The IAEA Director General replied on 11 May⁽²²⁾ that IAEA had been guided by its statute and by the relevant provisions of the safeguards agreement, in conformity with which he had reported to the Board of Governors on the results of the agreement's implementation and had provided information concerning objections raised by the DPRK to IAEA's right of access to relevant sites. He pointed to the Board's 18 March resolution, in which it expressed its full confidence in the IAEA Director General and secretariat and its support for actions taken by them to implement the agreement in an impartial and objective manner.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

The Security Council met on 11 May to discuss the DPRK's notice of withdrawal from NPT. It invited that country and the Republic of Korea, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The Council adopted resolution 825(1993).

The Security Council,

Having considered with concern the letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) dated 12 March 1993 addressed to the President of the Council concerning the intention of the Government of the DPRK to withdraw from the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (the Treaty) and the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA),

Recalling the Security Council Presidential statement of 8 April 1993 in which the members of the Council welcome all efforts aimed at resolving this situation and, in particular, encourage IAEA to continue its consultations with the DPRK for proper settlement of the nuclear verification issue in the DPRK,

Noting in that context the critical importance of the Treaty, emphasizing the integral role of IAEA safeguards in the implementation of the Treaty and in ensuring the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and reaffirming the crucial contribution which progress in non-proliferation can make to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling the Joint Declaration by the DPRK and the Republic of Korea (ROK) on the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, which includes establishment of a credible and effective bilateral inspection regime and a pledge not to possess nuclear reprocessing and uranium enrichment facilities,

Noting that the DPRK is party to the Treaty and has concluded a full-scope safeguards agreement as required by that Treaty,

Having also considered with regret the IAEA Board of Governors' findings contained in its resolution of 1 April 1993 that the DPRK is in non-compliance with its obligations under the IAEA-DPRK safeguards agreement, and that IAEA is not able to verify that there has been no diversion of nuclear materials required to be safeguarded under the terms of the IAEA-DPRK safeguards agreement to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices,

Noting the 1 April 1993 statement by the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, the depositaries of the Treaty (S/25515), which questions whether the DPRK's stated reasons for withdrawing from the Treaty constitute extraordinary events relating to the subject-matter of the Treaty,

Noting the letter of reply by the DPRK to the Director General of IAEA dated 22 April 1993 which, inter alia, encourages and urges the Director General to hold consultations with the DPRK on the implementation of the safeguards agreement, and noting also that the DPRK has expressed its willingness to seek a negotiated solution to this issue,

Welcoming recent signs of improved cooperation between the DPRK and IAEA and the prospect of contacts between the DPRK and other Member States,

1. Calls upon the DPRK to reconsider the announcement contained in the letter of 12 March 1993 and thus to reaffirm its commitment to the Treaty;

2. Further calls upon the DPRK to honour its non-proliferation obligations under the Treaty and comply with its safeguards agreement with IAEA as specified by the IAEA Board of Governors' resolution of 25 February 1993;

3. Requests the Director General of IAEA to continue to consult with the DPRK with a view to resolving the issues which are the subject of the Board of Governors' findings and to report to the Security Council on his efforts in due time;

4. Urges all Member States to encourage the DPRK to respond positively to this resolution, and encourages them to facilitate a solution;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter and to consider further Security Council action if necessary.

Security Council resolution 825(1993)

11 May 1993 Meeting 3212 13-0-2

8-nation draft (S/25745).

In favour: Brazil, Cape Verde, Djibouti, France, Hungary, Japan, Morocco, New Zealand, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Pakistan.

^a Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

In a statement to the Council, the DPRK asserted that neither legal nor technical grounds existed for a Council discussion of the so-called nuclear problem. It reiterated its reasons for withdrawing from NPT: the increasing nuclear threats from the United States and its manipulation of IAEA to demand opening military bases of the DPRK in order to disarm it. The "inconsistencies" and "suspicious locations" noted by IAEA were fabrications directed by the United States. The DPRK urged the Council not to deviate from justice and equity and to desist from applying a double standard by condoning the acts of the injurer while making an issue of the victim.

In China's view, the issue was mainly a matter between the DPRK and IAEA, the United States and the Republic of Korea, to be settled among them through dialogue and consultation. China was not in favour of having the Council deal with or adopt a resolution on the issue, for it could easily lead to complications and to an escalation of contradictions.

Pakistan said that, although many of its reservations on the original draft text had been resolved, those regarding paragraph 1 and the seventh preambular paragraph had not, hence its abstention.

On 12 May,⁽²³⁾ the DPRK characterized the resolution as unreasonable and resolutely rejected it as interference in its internal affairs and a grave infringement of its sovereignty. An ultimate imposition of sanctions based on the resolution could not but be construed as a declaration of war against the DPRK.

IAEA reports (September and October). As requested by the Security Council, the IAEA Director General continued to consult with the DPRK with a view to resolving the issues that were the subject of the Board of Governors' findings and reported to the Council on his efforts. His report covering developments from 1 April to 14 September was transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 17 September.⁽²⁴⁾ During that period, the Director General and the DPRK had a continuous exchange of communications in an effort to fix dates for the IAEA special inspection requested in February; for routine and ad hoc inspections to ensure continuity of safeguards over declared nuclear activities; and for consultations on outstanding safeguards issues, for technical discussions to improve an understanding of the nuclear inventory presented to IAEA and on the issue of the impartial application of safeguards. Meetings were held between the parties at Vienna, on 8 April, 24 May, 7 June and 2 August; and at Pyongyang, from 1 to 3 September. Two inspection teams visited the DPRK: the seventh (10-14 May) and the eighth (3-10 August).

Several key points emerged from those activities: IAEA could not obtain access to additional information or to the two locations that could help resolve the inconsistencies found in 1992 and was thus unable to verify the correctness and assess the completeness of the initial declarations; the routine and ad hoc inspection activities required under the safeguards agreement were overdue and IAEA proposed that they be carried out between 25 September and 9 October for continuity of safeguards over the declared nuclear activities to be ensured; the seventh and eighth inspections were so restricted that, instead of the activities specified under the agreement, they were limited to containment, surveillance and maintenance activities at the 5 MW(e) reactor and the radiochemical laboratory; and refuelling of the 5 MW(e) reactor, an operation requiring IAEA presence, had been postponed.

In addition, the exchange of correspondence revealed that the DPRK decided on 11 June "unilaterally to suspend", as long as it considered it necessary, "the effectuation of its withdrawal" from NPT.

In an 11 October addendum to his report,⁽²⁵⁾ the Director General covered developments from 15 September to 1 October. In communications with the DPRK, he stressed that IAEA verification activities in respect of that country's declared nuclear material and facilities must continue to be performed fully. He observed that the DPRK seemed to be suggesting that its "unique and extraordinary situation with regard to a temporary suspension of the effectuation of its withdrawal from NPT" meant that all issues relating to the agreement's implementation were open and negotiable at consultations and he emphasized the imperative of viewing the specific safeguards activities and time-frame as an integral whole, not as a menu to select from. Furthermore, the Director General made clear that the only legal basis and guidance for the relations between IAEA and the DPRK was found in the safeguards agreement.

The Director General underscored the foregoing points to the Board of Governors at its meeting on 23 September, adding that the positive attitude of the DPRK towards continuing consultations in the near future had not yet been matched in its approach to the request for the required routine and ad hoc inspections. He reiterated his observation that the DPRK seemed to take the untenable position that all issues pertaining to safeguards implementation were open for negotiation. The Board, on 23 September, adopted a resolution, by which it decided that the situation was urgent and asked that the item be placed on the agenda of the thirty-seventh (1993) regular session of the IAEA General Conference. The DPRK rejected the resolution as unjust and a violation of its sovereign rights; the nuclear issue, it said, was political and military rather than technical and could be resolved only through talks between it and the United States.

At the General Conference on 1 October, the Director General stated that as long as the existing inconsistency was not resolved by credible explanations through additional information and visits to additional locations, IAEA would not be able to exclude the possibility that nuclear material in the DPRK had been diverted. That country's readiness to implement its safeguards agreement had diminished rather than increased; while it had previously not objected to routine and ad hoc inspections, it currently accepted only limited safeguards, mainly related to maintenance. Whereas earlier uncertainty had centred on the possible existence of non-declared nuclear material, in the current circumstances only the implementation of systematic, effective and timely safeguards could provide assurance about the exclusively peaceful use of the declared nuclear material and facilities.

On the same date, the General Conference adopted a resolution expressing grave concern that the DPRK had failed to discharge its safeguards obligations and urged it to cooperate fully with IAEA.

In a second addendum dated 3 December,⁽²⁶⁾ the Director General described developments from his 11 October report to 1 December, noting that the situation had deteriorated further. No consultations between the DPRK and IAEA and no inspections of any kind at that country's nuclear facilities had taken place. Surveillance equipment, such as cameras, had ceased to operate; seals had not been checked; and many items that, for reasonable assurance against misuse, required visits and verification at determined intervals had not been visited.

