rehabilitation of the country.

310. The question of relations between Afghanistan and Tajikistan is crucial for peace and security in the region. I discuss this question in paragraphs 397 to 401 below.

2. Angola

311. The case of Angola illustrates the way in which United Nations peace-keepers have had to take on a multiplicity of roles. The United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II) had the responsibility of monitoring the cease-fire and demobilization arrangements in the country. In addition, UNAVEM II was entrusted with witnessing the balloting in the country's first multi-party elections after years of devastating civil war. The electoral component of UNAVEM II was approved by the Security Council on 24 March 1992, and its deployment began in April 1992. The registration and campaign processes were monitored by 98 international staff members in 5 regional headquarters and 18 provincial offices. During the period that followed, approximately 400 observers verified the process. In April 1992, a team of consultants provided substantive technical assistance and support to the electoral authorities, in close coordination with the European Community and the United States Agency for International Development. They contributed to the organization of a massive operation, involving a large number of planes and helicopters, for the transport of electoral material to areas of difficult access. Legislative elections and the first round of the presidential elections took place on 29 and 30 September 1992. Despite the Mission's assessment of the electoral process as fair, the results were not recognized by the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), which resumed hostilities, thereby precipitating a grave political and humanitarian crisis.

312. Since the resumption of hostilities, UNAVEM II has been engaged once more in peace-making activities in addition to its role of protecting access for relief assistance. I have been vigorously pressing the parties, in particular UNITA, to re-establish a cease-fire and to return as soon as possible to the peace process in order to achieve national reconciliation. Meanwhile, it should be made clear that the illegal occupation by UNITA of many localities is not acceptable to the international community.

313. The situation faced by Angola is now more tragic than ever. The humanitarian crisis is reaching unprecedented proportions and has been worsened by severe drought in the southern part of the country. Incidences of malnutrition and malnutrition-related diseases have increased, and medicine and medical supplies are frequently in short supply. It is estimated that drought, disease and civil war have severely disrupted the lives of at least 2 million Angolans, many of whom cannot be reached because of security constraints.

314. In May 1993, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs issued a consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola, seeking $227 million in assistance for the one-year period ending in April 1994. At the conference of donors held at Geneva on 3 June, initial contributions of approximately $70 million were registered. The humanitarian crisis in Angola is at least as serious as that in Somalia; unfortunately the assistance programme in Angola has received much less financial support from the international community.

315. The United Nations has taken a number of measures to strengthen its humanitarian assistance capacity and better coordinate the efforts of all concerned, including the non-governmental organizations participating in the relief effort. The functions and responsibilities of my Special Representative for Angola have been expanded to cover all emergency relief operations arising out of the present situation. A humanitarian coordination assistance unit, headed by a senior official with extensive operational experience, and reporting directly to the Special Representative, has been set up at Luanda. Continuing hostilities have caused the suspension of the organized voluntary repatriation of Angolans from Zaire and Zambia. Repeated efforts since May 1993 to launch an emergency relief programme for conflict-affected areas have been thwarted by security incidents and difficult negotiations over the destinations and means of delivery of humanitarian assistance. As in many similar situations, the Government and UNITA have been called upon to observe international humanitarian law to allow for the provision of relief assistance.

316. The Angolan political and military situation has continued to deteriorate dangerously as fighting has intensified and as the mistrust which has inhibited significant political accommodation has deepened. The possible consequences, both for Angola and for regional security, are more and more worrying.

317. The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, meeting at Cairo in June 1993, called on UNITA to resume the peace talks with the Government as soon as possible with a view to establishing a definitive cease-fire and ensuring the full implementation of the Peace Accords for Angola. I took the opportunity of my participation in that Assembly to consult extensively with President Jose Eduardo dos Santos and other African leaders on ways and means of advancing the peace process in Angola.

318. Alioune Blondin Beye took over as my Special Representative from Margaret Anstee on 30 June 1993. I am most grateful to Ms. Anstee for her work. She accomplished much, in the most difficult circumstances.

319. Since his arrival in Angola my Special Representative has been pursuing, at various levels, intensive consultations directed at resuming the peace talks under United Nations auspices with a view to the establishment of a cease-fire throughout the country and the full implementation of the Peace Accords. Those efforts have taken my Special Representative to Gabon, Namibia, Sao Tome and Principe, Zaire and Zimbabwe.

320. In conformity with paragraph 1 of Security Council resolution 834(1993), I have reduced the size of UNAVEM II to its current strength of 43 international civilian staff members, 50 military observers, 18 police observers and 11 military paramedical personnel, as well as necessary local staff. The activities of the military and police components of the Mission, which are currently deployed in four locations in addition to Luanda, consist essentially of patrolling, assessing the military situation, carrying out liaison with military and civilian officials, assisting in the delivery of humanitarian assistance to the civilian population and participating in other humanitarian operations. Current staff and logistic resources are based on my assessment of the situation at the time Security Council resolution 834(1993) was adopted. However, additional administrative support will be required at short notice if there is an increase in operations.

3. Armenia and Azerbaijan

321. In October 1992 I sent a fact-finding mission to Armenia and Azerbaijan to report on the situation there regarding the conflicts over Nagorny Karabakh, an enclave within Azerbaijan. In March 1993, the conflict escalated further when the Kelbadzhar district of Azerbaijan, between Armenia and Nagorny Karabakh, was occupied. That development resulted in a sudden increase in the number of displaced persons in Azerbaijan.

322. After the occupation of the Kelbadzhar district, the President of the Security Council made a statement on behalf of the Council, by which, inter alia, I was requested, in consultation with the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), to submit urgently a report to the Council regarding the situation on the ground. Following the submission of my report, the Security Council, on 30 April 1993, adopted resolution 822(1993), its first resolution on Nagorny Karabakh. Later in the year, following further fighting and occupation of Azerbaijani territory, the Council in its resolution 853(1993) demanded the immediate cessation of all hostilities and the withdrawal of the occupying forces from Agdam and all other recently occupied areas of the Azerbaijani Republic.

323. In the conflict relating to Nagorny Karabakh, the role of the United Nations is essentially one of support for the efforts of CSCE. A United Nations observer has participated regularly in the discussions of the Minsk Group of CSCE, which has drawn up a timetable setting out urgent steps to be taken for achieving the withdrawal of occupying forces from Kelbadzhar and a solution in Nagorny Karabakh, with appropriate verification and monitoring. I remain committed to supporting the efforts of CSCE.

324. In December 1992, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, after consulting United Nations humanitarian agencies, launched a joint appeal for humanitarian assistance to both Armenia and Azerbaijan in the amount of $12 million. Following further requests for assistance from the Governments of the two countries, inter-agency needs assessments were organized and humanitarian needs amounting to $22.5 million for Armenia and $12.5 million for Azerbaijan were reported. Those assessments were discussed at meetings of donors held at Geneva on 10 and 11 June 1993. The humanitarian programmes are being implemented by UNICEF, WFP, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the World Health Organization (WHO), and cover the period from 1 July 1993 to 31 March 1994. UNHCR is providing assistance to some 50,000 persons displaced by the recent fighting. A further inter-agency needs assessment is being planned by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs to re-evaluate the humanitarian situation in Azerbaijan.

4. Cyprus

325. In March 1993, my Special Representative, Oscar Camilión, was recalled to the service of his Government after five years in the post. I wish to thank Mr. Camilión for all he has done to help bring lasting peace to Cyprus, notably his contribution to the Set of Ideas which remains the basis of my efforts to achieve a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict there. I appointed Joe Clark to succeed Mr. Camilión.

326. Peace-keeping efforts in Cyprus have long been hampered by the inadequacy of financial resources. On 27 May 1993, the Security Council, in its resolution 831(1993), decided that with effect from the next extension of the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) on or before 15 June 1993, those costs of the Force which are not covered by voluntary contributions should be treated as expenses of the Organization under Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter.

327. By its resolution 831(1993) the Security Council also endorsed the restructuring plan proposed in paragraphs 16 to 19 of my report of 30 March 1993, with the addition of a limited number of observers for reconnaissance and with a view to further restructuring the Force in the light of a comprehensive reassessment of UNFICYP at the time of the consideration of the Force's mandate in December 1993.

328. Also, in resolution 831(1993) the Security Council reaffirmed that the present status quo was not acceptable and expressed concern that the United Nations should not be entering into open-ended peace-keeping commitments. The restructuring of UNFICYP following successive reductions in strength has major implications for the two parties. Greater responsibility rests with them for ensuring that there is no increase in tension in Cyprus and that conditions can be maintained for a speedy overall agreement as envisaged by the Security Council. It is imperative that the two sides exercise maximum restraint and, in accordance with the package of confidence-building measures, extend without delay the 1989 unarming agreement to all parts of the buffer zone where their forces remain in close proximity to each other. I urge both sides to take reciprocal measures to lower the tension, including mutual commitments, through UNFICYP, not to deploy along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons (other than those which are hand-held), and to prohibit firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone. It is also necessary for both sides to work together so that their own agencies can resume the humanitarian functions which, in its efforts to restore normal conditions, UNFICYP has assumed over the years.

329. In the aftermath of the 1974 hostilities in Cyprus, peace-building has been an integral part of United Nations efforts. The confidence-building measures I recommended to the Security Council in November 1992 include the rehabilitation of the fenced area of Varosha as a special area for bicomunal contact and commerce, a kind of free-trade zone in which both sides could trade goods and services. In addition, Nicosia International Airport would be opened for civilian passenger and cargo traffic under the administration of the United Nations in cooperation with the International Civil Aviation Organization. Both communities would have unrestricted use of the airport. Supported by my Special Representative, I am continuing my efforts to persuade the Turkish-Cypriot side to accept these proposals. In particular, I have held two rounds of talks in New York to bring the parties closer to agreement.

330. Some proposals for further confidence-building measures were also included in my report to the Security Council of 1 July 1993. They include cooperation on the short-term and the long-term water problem in Cyprus, cooperation on education to promote intercommunal harmony and friendship, joint cultural and sports events, meetings of political party leaders and of the Chambers of Commerce and Industry of both sides, expert cooperation in areas such as health and the environment, and cooperative arrangements on electricity. It should be emphasized, however, that confidence-building measures, beneficial though they may be, should not be substituted for an overall solution, nor can they be part of a step-by-step approach to such a solution. Their purpose is to serve as a catalyst in the negotiations leading to a comprehensive, overall solution to the question of Cyprus.

5. East Timor

331. Good offices efforts for a comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor are continuing. As indicated to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal, at my invitation, held informal consultations in New York on 26 September 1992. This was followed by two rounds of substantive discussions between the two Foreign Ministers under my auspices, the first in New York on 17 December 1992 and the second in Rome on 21 April 1993. A number of possible confidence-building measures, designed to create an atmosphere more propitious to addressing the core issues, were explored at those meetings. The discussions have continued in New York since April, at the Permanent Representative level. The next meeting between the two Foreign Ministers and myself will be held on 17 September in New York. My Personal Envoy, Amos Wako, was in Indonesia and East Timor from 3 to 9 April 1993. In May 1993 a United Nations observer attended the final stages of the trial at Dili, East Timor, of Xanana Gusmão, the detained leader of the pro-independence movement, the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN).

6. Georgia

332. In August 1992, fighting broke out in Abkhazia, Georgia. Since then, hostilities between Georgian and Abkhaz troops, supported by irregular units from the northern Caucasus region, have resulted in hundreds of casualties and thousands of refugees and displaced persons. In September and October 1992, I dispatched two United Nations fact-finding missions to Georgia and Abkhazia in support of and pursuant to the Moscow agreement of 3 September. After the second mission, with Security Council endorsement, two United Nations personnel remained in Georgia to provide an initial United Nations presence, with the tasks of maintaining continuing contact with all concerned, providing United Nations Headquarters with situation reports and acting as liaison.

333. Early in 1993, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs organized a United Nations inter-agency mission which visited all parts of Georgia. A consolidated appeal in the amount of $21 million was issued at the end of March. The appeal covered the needs of the affected population in Abkhazia, in Government-controlled areas of Georgia and, to a small extent, in South Ossetia. The overall humanitarian needs of Georgia will shortly be re-evaluated in view of the changing situation and in consultation with United Nations humanitarian organizations.

334. In view of the unabated fighting in Abkhazia at the beginning of May 1993, I appointed a Special Envoy, Edouard Brunner, to Georgia to revive the peace process; he undertook his first mission to the region from 20 to 31 May 1993. During that time, he also visited Stockholm, for consultations with the Chairman-in-Office of CSCE, and Moscow for discussions with the Foreign Minister of the Russian Federation. In pursuance of paragraph 2 of Security Council resolution 849(1993), I dispatched a planning team to the conflict area on 19 July 1993. The team returned to New York on 27 July 1993.

335. A cease-fire agreement, mediated by the Personal Representative of the President of the Russian Federation, Boris Pastukhov, was signed on 27 July 1993 by the Georgian and Abkhaz sides. My Special Envoy arrived in the region on 28 July, four hours after the cease-fire had entered into force. He stayed in the region until 31 July and had discussions with both parties to the conflict, and with officials from the Russian Federation. He held further discussions with Mr. Pastukhov and others in Moscow on 3 August.

336. I subsequently reported to the Security Council that I considered conditions to be right for the immediate deployment of United Nations observers to carry out functions envisaged in the cease-fire agreement. The readiness of the two parties to meet and talk with each other provides an opportunity that must not be missed. I have, accordingly, asked my Special Envoy to continue his efforts with a view to convening, before 15 September, a first round of negotiations under United Nations auspices, facilitated by the Russian Federation.

337. The Security Council, in resolution 854(1993), approved the deployment of an advance team of up to 10 United Nations military observers to verify compliance with the cease-fire agreement. On 24 August 1993 the Security Council, in resolution 858(1993), decided to establish a United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), comprising up to 88 military observers.

7. Guatemala

338. At the request of the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, the United Nations has, since 1991, participated as an observer in negotiations directed at ending the longest war in Central America. The talks have been held in Mexico and focused throughout 1992 on the issue of human rights, the first of 11 items of the negotiation agenda. Both parties indicated their wish that the United Nations should verify the implementation of a future agreement on human rights. I made it clear that the United Nations stood ready to assist them in that area.

339. In early 1993, with a view to facilitating final agreement on the human rights issue and speeding up the negotiation process, the parties agreed to consider, simultaneously with the human rights issue, a calendar for the discussion of all outstanding agenda items and the possibility of an early cease-fire verified by the United Nations. Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela constituted a "Group of Friends" to promote agreement between the parties. That objective has so far proved to be elusive, however.

340. In recent months, on several occasions, the parties have expressed the wish that the format of the talks agreed in 1991 be altered, inter alia, to allow for a more prominent role by the United Nations in negotiations. I have stated that the United Nations is ready to continue its support for the negotiation process within a framework agreeable to both parties.

8. Haiti

341. Haiti is one of the poorest countries in the world: two thirds of its population lives below the poverty line. Since the coup d'etat of September 1991, a trade embargo and a halt to bilateral assistance have been imposed on Haiti.

342. The search for a solution to the problems of Haiti has involved measures of diplomacy directed at nothing less than the restoration of freedom, democracy, just order and the potential for progress to an entire nation and State.

343. On 11 December 1992, I appointed Dante Caputo as my Special Envoy for Haiti. His appointment was in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 47/20 A of 24 November 1992, in which I was requested to take the necessary measures to assist, in cooperation with the Organization of American States (OAS), in the solution of the Haitian crisis. On 13 January 1993, Mr. Caputo was also appointed Special Envoy of OAS. He promoted negotiations to reach a political solution involving the return of the legitimate President and the restoration of the democratic process. The General Assembly, by its resolution 47/20 B of 20 April 1993, mandated United Nations participation, jointly with OAS, in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti. By March 1993, the Mission had already been deployed throughout Haiti and, on 3 June, I submitted the first report of the Mission to the General Assembly.

344. On 16 June, by its resolution 841(1993), the Security Council imposed sanctions on Haiti. Following talks held on Governors Island, New York, agreement was reached on 3 July 1993 on various measures relating to the return of the democratically elected President.

345. On 12 July and 13 August 1993 I reported to the Security Council on the Governors Island Agreement and the subsequent New York Pact, which provides for a six-month political truce and the resumption of the normal functioning of Parliament. In my report of 12 July, I recommended to the Council that the sanctions it had imposed by resolution 841(1993) should be suspended as soon as the Prime Minister of Haiti had taken office. In my report of 13 August, I referred to the letter addressed to me by the President of the Security Council on 15 July 1993, confirming the readiness of the members of the Council to suspend the measures imposed by resolution 841(1993) immediately after the ratification of the Prime Minister and his assumption of his functions in Haiti.

346. The Prime Minister-designate of Haiti, Robert Malval, was ratified by the Senate on 18 August 1993 and by the Chamber of Deputies on 23 August. He subsequently won a vote of confidence on his programme in the Senate on 24 August and in the Chamber of Deputies on 25 August. The process of confirmation of the Prime Minister-designate had thus been completed. On 27 August, by its resolution 861(1993), the Security Council decided that the sanctions were suspended. The Council also stated that the suspension would be immediately terminated if I were to inform it that the Governors Island Agreement had not been implemented in good faith. Furthermore, the Council stood ready to lift the sanctions definitively once it was informed that the relevant provisions of the Agreement had been fully implemented.

347. After being sworn in on 30 August, the Prime Minister travelled to Haiti the following day to assume his functions. Immediately after the return of President Aristide to Haiti on 30 October 1993, I shall report to the Security Council with a view to the sanctions being lifted definitively.

348. The Governors Island Agreement includes provision for United Nations assistance for modernizing the armed forces of Haiti and establishing a new police force with the presence of United Nations personnel in these fields. In a report to the Security Council on 25 August 1993 I outlined my plans in this regard. On 31 August, the Council, by its resolution 862(1993), approved the dispatch of an advance team to prepare for the possible deployment of the proposed United Nations Mission to Haiti.

349. The "silent emergency" in Haiti has been a challenge for the humanitarian organizations of the United Nations system. The Organization of American States and the United Nations have made constant efforts to respond to the considerable humanitarian needs of the people. Central to this process has been the formulation of a joint United Nations/OAS comprehensive humanitarian plan of action in Haiti. The plan contains emergency programmes in the fields of health, nutrition and food aid, water supply and sanitation, and agriculture, as well as support services for those areas and education and other social services. The needs identified totalled $62.7 million.

350. Haiti should now be set on the path to a stable democratic future in which all Haitians will fully enjoy human, civil and political rights. I trust that the international community will be generous and forthcoming in providing Haiti with the technical and financial assistance needed for the reconstruction of its economy and its institutions, as well as moral and political support to the Haitian people in their search for a just, peaceful and prosperous society.

351. I wish here to place on record my gratitude for the support and assistance which I and the Special Envoy have received at all times since the beginning of the negotiating process, particularly during the negotiations at Governors Island, from the Governments of Canada, France, the United States of America and Venezuela, which formed a group of "Friends of the Secretary-General" for Haiti. Their invaluable support has been crucial to the successful completion of this stage of the process.

9. India and Pakistan

352. The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) has been monitoring the cease-fire in Jammu and Kashmir since 1949. In the Simla Agreement of 1972, the two countries affirmed their commitment to respecting the cease-fire line and to resolving the issue peacefully through negotiations. I have repeatedly urged both sides, in the context of preventive diplomacy, to find a peaceful solution to this difficult and complex problem. I have also expressed my readiness, should the two countries request it, to exert every possible effort to facilitate the search for a lasting solution.

10. Iraq and Kuwait

353. Another action was performed for the first time in history when the United Nations demarcated the boundary between two Member States, as part of its mandate to maintain international peace and security. The Security Council, in resolution 687(1991), demanded respect for the boundary agreed by Iraq and Kuwait in 1963, called upon me to assist in arranging demarcation of that boundary, and decided to take, as appropriate, all necessary measures to guarantee the inviolability of the boundary.

354. On 2 May 1991, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission was established to demarcate the international boundary under the formula agreed in 1963. Both Iraq and Kuwait unconditionally accepted the terms of reference of the Commission, which was called upon to perform a technical and not a political task. During its 11 sessions, the Commission examined many sources, such as maps, graphics, aerial photographs, diplomatic correspondence, notes and archival documents.

355. That highly professional work has produced a precise, well-documented and verifiable demarcation of the entire boundary. It includes the offshore area from the khawrs to the eastern end of the Khawr Abd Allah. A complete set of coordinates was produced, and boundary markers will clearly display the course of the line. Satellite technology has enabled the Commission to position each marker with a margin of error of only 1.5 cm. This would have been unthinkable only a few years ago. Other countries are already looking at this precedent to demarcate their boundaries.

356. The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) has continued to operate in the demilitarized zone established by the Security Council on both sides of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary; that zone has been realigned to conform to the border as demarcated. The area of operation of UNIKOM has been generally calm except for a tense situation last January, following a series of actions by Iraq. Subsequently, the Security Council decided on a phased strengthening of UNIKOM, in the first phase by a mechanized infantry battalion. Owing to the greatly increased commitments by Member States to United Nations peace-keeping operations elsewhere, the Council's decision remains unfulfilled.

357. Because of the efforts of the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), Iraq's ability to pose a threat to its neighbours by producing or possessing weapons of mass destruction has been steadily diminishing. However, Iraq has yet to fulfil its commitment to provide the full, final and complete disclosure of all aspects of its programmes that is needed to assess adequately its capabilities and facilities. A secure environment can be assured only through long-term monitoring and verification of Iraq's unconditional obligation not to use, retain, possess, develop, construct or otherwise acquire items prohibited under Security Council resolution 687(1991).

358. Under resolution 687(1991), the disposal of nuclear-weapons-usable materials in Iraq is required. Early in 1992, IAEA assembled a multidisciplinary team, comprising experts from IAEA and representatives from the Special Commission and the Office of Legal Affairs, to implement that mandate. After lengthy negotiations a complex contract was concluded in late June 1993 with the Committee for International Relations of the Ministry of Atomic Energy (CIR-Minatomb), a State entity of the Russian Federation, which provided for the removal and reprocessing of the materials and for the permanent storage of the resulting wastes.

359. With regard to the suffering of the Iraqi civilian population, the United Nations has continued to make every effort to assist those most in need, often at great personal risk to relief workers. The inter-agency humanitarian assistance programme in Iraq has, from April 1991 to March 1993, brought relief aid to the Iraqi civilian population throughout the country. The programme was developed in response to Security Council resolution 688(1991), in which the Council recognized the pressing need for assistance, particularly to the 1.9 million Iraqis in the north and south of the country. To date, some $700 million has been raised through United Nations appeals to finance projects implemented by United Nations and non-governmental organizations. The humanitarian programmes in Iraq have been implemented within the framework of a series of memoranda of understanding which also provide for the deployment of the United Nations Guards Contingent in Iraq. The various phases of the programme share one goal, namely, a focus on meeting basic needs for food, water, medical drugs and equipment and shelter for Iraq's most vulnerable civilian population.

360. The Legal Counsel was requested on 19 May 1993 by the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established under resolution 661(1990) to provide his opinion whether Iraq's frozen assets might be used as payment for the sale or supply to Iraq of medicine and health supplies, foodstuffs and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs approved by the Committee, within the scope of the pertinent Security Council resolutions, and, if so, under which conditions. The Legal Counsel responded by a letter dated 4 June 1993 to the Chairman of the Committee in which he reviewed the legal regime applicable to frozen Iraqi assets in the light of Security Council resolutions 661(1990), 687(1991), 706(1991), 712(1991) and 778(1992).

361. At the end of June 1993, I met the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq, Tariq Aziz; a fourth round of talks between the United Nations Secretariat and the Government of Iraq was then held at United Nations Headquarters from 7 to 15 July 1993. The purpose was to reach an understanding on practical arrangements for the implementation of the scheme relating to the sale of Iraqi oil, provided for in Security Council resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991), and in my report of 4 September 1991. Ten meetings were held during that round of talks. The delegation of the United Nations was led by the Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs and Legal Counsel, and the delegation of Iraq by Riyadh Al-Qaysi, Under-Secretary-General at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. On 15 July 1993, the talks were suspended.

362. I continued to facilitate the return of Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq in accordance with paragraph 15 of Security Council resolution 687(1991). I am pleased to report that, in carrying out this task, I received full cooperation from the Governments of Iraq and Kuwait.

363. The Commission established to administer the United Nations Compensation Fund provided for in paragraph 18 of Security Council resolution 687(1991) has held four sessions since August 1992. The legal rules and procedures which govern the Commission's activities have been drawn up and approved. The first compensation commissioners have been appointed, and they will begin the examination and evaluation of the first category of claims in the next few months.

364. It may be recalled that, in accordance with Security Council resolution 706(1991), the United Nations established an escrow account into which the proceeds of the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products, and voluntary contributions, were to be paid. As at 1 September 1993, approximately $195 million had been deposited in that account. The funds have been designated to pay for the costs of the Special Commission, the Compensation Fund, the return of all Kuwaiti property, the Boundary Commission and humanitarian activities in Iraq.

365. Recently a new programme of humanitarian assistance for the period from 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 has been prepared to provide rehabilitation assistance designed to limit further deterioration of living conditions throughout Iraq. The aim is to facilitate self-sufficiency by promoting community-level projects. That programme includes specific project proposals from various United Nations organizations and programmes amounting to $489 million. The programme's current lack of funding jeopardizes the implementation of crucial rehabilitation activities, thereby prolonging the state of dependency and degradation of the living conditions of the Iraqi Kurds and the other vulnerable population groups in the country.

366. On 1 September 1993 I met Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz to urge Iraqi compliance across the range of outstanding issues.

11. Lebanon

367. In southern Lebanon, there has been an increase in hostilities between Israeli forces and armed elements that have proclaimed their resistance to Israeli occupation. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) has done its best to limit the conflict and to protect the inhabitants from its effects. In resolution 852(1993), the Security Council reaffirmed the mandate of UNIFIL as defined in its resolution 425(1978) and other relevant resolutions, which is to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restore international peace and security, and assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. Although UNIFIL has not been able to make visible progress towards these objectives, its contribution to stability and the protection it is able to afford the population of the area remain important.

368. The volatility of the situation manifested itself in a particularly grave escalation of hostilities in July 1993 when, in response to rocket attacks against northern Israel, the Israeli Defence Forces launched massive air strikes against southern Lebanon. The fighting caused the displacement of hundreds of thousands of civilians; dozens of Lebanese villages were destroyed or damaged; countless homes, schools, hospitals, roads and bridges were demolished. On 30 July 1993, in a letter to the President of the Security Council, I drew attention to the fact that the hostilities had severely affected the operations of UNIFIL, whose mandate had been extended by the Security Council two days earlier. The heavy bombardment of the UNIFIL area of operations by Israeli aircraft and artillery had, inter alia, hit the Nepalese battalion headquarters and positions in the Irish and Finnish battalion sectors. Fortunately, there were no serious casualties. After the cessation of hostilities, units of the Lebanese army were deployed in parts of the UNIFIL area of operation for the purpose of maintaining public order.

369. In these circumstances, I requested the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs to act swiftly to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system in the provision of emergency humanitarian assistance. A consolidated appeal for immediate assistance in the amount of $28.5 million was launched on 20 August. To start up urgent emergency work, advances of $5 million and $2 million from the Central Emergency Revolving Fund were made available to Habitat and WFP, respectively.

12. Liberia

370. In view of the ongoing conflict in Liberia and the continuing destruction and loss of life, the Security Council, in its resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, called upon all parties to the conflict in Liberia to respect and implement the cease-fire and the various accords of the peace process; decided, under Chapter VII of the Charter, that all States should, for the purposes of establishing peace and stability in Liberia, immediately implement a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia, with the exception of weapons and military equipment destined for the sole use of the peace-keeping forces of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS); and requested me to dispatch a Special Representative to Liberia to evaluate the situation.

371. In late 1992 and early 1993, my Special Representative, Trevor Gordon-Somers, visited Liberia and held extensive discussions there and in States members of ECOWAS. On the basis of his findings, I submitted a special report to the Security Council on 12 March 1993. The Council, in resolution 813(1993) of 26 March 1993, reaffirmed its belief that the Yamoussoukro IV Accord offered the best possible framework for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Liberia and its support for increased humanitarian assistance to Liberia; demanded that the parties concerned refrain from any action that would impede or obstruct the delivery of humanitarian assistance; and called upon them to ensure the safety of all personnel involved in international humanitarian assistance.

372. After the discovery of the massacre of innocent displaced persons at Harbel on 6 June 1993, the Security Council on 9 June requested me to commence an investigation and warned that those found responsible would be held accountable for the serious violation of international humanitarian law. My Special Representative proceeded to Monrovia to conduct a thorough investigation into the incident. Preliminary action was taken by other United Nations officials on the spot. Since the first stage of the investigation, and after consultations, I have appointed a panel of inquiry, which is now undertaking a more comprehensive investigation of the massacre. As soon as the investigation is completed, I shall submit a full report to the Security Council.

373. During the protracted conflict in Liberia, the United Nations provided assistance to over 700,000 Liberian refugees in neighbouring countries, to 100,000 internally displaced Liberians and to some 100,000 destitute Sierra Leoneans who had sought refuge in Liberia. As a result of the emergency relief programme which has been carried out by the United Nations and its non-governmental organization partners since December 1990, severe malnutrition has been eliminated except in isolated pockets, and the health of the population has improved significantly. However, since the resumption of hostilities in August 1992, the humanitarian situation has deteriorated. Masses of people have been displaced and large areas of the country have become inaccessible to relief agencies.

374. The conflicting parties agreed, at Geneva, after a week of negotiations conducted under the joint auspices of ECOWAS, OAU and the United Nations, to restore peace to the country. The peace agreement, which was signed on 25 July 1993 at an ECOWAS summit meeting at Cotonou, Benin, calls on the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) to continue its peace-keeping role in Liberia and on the United Nations to play a monitoring role through the establishment of an observer mission. The agreement also provides for the establishment of a broadly based central transitional government, to be replaced by a democratically elected body within seven months. Agreement was also reached on the provision of humanitarian relief to all Liberians in need through the most direct routes, which has facilitated the delivery of humanitarian assistance to the affected population. United Nations organizations have been asked to initiate the rapid voluntary repatriation and reintegration from neighbouring countries of the more than 700,000 refugees. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs is preparing an inter-agency consolidated appeal for Liberia.

375. The Security Council, in its resolution 856(1993) of 10 August 1993, decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) and approved the sending of an advance team of 30 military observers to participate in the work of the Joint Cease-fire Monitoring Committee.

13. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

376. In an effort to prevent a dangerous deterioration of the situation regarding suspected Libyan involvement in the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 and UTA flight 772, and to facilitate the implementation of Security Council resolutions 731(1992) and 748(1992), I have remained in almost constant contact over the past seven months with the parties to the dispute and the League of Arab States. I met the Foreign Minister of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya at Cairo in June 1993 and in New York in August in an attempt to resolve the dispute. I have on five occasions sent a personal envoy to Tripoli and intend to pursue every effort to facilitate a just settlement in accordance with the mandate given to me by the Security Council.

14. The Middle East

377. In the course of the past year, the plight of the Palestinian people living under occupation has not been alleviated. There has, moreover, been a dramatic worsening of the human rights situation in the occupied territories. In a particularly grave incident, Israel deported over 400 Palestinian civilians to southern Lebanon in December 1992. The Security Council, in its resolution 799(1992), inter alia reaffirmed the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to all the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, demanded that Israel ensure the safe and immediate return to the occupied territories of all those deported, and requested me to send a representative to the area and to report to the Council. Conscious of the possible effect of that event on the fragile process of Arab-Israeli peace negotiations, and with a view to finding a solution, I dispatched several missions to the area, led respectively by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and my Special Political Adviser. I had a number of meetings and telephone conversations with leaders in the region and representatives of interested Governments. Regrettably, those efforts were not successful and, in my report to the Security Council of 25 January 1993, I recommended that the Council should take whatever measures were required to ensure that its unanimous decision was respected.

378. I have also been seriously alarmed by the reports of the rapid worsening of the socioeconomic situation in the occupied territories. As the Palestinian economy is weak and highly dependent on that of Israel, the livelihood of the Palestinian communities suffered further damage when Israel closed off the occupied territories in March 1993. I have appealed to the international community to provide greater economic assistance to the occupied territories. In this connection, I have also reminded the major donors of the critical financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

379. Because of the long-standing commitment of the United Nations to a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement in the Middle East, based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), I welcomed the invitation extended in October 1992 by the co-sponsors of the Middle East peace process for the participation of the United Nations as a full extraregional participant in the multilateral working groups on environment, economic and regional development, water, refugees, arms control and regional security in the Middle East. Representatives of the United Nations attended and took an active part in the meetings of the working groups held in October/November 1992 in Paris, The Hague and Ottawa and in April/May 1993 in Geneva, Rome, Oslo, Washington and Tokyo. In November 1992, I appointed Chinmaya Gharekhan as my Special Representative at the multilateral talks.

380. The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) has continued to supervise the separation between the Israeli and Syrian forces, and the limitation of armaments and forces provided for in the disengagement agreement of 1974. With the cooperation of both sides, UNDOF has discharged its tasks effectively and its area of operation has been quiet.

381. The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), which is the oldest existing peace-keeping operation, has continued to assist UNDOF and UNIFIL in carrying out their tasks and has maintained its presence in Egypt. During the last year, the personnel of UNTSO has been reduced by 25 per cent.

15. Mozambique

382. The signing in Rome of the General Peace Agreement between the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO) in October 1992 brought renewed hope to this war-torn country. The United Nations was called upon to play a central role in the implementation of various aspects of the Agreement. The mandate of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) since its establishment in December 1992, as coordinated by my Special Representative, Aldo Ajello, is to monitor cease-fire arrangements and the demobilization of up to 100,000 soldiers from both sides, to fulfil political and electoral functions, to conduct a massive humanitarian operation and to organize mine clearance.

383. As part of the peace-building efforts in Mozambique, a meeting of donors was held at Maputo on 8 and 9 June 1993, under the joint chairmanship of the Government of Italy and the United Nations. The meeting, which followed the Donors Conference on Mozambique held in Rome on 15 and 16 December 1992 on the basis of article VII of the General Peace Agreement, reviewed the progress made in the implementation of the consolidated humanitarian assistance programme in Mozambique. That programme reflects a shift from the previous concentration on emergency relief; by focusing on the reintegration needs of refugees and displaced persons, leading to reconstruction and future development, it signals the end of a protracted emergency phase and the beginning of a return to normalcy. The humanitarian assistance programme encompasses support for the repatriation process, the demobilization of armed units, emergency relief, restoration of essential services and balance-of-payments and budget support. The programme will require $559.6 million for the period from May 1993 to April 1994. The repatriation and resettlement of 1.5 million Mozambicans, now living as refugees in neighbouring countries, will be the largest such operation undertaken in Africa under United Nations auspices.

384. While donors have since announced new pledges totalling some $70 million, thereby increasing the total value of pledges to $520 million, against the programme's total requirements of $560 million, they have also expressed concern about delays related to the electoral process, demobilization and the work of certain commissions identified in the General Peace Agreement. The positive participation of all concerned parties in the implementation of the Agreement will contribute significantly to the strengthening of peace in Mozambique.

385. In June 1993 I reported to the Security Council that the delays which had impeded the rapid deployment of the ONUMOZ military component had been overcome and that, by the beginning of May 1993, the five infantry battalions provided for in my operational plan had been fully deployed along the Beira, Tete, Limpopo and Nacala corridors and along national highway N1. Since then, the deployment of all contingents has been completed. At the end of August 1993 the total strength of the formed units, including support elements, was over 6,000.

386. As envisaged, the operations of the contingents chiefly involve the conducting of motorized and air patrols along the corridors, establishing checkpoints and providing escorts for trains. United Nations troops have also escorted road convoys carrying relief food to populations in need in various regions, and transported equipment to assembly areas. In addition, they have carried out repair and reconnaissance of roads, both in populated locations and en route to assembly areas.

387. The process of assembly and demobilization of Government and RENAMO forces scheduled to begin in mid-November 1992 has been delayed for several reasons, particularly the insistence of RENAMO on receiving financial support as a political party before participating in the work of the commissions and its insistence that 65 per cent of ONUMOZ troops be deployed before the assembly process begins.

388. As at 25 August 1993, 303 of the authorized total number of 354 military observers had arrived in Mozambique. Assisted by troops from the contingents, the observers are now actively involved in the establishment and preparation of assembly areas, conducting inspections and investigations of cease-fire violation complaints.

389. In late August 1993 I was able to report an important development, namely, the arrival at Maputo, after several postponements, of Mr. Afonso Dhlakama, President of RENAMO, and the start on 21 August of a series of meetings between him and the President of Mozambique, Mr. Joaquim Chissano. It is widely expected that the meetings will continue until some form of agreement has been reached on major outstanding is-ssues. The importance of this development cannot be overemphasized. Progress in many major areas of the peace process depends on the successful outcome of these discussions.

16. Republic of Moldova

390. After the signature of the disengagement agreement on 21 July 1992, and acting on a request from the President of the Republic of Moldova, I sent a second fact-finding mission to that country in late August 1992. The mission concluded that, despite the cessation of armed hostilities, prevailing conditions remained fragile.

391. A major stumbling-block continues to be the question of the withdrawal of the Fourteenth Russian Army from the left bank of the Dniester. In a letter dated 2 October 1992 to the Secretary-General, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Moldova proposed the dispatch of United Nations observers, with the consent of the Russian Federation, to the negotiations between the two countries on the withdrawal of the Fourteenth Army. In my response of 5 January 1993, I offered to send a mission to meet the leaders of the Moldovan and Russian delegations to the negotiations and to discuss possible arrangements for the presence there of United Nations observers.

392. In view of the establishment in the Republic of Moldova of an eight-member mission of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe on 27 April 1993, an understanding has been reached with the Government that CSCE will take the leading role in the issue.

17. Rwanda

393. United Nations observers have been deployed to one side of a common border with the agreement of the two States involved, namely, Rwanda and Uganda. In my interim report to the Security Council on Rwanda, of 20 May 1993 following the mission of my representative, I proposed the establishment of a United Nations observer mission on the Ugandan side of the Rwanda-Uganda border. In recommending the deployment of United Nations observers, I noted that a decision to deploy observers to the border would highlight the international community's interest in peace and security in the area, could help to promote the negotiation process at Arusha and would encourage the parties actively to pursue their efforts for peace and national reconciliation in Rwanda.

394. The Security Council, in its resolution 846(1993), taking note of the requests of the Governments of Rwanda and Uganda for the deployment of United Nations observers along their common border as a temporary confidence-building measure, decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda (UNOMUR), with the task of verifying that no military assistance is provided across the border between the two countries. At the same time, the United Nations is providing emergency relief assistance to the 900,000 persons displaced by the conflict. A consolidated appeal for $78 million has been launched for this humanitarian programme.

395. The cease-fire agreement reached on 12 July 1992 was broken on 8 February 1993 but restored on 9 March. Two United Nations military experts were placed at the disposal of the Organization of African Unity, to provide it with technical assistance in the preparation of a submission to donors for the funding of an expanded Neutral Military Observer Group in Rwanda. That Group has been monitoring the cease-fire. The latest phase of the talks began in mid-March 1993 and has now been completed. A comprehensive peace agreement was signed at Arusha on 4 August 1993. The role of the United Republic of Tanzania, as facilitator in the negotiations, was important for their successful completion.

396. Taking into account the communications received from the President of Rwanda and the Secretary-General of OAU and in pursuance of Security Council resolution 846(1993), I have sent a reconnaissance mission to Rwanda to examine the possible function of the neutral international force called for by the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front and to evaluate the human and financial resources that would be needed to carry them out. The findings of the mission, which will also hold consultations with OAU and the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania, will assist me in making recommendations to the Security Council regarding the United Nations contribution to the implementation of the Peace Agreement.

18. Tajikistan

397. During the summer of 1992, the number of armed clashes between various groups increased dramatically and by late August and early September 1992 fighting raged across southern Tajikistan. Concerned that events might lead to a wider regional conflict, I dispatched, in consultation with the Governments of Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, a fact-finding mission from 16 to 22 September 1992. It reported, inter alia, that the situation in Tajikistan was that of a civil war, and that since June 1992 more than 2,000 people had been killed and more than 200,000 had become refugees or displaced persons.

398. I consequently dispatched a goodwill mission to Tajikistan and four neighbouring countries, from 3 to 14 November 1992, to assist and support regional peacemaking efforts. The mission also carried out a preliminary assessment of humanitarian needs and its report formed the basis of a preliminary appeal for $20 million to support the humanitarian programmes of UNHCR, WFP and WHO. In the light of the mission's consultations with the various interlocutors in the region, I informed the Security Council on 21 December 1992 of my decision to establish a small, integrated United Nations unit at Dushanbe to monitor the situation on the ground and to provide liaison services. My decision was welcomed by the Government of Tajikistan.

399. Early in 1993, I appointed, for a period of three months, a Special Envoy to Tajikistan, Ismat Kittani, whose mandate was to obtain agreement on a cease-fire with appropriate international monitoring, begin negotiations for a political solution, and enlist the help of neighbouring countries and others concerned in achieving those objectives. That appointment was welcomed by the Security Council.

400. In May and June 1993, my Special Envoy visited the Islamic Republic of Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan and, a few weeks later, Saudi Arabia for talks with their leaders. During that initial mission he was not able to complete his contacts and ascertain the positions of all parties concerned in accordance with his mandate. On 16 August 1993, I submitted a report to the Security Council summarizing the Special Envoy's findings, and expressed my concern about the escalating crisis on the Afghan-Tajik border. In a statement made by its President on 23 August 1993, the Security Council welcomed my proposal to extend the mandate of my Special Envoy until 31 October 1993 and to extend, by three months, the tenure of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan.

401. I have asked my Special Envoy to visit Kabul as soon as possible for discussions with government leaders regarding his mandate in Tajikistan and to ascertain the views and positions of the Tajik opposition leaders residing in Afghanistan. In addition, I requested him to undertake a second mission to Dushanbe and to visit other regional countries. Meanwhile, I have informed the Security Council of my concern about recent developments and my intention to monitor the situation closely. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs is carrying out an inter-agency re-evaluation of the humanitarian needs of Tajikistan.

19. Western Sahara

402. In April 1991, the Security Council decided, in resolution 690(1991), to establish a United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO). The resolution provided for a referendum for self-determination to be organized by the United Nations in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity. The mission will consist of civilian, security and military units functioning as an integrated operation. The civilian unit of MINURSO is expected to comprise approximately 275 international staff members, the security unit up to 300 police officers and the military unit approximately 1,700 military personnel, including observers and infantry and logistics battalions. Differences have arisen with respect to the criteria relating to voter eligibility. I have been in close contact with both parties, and I visited the area from 31 May to 4 June 1993, accompanied by my Special Representative, Sahabzada Yaqub-Khan, in order to urge the parties to accept a compromise solution with regard to the interpretation and application of those criteria.

403. Notwithstanding difficulties in the preparation and organization of direct talks between the parties and other problems, mostly of a procedural nature, the delegations of Morocco and the Frente POLISARIO met from 17 to 19 July at Laayoune, in the presence of my Special Representative as United Nations observer. The dialogue was held in a positive spirit, marked by restraint and mutual respect. It is my earnest hope that the talks will be resumed soon as a follow-up to the Laayoune initiative, and that the referendum will take place before the end of the year.

20. Zaire

404. With respect to the situation in Zaire, I transmitted to the President of the Security Council, on 7 May 1993, a letter dated 24 March 1993 from Etienne Tshisekedi, the Prime Minister elected by the Sovereign National Conference, requesting the United Nations to appoint observers to safeguard respect for human rights; to assist in the preparation, monitoring and supervision of truly free and democratic elections; and to dispatch an evaluation mission to Shaba with a view to the provision of humanitarian assistance for people displaced within their own country. Mr. Tshisekedi also requested the dispatch of a United Nations intervention force to Zaire to restore law and order, peace and internal security, to ensure the protection of people and property, and to avert the possibility of a civil war. I also informed the President of the Security Council that I had met at Brussels on 23 April 1993 Monseigneur Laurent Monsengwo, President of the High Council of the Republic of Zaire, to discuss the deteriorating situation and the institutional stalemate in that country, and the possibility of a role for the United Nations.

405. The humanitarian situation continues to be very serious, with the number of displaced persons reaching into the hundreds of thousands. Locally based United Nations and non-governmental organizations are doing their utmost to provide the necessary relief assistance. I decided to organize an inter-agency needs assessment mission in order to obtain a first-hand appreciation of the humanitarian and related needs and to consult with all concerned on means of providing assistance to the affected population, in particular the displaced people. That mission did not take place because of reservations expressed by President Mobutu.

406. During the OAU summit meeting at Cairo in July 1993, I had the opportunity to hold extensive discussions with President Mobutu. I then appointed my Special Envoy for Zaire, Lakhdar Brahimi, to undertake a goodwill mission, having as its principal objective the exploration of ways and means for the United Nations to assist in finding a solution to the current political situation. I have been assured by President Mobutu that my Special Envoy will have his full cooperation and the freedom to travel to any part of the country, as well as to meet with the opposition parties.

407. My Special Envoy arrived in Zaire on 18 July. He met President Mobutu in Shaba and exchanged views with Prime Minister Faustin Birindwa and senior officials of his Government. He also met Etienne Tshisekedi, Monseigneur Monsengwo and leaders of the opposition parties. Mr. Brahimi was very well received by all his interlocutors and made every effort to encourage a dialogue among the parties, in order to put an end to the violence and facilitate national reconciliation.

408. After the return of Mr. Brahimi to New York at the beginning of August 1993, I sent an inter-agency mission to Zaire to assess urgent humanitarian requirements, particularly in regions of concentration of internally displaced persons, and to identify ways of addressing those needs effectively. Besides the Kinshasa area, the mission is planning to visit the provinces of Shaba, North Kivu and West and East Kasai, and is expected to complete its work within three weeks. In the interim, I alerted the United Nations organizations concerned, and the donor community, to the need for an increased effort to alleviate the plight of the affected populations, particularly in the provinces of Shaba and Kivu.

E. Major comprehensive efforts

409. As the foregoing examples demonstrate, the range of responsibilities facing the new United Nations is not only vast but virtually open-ended, extending to almost every area of human activity.

410. To cope with this revolutionary and novel situation, the United Nations must address its challenges in the most coherent and comprehensive way possible. Governments and private individuals must also realize that crises such as those just discussed transcend traditional boundaries of theory and practice. Food, water, land-mines, disease and death are inextricably intertwined with democratization, human rights and development. Efforts to deal with particular issues cannot succeed in the absence of a comprehensive vision of the whole.

411. Four current cases will illustrate the comprehensive and challenging situations in which the United Nations is engaged: Cambodia, El Salvador, Somalia and the former Yugoslavia. They resemble each other in the all-encompassing nature of the tasks they demand, but each involves distinct and different factors.

1. Cambodia

412. The successful conduct of the recent election in Cambodia represents an affirmation of the important contribution United Nations peace-keeping operations can make to resolving complicated situations even in the face of serious obstacles. The mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), set out in the Paris Agreements, was one of the most complex and ambitious ever undertaken by a United Nations operation. It included aspects relating to human rights, the organization and conduct of free and fair general elections, military arrangements, civil administration, the maintenance of law and order, the repatriation and resettlement of the Cambodian refugees and displaced persons, and the rehabilitation of essential Cambodian infrastructures during the transitional period. At the same time it was planned as a peace-keeping operation in the time-honoured tradition, an operation based on the agreement and cooperation of the parties, relying on political authority and persuasion rather than on force.

413. When one of the four Cambodian parties that had signed the Agreements and undertaken a range of obligations, the Party of Democratic Kampuchea, refused to honour its commitments, UNTAC was faced with grave difficulties. Indeed, that party, after its early refusal to implement Phase II of the cease-fire and to demobilize its troops under UNTAC supervision, progressively withdrew from the peace process, absenting itself from meetings of the Supreme National Council. Despite my continued efforts and those of my Special Representative, Yasushi Akashi, and of the Co-Chairmen of the Paris Conference and other concerned Governments to engage it in a dialogue, it eventually refused to participate in the election. I resolved nevertheless to go forward in implementing all aspects of the mandate of UNTAC to the maximum extent possible. I was determined not to allow the non-cooperation of one party to negate the unprecedented and far-reaching international efforts to restore peace to Cambodia.

414. The Security Council consistently supported this course of action. While the cantonment of forces had to be suspended after some 55,000 of the approximately 200,000 troops belonging to the three factions cooperating in the peace process had been regrouped and cantoned, the 16,000-member military component of UNTAC redeployed itself to focus on providing security for voter registration and later for the election itself in all 21 provinces. With full deployment of its 21,000 military, police and civilian personnel achieved by mid-1992, UNTAC vigorously pursued its manifold tasks of promoting respect for human rights, contributing to the maintenance of law and order and exercising control and supervision of the activities of the existing administrative structures, especially in the five key areas of foreign affairs, national defence, finance, public security and information. An active education and information campaign was a vital aspect of those efforts.

415. The successful repatriation of more than 360,000 refugees and displaced persons by 31 March 1993, exactly a year after the process began and in spite of major logistic and climatic impediments, was a testimony to the organizational capacity of UNTAC and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which served as the lead agency within an integrated effort, and to the faith that the returning Cambodians had in a future in their homeland.

416. The Cambodian people at large repeatedly manifested their faith in the peace process and their courage and determination to build a stable future by first registering for and then massively voting in the election, which was held on schedule from 23 to 28 May 1993. Nearly 4.7 million people, or some 96 per cent of the estimated eligible population, registered to vote. A total of 4,267,192, representing nearly 90 per cent of the registered voters, cast their ballot. Despite concerns about disruption by the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea, and about earlier acts of intimidation attributed largely to another party, both the six-week election campaign, in which 20 political parties actively took part, and the polling itself proved to be remarkably peaceful and free of violent incidents. The UNTAC electoral staff, who were joined by more than 50,000 Cambodian electoral workers and 1,000 international polling station officers, were moved by the enthusiasm, patience and buoyant spirit manifested by the Cambodian voters everywhere during the election.

417. On 10 June, after the verification and counting of the ballots had been completed, my Special Representative declared, with my authorization and on my behalf, that the election in Cambodia had been free and fair. The Security Council endorsed that determination on 15 June, and the results of the election have now been accepted by all the Cambodian parties. The newly elected Constituent Assembly held its inaugural meeting on 14 June to begin its task of drafting and adopting a new Constitution and establishing the new Government of Cambodia.

418. Since then, the four Cambodian political parties that won seats in the election have agreed to join in a joint interim administration, under the leadership of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, for the remainder of the transitional period until the creation of the new Government in accordance with the Paris Agreements. I welcomed and supported this step as contributing to stability, national reconciliation and a smooth transition to the future Government of Cambodia.

419. UNTAC will continue faithfully to fulfil its mandate for the remainder of the transitional period and will do its utmost to help the Cambodian people to consolidate their victory in this impressive feat of self-determination. I am convinced that the international community will not fail to continue to assist the people of Cambodia and their future Government in the arduous task of building a stable, peaceful and prosperous future.

420. More than 20,000 United Nations troops began leaving Cambodia in August 1993, ending one of the largest operations in the history of the Organization. On 27 August 1993 the Security Council, in its resolution 860(1993), fixed the date of 15 November 1993 as the deadline for the withdrawal of the military component of UNTAC.

2. El Salvador

421. El Salvador is another Member State where the United Nations is engaged in an operation of considerable complexity. The Organization mediated a series of peace agreements between the Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) and then assumed responsibility for assisting and verifying their implementation. The United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL), which was created for that purpose and is headed by my Special Representative Augusto Ramírez-Ocampo, comprises military observers, police officers, human rights experts and a variety of experts in other civilian disciplines. It will soon have added to it an Electoral Division to observe, at the request of the Government of El Salvador, the elections which are to be held in the spring of 1994 and which will mark the culmination of the peace process.

422. The multidisciplinary nature of ONUSAL reflects the complexity of the peace agreements, which provided, even before a cease-fire came into effect, for United Nations monitoring of respect for human rights by both sides. A Commission of three distinguished non-Salvadorians was appointed to establish the truth about certain grave acts of violence committed during more than 10 years of bitter civil war. There was to be a cease-fire; the purification and progressive reduction of the armed forces; and the demobilization of FMLN and its legalization as a political party. The existing public security bodies were to be monitored by the United Nations and a new national civil police formed. The judicial system was to be reformed, as was the electoral system. A variety of amendments were to be made to the Constitution in order to ensure, in particular, that the Army and other security forces were fully under civilian control and that the Army would not be involved in police functions, such as the preservation of internal order, except in exceptional circumstances. Reforms were to take place in the economic and social spheres. In particular, land was to be provided for ex-combatants from both sides as they demobilized and for persons who during the war had taken over and worked land owned by others.

423. It is to the credit of the Salvadorian people, in particular of the Government and FMLN, that it rapidly became clear that the peace process was irreversible. There have nevertheless been some set-backs in its implementation. The cease-fire was impeccably observed but there was an eight-month delay in the Government's implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission set up to purify the armed forces. Most seriously, the discovery of a substantial FMLN arms cache in Nicaragua on 23 May 1993 revealed that, despite repeated protestations to the contrary, FMLN had failed to declare and destroy all its arms, ammunition and other war materiel. During the following three months FMLN revealed to ONUSAL further arms caches inside and outside El Salvador, the contents of which were destroyed. That serious violation of the agreements put some strain on the peace process; I trust that this chapter is now closed.

424. In recent months there have been delays in the formation and deployment of the new national civil police and a lack of progress in implementing the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth, which complemented the agreements and were intended to ensure that the conditions which permitted gross violations of human rights during the armed conflict would not recur. I firmly believe that implementation of those recommendations is necessary for national reconciliation.

425. There have also been delays in putting into effect the complicated provisions of the peace agreements relating to land. There is an inescapable moral obligation to fulfil promises made to demobilized combatants of both sides.

426. Like the delays in the formation of the national civil police, the delays in the land programme are due partly to lack of financial resources. My appeals for financial support from the international community have not so far produced all that is required. I believe that the Government has therefore an obligation to adjust its own expenditure priorities to ensure that critical elements in the peace process do not fail for want of finance; but it has to be acknowledged that this may prove difficult to reconcile with the eco-conomic reform programme which is a condition of continuing support for El Salvador on the part of the international financial institutions.

427. The case of El Salvador is a prime example of the need for a fully integrated approach by the United Nations system as a whole to the requirements of peace-building in countries emerging from long years of armed conflict. A cease-fire and a successful election are not enough to claim success; that is only assured when the necessary political, economic and social measures have been taken to eradicate the underlying causes of the original conflict.

3. Somalia

428. Despite the best efforts of the international community to help Somalia with traditional peace-keeping and humanitarian assistance, the situation had become intolerable by the end of 1992. Somalia remained without a central Government, Mogadishu was divided by rival militia, and throughout the country a dozen or more factions were active.

429. Widespread looting of aid supplies, robbery, armed banditry and general lawlessness compounded the situation. Large sums of cash and relief aid were being extorted from donor organizations and the lives of their personnel were being put in danger. The result was that, while relief supplies were ready and in the pipeline, they were prevented from reaching Somalis dying of starvation. According to some estimates, as many as 3,000 persons a day were dying of starvation in Somalia, while warehouses remained stocked.

430. On 24 November 1992, I reported to the Security Council that I did not exclude the possibility that it might become necessary to review the basic premises and principles of the United Nations effort in Somalia. I also reported that traditional peace-keeping efforts were not yielding the desired results and that it might become necessary to resort to measures of peace-enforcement.

431. On 3 December 1992, the Security Council, by its resolution 794(1992), established a precedent in the history of the United Nations: it decided for the first time to intervene militarily for strictly humanitarian purposes. By that resolution the Council authorized the use of all necessary means to establish as soon as possible a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council authorized the Secretary-General and the Member States concerned to make arrangements for the unified command and control of the forces involved, and called on all Member States that were in a position to do so to provide military forces and to make contributions in cash or in kind. The Council further decided that the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM I) should proceed at my discretion in the light of my assessment of conditions on the ground.

432. In the first phase of the operation, the Unified Task Force, spearheaded by the United States of America, began arriving on 9 December 1992 to establish a secure environment for the unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance. I urged the Task Force command to take steps to disarm the factions involved in the fighting. In the course of five difficult months, the Task Force made progress in opening up access to more and more remote areas and in providing protection for the delivery of humanitarian assistance. Disarmament remains a major problem, but United Nations and non-governmental organizations were able to expand their relief activities in various parts of the country. As a result, there was a dramatic fall in malnutrition levels and in the number of deaths from starvation.

433. On 3 March 1993, I submitted to the Security Council my recommendations for effecting the transition from the Unified Task Force to UNOSOM II. I indicated that, since the adoption of Council resolution 794(1992), the Task Force had deployed approximately 37,000 troops, covering about 40 per cent of the country's territory. While the security situation had improved, incidents of violence continued to occur; I therefore concluded that UNOSOM II should be endowed with enforcement powers to enable it to establish a secure environment throughout Somalia.

434. On 26 March, in its resolution 814(1993), the Security Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, set out the arrangements for the transition from the Unified Task Force to a new United Nations operation (UNOSOM II) under a changed mandate. Instead of a return to peace-keeping, as envisaged in its resolution 794(1992), the Council chose to set up an unprecedented operation involving, as necessary, enforcement action by the United Nations itself under the authority of the Security Council.

435. In this second phase, UNOSOM II is called upon to continue the restoration of peace, stability and law and order, to assist in the re-establishment of the Somali police force, to provide security and assistance in the repatriation of refugees and the resettlement of displaced persons; to assist in the development of a programme for the removal of mines throughout Somalia, to monitor the arms embargo and to facilitate disarmament; and to assist in the provision of relief and in the economic rehabilitation of Somalia. The accelerated deployment of all UNOSOM II contingents to meet the full requirement of 28,000 personnel, all ranks, as well as equipment, was encouraged by the Security Council. Member States were urged to contribute, on an emergency basis, military support and transportation, including armoured personnel carriers, tanks and attack helicopters, to enable UNOSOM II to confront and deter armed attacks directed against it in carrying out its mandate. At 31 August 1993, the full target of 28,000 personnel had not been reached.

436. After the transfer of military command to UNOSOM II on 4 May 1993, some of the political movements staged armed attacks against personnel of the operation, as a result of which 49 soldiers have lost their lives. Four journalists have also been killed, and about 160 UNOSOM personnel have been wounded.

437. On 6 June 1993, the Security Council, by its resolution 837(1993), reaffirmed the authority of the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures against those responsible for the armed attacks and for publicly inciting them, including their arrest and detention for prosecution, trial and punishment. The Council also demanded that all Somali parties, including movements and factions, comply fully with their commitments. It re-emphasized the crucial importance of disarming them and of neutralizing radio broadcasting systems that contributed to the violence.

438. In the course of the military action carried out by UNOSOM II forces since 12 June, great care has been taken to avoid civilian casualties. The President of the Security Council and I have both expressed deep regret and sorrow at the casualties which have occurred among innocent Somali civilians.

439. One major task that lies ahead for UNOSOM II and for the Somali people is the implementation of the agreements signed at Addis Ababa in January and March 1993, which include specific provisions regarding a cease-fire, disarmament, demobilization and national reconciliation, as well as requests for United Nations assistance in enforcing them. Those agreements are Somali agreements, and the responsibility for their successful implementation lies with the Somali people. Under Chapter VII authority, UNOSOM II and my Special Representative in Somalia, Admiral Jonathan Howe, will be there to assist and facilitate.

440. The importance of security both for the effective delivery of relief and for the transition to rehabilitation and reconstruction was fully recognized at the Third Coordination Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance for Somalia, held at Addis Ababa from 11 to 13 March 1993. Participants endorsed the United Nations relief and rehabilitation programme for 1993, which was developed in consultation with the Somalis. The meeting was attended by 190 Somalis, many of whom played an active role in the proceedings of the Conference on National Reconciliation in Somalia which I convened at Addis Ababa on 15 March 1993.

441. At the Conference on National Reconciliation in Somalia, a two-year transitional period was set by the Somali participants for the re-establishment of a legitimate representative government. In choosing a target date of March 1995, Somalis have established for themselves a realistic time-frame in which to restore civil institutions, to pursue policies which will ensure economic recovery and to provide for their own security. It is my expectation that at the end of March 1995 the current phase in Somalia's history will have come to a successful conclusion and Somalia will have returned to normalcy.

442. The United Nations is undertaking parallel efforts to put together a three-year, medium-term reconstruction and development plan for Somalia. United Nations development organizations, including UNDP and the World Bank, have been actively involved in this exercise, and arrangements have been made to integrate the efforts of Somalis into this plan. I trust that those efforts will enable the Somalis to rebuild a civil society in their country.

4. The former Yugoslavia

443. The tragic situation in the former Yugoslavia continues to drain the attention, resources and emotion of the international community. The Security Council is in session almost daily on this subject and, by the end of July 1993, had adopted 44 resolutions and issued 33 statements by the President on the various conflicts there. While the Council's wishes have been repeatedly flouted by the parties on the ground, I am encouraged by the fact that nations with vastly different interests have been able to respond collectively, again and again, with spontaneous and courageous initiatives, and that they have made valiant attempts to bring tranquillity to that troubled region.

444. Since August 1993, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia has provided a permanent negotiating forum for seeking a political solution to all the problems of the former Yugoslavia. The Conference has a Steering Committee, now chaired by Lord Owen, representing the European Community, and Thorvald Stoltenberg, who in May replaced my Personal Envoy, Cyrus Vance, and who also serves as my Special Representative for the former Yugoslavia. I should like to place on record my gratitude for the tireless, selfless and dedicated efforts of Mr. Vance during the time that he served as my Personal Envoy. The Vance-Owen Plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Vance Plan for Croatia, still represent a basis for further political solutions to the conflicts in those Member States.

445. Meanwhile the peace-keeping challenge both in Croatia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina has proved to be formidable. The original mandate of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) was extended three times at my suggestion, on 21 February, 31 March and 30 June 1993. UNPROFOR now has almost 25,000 personnel—about 14,000 in Croatia, nearly 10,000 in Bosnia, and slightly under 1,000 in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. The experience of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina and, to a lesser extent, in Croatia has raised serious questions about the wisdom of deploying blue helmets in situations where the parties are unable or unwilling to honour commitments they enter into and where the peace-keepers themselves become targets of attack.

446. In Croatia, the original United Nations peace plan remained unimplemented in crucial respects. Demilitarization of the United Nations Protected Areas never took place because of the resistance of local Serbian authorities, a resistance which was at times hardened by the threat, or fear, of attack by the Croatian Army. Consequently, the return of refugees and displaced persons, which can be effected only in secure circumstances, was repeatedly postponed, much to the dismay of all concerned. The mounting frustration of the Croatian Government with the lack of progress in recovering its sovereign territory led to three incursions against Serbs in sectors adjoining the area of deployment of UNPROFOR, and set the peace process back even further. At the time of writing the situation remains tense.

447. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the considerable peace-keeping and humanitarian effort of the international community has not brought an end to the brutal conflict, and the daily horrors inflicted on suffering civilians remain an affront to the world's conscience.

448. The most visible and successful contribution of the international community in the former Yugoslavia is in the humanitarian sphere. The United Nations relief effort, headed by UNHCR, includes valuable contributions by UNICEF, the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme, and other organizations including the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Organization for Migration and numerous non-governmental organizations.

449. In March, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees reported that 3.8 million people were receiving assistance in the whole of the former Yugoslavia. In Bosnia and Herzegovina alone, some 2.28 million people, or half the original population, were benefiting from UNHCR assistance. UNPROFOR was able to facilitate the delivery of some 40,000 tons of humanitarian aid to over 800,000 besieged civilians, and to provide help for a huge number of displaced people in the area. Its presence was invaluable in helping to avert the mass starvation that many experts predicted would overtake Bosnia and Herzegovina during the past winter. The provision of relief has involved negotiation of access routes, coordination of airlifting supplies into Sarajevo, delivery of relief by road convoys, and the organization of air drops of relief supplies to areas under siege not accessible by road convoys.

450. The conditions for the international community's humanitarian efforts have steadily deteriorated, however. In Bosnia and Herzegovina there is currently widespread fighting. Relief operations are obstructed, sabotaged or diverted for military purposes, while the personnel of UNPROFOR, UNHCR and other organizations are increasingly targeted deliberately by members of the armed forces of all parties. UNPROFOR has now suffered 548 casualties, including 51 fatalities, and the casualty rate has recently increased significantly. Meanwhile, the support of the international community for humanitarian operations is dwindling and the sums actually received fall far short of requirements.

451. The role of the United Nations and other organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the means at their disposal are therefore under serious challenge. It is obviously of paramount importance to sustain the humanitarian effort for as long as necessary but there is a real risk that, if the present downward spiral continues, it will be impossible for the Security Council to achieve its political objectives in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The ultimate consequences would be further large population displacements, which could have serious destabilizing effects on neighbouring countries and the region as a whole, and a humanitarian catastrophe.

452. One of the most heinous aspects of the war in the former Yugoslavia is the massive and systematic violation of human rights, and the grave violations of humanitarian law, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights has submitted several detailed reports on the situation, with recommendations. In his report of March 1993, he paid special attention to mounting evidence of war crimes.

453. In August 1992, the Security Council reaffirmed the individual responsibility of those who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia. On 6 October 1992, the Council, in resolution 780(1992), requested me to appoint a Commission of Experts to reach conclusions on the evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. A five-member Commission was established, which has held seven sessions since November 1992, compiled a computerized database, provided two interim reports and conducted several field investigations. The Office of Legal Affairs has provided legal and administrative support services to the Commission.

454. The initial findings of the Commission led the Security Council to conclude that an international tribunal should be established for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991. By its resolution 808(1993), the Council requested me to prepare a report on all aspects of this matter, including specific proposals for the establishment of such a tribunal. I submitted the report, including a draft Statute, on 3 May 1993, and it was approved in its entirety by the Security Council in resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993.

455. The report and the Statute dealt with the constitutionally controversial question of the legal basis for the establishment of the Tribunal, the highly complex substantive legal issues regarding its competence, and the detailed procedural and organizational aspects of its work. The Statute is widely regarded as breaking new ground in the area of international criminal law.

F. Post-conflict peace-building

456. In "An Agenda for Peace", I stressed that a process of post-conflict peace-building was essential for preventing the recurrence of armed conflict between States. Despite the voluminous and very useful analysis and commentary which has emerged in the months since that report appeared, however, little attention has been given to this concept. Peace-building encompasses more than the reconstruction of the peace after the cessation of hostilities. Peace-building must be linked to the comprehensive development efforts of the United Nations, political, economic, social and cultural.

457. The objective of peace-building is to involve hostile parties in mutually beneficial undertakings which not only contribute to economic and social development but also reinforce the confidence necessary for the creation of lasting peace. The reduction of hostile perceptions through educational exchanges and curriculum reform may also be essential to forestall the re-emergence of cultural and national tensions which could spark renewed hostilities. Such an approach can also play a vital role in building the peace in situations characterized by civil conflict.

458. Peace-building begins with practical measures to restore the civil society, reinvigorate its economy, repair the land and restore its productivity, repatriate and resettle displaced people and refugees; it also entails reducing the levels of arms in society, as a component of the volatility that induces violence. These steps, taken in the context of comprehensive humanitarian efforts, are all essential to set the stage for sustainable social, political and economic development.

1. Mine clearance

459. Of all the tasks involved in setting a nation on a new road to peace and prosperity, perhaps none has the immediate urgency of mine clearance. Tens of millions of mines have been left in areas of conflict around the world. Although mine-clearance efforts may last for decades, the restoration of transport infrastructures, resettlement areas and agricultural land is often an early priority, and no attempt to restore a sense of community and security can succeed without effective land-mine removal.

460. I have therefore launched a coordinated programme of action for mine clearance, involving the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the Department of Peace-keeping Operations and other competent bodies. In Angola, Somalia and the former Yugoslavia, mine clearing is at present undertaken as part of peace-keeping and humanitarian efforts; a concerted drive to rid those countries of mine pollution must wait until the cessation of hostilities. In countries where major conflict has ceased or abated, mine clearance is under way and fighters are being disarmed, demobilized and aided in making the transition to productive peacetime work.

461. In Afghanistan, at least 10 million mines were left behind after the recent war, and are now seriously hindering the restoration of normal life in many parts of the country. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan is managing a mine-clearance programme involving the training and supervision of some 2,000 mine clearers fielded under the auspices of Afghan non-governmental organizations. If sufficient funding is made available by donors in a timely manner, it seems likely that the majority of the high priority cultivable land will be cleared by the end of 1997.

462. Mine clearance progresses well in Cambodia, where some 1,400 mine clearers are now working. There are perhaps 5 million mines spread all over the eastern districts, and clearance is slow, especially in the flood plains and paddy-fields. Following the successful use of mine-detecting dogs in Afghanistan, a similar effort is under way in Cambodia, but it will be many years before this problem is finally resolved. It is therefore imperative that mine clearing should continue in Cambodia after the termination of UNTAC.

463. A plan has been prepared for the clearance of an estimated 2 million mines in Mozambique. Funds have been raised, partly from the ONUMOZ budget and partly through a trust fund administered by UNDP. A mine-clearance training facility is to be a major part of the programme, since there too mine clearance will be a long-term operation.

2. Electoral assistance

464. During the year, I established an Electoral Assistance Unit in the Department of Political Affairs. Since the Unit became operational, it has provided electoral assistance to 36 Member States, including four cases where the requests were received before 1992 (Angola, Cambodia, Mali and Western Sahara). Of those 36 cases, 2 relate to organization and conduct, 4 to verification, 26 to technical assistance, 9 to coordination and support and 7 to follow-up and report. Twelve of those cases were a combination of technical assistance and one of the other categories. Of the Member States requesting assistance, 26 were from Africa, 4 from Eastern Europe, 4 from Latin America and 1 from Asia.

465. Member States seek electoral assistance from the United Nations essentially in four circumstances: when a country is undergoing a transition to democracy; when it is seeking to build a peaceful alternative to conflict; following decolonization; and in self-determination elections. In Eritrea and Western Sahara, for example, the United Nations has a long-term commitment to assisting in the design of the electoral and referendal systems. The case of Eritrea is an important illustration of this aspect of the Organization's activity.

466. Eritrea suffered more than 25 years of civil war, which ended in May 1991, and now benefits from overall political and security stability. In December 1991, the President of the Transitional Government of Ethiopia made the necessary arrangements with the Provisional Government of Eritrea to facilitate United Nations supervision of a referendum by which the people of Eritrea could determine their political future. On 19 May 1992, the Referendum Commission of Eritrea requested the United Nations to undertake the verification of the referendum. A technical team from the Electoral Assistance Unit visited Eritrea between 30 July and 8 August 1992 to gather information and submitted a report, on the basis of which I reported to the General Assembly, seeking a mandate to undertake a verification mission as requested. On 16 December 1992, the General Assembly, in its resolution 47/114, authorized the establishment of the United Nations Observer Mission to Verify the Referendum in Eritrea (UNOVER).

467. On 6 January 1993, I visited Eritrea to make a first-hand appraisal of the referendum process. UNOVER was inaugurated on 7 January 1993 and consisted of 21 international staff members supported by local personnel, headed by my Personal Representative, Samir Sanbar. They were joined by 85 observers during the referendum, which took place from 23 to 25 April 1993. The total budget of UNOVER was in the order of $2 million.

468. According to the Eritrean Referendum Commission, more than 98.5 per cent of the nearly 1.2 million registered voters voted in the referendum. Voting was overwhelmingly in favour of independence, which was declared on 27 April 1993. Soon after, Eritrea was admitted to membership in the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity.

469. In 1992, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs launched consolidated appeals for the region of the Horn of Africa. For Eritrea, the amount sought to meet emergency needs was $191 million, towards which the international community contributed resources in cash and in kind equivalent to $136 million. The results of any democratic electoral process must be supported by a fundamentally healthy society, economy and State if they are to be durable. The decades of warfare damaged or destroyed much of the physical infrastructure in Eritrea and, together with the drought in recent years, produced major relief needs; but the need is no longer for massive emergency relief but chiefly for major post-disaster rehabilitation and development. In July 1992, the United Nations and the Provisional Government of Eritrea launched a three-year programme for refugee reintegration and rehabilitation of resettlement areas, which requires $262 million and seeks to repatriate 500,000 Eritrean refugees from the Sudan. So far only $32.4 million has been pledged.

470. Not all the interventions of the United Nations in electoral observation have been large-scale missions such as UNAVEM II, UNTAC or UNOVER. Other approaches, involving the coordination and provision of logistic support to groups of international observers, have been effective. Malawi is a particularly interesting case. Coordination efforts began three months before the referendum date and included the deployment of observers during voter registration and the referendum campaign. The involvement of the United Nations was not limited to mere observation, however; on two occasions, I intervened to help secure the agreement of the parties to a change in the date of the elections and on the question of ballot boxes. The referendum confirmed the will of the Malawian people to move to a multi-party system, and the Government is now proceeding with the arrangements for parliamentary elections that will be fully supported by the United Nations.

G. Disarmament

471. Since my report on new dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold-war era, significant events have taken place in the international security environment, requiring new responses and renewed efforts by the international community to deal with them. The momentum created by the many positive breakthroughs of the past year must now be maintained.

472. Most notable among such achievements is the recent decision of the Conference on Disarmament to give its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban a mandate to negotiate a treaty on a comprehensive nuclear test ban. That decision was made possible by the crucial commitment of nuclear-weapon States to a continuing moratorium on nuclear testing, and represents a culmination of the efforts of the international community to bring about progress in one of the most vital areas of international security. The year 1993 is the first in which no nuclear tests have been carried out since the moratoria of the 1960s.

473. To be viable, a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty should be universal, verifiable and of indefinite duration. Coupled with a renewed interest in the cessation of the production of fissionable material, a comprehensive nuclear test ban could help to halt the qualitative arms race and to prevent other countries from acquiring nuclear weapons. That would strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation regime, which has gained in significance as the number of nuclear weapons is being drastically reduced. Together, all these developments offer an incentive to the States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to extend that Treaty in 1995 unconditionally and indefinitely.

474. I am gratified by the fact that Belarus has recently ratified the Non-Proliferation Treaty, and I very much hope that Kazakhstan and Ukraine will follow that example. I have expressed my deep concern about the intention of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to withdraw from the Treaty, and I am therefore encouraged by the fact that its Government has postponed a final decision on the matter and is engaged in negotiations with other interested parties, in particular the International Atomic Energy Agency.

475. Global non-proliferation efforts can also be facilitated by the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones. The progress made towards the full entry into force of the Treaty of Tlatelolco is most welcome; in this context, regional initiatives such as those taken by Argentina and Brazil are commendable. I am also gratified by the advances made in the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa. I extend my strongest support to the ongoing efforts to finalize the text of the treaty to establish formally a nuclear-weapon-free zone in that region.

476. Another significant landmark in the prevention of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction is the signature of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction by some 148 States. The smooth establishment of the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons augurs well for the effective and successful implementation of the Convention. Every effort must now be made to achieve universality at the earliest date.

477. The establishment of the Register of Conventional Arms is another event of historic significance. In the current situation, where emphasis is placed on building confidence through increased openness and transparency in military matters, the Register has a unique potential. I am pleased that all major arms suppliers and recipient States have provided information to the Register in its first year of operation. The Register has proved to be a success.

478. The importance of the Register becomes even clearer as we relate it to the question of excessive and destabilizing capabilities in conventional weapons. Although no substitute for actual arms reductions, the Register could help to make military behaviour more predictable and to reassure neighbouring States of each other's non-belligerent intentions. It could be particularly helpful in regions and subregions where there are potential hostilities, as it could lead to gradual reductions in armaments, while allowing the legitimate defence concerns of the parties involved to be considered. I would therefore strongly urge Member States to make use of the Register, together with other measures of confidence-building, particularly within regional and subregional frameworks. This is one way in which disarmament and arms control can contribute to the Organization's efforts in the fields of preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, and I have decided that this should become a priority task for the Office of Disarmament Affairs in the Department of Political Affairs.

479. An issue closely related to non-proliferation efforts, and to which I attach great importance, is that of the transfer of dual-purpose technology. While it is essential for the international community to prevent the misuse of technology for military purposes, it would be unfair to obstruct legitimate development opportunities. To ensure that all countries, particularly developing countries, will enjoy the peaceful uses of science and technology, I call on the international community to seek agreement on control arrangements that will be universal and non-discriminatory.

H. The humanitarian imperative

1. Towards a coordinated United Nations response

480. The international community has asked that more be done to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations to provide humanitarian assistance, through coordinated planning and implementation involving the Departments of Political Affairs, Peace-keeping Operations and Humanitarian Affairs, and that humanitarian concerns should be reflected in fact-finding missions and in peace-keeping operations. I have therefore taken steps to ensure that essential collaboration takes place among those Departments and between them and all other United Nations organizations and bodies.

481. Humanitarian emergencies, by causing the mass exodus of people, may constitute threats to international peace and security, or aggravate existing threats; conversely, disturbances of the peace may give rise to humanitarian crises. I stress again that it is essential that the United Nations should develop the ability to link humanitarian action and protection of human rights with peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building. In formulating the response to humanitarian emergencies, we cannot ignore the infrastructural requirements of the societies in need. Rehabilitation and reconstruction must accompany emergency relief.

482. Because relief personnel frequently operate in areas of conflict or danger even prior to the deployment of United Nations forces, their security is of particular concern. The murder of United Nations staff members working in humanitarian programmes in Afghanistan and the Sudan this past year is a tragic reminder of the fragile status of the United Nations humanitarian presence in turbulent areas (see figure 12). Every effort is being made to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel, and I am also concerned about the security of the personnel of humanitarian non-governmental organizations who are assisting in the implementation of United Nations relief programmes. It is imperative that Governments and other parties to conflict respect their obligations under international law to ensure the secure access of relief personnel and supplies to the victims of humanitarian emergencies.

483. The United Nations system has continued to adapt, refine and strengthen its mechanisms to address new challenges. United Nations and other organizations, including non-governmental organizations, have had to increase their emergency humanitarian relief substantially, straining resources available for reconstruction and development efforts. The three principal United Nations organizations engaged in humanitarian assistance, UNICEF, WFP and UNHCR, increased their relief outlays from $278 million in 1989 to $1,287 million during 1992.

484. At the last meeting of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, I discussed extensively with the heads of organizations, funds and programmes the issues of coordination and effectiveness of United Nations humanitarian action. While many issues remain to be resolved, I believe that the organizations of the United Nations system are moving in the right direction to establish mechanisms for greater coherence and increased rapidity in their response. One idea which I have encouraged relates to the immediate deployment, at the start of a crisis, of United Nations humanitarian emergency teams, which would draw on the capacities and expertise of the organizations of the system.

485. There is an Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC), composed of executive heads of organizations and chaired by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, which sets the direction on policy and coordination questions that shape the humanitarian response of the system. Arrangements have had to be made, however, to deal with issues that do not fall within the existing mandates of IASC member organizations, for example, the issue of internally displaced persons, whose numbers are growing at an alarming rate. Operational responsibility for programmes benefiting the internally displaced have been determined on the basis of the capacities of the organizations in the field. UNHCR, UNDP, UNICEF and WFP have all been addressing the various aspects of this problem.

486. As an integral part of the new arrangements for the prompt coordination of the international humanitarian response, the $50 million Central Emergency Revolving Fund has proved to be a useful instrument. Since its inception, $54 million has been advanced from the Fund to finance urgent humanitarian action in Afghanistan, Georgia, Iraq, Kenya, Lebanon, Mozambique, Somalia, Tajikistan and the former Yugoslavia; $20 million of the advances has been reimbursed, confirming the Fund's viability. I am at present considering how the scope and operations of the Fund could be broadened. Given the magnitude and range of emergency humanitarian crises, it may also be useful to consider expanding its resources.

487. Thus far in 1993, the new coordination arrangements under the Department of Humanitarian Affairs have helped to launch 17 inter-agency consolidated appeals for over $4 billion for relief and rehabilitation programmes in some 20 countries, involving assistance to more than 20 million affected people. Only a quarter of the resources appealed for were forthcoming, however, which has considerably hampered the effective implementation of humanitarian programmes. I have asked the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs to suggest ways in which international community support for those programmes could be further strengthened.

488. In northern Iraq, United Nations humanitarian efforts prevented another serious refugee crisis. For the Somalis, the spectre of starvation and disease has receded, and in Mozambique, too, the humanitarian situation seems hopeful. But in many other situations—in Afghanistan, Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Liberia and southern Sudan—human suffering continues to increase, and for many millions of refugees and displaced persons the situation remains desperate.

2. Disaster relief and mitigation

489. Apart from tragedies and crises caused by man's inhumanity to man, natural calamities, such as cyclones, drought, floods, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, continue to take a heavy toll of human life and property. Indeed, the rapidly increasing rate of urbanization and the steady increase in world population mean that natural disasters are both more destructive and more costly than ever before. In 1991, natural disasters took more than 162,000 lives and caused damage to property estimated at $44 billion. Disaster mitigation, which should involve both preventive and preparedness measures, can effectively reduce the human toll and economic losses. Ensuring a more effective disaster management response system is yet one more challenge for the United Nations system and the international community.

490. From January 1992 to June 1993, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs coordinated the international response to more than 90 natural disasters, including earthquakes or floods in Egypt, Turkey, Indonesia, Kazakhstan and Pakistan. Coordination mechanisms such as search and rescue teams and on-site coordination of relief activities have been strengthened. The ultimate objective is to increase national and local capacities to deal with disasters. Efforts to prevent and mitigate disasters must begin at the grass-roots level if they are to be effective in minimizing the harm caused by natural disasters.

491. I am convinced that improved disaster management, especially through enhanced preventive action, benefiting from scientific and technological advances, can help to reduce substantially the impact of natural disasters and alleviate the sufferings of the victims. Indeed, the Scientific and Technical Committee on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, consisting of scientists and specialists from related disciplines, recommended holding a conference where their expertise could be transferred to policy makers in disaster-prone countries. The General Assembly endorsed that recommendation at its forty-sixth session, and I am confident that the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction will mobilize the more active involvement of international and national organizations in prevention, preparedness and mitigation activities. I look forward to the participation of all Member States in that Conference.

3. Relief operations

(a) The Sudan

492. The humanitarian situation caused by continuing conflict in southern Sudan is a matter of considerable concern. While much was done to ameliorate human suffering, the underlying problems remain, and they require greater humanitarian efforts.

493. A series of high-level initiatives have been taken to broaden and accelerate the delivery of relief assistance to conflict-affected areas. During a visit to the Sudan in September 1992 by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, agreement was reached with the Government on the principle of access to all people in need of assistance, and on specific air and river corridors for relief deliveries. Following "proximity talks" between the Government and three factions of the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement, conducted by the United Nations at Nairobi in December 1992, further agreements were reached on road, river and rail corridors, and on updated assessments of the location and condition of displaced populations. In January 1993, the United Nations sponsored talks between the Government and international non-governmental organizations which resulted in wide-ranging agreements designed to enhance the effectiveness of relief operations conducted by those organizations.

494. Despite various efforts, including those of Operation Lifeline Sudan, the humanitarian situation of the affected population remains precarious. I consequently appointed Vieri Traxler as Special Envoy for Humanitarian Affairs for the Sudan, to travel to the region to develop practical and verifiable measures to mitigate the human suffering in several parts of the country. The Government of the Sudan at first denied Mr. Traxler's mission access to the country but, after further contact, it has been accepted.

(b) Kenya

495. Early in 1993, Kenya faced major humanitarian challenges. They included requirements for drought relief and drought recovery, such as seeds, tools and veterinary aid, and assistance for refugees in Kenya, primarily from Somalia. It was also necessary to promote stability on both sides of the borders with Ethiopia and Somalia, and to help create the conditions for the return of refugees from Kenya to those countries. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs took the lead in coordinating the preparation of a consolidated inter-agency appeal for Kenya for a total of $192 million. As at 31 July, the nine United Nations organizations requesting funds had received $74.5 million, or 39 per cent of the amount requested.

496. It is clear that Kenya will continue to require substantial humanitarian assistance throughout the remainder of 1993 and in 1994, and that a consolidated inter-agency appeal will be necessary for 1994. Current crop assessments indicate the likelihood of a third consecutive year of lower than normal harvests, primarily because of drought. UNHCR is preparing an appeal for the repatriation of refugees to Somalia from Kenya, a process which will extend well into 1994, as will the need for continued cross-border operations. Finally, special assistance efforts are now being considered to help Kenyans who have been internally displaced by violence in parts of the Rift Valley, Nyanza and Western provinces.

(c) Ethiopia

497. There continue to be significant relief needs in Ethiopia, but the overall emphasis has moved to rehabilitation efforts. In the course of 1993, the United Nations concentrated largely on providing humanitarian assistance to about 5 million people, mainly victims of drought, former soldiers and their families, several hundred thousand refugees from Somalia, returnees, and persons internally displaced. These numbers include an unabated influx of Sudanese refugees, as well as Kenyan and Djiboutian refugees and 400,000 to 500,000 Ethiopians who have returned over the past three years but who still have complex relief needs.

498. An especially noteworthy feature of the case of Ethiopia is the cross-mandate approach, under which those in need are assisted by competent United Nations organizations, the Government and others in a unified programme, regardless of their status (for example, returning refugees or internally displaced persons); the Emergency Preparation and Planning Group plays an important coordination role.

499. The consolidated inter-agency appeal for Ethiopia, launched in January 1993, sought $299.9 million to support such efforts. As at 31 July, $109.7 million had been received in donor contributions, or 36.6 per cent of the funds requested,

(d) Drought emergency in southern Africa

500. The drought emergency in southern Africa programme provides an example of the way in which the United Nations, in cooperation with Governments, regional organizations, international financial institutions and non-governmental organizations can meet the challenges of the humanitarian tasks that lie ahead. When 18 million lives were placed at risk by the worst drought to affect southern Africa in this century, that programme, a coordinated approach between the United Nations and a regional institution, the Southern Africa Development Community (SADC), was established as the cornerstone of a complex relief strategy involving assistance channelled through multilateral, bilateral and non-governmental organizations. Funding requirements amount to $858 million.

501. Tragedy was averted because the international community responded positively to the plight of southern Africa, and the Governments of the region made extraordinary efforts to mobilize large amounts of their own resources for food imports and the distribution of emergency aid. Although the unprecedented quantities of food aid they received placed a severe strain on the logistics capacity of individual countries, six of which are land-locked, the region demonstrated its capacity to deliver relief assistance to affected populations in a timely fashion.

502. The World Food Programme/SADC Logistics Advisory Centre was one of the collaborative mechanisms critical to the programme's success; it ensured well-coordinated utilization of ports and land and rail corridors. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs continues its collaboration with SADC to ensure that the emergency management capacity established under the programme is sustained. Of all the natural disasters affecting Africa, drought imposes the greatest toll in human suffering and economic costs.

(e) Chernobyl

503. Seven years have passed since the accident occurred at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant. I visited Ukraine recently and was greatly moved to see the continuing consequences of that disaster in the daily life of the population. Some sections of the populations of Belarus and the Russian Federation have also been affected.

504. My Coordinator of International Cooperation for Chernobyl has also visited the three affected States, including the exclusion zone around the encased reactor. After extensive consultations, a new approach has been formulated for the activities of the United Nations system in response to the Chernobyl accident, involving mitigation of its consequences through the implementation of specific projects to address priority needs in the affected areas. To be effective and credible, however, such activities require adequate funding, and thus depend on an appropriate response from the international donor community.

4. Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

505. The world's refugee population now stands at a staggering 19 million, and the number of internally displaced persons is 25 million. Such is the magnitude of the problem the world faces in 1993. This is a particularly difficult challenge, and the human and material resources of the United Nations system have been stretched to the limit.

506. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is carrying out a three-track strategy of prevention, preparedness and solutions. While responding to refugee situations in countries of asylum, the Office also turned its attention to countries of origin, seeking to prevent and contain refugee movements. UNHCR provided assistance not only to refugees, returnees and displaced persons but also, in the case of the former Yugoslavia, to people affected by conflict or under a direct threat of expulsion, or subjected to the form of persecution now known as "ethnic cleansing". Invoking the human right to remain in one's country of origin, the Office of the High Commissioner sought to ensure that people were not forced to flee from their homes in the first place.

507. One of the highest priorities of UNHCR is to secure the protection of vulnerable groups in areas where peace-keeping operations have brought about a halt in military hostilities. UNHCR has given special attention to sexual violence against refugee women. Among the most odious practices to re-emerge on a large scale in recent conflicts is the use of rape and other forms of sexual violence as an instrument of systematic persecution and intimidation. UNHCR is attempting to achieve international consensus on concrete measures to prevent such practices.

508. UNHCR has also focused on refugee children. Persistent protection problems include military recruitment, detention, irregular adoption, denial of the right to education, and the situation of unaccompanied minors in the care of families not their own. The guidelines and considerations contained in the pamphlet entitled Evacuation of Children from Conflict Areas, published jointly by UNHCR and UNICEF in December 1992, illustrate the great potential for inter-agency cooperation in securing the protection of children's rights in the most difficult situations.

509. Among the most notable refugee problems of the past year, the situation in Afghanistan stands out. The end of the occupation by forces of the former Soviet Union, and the return of large parts of the country to relative stability, have made possible the return of large numbers of refugees from safe havens in Pakistan and elsewhere. Although continuing hostilities in parts of the country have deterred some refugees from returning, it is estimated that some 1.7 million Afghans have re-entered Afghanistan in the course of the past 18 months. The provision of assistance to those returnees is an important element in the emergency programmes being coordinated by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan.

V. Conclusion: Strengthening the human foundation

"... promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion ..."

Charter of the United Nations, Article 1, paragraph 3

510. This report has addressed an immense array of practical and urgent programmes and measures designed to carry forward the purposes and principles of the Charter. Underlying these practical efforts are broader endeavours which warrant our commitment over the long term so that we may construct a more enduringly just and advancing global society.

511. A year ago, I stated that a new opportunity had presented itself, that fulfilment of the Charter's original promise was once again achievable. That opportunity has been grasped. Responsibilities have been heaped upon the United Nations. The new activism has made it clear, however, that new levels of political will and intellectual creativity must be attained if wider engagement is to produce enduring achievement.

512. The events of the past 12 months should impress upon us the need for a new realism. The United Nations, by undertaking a range of problems as wide as the globe itself, must be expected to achieve successes but also to experience failure. The failures cannot be put to one side; they require continuing commitment. And successes cannot be regarded as permanent; every positive outcome is likely to be a starting-point for further effort. In a spirit of realism and new possibility, a synthesis of heretofore opposing concepts is conceivable: the United Nations as the instrument of the body of Member States, and the United Nations as more than the sum of its parts.

513. Only international action that emerges from the crucible of debate and decision in the General Assembly, the Security Council and the other organs of the United Nations carries with it the full authority of the world community. The United Nations is now understood to be humanity's best hope in the pursuit of peace, development and human rights.

514. Dedicated to the integrity and development of each individual, drawing legitimacy from all peoples, expressing the consensus of States, the United Nations Organization calls forth, through its universality and dedication to life's basic tasks, a greater potential than humanity has ever before conceived possible.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The United Nations intensified its activities in 1993 to safeguard international peace and security. A record number of 17 peace-keeping operations were deployed worldwide, involving nearly 80,000 military and civilian peace-keeping personnel under United Nations command. The Security Council established peace-keeping operations in Georgia, Liberia and Rwanda.

Demands increased for a new approach to United Nations peace-keeping operations, encompassing peace-enforcement and peace-building, as well as humanitarian and electoral responsibilities, as a result of mounting outbreaks of regional ethnic tensions, religious conflicts and secessionist pressures worldwide. Inter-State wars requiring the classical peace-keeping approach gave way to intra-State, ethnic and factional confrontations, necessitating the United Nations, in its settlement and relief operations, to deal with factions and religious and ethnic movements.

The Secretary-General stressed that the second generation of peace-keeping comprised not only military, but also political, economic, social, humanitarian and environmental dimensions, demanding a unified and integrated approach. Preventive diplomacy, peace-keeping, peace-making and even peace enforcement were intertwined instruments of one concept that strengthened the opportunity for post-conflict peace-building to prevent the recurrence of violence among nations and peoples.

At its resumed forty-seventh session, the General Assembly continued its consideration of the Secretary-General's 1992 "An Agenda for Peace" and adopted a seven-part resolution (47/120 B) dealing with preventive deployment and demilitarized zones, use of the International Court of Justice in the peaceful settlement of disputes, special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures, post-conflict peace-building, cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations, and safety of United Nations peace-keeping personnel.

On the basis of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, the Assembly, by resolution 48/42, adopted a series of recommendations and conclusions on peace-keeping matters, addressing resources and finances, organization and effectiveness, issues arising from "An Agenda for Peace" and the status and safety of United Nations peace-keeping personnel. The Assembly also stressed the need to strengthen United Nations command and control capabilities in peace-keeping operations (48/43).

In September, the Security Council urged States and parties to a conflict to cooperate closely with the United Nations to ensure the security and safety of United Nations forces and personnel, and confirmed that attacks against such personnel would be considered interference with the exercise of the Council's responsibilities. The Council determined that the establishment of future operations would require the host country to take all appropriate steps to ensure the operation's security and safety (resolution 868(1993)).

In November, the Council intensified sanctions against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in order to ensure its compliance with two 1992 Council resolutions, requesting the surrender for trial of two Libyan nationals suspected in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, as well as cooperation with French authorities investigating the crash in 1989 of a Union de transports aériens flight in the Niger (883(1993)).

Maintenance of international security and strengthening of the international security system

Follow-up on "An Agenda for Peace"

The Security Council held monthly meetings between October 1992 and May 1993 to examine specific proposals contained in "An Agenda for Peace"⁽¹⁾ issued by the Secretary-General in June 1992.

The General Assembly, at the final meeting of its resumed forty-seventh session on 20 September 1993, adopted a seven-part resolution on the Secretary-General's wide-ranging strategy contained in "An Agenda for Peace", which was issued in response to a request emanating from the January 1992 Security Council summit of heads of State and Government.⁽²⁾ By the resolution—the culmination of nine months of consultations in the Council and subsequent Assembly review—the Assembly decided to consider ways to improve cooperation among United Nations organs in order to strengthen the role of the Organization in promoting peace, and invited those organs to consider implementing preventive deployment and/or the establishment of demilitarized zones, with the objective of preventing conflict and promoting the peaceful settlement of disputes likely to endanger international peace and security. The Assembly encouraged States to consider making greater use of the International Court of Justice for the peaceful settlement of disputes. It decided to continue examining ways to implement Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, with a view to solving the special economic problems of other Member States when preventive or enforcement measures were decided on by the Security Council against a State. It emphasized that post-conflict peace-building should be carried out in accordance with the Charter, in particular the principles of sovereign equality, political independence and territorial integrity of States and non-intervention in matters within their domestic jurisdiction. It encouraged regional organizations, arrangements and agencies to consider closer cooperation and coordination with the United Nations to fulfil the purposes and principles of the Charter, and decided to consider further steps to enhance the status and safety of personnel in United Nations operations.

To the concepts of preventive diplomacy, peace-keeping, peacemaking and post-conflict peace-building as defined in the Agenda, the Secretary-General added, in his 1993 report on the work of the Organization,⁽³⁾ peace enforcement, meaning peace-keeping activities foreseen in Chapter VII of the Charter and not necessarily involving the consent of all parties concerned. Peacemaking, peace-keeping and sometimes peace enforcement, which were intertwined and might be performed simultaneously and in parallel, were required to halt conflicts and preserve peace once it was attained; if successful, they strengthened the opportunity for post-conflict peace-building to prevent the recurrence of violence among nations and peoples.

New forms of preventive diplomacy had evolved; a variety of challenges had led to a more creative and intensive use of familiar techniques designed to prevent the occurrence of armed conflict, including fact-finding, good offices and goodwill missions, the dispatch of special envoys and efforts to bring parties to a potential conflict to the negotiating table.

More than 100 missions of representation, fact-finding and goodwill offices were undertaken to various countries on the Secretary-General's behalf; he had also travelled widely to extend good offices and represent the Organization throughout the world.

Just as preventive diplomacy and conflict resolution had taken on new dimensions, so peace-keeping stretched across a formerly unimagined range of activities and responsibilities, as recent developments challenged traditional assumptions relating to the upholding of agreements, the consent and cooperation of the parties and the minimum use of force.

The Secretary-General expressed regret that little attention had been given to the concept of post-conflict peace-building, which encompassed more than the reconstruction of peace after the cessation of hostilities—it had to be linked to comprehensive political, economic, social and cultural development efforts of the United Nations. He warned that humanitarian emergencies causing a mass exodus of people could threaten international peace and security or aggravate existing threats, just as disturbances of the peace could give rise to humanitarian crises. It was therefore essential to develop the ability to link humanitarian action and human rights protection to peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building.

In that context, the Secretary-General repeated his proposal, made in "An Agenda for Peace", that the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter, be invited to provide to the Security Council reports on economic and social situations threatening international peace and security.

Turning to the role of the International Court of Justice, he stressed that the incidence of cases of considerable political as well as legal importance showed that the Court was an integral part of the Organization's peace efforts. Therefore, he reiterated his recommendation that he be authorized to take advantage of the Court's advisory competence.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January-May)

In 1993, the Security Council held monthly meetings between January and May to examine specific proposals contained in "An Agenda for Peace". On 28 January, it considered cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements and organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security. Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members:⁽⁴⁾

Meeting number. SC 3166.

"The Security Council has continued its examination of the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace'.

"The Security Council notes with appreciation the views of the Secretary-General, as presented in paragraphs 63, 64 and 65 of his report, concerning cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations.

"Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter, the pertinent activities of the General Assembly and the challenges to international peace and security in the new phase of international relations, the Security Council attaches great importance to the role of regional arrangements and organizations, and recognizes the need to coordinate their efforts with those of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security.

"While reaffirming its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and being aware of the variety of mandate, scope and composition of regional arrangements and organizations, the Security Council encourages and, where appropriate, supports such regional efforts as undertaken by regional arrangements and organizations within their respective areas of competence in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter.

"The Security Council therefore invites, within the framework of Chapter VIII of the Charter, regional arrangements and organizations to study, on a priority basis, the following:

—ways and means to strengthen their functions to maintain international peace and security within their areas of competence, paying due regard to the characteristics of their respective regions. Taking into account the matters of which the Security Council has been seized and in accordance with the United Nations Charter, they might consider, in particular, preventive diplomacy, including fact-finding, confidence-building, good offices and peace-building and, where appropriate, peace-keeping;

—ways and means to further improve coordination of their efforts with those of the United Nations. Being aware of the variety of mandate, scope and composition of the regional arrangements and organizations, the Council stresses that the forms of interaction of these arrangements and organizations with the United Nations should be flexible and adequate to each specific situation. These may include, in particular, exchange of information and consultations, with a view to enhancing the United Nations capability including monitoring and early-warning, with the Secretary-General or, where appropriate, his Special Representative, participating as observers in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly, secondment of officials to the United Nations Secretariat, making timely and specific requests for United Nations involvement, and a readiness to provide necessary resources.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General:

—to transmit this statement to those regional arrangements and organizations which have received a standing invitation to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly as observers, and to other regional arrangements and organizations, with a view to promoting the aforementioned studies and encouraging the replies to the United Nations;

—to submit as soon as possible and preferably by the end of April 1993 to the Security Council a report concerning the replies from the regional arrangements and organizations.

"The Security Council invites the States which are members of regional arrangements and organizations to play a constructive role in the consideration by their respective arrangements or organizations of ways and means to improve coordination with the United Nations.

"In discharging its responsibilities, the Security Council will take into account the said replies as well as the specific nature of the issue and the characteristics of the region concerned. The Council considers it important to establish such forms of cooperation between the United Nations and the regional arrangements and organizations, in the area of maintaining peace and security, that are appropriate to each specific situation.

"The Security Council, noting the constructive relationship it has maintained with the League of Arab States, the European Community, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Organization of American States and the Organization of African Unity, supports the intention of the Secretary-General, as described in paragraph 27 of his report, to ask regional arrangements and organizations that have not yet sought observer status at the United Nations to do so.

"The Security Council notes the importance of the understanding reached at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to consider CSCE a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter and of the further examination within the framework of CSCE of the practical implications of this understanding. The Council welcomes the role of CSCE, together with the European Community, in the implementation of action required to carry out the pertinent resolutions of the Council.

"The Security Council intends to continue its consideration of the Secretary-General's report, as indicated in the President's statement of 29 October 1992."

On 26 February, the Council addressed the relationship between humanitarian assistance and peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building. The President made the following statement on behalf of the Council members:(5)

Meeting number. SC 3178.

"The Security Council has continued its examination of the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace'.

"The Security Council welcomes the observations contained in 'An Agenda for Peace' concerning the question of humanitarian assistance and its relationship to peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building, in particular those contained in paragraphs 29, 40 and 56 to 59. It notes that in some particular circumstances there may be a close relationship between acute needs for humanitarian assistance and threats to international peace and security.

"In this respect, the Security Council notes the Secretary-General's assessment that the impartial provision of humanitarian assistance could be of critical importance in preventive diplomacy.

"Recalling its statement on fact-finding in connection with 'An Agenda for Peace', the Council recognizes the importance of humanitarian concerns in conflict situations, and thus recommends that the humanitarian dimension should be incorporated in the planning and dispatching of fact-finding missions.

It also recognizes the need to include this aspect in connection with information-gathering and analysis, and encourages Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General and the Governments concerned with relevant humanitarian information.

"The Security Council notes with concern the incidence of humanitarian crises, including mass displacements of population, becoming or aggravating threats to international peace and security. In this connection, it is important to include humanitarian considerations and indicators within the context of early-warning information capacities as referred to in paragraphs 26 and 27 of 'An Agenda for Peace'. The Council emphasizes the role of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs in coordinating the activities of the various agencies and functional offices of the United Nations. It believes that this capacity should be utilized systematically at a pre-emergency phase to facilitate planning for action to assist Governments in averting crises that could affect international peace and security.

"The Security Council notes the ongoing and constructive collaboration between the United Nations and various regional arrangements and organizations, within their respective areas of competence, in identifying and addressing humanitarian emergencies, in order to solve crises in a manner appropriate to each specific situation. The Council also notes the important role which is being played by non-governmental organizations, in close cooperation with the United Nations, in the provision of humanitarian assistance in emergency situations around the world. The Council commends this cooperation and invites the Secretary-General further to explore ways in which this cooperation can be advanced in order to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to prevent and respond to emergency situations.

"The Council expresses concern about the increased incidence of deliberate obstruction of delivery of humanitarian relief and violence against humanitarian personnel, as well as misappropriation of humanitarian assistance, in many parts of the world, in particular in the former Yugoslavia, Iraq and Somalia where the Council has called for secure access to affected populations for the purpose of providing humanitarian assistance. The Council stresses the need for adequate protection of personnel involved in humanitarian operations, in accordance with relevant norms and principles of international law. The Council believes that this matter requires urgent attention.

"The Security Council believes that humanitarian assistance should help establish the basis for enhanced stability through rehabilitation and development. The Council thus notes the importance of adequate planning in the provision of humanitarian assistance in order to improve prospects for rapid improvement of the humanitarian situation. It also notes, however, that humanitarian considerations may become or continue to be relevant during periods in which the results of peacemaking and peace-keeping efforts are beginning to be consolidated. The Council thus recognizes the importance of ensuring a smooth transition from relief to development, and notes that the provision of coordinated humanitarian assistance is among the basic peace-building tools available to the Secretary-General. In particular, it fully endorses the Secretary-

General's observations in paragraph 58 of 'An Agenda for Peace' regarding the problems of land-mines, and invites him to address this as a matter of special concern.

"The Security Council intends to continue its consideration of the Secretary-General's report, as indicated in the President's statement of 29 October 1992."

At a meeting on 31 March, the President again made a statement, after consideration of the safety of United Nations forces and personnel deployed in conditions of strife:(6)

Meeting number. SC 3190.

"The Security Council has continued its examination of the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace', including the problem identified in paragraphs 66-68—the safety of United Nations forces and personnel deployed in conditions of strife. The Council has considered this question with regard to persons deployed in connection with a Security Council mandate.

"The Security Council commends the Secretary-General for drawing attention to this problem, including the unconscionable increase in the number of fatalities and incidents of violence involving United Nations forces and personnel. The Council shares fully the Secretary-General's concerns.

"The Security Council recognizes that increasingly it has found it necessary, in discharging its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, to deploy United Nations forces and personnel in situations of real danger. The Council greatly appreciates the courage and commitment of these dedicated people who accept considerable personal risk in order to implement the mandates of this Organization.

"The Security Council recalls that it has been necessary on a number of occasions to condemn incidents directed against United Nations forces and personnel. It deplores the fact that, despite its repeated calls, incidents of violence continue.

"The Council considers that attacks and other acts of violence, whether actual or threatened, including obstruction or detention of persons, against United Nations forces and personnel are wholly unacceptable and may require the Council to take further measures to ensure the safety and security of such forces and personnel.

"The Security Council reiterates its demand that States and other parties to various conflicts take all possible steps to ensure the safety and security of United Nations forces and personnel. It further demands that States act promptly and effectively to deter, prosecute and punish all those responsible for attacks and other acts of violence against such forces and personnel.

"The Security Council notes the particular difficulties and dangers that can arise when United Nations forces and personnel are deployed in situations where the State or States concerned are unable to exercise jurisdiction in order to ensure the safety and security of such forces and personnel, or where a State is unwilling to discharge its responsibilities in this regard. In such an eventuality, the Council may consider measures appropriate to the particular circumstances to ensure that persons responsible for attacks and other acts of violence against United Nations forces and personnel are held to account for their actions.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to report as soon as possible on the existing arrangements for the protection of United Nations forces and personnel, and the adequacy thereof, taking into account, inter alia, relevant multilateral instruments and status of forces agreements concluded between the United Nations and host countries, as well as comments he may receive from Member States, and to make such recommendations as he considers appropriate for enhancing the safety and security of United Nations forces and personnel.

"The Security Council will consider the matter further in the light of the Secretary-General's report and of work done in the General Assembly and its subsidiary bodies, including, in particular, the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 2006(XIX). In that regard, the Council recognizes the need for all relevant bodies of the Organization to take concerted action to enhance the safety and security of United Nations forces and personnel.

"The Security Council intends to continue its consideration of the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace', as indicated in the President's statement of 29 October 1992."

On 30 April, the Council focused on post-conflict peace-building. The President made the following statement on its behalf:(7)

Meeting number. SC 3207.

"Continuing its examination of the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace', the Security Council during the month of April 1993, emphasizing the importance of building strong foundations for peace in all countries and regions of the world, considered the subject of post-conflict peace-building.

"The Security Council supports the view that the United Nations, in order to meet its responsibilities in the context of international peace and security, should view its objectives in respect of economic and social cooperation and development with the same sense of responsibility and urgency as its commitments in the political and security areas.

"The Security Council stresses that, in examining the question of post-conflict peace-building, it wishes to highlight the importance and the urgency of the work of the United Nations in the field of development cooperation, without prejudice to the recognized priorities for the activities of the United Nations in that field as defined by the competent bodies.

"The Security Council took note of the Secretary-General's observation that, to be truly successful, peacemaking and peace-keeping operations 'must come to include comprehensive efforts to identify and support structures which will tend to consolidate peace and advance a sense of confidence and well-being among people'. It agreed that, in addition to the specific measures mentioned by the Secretary-General in paragraph 55 of his report 'An Agenda for Peace', activities such as disarmament and demobilization of belligerent forces and their reintegration into society, electoral assistance, the restoration of national security through formation of national defence and police forces and mine-clearing, where appropriate and within the framework of comprehensive settlements of conflict situations, strengthen national political structures and enhance institutional and administrative capabilities and are important in restoring a sound basis for sustainable peace.

"The Security Council further agrees that, in the aftermath of an international conflict, peace-building may, inter alia, include measures and cooperative projects linking two or more countries in mutually beneficial undertakings which contribute not only to economic, social and cultural development but also enhance mutual understanding and confidence that are so fundamental to peace.

"In discharging its responsibilities in the prevention of breaches of peace and in the resolution of conflicts, the Security Council encourages coordinated action by other components of the United Nations system to remedy the underlying causes of threats to peace and security. The Council is convinced that the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, in the development and implementation of their programmes, need to be constantly sensitive to the goal of strengthening international peace and security as envisaged in Article 1 of the Charter.

"The Security Council recognizes that post-conflict peace-building, in the context of overall efforts to build the foundations of peace, in order to be effective, also needs adequate financial resources. The Council, therefore, recognizes that it is important for Member States and financial and other United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as other organizations outside the United Nations system, to make all possible efforts to have adequate funding available for specific projects, such as the earliest possible return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes of origin, in post-conflict situations.

"The Security Council, as the organ having primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, fully recognizes, as stated in paragraph 59 of 'An Agenda for Peace', that social peace is as important as strategic or political peace and supports the Secretary-General's view that there is a new requirement for technical assistance for the purposes described in that paragraph.

"The Security Council intends to continue its consideration of the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace', as indicated in the President's statement of 29 October 1992."

On 28 May, the Council reviewed United Nations peace-keeping operations. After consultations, the President made the following statement:(8)

Meeting number. SC 3225.

"In accordance with its statement of 29 October 1992, the Security Council held a special meeting devoted to the Secretary-General's report entitled 'An Agenda for Peace'. This meeting concluded the present stage of the examination of this report by the Council. On this occasion, the Council wishes to express once again its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his report.

"The Security Council recommends that all States make participation in and support for international peace-keeping a part of their foreign and national security policy. It considers that United Nations peace-keeping operations should be conducted in accordance with the following operational principles consistent with the provisions of the United Nations Charter: a clear political goal with a precise mandate subject to periodic review and to change in its character or duration only by the Council itself; the consent of the Government and, where appropriate, the parties concerned, save in exceptional cases; support for a political process or for the peaceful settlement of the dispute; impartiality in implementing Security Council decisions; readiness of the Security Council to take appropriate measures against parties which do not observe its decisions; the right of the Security Council to authorize all means necessary for United Nations forces to carry out their mandate; and the inherent right of United Nations forces to take appropriate measures for self-defence. In this context, the Security Council emphasizes the need for the full cooperation of the parties concerned in implementing the mandates of peace-keeping operations, as well as relevant decisions of the Security Council, and stresses that peace-keeping operations should not be a substitute for a political settlement nor should they be expected to continue in perpetuity.

"The Security Council has studied thoroughly the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in 'An Agenda for Peace'. It pays tribute to the valuable contributions made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and other relevant bodies of the General Assembly. These discussions and consultations make it possible to formulate more clearly the common priorities of the Member States.

"In the context of the rapid growth in and new approaches to peace-keeping operations, the Security Council commends the initial measures taken by the Secretary-General to improve the capacity of the United Nations in this field. It believes that bold new steps are required and invites all Member States to make their views known to the Secretary-General and the Secretary-General to submit by September 1993 a further report addressed to all the Members of the United Nations containing specific new proposals for further enhancing these capabilities, including:

- the strengthening and consolidation of the peace-keeping and military structure of the Secretariat, including creation of a plans and current operations directorate reporting to the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations to facilitate planning and to enhance coordination;

- notification by Member States of specific forces or capabilities which, with the approval of their national authorities, they could make available on a case-by-case basis to the United Nations for the full spectrum of peace-keeping or humanitarian operations; in this context, the Council welcomes the Secretary-General's effort to ascertain the readiness and availability of Member States' forces or capabilities for peace-keeping operations and encourages Member States to cooperate in this effort;

- the feasibility of maintaining a limited revolving reserve of equipment commonly used in peace-keeping or humanitarian operations;

- elements for inclusion in national military or police training programmes for peace-keeping operations to prepare personnel for a United Nations peace-keeping role, including suggestions concerning the feasibility of conducting multinational peace-keeping exercises;

- refinement of standardized procedures to enable forces to work together more effectively;

- developing the non-military elements of peace-keeping operations.

"In view of the mounting cost and complexity of peace-keeping operations, the Security Council also requests the Secretary-General in his report to address measures designed to place them on a more solid and durable financial basis, taking into account where appropriate the Volcker-Ogata report (see PART FIVE, Chapter I) and addressing the necessary financial and managerial reforms, diversification of funding, and the need to ensure adequate resources for peace-keeping operations and maximum transparency and accountability in the use of resources. In this context, the Council recalls that, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the financing of peace-keeping operations is the collective responsibility of all Member States. It calls upon all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and encourages those States which can do so to make voluntary contributions.

"The Security Council expresses gratitude to the soldiers and civilians who have served or are serving in United Nations peace-keeping operations. It pays tribute to the courageous nationals of dozens of States who were killed or wounded while fulfilling their duty to the United Nations. It also strongly condemns attacks on United Nations peace-keepers and declares its determination to undertake more decisive efforts to ensure the security of United Nations personnel in the course of fulfilling their duties.

"In accordance with Chapter VI of the Charter, the Security Council notes the necessity to strengthen the United Nations potential for preventive diplomacy. It welcomes United Nations General Assembly resolution 47/120 A. It notes with satisfaction the increased use of fact-finding missions. It invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General with relevant detailed information on situations of tension and potential crisis. It invites the Secretary-General to consider appropriate measures for strengthening the Secretariat's capacity to collect and analyse information. The Security Council recognizes the importance of new approaches to prevention of conflicts, and supports preventive deployment, on a case-by-case basis, in zones of instability and potential crisis, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

"The Security Council underlines the close link which may exist, in many cases, between humanitarian assistance and peace-keeping operations and highly appreciates recent efforts by the Secretary-General aimed at further improvement of coordination among Member States and relevant agencies and organizations, including non-governmental organizations. It reiterates, in this context, its concern that humanitarian personnel should have unimpeded access to those in need.

"The Security Council reaffirms the importance it attaches to the role of regional arrangements and organizations and to coordination between their efforts and those of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council welcomes the readiness of Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to cooperate with the United Nations and other Member States by providing their particular resources and capabilities for peace-keeping purposes. The Security Council, acting within the framework of Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter, calls upon regional organizations and arrangements to consider ways and means of enhancing their contributions to the maintenance of peace and security. For its part the Security Council expresses its readiness to support and facilitate, taking into account specific circumstances, peace-keeping efforts undertaken in the framework of regional organizations and arrangements in accordance with Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter. The Security Council looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations.

"The Security Council draws attention to the increasing significance of post-conflict peace-building. The Council is convinced that in present circumstances peace-building is inseparably linked with the maintenance of peace.

"The Security Council stresses the value of high-level meetings of the Security Council and expresses its intention to convene such a meeting on the subject of peace-keeping in the near future."

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 resolution of the General Assembly,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in June 1993⁽¹⁰⁾ on the implementation of his recommendations in "An Agenda for Peace", relating to preventive diplomacy, including fact-finding missions, early-warning systems and confidence-building measures; peaceful settlement of disputes; humanitarian assistance; peace-keeping; peace-building; cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations; sanctions and special economic problems; and the safety of United Nations personnel.

Member States had voiced the desire to improve the United Nations ability to receive and analyse early signals on potential conflict situations. In particular, they wished to see: more timely and higher quality information made available to the Secretary-General; an improved capacity in the Secretariat to analyse diverse conflict sources; more effective action in response to potential or incipient conflicts; ready availability of trained Secretariat staff to undertake early-warning and conflict-resolution functions; and better coordination of those activities.

The Secretary-General estimated that during 1992-1993 more fact-finding missions would take place than in any previous biennium. Experience in that regard confirmed that early initiative, careful preparation and coordination with regional organizations were necessary. The Secretary-General had issued a standing invitation to all Member States to make available to the United Nations information which might help forestall conflict. Initial steps for an early-warning mechanism had been taken, as the Department of Humanitarian Affairs had begun monthly consultations with other United Nations departments, agencies, organizations and observers to develop a mechanism providing advance warning of situations which might give rise to new flows of refugees and displaced persons. The Secretariat's training programmes for political affairs officers, including a training component in preventive diplomacy and early warning, were being improved.

Methods for peaceful settlement of conflicts were increasingly used, adapted to each specific situation. In the past year, the United Nations had dispatched special envoys or missions to the former Yugoslavia, several newly independent States of the former USSR, East Timor, Guatemala, Haiti, Israel, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Rwanda, Solomon Islands, Somalia and South Africa. A group of Member States, informally constituted as "Friends of the Secretary-General", played a helpful role in settling the long-standing conflict in El Salvador. Similar groups were formed for the situations in Afghanistan and Haiti, providing the Secretary-General with an informal forum for the exchange of ideas and with a source of diplomatic support from interested countries.

Since humanitarian assistance was closely connected to preventive diplomacy, early warning and the maintenance of international peace and security, the Secretary-General had taken measures to ensure the necessary coordination between the Departments of Political Affairs, Peace-keeping Operations and Humanitarian Affairs, as well as between all United Nations organizations. Training courses for humanitarian assistance were being developed, and steps were taken to develop a specific humanitarian dimension in the integrated early-warning approach.

In response to requests from Member States, the United Nations was taking on a wide array of responsibilities in helping to advance democratization, including electoral assistance. The new Secretariat unit created for that purpose had already handled 36 such requests.

In connection with the multidimensional and interdisciplinary concept of peace-building, the Secretary-General said the Security Council supported specific measures he had proposed and had added new elements to strengthen national political structures and institutional capabilities. The Council, stressing the importance and urgency of the Organization's work in development cooperation, encouraged coordinated action by other components of the United Nations system to remedy the underlying causes of threats to peace and security.

Significant progress had recently been made in strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements and organizations. Effective joint ventures included the association of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the League of Arab States with the United Nations Operation in Somalia (see PART TWO, Chapter I); continuing progress by the United Nations and OAU in drafting a treaty on the denuclearization of Africa (see PART ONE, Chapter II); cooperation and division of labour with the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in areas of actual or potential conflict, such as Georgia, Moldova, Nagorny Karabakh, Tajikistan and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; the setting in motion by the Secretary-General and the European Community (EC) of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ together with close cooperation in the field between the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the EC Monitoring Mission (see PART TWO, Chapter IV); cooperation with the Organization of American States to restore human rights and democracy in Haiti (see PART TWO, Chapter II); and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's assistance to the United Nations in monitoring and enforcing the no-fly zone in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

As demand had grown exponentially for the Organization's services in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping, peace-building and humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General observed in conclusion that Member States had not only discussed the ideas outlined in "An Agenda for Peace", but were putting some of them into practice, a notable example being the preventive deployment of UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. He stressed the overriding importance of the full and timely provision by Member States of the resources needed to strengthen the Organization's capacity in the above realms.

Pursuant to the Security Council's request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted on 15 June a report, with five later addenda,⁽¹²⁾ containing replies of seven intergovernmental organizations with standing invitations to participate as observers in the work of the General Assembly and of five other regional arrangements and organizations, regarding ways to strengthen their functions in the maintenance of international peace and security and to improve coordination of their efforts with those of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 September, adopted resolution 47/120 B without vote.

An Agenda for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/120 A of 18 December 1992 entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters",

Reaffirming its resolution 46/59 of 9 December 1991, the annex to which contains the Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security,

Recalling also its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations,

Recalling further its resolution 47/71 of 14 December 1992 on the comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects,

Emphasizing that, together with the Security Council and the Secretary-General, it has an important role in preventive diplomacy,

Recognizing that it has to work in close cooperation and coordination with the Security Council and the Secretary-General in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and consistent with their respective mandates and responsibilities,

I

Role of the General Assembly

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations relating to the functions and powers of the General Assembly,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", which refers to the utilization of these functions and powers,

1. Resolves to make full and effective use of the functions and powers set out in Articles 10 and 14 of the Charter of the United Nations, in conformity with other relevant provisions of the Charter;

2. Decides to consider the use of existing or new machinery, including subsidiary organs under Article 22 of the Charter, to facilitate consideration of any situation coming within the scope of Article 14 of the Charter, with a view to recommending measures for the peaceful adjustment of such a situation;

3. Also decides to consider appropriate ways and means consistent with the Charter to improve cooperation among the competent United Nations organs in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations in the promotion of peace, including the possibility that the General Assembly receives reports, as appropriate, from the Secretary-General on matters related to the items on its agenda or on other matters within its competence;

II

Preventive deployment and demilitarized zones

Taking note of paragraphs 28 to 33 on preventive deployment and demilitarized zones contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", within the larger context of preventive diplomacy, as well as the views expressed on these issues by Member States,

Stressing that the implementation of any concepts and proposals on preventive deployment and demilitarized zones contained in "An Agenda for Peace" should be undertaken in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular its purposes and principles, and other relevant principles of international law,

Welcoming the instances of effective use of United Nations preventive deployment and the establishment of demilitarized zones,

Stressing the importance of appropriate consultations with Member States and transparency in any decision-making concerning the undertaking of preventive deployment or the establishment of a demilitarized zone,

Recognizing that a United Nations preventive deployment or the establishment of demilitarized zones could promote the prevention or containment of conflicts, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security,

Emphasizing that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State is crucial to any common endeavour to promote international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that, as each situation in which preventive deployment may be undertaken or a demilitarized zone established has its own special characteristics, it is of the utmost importance to make decisions on such measures on a case-by-case basis with due regard to all relevant factors and circumstances, including consultations with Member States,

Recognizing the need to preserve the impartiality of the United Nations when engaged in preventive deployment or in the establishment of demilitarized zones,

Recognizing also that preventive deployment and the establishment of demilitarized zones are evolving concepts,

1. Acknowledges the importance of considering, on a case-by-case basis, the use of preventive deployment and/or establishment of demilitarized zones as a means to prevent existing or potential disputes from escalating into conflicts and to promote efforts to achieve the peaceful settlement of such disputes, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security;

2. Reaffirms that a United Nations preventive deployment and/or the establishment of a demilitarized zone should be undertaken with the consent of and, in principle, on the basis of a request by the Member State or Member States involved, having taken into account the positions of other States concerned and all other relevant factors;

3. Also reaffirms that a United Nations preventive deployment and/or the establishment of a demilitarized zone should be undertaken in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular its purposes and principles and other relevant principles of international law, also taking into account relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions;

4. Invites the competent organs of the United Nations, within their respective mandates, to consider implementing preventive deployment and/or the establishment of a demilitarized zone with the objective of preventing conflict and of promoting efforts to achieve the peaceful settlement of disputes, and to continue to examine practical, operational and financial aspects of such preventive deployment and demilitarized zones with a view to increasing their efficacy and effectiveness;

III

Use of the International Court of Justice in the peaceful settlement of disputes

Emphasizing the role of the International Court of Justice under the Charter of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Encourages States to consider making greater use of the International Court of Justice for the peaceful settlement of disputes;

2. Recommends that States consider the possibility of accepting the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice, including through the dispute settlement clauses of multilateral treaties;

3. Notes that the use of chambers of the International Court of Justice for dealing with particular cases submitted to the Court by the parties is a means of providing increased use of the Court for the peaceful settlement of disputes;

4. Requests States to consider making, if possible on a regular basis, contributions to the Trust Fund of the Secretary-General to assist States in resolving their disputes through the International Court of Justice, and invites the Secretary-General to report periodically on both the financial status and the utilization of the Fund;

5. Recalls that the General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question, and that other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities;

6. Decides to keep under examination all the recommendations of the Secretary-General concerning the International Court of Justice, including those related to the use of the advisory competence of the Court;

IV

Special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures

Recalling Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, which entitles States that find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against any other State to consult the Council with regard to a solution of those problems,

Recalling also the recommendation of the Secretary-General in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace" that the Security Council devise a set of measures involving the financial institutions and other components of the United Nations system that can be put in place to insulate States from such difficulties and his view that such measures would be a matter of equity and a means of encouraging States to cooperate with decisions of the Council,

Recalling further the statement made on 30 December 1992 by the President of the Security Council, in which the Council expressed its determination to consider this matter further and invited the Secretary-General to consult with the heads of international financial institutions, other components of the United Nations system and

Member States of the United Nations, and to report to the Council as early as possible,

Recalling its resolution 47/120 A entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters", in which it decided to continue early in 1993 its examination of other recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", including implementation of the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter, in conformity with the Charter and taking into account the relevant developments and practices in the competent organs of the United Nations,

Stressing the importance of economic and other measures not involving the use of armed forces in maintaining international peace and security, in accordance with Article 41 of the Charter,

Recalling Article 49 of the Charter, which requires the Members of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

Noting that the implementation of Article 50 of the Charter has been addressed recently in several forums, including the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and the Security Council,

Recognizing that, in the conditions of economic interdependence that exist today, the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures under Chapter VII of the Charter against any State continues to create special economic problems for certain other States,

Recalling that Member States have engaged previously in consultations with bodies established by the Security Council regarding special economic problems confronted by them as a result of the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures against Iraq and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Concerned that certain States continue to be confronted with adverse economic problems owing to the implementation of preventive and enforcement measures under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Recognizing the need for appropriate means to find solutions to these problems as soon as possible,

1. Decides to continue its examination of ways to implement Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, with a view to finding solutions to the special economic problems of other Member States when preventive or enforcement measures are decided upon by the Security Council against a State;

2. Invites the Security Council to consider what could be done within the United Nations system and involving international financial institutions with regard to solutions to the special economic problems of States arising from the carrying out of the measures imposed by the Council and to consider, inter alia, the following measures:

(a) Strengthening of the consultative process for studying, reporting on and suggesting solutions to the special economic problems, with a view to minimizing such economic problems through consultations with States adversely affected or, as appropriate, with States likely to be adversely affected as a result of their implementing the preventive or enforcement measures, as well as with the Secretary-General, the principal organs, programmes and agencies of the United Nations, and international financial institutions;

(b) Other measures, in consultation with Member States and, as appropriate, with international financial institutions, such as voluntary funds to provide assistance to States experiencing special economic problems arising from carrying out the measures imposed by the Security Council, additional credit lines, assistance for the promotion of exports of the affected countries, assistance for technical cooperation projects in such countries and/or assistance for the promotion of investment in the affected countries;

3. Also invites the committees of the Security Council and other bodies entrusted with the task of monitoring the implementation of preventive and enforcement measures to take into account, in discharging their mandates, the need to avoid unnecessary adverse consequences for other Member States, without prejudice to the effectiveness of such measures;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the implementation of Article 50 of the Charter;

Post-conflict peace-building

Noting that post-conflict peace-building is a new and evolving concept,

Recognizing the need for sustained cooperative efforts by the United Nations to deal with the underlying economic, social, cultural and humanitarian causes and effects of conflicts in order to promote a durable foundation for peace,

Recalling the provisions of Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that the concept of post-conflict peace-building is aimed at the creation of a new environment to forestall the recurrence of conflicts,

Bearing in mind that each situation in which post-conflict peace-building may be undertaken is unique and therefore should be considered on a case-by-case basis,

Bearing in mind also that post-conflict peace-building should complement efforts at peacemaking and peace-keeping in order to consolidate peace and advance a sense of confidence and well-being among people and States,

1. Acknowledges the usefulness of the proposals of the Secretary-General contained in paragraphs 55 to 59 of his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", particularly in relation to the range of activities for post-conflict peace-building;

2. Emphasizes that post-conflict peace-building should be carried out in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the principles of sovereign equality and political independence of States, territorial integrity, and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State;

3. Recalls that each State has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems;

4. Stresses that activities related to post-conflict peace-building should be carried out within a well-defined time-frame;

5. Also stresses that post-conflict peace-building be undertaken on the basis of agreements ending conflicts or reached after conflicts, or at the request of the Government or Governments concerned;

6. Emphasizes the need for measures to promote peace and cooperation among previously conflicting parties;

7. Stresses the need for coordinated action by relevant components of the United Nations system, including the contributions that the international financial institutions can make in the area of socio-economic development in post-conflict peace-building;

8. Also stresses the importance for post-conflict peace-building of contributions from diverse sources, including components of the United Nations system, regional organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly of requests relating to post-conflict peace-building by the Government or Governments concerned, or emanating from peace agreements ending conflicts or reached after conflicts by parties concerned;

10. Affirms its readiness to support, as appropriate, post-conflict peace-building;

VI

Cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations

Recognizing the importance of the role of regional organizations and arrangements in dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, and the need to enhance, in this respect, cooperation between such organizations and arrangements and the United Nations,

Recalling Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and its acknowledgement of the role of regional arrangements and agencies in dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Taking into account the experience gained and the favourable results achieved by regional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes in different parts of the world,

1. Recognizes that regional organizations, arrangements and agencies can, in their fields of competence and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, make important contributions to the maintenance of international peace and security, preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building;

2. Encourages regional organizations, arrangements and agencies to consider, as appropriate, in their fields of competence, ways and means for promoting closer cooperation and coordination with the United Nations with the objective of contributing to the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter;

3. Also encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts at promoting cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, arrangements and agencies, in accordance with the Charter;

Safety of personnel

Recalling its resolution 47/72 of 14 December 1992 on protection of peace-keeping personnel, and all other relevant resolutions,

Bearing in mind the concern expressed by the Secretary-General over the safety of United Nations personnel in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace",

Also recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Taking note with appreciation of the statement made on 31 March 1993 by the President of the Security Council on the protection of United Nations forces and personnel,

Noting with appreciation the work done by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations on the issue of the status and safety of United Nations peace-keeping personnel,

Gravely concerned about the growing number of fatalities and injuries among United Nations peace-keeping and other personnel resulting from deliberate hostile actions in dangerous areas of deployment,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the security of United Nations operations;

2. Decides to consider further steps to enhance the status and safety of United Nations personnel involved in United Nations operations, taking into account the need for concerted action by all relevant bodies of the United Nations in this regard.

20 September 1993 Meeting 112 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/47/L.65); agenda item 10.

Following adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General said the text would strengthen the United Nations capacity to respond to a world in rapid transition. He was moving to implement all recommendations made on "An Agenda for Peace" by the various intergovernmental organs and bodies involved. He had set up an interdepartmental task force to work out practical measures in response to specific decisions by the Security Council and the Assembly.

The work of the United Nations in the social and economic fields was inseparable from its responsibility to promote international peace and security, the Secretary-General stated, adding that he intended to develop these linkages further in the forthcoming "An Agenda for Development". In the post-cold-war period, the world needed a new system for maintaining international peace and security; the resolution adopted was a step towards the realization of a new international consensus and framework for action in that respect. Therefore, he hoped that the implementation process would proceed vigorously.

Maintenance of international security

Pursuant to a 1992 resolution of the General Assembly,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1993 a report⁽¹⁴⁾ containing replies from Denmark (on behalf of EC) and the Dominican Republic in response to his note verbale of 6 April requesting Member States' views on further consideration of the maintenance of international security.

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

In December 1993, the General Assembly reaffirmed the validity of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security⁽¹⁵⁾ and urged States to take further immediate steps to promote and use the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter.

The Secretary-General, in August 1993,⁽¹⁶⁾ transmitted replies from five Member States to a 1992 Assembly invitation⁽¹⁷⁾ to submit their views on the implementation of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/83 by recorded vote.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2734(XXV) of 16 December 1970 on the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, as well as all its previous resolutions on the review of the implementation of the Declaration,

Bearing in mind the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992,

Expressing its firm belief that disarmament, the relaxation of international tension, respect for international law and for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, especially the principles of the sovereign equality of States and the peaceful settlement of disputes and the injunction to refrain from the use or threat of use of force in international relations, respect for the right to self-determination and national independence, economic and social development, the eradication of all forms of domination, and respect for basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the need for preserving the environment, are closely related and provide the basis for an enduring and stable universal peace and security,

Welcoming the recent positive changes in the international landscape, characterized by the end of the cold war, the relaxation of tensions on the global level and the emergence of a new spirit governing relations among nations,

Welcoming also the continuing dialogue between the major Powers, with its positive effects on world developments, and expressing its hope that these developments will lead to the renunciation of strategic doctrines based on the use of nuclear weapons and to the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, thereby making a real contribution to global security,

Expressing the hope that the positive trends that started in Europe, where a new system of security and cooperation is being built through the process of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, will succeed and be extended to the non-participating Mediterranean countries and encourage similar trends in other parts of the world,

Expressing its serious concern at the threat that could be posed to international peace and security by the resurgence of doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity and the contemporary forms and manifestations of racism and xenophobia,

Stressing the need for the strengthening of international security through disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament leading up to the elimination of all nuclear weapons, and restraints on the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race,

Recognizing that peace and security are dependent on socio-economic factors as well as on political and military elements,

Recognizing also that the right and responsibility for making the world safe for all should be shared by all,

Stressing also that the United Nations is the fundamental instrument for regulating international relations and resolving global problems for the maintenance and effective promotion of peace and security, disarmament and social and economic development,

1. Reaffirms the continuing validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Also reaffirms that all States must respect, in their international relations, the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Emphasizes that, until an enduring and stable universal peace based on a comprehensive, viable and readily implementable structure of international security is established, peace, the achievement of disarmament and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means continue to be the first and foremost task of the international community;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from the use or threat of use of force, aggression, intervention, interference, all forms of terrorism, suppression, foreign occupation or measures of political and economic coercion that violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

5. Urges all Governments to take immediate measures and to develop effective policies to prevent and combat all forms and manifestations of racism, xenophobia or related intolerance;

6. Calls for regional dialogues, where appropriate, to promote security and economic, environmental, social and cultural cooperation, taking into account the particular characteristics of each region;

7. Stresses the importance of global and regional approaches to disarmament, which should be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

8. Reaffirms the fundamental role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security, and expresses the hope that it will continue to address all threats to international peace and security in accordance with the Charter;

9. Urges all States to take further immediate steps aimed at promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter, as well as halting effectively the arms race with the aim of achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

10. Also stresses the urgent need for more equitable development of the world economy and for redressing the current asymmetry and inequality in economic and technological development between the developed and developing countries, which are basic prerequisites for the strengthening of international peace and security;

11. Considers that respect for and promotion of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the recognition of the inalienable right of peoples to self-determination and independence, will strengthen international peace and security, and reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under foreign occupation and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

12. Also reaffirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity, and stresses its belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of this goal;

13. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, particularly in the light of recent positive developments in the global political and security climate, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the basis of the replies received;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Fiftieth anniversary of four nations' Declaration on general security

On 1 November 1993, the General Assembly commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Four Nations on General Security of 30 October 1943. The Declaration, issued by China, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, recognized the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving States and open to membership by such States, for the maintenance of international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/6 without vote.

Commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Four Nations on General Security

The General Assembly,

Recalling the adoption in Moscow on 30 October 1943 of the Declaration of the Four Nations on General Security, which, inter alia, called for the establishment at the earliest practicable date of a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving States and open to membership by all such States, large or small, for the maintenance of international peace and security, Decides to commemorate in its plenary meeting on 1 November 1993 the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Four Nations on General Security of 30 October 1943.

19 October 1993 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

The proposal to commemorate the Declaration was adopted unanimously by the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations. The draft resolution was introduced by Australia as Chairman of the Committee.

Science and peace

The General Assembly's Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee considered the question of science and peace on 15 and 20 October 1993,(18) in accordance with a 1990 Assembly resolution.(19) On the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly, by decision 48/419 of 10 December 1993, deferred consideration of the item until its 1994 session.

Introducing the draft decision in the Committee, Costa Rica, speaking also on behalf of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, said that since the report of the Secretary-General on activities by States and organizations in connection with the International Week of Peace, requested by the Assembly in 1990,(19) had not been submitted, the decision would defer consideration of the item until 1994 with a view to receiving that report. The importance of science as a factor for peace and the contributions that scientists could make to disarmament, peace, security, well-being and sustainable development could not be underestimated.

The Assembly had adopted a resolution on the topic in 1988,(20) in the framework of follow-up activities to the 1986 International Year of Peace.(21)

Regional aspects of international peace and security

Strengthening of security in the Mediterranean region

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1992,(22) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993(23) a report on the strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region, containing a summary of the debate on the question during the 1992 Assembly session. Also included were replies from six Governments submitted in response to his request of 24 March 1993 for their views.

The heads of Government of the countries of the Commonwealth (Limassol, Cyprus, 21-25 October)(24) adopted a communique reaffirming their support for continuing efforts to bring about regional consultations among Mediterranean States with a view to strengthening cooperation and resolving problems in the region. They noted that recent events in the region had underlined the linkage between Mediterranean security and security in Europe, as well as international peace and security. In that regard, they noted with interest the proposals for a Conference on Security and Cooperation in the Mediterranean and for the setting up of a Council for the Mediterranean as a forum for political, economic and social dialogue for the region.

11. Recalls further the Declaration of the European Council of Ministers on relations between Europe and the Maghreb, issued at Lisbon on 25 June 1992, which underlines the views of the European Community and its member States on the principles and measures capable of strengthening stability and security and encouraging economic, social and cultural progress in the region;

South Atlantic zone of peace

The General Assembly in 1986(25) had declared the South Atlantic a zone of peace and cooperation and, in subsequent resolutions, reaffirmed the determination of States of the zone to enhance and accelerate their cooperation in political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other spheres.

In response to the latest such resolution, adopted in 1992,(26) the Secretary-General submitted in November 1993(27) a report containing the views of six Governments and 11 United Nations bodies on the implementation of the 1986 declaration.

The Ministerial Meeting of the Zone of Peace and Cooperation of the South Atlantic (New York, 5 October 1993) issued a Declaration,(28) which expressed hope that the zone would continue to be an active instrument for fostering human rights, fundamental freedoms, racial equality, justice and liberty as integral elements of peace, development and cooperation at national and regional levels. The Ministers stressed the importance for the region of attaining the objectives of the 1964 OAU Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa(29) and the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and its Additional Protocols I and II. They welcomed the agreement reached between Namibia and South Africa setting February 1994 as the date for the transfer and reintegration of Walvis Bay and the offshore islands into Namibia, in accordance with a 1978 Security Council resolution.(30)

Aware of the importance that the States of the zone attach to the preservation of the region's environment, and recognizing the threat that pollution from any source poses to the marine and coastal environment, its ecological balance and its resources,

Noting the concern expressed on the use of fishing methods and practices that cause the over-exploitation of living marine resources, especially of highly migratory and straddling fish stocks, and that it has an adverse impact on the conservation and management of living resources of the marine environment, both within and beyond the exclusive economic zones,

1. Reaffirms the purpose and objective of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic; tected by relevant international law, including the freedom of navigation on the high seas;

10. Notes with interest the hope expressed by the countries of the zone to welcome in the near future a united non-racial democratic South Africa into the community of South Atlantic States, and in that connection urges all parties concerned in South Africa to continue negotiations leading to the establishment of a united non-racial democratic South Africa;

Review of peace-keeping operations

As at September 1993, a record number of some 80,000 civilian and military personnel served in 17 United Nations peace-keeping operations around the world.

Peace-keeping forces continued in 1993 to operate in Cyprus (see PART TWO, Chapter III), Lebanon and the Golan Heights between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, as did two long-standing military observer missions, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in the Middle East (see PART TWO, Chapter V) and the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan. In Africa, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, expanded in 1991, continued activities to verify the peace accords and demobilization arrangements between the Angolan Government and the guerrilla forces in the country, and the United Nations Operation in Mozambique, set up in December 1992, monitored cease-fire and demobilization arrangements with the objective of fulfilling political, electoral and humanitarian functions, in addition to mine clearance (see PART TWO, Chapter I). The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, created in 1991, was seized of verifying the cease-fire and cessation of hostilities in the disputed territory (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia continued to operate in 1993 under their respective mandates (see PART TWO, Chapter III), as did the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (see PART TWO, Chapter II) and the United Nations Protection Force, deployed in 1992 in the territory of the former Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

In August 1993, the Security Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia to verify compliance with the cease-fire agreement, maintain contacts with both sides of the conflict and monitor the situation (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). In March, the Council set out arrangements for the transition from the Unified Task Force to a new United Nations Operation in Somalia to enforce the humanitarian and political objectives of the Organization in that country. In September, the Council set in motion the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia to investigate cease-fire and human rights violations and observe the election process in that country devastated by protracted civil strife. The United Nations Assistance Mission to Rwanda became operative in October to monitor implementation of a peace agreement between the Government and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, succeeding the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda, established by the Council in June to ensure that no military assistance reached Rwanda through Uganda (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

The Council, in a presidential statement of 28 May,(1) recommended that all States participate in and support international peace-keeping as part of their foreign and national security policy. It considered that United Nations peace-keeping operations should be conducted with a clear political goal and a precise mandate subject to periodic review; the consent of the Government and, where appropriate, the parties concerned; support for a political process or for the peaceful settlement of the dispute; impartiality in implementing Council decisions; readiness of the Council to take measures against non-compliant parties; and enforcement rights for United Nations forces to carry out their mandate as well as their right to self-defence.

In a statement issued on 30 September following a meeting with the Secretary-General,(2) the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the five permanent Security Council members addressed a number of regional conflicts and pledged strong support to improve the efficiency of the United Nations and to revitalize its peace-keeping capabilities. They agreed to cooperate in strengthening those capabilities under the Council's authority, stressing the importance of improving budget procedures; modernizing command, control and communications; professionalizing and institutionalizing planning and civilian training functions; enhancing public affairs capabilities; and establishing a high degree of coordination among States willing to contribute troops and other assistance to United Nations peace operations. In view of the demands on the United Nations, they affirmed that new commitments should be weighed very carefully and made only after fundamental questions of mandate, its length, objectives, adequacy of force, availability of resources and risk to personnel were examined and satisfactorily resolved.

Reporting to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General emphasized that peace-keeping now stretched across a formerly unimagined range of United Nations activities and responsibilities. Peace-keepers were sent to areas where there was no agreement, where Governments did not exist or exercised limited authority and where consent and cooperation of implicated parties could not be relied on. Frequently, their work was obstructed by well-armed irregular groups and warlords. They performed a variety of complex tasks, such as protecting humanitarian aid convoys, supervising elections and monitoring human rights, in addition to keeping apart warring parties. Keeping the peace, only a step in the process of peaceful resolution of conflicts, offered temporary respite from hostilities, while the crisis was being resolved in the political, humanitarian, economic and social spheres.

United Nations peace operations—most prominently in Cambodia, El Salvador, Somalia and the former Yugoslavia—involved interrelated functions and ranged far beyond the accepted notion and definition of peace-keeping, with virtually every department and established function of the United Nations engaged. This second generation of peace-keeping comprised not only military, but also political, economic, social, humanitarian and environmental dimensions, demanding a unified and integrated approach.

Referring to the United Nations engagement in South Africa, the Secretary-General said that, for the first time, civilian United Nations observers had been sent to a country with the consent of the Government to assist in a purely domestic matter, namely, containing the level of violence. In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, also for the first time ever in United Nations history, military units were deployed on the borders with Albania and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) as a measure of preventive diplomacy.

In order to deal with the increased demand for peace-keeping operations and the consequent shortage of peace-keepers, the Secretary-General invited Member States to designate qualified personnel for consideration for secondment to a peace-keeping operation and accepted offers by States to make available such personnel on loan; he also set up a special planning team to define standard components from which different types of peace-keeping operations might be put together. A military planning cell with staff on loan from Member States had been formed within the Department of Peace-keeping Operations (DPKO). At Headquarters, a situation room, staffed by military officers, had been created to enable the competent departments to maintain a continuous link with operations in Somalia and the former Yugoslavia. The Secretary-General further considered setting up an integrated situation room for coverage of United Nations peace-keeping operations worldwide in all their aspects.

The Secretary-General noted with concern⁽⁴⁾ that, as at 30 September 1993, the unpaid balance with regard to peace-keeping operations amounted to some $1.5 billion. Some operations were not fully solvent throughout the year, even after delaying payments to troop-contributing countries (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). Based on recommendations submitted by the Joint Inspection Unit, he suggested⁽⁵⁾ that DPKO become the central or lead department in the Secretariat dealing with peace-keeping operations.

Report of the Special Committee. In 1993, the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations held six meetings in New York between 5 April and 19 May.⁽⁶⁾ As a basis for discussion, it had before it an April report by the Secretary-General⁽⁷⁾ containing further observations and suggestions on peace-keeping operations submitted by six Member States—Canada, Denmark (on behalf of the EC member States), Finland (on behalf of the Nordic countries), New Zealand, the Russian Federation and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—as requested by the Assembly in 1992,⁽⁸⁾ and a draft working document prepared by its Bureau containing a list of items and elements for possible consideration by the Committee. An appendix, to the Committee's report contained draft elements for an international convention on the status and safety of the personnel of the United Nations force and associated civilian personnel.

Opening the meeting on 5 April, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs suggested that the question of political conditions necessary for the success of peace-keeping operations, such as the conflicting parties' consent to the deployment of an operation and their continuing cooperation, merited the Committee's attention. He believed the Committee could play a very valuable role in reminding Member States and their legislative bodies of the importance, at a time of limited resources, to ensure that peace-keeping operations were set up only in conditions that were conducive to their success.

On 19 April, the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations referred to "An Agenda for Peace",⁽⁹⁾ which suggested that stand-by arrangements for peace-keeping personnel be concluded between the United Nations and Member States. To that end, a special planning team had been set up with the task of defining standard components from which different types of peace-keeping operations might be put together. Training manuals were being prepared for troops, military observers and civilian police, and DPKO and the Field Operations Division were being gradually expanded to meet the increased peace-keeping demands. While appreciating the generosity of Member States which made available military personnel to DPKO free of charge, the Under-Secretary-General said it would be unrealistic for the Secretariat to continue depending on it and, in time, the United Nations would have to turn to Member States to fund additional posts.

To examine the substance of its mandate, the Special Committee established an open-ended working group, which submitted conclusions and recommendations for the Committee's approval and transmittal to the General Assembly. In those recommendations, the Committee encouraged Member States to develop, in cooperation with the Secretariat, arrangements for military, police and civilian personnel for participation in peace-keeping operations and to notify the Secretary-General of the existence and content of such arrangements on an ongoing basis. In view of the critical financial situation of the United Nations, it called on States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and encouraged those able to do so to make voluntary contributions.

The Committee suggested that the Security Council and the Secretary-General continue to analyse a given situation carefully before establishing a peace-keeping operation. A realistic mandate, with clear objectives and a time-frame for resolving the problem in a way conducive to furthering the political process, should be formulated in each case. To organize peace-keeping operations effectively and efficiently, the Committee urged the Secretary-General to initiate a comprehensive review of the role, tasks and functions of the various units of the Secretariat with a view to identifying the optimum Secretariat structure in that respect.

The Committee stressed that the conclusion of a status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and a host State was of utmost importance when deploying peace-keeping operations and called on host States to give their fullest cooperation in that regard. It again requested the Secretary-General to consider establishing a training programme for key staff personnel of peace-keeping operations with a view to creating a pool of trained personnel with knowledge of the United Nations system and its working procedures. He was further requested to take concrete steps to improve the physical security of United Nations peace-keeping personnel in the field.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a request of the Security Council, contained in the President's statement of 28 May 1993,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted replies from 10 States and two intergovernmental organizations on improving the capacity of the United Nations for peace-keeping.⁽¹⁰⁾

On 10 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/42 without vote.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 47/71 and 47/72 of 14 December 1992,

Welcoming the progress made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations during its recent sessions,

Convinced that peace-keeping operations constitute a considerable part of the efforts by the United Nations to maintain international peace and security and to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in this regard,

Recognizing that the peacemaking activities of the Secretary-General and of organs of the United Nations, which are actions to bring hostile parties to agreement essentially through peaceful means such as those foreseen in Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations, constitute an essential function of the United Nations and are among the important means for the prevention, containment and resolution of disputes, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security,

Emphasizing that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any States is crucial to any common endeavour to promote international peace and security,

Taking note of the statement by the President of the Security Council of 28 May 1993 and the recommendations contained therein,

Convinced that in order to ensure the effectiveness of peace-keeping operations it is necessary that they have precise and clearly defined mandates,

Taking into account that the increase in activities in the field of United Nations peace-keeping requires both increasing and better managed human, financial and material resources for the Organization,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations as described in the report of the Secretary-General and of the heavy burden on all the troop contributors, many of which are developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, having examined the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, and being aware of the relevant parts of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on staffing of the United Nations peace-keeping and related missions (civilian component),

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General to develop a proposal for regularly updated data banks recording the type and availability of resources Member States could provide, as described in paragraph 4 above, as well as individuals with skills appropriate for civilian peace-keeping duties, and invites the Secretary-General to propose such other measures as he believes necessary to meet the urgent need for timely availability of personnel qualified to serve in the full spectrum of civilian peace-keeping capacities;

6. Stresses the need for the United Nations to be given the resources commensurate with its growing responsibilities in the area of peace-keeping, particularly with regard to the resources needed for the start-up phase of such operations;

7. Takes note of the recommendations of the Secretary-General concerning the timely provision of basic peace-keeping equipment, and suggests the development of a limited revolving reserve of such equipment within existing resources;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to consult in advance with Member States on their willingness to earmark certain equipment specified by the Secretary-General for immediate sale, loan or donation to the United Nations when required;

9. Encourages Member States to make available air- and sea-lift resources to the United Nations at the best available rates in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

10. Requests the Secretariat to develop guidelines concerning the disposition of United Nations equipment upon the termination of a peace-keeping operation;

Finances

11. Recalls that the financing of peace-keeping operations is the collective responsibility of all Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, notes the report of the Secretary-General on improving the financial situation of the United Nations, reiterates its call upon all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time, and encourages States to make voluntary contributions in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to review, as appropriate, the applicable United Nations financial and administrative regulations concerning peace-keeping operations, and to that end urges that steps be taken to strengthen lateral communication and the distribution of information within the Secretariat;

13. 14. Stresses the need to delegate the appropriate degree of financial and administrative authority to Force Commanders or Special Representatives while ensuring that measures relating to responsibility and accountability are strengthened in order to increase the missions' capacity to adjust to new situations and specific requirements;

15. Notes that a number of military officers have been made available on loan on a non-reimbursable basis to the Secretariat at its request, and welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General to implement financial arrangements, within existing resources, which would enable all Member States to contribute to such a system in the future and would ease the costs borne by Member States contributing those officers;

16. Calls upon the Secretariat to prepare comprehensive budget estimates for all new and ongoing peace-keeping operations in a timely fashion in order to allow for a thorough examination by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the General Assembly;

18. Reaffirms the competence of the General Assembly for the appropriation and apportionment of the costs of United Nations peace-keeping operations, and notes the importance for the Security Council to be aware of, inter alia, the availability of adequate physical and material resources and the cost implications before it establishes new peace-keeping operations;

19. Considers that the issue of supplementing diversified financial resources to the assessed contributions should be studied further in all the appropriate United Nations forums;

20. Encourages the consideration in the appropriate forums of further measures that could improve the financing of peace-keeping operations, including the feasibility of an improved billing system;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with Member States during his current review of the rates of reimbursement for depreciation of contingent-owned equipment deployed at the request of the United Nations;

22. Requests the Secretariat to compile all the existing financial and administrative rules, regulations, practices and procedures relating to peace-keeping into a comprehensive document available to Member States;

23. Welcomes the creation of the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund, notes the importance of adequate resources for peace-keeping start-up costs and that sufficient resources have not been made available for this purpose, stresses that the Fund should be supplied with the amount specified in its resolution 47/217 of 23 December 1992, thereby making the Fund operational as soon as possible, and emphasizes that the Fund should, in the future, serve as an essential source of funds for peace-keeping start-up costs;

Organization and effectiveness

24. Suggests that the Security Council and the Secretary-General should continue to analyse a given situation very carefully before the establishment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation, that a realistic mandate, including clear objectives and a time-frame for the resolution of the problem, as appropriate, should be formulated in each case, conducive to the furtherance of the political process and that the Security Council should review periodically the effectiveness of current operations with a view to ensuring that they are consistent with the objectives and the mandates as approved by the Council, and affirms that no change in the mandate, character or duration of peace-keeping operations authorized by the Security Council is possible except through a specific decision of the Council;

25. Notes with appreciation the steps taken by the Secretary-General to strengthen and reform those units of the Secretariat dealing with peace-keeping, as outlined in his report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in "An Agenda for Peace";

26. Stresses the need for the Secretariat to deal effectively and efficiently with planning, launching, managing and providing administrative and logistics support to peace-keeping operations, and urges the Secretary-General, as the chief administrative officer of the Organization, in consultation with Member States, to initiate a comprehensive review of the role, tasks and functions, including civilian functions, of the various units of the Secretariat with a view to identifying the optimum Secretariat structure in that respect and to assuring the unity of command and control indispensable for successful peace-keeping by assigning executive responsibility for all aspects of a peace-keeping operation to the Department of Peace-keeping Operations of the Secretariat;

27. Also stresses the importance of coordination of all aspects of the planning process in peace-keeping operations, and suggests that the emergency relief coordinator should be fully consulted in the overall planning of a peace-keeping operation when the mandate for such an operation contains a humanitarian component and in other cases should be consulted at an early stage when close coordination between humanitarian and peace-keeping activities is required;

28. Notes the transfer of the Field Operations Division from the Department of Administration and Management to the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, and encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen and make more effective the planning, management and administrative support for peace-keeping operations and the capability of the Secretariat for overall evaluation and analysis of peace-keeping operations from their initial stages to their conclusion;

37. Stresses that the conclusion of a status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and a host State is of the utmost importance when deploying peace-keeping operations and calls upon host States to give their fullest cooperation in that regard, and recommends that after the establishment of a peace-keeping operation by the Security Council the concerned Member States should cooperate fully with the operation in the implementation of its mandate;

38. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and host States requirements for host States to treat United Nations peace-keeping forces at all times with full respect for the principles and relevant Articles of the Charter, for United Nations peace-keeping forces to respect local laws and regulations and for both parties to such an agreement to act at all times in accordance with the provisions of the status-of-forces agreement and the principles and relevant Articles of the Charter;

43. Requests the Secretary-General, once again, to report periodically to Member States on the performance of all peace-keeping operations;

44. Welcomes the increasingly frequent informal consultations between the Secretariat and contributing States, strongly recommends the continuation of such consultations on peace-keeping operations from their initial stages to their conclusion and strongly encourages the presence of the President of the Security Council and other members of the Council, as appropriate, at such consultations;

45. Recognizes that the training of peace-keeping personnel is primarily the responsibility of Member States;

47. Requests the Secretary-General to review and improve arrangements for training civilian, police and military peace-keeping personnel, using the appropriate capabilities of Member States, regional organizations and arrangements, in accordance with their constitutional mandates and Chapter VIII of the Charter, and of non-governmental organizations and the Secretariat;

48. Acknowledges the increasing challenge of forging large and cohesive peace-keeping missions from many and diverse contingents, stresses the need for the effective training of civilian, police and military personnel before deployment, and in that regard urges the Secretary-General to develop, in consultation with Member States, official United Nations guidelines combined with performance goals for individuals and units, so that peace-keepers can be trained within a national framework in accordance with agreed-upon common standards, skills, practices and procedures;

49. Also requests the Secretary-General to develop and publish peace-keeping training guidelines, manuals and other relevant training material, including material for correspondence instruction, in order to assist Member States in preparing their civilian, police and military personnel for peace-keeping operations in a standardized and cost-effective manner;

61. Reaffirms its resolution 47/120 B, in particular section II, entitled "Preventive deployment and demilitarized zones", and in this context recalls the importance of considering, on a case-by-case basis, the use of preventive deployment and/or the establishment of demilitarized zones as a means to prevent existing or potential disputes from escalating into conflicts and to promote efforts to achieve the peaceful settlement of such disputes, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security;

62. Encourages, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, the involvement of Member States through regional organizations and arrangements, as appropriate, in accordance with their respective areas of competence and the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

Strengthening United Nations command and control capabilities

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations,

Taking into account the rapid growth in the number, size, complexity and cost of United Nations peace-keeping operations,

Noting the proposals put forward by the Secretary-General in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 for a strengthening of the peace-keeping capabilities in the Secretariat, as well as his initiative to establish a stand-by forces planning team,

Aware of the need to strengthen the capability of the United Nations to plan, conduct and coordinate its peace-keeping operations and of the need for extending and deepening ongoing consultations between the Secretary-General and troop-contributing States concerning specific peace-keeping operations and to involve more closely the members of the Security Council in such consultations,

1. Stresses the need to strengthen the capabilities of the Secretariat for the operational management, command and control of peace-keeping operations based on unity of instruction and clearly established lines of command in such operations, including a fully staffed and equipped situation centre covering all peace-keeping operations;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the members of the Security Council, troop-contributing States and other interested Member States:

(a) To review thoroughly and take urgent steps to strengthen present arrangements for political direction, military command and control and to improve coordination with humanitarian and civilian aspects of peace-keeping operations, both at United Nations Headquarters and in the field;

(b) To strengthen existing arrangements for consultation and exchange of information at an early stage between the Secretary-General and troop-contributing countries and to hold such consultations in the presence of members of the Security Council, as appropriate, for the planning, management and coordination of peace-keeping operations;

(c) To report to Member States on the steps taken under subparagraphs (a) and (b) above, before the next session of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations.

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations were dealt with in resolution 48/227. By resolution 48/226, the Assembly endorsed observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for funding by a support account for peace-keeping operations of posts in DPKO, the Field Operations Division, the Internal Audit Division and the Department of Administration and Management.

Security of United Nations operations

As the Organization took on more complex and riskier mandates, the Secretary-General said,(3)

he attached greatest importance to the safety and security of peace-keeping personnel. Since the beginning of United Nations peace-keeping operations, 949 peace-keepers had lost their lives, more than 550 of them in ongoing operations. He stressed that their sacrifice would not be forgotten by the international community.

Because relief personnel frequently operated in areas of conflict or danger even prior to the deployment of United Nations forces, their security was of particular concern. The murder of staff members working in humanitarian programmes in Afghanistan and the Sudan in 1993 served as a tragic reminder of the fragile status of the United Nations humanitarian presence in turbulent areas. While every effort was being made to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel, the Secretary-General was also concerned about the security of personnel of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) assisting in United Nations relief programmes. It was imperative that Governments and other parties to conflict respected their obligations under international law to ensure secure access of relief personnel and supplies to the victims of humanitarian emergencies.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council in March,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August a report⁽¹²⁾ on the security of United Nations operations, containing information on existing arrangements and recommendations for enhancing the safety of United Nations forces and personnel. While United Nations forces had means of protection and were authorized to use their weapons in self-defence, they often included sizeable civilian components or operated side by side with unarmed civilian personnel and military observers. Thus, many categories of United Nations personnel were at risk.

The Secretary-General stressed that the primary responsibility for the safety of United Nations personnel and their dependants rested with the host Government of the respective United Nations operation, flowing from every Government's inherent function of maintaining order and protecting persons and property within its jurisdiction. The risk to United Nations personnel was particularly acute in times of civil disorder and domestic strife when the capacity of host Governments to provide protection might be greatly diminished. To meet such crises better, a set of rules and procedures was instituted in 1980⁽¹³⁾ on an inter-agency basis and revised in 1991. Under those arrangements, the responsibility for coordinating all security matters rested with the Secretary-General, who had appointed a United Nations Security Coordinator—currently the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management—to act on his behalf. Each United Nations organization had appointed an official responsible for liaison with the Security Coordinator. In the field, a senior United Nations official was appointed in each country to serve as designated official for security, with overall and special responsibility for the security and protection of the organization's personnel there and directly accountable to the Secretary-General.

The primary tool for security preparedness at any duty station was a country-specific security plan. Written in conformity with established procedures and subject to approval of the Security Coordinator, it defined the responsibilities of each person at the respective duty station, actions to be taken and the sequence to be followed. Under the current arrangements, the Organization's response to security threats was divided into five phases: phase one was precautionary, with travel to the area requiring prior clearance by the designated official; in phase two, all personnel and their dependants were restricted to their homes unless otherwise instructed and all movement was severely restricted, requiring specific authorization by the designated official; in phase three, personnel and their dependants could be concentrated at safe sites or relocated to other parts of the country, with the relocation of dependants and non-essential personnel outside the country; phase four meant the suspension of programmes and evacuation of personnel not directly concerned with emergency or humanitarian relief operations or security matters; during phase five, all personnel were evacuated except those required for Security Council-mandated activities related to the maintenance of international peace and security. Those security arrangements covered all except locally recruited personnel, who were normally not evacuated unless their security was endangered as a direct consequence of their United Nations employment.

It was apparent, the Secretary-General stated, that the above security system, oriented towards civilian staff engaged in normal peacetime activity, could not accommodate peace-keeping operations in situations where other activities had to be suspended. Peace-keeping personnel remained therefore under the exclusive jurisdiction of their chief of mission. There was, however, a considerable overlap, and the chief of a peace-keeping mission might be appointed designated security official. When that was not the case, the peace-keeping operation maintained close coordination and cooperation with the designated official and would normally take all necessary action to the extent compatible with the operation's continued functioning. All peace-keeping operations had contingency plans for their suspension and evacuation, if unavoidable. Existing arrangements for the protection of peace-keeping personnel were reflected in the model status-of-force agreement, annexed to a 1990 report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁴⁾ which embodied relevant principles of international law.

Peace-keeping forces were armed and authorized to use their weapons in self-defence. Though occasionally compelled to exercise that right and inflicting casualties doing so, their effective functioning was based on cooperation and consent. United Nations peace-keeping forces had always shown the greatest possible restraint in order to avoid involvement in a cycle of violence with any one party. Instead, they sought to contain whatever disputes arose and to resolve them politically so as to preserve their role as a third party above the conflict.

According to the Secretary-General, developments in the preceding year highlighted gaps in the existing system and the need for its strengthening, mainly concerning conditions of operation and the acceptable risk level. In fulfilling responsibilities entrusted to them by Member States, United Nations personnel were increasingly required to perform in extremely hazardous conditions where decisions regarding their safety assumed an immediacy not encountered in the past, particularly in areas where government authority was inadequately exercised or lacking altogether. Whereas in the past personnel were assured protection by virtue of their association with the United Nations, now they were often exposed to risk precisely because of it. Moreover, actions by the United Nations in one part of the globe could generate threats to its personnel in another. As a result, casualties had mounted: in 1992, on average one staff member was killed every month; that rate had doubled in 1993. Military personnel suffered 51 fatal casualties in all of 1992 and 97 in the first half of 1993.

The establishment of multidimensional operations involving military operations, humanitarian assistance, electoral assistance, human rights monitoring and development projects brought to light further gaps in the existing security system. The urgency of humanitarian needs often necessitated the deployment of personnel for the implementation of relief programmes, even before United Nations forces were deployed and before agreement on a precise legal framework governing the operation could be obtained. Such situations often invited great insecurity for those providing assistance; the hijacking of goods and equipment with concomitant serious implications for personnel safety was frequent, and so far no sufficient protection measures had been defined.

The tens of thousands of soldiers serving under United Nations command and an increasing number of civilian personnel of NGOs, on which the Organization had come to rely on to an unprecedented extent, ran the same or similar risks and also required protection.

Finally, the new feature of the Security Council using its enforcement powers under Chapter VII of the Charter led to the establishment of operations that were not based on consent and cooperation and might face outright opposition. In such cases, it would be prudent to provide reserves to reinforce an operation quickly if required.

With regard to the overall security of United Nations personnel, the Secretary-General said security matters would become an integral part of the planning of new operations. Priority would be given to the improvement and standardization of communications and to the training of staff in security matters. Expert staff would be recruited to assist the Security Coordinator at Headquarters and the designated officials in the field. Arrangements would be made, through the situation room being established by DPKO, to ensure that security staff could be reached at all times. An area of concern was the need for information on and analysis of possible risks, and for technical expertise with regard to air safety, criminal investigation, forensics, ballistics and pathology. The Secretary-General noted that the measures outlined entailed additional expenditures, but were essential for the discharge of the Organization's responsibility for the safety of its personnel; he trusted that Member States would provide the necessary means.

In the long term, he proposed to consider elaborating a new international instrument to codify and develop further international law relating to the security and safety of United Nations forces and personnel. The adoption of such an instrument, as suggested by New Zealand in April,⁽¹⁵⁾ would make possible the consolidation in a single document of the set of principles and obligations contained in current multilateral and bilateral treaties and provide an opportunity to codify and develop customary international law as reflected in recent United Nations and State practice.

For more immediate action, a short-term strategy should be implemented, under which the Security Council, when setting up a new operation, would consider including in the relevant resolution the necessary security conditions, including: application to the operation of the provisions of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations;⁽¹⁶⁾ confirmation that the host Government was obliged to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of the United Nations operation and personnel; clarification to the effect that security arrangements undertaken by the host Government extended to contractors and NGOs involved in an operation; a timetable for concluding an agreement on the status of the operation in the host country or countries; a statement reaffirming that attacks and use of force against United Nations personnel were considered interference with the exercise of the Council's responsibilities and might require appropriate measures; and a statement indicating that failure by the host State to meet its obligations with regard to the safety of an operation and its personnel might result in the Council considering measures to ensure such security.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 29 September to consider, on the basis of the Secretary-General's report, the security of United Nations operations. The President drew the Council's attention to a letter of 13 September from New Zealand,⁽¹⁷⁾ proposing certain Security Council action on resolutions establishing peace-keeping operations. After statements, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 868(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Council, on behalf of the Council, on 31 March 1993 in connection with the Council's consideration of the item entitled "An agenda for peace: preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping",

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 27 August 1993 on the security of United Nations operations,

Recalling the provisions of the Charter concerning privileges and immunities, and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, as applicable to United Nations operations and persons engaged in such operations,

Expressing grave concern at the increasing number of attacks and use of force against persons engaged in United Nations operations and resolutely condemning all such actions,

Welcoming the initiatives being taken in the General Assembly to consider the elaboration of new instruments relating to the security and safety of United Nations forces and personnel, and noting the Secretary-General's proposals in this regard,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 27 August 1993 on the security of United Nations operations;

2. Encourages the Secretary-General to take forward those measures proposed in his report falling within his responsibilities with a view, in particular, to ensuring that security matters are an integral part of the planning for an operation and that any such precautions extend to all persons engaged in the operation;

3. Urges States and parties to a conflict to cooperate closely with the United Nations to ensure the security and safety of United Nations forces and personnel;

4. Confirms that attacks and use of force against persons engaged in a United Nations operation authorized by the Security Council will be considered interference with the exercise of the responsibilities of the Council and may require the Council to consider measures it deems appropriate;

5. Confirms also that if, in the Council's view, the host country is unable or unwilling to meet its obligations with regard to the safety and security of a United Nations operation and personnel engaged in the operation, the Council will consider what steps should be taken appropriate to the situation;

6. Determines that, when considering the establishment of future United Nations operations authorized by the Council, the Security Council will require inter alia:

(a) That the host country take all appropriate steps to ensure the security and safety of the operation and personnel engaged in the operation;

(b) That the security and safety arrangements undertaken by the host country extend to all persons engaged in the operation;

(c) That an agreement on the status of the operation, and all personnel engaged in the operation in the host country be negotiated expeditiously and should come into force as near as possible to the outset of the operation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General when recommending the establishment or renewal of a United Nations operation by the Security Council to take into account the provisions of the present resolution;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 868(1993)

29 September 1993 Meeting 3283 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26499).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, in resolution 48/37, the General Assembly decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention dealing with the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel, with particular reference to responsibility for attacks on such personnel.

Aerial incidents and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In November 1993, the Security Council intensified sanctions under the air and arms embargo imposed in 1992 on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in key oil- and technology-related fields and by freezing Libyan financial funds abroad, in order to ensure compliance by the Jamahiriya with Council resolutions 731(1992)(1) and 748(1992).(2) Those resolutions had requested the surrender for trial in the United Kingdom or the United States of two Libyan nationals, Abdelbaset Ali Mohamed Al Megrahi and Al Amin Khalifa Fhima, suspects in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie in southern Scotland, and cooperation with French judicial authorities investigating the crash after the bombing in 1989 of Union de transports aériens (UTA) flight 772 over the Ténéré desert in the Niger. The Council expressed readiness to suspend those measures immediately if the Libyan Government ensured the appearance before the appropriate courts of those charged with bombing the Pan Am airliner and satisfied the French judicial authorities with respect to the bombing case of UTA 772.

Communications (April-October). Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco and Tunisia (the Arab Maghreb Union), in an 8 April 1993 letter to the President of the Security Council,(3) urged the Council to reconsider its resolutions so that the embargo and restrictions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya could be lifted, with a view to ending the suffering and eliminating the risks inherent in the continued application or strengthening of sanctions. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in July(4) and October,(5) reported to the Secretary-General on the negative impact and damage resulting from the implementation of resolution 748(1992) in the humanitarian, economic and aviation sectors.

By a tripartite declaration of 13 August,(6) France, the United Kingdom and the United States stated that, after 16 months since the imposition of sanctions for failure to comply with the demands set forth in resolution 731(1992), the Council found the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for the fourth time in defiance of the will of the international community. The three countries observed with diminishing patience that the envoys of the Secretary-General to Tripoli repeatedly returned empty-handed and without indications of Libyan compliance, although with many assurances of its cooperation. After having waited the four months requested by the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, who wished to serve as an intermediary between the international community and the Libyans, the three States asked the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to achieve full compliance by the Libyan Government within 40 to 45 days. If it failed to do so by 1 October, including the transfer to United Kingdom or United States jurisdiction of the Lockerbie suspects and compliance with French judicial requests, the three Governments would table a resolution strengthening the sanctions in key oil-related, financial and technological areas. Full implementation by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya of resolutions 731(1992) and 748(1992) would result in lifting the sanctions.

Refuting the tripartite declaration, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya affirmed on 14 August(7) that it had fully complied with resolution 731(1992) in all its aspects, having informed the Secretary-General of all the measures undertaken to implement the resolution and to cooperate with him and his envoys. It said it had acceded to the request for cooperation with the United Kingdom with regard to organizations accused of terrorism, for which the United Kingdom had expressed official satisfaction. It had also expressed complete readiness to cooperate with French justice and acknowledged the need for the two suspects to be brought to trial, stating that it was prepared to discuss the venue for a just and fair trial.

On 11 September,(8) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya contended again that it had implemented all provisions of resolution 731(1992), except for a single point relating to the venue of trial, which it intended to resolve through negotiations. In an enclosed memorandum outlining its legal position on the matter, it stressed that it had requested the Secretary-General to dispatch a technical mission to verify its compliance. Although interpreting the lack of response to that offer as meaning that the Council was persuaded that it had carried out all measures called for, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya renewed its invitation promptly to dispatch a mission. An extradition of its nationals, however, would violate Article 2 of the Charter, which established the principle of non-intervention in the domestic jurisdiction of Member States; also, there was no agreement between the parties concerned governing rules of extradition. Therefore, it remained for the two suspects to decide whether they would present themselves to the jurisdiction of either the United Kingdom or the United States. Meanwhile, the intense media campaigns, the hostility against the two suspects and official declarations to the effect that they were guilty dissipated any hope of a just and fair trial.

In further letters of 29 September and 1 October,(9) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it was no longer opposed to the suspects going to trial and encouraged them to do so. It also assured the Secretary-General of its full willingness to cooperate with the French authorities in their investigation.

Addressing the situation on 7 October before the General Assembly, the Jamahiriya reiterated its readiness to respond to resolution 731(1992), including cooperating with the Secretary-General to ensure success of the mission entrusted to him by that resolution. It again condemned international terrorism and declared that it had severed relations with all organizations and entities suspected of being involved in terrorist acts. It would not allow its territory, institutions or citizens to be used for terrorist acts and would severely punish those guilty of terrorist activities.

In a statement of 13 October,(10) the Arab Lawyers' Union said the Lockerbie case had been transformed from a legal matter into a political dispute with the threat of the use of force and pressure. It urged the United Nations, international parties and local organizations to remove all obstacles to keeping the matter within a legal framework, so that the two suspects could be given a fair trial after due legal process and thorough investigations.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya informed the Secretary-General⁽¹¹⁾ of a meeting on 8 and 9 October between the two suspects and their legal advisers, during which the suspects confirmed their innocence and their willingness to stand a fair trial after due process of law.

After consultations held on 8 April, 13 August and 10 December 1993 in connection with the sanctions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya under resolution 748(1992),⁽²⁾ the President of the Security Council made the following identical statement on behalf of the Council members:⁽¹²⁾

"The members of the Security Council held informal consultations on 8 April [13 August] [10 December] 1993 pursuant to paragraph 13 of resolution 748(1992), by which the Council decided to review every 120 days or sooner, should the situation so require, the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

"After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for modification of the measures of sanctions established in paragraphs 3 to 7 of resolution 748(1992)."

The Council convened on 11 November to consider charges of December 1991 by France, the United Kingdom and the United States⁽¹³⁾ that nationals and possibly officials of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were involved in the two aerial incidents, as well as demands for judicial steps.

At their request, Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Sudan were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Opening the discussion, the Jamahiriya stated that the matter considered by the Council was not one threatening international peace and security. It had fully responded to resolution 731(1992),⁽¹⁾ and the only remaining problem arose from the demand by the United Kingdom and the United States that the two suspects be extradited and from the legal wrangle over which country had the competence to try them. That question was definitively settled by the provisions of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation,⁽¹⁴⁾ to which all three States were parties and which stipulated jurisdiction regarding the trial to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. No bilateral treaty or convention regulating extradition existed between the Jamahiriya and the United Kingdom or the United States.

Accordingly, the Jamahiriya had appointed a judge to investigate the matter and he started his preliminary investigation by placing the two suspects under preventive custody. The United Kingdom and the United States were notified and requested to cooperate with the Libyan judicial authorities either by allowing access to their records of investigation or by arranging a date for carrying out the necessary investigation. However, they refused to cooperate and submit the case to arbitration, as foreseen by the Montreal Convention. As a result, the Jamahiriya had taken the question of the Convention's applicability before the International Court of Justice, where it was still pending (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

It had further proposed to request the Court to ascertain the validity of the accusation against the two Libyan nationals and suggested that they be surrendered to the office of the United Nations Development Programme at Tripoli for investigation. It also proposed that the Secretary-General form a legal committee composed of neutral judges to conduct a comprehensive investigation. The Jamahiriya declared that, if the Secretary-General concluded that the accusations were justified, it would not object to extraditing the two suspects under the Secretary-General's personal supervision to a third party, provided that they not be surrendered to any other party.

As for the French demands, the Jamahiriya did not regard them counter to Libyan law. Intensive contacts between the judicial authorities of both countries were held in order to reach a determination of responsibility for the explosion of UTA flight 772. After the French investigative judge had seen the minutes of the investigation by the Libyan judge, it was agreed that he would continue his investigation in the Jamahiriya.

Summing up its position, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that the draft resolution before the Council repeated the same legal mistake of resolutions 731(1992) and 748(1992) in linking the Jamahiriya to international terrorism based on suspicions created by intelligence agencies, thereby making an a priori judgement not substantiated by any evidence.

Following further statements, the Council adopted resolution 883(1993).

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 731(1992) of 21 January 1992 and 748(1992) of 31 March 1992, Deeply concerned that after more than twenty months the Libyan Government has not fully complied with these resolutions,

Determined to eliminate international terrorism,

Convinced that those responsible for acts of international terrorism must be brought to justice,

Convinced also that the suppression of acts of international terrorism, including those in which States are directly or indirectly involved, is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Determining, in this context, that the continued failure by the Libyan Government to demonstrate by concrete actions its renunciation of terrorism, and in particular its continued failure to respond fully and effectively to the requests and decisions in resolutions 731(1992) and 748(1992), constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Taking note of the letters to the Secretary-General dated 29 September and 1 October 1993 from the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation of Libya and his speech in the general debate at the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly in which Libya stated its intention to encourage those charged with the bombing of Pan Am 103 to appear for trial in Scotland and its willingness to cooperate with the competent French authorities in the case of the bombing of UTA 772,

Expressing its gratitude to the Secretary-General for the efforts he has made pursuant to paragraph 4 of resolution 731(1992),

Recalling the right of States, under Article 50 of the Charter, to consult the Security Council where they find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Demands once again that the Libyan Government comply without any further delay with resolutions 731(1992) and 748(1992);

2. Decides, in order to secure compliance by the Libyan Government with the decisions of the Council, to take the following measures, which shall come into force at 0001 EST on 1 December 1993 unless the Secretary-General has reported to the Council in the terms set out in paragraph 16 below;

3. Decides that all States in which there are funds or other financial resources (including funds derived or generated from property) owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by:

- (a) the Government or public authorities of Libya, or
- (b) any Libyan undertaking, shall freeze such funds and financial resources and ensure that neither they nor any other funds and financial resources are made available, by their nationals or by any persons within their territory, directly or indirectly, to or for the benefit of the Government or public authorities of Libya or any Libyan undertaking, which for the purposes of this paragraph means any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking which is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by

- (i) the Government or public authorities of Libya,
- (ii) any entity, wherever located or organized, owned or controlled by (i), or

- (iii) any person identified by States as acting on behalf of (i) or (ii) for the purposes of this resolution;

4. Further decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 3 above do not apply to funds or other financial resources derived from the sale or supply of any petroleum or petroleum products, including natural gas and natural gas products, or agricultural products or commodities, originating in Libya and exported therefrom after the time specified in paragraph 2 above, provided that any such funds are paid into separate bank accounts exclusively for these funds;

5. Decides that all States shall prohibit any provision to Libya by their nationals or from their territory of the items listed in the annex to this resolution, as well as the provision of any types of equipment, supplies and grants of licensing arrangements for the manufacture or maintenance of such items;

6. Further decides that, in order to make fully effective the provisions of resolution 748(1992), all States shall:

- (a) require the immediate and complete closure of all Libyan Arab Airlines offices within their territories;

(b) prohibit any commercial transactions with Libyan Arab Airlines by their nationals or from their territory, including the honouring or endorsement of any tickets or other documents issued by that airline;

(c) prohibit, by their nationals or from their territory, the entering into or renewal of arrangements for:

- (i) the making available, for operation within Libya, of any aircraft or aircraft components, or
- (ii) the provision of engineering or maintenance servicing of any aircraft or aircraft components within Libya;

(d) prohibit, by their nationals or from their territory, the supply of any materials destined for the construction, improvement or maintenance of Libyan civilian or military airfields and associated facilities and equipment, or of any engineering or other services or components destined for the maintenance of any Libyan civil or military airfields or associated facilities and equipment, except emergency equipment and equipment and services directly related to civilian air traffic control;

(e) prohibit, by their nationals or from their territory, any provision of advice, assistance or training to Libyan pilots, flight engineers, or aircraft and ground maintenance personnel associated with the operation of aircraft and airfields within Libya;

(f) prohibit, by their nationals or from their territory, any renewal of any direct insurance for Libyan aircraft;

7. Confirms that the decision taken in resolution 748(1992) that all States shall significantly reduce the level of the staff at Libyan diplomatic missions and consular posts includes all missions and posts established since that decision or after the coming into force of this resolution;

8. Decides that all States, and the Government of Libya, shall take the necessary measures to ensure that no claim shall lie at the instance of the Government or public authorities of Libya, or of any Libyan national, or of any Libyan undertaking as defined in paragraph 3 of this resolution, or of any person claiming through or for the benefit of any such person or undertaking, in connection with any contract or other transaction or commercial operation where its performance was af-fectured by reason of the measures imposed by or pursuant to this resolution or related resolutions;

9. Instructs the Committee established by resolution 748(1992) to draw up expeditiously guidelines for the implementation of paragraphs 3 to 7 of this resolution, and to amend and supplement, as appropriate, the guidelines for the implementation of resolution 748(1992), especially its paragraph 5 (a);

10. Entrusts the Committee established by resolution 748(1992) with the task of examining possible requests for assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations and making recommendations to the President of the Security Council for appropriate action;

11. Affirms that nothing in this resolution affects Libya's duty scrupulously to adhere to all of its obligations concerning servicing and repayment of its foreign debt;

12. Calls upon all States, including States not Members of the United Nations, and all international organizations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the effective time of this resolution;

13. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General by 15 January 1994 on the measures they have instituted for meeting the obligations set out in paragraphs 3 to 7 above;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to continue his role as set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 731(1992);

15. Calls again upon all Member States individually and collectively to encourage the Libyan Government to respond fully and effectively to the requests and decisions in resolutions 731(1992) and 748(1992);

16. Security Council resolution 883(1993)

11 November 1993

11-0-4

3-nation draft (S/26701).

Sponsors: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Brazil, Cape Verde, France, Hungary, Japan, New Zealand, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan.

After the vote, the United Kingdom and the United States said that, nearly two years after adoption of resolution 731(1992), the Libyan Government had refused to heed it and had spared no effort to break the Council's resolve and compromise the will of the international community. Such failure left no other alternative to further sanctions. The United Kingdom went on to say that the resolution's provision to lift sanctions immediately should the Jamahiriya comply with the two 1992 resolutions proved that the sanctions were not intended to punish, but to bring the Jamahiriya to compliance.

France stated that it, the United Kingdom and the United States had decided to give the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya a final chance to prove its good will by complying with its obligations before 1 October 1993; unfortunately, the Jamahiriya's continued delaying tactics, obstruction and contradictory positions closed the door to any solution.

Chapter II

Disarmament

During 1993, in spite of widespread strife and militant nationalism, further progress was made towards disarmament, particularly with respect to weapons of mass destruction. Achievements in that area included: progress towards nuclear disarmament by the Russian Federation and the United States; the wider observance of a de facto moratorium on nuclear testing and the collective decision of the Conference on Disarmament to commence substantive negotiations, early in 1994, aimed at concluding a comprehensive nuclear-test ban; widening acceptance of the nuclear non-proliferation regime and ever-increasing support for the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; and the opening of the process of signature and ratification of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction.

Nuclear disarmament negotiations between the Russian Federation and the United States continued to gain momentum with the signing in Moscow on 3 January, by President George Bush of the United States and President Boris Yeltsin of the Russian Federation, of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms.

The Conference on Disarmament, a 39-nation multilateral negotiating body, mandated its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban to negotiate a comprehensive test-ban treaty. By the end of the year, a draft mandate was ready for consideration by the Conference, which was to reconvene in January 1994. In December, the General Assembly urged the Conference to proceed intensively, as a priority task, with its negotiation of such a treaty (resolution 48/70).

The Disarmament Commission, a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, dealt with nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons; regional disarmament within the context of global security; and the role of science and technology in international security, disarmament and related fields. The Commission succeeded in adopting by consensus guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security, which were subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly (48/77 A).

As part of the process of restructuring the United Nations Secretariat, the Office for Disarmament Affairs became the Centre for Disarmament Affairs within the Department for Political Affairs.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

In 1993, United Nations disarmament efforts continued mainly through the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary body of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

The existing disarmament machinery, which was agreed on at the Assembly's tenth special session in 1978⁽¹⁾ its first special session devoted to disarmament, remained essentially the same. However, in response to the Secretary-General's 1992 suggestion⁽²⁾ that the disarmament machinery, created during the cold war, should be reassessed in order to meet the new realities and priorities, the existing disarmament machinery was examined by Member States (see below).

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in a February report with later addenda,⁽⁴⁾ the views of 33 Member States on his 1992 report in which he suggested that the existing disarmament machinery be reassessed.⁽²⁾

Conference on Disarmament consideration. Also in accordance with the Assembly's 1992 decision,⁽³⁾ the Conference on Disarmament issued its views, in February,⁽⁵⁾ on the Secretary-General's 1992 report. The Conference stated that, together with unilateral measures and bilateral and regional agreements, disarmament needed more and more a multilateral approach and was a collective responsibility; thus the Conference had an increased role to play. It decided to intensify its consultations on its improved and effective functioning, including its decision to carry out consultations on the issues of its membership and agenda. It was the sense of the Conference that it could best serve the international community by preserving its role as the sole multilateral global negotiating body on disarmament.

In another February report,(6) the Conference discussed the status of the ongoing review of its agenda, composition and methods of work.

First Committee action. Pursuant to a 1992 Assembly decision,(3) the First Committee met from 8 to 12 March 1993 to reassess the multilateral arms-control and disarmament machinery. It examined the respective roles and interrelationship of the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament, as well as the role of the Office for Disarmament Affairs. Member States expressed their concern that the Office should be strengthened to allow it to perform its mandated tasks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 April, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 47/54 G without vote.

Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 47/422 of 9 December 1992, by which it decided to reconvene meetings of the First Committee from 8 to 12 March 1993 in order to reassess the multilateral arms control and disarmament machinery, in particular the respective roles of the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament and their interrelationship, as well as the role of the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat, including ways and means to enhance the functioning and efficiency of the said machinery, bearing in mind the competence of the Security Council in those matters,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "New dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold-war era",

Taking note also of the views of Member States on that report,

Taking note further of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General, as well as its report on the ongoing review of the agenda, composition and methods of work of the Conference,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Having considered the views expressed by Member States at the resumed session of the First Committee on these questions,

Conscious that the new international situation has enhanced the prospects for disarmament and arms regulation, which is conducive to further multilateral efforts in disarmament,

Stressing the need for the multilateral arms control and disarmament machinery to respond to the new international situation,

Noting that a review is being undertaken regarding the allocation of agenda items to the Main Committees of the General Assembly,

Noting the continuing review of the role and resources of the Office for Disarmament Affairs in order to strengthen its effective functioning,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's statement of 9 March 1993 that the Secretariat's capabilities are being strengthened to enable it to discharge its responsibilities effectively in the field of disarmament,

Desiring to enhance the effective functioning of the present multilateral disarmament machinery,

1. Decides that the First Committee of the General Assembly, in pursuing its efforts to respond to the new realities of international security, should continue to deal with the questions of disarmament and related international security issues;

2. Requests the Chairman of the First Committee to continue his consultations on the further rationalization of the work and the effective functioning of the Committee, taking into account all the views and proposals presented to the Committee, including those related to the thematic clustering of agenda items;

3. Reaffirms the role of the Disarmament Commission as a specialized deliberative body within the United Nations disarmament machinery, and notes the progress achieved in its ongoing process of reform;

4. Recommends that every effort be made to continue to enhance the working methods of the Disarmament Commission so as to enable it to give focused consideration to a limited number of priority issues in the field of disarmament, and to that end welcomes the decision of the Commission to move its agenda towards a three-item phased approach;

5. Notes the fact that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single global disarmament negotiating forum, is a body of limited composition taking its decisions on the basis of consensus and maintains its special status in relationship with the United Nations disarmament machinery;

6. Welcomes the fact that the Conference on Disarmament, in addition to the review of its composition, has also intensified the review of its agenda and methods of work, with a view to reaching prompt decisions on these questions;

7. Encourages the Conference on Disarmament to reach early agreement on the expansion of its membership;

8. Stresses the importance of further enhancing the dialogue and cooperation among the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament;

9. Urges the Secretary-General to take concrete steps to strengthen the Office for Disarmament Affairs in order to ensure that it has the necessary means and resources to carry out its mandated tasks;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report on those steps to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

11. Decides to review these questions at its forty-eighth

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted a report in September on steps being taken to strengthen the Office for Disarmament Affairs.(7) His proposals included renaming the Office the Centre for Disarmament Affairs, to be headed by a Director, allocating additional human resources, and appropriating financial resources for the acquisition of office automation equipment.

Work of the First Committee

In November 1993, the First Committee devoted two meetings to discussing the further rationalization of its work and reform of its agenda, a subject that was included in the Assembly's agenda at the request of the European Community (EC).(8) Proposals concerning rationalization emphasized: more detailed and focused discussion of specific agenda items; reducing the number of draft resolutions; and the relationship between disarmament and security items. Proposals concerning reform of the agenda involved rearranging the agenda along thematic lines and clustering items under a limited number of "head items".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/87 without vote.

Rationalization of the work of the Disarmament and International Security Committee (First Committee)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/54 G of 8 April 1993, particularly paragraph 2 thereof, in which the Chairman of the First Committee was requested to continue his consultations on the further rationalization of the work and the effective functioning of the Committee, taking into account all the views and proposals presented to the Committee, including those related to the thematic clustering of agenda items,

Recalling also the ongoing efforts of the General Assembly aimed at revitalizing its work, and recalling further its resolution 47/233 of 17 August 1993,

Mindful that the United Nations has a central role and responsibility in the sphere of disarmament and international security,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the objectives and priorities set out therein, as well as the progress achieved in arms control and disarmament towards these ends,

Encouraged by the changed political climate in the post-cold-war era, which is conducive to further bilateral, regional and multilateral efforts in disarmament, and aware of the consequent need to adjust the work of the United Nations, including that concerned with disarmament and international security,

Desiring to enhance the effective functioning of the disarmament machinery of the United Nations,

Conscious of the need to improve the interrelationship between disarmament and arms regulation issues and the broader international security context,

Encouraged by the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General to strengthen the Secretariat's capabilities to enable it to discharge its tasks effectively,

1. Decides to enhance the effectiveness of the First Committee by:

(a) Addressing in a more systematic manner the issues of disarmament and related matters of international security;

(b) Streamlining its functioning and, as a first step towards that end, encouraging more detailed and focused discussion of the specific agenda items;

(c) Reviewing annually the time and resources allotted for its work;

2. Decides also, in relation to the restructuring and reorganization of the annual agenda of the First Committee, to adopt, in order to promote more detailed and focused discussions, a thematic approach whereby items presented by Member States are clustered in broad topic areas, such as:

(a) Nuclear weapons;

(b) Other weapons of mass destruction;

(c) Conventional weapons;

(d) Regional disarmament and security;

(e) Confidence-building measures, including transparency in armaments;

(f) Outer space (disarmament aspects);

(g) Disarmament machinery;

(h) Other disarmament measures;

(i) International security;

(j) Related matters of disarmament and international security;

3. Requests the Chairman of the First Committee to continue consultations on the further rationalization of the work of the Committee in terms of improving its effective functioning, taking into account relevant resolutions adopted by the Committee, as well as views and proposals presented to it on this issue;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to provide the appropriate means and adequate resources to the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat in order to ensure that it can carry out its mandated tasks, in particular those relating to deliberation and negotiation, taking into account existing resource constraints, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

5. Decides to review the question of further rationalization and improvement of the work of the First Committee at its forty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 48/87

16 December 1993 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/48/688) without vote, 19 November (meeting 31); draft by Chairman (A/C.1/48/L.51); agenda item 156.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 1st Committee 16, 17, 31; plenary 81.

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, held eight plenary meetings at its 1993 session (New York, 19 April-10 May).(9) It also held an organizational session on 23 March and 14 April to elect its officers and adopt the provisional agenda for its 1993 session. At a further organizational session on 9 and 14 December, it decided to schedule its items on nuclear disarmament and on the role of science and technology for conclusion in 1994 and inscribed on the agenda a new item on international arms transfers.

The Commission's 1993 agenda included items on nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons; regional disarmament within the context of global security; and the role of science and technology in international security, disarmament and related fields. All of those items were carried over from the 1992 session.⁽²⁾

Three working groups were established to deal with the agenda items. Working Group I, dealing with nuclear disarmament, adopted an outline of guidelines and recommendations for consideration in 1994, which was annexed to the Commission's report. Working Group II succeeded in adopting by consensus a text on guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security, thereby completing its consideration of the item. That text was also annexed to the Commission's report. Although Working Group III was able to draft guidelines on almost all aspects of the role of science and technology, differences of opinion remained on a number of issues. Consequently, it was decided to allow another year for completion of the item.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/77 A without vote.

9. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items on its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

11. Notes that the Disarmament Commission, at its 1993 organizational session, adopted the following items for consideration and conclusion at its 1994 substantive session:

- (1) Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons;

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, met three times in 1993 at Geneva (19 January-26 March, 10 May-25 June and 26 July-3 September); 37 members participated.(10) During 30 formal plenary meetings and 10 informal meetings, it considered a nuclear test ban; cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

The Conference agreed to begin work immediately on a nuclear test ban, prevention of an arms race in outer space, effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and transparency in armaments, and established ad hoc committees for each item. Interested members continued their ongoing open-ended informal consultations on non-proliferation in all its aspects. Two Special Coordinators were appointed to conduct consultations on the issues of membership and agenda. Following discussions, the Special Coordinator for the expansion of membership submitted in August a list of countries that would form the recommended composition of the Conference following expansion.(11) The Conference discussed the Special Coordinator's report but was unable to reach a conclusion on the matter. The Special Coordinator for the agenda reported that it had been agreed to continue consultations in 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/77 B without vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community, has the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Considering, in this respect, that the present international climate should give additional impetus to multilateral negotiations with the aim of reaching concrete agreements,

Taking note of the decision of the Conference on Disarmament to give to its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban a mandate to negotiate such a ban,

Noting with satisfaction the results achieved so far on the subject of improved and effective functioning of the Conference on Disarmament, as well as the decision to carry out inter-sessional consultations with a view to achieving consensus on the issue of its membership during the inter-sessional period, and the decision to continue consultations on the issue of the agenda at its 1994 session,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Welcomes the determination of the Conference on Disarmament to fulfil that role in the light of the evolving international situation with a view to making early substantive progress on priority items of its agenda;

3. Also welcomes the decision of the Conference on Disarmament to give to its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban a mandate to negotiate such a ban;

4. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to reach a consensus that would result in the expansion of its membership before the start of its 1994 session;

5. Encourages the ongoing review of the agenda, membership and methods of work of the Conference on Disarmament;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision to the Conference on Disarmament of additional administrative, substantive and conference support services for its negotiations;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Major trends and developments

Non-proliferation

In 1993, non-proliferation continued to be one of the most prominent disarmament issues at the bilateral, regional and global levels. As the threat of nuclear confrontation diminished with the end of the cold war, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the transfer of military technology emerged as the dominant challenge to international security. A number of international treaties and several control mechanisms imposed non-proliferation regimes with respect to various categories of weapons and weapons systems—biological, chemical and conventional. Issues related to the implementation or broadening of those regimes and to the transfer of technology were the focus of attention in different disarmament forums throughout the year.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

Signatures and accessions

In 1993, the Czech Republic and Slovakia succeeded to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)⁽¹⁾ and Armenia, Belarus, Guyana, Mauritania and Saint Kitts and Nevis acceded to it, bringing the number of States parties to 162 at the end of the year.⁽²⁾

Communications. On 12 March 1993,⁽³⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea informed the President of the Security Council that it had decided to withdraw from NPT, in accordance with paragraph 1 of article X of the Treaty, following controversy over inspections of its nuclear facilities conducted by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). (For details, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

During March, April and May, a number of States issued statements on the decision taken by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea: Bulgaria,⁽⁴⁾ Costa Rica,⁽⁵⁾ Croatia,⁽⁶⁾ the Czech Republic,⁽⁷⁾ Honduras,⁽⁸⁾ Mexico,⁽⁹⁾ Nicaragua,⁽¹⁰⁾ Norway,⁽¹¹⁾ Panama⁽¹²⁾ and Paraguay.⁽¹³⁾ The Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States issued a joint statement on the subject.⁽¹⁴⁾

Preparations for the 1995 review Conference on NPT

Following the entry into force on 5 March 1970 of NPT, quinquennial review conferences were held in 1975,(15) 1980,(16) 1985(17) and 1990,(18) as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty.

The Preparatory Committee for the 1995 Conference of the Parties to NPT, which would review the Treaty's operation and decide on its extension, held its first session in New York from 10 to 14 May 1993.(19) The States parties to NPT had formed the Committee in 1992.(20)

The Committee decided to hold the Conference in New York from 17 April to 12 May 1995 and to hold two of its own sessions in 1994 and one in 1995.