In his statement before the General Assembly on 1 November, the Director General reported that the central safeguards issue was that IAEA verification activities suggested that some nuclear material existed in the DPRK that had not been reported to IAEA. Hence, IAEA could not verify the correctness and assess the completeness of the declaration of material subject to safeguards. Until the inconsistency between that declaration and IAEA findings was satisfactorily resolved, the possibility that nuclear material had been diverted could not be excluded. The longer IAEA was precluded from conducting inspection, the more safeguards-related data deteriorated and the less assurance safeguards could provide that even the declared facilities were used exclusively for peaceful purposes.

In a 2 December statement, the Director General informed the Board of Governors that he was bound to conclude that the safeguards system in the DPRK could not be said to provide any meaningful assurance of the peaceful use of nuclear material and installations. That was not to say that the system could not, with renewed efforts, be fully or partially restored, if cooperation were forthcoming from that country.

He restated IAEA's readiness to receive at any time a team from the DPRK for consultations about the whole safeguards issue, including the need for additional information and visits to additional locations. It was also ready to send an inspection team to perform a full range of inspection activities, as communicated to the Government and of the kind previously performed without objection.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 48/14 on the annual (1992) report of IAEA, adopted on 1 November, the General Assembly took note of the resolutions of the IAEA Board of Governors and expressed grave concern that the DPRK had failed to discharge its safeguards obligations and had recently widened the area of non-compliance. It commended the IAEA Director General and secretariat for their impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement still in force between IAEA and the DPRK and urged that country immediately to cooperate with IAEA.

South-East Asia

Cambodia situation

The United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), established by the Security Council in 1992,⁽¹⁾ brought its mandate to a successful conclusion in 1993. In cooperation with three of the four parties that had been involved in the Cambodian conflict and became signatories to the 1991 settlement agreements (Paris Agreements),⁽²⁾ UNTAC saw to the implementation of those agreements as faithfully to their letter and spirit as was possible given the non-cooperation of one of the signatories. Thus, as envisioned by the agreements, the elections that created the Constituent Assembly took place as scheduled, leading to the formation of a new Government of Cambodia.

The three cooperating signatories were: the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea, renamed the Cambodia People's Party (CPP) and also referred to as the party of the State of Cambodia (SOC); the National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Cambodia (FUNCINPEC, from its French name, Front uni national pour un Cambodge indépendant, neutre, pacifique et coopératif); and the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), also represented by the Buddhist Liberal Democratic Party (BLDP). The fourth signatory, the Party of Democratic Kampuchea (PDK), did not cooperate in the agreements' implementation.

The signatories' armed forces were, respectively, the Cambodian People's Armed Forces (CPAF), the National Army of Independent Kampuchea (ANKI), the Khmer People's National Liberation Armed Forces (KPNLAF) and the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea (NADK). Following the formation of the new Government, the first three armies merged to become the Cambodian Armed Forces (CAF).

By a number of resolutions, the Security Council endorsed the decision of the Supreme National Council (SNC)⁽²⁾ to hold elections for a constituent assembly from 23 to 27 May and called on UNTAC to create a neutral political environment conducive to free and fair elections (resolution 810(1993)); reiterated that call (826(1993)); invited the Secretary-General promptly to report on the elections (835(1993)); endorsed the election results, certified free and fair by the United Nations and reported on by the Secretary-General on 10 June (840(1993)); confirmed that UNTAC should end upon the creation of a new government consistent with the 1991 Paris Agreements and that the UNTAC withdrawal should be completed on 15 November (860(1993)); welcomed the formation on 24 September of the new Government of all Cambodia; extended the withdrawal period of specific UNTAC elements, some until 30 November and the remainder until 31 December; and established, at the request of the new Government, a 20-member military liaison team at Phnom Penh for a six-month period (880(1993)).

The General Assembly provided the resources to maintain UNTAC to the end of its mandate and for the first phase of its liquidation (resolution 47/209 B), as well as for the final phase (decision 48/469) and the emplacement of the military liaison team (decision 48/480).

UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia

In the third⁽³⁾ of four progress reports on UNTAC, requested by the Security Council in 1992⁽¹⁾ for submission at specific intervals, the Secretary-General described activities since the second (September 1992) progress report⁽⁴⁾ up to 10 January 1993, as discharged by the seven UNTAC components: the human rights, electoral, military, civil administration, police, repatriation and rehabilitation components. The task of each was outlined when the Secretary-General proposed UNTAC's establishment in 1992.⁽⁵⁾

The human rights component expanded its education programme to include: the introduction of formal human rights courses in the educational system and the country-wide distribution of related curricular and other information materials; training sessions for judges and lawyers and for public administration officials in the provinces; dissemination of human rights concepts through radio programmes and video presentations; and collaboration with local human rights organizations, of which there were five. UNTAC investigated prisoners detained by the Phnom Penh authorities to determine whether or not their detention was politically motivated. In addition, an International Symposium on Human Rights in Cambodia was held (Phnom Penh, 30 November–2 December 1992), at which presentations on the future of human rights were given by FUNCINPEC, KPNLF and SOC.

Voter registration, begun in October 1992, went into high gear as its closure on 31 January 1993 drew near. Electoral teams were permitted to register applicants from PDK-controlled zones, mostly at registration points outside those zones. Of the more than 4 million registration cards issued, 2.6 million had been logged in by early January. Twenty political parties had provisionally registered. Each was entitled to post agents at registration points, in part to ensure that all voter registrants were qualified and to address the persistent claim that "Vietnamese" would try to register and vote. Only 0.3 per cent of all registrants, however, had been challenged by party agents.

Two revisions to the Electoral Law—one to enfranchise Khmer Krom residents in Cambodia (ethnic Cambodians born, or with a parent born, in southern Viet Nam) and the other to allow Cambodians overseas to register outside Cambodia (instead of in Cambodia as required)—were under proposal by FUNCINPEC and KPNLF. Having carefully considered the proposals, the Secretary-General instructed his Special Representative for Cambodia, Yasushi Akashi, that, unless the Security Council decided otherwise, he should not approve them: the first would not be consistent with the 1991 Paris Agreements; the second would entail administrative procedures that would make it impossible to hold the elections in May 1993 as scheduled.

The military situation had been marked by an increase in the daily count of cease-fire violations, mainly in central and northern Cambodia. The most serious occurred in the Bavel area of Battambang Province, where NADK had been attempting to consolidate territorial gains and disrupt CPAF communications. This led to continual shell-fire exchanges between the two armies throughout December 1992, in the course of which six bridges were blown up, 15,000 residents fled their homes and artillery shells landed in an area 50 kilometres north-east of Siem Reap where an UNTAC electoral team had recently been deployed.

PDK's refusal to participate in the cantonment, disarmament and demobilization of the four Cambodian armed forces made it necessary for the military component, originally deployed to meet the requirements of those three cease-fire provisions, to align its deployment with that of the electoral teams so as to protect them and enhance security in remote areas or areas of high conflict potential.

The civil administration component reported progress in developing procedures for expenditure control; establishing a border control mechanism to prevent the influx of Vietnamese into Cambodia and the export from it of round logs; planning specialized control operations for telecommunications and civil aviation; and advancing measures to foster a neutral political environment. With respect to foreign affairs, it supervised the abolition of entry and exit visas for holders of passports issued by Phnom Penh (SOC) and of the practice of retaining such passports after their holders had returned to Cambodia, as well as the streamlining of passport application and immigration procedures at Phnom Penh Airport.

As to national defence and public security, UNTAC proposed and obtained SOC approval of measures governing immovable assets and underlining the distinction between private and public assets, in view of widespread and complex land and property disputes. Incoming and outgoing correspondence of the SOC, FUNCINPEC and KPRLF administrations was monitored to prevent actions that might impair the neutrality of the political environment. A draft directive regarding political activity by CPAF, ANKI and KPRLF was in preparation. An orientation programme on interim penal provisions was launched for about 200 magistrates, police officers, prosecutors and public defenders.

In the area of finance and information, UNTAC strengthened control over expenditure, revenue sources (taxes and customs duties), central bank functions and the sale of public assets. It monitored currency issuance by the national bank and began setting up a system to monitor its currency reserves and liabilities. It published media guidelines aimed at encouraging a free and responsible press.

The civilian police component organized training courses for the local police, awarding graduation certificates to 84 of those who had completed the course in basic police methods. To enable electoral activity to proceed under peaceful and orderly conditions, the police component, in co-operation with the human rights and civil administration components, developed measures to prevent and deal with threats to public order. Patrols and static guard duty were increased to bolster the security of political party offices regarded most vulnerable to attack. A special directive issued under the relevant articles of the Paris Agreements empowered UNTAC to arrest, detain and prosecute suspects in cases involving serious human rights violations.

Two thirds of an estimated 360,000 Cambodian refugees and displaced persons had been safely repatriated. Arrangements were made with the United States for resettling in North Carolina a group of 398 Vietnamese Montagnards, called the Front uni de liberation des races opprimées, who had inhabited the forests of Monduliri Province during the last 15 years.