The Committee deferred decisions with regard to its own decision-making and to participation in its meetings. It held preliminary discussions and decided to defer decisions on the Conference's draft rules of procedure, agenda, final document(s) and background documentation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 C by recorded vote.

General and complete disarmament

The General Assembly,

Aware of its role in the field of disarmament,

Aware also of the interest of the international community in continuing and intensifying consideration of the question of the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and of vehicles for their delivery in all its aspects,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a short report containing a brief description of the question of the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and of vehicles for their delivery in all its aspects and to transmit it, no later than 1 May 1994, to a representative intergovernmental group of experts for its consideration and suggestions regarding further study of the question by the international community in various multilateral disarmament forums;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit his report, together with the suggestions of the representative intergovernmental group of experts, to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and of vehicles for their delivery in all its aspects".

IAEA safeguards

Steps continued to be taken in 1993 to strengthen the IAEA safeguards system—the cornerstone of NPT and of the whole non-proliferation regime. In December, the IAEA Board of Governors approved a programme by which a more effective and efficient safeguards system would be implemented prior to the 1995 NPT review Conference. Key elements of the programme entailed the achievement of greater transparency at all levels of the system and the accessibility necessary to verify information provided by States. In addition, the Board reaffirmed the Agency's right to perform special inspections when there was reason to believe that installations or material which should have been declared had not been so declared. Safeguards agreements between IAEA and the following parties to NPT entered into force in 1993: Latvia, Solomon Islands and Tonga.

Country situations

On 1 April,(21) the IAEA Board of Governors adopted a resolution, by which it found the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in non-compliance with its obligations under its safeguards agreement with IAEA. It decided to report such non-compliance, if not remedied, to all IAEA members and to the Security Council and the General Assembly. (For details, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council on 1 December(22) a joint report describing talks between the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and IAEA, for the one part, and the Government of Iraq, for the other (New York, 15-30 November). UNSCOM and IAEA welcomed Iraq's formal acceptance in November(23)—welcomed by the Council in December(24)—of the obligations under a 1991 Council resolution,(25) enabling UNSCOM to initiate immediately full-scale monitoring and verification. In another December report transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Council,(26) the Executive Chairman of UNSCOM described developments in Iraq and UNSCOM's activities there from 14 June to 14 December 1993. (For details, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

IAEA continued to carry out safeguards missions in South Africa. However, a new dimension was added when F. W. de Klerk, President of South Africa, declared on 24 March⁽²⁷⁾ that South Africa had, in the past, developed a limited nuclear deterrent capability and had completed six nuclear fission devices, but that it had voluntarily dismantled and destroyed all of them before acceding to NPT in 1991. He further stated that South Africa had never conducted a clandestine nuclear test and that at no time had it acquired nuclear weapons technology or materials from another country, nor had it provided any to another country, nor had it cooperated with another country in that regard. IAEA was invited, on the basis of the safeguards agreement, to verify that the programme had in fact been terminated and that all nuclear material had been placed under safeguards.

Other weapons of mass destruction

Chemical weapons

The Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by the Conference on Disarmament in 1992,⁽²⁸⁾ was opened for signature in Paris on 13 January 1993. By the end of the year, 154 States had signed and 4 States had ratified the Convention.⁽²⁹⁾

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,(29) the Secretary-General reported, in his capacity as depositary, on the status of the Convention as at 15 August.⁽³⁰⁾

During the year, the Preparatory Commission for the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, established in 1992 to prepare for the Convention's implementation,(28) worked, with the assistance of the Provisional Technical Secretariat, an arm of the organization, on implementation procedures. A priority was the development, in cooperation with member States, of the mechanisms required to verify compliance; training modules for future inspectors were being prepared and training programmes were launched by a number of member States. The Provisional Technical Secretariat also assisted members to establish national authorities and prepare national databases.

Bacteriological (biological) weapons

Further strengthening of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction⁽³¹⁾ was carried out on the basis of the Final Declaration of the Third (1991) Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention⁽³²⁾ in which the States parties agreed to expand the confidence-building measures they had agreed to at the Second (1986) Review Conference.⁽³³⁾ Among measures decided on was the requirement that parties declare what legislation and other regulations they had enacted to implement the Convention's provisions and to control the export or import of pathogenic micro-organisms. At the end of 1993, 40 States parties had submitted reports to the United Nations, including information concerning their export and import of certain biological weapons-related materials.

In addition, the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint (Geneva, 24 May-4 June and 13-24 September), established by the Third Review Conference, finalized its deliberations and submitted a report to the States parties.⁽³⁴⁾ The Group identified, examined and evaluated 21 potential measures, which were categorized as off-site (information monitoring, data exchange, remote sensing and inspections) and on-site (exchange visits, inspections and continuous monitoring). The Group concluded that the potential verification measures could be useful in enhancing confidence, through increased transparency, and that States parties were fulfilling their obligations, thereby strengthening the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/65 without vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling, in particular, its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and to their destruction,

Recalling also its resolution 46/35 A, adopted without a vote on 6 December 1991, in which it welcomed, inter alia, the establishment, proceeding from the recommendations of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, of an ad hoc group of governmental experts open to all States parties to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint,

Noting with satisfaction that there are more than a hundred and thirty States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

Recalling its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Third Review Conference, including the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference, and to provide such information and data in conformity with standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and no later than 15 April,

Recalling also the provisions of the Convention related to scientific and technological cooperation and the related provisions of the Final Document of the Third Review Conference and the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint completed its work on 24 September 1993;

2. Commends to all States parties the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts, agreed to by consensus at its last meeting at Geneva on 24 September 1993;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance to the depositary Powers of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and to provide such services as may be required for the convening of a special conference should the depositary Powers be requested by a majority of States parties to convene such a conference in order to consider the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts;

4. Welcomes the information and data provided to date and reiterates its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction;

6. Calls upon all signatory States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those other States that have not signed the Convention to become parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention.

Strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

On 21 January,(35) the Conference on Disarmament re-established its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, also known as negative security assurances. The Ad Hoc Committee held meetings between 5 March and 24 August.

In its conclusions and recommendations,(36) the Ad Hoc Committee noted that the complex nature of the issues involved and differing perceptions of security interests continued to impede work on the substance of effective arrangements and the search for a common formula. Recognizing the importance of the question and feeling that, in the light of recent transformations in the international political climate and other positive developments, there was a need to step up efforts to agree on a common approach and to proceed to negotiations with a view to reaching agreement as soon as possible, the Committee recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the 1994 session of the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/73 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Also convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of ~~force~~, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing also that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the decision adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta in September 1992,^b as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul in August 1991,^c calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991 and 47/50 of 9 December 1992,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament

Comprehensive test-ban treaty

Conference on Disarmament consideration.

The Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban of the Conference on Disarmament held 19 meetings between 18 February and 24 August. On 10 August,⁽³⁷⁾ the Conference gave the Ad Hoc Committee a mandate to negotiate a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty and requested the Chairman to conduct consultations in the inter-sessional period—between 3 September 1993 and 17 January 1994—on the specific mandate for, and the organization of, the negotiation. On the basis of that action, the Ad Hoc Committee's Chairman initiated consultations on adopting specific wording for a negotiating mandate and on organizing the negotiations to begin in January 1994.

The Ad Hoc Committee also discussed a draft comprehensive test-ban treaty proposed by Sweden in June,⁽³⁸⁾ for which verification protocols were yet to be prepared. It devoted considerable attention to questions related to verification, a crucial element of the future treaty. It was generally recognized that in order to ensure compliance with a future test ban, an effective, internationally applicable verification system would be required. Documents related to verification were submitted by Canada.⁽³⁹⁾ Some of the issues discussed during the session were: the substantial role that a global seismic monitoring network would have, especially in underground testing; the possible use of additional non-seismic verification technologies to detect nuclear tests in various environments, including in relation to evasion, and the possible use of such techniques to detect pre-testing preparations; the costs of a future verification system vis-a-vis its capabilities; the implementing agency, its powers, functions and costs; the close interrelationship between applicable verification techniques and the scope of obligations under the treaty; and a possible mix of national and international means of verification, taking into account cost effectiveness.

On 3 September,⁽³⁵⁾ the Conference adopted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Following the conclusion of the Conference's 1993 session in September, further documents related to a test ban were circulated. On 29 November, Mexico, as Coordinator of the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire), submitted a working paper on the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty.⁽⁴¹⁾ Sweden, on 6 December, submitted a revised draft comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, incorporating several additional articles and a protocol on verification.⁽⁴²⁾ On 9 December, during the inter-sessional consultations, Australia introduced a draft structural outline for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty.⁽⁴³⁾

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held two sessions at Geneva in 1993 (thirty-fifth, 15-26 February; thirty-sixth, 26 July-6 August). The Group had completed a comprehensive seismological evaluation of its second technical test, a large-scale international experiment on the exchange and analysis of seismic data (GSETT-2) conducted in 1991,⁽⁴⁴⁾ a summary of which was annexed to a February progress report.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Later in the year, the Ad Hoc Group continued its reassessment of the concept of a global system for exchanging seismic data and discussed plans for developing, testing and evaluating an experimental international seismic monitoring system (GSETT-3). A summary of the GSETT-3 exercise and a costs analysis were annexed to the Group's August progress report.⁽⁴⁶⁾

Note by the Secretary-General. By a May note with later addenda,⁽⁴⁷⁾ prepared in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted three quarterly reports (October-December 1992, January-March and April-June 1993) from Australia, which indicated that no underground nuclear explosions had been detected.

Moratoriums on testing

During the year, there were developments on moratoriums on testing, pending the achievement of a comprehensive test-ban treaty, which were closely connected with the unilateral moratoriums that had been declared or extended by three nuclear-weapon States—France, the Russian Federation and the United States—in 1992.⁽⁴⁹⁾

On 2 July 1993,⁽⁵⁰⁾ President William Clinton of the United States announced his decision to extend the 1992 United States moratorium on nuclear testing, at least until the end of September 1994, as long as no other nation tested, and called on the other nuclear Powers to do the same. If those nations were to join the United States in observing the moratorium, the President said, the five nuclear Powers would be in the strongest possible position to negotiate a comprehensive nuclear-test ban and to discourage other nations from developing their own nuclear arsenals. If, however, the moratorium was broken by another nation, approval would be sought from the United States Congress for additional tests.

In a 5 October statement,⁽⁵¹⁾ China informed the Secretary-General that it had conducted an underground nuclear test. It stated that it possessed a small number of nuclear weapons entirely for the purpose of self-defence and that it stood for the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons and for a comprehensive nuclear-test ban. China believed that a comprehensive test-ban treaty would have positive significance and it would take an active part in the negotiating process. After the treaty had been concluded and had come into effect, China would abide by it and carry out no more nuclear tests. Several States, either at the time the text was announced or later in the First Committee, voiced disappointment that China had resumed nuclear testing. On 21 October,⁽⁵²⁾ the Russian Federation, expressing deep regret over China's action, declared its intention to continue to adhere to the nuclear-testing moratorium, of which it had been the initiator, while retaining the right to reconsider its decision in the event of further unfavourable developments in the nuclear-testing area. Also in October,⁽⁵³⁾ Mexico lamented the resumption of nuclear testing by China as a step backwards and called on other nuclear-weapon States to continue to observe their unilateral moratoriums.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/70 without vote.

Comprehensive test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling that a comprehensive nuclear-test ban is one of the priority objectives of the international community in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve an end to nuclear testing is through the conclusion of a multilaterally and effectively verifiable comprehensive test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States and will contribute to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects, to the process of nuclear disarmament and therefore to the enhancement of international peace and security,

Convinced also that the exercise of utmost restraint in respect of nuclear testing would be consistent with the objective of an international negotiation of a comprehensive test ban,

Noting the aspirations expressed by the parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time, which are recalled in the preamble to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Welcoming the willingness of all nuclear-weapon States as well as the rest of the international community to pursue the multilateral negotiation of a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Noting with satisfaction the initiation in 1993 by the Conference on Disarmament of work under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear test ban", and the programme of substantive work subsequently undertaken within its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban,

Noting also the ongoing activity of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events,

1. Welcomes the decision taken by the Conference on Disarmament on 10 August 1993 to give its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban a mandate to negotiate a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive test-ban treaty, and fully endorses the contents of that decision;

2. Calls upon participants in the Conference on Disarmament to approach the inter-sessional consultations mandated by that decision in a positive and constructive light;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament at the commencement of its 1994 session to re-establish, with an appropriate negotiating mandate, the Ad Hoc Committee on its agenda item entitled "Nuclear test ban";

4. Calls upon all States to support the multilateral negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament for a comprehensive test-ban treaty;

5. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament to proceed intensively, as a priority task, in its negotiation of such a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision to the Conference on Disarmament of additional administrative, substantive and conference support services for these negotiations;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Comprehensive test-ban treaty".

Follow-up to the Amendment Conference of States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty

On 5 August,⁽⁵⁴⁾ Ali Alatas, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Indonesia and President of the 1991 Amendment Conference⁽⁵⁵⁾ of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963)(56) (also known as the partial test-ban Treaty), recalling that the Conference had empowered its President to consult with the States parties on possibly resuming the Conference's work, indicated that he would, in August, convene a special meeting of the States parties to examine the feasibility of reconvening the Conference later in 1993.

On 9 August,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the United States indicated that it looked favourably on the Conference on Disarmament as the forum for negotiating a comprehensive test-ban treaty. Global support for such a treaty would be more difficult to secure if the Conference—the recognized multilateral arms-control negotiating body—were excluded. The United States held that the Amendment Conference would not be the most effective forum in which to achieve a comprehensive test-ban treaty, because China and France were not parties to the partial test-ban Treaty and because of the risk of opening the Treaty for other amendments. At some point there might be other helpful steps the parties to the Treaty could take to move the international community to join a comprehensive test-ban treaty.

At the special meeting of the States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty held on 10 August,⁽⁵⁸⁾ there was consensus that the work on a comprehensive test ban in the different forums, and especially the Amendment Conference and the Conference on Disarmament, should be mutually supportive and complementary. There was also broad agreement that the President of the Amendment Conference should continue his consultations with the States parties as well as with States not parties to the Treaty and should hold another special meeting early in 1994 in order to review developments, assess the situation and examine the feasibility of resuming the Amendment Conference's work later that year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/69 by recorded vote.

Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 44/106 of 15 December 1989,

45/50 of 4 December 1990, 46/28 of 6 December 1991 and 47/46 of 9 December 1992,

Reiterating its conviction that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is the highest-priority measure for the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and for the achievement of the objective of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the central role of the United Nations in the field of nuclear disarmament and in particular in the cessation of all nuclear-test explosions, as well as the persistent efforts of non-governmental organizations in the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Conscious of the growing environmental concerns throughout the world and of the past and potential negative effects of nuclear testing on the environment,

Recalling its resolution 1910(XVIII) of 27 November 1963, in which it noted with approval the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed on 5 August 1963, and requested the Conference of the Eighteen-Nation Committee on Disarmament^{*} to continue with a sense of urgency its negotiations to achieve the objectives set forth in the preamble to the Treaty,

Recalling also that more than one third of the parties to the Treaty requested the depositary Governments to convene a conference to consider an amendment that would convert the Treaty into a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Recalling further that a substantive session of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water was held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991,

Reiterating its conviction that the Amendment Conference will facilitate the attainment of the objectives set forth in the Treaty and thus serve to strengthen it,

Noting with satisfaction the unilateral nuclear-test moratoria announced by several nuclear-weapon States,

Welcoming the decision of the Conference on Disarmament to give its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban a mandate to negotiate a comprehensive test ban,

Recalling its recommendation that arrangements be made to ensure that intensive efforts continue, under the auspices of the Amendment Conference, until a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is achieved, and its call that all parties participate in, and contribute to the success of, the Amendment Conference,

Recalling also the decision adopted by the Amendment Conference to the effect that, since further work needed to be undertaken on certain aspects of a comprehensive test-ban treaty, especially those with regard to verification of compliance and possible sanctions against non-compliance, the President of the Conference should conduct consultations with a view to achieving progress on those issues and to resuming the work of the Conference at an appropriate time,

Welcoming also the ongoing consultations being conducted by the President of the Amendment Conference,

1. Takes note of the concluding statement made by the President of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water at the special meeting of the States parties held on 10 August 1993, in which broad agreement was found for:

^{*}Redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

(a) Pursuing work for a comprehensive test ban in the Amendment Conference and the Conference on Disarmament in a mutually supportive and mutually complementary manner;

(b) Holding another special meeting early in 1994 to review developments and assess the situation regarding a comprehensive test ban and to examine the feasibility of resuming the work of the Amendment Conference later that year;

(c) Promoting universality of a comprehensive test ban by having the President of the Amendment Conference liaise closely with the Conference on Disarmament and the five nuclear-weapon States;

2. Recommends that arrangements be made to ensure the fullest possible participation of non-governmental organizations in the Amendment Conference;

3. Reiterates its conviction that, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the nuclear-weapon States should suspend all nuclear-test explosions through an agreed moratorium or unilateral moratoria;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water".

Issues related to START

A major development in the nuclear field in 1993 was the signing, on 3 January, of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START II) by President George Bush of the United States and President Boris Yeltsin of the Russian Federation.⁽⁵⁹⁾

The entry into force of START II was conditional upon the entry into force of the 1991 START I Treaty⁽⁶⁰⁾ and the 1992 Protocol thereto, known as the Lisbon Protocol,⁽⁶¹⁾ under which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and Ukraine assumed the obligations of the former USSR under the Treaty.

In connection with START I, an agreement was signed on 3 September 1993 between the Russian Federation and Ukraine concerning the dismantling and destruction of nuclear weapons deployed in Ukraine.⁽⁶²⁾ One article of that agreement provided for the recycling of nuclear warheads and attached to the agreement was a statement of basic principles for the recycling of nuclear warheads from strategic nuclear forces deployed in Ukraine.

By the end of the year, all of the States concerned had ratified START I and the Lisbon Protocol—Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and the United States in 1992,⁽⁶³⁾ Belarus on 4 February 1993⁽⁶⁴⁾ and Ukraine, by a parliamentary resolution, on 18 November.⁽⁶⁵⁾ Owing to the late date of Ukraine's ratification and to a number of reservations that accompanied it, no further action was taken on START II during 1993. On 25 November,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Russian Federation stated that it considered that Ukraine's resolution and the reservations contained therein subverted the objectives of START I. Efforts to address Ukraine's reservations continued during December.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 B without vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Recognizing the fundamental changes that have taken place with respect to international security, which have permitted agreements on deep reductions in the nuclear armaments of the States possessing the largest inventories of such weapons,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of international tension and to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Stressing the importance of strengthening international peace and security through disarmament,

Emphasizing that nuclear disarmament remains one of the principal tasks of our times,

Stressing also that it is the responsibility of all States to adopt and implement measures towards the attainment of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Appreciating a number of positive developments in the field of nuclear disarmament, in particular the treaty that was concluded on 8 December 1987 between the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles, and the treaties on the reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms,

Noting that there are still significant nuclear arsenals and that the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons, rests with the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the largest stockpiles,

Welcoming the steps that have already been taken by those States to begin the process of reducing the number of nuclear weapons and removing such weapons from a deployed status,

Noting also the new climate of relations between the United States of America and the States of the former Soviet Union, which permits them to intensify their cooperative efforts to ensure the safety, security and environmentally sound destruction of nuclear weapons,

Urging the further intensification of such efforts to accelerate the implementation of agreements and unilateral decisions relating to nuclear-arms reduction,

Welcoming also the reductions made by other nuclear-weapon States in some of their nuclear-weapon programmes, and encouraging all nuclear-weapon States to consider appropriate measures relating to nuclear disarmament,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament should facilitate and complement each other,

1. Welcomes the actions taken towards the ratification of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms signed in Moscow on 31 July 1991 by the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and the protocol to that Treaty signed at Lisbon on 23 May 1992 by the four parties thereto, and urges the parties to take the necessary steps to ensure its entry into force at the earliest possible date;

2. Also welcomes the signing of the Treaty between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on the Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, in Moscow on 3 January 1993, and urges the parties to take the steps necessary to bring that Treaty into force at the earliest possible date;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the continuing implementation of the treaty between the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles, in particular at the completion by the parties of the destruction of all their declared missiles subject to elimination under the treaty;

4. Encourages the United States of America, the Russian Federation, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine to continue their cooperative efforts aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and strategic offensive arms on the basis of existing agreements, and welcomes the contributions that other States are making to such cooperation as well;

5. Further encourages and supports the Russian Federation and the United States of America in their efforts to reduce their nuclear armaments and to continue to give those efforts the highest priority in order to contribute to the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons;

6. Invites the Russian Federation and the United States of America to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their discussions and in the implementation of their strategic offensive arms agreements and unilateral decisions.

Prohibition of the production of fissile material

Another major development in the nuclear field was the adoption by the General Assembly of a resolution recommending the negotiation of a treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 L without vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the significant progress in reducing nuclear-weapon arsenals as evidenced by the substantive bilateral agreements between the Russian Federation and the United States of America and their respective unilateral undertakings regarding the disposition of fissile material,

Welcoming also the initiative of the United States of America concerning a multilateral, internationally and effectively verifiable treaty on the prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices,

Welcoming further the decision taken by the Conference on Disarmament on 10 August 1993 to give its Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban a mandate to negotiate a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty, and fully endorsing the contents of that decision,

Convinced that a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices would be a significant contribution to nuclear non-proliferation in all its aspects,

1. Recommends the negotiation in the most appropriate international forum of a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

2. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to provide assistance for examination of verification arrangements for such a treaty as required;

3. Calls upon all States to demonstrate their commitment to the objectives of a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

Nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace

Africa

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993⁽⁶⁷⁾ a report on the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1964.⁽⁶⁸⁾ The report contained the text of a resolution on the subject adopted by the IAEA General Conference on 1 October and a report by the IAEA Director General on the Agency's verification activities in South Africa, in which he stated that in April an IAEA team in South Africa had found that the dismantling and destruction of weapons components and the destruction of technical documentation were nearly complete. Further, the team found no indication that there remained any sensitive components of the nuclear-weapons programme that had not been either rendered useless or converted to commercial non-nuclear applications or peaceful nuclear usage.

Expert group meeting. In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, in October 1993,⁽⁶⁹⁾ submitted the report of the Third Meeting of the Group of Experts to Draw up a Draft Treaty or Convention on the Denuclearization of Africa (Harare, Zimbabwe, 5-8 April), organized by the United Nations in cooperation with OAU. Attached to the Group's report was the draft text of an African nuclear-weapon-free zone treaty, together with four annexes and three protocols. The Group requested the Secretary-General to convene a further meeting in order to finalize the drafting of a treaty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/86 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo in July 1964, in which they solemnly declare their readiness to undertake, through an international agreement to be concluded under United Nations auspices, not to manufacture or acquire control of atomic weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961 and 47/76 of 15 December 1992, its earliest and latest on the subject, as well as all its previous resolutions on the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa,

Desirous of ensuring the implementation of the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Calling upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolutions CM/Res.1342(LIV) and CM/Res.1395(LVI)Rev.1 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-fourth and fifty-sixth ordinary sessions, held at Abuja in May and June 1991 and at Dakar in June 1992, respectively,

Noting that the Government of South Africa acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 10 July 1991 and that it concluded a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency, which entered into force on 16 September 1991, and committed itself to early and full implementation of that agreement,

Noting also the announcement by South Africa that it had voluntarily abandoned its nuclear deterrent capability before accession to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and of its standing invitation to the Agency to inspect past nuclear-weapon-programme activities and facilities and to verify its disclosure,

Recalling resolution GC(XXXVII)/RES/625 on an African nuclear-weapon-free zone, adopted on 1 October 1993 by the General Conference of the Agency,

Stressing that the full disclosure of South Africa's nuclear installations and materials is essential to the peace and security of the region and to the success of the commendable efforts exerted by the African States towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa,

Welcoming the progress made at the Third Meeting of the Group of Experts to Draw up a Draft Treaty or Convention on the Denuclearization of Africa, which was organized by the United Nations in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and held at Harare from 5 to 8 April 1993,

1. Takes note of the report of the Third Meeting of the Group of Experts to Draw up a Draft Treaty or Convention on the Denuclearization of Africa;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

4. Takes note of the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the Agency's verification activities in South Africa;

5. Calls upon South Africa to continue to comply fully with the implementation of its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency;

6. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which he has rendered effective assistance to the Organization of African Unity in organizing the meetings of the above-mentioned Group of Experts;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to take appropriate action to enable the Group of Experts designated by the United Nations in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity to meet during 1994 at Windhoek and Addis Ababa, in order to finalize the drafting of a treaty on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa, and to submit the text of the treaty to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session under an agenda item entitled "Final text of a treaty on an African nuclear-weapon-free zone";

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the progress made by the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency in ensuring the full implementation of the safeguards agreement with South Africa.

Latin America

At the regional level, the process of consolidation of the regime established by the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) through amendments adopted in 1992⁽⁷⁰⁾ continued. Mexico was the first State to deposit its instrument of ratification. In 1993, Dominica became party to the Treaty, bringing the total number of parties to 33 at 31 December.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/85 without vote.

Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 1911(XVIII) of 27 November 1963 it expressed the hope that the States of Latin America would take appropriate measures to conclude a treaty that would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it voiced its confidence that, once such a treaty was concluded, all States, and particularly the nuclear-weapon States, would lend it their full cooperation for the effective realization of its peaceful aims,

Considering that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965 it established the principle of an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations between nuclear-weapon States and those which do not possess such weapons,

Recalling that the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was opened for signature at Mexico City on 14 February 1967,

Recalling also that in its preamble the Treaty of Tlatelolco states that military denuclearized zones are not an end in themselves but rather a means for achieving general and complete disarmament at a later stage,

Recalling further that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty of Tlatelolco as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that the Treaty of Tlatelolco is open for signature to all the sovereign States of Latin America and the Caribbean and that it contains two additional protocols that are open for signature, respectively, to the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for territories located within the zone of application of the Treaty and to the nuclear-weapon States,

Bearing in mind also that, with the adherence in 1993 of Dominica, the Treaty of Tlatelolco is in force for twenty-five sovereign States of the region,

Recalling that since 1992 Additional Protocol I has been in force for all the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for territories located within the zone of application of the Treaty,

Recalling also that since 1974 Additional Protocol II has been in force for the five nuclear-weapon States,

Mindful that international conditions are more propitious for the consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty of Tlatelolco,

Recalling further that in 1992 the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean approved and opened for signature a set of amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, submitted jointly by Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Mexico, with the aim of enabling the full entry into force of that instrument,

Noting with satisfaction the holding of the thirteenth regular session of the General Conference at Mexico City on 27 and 28 May 1993,

Noting that the Government of Cuba has declared that, in pursuit of regional unity, it would be ready to sign the Treaty of Tlatelolco once all the States of the region have assumed the undertakings of that Treaty,

Taking into account the declaration presented by the delegation of Brazil at the aforementioned session of the General Conference in which it was stated that the full entry into force of the Treaty of Tlatelolco for Argentina, Brazil and Chile was imminent,

Also noting with satisfaction that on 1 September 1993 the Government of Mexico made that country the first State to deposit its instrument of ratification of the amendments to articles 14, 15, 16, 19 and 20 of the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference on 26 August 1992 in its resolution 290(VII),

1. Welcomes the concrete steps taken by several countries of the region during the past year for the consolidation of the regime of military denuclearization established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Notes with satisfaction the joint declaration by the Governments of Argentina, Brazil and Chile to the effect that the entry into force of the Treaty of Tlatelolco for those countries is imminent;

3. Urges the countries of the region that have not yet done so to deposit their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V) of 3 July 1990, 268(XII) of 10 May 1991 and 290(VII) of 26 August 1992;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report⁽⁷²⁾ describing major international developments bearing on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East and the attitudes of States in the region on such a zone and related questions. He noted that, as of May, the United Nations was invited to participate in the work of the Middle East Multilateral Working Group on Arms Control and Regional Security and that the prospects for establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East were somewhat more promising than a few years earlier.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/71 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989, 45/52 of 4 December 1990, 46/30 of 6 December 1991 and

47/48 of 9 December 1992 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing also the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 47/48,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned seriously to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of resolution GC(XXXVII)/RES/627, adopted on 1 October 1993 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-seventh regular session, concerning the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East;

4. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

5. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

6. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

7. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 46/30 and taking into account the evolving situation in the region, and to seek from those States their views on the measures outlined in chapters III and IV of the study annexed to his report or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

South Asia

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in July 1993 a report⁽⁷⁶⁾ summarizing the views of one Government (United Kingdom) on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/72 by recorded vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986, 42/29 of 30 November 1987, 43/66 of 7 December 1988, 44/109 of 15 December 1989, 45/53 of 4 December 1990, 46/31 of 6 December 1991 and 47/49 of 9 December 1992 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note with appreciation of the declarations issued at the highest level by the Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes, reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Taking note also of the proposal to hold consultations among five nations with a view to ensuring nuclear non-proliferation in the region,

Considering that the eventual participation of other States, as appropriate, in this process could be useful,

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

At its 1993 session (New York, 21 June-2 July),⁽⁷⁷⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean considered new alternative approaches to achieving the goals contained in the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.⁽⁷⁸⁾

The Committee dealt mainly with the implementation of a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽⁷⁹⁾ by which it was asked to consider new alternative approaches and to address the complex ramifications of the issues involved and differing perceptions on those issues, as well as its future role. The Chairman's summary of the discussion, annexed to the Committee's report, focused on: the changing international situation and its impact on the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace; ramifications of the issues involved and differing perceptions on those issues; new alternative approaches; and the future role of the Ad Hoc Committee.

The Committee recommended that it continue to consider new alternative approaches, building on the deliberations at its 1993 session, with a view to reaching early agreement to give new impetus to the process of strengthening cooperation and ensuring peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region. In that context, it recommended that the Assembly invite the views of

Member States, including views on the new alternative approaches discussed at its 1993 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/82 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolution 47/59 of 9 December 1992 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the report on the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Recalling further paragraphs 15 and 16 of chapter III of the Final Document adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta in September 1992,

Noting that great-Power rivalry is being replaced by a new and welcome phase of confidence, trust and cooperation, and that the improved international political environment following the end of the cold war has created favourable opportunities to renew comprehensive multilateral and regional efforts towards the realization of the goals of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

Welcoming the positive developments in international political relations, which offer opportunities for enhancing peace, security and cooperation and which have been reflected in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean,

Reaffirming the importance of the freedom of navigation in the high seas, including in the Indian Ocean, in accordance with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Convinced that the Ad Hoc Committee should continue its consideration of new alternative approaches,

Emphasizing the need for the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to cooperate with and participate in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, particularly at a time when the Committee is actively engaged in the task of developing new alternative approaches,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue consideration of new alternative approaches building upon its deliberations at the session held in 1993, with a view to reaching early agreement to give new impetus to the process of strengthening cooperation and ensuring peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region;

3. Calls upon the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to participate in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

4. Invites Member States to submit to the Secretary-General, by 31 May 1994, their views on new alternative approaches, including those discussed at the 1993 session of the Ad Hoc Committee and contained in its report to the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, by 30 June 1994, a report based on replies received from Member States;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold a session during 1994, of a duration of not more than five working days;

7. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace".

Other nuclear and related issues

The United Nations disarmament forums considered several less prominent nuclear and related issues that had been on their agendas for a number of years.

Disarmament Commission consideration.

The Commission again discussed the item "Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons", which it had first considered in 1991.⁽⁶⁰⁾ The Commission entrusted Working Group I with the item but, in view of the Commission's decision to postpone conclusion of the item to 1994, the Group held only five meetings between 22 April and 6 May. The Group had before it new working papers submitted by Australia,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Russian Federation⁽⁶¹⁾

and South Africa.⁽⁸²⁾ On the basis of the four subjects agreed on in 1992,⁽⁸³⁾ the Chairman proposed the following general outline for guidelines and recommendations for nuclear disarmament: a general overview concerning the relationship between the process of nuclear disarmament and international peace and security and a review and assessment of recent developments in the process of nuclear disarmament; mechanisms for nuclear disarmament; the role of the United Nations system; and conditions and measures required for strengthening the process of nuclear disarmament. The general outline was annexed to the Commission's report.⁽⁸⁴⁾

Conference on Disarmament consideration.

In view of the agreement by members of the Conference to focus on four agenda items in 1993, the Conference dealt with a number of items only in plenary meetings (see below, under "Disarmament machinery"). It decided not to establish ad hoc committees on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and on prevention of nuclear war, including all related matters. In addition, in the context of the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons", it did not establish its traditional ad hoc committee on radiological weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/61 without vote.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking note of paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Determined to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

Noting that in the course of its 1992 and 1993 sessions the Conference on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: radiological weapons",

Taking into account the sections of the reports of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Reaffirms that effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to keep under review, with expert assistance, as appropriate, the questions of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons with a view to making, when necessary, recommendations on undertaking specific negotiations on the identified types of such weapons;

3. Calls upon all States, immediately following the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament, to give favourable consideration to those recommendations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue the practice of reporting the results of its consideration of these questions in its annual report to the General Assembly;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Also on 16 December and on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 48/76 B by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Convinced also that a multilateral agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should strengthen international security and contribute to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the Treaty between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed in Moscow on 3 January 1993, aimed at reducing the strategic arsenals to an aggregate level not to exceed 3,500 deployed strategic warheads for each side no later than the year 2003,

Conscious that the recent steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Stressing that an international convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1993 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a possible basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to this Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Convinced also that this Convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Transparency and the arms Register

In the area of transparency—the systematic provision of information under formal or informal international arrangements—an important development took place in 1993 with the issuance of the first report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms (see below),⁽⁸⁵⁾ established in accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request.⁽⁸⁶⁾ The report presented official governmental data on arms transfers in seven major categories of what were considered to be the most destabilizing weapons systems. With almost all of the major exporters having reported to the Register, it was estimated that most of the world's trade in major conventional arms in 1992 was known. Despite the fact that several known major arms-recipient States—particularly in the Middle East and Asia—did not report, the data in the Register accounted for approximately two thirds of all imports.

Conference on Disarmament consideration.

On 21 January 1993,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Conference on Disarmament established an Ad Hoc Committee on Transparency in Armaments, which held 15 meetings between 19 March and 23 August.⁽⁸⁷⁾ In 1991,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the General Assembly had called on the Conference to address the interrelated aspects of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of arms, including military holdings and procurement through national production, and to elaborate universal and non-discriminatory practical means to increase openness and transparency. The Conference was also asked to address the problems and the elaboration of practical means to increase openness and transparency related to the transfer of high technology with military applications and to weapons of mass destruction, in accordance with existing legal instruments.

Many suggestions and working papers were presented on a wide variety of topics, several of them containing concrete proposals for practical measures to increase openness and transparency. Although agreement was not reached on any of them, it was felt that many of the issues contained therein were useful for future consideration and work with a view to promoting trust, confidence-building and stability. At the conclusion of its work, the Ad Hoc Committee recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the Conference's 1994 session.

Register of Conventional Arms

In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Secretary-General issued in October 1993(85) the first report on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms. He provided information received from 83 Member States on their national arms import and export policies, legislation and administrative procedures. Of those States, 33 provided background information on military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies. Annexed to the report was a list of the seven major arms categories used for reporting to the Register—battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships, and missiles and missile launchers—and their definitions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 E without vote.

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

3. Reaffirms its request to the Secretary-General to prepare a report, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts to be convened in 1994 on the basis of equitable geographical representation, on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, taking into account the work of the Conference on Disarmament and the views expressed by Member States, so that a decision may be taken by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are made available for the United Nations Secretariat to operate and maintain the Register;

5. Encourages the Conference on Disarmament to continue its work undertaken in response to the requests contained in paragraphs 12 to 15 of resolution 46/36 L;

Transparency of military expenditures

In an August report with later addenda,⁽⁸⁹⁾ the Secretary-General presented information received from 33 Member States on their military expenditures, as requested by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽⁹⁰⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/62 without vote.

Reduction of military budgets: transparency of military expenditures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, which introduced the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, 46/25 of 6 December 1991 and 47/54 B of 9 December 1992, dealing with the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters,

Noting that since then national reports on military expenditures have voluntarily been submitted by a number of Member States belonging to different geographic regions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing Member States with the reports on military expenditures,

Welcoming the decision of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, as contained in the Vienna Document 1990 of the negotiations on confidence- and security-building measures, to exchange information annually on their military budgets, on the basis of the categories of the United Nations standardized reporting system,

Welcoming also the recent progress achieved in arms limitations and disarmament, which, in the long term, will lead to significant reductions in military expenditures,

Convinced that the end of the East-West confrontation and the resulting improvement of international relations form a sound basis for promoting further openness and transparency on all military matters,

Emphasizing that an increased flow and exchange of information on military expenditures will contribute to the predictability of military activities, thus strengthening international peace and security on a global and regional level,

Recalling that the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters stated that the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures should continue in operation and could be further improved,

1. Calls upon all Member States to participate in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures as adopted by the General Assembly;

(For information on the 1993 activities of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint, see above, under "Non-proliferation".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/68 by recorded vote.

Stressing that the critical importance of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is universally recognized and that the issue of verification is a matter of concern to all nations,

Recognizing that the United Nations, in accordance with its role and responsibilities established under the Charter, can make a significant contribution in the field of verification, in particular of multilateral agreements, and taking into consideration its specific experience,

Affirming its continued support for the sixteen principles of verification drawn up by the Disarmament Commission,

Noting that recent developments in international relations continue to underscore the importance of effective verification of existing and future agreements to limit or eliminate arms, and that some of these developments have significant effects on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification, which require careful and ongoing examination,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to the statement of 31 January 1992 adopted at the conclusion of the first meeting held by the Security Council at the level of Heads of State and Government,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the occasion of Disarmament Week,

Welcoming also the conclusion of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, which contains an unprecedented regime of verification, and the ongoing work to bring this Convention into force,

Recalling that in its resolution 47/45 it requested the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 1990 study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification and in view of significant developments in international relations since that study, to seek the views of Member States on:

(b) Explore the further development of guidelines and principles for the involvement of the United Nations in verification;

(c) Review the conclusions of the 1990 study group with particular attention to the ways that the United Nations might facilitate verification through relevant procedures, processes and bodies for acquiring, integrating and analysing verification information from a variety of sources;

Compliance

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/63 without vote.

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/26 of 6 December 1991 and other relevant resolutions on the question,

Recognizing the abiding concern of all Member States for maintaining respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements and other obligations on arms limitation and disarmament if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements and other obligations not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements and other obligations,

Stressing also that any weakening of confidence in such agreements and other obligations diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing, in this context, that full compliance by parties with existing agreements and the resolving of compliance concerns effectively can, inter alia, facilitate the conclusion of additional arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Believing that compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is a matter of interest and concern to all members of the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations has played and should continue to play in that regard,

Convinced that resolution of non-compliance questions that have arisen with regard to arms limitation and disarmament obligations would contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

Welcoming the universal recognition of the critical importance of the question of compliance with and verification of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and other obligations,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the spirit and provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications that non-compliance with arms limitation and disarmament obligations has for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Also calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of non-compliance questions, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Welcomes the role that the United Nations has played in restoring the integrity of certain arms limitation and disarmament agreements and in the removal of threats to peace;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance that may be necessary in restoring and protecting the integrity of arms limitation and disarmament agreements;

6. Encourages efforts by States parties to develop additional cooperative measures, as appropriate, that can increase confidence in compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament obligations and reduce the possibility of misinterpretation and misunderstanding;

7. Notes the contribution that verification experiments and research can make and already have made in confirming and improving verification procedures for arms limitation and disarmament agreements under study or negotiation, thereby providing an opportunity, from the time that such agreements enter into force, for enhancing confidence in the effectiveness of verification procedures as a basis for determining compliance;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session an item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament obligations".

Regional disarmament

At the regional level, a number of initiatives were taken in 1993 to seek the adoption of arms limitation and disarmament measures, as well as of confidence-building measures.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission's working group on a regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security considered the subject between 21 April and 7 May 1993 under the following topics: relationship between regional disarmament and global security and arms limitation and disarmament; principles and guidelines; ways and means; machineries and modalities; and role of the United Nations. It agreed to concentrate on the last three topics, given the fact that the first two had been the focus of attention in 1992.⁽⁹⁴⁾ In addition to documents submitted by members at previous sessions, three new documents were submitted by South Africa.⁽⁹⁵⁾ Following intensive deliberations, the working group adopted guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security, which was annexed to the Commission's report.⁽⁸⁴⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 General Assembly decision,⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report presenting the views of three Member States (Belarus, Namibia and New Zealand) on conventional disarmament on a regional scale.⁽⁹⁷⁾

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 G without vote.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/52 G and 47/52 J of 9 December 1992,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and to international law in the conduct of their international relations,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Noting that regional arrangements for disarmament and arms limitation may free resources of participating States for peaceful purposes, inter alia, the promotion of their economic and social development,

Reaffirming its firm conviction that the regional approach to disarmament is essential to strengthening international peace and security at the regional and global levels,

Welcoming the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional level,

Noting with satisfaction the important progress made in various regions of the world through the adoption of arms limitation, peace, security and cooperation agreements, including those related to the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction, and encouraging States in the regions concerned to continue implementing those agreements,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments for all the participating States, would enhance the security of all States and would thus contribute to international peace and security,

Recognizing the useful role played by the United Nations regional centres,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission, containing the text, adopted by the Commission at its 1993 substantive session, of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security,

Expressing its appreciation for the work accomplished by the Disarmament Commission in finalizing the text of those guidelines and recommendations,

1. Endorses the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session, and recommends them to all Member States for implementation;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Affirms also that multifaceted cooperation among States of a region, especially encompassing the political, economic, social and cultural fields, can be conducive to the strengthening of regional security and stability;

4. Encourages States to reach, wherever possible, freely concluded agreements at the regional level on confidence- and security-building measures, disarmament and arms limitations, arrangements to prevent the proliferation in all its aspects of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, zones of peace and zones free of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, as well as consultative and cooperative arrangements;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional level in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional level;

6. Also encourages States to address, in regional arrangements for disarmament and arms limitations, the question of the accumulation of conventional weapons beyond the legitimate self-defence requirements of States;

7. Encourages States of a region to examine the possibility of creating, on their own initiative, regional mechanisms and/or institutions for the establishment of measures in the framework of an effort of regional disarmament or for the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts with the assistance, if requested, of the United Nations;

8. Invites Member States and regions to bring to the attention of the General Assembly results achieved on regional disarmament, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the basis of the replies received;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991 and 47/52 J of 9 December 1992,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note also of the recent proposals for disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of smaller States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

On the same date, the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 J by recorded vote.

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Believing that militarily significant States, and States with larger military capabilities, have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that one of the principal objectives of conventional arms control should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, as a first step, to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

Africa

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report on regional confidence-building measures⁽⁹⁹⁾ which focused on the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, established by him in 1992.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ The Committee's second meeting (Bujumbura, Burundi) was held at the expert level from 8 to 10 March and at the ministerial level on 11 and 12 March. The third meeting (Libreville, Gabon) was held at the expert level from 30 August to 1 September and at the ministerial level on 2 and 3 September. The Committee adopted a non-aggression pact between the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States and decided to submit it for signature by the heads of State and/or Government of the subregion. It mandated its officers to play a more active political role and to undertake visits of solidarity and sympathy to countries engaged in conflict. Pending the establishment of a system to manage crises and conflicts in the subregion, the Committee recommended the adoption of a number of transitional measures relating to policy, legislation and administration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/76 A by recorded vote.

Regional confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the United Nations and its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the guidelines for general and complete disarmament adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 43/78 H and 43/85 of 7 December 1988, 44/21 of 15 November 1989, 45/58 M of 4 December 1990, 46/37 B of 6 December 1991 and 47/53 F of 15 December 1992,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to regional disarmament and to international security, in accordance with the principles of the Charter,

Convinced that the resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the establishment by the Secretary-General on 28 May 1992 of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, the purpose of which is to encourage arms limitation, disarmament, non-proliferation and development in the subregion,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional confidence-building measures, which deals chiefly with the meetings of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, held at Bujumbura in March 1993 and at Libreville in August and September 1993;

2. Reaffirms its support for efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament, non-proliferation and the peaceful settlement of disputes in Central Africa;

3. Also reaffirms its support for the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee adopted at the organizational meeting held at Yaounde in 1992;

4. Welcomes the results of the meetings of the Standing Advisory Committee held at Bujumbura and at Libreville, particularly the adoption of the non-aggression pact between the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States, a pact that is likely to contribute to the prevention of conflicts and to confidence-building in the subregion;

5. Takes note of the readiness of the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States to reduce the military forces, equipment and budgets in the subregion and to carry out a study on that subject;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance to the Central African States in implementing the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Regional confidence-building measures".

Conventional weapons and advanced technologies

Questions related to conventional weapons and armed forces and to military technology continued to be addressed in different disarmament forums. Most States referred to conventional disarmament in the context of regional disarmament, confidence-building measures (including transparency), and exports and imports of conventional weapons and science and technology. With the conclusion of a number of agreements on significant reductions of nuclear weapons, there had been growing concern over the fact that conventional weapons were increasingly used in areas of tension. Although some progress had been made at the regional level in the reduction of conventional weapons, there was no discernible progress at the global level. Over the last several years, the efforts of the international community had come to focus on ways to regulate exports and imports of arms, including efforts to reduce illicit traffic, and especially to regulate the transfer of high technology with military applications. In addition to those issues, the economic repercussions of efforts to reduce or regulate conventional arms had attracted the attention of the international community.

International arms transfers

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁰¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted the reply received from one Member State (Colombia) on its national legislation and regulations on the authorization of arms transfers and prevention of the illicit arms traded⁽¹⁰²⁾ Colombia's reply included a statistical table of arms destined for illicit and destabilizing activities that had been confiscated by the military forces and national police.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 F without vote.

International arms transfers

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/75 I of 7 December 1988, 46/36 H of 6 December 1991 and 47/54 A of 9 December 1992, and its decisions 45/415 of 4 December 1990 and 47/419 of 9 December 1992,

Realizing the urgent need to resolve underlying conflicts, to diminish tensions and to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security in a world free from the scourge of war and the burden of armaments,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps in order to strengthen that role,

Recognizing that, in the context of international arms transfers, the illicit arms traffic is a disturbing, dangerous and increasingly common phenomenon, and that, with the technical sophistication and destructive capability of conventional weapons, the destabilizing effects of the illicit arms traffic increase,

Considering that, in the context of international arms transfers, the illicit arms traffic, by its clandestine nature, defies transparency and until now has escaped inclusion within the Register of Conventional Arms,

Realizing that arms obtained through the illicit arms traffic are most likely to be used for violent purposes, and that even small arms so obtained, directly or indirectly, by underground organizations such as mercenary groups can pose a threat to the security and political stability of the States affected,

Stressing that effective control over the imports and exports of conventional weapons falls under the responsibility of Member States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Calls upon all Member States to give priority to eradicating the illicit arms traffic associated with destabilizing activities, such as terrorism, drug trafficking and common criminal acts, and to take immediate action towards this end;
3. Urges Member States to monitor arms transfers effectively and to strengthen or adopt strict measures in an effort to prevent arms from falling into the hands of parties engaged in the illicit arms traffic;
4. Notes that the Disarmament Commission, at its organizational session in 1993, included the question of international arms transfers, with particular reference to General Assembly resolution 46/36 H, in the agenda of its substantive session in 1994, and requests the Commission to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-ninth session;
5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "International illicit arms traffic".

Measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991 and its decision 47/419 of 9 December 1992 on international arms transfers,

Considering that the availability of massive quantities of conventional weapons is a contributory factor to armed conflicts around the world,

Stressing the need for measures that curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional weapons,

Recognizing that the excessive quantity of conventional weapons in a number of countries constitutes a source of destabilization of their national and their regional security,

Convinced that peace and security are imperatives for economic development and reconstruction,

1. Invites Member States to take appropriate enforcement measures directed at ending the illegal export of conventional weapons from their territories;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Governments on effective ways and means of collecting weapons illegally distributed in countries, in the event that such countries so request, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Before approval of the draft text in the First Committee, Cuba introduced amendments⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ to the fourth preambular paragraph and paragraph 2. The first amendment was adopted by a recorded vote of 105 to 1, with 34 abstentions, and the second by 100 to 1, with 40 abstentions.

Science and technology

In 1993, differences of view persisted concerning the role of science and technology in the context of international security. Most industrialized countries maintained that there was a need to strengthen the existing control regimes regarding the transfer of science and technology that could be used for military purposes, while most developing countries considered that such regimes were discriminatory and adversely affected their economic development. Mention was also made of the danger of the possible dissemination of knowledge regarding weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery.

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1992⁽¹⁰³⁾ the Secretary-General continued to follow scientific and technological developments in order to assess emerging new technologies. In a September report⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ he stated that between 1991 and 1993 detailed discussion had taken place in the Disarmament Commission on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security and that further deliberations would be conducted in 1994 with a view to concluding the item. As the item was still under consideration, it was premature for any further action to be taken. He pointed out that his report on the relationship between disarmament and development⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ covered certain considerations that showed how scientific and technological developments had an impact on international security (see below, under "Economic aspects of disarmament").

Disarmament Commission consideration.

The Disarmament Commission established a working group to deal with the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields. The group held six meetings between 21 April and 8 May in addition to informal consultations. On 27 April, the group established a drafting group which held 13 meetings.

The working group based its deliberations on a working paper presented by the Chairman, prepared on the basis of a text contained in the report of the corresponding working group of 1992,⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ and on working papers submitted during the 1993 session. As at its 1992 session, the group concentrated on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security; science and technology for disarmament; the transfer of high technology with military applications; the role of science and technology in other related fields; and the role of the United Nations. New papers were submitted by Australia⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ Brazil and Canada⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ and Cuba⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ Although the group made progress in reconciling differences on a large number of issues, differences of opinion remained. It thereof recommended that the debate be continued at the 1994 session. That recommendation was made on the understanding that the Chairman's working paper, as annexed to the Commission's report⁽⁸⁴⁾ could serve as a basis for further work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/66 by recorded vote.

Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it unanimously stressed the importance of both qualitative and quantitative measures in the process of disarmament,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting with concern the potential in technological advances for application to military purposes, which could lead to more sophisticated weapons and new weapon systems,

Stressing the interests of the international community in the subject and the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on the security environment and on the process of arms limitation and disarmament, and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Emphasizing that the proposal contained in its resolution 43/77 A of 7 December 1988 is without prejudice to research and development efforts being undertaken for peaceful purposes,

Noting the results of the United Nations Conference on New Trends in Science and Technology: Implications for International Peace and Security, held at Sendai, Japan, in April 1990,^a and recognizing, in this regard, the need for the scientific and policy communities to work together in dealing with the complex implications of technological change,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security";^a

2. Takes note also of the interim report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of its resolution 45/60 of 4 December 1990;

3. Fully agrees that:

(a) The international community needs to position itself better to follow the nature and direction of technological change;

(b) The United Nations can serve as a catalyst and a clearing-house for ideas to this purpose;

4. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to conclude its work on the agenda item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields" and to submit to the General Assembly its recommendations in this regard;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to follow scientific and technological developments in order to make an assessment of emerging new technologies and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a framework for technology assessment guided, inter alia, by the criteria suggested in his report;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security".

The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/44 of 9 December 1992,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission on its 1993 substantive session, in particular on the work of Working Group III on agenda item 6, entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields",

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 September 1993 on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security,

Recognizing that science and technology per se are deemed to be neutral, that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting that qualitative improvements in science and technology with military applications have implications for international security and that States, in this regard, should assess carefully the impact of the use of science and technology on international security,

Recognizing also that progress in the application of science and technology contributes substantially to the implementation of arms control and disarmament agreements, inter alia, in the fields of weapons disposal, military conversion and verification,

Recalling that norms and guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account legitimate requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that they do not deny access to high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing that commitment to, and the fulfilment of, comprehensive and balanced objectives of non-proliferation in all its aspects pertaining to the acquisition or transfer of high technology relevant to weapons of mass destruction are essential for the maintenance of international security and international cooperation and for the promotion of transfers of such technology for peaceful purposes,

Noting the interest of the international community in cooperation in the fields of disarmament-related science and technology and the transfer of high technology with military applications,

Mindful that international cooperation should be encouraged with respect to the production of disarmament-related technical equipment with the purpose, inter alia, of reducing the costs of implementing arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

1. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to conclude its work on the agenda item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields" in 1994 and to submit as soon as possible specific recommendations on this matter to the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to pursue constructively, in response to General Assembly resolution 46/36 L of 9 December 1991, its work on the agenda item entitled "Transparency in armaments", which includes consideration of the elaboration of practical means to increase openness and transparency related to the transfer of high technology with military applications;

3. Invites Member States to undertake additional efforts to apply science and technology for disarmament-related purposes and to make disarmament-related technologies available to interested States;

4. Also invites Member States to widen multilateral dialogue, bearing in mind the proposal for seeking universally acceptable norms or guidelines that would regulate international transfers of high technology with military applications;

5. Encourages the United Nations to contribute, within existing mandates, to promoting the application of science and technology for peaceful purposes;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields".

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocols

Throughout 1993, there was renewed interest, in different international forums, in questions related to the prohibition of certain conventional weapons considered to be excessively injurious, especially anti-personnel mines. While the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons) had been kept under review with regard to the status of adherence ever since its conclusion in 1980,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ the question of broadening its scope, either by amending its Protocols or adopting additional protocols, had gained momentum in the last few years, as concerns had grown over the enormous quantity of mines sown on the territory of many countries and the consequent suffering of civilians, not only in time of war but also after the cessation of hostilities. During the year, three related subjects were discussed: the Convention and its Protocol II (on mines); a moratorium on the export of anti-personnel mines; and assistance in mine clearance.

Status of the Convention

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽¹¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report on the status of the Convention and its Protocols during the period 1 September 1989 to 31 August 1993.⁽¹¹²⁾

The number of States parties to the Convention stood at 41, as at 31 December 1993.⁽¹¹³⁾ During 1993, Latvia acceded to the Convention, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Czech Republic and Slovakia succeeded to it and New Zealand and Spain ratified it. The Convention and Protocols entered into force in 1983.⁽¹¹⁴⁾

Review conference

In October⁽¹¹²⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, on 9 February, France had requested him to convene, in conformity with article 8, paragraph 3, of the Convention, a conference to review the Convention and its Protocols, with priority to be given to anti-personnel mines. That request was transmitted to the parties to the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/79 by recorded vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982, 38/66 of 15 December 1983, 39/56 of 12 December 1984, 40/84 of 12 December 1985, 41/50 of 3 December 1986, 42/30 of 30 November 1987, 43/67 of 7 December 1988, 45/64 of 4 December 1990, 46/40 of 6 December 1991 and 47/56 of 9 December 1992,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Recalling also the role played by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the elaboration of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto,

Noting with satisfaction that, the conditions set forth in article 5 of the Convention having been met, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983,

Recalling further the commitment by the States that are parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto to respect the objectives and the provisions thereof, especially those set forth in the ninth preambular paragraph of the Convention, relating to the wish to prohibit or restrict further the use of certain conventional weapons, and believing that the positive results achieved in this area may facilitate the main talks on disarmament with a view to putting an end to the production, stockpiling and proliferation of such weapons,

Noting that, in conformity with article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to examine amendments to the Convention or to any of the Protocols thereto, to examine additional protocols concerning other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols or to review the scope and application of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to examine any proposed amendments or additional protocols,

Noting with satisfaction that a State party has asked the Secretary-General of the United Nations to convene, in conformity with article 8, paragraph 3, of the Convention, a conference to review the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto, giving priority to the question of anti-personnel land mines,

Noting also that international meetings have discussed possible restrictions on the use of other weapon categories presently not covered by the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto,

Reaffirming its conviction that a general and verifiable agreement on prohibitions or restrictions on the use of certain conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilians and combatants,

Being desirous of reinforcing international cooperation in the area of prohibitions or restrictions on the use of certain conventional weapons, and particularly for the removal of minefields, mines and booby traps,

Recalling in this respect its resolution 48/7 of 19 October 1993 on assistance in mine clearance,

1. Registers its satisfaction with the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with satisfaction that additional States have signed, ratified or accepted the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981, or have acceded to the Convention;

3. Urgently calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take all measures to become parties, as soon as possible, to the Convention and upon successor States to take appropriate measures so that ultimately access to this instrument will be universal;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in his capacity as Depositary of the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto, to inform it periodically of accessions to the Convention and the Protocols;

5. Welcomes the request to the Secretary-General to convene at an appropriate time, if possible in 1994, in accordance with article 8, paragraph 3, of the Convention, a conference to review the Convention;

6. Encourages the States parties to request the Secretary-General to establish as soon as possible a group of governmental experts to prepare the review conference and to furnish needed assistance and assure services, including the preparation of analytical reports that the review conference and the group of experts might need;

7. Calls upon the maximum number of States to attend the conference, to which the States parties may invite interested non-governmental organizations, in particular the International Committee of the Red Cross;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

A recorded vote on the fifth preambular paragraph was also requested in the Assembly. The paragraph was retained by 85 votes to 2, with 62 abstentions.

Land-mines

In February⁽¹¹⁵⁾ the President of the Security Council, in the context of the Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's 1992 report "An Agenda for Peace"⁽¹¹⁶⁾ asked the Secretary-General to address the problem of land-mines as a matter of special concern.

In June⁽¹¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported that he had instituted a coordinated programme of action for demining involving the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the Department of Peace-keeping Operations and others. Considerable progress was being made.

In view of the seriousness of the situation, the 12 EC members requested in August⁽¹¹⁸⁾ that an item entitled "Assistance in mine clearance" be inscribed on the agenda of the General Assembly's forty-eighth (1993) session. They stressed their conviction that a comprehensive programme of assistance in mine clearance which took into account all the aspects of economic and social reconstruction must be contemplated on a priority basis.

Symposium. The International Committee of the Red Cross organized a symposium on anti-personnel mines (Montreux, Switzerland, 21-23 April 1993) in the course of which a number of governmental and non-governmental experts addressed the humanitarian concerns raised by the use of such mines. The symposium concluded that there was a need to develop a coordinated strategy to tackle the medical, commercial, legal, technical, socio-economic and data-related aspects of the entire problem with a view to alleviating the sufferings of mine victims.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/7 without vote.

Assistance in mine clearance

The General Assembly,

Gravely alarmed by the increasing presence of mines and other unexploded devices resulting from armed conflicts,

Dismayed by the high number of victims of mines, especially among civilian populations, and taking note in this context of resolution 1993/83 of the Commission on Human Rights of 10 March 1993, on the effects of armed conflicts on children's lives,

Gravely concerned by the serious humanitarian, social, economic and ecological disruption which can be caused by the failure to remove mines and other unexploded devices,

Bearing in mind the serious threat which mines- and other unexploded devices pose to the safety, the health and the lives of personnel participating in humanitarian, peace-keeping and rehabilitation operations,

Aware that mines constitute an obstacle to reconstruction and economic development as well as to the restoration of normal social conditions,

Considering that, in addition to the responsibilities incumbent upon States, there is scope for the United Nations to strengthen its contribution to the solution of problems relating to mine clearance,

Taking note with interest, in this regard, of the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in paragraph 58 of his report of 17 June 1992 entitled "An Agenda for Peace", as well as in his report of 15 June 1993,

Recalling its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993 on the "Agenda for Peace", Taking note of the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 26 February 1993,

Recalling also its resolution 47/56 of 9 December 1992 on the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and in particular on the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II),

Noting with interest, in this regard, the convening by the Secretary-General of a review conference to amend the above-mentioned Convention and in particular its Protocol II,

Noting with satisfaction the inclusion in the mandate of several peace-keeping operations of provisions relating to mine clearance,

Commending the activities already undertaken by the United Nations system, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to address the solution of problems relating to the presence of mines,

Welcoming the establishment, within the Secretariat, of a coordinated mine-clearance programme,

1. Deplores the adverse consequences which can be caused by the failure to remove mines and other unexploded devices remaining in place after armed conflicts, and considers it a matter of urgency to correct the situation;

2. Stresses the importance of coordination by the United Nations of activities, including those by regional organizations, related to mine clearance, in particular those activities relating to information and training with a view to improving the effectiveness of activities in the field;

3. Invites all relevant programmes and bodies, multi-lateral or national, to include, in a coordinated manner, activities related to mine clearance in their humanitarian, social and economic assistance activities;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, before its forty-ninth session, a comprehensive report on the problems caused by the increasing presence of mines and other unexploded devices resulting from armed conflicts and on the manner in which the United Nations contribution to the solution of problems relating to mine clearance could be strengthened;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report consideration of the financial aspects of activities related to mine clearance and, in this context, of the advisability of establishing a voluntary trust fund to finance, in particular, information and training programmes relating to mine clearance and to facilitate the launching of mine-clearance operations;

6. Urges all Member States to extend full assistance and cooperation to the Secretary-General in this respect and to provide him with any information and data which could be useful in drawing up the above-mentioned report;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Assistance in mine clearance".

On 16 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 K without vote.

Moratorium on the export of anti-personnel land-mines

The General Assembly,

Noting that there are as many as 85 million uncleared land-mines throughout the world, particularly in rural areas,

Expressing deep concern that such mines kill or maim hundreds of people each week, mostly unarmed civilians, obstruct economic development and have other severe consequences, which include inhibiting the repatriation of refugees and the return of internally displaced persons,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolution 48/7 of 19 October 1993, by which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the problems caused by mines and other unexploded devices,

Convinced that a moratorium by States exporting anti-personnel land-mines that pose grave dangers to civilian populations would reduce substantially the human and economic costs resulting from the use of such devices and would complement the aforementioned initiative,

Noting with satisfaction that several States have already declared moratoriums on the export, transfer or purchase of anti-personnel land-mines and related devices,

1. Calls upon States to agree to a moratorium on the export of anti-personnel land-mines that pose grave dangers to civilian populations;

2. Urges States to implement such a moratorium;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report concerning progress on this initiative, including possible recommendations regarding further appropriate measures to limit the export of anti-personnel land-mines, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament".

Economic aspects of disarmament

Disarmament and development

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1993⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ reported on action taken with regard to the relationship between disarmament and development, particularly the implementation of priorities for the period 1990-1993, as determined by a high-level intra-Secretariat task force in 1990.⁽¹²⁰⁾ The task force had been established pursuant to the Final Document adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development⁽¹²¹⁾

Activities described by the Secretary-General included the Conference on International Cooperation to Promote Conversion from Military to Civilian Industry (Hong Kong, 7-10 July) and consideration of the matter in 1993 by the Disarmament Commission⁽⁸⁴⁾ He noted that the Commission recommended that every effort be made to apply scientific and technological resources, dedicated to military ends, to related activities in other fields, such as economic and social development, conversion, protection of the environment and other peaceful purposes. In addition, he had requested the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to coordinate the establishment of an interdepartmental task force on conversion and to prepare a preliminary proposal for its organization and programme of work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/70 on the scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacity for civilian use and sustainable development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/75 A without vote.

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Recalling further its resolution 47/52 F of 9 December 1992,

Bearing in mind the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta in September 1992,

Stressing the growing importance of the symbiotic relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and actions undertaken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

In 1993, positive developments in international relations caused differences of view to be less pronounced between the majority of States, on the one hand, and a small group of States, on the other, regarding the appropriateness of multilateral negotiations on preventing an arms race in outer space. In all forums dealing with the question, concern continued to be expressed about the danger of the militarization of outer space and the imporance and urgency of preventing an arms race in that environment.

Conference on Disarmament consideration. In 1993, the Conference on Disarmament⁽³⁵⁾ re-established its Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, which held 17 meetings between 16 February and 18 August⁽¹²²⁾ The Committee adopted the same programme of work as in 1992⁽¹²³⁾ which included the examination and identification of relevant issues; existing agreements; and existing proposals and future initiatives relating to the subject.

The Committee Chairman appointed friends of the Chairman, who held open-ended consultations on confidence-building measures in outer space and terminology and other relevant legal aspects related to the prevention of an arms race in outer space. In addition, the Committee benefited from scientific and technical contributions by experts from various delegations.

The Committee gave considerable attention to the question of confidence-building measures and the importance of transparency in outer space activities, which was discussed in conjunction with the possible formulation of a new mandate for the Committee. A number of Western and Eastern European delegations, as well as several members of the Group of 21, shared and supported the Chairman's view that the Ad Hoc Committee should be given a mandate to negotiate confidence-building measures. The majority of delegations, while agreeing that the Committee should be given such a mandate, emphasized that it should not be narrow but should encompass all relevant aspects of the prevention of an arms race in outer space. There was wide agreement that the conclusion of an international agreement, or agreements, to prevent an arms race in outer space remained the fundamental task of the Committee, and that concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements. It was recommended that the Conference on Disarmament re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee with an appropriate mandate at the beginning of the 1994 session, taking into account the work undertaken since 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/74 A by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming further paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on this question and the Final Document adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta in September 1992, and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing the grave danger for international peace and security of an arms race in outer space and of developments contributing to it,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that bilateral negotiations, begun in 1985 between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, were conducted with the declared objective of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Welcoming the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space at the 1993 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral body on disarmament, to continue to examine and identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990 and 47/51 of 9 December 1992, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that there was wide agreement in the Ad Hoc Committee that the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remained the fundamental task of the Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, building upon areas of convergence and taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1993 session of the Conference and at the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1994 session and to continue building upon areas of convergence, taking into account the work undertaken since 1985, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

10. Urges the Russian Federation and the United States of America to resume their bilateral negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Confidence-building measures in outer space

As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,⁽¹²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, by an October 1993 report, submitted a study on the application of confidence-building measures in outer space, prepared by a group of governmental experts.⁽¹²⁵⁾ The group prepared the report between July 1991 and July 1993, during which time it held four sessions in New York (29 July-2 August 1991, 23-27 March 1992, and 1-12 March and 6-16 July 1993). The experts examined specific aspects of the application of different confidence-building measures in outer space, including the different technologies available, and possibilities for defining appropriate mechanisms of international cooperation in specific areas of interest. They considered the current uses of outer space and emerging trends, with special emphasis on the technical problems involved, and described global multilateral and bilateral agreements concerning military and peaceful aspects of the exploration and uses of outer space.

Among other things, the group recommended that all States parties observe the provisions of the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;⁽¹²⁶⁾ that bilateral and multilateral mechanisms should continue to play an important role in considering and elaborating confidence-building measures in the context of preventing an arms race in outer space; and that institutional mechanisms to encourage international cooperation among States regarding space technology should be evaluated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/74 B without vote.

Study on the application of confidence-building measures in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, in which it requested the Secretary-General to carry out, with the assistance of government experts, a study on the specific aspects related to the application of different confidence-building measures in outer space, including the different technologies available, and possities for defining appropriate mechanisms of international cooperation in specific areas of interest,

Information and studies

Disarmament Information Programme

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1993 a report on activities carried out under the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme.⁽²⁾ Annexed to the report was a summary of the status of the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Programme as at 30 June 1993.

A symposium on transparency in armaments for the Mediterranean region was held (Florence, Italy, 29 March-1 April), in cooperation with the Forum on the Problems of Peace and War, to explore the concepts of openness and transparency as they applied to the pursuit of peace, security and disarmament. A conference on disarmament issues (Kyoto, Japan, 13-16 April), organized in cooperation with Japan, reviewed national security trends in the post-cold-war era and studied the challenges to disarmament in an increasingly interdependent world. A symposium on regional approaches to confidence- and security-building measures (Graz, Austria, 2-4 June) examined the challenges that confront States in implementing confidence-building concepts and the evolution of confidence-building methodology in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Latin America. A symposium on security, disarmament and confidence-building in the context of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) (Kiev, Ukraine, 27-30 September) focused on clarifying the security concerns of various CIS member States and exploring ways in which the newly independent States could be assisted to promote stability and cooperation in specific areas of concern.

The Centre for Disarmament Affairs (CDA) continued to produce and disseminate publications on disarmament. The Department of Public Information (DPI) produced radio and video programmes on disarmament for world-wide dissemination and included the subject in guided tours, lectures, press conferences, seminars and meetings. It also issued a press kit and documents and other information materials. United Nations information centres helped to provide press coverage and media support for workshops and seminars organized by CDA. In 1993, CDA maintained its involvement in a joint project with the International Association of University Presidents to develop prototype courses in arms control, disarmament and security for use at the undergraduate level and in professional schools worldwide.

As to special events, CDA supported an international non-governmental organization (NGO) conference (New York, 20-23 April), sponsored by the NGO Committee on Disarmament (New York) and the Special NGO Committee on Disarmament (Geneva), which had as its theme new realities: disarmament, peace-building and global security. Disarmament Week in 1993 was observed in New York and Geneva from 25 to 29 October. At a special meeting of the First Committee held on 29 October to commemorate the Week, opening statements were made by the Committee Chairman, the General Assembly President and the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. A symposium, held from 26 to 28 October under the auspices of DPI, CDA and the NGO Committee on Disarmament, discussed prospects for achieving a comprehensive test-ban treaty and a ban on the production of weapons-grade fissionable material, and for preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms and the discussion of transparency in armaments in the Conference on Disarmament; and progress towards a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa and confidence-building measures in Central Africa. (See below for a description of the 1993 activities of the disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme.)

In his annual report to the Assembly on the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters (see below)⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Board was informed that, in carrying out the activities of the Programme, CDA had continued to promote priorities such as non-proliferation, regional approaches to disarmament, openness and transparency and other confidence-building measures.

The Eleventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme was held in New York on 29 October, with 49 delegations participating⁽⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/76 D without vote.

United Nations Disarmament Information Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Bearing in mind its various resolutions on the subject, including resolution 47/53 D of 9 December 1992 in which it decided, inter alia, that the World Disarmament Campaign should be known thereafter as the "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme" and the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund as the "Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme",

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General of 24 August 1993 on the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, and of 22 September 1993 on the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters relating to the implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme, as well as the Final Act of the Eleventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the Programme, held on 29 October 1993,

Noting with appreciation the contributions that Member States have already made to the Programme,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 24 August 1993 on the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the resources available to him in disseminating as widely as possible information on arms limitation and disarmament to elected officials, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes, and in carrying out an active seminar and conference programme;

3. Notes with appreciation the contributions to the efforts of the Programme by the United Nations information centres and the regional centres for disarmament;

4. Recommends that the Programme should further focus its efforts:

(a) To inform, to educate and to generate public understanding of the importance of and support for multilateral action, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner;

(b) To facilitate unimpeded access to and an exchange of information on ideas between the public sector and public interest groups and organizations, and to provide an independent source of balanced and factual information that takes into account a range of views to help further an informed debate on arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(c) To organize meetings to facilitate exchanges of views and information between governmental and non-governmental sectors and between governmental and other experts in order to facilitate the search for common ground;

5. Invites all Member States to contribute to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

6. Commends the Secretary-General for supporting the efforts of universities, other academic institutions and non-governmental organizations active in the educational field in widening the world-wide availability of disarmament education, and invites him to continue to support and cooperate, without cost to the regular budget of the United Nations, with educational institutions and non-governmental organizations engaged in such efforts;

7. Decides that at its forty-ninth session there should be a twelfth United Nations Pledging Conference for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States which have not yet announced any voluntary contributions will do so, bearing in mind the objectives of the Third Disarmament Decade and the need to ensure its success;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report covering both the implementation of the activities of the Programme by the United Nations system during 1994 and the activities of the Programme contemplated by the system for 1995;

9. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme".

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported in September 1993⁽⁸⁾ on the activities of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament covering Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean for the period August 1992 to July 1993. He noted that during the period under review the financial situation of the centres remained precarious owing to a continued decline in voluntary contributions to their respective trust funds. The centres' programmes had been adjusted accordingly, resulting in drastically curtailed activities.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, established at Lome, Togo, in 1986,⁽⁹⁾ continued to focus on disseminating information relating to disarmament, peace and security, organizing seminars and conferences and undertaking studies. In cooperation with the Government of Namibia and the Friedrich Ebert Foundation Namibia Office, the Centre organized an international seminar (Windhoek, 24-26 February) which dealt with confidence- and security-building measures in southern Africa. The Centre also provided support to two meetings of the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Bujumbura, Burundi, 8-12 March, and Libreville, Gabon, 30 August-3 September). It continued to publish its quarterly newsletter, African Peace Bulletin.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October of that year⁽¹⁰⁾. Despite financial constraints, the Centre continued to expand its contacts and cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations, research centres, academic institutions and other United Nations bodies. As part of its programme for promoting awareness of regional security issues, the Centre held a workshop at Lima on 1 October 1992 on military expenditures in South America and their relation to overall government expenditures in general and to social expenditures in particular. In cooperation with CDA, the Centre organized a seminar on arms proliferation and confidence- and security-building measures in Latin America and the Caribbean (Asuncion, Paraguay, 18-20 January 1993). In June, it held a workshop on hemispheric strategic issues for scholars, retired military officers and diplomats and also the third annual seminar for the members of the Association of Military Attaches accredited in Peru. The Centre also provided assistance to Chile in organizing a workshop on chemical weapons (Santiago, 9 and 10 September), and to Ecuador and its Diplomatic Academy in organizing a seminar on disarmament and security in Latin America (Quito, 15-17 September). The Centre published its quarterly newsletter, Boletín, and its reference library continued to serve as a resource centre for students and researchers on issues of peace, security, disarmament and development in the region.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, inaugurated on 30 January 1989 at Kathmandu, Nepal, organized two major regional meetings in 1993. One, the fourth in the series (Kathmandu, 1-3 February), focused on national security and confidence-building in the region, and the second (Kyoto, 13-16 April), held in cooperation with the Government of Japan, centred on national security in an interdependent world. In conjunction with the latter meeting, the Centre cooperated with local authorities in organizing 3 one-day seminars on: early warning, preventive diplomacy and disarmament (Kyoto); new disarmament agenda and international security in the interdependent world (Nagasaki); and building on dialogue and searching for common security in Asia and the Pacific (Hiroshima). The Centre's activities also included disseminating information on disarmament and answering inquiries from the general public, students and NGOs.

Mindful of the provisions of Article 11, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations stipulating that a function of the General Assembly is to consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and arms limitation,

Bearing in mind that the changed international environment has created new opportunities for the pursuit of disarmament, as well as posed new challenges,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General containing the steps taken to strengthen the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat,

Convinced that the initiatives and activities mutually agreed upon by Member States of the respective regions aimed at fostering confidence, as well as the implementation and coordination of regional activities under the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, would encourage and facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament in these regions,

Welcoming the programme of activities carried out by the regional centres, which have contributed substantially to understanding and cooperation among the States in each particular region and have thereby strengthened the role assigned to each regional centre in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Taking note of the views on the regional centres contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters,

Recognizing the need to provide the regional centres with financial viability and stability so as to facilitate the effective planning and implementation of their respective programmes of activities,

Expressing its gratitude to the Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have contributed to the trust funds of the three regional centres,

1. Commends the activities being carried out by the regional centres in identifying and broadening the understanding of pressing disarmament and security issues and exploring optimum solutions under given specific conditions prevailing in each region, in accordance with their mandates;

2. Encourages the regional centres to continue intensifying their efforts in promoting cooperation among the States in their respective regions to facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament, with a view to strengthening peace and security;

3. Also encourages further use of the potential of the regional centres to maintain the increased interest in and momentum for revitalization of the Organization to meet the challenges of a new phase of international relations in order to fulfil the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations related to peace, disarmament and development, taking into account the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security as adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session;

4. Appeals once again to Member States, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the programmes of activities of the regional centres and their effective implementation;

Disarmament studies and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters (New York, 28 June-2 July)^(c) discussed current developments and trends in international affairs and their bearing on the role of the United Nations in international security and disarmament. The main issues discussed were the maintenance of peace, non-proliferation, conventional armament/disarmament and multilateral disarmament machinery. The Board expressed strong concern over the difficult financial situation of the three regional centres (see above).

In its capacity as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR), the Advisory Board considered and approved the report of the UNIDIR Director on the Institute's 1992-1993 activities (see below) and the proposed research programme and annual budget for 1994. It recommended a subvention from the United Nations regular budget of $220,000 for 1994 to assure the independence and financial viability of the Institute. In November⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Board's recommendation, which was supported by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to the General Assembly.

By resolution 48/230, section VIII, of 23 December, the Assembly approved the subvention.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In August⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the UNIDIR Director's report covering the period July 1992 to June 1993, which described UNIDIR's completed and ongoing research projects. Publication of the UNIDIR Newsletter continued, as did the fellowship programme enabling scholars from developing countries to undertake research on disarmament. UNIDIR also continued to publish studies on national concepts of security and to update its computerized information and documentation database service. Among its research projects were disarmament problems related to outer space; confidence-building measures for maritime security; economic aspects of disarmament; chemical weapons; and START implementation problems and nuclear non-proliferation efforts.

Disarmament studies programme

In 1993, a study on the application of confidence-building measures in outer space was completed and another, on verification in all its aspects including the role of the United Nations, was initiated.

With the assistance of a group of governmental experts, the Secretary-General carried out a study on the specific aspects related to the application of different confidence-building measures in outer space, including the different technologies available, and possibilities for defining appropriate mechanisms of international cooperation in specific areas of interest.⁽¹³⁾ (For details, see above, under "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".)

On 16 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 48/68, requested the Secretary-General to undertake, with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts, an in-depth study on verification (see above, under "Transparency and the arms register").

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

In October⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, stating that the emergence of new issues in the field of arms limitation, disarmament and security had led to a corresponding broadening in the focus of the content of the programme. In that context, the programme of lectures was revised to include such topics as regional approaches to disarmament, non-proliferation issues, openness and transparency, preventive diplomacy, conflict resolution, United Nations peace-keeping operations, international humanitarian law in armed conflicts and human dimensions of international security. The 1993 programme of studies, which began on 9 August at Geneva and ended on 29 October in New York, included a series of lectures; speaking, drafting and simulation exercises; preparation of individual research papers; attending the Conference on Disarmament and the General Assembly; study visits to IAEA headquarters at Vienna; and, at the invitation of the States concerned, visits to offices and institutions in Finland, Germany, Japan and Sweden.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/76 C without vote.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985, 41/60 H of 3 December 1986, 42/39 I of 30 November 1987, 43/76 F of 7 December 1988, 44/117 E of 15 December 1989, 45/59 A of 4 December 1990, 46/37 E of 6 December 1991 and 47/53 A of 9 December 1992,

Noting also with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Finland, Germany, Japan and Sweden for inviting the 1993 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Notes with satisfaction that, within the framework of the programme, the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat organizes regional disarmament workshops for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the Geneva-based programme within existing resources and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 48/64 without vote.

Education and information for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/123 of 15 December 1989 and 46/27 of 6 December 1991,

Taking into account the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in particular paragraph 106 thereof, in which the Assembly urged Governments and international governmental and non-governmental organizations to take steps to develop programmes of education for disarmament and peace studies at all levels,

Considering that paragraphs 99, 100 and 101 of the Final Document provide for the mechanisms of a programme to mobilize world public opinion to promote disarmament, including the dissemination of information and publicity to complement the educational work,

Also considering that the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme plays an important role in complementing the educational and information efforts for disarmament carried out by Member States within their own educational and cultural development systems,

Recognizing that the important changes that have taken place in the world aimed at promoting freedom, democracy, respect for and enjoyment of human rights, disarmament and social development contribute to the achievement of positive results in the promotion of education and information for disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts that the educational community is making in the preparation of curricula and activities to promote education for disarmament and peace, as a means of contributing to the implementation of resolutions 44/123 and 46/27,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his reports submitted pursuant to resolutions 44/123 and 46/27;

2. Also expresses its appreciation for the valuable information submitted by Member States, international governmental and non-governmental organizations and educational institutions for peace and disarmament and contained in the reports;

3. Reaffirms that, in order to achieve positive results, it is indispensable to carry out educational and advisory programmes that promote peace and disarmament at all levels and are aimed at changing basic attitudes with respect to aggression, violence, armaments and war, and that support regional and international measures geared to peace, security and cooperation;

4. Reiterates that the efforts of Member States, international governmental and non-governmental organizations and educational institutions for peace and disarmament, in the promotion of activities under the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, will strengthen not only education and information for disarmament, as described in the second and third preambular paragraphs above, but also the arms reduction and disarmament processes or agreements that are being carried out at the regional and international levels;

5. Invites Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations and educational institutions for peace and disarmament to redouble their efforts to respond to the appeal made in paragraph 106 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and to submit to the Secretary-General a report on their activities in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, under the item entitled "Education and information for disarmament" and from within existing resources, the reports requested in paragraph 5 above.

Chapter III

Trusteeship and decolonization

In 1993, the United Nations continued its efforts to eliminate colonialism. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) held its annual session in New York (10 February-28 May and 7 July-12 August) to consider various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. The Committee examined decolonization in general as well as the situation of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories.

The Trusteeship Council, composed of China, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, held its sixtieth session in New York from 12 to 17 May and on 1 November 1993, with its final meeting in January 1994.

The Council continued to supervise, on behalf of the Security Council, the one remaining Trust Territory under the International Trusteeship System—Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands—a strategic territory administered by the United States.

1960 Declaration on colonial countriesDecade for the Eradication of Colonialism

As called for in the plan of action adopted by the General Assembly in 1991(l) for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), which the Assembly had declared in 1988,⁽⁷⁾ the Committee on colonial countries organized a seminar in the Pacific region (Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea, 8-10 June 1993) to review political, economic and social conditions in the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). Political questions addressed were self-determination and the future political status of NSGTs. A broad range of economic and social questions were considered, including: development and its impact on self-determination; problems of small, structurally open economies; food production; tourism development; drug trafficking and money laundering; development of financial management expertise; human resources development; the role of specialized agencies and international and regional organizations in economic and social development; environmental issues; women in development; and access to information. It also considered regional cooperation in the preservation and protection of marine resources from over-exploitation; disaster preparedness and relief; sea and air transport; higher education; research and development; and regional pooling arrangements for sharing special skills and expertise. On 10 June, the seminar adopted a summary of its discussions and recommendations⁽³⁾ The guidelines and rules of procedure for the seminar were contained in a separate report to the Committee on colonial countries.⁽⁴⁾

On 14 July⁽⁵⁾ the Committee's Working Group recommended that the summary of discussions of the seminar be taken into account when considering the situation in NSGTs of the Pacific region. Noting that the plan of action provided for holding seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions alternately, the Working Group recommended that the Committee organize a seminar in 1994 in New York for all Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories, irrespective of their location, with the view to providing an opportunity to carry out a mid-term review of the plan of action. The Group further recommended that the Committee invite United Nations organs, agencies and institutions to apprise the Secretary-General of actions taken to implement the 1991 Assembly resolution relating to the plan of action and report to the Assembly in 1994.

The Committee approved those recommendations on 27 July⁽⁶⁾

Committee on colonial countries

The Committee on colonial countries held its 1993 session in two parts, with a total of 17 meetings, from 10 February to 28 May and from 7 July to 12 August in New York⁽⁶⁾ It considered the report of its Working Group⁽⁵⁾ the report of an open-ended working group on improving the efficiency of the Committee's work⁽⁷⁾ and four reports of the Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance on: the dissemination of information on decolonization⁽⁸⁾ Pitcairn⁽⁹⁾ St. Helena⁽¹⁰⁾ and 10 other small Territories⁽¹¹⁾

Implementation of the Declaration

On 10 December 1993, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/52 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, most recently resolution 47/23 of 25 November 1992, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism is one of the priorities of the Organization for the decade that began in 1990,

Deeply conscious of the need to take, speedily, measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism by the year 2000, as called for in its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the elimination of colonialism, as well as of the need for the total eradication of racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Conscious that the success of national liberation struggles and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Also noting with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of some administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Aware of the pressing need of newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Aware also of the pressing need of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, including particularly the small island Territories, for economic, social and other assistance from the United Nations and the organizations within its system,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization, including its resolution 43/47, in which it declared the decade that began in 1990 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in any form or manifestation—including racism and economic exploitation—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its support for the aspirations of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1993, including the programme of work envisaged for 1994;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that no activity of foreign economic and other interests in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration hinders the peoples of those Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers to terminate military activities in the Territories under their administration and to eliminate military bases there in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and urges them not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

9. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, and requests that the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration and to carry out those actions approved by the General Assembly regarding the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism in all Territories that have not yet exercised their right to self-determination and independence, and in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the implementation by Member States of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of regular visiting missions, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

11. Also calls upon the administering Powers to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to receive visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

12. Further calls upon the administering Powers that have not participated in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1994 session;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide economic, social and other assistance to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to continue to do so, as appropriate, after they exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the other resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 48/46 by recorded vote.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as all its other resolutions on this subject, including, in particular, resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991, endorsing the plan of action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that any economic or other activity that constitutes an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination is a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Concerned about the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests that exploit the natural and human resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories and deprive them of their right to control the wealth of their countries,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

Recognizing the crucial and decisive role that the imposition of international sanctions played in applying the necessary pressure on the South African regime to undertake significant measures towards the eradication of apartheid,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering Power that deprives the colonial peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources, or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests, violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms its concern over the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural resources that are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, as well as their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, thus depriving them of their right to control the resources of their Territories and impeding the realization by those peoples of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence;

4. Condemns those activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism and racial discrimination;

5. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

6. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories by foreign economic interests, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, is a threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

7. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take all possible measures to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

8. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

9. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory and unjust wage systems or working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of those activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

11. Appeals to mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

12. Decides to continue to monitor closely the situation in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of the indigenous peoples and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories, in order to facilitate and accelerate the exercise by the peoples of those Territories of their right to self-determination and independence;

13. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

Military activities and arrangements in colonial countries

The Committee on colonial countries in 1993 again considered military activities by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might impede the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda⁽²³⁾ Guam⁽²⁴⁾ and the United States Virgin Islands.⁽²⁵⁾

The Committee decided to change the title of the item to "Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1993, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/421 by recorded vote.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration

At its 75th plenary meeting, on 10 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration', and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, should be withdrawn.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its concern that military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the administering Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of the local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"6. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform world public opinion of those military activities and arrangements in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"7. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-ninth session."

Information dissemination

In July, the Committee on colonial countries adopted recommendations for the dissemination of information on decolonization, based on a report of its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance⁽⁸⁾ which related to consultations with the representatives of the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) and Department of Political Affairs, and to the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of All Colonial Territories, as well as Those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (24-28 May).

Among the recommendations were that DPI continue intensifying its publicity of decolonization; that it produce new visual material on problems of decolonization; that it provide feedback from United Nations information centres; that it utilize materials pertaining to the participation of United Nations organizations and agencies in the decolonization process and distribute those materials through the information centres; and that it increase, in cooperation with the Department of Political Affairs, its speaking engagements at universities and intensify cooperation with non-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/53 by recorded vote.

New Caledonia

The Committee on colonial countries had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat on recent political developments and economic, social and educational conditions in New Caledonia.⁽²⁶⁾

According to the Committee to Monitor the Matignon Accords (Paris, 2-4 February 1993), overall progress had been made but more was needed in education, nickel mining—the most important sector of the economy—and regional links. The Accords, adopted in 1988⁽²⁷⁾ called for a self-determination referendum to be held in 1998, following a 10-year period of development aimed at effecting more equitable economic distribution between indigenous Melanesians, known as Kanaks, who comprised about 45 per cent of the population, and persons of European origin, mainly French.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 48/50 without vote.

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia,

Reaffirming the right of peoples to self-determination as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Noting the importance of the positive measures being pursued in New Caledonia by the French authorities, in cooperation with all sectors of the population, to promote political, economic and social development in the Territory, including measures in the area of environmental protection and action with respect to drug abuse and trafficking, in order to provide a framework for its peaceful progress to self-determination,

Noting also, in this context, the importance of equitable economic and social development, as well as continued dialogue among the parties involved in New Caledonia in the preparation of the act of self-determination of New Caledonia,

Welcoming the positive outcome of the mid-term review of the Matignon Accords in February 1993 and the continuing support for the process by the new French Government,

Noting the holding of the Pacific Regional Seminar at Port Moresby from 8 to 10 June 1993 to examine the political, economic and social situation in small island Non-Self Governing Territories,

Noting with satisfaction the intensification of contacts between New Caledonia and neighbouring countries of the South Pacific region,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia;

2. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia and building on the positive outcome of the mid-term review of the Matignon Accords, to maintain their dialogue in a spirit of harmony;

3. Invites all the parties involved to continue promoting a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory towards an act of self-determination in which all options are open and which would safeguard the rights of all New Caledonians according to the letter and the spirit of the Matignon Accords, which are based on the principle that it is for the populations of New Caledonia to choose how to control their destiny;

4. Welcomes recent and impending measures to strengthen and diversify the New Caledonian economy in all fields;

5. Also welcomes the call by the parties to the Matignon Accords for greater progress in housing, employment, training, education and health care in New Caledonia;

6. Commends the decision to establish a Melanesian cultural centre as a contribution to preserving the indigenous culture of New Caledonia;

7. Notes the recent positive initiatives aimed at protecting New Caledonia's natural environment, notably the "Zoneco" operation designed to map and evaluate marine resources within the economic zone of New Caledonia;

8. Acknowledges the close links between New Caledonia and the peoples of the South Pacific and the positive actions being taken by the French authorities to facilitate the further development of those links, including the development of closer relations with the member countries of the South Pacific Forum;

9. Welcomes in particular, in this regard, recent high-level visits to New Caledonia by delegations from countries of the Pacific region;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth ended working group⁽⁷⁾ that the Committee defer until 1994 consideration of its decision of 15 August 1991,⁽²⁸⁾ by which it deplored the fact that the United States Congress had not adopted a legal framework for holding a referendum to enable the people of Puerto Rico to determine their political future. In accordance with the group's suggestion that it give due consideration to requests for hearings, the Committee heard 30 representatives of organizations from Puerto Rico in July.

Visiting missions

The Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, as requested by the Committee in 1992,⁽⁵⁾ held consultations with representatives of administering Powers on the question of sending visiting missions to NSGTs. In July 1993,⁽⁶⁾ he reported that some NSGTs had expressed their willingness to receive United Nations visiting missions. He drew the attention of the administering Powers to the efforts of the Committee to improve its efficiency and methods of work in fulfilling its mandate. Regarding the dispatch of visiting missions, he pointed out that in most cases further efforts by the Committee were required before the full cooperation of the administering Powers could be restored.

The Chairman took note of a May letter from New Zealand⁽⁷⁾ inviting the Committee to send a visiting mission to Tokelau in 1994.

On 12 July⁽⁸⁾ the Committee adopted a resolution, stressing the need to dispatch periodic missions to NSGTs to facilitate full implementation of the 1960 Declaration⁽⁹⁾ calling on the administering Powers to continue to cooperate by receiving United Nations missions in Territories under their administration and to participate in the work of the Committee, and requesting its Chairman to continue consulting with those Powers and to report as appropriate.

Other colonial Territories

East Timor

The Committee on colonial countries, in July 1993, considered a working paper prepared by the Secretariat on political developments, the human rights situation, economic and social conditions and other developments in East Timor⁽¹⁾ The paper also described United Nations consideration of the situation. The Committee heard statements by, among others, Portugal, as the administering Power, and 21 petitioners.

In a letter to the Committee Chairman⁽²⁾ Indonesia reiterated that any consideration of the so-called question of East Timor was inappropriate and constituted unacceptable interference in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of a sovereign Member State. The process of decolonization had been carried out in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolutions, and East Timor's integration into Indonesia was formalized in 1976; it had rights and obligations equal to those of the other provinces. Indonesia, therefore, strongly objected to the participation of petitioners in the Committee's deliberations.

Acting on a proposal of its Chairman, the Committee decided to continue consideration of the item at its 1994 session, subject to any directives by the General Assembly.

In September⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General updated his 1992 progress report⁽⁴⁾ regarding a comprehensive solution to the question of East Timor. The Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal had held substantive discussions in December 1992 (New York), and April (Rome) and September (New York) 1993. United Nations officials had also had contacts with various East Timorese groups and prominent individuals.

The Secretary-General stated that it had proved difficult to make progress owing to the wide difference in the positions of the two sides, but he was moderately encouraged and planned to hold another round of discussions with the two Foreign Ministers in May 1994 at Geneva. The improvement of the conditions in East Timor, especially of the human rights situation there (see PART THREE, Chapter X), was sine qua non to progress in the talks.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Committee on colonial countries considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 14 July 1993. The United Kingdom, the administering Power, did not participate in consideration of the item. The Committee acceded to a request from Argentina to participate. It had before it a working paper⁽⁵⁾ prepared by the Secretariat, which outlined political developments and economic, social and educational conditions and described the Constitution and Government of the islands and consideration of the question by the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations.

The Committee adopted a resolution⁽⁶⁾ requesting Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the process of dialogue and cooperation by resuming negotiations to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the islands, and reiterating its support for the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General in assisting the parties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November, the General Assembly, by decision 48/408, deferred consideration of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and included it in the provisional agenda of its 1994 session.

Western Sahara

In 1993, efforts continued towards organizing a United Nations-supervised referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, in accordance with a settlement plan approved by the Security Council in 1991.⁽⁷⁾ The Secretary-General continued exercising his good offices, in close cooperation with the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to settle the differences between the two parties concerned—the Government of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO). In order to resolve the outstanding issues—related mainly to the basic question of the establishment of the electorate eligible to participate in the referendum—the Secretary-General put forward a compromise proposal.

During consultations in November 1993, both sides confirmed their intention to proceed expeditiously with the initial stage of the registration of voters, in cooperation with the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO). Accordingly, in late November, the revised lists of the 1974 census, together with a supplement listing additional persons expected to reach 18 years of age by 31 December 1993, were made accessible at 10 different locations at Laayoune and several places in the El-Aiun refugee camp in the Tindouf area. Beginning in December, application forms for preliminary registration of potential participants in the referendum were distributed. In May 1993, Erik Jensen of Malaysia was appointed Chairman of the Identification Commission, responsible for establishing the final list of Saharans qualified to participate in the voting.

MINURSO continued monitoring and verifying the cease-fire in effect since September 1991. For the period between 1 January and 31 October 1993, 23 cease-fire violations—which were of a non-violent nature and did not result in casualties—were reported.

As at 1 November, the military component of MINURSO totalled 324 personnel, comprising 226 military observers and 98 military support personnel. Brigadier-General Andre Van Baelen of Belgium continued to serve as Force Commander. His tour of duty was renewed on 1 October for an additional one-year period.

MINURSO's Security Unit—responsible for maintaining order in and around the identification and registration offices—was composed of a first contingent of 26 police officers, including the Police Commissioner, Colonel Jurgen Friedrich Reimann of Germany, who assumed his functions in early June. Current activities of the police officers were complementary to the work of the Identification Commission and included coordination of logistics and technical and physical support.

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In January 1993,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General described the military and financial aspects of MINURSO, events in the mission area having a bearing on MINURSO's activities, and developments since his previous report to the Security Council in August 1992.⁽⁹⁾ He stated that, notwithstanding prior acceptance of the general provisions of the settlement plan⁽¹⁰⁾ approved by the Council in April 1991,⁽⁷⁾ important disagreements persisted between the parties regarding fundamental issues. Annexed to the report were an interpretation by the parties of the criteria for eligibility to vote in a United Nations-organized referendum, in accordance with the plan for implementation of the settlement proposals, and other instructions relating to evidence that individuals were required to furnish for participation in the referendum.

The Secretary-General presented three broad options for resolving the differences, namely: continuation and intensification of talks; immediate implementation of the settlement plan; and adoption of an alternative approach. He said he awaited guidance from the Council by way of a resolution.

On 2 March 1993, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 809(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 658(1990) of 27 June 1990, 690(1991) of 29 April 1991 and 725(1991) of 31 December 1991,

Recalling that in conformity with the settlement plan regarding the question of Western Sahara, as adopted by resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991), it was for the Secretary-General to determine the instructions for the review of the applications for participation in the referendum, and that the Council welcomed in its resolution 725(1991) the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 December 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara,

Concerned by the difficulties and delays encountered in the implementation of the settlement plan regarding the question of Western Sahara and in particular the persistent divergences between the two parties on the interpretation and application of the criteria for voter eligibility set out by the Secretary-General in his report dated 19 December 1991,

Determined that the settlement plan regarding the question of Western Sahara be implemented without further delay in order to achieve a just and lasting solution,

Stressing the desirability of ensuring the full cooperation of both parties for the implementation of the settlement plan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara;

2. Invites the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to intensify their efforts, with the parties, in order to resolve the issues identified in his report, in particular those relating to the interpretation and application of the criteria for voter eligibility;

3. Invites further the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for the organization of the referendum of self-determination of the people of Western Sahara and to consult accordingly with the parties for the purpose of commencing voter registration on a prompt basis starting with the updated lists of the 1974 census;

4. Invites also the Secretary-General to report to the Council as soon as possible and not later than May 1993 on the outcome of his efforts, on the cooperation of the parties and on the prospects and modalities for the holding of the referendum on a free and fair basis with a view that this take place by the end of the current year at the latest, and requests the Secretary-General to include in this report proposals for the necessary adjustments to the present role and strength of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara;

5. Urges the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in implementing the settlement plan which has been accepted by them and approved by the Council in its resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991), and in resolving the issues identified in the Secretary-General's recent report, in particular those relating to the interpretation and application of the criteria for voter eligibility;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 809(1993)

2 March 1993 Meeting 3179 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25340).

Reports of the Secretary-General (May-November). In May⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an interim status report, informing the Security Council of his decision to visit the mission area in June, in pursuance of the Council's call in March for an intensification of efforts in order to resolve outstanding issues, particularly those relating to the interpretation and application of the criteria for voter eligibility.

In accordance with the Council's request to the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for organization of the referendum and to consult with the parties regarding an early registration of voters, starting with the updated lists of the 1974 census, discussions were held in March and April with the parties, which confirmed their desire to proceed promptly with the registration and to cooperate with MINURSO in so doing. They also agreed to the participation of tribal chiefs, as well as observers from either side, in the registration process. Both parties showed a desire to move towards an early referendum, although the Frente POLISARIO maintained reservations concerning the eligibility of applicants to vote.

In the light of the consultations, it was decided to establish an identification commission to begin voter registration and draw up plans, including resource requirements, for expanding the identification process to include all potentially eligible voters. In view of the above, the Secretary-General postponed publication of the report requested of him by the Council.

On 28 May⁽¹²⁾ the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General that the Council members understood the reasons for such postponement. They welcomed his decision to visit the region, as well as the establishment of an identification commission.

The Secretary-General reported in July⁽¹³⁾ that he had met with officials of both sides during his visit to the mission area with his Special Representative from 31 May to 4 June. The aim of the visit was to urge the parties to accept a compromise solution regarding the interpretation and application of the criteria for voter eligibility. The compromise proposal was annexed to the report, as were the terms of reference of the Identification Commission and general regulations for the organization and conduct of the referendum.

Despite initial reservations concerning tribal links with the Territory that it felt were unduly restrictive, Morocco acquiesced to the compromise. The Frente POLISARIO proposed amendments to provisions relating to tribal links and the composition of the teams of tribal chiefs invited to testify, which it considered unduly permissive. The Secretary-General stated that the Identification Commission in June had begun with both parties to establish procedures for identification and registration of voters.

By a letter of 4 August⁽¹⁴⁾ the President of the Council stated that the Council members supported the Secretary-General's efforts and noted that the Identification Commission had started preparatory work. They welcomed the parties' commitment to implement the peace plan.

In November⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General provided an update of the situation, including the military aspects of MINURSO and its civil police component. He stated that although the Frente POLISARIO had accepted the criteria for voter eligibility, it maintained substantial reservations on the interpretation and application of the criteria and requested amendments. Morocco, on the other hand, rejected any modification of the compromise text in its current form. Both parties agreed that membership of a Saharan subfraction existing in the Territory was a prerequisite to voter eligibility; however, they disagreed over which tribes or tribal units had a clearly established connection with or were existing in the Territory. Morocco held the view that members of all subfractions of a given Saharan tribe should be considered for participation in the referendum, including those not represented in the 1974 census. The Frente POLISARIO contended that, unless the vast majority of the members of a subfraction had been counted in the 1974 census, that subfraction should not be considered as existing in the Territory and its members, other than those already counted, should not be eligible. As a compromise, the Secretary-General proposed that the potential electorate encompass members of all the Saharan tribal subfractions, but only those represented in the 1974 census, regardless of the number of individuals from those subfractions who were counted in 1974. The Frente POLISARIO, however, did not agree with that proposal, as it remained concerned about the possible inclusion of members of some tribal units which it did not consider as existing in the Territory.

In view of the remaining difficulties, the Secretary-General said, it was not possible to hold the referendum by the end of 1993. He stressed that acceptance by both parties of his role as guarantor of an objective and impartial referendum was central to the issue. On the assumption that the remaining difficulties were settled and progress was made in the initial stages of the registration process, he hoped to be able to report early in 1994 on the prospects and modalities of the referendum, together with a timetable and recommendations for necessary adjustments with regard to MINURSO's strength, with a view to holding the referendum in mid-1994.

On 6 December⁽¹⁶⁾ the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General that the Council members supported his compromise proposal and reaffirmed his role as guarantor of an objective and impartial referendum. They expected any difficulties with the compromise to be resolved by early 1994.

In September 1993⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1992⁽¹⁸⁾ reported on the situation in Western Sahara and described the activities he had undertaken since 3 October 1992. In close cooperation with the Chairman of OAU, he continued to exercise his good offices with the parties. He recalled that, pending fulfilment of the conditions necessary for the commencement of the transitional period in accordance with the timetable and plan of action set out in his April 1991 report, MINURSO's military mandate remained restricted to monitoring and verifying the cease-fire in effect since September 1991. There were no breaches of the cease-fire resulting in casualties on either side and violations were of a non-violent nature.

The basic question of the establishment of the electorate largely accounted for the differences of view of the parties concerned. In order to resolve the outstanding issues and prepare for the holding of the referendum, the Secretary-General and his Special Representative were continuing their efforts through regular contacts with the parties and with government officials of the neighbouring countries.

Consideration by the Committee on colonial countries. In July⁽¹⁹⁾ the Committee on colonial countries heard the views of a representative of the Frente POLISARIO and considered a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on developments in Western Sahara.⁽²⁰⁾ The paper presented an overview of the General Assembly's consideration of the question in 1992, of the Secretary-General's good offices, and of political and other developments from September 1992 to July 1993.

the interpretation and application of the criteria, and shared his hope that direct talks between the two parties will soon resume;

Financing of MINURSO

In April 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted decision 47/451 B without vote.

At its 98th plenary meeting, on 8 April 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided, in the light of Security Council resolution 809(1993) of 2 March 1993 and in particular of the activities enumerated in paragraphs 2 and 3 of that resolution, to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding 3,499,700 United States dollars gross (3,319,400 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 March to 30 June 1993, subject to the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. Those resources should be utilized from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation provided for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara.

General Assembly decision 47/451 B

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/796/Add.D) without vote, 19 March (meeting 57); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 121.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 55, 57; plenary 98.

Reporting on 19 March on the informal consultations with regard to the financing of MINURSO, Belgium said the Fifth Committee would not be able to consider the Secretary-General's December 1992 report on the subject⁽²¹⁾ in view of the Security Council's March 1993 resolution concerning implementation of the settlement plan for Western Sahara. Activities required under that resolution, for which additional resources had to be allocated, were the following: intensified efforts by the Secretary-General to conduct several rounds of talks with the parties and neighbouring countries, and preparations for the referendum, specifically the establishment of the Identification Commission. The Commission would conduct research in order to review the 1974 census carefully, arrange for a revised list to be published in the Territory and in other places where a number of Western Saharans were known to be living, and publish instructions on how Western Saharans could apply in writing.

In September 1993, the Assembly adopted decision 47/451 C without vote.

At its 110th plenary meeting, on 14 September 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided:

(a) To utilize an amount not exceeding 6,525,380 United States dollars gross (6,181,980 dollars net) for the maintenance of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara for the period from 1 July to 31 August 1993 from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation provided for the Mission;

(b) To authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding 3,204,600 dollars gross (3,028,200 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 September to 31 December 1993, subject to the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and that that amount be provided from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation provided for the Mission.

General Assembly decision 47/451 C

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/796/Add.2) without vote, 3 September (meeting 74); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.48); agenda item 121. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 73, 74; plenary 110.

On 1 October, the United Nations Controller sought the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to enter into further commitments on a monthly basis in an amount not exceeding $3,204,600 gross ($3,028,200 net) for the maintenance of MINURSO from 1 September to 31 December 1993. The Chairman of ACABQ, in a letter of 22 October to the Secretary-General, concurred in the entering into further commitments for those four months in an amount not exceeding $3 million gross per month, to be provided from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation provided for MINURSO.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a December report to the Fifth Committee on the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General presented a revised apportionment for MINURSO totalling $12,000,000 gross ($11,294,000 net) for the period from 1 September to 31 December 1993, and a cost estimate of $12,782,000 gross ($12,086,000 net) for the period from 1 January to 30 April 1994.

ACABQ recommendations. Also in December⁽²³⁾ ACABQ recommended that the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to $12.8 million gross ($12.1 million net) from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation for MINURSO, for the period from 1 January to 30 April 1994. No assessment was currently necessary, the Committee added.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

Concurring with the observations of ACABQ, the General Assembly, by decision 48/467 of 23 December 1993, authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to $9,586,500 gross ($9,064,500 net) from the unencumbered balance of the appropriation for MINURSO, for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1994.

Island Territories

The Committee on colonial countries considered the following 12 island Territories and had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat describing their constitutional and political developments and economic and social conditions: American Samoa⁽²⁴⁾ Anguilla⁽²⁵⁾ Bermuda⁽²⁶⁾ British Virgin Islands⁽²⁷⁾ Cayman Islands⁽²⁸⁾ Guam⁽²⁹⁾ Montserrat⁽³⁰⁾ Pitcairn⁽³¹⁾ St. Helena⁽³²⁾ Tokelau⁽³³⁾ Turks and Caicos Islands⁽³⁴⁾ and United States Virgin Islands⁽³⁵⁾ In view of Palau's intention to hold a plebiscite on 27 July 1993 regarding the Compact of Free Association (see below), the Committee's open-ended working group recommended that the Committee suspend consideration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands until 1994⁽³⁶⁾

The Committee allocated the item to its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance⁽³⁷⁾ for preliminary consideration and subsequently took up the item between 28 May and 27 July⁽¹⁹⁾ It adopted a consolidated draft resolution, the first part of which dealt with 10 island Territories in general and the second with specific conditions in those same 10 Territories; it also recommended two draft decisions to the General Assembly, one on Pitcairn and the other on St. Helena (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolutions 48/51 A and B without vote.

B

Individual Territories

I. American Samoa

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Noting that efforts are currently aimed at increasing the production of food crops for local consumption,

Noting also the announcement by the Governor that his administration was planning to lay off over one thousand public employees, including some four hundred permanent career civil servants,

Noting further that American Samoa is the only United States of America Territory in which employers are allowed to pay workers less than the mainland minimum wage,

Also noting that the Government's Public Sector Investment Programme for 1991-1995 is expected to be financed by external donors through grants and concessional loans,

1. Notes the efforts of the administering Power aimed at improving its relations with its dependent Territories of the Caribbean; of the Trusteeship Agreement had been fully attained and the applicability of the Agreement to them had terminated.

Palau, located in the Western Caroline Islands, is composed of many islands with a total land area of 492 square kilometres. The estimated 1993 population was 16,642, two thirds of whom lived in the capital, consisting of Koror and several adjacent islands.

In a working paper submitted to the Trusteeship Council in May 1993,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretariat described conditions in the Trust Territory, covering political, economic, social and educational developments.

Constitutional and political status of Palau

The Palau National Congress (Olbiil Era Kelulau) had linked its approval of a plebiscite to a favourable United States response to requests submitted to the United States on 25 March 1993 by the President of Palau for certain modifications and assurances related to the proposed Compact of Free Association. Following meetings which began on 2 April between President Kuniwo Nakamura of Palau and the former United States Assistant Secretary of State, a letter was sent on 6 May to the President of Palau containing assurances concerning United States intentions with respect to the implementation of the Compact.

The Compact would recognize Palau as fully self-governing, while the United States would remain responsible for its defence. However, because the Compact would conflict with the non-nuclear provisions of Palau's Constitution, local courts had ruled that it would need to be approved by 75 per cent of the voters—the same margin required for a constitutional amendment. In none of the seven plebiscites (February 1983, September 1984, February and December 1986, June and August 1987 and February 1990) was the required 75 per cent vote obtained.

On 29 October 1993, the Supreme Court of Palau delivered final adjudication upholding the validity of a 1992 constitutional referendum⁽⁵⁾ which reduced the votes required to approve the Compact from 75 per cent to a simple majority of 51 per cent.

Trusteeship Council consideration. In April⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council a report by the United States on the administration of the Trust Territory for the year ending 30 September 1992.⁽⁷⁾

On 17 May 1993, the Trusteeship Council adopted the conclusions and recommendations prepared by its Drafting Committee (China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom). Taking note of a 1990 Security Council resolution on the Trust Territory⁽⁸⁾ the Council expressed

International Trusteeship System

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

In 1993, Palau was the last remaining entity of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands under the 1947 Trusteeship Agreement⁽¹⁾ which had designated the United States as the Administering Authority of the Territory. The Security Council, in December 1990,⁽²⁾ had determined that, in view of the entry into force of new status agreements between the United States and the other three entities of the Trust Territory—the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and the Northern Mariana Islands⁽³⁾—the objectives the hope that the people of Palau would be able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and that it would be possible to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement.

The Council noted with satisfaction recent economic, social and educational improvements in the Trust Territory and hoped that further progress would continue to be made. It also noted with satisfaction the Administering Authority's assurances that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations and the Trusteeship Agreement, and further noted that it had no plans to establish military bases in Palau.

The Council heard two petitioners on various issues concerning conditions in the Trust Territory and considered four communications and one written petition.

Visiting mission

On 13 May 1993,⁽⁸⁾ the United States informed the President of the Trusteeship Council of Palau's intention to hold a plebiscite on the Compact of Free Association, which it said was likely to occur on 27 July. The United States invited the Council to send a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite.

On 9 September⁽⁹⁾ the United States informed the Council President that on 6 August the President of Palau had issued Executive Order No. 124, which decreed that Palau would hold a plebiscite regarding the Compact on 9 November. Referring to the Council's resolution of 17 May (see below) and its letter of 13 May, the United States invited the Council to send a mission to observe the plebiscite.

members—one representative each from China, France, the Russian Federation and the United Kingdom—and two representatives of countries of the region that were not Council members—the Marshall Islands and Samoa. The visit in Palau took place from 5 to 12 November.

The Mission concluded that the plebiscite held on 9 November was conducted fairly and reflected the wishes of the people of Palau; of a total of 7,608 valid votes cast, 5,193 or 68.26 per cent were in favour of the Compact.

Other aspects of the International Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

Under a scholarship programme launched by the General Assembly in 1952⁽¹¹⁾ 11 Member States had in past years made scholarships available for students from Trust Territories: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, the Russian Federation and Yugoslavia. In a report to the Trusteeship Council covering the period 16 May 1992 to 7 May 1993,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had requested up-to-date information on scholarships for students from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, but had received no response. On 13 May⁽¹³⁾ the Council took note of the report.

Information dissemination

The Department of Public Information (DPI) in 1993 continued to disseminate information on the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The Secretary-General described those activities in a report covering the period from 1 May 1992 to 30 April 1993.⁽¹⁴⁾ Annexed to the report was a detailed list of information materials distributed during that period. DPI and the United Nations information centres, primarily the Centre at Tokyo, disseminated information to the Trust Territory on the aims and objectives of the International Trusteeship System and of the United Nations. DPI mailed directly to 97 recipients in the Trust Territory documents of the Trusteeship Council and taped radio, video and film programmes. It also produced and transmitted press releases and publications covering the issue of the Trust Territory. Regarding feedback, DPI sent out a second series of questionnaires to the 97 direct-mail recipients. The first questionnaire was sent in 1992.⁽¹⁵⁾

On 14 May, the President of the Trusteeship Council announced that, following consultations between the secretariats of the Council and DPI, the staff servicing the next visiting mission to the Territory would also carry out functions on behalf of DPI while in the Territory.

On the same date, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Chapter IV

Peaceful uses of outer space

During 1993, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees again considered matters relating to international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space. The Committee, at its thirty-sixth session (New York, 7-18 June), agreed, as a follow-up to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to promote international cooperation in the application of space technologies for environmental monitoring and sustainable development. It recommended the convening of a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, possibly in 1995.

The General Assembly, in December, endorsed the Committee's recommendations and the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1994 (resolution 48/39). The Assembly also welcomed the Secretary-General's report on international cooperation in space activities for enhancing security in the post-cold-war era and called on the competent bodies to take into account its contents.

Science, technology and law

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space held its thirtieth session in 1993 (New York, 16-26 February)⁽¹⁾ It continued to consider the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, coordination of space activities within the United Nations system and implementation of the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82)⁽²⁾ The Subcommittee also considered matters related to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, particularly its applications for developing countries; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment; matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine; and issues concerning planetary exploration and astronomy.

In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ the Subcommittee reconvened the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82.

During the Subcommittee's session, the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) of the International Council of Scientific Unions and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF), in response to a 1992 Assembly request⁽³⁾ organized a symposium (16 and 17 February 1993) on the subject "Space-based communications: global systems and new services"⁽⁴⁾ selected by the Subcommittee for special attention. France made a special presentation to the Subcommittee on the issue of space debris.

The Subcommittee's recommendations were acted on by the Committee on outer space in June⁽⁵⁾

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

In 1993, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, noting that the General Assembly in 1992⁽³⁾ had again emphasized the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of UNISPACE-82, endorsed by the Assembly in 1982⁽⁶⁾ reconvened the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, which held three meetings between 18 and 25 February 1993.

In the report on its seventh session, annexed to the Subcommittee's report⁽¹⁾ the Working Group made recommendations that were endorsed by the Subcommittee and by the Assembly in resolution 48/39. Among the recommendations were that: the organization of seminars and workshops on advanced applications of space science and technology should continue so that the recent advances in space technologies and applications for development could be brought to the attention of planners, administrators and decision-makers in developing countries; the emphasis of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications should continue to be on long-term, project-oriented, on-the-job training in space technology and specific applications areas; Member States and international organizations should make offers for long-term training and every effort should be made to increase the number of fellowships and encourage full utilization of those available; Member States should introduce or improve space science, technology and applications curricula in their educational institutions; the United Nations should continue to arrange for funding and other support for the establishment and operation in developing countries of regional centres for space science and technology education; particularly those States with major space and space-related capabilities and international organizations should continue to inform the Secretary-General about activities that were or could be the subject of greater international cooperation, with special emphasis on the needs of developing countries; extensive regional cooperation should be encouraged, particularly among developing countries; to assist developing countries, the United Nations should strengthen its cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other international and regional bodies specializing in space activities; countries with relevant capabilities should be encouraged to provide developing countries with technical and financial assistance for developing low-cost community receivers and power sources for communication satellites; and satellite-operating States should ensure the availability of data on a continued basis and in a form compatible with current systems.

The Working Group recommended specific studies on the use of low Earth-orbiting communications satellites, forest resources management, space applications for sustainable development, and satellite-based radio broadcasting services. It also recommended that the United Nations continue to assist in the preparation of integrated national action plans for initiating, strengthening or reorienting space applications programmes.

It identified a number of priority areas to promote the applications of space science and technology for development, including stimulation of indigenous nuclei and an autonomous technological base in space technology in developing countries, greater exchange of space applications experience, and funding for the United Nations Programme on Space Applications. The Group also recommended that the Committee on outer space at its 1993 session address the question of convening a third UNISPACE conference (see below).

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General, in October 1993,⁽⁷⁾ provided information on progress made in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. The report reflected the work of the Committee on outer space and its subsidiary bodies in 1993.

The Secretariat, responding to 1992 requests of the Working Group of the Whole, submitted to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee studies on the applications of space technology for ocean resources development⁽⁸⁾ and for remote and rural communications and broadcasting⁽⁹⁾ and a report on the activities of Member States in the context of international cooperation⁽¹⁰⁾

The Committee on outer space, in endorsing the recommendations of the Working Group, noted its concern over the continuing inadequacy of budgetary allocations to implement UNISPACE-82 recommendations. It noted the recommendations and actions of the Assembly's Special Political Committee in 1992 concerning the provision of adequate budgetary allocations⁽¹¹⁾ and expressed the hope that those actions would be reflected in adequate allocations for the Programme on Space Applications in the 1994-1995 programme budget.

The Committee noted that the Secretariat continued to strengthen cooperation through regional workshops and training courses, technical assistance and the establishment of regional centres for space science and technology education. It expressed appreciation to France and Germany for providing experts for an evaluation mission to potential host countries for a centre in Africa. It also noted the contributions of other international organizations towards implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

The Committee recognized the contribution of the Second Space Conference of the Americas (Santiago, Chile, 26-30 April) and the Santiago Declaration, annexed to the Committee's report, and that of the Asia-Pacific Workshop on Multilateral Cooperation in Space Technology and Applications (Beijing, China, 30 November-5 December 1992) in promoting international cooperation in outer space.

UN Programme on Space Applications

In accordance with its 1982 mandate⁽⁶⁾ the United Nations Programme on Space Applications focused on developing indigenous capability in space science and technology; providing fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services to Member States; organizing regional and international training courses, conferences and meetings; assisting in the development of information systems; and promoting greater cooperation in space science and technology.

In a December 1993 report to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee⁽¹²⁾ the United Nations Expert on Space Applications stated that the Programme continued to help developing countries build up indigenous capability through the establishment and operation of centres for space science and technology education at the regional level.⁽¹³⁾ The activities of the centres would allow the introduction of space science and technology into existing education curricula and contribute to countries' development programmes. They would also contribute to the sustainable development of natural resources, provide a supplementary input for biodiversity conservation and related environmental programmes and improve the development of the national technological base, including that of the telecommunications industry.

The Programme received 19 long-term fellowship offers for 1993-1994: 10 from Brazil in research and applications in remote sensing; 4 from China in geodesy, Photogrammetry and remote sensing; and 5 from the European Space Agency (ESA) in space antennae and propagation, communications systems, satellite meteorology, and remote-sensing information and instrumentation.

The Programme, under projects jointly sponsored with ESA, continued to provide remote-sensing data to scientists in Guinea, Morocco, Nigeria and Tunisia through two ESA ground-receiving stations at Maspalomas, Spain, and Fucino, Italy. It would also train those scientists at ESA facilities in Frascati, Italy, in the use of European Remote Sensing Satellite (ERS-1) data in relevant application projects in their countries.

The Programme continued to promote cooperation among the countries covered by the Cotopaxi station in Ecuador. It conducted a mission in March to Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela to review the possibilities and modalities of operating the station within a regional framework and to evaluate its current status. The mission recommended that the Governments within the Andean Group (Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela) establish a working group to strengthen the use of data available at the station, determine and advise on technical upgrades, and guarantee the continuous operation of the station and maintenance of a regional data archive.

In 1993, the Programme conducted three training courses, four workshops and two regional conferences. In cooperation with ESA, it sponsored a training course for African francophone countries on applications of ERS-1 data for natural resources, renewable energy and the environment (Frascati, 19-30 April).⁽¹⁴⁾ The course, with 24 participants, examined the physical theory of active and passive remote sensing and presented an overall view of remote sensing in the electromagnetic spectrum.

The third United Nations training course on remote-sensing education for 26 educators from developing countries (Stockholm and Kiruna, 3 May-4 June)⁽¹⁵⁾ was organized in cooperation with Sweden and hosted by the University of Stockholm and the Swedish Space Corporation.

A United Nations workshop on space communications for development (Athens, 10-12 May)⁽¹⁶⁾ organized in cooperation with Greece as a contribution to International Space Year (1992) (ISY) activities, was attended by 47 experts from 22 Member States of the Mediterranean and adjacent areas. The workshop addressed the current state and future trends of satellite communication technologies and their contributions to economic and social development.

A United Nations/Indonesia regional conference on space science and technology for sustainable development (Bandung, 17-21 May)⁽¹⁷⁾ hosted by the Indonesian ISY Committee, concluded that countries in the region should give the highest priority to human resources and infrastructure development for effective use of space technology in their social and economic development programmes, particularly through the planned centres for space science and technology education. The conference, attended by 182 experts and scientists, identified a number of programmes of primary interest to the region.

A United Nations/ESA workshop on applications of space techniques to prevent and combat natural disasters, organized in cooperation with Mexico and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 27-30 September)⁽¹⁸⁾ exposed 69 experts from 19 countries to the use of space technology for natural disaster prevention or mitigation and addressed the development of databases and the Geographic Information System. The workshop agreed that a network of focal points should be established to disseminate information and provide emergency services through communication with the international relief community.

The fifth United Nations/Carl Duisberg Gesellschaft/ESA training course on remote-sensing applications to geological sciences: the planning and management of the environment, natural resources and physical infrastructure was organized in cooperation with Germany through the Carl Duisberg Gesellschaft and hosted by the International Centre for Integrated Mountain Development (Kathmandu, Nepal, 10 October-6 November)⁽¹⁹⁾ The third United Nations/ESA workshop on basic space science, organized in cooperation with Nigeria and hosted by the National Agency for Science and Engineering Infrastructure, University of Nigeria, Nsukka, and Obafemi Awolowo University, Ile-Ife, was held at Lagos (18-22 October)⁽²⁰⁾

A United Nations/IAF workshop on organizing space activities in developing countries (Graz, Austria, 15-17 October)⁽²¹⁾ was co-sponsored by the Commission of the European Communities and ESA and hosted by the Austrian Space Agency on behalf of the Government of Austria. A United Nations regional conference on space technology for sustainable development in Africa, organized with the assistance of Senegal and the United Nations Development Programme Office at Dakar (Dakar, 25-29 October)⁽²²⁾ focused on national participation in developing and utilizing environmental information systems and space technology in the social and economic development of Africa; investment in communications research, development and growth; privatization and commercialization; and promoting cooperation and development of indigenous capability.

The Programme also assisted Chile in planning and organizing the Second Space Conference of the Americas (Santiago, 26-30 April) and would provide support to follow up its recommendations. It would also assist the Republic of Korea in organizing an Asia-Pacific workshop on satellite communications, to be held in 1994.

The Programme conducted a survey to evaluate the effectiveness of its 1990 activities. As a result of United Nations ISY activities, the Programme was consulting with appropriate entities on providing basic space-related education to youth on a global basis, particularly through elementary and secondary school programmes.

The General Assembly in 1992 had approved appropriations of $443,200 under the regular United Nations budget for implementing Programme activities in 1994-1995. In addition, the Programme received voluntary contributions in cash and kind from Member States, governmental organizations and NGOs.

Both the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and the Committee on outer space expressed concern over the limited financial resources available for carrying out the Programme and appealed for further voluntary contributions.

The Assembly, in resolution 48/39, endorsed the Programme for 1994, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications⁽²³⁾

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee⁽¹⁾ in accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ continued consideration of matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites. It reviewed national and cooperative programmes in remote sensing and received information on national programmes in developed and developing countries and international programmes based on bilateral, regional and international cooperation, including technical cooperation to developing countries.

The Subcommittee noted the continuing programmes for remote-sensing satellites of China, France, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United States and ESA and the planned systems of Brazil and Canada. It noted the recent launchings of ERS-1, the Japanese Earth Resources Satellite and the Indian Remote Sensing and Marine Observation Satellite. The Subcommittee also noted the remote-sensing activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in the area of renewable natural resources, including land-cover mapping and geographic information systems; those of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in establishing satellite data centres; those of the World Meteorological Organization in weather forecasting and storm warning; and those of the International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing in promoting international cooperation in remote sensing and image processing.

The Subcommittee reiterated that remote-sensing activities should take into account the need to provide appropriate and non-discriminatory assistance to developing countries. It emphasized the importance of making remote-sensing data and analysed information openly available, affordable and timely, and recognized the need for free access to data from meteorological satellites.

The Subcommittee suggested that international cooperation in remote sensing should be encouraged through coordination of the operations of ground stations and regular meetings of satellite operators and users. It noted the importance of compatibility and complementarity of existing and future systems and the importance, particularly for developing countries, of sharing experiences and technologies, of cooperation through remote-sensing centres and of work on collaborative projects.

The Committee on outer space recognized the importance of international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of remote-sensing systems and to promote cooperation through regular meetings of satellite and ground-station operators and users. It encouraged countries and agencies to continue the free distribution of meteorological information.

Nuclear power sources in outer space

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, in response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽³⁾ reconvened its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space. The Group held its tenth session from 22 to 25 February 1993. Its report was annexed to the Subcommittee's report.⁽¹⁾

The Working Group considered questions relating to a possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, adopted by the Assembly in 1992⁽²⁴⁾ It considered a further definition of terms, expanding the scope of the Principles, criteria for acceptable risk, risk assessment, applicability of fundamental nuclear safety principles, adoption of a safety culture, the effect of space debris on the safety of nuclear power sources, and application of the relevant recommendations of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

The Subcommittee agreed that Member States should continue to report regularly to the Secretary-General on national and international research concerning the safety of nuclear-powered satellites, that further studies should be conducted on the problem of collision of nuclear-powered sources with space debris, and that it should be informed of the results. It noted papers by the Russian Federation and the United Kingdom on safety aspects of nuclear power sources in space and by Pakistan on risks and radiological consequences of debris collisions with nuclear power sources in space.

The Committee on outer space endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendations and recommended that it reconvene the Working Group to consider further a possible revision of the Principles.

Legal aspects of the revision of the Principles were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Space transportation

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in space transportation systems, including expendable launchers, reusable space shuttles and space stations. It noted progress in the various programmes of Canada, China, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine, the United Kingdom, the United States and ESA. It also noted developments in low-cost microsatellite technology and applications and stressed the importance of international cooperation in space transportation to provide all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.

The Committee on outer space endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendation that it continue consideration of the item at its next session.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee examined the utilization and applications of the geostationary orbit—in which communications and other satellites are positioned some 36,000 kilometres above the equator. It reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in satellite communications, including technological progress to make such communications more accessible and affordable and increase the communications capacity of the geostationary orbit and the electromagnetic spectrum. It noted the growing use of satellite systems for telecommunications, television broadcasting, data networks, environmental data relay, mobile communications, disaster warning and relief, telemedicine and other communication functions, as well as studies and research on the use of multiple, low-orbiting communication satellites.

As in previous years, some delegations advocated avoiding saturation of the geostationary orbit and a special regime to ensure equitable access, particularly by developing countries, in particular taking into account the characteristics of the equatorial countries. Others suggested that efforts be made to minimize the generation of space debris by moving satellites before the end of their useful lives into disposal orbits beyond the geostationary orbit.

The Subcommittee recommended that countries participate in the Space System for Tracking Ships in Distress/Search and Rescue Satellite Tracking System.

The Committee on outer space expressed appreciation to the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) for its thirty-second annual progress report on telecommunications and the peaceful uses of outer space⁽²⁵⁾ Some delegations stressed the important technical scope of the work of ITU, while drawing attention to the competence of the Committee in preparing policy decisions relating to the geostationary orbit.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Space and Earth environment

In 1992,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly had recommended that more attention be paid to all aspects of the protection and preservation of the outer space environment, especially those affecting the Earth environment, as well as the problem of space debris, and had called for continued national research and development of improved technology to monitor space debris. In response to the Assembly's request, Austria, Germany, Pakistan, Sweden and the United Kingdom provided information to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee on their research on space debris⁽²⁶⁾

The Subcommittee agreed that information on national research should continue to be provided to it and that there was a need for further research, for the development of improved monitoring technology and for compiling and disseminating data on space debris. It noted the importance of international cooperation in addressing those issues. It also noted a proposal of Poland that COSPAR prepare a report on the protection and preservation of outer space, especially activities potentially affecting the Earth environment.

The Committee on outer space agreed that, beginning in 1994, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee would consider scientific research, including studies, mathematical modelling and the characterization of the space debris environment, under a new agenda item on space debris. It noted the importance of satellite remote sensing for monitoring the Earth's environment, particularly for studying and monitoring global change.

Following an invitation by the Committee on outer space in 1992, the Secretary-General submitted in May 1993 a report⁽²⁷⁾ on the Committee's role in implementing the recommendations of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED)⁽²⁸⁾. The report identified, for applications of satellite remote-sensing technology for environmental protection and development, eight areas related to Agenda 21 programmes: protection of the atmosphere; integrated planning and management of land resources; combating deforestation; combating desertification and drought; sustainable agriculture and rural development; protection of oceans, coastal areas and marine resources; protection, development and management of freshwater resources; and science for sustainable development.

The report outlined the activities of the Committee and the Office for Outer Space Affairs relevant to the application of space technology for implementing Agenda 21, particularly those of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications.

Among the report's recommendations were that the Office for Outer Space Affairs and the Committee keep the Commission on Sustainable Development, which was primarily responsible for coordinating activities to implement Agenda 21, informed of developments in space technology and its applications, and that the Committee consider further action it could take in developing international policy to protect the space environment. Suggestions were also made for action by Member States.

The Committee agreed that it could make an important contribution to implementing the recommendations of UNCED by promoting international cooperation in the applications of space technologies for environmental monitoring and sustainable development. It noted that the Programme on Space Applications could assist developing countries in strengthening their capabilities in related space technologies and applications through education, training and technical advisory activities.

The Committee requested the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee to review the Secretary-General's report in 1994 and to consider how the Committee could best promote the use of space technology for environmental monitoring and sustainable development. It requested the Secretariat to provide the Subcommittee with updated information on the implementation of Agenda 21 by the United Nations system and on the related activities of the Programme on Space Applications, with suggestions for expanding those activities.

The Subcommittee also considered progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme and its importance for examining the future habitability of the planet and managing its natural resources. It noted the contributions of satellite remote sensing for environmental monitoring, planning sustainable development, water resource development, monitoring crop conditions and predicting and assessing drought; the contribution of meteorological and atmospheric research satellites for studying global climate change, the greenhouse effect, the ozone layer and other global environmental processes; and the need for further space research on climate change, weather patterns, vegetation distribution, storm and flood risk and other environmental factors. The Subcommittee recommended that States participate in international cooperation activities of existing and planned satellite systems for environmental monitoring.

Spin-off benefits of space technology

In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly request⁽³⁾ the Committee on outer space reviewed the status of spin-off benefits of space technology. It agreed that spin-offs were yielding substantial benefits by providing new techniques for industrial measurement and control, image and data processing, medical techniques, computer systems, robotics, special materials and chemicals, water treatment and refrigeration.

The Committee also agreed on the need to strengthen and enhance international cooperation by improving access to spin-off benefits for all countries and by giving attention to those which addressed the needs of developing countries. It recommended that the Programme on Space Applications include the promotion of spin-off benefits in its training courses, seminars or expert meetings.

Coordination in the UN system

The fifteenth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, convened by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (Geneva, 11-13 October)⁽²⁹⁾ reviewed progress in the implementation of UNISPACE-82 recommendations, discussed plans and programmes requiring coordination, exchanged views on activities in the practical applications of space technology and related areas, and reviewed cooperation within the United Nations system in remote sensing and coordination of follow-up to ISY. The Meeting agreed that remote-sensing and Geographic Information Systern technologies should be linked to enhance the scope, accuracy and cost benefits of remote-sensing applications, and on the formatting of satellite data by the proposed satellite data centres of UNESCO.

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee noted that the General Assembly, in 1992,⁽³⁾ had reaffirmed that all United Nations organs and organizations and other intergovernmental bodies working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters should cooperate in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.

Following consideration of the report of the 1992 Inter-Agency Meeting⁽³⁰⁾ the Subcommittee noted the progress achieved in coordinating United Nations space activities. It expressed appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General on coordination of space activities within the United Nations system⁽³¹⁾ which described major activities and programmes planned for 1993, 1994 and future years in remote sensing, communications, meteorology, hydrology, space science, maritime communications and air navigation, and other activities in space science and technology and its applications.

In December 1993,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his annual report outlining major United Nations system space activities and programmes planned for 1994, 1995 and future years.

The Committee on outer space noted that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee had stressed the necessity of ensuring continuous and effective consultations and coordination in outer space activities. It found the reports submitted by the specialized agencies and other international organizations helpful in enabling it and its subsidiary bodies to fulfil their role as a focal point for international cooperation, especially in the practical applications of space science and technology in developing countries.

The Committee also noted that, as part of the restructuring of the United Nations Secretariat (see PART FIVE, Chapter II), the Office for Outer Space Affairs would be relocated to the United Nations Office at Vienna and would be responsible for servicing the Committee, its Subcommittees and their subsidiary bodies. The Office would continue to cooperate with the Office of Legal Affairs.

Convening of a third UNISPACE conference

The General Assembly in 1992⁽³⁾ had endorsed the recommendation of the Committee on outer space that the Committee discuss the possibility of holding a third UNISPACE conference. The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its 1993 session, endorsed the recommendation of its Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82 that the Committee discuss the convening of such a conference. The Working Group had also noted the suggestions that it could serve as the preparatory committee for the conference and that the conference could take place in 1995.

The Committee requested the Subcommittee to discuss the subject in 1994 so as to enable it to arrive at an early conclusion on the matter. The Committee noted the importance of defining sharply focused objectives for the conference, and that the goals of such a conference might also be achieved through other means, including intensification of work within the Committee. It also requested the Subcommittee to consider the organizational and funding details, and noted India's proposal to host the conference.

Other questions

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered various other space-related questions, including life sciences, space medicine and matters relating to planetary exploration and astronomy. The Committee noted the variety of space activities being undertaken in those areas and encouraged further cooperation, especially efforts to increase the participation of developing countries. It also noted the report⁽²⁷⁾ on the role it could play in relation to the decisions and recommendations of UNCED (see above).

In the area of life sciences, the Subcommittee noted the important advances in medical knowledge resulting from studies of human and animal physiology under microgravity conditions, the growing promise of space technology applications in public health, the role of satellite communications in providing expert medical advice to distant areas, and the contribution of space biotechnology to improved health care. It encouraged further research and exchange of information on those applications, and recommended promoting international cooperation so that all countries could benefit from those advances.

In the area of planetary exploration, the Subcommittee noted the several missions in progress and plans for comprehensive investigations of Mars and Saturn and its moons. It stressed the need further to enhance international cooperation in that area. The Subcommittee noted that the use of spacecraft for astronomical observations had greatly advanced knowledge of the universe and that planned activities would open further realms of the universe to detailed observation.

The Subcommittee welcomed the annual reports of various organizations in and outside the United Nations system⁽³³⁾ and the report of ITU on telecommunications and the peaceful uses of outer space⁽²⁵⁾. It expressed appreciation to COSPAR and IAF for their report on progress in space science, technology and applications in 1992.⁽³⁴⁾

The Committee expressed appreciation to those organizations that had submitted reports and requested that it continue to be kept informed. It also noted the participation in its work and that of its Subcommittees by various organizations.

It recommended that the Secretariat invite Member States to submit annual reports on their space activities, including space programmes, spin-off benefits of space activities and other topics. The Secretariat in December⁽³⁵⁾ submitted such information from eight Member States.

Follow-up to International Space Year

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee noted that the international programmes for ISY, which was endorsed by the General Assembly in 1989⁽³⁶⁾ and celebrated in 1992⁽³⁷⁾ had made important contributions to international cooperation, particularly in the use of space technology for studying and monitoring the environment, and urged that other countries be encouraged to participate in those activities. It requested the Secretariat to continue to promote international cooperation initiated during ISY and to keep it informed of further developments.

The Committee on outer space agreed that one way to broaden and deepen international cooperation in outer space was through international and regional endeavours such as ISY. It noted that the United Nations Programme on Space Applications was continuing its collaboration with ESA in a follow-up to the United Nations/ESA ISY activity on the use of remote-sensing data being provided by ESA to African countries covered by the receiving stations at Maspalomas and Fucino.

Space activities in the post-cold-war era

The Secretary-General, in a July 1993 report⁽³⁸⁾ to the General Assembly, presented his views on international cooperation in space activities for enhancing security in the post-cold-war era. He stated that the end of the cold war and subsequent changes in the international security environment had raised new possibilities for utilizing space technology to promote international peace, security and stability. In the light of the new political environment and the rapid advancement and widespread use of space technology for economic and social services, the international community should ensure that that technology was used to promote security in all its forms.

He suggested that the United Nations and its specialized agencies should develop new policies and programmes for the innovative use of space technologies; international cooperation should be expanded by revitalizing existing mechanisms and developing new ones; and new initiatives should be taken to ensure access of all countries to the benefits of space activities. He contended that the security benefits to the international community from greater cooperative utilization of space technology were many, and that the United Nations should ensure that the improved technologies benefited all people, either through existing organizations or through the establishment of new ones.

The Secretary-General outlined the post-cold-war challenges, including the conversion of military technology, commercialization and proliferation, environmental protection and the new role of the United Nations. He made recommendations for enhancing security through space technology in the areas of international space policy, arms control and disarmament, scientific and technical cooperation, and the commercialization of space activities, and proposed new approaches to space and security through confidence-building and improving access to space technology.

According to the Secretary-General, the report represented a blueprint for integrating space technology more fully into the mechanisms for preserving and enhancing international security. He called for open discussion to determine the best methods for implementing the recommendations in the report.

The General Assembly, in resolution 48/39, welcomed the report. In resolution 48/74 B, it noted the study submitted by the Secretary-General on the application of confidence-building measures in outer space⁽³⁹⁾ Prevention of an arms race in outer space was the subject of resolution 48/74 A.

Space law

The Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space, at its thirty-second session (New York, 22 March-8 April 1993)⁽⁴⁰⁾ considered questions relating to an early review and possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; and legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit of and in the interests of all States.

The Committee on outer space took note with appreciation of the Subcommittee's report on its 1993 session⁽⁵⁾

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in outer space

The Legal Subcommittee re-established its working group to consider the revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, adopted by the General Assembly in 1992. The group considered that revision of the substantive provisions of the Principles should be based on possible scientific and technical developments and decided to await the input of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in that respect. Some delegations were of the view that sufficient time had not elapsed since adoption of the Principles to allow for a meaningful assessment of their operation, while others considered that concerns relating to the Principles should be freely expressed and recorded. Questions relating to Principle 4, on safety assessment, were also raised.

The Committee on outer space agreed that the Principles should be implemented and reviewed to determine whether revision was necessary. It also agreed that the need for revision should be considered by the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in the light of changing technology before any actual revision was undertaken by the Legal Subcommittee or the Committee.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee, through a working group, continued consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure its rational and equitable use without prejudice to the role of ITU. In addition to working papers submitted at previous sessions, the Subcommittee had before it a working paper presented by Colombia on the geostationary satellite orbit.

The Committee on outer space noted that a working paper on the legal regime for aerospace objects had been submitted by the Russian Federation and a draft questionnaire, based on an informal paper by the Chairman of the working group, had been discussed and would be forwarded for comments to Member States, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee. The Committee agreed that those documents, among others, could form a suitable basis for further discussion. It noted the deliberations of the Legal Subcommittee and the exchange of views on the geostationary orbit, based on Colombia's paper. The Committee recognized that space debris in the geostationary and lower orbits was cause for concern.

Exploration of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee re-established its working group to consider the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. The group based its discussion on a working paper on principles regarding international cooperation in the exploration and utilization of outer space for peaceful purposes, submitted by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The Committee on outer space noted the constructive work carried out by the Subcommittee and the working group, the discussion based on the working paper and the positive responses of its co-sponsors to comments by other delegations, which would be taken into account in future discussions.

Spacecraft launchings

During 1993, eight countries (Australia, Brazil, China, Germany, India, Japan, Russian Federation, United States) and ESA provided information to the United Nations on the launchings of objects into orbit or beyond⁽¹⁾ in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ and article IV of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space⁽³⁾ which entered into force in 1976.

Convention on registration of launchings

As at 31 December 1993, there were 38 States parties to the Convention on registration. During the year, Argentina, the Czech Republic and Slovakia became parties to the Convention, following the dissolution of Czechoslovakia on 31 December 1992. In 1979, ESA had declared its acceptance of the rights and obligations of the Convention.

Chapter V

Other political questions

In 1993, issues relating to information, effects of atomic radiation and Antarctica continued to be on the General Assembly's agenda. The Assembly adopted resolutions on promotion of communication and the free flow of information (resolution 48/44 A) and on United Nations public information activities (48/44 B). It requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue its work on the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources (48/38). The Assembly reaffirmed the need to promote further public awareness of Antarctica's importance to the ecosystem, encouraged the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to increase cooperation with a view to reducing the number of scientific stations on that continent, and urged the international community to ensure protection of the Antarctic environment (48/80).

Six States were admitted to United Nations membership, bringing the total number to 184. One Member State—the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic—ceased to exist on 31 December 1992, while a new State was admitted under the provisional name of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was barred from participating in the work of the Economic and Social Council pending its admission to United Nations membership (47/229).

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations continued to focus on publicizing the Organization's work and goals and enhancing the information and communication capabilities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC).

Information policies and activities were reviewed at the fifteenth session of the General Assembly's Committee on Information (New York, 10-28 May 1993).^W Its recommendations were considered by the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee in October and November and acted on by the Assembly in December. Also in December, the Assembly, by decision 48/318, appointed Gabon and Israel as members of the Committee on Information, thereby increasing its membership from 81 to 83 (see APPENDIX III).

The Committee had before it six reports submitted by the Secretary-General in response to a 1992 General Assembly resolution.⁽²⁾ A report on ways and means of furthering the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries⁽³⁾ reproduced the observations and suggestions of 13 Member States, as at 12 May 1993, on the subject. Other reports reviewed implementation of a system-wide information programme for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED)⁽⁴⁾ outlined United Nations publications policy⁽⁵⁾ and continuous and major publications of DPI⁽⁶⁾ and described the allocation of resources to United Nations information centres (UNICs)⁽⁷⁾ and their integration with other United Nations offices⁽⁸⁾ Another report, dealing with the enhancing and reactivation of UNICs and the establishment of new ones⁽⁹⁾ was submitted pursuant to a decision taken by the Bureau of the Committee on 10 February. The Committee also considered a report of the Secretary-General on JUNIC activities⁽¹⁰⁾ presented in response to a 1991 Assembly request⁽¹¹⁾

Mass communication

At its 1993 session, the Committee on Information discussed the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order, examined United Nations public information policies and activities, and evaluated the progress achieved by the United Nations system in information and communications.

UNESCO activities. In 1993, UNESCO continued to promote the free flow of information and to develop communication through its International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC), the General Information Programme and the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme. In accordance with a resolution of its 1991 General Conference, UNESCO began to develop a coherent approach to its information activities through cooperation and closer coordination among those programmes.

A meeting of African communications experts (Yaounde, Cameroon, 17-19 March), organized by IPDC, discussed the situation of the mass media in Africa and issues related to the preparation of projects, their priorities and funding. UNESCO sponsored a national seminar on improving press pluralism in Mali and an awareness-raising seminar on problems of professional ethics in Cameroon and co-sponsored a workshop on the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome for 24 African radio and television producers. It provided financial assistance for training 30 press photographers from South Africa, as well as for a programme in management techniques for 25 publishers of the private African press and a course in electronic page-setting and media management for eight women journalists and editors from China. The fifth IPDC/UNESCO Prize for rural communication was awarded in October to the College de l'Air of Mauritius for its media campaign to increase awareness of health problems associated with stress.

The General Conference of UNESCO, at its twenty-seventh session (Paris, 25 October-16 November 1993), in a resolution on communication, information and informatics in the service of humanity, invited the Director-General to promote a better balanced dissemination of information, support programme exchange and foster the broadcasting in industrialized countries of radio and television programmes produced in developing countries; to strengthen communication capacities in developing countries by expanding IPDC's activities, provide training for communication professionals and technicians, especially for women producers, and foster the development of communication infrastructures in rural and disadvantaged suburban areas; to encourage member States to adopt information policies and promote regional cooperation in the development of and access to specialized information services; to strengthen regional informatics networks and the training of informatics specialists; and to develop further the INFORMAFRICA programme aimed at introducing informatics into education systems in Africa. By two other resolutions, the General Conference invited the Director-General to mobilize extrabudgetary resources for communication activities for the benefit of women and to promote the establishment of a network of schools of journalism associated with UNESCO.

During 1993, IPDC continued activities aimed at channelling international cooperation and funding to support the development of media infrastructure in developing countries. The Bureau of the IPDC Intergovernmental Council (Paris, 19-28 April) earmarked a supplementary $1,230,000 to finance projects approved in 1992 and $20,000 to cover the urgent needs of students with IPDC scholarships in the former USSR. It also pre-selected 58 out of the 102 projects received for submission to the Intergovernmental Council, including several private projects as well as projects for Central European countries.

Under a joint IPDC/Republic of Korea training programme, 15 scholarships for further training in television were awarded to specialists from developing countries and Eastern Europe; 10 more were awarded to African nationals under the IPDC/Nigeria programme.

During 1992-1993,⁽¹²⁾ 46 projects amounting to $6,837,718 were financed under the IPDC Special Account and funds-in-trust arrangements. That total included 15 projects ($3,549,466) for Africa, 14 ($1,914,252) for Asia and the Pacific, 11 ($611,000) for Latin America and the Caribbean, 3 ($500,000) for the Arab States, 1 ($113,000) for Europe and 2 interregional projects ($150,000). In 1993, a total of $1,433,000 in pledged or received contributions was allocated to the Special Account and $2,944,600 to funds-in-trust; in addition, Germany and the Netherlands pledged or contributed DM 150,000 and 400,000 guilders, respectively, to the Special Account.

Projects financed in 1993 dealt with the publication of a women's magazine in Mozambique; improved radio coverage of the capital of Mauritania; newspaper and journal development in Gabon, Ghana, Kiribati and Samoa; television programmes on cultural heritage in Belize; refurbishing radio broadcasting facilities in Grenada; establishment of an educational media unit in Saint Kitts and Nevis; development of a computer system for the Information Service of Jamaica; human resources development in State television of Uruguay; and assistance to rehabilitate broadcasting in Uganda.

At its fourteenth session (Paris, 5-8 October)⁽¹³⁾ the IPDC Intergovernmental Council approved 60 projects amounting to $2.2 million, excluding funds-in-trust arrangements. Of the total, 3 projects were interregional, 13 regional, 26 national and 18 for the least developed countries.

Promotion of press freedom

The UNESCO General Conference again invited the Director-General to promote press freedom and independent and pluralistic media, while the IPDC Intergovernmental Council decided that IPDC's orientation regarding freedom of the press and the pluralism and independence of the media must become a priority concern. UNESCO fielded a high-level mission to Kazakhstan to help develop legislation promoting press freedom and media pluralism and began, in cooperation with DPI, preparations for a seminar on promoting independent and pluralistic media in Latin America and the Caribbean, to be held in 1994. In addition, IPDC co-sponsored the establishment of an early-warning network to combat infringements of press freedom.

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ the Secretariat, by an April 1993 note⁽¹⁴⁾ transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a 1991 resolution of the General Conference⁽¹⁵⁾ calling for the promotion of press freedom in the world.

UN public information

DPI activities

In response to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report on questions relating to information⁽¹⁶⁾ which focused on activities of DPI.

The report stated that DPI continued in 1993 to disseminate information about United Nations activities pertaining to peace-keeping and peacemaking. It provided advice and technical support to peace-keeping missions, issued periodic updates on peace-keeping operations and produced new ad hoc radio programmes on the situation in Somalia and in the former Yugoslavia, as well as features on the situation in Haiti and on activities concerning Iraq's weapons capabilities. DPI also prepared a variety of printed and audiovisual materials at the request of the United Nations Observer Mission to Verify the Referendum in Eritrea and provided on-the-spot coverage of the referendum. Among other materials produced by DPI were a television news story on Cambodia, a documentary on the peace process in Central America, and an educational video and a teaching manual on United Nations peace-keeping and peacemaking activities in English, French and Spanish.

Activities under the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme included a press kit on the Secretary-General's report on new dimensions of arms regulation and disarmament in the post-cold-war era (see PART ONE, Chapter II) and several features, documentaries and radio and video programmes on disarmament-related issues, as well as the preparation of a two-day symposium in New York in the context of Disarmament Week.

DPI also pursued activities within the framework of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000) (see PART ONE, Chapter III) and disseminated information on the advancement of the status of women and their role in society through feature articles on women and poverty and women in public life, the weekly radio series entitled "Women" and bimonthly programmes in Arabic, French and Spanish, four video segments on women's issues and a programme on the rights of women in the development process. It continued to develop a public information strategy for the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII) and held a panel discussion on violence against women (New York, 4 March).

During the reporting period, DPI received almost 4,000 requests for information on human rights and distributed some 273,000 copies of its human rights publications in bulk and more than 500,000 copies by request. They included reprints and new language versions of various human rights instruments, the biennial Objective: Justice, and numerous pamphlets, booklets, feature articles and brochures. DPI provided extensive coverage of the World Conference on Human Rights (Vienna, 14-25 June) (see PART THREE, Chapter X) and organized an encounter for journalists on the main issues before the Conference. It also publicized the International Year of the World's Indigenous People (1993), (see PART THREE, Chapter X) and prepared an exhibition on indigenous people and the modern world, held in New York in November/December 1993.

As to activities relating to economic and social development, DPI organized the press launch of the World Economic Survey 1993 and promoted the Report on the World Social Situation 1993; produced, among other materials, a press kit and a radio documentary on disability-related issues, in connection with the end of the Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992); and prepared an information programme for the Year of the Family (1994), including a radio programme on women and the family and materials for the Year's launch by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in Malta in November/December. The Department helped prepare an information programme for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000) and a public information campaign for the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, to be held in Japan in 1994 (see PART THREE, Chapter III). DPI also sponsored the 1993 annual NGO conference, on social development (New York, 8-10 September), and was preparing information programmes for the World Summit for Social Development and the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, both to be held in 1995 (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

Activities on environment and development included an information programme as a follow-up to UNCED and media campaigns for the first session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (New York, 14-25 June) and for the Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks (New York, 12-30 July). DPI also planned an information campaign for the 1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and for negotiations for a Convention on Desertification.

DPI pursued its activities pertaining to African economic recovery and development, based on the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted in 1991,⁽¹⁷⁾ through continued publication of its quarterly periodical Africa Recovery and production of briefing papers on the peace-keeping and humanitarian operations in Somalia and Mozambique, food security on the continent and the prevention of famine in southern Africa. The Department also produced a brochure on external debt and African development and held a briefing on the subject (Washington, DC., 15 April) for United States congressional aides and administration officials.

As part of its programme on the question of Palestine, mandated by the Assembly in 1992⁽¹⁸⁾ DPI sponsored an encounter for European journalists on the question of promoting a culture for peace in the Middle East (London, 9-11 June) and began preparations for a fact-finding mission for journalists to that region. In addition, a radio documentary on the question of international protection for the Palestinian people was produced and distributed worldwide.

In 1993, DPI extended its services to public access databases, such as Federal News in Washington, DC., and Agora in Italy. It continued to issue its annual directory of associated NGOs and began preparing two new directories to classify them by country and by their speciality and/or field of interest. The United Nations/International Public Relations Association Award for outstanding public relations campaigns addressing priority United Nations issues was established, and the 1992 Award and honourable mentions were presented, respectively, for programmes aimed at raising the status of women in India, expanding community-based health care in Africa and increasing awareness of environment/development issues in the United States. DPI's annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries was held (New York, 14 September-22 October); since 1981, 224 participants from more than 120 countries had been trained under the programme. DPI also continued its cooperation with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries and other news agencies of and in developing countries by providing them with daily news items on a variety of issues.

The Secretary-General's report also described DPI activities in connection with international efforts against drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking (see PART THREE, Chapter XVI) and against apartheid, as well as United Nations publications during 1993, including the UN Chronicle and the Yearbook of the United Nations. It noted that publication of Development Forum had ceased by 31 December 1992 for financial reasons, and that an option of merging the United Nations Development Business and the World Bank's International Business Opportunities was being considered.

UN information centres

In the interest of improved productivity and economies of scale, as well as in order to present a unified United Nations image, the Secretary-General decided in March 1992⁽¹⁹⁾ that, wherever feasible, the operations of UNICs should be integrated with those of field offices of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). In March 1993,⁽⁸⁾ he reported on the integration of UNICs with other United Nations offices, while maintaining the centres' functional autonomy and ensuring that they were fully operational. A 1990 agreement between UNDP and DPI formed the basis for further cooperation in that regard.

At the time of the report, 18 UNICs were headed by a UNDP resident representative who served concurrently as full-time centre director. The director reported to DPI on every aspect of the work connected with the centre, including administration, budget and staffing, all of which remained independent from UNDP.

In addition to financial advantages, the integration of offices was expected to have qualitative benefits arising from closer interaction and increased cooperation. For instance, it was recommended that a schedule of events for the year be established, identifying priority themes, selecting target audiences, coordinating promotional efforts and seeking the cooperation of local institutions and organizations. The offices were requested to identify one information staff member to serve as the focal point in dealings with national institutions and organizations.

Most of the integrated UNICs shared common office premises with UNDP. Where there were separate premises, as was the case with six UNICs, the UNDP resident representative was requested to explore the feasibility of common premises at a future date.

Concluding, the Secretary-General stated that the experience would be evaluated after a trial period of one year, during which time the terms of integration would be refined. In the meantime, DPI and UNDP regularly reviewed the integration and ensured maximum collaboration.

On 10 December, by decision 48/418, the Assembly requested the Committee on Information to consider on a priority basis, at its 1994 session, recent initiatives regarding the creation of new UNICs and to make a recommendation on the matter, bearing in mind the need for improved criteria for the establishment of centres.

In resolution 48/44 B, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to the Committee in 1994 on the results of the current trial of integrating 18 UNICs with UNDP field offices, for the purpose of evaluating the need for any subsequent integration. The report should also contain the host countries' views, bearing in mind Member States' concerns that integration could adversely affect the centres' functions in developing countries.

In resolution 48/209, the Assembly reaffirmed that field office activities related to public information should follow the relevant provisions of the Assembly, particularly resolution 48/44 B. The Assembly also affirmed the need to increase the number of common premises, in cooperation with host Governments, in a way that increased efficiency but did not increase costs.

Resource allocation to UNICs

In an April 1993 report on allocation of resources to and strengthening of UNICs,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General noted DPI's efforts to enhance the centres' electronic communications capabilities and provide training for staff. However, its limited resources seriously curtailed the centres' ability to expand public information activities; therefore, they had to rely more and more on the cooperation of Governments, NGOs and local interest groups. The centres' overall situation continued to be critical, as DPI had to absorb an increasing amount of extrabudgetary funds not forthcoming from a number of host Governments.

A means of redressing differences in the allocation of resources to all centres was, in the Secretary-General's view, effective support from every host Government on an assured and continuing basis. Equally important and an essential prerequisite for the establishment of new centres and information components, as well as for the enhancement of existing ones, must be General Assembly approval and provision of additional staffing and financial resources.

Taking note of the report, the Assembly, in resolution 48/44 B, called on the Secretary-General to study ways to rationalize and effect equitable disbursement of resources to all UNICs and to report thereon to the Committee on Information in 1994.

UN interim offices in new Member States

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported in March 1993⁽²¹⁾ on the establishment of United Nations interim offices in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan to facilitate dialogue between the Organization and its programmes and the new Member States.

The report summarized objectives and functions of the interim offices and described related administrative and financial arrangements and budget requirements. Total costs for 1992-1993 were estimated at $4,149,100 gross, of which

$2,008,400 was to be financed by UNDP, $1,822,900 from the United Nations regular budget and $317,800 by host Governments. On the basis of those estimates, the Secretary-General requested an additional net appropriation of $1,244,400 under the Organization's programme budget for 1992-1993.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), also in March⁽²²⁾ noted that the relevant intergovernmental bodies had yet to decide on financing the interim offices and that it had no mandate to recommend funding from the regular budget. It recommended that the existing arrangements be considered provisional and exceptional, pending a policy decision by the Assembly.

By decision 47/469 of 6 May, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, endorsed ACABQ's observations and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that his proposals relating to the interim offices complied with its resolutions pertaining to operational activities and dissemination of information. It took note of the provisional and exceptional arrangements in place and stressed that they could continue until its policy decision on the matter at its forty-eighth session.

Coordination in the UN system

The inter-agency Joint United Nations Information Committee, which coordinates information activities in the United Nations system, held its nineteenth session in 1993 (London, 20-22 July)⁽²³⁾ Its discussions focused on the programme and funding of the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service, the question of a system-wide publication on development issues, participation in international exhibits and project proposals for inter-agency information programmes on upcoming events, such as the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the International Conference on Population and Development and the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, all scheduled for 1994, as well as the observance of the United Nations fiftieth anniversary, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development, both to be held in 1995.

JUNIC also considered proposed activities for the 1993 International Year of the World's Indigenous People, the 1994 International Year of the Family and the launching of World Day for Water (22 March). It reviewed inter-agency cooperation in audiovisual productions, discussed the use of computer technology in the field of information and examined its cooperation with United Nations information centres and services. The Committee noted that Agenda IV of the Agenda for a Small Planet series of television documentaries was never completed for lack of financial support, and decided to postpone implementation of Agenda V until sufficient start-up funds could be raised.

Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-second session at Vienna (17-28 May 1993). In September, the Committee submitted to the General Assembly its eleventh comprehensive report on the sources and effects of ionizing radiation for the period 1989-1993,⁽¹⁾ later issued with scientific annexes as a United Nations publication⁽²⁾

The report focused on natural, medical, occupational and man-made radiation exposures, including those from nuclear explosions and major accidents and from the production of nuclear weapons and nuclear power; radiobiological and epidemiological studies; deterministic effects of radiation on the developing human brain and in children; radiation-induced cancer; hereditary effects of radiation; and perception of radiation risks.

The report presented collective doses of radiation from natural and man-made sources. The Committee concluded that improved procedures had generally decreased radiation exposures. Its estimates indicated that, contrary to the general belief, radiation was a weak carcinogen, accounting for only some 4 per cent of deaths caused by cancer, and that most of that radiation came from natural sources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 48/38 without vote.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, in which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 47/66 of 14 December 1992, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and the environment,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty-eight years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the completion in 1993 of the eleventh comprehensive report of the Scientific Committee entitled Sources and Effects of Ionizing Radiation, thereby providing to the scientific and world community its latest evaluations of the sources and effects of ionizing radiation;

4. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Also requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

Antarctica

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly resolution(¹) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report(²) evaluating the response to the Assembly's call on the 1959 Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to deposit with him information covering all aspects of Antarctica.

On 19 August 1993, Italy, on behalf of the States parties to the Treaty (Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay (italic indicates consultative status)), transmitted to the Secretary-General the final report of the Seventeenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Venice, 11-20 November 1992), containing detailed information about different aspects of Antarctica.

The Meeting reviewed reports from a number of international bodies—such as the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources, the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research (SCAR), the Council of the Managers of National Antarctic Programmes, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Hydrographic Organization and the Antarctic and Southern Ocean Coalition—and from the depositary Government of the Convention for the Conservation of Antarctic Seals. It emphasized the importance of promoting inspections under the Antarctic Treaty as a means of monitoring activities in Antarctica and exchanging information. It adopted recommendations concerning proposed management plans for some specially protected areas and examined environmental monitoring issues, including the report of the First Meeting of Experts on Environmental Monitoring in Antarctica (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1-4 June 1992).

The Meeting noted that Spain had ratified the Treaty's Protocol on Environmental Protection and that other parties were expected to do so, and considered the establishment of the Committee for Environmental Protection foreseen in the Protocol, following its entry into force. Consensus was reached that a secretariat should be set up to assist both the Meeting and the Committee in performing their functions. The Meeting also analysed recommendations regarding tourism and non-governmental activities and pertinent regulations contained in the Protocol and its annexes.

The Meeting recommended that Governments adopt emission standards for the combustion of fossil fuels and incineration of waste to contain contamination of the Antarctic environment, and that they seek advice from SCAR on the types of long-term programmes necessary to verify that tourism, scientific research and other human activities did not have significant adverse effects on birds, seals and plants. In addition, the Meeting acknowledged continuing ozone depletion and a rise in ultraviolet radiation that could have adverse effects on the Antarctic marine ecosystem, and agreed that that information should be made known to the parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.(³)

Other matters discussed included Antarctic meteorology and telecommunications, marine hydrometeorological services to navigation in the Southern Ocean, cooperation in hydrographic surveying and charting of Antarctic water, air safety in Antarctica, international scientific and logistic cooperation and questions related to the exercise of jurisdiction in Antarctica.

Concluding his report, the Secretary-General noted continuing progress in international cooperation on Antarctica and a trend to move the Antarctic Treaty system towards increased environment-related action. International cooperation in scientific research and environmental priorities given by that system, he said, served as a guarantee for the preservation of the continent as a zone of peace and cooperation.

Antarctica and the environment

In October 1993,⁽⁴⁾ in response to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the state of the environment in Antarctica. The report, which took into account information from Member States, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, considered Antarctica's influence on the global environmental system and questions relating to scientific research and protection of the Antarctic environment.

The report indicated that the most important among global change effects in the polar regions were man-induced ozone depletion and the "greenhouse effect", which might result in sea-ice and ice-sheet melting and a consequent global sealevel rise. It further noted a programme of global change research in the Antarctic, developed by SCAR, and summarized the objectives, current status and future plans of its six core projects, dealing with the continent's sea-ice zone interactions and feedbacks within the global geosphere-biosphere system; global palaeo-environmental records from the Antarctic ice sheet and marine and land sediments; mass balance of the ice sheet and sealevel; Antarctica's stratospheric ozone, tropospheric chemistry and the effect of ultraviolet radiation on the biosphere; the role of the Antarctic in biogeochemical cycles and exchanges, its atmosphere and ocean; and environmental monitoring and detection of global change in Antarctica.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General said interdependence between human activities and the state of the environment increased the importance of effective actions aimed at establishing harmonious relations between nature and man, and, in that context, the significance of scientific research of the Antarctic ecosystems, given the continent's paramount value in the global environment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, adopted resolution 48/80 by roll-call vote.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

In January 1993, the Secretary-General circulated to the General Assembly and the Security Council an application of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia⁽¹¹⁾ for admission to the United Nations. The application was made in July 1992 and was followed by informal consultations of the Council President.

In March 1993,⁽¹²⁾ the Republic expressed willingness to continue cooperating with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to settle the difference that had arisen over the country's name and to promote confidence-building measures with Greece, on the understanding that that in no way affected the process of the Republic's admission to United Nations membership. It pointed out, however, that it would not accept "the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia" as the name of the country.

In April⁽¹³⁾ the Republic informed the Council that it would submit to the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee proposals for promotion of confidence-building measures with Greece. Greece, also in April⁽¹⁴⁾ agreed to admitting the new State to the Organization under a provisional name, but objected to using the flag bearing the Sun of Vergina as the symbol of the Republic.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 7 April, acting on the Republic's application, the Security Council adopted resolution 817(1993) without vote.

The Security Council,

Having examined the application for admission to the United Nations contained in document A/47/876-S/25147,

Noting that the applicant fulfils the criteria for membership in the United Nations laid down in Article 4 of the Charter,

Noting, however, that a difference has arisen over the name of the State, which needs to be resolved in the interest of the maintenance of peaceful and good-neighbourly relations in the region,

Welcoming the readiness of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, at the request of the Secretary-General, to use their good offices to settle the above-mentioned difference and to promote confidence-building measures among the parties,

Taking note of the contents of the letters received from the parties,

1. Urges the parties to continue to cooperate with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in order to arrive at a speedy settlement of their difference;

2. Recommends to the General Assembly that the State whose application is contained in document A/47/876-S/25147 be admitted to membership in the United Nations, this State being provisionally referred to for all purposes within the United Nations as "the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia" pending settlement of the difference that has arisen over the name of the State;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the outcome of the initiative taken by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

Security Council resolution 817(1993)

7 April 1993 Meeting 3196 Adopted without vote

Draft by Committee on the Admission of New Members (S/25544).

Following the adoption of the resolution, the Council President made a statement on behalf of the members⁽¹⁵⁾

"The Security Council has just recommended that the State whose application is in document S/25147 be admitted to membership in the United Nations. It is with great pleasure that, on behalf of the members of the Council, I congratulate the State concerned on this historic occasion. The members of the Council look forward to its early admission to the United Nations.

"The Council welcomes the initiative taken by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, at the request of the Secretary-General, in order to set up a mechanism to settle the difference which has arisen over the name of the State, and to promote confidence-building measures among the two parties. The Council attaches the highest importance to implementing as soon as possible the confidence-building measures referred to in the resolution which has just been adopted. The Council expresses the hope that the initiative of the Co-Chairmen will be pursued expeditiously, that both sides will fully cooperate with the Co-Chairmen, that both sides, and all others concerned, will avoid taking steps that would render a solution more difficult, and that both will accept and implement the outcome. A mutually acceptable solution to these matters would be a major contribution to the maintenance of peaceful and good-neighbourly relations in the region.

"The Council is clear that the reference in the resolution that has just been adopted to 'the former Yugoslav Republic' carries no implication whatsoever that the State concerned has any connection with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). It merely reflects the historic fact that the State recommended for admission to the United Nations in the present resolution was in the past a republic of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 April, having considered the Council's recommendation⁽¹⁶⁾ the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/225 by acclamation.

Admission of the State whose application is contained in document A/47/876-S/25147 to membership in the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 7 April 1993 that the State whose application is contained in document A/47/876-S/25147 should be admitted to membership in the United Nations,

Having considered the application for membership contained in document A/47/876-S/25147, Decides to admit the State whose application is contained in document A/47/876-S/25147 to membership in the United Nations, this State being provisionally referred to for all purposes within the United Nations as "the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia" pending settlement of the difference that has arisen over the name of the State.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). Pursuant to the Council's 7 April resolution, the Secretary-General reported in May⁽¹⁷⁾ that, following extensive consultations with the parties, the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee had submitted to them a draft Treaty Confirming the Existing Frontier and Establishing Measures for Confidence Building, Friendship and Neighbourly Cooperation. The proposed Treaty (which was annexed to the report) represented a fair balance of both parties' claims and aspirations and included special provisions to promote friendly relations and to constitute confidence-building measures, as well as provisions for friendship and neighbourly cooperation.

With regard to the name to be used by the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Greece stated that it should not include the word "Macedonia" but indicated that, if that term were to be included, the name "Slavomacedonia" could be envisaged. The other side preferred "The Republic of Macedonia" to be used for all purposes but was prepared to discuss the modalities of the use of a name for international purposes only. Taking into account those positions, the Co-Chairmen proposed the name "The Republic of Nova Makedonija" for all official purposes, both domestic and international.

Communications. On 27 May⁽¹⁸⁾ Greece, without objecting to the draft Treaty in general, said it had difficulties with the name "Nova Makedonija" and considered that further efforts should be deployed to resolve the issue, including possible direct talks under the Secretary-General's auspices.

On 29 May⁽¹⁹⁾ the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia proposed an amendment to article 8 of the draft Treaty (concerning human rights) and raised specific objections in connection with articles 5 (on the use of the name of the Republic of Nova Makedonija for all official purposes) and 7 (on the use of symbols, names, flags, monuments or emblems), which it considered to be drafted in a wide and imprecise manner. Another objection related to the necessity to stipulate Macedonian and Greek (apart from English) as the languages of the two parties that were to sign an international agreement. The Republic found it indispensable for negotiations to continue, including possible bilateral talks. It emphasized that its constitutional name, "The Republic of Macedonia", did not imply territorial aspirations and that therefore no other proposals were necessary.

On 7 June⁽²⁰⁾ Albania objected to "Slavo-Macedonia" as a possible name of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, saying that it ignored the existence of the Albanian community in that country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 18 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 845(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 817(1993) of 7 April 1993, in which it urged Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to continue to cooperate with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in order to arrive at a speedy settlement of their difference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 817(1993), together with the statement of the Government of Greece and the letter of the President of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia dated 27 and 29 May 1993, respectively,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia for their efforts and commends to the parties as a sound basis for the settlement of their difference the proposals set forth in annex V to the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges the parties to continue their efforts under the auspices of the Secretary-General to arrive at a speedy settlement of the remaining issues between them;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed on the progress of these further efforts, the objective of which is to resolve the difference between the two parties before the commencement of the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly, and to report to the Council on their outcome in good time, and decides to resume consideration of the matter in the light of the report.

Security Council resolution 845(1993)

18 June 1993 Meeting 3243 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25968).

On 13 July⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council that Cyrus Vance, the former Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee, had accepted the request to continue his good offices, beginning on 1 August, to help the parties reach agreement. The Council welcomed that information on 15 July.⁽²²⁾

Report of the Secretary-General (September) and further developments. In response to the Council's June resolution, the Secretary-General reported in September⁽²³⁾ that both parties, at their meeting in New York on 23 August under Mr. Vance's auspices, agreed to commence direct discussions in Mr. Vance's presence in New York on 28 September. Pending the opening of the discussions, they reserved their positions as stated earlier.

In a statement following the 28 September meeting, Mr. Vance said the parties agreed to defer further direct talks until after the 10 October elections in Greece.

Following the elections and the installation of a new Government, Greece addressed a letter to the Secretary-General regarding the matter. In his reply of 8 November, the Secretary-General noted that a solution would require both parties to demonstrate the necessary political will, mutual respect and a spirit of compromise. He expressed readiness to assist the two countries in their efforts to reach a speedy settlement. Following the exchange of letters, Mr. Vance maintained contact with the parties with a view to determining steps which might lead to progress towards a settlement.

Yugoslavia and UN membership

In 1993, the Security Council again considered the question of membership of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the United Nations, further to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁴⁾ barring it from participating in the Assembly's work.

On 28 April, the Council adopted resolution 821(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Considering that the State formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has ceased to exist, Recalling resolution 757(1992) of 30 May 1992 which noted that "the claim by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations has not been generally accepted",

Recalling also its resolution 777(1992) of 19 September 1992, in which it recommended to the General Assembly that it decide that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should apply for membership in the United Nations and that it shall not participate in the work of the General Assembly,

Recalling further that the General Assembly by resolution 47/1 of 22 September 1992, having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 19 September 1992, considered that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations, and therefore decided that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should apply for membership in the United Nations and that it shall not participate in the work of the General Assembly,

Recalling further that in its resolution 777(1992) the Council decided to consider the matter again before the end of the main part of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly, and that in December 1992 the members of the Council agreed to keep the subject-matter of resolution 777(1992) under continuous review and to consider it again at a later date,

Reaffirms that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cannot continue automatically the membership of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Nations, and therefore recommends to the General Assembly that, further to the decisions taken in resolution 47/1, it decide that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) shall not participate in the work of the Economic and Social Council;

Decides to consider the matter again before the end of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Brazil, Cape Verde, Djibouti, France, Hungary, Japan, Morocco, New Zealand, Pakistan, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.
Against: None.
Abstaining: China, Russian Federation.

Explaining its abstention, China said that all the Republics of the former Yugoslavia should take their own seats in the United Nations and no Republic should be excluded lightly; in its opinion, the resolution was a transitory arrangement. The Russian Federation was against any further steps, in addition to the action taken in 1992, to keep Belgrade outside international organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 April, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/229 by roll-call vote.

Recommendation of the Security Council of 28 April 1993

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/1 of 22 September 1992,

Having received the recommendation made by the Security Council in its resolution 821(1993) of 28 April 1993 that, further to the decisions taken in resolution 47/1, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) shall not participate in the work of the Economic and Social Council,

1. Decides that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) shall not participate in the work of the Economic and Social Council;

2. Takes note of the intention of the Security Council to consider the matter again before the end of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Cameroon, China, India, Iraq, Kenya, Lesotho, Mexico, Myanmar, Russian Federation, Sri Lanka, Zimbabwe.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, Denmark said it was necessitated by continued disregard of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for the resolve of the international community. It expressed the hope that the Assembly's decision would open the eyes of the authorities in Belgrade and thus obviate the need for further Security Council and Assembly action.

In a statement of 30 April⁽²⁵⁾ Yugoslavia expressed deep regret at the adoption of the resolution, which it called an incredulous example of exerting pressure on Yugoslavia to stop the civil war in Bosnia and Herzegovina to which it was not a party. The decision to deny it the right to participate in the work of the Economic and Social Council would affect negatively cooperation with neighbouring countries and the region as a whole in providing humanitarian assistance, securing basic human rights, combating illicit drug trafficking, crime prevention and assistance to vulnerable groups.

On 17 September⁽²⁶⁾ the Security Council President informed the President of the Assembly that the Council members agreed to keep the subject-matter of the 28 April resolution under continuous review and to consider it again at a later date.

Institutional machinery

Security Council

In 1993, the Security Council held 171 meetings and adopted 93 resolutions.

Agenda

The Security Council considered 42 agenda items during 1993. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

On 20 September⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, of 44 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification⁽²⁸⁾ He listed 172 other matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized.

On 16 November⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General notified the Assembly of a matter with which the Council had ceased to deal (concerning the destruction of the diplomatic mission of Venezuela in Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 2 April 1992)⁽³⁰⁾ and of two matters subsumed under a new item, of which the Council remained seized.

By decision 48/409 A of 17 November, the Assembly took note of those matters.

On 10 December⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General notified the Assembly of the Council's decision⁽³²⁾ to remove 76 items from the list of matters of which it remained seized. The Assembly took note of those matters by decision 48/409 B of 21 December.

In June⁽³³⁾ July⁽³⁴⁾ and August⁽³⁵⁾ the Council agreed on changes concerning its documentation. It decided, among other things, to adopt the draft annual report to the General Assembly at a public meeting and issue it for limited distribution; to publish Council documents and presidential statements in annual series, as of 1 January 1994; to include a chronological listing of presidential statements, with relevant agenda items, in annual reports starting with the report for 1992/93; to make tentative forecasts of the Council's programme of work for each month available to Member States for information; and to ensure the timely submission of the annual report for consideration by the Assembly during the main part of its regular session. The Council further agreed to keep under due consideration the question of establishing new ways to provide information to States not members of the Council.

In 1993, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council, in response to a 1992 Assembly request⁽³⁸⁾ The report⁽³⁹⁾ contained comments received from 76 Member States as at 30 November 1993.

The item was first considered by the Assembly in 1979⁽⁴⁰⁾ when it was introduced on the grounds that United Nations membership had grown to 152, compared to 113 in 1963, when the Council membership was increased from 11 to

On 3 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/26 by consensus.

Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/62 of 11 December 1992,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General which reflected the views of a number of Member States on the agenda item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council",

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, especially Article 23,

Recalling further that the Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf,

Recognizing the need to review the membership of the Security Council and related matters in view of the substantial increase in the membership of the United Nations, especially of developing countries, as well as the changes in international relations,

Bearing in mind the need to continue to enhance the efficiency of the Security Council,

Reaffirming the principle of the sovereign equality of all Members of the United Nations,

Acting in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement,

1. Decides to establish an Open-ended Working Group to consider all aspects of the question of increase in the membership of the Security Council, and other matters related to the Security Council;

2. Requests the Open-ended Working Group to submit a report on the progress of its work to the General Assembly before the end of its forty-eighth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and related matters".

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two sessions during 1993, to resume and conclude its forty-seventh (1992) regular session and to hold the main part of its forty-eighth session. The forty-seventh session resumed on 19 January, 11 February, 16 March, 8, 15, 20 and 29 April, 6, 10 and 28 May, 15 and 22 June, 28 July, 17 August and 14, 15 and 20 September.

The forty-eighth session opened on 21 September and continued until its suspension on 23 December.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting on 14 October 1993,⁽⁴²⁾ the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum from the Secretary-General indicating that, as at 13 October, credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's forty-eighth session had been submitted by 118 Member States. The Legal Counsel explained that the memorandum related solely to Member States which had submitted formal credentials. The Counsel further explained that, subsequent to the memorandum, credentials in due form had been received in respect of the representatives of China. Noting that, in addition to credentials signed by the head of State of Zaire, another communication had been received containing a list of purported representatives of Zaire but not signed by the head of State or issued in his name, the Counsel explained that only the credentials signed by the head of State were to be regarded as formally correct.

Austria stated that acceptance of Zaire's credentials in no way implied its acceptance of that country's Government, formed without the approval of the High Council of the Republic and therefore outside the transition process defined by the sovereign national conference. It said its position was analogous to that of the European Community. The United States associated itself with Austria's disclaimer.

On 15 December, at its second meeting⁽⁴³⁾ the Committee examined a further memorandum from the Secretary-General, reporting that, since the first meeting, formal credentials had been received from 42 other Member States. In addition, information concerning the appointment of their representatives to the forty-eighth session had been communicated to the Secretary-General by 20 Member States, by means of a facsimile communication, letter or note verbale. The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of all those Member States, including those that had communicated by facsimile, letter or note verbale, on the understanding that the latter would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee, acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Chairman, adopted a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received. The Committee also recommended to the Assembly two draft resolutions. On 29 October and 21 December, the Assembly, by resolutions 48/13 A and B, respectively, approved the first⁽⁴²⁾ and second⁽⁴³⁾ reports of the Credentials Committee.

Before resolution 48/13 A was adopted, Iran expressed reservations regarding the credentials of Israel and dissociated itself from the parts of the Committee's report referring to their approval.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that its approval of the report did not mean recognition of Israel's credentials.

Organization of the 1993 session

On 24 September 1993, by decision 48/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee as set forth in its first report⁽⁴⁴⁾ adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the forty-eighth session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; the closing date of the session; the schedule of meetings; the general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; meeting records; concluding statements; resolutions; documentation; questions related to the programme budget; observances and commemorative meetings; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs.

Subsidiary organs

By decision 48/403 A of 24 September, on the recommendation of the General Committee,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the General Assembly authorized the following subsidiary organs to hold meetings during its 1993 session: Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Committee for Programme and Coordination; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; Committee on Conferences; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund; Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa; Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations; Special Committee against Apartheid; Special Committee to Select the Winners of the United Nations Human Rights Prize; and Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

On 29 November, by decision 48/403 B, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences⁽⁴⁵⁾ also authorized meetings of the Governing Council of UNDP.

Agenda

At its resumed forty-seventh session, on 19 January 1993, the General Assembly, on the Secretary-General's proposals, included in the agenda sub-items on the election of a member of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and of a member of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law⁽⁴⁶⁾ and reopened consideration of the items on the appointment of members of ACABQ,⁽⁴⁷⁾ implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples; effects of atomic radiation; international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space; questions relating to information; and the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization⁽⁴⁸⁾ (decision 47/402 B).

By the same decision, on 11 February, the Assembly, also on the Secretary-General's proposals, included an item on financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique⁽⁴⁹⁾ and a sub-item on the election of a member of the International Court of Justice⁽⁵⁰⁾ on 16 March, it deleted the item on financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America from the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session; on 8 April, on the recommendation of the General Committee⁽⁵¹⁾ it included in the agenda of its forty-seventh session a sub-item on the appointment of members and alternate members of the United Nations Staff Pension Committee and an item on emergency assistance to Cuba.

17 August 1993 Meeting 109 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/47/L.64); agenda item 31.

Speaking on behalf of the Asian Group, Fiji said it was not happy with the interim solution because the reduction in the number of the Main Committees resulted in an inequitable allocation of posts, with the Group losing a second chairmanship; however, it supported the resolution on the understanding that the interim arrangement not be construed as a legal basis for future decisions and was applicable only to the forty-eighth session.

Commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1995

In 1993, the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, established by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽⁶⁴⁾ agreed on organizing principles for the commemoration and chose the theme of the fiftieth anniversary, namely, "We the Peoples of the United Nations . . . United for a Better World". An open-ended drafting group, established to prepare a solemn declaration marking the observance of the anniversary in 1995, discussed the conceptual framework for the declaration at its first meeting on 22 June 1993. The Committee also agreed to encourage the participation of NGOs in commemorative events, at both the national and global levels. The Committee further requested that its secretariat be assured adequate staff and related resources. The General Assembly endorsed that request by resolution 48/215.

Activities within the United Nations system were coordinated through the Administrative Committee on Coordination. The secretariat prepared a paper on the status of the commemorative programme and compiled a list of proposed events and activities, divided into three categories: communication/education projects to promote awareness of the United Nations history, structure and functions, to increase grass-roots support of the Organization and to highlight issues on its agenda; commemorative projects to review its past achievements with a view to promoting its future; and celebratory events. Thirteen Member States informed the Secretary-General that they had established national committees for the anniversary and 14 others expressed their intention to do so. A Fiftieth Anniversary Committee was established by the city of San Francisco, United States, where the Charter of the Organization had been signed. As commemorative programmes and events could not be financed from the regular budget, the Secretary-General set up a Trust Fund for the Fiftieth Anniversary Celebrations and urged Member States to support the initiative. A Foundation for the Fiftieth Anniversary was created to allow contributions from corporations, foundations and individuals.

The Committee adopted unanimously a proposal to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Four Nations on General Security. The General Assembly acted on the proposal by adopting resolution 48/6.

By decision 48/406 of 19 October, the Assembly, having considered the Preparatory Committee's report⁽⁶⁵⁾ took note of its activities and decided that it should continue its work.

Following a coordinating meeting of their secretariats (New York, 10 and 11 May 1993), the two organizations held a general meeting (Geneva, 30 and 31 August) to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the first general meeting of cooperation between them. (4) The general meeting, preceded by a meeting of experts on 26 and 27 August, reviewed and appraised the progress of cooperation, established priority areas and agreed on a framework for cooperation, including international peace and security; economic, financial and technical cooperation for development; natural resources and environment; food and agriculture; transport and communications; trade and development; atomic energy; finance; and social affairs. The meeting agreed to establish standing sectoral committees to review annually and monitor the implementation of mutual agreements and the progress of joint activities and to identify new areas of cooperation.

Observer status for the Economic Cooperation Organization

In April 1993,⁽⁹⁾ members of the Economic Cooperation Organization—Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan—requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's forty-eighth session of an item on its observer status in the Assembly. According to the accompanying explanatory memorandum, the Economic Cooperation Organization was established in 1990 as the successor to the Regional Cooperation for Development Organization. Its objectives were to expand trade among member States by providing free access to each other's markets, to promote conditions for sustained economic growth in each member State, to consolidate cultural affinities and spiritual and fraternal ties among them, to contribute to the growth of world trade and to strive to remove trading policies resulting in adverse terms of trade for the developing countries.

PART TWO

Regional questions

Chapter I

Africa

During 1993, the United Nations intensified its efforts to assist the transformation of South Africa into a united, democratic and non-racial society and the eradication of the legacies of the apartheid system. Those ambitions, however, were constantly threatened by a hostile climate of political and ethnic mistrust and the unprecedented escalation of violence, resulting in much loss of innocent lives. The assassination, on 10 April, of Chris Hani, General Secretary of the South African Communist Party, caused widespread unrest. The Security Council condemned that assassination. The General Assembly urged the South African authorities to halt such violence and to protect all South Africans while bringing to justice those responsible (resolution 48/159 A). The Economic and Social Council demanded the release of any political prisoners and detainees and appealed to the international community to support the critical process under way (1993/13).

The South African Parliament established the Transitional Executive Council to oversee the transition to a democratic order. The Assembly lifted all economic sanctions imposed against South Africa, including the oil embargo. As a result, South Africa's political and economic isolation continued to lessen, as more States established or resumed diplomatic, trade and other ties with it, in recognition of the country's achievements towards democracy.

The Security Council increased the number of observers of the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa to serve as a nucleus for the anticipated United Nations role in the upcoming electoral process.

The United Nations continued to face severe challenges elsewhere in Africa. Peace negotiations resumed in Angola, prompting the Security Council to extend the mandate of the second United Nations Angola Verification Mission through March 1994. The Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia to monitor the implementation of a peace agreement signed by the protagonists in the civil war there. It renewed for six months the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique to monitor the implementation of the General Peace Agreement between the Government and its main rival, the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana. The situation in Rwanda continued to deteriorate and was monitored by two new missions, namely, the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda, established to verify that no military assistance reached Rwanda from Ugandan territory, and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, created to assist in implementing the peace agreement signed between the Government and the Rwandese Patriotic Front.

The Security Council established the second United Nations Operation in Somalia, which took over the responsibilities of the Unified Task Force led by the United States. The Council subsequently extended that Operation's mandate through May 1994. Despite a cease-fire agreement signed by the Somali political factions, the security situation in that country remained tense and was characterized by repeated attacks against the United Nations and United States forces.

The Security Council also considered the situation in Burundi, following the October coup d'état that resulted in the assassination of the President. The General Assembly demanded the immediate restoration of the constitutional Government and requested the international community to provide emergency humanitarian assistance to the people of Burundi.

Based on the results of the referendum verified by the United Nations Observer Mission, Eritrea declared independence in April and was admitted to United Nations membership in May.

The Secretary-General continued to exercise his good offices towards finding a solution to the question of the island of Mayotte. The Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island and urged France to accelerate negotiations with a view to ensuring the return of the island to the Comoros.

In October, organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) adopted recommendations for a new joint action programme. The Assembly urged the United Nations to continue to support OAU in its efforts to promote a peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts, and to collaborate with it in implementing the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.

South Africa and apartheid

Important developments continued to take place in South Africa in 1993 as the country progressed towards the complete elimination of apartheid and implementation of transitional arrangements for the establishment of a non-racial democratic society. In March, discussions in preparation for multi-party talks began among 26 political formations. In April, agreement was reached on the establishment of a Plenary, a Multi-Party Negotiating Council (MPNC) and a Planning Committee as the structure for the multi-party negotiation process. In July, MPNC adopted binding constitutional principles for a democratic Government. It was decided that non-racial elections for a constitutional assembly would be held on 27 April 1994. In September, the South African Parliament established a Transitional Executive Council (TEC) to oversee the preparation for and transition to a democratic order in South Africa. Bills were also passed setting up independent media and electoral commissions and an independent broadcasting authority.

In November, the leaders of 20 political parties of the multi-party negotiating framework endorsed an interim constitution for the transitional period and the electoral bill agreed on by MPNC. They confirmed the election date of 27 April 1994 and adopted transitional agreements, allowing for TEC and other commissions to become operational. In December, Parliament restored South African citizenship to an estimated 10 million people in the four nominally independent homelands of Bophuthatswana, Ciskei, Transkei and Venda. It also adopted the interim constitution and electoral bill.

Throughout 1993, unprecedented political violence threatened the negotiation process and the transition to democracy, culminating in the assassination in April of Chris Hani, General Secretary of the South African Communist Party (SACP). That crime caused widespread unrest, attracted international attention and was subsequently condemned by the Security Council. The General Assembly, in December, urged the South African authorities to bring such violence to an end and to protect all South Africans, while bringing to justice those responsible and protecting and promoting the democratic process (resolution 48/159 A). The Assembly and the Economic and Social Council demanded the immediate release of remaining political prisoners.

The Security Council authorized an increase in the number of observers of the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa (UNOMSA)—bringing the total complement to 100. That group served as a nucleus for the anticipated United Nations role in the electoral process in South Africa. The Secretary-General proposed the expansion of UNOMSA's mandate to observe all aspects and stages of the upcoming electoral process. In December, he appointed Lakhdar Brahimi as his Special Representative for South Africa.

Following an appeal by Nelson Mandela, President of the African National Congress (ANC), and a recommendation of OAU, the General Assembly, in October, lifted with immediate effect all economic sanctions imposed on South Africa and decided to lift the oil embargo as of the date when TEC became operational (48/1). Since TEC met formally for the first time on 7 December, that became the effective date for the lifting of the oil embargo. Meanwhile, South Africa's political and economic isolation continued to lessen as more States established diplomatic ties with Pretoria, resumed trade and lifted sanctions in recognition of the country's achievements towards establishing a non-racial democracy.

Activities of the Special Committee against Apartheid. In its annual report covering the period October 1992 to October 1993⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid reviewed the political, socio-economic, military and other developments in and relating to South Africa, including the international response to the elimination of apartheid and establishment of a united, non-racial South Africa based on a democratically negotiated and agreed constitution. The Committee reviewed those developments in accordance with its mandate and guidelines set out by the General Assembly in 1989.⁽²⁾ It also facilitated a peaceful and stable transition in South Africa by promoting international assistance to enable South Africans to overcome the negative consequences of apartheid.

In order to reflect the emerging political reforms in South Africa, the Committee requested the General Assembly in September⁽³⁾ to change the wording of the agenda item from "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa" to "Elimination of apartheid and establishment of a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa". The Assembly, by decision 48/402 A of 24 September, approved that request (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

During the period under review, the Special Committee focused on the continuing political violence in South Africa; the creation of an atmosphere of political tolerance; the grave socio-economic inequalities; the urgent need for human resource development assistance for the disadvantaged sectors of the population; and ensuring that the international community continued to support the vulnerable and critical process under way in the country.

The Committee was encouraged by the transformation of the international anti-apartheid movement into a pro-democratic campaign for a new South Africa. It emphasized the vital importance of the support of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) worldwide during the transition period and called on the international community to support the ongoing democratic process. It welcomed the setting of the date for South Africa's first non-racial elections and emphasized the need to end the senseless violence that threatened to disrupt the peaceful political change. The Committee sent a mission to South Africa (1-11 March), which held consultations with high-ranking representatives of major parties and with a wide range of civic, religious, business, labour and media leaders to obtain first-hand understanding of the political factors influencing the transitional process. In its report⁽⁴⁾ the mission recommended the expansion of the number and mandate of the United Nations observers, that the United Nations examine the requirements relating to the functions and capabilities of international electoral monitors in South Africa, and that their deployment should begin several months in advance of the elections. The mission also recommended that UNOMSA become a "United Nations Transition Mission in South Africa" with a view to promoting and assisting the multi-party negotiations, the work of the National Peace Accord structure and the monitoring of the elections process. It further recommended that the international community assist in voter education, that the United Nations start planning programmes of socio-economic assistance, and that a resource mobilization conference be convened.

The Committee decided on 17 February to discontinue the registers set up to discourage sports and enforce a cultural boycott of South Africa.

It co-sponsored an International Conference on Southern Africa: Making Hope a Reality (London, 14 and 15 June), organized by the British Anti-Apartheid Movement. In its Declaration⁽⁵⁾ the Conference urged support for the democratic transformation of South Africa, and that the international community ensure that the people of South Africa exercised their democratic rights in the country's first-ever one person, one vote elections, and that those elections were free and fair.

The Committee also co-sponsored, with the Institute for a Democratic Alternative for South Africa (IDASA) and the Institute for Multi-Party Democracy, the Symposium on Political Tolerance in South Africa: Role of Opinion-Makers and Media (Cape Town, 30 July-1 August), its first event ever organized inside South Africa. The Symposium was attended by representatives of a broad spectrum of South African opinion-makers, media experts, academics, political scientists, trade unionists and international observers. It agreed that the United Nations should share its resources with the South African media on issues relating to the transition and the role of the media.

The Special Committee also cooperated in organizing the joint North American/European NGO consultation (Geneva, 30 and 31 August), involving South African NGOs and United Nations agencies, on the social and development needs in rural and township communities in South Africa and the role of international NGOs in helping them meet those needs. Participants reached an understanding on cooperation between international and South African NGOs in developing and implementing projects at the grass-roots level.

As in previous years, the Special Committee observed the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (22 March). On that occasion, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa sent a message to the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁾ expressing his Government's commitment to and solidarity with the Day's objectives. The Committee also observed the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa (9 August) and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Special Committee stated that the current negotiating framework, which brought together 26 parties, was a milestone in South African history. It was all the more significant since the negotiations were not disrupted despite frequent cases of violence and intimidation.

The Committee noted that, with the economy facing an unprecedented recession and society threatened by the disintegration and collapse of all social norms, it was clear that unless a credible, representative, legitimate and democratically elected Government was established soon, South Africa's problems could not be effectively addressed. Thus, the United Nations needed to examine immediately the functions and requirements of international electoral monitors for their early deployment. It was also essential to maintain effective coordination with the Independent Electoral Commission (IEC), the National Peace Accord structure and the international observers already deployed. The Committee recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm the objectives envisaged in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa⁽⁷⁾ and the international community's determination to support the South African people in achieving a speedy and peaceful transition to a non-racial and democratic society; request that mandatory measures imposed by the Security Council remain in effect; and urge Member States to respect them until they were lifted by the Council. It also recommended that the Assembly urge those parties that had suspended their participation in the multi-party negotiations to return to that framework until its successful conclusion.

Among other recommendations, the Special Committee requested that the Assembly urge the South African authorities to exercise fully and impartially their responsibility to end the violence, protect the lives and property of all South Africans, and promote their right to participate in the democratic process, including the rights to demonstrate peacefully, to organize political rallies, to run for election and to participate in the elections without intimidation. The Assembly was also urged to call on the signatories to the National Peace Accord to recommit themselves to the process of peaceful change by fully implementing its provisions; to recommend the immediate expansion of the number of observers and their mandate to enable them to function as international election monitors in close cooperation with IEC; and to appeal to the international community to maintain its humanitarian, legal and financial assistance to the victims of apartheid, in particular to the returning refugees and exiles and released political prisoners.

7. Also decides to continue to authorize adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania to maintain offices in New York so that they may participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee and in deliberations relating to the situation in South Africa in other relevant United Nations bodies, on the understanding that such grants will continue until the situation of the two organizations as political parties has been regularized.

Progress report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General in December 1993 presented a fourth progress report⁽⁸⁾ on the implementation of the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa.⁽⁹⁾ The report, which analysed the progress made towards dismantling apartheid since September 1992, was based on written submissions by the Government of South Africa, participants in the multi-party negotiating process, and movements and other organizations, supplemented by official statements and press releases. It dealt with factors conducive to enhancing a negotiated settlement to end apartheid, relevant socio-economic factors, and arrangements and modalities for the transition to a new democratic order, and reviewed international action with regard to South Africa.

The Secretary-General observed that the resumption, after a 10-month suspension, of multi-party negotiations in April, with broader representation than the preceding Convention for a Democratic South Africa (CODESA), was a welcome development. It resulted in significant breakthroughs, including agreement on a date in April 1994 for South Africa's first non-racial and democratic elections. That was followed by enactment into law of most of the principal provisions of the transitional arrangements, including TEC, IEC, an Independent Media Commission, (IMC), an Independent Broadcasting Authority (IBA) and an interim constitution. However, violence continued to pose a major threat to the peace process, and breaking the cycle of violence required the cooperation of the Government and of all parties in South Africa.