While the success of the voter registration exercise and repatriation process was remarkable and encouraging, some negative developments gave cause for concern. Chief among these were the continuing refusal of PDK to participate in phase II of the cease-fire implementation, making it impossible for UNTAC to carry out the agreed cantonment, disarmament and demobilization of the four parties' armed forces; the growing climate of violence as evidenced by politically motivated acts of intimidation and attacks against party workers and offices, apparently deliberate killings of ethnic Vietnamese and attacks on UNTAC; a growing reluctance of some administrative structures to accept the control and supervisory functions entrusted to UNTAC; and the infrequency of SNC meetings, not to mention the disappointing level of member participation.

On 13 February,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in response to the Council's 1992 call⁽⁷⁾ for the implementation of measures to ensure the realization of the fundamental objectives of the Paris Agreements, in particular those required for the successful conduct of free and fair elections, including a presidential election.

In the context of Council instructions to proceed with the elections in all parts of Cambodia to which UNTAC had full access as at 31 January 1993, the Special Representative met with the President of PDK (Beijing, China, 27 January) in a renewed effort to secure his party's cooperation with UNTAC, stressing that it was in the long-term interests of PDK to take part in those elections. The PDK President insisted that before his party could join the peace process, its conditions must first be fulfilled, namely, the removal of foreign forces from Cambodia, the granting of greater powers to SNC and full UNTAC control over the five administrative areas of foreign affairs, national defence, public security, finance and information, as specified in the Paris Agreements.

At the first 1993 SNC meeting (Beijing, 28 January), it was agreed that the elections for a constituent assembly would be held from 23 to 25 May. Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who chaired the meeting, announced his decision not to advance his candidacy for the presidential elections until a new constitution was adopted, which would lay down the modalities for the election of the head of State and the related term of office and powers. Consequently, UNTAC preparations for holding a presidential election in conjunction with the constituent assembly elections were put on hold.

Despite additional protective measures for the electoral teams and political party offices and reinforced patrols in remote areas, incidents of violence and intimidation persisted mainly in the provinces of Battambang and Kompong Cham; in most cases the victims were FUNCINPEC members. Under investigation by UNTAC were two separate armed attacks (12 and 27 January) at Phum Angkrong and vicinity, Siem Reap Province, amidst indications that NADK might have been responsible; the two attacks killed 11 civilians, two of them UNTAC electoral workers, and injured 12 others. In early February, four FUNCINPEC members were detained at Battambang and an attack in the Bakan district, Pursat Province, killed five civilians and damaged UNTAC premises.

Attacks commonly levelled at UNTAC on PDK radio had become increasingly hostile. However, SOC had only recently begun a multi-media campaign to spread the message that UNTAC could not be trusted to protect Cambodians, and that only SOC could defend the country against PDK and so deserved electoral support.

To preserve Cambodia's natural resources, UNTAC deployed border control teams to monitor violations of the moratorium on the export of logs by land or sea, raised the number of its checkpoints along the Cambodia-Thailand border to 17 and appealed to the four Cambodian parties and neighbouring countries (the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam) to assist in implementing the moratorium. UNTAC observers recorded 46 violations between 1 January and 5 February, during which 46,507 cubic metres of logs were transported by three of the Cambodian parties (FUNCINPEC, PDK, SOC) to seven known destinations. At its 10 February meeting, SNC, on a proposal by UNTAC, asked the Technical Advisory Committee on Management and Sustainable Exploitation of Natural Resources to determine a ceiling on the export of sawn timber. Over PDK objections, it adopted a Declaration on Mining and Export of Minerals and Gems from Cambodia, placing a moratorium on the extraction and export of minerals and gems, effective 28 February.

Following UNTAC discussions with Thailand (which bordered on most of the PDK zones) regarding the Council's call for measures to prevent the supply of petroleum products to areas occupied by any Cambodian party not complying with the military provisions of the Paris Agreements, Thailand announced the suspension of its petroleum shipments to Cambodia pending establishment of a system, under UNTAC monitoring, to preclude petroleum shipments to those areas.

In the broader context of border control, the civil administration component was to monitor customs and immigration control. Each of the 23 checkpoints in operation was manned by an UNTAC team of military observers, armed soldiers and civilian police with communication support facilities, in which the three cooperating Cambodian parties were also represented.

At the 28 January SNC meeting, the Special Representative announced that some $540 million of the $880 million pledged at the 1992 Ministerial Conference on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia⁽⁶⁾ had been committed for specific rehabilitation activities; he conveyed UNTAC's concern, however, that the actual level of disbursements currently stood only at $95 million. Also of concern was the lack of funding for such specific activities as training and maintenance of essential social services that could compromise the overall rehabilitation effort. To address those concerns, it was agreed to hold a technical-level meeting, with the participation of donors, the Cambodian parties, all countries providing assistance to Cambodia and non-governmental organizations.

The Secretary-General stated that it was imperative for UNTAC to maintain the momentum towards the constituent assembly elections, due to start on 23 May. Meanwhile, he had instructed his Special Representative to assess post-election security requirements, as arrangements envisioned by the Paris Agreements would almost certainly be impossible to apply given PDK's decision not to enter into phase II of the cease-fire.

15. Takes note of the remarks of the Secretary-General in paragraph 44 of his report concerning the security situation in Cambodia during the period between the election for the constituent assembly and the end of the mandate of UNTAC upon the creation of a government, and welcomes his intention to submit recommendations in that connection;

16. Commends the decision of SNC at its meeting on 10 February 1993 to adopt measures for the protection of Cambodia's natural resources, and supports steps taken by the Technical Advisory Committee on Management and Sustainable Exploitation of Natural Resources to implement these decisions;

17. Reiterates its demand that all parties honour in full their obligations under the Paris Agreements, in particular to desist from all offensive military activity;

18. Demands that all parties take all action necessary to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel throughout Cambodia, and desist from all threats or intimidation against UNTAC personnel and from any interference with them in the performance of their mandate;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council in the context of his fourth progress report in April 1993 on the implementation of this resolution, and on any further measures that may be necessary and appropriate to ensure the realization of the fundamental objectives of the Paris Agreements;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 810(1993)
 8 March 1993 Meeting 3181 Adopted unanimously
 Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25376).

Communications. On 11 March,⁽⁹⁾ Viet Nam referred to the massacre of 33 Vietnamese and the wounding of 26 others during an attack on the fishing village of Chong Kneas, 10 kilometres south of Siem Reap. It denounced what it called the barbarous acts of terrorism against Vietnamese residents in Cambodia and demanded an immediate end to them. Viet Nam appealed to SNC and to UNTAC on 16 March⁽¹⁰⁾ to take determined measures to stop the killing and, on 26 March,⁽¹¹⁾ issued a statement citing the relevant portions of the 1991 Paris Agreements obligating UNTAC morally and legally to protect ethnic Vietnamese residents in Cambodia.

Reports of the Secretary-General (3 and 15 May). In his fourth progress report, describing UNTAC activities up to 3 May,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the human rights education programme was accelerated, particularly in teacher training, dissemination of international human rights instruments, education of health professionals, training of public administration and political officials and support for local human rights organizations.

Revisions were made to the Electoral Law to ban public meetings before the official start of the election campaigns on 7 April, public opinion polls and the placing of party seals on ballot boxes at polling time; to amend provisions regarding the removal of names from the lists of candidates; and to permit polling stations to be set up in Paris, New York and Sydney, Australia, for overseas voters duly registered in Cambodia.

The computerized voter registration lists showed nearly 4.7 million registered voters, or about 96 per cent of the eligible voter population. Based on that number, 120 seats for the constituent assembly were allocated to the 21 provinces including the Phnom Penh special district. All 20 political parties—PDK not among them—had been officially registered and had submitted their lists of candidates. Preparations for the conduct of the elections were under way: 50,000 Cambodian electoral staff had been selected, the number and organization of polling stations were being finalized and plans had been made to recruit some 1,000 international polling station officers from more than 30 countries. Eleven countries were asked to provide a total of 50 fingerprint and five handwriting experts to check tendered ballots (ballots cast by voters whose cards had been lost or illegally confiscated or who had voted outside their province of registration).

One of the most serious violations of the ceasefire occurred on 3 May, when NADK elements attacked the town of Siem Reap with rockets, small arms and grenades. Targeted were a CPAF garrison, the airport and a number of buildings, including some occupied by UNTAC, which were also ransacked.

In cooperation with the civilian police component, the military component concluded security arrangements with FUNCINPEC, KPNLF and SOC applicable during the polling period. UNTAC alone would provide security at and around polling stations and for United Nations personnel and property; the armed forces of the three parties would assist UNTAC by reporting to it possible or actual threats to the election and by ensuring security in the zones they controlled.

On 1 March, UNTAC announced that, of the persons under investigation by the strategic investigation teams set up to examine allegations of the continued presence of foreign forces in Cambodia, three were Vietnamese who fell under the category of "foreign forces"; a fourth had since been similarly identified. However, UNTAC pointed out the complexities of the cases: the three Vietnamese were married to Cambodian women with whom they had children, and there was no suggestion that they were in any way under the control of Vietnamese authorities. UNTAC reported that Viet Nam had so far declined to receive the men back as Vietnamese nationals.