The Secretary-General met in New York with the South African President, F. W. de Klerk, and Nelson Mandela, President of ANC, on 23 and 29 September, respectively. He also met with Clarence Makwetu, President of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC), Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, President of the Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP), and Foreign Minister Roelof Botha. During his meeting with Chief Buthelezi, he stressed the importance accorded by the international community to the multi-party negotiations and the formation of TEC. He stated that participation by all parties, including the Freedom Alliance—a new political grouping consisting of the Bophuthatswana and Ciskei homelands, IFP and the Afrikaner Volksfront (Afrikaner People's Front)—was essential to the establishment of a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa, and to ensuring that their views were reflected in the interim constitution. The Secretary-General further met with John Hall and Antonie Gildenhuys, respectively the chairman of the National Peace Committee and the head of its secretariat, to discuss strengthening and broadening the peace structures to defuse violence and to make them more representative of the population.

In its submission to the Secretary-General, ANC averred that the continued application of certain security legislation was hampering free and peaceful political activity in the country, especially in the so-called Bantustans. Therefore, it urged that the leaders of Bophuthatswana, Ciskei and KwaZulu be prevailed upon to allow free political activity in the areas under their control, in order to eliminate the "no-go" areas where ANC leaders and activists engaged in legitimate political activity continued to be routinely attacked and even assassinated. PAC stated that the Government had not yet repealed all legislation impeding free political activity, and submitted a list of 10 such inhibiting laws, among them the Internal Security Act, which allowed for the arrest of political opponents and denial of access to a speedy trial, legal representation and visits from family members, and the Post Office Act, which allowed for interference with the mail of political opponents.

Among other initiatives was the organization by the United Nations and the Commonwealth secretariat of an international donors' conference, scheduled for June 1994, to mobilize international support for addressing the human resource development needs of a post-apartheid South Africa.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General urged all parties in South Africa to cooperate in implementing the transitional arrangements for the early establishment of a non-racial and democratic society. He assured them of his continued assistance in facilitating the success of the transitional process.

Multi-party negotiations and political developments

Following a 10-month deadlock, delegations from 26 political formations in South Africa met on 5 and 6 March 1993 for a multi-party planning conference to review earlier agreements and prepare for multi-party talks. It was the most representative gathering of political leaders in South African history and included parties such as PAC and the Conservative Party (CP) that had not participated in the 1991⁽⁹⁾ or 1992⁽¹⁰⁾ Convention for a Democratic South Africa (CODESA I and II). As communicated by South Africa's Permanent Representative to the United Nations on 9 March⁽¹¹⁾ participants at the conference, with the exception of CP, committed themselves to resuming the multi-party constitutional negotiations within a month and to reconvening the multi-party forum not later than 5 April. Negotiations resumed on 1 April, but without the participation of the Azanian People's Organization and the Afrikaanse Weerstandsbeweging (AWB), also known as the Afrikaner Resistance Movement. It was agreed to establish a Plenary, MPNC and a Planning Committee as the structure for the multi-party negotiating process. MPNC appointed seven technical committees, on constitutional issues, fundamental rights during the transition period, TEC, IEC, IMC, IBA, repeal or amendment of legislation impeding free political activity and of discriminatory legislation, and violence. To facilitate the negotiation process, an understanding was reached on the use of "sufficient consensus" as a decision-making mechanism, by which dissenting parties would not block decisions agreed on by a majority.

Important issues discussed included interim constitutional provisions; the powers of the central Government; the degree of devolution of powers to regional and local governments and the exercise of residual powers; the extent and mandatory character of principles for the future constitution to be agreed on in advance of elections, including regional boundaries; the justiciability of disputes regarding the elections; reincorporation of the homelands; and the control of the security forces and maintenance of law and order. Also discussed was the question of integrating all armed formations, including the South African Defence Force (SADF), military wings of liberation movements and homeland armies, into a national defence force.

With regard to regional boundaries, a Commission on the Demarcation/Delimitation of Regions was given the task of making recommendations to MPNC. In the course of the negotiations, a demand was made for a separate Afrikaner State to be provided for in the constitution. Discussions also continued regarding the reincorporation of the 10 ethnically based homelands into a united South Africa, viewed as essential for their own development and as a prerequisite for a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa. However, most homeland leaders opposed the suggestion for an early reincorporation of their territories.

On 2 July, MPNC adopted by consensus a set of binding constitutional principles for a democratic Government, including provisions for a strong central Government, while accommodating regional diversity, a bill of fundamental human rights and an independent judiciary. The justiciability of constitutional principles would be ensured by a constitutional court. A decision was also taken by "sufficient consensus" for non-racial democratic elections to a constitutional assembly to be held on 27 April 1994. However, IFP, the KwaZulu Government and CP were among seven parties that opposed setting a date at that stage. On 23 September, the South African Parliament passed a bill, by a vote of 211 to 36, establishing TEC to oversee preparation for and transition to a democratic order, including the conduct of free and fair elections to the constituent assembly and the establishment of legislative and executive structures at all levels of government (see also below, under "Transition to democracy"). TEC was to have seven subcouncils: regional and local government and traditional authorities; law and order, stability and security; defence; intelligence; finance; foreign affairs; and the status of women. Bills were also passed enabling IMC, IEC and IBA to be set up.

In a statement made on 20 July, the Special Committee against Apartheid expressed concern over the possible withdrawal of CP and IFP from the multi-party negotiations and the view that the active participation of all parties was crucial in building on the significant consensus already achieved on essential constitutional principles.

On 24 September, Mr. Mandela told the Special Committee that TEC would mark the first-ever participation by the majority of the South African people at governmental levels in the process of determining the destiny of their country. Although a democratic Government was not yet elected, TEC would provide the appropriate mechanism for interaction with the international community.

The Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ the announced withdrawal, on 7 October, of the homelands of Bophuthatswana and Ciskei from the multi-party negotiating process, and the announcement that the Concerned South Africans Group had been disbanded and replaced by the new Freedom Alliance, which declared that it would henceforth discuss outstanding issues only through a joint negotiating team. IFP proposed a constitutional convention of leaders to draft a final constitution, which could provide for the establishment of a federation of states and which could be approved by a national referendum. ANC stated that, while it was continuing bilateral discussions with the Freedom Alliance, no organization should hold the country to ransom or derail the process in any way.

On 18 November, at a meeting of the Plenary of the multi-party negotiating process, the leaders of 20 political parties endorsed a constitution for the transitional period and an electoral bill agreed on by MPNC. The Plenary further confirmed the election date and adopted transitional agreements, allowing for TEC, IMC, IEC and IBA to become operational. TEC was to succeed MPNC. The Afrikaner Volksunie, or Afrikaner People's Union, voted against the transitional agreements, while IFP and other members of the Freedom Alliance did not participate in the session.

On 15 December, the Parliament voted to restore citizenship to an estimated 10 million people in the four nominally independent homelands of Bophuthatswana, Ciskei, Transkei and Venda. On 22 December, it adopted an Interim Constitution and Electoral Bill, endorsed on 18 November by 20 political parties at MPNC by a vote of 237 in favour to 46 against.

Among other political developments, the South African Government and PAC resumed bilateral talks, focusing mainly on the cessation of the armed struggle. At a bilateral meeting held from 9 to 12 February, the Government and ANC agreed on the holding of elections within a year for a constituent assembly that would draft and adopt a new constitution and, simultaneously, serve as an interim parliament. It was also agreed that parties receiving a certain minimum percentage of votes would be entitled to participate in a coalition cabinet and that such an "interim government of national unity" would serve for five years. New elections would then take place under a new constitution. Discussions were also held with regard to TEC and its role in overseeing the conduct of security forces, the media and electoral mechanisms.

Political violence

Political violence and economic crime reached unprecedented levels in 1993, taking a high toll in human lives and destruction of property, and spreading fear and anguish throughout the country. The Human Rights Commission of South Africa underlined the fact that violent incidents increased markedly each time progress was achieved in the multi-party negotiations. Following the 2 July announcement of the date for elections to a constitutional assembly, 605 deaths were recorded. According to the Commission, 2,768 people died in political violence between June and November, an increase of 46 per cent over the same period in 1992. The regions of the East Rand and Natal together accounted for approximately 90 per cent of the death toll, with 1,299 such fatalities in the East Rand. While much of South Africa's violence was rooted in the legacies of the apartheid system, human rights observers noted that recent violence also included fighting for political domination, struggle for scarce economic resources, ethnic and racial hatred, criminal gangs exploiting the political instability and revenge killers settling old scores.

The Secretary-General observed⁽⁸⁾ fluctuations in the pattern and frequency of violence, but with no change in its negative effects on society, a peaceful transition and stable development. Township, squatter, rural and urban communities suffered greatly from attacks by criminal vigilante and other groups and persons alleged to be members of covert security forces. In the first nine months of 1993, deaths due to political violence totalled 3,049, an increase of 10 per cent over the corresponding period in 1992.

Political violence within black communities abated somewhat in the first half of the year, resulting in 1,387 deaths, with Natal accounting for the largest number of casualties (774 deaths). However, the unprecedented violence in July in the East Rand resulted in 605 deaths, up from a monthly average of 231 deaths, while some 554 deaths were reported in August.

There was a marked increase in attacks against civilian whites, with 34 being killed during the first half of the year. The number of media reporters attacked or killed also increased, and at least 130 policemen were killed in the first seven months of 1993. There was also a rise in right-wing violence.

On 25 June, armed right-wingers, many of them members of AWB, forcibly broke into and occupied Johannesburg's World Trade Centre, where multi-party negotiations were taking place. On 13 December, in an attack in Randfontein, men in camouflage uniform forced two cars off the road and shot their black occupants, killing three people and injuring four others.

In a raid conducted during the night of 8 October, SADF soldiers shot dead five young people sleeping in a house at Umtata in Transkei. SADF claimed that the house served as a base for PAC's military wing. Police later admitted that forensic tests had been unable to link the weapons found in the house with any crimes. UNOMSA, together with the observer missions of the Commonwealth and OAU, condemned the raid, which had been authorized at the highest levels of government.

On 10 April, Chris Hani, General Secretary of SACP, was assassinated, an incident that caused widespread unrest and attracted international attention. Janusz Jakob Walus, a Polish immigrant and member of AWB and CP, and Clive Derby-Lewis, a former member of the President's Council, were convicted and sentenced to death.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

Following consultations held on 12 April on the question of South Africa, the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of its members⁽¹²⁾

Meeting number. SC 3197.

"The assassination of Chris Hani, a member of ANC's National Executive Committee and the Secretary-General of the South African Communist Party, is a deplorable and troubling event. This brutal murder saddens all who are working for peace, democracy and justice in South Africa. Mr. Hani's murder further underscores the urgent need to end violence in the country and to push ahead with the negotiations which will create a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa.

"Chris Hani actively supported these negotiations and only last week called for an end to violence so the negotiations could proceed in a climate of peace and stability. In this regard, the Security Council welcomes the announcements by all those who have reaffirmed their commitment to the negotiating process, including ANC, the South African Communist Party and the Congress of South African Trade Unions. Negotiations leading to non-racial democracy must not be held hostage by the perpetrators of violence.

"The Security Council states its determination to remain supportive of efforts to facilitate this peaceful transition to a non-racial democracy for the benefit of all South Africans."

Further developments. The Commission of Inquiry regarding the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation (Goldstone Commission) continued to play a major role in investigating the behaviour of security forces of the various parties in the ongoing political violence and in specific incidents. It conducted inquests into political assassinations and probes into the smuggling of arms into the country, the school crisis, activities of the Azanian People's Liberation Army (APLA)—the military wing of PAC—and the KwaZulu police, the alleged involvement of SADF's military intelligence in fomenting conflict, police actions during the AWB raid on the Johannesburg World Trade Centre in June and the violence in the East Rand since July. To assist its investigations, the Goldstone Commission established the Institute for the Study of Public Violence, which received financial and technical support from Norway. In its report on the raid on the World Trade Centre, the Commission concluded that the police were guilty of dereliction of duty by not organizing a strong and visible show of force during the assault, which was anything but spontaneous.

South Africa transmitted on 30 March⁽¹³⁾ the Goldstone Commission's report on the activities of APLA. According to information placed before the Commission, APLA's policy was to kill policemen, white farmers in rural areas and whites in general, whom it referred to as settlers. Statistics were given of 15 attacks on policemen, 13 on farmhouses, 3 on houses in the town of Fickburg, attacks on the Golf Club at King William's Town, and attacks on restaurants in Cape Town and Queenstown. According to the South African Police (SAP), 16 people were killed in alleged APLA assaults. Asserting that APLA used Transkei as a springboard for attacks into South Africa, the Commission recommended that perpetrators of violence be prosecuted in terms of the common law, and requested the international community to withhold assistance to APLA and to exert pressure on PAC to cease condoning and supporting violence and to join other political groups in their search for a negotiated settlement.

The Government identified a number of problem areas where improvements could be made to implement better the National Peace Accord and reduce violence: the open hostility between ANC and IFP; the use by political groups of local dispute-resolution committees as political platforms; the lack of objectivity of such committees' chairmen; and extending to the other Peace Accord signatories the code of conduct currently only applicable to and binding on SAP. The Government stated that coordination between SAP, the National Peace Committee secretariat and the international observers resulted in the defusing of many potentially violent situations.

As part of its proposals for creating conditions to eliminate violence, the multi-party negotiating process, on 22 June, proposed the establishment of an independent, national, multi-party peace-keeping force. While the idea was supported in principle by the Government, ANC and IFP, they differed on its form and authority. In addition, in the legislation adopted by the South African Parliament on the establishment of TEC, provisions were made for the creation of a national peace-keeping force, comprising members of all armed forces. On 23 June, a meeting between Mr. Mandela and Chief Buthelezi was held under the chairmanship of Archbishop Desmond Tutu and Bishop Stanley Mogoba. The two leaders issued a joint statement expressing their determination to end the violence and promote national reconciliation, and to hold joint peace rallies. They also called for the strengthening of the National Peace Accord.

On 2 September, addressing a rally in commemoration of Peace Day, the two leaders urged the gathering to put an end to violence.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

Following consultations held on 24 August on the political violence in South Africa, the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of its members⁽¹⁴⁾

Meeting number. SC 3267.

"The Security Council deplores the recent upsurge in violence and discord in South Africa, especially in the East Rand. This violence—terrible in its human toll—is even more tragic as the country proceeds on the path to a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa and a new, more promising future for all its citizens.

"The Council recalls its statement in resolution 765(1992) that it is the responsibility of the South African authorities to take all necessary measures to stop immediately the violence and protect the life and property of all South Africans. The Council affirms that all parties in South Africa must assist the Government in preventing opponents of democracy from using violence to threaten the country's democratic transition. In this regard, the Council notes the proposal for a national peace force to restore and maintain order in volatile areas. Any such force should be genuinely representative of South African society and its major political bodies. Just as importantly, it must have the confidence, support and cooperation of the people of South Africa. The Council also welcomes efforts by the leaders of the African National Congress and the Inkatha Freedom Party to convince their followers to avoid further violence. The Council urges all of South Africa's leaders to work jointly to prevent violence in the election period ahead.

"The Security Council commends the international community, including the Organization of African Unity, the European Community and the Commonwealth, for playing a constructive role in helping to curb the violence in South Africa. The United Nations Peace Monitors, under the able supervision of the chief of the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa, have made a difference. People are alive today because of the tireless and courageous efforts of these and other international peace monitors. Yet far too many are dying. The world community must continue to signal firmly that it will not allow the violence to derail South Africa's political transition.

"The Council emphasizes the key role of the multi-party negotiating process in securing the transition to a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa. It urges the parties to reaffirm their commitment to the multi-party negotiating process, to redouble their efforts to reach consensus on the transitional arrangements and constitutional issues still outstanding and to proceed to elections as planned in the coming year.

"The Security Council reaffirms its determination to remain supportive of efforts to facilitate the peaceful transition to a non-racial democracy for the benefit of all South Africans. The Council is following developments in South Africa closely and will remain seized of the matter."

International efforts for a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa

Developments in South Africa remained the focus of attention of the international community, which continued to monitor those developments closely and welcomed the resumption of multi-party negotiations in March and subsequent understandings and agreements reached.

On 15 October, the 1993 Nobel Peace Prize was awarded jointly to Mr. Mandela and President de Klerk for their work towards the peaceful termination of the apartheid regime and for laying the foundations for a new South Africa. In announcing the award, the Nobel Committee stated that their constructive policy of peace and reconciliation also pointed the way to a peaceful resolution of similar conflicts elsewhere in the world.

The United Nations, with the sponsorship and funding of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden) and the Friedrich Ebert Foundation of Germany, held an International Seminar on Confidence- and Security-building Measures in Southern Africa (Windhoek, Namibia, 24-26 February). The Seminar brought together high-ranking experts from military, political, government-related and academic areas in the countries of southern Africa, including South Africa. It concluded that most major security problems in the region bore an internal and domestic character, albeit with potentially dangerous implications for neighbouring States. There was a need to give innovative consideration to confidence- and security-building measures of domestic applicability in the military sphere.

In February, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) dispatched an interdisciplinary planning mission to assess the needs for technical cooperation and assistance, and met with representatives of South African employers' and employees' organizations. The findings of the mission were to be used to design a programme of action for implementation in priority areas, such as employment creation, human resource development, economic policy, worker education and training, and reform of labour legislation. ILO also assisted and participated in training workshops for non-racial civil organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly on 24 September decided that the item on the elimination of apartheid and establishment of a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa would be considered directly in plenary meeting, on the understanding that representatives of OAU and of national liberation movements recognized by it would be permitted to participate and that organizations and individuals with special interest in the item would be heard by the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee.

In accordance with that decision, the Fourth Committee on 8 and 9 November⁽¹⁵⁾ heard 10 persons representing the following organizations: PAC, ANC, the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the NGO Committee on Southern Africa, the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs, the City of London Anti-Apartheid Group, the American Committee on Africa, and IFP. By decision 48/425 of 13 December, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report.

On 20 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 48/159 A without vote.

International efforts towards the total eradication of apartheid and support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa

General Assembly resolution 48/159 A

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Draft by Nigeria (A/48/L.29); agenda item 38.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/48/788; S-G, A/C.5/48/59.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 43; plenary 72, 76-80, 85.

Transition to democracy

On 2 July, the plenary of the multi-party negotiating process adopted by consensus 27 constitutional principles which, along with a bill of fundamental human rights, would be included in both the interim constitution and the final constitution to be adopted by an elected constituent assembly or an interim parliament. The principles were intended to provide for a strong central Government while accommodating regional diversity in the country.⁽¹⁶⁾

Under the Transitional Constitution, the national Parliament would consist of a 400-member National Assembly, elected on the basis of proportional representation, and a 90-member Senate, to be elected by nine provincial legislatures. The National Assembly would elect the President. The full Parliament would serve both as an interim parliament and as a constituent assembly and would draw up the final constitution within two years. The homelands would be abolished and the country divided into nine provinces, each with an elected provincial legislature to administer education, health, police and other services at the provincial level, as well as to elect the representatives for the 10 seats allocated to each province in the national Parliament's Senate. The interim constitution further guaranteed fundamental rights, including: equality of race and gender; freedom of speech, assembly and movement; the right to vote and to a fair trial; prohibition of torture and cruel or inhuman punishment; and the right of those dispossessed of land under apartheid legislation to seek restitution. It also limited the President's power to declare a state of emergency.

It was envisaged that the transition to a new democratic order would commence with the establishment and functioning of TEC, which was to include one member from each of the parties represented in the multi-party negotiating process. The State President would be an Executive President chosen by the governing party. The Cabinet, based on the principle of proportional representation, was to be composed of those political parties obtaining 5 per cent or more of the electoral vote. The State President and the Cabinet would keep TEC informed of any proposed legislation, decisions and intended actions, and, if 75 per cent of its members so decided, it could stop legislation or reverse a government decision. TEC was entitled to request documents and information and could conduct investigations and delegate powers to its subcouncils. The President must consult TEC before declaring a state of emergency or "unrest areas" in the country. TEC could reverse such a decision, if 80 per cent of its members so decided.

The future Constitutional Court of South Africa would have final and binding jurisdiction over the interpretation, protection and enforcement of the interim constitution.

Meanwhile, the structures established under the National Peace Accord were all functioning at the national, regional and local levels, with the number of peace committees rising from 50 to about 200 in the second half of 1993. Their performance was, however, far from uniform due to lack of agreement between political parties on measures to be taken or failure to implement decisions. Most peace committees suffered from budgetary and human resource constraints, as well as the absence of political commitment of major players, including the police and security forces.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following consultations held on 23 November, at which South Africa was invited to participate under rule 37^a of the Security Council's provisional rules

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

of procedure, the President of the Council made a statement on behalf of its members⁽¹⁷⁾

Meeting number. SC 3318.

"The Security Council welcomes the successful completion of the multi-party negotiating process in South Africa, and the conclusion of agreements reached therein on an interim constitution and electoral bill. These agreements constitute a historic step forward in establishing a democratic, non-racial and united South Africa.

"The Security Council looks forward to the elections to be held in South Africa in April 1994. It urges all parties in South Africa, including those which did not participate fully in the multi-party talks, to respect agreements reached during the negotiations, to recommit themselves to democratic principles, to take part in the elections and to resolve outstanding issues by peaceful means only.

"The Security Council reiterates its determination to continue to support the process of peaceful democratic change in South Africa for the benefit of all South Africans. The Security Council commends once again the work being done by the Secretary-General and the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa in assisting that process. It invites the Secretary-General to accelerate contingency planning for a possible United Nations role in the election process, including coordination with the observer missions of the Organization of African Unity, European Community and Commonwealth, to enable expeditious consideration of a request to the United Nations for such assistance. In this connection, the Council urges early establishment of the Transitional Executive Council and the Independent Electoral Commission.

"The Security Council considers that South Africa's transition to democracy must be underpinned by economic and social reconstruction and development, and calls on the international community to assist in this regard."

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁸⁾ that, pursuant to Security Council resolutions of July⁽¹⁹⁾ and August⁽²⁰⁾ 1992, and taking into account the progress achieved in the peace process, he had advised the President of the Council on 13 December⁽²¹⁾ of his intention to appoint Lakhdar Brahimi, former Minister for Foreign Affairs of Algeria, as his Special Representative for South Africa. His tasks were to assist in implementing relevant Council resolutions and decisions and to coordinate the activities of other international observers, as requested by TEC. On 16 December⁽²²⁾ the Council President indicated the Council's agreement to that proposal.

The Special Representative visited South Africa and met in Cape Town with President de Klerk and Foreign Minister Roelof F. Botha on 17 and 23 December, respectively. The President welcomed national and international assistance in voter education. Both the President and the Foreign Minister stressed that the most difficult problem facing the transition process was political violence and intimidation. They noted that UNOMSA had assisted in curbing such violence and in encouraging dialogue and tolerance. In the process, the United Nations had succeeded in establishing its credibility among the South African population. They underlined the historical importance of the elections and the need for them to be free, fair and legitimate. The Minister expressed the hope that the United Nations would allocate resources to provide for the largest possible number of observers needed during the elections.

At a meeting in Johannesburg on 18 December, the ANC President, Mr. Mandela, stated that he and President de Klerk were coordinating efforts to bring the members of the Freedom Alliance into the peace process. He noted that the groups which had the potential to disrupt the electoral process were those that enjoyed support within the military police and security forces as well as within the bureaucracy. He stressed the importance of maintaining lines of communication with the Freedom Alliance and urged the Special Representative to meet with its members during his visit. He called for a strong United Nations presence during the electoral process to ensure that the elections were free and fair.

On 17 December, the Special Representative met in Cape Town with Archbishop Desmond Tutu and Justice Richard Goldstone, Chairman of the Goldstone Commission. Archbishop Tutu, who had recently held discussions with Chief Buthelezi, Mr. Mandela and other leaders, was optimistic that the transitional arrangements would succeed, despite the decision of the Freedom Alliance not to participate in the electoral process and violence in the East Rand and Natal/KwaZulu.

The Special Representative held talks on 18 December with Legwaila J. Legwaila, head of the OAU Observer Mission in South Africa, and a team of the Commonwealth Observer Mission on strengthening and broadening cooperation between them and UNOMSA in connection with the electoral process.

On 22 December, Mr. Brahimi held talks in Johannesburg with John Hall and Antonie Gildenhuys, chairman of the National Peace Committee and head of its secretariat, respectively. Discussing the role that the two bodies would play in the electoral process and their cooperation with UNOMSA, Mr. Gildenhuys informed the Special Representative that the various local and regional peace committees would continue to be involved in promoting peace, but would not observe the electoral process.

The Special Representative also discussed arrangements for the elections and the United Nations role in them with Zach de Beer, leader of the Democratic Party, Thabo Mbeki, Chairman of ANC, Benny Alexander, Secretary-General of PAC, and other officials, as well as with representatives of the transitional institutions.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/45 on monitoring the transition to democracy in South Africa.

UN Observer Mission in South Africa

UNOMSA, which was established by the Security Council in August 1992⁽²⁰⁾ and which initially deployed 50 observers to South Africa⁽²³⁾ was expanded in 1993 in its scope of operations and strengthened in personnel.

Responding to the Secretary-General's requests of December 1992⁽²⁴⁾ and September 1993,⁽²⁵⁾ the Security Council authorized an increase in the number of UNOMSA observers—10 in February⁽²⁶⁾ and 40 in September⁽²⁷⁾ for a total complement of 100—to serve as a nucleus for the anticipated United Nations role in the electoral process in South Africa.

The Secretary-General reported in November⁽²⁸⁾ that the additional observers would supplement those already serving the local peace committees, whose numbers had risen from 23 to 120 in less than a year, and would be deployed as follows: two teams each at the Western, Northern and Eastern Capes; Western, Northern, Far Northern and Eastern Transvaals; and Border/Ciskei and Orange Free State; and seven each at Durban and Johannesburg.

UNOMSA continued to carry out its tasks in all regions and at all levels. Its Chief of Mission, Angela King, held meetings with a cross-section of political, church and community leaders to discuss the peace process, the question of political violence and developments in the multi-party negotiations. UNOMSA observers worked closely with organizers and the security forces to ensure that demonstrations, marches, rallies, funerals and other mass actions were adequately planned and that the Goldstone Commission guidelines for marches and political gatherings were complied with. Observers held 832 informal bilateral meetings and acted as channels of communication between international observer missions, government officials, security forces, political parties and NGOs actively involved in the peace process. In total, its observers attended well over 9,000 meetings and events throughout the country in the 15 months since its deployment.

The Secretary-General proposed that UNOMSA's mandate be expanded to include the observation of the April 1994 elections. Under the proposed expanded mandate, UNOMSA would be required to: observe the actions of IEC and its organs in all aspects and stages of the electoral process, verifying their compatibility with the conduct of a free and fair election under IEC and Electoral Acts; observe the extent of freedom of organization, movement, assembly and expression during the electoral campaign and ascertain the adequacy of the measures taken to ensure that political parties and alliances enjoyed those freedoms without hindrance or intimidation; monitor compliance of the security forces with the requirements of the relevant TEC laws and decisions; and verify the satisfactory implementation of the disposition of the IMC and IDA Acts. UNOMSA would also verify adequate voter education, the proper exercise of voting rights, that voting was free of intimidation, that there was free access to voting stations and secrecy of vote, the proper transport and custody of the ballots, security of the vote count and timely announcement of the results. The Mission would coordinate the activities of the international electoral observers and establish effective cooperation with national and foreign NGOs monitoring the electoral process. It would report complaints, irregularities and interferences to the electoral authorities for remedial action. It would also play a more proactive role in the socio-economic reconstruction and development of the country.

At its first meeting on 7 December, TEC endorsed a resolution adopted the previous day by MPNC requesting the United Nations to provide a sufficient number of international observers to monitor the electoral process and to coordinate the activities of other international observers provided by OAU, the European Union and the Commonwealth as well as those provided by individual Governments. Accordingly, the Secretary-General dispatched a survey team to South Africa on 9 December to assess the electoral assistance needs.

UNOMSA financing

In a November report⁽²⁸⁾ to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Secretary-General estimated UNOMSA's costs for the period from mid-September 1992 to 31 December 1993 at $13,106,100 against an appropriation of $13,044,900. The additional requirement of $61,200 would be reflected in the second performance report of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993. An amount of $8,994,100 would be required under the proposed budget for the 1994-1995 biennium to cover the costs of UNOMSA up to 31 July 1994, excluding provisions for staff assessment in the amount of $1,324,300. Should decisions be made concerning specific additional electoral requirements or extension of the Mission beyond 31 July 1994, he would seek the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to enter into related commitments under Assembly resolution 48/229 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1994-1995.

ACABQ communicated in December⁽²⁹⁾ that it had no objection to those proposals.

By resolution 48/230, section I, of 23 December, the Assembly endorsed ACABQ's recommendations, concurring in particular with the one concerning the Committee's concurrence to enter into related commitments under resolution 48/229. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in administering the appropriation, to take full account of ACABQ's recommendations to seek the Government's assistance in procuring office space with minimum charge and to make every reasonable effort to acquire services and materials from local area sources.

Other aspects

Political prisoners and exiles

In 1992, 192 political prisoners had been released as part of the Record of Understanding agreed to by the South African Government and ANC on 26 September of that year. However, at the end of September 1993, 46 persons remained listed as political prisoners by the Human Rights Commission of South Africa. During the first half of 1993, 281 cases of detention without trial were reported under South Africa's Public Safety Act of 1953 and section 29 of the Internal Security Act.

ANC said that despite the Government's undertaking to release all the remaining political prisoners, a number of them were still in jail. Statistics of research groups indicated that the monthly average number of people detained without trial was higher during 1993 than in 1992. According to the South African Institute of Race Relations, detention without trial was used during 1993 against dozens of people.

The Human Rights Commission of South Africa reported that during the first half of the year, 84 political trials were concluded in which 145 persons out of 824 accused were convicted. From October 1992 to October 1993, representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) made over 500 visits to detainees in some 300 police stations and prisons.

PAC reported that, on 25 May, the Government had arrested over 100 of its leaders and members. However, no serious charge was brought against any PAC member.

Significant progress continued with regard to political exiles. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) indicated that, by the end of May, 10,957 South African refugees and exiles had registered for voluntary repatriation. The Government cleared some 10,730 for return and 6,604 returned to South Africa under UNHCR auspices. Member States and regional and other organizations contributed over $27 million to the repatriation and reintegration effort, including small-scale income-generating training programmes for returnees.

Women and children under apartheid

Responding to a 1992 Economic and Social Council request⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women in January 1993 a report⁽³¹⁾ on women and children living under apartheid. The report, which updated information contained in his 1991 report,⁽³²⁾ examined the legal, social and economic situation of women in South Africa and action taken to assist them.

The report indicated that, on 29 January, the Government of South Africa signed a number of international treaties relating to women and children, including the Convention on the Political Rights of Women⁽³³⁾ the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women⁽³⁴⁾ the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽³⁵⁾ the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽³⁶⁾ and the Convention on the Rights of the Child⁽³⁷⁾ it also acceded to the Convention on Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age for Marriage and Registration of Marriage.⁽³⁸⁾

In the economic and social spheres, women in South Africa continued to be subject to race and gender discrimination and were further disadvantaged by living in a male-dominated and patriarchal society. Apartheid had confined the majority of women to impoverished homelands, with limited opportunities for employment and income-generating activities. Those in urban areas tended to be concentrated in unskilled and semi-skilled positions in the informal sector, and were exploited in terms of salary and working conditions. Data also indicated that black women were concentrated in the service sector, mainly as domestic assistants, nurses and teachers, and constituted a negligible proportion of the black workers in managerial and professional jobs.

As the Government devoted 35 per cent of its overall education expenditure to the minority white children, the crisis of black education reached alarming proportions. An estimated 1.5 million children of school-going age were not attending school. The crisis was exacerbated by a severe shortage of basic materials and qualified teachers. Announced government reforms for semi-private status for white schools were denounced as a new attempt at segregation. Children were also exploited as agricultural labourers and in the informal sector in the urban areas and townships.

Poverty affected the majority of South African families. As many as 2.5 million people could not afford basic nutritional needs. Infant mortality rates were rising as nutritional problems worsened. It was estimated that only 8 per cent of the rural black population were self-sufficient, while the majority relied on remittances from relatives working in the cities.

United Nations organs undertook several activities to assist women and children living under apartheid, including the Centre against Apartheid, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and ILO.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/13 without vote.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1992/15 of 30 July 1992,

Reaffirming the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/95 of 16 December 1992,

Alarmed by the grave socio-economic deprivation to which the majority of the people, especially the women and children, are subjected as a direct consequence of apartheid,

Deeply concerned about the politically motivated violence that has to date claimed thousands of lives and left hundreds of thousands of people homeless, the majority of whom are women and children, especially in Natal and Transvaal provinces,

Noting the positive changes initiated by the South African authorities aimed at dismantling apartheid, which were the result of the relentless struggle waged by the people of South Africa as well as of the pressure exerted by the international community,

Welcoming the progress made by the Convention for a Democratic South Africa, and encouraging the multi-party forum to discuss and debate the political dispensation and future of a democratic, non-racial, non-sexist South Africa,

Concerned at the fact that women are not integrated in the ongoing attempts to resolve the problems of South Africa by peaceful means, as envisaged in the Declaration on Apartheid, and stressing the need to ensure their full participation in that process by, inter alia, directly involving the gender advisory committee in the multi-party forum,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on women and children living under apartheid, in which it is mentioned that the Government of South Africa signed on 29 January 1993 a number of conventions aimed at promoting and implementing fundamental rights and freedoms without distinction as to sex, namely, the Convention on the Political Rights of Women, the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Noting the subsequent release by the Government of South Africa of the draft bill on the promotion of equal opportunities and concerned that it failed to deal with questions of substantive sexism that are integral to the problems of poverty, ignorance and disempowerment,

Convinced that the present legal system requires structural changes to be relevant to a new and just South Africa and that the draft bill should represent the views and experiences of those most affected by it,

Recognizing that the equality of women and men cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle towards a united, non-racist, non-sexist and democratic South Africa,

Commending the role played by the United Nations, particularly the Centre against Apartheid and the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, in helping South African women to participate fully in the process of establishing a non-racist, non-sexist democracy in South Africa,

1. Commends those women both inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression and have remained steadfast in their opposition to apartheid;

2. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of any political prisoners and detainees, among whom are women and children, in accordance with the undertaking of the South African authorities;

3. Urges those involved in the multi-party forum to place high on their agenda issues concerning women, such as freedom, justice and equality, development and the environment;

4. Appeals to all countries and United Nations bodies, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 46/79 A of 13 December 1991 and in consultation with liberation movements, to increase their support for educational, health, vocational training and employment opportunities for women and children living under apartheid;

5. Requests the Centre against Apartheid to widen and strengthen its cooperation with the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, with a view to creating specific programmes of assistance to South African women to enable them to participate fully in the process of transition of their country towards a non-racist democracy;

6. Appeals to the international community to give its full and concerted support to the vulnerable and critical process now under way in South Africa through a phased application of appropriate pressures on the South African authorities, as warranted by developments, and to provide assistance to the opponents of apartheid and the disadvantaged sectors of society in order to ensure the rapid and peaceful attainment of the objectives of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

7. Requests the international community to provide financial, material and human resources to South African women towards the establishment of special programmes and projects geared to women's integration and advancement at the present time and in post-apartheid South Africa;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to consolidate the United Nations observer mission already deployed in South Africa to monitor and report on the unprecedented proportion of incidents of political and domestic violence directed against women and children from a variety of sources;

9. Decides that the Commission on the Status of Women should remain seized of the question of women and children living under apartheid;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission at its thirty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/13

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/105) without vote, 12 July (meeting 6); draft by Commission on women (E/1993/27); agenda item 19.

Economic and social conditions

As the structures of apartheid were being dismantled and new agreements reached for their replacement, all major groupings in South Africa called for social reconstruction to eliminate the economic, social and political consequences of apartheid. Progress was made in addressing the critical needs in the socio-economic sectors, through the establishment of national forums in the areas of housing, electrification, local governments, drought, education and training.

In 1993, there were signs that the country was emerging from the longest recession it had suffered in the twentieth century. The gross domestic product (GDP) grew by 1.4 per cent in the first quarter and by 5.1 per cent in the second. The recession had severely affected employment, and was marked by a further decline in investment because of depressed demand and political uncertainties. The 1992/93 budget deficit reached 8.6 per cent, with revenues lower than expected because of the recession and higher expenditures, mainly on drought relief. With a generally declining inflation rate, the South Africa Reserve Bank cut the discount rate in February to 13 per cent, compared to 16 per cent in March 1992. The current account surplus continued to decline, to 700 million rand (R) during the first quarter of 1993, reflecting an increase in the price and volume of non-agricultural exports. The country recorded a capital outflow of R 3.7 billion during the first quarter, while gold and foreign reserves declined to R 9.5 billion in March 1993 from R 13.2 billion in August 1992.

The budget presented in March 1993 projected a decline in the deficit to 6.8 per cent of GDP. It also earmarked increases of 8 per cent in social expenditures, 12 per cent for education and 28 per cent for housing and related services. In March, the Minister of Finance presented a long-term restructuring programme for the South African economy. The programme recommended measures to improve growth, but recognized that, to improve the living standards of the poor, additional measures would be necessary to address the disparities in the socio-economic sectors. In May, the World Bank, in a paper entitled "An economic perspective of South Africa", recommended a number of measures to maximize employment growth and reduce income differences.

In the area of housing, conditions for blacks deteriorated, with squatters in the Johannesburg area having quadrupled to 400,000 since 1990. To alleviate that situation, the Independent Development Trust, a leading development group, aimed to provide 110,000 residential sites to homeless families before the end of 1993 through its capital subsidy scheme. Special funds were allocated for the construction of primary health care clinics, of which 73 were completed, 50 were under construction and 28 were in the planning phase. Nevertheless, the provision of health care remained inequitable and inefficient.

On 26 January, the Minister of National Education released an education renewal strategy, envisaging compulsory education for at least nine years, equal spending per head across racial categories, the creation of a single department supervising all education, recognition of diversity and a new system to promote national unity. Following widespread disruption in schooling due to mass action by students and teachers, President de Klerk and Mr. Mandela reached agreement on the setting up of an education negotiating forum. In August, a National Education Training Forum was launched to create a single non-racial education system.

In terms of land distribution, the Advisory Commission on Land Allocation was established to deal with the task of restoring land to dispossessed communities and peoples, by acting as an advisory body on land claims.

In the area of trade and finance, the Johannesburg Chamber of Commerce and Industry adopted a three-pronged approach, aimed at re-establishing and expanding trade relations with traditional partners, mainly the United Kingdom and other Western European countries; creating new markets in the economically buoyant regions of the Pacific Rim; and expanding and creating links with African countries. The number of trade missions visiting South Africa soared to 160 in 1992, with a bigger increase expected for 1993.

South African exports in the first six months of 1993, totalling R 3.69 billion, were 11 per cent higher than those recorded for the same 1992 period, while imports, totalling R 2.76 billion, were up by 14 per cent.

Relations with South Africa

South Africa continued to emerge from its political and economic isolation in 1993 as more States established diplomatic ties with Pretoria, resumed trade and lifted sanctions in recognition of the country's achievements towards establishing a non-racial, democratic order.

Albania, the Central African Republic, the Congo, Gabon, Morocco, Norway, Qatar and the Republic of Korea established diplomatic relations with South Africa during the year. Agreements were concluded on the opening of representative offices in Oman, Jordan and Zambia, while consular relations were established with Greece and Turkey. In May, South Africa opened a representative office in Angola.

Economic relations

Lifting of sanctions

Addressing the Special Committee against Apartheid on 24 September, ANC President Mandela said the time had come for the international community to lift all economic sanctions against South Africa in response to the historic advances achieved towards democracy, so as to give added impetus to that process and to strengthen the forces of democratic change towards stability and social progress. PAC, on the other hand, called for existing sanctions to remain in effect until a new constitution was in place ensuring election of a new Government.

Following Mr. Mandela's appeal, the OAU Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa, meeting in extraordinary ministerial session on 29 September in New York, issued a statement⁽³⁹⁾ supporting the lifting of sanctions, except those relating to the arms embargo and nuclear matters. The Committee urged that the oil embargo be lifted after the establishment and commencement of the work of TEC.

On 24 September, the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth announced the immediate lifting of all trade, investment and financial sanctions. Several Governments, including those of Australia, Canada, India and the United States, announced similar steps. Norway had announced on 15 March the lifting of sanctions, excluding the Assembly's oil embargo and the mandatory arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in 1977.⁽⁴⁰⁾

On 8 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/1 by consensus.

Lifting of sanctions against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by consensus on 14 December 1989,

Noting that the transition to democracy has now been enshrined in the law of South Africa,

1. Decides that all provisions adopted by the General Assembly relating to prohibitions or restrictions on economic relations with South Africa and its nationals, whether corporate or natural, including the areas of trade, investment, finance, travel and transportation, shall cease to have effect as of the date of the adoption of the present resolution, and requests all States to take appropriate measures within their jurisdiction to lift the restrictions and prohibitions they had imposed to implement the previous resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly;

2. Also decides that all provisions adopted by the General Assembly relating to the imposition of an embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa, and on investment in the petroleum industry there, shall cease to have effect as of the date that the Transitional Executive Council becomes operational, and requests all States to take appropriate measures within their jurisdiction to lift any restrictions or prohibitions they had imposed to implement previous resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly in this respect.

8 October 1993 Meeting 22 Adopted by consensus

Draft by Nigeria (A/48/L.2); agenda item 38.

Monitoring of the oil embargo

The Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa continued to investigate alleged violations and port calls in South Africa of ships capable of carrying oil and petroleum products. The Group maintained contact with Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and the shipping industry, following up cases of alleged violations.

During 1993, the Group queried 71 cases of alleged violations that occurred mainly during 1992 and collected information on 198 additional cases involving 149 ships of oil-shipping States.

Since 1987, the Group had removed a number of cases of alleged violations from further consideration, using the following criteria: when the certificate of discharge confirmed the delivery of oil to ports other than those in South Africa; when there was no oil-loading facility in the port concerned; and when it was certified that the ship in question was not capable of transporting oil or petroleum products. During 1993, the Group removed 22 such cases from further consideration after receiving information from Governments. Four annexes to the Group's annual report to the Assembly, issued in November⁽⁴¹⁾ contained a list of ships and companies reportedly involved in supplying oil to South Africa between 1987 and 1992; a summary of cases of alleged violations reported and investigated in 1993; and surveys of unclarified tanker calls at South African ports reported in 1991 and 1992, and in 1993.

The Group concluded that changes in South Africa were sufficiently profound and irreversible to warrant the lifting of the oil embargo, and endorsed the OAU decision that the embargo should be lifted after the establishment and commencement of work of TEC. It recommended to the General Assembly that its mandate be terminated when TEC became operational.

By letters of 7 December, the Chairman of the Group⁽⁴²⁾ the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid⁽⁴³⁾ and the Permanent Representative of South Africa⁽⁴⁴⁾ informed the President of the Assembly that TEC had convened that day for its first formal meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/159 C without vote.

Work of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Recalling its resolutions 47/116 D of 18 December 1992 and 48/1 of 8 October 1993,

Welcoming the establishment of the Transitional Executive Council in South Africa,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products and endorses its recommendations;

2. Decides to terminate the mandate of the Intergovernmental Group as of the date of the adoption of the present resolution;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to issue by 30 January 1994, as addenda to the report of the Intergovernmental Group, the responses of States to requests addressed to them regarding the cases contained in the annexes to that report.

Transnational corporations

In a March 1993 report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations (TNCs)⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General examined the economy of South Africa in the context of the world recession and the economic measures necessary to encourage long-term inward foreign investments by TNCs. In an addendum to the report, the Secretary-General updated the list of TNCs with equity interests of more than 10 per cent in South Africa and those which had divested. It also contained the Code of Conduct for Multinational Companies Investing in South Africa and the Platform of Guiding Principles for Foreign Investors, formulated by the Congress of South African Trade Unions in conjunction with ANC.

By resolution 1993/49, the Economic and Social Council invited TNCs to give their full support to the demise of apartheid and to take appropriate measures regarding the vulnerable and critical process currently under way in South Africa. It requested the Secretary-General to continue examining possible contributions of TNCs to a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa in the economic and social fields, taking into account the special need for development of human resources, particularly the training of black South African entrepreneurs, and for employment, housing and health.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations, at its nineteenth session (Geneva, 5-15 April)⁽⁴⁶⁾ reiterated the urgent need for the removal of the remaining obstacles to the creation of an atmosphere conducive to constitutional negotiations in South Africa. It invited Governments, entrepreneurs and enterprises, including TNCs, to give their full support to the end of apartheid.

Military and nuclear aspects

South Africa reduced its 1993/94 defence budget to R 9.3 billion from R 9.7 billion in 1992/93, a decrease of 3.8 per cent. However, the South African Parliament was informed that SADF had a R 4.38 billion budget for its secret special defence account, an appropriation that was sharply criticized by ANC and PAC as undermining the transition to democracy and fomenting the violence.

In spite of protests and appeals, Switzerland announced on 1 June its approval for the export of 60 Pilatus PC-70 military trainer aircraft to the South African Air Force, stating that the technical changes made by its manufacturer would make it impossible to convert the aircraft for combat use.

The South African Arms Corporation (ARMS-COR) held a six-day armaments fair, the Defence Exposition of South Africa (Nasrec, 16-22 November 1992), with more than 150 South African companies participating. The Special Committee against Apartheid called on all Governments and other institutions not to support the exhibition.

As regards South Africa's long-suspected nuclear programme, President de Klerk confirmed on 24 March that over a 15-year period South Africa had built six nuclear fission devices and had been working on a seventh, when it decided, in 1989, to dismantle its arsenal so as to accede to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons⁽⁴⁷⁾ and sign an international safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), which it did in 1991.⁽⁴⁸⁾ He stated that at no time did South Africa acquire nuclear-weapon technology or material from another country, nor had it provided any to or cooperated with any third country in that regard.

In September⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Director General of IAEA reported on implementation of the safeguards agreement and the Agency's assessment of South Africa's nuclear-weapon programme. The Agency reported that it had found no indication that there remained any sensitive components of the nuclear-weapon programme that had not been either rendered useless or converted to commercial non-nuclear applications or peaceful nuclear usage.

On 1 October⁽⁵⁰⁾ the General Conference of IAEA took note of South Africa's announcement concerning the voluntary abandonment of its nuclear deterrent capability and its invitation to IAEA to inspect past nuclear-weapon programme activities and facilities and to verify its full disclosure. It requested South Africa to continue its stated policy of full transparency.

Aid programmes and inter-agency cooperation

In an October 1993 report⁽⁵¹⁾ submitted in response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the coordinated approach of 16 United Nations bodies and 13 specialized agencies to facilitate the peaceful elimination of apartheid and the transition of South Africa to a non-racial and democratic society as envisaged by the Assembly in 1989.⁽²⁾ Guidelines for a coordinated United Nations approach to questions relating to South Africa had been adopted by the Administrative Committee on Coordination in 1991.⁽⁵²⁾

The Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid was involved in organizing the Symposium on Political Tolerance in South Africa: Role of Opinion-Makers and the Media (Cape Town, 30 July-1 August), as well as the Joint North American/European NGO Consultation (Geneva, 30 and 31 August). The Centre for Human Rights invited 11 South Africans representing a wide cross-section of society to participate in its fellowship programme and to attend the annual study session of the International Institute of Human Rights (Strasbourg, France). The Department of Public Information (DPI) provided television, radio and photographic coverage of meetings and events sponsored by the Special Committee against Apartheid. It issued a background article in January in UN Focus on recent developments in the issue of apartheid in South Africa, as well as 76 press releases in English and 21 in French, which were distributed to 67 United Nations information centres (UNICs). Articles on the topic were also published in four editions of the UN Chronicle. The DPI Radio Section's Anti-Apartheid Programmes Section produced 89 radio programmes in the first four months of 1993 in Arabic, Bangla, Chinese, Dutch, English, French, Kiswahili and Spanish and distributed them to local radio stations through UNICs. Regular weekly broadcast slots were secured for "One South Africa" and "Southern Africa Review" by the Harare UNIC on Zimbabwe Broadcasting Corporation, and by the Cairo UNIC on Cairo Radio Overseas Service.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was preparing a project for technical assistance in public service reform and conducted an assessment of NGOs in South Africa as a basis for providing assistance for human development and capacity-building. It was also providing support to the core group responsible for organizing a donors' conference to mobilize resources for South Africa.

UNICEF launched a national advocacy and social mobilization drive (Johannesburg, 14-18 June) and assisted in organizing a conference on food security, hosted by the National Consultative Forum on Drought; activities relating to the celebration of the Day of the African Child; and a situation analysis dissemination conference. The United Nations University held a seminar in July, financed by the International Development Research Centre of Canada, on industrial policy in post-apartheid South Africa.

The Economic Commission for Africa jointly organized with the African Institute of South Africa a workshop at Johannesburg in August entitled "Towards a Development Strategy for South Africa", attended by international and South African experts in the field. It debated the theoretical underpinnings of and options for development in a post-apartheid South Africa.

An ILO planning mission to South Africa met in February with a wide range of trade unionists, employer organizations and liberation movements and determined priority technical cooperation needs in the transition to democracy. Those priorities included employment creation, human resource development, economic policy formulation, worker education and labour law reform. ILO assisted in organizing a workshop on labour relations in the public sector (Johannesburg, 20 and 21 April) and participated in a conference on labour law in the rural sector (Stellenbosch, 13 and 14 May) and a conference on workers' rights (Cape Town, 18 and 19 June).

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) established a special programme for South Africa in May in support of a democratic, united and non-racial society. Through its regular programme, UNESCO granted fellowships for university studies and provided technical advice and material assistance to education officers and departments of ANC and PAC, as well as joint assistance with UNDP for the setting up of ANC and PAC education centres in the United Republic of Tanzania. In June, 20 South African trainees completed a three-year course for secondary schoolteachers at Tanzania's Mkwaja Teacher Training Institute.

A World Health Organization mission to South Africa in February covered four major areas: the general functioning of the national immunization programme as a part of primary health care activities and a basis for polio eradication; the surveillance system for vaccine-preventable diseases; diagnostic virology activities; and production and control of the Expanded Programme of Immunization vaccines. A follow-up visit in September carried out further analysis of the vaccine production situation.

The Assembly, by resolution 48/159 A, called on the international community to assist disadvantaged South African democratic anti-apartheid organizations and individuals in the academic, scientific and cultural fields.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

Five grants totalling $1,880,000 were made in 1993 from the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established in 1965⁽⁵³⁾ to provide legal, relief and educational assistance to persons persecuted under the country's repressive and discriminatory legislation, as well as relief to South African refugees.

According to an October 1993 report of the Secretary-General⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Fund had received, since his October 1992 report⁽⁵⁵⁾ $2,188,955 in voluntary contributions from 25 Member States. Total income of the Fund since its inception, including interest, was $50,298,190, and the total amount of grants was $47,850,974, including those approved in 1993. Pledges from 15 Governments totalling $82,357 were outstanding.

In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Fund's Committee of Trustees provided assistance for the reintegration of former political prisoners and newly released prisoners into South African society, as well as assistance to voluntary agencies inside South Africa to alleviate the adverse effects of the apartheid legacy and to encourage increased public confidence in the rule of law. The Committee supported the involvement of the international community and the United Nations in support of the multi-party negotiating process, human rights and democracy in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/159 D without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 47/116 C of 18 December 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Taking note of its resolution 46/79 F, adopted without a vote on 13 December 1991, in particular paragraph 3, relating to assistance by the Trust Fund for work in the legal field,

Welcoming the agreements reached within the framework of the resumed multi-party negotiations and approved by Parliament to hold elections in 1994 on the basis of universal suffrage and to establish a Transitional Executive Council, as well as legislative and other measures adopted to promote free political activity in the run-up to free and fair elections,

Recognizing the work being carried out by broad-based, impartial voluntary organizations inside South Africa in providing legal and humanitarian assistance to victims of apartheid and racial discrimination, and noting with satisfaction the working relationship that the Trust Fund has established with those South African organizations,

Concerned about continued political violence and the dangers it represents for the democratic process and for the country at large,

Convinced that the time is nearing when South African authorities, within new, non-racial and democratic structures, will take responsibility for matters which have been within the mandate of the Trust Fund,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Supports continued humanitarian, legal and educational assistance by the international community towards alleviating the plight of victims of apartheid in South Africa and towards facilitating the reintegration of released political prisoners and returning exiles into South African society;

3. Endorses the decision of the Trust Fund to channel its assistance through appropriate non-governmental organizations inside South Africa;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid in South Africa;

5. Expresses its conviction that the Trust Fund has an important role to play during the final stage of the elimination of apartheid by assisting efforts in the legal field aimed at ensuring effective implementation of legislation repealing major apartheid laws, redressing the continuing adverse effects of those laws and encouraging increased public confidence in the rule of law, and, therefore, appeals for generous contributions to the Fund;

6. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund for their persistent and worthy efforts throughout the years to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarship awards under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa reached 2,553 in 1992/93, compared to 2,108 in 1991/92, according to a report of the Secretary-General covering the period between 1 September 1992 and 31 August 1993.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The Programme was administered by the Secretary-General in consultation with an Advisory Committee and financed from a Trust Fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals. Scholarship assistance was granted to 2,459 students from South Africa and to 94 students from Namibia who had enrolled prior to 31 December 1992. New awards were granted only to disadvantaged South Africans.

During the period, a total of $3,279,817 in contributions was received from 23 countries. In addition, pledges for 1993 from 14 States amounting to $759,345 were outstanding. The 1993 contributions and pledges, totalling $4,039,162, represented a decrease of $1,384,123 from the previous year.

The Advisory Committee on the Programme held three meetings to consider several aspects relating to the Programme's development in the light of the changing circumstances in South Africa. It noted the need for intensive educational and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans to facilitate the country's transition.

The Programme initiated several new projects in cooperation with a broader network of scholarship agencies, educational institutions and NGOs, particularly inside South Africa. In its work plan for 1993-1994, it allocated $2.4 million, or 64 per cent of its total budget, for new awards to projects inside the country, 10.5 per cent in other low-cost countries and 19.5 per cent in high-cost countries. Currently, 84 per cent of its students were placed in South Africa and other low-cost countries, while 16 per cent were pursuing their studies in high-cost countries in short-term specialized courses. The Programme was mounting a major co-sponsorship training programme with technikons in South Africa, which would absorb a greater percentage of its resources in the near future. Training and placement of mid- and high-level cadres in key sectors of science and technology were considered a crucial requirement for sustained growth and development in South Africa.

In accordance with a 1992 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁸⁾ co-sponsorship and other arrangements inside South Africa were consolidated and expanded with a number of universities, technikons and NGOs. As the Programme shifted the focus of its educational and training activities to South Africa, particular attention was given to distance programmes with a view to enhancing institution-building and to filling South Africa's human resource needs during the transition period and beyond. Some graduate studies were primarily carried out abroad in programmes involving tuition waivers, graduate assistantships and other cost-sharing arrangements. The Programme's administrative costs were maintained at a minimum through group arrangements with educational institutions in South Africa.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that it was increasingly recognized that a large trained cadre of black South Africans, especially at the high- and mid-management levels in education, science, technology and other priority areas, would play an important role in the country's economic and social development. He appealed for generous financial and other support to the Programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/160 without vote.

Noting that, in order to address the priority needs of disadvantaged South Africans, the Programme is continuing to allocate a higher proportion of resources for the purpose of institution-building in South Africa, in particular by strengthening the historically black and other institutions of higher learning, especially the technikons, through specialized training courses with built-in employability of graduates,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

7. Considers that the activities of the Programme, under changing circumstances, should be planned in such a manner as to ensure that commitments made with regard to educational and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans can be fully met;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to include the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa in the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

9. Expresses its appreciation to all those who have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

Angola

The armed conflict between the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) escalated during 1993, following an outbreak of fighting in late 1992 as a result of UNITA's refusal to accept the validity of the 1992 multi-party elections. W Peace negotiations resumed twice and resulted in the drafting of a Memorandum of Understanding and adoption of several specific principles on the re-establishment of the cease-fire and the formation of the Angolan armed forces. The Security Council extended the mandate of the second United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II), established in 1991,⁽⁵⁾ six times, until 16 March 1994. In June, an international appeal was launched for emergency humanitarian assistance to the Angolan population.

Communication and report of the Secretary-General (January). On 8 January 1993,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the situation in Angola had deteriorated since the beginning of the year, with heavy fighting in at least 10 provincial capitals and other population centres. The Government was unable to re-establish its administration in many rural areas, and the majority of municipalities remained in UNITA's hands. The Secretary-General's Special Representative for Angola and Chief of UNAVEM II, Margaret Joan Anstee, in an effort to restore the cease-fire and relaunch the dialogue begun in 1992, obtained the agreement of both sides to a meeting of military leaders. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council endorse her efforts and appeal to the two sides to meet as early as possible.

In a 21 January report⁽⁴⁾ submitted in response to a 1992 Council request⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General described the political and military developments in Angola and outlined the role and situation of UNAVEM II. He stated that, although the Angolan President, Jose Eduardo dos Santos, and the President of UNITA, Jonas Malheiro Savimbi, continued to reiterate their commitment to peace and resumed negotiations, fierce armed clashes broke out on 3 January in the city of Lubango and spread quickly throughout the country, effectively returning Angola to civil war. The military meeting, scheduled for 16 and 17 January, was suspended after UNITA insisted that political talks should take place at the same time. On 19 January, the Government of Angola accepted UNITA's proposal for a political-military meeting at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. The Secretary-General noted that there were reports of foreign interference in the conflict, in violation of the 1991 Peace Accords⁽⁶⁾. In a 21 January letter⁽⁷⁾ to the Secretary-General, the President of Angola requested that the Security Council extend and update UNAVEM's mandate, in the light of the escalating military action, to reinforce its presence in Angola and to ensure full implementation of the Peace Accords.

The Secretary-General said UNAVEM II played a mediating role following post-election developments, facilitating negotiations between the Government and UNITA, including between military commanders in combat. At the same time, its original mandate had become less relevant with the collapse of joint monitoring mechanisms, and the deteriorating security situation made it impossible to restore the Mission to full strength. By 20 January, its military and police observers had been reduced from 350 and 126 to 247 and 87, respectively, and civilian observers to nine. Of 67 UNAVEM locations, 45 had to be evacuated due to extensive fighting, with an estimated loss of some $5.2 million in abandoned, damaged or looted equipment. In addition, United Nations personnel were subjected to harassment and physical abuse. As a result, the Mission could no longer monitor the course of events adequately; however, it continued to assist in the evacuation efforts of ICRC, foreign consulates and NGOs. Following the return of Major-General Edward U. Unimna of Nigeria to national service on 14 December 1992, Brigadier-General Michael Nyambuya of Zimbabwe acted as Chief Military Observer.

The Secretary-General noted that his Special Representative had submitted to the two parties on 24 December 1992 a discussion paper on the future mandate of an enlarged UNAVEM. He recommended that the Security Council renew the mandate of his Special Representative, but confine the deployment of UNAVEM II, with reduced staff, to the capital city of Luanda, while maintaining sufficient equipment to permit subsequent expeditious redeployment to regional centres when feasible. The Secretary-General also recommended 30 April 1993 as the deadline for the Mission's withdrawal, should the two parties fail to agree on a cease-fire and resume negotiations.

Monthly cost estimates for the extension of UNAVEM II were provided in an addendum to the report.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 29 January to consider the situation in Angola, in accordance with the understanding reached in its prior consultations and in response to Angola's request⁽⁸⁾ Angola, Cuba, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Namibia, Nigeria, Portugal, Zaire and Zimbabwe were invited to participate in the discussion, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council adopted resolution 804(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, 747(1992) of 24 March 1992, 785(1992) of 30 October 1992 and 793(1992) of 30 November 1992,

Having considered the further report of the Secretary-General dated 21 January 1993,

Having considered also the request submitted to the Secretary-General by the Government of Angola in its letter dated 21 January 1993,

Gravely disturbed by the recent outbreak of heavy fighting in many parts of Angola and the further deterioration of the already dangerous political and military situation in that country,

Gravely concerned at the continuing non-implementation of the major provisions of the "Acordos de Paz para Angola", Concerned at the recent absence of dialogue between the Government of Angola and UNITA, and welcoming the meeting between them under United Nations auspices in Addis Ababa to discuss the cease-fire and political matters,

Also concerned at the outrageous harassment and physical abuse to which UNAVEM II personnel have been subjected, and the looting and destruction of United Nations property, as described in the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General,

Further concerned at reports of foreign support for and involvement in military actions in Angola,

Regretting that the deteriorating situation has made it increasingly difficult for UNAVEM II to carry out its mandate,

Recalling that democratic elections were held on 29 and 30 September 1992, which the Special Representative of the Secretary-General certified as being generally free and fair, and that steps have been taken to set up a Government of National Unity which would reflect the results of the legislative elections, and deeply regretting the failure of UNITA to take part in the political institutions thus established,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Recognizing that the Angolans themselves bear ultimate responsibility for the restoration of peace and national reconciliation of their country,

Reiterating its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative aimed at resolving the present crisis and resuming the political process, in particular through the completion of the electoral process,

1. Notes with appreciation the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General;

2. Strongly condemns the persistent violations of the main provisions of the "Acordos de Paz", in particular the initial rejection by UNITA of the election results, its withdrawal from the new Angolan armed forces, its seizure by force of provincial capitals and municipalities and the resumption of hostilities;

3. Demands that the two parties cease fire immediately, restore at their meeting in Addis Ababa continued and meaningful dialogue, and agree on a clear timetable for the full implementation of the "Acordos de Paz", in particular with regard to confinement of their troops and collection of their weapons, demobilization and formation of the unified national armed forces, effective restoration of the Government administration throughout the country, the completion of the electoral process and the free circulation of people and goods;

4. Supports fully the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in their continuing efforts to restore the peace process and to carry out the mandate of UNAVEM II under extremely difficult conditions;

5. Urges once again the two parties, and in particular UNITA, to produce early evidence of their adherence to, and fulfilment without exception of, the "Acordos de Paz";

6. Appeals strongly to the Government of Angola and UNITA to confirm as soon as possible to the Secretary-General that real progress has been made towards implementation of the "Acordos de Paz";

7. Appeals to all Member States to render economic and technical assistance to the Government of Angola for reconstruction and development of the country;

8. Calls upon all Member States to support all those concerned in their efforts for the implementation of the "Acordos de Paz";

9. Urges all Member States to take all necessary steps to stop immediately and effectively any direct or indirect military or paramilitary interference from their territories and to respect scrupulously the provisions of the

"Acordos de Paz" concerning the cessation of supply of lethal material to any Angolan party;

10. Strongly condemns violations of international humanitarian law, in particular the attacks against the civilian population, including the extensive killings carried out by armed civilians, and calls upon both parties to abide by their obligations thereunder and the appropriate provisions of the "Acordos de Paz";

11. Demands that UNITA immediately release foreign nationals taken hostage;

12. Strongly condemns attacks against UNAVEM II personnel in Angola, and demands that the Government and UNITA take all necessary measures to ensure their safety and security;

13. Expresses its condolences to the family of the UNAVEM II police observer who lost his life;

14. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General to maintain a Special Representative for Angola based in Luanda, with the necessary civilian, military and police staff with the mandate as described in paragraph 29 of the report of the Secretary-General;

15. Decides to extend the mandate of UNAVEM II for a period of three months until 30 April 1993, with the proviso that, as a provisional measure based on security considerations, the Secretary-General is authorized to concentrate UNAVEM II deployment in Luanda, and at his discretion in other provincial locations, with the levels of equipment and personnel he deems appropriate to be retained in order to allow the subsequent expeditious redeployment of UNAVEM II as soon as this becomes feasible, with a view to the resumption of its functions in accordance with the "Acordos de Paz" and previous resolutions on this matter;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it as soon as the situation warrants, and in any case before 30 April 1993, a report on the situation in Angola together with his recommendations for the further role of the United Nations in the peace process, and in the meantime to keep the Council regularly informed;

17. Stresses its readiness to take action promptly, at any time within the period of the mandate authorized by this resolution, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, to expand substantially the United Nations presence in Angola in the event of significant progress in the peace process;

18. Reiterates its readiness to consider all appropriate measures under the Charter of the United Nations to secure implementation of the "Acordos de Paz";

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 804(1993)

29 January 1993 Meeting 3168 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25187).

Further developments (January-March). A high-level meeting between the Government of Angola and UNITA was held at Addis Ababa from 27 to 30 January, to consider the re-establishment of the cease-fire, conclusion of the implementation of the Peace Accords, the role of the United Nations in the peace process and the release of prisoners. Although no agreement on a cease-fire was reached, the parties agreed on some issues and to discuss outstanding ones. A second meeting, scheduled initially for 10 February at Addis Ababa, was postponed at UNITA's request until 26 February. On 23 February, the States observers to the Peace Accords (Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States), meeting at Lisbon, Portugal, in preparation for the second meeting, called on the parties to the conflict to respond immediately to the appeals for truce launched by ICRC and the United Nations, pending agreement on a cease-fire, and to facilitate the provision of urgent humanitarian assistance. The meeting was cancelled following UNITA's request for a further delay of unspecified duration. The Special Representative regretted the cancellation of the meeting, since it was crucial for obtaining a cease-fire agreement. The observer States also issued a statement deploring the outcome.

In the meantime, civil war continued throughout most of the country. On 7 March, UNITA declared full control of Huambo, Angola's second largest city, following a battle which lasted for almost two months and cost more than 10,000 lives. On 8 March⁽⁹⁾ Angola appealed to the Security Council to condemn the aggressor and violator of the Peace Accords, to release Angola from compliance with the provision of the Accords concerning arms supplies, in acknowledgement of its right to recourse to Article 51 of the Charter, and to adopt international sanctions against UNITA.

In an oral report to the Council on 11 March, the Special Representative outlined several options for UNAVEM II, including the deployment of a major peace-keeping force, and emphasized that it was essential to review the Mission's mandate and make it more relevant to the changed circumstances.

UNAVEM personnel continued to be exposed to threats, intimidation and physical attacks; a military observer from Jordan was kidnapped at Cabinda on 23 February, and a police observer was wounded during a 6 March attack on the UNAVEM camp there.

In a 22 February letter⁽¹⁰⁾ to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Major-General Chris Abutu Garuba of Nigeria as Chief Military Observer of UNAVEM II. On 26 February⁽¹¹⁾ the President informed the Secretary-General of the Council's agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council considered further developments in Angola on 12 March. At its request, Angola was invited to participate in the discussion, in accordance with the Charter and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council adopted resolution 811(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, 747(1992) of 24 March 1992, 785(1992) of 30 October 1992, 793(1992) of 30 November 1992 and 804(1993) of 29 January 1993,

Gravely disturbed by the recent outbreak of heavy fighting in many parts of Angola, the large number of casualties and massive loss of human life which have ensued and the further deterioration of the already dangerous political and military situation, bringing the country to the verge of the resumption of civil war,

Gravely concerned at the persistent violations by UNITA of the major provisions of the "Acordos de Paz para Angola",

Further concerned at reports that military support and equipment continue to flow in contravention of the "Acordos de Paz",

Noting with particular concern that a humanitarian tragedy of grave proportions is developing in Angola and the need, therefore, for increased international humanitarian assistance,

Deeply regretting that the second meeting between the delegations of the Government of Angola and UNITA, which had been scheduled to be held on 26 February 1993 in Addis Ababa under the auspices of the United Nations, did not take place because of the failure by UNITA to fulfil its commitment to send a delegation to Addis Ababa,

Noting with satisfaction the readiness displayed by the Government of Angola to participate in the Addis Ababa meeting,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Welcoming and supporting the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative aimed at resolving the present crisis through negotiations,

1. Strongly condemns the persistent violations by UNITA of the major provisions of the "Acordos de Paz", in particular the continued rejection by UNITA of the results of the elections held on 29 and 30 September 1992 which the Special Representative of the Secretary-General determined as generally free and fair, its failure to take part in the political institutions established on the basis of those elections, its failure to engage in meaningful negotiations with the Government of Angola, its withdrawal from the new Angolan armed forces, its seizure by force of provincial capitals and municipalities and the resumption of hostilities;

2. Demands that UNITA accept unreservedly the results of the democratic elections of 1992 and abide fully by the "Acordos de Paz", and further demands that the two parties, particularly UNITA, produce early evidence, not later than 30 March 1993, that real progress has been made towards the implementation of the "Acordos de Paz";

3. Strongly demands an immediate cease-fire throughout the country, and further demands the resumption without delay and without preconditions of a continued and meaningful dialogue under United Nations auspices so that a clear timetable for the completion of the implementation of the "Acordos de Paz" may be established;

Security Council resolution 811(1993)

12 March 1993 Meeting 3182 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25399).

Further developments (March/April). Following bilateral talks between the United States and UNITA at Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, from 25 to 29 March and subsequent consultations of the Special Representative with both parties to the conflict, direct talks resumed at Abidjan on 12 April under the auspices of the United Nations. The agenda of the meeting included arrangements for a cease-fire, completion of the Peace Accords, national reconciliation, release of prisoners and humanitarian assistance, as well as guarantees for the security of people and property, freedom of the press, definition of the powers of provincial administration and the question of the future role of the United Nations in the peace process. Efforts concentrated on preparing a Protocol of Abidjan which, once signed, would immediately lead to a cease-fire and provide the basis for its implementation. The draft Protocol also provided for an expanded United Nations peace-keeping presence.

As hostilities in Angola continued, efforts to deliver humanitarian assistance to both Government- and UNITA-controlled areas met with increasing difficulties. On three separate occasions, United Nations aircraft came under fire, and a UNAVEM helicopter was damaged by stray bullets while evacuating refugees. On 26 April, an aircraft of the World Food Programme (WFP) was hit and made a crash landing short of the runway, which led to the death of the flight navigator and injuries to the seven other crew members. On the positive side, the military observer kidnapped on 23 February was released on 15 March. On 2 April, the southern African front-line States—a subregional group that included Angola—declared that the Angolan Government had a legitimate right to use all means to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity and appealed to the international community to provide assistance to the Government.

An oral report on the developments in Angola was presented to the Security Council on 22 April. On 29 April⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General apprised the Council of the progress of the talks, which were expected to continue beyond 30 April, and recommended extending the existing mandate of UNAVEM II for an interim period of 31 days, until 31 May. He noted that the current strength of the Mission consisted of 75 military observers, 30 police officers, 49 international civilian staff, 12 paramedics and 70 local staff, which corresponded roughly to the wider deployment option envisaged in resolution 804(1993).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Council met on 30 April, with Angola participating under rule 37^a of the provisional rules of procedure, and adopted resolution 823(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, 747(1992) of 24 March 1992, 785(1992) of 30 October 1992, 793(1992) of 30 November 1992, 804(1993) of 29 January 1993 and 811(1993) of 12 March 1993,

Recalling its resolution 804(1993), in particular its paragraph 15, by which it decided to extend the mandate of UNAVEM II for a period of three months until 30 April 1993,

Extending its support to the current and ongoing peace talks in Abidjan between the Government of Angola and UNITA under United Nations auspices and chairmanship and expressing the hope that those talks will result in an immediate cease-fire and in the full implementation of the "Acordos de Paz",

Gravely concerned at the continuing attacks against international humanitarian flights operating in Angola, in particular the recent shooting down of a World Food Programme aircraft, Taking into account the letter dated 29 April 1993 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council,

1. Decides to extend the existing mandate of UNAVEM II until 31 May 1993;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it as soon as the situation warrants, and in any case before 31 May 1993, a report on the situation in Angola with his recommendations for the further role of the United Nations in the peace process and in the meantime to keep the Council regularly informed;
3. Stresses its readiness to take action promptly, at any time within the period of the mandate authorized by this resolution, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, to expand substantially the United Nations presence in Angola in the event of significant progress in the peace process;
4. Condemns the attacks against international humanitarian flights operating in Angola and demands that these attacks cease forthwith and that both parties, in particular UNITA, take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of these flights as well as the security of UNAVEM II personnel;
5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 823(1993)

30 April 1993 Meeting 3206 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25694).

Communication and reports of the Secretary-General (May). In a 25 May report⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General described political and military developments and humanitarian assistance efforts in Angola since his January report. He stated that fighting throughout the country had intensified, with UNITA occupying an estimated 75 per cent of the territory. The direct talks between the Government and UNITA that led to the drafting of the Abidjan Protocol and its Memorandum of Understanding had to be suspended on 21 May due to UNITA's insistence on absolute parity in the simultaneous movement and quartering of government and UNITA troops, rather than just UNITA troops, as drafted in the Memorandum.

By a 27 May letter⁽¹⁴⁾ to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General announced his intention to release Ms. Anstee, at her request, from her responsibilities as his Special Representative for Angola, and to appoint Alioune Blondin Beye of Mali to the post, effective 28 June. As stated in a 4 June letter⁽¹⁵⁾ of the President, the Council members welcomed Mr. Beye's appointment.

As the war continued, the emerging humanitarian disaster was further aggravated by the recent drought in southern Africa, the Secretary-General said. According to WFP estimates, nearly 2 million Angolans were suffering from hunger, drought and disease, with at least 1,000 people dying daily. Activities of the United Nations humanitarian assistance coordination unit, set up in Luanda in late April, were supported by UNAVEM II, which coordinated security clearance for land and air transportation, provided communications services and its aircraft for humanitarian operations, and accompanied humanitarian flights and land convoys. Their efforts resulted in the transfer of nearly 6,000 refugees, mostly women and children, from Humambo and the delivery of some 350 tons of food and medical supplies to Caibambo. The Special Representative proposed an emergency one-month plan for the delivery of humanitarian aid through land and air corridors to be mutually agreed on. An international appeal to fund the Emergency Humanitarian Programme, covering the period from 1 May 1993 to 30 April 1994, with a total funding requirement of $226 million was planned. The Secretary-General pointed to increasing reports of human rights violations and other atrocities against civilians, committed by both parties to the conflict, and urged them to respect their responsibilities under international humanitarian law.

He further reported that 18 UNAVEM locations had been evacuated since January, leaving only four outside Luanda, and that the losses since UNAVEM's first withdrawal in late 1992 totalled $6.7 million. Noting that, apart from assisting in the delivery of humanitarian aid, the Mission's military and police components concentrated on patrolling and providing liaison with local military and civilian officials and other confidence-building measures, the Secretary-General recommended a further interim extension of UNAVEM II, on a reduced basis, from 1 June to 31 July, to provide good offices and mediation aimed at restoring a cease-fire and reinstating the peace process. He also recommended increasing resources for coordination of humanitarian assistance, including protection of the relief personnel and supervision of aid distribution.

The cost of the two-month extension was estimated at $3,659,000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report on 1 June. Angola and Portugal were invited to participate in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Resolution 834(1993) was adopted unanimously.

6. Affirms that such occupation is a grave violation of the "Acordos de Paz";

7. Strongly appeals to the two parties, and in particular to UNITA, to reinstate as soon as possible the interrupted peace talks under United Nations auspices with a view to the earliest establishment of a cease-fire throughout the country and the full implementation of the "Acordos de Paz", further undertakings between the two parties, and relevant resolutions of the Security Council, due account being taken of what was achieved during the discussion of the Abidjan draft protocol;

13. Reiterates its appeal to both parties strictly to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law, including to guarantee unimpeded access for humanitarian assistance to the civilian population in need, and commends in particular the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to establish agreed humanitarian relief corridors;

14. Reiterates its appeal to both parties to take all necessary measures to ensure the security and the safety of the personnel involved in humanitarian relief operations;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it as soon as the situation warrants, and in any case before 15 July 1993, a report on the situation in Angola with his recommendation for the further role of the United Nations in the peace process and, in the meantime, to keep the Council regularly informed of developments;

Security Council resolution 834(1993)

1 June 1993 Meeting 3226 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25857).

On 8 June, following consultations with Council members, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:^(c)

Meeting number. SC 3232.

"The Security Council received with grave concern and shock the report of the Secretary-General on the attack by UNITA forces, on 27 May 1993, between Quipungo and Matala, against a train carrying civilians, which resulted in the death of 225 persons, including women and children, and several hundred wounded.

"The Security Council strongly condemns this action by UNITA, which is a clear violation of Security Council resolutions and of international humanitarian law, and it reiterates its demand that UNITA immediately cease its armed attacks. The Security Council expresses its condemnation of such criminal attacks and it stresses that those responsible must be held accountable. The Security Council urges UNITA leaders to make sure that its forces abide by the rules of international humanitarian law.

"The Security Council emphasizes once again the imperative need for an immediate cease-fire throughout the country and it reiterates its appeal to the two parties, in particular UNITA, to reinstate the interrupted peace talks with a view to the full implementation of the Acordos de Paz."

Communications (June/July). On 14 June⁽¹⁷⁾ the observer States communicated to the Security Council a statement issued at their 8 June meeting in Washington, D.C., reaffirming that the key principles of the Peace Accords and additional principles of the draft Abidjan Protocol's Memorandum of Understanding remained the basis for a peaceful settlement in Angola. They expressed their readiness to reactivate the monitoring and guarantee mechanisms of the Peace Accords, support the reinforcement of the United Nations role once agreement was reached, and ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance throughout Angola. On 9 July⁽¹⁸⁾ they transmitted a statement issued at their 8 July meeting in Moscow, calling for an immediate cessation of hostilities and strongly urging UNITA to end its threats and intimidation against United Nations personnel and other participants in the peace process and to refrain from direct actions or threats against citizens or installations of third countries. Recognizing the right of the Angolan Government to self-defence, the observer States stressed the need to exercise restraint so as not to aggravate the situation. They also discussed additional measures to resolve the crisis, including an arms embargo against UNITA.

On 13 July⁽¹⁹⁾ Uganda communicated to the Council the Declaration on Angola, adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its twenty-ninth ordinary session (Cairo, Egypt, 28-30 June), calling on UNITA to resume peace talks with the Government, with a view to establishing a cease-fire and ensuring the full implementation of the Peace Accords. Condemning UNITA for repeated massacres of civilians and destruction of social infrastructures, the Assembly recommended that the Security Council impose sanctions against UNITA and neutralize its activities. It called on neighbouring countries not to allow the use of their territories as a springboard for military action by UNITA. By a letter of 14 July⁽²⁰⁾ Uganda transmitted a resolution on the situation in Angola, adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its fifty-eighth ordinary session (Cairo, 21-26 June). The Ministers demanded that UNITA refrain from military actions and withdraw its troops from the occupied areas, and appealed to African States to end support to UNITA's military wing.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In a 12 July report⁽²¹⁾ submitted pursuant to resolution 834(1993), the Secretary-General said that the political and military situation in Angola continued to deteriorate as fighting intensified and mistrust deepened. UNITA increased efforts to seize additional territory and intensified attacks, aimed at causing serious economic losses to the Government. For its part, the Government reintroduced military conscription and the National Assembly on 17 June empowered it to use any means to confront the UNITA offensive. In a particularly serious incident, UNITA ambushed a train between Quipungo and Matala on 27 May, resulting in the deaths of some 300 people and hundreds of wounded. At meetings with the Special Representative on 5 and 8 July, respectively, both President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi expressed readiness to resume peace talks and facilitate relief operations. Dr. Savimbi also stressed the need for the United Nations to assume a mediation role.

The Secretary-General also reported on efforts of United Nations organizations to provide humanitarian assistance to Angola and said that an estimated $70 million was received in response to the United Nations Consolidated Appeal for Angola, presented at a donors' conference at Geneva on 3 June (see PART THREE, Chapter III). WFP and UNICEF delivered food, medicines, vegetable oil and blankets under the one-month emergency relief plan, before its suspension at the end of June. The Secretary-General noted a declaration adopted on 24 June by the World Conference on Human Rights, urging the Security Council to take steps towards reaching a cease-fire and restoring peace in Angola, and calling for immediate humanitarian assistance (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

The Secretary-General reported that the Chief Military Observer appointed in June (see above) assumed command of UNAVEM II on 9 July. He had reduced the size of the Mission to 50 military and 18 police observers, 43 international civilian staff and 11 military paramedics, as well as necessary local staff. Its activities focused on patrolling, assessing the military situation, providing liaison between military and civilian officials and participating in humanitarian operations. The Secretary-General concluded that UNAVEM II had become an essential factor in advancing the peace process and an indispensable channel for communication between the parties; he recommended extension of its mandate for three months, from 16 July to 15 October. The total cost of a two-month extension until 15 September was estimated at $4,307,600.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

Security Council resolution 851(1993)

15 July 1993 Meeting 3254 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26080).

In a 10 September statement,⁽²³⁾ issued at a meeting at Lisbon, the observer States, noting with concern the intensification of the war in Angola, recommended that the Security Council propose measures to undercut UNITA's ability to pursue war and make it resume negotiations. They gave special attention to the tragic humanitarian situation in Angola and demanded the immediate release of all foreigners held captive by UNITA.

Report of the Secretary-General (September). The Secretary-General reported on 13 September⁽²³⁾ that the Angolan Government had launched a counter-offensive in early August and succeeded in broadening its area of control. On 11 August, Dr. Savimbi proposed an immediate cease-fire without preconditions, which was communicated to the Security Council President and the Special Representative on 13 and 20 August, respectively. However, while reiterating its readiness to resume dialogue, the Government of Angola asserted that the proposal could not be considered seriously since it had not been communicated to it officially. Subsequent efforts by the Special Representative to discuss the proposal with Dr. Savimbi were to no avail, due to ongoing hostilities at Huambo.

The Special Representative continued to maintain regular contacts with the Government and the three observer States, as well as with UNITA, and held intensive consultations in the Congo, Gabon, Namibia, Sao Tome and Principe, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe, which led to initiatives to hold a high-level meeting between the parties to the conflict either in Gabon or in Sao Tome and Principe. In a 3 September communique, UNITA expressed readiness to meet with the Presidents of Sao Tome and Principe and of Portugal and reiterated its offer to suspend military hostilities immediately. On 4 September, the Government stated that a cease-fire should be established in accordance with the Peace Accords and relevant Security Council resolutions and that UNITA's offer was not made within such a context. On 9 September, UNITA announced that Dr. Savimbi was not included in its delegation due to the security situation at Huambo.

The report noted that, with the further intensification of the fighting, the humanitarian situation had worsened dramatically. Food and other emergency assistance were provided under a relief programme to the areas considered secure. On 7 July, agreement was reached between the Government of Angola, UNITA and the United Nations to resume the emergency relief plan suspended in June. On 15 July, relief flights were resumed to agreed locations in combat zones for an initial period of 10 days. On 29 July, the Government approved a twofold plan covering emergency assistance to areas of active conflict and to those outside conflict but still considered unsafe. On 3 September, UNITA agreed to the proposed plan.

The Secretary-General recommended restoring the level of UNAVEM's international civilian staff to at least 59 and extending its mandate for a further three months. The total cost of the extension was estimated at some $7.2 million.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 15 September, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Angola, Egypt, Nigeria and Portugal participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The Council adopted resolution 864(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, 747(1992) of 24 March 1992, 785(1992) of 30 October 1992, 793(1992) of 30 November 1992, 804(1993) of 29 January 1993, 811(1993) of 12 March 1993, 823(1993) of 30 April 1993, 834(1993) of 1 June 1993 and 851(1993) of 15 July 1993,

Welcoming the joint statement issued in Lisbon on 10 September 1993 by the representatives of Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States of America, the three observer States to the Angolan peace process,

Welcoming also and supporting to that end the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative aimed at the earliest resolution of the Angolan crisis through negotiations, and stressing the importance it attaches thereto,

Welcoming further the efforts of the Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and of heads of State of neighbouring countries to facilitate the resumption of the peace process in Angola,

Security Council resolution 864(1993)

15 September 1993 Meeting 3277 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26445).

Report of the Secretary-General (October).
On 27 October⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council that UNITA, at a meeting with his Special Representative at Abidjan on 14 and 15 September, proposed a unilateral declaration of a cease-fire throughout Angola, effective 20 September, and called for immediate discussions of a number of political and military issues. The proposal, however, included no references to the legal framework for the peace process, acceptance of the 1992 election results, or a bilateral cease-fire agreement between the parties. The report noted that the Angolan Government had, on 22 September, announced its peace plan⁽²⁵⁾ which included principles for the resolution of the post-electoral crisis, such as UNITA's withdrawal from the occupied areas, followed by a cease-fire; unimpeded access for humanitarian aid and immediate evacuation of the wounded, sick and foreigners after the establishment of the cease-fire; complete acceptance of the validity of the Peace Accords and the election results; and respect for the legislation produced by the institutions resulting from the elections. In a 6 October communique, UNITA reaffirmed the validity of the Peace Accords and its acceptance of the election results, although holding them fraudulent, and considered the Abidjan Protocol as a serious basis for negotiations. It also stated that institutions resulting from the elections should reflect the current position of UNITA and other opposition forces. It pledged to maintain the unilateral cease-fire and requested the Special Representative to announce a date for the resumption of negotiations. On 25 October, the two sides began exploratory talks at Lusaka, Zambia.

Although the intensity of military operations generally decreased, specific activities were reported in various parts of the country, including troop movements, attacks, ambushes and shelling. The Secretary-General noted that UNAVEM II at its current level could not provide nationwide coverage to verify those reports. As the humanitarian situation worsened, the programme of emergency assistance was expanded. Food deliveries by WFP and NGOs increased to more than 8,800 tons in September, while UNICEF initiated its second 90-day plan providing aid in primary health care, vaccination and diarrhoeal disease control, nutrition, relief and survival assistance, water and sanitation, household food security and education.

In view of the ongoing political talks, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council postpone action to impose further measures against UNITA until 1 December. He also recommended increasing the number of UNAVEM II military observers to 175, police observers to 60 and military paramedics to 14, to be deployed in the event of a political breakthrough. Cost estimates of the Mission's enlargement for a six-month period were set at $14,194,000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

The Security Council met on 1 November to consider the Secretary-General's report. Angola participated in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Following consultations, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement⁽²⁶⁾

Meeting number. SC 3302.

"The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's report of 27 October 1993 submitted in response to operative paragraph 28 of resolution 864(1993). It notes the exploratory talks in Lusaka, Zambia, under the auspices of the United Nations, to which both the Government of Angola and UNITA have sent delegations. It affirms its complete support for the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in their efforts aimed at the earliest resolution of the Angolan crisis through negotiations within the framework of the 'Acordos de Paz' and Security Council resolutions. It calls upon the Angolan parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to this end.

"The Security Council notes recent actions taken by both parties, including the lessening of hostilities, and considers it essential that the two parties take the necessary steps to resume direct negotiations towards a peaceful settlement and agree without delay on the modalities for an effective cease-fire in accordance with Security Council resolutions.

"The Security Council notes UNITA's communique of 6 October referred to in paragraph 11 of the Secretary-General's report. It expresses its concern that the Secretary-General has reported that not enough progress has yet been made towards the full implementation of the 'Acordos de Paz' and relevant resolutions of the Council. It demands that UNITA take the necessary steps to comply with its previous resolutions. It expresses its readiness to consider the immediate imposition of further measures under the Charter of the United Nations, including inter alia trade measures against UNITA and restrictions on the travel of UNITA personnel, at any time that it observes that UNITA is not cooperating in good faith to make the cease-fire effective and implement the 'Acordos de Paz' and relevant resolutions of the Security Council, or upon a report from the Secretary-General to that effect.

"The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Angola. It is encouraged however by the Secretary-General's report that the United Nations system, working with humanitarian agencies, has now been able significantly to increase the rate of delivery of relief aid to all parts of the country. It welcomes the resumption of humanitarian relief deliveries to the cities of Cuito and Huambo. It calls upon the parties to cooperate fully in ensuring the unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance to all Angolans throughout the country, to take all necessary measures to ensure the security and safety of United Nations and other personnel involved in humanitarian relief operations, and strictly to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law. It commends the international community for its generous provision of relief aid and calls upon the international community to make available further relief aid rapidly to meet the growing need.

"The Security Council shares the Secretary-General's view that UNAVEM II should be able to respond rapidly to any progress which might be achieved in the peace process. It encourages the Secretary-General to carry out urgent contingency planning for the possible augmentation of the existing strength of the military, police and medical components of UNAVEM II for deployment in the event of significant progress in the peace process, including contacting potential troop contributors. It stands ready to take decisions in the matter at any time within the period of the mandate authorized by resolution 864(1993).

"The Security Council again expresses its strongest appeal that both sides, in particular UNITA, undertake to commit themselves to the peace process that will lead to a comprehensive settlement in Angola on the basis of the 'Acordos de Paz'.

"The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter and will review the position again with regard to further measures at the latest on 15 December in the context of its consideration of the report that the Secretary-General is due to make by that date pursuant to its resolution 864(1993)."

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

The Secretary-General reported on 14 December⁽²⁷⁾ that UNITA had clarified its position stated in the 6 October communique, as requested by the Angolan Government, and accepted the principle of immediate withdrawal of its troops to United Nations-monitored areas, pending full implementation of the Peace Accords. Responding to the Special Representative's request, the Angolan Government said it could not observe a unilateral cessation of hostilities because UNITA had launched a number of offensives and would consider the principle of withdrawal of UNITA troops only within the framework of a bilateral cease-fire. The Special Representative nevertheless emphasized that the Government should ensure a pause in military operations during the peace talks.

The talks began at Lusaka on 15 November and concluded on 10 December with the adoption of general and specific principles on the re-establishment of the cease-fire and on completing the formation of the Angolan armed forces, as well as implementation arrangements. The Secretary-General noted that there were unconfirmed reports of the violation of the arms embargo against UNITA, which came into force on 26 September, as well as of troop movements, attacks, ambushes, mine-laying and shelling. Although the ability of UNAVEM II to evaluate the military situation remained limited, the military observers confirmed that the Government had enlarged the area of the country under its control. Contingency planning was initiated for the possible augmentation of the Mission's strength in the event of progress in the Lusaka talks, and projections for the involvement of the United Nations in the implementation of agreements under discussion were drawn up.

The report assessed the humanitarian situation in the coastal areas, non-intensive conflict areas and those until recently known as intensive conflict areas. It noted the cooperation of the Government and UNITA in facilitating the provision of humanitarian assistance. The emergency programmes, however, faced serious financial difficulties, which prompted preparation of a revised inter-agency appeal to the donor community.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General again recommended postponing further additional measures against UNITA and extending the mandate of UNAVEM II for three months. He stated that both parties insisted on an increase in United Nations involvement to verify and monitor the withdrawal and quartering of UNITA's troops; collect, store and guard UNITA's armaments; oversee the disarming of civilians; and verify the formation of the Angolan armed forces and the police, as well as the extension of State administration throughout Angola. The cost of the three-month extension was estimated at $6,455,000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 15 December, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Angola participating in the discussion under rule 37ⁿ of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The Council adopted resolution 890(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, 747(1992) of 24 March 1992, 785(1992) of 30 October 1992, 793(1992) of 30 November 1992, 804(1993) of 29 January 1993, 811(1993) of 12 March 1993, 823(1993) of 30 April 1993, 834(1993) of 1 June 1993, 851(1993) of 15 July 1993 and 864(1993) of 15 September 1993,

Commending the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative aimed at the earliest resolution of the Angolan crisis through negotiations within the framework of the "Acordos de Paz" and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Taking note of actions taken by both parties, including the lessening of hostilities, but deeply concerned that an effective cease-fire has not yet been established,

Stressing the importance it attaches to UNITA's acceptance without reservations, as requested by the Security Council, of the results of the democratic elections of 30 September 1992 held under United Nations supervision and to their abiding fully by the "Acordos de Paz" and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Deeply concerned also about the continued grave humanitarian situation,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

6. Calls upon both parties to honour the commitments already made by them at the talks in Lusaka, urges them to exercise their maximum restraint and to stop immediately all military actions in order to prevent further suffering on the part of the civilian population of Angola and damage to Angola's economy, and further urges them to agree on the modalities for and establishment of an effective and sustainable cease-fire in accordance with relevant Security Council resolutions and to conclude a peaceful settlement as soon as possible;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council as soon as an effective cease-fire is established and in any case by 1 February 1994 on progress made by the parties in the Lusaka talks, including a report on progress achieved in furthering the peace process, establishing an effective cease-fire, and implementing relevant Security Council resolutions and the "Acordos de Paz";

8. Takes note of the steps taken by the Secretary-General to initiate contingency planning for the possible augmentation of the existing components of UNAVEM II for deployment in the event of significant progress in the peace process, and requests him to inform the Council periodically in this regard;

9. Reiterates its readiness, in the event of the achievement of an effective and sustainable cease-fire, to consider promptly any recommendations by the Secretary-General on the basis of that contingency planning;

10. Reaffirms further the need for unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance to all civilian populations in need;

11. Welcomes also the actions taken by the Secretary-General to implement the emergency humanitarian assistance plan;

12. Commends those Member States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations that have already contributed to the relief efforts and strongly appeals to all Member States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide rapidly further assistance to Angola to meet the growing humanitarian needs;

13. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993);

14. Decides in view of the direct negotiations under way between the parties not to impose at present the additional measures against UNITA contained in paragraph 26 of resolution 864(1993), but reiterates its readiness to consider at any time further steps, in the light, inter alia, of a recommendation of the Secretary-General, either to impose such additional measures or to review those in effect;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 890(1993)

15 December 1993 Meeting 3323 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26877).

Further developments (December). In a note to the Security Council⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General listed replies received from 18 Member States, as at 17 December, concerning their implementation of measures imposed against UNITA in response to resolution 864(1993).

The Lusaka talks, interrupted on 13 December to investigate an alleged attempt on Dr. Savimbi's life, resumed on 21 December and were suspended on 23 December until 5 January 1994. The military situation in December was marked by an intensification of hostilities and military preparations. At the same time, significant progress was made with regard to access to areas of extreme need, as both sides agreed to increased use of two land corridors and to the opening of an airport for humanitarian air operations.

Financing of UNAVEM II

On 19 March, the Assembly's Fifth Committee, on a proposal of its Chairman and in view of the changes in the operational plan of UNAVEM II and the need to revise the Secretary-General's December 1992 report on its financing⁽²⁹⁾ recommended that, as an ad hoc measure to provide for the Mission's continued maintenance, the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to $3.5 million gross ($3.4 million net) per month for the period 1 March to 30 April, subject to the concurrence of ACABQ. That amount was to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in resolution 47/224 A on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique. The Committee further recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to review current procedures for the planning of peace-keeping operations to make them more cost-effective.

The Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendations in decision 47/450 B of 8 April 1993.

In a March 1993 report on the financing of UNAVEM II,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General said outstanding assessments due from Member States for the period since the Mission's inception up to 28 February 1993 totalled $33,160,200. An additional appropriation of $1,260,400 was required for the period from 1 January to 31 October 1992, while the unencumbered balance for the period from 1 November 1992 to 28 February 1993 amounted to $3,804,100 gross ($3,491,900 net). The cost from 1 March to 30 April was estimated at $5,322,500 gross ($5,124,300 net), with a total of $25,516,800 gross ($24,590,000 net) for the period from 1 November 1992 to 30 April 1993. That amount reflected a net additional requirement of $1,632,400 for that period. In view of an operating deficit of $26,476,300 in the Mission's special account and of $15.9 million loaned to it from the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund, the Secretary-General recommended retaining the unencumbered balance in the account pending receipt of outstanding assessed contributions. He further set out financial requirements for UNAVEM II operations up to and after 30 April. Annexed to the report was supplementary information on cost estimates and proposed staffing requirements.

In April,⁽³¹⁾ ACABQ, concurred with the Secretary-General's proposals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

In September, the General Assembly adopted decision 47/450 C without vote.

At its 110th plenary meeting, on 14 September 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided:

(b) To appropriate the amount of 1,518,400 dollars gross (1,632,400 dollars net) for the maintenance of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission for the period from 1 March to 30 April 1993, and that there shall be set off against the apportionment thereof among Member States, in accordance with the scheme set out in its resolution 47/224 A of 16 March 1993, their respective share in an equal amount from the total unencumbered balance of appropriations for the prior periods;

(c) To appropriate the amount of 9,830,950 dollars gross (9,466,050 dollars net), consisting of:

(i) The amount of 5,948,650 dollars gross (5,723,950 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for the period from 1 May to 15 July 1993;

(ii) The amount of 3,882,300 dollars gross (3,742,100 dollars net) requested by the Secretary-General for the period from 16 July to 15 September 1993;

(d) To apportion the amount indicated in subparagraph (c) above among Member States in accordance with paragraphs 12 and 15 of its resolution 47/210 B of 14 September 1993;

(e) To authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to the amount of 1,942,000 dollars gross (1,871,900 dollars net) per month for the continued maintenance of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission after 15 September 1993 for a period of three months, subject to the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, should the Security Council decide to extend the mandate of the Verification Mission beyond 15 September 1993. As an ad hoc arrangement, the amount decided upon by the Advisory Committee shall be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in General Assembly resolution 47/210 B.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 72-74; plenary 110.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In a December report⁽³²⁾ to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General noted that ACABQ had, on 21 October, concurred in an amount not exceeding $5.5 million gross for the three-month period ending 15 December. He estimated the cost of maintaining UNAVEM II beyond that date at $22,560,000 gross ($21,338,400 net) for the next 12-month period, at a monthly rate of $1,880,000 gross ($1,778,200 net), including the amount of $8,460,000 gross ($8,001,900 net) required for the period from 16 December to 30 April 1994.

In December ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly authorize further commitment up to $6.8 million gross (6.4 million net) for the period 16 December to 31 March 1994.⁽³³⁾

As at 30 November, outstanding assessed contributions due from Member States totalled $29,378,680, with an operating deficit in the Mission's special account running at $27,305,600. The unencumbered balance for the period from 1 March to 15 September 1993 amounted to $90,100 gross ($126,100 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted decision 48/465.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 6.8 million United States dollars gross (6.4 million dollars net) for the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II for the period from 16 December 1993 to 31 March 1994;

Burundi

On 10 July 1993, Melchior Ndadaye was installed as President of Burundi, following the 1 June Presidential elections in that country, and a National Assembly set up as a result of legislative elections of 29 June, effectively indicating the beginning of Burundi's transition to democracy. On 22 October⁽³⁴⁾ however, the Permanent Representative of Burundi to the United Nations informed the Security Council of a military coup d'etat that occurred on the night of 20-21 October resulting in the assassination of the President and a number of other political leaders. In a statement issued on 23 October at Addis Ababa, the Secretary-General condemned the coup d'etat and expressed concern over the situation in Burundi. He asked Under-Secretary-General James O. C. Jonah to travel there immediately as his Special Envoy to facilitate the return of the country to constitutional rule.

By a letter of 25 October⁽³⁵⁾ Burundi requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation. Similar requests were received from Cape Verde, Djibouti and Morocco⁽³⁶⁾ and from Zimbabwe⁽³⁷⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Council considered the situation in Burundi on 25 October. Burundi, Egypt, Mali and Zimbabwe were invited to participate in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, following consultations, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement⁽³⁸⁾

Meeting number. SC 3297.

"The Security Council expresses its grave concern at and condemnation of the military coup of 21 October 1993 against the democratically elected Government of Burundi.

"The Security Council deeply regrets and strongly condemns the acts of violence and the loss of life which have been caused by the perpetrators of the military coup. It demands that they desist forthwith from taking any action which would exacerbate tension and plunge the country into more violence and bloodshed, which could have serious implications for peace and stability in the region.

"The Security Council demands that the perpetrators of the military coup cease all acts of violence, reveal the whereabouts and fate of Government officials, release all prisoners, return to their barracks and put an immediate end to their illegal act, with a view to the immediate reinstitution of democracy and constitutional rule in Burundi.

"The Security Council pays tribute to the deceased President of Burundi, His Excellency Mr. Melchior Ndadaye, and members of his Government for their supreme sacrifice for democracy. Those responsible for their violent deaths and other acts of violence should be brought to justice.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to monitor and follow closely the situation in Burundi, in close association with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), and report to the Security Council thereon urgently. In this context, it takes note with appreciation of the dispatch by the Secretary-General of a Special Envoy to Burundi.

"The Council will remain seized of the matter."

Further developments (October/November).

The Special Envoy arrived in Bujumbura, Burundi, on 27 October and reported that the military had returned to barracks while surviving members of the Government had taken refuge in the French Embassy compound; neither side was exercising authority in the country. He held three meetings with Prime Minister Sylvie Kinigi and several members of the Government, who maintained that the coup d'etat was continuing and called for the complete disbandment of the army and the deployment of a large international force. At a subsequent meeting with the army command, the Special Envoy was informed that the army assumed no responsibility for governing the country and was ready to respond to decisions of the Government through the Minister of Defence. The commander asserted that the coup had been carried out by a small military group and that the majority of the army remained loyal to the Government. It rejected the deployment of an outside force. Both sides supported the proposal to appoint a Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi. The Special Envoy also met with members of the opposition, representatives of the African Group (Egypt, Rwanda and Zaire), the European Community and the United States, all of whom urged him to ensure that the Government assumed its authority. On 29 October, the Government re-established its authority, but continued to operate from the French Embassy compound. The Special Envoy briefed the Security Council on 1 November on the situation in Burundi.

By a 27 October letter⁽³⁹⁾ Burundi requested the General Assembly to include an item on the situation in Burundi in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and to consider it in plenary. The explanatory memorandum accompanying the letter stated that the continuing violence had resulted in some 300,000 refugees and displaced persons and was bringing the country to the verge of civil war, and that the Assembly should request the intervention of the international community to restore the functioning of democratic institutions and provide emergency humanitarian assistance.

A Regional Summit on the situation in Burundi (Kigali, Rwanda, 28 October), convened by the President of Rwanda, requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of OAU, to establish an international force for confidence-building and stabilization of the situation, to be composed essentially of troops from African countries chosen in consultation with the Government of Burundi. The Summit urged the Burundi military personnel to return to their barracks and appealed to the international community to provide assistance to the proposed international force as well as emergency assistance to the Burundi refugees and displaced persons. The communique issued at the Summit was transmitted to the Security Council⁽⁴⁰⁾ and to the Secretary-General on 1 November⁽⁴¹⁾.

By a letter of 2 November⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General apprised the Security Council of developments in Burundi and announced his intention to hold consultations with the OAU Secretary-General and to appoint a Special Representative for Burundi.

Appointment of the Special Representative.

On 4 November⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint a Special Representative for Burundi. On 16 November⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General announced that Mr. Maxime Zollner, his original appointee, was not available to take up the position and that Ahmedou Ould Abdallah, United Nations Special Coordinator for Africa and the Least Developed Countries, was appointed to that post with immediate effect. On 19 November⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members took note of that information.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

At Burundi's request⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Security Council met on 16 November to consider the situation in that country. Burundi and Rwanda participated in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:⁽⁴⁷⁾

Meeting number. SC 3316.

"The Security Council continues to follow with deep concern the developments in Burundi, which have threatened that country's nascent democracy, and caused widespread violence and bloodshed.

"The Security Council reiterates its condemnation of the abrupt and violent interruption of the democratic process initiated in Burundi and demands the immediate cessation of acts of violence.

"The Security Council warmly commends the Prime Minister and the other members of the Government of Burundi for their courage, and the spirit of reconciliation they have demonstrated at this very difficult moment.

"The Security Council is alarmed at the grave humanitarian consequences of this tragedy, which has resulted in the movement of over 700,000 refugees into neighbouring countries and an increasing number of internally displaced persons throughout the country. The Council appeals to all States, international agencies and other humanitarian organizations to provide prompt humanitarian assistance to the affected civilian population in Burundi and neighbouring countries.

"The Security Council notes with satisfaction the immediate response of the Secretary-General to this situation by the dispatch of a Special Envoy on a good offices mission to facilitate the return of the country to constitutional rule, and welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative for Burundi. The Security Council also welcomes the efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to assist the Government of Burundi in its efforts to restore democratic institutions, rebuild confidence and stabilize the situation.

"The Security Council expresses gratitude to the States which provided shelter in their diplomatic compounds to the members of the Government of Burundi and also expresses its gratitude for the technical assistance provided by those countries to ensure the security and safety of the members of the Government.

"The Security Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue using his good offices through his Special Representative and to consider dispatching in his support as soon as possible a small United Nations team, within existing resources, to Burundi for fact-finding and advice with a view to facilitating the efforts of the Government of Burundi and the OAU.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed as appropriate on the situation and the progress of the United Nations good offices mission. It also requests the Secretary-General to report, at the earliest, with recommendations on the possible establishment of a voluntary fund to assist in the dispatch of an OAU mission as announced by the Secretary-General of the OAU.

"The Council will remain seized of the matter."

Comorian island of Mayotte

The question of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—remained on the General Assembly's agenda in 1993. The Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975, following a referendum in 1974. France, the former colonial Power, had since continued to administer the island of Mayotte.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1993 report⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General described his note verbale to the Comoros and France, drawing their attention to a 1992 General Assembly resolution on the question of Mayotte⁽⁴⁹⁾ and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information. A similar letter was sent to the Secretary-General of OAU. Under the 1992 resolution, the Assembly requested the United Nations Secretary-General to make available his good offices in the search for a negotiated solution to the problem.

France, in its response, pointed out that Mayotte's special status acquired under the December 1976 law proclaiming Mayotte a territorial collectivity of the French Republic did not bar any further development. France was willing to seek conditions for a solution to the problem, on the basis of respect for its domestic laws and international law, and to promote such a just and lasting solution in conformity with its Constitution and the wishes of the peoples concerned. Accordingly, a constructive dialogue was continually taking place at the highest level with the Comoros, as shown by regular visits of the Comorian President to France.

The Comoros said the United Nations recognized the independence of the Comorian State—comprising the four islands of Grande Comore, Anjouan, Moheli and Mayotte—and considered it as a single entity. Notwithstanding resolutions to that effect by the United Nations and other organizations, including OAU and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, France continued to maintain its military and administrative presence on Mayotte, on the grounds that a two-thirds majority of the island's population voted against independence. Under agreements reached between the two parties, however, France had undertaken to respect the Comoros' unity and territorial integrity and to announce the referendum results on a global basis, although considering them island by island.

In 1989, all the country's political organizations reaffirmed unanimously that Mayotte belonged to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros and called for its reincorporation into that nation. Despite international support and solidarity in that matter, the situation hardly evolved, prompting the Comoros to call again on the Secretary-General to continue his mediating role by bringing the two parties together in the search for a just and fair settlement.

The OAU Secretary-General quoted a resolution adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU at its twenty-ninth session (Cairo, 28-30 June 1993), reaffirming the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte and appealing to the French Government to accede to the legitimate claims of the Government of the Comoros. The resolution also appealed to all OAU member States and the international community to reject any consultations regarding the international legal status of the island and condemn any initiative by France to make the Comorian island of Mayotte participate in activities as an entity different from the Federal Islamic Republic of the Comoros. It charged the OAU Secretary-General to resume dialogue with France for a rapid settlement of the Comorian issue and to consider the possibility of convening a tripartite conference on the issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/56 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985, 41/30 of 3 November 1986, 42/17 of 11 November 1987, 43/14 of 26 October 1988, 44/9 of 18 October 1989, 45/11 of 1 November 1990, 46/9 of 16 October 1991 and 47/9 of 27 October 1992, in which, inter alia, it affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced also that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Noting the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind also the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

Eritrea

The right of the Eritrean people to determine their political future by an internationally supervised referendum was formally recognized in July 1991 by the Conference on Peace and Democracy (Addis Ababa). In 1992, at the invitation of the Referendum Commissioner of Eritrea, the General Assembly established the United Nations Observer Mission to Verify the Referendum in Eritrea (UNOVER).⁽⁵⁰⁾

Following his visit to Eritrea on 6 January 1993, the Secretary-General appointed Samir Sanbar as his Special Representative and the Chief of UNOVER, headquartered at Asmara. The Mission also had regional offices at Asmara, Keren and Mendefera. At its maximum strength, UNOVER consisted of 21 international staff and 86 observers, including 57 from 35 countries, deployed in 45 teams in the three regions.

The referendum was held from 23 to 25 April and was observed, in addition to UNOVER, by several organizations such as OAU and the League of Arab States. The results of the referendum showed that the majority of Eritreans (99.8 per cent in a turnout of 98.5 per cent) voted in favour of independence. On 27 April, the Provisional Government declared Eritrea as an independent and sovereign State.

In its application for admission to membership of the United Nations,⁽⁵¹⁾ Eritrea said that the peaceful and democratic resolution of its case through the referendum would consolidate peace and stability and contribute to cooperation and progress in the subregion and thus on the African continent, and underlined Eritrea's active engagement in the peaceful resolution of conflicts in the Horn of Africa.

On 28 May, by resolution 47/230, the General Assembly admitted Eritrea to membership in the United Nations, as recommended by the Security Council in its resolution 828(1993) of 26 May (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

Speaking before the Assembly, the Eritrea representative thanked the Secretary-General and Member States for supporting the referendum and its membership in the Organization, and expressed the hope that the United Nations would play an active role in supporting reconstruction of that country devastated by 30 years of war.

The referendum process and activities of UNOVER were described in the Secretary-General's August report⁽⁵²⁾ to the General Assembly. In a letter dated 23 November,⁽⁵³⁾ the Permanent Mission of Eritrea to the United Nations updated the information contained in the Secretary-General's report. By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Liberia

Efforts of the United Nations and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to end the three-year civil war in Liberia culminated in the signing of the Cotonou Peace Agreement in July 1993, providing for a cease-fire, the cessation of hostilities, disarmament and demobilization of the warring factions, the establishment of a transitional government and the holding of national elections in 1994. The war—whose main protagonists were the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) of Charles Taylor and the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy (ULIMO), led by Alhaji Kromah and inspired by the memory of the former President of Liberia killed in that war—began with the complete breakdown of law and order and civil authority that accompanied the overthrow in 1990 of the regime headed by President Samuel Doe.

Earlier initiatives for a peaceful settlement of the conflict included the creation of an ECOWAS Cease-Fire Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) in 1990 and agreement reached at the fourth Yamoussoukro (Cote d'Ivoire) meeting in October 1991 and known as the Yamoussoukro IV Accord or the Yamoussoukro IV Agreement. The implementation of the 1993 Peace Accord was to be monitored by an expanded ECOMOG and a United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia. Major-General Daniel Opande of Kenya was appointed the Chief Military Observer for UNOMIL.

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In a March report⁽⁵⁴⁾ submitted in response to a 1992 Security Council request,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Secretary-General said that his Special Representative for Liberia visited Benin, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Guinea, Nigeria, Senegal and Sierra Leone as well as Liberia between November 1992 and February 1993 to meet with senior government officials and the parties to the conflict. They emphasized the need for continued support by the international community for the peace efforts of ECOWAS. President Nicephore Soglo of Benin, the current Chairman of ECOWAS, stressed that there was a clear role for the United Nations in monitoring a cease-fire, encampment, disarmament, demobilization and the organization of free and fair elections. In Liberia, the Special Representative held extensive consultations with all parties to the conflict, including NGOs, civic, religious and voluntary associations. The NPFL leader, Charles Taylor, expressed his willingness to agree to a cease-fire and talks with other parties leading to elections as long as the United Nations were fully involved in the process. Questions related to national reconciliation and the organization of elections were also discussed, including the repatriation of refugees and establishment of conditions that would allow for an agreement on a unified administration, freedom of movement, disarmament and encampment as essential factors for free and fair elections.

Meanwhile, the fighting which resumed in October 1992 continued. The country remained partitioned, with the Interim Government of National Unity, headed by President Amos Sawyer, administering the province of Monrovia and its environs, while NPFL controlled 10 counties and ULIMO two. War-related casualties were estimated at 150,000, while Liberian refugees numbered between 600,000 and 700,000, mainly in Cote d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone. The President of the Interim Government, Amos Sawyer, supported the call by ECOWAS for a greater United Nations involvement in the peace process under the Yamoussoukro IV Accord and expressed his readiness for genuine dialogue to expedite a settlement.

The Secretary-General noted that the United Nations emergency relief and humanitarian programmes in Liberia experienced a funding gap of $57 million in priority areas such as food aid, health, water and sanitation, agriculture and assistance to displaced persons and refugees, former combatants and children. He also pointed to the need to initiate steps towards a comprehensive programme for the post-war reconstruction and development in that country (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council expand cooperation between the United Nations and ECOWAS and consider enlarging the scope of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. He expressed his readiness to assist ECOWAS in monitoring the sanctions and in convening a meeting of the Interim Government and the warring factions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March and June)

On 26 March, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Liberia participating without the right to vote under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, and adopted unanimously resolution 813(1993), as orally revised.

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of this resolution as soon as possible;

20. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 813(1993)

26 March 1993 Meeting 3187 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25469), orally revised.

On 9 June, having received an 8 June communication from Liberia⁽⁵⁶⁾ on the massacre of civilians in the Harbel area and following consultations with the Council members, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:⁽⁵⁷⁾

Meeting number. SC 3233.

"The Security Council is shocked and saddened by the senseless killing of innocent civilians which occurred near Harbel, Liberia, on the morning of 6 June 1993. It strongly condemns this massacre of innocent displaced persons, including women and children, which comes at a time when the Secretary-General's Special Representative is working diligently, in furtherance of the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), on the basis of the Yamoussoukro IV Accord, to arrange a meeting of the warring factions in order to bring the three-year civil war to a peaceful end.

"The Security Council urges all parties to the conflict to respect the rights of the civilian population and take all necessary measures to secure their safety.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to commence immediately a thorough and full investigation of the massacre, including any allegations as to the perpetrators whoever they may be, and report to it as soon as possible. It warns that those found responsible for such serious violations of international humanitarian law will be held accountable for such crimes and demands that the leaders of any faction responsible for such acts effectively control their forces and take decisive steps to ensure that such deplorable tragedies do not happen again.

"The Council remains firmly supportive of the efforts of ECOWAS and the Secretary-General to bring peace to Liberia. It urges all Liberian factions and regional leaders to give their full cooperation to current efforts by Special Representative Trevor Gordon-Somers to assist in the implementation of the Yamoussoukro IV Accord calling, inter alia, for a cease-fire, encampment, disarmament and democratic elections."

By a 4 August letter,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint a three-expert Panel of Inquiry to investigate the Harbel massacre.

Communication and report of the Secretary-General (August). In August, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁵⁹⁾ to the Security Council that peace talks between the Interim Government, NPFL and ULIMO were held at Geneva from 10 to 17 July. A final agreement on the framework settlement between the parties to the conflict was signed on 25 July following the ECOWAS Summit meeting (Cotonou, Benin, 22-24 July). The Agreement provided for a cease-fire and the cessation of hostilities on 1 August; ECOMOG and the United Nations Observer Mission to supervise and monitor implementation of the Agreement; establishment of a Joint Cease-fire and Monitoring Committee; and expansion of ECOMOG. It also provided for the structure and mandate of a national transitional government for a seven-month transition period, comprising legislative, executive and judicial branches; modalities for general and presidential elections, including the establishment of an Electoral Commission; as well as modalities for disarmament, demobilization, encampment and peace enforcement, the release of prisoners-of-war, repatriation of refugees, humanitarian assistance and general amnesty.

A Memorandum of Understanding was also signed providing for United Nations' assistance in demobilizing soldiers. The Secretary-General announced his intention to dispatch an advance United Nations team of 30 military observers and a technical team to prepare for the establishment of an observer mission. He noted that ECOWAS had requested the United Nations to set up a trust fund to facilitate the implementation of the Agreement and that arrangements were being made for the expansion of humanitarian assistance activities throughout Liberia.

The text of the Cotonou Agreement was communicated to the Security Council on 6 August.⁽⁶⁰⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council met on 10 August to consider the situation in Liberia. Benin, Egypt, Liberia and Nigeria were invited to participate in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 856(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 813(1993) of 26 March 1993,

Considering that the signing of the Peace Agreement constitutes a major achievement and an important contribution to the restoration of peace and security in Liberia and in this region of West Africa, and creates the opportunity to bring an end to the conflict,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 August 1993,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to send a technical team to Liberia to gather and evaluate information relevant to the proposed establishment of a United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL);

3. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on the proposed establishment of UNOMIL, including in particular a detailed estimate of the cost and scope of this operation, a time-frame for its implementation, the projected conclusion of this operation, how to ensure coordination between UNOMIL and the peace-keeping forces of ECOWAS and their respective roles and responsibilities;
4. Calls upon all parties to the conflict to respect and implement the cease-fire provided for in the Peace Agreement and to cooperate fully with the advance mission and ensure the safety of all United Nations personnel and all other peace-keeping and humanitarian personnel within Liberia;

6. Commends ECOWAS for its efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of this matter.

Security Council resolution 856(1993)

10 August 1993 Meeting 3263 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26259).

On 27 August,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council would support the establishment of a United Nations voluntary trust fund for Liberia to finance the implementation of the Cotonou Accord, including deployment of ECOMOG peace-keeping troops, demobilization of combatants, elections and humanitarian assistance.

Report of the Secretary-General (September). In a September report,⁽⁶²⁾ the Secretary-General proposed the structure and concept of operations of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL), paying particular attention to the division of functions between UNOMIL and ECOMOG. He also described preparations for its deployment and recommended that the Security Council approve the establishment and deployment of UNOMIL as set out in the report. The Secretary-General reported that members of the Council of State of the Liberia National Transitional Government were selected on 17 August and that the newly established Joint Cease-fire Monitoring Committee, which was to be replaced by a Violations Committee upon the full deployment of ECOMOG and UNOMIL, had addressed eight alleged violations of the cease-fire to date. The report further outlined arrangements for humanitarian and development assistance, pointing in particular to the related problem of land mines, and discussed modalities for the United Nations verification of the elections process.

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations would work with the Transitional Government, other agencies and organizations and NGOs to develop a comprehensive cantonment, disarmament and demobilization programme. He urged Member States to support the peace process by contributing to its trust fund for Liberia.

Staffing requirements for the Mission were provided in an addendum to the report. The total cost for a seven-month period was estimated at $42.6 million gross, to be borne by Member States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 22 September, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Liberia participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, and adopted unanimously resolution 866(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 813(1993) of 26 March 1993 and 856(1993) of 10 August 1993,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 September 1993 on the proposed establishment of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL),

Noting that the Peace Agreement signed by the three Liberian parties in Cotonou on 25 July 1993 calls on the United Nations and the Military Observer Group (ECOMOG) of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to assist in the implementation of the Agreement,

Emphasizing as noted in the Secretary-General's report of 4 August 1993, that the Peace Agreement assigns ECOMOG the primary responsibility of supervising the implementation of the military provisions of the Agreement and envisages that the United Nations role shall be to monitor and verify this process,

Noting that this would be the first peace-keeping mission undertaken by the United Nations in cooperation with a peace-keeping mission already set up by another organization, in this case ECOWAS,

Recognizing that United Nations involvement would contribute significantly to the effective implementation of the Peace Agreement and would serve to underline the international community's commitment to conflict resolution in Liberia,

Commending ECOWAS for its continuing efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia,

Commending also the efforts of the Organization of African Unity in support of the peace process in Liberia,

Stressing the importance of full cooperation and close coordination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG in the implementation of their respective mandates,

Taking note of the deployment of an advance team of United Nations military observers to Liberia as authorized under resolution 856(1993),

Welcoming the establishment of the Joint Cease-fire Monitoring Committee (JCMC) composed of the three Liberian parties, ECOMOG and the United Nations,

Welcoming also the formation in Cotonou on 27 August 1993 of the five-member Council of States representing all three Liberian parties, which, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, shall be installed concomitantly with the commencement of the disarmament process and shall be responsible for the day-to-day operation of the transitional government,

Noting that the Peace Agreement calls for legislative and presidential elections to take place approximately seven months after the signing of the Peace Agreement,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 September 1993 on the proposed establishment of UNOMIL;

2. Decides to establish UNOMIL under its authority and under the direction of the Secretary-General through his Special Representative for a period of seven months, subject to the proviso that it will continue beyond 16 December 1993 only upon a review by the Council based on a report from the Secretary-General on whether or not substantive progress has been made towards the implementation of the Peace Agreement and other measures aimed at establishing a lasting peace;

3. Decides that UNOMIL shall comprise military observers as well as medical, engineering, communications, transportation and electoral components, in the numbers indicated in the Secretary-General's report, together with minimal staff necessary to support it, and shall have the following mandate:

(a) To receive and investigate all reports on alleged incidents of violations of the cease-fire agreement and, if the violation cannot be corrected, to report its findings to the Violations Committee established pursuant to the Peace Agreement and to the Secretary-General;

(b) To monitor compliance with other elements of the Peace Agreement, including at points on Liberia's borders with Sierra Leone and other neighbouring countries, and to verify its impartial application, and in particular to assist in the monitoring of compliance with the embargo on delivery of arms and military equipment to Liberia and the cantonment, disarmament and demobilization of combatants;

(c) To observe and verify the election process, including the legislative and presidential elections to be held in accordance with the provisions of the Peace Agreement;

(d) To assist, as appropriate, in the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities in the field in conjunction with the existing United Nations humanitarian relief operation;

(e) To develop a plan and assess financial requirements for the demobilization of combatants;

(f) To report on any major violations of international humanitarian law to the Secretary-General;

(g) To train ECOMOG engineers in mine clearance and, in cooperation with ECOMOG, coordinate the identification of mines and assist in the clearance of mines and unexploded bombs;

(h) Without participation in enforcement operations, to coordinate with ECOMOG in the discharge of ECOMOG's separate responsibilities both formally, through the Violations Committee, and informally;

4. Welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to conclude with the Chairman of ECOWAS an agreement defining, before deployment of UNOMIL, the roles and responsibilities of UNOMIL and ECOWAS in the implementation of the Peace Agreement, in accordance with the concept of operations outlined in Chapter IV of the Secretary-General's report, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed on the progress and outcome of the negotiations leading thereto;

5. Encourages African States to provide the additional troops requested from them by ECOWAS for ECOMOG;

6. Welcomes the steps taken by the Secretary-General to establish a Trust Fund, which would facilitate the sending of reinforcements by African States to ECOMOG, assist in supporting troops of participating ECOMOG countries and also assist in mine-clearing, humanitarian and development activities, as well as the electoral process, and calls on Member States to support the peace process in Liberia by contributing to the Trust Fund;

7. Urges the Liberian parties to commence the encampment, disarmament and demobilization process without delay;

8. Welcomes the decision to establish the transitional government and urges also the Liberian parties to begin the exercise of that government's responsibilities concomitantly with the process described in paragraph 7 above and consistent with the Peace Agreement;

9. Calls on the transitional government to conclude expeditiously, and no later than 60 days after its installation, a Status of Mission Agreement with the United Nations to facilitate the full deployment of UNOMIL;

10. Urges the Liberian parties to finalize the composition of the Elections Commission so that it can promptly undertake the necessary preparations for legislative and presidential elections by March 1994, at the latest, in accordance with the timetable foreseen in the Peace Agreement;

11. Calls on the Liberian parties to cooperate fully in the safe delivery of humanitarian assistance to all parts of the country by the most direct routes, in accordance with the Peace Agreement;

12. Welcomes ECOMOG's stated commitment to ensure the safety of UNOMIL observers and civilian staff and urges the Liberian parties to take all necessary measures to ensure the security and safety of UNOMIL personnel, as well as of the personnel involved in relief operations, and strictly to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit progress reports to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution by 16 December 1993 and by 16 February 1994;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 866(1993)

22 September 1993 Meeting 3281 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26477), orally revised.

On 27 September,⁽⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Major-General Daniel Ishmael Opande of Kenya as the Chief Military Observer of UNOMIL. As stated in a 4 October letter⁽⁶⁴⁾ from the Security Council President, the Council members agreed to the proposed appointment. On the same date,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General proposed that the military elements of UNOMIL be composed of personnel from Austria, Bangladesh, China, Ecuador, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, Jordan, Kenya, Malaysia, Slovakia and Uruguay; subsequently added to that list were the Czech Republic, Hungary and Pakistan⁽⁶⁶⁾ and India.⁽⁶⁷⁾ On 8 October,⁽⁶⁸⁾ 19 November⁽⁶⁹⁾ and 8 December,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Council President communicated to the Secretary-General its members' agreement with those proposals.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In a December report,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Secretary-General said that the Liberian parties had selected the five members of the Council of State and had chosen its chairman and vice-chairman. In addition, 13 out of 17 cabinet posts in the Transitional Government were distributed among the parties and agreement was reached on the composition of the Elections Commission, members of the Supreme Court and the Speaker of the Legislature. UNOMIL's deployment began as scheduled, while the United Nations and ECOWAS agreed on the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIL and ECOMOG. The Joint Cease-fire Monitoring Committee had resolved 59 out of 99 alleged cease-fire violations and was investigating 25 others. Initial steps were taken to commence the disarmament and demobilization campaign, which was conditioned on the expansion of ECOMOG. The Trust Fund for the Implementation of the Cotonou Accord on Liberia, established on 23 September, had received a single pledge of $19.83 million to meet the costs of expansion and a $1 million contribution for humanitarian activities; however, as no pledges had been made for disarmament and demobilization, the immediate needs of that campaign had to be met from the UNOMIL budget.

The report noted that recent efforts to improve coordination of humanitarian activities between the United Nations and NGOs were yielding positive results and that food and other essential assistance were reaching the most vulnerable groups; however, shortfalls remained in the quantities of assistance delivered. At the same time, UNHCR had launched an appeal for funding to facilitate repatriation and held a regional meeting in October to assess requirements for setting up transit and reception centres. Also in October, a joint mission of the United Nations and the International Foundation for an Election System assessed the requirements for holding elections and found that the timetable provided for in the Peace Agreement, although optimistic, was unlikely to be met and that elections could possibly be held by May 1994.

The Secretary-General also stated that reported human rights abuses, particularly recent reports of alleged killings in the Upper Lofa region resulting from ethnic animosities, prompted his Special Representative to request a Human Rights Officer for his team in Monrovia.

As stated in a 16 December letter⁽⁷²⁾ of the Security Council President, the Council members took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested a further report on the situation in Liberia by 16 February 1994. They also urged Member States to contribute generously to the Trust Fund.

Financing of UNOMIL

In November,⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that ACABQ had, on 20 September, authorized him to enter into commitments not exceeding $3.3 million under a 1991 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses,⁽⁷⁴⁾ to finance UNOMIL activities for a period of three months, including $164,700 for the technical survey mission to Liberia. The total cost of maintaining UNOMIL for the period from 22 September 1993 to 21 April 1994 was estimated at $43,509,200 gross ($42,603,800 net), while the cost estimate for its liquidation, projected to be completed by 30 June 1994, amounted to $3,512,200 gross ($3,347,800 net). Subsequently, estimates for the seven-month period were revised down to $40,318,000 gross ($39,560,800 net).⁽³²⁾

In December,⁽⁷⁵⁾ ACABQ recommended that the Assembly authorize a further commitment and assessment of that amount.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/478 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, and in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into total commitments up to the amount of 40,318,000 United States dollars gross (39,560,800 dollars net), inclusive of the amount authorized by the Advisory Committee in accordance with Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991, for the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia for the period from 22 September 1993 to 21 April 1994, and requested him to establish a special account for the Observer Mission;

(b) Decided to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount indicated in subparagraph (a) above among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989,

45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

(c) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 757,200 dollars for the period from 22 September 1993 to 21 April 1994.

Mozambique

During 1993, United Nations activities in Mozambique were geared towards the implementation of the General Peace Agreement, signed in October 1992⁽⁷⁶⁾ between the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO) and monitored by the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ), established in December 1992.⁽⁷⁷⁾ Despite delays and difficulties, progress was made in implementing the Peace Agreement and action taken to address the humanitarian situation. In November, the Security Council renewed the mandate of ONUMOZ for a further six months.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In an April report⁽⁷⁸⁾ to the Security Council, the Secretary-General said that RENAMO considered a substantial United Nations military presence in Mozambique as a condition for the cantonment and demobilization of its troops, thus giving the ONUMOZ role a broader interpretation than originally intended, whereas the Government asked for a wider deployment of ONUMOZ forces so that the movements of RENAMO and government troops could be monitored equally. By mid-March, following the delayed approval by both parties of the initial list of troop-contributing countries, some 154 military observers from 12 States were deployed at three regional headquarters (Nampula, Beira and Matola) and in Maputo, the capital. Inspections of the deployment areas and assessments of resource requirements were completed also in March. The bulk of forces were expected to arrive in April, and full deployment completed in May. At the same time, the absence of a status-of-forces agreement restricted the Operation's freedom of movement and, along with certain administrative and logistical problems, affected its effectiveness.

Little progress was made in implementing the provisions of the General Peace Agreement dealing with the separation and demobilization of forces, due to the failure of the parties to provide ONUMOZ with necessary information, the unsuitability of the designated troop assembly locations and the linking by RENAMO of the demobilization of its troops to the deployment of United Nations forces. A United Nations technical unit was set up to assist with the demobilization programme, while WFP and UNICEF provided food and other assistance.

The Secretary-General further described activities of the four commissions established in November 1992 under the General Peace Agreement. He noted that the Supervisory and Monitoring Commission had adopted rules governing the work of the entire monitoring machinery, while its subsidiary Cease-fire Commission set up a plan to clear an estimated 2 million mines, including the creation of a mine-clearing school. Two other subsidiary bodies—the Reintegration Commission and the Joint Commission for the Formation of the Mozambican Defence Force—were at the initial stage of their work. At the same time, the establishment of national commissions stipulated in the Agreement—the National Police Affairs Commission, the National Information Commission, the National Elections Commission and the National Commission for Administrative Questions—was delayed. As a result, the timetable for holding the elections in October 1993 was seriously in question.

The United Nations Office for Humanitarian Assistance Coordination, integrated with ONUMOZ, was preparing a consolidated humanitarian assistance programme for 1993-1994, while the Secretariat's Department of Humanitarian Affairs set up a United Nations Trust Fund for Humanitarian Assistance to Mozambique. There were an estimated 3 million to 4 million displaced persons within Mozambique and some 1.5 million refugees receiving assistance in neighbouring countries.

The Special Representative for Mozambique, appointed in 1992,⁽⁷⁹⁾ maintained regular contacts with both parties to the Agreement. On 31 March, the Secretary-General reviewed in detail various aspects of the peace process at his meeting with the Foreign Minister. He noted the difficulties in implementing the peace process and underlined the importance of completing all arrangements for the successful implementation of the Agreement without further delay. He stated that although a draft electoral law had been circulated, it was unlikely that the elections could be held in October as scheduled and he undertook to continue discussions on new dates. He also indicated that President Joaquim Chissano and Alfonso Dhlakama, the President of RENAMO, had agreed to meet to discuss outstanding problems.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Security Council met on 14 April to consider the Secretary-General's report. Mozambique and Portugal were invited to participate in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council adopted unanimously resolution 818(1993).

12. Strongly urges both sides to guarantee ONUMOZ's freedom of movement and verification capabilities pursuant to the commitments made under the General Peace Agreement;

13. Appreciates the assistance and pledges made by Member States in support of the peace process, and encourages the donor community to provide appropriate and prompt assistance for the implementation of major aspects of the Agreement;

Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of developments regarding the full implementation of the provisions of the General Peace Agreement, including on progress in the consultations with the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO concerning the finalization of the precise timetable for separation, concentration and demobilization of forces, as well as for the elections, and to submit a further report to the Council by 30 June 1993;

15. Expresses its confidence in the Secretary-General's Special Representative and its appreciation for the work he has done to date in coordinating all aspects of the Agreement;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 818(1993)

14 April 1993 Meeting 3198 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25591), orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In June,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the main military components of ONUMOZ, with a total strength of some 6,100 personnel, had been fully deployed by the beginning of May and that the withdrawal of foreign troops had been completed. He indicated the need to bring the strength of the Operation's military component to the levels originally envisaged, and regretted that the deadlines for the cantonment of government and RENAMO troops had not been met. In the meantime, the Cease-fire Commission approved 13 areas for the assembly of troops, out of 49 envisaged in the Agreement, 6 of which (3 each for the Government and RENAMO) were declared ready by ONUMOZ. Since mid-April, ONUMOZ had also been involved in registering and resettling some 16,000 government soldiers along with their dependants, demobilized prior to the Agreement. ONUMOZ activities were facilitated by the status-of-forces agreement between the Government and the United Nations, signed in New York on 14 May.

The work of the monitoring commissions was temporarily suspended when RENAMO withdrew its delegation, but was resumed at the end of May. The Joint Commission for the Formation of the Mozambican Defence Force, however, was expected to start work in July. In addition, the President of Mozambique appointed members of the National Information Commission and Police Affairs Commission.

A new timetable for implementing the General Peace Agreement was proposed to the parties; it called for demobilization to begin on 1 July, the training of soldiers for and the formation of the new Mozambican Defence Force (FADM) by 1 September, approval of the electoral law by the end of July and the holding of elections in September/October 1994.

The report said that $19 million was available for the demining of priority roads, a nationwide mine survey, establishment of a mine-clearing training facility and a mine-awareness programme. A consolidated humanitarian assistance programme for 1993-1994 was presented to a donors' meeting held at Maputo on 8 and 9 June. The programme projected the resettlement of some 4 million displaced persons, 1.5 million refugees and 370,000 demobilized soldiers and their dependants. Its funding requirement from May 1993 to April 1994 was estimated at $559.6 million, of which $450 million had been pledged in December 1992 and an additional $70 million at the June meeting. On 12 June, UNHCR organized the start of the voluntary return of some 250,000 Mozambican refugees from Zimbabwe.

To accelerate the peace process, the Secretary-General said that he was ready to accede, with the consent of the Security Council, to the request that ONUMOZ assume chairmanship of the Joint Commission for the Formation of FADM.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 9 July, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Mozambique participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The Council adopted unanimously resolution 850(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 782(1992) of 13 October 1992, 797(1992) of 16 December 1992 and 818(1993) of 14 April 1993,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 June 1993,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique and to the timely fulfilment by all parties in good faith of obligations contained therein,

Seriously concerned that the delays in the implementation of major aspects of the General Peace Agreement have not been entirely overcome,

Encouraged by the efforts of the Government of Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO) to maintain the cease-fire,

Noting with satisfaction the signature of the Status-of-Forces Agreement between the Government of Mozambique and the United Nations, and the full deployment of all the main infantry battalions of ONUMOZ,

Welcomes the progress made to date in the implementation of the provisions of the General Peace Agreement but stresses its concern that the delays previously reported to the Security Council have not been entirely overcome, in particular with respect to the assembly and demobilization of forces, the formation of the new unified armed forces, and finalizing the arrangements for the elections;

4. Underlines in this respect the importance it attaches to the holding of the elections no later than October 1994;

5. Welcomes the agreement of the parties to the convening of a meeting between the President of the Republic of Mozambique and the President of RENAMO in Maputo on 17 July 1993 to address major issues pertaining to the implementation of the General Peace Agreement;

6. Invites the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in their efforts to promote a resolution of these difficulties and to agree without delay to the revised timetable for the implementation of the provisions of the General Peace Agreement on the basis of the general parameters described in paragraphs 21-23 of the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Urges the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO to begin, as a matter of urgency, the assembly and demobilization of their forces without waiting for all assembly areas to become operational;

8. Further urges RENAMO to dispatch without further delay its military personnel to the military centre in Nyanga (Zimbabwe) for training, together with military personnel of the Government of Mozambique, as the first elements of the new Mozambican Defence Force;

9. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General that ONUMOZ should chair the Joint Commission for the Formation of the Mozambican Defence Force, on the strict understanding that this would not entail any obligation on the part of the United Nations for training or establishing the new armed forces, and encourages RENAMO to participate fully in the work of the Commission;

10. Stresses the importance of the early establishment of the Commission of State Administration, and the application throughout the country of the provisions of the General Peace Agreement concerning public administration;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 850(1993)

9 July 1993 Meeting 3253 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26055), orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (August/September). In August,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported that progress continued towards the full deployment of ONUMOZ military units, whose total strength stood at 6,004 at the end of the month, while the number of military observers was at 303 of the authorized 354. Regarding the assembly of troops, the Cease-fire Commission approved 34 assembly areas (26 for the Government and 8 for RENAMO), and military observers were deployed in 18 of them. However, RENAMO refused to begin demobilization of its troops until the question of administrative control over RENAMO-held areas was resolved.

Following the first formal meeting of the Joint Commission for the Formation of FADM on 22 July, at which assistance programmes offered by France, Portugal and the United Kingdom were approved, 100 officers (50 from each party) were sent to the training facility at Nyanga, Zimbabwe, and an additional 440 officers were expected to be dispatched at the beginning of September. On 13 August, the Joint Commission approved the timetable for the formation of FADM, the structure of its high command and the rules and criteria for the instructors to be trained at Nyanga.

The multi-party consultative conference on the draft electoral law resumed on 2 August. However, those talks broke down due to disagreement on the composition of the National Electoral Commission. Other developments included the establishment of the National Commission for State Administration; approval by the Commission for Reintegration of key programmes for demobilized soldiers in the areas of training and labour-intensive employment, and an information programme for soldiers in the assembly areas. However, agreement was still not reached on the revised timetable for implementation of the Peace Agreement, calling for the beginning of the demobilization of troops in October.

The report indicated continued deliveries of food to many regions, including RENAMO areas, and the expansion of humanitarian assistance to include health, water, agricultural inputs and education. The number of returnees to Mozambique stood at some 326,000, and an agreement was signed with Swaziland to begin the repatriation of some 24,000 refugees.

In a September addendum to his report,⁽⁸²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council that direct talks between President Chissano and Mr. Dhlakama of RENAMO, begun at Maputo on 23 August, had resulted in the signing of a final document on 3 September,⁽⁸³⁾ containing agreements on territorial administration and the national police. They agreed to integrate all areas under RENAMO control into the State administration and to request the United Nations to monitor all police activities as well as the rights and liberties of citizens, and to provide technical support to the Police Commission. The Government also indicated that it would seek international support in reorganizing its Rapid Intervention Police. Among other issues discussed were the impartiality of the press and economic assistance to RENAMO.

The Secretary-General announced his intention to dispatch an expert team to Mozambique to assess requirements for the ONUMOZ police contingent and, pending the team's findings, to begin preparations for the deployment of the 128 police observers authorized by the Council in December 1992.⁽⁷⁷⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September and October)

Noting also with satisfaction the full deployment of the military component of ONUMOZ, and the progress made in the establishment by ONUMOZ of assembly areas,

Stressing the unacceptability of attempts to attach conditions to the peace process, in particular to the assembly and demobilization of troops, or to gain more time or further concessions, bique in quickly agreeing on an election law, which should include provision for an effective national election commission;

9. Calls on the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO to make operational without further delay the National Commission for Administration, the National Information Commission and the Police Affairs Commission;

10. Commends the agreements reached in the Maputo talks between the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO on the reintegration into the State administration of all areas now under the control of RENAMO as well as on the request for monitoring by the United Nations of all police activities in Mozambique and on undertaking additional tasks, as set out in document S/26385/Add.1;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to examine expeditiously the proposal by the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO for United Nations monitoring of police activities in the country, as set out in document S/26385/Add.1, and welcomes his intention to send a survey team of experts in connection with the proposed United Nations police contingent, and to report thereon to the Council;

12. Urges the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO to ensure that the momentum towards implementing the General Peace Agreement in full is maintained so that a just and lasting peace in Mozambique can be established, and to this end encourages the President of Mozambique and the President of RENAMO to continue their direct talks;

Security Council resolution 879(1993)

29 October 1993 Meeting 3300 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26664).

Report of the Secretary-General (November). In November,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported that he had visited Mozambique from 17 to 20 October and met with President Chissano and Mr. Dhlakama, as well as leaders of other political parties and representatives of the international community. During that visit, a number of agreements were reached between the Government and RENAMO, covering, inter alia, the assembly and demobilization of RENAMO and government troops and the simultaneous disarmament of paramilitary forces, militia and irregular troops; the composition of the National Elections Commission and the system and timetable for finalizing the electoral law; the chairmanship of the national commissions for administration, police affairs and information; creation of local bodies to monitor police activities; and guidelines for the Cease-fire Commission related to the movement of troops after signature of the peace agreement. The multi-party conference on the draft electoral law, which had broken down in August, was dissolved on 17 September. Further negotiations failed to resolve the stalemate and the Government declared its intention to finalize the draft law through bilateral consultations. The parties also agreed that the law would be examined by technical multi-party meetings. Further adjustments were made to the timetable for the peace process, with regard to voter registration scheduled for April-June 1994, the electoral campaign in September and elections in October, as well as to the training and formation of FADM, which was to become operational by September 1994.

On 22 October 1993, the Supervisory and Monitoring Commission approved the new dates for the assembly and demobilization of troops, beginning in November 1993 and January 1994, respectively. All troops were to be demobilized by May 1994. There were 36 assembly areas approved by the Cease-fire Commission (26 for the Government and 10 for RENAMO), with military observers deployed in 23 of them.

As for ONUMOZ activities, the Secretary-General confirmed his intention to proceed with the deployment of the initial police contingent and to deploy an infantry unit in Zambezia Province, due to a recent increase in incidents of banditry along the main routes. He also indicated an increased demand for ONUMOZ air transport.

The Joint Commission for the Formation of FADM decided on the staffing table and structure of its High Command and General Staff, as well as on its uniform and rules of military discipline, while the Commission for Reintegration approved two programmes for demobilized soldiers, dealing with assistance in farming and in training. The Cease-fire Commission had reviewed 59 complaints of alleged violations since June, while guidelines governing the movement of troops, prepared by ONUMOZ, were signed by both parties on 23 October.

On 15 October, a tripartite agreement was signed between the respective Governments and UNHCR on repatriation of some 250,000 Mozambican refugees from South Africa. At the same time, some 400,000 refugees and 1.2 million internally displaced persons were estimated to have returned to their home areas. The first pilot project in mine-clearing was expanded with five additional teams, and a second mine-clearing operation was launched. Another project, aimed at training 1,500 deminers, was at an advanced stage of preparation.

The Secretary-General noted that the trust fund to finance RENAMO's participation in administrative structures and to ensure the transformation of RENAMO into a political party had fallen short of the estimated requirements of $10 million. He proposed establishing complementary funding mechanisms for that purpose and indicated that it might also be necessary to set up a separate trust fund for other political parties, following the approval of the electoral law and establishment of the Elections Commission. In conclusion, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of ONUMOZ until October 1994.

An addendum to the report provided cost estimates related to the deployment of 128 police observers and to additional requirements for transport and air operations, amounting to some $6,480,000 for the period from 1 November 1993 to 30 April 1994 and some $1,405,000 per month thereafter.

11. Calls on the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO to build on the progress which has been achieved and to respect fully all the provisions of the General Peace Agreement, in particular those concerning the cease-fire and the movement of troops;

Further developments (November/December). Following the ratification by the Supervisory and Monitoring Commission of a declaration regarding the opening of assembly areas, troop cantonment formally commenced on 30 November and 35 assembly areas were open by 20 December. By the same date, the training of 540 instructors for FADM had been completed at

Composition of ONUMOZ

In January,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Secretary-General sought and received from the Security Council agreement to his proposal that the ONUMOZ military elements be composed of contingents from Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cape Verde, Egypt, Italy, Malaysia, Sweden and Uruguay. Subsequently added to that list were Botswana, Canada, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Spain and Zambia in February;⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Czech Republic, Portugal and the Russian Federation in March;⁽⁸⁷⁾ China and Japan in April;⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Congo and the Netherlands in June;⁽⁸⁹⁾ the United States in August;⁽⁹⁰⁾ and Australia and New Zealand in December.⁽⁹¹⁾

On 10 February,⁽⁹²⁾ the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Major-General Lélío Gonçalves Rodrigues da Silva of Brazil as the Force Commander of ONUMOZ. The Council agreed to that proposal on 12 February.⁽⁹³⁾

Financing of ONUMOZ

Report of the Secretary-General (February).

In February,⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General requested the inclusion of an item on the financing of ONUMOZ in the agenda of the General Assembly's resumed forty-seventh session. Later that month, he submitted a report,⁽⁹⁵⁾ which included information on initial commitments for the Operation, cost estimates from 15 October 1992 to 31 October 1993, the status of voluntary contributions and the financial administration of the Operation. He stated that ACABQ had authorized him to enter into commitments not exceeding $9.5 million, including the pre-implementation costs, to meet the immediate operational requirements of ONUMOZ. He further estimated the total cost of the Operation for the period from 15 October 1992 to 31 October 1993 at $264,090,700 gross ($259,712,000 net).

ACABQ recommendations. ACABQ in February⁽⁹⁶⁾ noted that the previously authorized commitment had been fully obligated and that substantial funds were urgently required to ensure the deployment of military and civilian personnel. It recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess a lump sum amount of $140 million for the period from 15 October 1992 to 30 June 1993. ACABQ requested revised and detailed cost estimates for that period by 1 July. It also recommended that the Secretary-General take urgent measures to make peace-keeping operations more cost-effective.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 16 March, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolutions 47/224 A and B without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique

A

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 782(1992) of 13 October 1992,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 797(1992) of 16 December 1992, by which the Council, inter alia, decided to establish under its authority a United Nations Operation in Mozambique for a period until 31 October 1993,

Recognizing that the costs of the Operation in Mozambique are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Operation in Mozambique, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Operation in Mozambique with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern over the delays in launching and in the submission of the financing proposal for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique;

2. Regrets that the report of the Secretary-General did not provide full and detailed information on the cost estimates of the operation;

3. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Operation in Mozambique in full and on time;

5. Notes that, pursuant to Security Council resolution 797(1992), the Secretary-General is requested to submit a further report to the Council by 31 March 1993;

6. Decides, at this stage to appropriate, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 14 of the report of the Advisory Committee, a lump sum amount of 140 million United States dollars, inclusive of the amount of 9.5 million dollars authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, for the period from 15 October 1992 to 30 June 1993, inclusive, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique in accordance with paragraph 34 of his report;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 140 million dollars for the period from 15 October 1992 to 30 June 1993 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

8. Decides further to establish the contributions of the Czech Republic and Slovakia to the Operation in Mozambique in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-eighth session;

9. Invites the new Member States mentioned in paragraph 8 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit as soon as possible but no later than 1 July 1993 revised and detailed cost estimates for the Operation in Mozambique for the entire mandate period, taking into account any possible adjustments in the operational plan and related decisions of the Security Council, and the financial performance of the Operation in Mozambique during the start-up period;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Operation in Mozambique in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Operation in Mozambique are administered under the authority of his interim Special Representative in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandate, and to include information on the arrangement made in this regard in his report on the financial performance of the Operation in Mozambique;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique".

B

The General Assembly

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure a more effective planning of peace-keeping operations and to undertake an urgent review of the current procedures to enable the proper and timely launching of such missions in a cost-effective and efficient manner, and to report on his efforts to the General Assembly at its current session;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the format, contents and transparency of information contained in the cost estimates for peace-keeping operations, in accordance with the relevant recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as approved by the General Assembly.

In a June report on the financing of ONUMOZ,⁽⁹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on its financial performance up to 30 June 1993 and revised cost estimates for the entire mandate period, as well as for the period from 1 November 1993 to 31 October 1994. He reported that outstanding assessments due from Member States totalled $87,894,122 as at 15 June, while the unencumbered balance for the period from 15 October 1992 to 30 June 1993 amounted to $46,867,300 gross ($47,870,400 net). The Operation's cost from 1 July to 31 October 1993 was estimated at $113,477,700 gross ($111,885,100 net), providing for a total of 354 military observers, 6,625 military contingent personnel, 355 civilian personnel and 506 local staff. The cost estimate for the entire mandate period from 15 October 1992 to 31 October 1993, including the unencumbered balance, was revised down to $206,610,400 gross ($204,014,700 net). The report also provided the monthly cost of maintaining ONUMOZ from 1 November 1993 to 31 October 1994, estimated at $25,823,408 gross ($25,261,600 net).

In July,⁽⁹⁸⁾ ACABQ made a downward revision of the cost estimates from 1 July to 31 October 1993 to $110,810,700 gross ($109,218,100 net) and recommended for that period the amount of $54 million gross to be appropriated and assessed and the commitment authority of $20 million gross per month for the period beyond 31 October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

On 14 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/224 C without vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 797(1992) of 16 December 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Operation in Mozambique for a period until 31 October 1993,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Operation in Mozambique are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Operation in Mozambique, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Operation in Mozambique with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Expressing concern about the deteriorating financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears,

Expressing deep concern about the adverse effect that the deteriorating financial situation has on reimbursement to troop contributors, placing an additional burden on these countries and putting at risk the continuing supply of troops to the Operation in Mozambique and, consequently, the success of the Operation,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the terms of the present resolution;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Operation in Mozambique in full and on time;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to explore all possibilities in order to ensure prompt reimbursement to troop-contributing countries;

4. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique a total amount of 54 million United States dollars gross (52,785,200 dollars net) for the Operation in Mozambique for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1993;

5. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 54 million dollars gross (52,785,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1993 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and Assembly decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

6. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,214,800 dollars for the period from 1 July to 31 October 1993 approved for the Operation in Mozambique;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Operation in Mozambique at a rate not to exceed 20 million dollars gross (19,439,000 dollars net) per month, should the Security Council decide to extend the mandate of the Operation beyond 31 October 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for the period from 1 November 1993 to 28 February 1994, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to submit, no later than 8 February 1994, budget proposals, including revised estimates for the period the Council might have decided to continue the mandate of the Operation beyond 31 October 1993, as well as budget proposals for the subsequent period of six months;

8. Decides to establish the contributions of Andorra, the Czech Republic, Eritrea, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Monaco and Slovakia to the Operation in Mozambique in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for those Member States at its forty-eighth session;

9. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 8 above to make payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

10. Invites voluntary contributions to the Operation in Mozambique in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Operation in Mozambique are administered under the authority of his Special Representative in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandate, and to include information on the arrangements made in this regard in his report on the financing of the Operation.

The situation concerning Rwanda

The armed conflict between the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF), which originally broke out in October 1990, resumed on 8 February 1993 in violation of the Cease-fire Agreement signed in July 1992 at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. In June, the Security Council established the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda to verify that no military assistance reached Rwanda across their common border. In October, the Council established the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda to assist in implementing the peace agreement signed by the parties in August.

Communications (February/March). On 22 February,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ Rwanda informed the Security Council of the resumption of hostilities in the northern part of the country by RPF, composed essentially of Rwandese refugees in Uganda, and requested the deployment of United Nations military observers on both sides of the frontier between the two countries to ensure that no military assistance reached Rwandese territory from Uganda. Uganda made a similar request, also on 22 February.⁽¹⁰¹⁾

On 4 March,⁽¹⁰²⁾ Rwanda requested an immediate meeting of the Security Council to consider ways to end the fighting and ensure the observance of the 1992 Cease-fire Agreement and implementation of declarations of cease-fire, issued by RPF and the Government on 21 and 22 February. It requested that an international force supervise the zone along the front line between the positions occupied prior to the violation of the cease-fire. Also on 4 March,⁽¹⁰³⁾ a similar request for a meeting of the Council was received from France.

A joint communique issued at the end of a high-level meeting between the Government and RPF (Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, 5-7 March) was transmitted to the Council.⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ The two parties agreed on the cessation of hostilities as of 9 March, the resumption of the Arusha peace negotiations on 15 March, the withdrawal of their troops to positions identified by the OAU Neutral Military Observer Group (NMOG) and by the 1992 Cease-fire Agreement, and the withdrawal of foreign troops, to be replaced by an international humanitarian force of the United Nations and OAU. The parties called for increased relief assistance to persons displaced by the conflict and undertook to facilitate the delivery of relief supplies and the return of displaced persons.

Following consultations of the Security Council on 24 February, the Secretary-General sent a goodwill mission to Rwanda and Uganda, which held consultations with the Rwandese Government from 4 to 9 March. An oral report on the mission's activities was presented to the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council met on 12 March to consider the situation concerning Rwanda. Rwanda was invited to participate in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council adopted resolution 812(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the request contained in the letter of the Charge d'affaires a.i. of Rwanda dated 4 March 1993,

Also taking note of the letters of the Permanent Representative of Rwanda and of the Permanent Representative of Uganda dated 22 February 1993 in which the Governments of both these countries called for the deployment of United Nations observers along their common border,

Gravely concerned by the fighting in Rwanda and its consequences regarding international peace and security,

Alarmed by the humanitarian consequences of the latest resumption of the fighting in Rwanda, in particular the increasing number of refugees and displaced persons, and by the threats to the civilian populations,

Stressing the need for a negotiated political solution, in the framework of the agreements signed by the parties in Arusha, in order to put an end to the conflict in Rwanda,

Paying tribute to the efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), in order to promote such a political solution,

Taking note of the statements by the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF) by which the Rwandese armed forces would remain in their current positions, the army of RPF would pull back to the positions it occupied before 7 February 1993 and the buffer zone between the forces would be considered as a neutral demilitarized zone used to monitor the implementation of the cease-fire by an international force,

Welcoming the joint communique issued in Dar es Salaam on 7 March 1993 by the Government of Rwanda and RPF, concerning in particular the modalities of the cease-fire which should be effective on 9 March 1993 and on the situation of displaced persons,

Welcoming the decision of the Secretary-General to send a goodwill mission to the region and having heard a first oral report on the mission,

Determined that the United Nations, in consultation with OAU, and in support of its ongoing efforts, should consider how a United Nations contribution might assist the process towards a political settlement in Rwanda, in particular by preventing the resumption of fighting and by monitoring the cease-fire,

1. Calls upon the Government of Rwanda and RPF to respect the cease-fire which took effect on 9 March 1993, to allow the delivery of humanitarian supplies and the return of displaced persons, to fulfil the obligations they have accepted in the agreements they have signed and to implement the commitments they have undertaken in their above-mentioned statements and joint communique;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to examine in consultation with OAU the contribution that the United Nations, in support of OAU's efforts, could bring to strengthen the peace process in Rwanda, in particular through the possible establishment of an international force under the aegis of OAU and the United Nations, entrusted inter alia with the protection of, and humanitarian assistance to, the civilian population and the support of the OAU force for the monitoring of the cease-fire, and to report most urgently on the matter;

3. Also invites the Secretary-General to examine the request by Rwanda and Uganda for the deployment of observers at the border between these two countries;

4. Expresses its readiness to examine without delay the recommendations that the Secretary-General could submit in this regard;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to coordinate closely his efforts with those of OAU;

6. Calls upon the Government of Rwanda and RPF to cooperate fully with the efforts of the United Nations and OAU;

7. Urges the Government of Rwanda and RPF to resume the negotiations on 15 March 1993 as agreed, in order to resolve the pending questions with a view to signing a peace agreement at the beginning of April 1993 at the latest;

8. Urges both parties strictly to respect the rules of international humanitarian law;

9. Urges all States to refrain from any action that could increase the tension in Rwanda and jeopardize respect for the cease-fire;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 812(1993)

12 March 1993 Meeting 3183 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25400).

Communications (April-June). On 8 April,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to strengthen the goodwill mission, which had visited Ethiopia, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania from 4 to 19 March, by adding three military advisers. The Council welcomed that decision on 13 April.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾

On 18 May,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ Uganda reiterated its agreement with the deployment of a monitoring team on its territory, but expected the Security Council to reflect an earlier agreement that a neutral observer or peace-keeping force would be deployed in the buffer zone between the conflicting forces inside Rwanda. On 14 June,⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ Rwanda communicated to the Council a joint request of the Government and RPF for the deployment, following the signing of a peace agreement between the parties, of a neutral international force in that country to assist in its implementation.

Interim report of the Secretary-General (May). In May,⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Council that peace talks between the parties had resumed at Arusha on 16 March, with the United Republic of Tanzania acting as facilitator. The negotiations focused on the composition and size of the new army, arrangements related to security services, demobilization, international assistance and the establishment of an international neutral force. Discussions also centred on amendments to the Constitution, the duration of the transitional period and questions relating to refugees and displaced persons.

The report noted that the United Nations had assisted OAU in preparing a funding proposal for the expansion of NMOG. It also outlined the findings of the technical mission that visited Rwanda and Uganda from 2 to 6 April to assess the requirements for the deployment of a United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda (UNOMUR). The Secretary-General described the structure, concept of operations, phases of deployment and staffing requirements of UNOMUR. He recommended that the Security Council authorize the establishment of the Mission on the Uganda side of the border for an initial period of up to six months. The total cost for that period was estimated at $8,529,000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 22 June, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Rwanda participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the provisional rules of procedure. It adopted resolution 846(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 812(1993) of 12 March 1993,

Taking note of the interim report of the Secretary-General dated 20 May 1993,

Also taking note of the requests of the Governments of Rwanda and Uganda for the deployment of United Nations observers along their common border as a temporary confidence-building measure,

Emphasizing the need to prevent the resumption of fighting in Rwanda that could have adverse consequences on the situation in Rwanda and on international peace and security,

Stressing the need for a negotiated political solution, in the framework of the agreements to be signed by the parties in Arusha, in order to put an end to the conflict in Rwanda,

Paying tribute to the efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania to promote such a political solution,

Taking note of the joint request of the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF) concerning the establishment of a neutral international force in Rwanda,

Stressing the importance of the ongoing negotiations in Arusha between the Government of Rwanda and RPF, and expressing its readiness to consider assistance to OAU in the implementation of the agreements as soon as they are signed,

1. Welcomes with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Decides to establish the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda (UNOMUR) that will be deployed on the Ugandan side of the border, for an initial period of six months, as set out in the report of the Secretary-General, and subject to review every six months;

3. Decides that UNOMUR shall monitor the Uganda/Rwanda border to verify that no military assistance reaches Rwanda, focus being put primarily in this regard on transit or transport, by roads or tracks which could accommodate vehicles, of lethal weapons and ammunition across the border, as well as any other material which could be of military use;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to conclude with the Government of Uganda, before the full deployment of UNOMUR, a status of mission agreement including the safety, cooperation and support the Government of Uganda will provide to UNOMUR;

5. Approves the dispatching of an advance party within fifteen days of the adoption of this resolution or as soon as possible after the conclusion of the status of mission agreement and the full deployment within thirty days of the arrival of the advance party;

6. Urges the Government of Rwanda and RPF strictly to respect the rules of international humanitarian law;

7. Further urges the Government of Rwanda and RPF to refrain from any action that could contribute to tension;

8. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to support the peace efforts of the OAU by putting two military experts at its disposal with a view to assisting the Neutral Military Observer Group (NMOG), in particular through logistic expertise to help expedite deployment of the enlarged NMOG to Rwanda;

9. Urges the Government of Rwanda and RPF to conclude quickly a comprehensive peace agreement;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the results of the Arusha peace talks;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on the contribution the United Nations could make to assist OAU in the implementation of the above-mentioned agreement and to begin contingency planning in the event that the Council decides such a contribution is needed;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution within sixty days of the deployment of UNOMUR;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 846(1993)

22 June 1993 Meeting 3244 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25981).

On 29 June,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Brigadier-General Romeo A. Dallaire of Canada as the Chief Military Observer of UNOMUR and proposed that the Mission be composed of military observers from Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, Fiji, Hungary, the Netherlands, Senegal, Slovakia and Zimbabwe. The Security Council agreed to those proposals on 30 June.⁽¹¹¹⁾

Further report of the Secretary-General (August). In August,⁽¹¹²⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the Government of Rwanda and RPF had signed a peace agreement at Arusha on 4 August, following the conclusion of the peace talks. They agreed that the war had come to an end and that they would promote national reconciliation. The agreement incorporated six protocols: the 1992 Cease-fire Agreement and protocols on the rule of law, power-sharing, repatriation of refugees and resettlement of displaced persons, integration of the armed forces and issues related to the appointment of the Prime Minister and the transitional period, which was set at 22 months. The Secretary-General indicated that NMOG had been replaced by NMOG II as of 3 August, pending the deployment of an international force. He dispatched a reconnaissance mission to Rwanda on 19 August to assess the human and financial requirements for establishing such a force.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 10 September, the President, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement:⁽¹³⁾

Meeting number. SC 3273.

"The Security Council welcomes the peace agreement concluded by the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front at Arusha on 4 August 1993. The Council is aware of the hopes the Rwandese parties entertain that the international community will lend its assistance in the implementation of the agreement. It has also taken note of the importance they attach to 10 September 1993, the date that is to mark the establishment of transitional institutions.

"The Security Council welcomes in this regard the decision taken by the Secretary-General to send a reconnaissance mission to Rwanda. The Council hopes to have the report of the Secretary-General based on the recommendations of the reconnaissance mission in the next few days so that it can consider the contribution the United Nations could make to facilitate the implementation of the Arusha peace agreement.

"The Security Council urges the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front to continue to honour the Arusha agreements in accordance with their commitments. It further urges them to continue to cooperate with the Neutral Military Observer Group, whose mandate the Secretary-General of OAU has decided to extend on an interim basis."

Report of the Secretary-General (September).

In a September report,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the reconnaissance mission visited Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Ethiopia between 19 August and 3 September. On the basis of its observations and recommendations, he outlined the United Nations contribution to the establishment of a peace-keeping mission to Rwanda, as provided for in the Arusha Peace Agreement. The Mission would assist in ensuring the security of the capital, Kigali; monitor the cease-fire, including demobilization and the establishment of a demilitarized zone, and the security situation during the transitional period; and assist with mine clearance. It would incorporate NMOG II forces, have under its command UNOMUR military observers, and operate in five sectors, with headquarters at Kigali. The report set out the concept of operations, proposed structure and deployment schedule of the new Mission, as well as functions and staffing requirements of its military, civilian police and administrative components. He proposed that the military personnel be deployed progressively and that the operation be conducted in four phases.

The Secretary-General also proposed that the Mission's activities be coordinated with humanitarian assistance to Rwanda. Humanitarian programmes were envisaged for the repatriation and reintegration of refugees, the resettlement of displaced persons, assistance to demobilized soldiers, mine clearance and reconstruction. In February, UNDP adopted a programme on Rwanda, and a consolidated appeal was launched in April to meet the emergency needs of displaced persons. The report noted that, while some 600,000 people had returned to their homes, an estimated 300,000 remained displaced and continued to rely on emergency assistance, and that some $100 million had been contributed to that programme since January.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council authorize the establishment of a United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), led by a Special Representative, and urge Member States to support the United Nations aid effort there. Cost estimates for a six-month period were estimated at $62.6 million.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council met on 5 October to consider the Secretary-General's report. Rwanda was invited to participate under rule 37^a of the provisional rules of procedure.

The Council adopted resolution 872(1993) unanimously.

Rwandese Patriotic Front and as reaffirmed by their joint delegation in New York,

Paying tribute to the role played by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and by the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania in the conclusion of the Arusha Peace Agreement,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Decides to establish a peace-keeping operation under the name "United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda" (UNAMIR) for a period of six months subject to the proviso that it will be extended beyond the initial ninety days only upon a review by the Council based on a report from the Secretary-General as to whether or not substantive progress has been made towards the implementation of the Arusha Peace Agreement;

3. Decides that, drawing from the Secretary-General's recommendations, UNAMIR shall have the following mandate:

(a) To contribute to the security of the city of Kigali inter alia within a weapons-secure area established by the parties in and around the city;

(b) To monitor observance of the cease-fire agreement, which calls for the establishment of cantonment and assembly zones and the demarcation of the new demilitarized zone and other demilitarization procedures;

(c) To monitor the security situation during the final period of the transitional government's mandate, leading up to the elections;

(d) To assist with mine clearance, primarily through training programmes;

(e) To investigate at the request of the parties or on its own initiative instances of alleged non-compliance with the provisions of the Arusha Peace Agreement relating to the integration of the armed forces, and pursue any such instances with the parties responsible and report thereon as appropriate to the Secretary-General;

(f) To monitor the process of repatriation of Rwandese refugees and resettlement of displaced persons to verify that it is carried out in a safe and orderly manner;

(g) To assist in the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities in conjunction with relief operations;

(h) To investigate and report on incidents regarding the activities of the gendarmerie and police;

6. Further approves the Secretary-General's proposal that the deployment and withdrawal of UNAMIR should be carried out in stages and notes in this connection that UNAMIR's mandate, if extended, is expected to terminate following national elections and the installation of a new Government in Rwanda, events which are scheduled to occur by October 1995, but no later than December 1995;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General, in this context, to deploy the first contingent, at the level specified by the Secretary-General's report, to Kigali for an initial period of six months, in the shortest possible time, which, when fully in place, will permit the establishment of the transitional institutions and implementation of the other relevant provisions of the Arusha Peace Agreement;

8. Invites the Secretary-General, in the context of the report referred to in paragraph 2 above, also to report on the progress of UNAMIR following its initial deployment, and resolves to review as appropriate, on the basis of that report and as part of the review referred to in paragraph 2 above, the requirement for further deployments in the scale and composition recommended by the Secretary-General in his report;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to consider ways of reducing the total maximum strength of UNAMIR, in particular through phased deployment without thereby affecting the capacity of UNAMIR to carry out its mandate, and requests the Secretary-General in planning and executing the phased deployment of UNAMIR to seek economies and to report regularly on what is achieved in this regard;

10. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to appoint a Special Representative who would lead UNAMIR in the field and exercise authority over all its elements;

11. Urges the parties to implement the Arusha Peace Agreement in good faith;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to conclude expeditiously an agreement on the status of the operation, and all personnel engaged in the operation in Rwanda, to come into force as near as possible to the outset of the operation and no later than thirty days after the adoption of this resolution;

13. Demands that the parties take all appropriate steps to ensure the security and safety of the operation and personnel engaged in the operation;

14. Urges Member States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide and intensify their economic, financial and humanitarian assistance in favour of the Rwandese population and of the democratization process in Rwanda;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 872(1993)

5 October 1993 Meeting 3288 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26519).

On 8 November,⁽¹¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to appoint Jacques-Roger Booh-Booh of Cameroon as his Special Representative for Rwanda, with immediate effect. As stated in a 12 November letter⁽¹¹⁶⁾ of the Council President, its members took note of that information. On 12 October,⁽¹¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint Brigadier-General Romeo A. Dallaire of Canada, the Chief Military Observer of UNOMUR, as the Force Commander of UNAMIR. The Council agreed to that proposal on 18 October.⁽¹¹⁸⁾

In November,⁽¹¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General sought and received agreement of the Security Council to his proposal that UNAMIR's military elements be composed of personnel from Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Ghana, Malawi, Senegal, Togo, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Uruguay; added to that list in December were Argentina, Austria, the Congo, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Russian Federation and Zimbabwe⁽¹²⁰⁾ and Romania.⁽¹²¹⁾

Reports of the Secretary-General (October and December). In October,⁽¹²²⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, following the conclusion of a status-of-mission agreement with the Government of Uganda on 16 August, UNOMUR had been fully deployed and had reached its authorized strength.

In a second report, submitted in December,⁽¹²³⁾ he said that UNOMUR had established its headquarters at Kabale, Uganda, and set up five observation posts in two sectors along the border, which was monitored through mobile patrols, to be enhanced with airborne coverage. He stated that consultations had been held with the Government of Uganda on integrating the Mission into UNAMIR, without prejudice to UNOMUR's mandate and the status-of-mission agreement. The total cost of UNOMUR for the period from 22 June to 21 December was estimated at $4,392,900 gross ($4,308,000 net). The Secretary-General recommended that UNOMUR's mandate be extended for a period of six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 20 December, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's December report on UNOMUR, with Rwanda and Uganda participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The Council adopted resolution 891(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 812(1993) of 12 March 1993 and 846(1993) of 22 June 1993,

Recalling its resolution 872(1993) of 5 October 1993 establishing the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR),

Having examined the Secretary-General's report dated 15 December 1993,

Welcoming the substantial results obtained by the deployment of the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda (UNOMUR),

Endorsing the Secretary-General's view, shared by the Governments of Uganda and Rwanda, that UNOMUR has been a factor of stability in the area and that it is playing a useful role as a confidence-building mechanism,

1. Welcomes the Secretary-General's report;
2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMUR for a period of six months, as envisaged in Security Council resolution 846(1993);
3. Notes that the integration of UNOMUR within UNAMIR is purely administrative in nature and that it will in no way affect the mandate of UNOMUR as set out in resolution 846(1993);

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Uganda for its cooperation and support for UNOMUR;

5. Underlines the importance of civilian and military authorities in the mission area continuing to have a cooperative attitude;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 891(1993)

20 December 1993 Meeting 3324 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26888).

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In a December report on UNAMIR,⁽¹²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General said his Special Representative arrived in Kigali on 23 November and took initiatives to defuse tension resulting from a series of violent incidents in November/December, including the convening of a meeting at Kinyihira, Rwanda, at which the two parties agreed to set up a broad-based transitional Government before 31 December. He indicated that, as at 27 December, UNAMIR had been deployed to the strength of 1,260 military personnel, including the 81 UNOMUR observers. The withdrawal of foreign troops was completed by 15 December; however, the security situation in the demilitarized zone and the north-west of the country remained unstable. In addition, the humanitarian situation in the south was aggravated by the influx of some 375,000 Burundese refugees to Rwanda, following the October coup d'état in Burundi (see above, under "Burundi"). According to UNHCR, $52 million was required to meet their emergency needs.

In the light of those developments, the Secretary-General noted an urgent need to proceed with the second phase of UNAMIR's deployment and recommended that the Security Council agree on the continued implementation of the Mission's mandate. With respect to the Council's request to reduce the maximum strength of UNAMIR, he said that, while seeking economies through the phased deployment and withdrawal of UNAMIR personnel, he considered a reduction in resource levels, at the current time, would negatively affect the performance and credibility of UNAMIR.

Financing of UNOMUR

In a November report to the General Assembly on the financing of UNOMUR,⁽¹²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that ACABQ had authorized him to enter into commitments not exceeding $6 million for the period from 22 June to 31 October. He estimated the total cost of the Mission from 22 June to 21 December at $4,392,900 gross ($4,308,000 net). In December,⁽¹²⁶⁾ he indicated that for the period beyond 21 December, costs related to the administrative integration of UNOMUR into UNAMIR would be included in UNAMIR's cost estimates.

ACABQ, also in December,⁽¹²⁶⁾ recommended that the General Assembly take no further action on the financing of UNOMUR, pending its consideration of the report on the financing of UNAMIR. By decision 48/476 of 23 December, the Assembly endorsed that recommendation.

Financing of UNAMIR

Reporting in December on the financing of UNAMIR,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that ACABQ had authorized him to enter into commitments not exceeding $4.6 million from 5 October to 30 November. He estimated the total cost from 5 October 1993 to 4 April 1994 at $51,120,000 gross ($50,478,000 net). That estimate included the authorized commitments, costs of integrating NMOG II and UNOMUR and of maintaining UNOMUR's mandate, and requirements for the deployment of 331 military observers, 1,420 troops, 60 civilian police and 112 international and 68 local civilian staff.

ACABQ, also in December,⁽¹²⁷⁾ recommended a further authorization of up to $46.5 million gross ($45.9 million net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/479 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Noted that the integration of the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda within the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda was purely administrative in nature and that it would in no way affect the mandate of the Observer Mission as set out in Security Council resolution 846(1993) of 22 June 1993;

(b) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into total commitments up to the amount of 51,120,000 United States dollars gross (50,478,000 dollars net), inclusive of the amount authorized by the Advisory Committee in accordance with Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991, for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda for the period from 5 October 1993 to 4 April 1994, and requested him to establish a special account for the Assistance Mission;

(c) Decided to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount indicated in subparagraph (b) above among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decisions 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

(d) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (c) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 642,000 dollars for the period from 5 October 1993 to 4 April 1994.

General Assembly decision 48/479

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/48/828) without vote, 22 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/48/L.30); agenda item 173. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 87.

Somalia

During 1993, the United Nations continued efforts to end the clan-based civil war in Somalia, which broke out after the ousting of President Mohammed Siad Barre—Somalia's leader for 21 years—in January 1991. On 26 March, the Security Council expanded the size and mandate of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM), established in April 1992.⁽¹²⁸⁾ UNOSOM II took over responsibilities of the Unified Task Force (UNITAF), led by the United States and dispatched to Somalia in December 1992 to establish a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in that country, in accordance with a December 1992 resolution of the Security Council.⁽¹²⁹⁾ In February 1993, Lieutenant-General Cevik Bir of Turkey was appointed the Force Commander of UNOSOM II. Activities of UNITAF and UNOSOM II ensured the provision of emergency assistance which averted the mass starvation threatening almost 4.5 million of the 6 million Somalis. Efforts were also made to facilitate the return of some 1.7 million Somalis displaced by the conflict, including more than 1 million refugees in neighbouring countries (see PART THREE, Chapter XV).

In March 1993, the Somali political factions signed the Addis Ababa agreement on the cessation of hostilities and transitional mechanisms for re-establishing civil authority. The security situation in the capital city of Mogadishu and surrounding area remained tense, however, as General Mohamed Farah Aidid, Chairman of the United Somali Congress/Somali National Alliance (USC/SNA), demanded the revision of the agreement. His militia attacked UNOSOM II and UNITAF forces on 5 June and 3 October, causing significant loss of life and prompting the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia, Admiral Jonathan Howe, to call for his arrest and detention. On 6 June, the Security Council condemned hostile actions against UNOSOM II and, on 16 November, established a Commission of Inquiry to investigate them. On 18 November, the Council extended the mandate of UNOSOM II until 31 May 1994.

Reports of the Secretary-General (January and March). In a progress report on the situation in Somalia,⁽¹³⁰⁾ submitted to the Security Council in January, the Secretary-General said that the informal preparatory meeting for a conference of national reconciliation and unity on Somalia (Addis Ababa, 4-15 January) agreed on an immediate and binding cease-fire throughout the country and its monitoring, the cessation of hostile propaganda, disarmament and the release of prisoners-of-war. A General Agreement, supplemented by an agreement on implementing the cease-fire and on modalities of disarmament, was signed on 8 January. The meeting also agreed to set up an ad hoc committee to consider the criteria for participation in the conference, its agenda and other pending issues, and to convene the conference at Addis Ababa on 15 March. However, the first meeting of the ad hoc committee, held on 22 January at Addis Ababa, was suspended to consider an unconfirmed allegation by SNA that the Somali National Front (SNF) had violated the cease-fire agreement of 15 January.

In terms of the security situation, the Secretary-General noted that the United States had reported in January⁽¹³¹⁾ that UNITAF forces continued to expand security operations at Mogadishu and other major relief centres as well as in the countryside, and that their strength totalled 21,000 military personnel from the United States and 9,995 from other countries, including Belgium, Botswana, Canada, Egypt, France, Germany, Italy, Kuwait, Morocco, New Zealand, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and the United Kingdom.

He described preparations for the transition from UNITAF operations to UNOSOM II, including plans for deploying troops to northern Somalia and proposals for mine clearance. As part of those preparations, it was decided to authorize the deployment of an additional 30 officers to UNOSOM headquarters and 250 soldiers from Pakistan. The current strength of UNOSOM totalled 634 all ranks, including 50 military observers. However, further deployment was put on hold pending assessment of conditions on the ground.

Noting that the security situation, although generally improved, was still characterized by occasional outbreaks of inter-clan fighting in certain areas and posed a threat to relief workers and military personnel, the Secretary-General announced his decision to send an expert team to Somalia to prepare for the establishment of a neutral police force. He said that there was greater security and efficiency at the port of Mogadishu and the main airport, enabling the delivery of food and other supplies to more remote areas in the country.

The Secretary-General pointed to a marked increase in humanitarian assistance to Somalia and summarized related activities of several United Nations specialized agencies. He noted the establishment of Humanitarian Operations Centres (HOCs) in six Somali cities in addition to Mogadishu, as well as the preparation of a Relief and Rehabilitation Programme for Somalia for 1993 (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

In March,⁽¹³²⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the Ad Hoc Committee on the National Reconciliation Conference had met on 23 and 27 February and adopted a report on participation in the conference, with SNA's reservations regarding the criteria, as well as its draft agenda and decision-making procedures. In the meantime, the Special Representative for Somalia and other senior United Nations officials, in cooperation with regional organizations, the League of Arab States (LAS), OAU and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), continued to promote national reconciliation and to enhance Somalia's capability to govern itself, and held consultations with Somali elders, leaders, warring factions and women's professional groups on ways to establish a broad-based Government.

In describing UNOSOM's activities, the Secretary-General stated that the Operation's strength had risen to 715 all ranks, while that of UNITAF totalled 37,000 troops deployed in southern and central Somalia. Although all areas were declared stable or relatively stable by the UNITAF Commander, incidents of fighting or rioting had been recently reported from Kismayo and Mogadishu, and UNITAF forces continued to be the target of sniper fire and harassment. A number of disarmament forays were carried out on a limited scale, and an auxiliary force of former police officers was being constituted at Mogadishu to oversee road traffic control and protect feeding centres, pending the establishment of a national civilian police.

The Secretary-General summarized the proposed modalities for the transition of operations in Somalia from UNITAF to UNOSOM II, stating that the Operation's new mandate should cover the whole territory of Somalia including disarmament. He recommended that it be endowed with enforcement powers under Chapter VII of the Charter. The formal date of transfer of command from UNITAF to UNOSOM II was set as 1 May 1993 and would be the first operation of its kind authorized by the international community. He also outlined the cease-fire and disarmament concepts and the military concept of operations designed to facilitate implementation of the Addis Ababa agreements, including the four phases of deployment and rules of engagement. The overall operations required 20,000 military personnel and 8,000 logistical support staff as well as some 2,800 civilian staff. An expanded public information campaign was also required to support the execution of the mandate and to strengthen the peace process. In that regard, the Secretariat's Department of Public Information had entered into an agreement with Radio Cairo to translate and broadcast in Somalia United Nations-produced material.

With regard to humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General stated that the major challenges in 1993 were to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons, provide jobs for the millions of unemployed Somalis, reinstate national institutions and civil administration, re-establish education facilities and set up integrated programmes for mine clearance and mine awareness. Under the assistance programme, 10 core groups were formed to assess needs and devise projects in the priority sectors such as health, water, food, security, nutrition, sanitation, employment, administrative rehabilitation, police forces and agriculture and livestock.

The Secretary-General concluded that a secure environment had not yet been established and was a matter of grave concern especially in the north-east and north-west of Somalia and along the Kenyan-Somali border where no troops were deployed. He recommended that troop deployment under UNOSOM II be at the discretion of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the Force Commander and not be subject to the agreement of any local faction leaders.

An addendum to the report provided cost estimates of UNOSOM II for a 12-month period, totalling $1,550 million, excluding the unencumbered balance from UNOSOM, estimated at some $70 million. The cost for the first six months, amounting to some $856.4 million and including $189.5 million for start-up costs, was provided in a further addendum to the report.

On 5 March, the Secretary-General announced the appointment of Admiral Jonathan Trumbull Howe (United States) as his Special Representative for Somalia, effective 9 March, to replace Ambassador Ismat Kittani (Iraq).

The Third Coordination Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance for Somalia (Addis Ababa, 11-13 March), attended by representatives of Governments, United Nations agencies, regional and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs as well as 190 Somali political leaders, community elders and representatives of women's organizations and indigenous NGOs, adopted the 1993 relief and rehabilitation programme with a funding requirement of $160 million. Subsequently, the Conference on National Reconciliation for Somalia was convened at Addis Ababa on 15 March, with the participation of 250 representatives of political movements, civic and non-governmental organizations, elders and eminent persons as well as community, religious and women's groups.

Security Council resolution 814(1993)

26 March 1993 Meeting 3188 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25472), orally revised.

Further developments (March-June). On 27 March, the Somali political leaders attending the National Reconciliation Conference in Addis Ababa signed a comprehensive agreement covering disarmament and security issues, reconstruction and rehabilitation, restoration of property and the peaceful settlement of disputes and the establishment of transitional mechanisms. The Agreement provided for the creation of the Transitional National Council (TNC) and the Transitional Drafting Committee to prepare a transitional charter for Somalia, and for the establishment of central administrative departments and regional and district councils. The agreement was adopted on 28 March at Addis Ababa. In a statement of 29 March, the Secretary-General urged the Somali political leaders to work out arrangements for implementing the agreement.

The Transitional Drafting Committee, meeting at Mogadishu from 15 to 20 April and from 26 May to 4 June, considered six chapters for the draft transitional charter, including general principles, functions and powers of TNC, central administrative departments, regional administration, judiciary and transitional rules. The Committee set up a working group to finalize the text of the Transitional Charter, but its work had to be suspended on 5 June due to the outbreak of violence in the capital. The Committee on the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes held three sessions (Addis Ababa, 19-21 March; Mogadishu, 15-21 April and 25 May-4 June) to draft guidelines relating to compensation and procedures for the settlement of property claims. The Cease-fire and Disarmament Committee met several times between 7 March and 25 May to investigate incidents of cease-fire violations. It agreed on penalties to be applied for violating the cease-fire. It also completed the delineation of regions to be disarmed simultaneously and extended the disarmament process to cover small weapons in the hands of civilians.

Following the transfer of military command from UNITAF to UNOSOM II on 4 May, the nine UNITAF humanitarian relief sectors were realigned into four UNOSOM areas of responsibility, including Kismayo, Baidoa, Merca-Mogadishu and Belet Weyne-Jalalasi. From March to May, UNOSOM II assisted in organizing a regional reconciliation conference at Boroma in the north-west and a Mogadishu conference on Galkayo and central regions. In the meantime, UNITAF continued to confiscate weapons, recovering during March and April alone some 150 handguns, more than 750 rifles, 400 heavy weapons such as machine-guns, rocket launchers and mortars, nearly 50 armoured vehicles, more than 400 artillery pieces, almost 700 other weapons and close to 79,000 items of ordnance. On 6 and 7 May, UNOSOM forces repelled an attack on Kismayo as inter-clan fighting resumed for the control of that city. The Operation was also the target of increasingly hostile propaganda from Radio Mogadishu, controlled by USC/SNA. Hostile actions against UNOSOM forces culminated in the killing of 24 Pakistani soldiers in Mogadishu on 5 June.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 6 June, the Security Council, meeting at the requests of Italy⁽¹³³⁾ and Pakistan⁽¹³⁴⁾ adopted resolution 837(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, 746(1992) of 17 March 1992, 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, 767(1992) of 27 July 1992, 775(1992) of 28 August 1992, 794(1992) of 3 December 1992 and 814(1993) of 26 March 1993,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 47/167 of 18 December 1992,

Gravely alarmed at the premeditated armed attacks launched by forces apparently belonging to the United Somali Congress (USC/SNA) against the personnel of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) on 5 June 1993,

Strongly condemning such actions, which directly undermine international efforts aimed at the restoration of peace and normalcy in Somalia,

Expressing outrage at the loss of life as a result of these criminal attacks,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the people of Somalia in re-establishing conditions of normal life,

Stressing that the international community is involved in Somalia in order to help the people of Somalia who have suffered untold miseries due to years of civil strife in that country,

Acknowledging the fundamental importance of completing the comprehensive and effective programme for disarming all Somali parties, including movements and factions,

Convinced that the restoration of law and order throughout Somalia would contribute to humanitarian relief operations, reconciliation and political settlement, as well as to the rehabilitation of Somalia's political institutions and economy,

Condemning strongly the use of radio broadcasts, in particular by the USC/SNA, to incite attacks against United Nations personnel,

Recalling the statement made by its President on 31 March 1993 concerning the safety of United Nations forces and personnel deployed in conditions of strife and committed to consider promptly measures appropriate to the particular circumstances to ensure that persons responsible for attacks and other acts of violence against United Nations forces and personnel are held to account for their actions,

Taking note of the information provided to the Council by the Secretary-General on 6 June 1993,

Determining that the situation in Somalia continues to threaten peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Strongly condemns the unprovoked armed attacks against the personnel of UNOSOM II on 5 June 1993, which appear to have been part of a calculated and premeditated series of cease-fire violations to prevent by intimidation UNOSOM II from carrying out its mandate as provided for in resolution 814(1993);

2. Expresses its condolences to the Government and people of Pakistan and the families of the UNOSOM II personnel who have lost their lives;

3. Re-emphasizes the crucial importance of the early implementation of the disarmament of all Somali parties, including movements and factions, in accordance with paragraphs 56-69 of the report of the Secretary-General of 3 March 1993, and of neutralizing radio broadcasting systems that contribute to the violence and attacks directed against UNOSOM II;

4. Demands once again that all Somali parties, including movements and factions, comply fully with the commitments they have undertaken in the agreements they concluded at the informal Preparatory Meeting on Somali Political Reconciliation in Addis Ababa, and in particular with their Agreement on Implementing the Cease-fire and on Modalities of Disarmament;

5. Reaffirms that the Secretary-General is authorized under resolution 814(1993) to take all necessary measures against all those responsible for the armed attacks referred to in paragraph 1 above, including against those responsible for publicly inciting such attacks, to establish the effective authority of UNOSOM II throughout Somalia, including to secure the investigation of their actions and their arrest and detention for prosecution, trial and punishment;

6. Requests the Secretary-General urgently to inquire into the incident, with particular emphasis on the role of those factional leaders involved;

7. Encourages the rapid and accelerated deployment of all UNOSOM II contingents to meet the full requirements of 28,000 men, all ranks, as well as equipment, as indicated in the Secretary-General's report of 3 March 1993;

8. Urges Member States to contribute, on an emergency basis, military support and transportation, including armoured personnel carriers, tanks and attack helicopters, to provide UNOSOM II the capability appropriately to confront and deter armed attacks directed against it in the accomplishment of its mandate;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution, if possible within seven days from the date of its adoption;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 837(1993)

6 June 1993 Meeting 3229 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25889).

Further report of the Secretary-General (August). In August,⁽¹³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported that UNOSOM II's strength had been built up to the level of more than 20,000 military personnel from 27 countries, with an additional 8,000 personnel from 8 other States expected to arrive in August/September. The Operation was supported by the United States Quick Reaction Force of 1,167 all ranks. However, the deployment of UNOSOM II forces was delayed due to administrative, logistical and financial difficulties. Those delays and the recalcitrance of certain elements in the country hindered UNOSOM's capacity to extend its operations through the country and to help towards recovery. As at 31 July, UNOSOM casualties were 39 military and 6 civilian fatalities and 160 wounded.

Under the disarmament programme, aimed primarily at the militias and their heavy weapons, cooperative and voluntary disarmament was negotiated in several parts of Somalia. UNOSOM contingents removed mines from the roads in their areas of responsibility, while European and North American countries were financing mine clearance in the north-west. The Operation continued to support the Somali police force, assisted in developing mechanisms for selecting judges and magistrates at Mogadishu and encouraged the development of judicial and penal systems in other areas. It also provided resources for the prison population in that city, and encouraged the development of judicial and penal systems in other areas. It assisted in establishing the district councils envisaged in the Addis Ababa agreement, 21 of which had been created in 7 regions by 31 July. On 6 August, 152 elders representing more than 20 clans of the Juba region signed the Jubaland peace agreement at a regional peace conference at Kismayo, convened by UNOSOM II, committing themselves to ending all hostilities among their clans. The Secretary-General indicated that the overall situation in Somalia had stabilized and that significant gains were made in reducing banditry and fostering the goodwill of the local population.

The United Nations relief and rehabilitation programmes throughout the country resulted in the eradication of starvation, improved nutrition and massive immunization programmes for children, the reopening of schools and plans to begin vocational and teacher training, excellent prospects for the coming harvest, facilitation of livestock exports and an increase in trade. At Mogadishu, however, humanitarian programmes were suspended following the 5 June attack and subsequent relocation of many relief workers to Nairobi. The report also pointed to the shortage of funds for the 1993 Programme, as only $16 million had been pledged by 27 July. Urgent action was required to ensure continuing emergency relief operations, the resettlement of refugees and displaced persons, reinvigoration of agriculture and livestock and fisheries, revitalization of social services and resuscitation of commerce and trade, said the Secretary-General. Meanwhile, consultations were initiated with the World Bank on Somalia's long-term reconstruction and recovery.

The public information campaign in support of UNOSOM activities included broadcasting on Radio Maanta and distributing the Moanta newspaper in the Somali and English languages. The report noted that Radio Mogadishu had been neutralized during a disarmament operation on 12 June.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General underlined the transformation in the overall situation in Somalia and pointed to the strong support from OAU, LAS and OIC for the United Nations' role in that country's peace process. He stated that some faction leaders hostile to UNOSOM's disarmament efforts, in particular General Aidid, carried primary responsibility for incidents of violence and the loss of life, and that unless disarmament was fully implemented, the Operation could not be expected to fulfil other aspects of its mandate. He recommended the assignment of an additional brigade to extend UNOSOM's activities and drew the Security Council's attention to the need for ensuring clear subordination in the chain of command and control over UNOSOM II to avoid complications in the future.

An annex to the report provided a proposed UNOSOM strategy regarding the re-establishment of the police, judicial and penal systems in Somalia. The strategy envisaged the creation of a neutral three-tier (national, regional and district) police force of 10,000 by December 1994; establishment of an interim three-tier judicial system by 31 October 1993, to be replaced by a permanent one by 31 March 1995; renovation or re-establishment of prison facilities, to be managed by the Custodial Corps and monitored by ICRC, United Nations agencies and NGOs; and establishment of an Office of Human Rights to investigate and facilitate prosecution of violations of international humanitarian law (see also PART THREE, Chapter X). The one-year cost of maintaining the Office was estimated at $2,322,000, while the total cost of re-establishing the police, judicial and penal systems amounted to $45,130,000.

On 27 August,⁽¹³⁶⁾ the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members had taken note of his report.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 22 September, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report, with Somalia participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, and adopted unanimously resolution 865(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, 746(1992) of 17 March 1992, 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, 767(1992) of 27 July 1992, 755(1992) of 28 August 1992, 794(1992) of 3 December 1992, 814(1993) of 26 March 1993 and 837(1993) of 6 June 1993,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 17 August 1993,

Stressing the importance of continuing the peace process initiated by the Addis Ababa agreement and in this connection welcoming the efforts of African countries, the Organization of African Unity, in particular its Horn of Africa Standing Committee, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in cooperation with and in support of the United Nations, to promote national reconciliation in Somalia,

Stressing the commitment of the international community to help Somalia regain a normal, peaceful life, while recognizing that the people of Somalia bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation and reconstruction of their own country,

Expressing its appreciation for the improvements in the overall situation, which have been achieved by the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II), in particular, eradication of starvation, establishment of a large number of district councils, opening of schools and resumption by the Somali people in most areas of the country of their normal lives,

Recognizing the continuing need for broadbased consultations and consensus on basic principles to achieve national reconciliation and the establishment of democratic institutions,

Catting upon all Somali parties, including movements and factions, to show the political will to achieve reconciliation, peace and security,

Recognizing that the highest priority for UNOSOM II is to assist the people of Somalia in the furtherance of the national reconciliation process and to promote and advance the re-establishment of regional and national institutions and civil administration in the entire country, as set out in resolution 814(1993),

Noting with great concern, despite the improvements in the overall situation in Somalia, continuing reports of violence in Mogadishu and the absence of law enforcement and judicial authorities and institutions in the country as a whole, and recalling the request to the Secretary-General in resolution 814(1993) to assist in the re-establishment of the Somali police and the restoration and maintenance of peace, stability, and law and order,

Convinced that the re-establishment of the Somali police, and judicial and penal systems, is critical for the restoration of security and stability in the country,

Gravely concerned at the continuation of armed attacks against the personnel of UNOSOM II, and recalling its resolution 814(1993) which emphasized the fundamental importance of a comprehensive and effective programme for disarming Somali parties, including movements and factions,

A

1. Welcomes the reports by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative on the progress achieved in accomplishing the objectives set out in resolution 814(1993);

2. Commends the Secretary-General, his Special Representative, and all the personnel of UNOSOM II, for their achievements in greatly improving the conditions of the Somali people and beginning the process of nation-building apparent in the restoration in much of the country of stable and secure conditions in stark contrast with the prior suffering caused by inter-clan conflict;

3. Condemns all attacks on UNOSOM II personnel and reaffirms that those who have committed or have ordered the commission of such criminal acts will be held individually responsible for them;

4. Affirms the importance it attaches to the successful fulfilment on an urgent and accelerated basis of UNOSOM II's objectives of facilitation of humanitarian assistance and the restoration of law and order, and of national reconciliation in a free, democratic and sovereign Somalia, so that it can complete its mission by March 1995;

5. Requests, in that context, the Secretary-General to direct the urgent preparation of a detailed plan with concrete steps setting out UNOSOM II's future concerted strategy with regard to its humanitarian, political and security activities and to report thereon to the Council as soon as possible;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to re-double his efforts at the local, regional and national levels, including encouraging broad participation by all sectors of Somali society, to continue the process of national reconciliation and political settlement, and to assist the people of Somalia in rehabilitating their political institutions and economy;

7. Calls on all Member States to assist, in all ways possible, including the urgent full staffing of UNOSOM II civil positions, the Secretary-General, in conjunction with regional organizations, in his efforts to reconcile the parties and rebuild Somali political institutions;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to consult the countries of the region and regional organizations concerned on means of further reinvigorating the reconciliation process;

B

9. Approves the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in annex I to his report of 17 August 1993 relating to the re-establishment of the Somali police, judicial and penal systems in accordance with resolution 814(1993) and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps on an urgent and accelerated basis to implement them;

10. Welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to convene at the earliest possible date a meeting of Member States interested in supporting UNOSOM II in the re-establishment of the police, judicial and penal systems, for the purpose of determining specific requirements and identifying specific sources of support;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to undertake actively and as a matter of great urgency an international recruiting programme for staffing the UNOSOM II Justice Division with police, judicial and penal system specialists;

12. Welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to maintain and utilize the fund established pursuant to resolution 794(1992) and maintained in resolution 814(1993) for the additional purpose of receiving contributions for the re-establishment of the Somali judicial and penal systems in addition to the establishment of the Somali police, other than for the cost of international staff;

13. Urges Member States, on an urgent basis, to contribute to that fund or otherwise to provide assistance for the re-establishment of the Somali police, judicial and penal systems, including personnel, financial support, equipment and training to help attain the objectives outlined in annex I to the Secretary-General's report;

14. Encourages the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure continuation of the current police, judicial and penal programme from October to the end of December 1993 until additional funding from Member States is forthcoming, and to make recommendations as appropriate to the General Assembly;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council fully informed on a regular basis on the implementation of this resolution;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 865(1993)

22 September 1993 Meeting 3280 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26476), orally revised.

On 1 October,⁽¹³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council that Mr. Mohamed Ibrahim Egal, the "President" of "Somaliland" in the north-west of the country, had demanded the withdrawal of United Nations troops from that region by 2 October. Mr. Egal also asked the Special Representative to inform him about the United Nations plans for the region in the political and economic areas. In view of security concerns for the UNOSOM personnel, the Secretary-General sought the Council's guidance on that matter.

On the same date,⁽¹³⁸⁾ the Council expressed confidence that necessary precautions would be taken for the safety and protection of United Nations personnel deployed in north-west Somalia and the hope that UNOSOM II would be able to continue its work in that region, using all peaceful means for the benefit of the local population.