The five UNTAC engineering units, supplemented by the engineer platoons in 11 of the 12 infantry battalions, had repaired hundreds of bridges and improved scores of kilometres of roads, as well as airfields at Pochentong (Phnom Penh) and Stung Treng.

UNTAC efforts to stabilize the riel were hampered by the fact that support for it was perceived as partiality towards SOC. To avert social unrest from the unstable riel and spiralling food prices, UNTAC introduced additional rice supplies into the market to discourage hoarding and to bring down the price of that prime commodity. Besides making its television/video, radio and other information facilities available to the 20 participating parties, UNTAC exercised its right of direct control over existing administrative structures so as to secure for all parties access to the SOC public media facilities at Phnom Penh and to the FUNCINPEC and KPNLF radio stations.

On 30 March, a year after the repatriation component began operations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the lead agency, closed the largest and last of the refugee camps. By the end of April, about 365,000 Cambodian refugees and displaced persons from camps along the Cambodia-Thailand border and elsewhere had been repatriated. Some 600 refugees on Thai territory had refused repatriation and would be deported by Thailand.

By March, only about $100 million of the $880 million pledged at the 1992 Ministerial Conference⁽⁶⁾ had been disbursed for rehabilitation projects. Forty-five such projects, worth $366 million, had been approved by SNC. The rehabilitation component continued to monitor compliance with the moratorium on log export. On 9 March, SNC approved the UNTAC draft action plan for implementing the moratorium on the mining and export of minerals and gems.

The main emphasis of UNTAC efforts in information and education during the electoral campaign was on the secrecy of the ballot and on the production of broadcast campaign material.

Acts of violence and intimidation continued to undermine efforts to maintain a neutral political environment. About 100 persons were killed in March, including members of all four Cambodian parties and persons of Vietnamese descent. The UNTAC Special Prosecutor issued warrants for the arrest of 12 people including 7 CPAF officers in connection with the abduction and subsequent disappearance of 4 FUNCINPEC members in Battambang, 2 SOC officials for the murder of a BLDP member at Prey Veng, and an NADK officer in connection with a massacre at Chong Kneas, Siem Reap. The targets of violence were Vietnamese-speaking persons, including those born in Cambodia of Vietnamese descent; political party members and offices; and UNTAC military and civilian personnel.

The Secretary-General felt that, given the altered conditions for the UNTAC operations, the military component, which was to have been reduced after completion of the cantonment and demobilization process, should be maintained at its current level until the elections in May. Despite the imperfect conditions, he saw no reason to hold back the May elections, which were not the end but rather the beginning of the process of Cambodia's renewal.

Viet Nam, in a statement of 2 March⁽¹³⁾ regarding the three men identified by UNTAC as "foreign forces", asserted that they did not fall under that category as defined by the 1991 Paris Agreements; thus, to label them as such and to demand their repatriation to Viet Nam was contrary to the letter and spirit of the agreements. The statement repeated what UNTAC itself recognized: that the three men returned to civilian life in 1983 and 1985, that they were married to Cambodian women and had children with them and that they were issued Cambodian identity cards. They had become Cambodian of Vietnamese origin, the statement continued, and Viet Nam had absolutely no jurisdiction over them.

In a further report of 15 May,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described the final preparations for the elections. He referred to a meeting (Beijing, 6 May) at which FUNCINPEC, KPNLF and SOC reaffirmed their support for the elections. Technical preparations were virtually complete. Some 900 international polling officers recruited from 44 countries and the Geneva-based Inter-Parliamentary Union had arrived and were at a three-day training course (Bangkok, Thailand, 13-15 May); 130 staff members from the United Nations Secretariat and 370 UNTAC personnel were due to arrive at their duty stations by 18 May.

All political parties had campaigned vigorously. UNTAC itself organized multi-party meetings, granted access to its media facilities, provided air transport for campaign purposes to three parties, including FUNCINPEC, and stepped up publicity on the secrecy of the ballot through radio and television spots.

Incidents of banditry and lawlessness apart, violence to disrupt the electoral process continued: killings, including of ethnic Vietnamese, to pressure them into leaving Cambodia; SOC attacks and harassment to intimidate other political parties, primarily FUNCINPEC; and attacks on UNTAC personnel.

In the light of PDK's expressly repeated intention to oppose the elections even by violent means, UNTAC further refined the different levels of security measures applicable to what it designated as high-, medium- and low-risk zones. Measures for high-risk zones included reinforcement of physical fortifications, stationing armed UNTAC military personnel at and around polling stations, and provision of protective gear, as well as of quick reaction forces and medical support units. Equipment to enhance security had been obtained from five Governments; negotiations for more were in progress.

Owing to the heightened threat in Kompong Thom, UNTAC withdrew its civilian personnel from some locations and reduced the 102 polling stations in the area to 51. It made arrangements so that its civilian staff, including civilian police monitors, could directly seek the protection of the UNTAC Indonesian battalion on Kompong Thom, Stung and Baray; and so that all personnel at Siem Reap would be accommodated with military units at night. Movement in the provinces was subject to authorization and monitoring by UNTAC sector commanders.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite meticulous preparations by UNTAC, the conditions for the elections fell short of those envisioned by the Paris Agreements owing to PDK's progressive withdrawal from the peace process, starting with not complying with the Agreements' military provisions and moving to boycotting the elections and then to disrupting them through violence. Regrettably, SOC had also contributed to the climate of violence by resorting to intimidation of other political parties; it had, moreover, not responded satisfactorily to UNTAC's efforts to prevent it from using its administrative structures for political purposes. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General directed that the elections take place as scheduled, for that was clearly the will and intent of the Security Council and of the vast majority of the Cambodian people.

20 May 1993 Meeting 3213 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25803), orally revised.

Safety of UNTAC personnel

The Secretary-General's third progress report on UNTAC⁽ⁱ⁾ drew attention to the illegal detention of UNTAC personnel by NADK on two occasions: at O Sala, Kompong Thom, where four military observers and groups of soldiers from the Indonesian battalion were detained at different times during the three-day period from 15 to 18 December 1992; and in Kratie, where, on 18 December, 10 members of the Uruguayan battalion were detained overnight, together with four Russian personnel from a helicopter that inadvertently landed in an NADK defensive position. As a result of negotiations to secure agreement to procedures that would prevent the recurrence of such detentions, a joint PDK/NADK declaration was transmitted to the Special Representative on 20 December, enjoining UNTAC from entering PDK-controlled zones without prior authorization and holding UNTAC fully responsible for incidents that had resulted from its failure to obtain such authorization.

During the reporting period, 14 UNTAC personnel had been injured as a result of military activity by one Cambodian faction or another, nine of them from land-mine explosions in Banteay Meanchey, Kratie and Siem Reap provinces.

An armed attack at Phum Prek, Kompong Speu, on 2 April, that killed three members of the Bulgarian contingent and seriously wounded three others was the subject of a protest and condemnation by Bulgaria.⁽¹⁵⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

After consultations among the members of the Security Council on 5 April, the President made the following statement⁽¹⁶⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3193.

"The Security Council strongly condemns all attacks on the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), particularly the recent attacks which have resulted in the death of two Bangladeshi members of UNTAC and the cowardly assassination of three members of the Bulgarian contingent of UNTAC on 2 April 1993.

"The Security Council expresses its strong support for UNTAC in carrying out its mandate within the framework of the Paris Agreements. It demands that all hostile acts against UNTAC cease immediately and that all parties take measures to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel.

"It expresses its condolences to the Governments of Bangladesh and Bulgaria and to the families of the victims; it pays tribute to the latter for their courage and dedication. It requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council on the circumstances of these murderous acts and the responsibility for them.

"The Security Council also expresses its determination that the election for the constituent assembly should be held on the dates decided by the Supreme National Council and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 810(1993). In this respect, the Council stresses the importance of ensuring a neutral political environment in Cambodia, as well as the cessation of acts of violence and of all threats and intimidation committed on political or ethnic grounds."

The Secretary-General's findings, communicated to the Council on 27 April,⁽¹⁷⁾ revealed that an UNTAC post manned by a Bangladeshi unit at Angkor Chum, Siem Reap, was subjected to an hour-long mortar and small-arms fire on 27 March, during which a Bangladeshi soldier was wounded and later died from his wounds; four Cambodian civilians were also injured. An investigation strongly indicated that members of NADK had directed the attack.

On the night of 29 March, one of three Bangladeshi nationals (two of them UNTAC members) travelling by car was shot dead while passing a CPAF checkpoint. Two CPAF soldiers had since been arrested for that murder.

Shortly before midnight on 2 April, an 11-member Bulgarian battalion of UNTAC stationed at Phum Prek, Kompong Speu, was assaulted with automatic weapons and hand-grenades; three Bulgarians were killed and three others wounded. The attackers were 10 to 15 NADK soldiers, led by a commander who had earlier dined with the battalion. The UNTAC post was thereafter subjected to mortar and small-arms fire until dawn. The wounded were airlifted to the UNTAC field hospital at Phnom Penh and two were later evacuated to Bangkok for further treatment. On 5 April, the Bulgarian post at Amelean came under machine-gun fire; a sentry sustained a wound in the abdomen, which damaged his spinal cord and paralysed his legs.