By a 28 October letter,⁽¹³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General apprised the Council of his recent visit to Somalia and discussions with the heads of State and Government and other high-level officials interested in supporting the United Nations involvement in that country. Pending the submission of his report on the situation in Somalia, he requested the extension of UNOSOM II until 18 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 29 October, the Council adopted resolution 878(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, 746(1992) of 17 March 1992, 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, 767(1992) of 27 July 1992, 775(1992) of 28 August 1992, 794(1992) of 3 December 1992, 814(1993) of 26 March 1993, 837(1993) of 6 June 1993 and 865(1993) of 22 September 1993,

Having considered the letter of the Secretary-General of 28 October 1993,

Stressing the need for all the parties in Somalia to exercise maximum restraint and to work towards national reconciliation,

Expressing once again its commitment to a future concerted strategy for UNOSOM II in Somalia and, in that context, to undertake an in-depth consideration of its humanitarian, political and security activities on the basis of the concrete suggestions to be submitted by the Secretary-General as requested in resolution 865(1993),

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend UNOSOM II's mandate for an interim period terminating on 18 November 1993;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the Security Council concerning the further extension of UNOSOM II's mandate which should be submitted in good time before 18 November 1993, to report also on recent developments in Somalia in order to enable the Council to take appropriate decisions;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 878(1993)

29 October 1993 Meeting 3299 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26660).

Further report of the Secretary-General (November). In a November report,⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ describing the general situation in Somalia and events affecting UNOSOM II, the Secretary-General said that to date 39 district and 6 regional councils had been established and 651 councillors had participated in training programmes on leadership, management and development. UNOSOM II facilitated the reconciliation between competing wings of the Somali Salvation Democratic Front (SSDF) in the north-east and central regions and worked towards reconciling clans in the north-west and Gedo region. It supported an all-Somali peace conference from 30 September to 1 October, attended by 600 delegates, and a reconciliation conference for Hawiye sub-clans from 14 to 16 October. The authorities in north-west Somalia did not pursue their demand for United Nations withdrawal and the Special Representative clarified the issue further during his visit to the region on 6 November.

The Operation funded the expansion of the police force by 5,000 people, including 3,000 at Mogadishu and 2,000 in other regions, while police experts from Canada, Italy and the United Kingdom formulated relevant assistance programmes for their Governments to implement. The United States pledged $6 million for the re-establishment of the Somali judicial and penal systems, $2 million for the police and up to $25 million-worth of equipment; a $1 million contribution was also received from Norway.

The security situation remained tense even after the 9 October unilateral cessation of hostilities by USC/SNA, with major factions reportedly rearming in anticipation of a return to fighting. Limited success was achieved in disarming militia in the north-east and central regions, as well as in cantonment of heavy weapons in Gardo. Disarmament and demobilization progressed in the north-west, but on a lesser scale in other areas under United Nations control. A Mogadishu peace conference on 1 and 2 October, attended by 12 of the 15 political factions and representatives from all segments of Somali society, condemned the violence against UNOSOM II and called for the simultaneous disarmament of all militias throughout the country. The report also underscored the importance of demobilization, training and rehabilitation, especially of the young militiamen, as well as of mine clearance, which had been limited so far by the lack of trained staff, security and funds.

UNOSOM II's strength reached 29,284 all ranks from 29 countries, with additional battalions expected from Egypt and Pakistan. They were supported by some 17,700 troops of the United States Joint Task Force. However, its operations were seriously affected by violent incidents that occurred at Mogadishu between 5 June and 3 October. On 12 July, in the aftermath of military action to neutralize USC/SNA command and control capability, four journalists were murdered by Somali civilians. Four United States soldiers serving with UNOSOM II were killed on 8 August. On 5 September, 7 Nigerian soldiers were killed, 10 wounded and 1 held prisoner, but released on 14 October. One Pakistani soldier was killed and two Pakistani and three United States soldiers wounded in an ambush on 9 September; on 15 September, two Italian soldiers were killed by snipers.

On 3 October, during an operation launched by the United States forces to capture a number of key aides to General Aidid suspected of complicity in attacks against UNOSOM II, two helicopters were shot down, 18 United States soldiers killed and 75 wounded. One helicopter pilot was captured but subsequently released on 14 October. Following the attack, the United States reinforced its Quick Reaction Force and announced its intention to withdraw its combat troops from Somalia by 31 March 1994. Similar decisions had been announced earlier by Belgium, France and Sweden.

During his visit to the region, the Secretary-General met on 14 October at Cairo with President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt and the Secretaries-General of OAU, LAS and OIC. They expressed concern over the consequences of the United States withdrawal from Somalia, reaffirmed their commitment to advancing the process of reconciliation in that country and called for the establishment of a trust fund for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Somalia. The Secretary-General also discussed the situation in Somalia with the Presidents of Djibouti, Ethiopia and Kenya and held talks with UNOSOM military and civilian officials and Somali leaders at Mogadishu and Baidoa.

In the meantime, humanitarian assistance continued to reach all parts of Somalia. A draft framework for planning the long-term reconstruction and recovery was prepared by donors, United Nations agencies and NGOs in coordination with the World Bank, and reviewed at their third informal meeting in Paris on 22 October. Agreement was reached among humanitarian agencies to coordinate efforts to resettle some 1.7 million Somalis displaced by the war and famine. The Fourth Coordination Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance for Somalia was convened at Addis Ababa from 29 November to 1 December. The meeting adopted the Addis Ababa Declaration, which outlined a regional strategy for resource mobilization and allocation and project development, as well as principles for its implementation.

The Secretary-General stated that the overwhelming majority of the Somali people wanted the United Nations to continue supporting the reconciliation and rehabilitation process in their country. He recommended that the Security Council renew the existing mandate of UNOSOM II until 31 March 1994, while proposing other options to the Operation's mandate which future circumstances might oblige the Council to consider.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

The Security Council met on 18 November to consider the Secretary-General's report. Ethiopia and Somalia were invited to participate under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 886(1993) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 12 November 1993,

Noting the significant improvement in the situation in most areas of Somalia achieved by the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) as described in that report,

Noting also paragraph 72 of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the people of Somalia bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation and reconstruction of their own country,

Stressing the commitment of the international community to continue helping Somalia in its efforts to accelerate the process of national reconstruction and to promote stability, rehabilitation and political reconciliation and to regain a normal, peaceful life,

Affirming that the General Agreement signed in Addis Ababa on 8 January 1993 and the Addis Ababa Agreement of the First Session of the Conference on National Reconciliation in Somalia signed on 27 March 1993, establish a sound basis for resolution of the problems in Somalia,

Emphasizing also, in this context, the crucial importance of disarmament in achieving lasting peace and stability throughout Somalia,

Condemning the continuing acts of violence and armed attacks against persons engaged in humanitarian and peace-keeping efforts and paying tribute to those troops and humanitarian personnel of several countries who have been killed or injured while serving in Somalia,

7. Underscores the importance of the Somali people attaining specific goals in the context of political reconciliation, in particular the early establishment and effective functioning of all district and regional councils and an interim national authority;
8. Stresses in this regard the importance it attaches to the accelerated implementation by the Somali people, with the assistance of the United Nations and donor countries, of the recommendations contained in annex I of the Secretary-General's report of 17 August 1993 and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 865(1993), and in particular the establishment of an operational police, penal and judiciary system at the regional and district level as soon as feasible;

9. Reminds all parties in Somalia, including movements and factions, that continued United Nations involvement in Somalia depends on their active cooperation and tangible progress towards a political settlement;

15. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have contributed to or provided logistical or other assistance to UNOSOM II or offered to do so, and encourages those who are in a position to do so to contribute, on an urgent basis, troops, equipment, financial and logistical support to enhance UNOSOM II's capability to carry out its mandate and to ensure the safety of the personnel;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to ask the Somalia Trust Fund Committee to review claims and make payments on an urgent basis and urges Member States to make funds available directly or through the Somalia Trust Fund for priority projects, including the re-establishment of the Somali police and demining, on an urgent basis;

17. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 886(1993)

18 November 1993 Meeting 3317 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26767).

Further developments (December). Progress in political reconciliation and reconstruction in Somalia continued to be impeded by SNA's rejection of all political initiatives undertaken by UNOSOM II and by deep divisions between the two main factional alliances—the Group of 12 and SNA. At their Addis Ababa meeting from 2 to 11 December, they failed to arrive at any agreement. SNA insisted that the United Nations had no role to play in national reconciliation, preferring that to be done by regional Powers, whereas the Group of 12 felt that UNOSOM II should remain in Somalia and play a key role in the political process. Sharp differences also arose over the status and mandate of regional and district councils and SNA's demand that the Addis Ababa agreement be revised. In December, the Group of 12 issued an interim plan calling for the establishment of a contact group to discuss with SNA implementation of the Addis Ababa agreement. Other initiatives were also undertaken to achieve a general reconciliation at Garowe in the north-east, Bula-Haji in the Lower Juba, Bardhera in the Gedo region and Mogadishu.

In the meantime, Somali factions, except USC/SNA, expressed their intention to work towards the rapid establishment of TNC. By the end of the year, a total of 53 district and 8 regional councils had been set up, and efforts were made to establish councils in the 15 districts of the greater Mogadishu area; on 6 December, a district council was certified in North Mogadishu. Progress was achieved in re-establishing the police and justice systems as 107 district police stations and 2 prisons were reopened and 16 district and 6 regional courts as well as 6 courts of appeal began to function, including one of each at Mogadishu.

However, the security situation was characterized by an increase in banditry in parts of the countryside and especially in Mogadishu, as well as by outbreaks of localized inter-clan fighting. Voluntary disarmament was stalled as the Somali factions failed to honour their commitments under the Addis Ababa agreement, and there were reports of rearmament and build-up of troops in certain areas. The lack of security also prevented the provision of professional assistance in mine clearing in some areas. At the same time, the withdrawal by several Governments of their military contingents in December reduced UNOSOM II's strength.

As malnutrition levels began to rise again in parts of the country, efforts were increased to provide emergency food relief and medical treatment. Assistance was extended to flood victims in the north-east, to Ethiopian refugees at Mogadishu, to the disabled, orphans and schoolchildren and to returnees in the Juba valley. More than 3,000 refugees and displaced persons were estimated to have returned to their homes since October from camps in Kenya, Kisumayo and Mogadishu.

Investigation of the 5 June attack

In response to the 6 June resolution of the Security Council, the Secretary-General in July⁽¹⁴¹⁾ provided detailed information on the 5 June attack against UNOSOM forces and on efforts to disarm South Mogadishu and the headquarters of General Aidid and neutralize broadcasting systems inciting violence. He stated that, on 8 June, his Special Representative had addressed letters to General Aidid and Chairmen of 11 other political factions, seeking their cooperation in the disarmament programme and in the reconstruction of the country. On 12 June, UNOSOM II began the first phase of its disarmament programme in South Mogadishu. From 12 to 14 June, it took military action to disable or destroy ordnance, weapons and equipment and to neutralize Radio Mogadishu. Citizens were called upon to turn in their arms peacefully and to help identify clandestine arms caches. The second phase of the programme was carried out from 17 to 25 June, during which General Aidid's headquarters area was searched and disarmed. The Secretary-General indicated that there was increasing evidence that General Aidid deliberately and personally directed the use of women and children for attacks on UNOSOM II and that he had directed his militia to shoot into the civilian crowd on 13 June. Military casualties from 5 June to date were 29 Pakistani and Moroccan soldiers killed and 88 Moroccan, Pakistani and United States soldiers wounded. In the light of the 5 June attack on Pakistani troops and subsequent attacks on UNOSOM II by the USC/SNA militia, the Special Representative, on 17 June, publicly called for the arrest and detention of General Mohamed Aidid.

In August, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴²⁾ that an independent expert, Professor Tom Farer of the American University in Washington, had conducted on his behalf an investigation into the 5 June attack and concluded that General Aidid's complicity in the attack was supported by clear and convincing evidence and that the attack itself was a violation of international humanitarian law. There was also sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case that the subsequent attack on 13 June was designed by persons associated with SNA.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 November, the Security Council considered the two reports of the Secretary-General, with Somalia participating in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, and adopted unanimously resolution 885(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming resolutions 733(1992), 746(1992), 751(1992), 767(1992), 775(1992), 794(1992), 814(1993), 837(1993), 865(1993) and 878(1993),

Also reaffirming resolution 868(1993) on the need to ensure the safety and protection of United Nations personnel,

Recognizing the critical need for broad-based consultations among all parties and consensus on basic principles to achieve national reconciliation and the establishment of democratic institutions in Somalia,

Stressing that the people of Somalia bear the ultimate responsibility for achieving these objectives and in this context noting in particular resolution 837(1993) which condemned the 5 June 1993 attack on UNOSOM II personnel and called for an investigation,

Noting further proposals made by Member States, in particular from the Organization of African Unity (OAU), including those in document S/26627, which recommended the establishment of an impartial Commission of Inquiry to investigate armed attacks on UNOSOM II.

Having received and considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 837(1993),

1. Authorizes the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry, in further implementation of resolutions 814(1993) and 837(1993), to investigate armed attacks on UNOSOM II personnel which led to casualties among them;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, having conveyed his views to the Security Council, to appoint the Commission at the earliest possible time, and to report to the Council on the establishment of the Commission;

3. Directs the Commission to determine procedures for carrying out its investigation taking into account standard United Nations procedures;

4. Notes that members of the Commission will have the status of experts on mission within the meaning of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, which shall apply to the Commission;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to provide the Commission with all assistance necessary to facilitate its work;

6. Calls on all parties in Somalia fully to cooperate with the Commission;

7. Requests the Commission to report its findings through the Secretary-General to the Security Council as soon as possible, taking into consideration the need for a thorough inquiry;

8. Requests that the Secretary-General, under his authority in resolutions 814(1993) and 837(1993), pending completion of the report of the Commission, suspend arrest actions against those individuals who might be implicated but are not currently detained pursuant to resolution 837(1993), and make appropriate provision to deal with the situation of those already detained under the provisions of resolution 837(1993);

9. Decides to remain seized of this matter.

Security Council resolution 885(1993)

16 November 1993 Meeting 3315 Adopted unanimously

Draft by United States (S/26750), orally revised.

On 23 November,⁽¹⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General communicated to the Council the composition of the three-person Commission of Inquiry and his decision to establish a separate secretariat to assist it. On 30 November,⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ the Council welcomed that decision and took note of the Commission's composition.

Composition of UNOSOM II

On 16 February,⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General obtained the agreement of the members of the Security Council to his proposal ⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ to appoint Lieutenant-General Cevik Bir of Turkey as Force Commander of UNOSOM II. In April,⁽¹⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General sought and received the Council's approval that UNOSOM II be composed of contingents from Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Botswana, Egypt, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Malaysia, Morocco, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Republic of Korea, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United States and Zimbabwe. The addition of Namibia, Uganda and Zambia⁽¹⁴⁸⁾ to these troop-contributing countries, as he later proposed, was also agreed to by members of the Council.

Financing of UNOSOM II

In a March report on the financing of UNOSOM II,⁽¹⁴⁹⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the Operation's cost for May and June 1993 at $397.2 million gross ($396.0 million net), including start-up costs of $186.3 million and operational costs of $210.9 million gross ($209.7 million net). He also noted that, as at 28 March, outstanding assessed contributions due from Member States for UNOSOM totalled $58.9 million and that the unencumbered balance amounted to $70 million. The Secretary-General recommended that the special account established for UNOSOM should continue to be used for UNOSOM II and requested that the General Assembly approve an additional appropriation to cover the requirements of UNOSOM II for that period.

In April, ACABQ, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee, recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess the sum of $300 million for the two-month period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 15 April, the General Assembly, on the report of its Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/41 B without vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the initial phase of the expanded size and mandate of the United Nations Operation in Somalia and the related oral report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 751(1992) of 24 April 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Operation in Somalia, and Council resolution 814(1993) of 26 March 1993, by which the Council expanded the size of the United Nations Operation in Somalia and authorized the mandate for the expanded Operation (United Nations Operation in Somalia II) for an initial period through 31 October 1993,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 794(1992) of 3 December 1992,

Expressing its appreciation to those countries that participated in, and made contributions to, the Unified Task Force in Somalia,

Recalling its resolution 47/41 A of 1 December 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia,

Recalling also its responsibility in considering and approving the budget of the Organization in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the costs of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the deployment of the Operation in Somalia II, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the expanded Operation with the required resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Expressing concern about the financial situation of the Organization, in particular the fact that its reserves, including the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund, are almost depleted owing to the late payment of contributions by Member States,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations made in the oral report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Reiterates the concern it had expressed, in considering other peace-keeping budget estimates, about the lack of detailed budgetary information in the report of the Secretary-General, and regrets that the figures presented do not have enough justification and will need to be adjusted in the detailed budget estimates to be submitted not later than 15 June 1993;

3. Urges all Member States to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Operation in Somalia II promptly and in full;

4. Decides to continue to use the Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Somalia, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/41 A, for the Operation in Somalia II;

5. Decides also, as an exceptional measure, pending submission of detailed budget estimates for the Operation in Somalia II and the performance report on the United Nations Operation in Somalia by the Secretary-General, to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 300 million United States dollars for the Operation in Somalia II for the period from 1 May to 30 June 1993, and notes that this appropriation takes into account the unencumbered balance of appropriation remaining in the Special Account;

6. Decides further to take into account the amount of 300 million dollars appropriated in paragraph 5 above against the full assessments to be levied on Member States upon the approval of the total cost estimates of the Operation in Somalia II;

7. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to assess the amount of 300 million dollars for the period from 1 May to 30 June 1993 and to apportion that amount among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991 and 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and the rates of assessment adopted by Assembly decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

8. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1993 in the context of the detailed budget estimates to be submitted not later than 15 June 1993;

9. Decides further to establish the contributions of the Czech Republic, the Slovak Republic and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to the Operation in Somalia II in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for those Member States at its forty-eighth session;

10. Invites the new Member States mentioned in paragraph 9 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit as soon as possible but not later than 15 June 1993 detailed cost estimates for the Operation in Somalia II for the entire mandate period through 31 October 1993, taking into account the views and observations of Member States in the Fifth Committee, and to report at that time on the actual expenditure for the Operation;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Operation in Somalia II in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to the fund established pursuant to Security Council resolution 794(1992) in accordance with paragraph 15 of Council resolution 814(1993);

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related the Operation in Somalia II are administered under the authority of his Special Representative in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandates.

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity was described by the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ in an October 1993 report.⁽²⁾ In 1992, the Assembly had called on the Secretaries-General of both organizations to work closely, in particular regarding the follow-up to and review of implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.⁽³⁾

The report gave an overview of consultations and exchange of information between the two organizations and of cooperation in the field of economic and social development as well as in other areas.

A meeting was held between the secretariats of the United Nations system and OAU (New York, 8-10 September 1993) to evaluate progress achieved in implementing the proposals and recommendations for cooperation agreed on in 1991 and 1992, and to adopt new joint action.

The meeting agreed on follow-up arrangements within the United Nations to ensure implementation of OAU resolutions and recommendations, particularly those on the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic and the African Regional Food and Nutrition Strategy, adopted at the twenty-ninth ordinary session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Cairo, 28-30 June).⁽⁴⁾ The meeting called for cooperation in popularizing the 1991 Treaty establishing the African Economic Community;⁽⁵⁾ enhancing regional cooperation and integration; and coordinating the programmes of the two organizations. United Nations agencies were called upon to assist OAU in preparing the protocols of the Economic Community and in examining the implications of the Treaty on the free movement of persons within the Economic Community, particularly refugees and displaced persons; and to intensify cooperation with the OAU Labour Commission.

With regard to conflict prevention, management and resolution, the meeting recommended supplementing the updated 1990 Cooperation Agreement between the United Nations and OAU with an agreement on conflict management and resolution. It also recommended that the United Nations assist OAU in establishing an early warning system; developing its capacity for confidence building among its member States; developing joint training programmes on the settlement of disputes; and supporting the African Commission on Human and Peoples Rights. It recommended that the two organizations engage in regular joint peacemaking and peace-keeping activities in Africa and cooperate in post-conflict peace-building.

The meeting adopted other recommendations on the exchange of information and training, technical assistance and electoral observation and cooperation in monitoring democratic change and election monitoring in Africa. It identified priorities for implementing Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,⁽⁶⁾ including the establishment of an OAU ad hoc expert group to prepare a document on Africa's inputs to the proposed international convention to combat desertification; technical and financial assistance to OAU; and measures to organize the follow-up to and mobilize resources for the implementation of Agenda 21 and related agreements.

The meeting discussed areas of cooperation between OAU and the United Nations in implementing the Consensus of Dakar, adopted by the 1992 International Conference on Assistance to African Children.⁽⁷⁾

With regard to the implementation of the New Agenda, the meeting welcomed the establishment by the United Nations Secretary-General of the Panel of High-level Personalities and stressed the need for additional resources to support economic development in Africa. It emphasized that resources intended for long-term development should not be used for emergency situations and that bilateral and multilateral financial assistance should be directed to the sectors identified in the New Agenda. The meeting called for improvement of the international economic environment to facilitate Africa's economic recovery and development and to address the questions of external debt, resources flows, commodities, market access and terms of trade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/25 without vote.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretaries-General of the two organizations,

Recalling also its resolutions on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolutions 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988, 44/17 of 1 November 1989, 45/13 of 7 November 1990, 46/20 of 26 November 1991 and 47/148 of 18 December 1992,

Recalling further that in its resolutions 46/20 and 47/148 it, inter alia, urged the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support for the establishment of an African economic community,

Taking note of the resolutions, decisions and declarations on democratization, conflict resolution and economic integration adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-eighth ordinary session, held at Cairo from 21 to 26 June 1993, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-ninth ordinary session, held at Cairo from 28 to 30 June 1993,

Considering the important statement made by the representative of the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 28 September 1993,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer cooperation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity, in particular in the political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Noting the establishment by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in June 1993 of a mechanism for the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in Africa,

Also noting the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, and the support and assistance of the United Nations, to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts in Africa and the harmonious continuation of the process of democratization,

Deeply concerned that, despite the policies of reform being implemented by most African countries, their economic situation remains critical and African recovery and development continue to be severely hindered by the persistence of lower level commodity prices, the heavy debt burden and the paucity of funding possibilities, as well as by the effects of the devastating drought affecting certain regions of the continent,

Aware of the efforts under way by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and, in particular, of the adoption by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization on 3 June 1991 at Abuja of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community,

Deeply concerned also about the gravity of the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help refugees and, subsequently, African countries of asylum,

Acknowledging the assistance already rendered by the international community, particularly to refugees, displaced persons and African countries of asylum,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the meeting between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity, held at United Nations Headquarters from 8 to 10 September 1993,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen that cooperation and to implement the relevant resolutions;

7. Calls upon the United Nations to coordinate its efforts and to cooperate with the Organization of African Unity in the context of the peaceful settlement of disputes and the maintenance of international peace and security in Africa, as provided for under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Notes with appreciation the assistance provided by the United Nations and its agencies to African countries in the context of the democratization process;

9. Urges the United Nations and its Member States to continue to provide assistance, as appropriate, to the Organization of African Unity, should the latter decide to launch a peace-keeping operation;

10. Urges the United Nations to continue to support the Organization of African Unity in its efforts to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts and peacefully to manage change in Africa;

11. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide the necessary and appropriate economic, financial and technical assistance to refugees and displaced persons, as well as to African countries of asylum, taking into account recent disquieting developments in this respect;

12. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral cooperation and economic integration among African States, and requests United Nations agencies to continue to support those efforts;

14. Urges the Secretary-General and Member States, regional and international organizations, non-governmental organizations and relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support to the establishment of the African Economic Community and to assist in economic integration and cooperation;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support the efforts of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with a view to holding sectoral meetings on the priority areas of cooperation, particularly the establishment of the African Economic Community and the strengthening of the African regional and subregional organizations;

the African regional and subregional economic organizations;

18. Emphasizes the urgency of the need to adopt appropriate measures to ensure the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, in particular in the areas of resource flows, debt relief and diversification of African economies;

20. Endorses the agreement reached between the organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity on the convening of a meeting between the secretariats of those organizations, to be held in 1994 at Addis Ababa, to review and evaluate the progress made in implementing the proposals and recommendations agreed upon in September 1993 on cooperation between them in 1993-1994 and to adopt new and effective joint action;

21. Calls upon the relevant organs of the United Nations to ensure the effective, fair and equitable representation of Africa at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional field operations;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that the United Nations information network continues to disseminate information so as to increase public awareness of the situation prevailing in southern Africa, as well as of the social and economic problems and needs of African States and of their regional and subregional institutions;

23. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and organizations of the United Nations system.

Chapter II

Americas

The General Assembly in 1993 commended the sustained efforts of the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama to consolidate peace and economic growth throughout Central America. The United Nations system maintained its support for those efforts in the form of technical, humanitarian and other assistance within country programmes or regional frameworks.

The Secretary-General continued to play a key role in the peace process in El Salvador, assisting the Government and Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional in every way possible to complete implementation of their 1992 Peace Agreement and supplementary accords. The United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, charged with verifying the parties' compliance with the Agreement, was additionally charged by the Security Council in 1993 with the observance of the Salvadorian electoral process, officially begun in November and expected to conclude in general elections in March 1994. To that end, the Council extended the Mission's mandate until 31 May 1994.

Through the efforts of the Special Envoy for Haiti of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States, the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact were concluded, providing for measures aimed at restoring constitutional order in Haiti and for the return of its duly elected President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, on 30 October 1993. As part of the Agreement, the Security Council established the United Nations Mission in Haiti, whose deployment was prevented, however, by the military authorities and other elements opposed to President Aristide's return. The incident drew the condemnation of the Council and the Assembly, which asserted that the Governors Island Agreement remained the only valid basis for resolving the Haitian crisis. None the less, the Special Envoy maintained contact with all the parties in order to put the political dialogue back on track and arrive at a negotiated settlement.

The Secretary-General, in the exercise of his good offices, remained involved in the peace process to settle the civil conflict in Guatemala. In December, the Assembly reiterated the importance of resuming negotiations between the Government and Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, bearing in mind the progress and agreements achieved up to May 1993.

In other actions relating to Latin America and the Caribbean as a whole, the Assembly granted observer status to the Latin American Parliament in the Assembly and urged the broadening of cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System (see PART ONE, Chapter V, and PART TWO, Chapter VI).

Central America situation

The Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama continued efforts in 1993 to achieve peace, consolidation of democracy and development throughout all of Central America. In June, their Presidents met at Guatemala City to reaffirm their commitment to those purposes. By the Joint Declaration adopted at that meeting, they acknowledged the need to continue improving the underpinnings of existing democratic and constitutional systems throughout the subregion and reiterated their determination to promote dialogue, coordination and consensus; they accordingly welcomed the peaceful settlement of the recent political crisis in Guatemala (see below, under "Guatemala situation").

At an August meeting at San Salvador, El Salvador, the Presidents, considering that peace in Central America was indivisible and that any development disrupting it had repercussions throughout the subregion, adopted a Declaration on the Situation in Nicaragua (see below, under "Nicaragua").

In the Guatemala Declaration, adopted at the conclusion of their fourteenth summit meeting (Guatemala City, 27-29 October), the Presidents called for an international conference on peace and development in Central America for the purpose of assessing the status of the subregion's peace process, cooperation and requirements for technical assistance and financing.

The General Assembly, in December, adopted a resolution on the overall situation in Central America (see below). By other resolutions, it requested the United Nations system to continue to implement the humanitarian programmes for the uprooted populations of the subregion within the framework of the International Conference on Central American Refugees (resolution 48/117); it also urged all States and the United Nations system to step up support for the 1988 Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America with a view to preventing a reversal of achievements in the subregion and building peace through integrated and sustained development (48/199).

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1992,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on 11 November 1993 reviewing the situation in Central America.⁽²⁾ He noted that the goals of peace, democratization, reconciliation, development and justice, set out by the Central American Presidents in 1986⁽³⁾ and 1987⁽⁴⁾ and to which they had renewed their commitment at all presidential summit meetings since, had materialized in several areas.

The events leading to the election of a President in Guatemala on 6 June and the ongoing democratic electoral processes in Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Panama, as well as the rise of issue-oriented organizations, such as those that had begun pressing for government protection of human rights, testified to improved prospects for the continued strengthening of democratic institutions and to the growing assertiveness of civil society. The settlement of the conflicts in Nicaragua and El Salvador had allowed thousands of refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes. The improved political climate and ongoing macroeconomic reforms had increased business confidence within the subregion. The transition from confrontation to consensus in intergovernmental relations had engendered cooperation on a large number of issues and rekindled the thrust towards regional integration, with results particularly in trade.

However, as the Central American Presidents acknowledged in the Guatemala Declaration, there was still a long way to go to reach the goals of Central America's transformation. The civil conflict in Guatemala, the longest lasting one in the subregion, had yet to be settled. Many of the structural causes of the acute crisis of the 1980s persisted. Extreme poverty was growing and social disparities remained a source of tension. The state of health care, housing, education and employment were a continuing cause for concern. Drug trafficking and environmental degradation had emerged as new challenges.

Economic policies essential for macroeconomic stabilization had often been stymied by deteriorating social conditions and a diminished government ability to take remedial action, further straining the political process. The difficulties of simultaneously adjusting the economy, correcting social inequalities and easing political tensions had become particularly obvious in Nicaragua, still grappling with the legacy of a decade of civil war. Similar difficulties faced El Salvador, which was contending with stabilizing its economy and meeting the financial burdens of its 1992 Peace Agreement⁽⁵⁾ and supplementary accords.

By the Panama Declaration that concluded their thirteenth summit meeting (Panama City, 9-11 December 1992),⁽⁶⁾ the Central American Presidents underscored the imperative to ensure the continuous improvement of genuine democratic, pluralistic and participatory processes. They recognized that the primary challenges confronting Central America were the improvement of democracy, the consolidation of peace, access to international markets on equitable conditions and sustainable development with social justice—challenges that called for an institutional framework for integrated subregional development, with the agricultural sector as the linchpin of economic revitalization. Therefore, as decided at that meeting, the Central American Integration System, provided for by the 1991 Tegucigalpa Protocol,⁽⁷⁾ was formally established on 1 February 1993; its headquarters at San Salvador were inaugurated on 27 October. Since the System's inception, its secretariat had been fostering coordination among its constituent agencies and assisting the Presidents' good-offices mission to Nicaragua.

At their fourteenth summit, the Presidents signed a protocol updating the 1960 General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration⁽⁸⁾ with the aim of promoting a voluntary and gradual process towards a Central American economic union.

Throughout 1993, meetings among the Central American Presidents continued to prove an effective format for high-level regional decision-making. In addition to the fourteenth (regular) summit meeting, the Presidents met in special summit (Belize, 19-21 February) to coordinate regional efforts against drug trafficking. They held two ad hoc meetings (El Salvador, 1 June; Guatemala, 17 June) to address the Guatemalan crisis which arose in late May, and held a third one (El Salvador, 27 August) to offer their good offices to facilitate national reconciliation in Nicaragua.

The Central American countries continued to enlist the international community's cooperation through various mechanisms. At a meeting early in the year (Caracas, Venezuela, 12 February), their Presidents and those of the Group of Three cooperating countries (Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela) adopted the Caracas Commitment, establishing a new framework for cooperation, as well as the Caracas Statement, renewing their commitment to the creation of a free-trade zone. At their ninth ministerial meeting (San Salvador, 22 and 23 February), the Central American countries and the European Community (EC) signed the San Salvador Agreement on further cooperation between them. At a special session of the Partnership for Democracy and Development in Central America (Tokyo, 15 and 16 March), the 30 participating countries shared the view that, to consolidate the Central American peace process, democratic and economic development must proceed in tandem, and assistance to both must be well balanced.

The World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the Inter-American Development Bank endeavoured to promote structured dialogue between the international donor community and the Central American countries. The first meeting of the Regional Consultative Group for Central America (Brussels, March), coordinated by the Inter-American Development Bank, discussed regional technical cooperation in energy, human resources, the environment, and science and technology. Meetings of national consultative groups were held under World Bank auspices (Paris, April). A meeting on El Salvador reviewed the first year's implementation of the National Reconstruction Plan and received pledges from donor countries amounting to $800 million, while a meeting on Nicaragua evaluated the national reconciliation process and received pledges totalling some $750 million. At an informal meeting organized by the World Bank (Washington, D. C., September) at Guatemala's request, donors offered financial support to meet a $150-million short-term need.

In cooperation with the Central American Governments, the Organization of American States (OAS) played a prominent part in efforts that successfully reinstated democratic institutions in Guatemala, suspended on 25 May by the then President, Jorge Antonio Serrano Elias. In connection with developments disrupting national reconciliation in Nicaragua in late August and early September, the OAS Permanent Council met in special session on 3 September to affirm support for President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro and for the good offices of the other Central American Presidents on Nicaragua's behalf.

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations had continued to support the efforts of the Central American Governments to consolidate peace, democracy and development. He had exercised his own good offices to advance the implementation of the Salvadorian Peace Agreement, highlighting what had been achieved and what remained to be done (see below, under "El Salvador situation"), and to assist in the search for a negotiated settlement of the Guatemala conflict (see below, under "Guatemala situation"). United Nations operational activities remained in place within national programmes and subregional frameworks, such as the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America and the International Conference on Central American Refugees (see PART THREE, Chapters II and XV, respectively).

Referring to further prospects, the Secretary-General pointed to the three assets that had helped Central America emerge from the difficult decade of the 1980s: a dynamic institutional framework; a comprehensive agenda of social, economic and other reforms; and an active partnership with the international community through several cooperation mechanisms, including the United Nations itself. Together they constituted a powerful instrument to address the challenges of further democratization, improved social justice and economic growth. A key to success, he stated, would be the sustained dedication and sense of urgency that were mustered in addressing the challenges of civil war and regional tensions. He called on the international community to remain a prominent contributor, not by directing or substituting regional efforts but by supporting Central America's own commitment. The Secretary-General affirmed his readiness, within the mandate entrusted to him by the General Assembly, to play an active part in that endeavour.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/161.

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and its own resolutions, particularly resolution 47/118 of 18 December 1992, in which it recognized that there remained in Central America major obstacles to the full exercise of peace, freedom, democracy and development and the need for a global frame of reference that would enable the international community to channel support to the efforts of the Central American Governments, as well as the desirability of increasing support by providing resources for the consolidation of the objectives set, in order to prevent the region's material limitations from diminishing or reversing the progress made,

Recognizing the importance and validity of the commitments assumed by the Central American Presidents in the "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", adopted at the Esquipulas II summit meeting on 7 August 1987, and the agreements adopted at their subsequent summit meetings, especially the commitments undertaken at the fourteenth summit meeting, held at Guatemala City from 27 to 29 October 1993, which established a framework of priorities for the consolidation of peace and human development in Central America based on democratic participation and the identification of fundamentally new courses of action which call for a new strategy reflecting the concept of integrated and sustained human development,

Aware of the importance of supporting the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments for the consolidation of a firm and lasting peace in Central America, and bearing in mind that the Central American Integration System constitutes the institutional framework for subregional integration through which integrated development can be promoted in an effective, orderly and coherent manner,

Convinced of the hopes that inspire the peoples of Central America to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and social justice, as well as the commitment to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience while fully respecting the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Recognizing the importance of the peace-keeping operations that have been carried out in Central America pursuant to the decisions of the Security Council and with the support of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing also the need to preserve and enhance the results obtained by means of new and innovative initiatives,

Reaffirming the belief that there can be no peace in Central America without development or democracy, which are essential for transforming the region and realizing the hope of the Central American peoples and Governments that Central America may become a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development,

Emphasizing the important role of international cooperation in helping to implement the decisions adopted at the summit meetings of Central American Presidents in order to consolidate peace with human development and social justice,

Stressing the importance of honouring the commitments to accelerate the establishment of a new model of regional security in Central America as established in the Tegucigalpa Protocol of 13 December 1991, which established the Central American Integration System, and bearing in mind the institutional changes that have taken place in the armed forces in Central America,

Noting with concern the recent acts of violence, with possible political motives, in El Salvador which may, if measures to halt them are not taken, jeopardize the peace process initiated under the Peace Agreement signed at Mexico City by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional on 16 January 1992,

Noting with interest the steps taken by both the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí with the Secretary-General and officials of countries that support the peace process, as well as the initial measures adopted by the Government of El Salvador and the decision of the Secretary-General to have the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador collaborate with the competent authorities in conducting immediately a full, impartial and reliable investigation of illegal armed groups, which would result in the determination of responsibility for the acts of violence that could reverse and obstruct the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Convinced of the importance of achieving a negotiated political solution to the situation in Guatemala and of resuming the talks between the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca and the Government of Guatemala in order to end the internal armed confrontation in the shortest possible time and to bring about national reconciliation and full respect for human rights, in keeping with the wishes of the Guatemalan people,

Noting with satisfaction that the obstacles that led to the recent institutional crisis between the legislative and the executive branches in Guatemala have been overcome,

Bearing in mind the efforts made by the Government of Nicaragua to promote a broad national dialogue as the best way to consolidate peace, national reconciliation, democracy and development in that country,

Welcoming the adoption of resolution 48/8 of 22 October 1993, entitled "International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters", in which it recognized the exceptional circumstances prevailing in Nicaragua,

Recognizing that the consolidation of peace in Nicaragua is a key factor in the Central American peace process, as well as the urgent need for the international community and the United Nations system to continue providing Nicaragua with the support it needs to continue promoting its economic and social rehabilitation and reconstruction in order to strengthen democracy and overcome the aftermath of war and recent natural disasters,

Recognizing also the valuable and effective contribution of the United Nations and of various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms to the process of democratization, pacification and development in Central America, and the importance for the gradual transformation of Central America into a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development of both the political dialogue and the economic cooperation set in motion by the ministerial conference between the European Community and the Central American countries and the joint initiative of the industrialized countries (Group of Twenty-four) and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three) through the Partnership for Democracy and Development in Central America,

Bearing in mind that the process established by the International Conference on Central American Refugees will be completed in May 1994 and that the United Nations Development Programme has assumed the role of lead agency in completing unfinished programmes, and bearing in mind as well the eventual depletion of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, through which both the United Nations system and the international community, and especially the cooperating countries, have supported the Central American peace process,

Noting with concern that events have occurred in Central America that may hinder the consolidation of a firm and lasting peace,

Aware that Central America is facing a difficult transition period requiring every effort of the Governments and the various sectors of the Central American countries, as well as support from the international community, in overcoming the underlying structural causes that gave rise to the crisis in the region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 November 1993 on the situation in Central America,

Bearing in mind the initiative of the Central American Presidents to convene an international conference on peace and development in Central America, contained in the Guatemala Declaration adopted at their fourteenth summit meeting on 29 October 1993,

1. Commends the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments to consolidate peace by implementing the agreements adopted at summit meetings since 1987, urges them to continue with their efforts to consolidate a firm and lasting peace in Central America, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to afford the fullest possible support for the initiatives and efforts of the Central American Governments;

2. Supports the decision of the Central American Presidents to declare Central America a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development, as set out in the Tegucigalpa Protocol, and encourages the initiatives of the Central American countries to consolidate Governments which base their development on democracy, peace, cooperation and full respect for human rights;

3. Takes note of the Guatemala Declaration adopted on 29 October 1993 by the Central American Presidents at their fourteenth summit meeting, and shares the view that an opportunity exists in Central America to translate into reality the relation of interdependence between peace and development, which would constitute an historic achievement and a frame of reference useful in the settlement of disputes and the consolidation of peace and democracy through integrated and sustained development;

4. Welcomes with satisfaction the efforts of the Central American countries to promote economic growth within a context of human development, as well as the progress achieved in strengthening democracy in the region, as amply demonstrated by the elections to be held shortly in Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Panama;

5. Emphasizes the functioning of the Central American Integration System since 1 February 1993 and the registry of the Tegucigalpa Protocol with the United Nations Secretariat, expresses its full support for the efforts made by the Central Americans to stimulate and broaden the integration process in the context of the Central American Integration System, and calls on Member States and international organizations to provide effective cooperation to Central America so that it may promote and strengthen sustained subregional integration and achieve its fundamental goal;

6. Welcomes with interest the proposals to establish a new model of regional security based on a reasonable balance of forces, the pre-eminence of civilian authority, the eradication of extreme poverty, the promotion of sustained development, protection of the environment and the elimination of violence, corruption, terrorism and trafficking in drugs and weapons;

7. Calls upon the international community and the United Nations system to expand their technical and financial support for the professionalization of the police forces of the Central American countries in order to safeguard democratic institutions;

8. Reiterates its appreciation for the effective and timely participation of the Secretary-General and his representatives and encourages them to continue to take all necessary steps to contribute to the successful implementation of all the commitments subscribed to by the parties to the Peace Agreement in El Salvador, including efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for the reconstruction and development of the country, which are indispensable to the consolidation of peace and democracy there;

9. Reiterates its appreciation also to the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, which make up the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, as well as to the Government of the United States of America and other interested Governments, for their constant support and contribution to the efforts to implement the Peace Agreement, and urges them to continue to lend their support until the full implementation of the agreements, which reflect the will and aspirations of the Salvadorian people, is brought about;

10. Notes with concern the acts of violence that have occurred in recent months in El Salvador, which could indicate the resurgence of illegal armed groups, as well as the delay in the implementation of specific provisions of the Peace Agreement, and in this regard highlights the importance of complying with the agreement between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional concerning the need to accelerate the implementation of the provisions of the Peace Agreement, urging all political forces to cooperate to this end;

11. Calls upon the Government of El Salvador and all other institutions involved in the electoral process to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the elections to be held in March 1994 be free, representative and irreproachable, as they constitute an essential element in the peace process;

12. Reiterates the importance of resuming, in the shortest possible time, the negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, bearing in mind the progress and agreements achieved up to May 1993, expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and his representative for their participation in the peace process in Guatemala, and requests him to continue supporting that process;

13. Takes note in this context of the Peace Plan of the President of Guatemala;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the international community and encourages it to continue providing the necessary assistance for the people of Guatemala to achieve, in the shortest possible time, its aspirations of peace, national reconciliation, democracy and development;

15. Calls upon all political groups in Nicaragua to pursue, by means of the national dialogue promoted by the Government, their efforts to conclude agreements for the consolidation of the democratic process, reconstruction and national reconciliation;

16. Supports the efforts that the Government of Nicaragua is making to consolidate peace, and endorses the provision concerning exceptional circumstances so that the international community and funding agencies may provide their support for rehabilitation, economic and social reconstruction and the strengthening of reconciliation and democracy in that country;

17. Welcomes with interest the initiative by the Government of Nicaragua concerning the establishment of an active group of friendly countries to play a particularly important role in supporting the reactivation of the economic and social development of the country, which will facilitate the strengthening of its institutional and democratic structures, and requests the Secretary-General to give his full support to that initiative;

18. Stresses the importance of the political dialogue and economic cooperation between the European Community and its member States and the Central American countries within the ministerial conference in support of the efforts of the Central American countries in their quest for peace, consolidation of democracy and sustained development;

19. Stresses also the importance of the joint initiative of the industrialized countries (Group of Twenty-four) and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three), through the Partnership for Democracy and Development in Central America;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Central American countries with all possible assistance for the consolidation of peace in the region;

21. Requests the agencies of the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Development Programme, and the international institutions to consider providing the necessary resources to establish new and up-to-date regional programmes through arrangements to be defined jointly by the Central American countries and the cooperation community as part of the new development strategy, given the need to anticipate the eventual depletion of resources from the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America and to prevent any reversal of the achievements in Central America thus far and consolidate peace in the region through comprehensive and sustained development;

22. Recognizes the importance of the programmes undertaken in the context of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America to strengthen democratic institutions and modernize State infrastructure, telecommunications, agricultural development, environmental protection and human development;

23. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for carrying out her mandate under the International Conference on Central American Refugees, and supports the United Nations Development Programme as it completes the unfinished programmes within a comprehensive and sustained concept of development with a human face;

24. Notes with interest the proposal to convene an international conference for peace and development in Central America, the primary objectives of which would be to assess the status of the peace process, cooperation and technical assistance needs and the financing required for the region to become one of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and in this context expresses its satisfaction at the holding of an international technical meeting on Central America at United Nations Headquarters on 16 November 1993, with the participation of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Central America and representatives of cooperating countries and international institutions;

25. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development";

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

El Salvador situation

Implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement⁽⁵⁾ and other subsequent supplementary agreements between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) continued throughout 1993. In this regard, the Secretary-General was able to confirm two major accomplishments: compliance by the Government with the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces by 30 June 1993; and, with the destruction by 18 August of virtually all FMLN weapons inventoried in 1992 following the formal cease-fire date⁽⁶⁾ and those declared in 1993, the effective dismantling of FMLN's military structure.

On the other hand, considerable delays continued to hamper the implementation of other key provisions of the Agreement, notably the recovery from private hands of assault weapons, the programmes for the reintegration of demobilized combatants into productive civilian life and the establishment of the National Civil Police (PNC). Certain other police and public security provisions remained to be complied with. The human rights situation gave cause for concern in view of recent cases of executions, death-squad style. Above all, the critical issue of financing necessary to implement the Agreement remained unresolved.

Implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth, released in March, had given rise to controversy and remained outstanding. Five days after the report's release, a general amnesty came into force. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of El Salvador, by a note of 16 April⁽¹⁰⁾ to the Foreign Ministers of countries with which El Salvador had diplomatic relations, explained the event in the context of his country's efforts to foster genuine national reconciliation. He asserted that, to eradicate the hatred, bitterness and confrontation which marked the 12-year armed conflict, the Salvadorian Legislative Assembly, by Decree No. 486 of 20 March, adopted the "General Amnesty Act for the Consolidation of Peace", granting full, complete and unconditional amnesty to all persons who in any way had participated in criminal acts committed before 1 January 1992, whether they involved political crimes, related common crimes or common crimes committed by at least 20 persons.

The Secretary-General expressed concern at the haste with which the amnesty was approved, namely, by simple majority in the Legislative Assembly, commenting that it would have been preferable if the amnesty had been promulgated by a broad degree of national consensus.

Despite the outstanding commitments, the electoral process began in November. At the request of the Salvadorian Government and on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council enlarged the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) to include the observation of the electoral process.

The General Assembly, in addition to providing for the continued financing of ONUSAL, adopted resolution 48/203, calling on the signatories to the Peace Agreement to expedite the implementation of outstanding commitments under that Agreement, in order to guarantee fully the building of peace in El Salvador and hence to encourage the international community to increase the level of financial resources accorded to priority projects for reconstruction, development and the strengthening of democratic institutions in El Salvador.

Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces

Communication (January). On 7 January 1993,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council, through its President, on the latest developments relating to the implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces of El Salvador. The Government had expressed reservations in 1992⁽¹²⁾ on the time-frame specified for implementation.

The Secretary-General recalled that the arrangements formally ending the armed conflict in El Salvador on 15 December 1992⁽¹³⁾ included agreement by that country's President, Alfredo F. Cristiani, to complete implementation, within a specified time-frame, of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission concerning all the officers named in its report. The President punctually communicated that he had adopted appropriate administrative decisions, to take effect on 1 January 1993 and to be made known the preceding day at the latest. The officers in question numbered 103, one of whom was no longer serving in the Armed Forces (FAES). Of the remaining 102 officers, 76 had been recommended for discharge and 26 for transfer to other functions.

The Secretary-General stated that President Cristiani informed him on 1 January of measures adopted in respect of 94 of the officers, as follows: (a) 25 had been transferred to other functions; (b) 4 had been discharged for disciplinary reasons (among them the twenty-sixth officer recommended for transfer to other functions); (c) 19 had been discharged for administrative reasons; (d) 38 had been placed on leave with pay pending completion of the legal formalities for their retirement, which would take place within a period not to exceed six months; (e) 7 had been appointed as military attaches to Salvadorian embassies abroad; and (f) 1 had been permitted for personal reasons to remain in active service until his retirement on 1 March. Administrative decisions regarding the other 8 officers would be deferred during "the period of transition", understood to mean during the remainder of President Cristiani's presidency.

Having studied the information and verified that the names in the accompanying administrative orders relating to categories (a) to (e) corresponded with those in the Commission report, the Secretary-General concluded that the measures relating to categories (a) to (c) were in full compliance with the Commission recommendations; those relating to categories (d) and (f), although complying only broadly, could be accepted as satisfactory. The measure adopted for category (e) was not in compliance with the recommendation for the discharge of the seven officers, nor was the deferral of decisions on the remaining eight; the Secretary-General asked President Cristiani to take early action to regularize the position of those 15 officers.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 9 February 1993. Before it were the Secretary-General's latest 1992 report on ONUSAL⁽¹³⁾ and his communication of 7 January 1993. After consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement⁽¹⁴⁾ on behalf of the Council in connection with its consideration of the item entitled "Central America: efforts towards peace":

Meeting number. SC 3172.

"The Security Council welcomes with satisfaction the important progress made thus far towards the full implementation of the Peace Agreement for El Salvador and the cooperation shown by the parties to this end. The Security Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 23 December 1992 in which he indicates that the armed conflict between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) was brought formally to an end on 15 December 1992. The Council emphasizes this event, which puts an end to more than 10 years of armed conflict.

"However, the Security Council expresses concern at the observations made by the Secretary-General in his letter dated 7 January 1993 addressed to the President of the Security Council, by which he reported on the situation with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission concerning the purification of the armed forces of El Salvador and, basically, at the fact that those recommendations have yet to be fully complied with despite prior assurance by the Government of El Salvador. The Security Council also expresses concern at the indication in the letter dated 29 January 1993 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council that FMLN, despite prior assurances, did not complete the destruction of its weapons by the agreed deadline and that it is therefore not yet in full compliance with its undertakings under the Peace Agreement.

"In this connection, the Security Council emphasizes the solemn nature of the undertakings made by each of the parties when they signed the Peace Agreement and reaffirms the obligation of the parties to comply fully and in a timely fashion with those undertakings.

"The Council welcomes with satisfaction the decision of the Government of El Salvador to request the United Nations to verify the forthcoming general elections and the intention of the Secretary-General, communicated in his letter dated 26 January 1993 to the President of the Security Council to recommend to the Security Council that it accede to this request.

"The Security Council strongly urges the parties to persist in their determination to complete the process of bringing peace and national reconciliation to El Salvador and to continue cooperating with the Secretary-General in the efforts that he is making to ensure that the Peace Agreement is implemented fully. To that end, the Council will follow closely the progress and results of those efforts."

(For the statement's references to FMLN armaments and the Salvadorian electoral process, see below under those topics.)

Communications (April-July). On 2 April,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President that the President's plan for the 15 officers had been conveyed to him during a visit from the Minister of the Presidency of El Salvador. In order to take account of the Secretary-General's comments, the plan was revised to provide that, by 30 June at the latest, all 15 officers would be placed on leave with pay pending completion of the procedures for their retirement, to take place no later than 31 December; they would not perform any official functions while on leave.

The Secretary-General confirmed on 7 July⁽¹⁶⁾ that, as verified by ONUSAL, the 15 officers had been placed on leave with pay by a General Order of 30 June of the FAES High Command. On 13 July,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council acknowledged the information that the Government was finally in compliance with the Commission's recommendations, describing the Government's actions as a significant achievement in the consolidation of the peace process in El Salvador.

Commission on the Truth

The Commission on the Truth, established in accordance with the 1991 Mexico Agreements⁽¹⁸⁾ and formally constituted by the Secretary-General in 1992,⁽¹⁹⁾ presented its report on 15 March 1993 on its investigation of the serious acts of violence perpetrated during the 12-year armed conflict in El Salvador and whose impact on society demanded that the public know the truth. The Secretary-General transmitted the report to the Security Council on 29 March.⁽²⁰⁾

The report reproduced excerpts of the Commission's mandate as set forth in the Mexico Agreements, defined the legal norms applicable to its task, outlined the methodology used, and gave a chronology of the violence, as well as an overview of the cases and patterns of violence perpetrated. The Commission registered more than 22,000 complaints of serious acts of violence perpetrated between January 1980 and July 1991, involving extrajudicial executions (over 60 per cent), enforced disappearances (over 25 per cent) and torture (over 20 per cent). Some 30 cases examined were illustrative of violence by State agents, massacres of peasants by FAES, death-squad assassinations, violence by FMLN and murders of judges.

The Commission made some 40 recommendations grouped into four categories: (1) recommendations arising directly from the Commission's investigations, relating to specific persons (whose dismissal from either FAES or the civil service, or disqualification from holding public office, were called for) and to the reform of the judicial system; (2) recommendations for the eradication of structural causes directly linked to the acts investigated, for the investigation of illegal groups and for the reform of FAES and public security arrangements; (3) recommendations for institutional reforms in respect of the administration of justice, the protection of human rights (including some 19 recommendations already made by ONUSAL's Human Rights Division) and the new PNC; and (4) recommendations for national reconciliation, including material and moral compensation, for the creation of a forum for truth and reconciliation and for international follow-up.

The annexes to the report were published separately in two volumes. They consisted of, among other documents, texts of the Mexico Peace Agreements, the forensic and photographic reports of the 1981 massacre of peasants at El Mozote, statistical analysis of testimony received by the Commission; and lists of victims submitted to the Commission, of disappeared persons compiled by the United Nations, and of FAES and FMLN members killed in the armed conflict.

(For other aspects of the human rights situation in El Salvador, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 18 March and, following consultations with Council members, the President was authorized to make the following statement⁽²¹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3185.

"The Security Council welcomes the recent efforts to apply fully the peace accords in El Salvador and acknowledges the sense of responsibility and cooperation demonstrated by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to reach this objective.

"In this context, the Security Council welcomes the submission of the report of the Commission on the Truth and of its recommendations intended to prevent the repetition of the acts of violence committed during the twelve years of armed confrontation, as well as to create confidence in the positive changes caused by the peace process and stimulate national reconciliation.

"The Security Council underlines the need for the parties, in accordance with the peace accords, to comply with the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission on the Truth, as well as all other obligations which remain to be implemented. In addition, it calls upon Salvadorian society to continue acting with the responsibility which it has demonstrated throughout this process, in order to contribute to the consolidation of internal peace and the maintenance of a genuine and lasting atmosphere of national harmony.

"The Security Council invites the Secretary-General to keep it informed regarding the implementation of the parties' pending commitments and reiterates that it will continue to follow closely the evolution of the peace process in El Salvador and stands ready to assist the parties as appropriate to achieve the successful completion of that process."

Reports of the Secretary-General (May and October). In his 21 May 1993 report⁽²²⁾ on the activities of ONUSAL and developments in the overall implementation of the Peace Agreement (see below, under "UN Observer Mission in El Salvador"), the Secretary-General observed that the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth required a wide range of administrative, legislative and constitutional measures to be undertaken by: the Government; the Legislative Assembly, which would have to adopt new laws, amend existing ones and ratify constitutional amendments to allow implementation; FMLN; and certain individuals and institutions.

He reported that the Government and a number of institutions expressed serious reservations as to the applicability of some of the recommendations. President Cristiani, in a public statement and in a letter to the Secretary-General, stated his willingness to comply with those recommendations that fell within his competence, were consistent with the Salvadorian Constitution, were in harmony with the Peace Agreement and contributed to national reconciliation. At the same time, however, government spokesmen accused the Commission of exceeding its mandate, in particular of having assumed judicial functions. The FMLN Coordinator-General, Schafik Jorge Handal, accepted the recommendations in their entirety and would implement them provided the Government did likewise.

In the light of that reaction, the Secretary-General asked the United Nations to make a detailed analysis of the recommendations, examine whether any fell outside the Commission's mandate or was incompatible with the Constitution and identify what action was required by whom and within what time-frame. The resultant analysis, set out in an addendum to his report,⁽²³⁾ was conveyed on 20 May to the Government, FMLN and the Coordinator of the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace (COPAZ),⁽⁹⁾ with a request for information by 20 June on action taken or planned to implement the recommendations.

The analysis found that only one of the recommendations—that calling for the disqualification by law of specific persons from holding public office—could not be implemented, since it was at variance with fundamental provisions of the Constitution and in conflict with the recommendation on the ratification of international human rights instruments under which citizens could not be deprived of their political rights in the manner recommended by the Commission.

In a progress report of 14 October,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the positions of the Government, FMLN and COPAZ on the recommendations, following communication exchanges between them and the United Nations. For FMLN, while disqualification by law from holding office appeared impossible, it would be ready to accept a procedure of "self-disqualification" by the FMLN members named, provided the government officials and FAES officers named did likewise. COPAZ reported having taken specific action with respect to the recommendations for reforming the judicial system and FAES (revision of military legislation and curricula); on the issue of the relationship between FAES and paramilitary or illegal groups; and for ensuring the civilian character of PNC.

The Government confirmed on 13 July that it would be in a position to implement all of the recommendations, except for (a) those involving dismissal from the civil service and disqualification from holding public office; (b) those implying constitutional reforms; and (c) those which would have to be implemented by the judiciary through the Supreme Court of Justice. COPAZ seemed to indicate the existence of a consensus that the recommendations involving dismissals from civil service, including FAES, and disqualification from holding public office, should not be implemented—a position on which FMLN raised doubts. Since constitutional reform required ratification by two successive legislatures, it was imperative that action on the relevant recommendations be initiated during the current Legislative Assembly, otherwise the earliest time in which they could be implemented would be 1997. The Commission stressed that the Government's undertaking to implement its recommendations meant that it must take action to ensure that the recommendations to be implemented by the judiciary through the Supreme Court of Justice were put into practice by the appropriate State machinery.

Annexed to the progress report was an item-by-item description of the status of implementation of the recommendations. Under the item on the investigation of illegal groups, it was noted that recent cases of arbitrary executions had given ground for concern that such groups were operating, whose methods seemed to repeat behavioural patterns that had prevailed in the past.

Illegal armed groups

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council President on 3 November 1993⁽²⁵⁾ of the execution, death-squad style, of a leader of FMLN on 25 October, followed five days later by the murder of another leading member. He said the murders called for a vigorous investigation and confirmed the need for immediate implementation of the recommendation of the Commission on the Truth for a thorough investigation of private armed groups. Accordingly, he had asked the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL, with supplementary expert assistance, to work with those concerned to assist the Salvadorian Government in those investigations, in which the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights, created under the Peace Agreement, could also play an important role.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

In the light of the Secretary-General's letter, the Security Council met on 5 November. After consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement⁽²⁶⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3306.

"The Security Council has learned with shock and concern of the violent deaths in recent days in El Salvador of two leaders and other members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), as well as one member of the Alianza Republicana Nacionalista (ARENA) party. It notes, in this respect, that the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) has referred in its last two reports to what appears to be a pattern of politically motivated murders, a development all the more serious in the light of the upcoming electoral process. The Council insists that this violence has to stop.

"The Security Council deems it essential that the authorities of El Salvador take all necessary measures so that those responsible for the killings be promptly brought to justice, with a view to preventing such events from occurring in the future. It welcomes the technical cooperation that Member States are extending to the competent Salvadorian authorities, at their request, in order to assist them in the investigation of these criminal acts.

"The Security Council notes with particular concern that the Secretary-General, in his report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth, underscored the significance of cases of killings over the past few months that seemed to follow patterns that could indicate a resurgence of illegal armed groups, whose activities had diminished following the signature of the peace accords in January 1992.

"In this regard, the Council takes note, with approval, of the Secretary-General's decision, as reported in his letter to the President of the Council, to direct the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL to work with the El Salvador Human Rights Prosecutor in order to assist the Government of El Salvador in implementing the recommendation of the Commission on the Truth that a thorough investigation of illegal armed groups be undertaken immediately.

"The Security Council further underlines the importance of full and timely implementation of all the provisions of the peace accords. It remains concerned about delays occurring in several instances, namely, the phasing out of the National Police and full deployment of the National Civil Police, the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth and the transfer of lands and other reintegration programmes, which are essential for the development of a solid framework and a new climate for the respect of human rights in El Salvador.

"The Security Council also calls upon all parties to continue their efforts to make the March 1994 elections representative and successful. It recognizes the progress that has been made in registering thousands of voters, but, taking into account the delays and problems reported by the Secretary-General, calls upon the Government and all concerned to ensure that all qualified voters who have applied will receive the necessary documents in time to vote. It welcomes the steps taken by the Secretary-General to assist in this process through the Electoral Division of ONUSAL.

"The Security Council welcomes the agreement reached between the Government and FMLN on the need to speed up the implementation of the provisions of the peace accords and, accordingly, urges all parties concerned to accelerate the fulfilment of their commitments under those accords before the electoral campaign gets under way. It expects ONUSAL to be allowed fully to carry out its verification mandate unimpeded. The Council will continue to follow developments in El Salvador with close attention."

Communications. The Secretary-General, in a follow-up letter of 7 December⁽²⁷⁾ to the Security Council President, stated that he had dispatched a mission headed by Under-Secretary-General Marrack Goulding to El Salvador, from 8 to 15 November, which negotiated an agreed set of principles for the establishment of a two-member Joint Group for the investigation of what could be politically motivated illegal armed groups. The principles, annexed to the letter, defined the Joint Group's membership, faculties (including organizing a technical team of Salvadorian and foreign investigators of renowned competence, impartiality and respect for human rights) and the impartial and non-political framework for the conduct of its functions.

The Joint Group was to be established on 8 December with a six-month mandate, at the end of which it would submit a public report to the President of El Salvador and to the United Nations Secretary-General. Jose Leandro Echevarría and Juan Jerónimo Castillo, two independent Salvadorian lawyers of long-standing prestige, were subsequently nominated, as prescribed, by the President, with the approval of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights and the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL.

In stating its support for the agreed principles on 10 December,⁽²⁸⁾ the Security Council stressed the utmost importance of taking all measures to facilitate the task of the Joint Group and called for the full cooperation of all the parties.

FMLN armaments

Communications (January and June). On 29 January 1993,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council President on the status of the destruction of arms and equipment which, in accordance with the provisions of the Peace Agreement, FMLN had inventoried and collected at designated centres and placed under ONUSAL supervision. FMLN was to have completed their destruction on 15 December 1992, except for those categories of weapons which for technical reasons would take longer to destroy. Because of the Government's delay in complying with its own commitments under the Agreement, FMLN suspended the destruction process towards the end of December.

Following repeated ONUSAL requests and a warning that alternative ways to ensure compliance would have to be put into effect, FMLN resumed the process on 22 January 1993. Despite prior assurances, the agreed completion date of 29 January was not met. In his statement of 9 February,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Council President expressed the Council's concern over FMLN's failure to comply fully with this particular undertaking.

In an unexpected development relating to FMLN armaments, the Secretary-General, on 8 June,⁽³⁰⁾ confirmed that, as Council members had been advised at informal consultations on 1 June, an explosion in an automobile repair shop at Managua, Nicaragua, on 23 May had led to the discovery of a cache of surface-to-air missiles, large quantities of ammunition, military weapons and plastic and other explosives. Also found were a number of documents, including over 300 passports of various nationalities. Evidence linked the cache to Fuerzas Populares de Liberación (FPL), an FMLN constituent group, which promptly acknowledged responsibility for the existence of the cache, but denied any intention of reverting to the use of arms as an instrument of political pressure.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative in El Salvador and several ONUSAL members travelled to Managua to join an investigation launched by the Government of Nicaragua that uncovered the existence in the country of other clandestine deposits of weapons. ONUSAL specialists were working with a Nicaraguan team on the inventory and disposal of those weapons. FMLN was also cooperating in the search and destruction of other possible weapons caches. It moreover agreed to destroy its sophisticated weapons under ONUSAL custody on 4 June, previously to be destroyed at the end of that month, to coincide with the Salvadorian Government's compliance with recommendations relating to the post-conflict purification of FAES.

The Secretary-General stressed that the maintenance of clandestine arms deposits by FMLN and their exclusion from the final weapons inventory it had presented to ONUSAL raised serious questions of confidence and trust. He added that the peace process could be jeopardized if such damaging incidents as the one of 23 May should again occur.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 June, after Security Council consultations on the incident, the President was authorized to make the following statement⁽³¹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3236.

"The Security Council takes note with concern of the Secretary-General's letter of 8 June 1993 regarding the existence in Nicaragua of a weapons cache belonging to the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), discovered on 23 May 1993.

"The Security Council considers that the maintenance of clandestine arms deposits is the most serious violation to date of the commitments assumed under the Peace Agreement signed at Mexico City on 16 January 1992 and agrees with the Secretary-General that this is a cause of serious concern.

"The Security Council reiterates its demand that the Peace Agreement be complied with fully and promptly. In this context, the Council again urges FMLN to comply fully with its obligation to provide a complete inventory of its arms and munitions both inside and outside El Salvador and surrender them in accordance with the provisions of the Peace Agreement, and to continue to cooperate in this regard with the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL).

"The Security Council takes note with satisfaction of the cooperation of the Government of Nicaragua in itemizing and disposing of the war materiel found.

"The Security Council expects that the parties to the Peace Agreement will continue their efforts to complete the peace process and achieve national reconciliation in El Salvador."

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In a report of 29 June,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General brought the Security Council up to date on action taken in the aftermath of the Managua explosion, as described in communications annexed to the report.

He reminded the FMLN Coordinator-General on 12 June that FMLN had been legalized as a political party based on ONUSAL's confirmation that all items in the weapons inventory presented to it by FMLN had been accounted for and were being destroyed; therefore, the deliberate attempt to mislead him placed his credibility in doubt. The Coordinator-General responded on 16 June that, notwithstanding the existence of undeclared war materiel—held as a last negotiating card to guarantee peace and the conclusion of the agreements—FMLN had at no time considered resuming its armed struggle and reaffirmed its commitment to the peace process. FMLN had no armed groups under its command and was considering how best to collect the arms that might have been concealed.

The Coordinator-General transmitted an apology of 11 June from FPL, which explained that concealment of its arms stemmed from its profound distrust of FAES, exacerbated by the Government's delays and failure to meet its commitments under the peace accords. In line with FMLN's new status as a political party, FPL had decided to hand over all of its caches to the Nicaraguan Government and to ONUSAL and had taken steps to rid itself of all arms. Once the weapons in Nicaragua had been destroyed, it would notify ONUSAL of the location of its remaining caches in El Salvador.

Accordingly, FPL later reported to the Secretary-General's Special Representative that it had assigned a liaison officer to draw up with ONUSAL a plan for the location and destruction, by 4 August, of the remaining arms caches. On 19 June, the Coordinator-General pledged FMLN's cooperation with ONUSAL in the execution of the plan by that deadline. At the same time he expressed concern over the Government's delays and non-compliance with the accords, stressing the need for specific time-limits for the implementation of outstanding commitments, as well as for renewed direct communication between the Government and FMLN.

Meanwhile, the investigations in Nicaragua determined the existence of 16 "safe houses", including the site of the 23 May explosion, for the storage of arms and documents. Five contained some 1,240 rifles, 2,025 kilogrammes of explosives, 1.4 million rounds of ammunition, 1,300 mortar grenades, 3,970 assorted grenades, 350 rockets, 35,700 detonators, 42 machine-guns and 19 surface-to-air missiles. Two other FMLN constituent groups would be transferring their arms holdings to ONUSAL for destruction; a third had earlier handed over holdings of two to three tons. Nicaragua continued to inquire into the possible involvement of parties foreign to El Salvador.

President Cristiani, on 11 June, stated that FMLN's conduct, which he described as a violation not only of its commitments but also of the constitutional provision prohibiting the existence of armed groups, could be a reason to disband FMLN as a political party. He asked that the 1992 certification by ONUSAL of complete FMLN disarmament⁽³³⁾ be held in abeyance until FMLN had surrendered all its war-related materiel. He demanded that FMLN demobilize the armed groups constituted by its members or sympathizers, or declare the severance of its links with such groups. He was of the view that the gravity of the breach warranted a Council resolution.

The Secretary-General noted that the right of FMLN to retain its status as a political party in the circumstances had also been questioned in other quarters and its cancellation or suspension intimated. On 14 June, the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, which had granted that status, requested a full report from ONUSAL.

ONUSAL investigations into the possibility, advanced by FMLN, that some of its ex-combatants might belong to groups of delinquents, confirmed the existence of fully autonomous armed bands of from 20 to 50 members, composed of FMLN and FAES ex-combatants and civilians whose behaviour was criminal but non-political. ONUSAL found neither direct relationship between those bands and the recently discovered arms caches nor evidence of armed groups under FMLN command.

In the Secretary-General's view, the transformation of FMLN into a political party was at the core of the peace accords. Thus, cancellation or suspension of that status could jeopardize all that had been achieved. He said it was a credit to the parties that they did not allow the incident to derail the peace process.

Communications (June and July). Nicaragua, on 22 June,⁽³⁵⁾ informed the Secretary-General of the findings of its investigation, confirming that the arms found in 15 "safe houses" had been inventoried and promptly destroyed in collaboration with ONUSAL. In accordance with its security commitments under the 1987 Esquipulas II Agreement,⁽³⁴⁾ and the corresponding provisions of its Penal Code, Nicaragua had instituted criminal proceedings against the persons linked to the concealed weapons.

On 12 July,⁽³⁵⁾ the Security Council President, in taking note of the June report of the Secretary-General,⁽³²⁾ agreed with the assessment that cancellation or suspension of FMLN's status as a political party could deal a severe blow to the peace process. The President further welcomed Nicaragua's 22 June letter, saying he expected that country to comply with its international obligations to prevent the use of its territory for the illegal storage or transshipment of arms and other war materiel and to investigate fully all such deposits discovered in Nicaragua, including possible links to international terrorism.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). In a follow-up report of 30 August,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that only 85 per cent of the recently discovered FMLN arms caches had been destroyed by the 4 August deadline. Apart from delays due to, among other causes, logistical and operational difficulties of dealing with the widely dispersed small caches in El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua and of coordinating with national authorities, a fifth FMLN group presented a new list of clandestine arms only the day preceding the deadline.

However, the overall process of verification and destruction of FMLN weapons and equipment as mandated by the Peace Agreement was finally completed on 18 August. The process involved two distinct phases. The first covered the period from the cease-fire on 1 February 1992 until the accidental explosion on 23 May 1993. Weapons verified and destroyed during that period included those that had been turned in at 15 ONUSAL verification centres in El Salvador by 15 December 1992 and those voluntarily declared later; those two groups represented about 70 per cent of the total FMLN arms verified.

During the second phase, from 23 May to 18 August, the weapons verified and destroyed were those discovered in the aftermath of the 23 May explosion and those declared by FMLN in compliance with its renewed commitment to disclose all of its remaining weapons, representing 20 per cent and 10 per cent of total holdings, respectively.

In sum, the weapons identified in the complete FMLN arms and munitions inventory included: 10,230 arms (9,851 individual and 379 support weapons); 4,032,606 rounds of ammunition, 140 rockets and 9,228 grenades; 5,107 kilogrammes of explosives; 63 pieces of communications equipment; and 74 surface-to-air missiles. The arms caches declared by the five FMLN constituent groups numbered 128, of which 109 were in El Salvador, 14 in Nicaragua and 5 in Honduras. In addition, FAES press bulletins throughout the war indicated the capture of more than 4,000 individual weapons (7,000 according to unofficial figures), 270 support weapons, some 4.5 million rounds of ammunition and 31 surface-to-air missiles.

The Secretary-General concluded that, by all available indications, FMLN's military structure had been effectively dismantled and its former combatants demobilized and reintegrated, within a framework of full legality, into the civil, institutional and political life of El Salvador. The apprehensions raised by the discovery of the large quantities of undeclared FMLN weapons appeared to have been surmounted. He added that, because of the irregular nature of the 12-year war and the sense of insecurity inherent to a post-war period, an unknown number of weapons and remnants of war-related materiel were likely to remain for some time in the hands of individuals or groups, including criminal ones. As FMLN announced, such cases should be dealt with according to the laws of the country in which they were found.

Electoral process

On 26 January 1993,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council of a formal request from the Government of El Salvador that the United Nations verify the general elections, scheduled for March 1994, and of his intention to recommend acceptance. The Council President welcomed that development in a 9 February statement.⁽¹⁴⁾

On the basis of the report of the Secretary-General below, the Council, by resolution 832 (1993), enlarged the ONUSAL mandate to include the observation of the electoral process and asked him to take the necessary action to that effect.

Reports of the Secretary-General (May and October). In a 21 May report⁽²²⁾ on the activities of ONUSAL (see below, under "UN Observer Mission in El Salvador"), the Secretary-General stated that, as a follow-up to his recommendation that the request for United Nations observation of the electoral process be accepted, a technical mission visited El Salvador from 18 to 28 April in order to define the terms of reference, concept of operations and financial implications of expanding the ONUSAL mandate to include that function. As a result of its meetings with the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, COPAZ and the political parties, the mission identified several areas of concern and made recommendations for improvement.

The concerns revolved around serious inadequacies of the existing electoral roll and the obstacles to the timely issue of electoral documents. Foremost among them were: the inclusion of a large number of names belonging to expatriates or deceased persons and insufficient controls at the national level to prevent double registration, both of which could result in multiple voting; discrepancies between the names in the rolls and those on electoral cards, and/or holders of valid electoral cards whose names were not in the rolls; non-inclusion of about a third of the total number of potential voters due to problems in the registration process; and the failure of the campaign launched by the Supreme Electoral Tribunal to produce significant results, although registration requests more than tripled during the campaign.

The additional terms of reference of an expanded ONUSAL would be to observe the electoral process before, during and after the elections. Specifically, it would verify that: measures taken by the electoral authorities were impartial and consistent with free and fair elections; steps were taken to include all qualified voters in the electoral roster; mechanisms to prevent multiple voting were set up; freedom of expression, organization, movement and assembly were respected; and voters were sufficiently informed of the mechanisms for participating in the election. ONUSAL would also examine, analyse and assess any objections to the electoral process or attempts to de-legitimize it and, as required, convey such information to the Supreme Electoral Tribunal; inform the Tribunal of complaints of irregularities in electoral advertising or of interference with the electoral process; post observers at every polling site on election day to ensure full respect for the right to vote; and assist the Chief of Mission in preparing periodic reports to the Secretary-General, who in turn would inform the Tribunal and report to the Security Council.

The Secretary-General thus recommended that an Electoral Division be established as part of ONUSAL, to carry out its work in five stages. It would devote the first stage (1-30 June) to organizational activities at the central and regional levels; the second (1 July-15 December) to verifying voter registration and monitoring political activities; the third (16 December 1993-14 March 1994) to observing the electoral campaigns; and the fourth (15-31 March 1994) to observing the elections, vote counting and announcement of results. If the first round did not yield a definitive result, the Division would observe, during a fifth and final stage (1-30 April), a second round of elections for the presidency.

An addendum to the report, dated 24 May,⁽³⁸⁾ set out the personnel requirements for the additional responsibilities: 38 international staff, including administrative support staff, and 7 locally recruited staff; and 900 electoral observers during the polling, 320 from existing ONUSAL personnel, 330 from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), other United Nations agency personnel in El Salvador and volunteers from selected non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and 250 from the United Nations Secretariat and/or Member States. Also required were premises, transport operations, communication and miscellaneous equipment, supplies and services, and public information programmes. Additional costs involved were estimated at $7 million for the 11-month period from 1 June 1993 to 30

April 1994, a breakdown of which was annexed to the addendum. The additional costs would be considered an expense to the Organization, to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations.

In the first of a series of periodic reports on the activities of the Electoral Division of ONUSAL, dated 20 October 1993,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General confirmed that the institutional framework for the electoral process had been established. The Supreme Electoral Tribunal had set up offices in all of the country's departments and municipalities. To supervise their work, a Board of Vigilance composed of representatives of all political parties was established. In December,⁽⁴⁰⁾ departmental election boards were set up with authority to monitor elections, report violations of electoral legislation, deliver election material to municipal boards and collect ballots. The board chairmen were elected from four political parties, including FMLN.

As scheduled, four elections were to be held simultaneously on 20 March 1994: presidential elections, to be followed, if necessary, with a second round within the next 30 days; parliamentary elections for 84 seats in the National Assembly, based on proportional representation; municipal elections in 262 mayoral districts on the basis of a simple majority; and elections for 20 deputies to the Central American Parliament,⁽³⁾ treated as a single national district and based on proportional representation.

At reporting time, there were 12 competing political parties, including FMLN, and five presidential candidates. Access to the media, as regulated by the Electoral Law, was available to all parties, with space and time allocated according to Electoral Tribunal rules. Private communication enterprises were obliged to provide services to all parties on an equal basis.

Problems limiting voter registration persisted, as illustrated by a joint ONUSAL/UNDP study, which found that 27 per cent of Salvadorians of voting age, or some 700,000 persons, had no electoral cards. This was due in large measure to deficiencies in the mechanism for issuing such cards. In addition, Electoral Tribunal personnel were not adequately trained, transport for the mobile registration teams was limited and public information campaigns were marked by many shortcomings.

Between 1 July and 19 November, however, registration requests reached 787,834, reflecting a high degree of citizen mobilization. These were requests for new registration (469,098), changes (85,560) and reinstatement (229,800).

UN Observer Mission in El Salvador

The mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador was extended twice in 1993: on 27 May, when it was also enlarged, and on 30

November. The extensions, for periods ending, respectively, on 30 November 1993 and on 31 May 1994, were based on the Secretary-General's reports on all operational aspects of ONUSAL before the expiry of each mandate period.

Established by the Security Council in May 1991(41) to monitor all agreements concluded between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN, ONUSAL, in its initial phase as an integrated peace-keeping operation, was mandated to verify compliance by the parties with the 1990 San Jose Agreement on Human Rights.⁽⁴²⁾ As enlarged in 1992,⁽⁴³⁾ its mandate included verification and monitoring of the implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement,⁽⁴⁴⁾ in particular the cessation of the armed conflict and the establishment of PNC; as enlarged in 1993, it included observance of the electoral process (see above).

Report of the Secretary-General (May). On 21 May 1993,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report covering all aspects of ONUSAL operations. These included military and public security matters; human rights and the administration of justice; the report of the Commission on the Truth; economic and social matters, in particular the land-transfer programme; the status of FMLN as a political party; the restoration of public administration in the former zones of conflict; and the electoral system. In addition, the Secretary-General commented on the financial requirements of implementing the Salvadorian peace accords.

The Secretary-General described the status of the implementation of those provisions of the peace accords that were outstanding as at the formal end of the armed conflict in December 1992.⁽⁴⁶⁾ As verified by the Military Division of ONUSAL, the demobilization of FMLN combatants had been completed. FMLN resumed destruction of its existing weapons (65 per cent of inventory), finally destroying most of them—by 11 February those collected at designated points within El Salvador, and by 1 April those in deposits outside the country; the exceptions were those reported lost or stolen (3.5 per cent) and a small number of sophisticated weapons, whose destruction FMLN had scheduled to coincide with full government compliance with the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces. FAES troop reduction had been accelerated and completed on 31 March 1993, instead of January 1994 as previously scheduled, with reductions reaching 54.4 per cent, rather than the planned 50.2 per cent. The new armed forces reserve system had been introduced and 14 recruitment and reserve centres had been set up. The recovery of weapons from private hands had failed to meet the latest deadline of 31 March, with only 40 per cent of inventory recovered and an even smaller percentage verified by ONUSAL.

The Police Division of ONUSAL continued to monitor and assist the National Police pending full deployment of the new PNC; to supervise and support the Auxiliary Transitory Police in maintaining public order and security in the former zones of conflict; to assist in locating illegal arms caches; and to support the Human Rights Division, conducting special inquiries when required.

By the end of the year, PNC candidates at the National Public Security Academy were expected to number 5,500 and graduates to number some 3,000. The 10 former Treasury Police and National Guardsmen transferred to the National Police and accepted as PNC candidates by the Academic Council in 1992,⁽⁴⁷⁾ in contravention of the Peace Agreement, remained the subject of ONUSAL discussions with the Government. After four months of training abroad, those candidates joined PNC as provisional commands. ONUSAL eventually recommended that their admission be treated as an exceptional circumstance to keep it from being regarded as constituting a precedent. Since January 1993, the monitoring of the Academy's functioning had been strengthened through the presence of an ONUSAL observer in the Academic Council. The gradual phasing out of the National Police, as stipulated by the Agreement, had not begun, despite the replacement of 3 out of 14 of its departments by PNC. Moreover, the National Police training school remained in existence, as did certain police structures, notably the Customs Police, whose continued existence was incompatible with the newly established PNC Finance Division. Although PNC was open to candidates from the National Police, ONUSAL, in monitoring the entrance examinations for the Academy, ascertained that included in the last examinations were a number of former members of the National Police who had left four to six years earlier—many for disciplinary reasons—but who rejoined once the Peace Agreement was signed.

The Human Rights Division continued to discharge its work in relation to the 1990 San Jose Agreement on Human Rights,⁽⁴⁸⁾ recording facts and assisting Salvadorians in the search for remedies to persistent human rights violations. It held discussions with the Government on its findings and proposals for implementing its recommendations. It actively supported the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights and strengthened its relations with relevant NGOs. In the context of the recommendation of the Commission on the Truth for the investigation of illegal armed groups (see above, under "Commission on the Truth"), the Division was to provide the list of cases of recent arbitrary executions requiring special investigation to the Minister of the Presidency, the Minister of Justice and the Criminal Investigation Commission.⁽⁴⁹⁾

The work of the Human Rights Division was the subject of a separate series of reports. Those pertaining to the human rights situation in 1993 were issued as follows: one report (the sixth) covered the eight-month period from 1 July 1992 to 31 January 1993;⁽⁴⁵⁾ the following three reports (the seventh, eighth and ninth) covered the periods 1 February to 30 April, 1 May to 31 July,⁽⁴⁷⁾ and 1 August to 31 October⁽⁴⁸⁾ (see also PART THREE, Chapter X). The eighth report noted definite improvements but also serious violations, especially of the right to life, and that politically motivated human rights violations had become more open and rendered more serious in the light of the forthcoming electoral process.

With respect to social and economic issues, the Secretary-General noted that implementation of the land-transfer programme was slow and fraught with problems. Under the programme, up to 237,000 mz (manzana: 1 mz = 0.7 hectare) were to be transferred in three phases to a maximum of 47,500 people, including ex-combatants of both sides and landholders (people who had occupied land without title during the conflict). The land-transfer proposal, made by the Secretary-General and accepted separately by the Government and FMLN in 1992,⁽⁴⁹⁾ was set out in detail in an addendum to the current report.⁽⁵⁰⁾ It was a supplement to the Peace Agreement and deemed an integral part of it.

During the first phase, scheduled from October 1992 to January 1993, 15,400 people were to receive 77,000 mz, with priority to demobilized FMLN combatants, who would be given all available land not legally transferred to landholders. By the reporting date, some 45,000 mz (made up of 36 State and 196 private properties) had been acquired and earmarked for 10,000 FMLN ex-combatants and landholders; issuance of most of the titles were awaiting completion of legal formalities. The second phase started in February when EC funds became available for the purchase of 20,000 mz for 4,000 recipients. EC required that FMLN and FAES equally benefit from its assistance. Thus far, 11 properties totalling 1,400 mz had been registered and transferred to over 600 FAES ex-combatants. The third phase would parcel out 140,500 mz to some 28,100 recipients, for which neither the land nor the estimated $85 million required was currently available.

The programme suffered a number of delays that had generated tension. This was true in the case of loans for agricultural activities. The Government had agreed to grant credit to landholders who had negotiated acquisition of land they occupied, but not to about 80 per cent of those who had not. In addition, original contracts for land legalization did not conform to the accords and had to be changed. The number of landholders was likely to be significantly higher than the ceiling of 25,000 stipulated in the Agreement. Besides rejecting some of the plots identified as not meeting expectations, FMLN had had difficulty submitting the names and identification numbers of designated recipients; thus, after six months into the programme, lists had yet to be presented for 97 of the 196 properties already negotiated for.

Under existing laws, moreover, land transfer through the Lands Bank involved 17 stages of time-consuming steps. The Government was endeavouring to accelerate the process in cooperation with ONUSAL and FMLN, and with the United States Agency for International Development and EC (the donors). Despite several ONUSAL requests, the Government had not provided information relating to FAES, in particular on its negotiations with the Lands Bank. Consequently, ONUSAL had been unable either to verify beneficiary lists or to observe the negotiations in the buying and selling of land and in the determination of the number of beneficiaries, as it had done in the case of FMLN.

The Secretary-General noted with concern the relocation, by the Government and FMLN, of landholders occupying land whose rightful owners were not willing to sell. This was contrary to the 1992 agreed land-transfer proposal, which provided that such landholders would be relocated last, based on the Peace Agreement's stipulation that combatants of either side were to have priority and be given land as they demobilized, from which they were not to be evicted until a solution was found to relocate them. However, pressures were brought to bear on the Government by landowners wanting to repossess their land and on FMLN by those occupying land not available for purchase, as that precluded their access to credit for housing and agricultural production. Moreover, some FMLN ex-combatants had been unwilling to accept State lands offered by the Government in the expectation of getting private land closer to where their families lived.

On 22 February, government, business and labour representatives signed a landmark agreement at the Forum for Economic and Social Consultation, recognizing for the first time the right of labour to associate and establishing the principle of a tripartite mechanism for dealing with labour conflicts. On 14 April, the Forum created a commission to examine 29 International Labour Organisation conventions proposed by labour for ratification.

Under the National Reconstruction Plan, government programmes for the reintegration of some 11,000 FMLN ex-combatants, including the war-disabled, were under way. A UNDP-coordinated agricultural training programme and the distribution of agricultural tools and household goods were completed by the end of April. The programme for industrial and services training was expected to continue up to August. As to credit for small business ventures and agricultural activities, the Government and FMLN set the interest rate at 14 per cent. Programmes for the war-disabled had met with difficulties stemming from the failure of both sides to agree on provisions for long-term rehabilitation. The functioning of the Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-disabled, created by Decree No. 416 of 13 December 1992, was dependent on the Government's making its initial financial contribution on 22 June. EC would contribute some $46,000 upon registration of the Fund's potential beneficiaries.

ONUSAL had had no access to the implementation of programmes for FAES reintegration, including the payment of compensation to demobilized troops. On 4 February, agreement was reached on a reintegration programme for former FMLN officers and medium-rank commanders, covering a maximum of 600 and providing for training, subsistence allowance, credit for production ventures and housing. UNDP began to administer the training and technical assistance part of the programme in April, to be completed by June.

FMLN had begun reorganizing according to its full legal status as a political party, granted by the Supreme Electoral Tribunal of El Salvador in 1992.⁽¹³⁾ It had replaced its five-member General Command with a 15-member national committee, appointed a Coordinator-General with authority to represent the party, set up offices in municipalities throughout El Salvador and held meetings for the recruitment of new membership. Draft legislation providing security for its leadership had been approved by COPAZ and was before the Legislative Assembly for consideration. The Government, by making available four radio frequencies (one AM and three FM), had partially implemented its agreement of 1992 to assign a series of radio and television frequencies by 15 January 1993.

Of special significance was the fact that public administration in the former zones of conflict had been fully restored. Most of the mayors and judges had returned to their jurisdictions. By mid-April, the mayors had organized town meetings for the purpose of identifying community reconstruction projects.

The groundwork had been laid for expanding the ONUSAL mandate to include the observation of the electoral process, for which the Secretary-General recommended that an Electoral Division be established as part of ONUSAL (see above, under "Electoral process").

The long-delayed implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces was on its way to completion (see above, under "Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of FAES"), but the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth remained outstanding (see above, under "Commission on the Truth"). The release of the Commission report was shortly followed by a general amnesty, approved by simple majority in the Legislative Assembly. The Secretary-General expressed concern at the haste of that step, stating it would have been preferable if the amnesty had been promulgated by a broad degree of national consensus.

The successful conclusion of the Salvadorian peace process, the Secretary-General stressed, could be achieved only if the necessary financing was forthcoming. He further stressed that, while urgent response was required from the international donor community and the Government, it was the Government's responsibility to define fiscal policies and set public expenditure priorities to enable it to fulfil its commitment to implement the Peace Agreement fully.

In the light of the foregoing, the Secretary-General recommended to the Security Council that it renew the mandate of ONUSAL until 30 November 1993 and that it authorize the addition to it of an Electoral Division to observe the 1994 elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 27 May to consider the Secretary-General's report, together with its addenda, following which it unanimously adopted resolution 832(1993).

7. Reaffirms its support for the Secretary-General's use of his good offices in the El Salvador peace process;

Security Council resolution 832(1993)

27 May 1993 Meeting 3223 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25851).

Report of the Secretary-General (November). On 23 November 1993,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a second report describing the overall activities of ONUSAL during the period 22 May to 20 November. According to the report, ONUSAL held a series of meetings separately with the Government and FMLN in late August, in an effort to find ways of tackling the serious delays hindering the full implementation of the key aspects of the 1992 Peace Agreement. At their meeting with ONUSAL on 8 September, the parties agreed "to sweep the table clean" of all outstanding commitments before the start of the electoral campaign on 20 November.

During the reporting period, ONUSAL's Military Division was concerned mainly with activities resulting from the 23 May explosion at Managua of an arsenal belonging to an FMLN constituent group that led to the declaration of the existence of 128 widely dispersed FMLN arms caches: 109 in El Salvador, 14 in Nicaragua and 5 in Honduras (see above, under "FMLN armaments"). ONUSAL, in cooperation with FMLN and the national authorities involved, completed verification and destruction of the caches in August.

Development of plans to reduce the officer strength of FAES was in progress. However, the reintegration programmes, notably land transfer and training, for FAES and FMLN troops already demobilized had been so delayed that only a small percentage had benefited. Payment to them of one year's wages in compensation, as stipulated by the Agreement, had not begun. The new State Intelligence Agency had been created, but it was not clear that the conduct of intelligence activities fully complied with the doctrinal principles set forth in the Agreement and with the reformed Constitution. The Government had yet to clarify the ultimate disposition of the files on individuals maintained by the disbanded National Intelligence Department; instead of being destroyed or transferred to the new Agency, those files were currently with the FAES Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The recovery of privately held arms could not be fully implemented until two laws governing the use of arms by individuals and by security institutions were enacted; one draft law was near enactment but the other had to be submitted to the Legislative Assembly. Despite contractual difficulties, the mine-clearance programme, coordinated by the Military Division and covering 425 minefields, was expected to be completed by the end of the year.

A number of unresolved problems related to the police and public security provisions of the Agreement and complementary accords, notably, the fulfilment of entrance requirements to the National Public Security Academy, which was open to candidates as follows: 20 per cent from FMLN, 20 per cent from the National Police and 60 per cent from civilians who did not take part in the armed conflict. To verify that former members of the National Guard and Treasury Police (former public security bodies) and the elite battalions (immediate reaction infantry battalions) had not also been admitted as civilians, ONUSAL asked the Government for personnel lists of those entities prior to their dissolution and demobilization. It further asked for documentation to verify fulfilment of the special entrance requirements and functional limitations applicable to former members of the Criminal Investigation Commission and Special Antinarcotics Unit who were being considered for PNC, or had already been admitted to it. As to the ongoing use of FAES for public security duties, the Government had not yet reported to the Legislative Assembly that the exceptional circumstances permitting such use existed.

ONUSAL continued to press the Government to accelerate the phasing out of the National Police in line with the rate of PNC deployment. The two-stage plan recently presented would extend the process from October 1993 to October 1994.

Regarding economic and social matters, the land-transfer programme continued to suffer delays from technical, financial and legal difficulties. Chief among these was the inability of FMLN to satisfy the Government's requirement that all beneficiaries on its lists be verified. None the less, at the Secretary-General's behest, the Government agreed on 17 November to accept the FMLN lists for 120 private properties and 50 State properties already negotiated for, giving 12,000 beneficiaries access to credit for agricultural production by year's end. In addition, a German-financed project for the construction of 2,000 houses for FMLN ex-combatants was inaugurated in eight departments at the end of October.

Discussions in the Forum for Economic and Social Consultation resulted in the lifting of restrictions on unionization of rural workers. To institutionalize consultation on labour issues, the Government, business and labour agreed to the creation of a Labour Council within the Ministry of Labour.

In keeping with its new status as a political party, FMLN held a national convention on 5 September to choose its candidates for the 1994 elections. Besides the previously assigned AM and FM radio frequencies, the Government additionally assigned for FMLN use one short-wave and two television frequencies and exempted from tax all vehicles imported for the use of its leadership. Under a law of 17 June providing protection to individuals subject to special security, FMLN bodyguards were incorporated into PNC as supernumeraries.

The first stage of the electoral process was completed. The second was still in progress; by 19

November, the Supreme Electoral Tribunal had received 787,834 registration forms, and the following day the campaign began.

It was of great concern to the Secretary-General that the campaign should have begun when key elements of the accords remained only partially implemented and when there were signs that some ugly features of El Salvador's past had reappeared, such as the possible re-emergence of death squads noted by the Human Rights Division reports and the October murders of two FMLN leaders. He said ONUSAL reports on public security matters gave the impression of a lack of commitment, at some levels of Government, to the objective of the Peace Agreement, as reflected in the denial to PNC of the necessary logistical and technical resources, the incorporation into it of military personnel, the prolongation of the existence of the National Police, and the denial to ONUSAL of information it required for verification purposes. Severe delays in implementing the reintegration programmes for ex-combatants had given rise to tension that could become a source of instability.

The Secretary-General thus called for more financing, technical assistance and political will from the parties. In addition, he had asked his Special Representative to obtain the Government's and FMLN's agreement to a new timetable setting the firmest possible dates for completing implementation of the most important outstanding points in the Peace Agreement. In this connection, a significant step was taken on 5 November when, in response to the Special Representative's initiative, six of the seven presidential candidates signed a statement solemnly committing themselves to maintain the constructive evolution of the peace process and to implement all the obligations contained in the Peace Agreement, and rejecting any politically motivated violence or intimidation.

In view of the clear necessity for ONUSAL to continue to carry out its verification and good-offices functions through the forthcoming elections and inauguration of the newly elected President on 1 June 1994, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend ONUSAL's mandate for a further period of six months, until 31 May 1994.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 888(1993) on 30 November.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, 714(1991) of 30 September 1991, 729(1992) of 14 January 1992, 784(1992) of 30 October 1992, 791(1992) of 30 November 1992 and 832(1993) of 27 May 1993,

Recalling also its presidential statements of 18 March 1993, 11 June 1993 and 5 November 1993,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1993,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to support the full and timely implementation of the agreements signed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to maintain and consolidate peace and promote reconciliation in El Salvador,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's observation that the peace process in El Salvador has advanced, and that significant progress has been made towards other objectives of the Peace Agreement,

Concerned at the continuing problems and delays in implementing several important components of the Peace Agreement, including inter alia those related to the transfer of lands, the reintegration into civilian society of ex-combatants and war-disabled, the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police, and the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth,

Noting with concern the recent acts of violence in El Salvador, which may indicate renewed activity by illegal armed groups, and could, if unchecked, negatively affect the peace process in El Salvador including the elections scheduled for March 1994,

Welcoming in this regard the efforts of the Secretary-General in cooperation with the Government of El Salvador towards the establishment of a mechanism to investigate illegal armed groups and their possible connection with renewed political violence,

Noting also with concern the seemingly politically motivated murders of members of the different political parties, including the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional and the Alianza Republicana Nacionalista,

Noting that El Salvador has entered a critical phase in the peace process and that political parties have just begun a campaign for the elections to be held in March 1994, which should take place in a peaceful environment,

Stressing the importance of free and fair elections as an essential element of the entire peace process in El Salvador,

Noting recent progress in voter registration and stressing the importance that all registered voters be issued relevant credentials so as to enable broad participation in the elections,

Welcoming the commitment of the presidential candidates to peace and stability in El Salvador of 5 November 1993, as referred to in paragraph 92 of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming also the recent announcement by the Government of El Salvador to expedite the implementation of the land-transfer programme,

Welcoming also the work of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) and noting its vital importance to the entire peace and reconciliation process in El Salvador,

Reiterating the necessity, in this as in all peace-keeping operations, to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources,

2. Condemns recent acts of violence in El Salvador;

3. Expresses concern that important elements of the Peace Agreement remain only partially implemented;

6. Reaffirms also its support, in this context, for the efforts of the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Government of El Salvador, aimed at the immediate launching of an impartial, independent and credible investigation into illegal armed groups, and urges all sectors of society in El Salvador to cooperate in such an investigation;

7. Calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's Special Representative and ONUSAL in their task of verifying the parties' implementation of their commitments and urges them to complete such implementation within the framework of the agreed calendar and the new timetable proposed by ONUSAL;

8. Stresses the need to ensure that the police and public security provisions of the Peace Agreement are scrupulously observed, with full ONUSAL verification, and that necessary steps are taken to complete the recovery of all weapons held by private individuals, in contravention of the Peace Agreement;

9. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to remove all obstacles facing implementation of the land-transfer programme and stresses the need to accelerate reintegration programmes for ex-combatants of both sides in conformity with the Peace Agreement;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 888(1993)

30 November 1993 Meeting 3321 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26820).

Composition

In 1993, the Secretary-General appointed Augusto Ramírez-Ocampo as his Special Representative and ONUSAL's Chief of Mission with effect from 1 April,⁽⁵²⁾ succeeding Iqbal Riza, who had served in that capacity until 6 March. That decision was conveyed to the Security Council President on 18 March, which the Council welcomed four days later.⁽⁵³⁾ Brigadier-General Victor Suanzes Pardo, Chief of the Military Division, served as Interim Chief of Mission until the arrival of the new Special Representative on 14 April.⁽⁵⁴⁾

The Military Division, composed of 74 military observers in May,⁽⁵⁵⁾ began to be phased out on 1 June, the same date on which the Electoral Division started to be phased in. By 1 November, the strength of ONUSAL stood at 31 military observers, contributed by Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, India, Ireland, Spain, Sweden and Venezuela. There were also seven medical officers from Argentina.⁽⁵⁶⁾ The reduced Division was restructured and redeployed in two regional offices in the eastern and western parts of El Salvador, from which they patrolled the former zones of conflict.

Also by 1 November, ONUSAL had 277 police observers contributed by Austria, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, France, Guyana, Italy, Mexico, Norway, Spain and Sweden; 19 of them were seconded to the Human Rights Division.

Financing

On 2 March 1993,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered the Secretary-General's 1992 report⁽¹³⁾ on the financing of ONUSAL from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993, as well as on the budget performance for the preceding periods from 1 January to 31 October and from 1 to 30 November 1992. The General Assembly had decided in 1992 on measures for the continued maintenance of ONUSAL until 28 February 1993,⁽⁵⁵⁾ pending ACABQ's consideration of that report.

Representatives of the Secretary-General updated the information to 31 December 1992, as follows: the outstanding assessments for ONUSAL amounted to $11,593,125; with the merger of the special accounts for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) and ONUSAL, the ONUCA/ONUSAL Special Account showed a combined miscellaneous and interest income of $4,591,654, recommended for retention, and a net operating deficit of $6,736,160, reduced to $2,146,153 as at 31 January 1993.

ONUSAL expenditures from 1 January to 30 November 1992, as at 31 December 1992, amounted to $36,408,900 gross ($34,589,800 net), against an apportionment of $39 million gross ($37 million net), resulting in savings of $2,591,100 gross ($2,410,200 net). As to expenditures for the period 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993, estimates were reduced to $18.1 million gross ($16.7 million net), due to downward adjustments for major expenditures, including reductions of military personnel and delays in the recruitment of civilian police. Owing to possible additional reductions in respect of other items of expenditure that the Secretary-General was asked to review (subsistence allowance, salaries and staff costs, the number of administrative staff and the grades of senior staff, consultant fees, premises and accommodation), ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate $17.2 million gross ($16 million net) for ONUSAL for the period 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993.

ACABQ saw no need to retain the $4.6 million in the ONUCA/ONUSAL Special Account and recommended that the amount be credited to Member States against assessments for ONUSAL. Since the $8,045,600 gross ($7,514,200 net) authorized for commitment and apportioned by the Assembly in 1992 for the period ending 28 February 1993 had already been fully assessed, what remained to be assessed on Member States for the current mandate period, after crediting the combined income, was $4.6 million gross ($3.9 million net).

As to the period after 31 May 1993, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General be given commitment authority in the amount of $2.9 million gross ($2.7 million net) per month for the period of the extension, with prior ACABQ concurrence. Should ONUSAL's mandate be extended, ACABQ asked the Secretary-General to submit cost estimates for the extension period, together with a detailed performance report for the current mandate period, not later than 1 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/223 without vote on 16 March 1993.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, and Council resolution 730(1992) of 16 January 1992, by which the Council terminated the mandate of the Group,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, and Council resolution 729(1992) of 14 January 1992, by which the Council decided to extend and enlarge the mandate of the Mission, as well as the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 791(1992) of 30 November 1992,

Recalling its resolution 46/240 of 22 May 1992, wherein it decided, in principle, that the special accounts for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador should be merged,

Noting the current status of the combined Special Account for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Reaffirming that the costs of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee regarding economy measures, and urges the Secretary-General to implement them immediately;

3. Takes note of the outstanding assessments and the net operating deficit of the combined Special Account for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador;

4. Urges all Member States to expedite payments of their assessed contributions to the Special Account in full and on time;

5. Decides, at this stage, to appropriate to the Special Account, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 29 of the report of the Advisory Committee, for the operation of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador for the period from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993, an amount of 17.2 million United States dollars gross (16 million dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 8,045,600 dollars gross (7,514,200 dollars net) authorized and apportioned in accordance with its decision 47/452 of 22 December 1992;

6. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the remaining amount of 9,154,400 dollars gross

(8,485,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993 among Member States in accordance with the composition of the groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994;

7. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the remaining estimated staff assessment income of 668,600 dollars for the period from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993 approved for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador;

8. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the combined miscellaneous and interest income of 4.6 million dollars in the Special Account for the period from 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993;

9. Decides also that the remaining unencumbered balance of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America shall be credited to Member States against their assessed contributions for the next mandate period of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, should the Security Council decide to renew the mandate of the Mission beyond 31 May 1993, or shall be made available to be set off against the assessed contributions of Member States for other United Nations peace-keeping operations, in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, in the event that the Council decides not to renew the mandate of the Mission beyond 31 May 1993;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador at a rate not to exceed 2.9 million dollars gross (2.7 million dollars net) per month for the period beginning 1 June 1993, should the Security Council decide to continue the Mission beyond 31 May 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for the period beyond 31 May 1993, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

11. Decides to establish the contributions of the Czech Republic and Slovakia to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-eighth session;

12. Invites the new Member States mentioned in paragraph 11 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador are administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandate, and to include information on the arrangements in this regard in his report on the financial performance of the Mission;

15. Decides that future reports on the status of contributions and financial statements prepared by the Secretariat shall provide combined information for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador;

16. Decides also to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador".

General Assembly resolution 47/223

16 March 1993 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/797/Add.1) without vote, 12 March (meeting 56); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/C.5/47/L.33); agenda items 119 & 122.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 55, 56; plenary 97.

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (July). By a report of 8 July 1993,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Secretary-General set out the costs of operating ONUSAL in the light of the enlargement and extension of its mandate from 1 June to 30 November 1993, as well as of his request for a further mandate renewal from 1 December 1993 up to 30 April 1994, to enable ONUSAL to complete the verification of the Salvadorian elections and for a transition period immediately thereafter.

For the current mandate period from 1 June to 30 November, the total cost of ONUSAL was estimated at $20,248,300 gross ($18,341,900 net); for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 April 1994, the total cost was estimated at $20,239,500 gross ($18,474,900 net). The Secretary-General requested appropriation of the first amount and apportionment thereof. In that connection, he said it would be prudent for continuing authorization to exist for ONUSAL, as well as for other peace-keeping operations. In the event that the Council decided to continue ONUSAL beyond 30 November 1993, he requested that provision be made for the second amount, either by appropriation or commitment authorization, together with apportionment thereof.

The cost for the liquidation phase, projected to take three months, was estimated at $3,219,100 gross ($3,015,100 net). A full report on the disposition of the ONUSAL assets would be submitted to the General Assembly through ACABQ. In connection with that phase, the Secretary-General requested that the Assembly extend to ONUSAL the special arrangements regarding the application of regulations 4.3 and 4.4 under article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, as it did to the United Nations Transition Assistance

Group in 1991.⁽⁵⁷⁾ That would allow retention of appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing troops and/or logistic support beyond the period stipulated under those regulations.

The ONUCA/ONUSAL Special Account showed an unencumbered balance of $14,835,505 ($829,032 for ONUSAL and $14,006,473 for ONUCA). However, assessed contributions amounting to $22,404,703 ($10,212,215 for ONUSAL and $12,192,488 for ONUCA) remained outstanding as at 31 May 1993, resulting in an operating deficit of $7,569,198. Loans totalling $5 million were made to the Special Account from the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund in order to meet cash requirements. Hence, the Secretary-General recommended that no action be taken as to the unutilized ONUCA balance of $1,813,985 and that it be retained in the ONUCA/ONUSAL Special Account.

Having reviewed the expenditure items and identified areas where savings could be achieved, ACABQ⁽⁵⁸⁾ recommended that the Assembly appropriate $18 million gross for 1 June to 30 November 1993; that, as decided by the Assembly in March, the unutilized ONUCA balance be credited to Member States against their assessments of $18 million gross for ONUSAL for the same period, thus reducing that amount to $16,186,015 gross; and that, should the Security Council extend ONUSAL beyond 30 November 1993, the Secretary-General should submit revised cost estimates for that extension and for ONUSAL's liquidation, based on a detailed performance report for the current mandate period and taking account of ACABQ's observations.

ACABQ concurred, on an exceptional basis, with the request relating to the application of the financial regulations mentioned above, but recommended that the Secretary-General enhance his communication with troop-contributing States to bring about the timely submission of their claims and relevant information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

On 14 September 1993, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/234 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, and Council resolution 729(1992) of 14 January 1992, by which the Council decided to extend and enlarge the mandate of the Observer Mission, as well as the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 832(1993) of 27 May 1993,

Recalling its resolution 46/240 of 22 May 1992, in which it decided, in principle, that the special accounts for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the United Nations Observer Group in Central America should be merged,

Noting the current status of the combined Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the United Nations Observer Group in Central America,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Expressing concern about the financial situation with regard to the Observer Mission owing to overdue payment by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears,

Also expressing concern about the delays in submission of budget documents until well into the financial period of the Observer Mission, which have contributed to the financing difficulties of the Mission,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the terms of the present resolution, and approves on an exceptional basis the special arrangements for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Observer Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy, to improve management, and to include in his report on this item to the General Assembly information on the steps taken in this regard;

3. Takes note of the outstanding assessments and the net operating deficit of the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the United Nations Observer Group in Central America;

4. Urges all Member States to expedite payments of their assessed contributions to the Special Account promptly and in full;

5. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 40 of the report of the Advisory Committee, for the operation of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1993, an amount of 18 million United States dollars gross (16,324,000 dollars net);

6. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 18 million dollars gross (16,324,000 dollars net) for the above-mentioned period among Member States in accordance with the composition of the groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/267 of 21 June 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and Assembly decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

7. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,676,000 dollars for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1993 approved for the Observer Mission;

8. Reiterates its decision in paragraph 9 of its resolution 47/223 of 16 March 1993;

9. Notes that, in the light of the termination of the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America as at 17 January 1992, the net estimated costs of the Observer Group will be revised to reflect a final recorded expenditure and that the financial obligations of Member States to the Group will be adjusted accordingly;

10. Decides that the remaining unencumbered balance of the Observer Group after the revision of the net estimated costs as mentioned above shall be first applied as credits to Member States against their assessed contributions for the current mandate period of the Observer Mission in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 9 of its resolution 47/223, on the understanding that:

(a) Those Member States whose payments to the Observer Group are lower than their adjusted obligations shall pay their remaining outstanding assessed contributions to the Group;

(b) Those Member States whose payments to the Observer Group exceed their adjusted obligations shall be credited in full with the difference;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the General Assembly with the recorded expenditure of the Observer Group in order to assist it in its decision on the adjustment of the financial obligations of Member States as noted in paragraph 9 above;

12. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the unutilized balance of 1,813,985 dollars in the Special Account for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1993;

13. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Observer Mission at a rate not to exceed 3 million dollars gross (2,720,000 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 December 1993 to 31 March 1994, should the Security Council decide to continue the Mission beyond 30 November 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for the period beyond 30 November 1993, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

14. Requests the Advisory Committee to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on action taken with regard to paragraph 13 above;

15. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, no later than 8 February 1994, budget proposals, including revised estimates for the period the Security Council might have decided to continue the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 30 November 1993;

16. Decides to establish the contributions of Andorra, the Czech Republic, Eritrea, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Monaco and Slovakia to the Observer Mission in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-eighth session;

17. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 16 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991.

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided in regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

General Assembly resolution 47/234

14 September 1993 Meeting 110 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/797/Add.2) without vote, 7 September (meeting 75); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.40), orally revised; agenda item 122.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 68, 69, 72, 75; plenary 110.

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (December). Following the extension of ONUSAL's mandate for the period from 1 December 1993 to 31 May 1994, the Secretary-General, in a report submitted to the General Assembly on 9 December 1993⁽⁵⁹⁾ on the financing of 17 peace-keeping operations, including ONUSAL, estimated that the cost of maintaining ONUSAL for five months, from 1 December 1993 to 30 April 1994, would amount to $18,137,400 gross ($16,475,500 net), appropriation and apportionment for which he requested. That figure was inclusive of the commitment of $12 million gross ($10,880,000 net) authorized by the Assembly resolution above for the four-month period from 1 December 1993 to 31 March 1994. An apportionment of the amount by major line-items of expenditure was provided, as was the revised apportionment for the preceding six-month period ending 30 November 1993 for comparison purposes.

ACABQ observed on 17 December⁽⁶⁰⁾ that it would be examining the detailed performance report of ONUSAL in February 1994 and that the current Assembly authorization of $12 million covered the period up to 31 March 1994; it therefore recommended that, currently, the amount of $12 million gross ($10,880,000 net) be maintained and assessed. It further pointed out⁽⁶¹⁾ that the cost estimates as presented in no way constituted the "normal" performance/financing reports submitted by the Secretary-General. His explanations notwithstanding, ACABQ expressed its serious concern over the manner of presentation, noting that it represented a lack of budgetary discipline and eroded the role of the General Assembly. It added that its recommendation for ONUSAL, as for the other 16 peace-keeping operations, was for commitment authority rather than appropriation in view of the fact that the relevant budgets had not been considered and approved.

As requested by ACABQ, the Secretary-General subsequently submitted a separate report on ONUSAL financing, containing essentially the same information as above, but in the standard form of presentation.⁽⁶²⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

The General Assembly, in December, adopted decision 48/468 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 8,823,500 United States dollars gross (8 million dollars net) for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador for the period from 1 December 1993 to 28 February 1994;

(b) Decided at that time to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount of 5,382,300 dollars gross (4,880,000 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

(c) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 502,300 dollars for the period from 1 December 1993 to 28 February 1994;

(d) Further decided that, in view of the expiration of the commitment authority on 28 February 1994, priority should be given to the cost estimates for the Observer Mission in the consideration by the General Assembly of peace-keeping budgets.

General Assembly decision 48/468

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/48/817) without vote, 22 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/48/L.20); agenda item 134.
Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 87.

Also on 23 December, the Assembly, by decision 48/484, decided that the item on the financing of ONUSAL remained for consideration during its forty-eighth session.

Guatemala situation

The President of Guatemala, Jorge Antonio Serrano Elías, personally delivered to the Secretary-General on 19 January 1993 a document containing a government proposal to the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) for the immediate signing of an agreement on a firm and lasting peace in the country. A copy was transmitted to the Secretary-General by the Permanent Representative of Guatemala to the United Nations on the same day.⁽⁶⁵⁾

The proposal, reported as having received the broadest possible support of the Guatemalan people, called for the signing of a peace agreement to end the country's internal armed conflict within a period not exceeding 90 days from the signing also of a human rights agreement that included provisions for immediate verification. In the event that agreement was not reached, the proposal called for the declaration of a definitive cease-fire at the end of the 90-day period and the temporary concentration of URNG's armed contingents at government-designated locations until a peace agreement was negotiated and procedures were established for their disarmament, demobilization and integration into the legal and institutional life of Guatemala. It was further proposed that the Secretary-General be requested to draw up the appropriate procedures.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Guatemala, on 19 February,⁽⁶⁴⁾ stated his understanding that the Secretary-General had reported orally on the proposal to the Security Council on 22 January and had expressed readiness to initiate steps for the establishment of a machinery to verify compliance with any agreement reached on human rights. In that connection, the Minister reiterated the request that the Secretary-General draw up the procedures needed to set the peace process in motion.

On 27 May,⁽⁶⁵⁾ however, EC issued a statement expressing concern over President Serrano's decision to break off constitutional order, in particular to dissolve Parliament and the Supreme Court. It urged the immediate re-establishment of those democratic institutions, saying they were fundamental to a successful conclusion of the peace process and the full observance of human rights. The subsequent return to constitutional order in Guatemala through legal and peaceful means was welcomed on 7 June⁽⁶⁶⁾ by EC, which expressed support for the new constitutional President, Ramiro de León Carpio.

The Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, at their meeting at Guatemala City on 17 June⁽⁶⁷⁾ to reaffirm their commitment to the strengthening of peace and democratic development of Central America, signed a Joint Declaration by which, among other things, they hailed the peaceful settlement of the recent political crisis in Guatemala, warmly welcomed an OAS resolution adopted on 8 June on the restoration of democracy in that country, and expressed their gratitude for the determination of all Guatemalan society, which fought resolutely to re-establish constitutional order.

In resolution 48/161, the General Assembly reiterated the importance of resuming the negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and URNG, bearing in mind the agreements achieved up to May 1993. It expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General and his representative for their participation in the Guatemalan peace process and, in that context, took note of the peace plan of Guatemala's President.

Nicaragua

On 27 August 1993, the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, meeting at San Salvador,⁽⁶⁸⁾ adopted a Declaration on the Situation in Nicaragua, by which they reaffirmed that peace in Central America was indivisible and that any development disrupting it had repercussions throughout the subregion. They condemned any act of violence and terrorism that threatened the lives and personal safety of Nicaraguans or the security of the State and the stability of the lawfully constituted Government; expressed solidarity with and support for President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro; appealed to all sectors of Nicaraguan society to assume their share of responsibility in building their country's future; supported the early implementation of the Agreement concluded on 21 August between the Government, Union Nacional Opositora and Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional, so that the obstacles impeding the institutional, economic and social normalization of Nicaragua might be removed; urged the subregion's Foreign Ministers to use their good offices to bring about national agreement in Nicaragua; and appealed for the international community's cooperation.

In resolution 48/161, the General Assembly supported the Nicaraguan Government's efforts to consolidate peace. In resolution 48/8, it encouraged Nicaragua to continue its efforts aimed at reconstruction and national reconciliation and called on the Secretary-General to provide, at the request of the Government, all possible assistance to support the consolidation of peace in, among other areas, the settlement of displaced and demobilized persons and refugees, land ownership and land tenure in rural areas, direct care for war victims, mine clearance and, in general, a process of sustained economic and social recovery and development that would render the peace and democracy achieved irreversible.

The Caribbean

Cuba-United States

Cuba continued in 1993 to protest to the Security Council against terrorist acts perpetrated against Cuba or Cuban juridical persons in which the United States was involved, either by commission or omission.

On 4 February,⁽¹⁾ it drew attention to the hijacking and diversion to the United States, on the morning of 29 December 1992, of a Cuban AN-28 aircraft bearing registration number CUT-110 and belonging to Aerocaribbean. Cuba asserted that the gravity of that air piracy—clearly defined as an act of terrorism condemnable by the international community—was compounded by the favourable reception, preferential treatment and attention lavished with fanfare on the hijackers at Miami International Airport, Florida, by United States authorities.

Cuba objected to the failure of the United States to take legal action against the perpetrators, who remained at large, having been admitted "on their own recognizance" into the United States.

United States embargo against Cuba

In accordance with its decision of 1992,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly included in its 1993 agenda an item on the necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba.

To bolster the need for ending that embargo, imposed more than 30 years earlier, Cuba transmitted to the Secretary-General several documents during the second half of the year. One was a study by an expert group giving what it described as the historical truth behind the embargo,⁽³⁾ justified by reason of Cuba's nationalization of properties belonging to United States companies but, in truth, imposed and strengthened to coerce Cuba into changing its political and economic system according to United States wishes; and underscoring the refusal of the United States to respond to repeated Cuban proposals for negotiations on the nationalization dispute. Another study, undertaken by Cuban experts,⁽⁴⁾ calculated the economic and social cost to Cuba of the embargo at $40.8 billion and detailed its negative impact on the Cuban population.

Also transmitted were 16 communications from NGOs and individuals⁽⁵⁾ urging the Assembly to call for an end to the economic blockade, as well as a letter citing specific examples⁽⁶⁾ that proved false the United States assertion that the economic blockade redirected the flow of convertible currencies that Cuba might otherwise have used to suppress its own population and support insurgencies abroad.

Report of the Secretary-General. As called for by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to it a report of 28 September 1993, with a later addendum,⁽⁷⁾ reproducing the replies from 32 States to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to repeal or invalidate any of their laws whose extraterritorial effects affected the sovereignty of other States. The report also noted that over 120 NGOs had urged the Secretary-General promptly to implement the Assembly's 1992 resolution on the subject.⁽⁸⁾

On 3 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/16 by recorded vote.

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of trade and international navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Taking note of the statement of the heads of State and Government at the third Ibero-American Summit, held at Salvador, Brazil, on 15 and 16 July 1993, concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another for political purposes,

Concerned about the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations whose extraterritorial effects affect the sovereignty of other States and the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction, as well as the freedom of trade and navigation,

Recalling its resolution 47/19 of 24 November 1992,

Having learned that, since the adoption of resolution 47/19, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba have been promulgated and applied, and concerned about the adverse effects of those measures on the Cuban population,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 47/19;

2. Reiterates its call to all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

Haiti

In 1993, intensive efforts were mounted by the Special Envoy for Haiti of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States, Dante Caputo (Argentina), in order to restore constitutional order to Haiti and the return of its democratically elected President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who remained in exile in the United States. Through those efforts, the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact were concluded, the first by President Aristide and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, General Raoul Cédras, and the second by the political parties represented in the Haitian Parliament. Both documents embodied a series of undertakings whose implementation would make possible the return of President Aristide to Haiti on 30 October.

As part of the Agreement, the Security Council established and authorized the dispatch to Haiti of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) (resolutions 862(1993) and 867(1993)), which was prevented by the Haitian military authorities, together with the police, from entering the country on 11 October, in serious breach of the Agreement. Consequently, the sanctions imposed against Haiti by the Council in mid-June, shortly before the Agreement was signed (841(1993)), and suspended in August when certain measures in the Agreement were implemented (861(1993)), were promptly reimposed in October (873(1993)) and thereafter strengthened (875(1993)).

The joint United Nations/OAS International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH), in operation in the country since February and whose United Nations component had been authorized by the Assembly in April to verify compliance with Haiti's human rights obligations, was withdrawn immediately following the prevention of UNMIH's emplacement, amidst mounting demonstrations and threats against the two missions and President Aristide's return.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council met on 30 October 1993, the date on which the President of Haiti was to have returned to his country pursuant to the Governors Island Agreement. In connection with its consideration of the item "The question concerning Haiti", the President made the following statement⁽⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3301.

"The Security Council continues to insist on full and unconditional compliance with the Governors Island Agreement and the early return of President Aristide and full democracy to Haiti, in accordance with relevant resolutions and statements by the President of the Council. It reaffirms that the Governors Island Agreement remains fully in force as the only valid framework for the solution of the crisis in Haiti which continues to threaten peace and security in the region.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned by the suffering of the Haitian people which results directly from the refusal by the military authorities to comply with the Governors Island process.

"The Security Council stresses that the signatories to the Governors Island Agreement remain obligated to comply in full with its provisions. The Security Council condemns the fact that General Cédras and the military authorities have not so far fulfilled their obligations under that Agreement. It moreover deplores the fact that the Haitian military leaders have fostered and perpetuated in Haiti a political and security environment which prevents the President's return to Haiti as provided for in paragraph 9 of the Governors Island Agreement.

"The Security Council expresses its support for the invitation by the Special Envoy of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States to all parties to meet next week solely to resolve the remaining obstacles to full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement. Further, it reaffirms its determination to maintain and effectively enforce sanctions on Haiti until the commitments made on Governors Island are honoured, and to consider strengthening them, in accordance with its resolutions 873(1993) and 875(1993) and its Presidential statement of 25 October 1993, if the military authorities continue to interrupt the democratic transition. In this regard, it requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council."

Report and communication (November). The Secretary-General, on 12 November,⁽¹⁰⁾ described events following the withdrawal of the two missions.

Prime Minister Robert Malval and General Cédras met on 23 October but failed to produce an agreement. Also on that date, a "Crisis Committee", composed of parliamentarians opposed to President Aristide and led by the President of the Chamber of Deputies, proposed an 11-point compromise calling for, among other things, simultaneous and immediate enactment of legislation on a broad amnesty and separation of the police from the military, the expansion of the Government and the elaboration by the Government of a protocol governing international missions to Haiti. Unable to constitute a quorum by 27 October, Parliament could not consider the proposals.

On 26 October, a parliamentary bloc called Front national pour le changement et la démocratie (FNCD), supporting President Aristide, offered its own eight-point compromise. President Aristide addressed the General Assembly on 28 October, asking for a total blockade of Haiti and calling for the departure of General Cédras, the Armed Forces High Command and General Staff, as well as the Police Chief, Colonel Michel François, and his allies; upon their departure, he would summon Parliament to vote on the police and amnesty bills. Lastly, he invited the Prime Minister and his Cabinet not to resign, in solidarity with the people.

On 29 October, the Special Envoy invited President Aristide and his Government, the President of the Chamber of Deputies, the President of the Senate and General Cédras to a meeting. Following several exchanges of correspondence clarifying certain conditions from the parties, a further exchange took place with the Special Envoy explaining that the Agreement remained valid and that the sequence of events which it envisaged could not be modified unilaterally.

The meeting took place on 5 November at Port-au-Prince. Present were the entire Government, assisted by two of President Aristide's advisers; the Senate President, accompanied by two FNCD senators; the President of the Chamber of Deputies, a member of the opposition, accompanied by two FNCD senators and an opposition deputy; and the international community, represented by the four Friends of the Secretary-General (Canada, France, United States, Venezuela) and the United Nations. The seats reserved for the military remained empty. Less than an hour into the meeting, a letter of 4 November from General Cédras was delivered to the Special Envoy, criticizing the planning of the meeting in the absence of the signatories to the Agreement and the use of foreign civilians to provide internal security. The meeting was thus adjourned with the participants' agreement.

In a statement to the press, the Special Envoy described as regrettable the absence of the military authorities—the party responsible for prolonging the crisis in Haiti and for the reimposition of the sanctions. He pointed out again that the basis for any settlement of the Haitian crisis was the Agreement, in the context of which he reaffirmed the international community's determination to persevere in the search for a negotiated settlement.

On 12 November,⁽¹¹⁾ Haiti informed the Security Council of a meeting between President Aristide and a government delegation in Washington, DC., from 9 to 11 November. Several resolutions were adopted, some of which affirmed that: the Government of Prime Minister Malval remained in power with the absolute confidence of the President of the Republic; the Prime Minister's mandate was consistent with, inter alia, the Constitution and the Governors Island Agreement; and the Agreement remained the sole framework for resolving the Haitian crisis.

Other resolutions called on the Haitian military to honour its commitments under the Agreement, requested the international community to ensure the immediate return of MICIVIH and UNMIH to Haiti, and called on the Cabinet Ministers to rally all democratic forces willing to strive for the Agreement's implementation and the establishment of the rule of law in Haiti. By a final resolution, the President decided to implement an urgent economic and social programme to alleviate the suffering of the Haitian people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

At a meeting of the Security Council on 15 November, the President made the following statement⁽¹²⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3314.

"The Security Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question concerning Haiti and the letter dated 12 November 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Haiti to the United Nations.

"The Security Council commends the efforts of the Special Envoy of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and the Organization of American States, Mr. Dante Caputo, takes note of his oral report made to the Council on 12 November 1993 and confirms its full support for his continued active diplomacy for resolving the crisis in Haiti.

"The Security Council condemns the military authorities in Port-au-Prince for failing to comply fully with the Governors Island Agreement and in particular with points 7, 8 and 9. It reaffirms that this Agreement constitutes the only valid framework for resolving the crisis in Haiti, which continues to threaten peace and security in the region.

"The Security Council also reaffirms its support for the democratically elected President, Mr. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and for the legitimate Government of Mr. Robert Malval. It recalls that it holds the military authorities responsible for the security of the members of this Government and for the security of the United Nations and Organization of American States personnel in Haiti.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned by the plight of the Haitian people. It reaffirms that the military authorities in Haiti are fully responsible for this suffering which directly results from their non-compliance with their public commitments to the Governors Island Agreement. The Council expresses its determination to minimize the impact of the present situation on the most vulnerable groups and calls upon Member States to continue, and to intensify, their humanitarian assistance to the people of Haiti. The Security Council welcomes in this regard the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch a team of additional humanitarian personnel to Haiti.

"The Security Council encourages the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, to work for the earliest possible return of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH). The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to continue planning for additional measures including for an appropriate United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) to be deployed as conditions permit, consistent with the Governors Island Agreement.

"The Security Council stresses that the sanctions contained in resolutions 841(1993), 873(1993) and 875(1993) will remain in force until the objectives of the Governors Island Agreement are fulfilled, including the departure of the Commander-in-Chief of the Haitian Armed Forces, the creation of a new police force permitting the restoration of constitutional order to Haiti and the return of the democratically elected President.

"The Security Council reaffirms its determination, expressed in the above-mentioned resolutions, to ensure the full and effective enforcement of current sanctions. It welcomes measures taken to this effect by States on a national basis in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and relevant Security Council resolutions. In this regard, the Council is prepared to consider additional mechanisms and practical measures to help verify the full compliance with the decisions of the Security Council.

"The Security Council reaffirms its determination to consider strengthening the measures regarding Haiti in accordance with its resolutions 873(1993) and 875(1993) and its presidential statements of 25 October 1993 and of 30 October 1993 if the military authorities continue to obstruct full compliance with the Governors Island Agreement, thus preventing the restoration of lawful order and democracy in Haiti."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 6 December 1993, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/27.

On 23 December, by decision 48/484, the Assembly retained the agenda item on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti for consideration during the forty-eighth session.

(For the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Haiti, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

International Civilian Mission in Haiti

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report, dated 24 March 1993,⁽¹⁴⁾ stating that, on 8 January, President Aristide made the following requests: deployment by the United Nations and OAS of an international civilian mission in Haiti to monitor respect for human rights and the elimination of all forms of violence; establishment of dialogue among the Haitian parties for the purpose of reaching agreement on the appointment by the President of a Prime Minister to lead a Government of national concord aimed at the full restoration of democratic order, on the reform of Haitian institutions (the judicial system, armed forces and police) and on international assistance for national reconstruction; and a system of guarantees to ensure a lasting solution.

The report noted that the Special Envoy for Haiti, in a series of consultations undertaken since his appointment in December 1992⁽¹⁵⁾ to help resolve the Haitian crisis, sought to achieve agreement on three main issues: the return of President Aristide to Haiti, the appointment of a Prime Minister to head a Government of national concord, and the question of amnesty. As a result of his recent meetings with the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces and the Prime Minister of the de facto Government, Marc Bazin, the Special Envoy obtained from both acceptance in principle of the proposed mission, as well as of the proposed dialogue among the Haitian parties.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General dispatched an advance team, together with a survey group, to Haiti on 13 February to make the necessary preparations for the deployment of the United Nations component of the mission. A three-member human rights team also visited Haiti, from 15 to 22 February, to determine how the mission's tasks should be undertaken. As determined by the Secretary-General and OAS, with President Aristide's agreement, the mission, to be called the International Civilian Mission in Haiti, would be integrated under one Head of Mission, to be appointed jointly by the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and OAS, under whom would be a Director for Human Rights, and an integrated structure down to the level of Local Office Coordinator.

An annex to the report contained a series of recommendations for the deployment of the Mission, the modalities of its operation and requirements in terms of personnel and financial resources. Its initial task would be to verify Haiti's compliance with its human rights obligations, as laid down in the Haitian Constitution and in international human rights instruments to which Haiti was a party, and make recommendations as appropriate, so that a climate conducive to the restoration of constitutional authority might be created. It was to devote special attention to respect for the right to life and integrity and security of person, and to freedom of expression and association.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In addition to the Secretary-General's report, the General Assembly had before it three declarations adopted by the Permanent Council of OAS on 13 January, 11 February and 5 March. The first considered that the partial elections to the Haitian Parliament held by the de facto Government in January were illegitimate; the second trusted that MICIVIH would have the agreed safeguards for the performance of its functions; and the third condemned the recent acts of organized violence and serious human rights violations in Haiti.

Having taken note of those documents, the Assembly adopted resolution 47/20 B without vote on 20 April.

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered further the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Recalling its resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991, 46/138 of 17 December 1991, 47/20 A of 24 November 1992 and 47/143 of 18 December 1992, as well as the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/68 of 10 March 1993,

Welcoming resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and MRE/RES.4/92 adopted on 3 and 8 October 1991, 17 May 1992 and 13 December 1992, respectively, by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States,

Also welcoming resolution CP/RES.594(923/92) and declarations CP/DEC.8(927/93), CP/DEC.9(931/93) and CP/DEC.10(934/93) adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States on 10 November 1992, and 13 January, 11 February and 5 March 1993, respectively,

Deploping the fact that, despite the efforts of the international community, the legitimate government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has not been re-established and that violent denial of human rights and civil and political liberties continues in Haiti,

Reiterating that the goal of the international community remains the early restoration of democracy in Haiti and the return of President Aristide, the full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the promotion of social and economic development in Haiti,

Strongly supportive of the continuing leadership by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States of the efforts of the international community to reach a political solution to the Haitian crisis,

Noting with satisfaction the designation by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of a Special Envoy for Haiti and the designation by the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States of the same Special Envoy,

Welcoming the agreement which has made possible the deployment of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti by the United Nations and the Organization of American States, as described in the letter dated 8 January 1993 to the Secretary-General from President

Aristide, which is contained in annex I to the report of the Secretary-General,

Convinced that the work of the Mission can contribute to the full observance of human rights and create a climate propitious to the restoration of the constitutional authority,

Expressing its agreement with declaration CP/DEC.8(927/93) of the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States that the partial elections to Parliament held by the de facto government in January 1993 would be illegitimate,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti and the recommendations contained therein,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein for United Nations participation, jointly with the Organization of American States, in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, with the initial task of verifying compliance with Haiti's international human rights obligations, with a view to making recommendations thereon, in order to assist in the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the re-establishment of democracy in Haiti;

2. Decides to authorize the deployment without delay of the United Nations participation in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti and requests the Secretary-General to take the steps necessary to expedite and strengthen its presence in Haiti;

3. Expresses its full support for the International Civilian Mission to Haiti and urges that all parties afford it timely, complete and effective cooperation;

4. Reiterates the need for an early return of President Aristide to resume his constitutional functions as President, as the means to restore without further delay the democratic process in Haiti;

5. Strongly supports the process of political dialogue under the auspices of the Special Envoy with a view to resolving the political crisis in Haiti;

6. Considers that any modifications regarding the economic measures recommended by the ad hoc meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States should be considered according to progress in the observance of human rights and in the solution of the political crisis leading to the restoration of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

7. Reiterates that any entity resulting from actions of the de facto regime, including the partial elections to Parliament in January 1993, is illegitimate;

8. Reaffirms once again the commitment of the international community to an increase in technical, economic and financial cooperation when constitutional order is restored in Haiti, as a support for its economic and social development efforts and in order to strengthen its institutions responsible for dispensing justice and guaranteeing democracy, political stability and economic development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to make regular reports to the General Assembly on the work of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, and in particular to report no later than September 1993 on the outcome of the comprehensive review referred to in paragraph 95 of annex III to his report;

10. Decides to keep open the consideration of this item until a solution to the situation is found.

MICIVIH reports. As requested by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General transmitted to it the Mission's periodic reports on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, which were also transmitted to OAS by the Special Envoy. The first of these was an interim report dated 3 June 1993,⁽⁶⁾ covering the period 9 February to 31 May.

The most serious and greatest incidence of human rights violations observed by the Mission included: violations of the right to physical integrity and individual security, intended primarily to restrict or prohibit freedom of expression, of assembly and of peaceful association; abridgement of the freedom of the press, by the continued closure of radio stations and by subjecting journalists and reporters to threats, intimidation, harassment, assault and sometimes detention; systematic beatings and torture; deaths in detention following torture; enforced disappearances, several cases of which the Mission was investigating; and arbitrary executions, perpetrated by "zenglendos" (criminal recruits operating at night in the slums and working-class districts), paramilitary groups, bands of delinquents or State agents.

The report cited cases for each of the foregoing categories of violations, which the Mission had communicated to local or departmental authorities, or, for the most serious cases, to the High Command of the Haitian Armed Forces. Written replies had yet to be received, but the High Command had orally informed the Mission that it had taken measures against perpetrators within the army's ranks.

The report observed that the Mission's presence had encouraged some Haitians to exercise their right to free expression and association and had taken the Haitian police and their auxiliaries somewhat by surprise, but had not led them to abandon their repressive practices. With political negotiations deadlocked, the Armed Forces had adopted a more aggressive attitude to prevent or reduce contact between the Mission and the population.

A second report, transmitted on 25 October,⁽¹⁷⁾ covered the Mission's activities from 1 June to 31 August. The Mission gave wide publicity to its presence and mandate by establishing contacts with local associations, churches and the Haitian authorities, by using radio and television spots, and by distributing information on its purposes and objectives in French and Creole. It intensified its information-gathering, visited prisons and other detention sites, notified local and judicial authorities about cases of concern, submitting recommendations as necessary; and arranged access to legal representation and/or medical treatment for victims. It maintained a dissuasive presence whenever it was feared that violations might occur, such as at peaceful gatherings or demonstrations.

The report gave a full analysis of the human rights situation during the reporting period, based on information gathered on violations of the rights to life, personal integrity and security, and freedom of expression and association. Among the violation cases cited were several assassinations, notably the killings at Port-au-Prince, outside City Hall, at the time of the reinvestiture of the elected mayor on 8 September and the assassinations of Antoine Izméry, a prominent supporter of President Aristide and co-founder of the Joint Committee for the Emergence of the Truth, and of Jean-Claude Maturin near the Church of Sacré-Coeur on 11 September. Thirty cases of enforced disappearance in the capital alone were reported, as were several hundred cases of arbitrary arrests, illegal detention and torture throughout the country. The victims were usually members of political groups or organizations, individual activists or their relatives, or supporters of President Aristide. Many people who had had contact with the Mission became targets of threats by the military.

Apart from the military's clear refusal to permit public demonstrations in support of President Aristide's return, the report stated that the September assassinations appeared to have succeeded in creating a climate of fear in which no such demonstrations were attempted. On the other hand, hostile groups of demonstrators were able to invade the Ministry of Finance on two occasions and to disrupt the investiture of the new Minister for Foreign Affairs. Moreover, a large gathering of self-styled Duvalierists was permitted in central Port-au-Prince on 22 September.

An addendum to the report, transmitted on 18 November,⁽¹⁸⁾ covered the period 1 September to 15/16 October, when the Mission evacuated Haiti for security reasons. The report noted many cases of arbitrary arrests, illegal detention and torture linked to attempts at exercising the right to freedom of expression, mostly of support for President Aristide. It also noted over 60 killings or suspect deaths in Port-au-Prince during September, including targeted assassinations of local political activists by paramilitary groups linked to the Armed Forces.

The Mission's investigation into the assassination of Antoine Izméry found that the perpetrators included an Armed Forces member and several "attaches" (civilian auxiliaries of the army) and concluded that the assassination could have been carried out only with the complicity, if not the direct participation, of high-ranking army members.

National political leaders were also targeted, among them the Minister of Justice, gunned down on 14 October. Groups hostile to the constitutional Government were not only permitted but also encouraged to engage in intimidatory demonstrations, which began to mount throughout Haiti as the date agreed upon for President Aristide's return drew near. Parades were staged on 30 September to celebrate the anniversary of the coup. The recruitment of attaches increased as did the distribution of arms to them; in some places, their presence led to a virtual curfew.

Among the demonstrations' demands were the withdrawal from Haiti of the Special Envoy of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and OAS and of MICIVIH. Mission observers were increasingly subjected to threats, at times with loaded weapons, from the military and the attaches. On 12 October, about 300 men, some with batons, surrounded the Mission office at Hinche, shouting slogans and tearing down a human rights education banner, after which they proceeded to a Mission residence where they assaulted a local employee and smashed the windows of a Mission vehicle.

Composition

As at 15 September 1993,⁽¹⁷⁾ MICIVIH had 204 human rights observers (against the planned 280) and other substantive professional personnel (97 OAS, 107 United Nations) and 28 international (3 OAS, 25 United Nations) administrative staff deployed in 13 offices set up in the main towns of each of Haiti's nine departments. More than 45 nationalities were represented.

MICIVIH was headquartered at Port-au-Prince, organized into the Office of the Executive Director (media, operations, administration) and the Human Rights Division (Director's Office, investigation and research, legal and human rights departments).

Financing

To finance the initial requirements of MICIVIH, including the Office of the Special Envoy, the advance team, survey group and human rights experts, the Secretary-General sought and received in February 1993⁽¹⁸⁾ the concurrence of ACABQ to enter into commitments of up to $1 million under the terms of a 1991 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁰⁾ on the 1992-1993 unforeseen and extraordinary expenses. Meanwhile, in discussions between the United Nations and OAS on how costs should be divided between them, it was agreed that each organization would be responsible for the personnel costs of international staff serving in its component.

Requirements for 1993—inclusive of the $1 million commitment authority for initial requirements—were estimated at $23,694,900 net. Of the total, $18,083,200 related to personnel costs (salaries, fees, travel and related allowances) and $5,611,700 to operational costs (such as premises, vehicles, furniture, communications equipment).

Pending agreement with OAS on a comprehensive cost-sharing formula, the Secretary-General requested the Assembly to appropriate $19,112,600 (exclusive of $2,925,000 for staff assessment), which was equivalent to the full costs of the international staff of the United Nations component, plus 35 per cent of the estimated costs of the local personnel, goods and services required to support the joint mission. On the recommendation of ACABQ,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General was authorized further commitments of up to $18,112,600 over the previously authorized $1 million.

According to a 29 November report of the Secretary-General,⁽²²⁾ the financial performance for February to 31 December 1993 indicated $13,183,500 in total estimated requirements against the initial commitment authority (interim funding) of $19,112,600, resulting in an estimated net balance of $5,929,100. However, the second performance report under section 2 of the 1992-1993 programme budget would reflect an increase of $13,183,500 relating to MICIVIH, or $5,929,100 less than the total commitment authority for the biennium.

MICIVIH operations had been suspended since 15 October 1993. Except for a small core group remaining in Haiti, international and local staff had been evacuated to Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic. To some extent, this interim status had affected budgetary requirements. For budgetary purposes, the assumption was that normal operations would resume in Haiti in December.

Cost estimates for the three-month period from 1 January to 31 March 1994 totalled $5,936,400, for which an additional appropriation would be required under the relevant section of the 1994-1995 programme budget.

A Trust Fund for Haiti, set up to help meet United Nations costs, had received $1 million from Japan. Approximately $500,000 would be expended in 1993 for consultant fees and operating costs.

The report also stated that the General Secretariat of OAS and the United Nations signed a memorandum of understanding on 6 May assigning responsibilities and costs between the two organizations. Among other provisions, the memorandum confirmed that MICIVIH senior officials would be provided as follows: the Special Envoy (United Nations), the Executive Director (OAS) and the Human Rights Director (United Nations). It specified how the other categories of staff were to be apportioned, spelt out the modalities for the procurement of goods and services, as well as for administration, assigning the recruitment and payment of local staff to the United Nations, and the procurement and costs of all office accommodations, utilities and commercial communications to OAS. A final agreement on the practical applications of a comprehensive cost-sharing formula was under negotiation.

In the view of ACABQ,⁽²³⁾ the events that had taken place in Haiti since 15 October would affect MICIVIH operations for 1 January to 31 March 1994. Given the current circumstances, it was doubtful that all of the 188 international staff would be deployed, or that consultants would be required during that period. Implementation of public information and human rights education also assumed normal operations, which were currently questionable.

Accordingly, ACABQ recommended approval of only $4 million. Should MICIVIH continue beyond 31 March 1994, or if developments between January and March should call for additional resources, the Secretary-General could seek ACABQ's concurrence to enter into related commitments under the terms of an Assembly resolution to be adopted on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1994-1995. The Fifth Committee, in its consideration of the proposed 1994-1995 programme budget on 19 December,⁽²⁴⁾ endorsed those recommendations for Assembly approval.

By section IV of resolution 48/230 of 23 December, on special subjects relating to the proposed 1994-1995 programme budget, the Assembly endorsed the ACABQ recommendations, approved $4 million for the period 1 January to 31 March 1994 and authorized the Secretary-General, should the Mission continue beyond 31 March, to seek ACABQ concurrence to enter into related commitments as recommended.

Sanctions

Haiti, on 7 June 1993,⁽²⁵⁾ drew the attention of the President of the Security Council to the fact that, despite the international community's efforts during the past 20 months to bring about a reversal of the situation in Haiti and restore the legitimate Government, constitutional order had not been re-established as the de facto authorities continued obstructing all initiatives that had been proposed. Consequently, Haiti requested that the Council make universal and mandatory the sanctions against the de facto authorities adopted at the Ad Hoc Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of OAS, giving priority to the embargo on petroleum products and arms and munitions.

The Secretary-General, in July,⁽²⁶⁾ confirmed that the Council had further been informed, in informal consultations on 11 June, that the de facto authorities had not displayed the required political will to reach a negotiated solution to the Haitian crisis, despite efforts exerted since mid-December 1992 by his Special Envoy and OAS to establish dialogue between those authorities and Haiti's constitutional Government. The Secretary-General also mentioned to the Council his belief that, in the absence of stronger pressures by the international community, prospects for a swift and peaceful solution would be in jeopardy. The Special Envoy had also drawn the de facto regime's attention to the fact that sanctions, currently under consideration by the Council, would enter into force on 23 June unless the results of his negotiations enabled the Secretary-General to report that sanctions were not warranted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council convened on 16 June in response to Haiti's request. It had before it, in addition to that request, a letter of 14 June from Cuba⁽²⁷⁾ asserting that the question at hand did not fall within the purview of the Council, whose primary responsibility under the Charter was the maintenance of international peace and security.

At their request, the Council invited the Bahamas, Canada and Haiti to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 841(1993).

The Security Council,

Having received a letter from the Permanent Representative of Haiti to the President of the Council dated 7 June 1993 requesting that the Council make universal and mandatory the trade embargo on Haiti recommended by the Organization of American States,

Having also heard a report of the Secretary-General on 10 June 1993 regarding the crisis in Haiti,

Noting resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and MRE/RES.4/92 adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the Organization of American States, and resolution CP/RES.594(923/92) and declarations CP/DEC.8(927/93), CP/DEC.9(931/93) and CP/DEC.10(934/93) adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States,

Noting in particular resolution MRE/RES.5/93 adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the Organization of American States in Managua, Nicaragua, on 6 June 1993,

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991, 46/138 of 17 December 1991, 47/20 A of 24 November 1992, 47/143 of 18 December 1992 and 47/20 B of 23 April 1993,

Strongly supportive of the continuing leadership by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States and of the efforts of the international community to reach a political solution to the crisis in Haiti,

Commending the efforts undertaken by the Special Envoy for Haiti of the United Nations and Organization of American States Secretaries-General, Mr. Dante Caputo, to establish a political dialogue with the Haitian parties with a view to resolving the crisis in Haiti,

Recognizing the urgent need for an early, comprehensive and peaceful settlement of the crisis in Haiti in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and international law,

Also recalling the statement of 26 February 1993, in which the Council noted with concern the incidence of humanitarian crises, including mass displacements of population, becoming or aggravating threats to international peace and security,

Deploping the fact that, despite the efforts of the international community, the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has not been reinstated,

Concerned that the persistence of this situation contributes to a climate of fear of persecution and economic dislocation which could increase the number of Haitians seeking refuge in neighbouring Member States, and convinced that a reversal of this situation is needed to prevent its negative repercussions on the region,

Recalling, in this respect, the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and stressing the need for effective cooperation between regional organizations and the United Nations,

Considering that the above-mentioned request of the Permanent Representative of Haiti, made within the context of the related actions previously taken by the Organization of American States and by the General Assembly of the United Nations, defines a unique and exceptional situation warranting extraordinary measures by the Security Council in support of the efforts undertaken within the framework of the Organization of American States,

Determining that, in these unique and exceptional circumstances, the continuation of this situation threatens international peace and security in the region,

Acting, therefore, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Affirms that the solution of the crisis in Haiti should take into account the above-mentioned resolutions of the Organization of American States and of the General Assembly of the United Nations;

2. Welcomes the request of the General Assembly that the Secretary-General take the necessary measures in order to assist, in cooperation with the Organization of American States, in the solution of the crisis in Haiti;

3. Decides that the provisions set forth in paragraphs 5 to 14 below, which are consistent with the trade embargo recommended by the Organization of American States, shall come into force at 0001 EST on 23 June 1993 unless the Secretary-General, having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, has reported to the Council that, in the light of the results of the negotiations conducted by the Special Envoy for Haiti of the United Nations and Organization of American States Secretaries-General, the imposition of such measures is not warranted at that time;

4. Decides that if, at any time after the submission of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General, having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, reports to the Council that the de facto authorities in Haiti have failed to comply in good faith with their undertakings in the above-mentioned negotiations, the provisions set forth in paragraphs 5 to 14 below shall come into force immediately;

5. Decides that all States shall prevent the sale or supply, by their nationals or from their territories or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of petroleum or petroleum products or arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, police equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, whether or not originating in their territories, to any person or body in Haiti or to any person or body for the purpose of any business carried on in or operated from Haiti, and any activities by their nationals or in their territories which promote or are calculated to promote such sale or supply;

6. Decides to prohibit any and all traffic from entering the territory or territorial sea of Haiti carrying petroleum or petroleum products, or arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, police equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, in violation of paragraph 5 above;

7. Decides that the Committee established by paragraph 10 below may authorize on an exceptional case-by-case basis under a no-objection procedure the importation, in non-commercial quantities and only in barrels or bottles, of petroleum or petroleum products, including propane gas for cooking, for verified essential humanitarian needs, subject to acceptable arrangements for effective monitoring of delivery and use;

8. Decides that States in which there are funds, including any funds derived from property, (a) of the Government of Haiti or of the de facto authorities in Haiti, or (b) controlled directly or indirectly by such Government or authorities or by entities, wherever located or organized, owned or controlled by such Government or authorities, shall require all persons and entities within their own territories holding such funds to freeze them to ensure that they are not made available directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of the de facto authorities in Haiti;

9. Calls upon all States, and all international organizations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to 23 June 1993;

10. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To examine the reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 13 below;

(b) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of this resolution;

(c) To consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures imposed by this resolution and to recommend appropriate measures in response thereto;

(d) To consider and decide expeditiously requests for the approval of imports of petroleum and petroleum products for essential humanitarian needs in accordance with paragraph 7 above;

(e) To make periodic reports to the Security Council on information submitted to it regarding alleged violations of the present resolution, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels, reported to be engaged in such violations;

(f) To promulgate guidelines to facilitate implementation of this resolution;

11. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee established by paragraph 10 in the fulfilment of its tasks, including supplying such information as may be sought by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

12. Calls upon States to bring proceedings against persons and entities violating the measures imposed by this resolution and to impose appropriate penalties;

13. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General by 16 July 1993 on the measures they have initiated for meeting the obligations set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 above;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee established by paragraph 10 and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for this purpose;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council, not later than 15 July 1993, and earlier if he considers it appropriate, on progress achieved in the efforts jointly undertaken by him and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States with a view to reaching a political solution to the crisis in Haiti;

16. Expresses its readiness to review all the measures in the present resolution with a view to lifting them if, after the provisions set forth in paragraphs 5 to 14 have come into force, the Secretary-General, having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, reports to the Council that the de facto authorities in Haiti have signed and have begun implementing in good faith an agreement to reinstate the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 841(1993)

16 June 1993 Meeting 3238 Adopted unanimously

3-nation draft (S/25957).

Sponsors: France, United States, Venezuela.

Upon adoption of the resolution, the President announced that he had been asked by Council members to state that the resolution was warranted by the unique and exceptional situation in Haiti and should not be regarded as constituting a precedent.

Reports of the Secretary-General (July and August). As requested by the Security Council, the Secretary-General reported to it in July⁽²⁶⁾ and August⁽²⁸⁾ that the efforts towards a political solution of the Haitian crisis had resulted in the signing of the Governors Island Agreement and of the New York Pact on 3 and 16 July, respectively (see below, under those topics).

The Secretary-General's recommendation, to which the Council agreed,⁽²⁹⁾ was to suspend the sanctions under resolution 841(1993) when implementation of the undertakings under the Agreement reached a particular stage, with the proviso that such suspension would be automatically terminated and the sanctions reimposed if the undertakings were not complied with by the parties to the Agreement or by any other authority in Haiti. The sanctions would be lifted definitively upon President Aristide's return to Haiti on 30 October.

In a follow-up report of 26 August,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that Robert Malval, the Prime Minister-designate of Haiti, was ratified on 18 and 23 August by the Senate and by the Chamber of Deputies, from which he subsequently won a vote of confidence on his programme on 24 and 25 August. The Prime Minister having been confirmed and having assumed his functions in Haiti, the Secretary-General recommended the immediate suspension of the sanctions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August, September and October)

In the light of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council met on 27 August and invited Haiti, at its request, to participate in the discussions without the right to vote under rule 37.⁴ Having considered also the Secretary-General's reports on the Governors Island Agreement and on the New York Pact, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 861(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 841(1993) of 16 June 1993,

Commending the efforts undertaken by the Special Envoy for Haiti of the United Nations and Organization of American States Secretaries-General,

Having considered the relevant parts of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 July 1993,

Taking note with approval of the Governors Island Agreement between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, including the provisions of point 4, under which the parties agreed that the sanctions should be suspended immediately after the Prime Minister is confirmed and assumes office in Haiti,

Having also considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 August 1993 on the New York Pact of 16 July 1993,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General indicating that the Prime Minister of Haiti has been confirmed and has assumed office in Haiti,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the measures set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 of resolution 841(1993) are suspended with immediate effect and requests all States to act consistently with this decision as soon as possible;

2. Confirms its readiness, as noted in the letter from the President of the Council of 15 July 1993, to terminate immediately the suspension of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above if, at any time, the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, informs the Security Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement or any other authorities in Haiti have not complied in good faith with the Agreement;

3. Expresses its readiness to review all the measures in paragraphs 5 to 14 of resolution 841(1993) with a view to lifting them definitively once the Secretary-General, having regard for the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, informs the Security Council that the relevant provisions of the Governors Island Agreement have been fully implemented;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 861(1993)

27 August 1993 Meeting 3271 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26364).

The Security Council convened again on 17 September 1993 amidst reports of a recent upsurge of violence in Haiti, in particular the assassinations in September, and of the increasing incidence of threats to the joint United Nations/OAS International Civilian Mission (see above). Following consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement⁽³⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3278.

"The Security Council deplores the recent upsurge in violence in Haiti, particularly the events of 11 and 12 September, when at least a dozen people were assassinated, including a prominent supporter of President Aristide during a church service.

"The Council is deeply concerned at these developments as well as at the existence of organized armed civilian groups in the capital which are attempting to interfere with the new Constitutional Government's proper assumption of its functions.

"The Security Council considers it imperative that the Constitutional Government of Haiti assume control over the security forces of the country, and that those responsible for the activities of the organized armed civilian groups throughout the country, and particularly in Port-au-Prince, be held personally accountable for their actions and removed from their functions. The Council also urges the Haitian authorities to take immediate measures with a view to disarming these groups.

"The Council strongly calls on the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, also in his capacity as signatory to the Governors Island Agreement, to carry out his responsibilities to the fullest by ensuring immediate compliance with the letter and the spirit of the Governors Island Agreement.

"The Council will hold the Haitian military and security authorities personally responsible for the safety of all United Nations personnel in Haiti.

"Unless there is a clear and immediate effort by the security forces to put an end to the present levels of violence and intimidation and unless the above requirements are met, the Security Council will have no alternative but to consider that the authorities responsible for public order in Haiti are not complying in good faith with the Governors Island Agreement.

"Therefore, should the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in accordance with Security Council resolution 861(1993) and having received the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, inform the Security Council that, in his opinion, there is a serious and consistent non-compliance with the Governors Island Agreement, the Council will immediately reinstate those measures provided for in its resolution 841(1993) appropriate to the situation, with particular emphasis on those measures aimed at those deemed responsible for the non-compliance with the Agreement.

"The Council reaffirms that all the parties in Haiti are bound to comply with their obligations under the Governors Island Agreement, as well as with those embodied in the relevant international treaties to which Haiti is party and in all relevant Security Council resolutions.

"The Council will closely monitor the situation in Haiti in the coming days."

On 11 October, the Council convened urgently regarding that day's events which had prevented the seaborne military component of UNMIH from disembarking at Port-au-Prince (see below, under "UN Mission in Haiti"). Following consultations among Council members, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council deploring those events; reiterating his 17 September statement that serious and consistent non-compliance with the Governors Island Agreement would prompt the Council to reinstate immediately the sanctions under resolution 841(1993), with particular emphasis on measures aimed at those deemed responsible; and requesting an urgent report as to whether the 11 October incidents constituted such non-compliance.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General submitted the requested report on 13 October.⁽³¹⁾ It gave a factual account of the circumstances surrounding the 11 October incidents, including the 7 October general strike against UNMIH, and cited the series of violent incidents including assassinations that had occurred in Haiti during the previous few weeks. The facts led the Secretary-General to conclude that the incidents reflected a lack of will on the part of Haiti's military authorities to cooperate fully in a peaceful transition to a democratic society, as well as an explicit intent to prevent the democratic process agreed on in the Governors Island Agreement from taking its course.

In the light of the consistent non-compliance by the Haitian military and police with the Agreement, as borne out by the facts, the Secretary-

General, taking account also of the view of the OAS Secretary-General, considered it necessary, in accordance with resolution 861(1993), to terminate the suspension of measures set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 of resolution 841(1993).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (13 October)

The Security Council met on 13 October 1993 to take action on the Secretary-General's report. At their request, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Haiti and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines were invited, under rule 37.^a The Council unanimously adopted resolution 873(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 841(1993) of 16 June 1993, 861(1993) of 27 August 1993, 862(1993) of 31 August 1993 and 867(1993) of 23 September 1993,

Deeply disturbed by the continued obstruction of the arrival of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), dispatched pursuant to resolution 867(1993), and the failure of the Armed Forces of Haiti to carry out their responsibilities to allow the Mission to begin its work,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General informing the Council that the military authorities of Haiti, including the police, have not complied in good faith with the Governors Island Agreement,

Determining that their failure to fulfil obligations under the Agreement constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides, in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 861(1993), to terminate the suspension of the measures set out in paragraphs 5 to 9 of resolution 841(1993) as of 2359 hours Eastern Standard Time on 18 October 1993 unless the Secretary-General, having regard to the views of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, reports to the Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement and any other authorities in Haiti are implementing in full the agreement to reinstate the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and have established the necessary measures to enable UNMIH to carry out its mandate;

2. Decides also that funds that are required to be frozen pursuant to paragraph 8 of resolution 841(1993) may be released at the request of President Aristide or Prime Minister Malval of Haiti;

3. Decides further that the Committee established by paragraph 10 of resolution 841(1993) shall have the authority, in addition to that set forth in that paragraph, to grant exceptions to the prohibitions (other than those referred to in paragraph 2 above) referred to in paragraph 1 above on a case-by-case basis under the no-objection procedure in response to requests by President Aristide or Prime Minister Malval of Haiti;

4. Confirms its readiness to consider urgently the imposition of additional measures if the Secretary-General informs the Security Council that the parties to the Governors Island Agreement or any other authorities in Haiti continue to impede the activities of UNMIH or interfere with the freedom of movement and communication of UNMIH and its members as well as the other rights necessary for the performance of its mandate, or have not complied in full with relevant Security Council resolutions and the provisions of the Governors Island Agreement;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 873(1993)

13 October 1993 Meeting 3291 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26578).

Communication (15 October). On 15 October,⁽³²⁾ elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide drew to the Secretary-General's attention the assassination on the previous day of the Minister of Justice, François-Guy Malary. In view of that and noting the violations of the Governors Island Agreement, he requested that the Security Council, under the authority vested in it by Chapter VII of the Charter, call on Member States to take the necessary measures to strengthen the provisions of resolution 873(1993).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (16 and 25 October)

Responding to the Haitian President's request, the Security Council met on 16 October and invited Canada and Haiti, at their request, to participate without the right to vote under rule 37.^a Following statements by several States, including Haiti, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 875(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 841(1993) of 16 June 1993, 861(1993) of 27 August 1993, 862(1993) of 31 August 1993, 867(1993) of 23 September 1993 and 873(1993) of 13 October 1993,

Noting resolutions MRE/RES.1/91, MRE/RES.2/91, MRE/RES.3/92 and MRE/RES.4/92 adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the Organization of American States, and resolution CP/RES.594(923/92) and declarations CP/DEC.8(927/93), CP/DEC.9(931/93), CP/DEC.10(934/93) and CP/DEC.15(967/93), adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States,

Deeply disturbed by the continued obstruction to the dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), pursuant to resolution 867(1993), and the failure of the Armed Forces of Haiti to carry out their responsibilities to allow the mission to begin its work,

Condemning the assassination of officials of the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide,

Taking note of the letter of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to the Secretary-General of 15 October 1993, in which he requested the Council to call on Member States to take the necessary measures to strengthen the provisions of Security Council resolution 873(1993),

Mindful of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 October 1993 informing the Council that the military authorities in Haiti, including the police, have not complied in full with the Governors Island Agreement,

Reaffirming its determination that, in these unique and exceptional circumstances, the failure of the military authorities in Haiti to fulfil their obligations under the Agreement constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapters VII and VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls upon Member States, acting nationally or through regional agencies or arrangements, cooperating with the legitimate Government of Haiti, to use such measures commensurate with the specific circumstances as may be necessary under the authority of the Security Council to ensure strict implementation of the provisions of resolutions 841(1993) and 873(1993) relating to the supply of petroleum or petroleum products or arms and related materiel of all types, and in particular to halt inward maritime shipping as necessary in order to inspect and verify their cargoes and destinations;

2. Confirms that it is prepared to consider further necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the provisions of relevant Security Council resolutions;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 875(1993)

16 October 1993 Meeting 3293 Adopted unanimously

4-nation draft (S/26586).

Sponsors: Canada, France, United States, Venezuela.

The Council held another meeting on 25 October and, following consultations among its members, the President made the following statement⁽³³⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3298.

"The Security Council reaffirms the necessity of full compliance with the Governors Island Agreement. It condemns the acts of the military authorities in Haiti, who continue to hamper the full implementation of the Agreement, in particular by permitting the development of acts of violence in violation of their obligations under the Agreement. It gives full support to the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Dante Caputo, to put an end to the crisis and to ensure the return, without delay, of democracy and the rule of law in Haiti.

"The Security Council, recalling points 7 and 8 of the Governors Island Agreement concerning the departure of the Commander-in-Chief of the Haitian Armed Forces and the appointment of a new Commander of the police force, insists that these provisions be implemented without further delay.

"The Security Council reiterates its support for the legitimate Government of Haiti and recalls that it holds the military authorities responsible for the security of that Government and of the parliamentarians. It also continues to hold the military authorities responsible for the safety and security of all United Nations personnel in Haiti.

"The Security Council warns that, should the Governors Island Agreement not be fully implemented, it will consider imposing measures additional to those imposed by resolutions 841(1993), 873(1993) and 875(1993).

"The Security Council underlines the importance of the full implementation of the measures contained in the above-mentioned resolutions by all States, including nearby countries.

"The Council will continue to monitor closely the situation in Haiti in the coming days."

Governors Island Agreement

In keeping with a Security Council request, the Secretary-General reported on 12 July 1993⁽²⁶⁾ that the Special Envoy had obtained the agreement of the President of Haiti, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, General Raoul Cédras, to participate in a meeting with him at Governors Island, New York. The meeting took place from 27 June to 3 July and concluded with the signing, by the President and the General, of the Governors Island Agreement embodying arrangements, to be implemented in 10 stages, for the resolution of the Haitian crisis. The text of the Agreement was incorporated in the report. Both signatories pledged to cooperate fully in the peaceful transition to a stable and lasting democratic society in which all Haitians would be able to live in a climate of freedom, justice, security and respect for human rights.

The arrangements called for a dialogue among the political parties represented in the Haitian Parliament, in which the Presidential Commission would participate, to be organized under United Nations and OAS auspices, in order to agree on: a political truce and promotion of a social pact to create the conditions for a peaceful transition; a procedure for enabling Parliament to resume its normal functioning and for the speedy confirmation of a Prime Minister; and the adoption of laws necessary for the transition.

Also called for were: nomination by the President of a Prime Minister, his confirmation by the legally reconstituted Parliament and assumption to office in Haiti; followed by the suspension of the sanctions under Security Council resolution 841(1993) and of those adopted by OAS; technical and financial assistance for development, administrative and judicial reform and, with the presence of United Nations personnel, modernization of the Armed Forces of Haiti and creation of a new police force; an amnesty to be granted by the President; enactment of a law creating the new police force and providing for the appointment of its Commander-in-Chief by the President; appointment of a new Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, in view of General Cédras's decision to take early retirement; and return to Haiti of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide on 30 October. Fulfilment of all the foregoing commitments would be subject to United Nations and OAS verification.

The Secretary-General stated his intention to entrust verification of the Agreement to the Special Envoy, who would report periodically to him and to the OAS Secretary-General. He would propose that MICIVIH remain in effect and recommend Council endorsement of the proposal to suspend the sanctions immediately after the duly nominated and confirmed Prime Minister assumed his functions in Haiti. However, the suspension should be automatically terminated if the parties, or any authorities in Haiti, failed to comply in good faith with the Agreement. He would report to the Council upon President Aristide's return to Haiti, with a view to having the sanctions lifted definitively.

On 15 July,⁽²⁹⁾ the Security Council declared its readiness to give the fullest possible support to the Agreement, to suspend the sanctions in force at the appropriate stage of the Agreement's implementation, with a provision for the automatic termination of the suspension as proposed, and to terminate the sanctions on receipt of the Secretary-General's confirmation that President Aristide had returned to Haiti.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, in the statement of 25 October 1993⁽³³⁾ made by its President, reaffirmed the necessity of full compliance with the Agreement—as it did on 30 October⁽⁹⁾—and condemned the acts of the Haitian military who continued to hamper its full implementation, in particular by permitting the development of acts of violence in violation of their obligations under the Agreement. The Council insisted that the provisions of the Agreement concerning the departure of the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces and the appointment of a new Commander of the police force be implemented without delay.

New York Pact

The Secretary-General reported on 13 August 1993⁽³⁴⁾ that, after the signing of the Governors Island Agreement, the inter-Haitian political dialogue it called for was convened by the Special Envoy. The dialogue took place at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 14 to 16 July, at the conclusion of which the participants signed the New York Pact, providing for a six-month political truce, for a procedure to enable Parliament to resume its functioning and agreements for the early confirmation of a Prime Minister nominated by the President to head a Government of national concord, and for the adoption of the legal instruments necessary for ensuring the transition. The text of the Pact was annexed to the report.

Under the Pact, the political parties and parliamentary blocs undertook, among other things, to refrain from tabling in Parliament any motion of no-confidence against the new Government of national concord, to secure the immediate release of all persons detained for offences relating to their views and to have the status of prisoners reviewed, to promote the establishment of a compensation commission for the victims of the coup d'état,⁽³⁵⁾ and to ensure confirmation of the new Prime Minister without delay. They also undertook to ensure passage by Parliament of a series of bills under an emergency procedure, including those relating to the setting up of a new police force, an amnesty, the abolition of all paramilitary forces, the creation of a Citizens' Protection Bureau, and reform of the judicial system. They reaffirmed the right of the Executive to review the various decrees and orders adopted from 30 September 1991 (the day after the coup d'état) to 3 July 1993 (the date of the Agreement) that were not in accord with the Constitution, particularly the order that created the Permanent Emergency Electoral Council.

With respect to the 13 Parliament members who derived their mandate from the partial elections held on 18 January, it was agreed that they should voluntarily refrain from occupying their seats until the Conciliation Commission—a constitutional organ whose functioning required the adoption by Parliament of a law under the emergency procedure—had definitively pronounced itself on the matter. Those elections were rejected as illegitimate by the OAS Permanent Council and by the General Assembly. During the dialogue, the Special Envoy stressed that the United Nations position on those elections remained unchanged.

Hence, it was the Secretary-General's understanding that, as agreed, those members of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies who were in office by virtue of the contested 18 January elections were to abstain from participating in any Parliament business; failure to do so would constitute a serious breach of the Agreement, to be reported to the Security Council.

As with the undertakings under the Agreement, those under the Pact were subject to United Nations and OAS verification.

The Secretary-General further reported that President Aristide informed the Presidents of the two chambers of Parliament on 24 July of his intention to nominate Robert Malval as Prime Minister. A new Bureau was elected in the Chamber of Deputies on 22 and 28 July and in the Senate on 10 August. With the normalization of Parliament, the way had been cleared for the ratification of the Prime Minister.

UN Mission in Haiti

The Governors Island Agreement provided for, among other things, the presence of United Nations personnel to assist in modernizing the Armed Forces of Haiti and establishing a new police force. The President of Haiti, on 24 July 1993,⁽³⁶⁾ proposed terms of reference governing the assistance which Haiti hoped to receive in this regard.

Assistance to the police sector would be to enhance the functioning of the existing security forces until the new police force, which the United Nations would help to create, was capable of assuming its responsibilities. For this purpose, 500 to 600 United Nations police officers would be required. Assistance in respect of the Armed Forces would be to attain the degree of professionalism required to discharge their constitutional obligations, in particular to ensure the security and integrity of the Republic, assist in times of natural disasters and carry out development tasks pursuant to the relevant articles of the Constitution. United Nations personnel needed for those tasks would be 50 to 60 instructors and some 500 engineers and construction experts.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). On the basis of the President's proposal and taking account of the advice of the Special Envoy and the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti (Canada, France, United States, Venezuela), the Secretary-General, in a report of 25 August to the Security Council,⁽³⁷⁾ set out his recommendations for a United Nations Mission in Haiti, with civilian police and military components, to carry out the assistance called for.

Pending adoption of legislation necessary for the creation of the new police force and appointment of a Commander-in-Chief of the Police by the President, some 567 civilian police, to be known as United Nations police monitors, would assist the Government in monitoring the activities of those members of the Armed Forces charged with police functions, since the responsibilities of the Armed Forces currently included both military and police functions. The police monitors would provide guidance and training to all levels of the Haitian police and ensure that police actions were in keeping with legal requirements.

In order to perform their duties, the police monitors would require access to information on the deployment of all personnel charged with civilian police functions, including control of civil disturbances, and freedom of movement throughout Haiti. They should be entitled to hold discussions freely and confidentially with any individual or group, including those in the Armed Forces performing police functions, the Ministry of Justice and other components of the judicial system, as well as to submit recommendations regarding particular cases or situations and to make follow-up inquiries.

The task of modernizing the Armed Forces would be discharged by an average of five training teams of 12 trainers each, on duty in Haiti at any given time, and a military construction unit with a strength of approximately 500 all ranks. The teams would provide non-combat training in what would become their primary mission, as responsibility for internal security was transferred from the Armed Forces to the new police force. Training would aim to develop a range of capabilities in military engineering (such as road-building and well-drilling), disaster relief, search and rescue operations, and border and coastal surveillance. The teams would work with the Haitian Government to develop a modern code of conduct, reform the military justice system and improve the effectiveness of the Inspector General of the Armed Forces.

The United Nations military construction unit would provide the Haitian military with on-the-job training in construction projects, to include the construction of new barracks; the conversion to civilian use of military facilities no longer required by the Armed Forces under their newly defined mission; the renovation of medical facilities; and road repair and well-drilling in rural areas. The projects would take six to eight months to complete.

UNMIH would be under the command of the United Nations, vested in the Secretary-General under the authority of the Security Council. It would be headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, namely, the Special Envoy, who was already overseeing MICIVIH and who would coordinate the activities of the two missions. UNMIH would set up headquarters at Port-au-Prince, with sub-headquarters in other parts of the country as required.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council authorize the establishment of UNMIH for an initial period of six months, to be dispatched as soon as the conditions set out in the Governors Island Agreement were met.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council convened on 31 August 1993 regarding the Secretary-General's report and unanimously adopted resolution 862(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 841(1993) of 16 June 1993 and 861(1993) of 27 August 1993,

Recalling also the Governors Island Agreement between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, of 3 July 1993, contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 12 July 1993, and the letter of the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General of 24 July 1993,

Commending the efforts undertaken by the Special Envoy for Haiti of the United Nations and Organization of American States Secretaries-General,

Noting that point 5 of the Governors Island Agreement calls for international assistance in modernizing the armed forces of Haiti and establishing a new police force with the presence of United Nations personnel in these fields,

Reaffirming the international community's commitment to a resolution of the crisis in Haiti, including a restoration of democracy,

Recalling the situation in Haiti and the continuing responsibility of the Council under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Takes note of the Secretary-General's report of 25 August 1993 to the Security Council, which contains recommendations concerning United Nations assistance in the modernization of the armed forces as well as in the establishment of a new police force in Haiti under a proposed United Nations Mission in Haiti;

2. Approves the dispatch as soon as possible of an advance team of not more than 30 personnel to assess requirements and prepare for the possible dispatch of both the civilian police and military assistance components of the proposed United Nations Mission in Haiti;

3. Decides that the mandate of the advance team will expire within one month, and contemplates that this advance team could be incorporated into the proposed United Nations Mission in Haiti if and when such a mission is formally established by the Council;

4. Looks forward to a further report of the Secretary-General on the proposed establishment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, including in particular a detailed estimate of the cost and scope of this operation, a time-frame for its implementation, and the projected conclusion of this operation, and how to ensure coordination, inter alia, between it and the work of the Organization of American States, with a view to establishing the proposed mission on an expeditious basis, if the Council so decides;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to enter expeditiously into discussions with the Government of Haiti on a status-of-mission agreement to facilitate the early dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, if and when the Council so decides;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 862(1993)

31 August 1993 Meeting 3272 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26384).

Report of the Secretary-General (September).

In keeping with paragraph 4 of resolution 862(1993), the Secretary-General submitted a further report on 21 September,⁽³⁸⁾ supplementing information provided in his August report.⁽³⁷⁾ It described the findings of an advance team of military, police and civilian specialists, led by the Special Envoy, dispatched to Haiti on 8 September. As instructed, the advance team undertook a detailed survey of requirements; a small group remained behind after the return of most of the team on 12 September to prepare for the eventual deployment of UNMIH if the Council so decided.

The advance team met with a number of Haitian officials representing the Constitutional Government, among them the new Prime Minister and the Armed Forces, including their Commander-in-Chief. Notwithstanding assurances by both sides of their desire to pursue implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, a gulf of mistrust and suspicion divided them. In the Special Envoy's opinion, that called for a tangible demonstration of the international community's commitment to solve the Haitian crisis.

For the organizational purpose of the police component, the territory of Haiti would be divided into four administrative divisions, with headquarters at Port-au-Prince. To the extent possible, United Nations police monitors would be deployed at the same locations as MICIVIH, but would maintain presence in all departmental capitals. They would adapt their deployment in such a manner as to encourage partnership between police and the communities they served.

Military assistance over the six-month mandate period would be a three-phased operation: the first phase would cover deployment of military units and installation of a base camp; the second would be devoted to training the Haitian military in various disciplines and initiating engineering and medical assistance projects; in the third and final phase, training would be expanded and projects completed. Parallel with those activities, the Armed Forces would be reorganized into five battalions and deployed throughout the country.

As to coordination between UNMIH and MICIVIH, both would operate under the overall authority of the Secretary-General's Special Representative (also the Special Envoy for Haiti). UNMIH police monitors would work with the Department of Investigation and Research within the MICIVIH Human Rights Division. MICIVIH would provide an orientation course for the police monitors, drawing on its experience and familiarity with the Haitian political and social environment. While separate budgets would be maintained for both missions, they would come under a single administrative unit under the Special Representative, with the unit's costs to be shared between the two budgets.

UNMIH and its personnel would be granted all relevant privileges and immunities provided for by the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.⁽³⁹⁾ The status-of-mission agreement for UNMIH would be signed with the Government to facilitate the early dispatch of the mission. In view of the violence prevailing in the country, the Secretary-General would appoint a Security Adviser to coordinate the security requirements of the entire United Nations presence in Haiti.

In an addendum to his report,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the total operating cost for the six-month period at $49,856,000. The costs were to be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States; the assessments to be levied on them should be credited to a special account to be established for the purpose.

UNMIH personnel would consist of 99 international and 271 local civilian staff, 567 police monitors and 700 (rather than the original estimate of 500) military personnel, including 60 military trainers.

As later reported by the Secretary-General,⁽⁴¹⁾ an advance team of 53 military and 51 police personnel was deployed at Port-au-Prince during September and October. The Status-of-Mission Agreement was signed by the new Prime Minister and the Secretary-General's Special Representative on 9 October.

Following consultations with Governments, the Secretary-General stated that the military component of UNMIH would be contributed by Argentina, Canada and the United States, and the police component by Algeria, Austria, Canada, France, Indonesia, Madagascar, the Russian Federation, Senegal, Spain, Switzerland, Tunisia and Venezuela.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September and October)

The Security Council, having before it the Secretary-General's September report, unanimously adopted resolution 867(1993) on 23 September.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 841(1993) of 16 June 1993, 861(1993) of 27 August 1993 and 862(1993) of 31 August 1993,

Recalling also relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Organization of American States,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General of 21 September 1993, and the reports of the Secretary-General of 25 August 1993 and 26 August 1993, submitted pursuant to his reports to the Security Council dated 12 July 1993 and 13 August 1993,

Taking note of the letter dated 24 July 1993 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council conveying a proposal from the Government of Haiti requesting the United Nations to provide assistance in creating a new police force and in modernizing the Haitian armed forces,

Stressing the importance of the Governors Island Agreement of 3 July 1993 between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti towards promoting the return of peace and stability in Haiti, including the provisions of paragraph 5, under which the parties call for assistance for modernizing the armed forces of Haiti and establishing a new police force with the presence of United Nations personnel in these fields,

Strongly supportive of the efforts to implement that Agreement, and to permit the resumption of the normal operations of government in Haiti, including police and military functions, under civilian control,

Recalling the situation in Haiti and the continuing responsibility of the Council under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Concerned about the escalation of politically motivated violence in Haiti at this time of critical political transition, and recalling in this respect the statement of the President of the Security Council of 17 September 1993,

Considering that there is an urgent need to ensure conditions for the full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the political accords contained in the New York Pact as contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 13 August 1993,

1. Approves the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his report of 21 September 1993 and his report of 25 August 1993 to authorize the establishment and immediate dispatch of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) for a period of six months subject to the proviso that it will be extended beyond seventy-five days only upon a review by the Council to be based on a report from the Secretary-General on whether or not substantive progress has been made towards the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement and the political accords contained in the New York Pact;

2. Decides that, in accordance with the report of 21 September 1993, the United Nations Mission shall comprise up to 567 United Nations police monitors (UNPMs) and a military construction unit with a strength of approximately 700, including 60 military trainers;

3. Determines that the UNPMs shall provide guidance and training to all levels of the Haitian police and monitor the way in which the operations are implemented in accordance with paragraph 9 of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 September 1993;

4. Also determines that the military component of the Mission in charge of modernization of the armed forces shall have the following roles:

(a) The military training teams shall provide non-combat training, as outlined in paragraph 17 of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 September 1993, to meet requirements determined through coordination between the Chief of the United Nations Mission and the Government of Haiti;

(b) The military construction unit will work with the Haitian military to carry out projects, as specified in paragraph 15 of the report of the Secretary-General of 25 August 1993 and as described in paragraph 16 of his report of 21 September 1993;

5. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to place the peace-keeping mission under the oversight of the Special Representative of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the Organization of American States, who also oversees the activities of the International Civilian Mission (MICIVIH), so that the peace-keeping mission may benefit from the experience and information already obtained by MICIVIH;

6. Calls upon the Government of Haiti to take all appropriate steps to ensure the safety of United Nations personnel, as well as to ensure the freedom of movement and communication of the Mission and its members as well as the other rights necessary for the performance of its task, and in this regard urges the conclusion at the earliest possible stage of a Status-of-Mission Agreement;

7. Notes that such safety and freedoms are a prerequisite for the successful implementation of the Mission, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council in the event such conditions do not exist;

8. Calls upon all factions in Haiti explicitly and publicly to renounce, and to direct their supporters to renounce, violence as a means of political expression;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to dispatch the United Nations Mission in Haiti on an urgent basis;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund or make other arrangements to assist in the financing of the Mission, along the lines and conditions outlined in paragraph 26 of the report of the Secretary-

General of 21 September 1993, and to seek for this purpose pledges and contributions from Member States and others, and encourages Member States to make voluntary contributions to this fund;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to seek contributions of personnel from Member States for the civilian police and military components of the Mission, as specified in paragraph 18 of his report of 25 August 1993;

12. Expresses the hope that States will assist the legally constituted Government of Haiti in carrying out actions consistent with the restoration of democracy as called for by the Governors Island Agreement, the New York Pact and other relevant resolutions and agreements;

13. Expresses its appreciation for the constructive role of the Organization of American States in cooperation with the United Nations in promoting the solution of the political crisis and the restoration of democracy in Haiti and, in this context, stresses the importance of ensuring close coordination between the United Nations and the Organization of American States in their work in Haiti;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit progress reports to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution by 10 December 1993 and 25 January 1994, thus keeping the Council fully informed on actions taken to implement the Mission;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 867(1993)

23 September 1993 Meeting 3282 Adopted unanimously

Draft by United States (S/26484), orally revised.

On 4 October, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, following the usual consultations, he intended to appoint Colonel Gregg Pulley (United States) as Commander of UNMIH's military unit⁽⁴²⁾ and Superintendent Jean-Jacques Lemay (Canada) as Commander of the police unit.⁽⁴³⁾ The Council agreed to those appointments on 6 October.⁽⁴⁴⁾

The Council met again on 11 October regarding that day's events that prevented the military component of UNMIH aboard the USS Harlan County from landing at Port-au-Prince. Following consultations among Council members, the President was authorized to make the following statement⁽⁴⁵⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3289.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned with the situation in Haiti and deeply deplores the events of 11 October 1993, when organized armed civilian groups ('attachés') threatened journalists and diplomats waiting to meet a contingent of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) dispatched pursuant to Security Council resolution 867(1993). Moreover, the disturbance created by these armed groups, and a lack of dock personnel, prevented the landing in Port-au-Prince of the ship carrying the contingent. The Security Council considers it imperative that the Armed Forces of Haiti carry out their responsibilities to ensure that obstructions such as these to the safe and successful dispatch of UNMIH end immediately.

"The Council reiterates, in accordance with its Presidential statement of 17 September 1993, that serious and consistent non-compliance with the Governors Island Agreement will prompt the Council to reinstate immediately those measures provided for in its resolution 841(1993) appropriate to the situation, with particular emphasis on those measures aimed at those deemed responsible for this non-compliance. In that context, the Security Council requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council whether the incidents of 11 October constitute such non-compliance by the Armed Forces of Haiti with the Governors Island Agreement.

"The Council looks forward to the Secretary-General's report and will closely monitor the situation in Haiti in the coming days."

Reports of the Secretary-General (October and November). Replying to the Security Council's request to report whether the incident of 11 October constituted serious and consistent non-compliance by the Armed Forces of Haiti with the Governors Island Agreement, the Secretary-General submitted a report on 13 October,⁽⁴⁶⁾ describing the 11 October incidents as the nadir of a progressively deteriorating situation in Haiti.

The report pointed to the repeatedly observed lack of will on the part of the Armed Forces Command to facilitate deployment and operation of UNMIH, creating obstacles instead to delay its emplacement. Despite written commitments from the military and port authorities, the Harlan County, transporting the military component of UNMIH, was blocked from docking at Port-au-Prince. Port authorities denied having had contact with United Nations representatives and left the field clear for armed civilians who engaged in acts of intimidation, firing into the air and threatening Haitian and international journalists, as well as representatives of the international community. In spite of appeals to the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces (General Cédras) and to the police chief (Lieutenant-Colonel Michel François), nothing was done to bring the situation under control.

A general strike had been declared against UNMIH earlier, on 7 October, instigated by a group known as Front pour l'avancement et le progrès d'Haïti, which on numerous occasions had threatened the Prime Minister and cabinet members, the Secretary-General's Special Representative and the French and Canadian personnel of UNMIH who were among the advance contingents of 53 military engineers and 51 civilian police deployed at Port-au-Prince during late September and early October.

The report also cited the attack on the Prime Minister's offices on 5 October by some 200 armed civilians, with police participating, as well as the complete disregard of government instructions by the military and police. All these examples, the report noted, reflected a clear and explicit intent to prevent the democratic process from taking its course.

The Secretary-General, taking account of the views of the OAS Secretary-General, was thus compelled to inform the Council that the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti, as one of the parties to the Agreement, and the police chief and commander of the Port-au-Prince metropolitan area, as one of the authorities in Haiti, had failed to fulfil the commitments entered into under the Agreement.

In a report of 26 November⁽⁴⁷⁾ on whether or not substantive progress had been made towards implementing the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact, the Secretary-General restated that various developments in Haiti had undermined the UNMIH mandate, in particular the 11 October incident. As a result of subsequent developments, the advance elements of UNMIH were withdrawn from Haiti, following the departure of the Harlan County on 13 October. The bulk of MICIVIH was likewise withdrawn on 15 October. The Special Representative and several assistants remained at Port-au-Prince.

The success of UNMIH, the Secretary-General stated, depended on the full and active cooperation of the two parties to the Governors Island Agreement; that cooperation had not been forthcoming from the Haitian military authorities. In the circumstances, he was obliged to conclude that the mandate entrusted to UNMIH by resolution 867(1993) could not be implemented until there was a clear and substantial change of attitude on the part of the Haitian military leaders.

The President of the Security Council stated on 10 December 1993⁽⁴⁸⁾ that, based on the Secretary-General's November report,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Council had found no reason why the UNMIH mandate should not be continued for the full six-month period authorized by resolution 867(1993).

Financing

In a report of 9 December 1993⁽⁴⁹⁾ on the financing of 17 peace-keeping operations, including UNMIH, the Secretary-General stated that negotiations were continuing in Haiti among his Special Representative, the local authorities and the military regarding the emplacement of UNMIH. If and when the matter was resolved, the necessary resources would have to be provided.

For budgetary purposes, therefore, it was assumed that UNMIH would be continued at its current level, pending further developments. Requirements for its maintenance from its inception on 23 September 1993 to 30 April 1994 were estimated at $1,383,000, inclusive of the initial expenditures incurred by the survey and technical missions to Haiti ($59,500) and by the advance team ($137,500), estimated expenditures incurred until 31 October ($1,034,000) and maintenance costs from 1 November 1993 to 30 April 1994 ($152,000). A monthly maintenance cost of $25,300 as of 1 November 1993 was to cover the subsistence allowance for two liaison officers (military and police) and the salary and related costs for one P-5 officer (spokesman). A breakdown of the total requirement by major line-items of expenditure was also provided.

ACABQ, on 17 December,⁽⁵⁰⁾ recommended that, for the period indicated, the General Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments up to $1,383,000 gross ($1,364,000 net).

As requested by ACABQ,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General subsequently submitted a separate report on the financing of UNMIH, dated 22 December,⁽⁵²⁾ annexing a detailed table of cost estimates for 23 September 1993 to 22 March 1994, together with the usual supplementary information. It also contained a recommendation for the establishment of a special account for UNMIH.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in December 1993, adopted decision 48/477 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 1,383,000 United States dollars gross (1,364,000 dollars net) for the United Nations Mission in Haiti for the period from 23 September 1993 to 22 March 1994, and requested him to establish a special account for the Mission;

Chapter III

Asia and the Pacific

The United Nations continued in 1993 to pursue its initiatives aimed at resolving conflicts and alleviating tensions in the Asia and Pacific region. Its operations were marked by encouraging success in one case and by significant progress in another.

The United Nations Transition Authority in Cambodia brought its mandate to a successful conclusion with the fulfilment of the final phase of its task, namely, the organization and supervision of elections in May. Certified free and fair by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Cambodia, those elections led to the formation in September of a new constitutional Government of Cambodia.

The United Nations Boundary Demarcation Commission completed its technical task in May of demarcating, for the first time, the precise coordinates of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait. More significantly, Iraq, towards the end of November, formally accepted its obligations under Security Council resolution 715(1991), thus enabling the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to initiate the long-delayed full-scale ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's weapons-related activities on a routine basis.

In the Korean peninsula, the United Nations Command continued to monitor observance of the 1953 Armistice Agreement. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) called for the dissolution of the Command and for the replacement of the Agreement by one to be concluded between it and the Republic of Korea. In a disturbing development in March, the DPRK announced its decision to withdraw from the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, following its refusal of repeated IAEA requests for access to and full inspection of its nuclear facilities. This non-compliance with its obligations under its agreement with IAEA for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty was, in April, brought before the Security Council, which urged the DPRK to reconsider its announcement and IAEA to continue to consult with that country in order to resolve the issue.

The Secretary-General, in pursuance of his mission of good offices on behalf of Cyprus, renewed and widened efforts to obtain the agreement of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities to a package of confidence-building measures as a step towards reaching a mutually acceptable overall solution to the decades-long conflict between them. On his recommendation, the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, deemed vital to maintaining a climate conducive to negotiations, was extended by the Council twice during the year, the second time until June 1994.

The Assembly, in December, requested the Secretary-General to dispatch as soon as possible a United Nations special mission to Afghanistan to canvass a broad spectrum of that country's leaders to solicit their views on how the United Nations could best assist in facilitating national rapprochement and reconstruction. It also invited him to continue to monitor the overall situation in Afghanistan and make available his good offices as required.

East AsiaKorean question

On 15 June,⁽¹⁾ the United States, on behalf of the Unified Command, submitted to the Security Council the annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance in 1992 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement.⁽²⁾

The report provided background information on UNC and its mission, as well as on the Armistice mechanism and procedures. This included the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC), originally composed of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden and Switzerland and charged with conducting independent investigations of Armistice violations outside the demilitarized zone (DMZ); and the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), set up to supervise the implementation of the Agreement and to settle any violations reported to it by NNSC through negotiations with the Korean People's Army (KPA) and the Chinese People's Volunteers (CPV). MAC was composed of 10 military members—five senior officers from UNC and five from KPA/CPV. Its Joint Duty Office, located in the Joint Security Area, served as the basic channel of communications between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and the Republic of Korea.

Appended to the report was an account of a 1992 Armistice violation⁽³⁾ involving an armed infiltration by the DPRK through the DMZ into the Republic of Korea.

On 13 and 28 May 1992, the DPRK returned 30 sets of "United States war remains". Taking this as an indication that many more UNC war remains might be in the DPRK, UNC requested KPA to continue its search for and repatriation of such remains for humanitarian reasons.

By a letter of 11 October,⁽⁴⁾ the DPRK asserted that the armistice mechanism had become worthless. NNSC had virtually ceased to function in 1956⁽⁵⁾ when UNC unilaterally imposed limitations on it, and because of the withdrawal on 1 January 1993 of Czechoslovakia, whose replacement could be nominated solely by the DPRK. As to MAC, its major functions were paralysed in 1991⁽⁶⁾ with the illegal appointment to it of a General of the Republic of Korea as a senior UNC member. The DPRK therefore called for the dissolution of UNC and the replacement of the Armistice Agreement with a peace agreement between the two Koreas, in accordance with a 1975 General Assembly resolution on the subject.⁽⁷⁾

By the same letter, the DPRK further cited several UNC violations of the Armistice between April and July 1993, including introducing heavy weapons into the DMZ, infiltrating combat vessels into the territorial waters of the DPRK and setting fire to its forests.

Following the announcement by the Republic of Korea and the United States on 26 January 1993 that they would resume their previously suspended joint "Team Spirit" military exercises, the DPRK, on 27 January, denounced the resumption as a provocative act intended to start a nuclear war in the Korean peninsula.⁽⁸⁾ As a result, the country had been placed on semi-war alert on 8 March,⁽⁹⁾ and, because of the coincidental demand by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for a special inspection of its military installations not related to nuclear activities, it decided, on 12 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ to withdraw from the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)⁽¹¹⁾ until the United States nuclear threats and IAEA's unjust conduct had been recognized to have been removed. The DPRK also transmitted to the Security Council a 29 January memorandum⁽¹²⁾ disclosing what it described as the true picture of the Republic of Korea's drive for nuclear-weapons development promoted with the tacit consent of the United States.

Compliance with non-proliferation and safeguards agreements

On 12 March 1993,⁽¹³⁾ the DPRK informed the President of the Security Council that, owing to the abnormal situation currently prevailing, it was no longer able to fulfil its obligations under NPT and had decided to withdraw from it. The withdrawal was a defensive measure against the United States nuclear war manoeuvres, "Team Spirit", and the misapplication of NPT by some IAEA officials so as to jeopardize the country's sovereignty and security and stifle its socialist system.

The DPRK, on 15 March,⁽¹⁴⁾ denied the inconsistencies first reported in 1992⁽¹⁵⁾ between its declarations regarding quantities and composition of nuclear material and IAEA inspection findings, characterizing the latter as fabrication and the result of United States manipulation of IAEA.

Access to more information and to two additional locations in order to resolve the inconsistencies (referred to as a special inspection) were the subject of talks held between IAEA and the DPRK at Pyongyang from 20 to 28 January 1993; such access was subsequently requested by the Director General of IAEA, Hans Blix, on 9 February.

IAEA reports (March and April). The Secretary-General drew to the attention of the President of the Security Council an 18 March communication⁽¹⁶⁾ from the Director General of IAEA, transmitting his report on the implementation of an IAEA Board of Governors resolution of 25 February and of the agreement between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (safeguards agreement), which entered into force on 10 April 1992.⁽¹⁵⁾

The 25 February 1993 resolution called on the DPRK to extend full cooperation to IAEA to enable it to discharge its responsibilities under the safeguards agreement, and to respond positively and without delay to the Director General's request of 9 February for access to additional information and to two additional sites, which was essential and urgent in order to resolve the inconsistencies noted and to ensure verification of compliance with the agreement.

The resolution was forwarded to the DPRK the day after its adoption, with a request for cooperation in its implementation, in particular that the Government receive an IAEA inspection team scheduled to arrive at Pyongyang on 16 March. The DPRK, on 10 March, expressed reservations about receiving the inspection team, referring to the resumption of the joint Republic of Korea/United States military exercise, "Team Spirit", and to the semi-war state into which the country had been placed as a result of that upcoming exercise. Despite IAEA notification that that state could not impede implementation of the agreement, the DPRK issued a 12 March statement⁽¹³⁾ declaring its decision to withdraw from NPT (see above). To IAEA's reiteration that the safeguards agreement remained in force until any withdrawal took effect—that is, after three months' advance notice to all other NPT parties and to the Security Council—and that a declaration of intention to withdraw should not impede the agreement's implementation, the DPRK none the less notified IAEA on 16 March that it could not receive the inspection team because, among other reasons, some IAEA officials had joined in a plot led by a party hostile to the DPRK and was trying to strangle its socialist system.

The Director General noted that: the safeguards agreement remained in force as long as the DPRK was a party to NPT; an NPT party had the right to withdraw from NPT if it decided that extraordinary events related to the subject-matter of the Treaty had jeopardized its supreme interests; and the withdrawal notice should state the nature of those extraordinary events.

In a second report, transmitted on 6 April,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Director General stated that the IAEA Board of Governors, having been informed of the foregoing developments, adopted a further resolution on 18 March, by which it confirmed that, although the DPRK had announced its intention to withdraw from NPT, the safeguards agreement remained in force and compliance with it was essential; it requested the Director General to continue his dialogue with the DPRK.

In forwarding the 18 March resolution to the DPRK, the Director General reiterated his request that the IAEA inspection teams be granted access to the two locations specified, which, although described as military sites rather than nuclear facilities, in no way immunized them from inspection; if his request was not granted, he would have no choice but to report non-compliance to the Board at its 31 March meeting. A reply from the DPRK reaffirmed that the issue of special inspections could not be a matter for discussion.

Thus, the IAEA Board of Governors adopted a resolution on 1 April, by which it found the DPRK in non-compliance with its obligations under its safeguards agreement with IAEA and that IAEA had been unable to verify the non-diversion of nuclear material to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices; it decided to report the non-compliance to all IAEA members and to the Security Council and General Assembly.

Annexed to the report were the texts of the Board's February, March and April resolutions, the safeguards agreement and the communications exchanged between IAEA and the DPRK.

The DPRK, on 5 April,⁽¹⁸⁾ rejected and condemned the Board's 1 April resolution as an encroachment on its sovereignty and dignity, asserting that it was preposterous for IAEA to charge it with non-compliance, that there was no basis for referring the matter to the United Nations and that to demand inspection based on spy-satellite intelligence information was to join the United States in its sinister purpose of exposing the military facilities of the DPRK so as to disarm it. The DPRK warned that, if the Security Council tried to pressure it by the application of collective sanctions, it would be compelled to take corresponding self-defensive measures.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Security Council, after consultations held on 8 April 1993, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁹⁾ to the media on behalf of the Council members:

"The members of the Security Council take note of the oral statement on 6 April 1993 and the written report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Director General, Dr. Hans Blix. The members of the Council also take note of the letter of 12 March 1993 of the Permanent Representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) to the President of the Security Council, enclosing one from his Foreign Minister with reference to article X of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT).

"The members of the Council are concerned at the situation which has arisen. In this connection they reaffirm the importance of NPT and of the parties to it adhering to it.

"The members of the Council also express their support for the North-South Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean peninsula.

"The members of the Council welcome all efforts aimed at resolving this situation and in particular encourage IAEA to continue its consultations with the DPRK and its constructive endeavours for a proper settlement of the nuclear verification issue in the DPRK.

"The members of the Security Council will continue to follow the situation."

Communications. In a 10 April statement,⁽²⁰⁾ the DPRK asserted that its fictitious "nuclear problem" and its withdrawal from NPT—a matter pertaining to its sovereignty—were not issues for debate in the Security Council, an organ concerned with issues endangering world peace and security. If the Council wanted to deal with the nuclear problem from the standpoint of guaranteeing international peace and security, it must first call into question the actions of the United States, the first nation to develop nuclear weapons and the one with the largest nuclear arsenal. It asked how the Council could remain indifferent to the illegal acts of the United States, which had strained the situation in the Korean peninsula to the extreme by resuming the nuclear-war rehearsal "Team Spirit", and to those IAEA officials who violated the sovereignty and security of a non-nuclear State by abusing the IAEA statute, NPT and the safeguards agreement.

On 10 May,⁽²¹⁾ the DPRK stated that some IAEA officials had demanded the inspection of military sites based on fabricated "satellite intelligence information" provided by the United States, in violation of the sovereign rights of States, had handed over confidential inspection information to the United States and had made it public. It asked the Council, when it convened on the matter of implementing the safeguards agreement, to consider the agreement's abuse by IAEA as it concerned the DPRK.