The Secretary-General reported two further attacks, one on 8 April, in which a Japanese national serving with the UNTAC electoral component and his Cambodian interpreter were detained at Prasat Sambo District, Kompong Thom, and then shot; both died of their wounds. UNTAC had not been able to determine responsibility. The other attack, which occurred on 19 April, was on the UNTAC offices at Oaral District, Kompong Speu. An armoured personnel carrier, dispatched from a nearby Bulgarian contingent post to give assistance, was fired upon as it came within 1.5 kilometres of the UNTAC offices. An anti-tank grenade killed a Bulgarian soldier and wounded five others. In the ransacking of the UNTAC offices that ensued, an Indonesian civilian police monitor and a Cambodian interpreter were injured. Preliminary investigations indicated that NADK elements were responsible for the attack; however, since a CPAF camp was located near the UNTAC offices and seven non-UNTAC buildings were also destroyed, it could not be concluded that UNTAC was the prime target.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In his fourth periodic report on UNTAC, dated 3 May,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that the 27 March incident appeared to have been the first deliberate attack against UNTAC personnel. As to the 8 April incident, evidence ruled out involvement of any Cambodian faction.

In separate incidents on 30 April, an UNTAC vehicle carrying three civilian police monitors was fired upon in Kompong Cham, killing one and injuring another—a Colombian and a Malaysian, respectively; an attack on the Uruguayan detachment in Kratie wounded two soldiers. The assailants in both instances were unknown. On 1 May, a Dutch soldier was killed when three hand-grenades were hurled at the Dutch battalion camp in Banteay Meanchey; two days later, five soldiers from the Indian contingent were injured when their two-vehicle patrol was ambushed in Kompong Cham.

As a result of these attacks, UNTAC directed all of its military units to enhance security measures and procedures. Defensive positions, particularly in Siem Reap and Kompong Thom, were expanded to include bunkers, overhead protection and firing bays. Permanent guards and/or mobile patrols were used to improve the physical security of UNTAC premises and property at isolated locations. At UNTAC headquarters, the surrounding walls were heightened and illumination was improved. Military and civilian police monitors manned checkpoints and roadblocks, confiscating illegally held weapons.

In his 15 May report,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that, between 4 and 11 May, UNTAC sustained five separate attacks: an ambush of one of its convoys in Banteay Meanchey; rocket and small-arms attacks on the Chinese engineering and Polish logistics companies in Kompong Thom and a similar assault on a Pakistani company at Choam Khsan, Preah Vihear; and, at Sisophon, Banteay Meanchey, a grenade attack on a vehicle driven by a civilian police monitor. The resultant UNTAC casualties were two dead and 17 wounded.

As at the reporting date, UNTAC personnel killed in the line of duty numbered 13 and the injured 52. Deaths through other causes totalled 39.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following consultations among its members, the President of the Security Council, on 22 May, made the following statement⁽¹⁸⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3214.

"The Security Council strongly condemns the shelling on 21 May 1993 of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), during which the Chinese engineering detachment suffered two deaths and seven wounded. It expresses its condolences to the Chinese Government and to the families of the victims; it pays tribute to the latter for their courage and dedication.

"The Security Council takes note of the preliminary report by the Secretariat indicating that the shelling was carried out by NADK. It requests the Secretary-General to investigate further and to report urgently to the Council.

"The Security Council expresses its strong support for UNTAC in carrying out its mandate within the framework of the Paris Agreements. It strongly condemns all attacks against UNTAC and demands that those responsible cease forthwith all hostile acts against UNTAC and take immediate measures to safeguard the lives and the security of UNTAC personnel.

"The Council recalls the warning contained in its resolution 826(1993) that it would respond appropriately should any of the parties fail to honour its obligations. It further warns that it will not countenance the use of violence to interfere with or overturn the democratic process in Cambodia and will take further appropriate measures against any of the parties failing to honour its obligations.

"The Security Council also expresses its determination that the election for the constituent assembly should be held on the dates decided by the Supreme National Council and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 810(1993) and reaffirms its commitment to resolution 826(1993). The Council calls upon the Cambodian people fully to exercise their right to vote in the forthcoming elections. In this respect, the Council stresses the importance of ensuring the cessation of acts of violence and of all threats and intimidation, as well as of ensuring a neutral political environment in Cambodia."

As requested, the Secretary-General, on 28 May,⁽¹⁹⁾ communicated the findings of the UNTAC investigations into the 21 May incident. They confirmed that the intended target of the NADK shelling was not the Chinese engineering company at Skon village, Kompong Cham, but rather an SOC police station located some 150 metres directly south of it. Being in the line of fire and owing to the inaccuracy of the firing, the UNTAC barracks was hit by a rocket that instantly killed a Chinese soldier and injured another who later died; seven others were injured.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 June, following consultations among its members, the Security Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3230.

"The Security Council strongly condemns the armed attack against a Pakistani platoon and another against a Malaysian platoon of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), both on 7 June 1993. In the first incident, two Pakistani personnel were injured, one of them seriously; in the second, three Malaysian personnel were injured, one of them seriously.

"The Security Council takes note of the Secretariat's preliminary report that the first attack was launched against the Pakistani compound by the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea (NADK); the identity of the attackers in the second incident has not yet been determined. It requests the Secretary-General to investigate further and to report urgently to the Council.

"The Security Council demands that those responsible for the attacks cease immediately all attacks against UNTAC and reiterates its warning that it will take appropriate measures against those who are threatening the safety and security of UNTAC personnel and are trying to overturn the democratic process in Cambodia through violence."

The Secretary-General, on 22 June,⁽²¹⁾ conveyed the results of the UNTAC investigation into the two attacks that occurred on 7 June. The attack on the Pakistani platoon encamped at Phum Tbeng, west of Preah Vihear, which injured two Pakistani soldiers, had been a deliberate action by some 170 NADK soldiers who attacked in waves. Evidence was provided by local villagers who identified two corpses on the scene as well-known NADK members. The Pakistani platoon had since been withdrawn from the area. The 45-minute assault, by rocket and small-arms fire, on the Malaysian platoon at Phum Tapoung, Battambang, which wounded three Malaysian soldiers, had in all probability been at the hands of CPAF elements. That conclusion was based on shell casings retrieved from the area and on the behaviour of the local CPAF and villagers.

Elections

The elections for the Constituent Assembly of Cambodia took place, as scheduled, from 23 to 28 May 1993. At the SNC meeting on 29 May, the Special Representative for Cambodia, in a statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General and the United Nations,⁽²²⁾ reported that the Cambodian electorate turned out in high numbers to exercise the right to vote without fear, in an atmosphere almost completely free of violence and intimidation, and concluded that the conduct of the elections had been free and fair. The counting and verification of ordinary and tendered ballots were under way, he said, adding that the outpouring of popular will demonstrated during the polling should reinforce the commitment already made by the parties to respect the election results.

Based on the certified results, the list of members of the Constituent Assembly would be drawn up, following which the date and venue of the first Assembly meeting would be fixed. The Special Representative announced that UNTAC stood ready to assist the Constituent Assembly and that a draft set of rules of procedure had been prepared for its consideration. He proposed that the modalities of the Assembly's functioning and its relationship with UNTAC, SNC and the existing administrative authorities should be discussed at the next SNC meeting on 5 June.

On 2 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 835(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, 810(1993) of 8 March 1993, 826(1993) of 20 May 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) and especially to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Yasushi Akashi, for their courage, dedication and perseverance in providing the necessary support for the electoral process despite hardships and difficulties,

Paying tribute to the leadership and continuing role of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, President of the Supreme National Council,

Noting with satisfaction the overwhelming number of Cambodians who demonstrated their patriotism and sense of responsibility in exercising their right to vote,

Endorsing the declaration of the Secretary-General's Special Representative to the Supreme National Council of 29 May 1993 that the conduct of the election had been free and fair,

1. Salutes the members of UNTAC, particularly those who gave their lives in order to make possible this extraordinary demonstration by the Cambodian people;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to make his report on the election available as soon as possible;

3. Expresses its intention, following certification of the election, to support fully the duly elected constituent assembly in its work of drawing up a constitution, according to the principles laid down in annex 5 to the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, and establishing a new government for all Cambodia;

4. Calls upon all parties to stand by their obligation to respect fully the results of the elections and urges them to do all in their power to bring about the peaceful establishment of a democratic government in accordance with the terms of the new constitution;

5. Urges the international community to contribute actively to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Cambodia;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

2 June 1993 Meeting 3227 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25876).

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 10 June report,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General gave the official results of the elections. Of the 4,011,631 ballots (ordinary and tendered) verified as valid, FUNCINPEC won 1,824,188 votes (45.47 per cent of the votes); SOC (CPP) won 1,533,471 (38.23 per cent); and KNPLF (BLDP) won 152,764 (3.81 per cent). Based on those figures, the 120 seats in the Constituent Assembly were allocated as follows: 58 to FUNCINPEC, 51 to SOC (CPP), 10 to KNPLF (BLDP) and 1 to MOLINAKA (Molinaka and Naktaorsou Khmere for Freedom). A table giving the names of the 20 participating parties, with the number and percentage of votes won by each, was annexed to the report.

The Secretary-General authorized the Special Representative to issue a statement at the SNC meeting on 10 June, on behalf of the United Nations, that the elections had been free and fair. Voter turnout reached 4,267,192, representing 89.56 per cent of registered voters. Tendered ballots made up about 7 per cent of the votes cast. To ensure maximum accuracy and transparency, counting proceeded at a pace slower than anticipated and UNTAC released interim vote counts twice a day.

Certain irregularities were alleged by SOC (CPP): party agents were not able to inspect the "safe havens" where ballot boxes were stored overnight; the plastic seals of some boxes were ruptured; the indelible ink used was not efficacious; discrepancies were found in the ballot count of certain boxes; and some locally recruited Cambodian polling staff lacked impartiality. UNTAC investigations into some of these allegations were conducted to the complete satisfaction of party agents. As to the other allegations, details requested by UNTAC to enable investigations to proceed had not been forthcoming. UNTAC denied SOC's request for new elections in seven provinces and in Phnom Penh for lack of convincing evidence that irregularities and fraud had been such as to invalidate the poll.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report on the conduct and results of the elections, unanimously adopted resolution 840(1993) on 15 June 1993.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, 810(1993) of 8 March 1993, 826(1993) of 20 May 1993, 835(1993) of 2 June 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 10 June 1993, and in particular the statement contained therein concerning the election that took place in Cambodia from 23 to 28 May 1993,

Paying tribute to the leadership and continuing role of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk, President of the Supreme National Council, in bringing about national reconciliation and restoring peace in Cambodia,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) and especially to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the smoothness of the electoral process,

Reaffirming the national unity, territorial integrity and inviolability and independence of Cambodia,

Welcoming the fact that on 14 June 1993 the newly elected constituent assembly held its first meeting,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Endorses the results of the election, which has been certified free and fair by the United Nations;
3. Calls upon all parties to stand by their obligation to respect fully the results of the election and to cooperate in securing a peaceful transition and welcomes, in this context, the efforts of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk to achieve national reconciliation and his leadership and continuing role in maintaining stability and in promoting cooperation among Cambodians by appropriate means;
4. Fully supports the newly elected constituent assembly which has begun its work of drawing up and approving a constitution according to the principles laid down in annex 5 to the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict contained in the Paris Agreements, and will subsequently transform itself into a legislative assembly, which will establish a new government for all Cambodia;

5. Emphasizes the necessity to complete this work and to establish a new government for all Cambodia as soon as possible and within the time allotted by the Paris Agreements;

6. Requests UNTAC to continue to play its role in conjunction with SNC during the transitional period in accordance with the Paris Agreements;

7. Requests also the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council by the middle of July, including on his recommendations on the possible role the United Nations and its agencies might play after the end of the mandate of UNTAC according to the Paris Agreements;

8. Urges all States and relevant international organizations to contribute actively to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Cambodia;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 840(1993)

15 June 1993 Meeting 3237 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/25931), orally revised.

Post-election period

and termination of UNTAC

Report of the Secretary-General (July). On 16 July,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described post-election developments and the possible role of the United Nations after the end of the UNTAC mandate. As provided for by the Security Council in 1992,⁽¹⁾ that mandate was to extend for a period not to exceed 18 months until the end of the transitional period, that is, until the Constituent Assembly had drafted and approved a constitution, transformed itself into a legislative assembly and created a new Cambodian government—all to be performed within three months from the date of the election (23 to 28 May).

The duly elected Constituent Assembly held an inaugural meeting on 14 June. It elected its President and two Vice-Presidents and adopted its rules of procedure on 30 June. It established two permanent committees—the Committee for Drafting the Constitution and the Committee on Rules of Procedure. Elaboration of a draft constitution had begun, with UNTAC providing technical advice and logistical and operational assistance.

The post-election period had not been without difficulties. Some elements of SOC (CPP), which had made numerous allegations of electoral irregularities and had initially withheld recognition of the outcome of the elections, declared a short-lived "secession" in three eastern provinces that collapsed after a few days. SOC subsequently accepted the election results. None the less, the Electoral Advisory Committee, set up by the Special Representative, continued to review outstanding allegations.

Though not foreseen under the 1991 Paris Agreements,⁽²⁾ an Interim Joint Administration (Provisional National Government) was set up, with Prince Norodom Sihanouk as head of State, to serve as a cooperative framework, during the transitional period, between all parties holding seats in the Constituent Assembly. On 1 July, the Assembly gave its vote of confidence to the Administration and unanimously adopted the Programme of Action of the Provisional Government for the Coming Three Months. It agreed on the composition of the Council of Ministers, with Prince Norodom Ranariddh (head of FUNCINPEC) and Hun Sen (head of SOC (CPP)) as Co-Chairmen.

The Joint Administration was to be viewed as an attempt to fuse three of the existing administrative structures and as a manifestation of a common desire for peace, stability and national reconciliation. In accordance with the Paris Agreements, UNTAC continued to cooperate with SNC as the unique legitimate body and source of authority in Cambodia throughout the transition period.

Also declaring acceptance of the election results was PDK, which, although not a party to the Joint Administration, held tentative discussions with it aimed at achieving national reconciliation. In the meantime, low-level cease-fire violations and military activities, mainly involving NADK, continued to occur.

The Secretary-General outlined the plan for the orderly withdrawal of UNTAC to be completed by 15 November 1993. The military component would be withdrawn in three phases. Phase I (to end on 31 July) would entail the physical preparations for withdrawal. Under phase II (1-31 August), the infantry battalions and related field hospitals, engineering and other units would withdraw and infantry battalions in neighbouring sectors would redeploy to cover the vacated sectors. Under phase III (1 September-15 November), the remaining UNTAC elements would be completely withdrawn.

The 3,500 officers of the civilian police component were scheduled for withdrawal in three groups: 1,100 during 1 July-1 August; another 1,100 during 2-28 August; and 1,300 during 29 August-30 September.

Of the remaining 15 Professional staff of the human rights component at Phnom Penh and 18 others (with training assistants) in the provinces, eight were to leave by 31 July and the rest by 31 August.

More than 1,600 electoral staff (international polling station officers, fingerprint and handwriting experts and district electoral supervisors) were repatriated between 31 May and 15 June. Eight officers were to leave on 31 July and 16 others (including the Chief Electoral Officer and three staff assistants) were to remain at Phnom Penh until 31 August to assist the Electoral Advisory Committee.

Of the 172 international staff of the civil administration component (115 in provincial capitals, including the municipality of Phnom Penh, and at border checkpoints; and 57 at UNTAC headquarters), 32 were to depart before the end of July; the rest would remain until 31 August.

Twelve staff members of the rehabilitation component were scheduled to leave between 31 July and 22 August and the remaining 17 by 31 August. One third of the Information/Education Division's 45 staff had been released by 30 June; four were to leave by 31 July; and the rest would continue producing programmes on human rights education and on reconstruction and development until the end of August.

Various programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions, would be prepared, in consultation with the Cambodian Government, to continue to play their traditional role in rehabilitation, reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance during the immediate post-UNTAC period.

Communications. The Secretary-General supplemented his report with a letter to the Security Council President,⁽²⁵⁾ stating that, in the coming months, it was essential for the Interim Joint Administration to be able to function properly, and that neither social unrest nor macroeconomic disorder be allowed to take hold. It was also essential for those serving in the public domain—civil servants, police and the armed forces—to begin redirecting their allegiances from the factions of the past to the future constitutional Government.

Therefore, on the recommendation of the Special Representative and in consultation with concerned Governments, the Secretary-General concluded that urgent measures should be taken to enable UNTAC to provide, for the remainder of the transitional period, emergency financial assistance in support of the process of restructuring and adjustment of the administrative, police and military structures of the Joint Administration. The amount required would be $20 million—a relatively modest additional outlay to ensure non-interruption of the remarkable progress towards peace and the successful conclusion of United Nations endeavours on behalf of Cambodia.

The Security Council, on 16⁽²⁶⁾ and 26 July,⁽²⁷⁾ agreed with the Secretary-General's view regarding the proposed financial outlay and endorsed the overall concept and arrangements concerning the withdrawal of UNTAC from Cambodia.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). In a further report of 26 August,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that agreement had been reached on some 120 articles of the draft constitution. With only two items outstanding—the status of the head of State and the post of prime minister—elaboration would be completed at the end of the month.

Relative calm lasting several weeks was broken in mid-August, when, as a result of NADK military activities in the north and west, CAF launched a military operation in Banteay Meanchey, surrounding a number of NADK strongholds and overrunning one at Phum Chat on the Thai border. Several hundred villagers were displaced or forcibly removed, including some 1,200 who reportedly crossed into Thailand.

NADK was further responsible for a mortar assault on a 21-man UNTAC checkpoint at Choam Khsan, Preah Vihear (1 August); and for attacks on two trains, one in Kampot and the other in Kompong Chhnang (2 and 15 August), that killed a total of 16 passengers and injured 40 others. Racist PDK radio broadcasts directed at ethnic Vietnamese were the subject of an UNTAC protest, which the PDK President rejected. UNTAC was investigating the murder of six such persons in Kompong Chhnang (10 August). In addition, a group of ethnic Vietnamese children had been abducted (13 August) and later released for ransom.

In another development, highly organized criminal gangs had been stealing UNTAC vehicles, sometimes at gunpoint. The Co-Presidents of the Interim Joint Administration, to whom representations were made, agreed to cooperate closely with UNTAC to prevent and punish such crimes.

The withdrawal of UNTAC was proceeding as planned, with some adjustments, including the retention until mid-September of 15 staff members in the Office of Economic Affairs and of 28 civilian police officers until 15 October.

The Secretary-General noted that urgent measures were required to assist the incoming Cambodian Government to meet a number of pressing needs: budgetary support, public administration reform, mine clearance, resettlement and reintegration of displaced persons, agriculture, social services including health care and education, maintenance of public utilities and repair of the infrastructure, especially the transportation system. These requirements were to be discussed at a meeting of the International Committee on Reconstruction of Cambodia (Paris, 8 and 9 September).

Noting that the future status of the Cambodia Mine Action Centre (CMAC) was to be taken up with the new Government, the Secretary-General stated that, since the inception of UNTAC, more than 4 million square metres had been cleared of mines and about 37,000 mines and other unexploded ordnance had been destroyed; some 2,330 Cambodians had been trained in mine-clearance techniques, of whom approximately 1,400 were currently employed. Pending alternative funding arrangements, he would maintain the United Nations Trust Fund for the Demining Programme in Cambodia. In the meantime, the CMAC Governing Council, on which Prince Sihanouk served as President and the Special Representative for Cambodia as Vice-President, was to meet at the end of August regarding the Council's mandate.

Article 17 of the Paris Agreements provided that, after the end of the transitional period, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights should continue to monitor the human rights situation in Cambodia and, if necessary, appoint a Special Rapporteur who would report his findings annually to the Commission and to the General Assembly. The Centre for Human Rights was scheduled to establish its operational presence in Phnom Penh upon the termination of the UNTAC mandate, with a total of 23 international and local staff, to be drawn in part from the UNTAC human rights component (see also PART THREE, Chapter X).

The Secretary-General indicated his intention to establish an integrated office at Phnom Penh, to be headed by a United Nations representative who would coordinate, in close consultation with the Cambodian Government, the full range of civilian activities to be undertaken by various programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to promote development, provide humanitarian assistance and foster respect for human rights in Cambodia. During the period immediately following the establishment of the new Government, the office would deal with a number of residual issues arising from the Paris Agreements and UNTAC's presence in the country.

On 27 August, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 860(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, 840(1993) of 15 June 1993 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General dated 16 July 1993 and 26 August 1993,

Paying tribute to the continuing role of His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Sihanouk in achieving peace, stability and genuine national reconciliation for all Cambodia,

Recalling that, according to the Paris Agreements, the transitional period shall terminate when the Constituent Assembly elected through free and fair elections, organized and certified by the United Nations, has approved the constitution and transformed itself into a legislative assembly, and thereafter a new government has been created,

Also taking note of the expressed wish of the Cambodian interim joint administration to maintain the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) until the establishment of a new government in Cambodia as conveyed by the Secretariat,

1. Welcomes the reports of the Secretary-General dated 16 July 1993 and 26 August 1993, and approves the UNTAC withdrawal plan contained in document S/26090;

2. Fully supports the Constituent Assembly in its work of drawing up and approving a constitution, and stresses the importance of completing this work in accordance with the Paris Agreements;

3. Confirms that UNTAC's functions under the Paris Agreements shall end upon the creation in September of a new government of Cambodia consistent with those Agreements;

4. Decides that, in order to ensure a safe and an orderly withdrawal of the military component of UNTAC, the period of such withdrawal shall end on 15 November 1993;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 860(1993)

27 August 1993 Meeting 3270 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26362).

On 28 October,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council President of having received word from the UNTAC Officer-in-Charge of withdrawal that security in Cambodia had so deteriorated that theft of UNTAC equipment, often by armed elements, had increased; and that, at the next stage of withdrawal, equipment would need to be retrieved from outlying areas following the departure of military personnel, which could expose UNTAC civilian staff to heightened insecurity. In the circumstances, he requested that certain categories of UNTAC personnel remain deployed beyond 15 November, as follows: 71 military police officers from 16 to 30 November and 30 others from 1 to 31 December; 10 medical personnel from 16 November to 7 December and eight others from 8 to 31 December.

The Secretary-General advised that further United Nations involvement in the executive and managerial responsibilities of CMAC was inappropriate, but proposed extending to 30 November the deployment of 17 members of the UNTAC Mine Clearance and Training Unit.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). On 5 October,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported with great satisfaction that the new Government of Cambodia was formed on 24 September, based on the will of the people, expressed through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations.

The immediate steps leading to that historic event began on 19 September, when the 120-member Constituent Assembly concluded its deliberations on a new constitution; on 21 September, it formally adopted the Constitution by a vote of 113 to 5, with 2 abstentions, a greater margin than the two-thirds majority specified in the Paris Agreements.

On 24 September, Prince Sihanouk, as head of State of Cambodia, formally promulgated at Phnom Penh the Constitution according to which Cambodia became a constitutional monarchy, with the official name "The Kingdom of Cambodia", and an independent, sovereign, peaceful, neutral and non-aligned State. On the same date, Prince Sihanouk was elected King of Cambodia by the Royal Council of the Throne. The powers and duties of the monarch were set forth in the Constitution, article 7 of which stated that the King held the throne but should not hold power. In accordance with the Constitution and the Paris Agreements, the Constituent Assembly transformed itself into a legislative assembly.

The Constitution also stipulated that Cambodia should recognize and respect human rights in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽³¹⁾ and all other international instruments related to human rights and the rights of women and children. Article 51 called for the adoption of a multi-party, free and democratic regime.

Following his election, King Sihanouk appointed Prince Norodom Ranariddh First Prime Minister, and Hun Sen, Second Prime Minister.

Thus UNTAC's mandate was successfully concluded on 24 September. Two days later, the Special Representative departed Cambodia. The departure by 15 November of most of UNTAC personnel was well under way.

The Secretary-General expressed his appreciation to the Security Council for its consistent support and guidance, as well as to all the countries that had contributed troops and/or police officers. He also expressed regret at the loss of UNTAC personnel and paid tribute to King Sihanouk, other leaders and the people of Cambodia for their historic achievement in overcoming two decades of strife and devastation and laying a sound foundation for a peaceful and democratic Cambodia.

The Security Council convened on 5 October. It had before it the Secretary-General's report (see above), as well as a statement of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the permanent Council members,⁽³²⁾ noting, among other things, the successful fulfilment of UNTAC's mandate and agreeing to consider how a continued United Nations presence would contribute further to peace and stability after UNTAC's departure.

At their request, Australia, Cambodia and Thailand were invited to participate in the deliberations without the right to vote under the relevant provision of the Charter and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

After statements by 12 States, beginning with one by the First Prime Minister of Cambodia, the Council President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3287.

"On behalf of the members of the Security Council, I wish to thank His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Ranariddh, First Prime Minister, and His Excellency Mr. Hun Sen, Second Prime Minister, of the Royal Government of Cambodia for their presence here and to express the satisfaction of the Security Council at the auspicious developments that have taken place in Cambodia since the holding of the elections of 23 to 28 May 1993, in particular the proclamation of the Cambodian Constitution on 24 September 1993 and the creation of the new Government of Cambodia.

"I also take this opportunity to congratulate His Majesty King Norodom Sihanouk, head of State of Cambodia, on his accession to the throne and to pay tribute to the continuing role played by His Majesty in the quest for national reconciliation and a better future for all Cambodia.

"In the light of the successful completion of the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), the Security Council reiterates its recognition of the remarkable work carried out by UNTAC, under the leadership of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, Mr. Yasushi Akashi.

"The Security Council stresses the importance of the continued support of the international community to the consolidation of peace and democracy and the promotion of development in Cambodia.

"Taking into account the letter dated 26 September 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General by His Royal Highness Prince Norodom Ranariddh, First Prime Minister, and His Excellency Mr. Hun Sen, Second Prime Minister, and the further report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Security Council resolution 745(1992) which members of the Council have just received, the Council will continue to study the situation in Cambodia and will consider what action it should take."

(For the 26 September letter referred to in the statement, see below, under "UN Military Liaison Team in Cambodia".)

Financing

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In his 27 July report on the financing of UNTAC,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that, as at 30 June 1993, outstanding assessments of $290,533,100 were due from Member States: $4,645,300 for the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC)⁽³⁵⁾ and $285,887,800 for UNTAC. Voluntary contributions consisted of cash contributions in the amounts of $1.1 million from Japan for costs incurred in reinforcing security measures undertaken by UNTAC and $25,807 from New Zealand for the air fare of international polling station officers. These items had been budgeted for.

The estimated amounts due to troop-contributing States for troop costs for the period 1 February to 31 May 1993 totalled $64,425,600. Troops were currently being provided by 25 Governments: Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, France, Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Namibia,⁽³⁶⁾ Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Russian Federation, Singapore,⁽³⁷⁾ Thailand, Tunisia and Uruguay.

The appropriations for the combined UNAMIC and UNTAC operations from 1 November 1991 to 30 April 1993 totalled $1,161,191,600 gross ($1,143,038,800 net), of which $20,023,200 gross ($19,777,200 net) related specifically to UNAMIC.

Revised UNTAC requirements for the three-month period from 1 May to 31 July 1993 amounted to $301,181,600 gross ($292,829,700 net), representing an increase of $65,181,600 gross ($59,023,100 net) over the reduced commitment authorization of $236 million. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) communicated to the Secretary-General on 13 April its concurrence in his request to enter into commitments up to that level. Requirements for the month of August amounted to $68,527,700 gross ($66,896,800 net).

The liquidation of UNTAC was projected to take 10 months; estimated costs for the first phase (1 September to 31 December 1993) amounted to $147,094,600 net. Proposals for the disposition of UNTAC property were annexed to the report, as was a list of UNTAC assets potentially available by 1 August.

To sum up, the financing of UNTAC required the appropriation of: $236 million gross ($233,806,600 net) to be authorized with prior ACABQ concurrence for operations from 1 May to 31 July 1993; $65,181,600 gross ($59,023,100 net) to meet additional requirements for the same period; and $68,527,700 gross ($66,896,800 net) for continued UNTAC operations for August. Also called for were: a decision to credit the unencumbered balance of $3,367,600 gross ($58,500 net) as of 30 April 1993 to Member States against their assessments for the additional requirements for 1 May to 31 July; approval, in principle, for the Secretary-General to proceed, upon the completion of UNTAC's mandate, to dispose of its property; and appropriation and/or commitment authorization in the amount of $150,515,700 gross ($147,094,600 net) to meet liquidation costs during the first phase.

In addition, the Secretary-General stated that assistance to the Interim Joint Administration in Cambodia was necessary to enable it to improve its capacity to generate revenue and meet minimal expenditure without provoking inflation. The assistance would allow the following to be undertaken with direct UNTAC involvement: unifying procedures for dealing with civil servants in zones administered by the three main parties of the Constituent Assembly; extending the use of the riel in the zones not hitherto using it; training public-sector employees in the responsibilities of a multi-party democracy; setting in motion the rationalization and streamlining of organizational structures and reduction of public-sector employment; and meeting the most pressing expenditures during July and August without resort to currency issuance.

The Secretary-General proposed that the assistance, calculated at $20 million for July and August, should be provided from the UNTAC budget. Since $3 million would be met from the Trust Fund for the Cambodian Peace Process, $17 million would be required from the UNTAC budget.

ACABQ,⁽³⁸⁾ noting that the Secretary-General's report was not available in time for detailed consideration and that performance report and cost estimates were incomplete, recommended, pending a detailed examination of an updated report, that the General Assembly appropriate and assess the amount of $85 million net to meet UNTAC's additional requirements from 1 May to 31 July 1993 and its continued operation during August. It recommended that the Secretary-General pursue his efforts to collect the outstanding assessments of $290.5 million from Member States for UNAMIC and UNTAC as at 30 June.

Annexed to the report of ACABQ was its letter of 15 July to the Secretary-General on financial assistance to the Interim Joint Administration, for which the Controller had requested commitment authority in the amount of $10 million under the terms of a 1991 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.⁽³⁹⁾ ACABQ stated that, while such assistance could be within the overall scope of UNTAC, it could find no specific authority to support the financing of that activity from assessed contributions. It therefore decided not to act on that request.

As to the Secretary-General's request for $17 million from the UNTAC budget, ACABQ stated that, pending its consideration of that request, the Secretary-General could utilize $3 million from the Trust Fund for the Cambodian Peace Process. He could further utilize, on an exceptional and temporary basis, an amount from existing reserves equivalent to voluntary contributions pledged in response to his appeal of 9 July; repayment of reserves so utilized should be the first charge against contributions received until the amount utilized from the reserves was fully repaid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September 1993, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/209 B without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 717(1991) of 16 October 1991, 718(1991) of 31 October 1991, 728(1992) of 8 January 1992, 745(1992) of 28 February 1992, 766(1992) of 21 July 1992, 783(1992) of 13 October 1992, 792(1992) of 30 November 1992, 810(1993) of 8 March 1993, 826(1993) of 20 May 1993, 835(1993) of 2 June 1993 and 840(1993) of 15 June 1993,

Reaffirming that the costs of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Authority with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Expressing concern about the financial situation of the Transitional Authority, owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears,

Expressing deep concern about the adverse effect that the deteriorating financial situation has on reimbursement to troop contributors, placing an additional burden on these countries,

Noting that the amount referred to in section IV of the report of the Secretary-General has been revised to 13 million United States dollars,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

2. Urges all Member States to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia promptly and in full;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to explore all possibilities in order to ensure prompt reimbursement to troop-contributing countries;

4. Decides, at this stage, to appropriate, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 14 of the report of the Advisory Committee, an amount of 85 million United States dollars net to meet the additional requirements of the Transitional Authority for the period from 1 May to 31 July 1993 and for the continued operation of the Transitional Authority from 1 August 1993 to the end of its mandate, in accordance with Security Council resolution 860(1993) of 27 August 1993, in addition to the total amount of 1,397,191,600 dollars gross (1,376,845,400 dollars net) already appropriated for the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority, inclusive of the amount of 236 million dollars authorized and apportioned with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 47/209 A of 22 December 1992 for the period from 1 May to 31 July 1993;

5. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 85 million dollars net, for the period from 1 May 1993 to the end of the mandate of the Transitional Authority, in accordance with Security Council resolution 860(1993), among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and Assembly decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

6. Decides further to establish the contributions of Andorra, the Czech Republic, Eritrea, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Monaco and Slovakia to the Transitional Authority in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States no later than at its forty-eighth session;

7. Invites the new Member States mentioned in paragraph 6 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

8. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Authority in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a detailed and up-to-date performance report on the budget of the Advance Mission and the Transitional Authority for the period from 1 November 1991 to the end of the mandate of the Transitional Authority, in accordance with Security Council resolution 860(1993);

10. Decides that the disposition of the property of the Transitional Authority shall proceed on the basis of the principle that the equipment of the Transitional Authority should, wherever possible and cost-effective, be transferred to other missions, and, in this connection, endorses the recommendation of the Advisory Committee with regard to the disposition of the equipment, and requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the disposition on this basis;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report early at the forty-eighth session providing a detailed explanation for the donation of certain assets to the Government of Cambodia along with the proposals for the donation of any remaining assets which cannot be transferred to other missions;

12. Decides, with regard to section IV of the report of the Secretary-General, that the Secretary-General may use, on an extraordinary and temporary basis, an amount from the existing reserves equivalent to the pledges received and that repayment of any reserves so utilized shall be the first charge on receipts from voluntary contributions, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Advisory Committee, on the financial situation with regard to the joint interim administration referred to in section IV of his report, including proposals on this matter;

13. Invites Member States and other States in a position to do so to respond positively to the appeal of the Secretary-General for voluntary contributions for financial assistance to the joint interim administration of Cambodia;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit revised cost estimates related to the liquidation of the Transitional Authority, scheduled to start on 1 September 1993;

15. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments of up to 100 million dollars to meet the costs associated with the initial liquidation of the Transitional Authority over the period from 1 September to 31 December 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

16. Requests the Advisory Committee to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on action taken with regard to paragraph 15 above;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Authority is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 47/209 B

14 September 1993 Meeting 110 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/824/Add.1) without vote, 7 September (meeting 75); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.41); agenda item 123. Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 68, 69, 72, 75; plenary 110.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). On 8 December,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a further report on UNTAC's financing, giving updated information on assessed contributions, voluntary contributions, trust funds for Cambodia, reimbursements to troop-contributing States, financial performance from 1 November 1991 to 30 September 1993 and cost estimates for the initial stage of the liquidation phase of UNTAC, as revised, and for the final stage. The withdrawal plan for UNTAC was outlined, including the extension of deployment of certain categories of military personnel beyond 15 November 1993.

As at 31 October, a total of $230,689,200 in outstanding assessments was due from Member States for UNAMIC ($4,524,600) and UNTAC ($226,164,600).

Between 1 July and 31 October, voluntary contributions in the amount of $10.3 million were pledged to the Interim Joint Administration by six Member States (Australia, Japan, Netherlands, Philippines, United Kingdom and United States), of which $7.9 million had been paid and $2.4 million remained outstanding.

The four trust funds set up on behalf of Cambodia and the total contribution received by each as at 31 October were: the Trust Fund for the Cambodian Peace Process, set up by the Secretary-General in April 1990, received $8.7 million from 12 Member States ($6.8 million) and a private institution ($1.9 million); the Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia, set up in June 1992, received $1.6 million from eight Member States and a private institution ($75,000); the Cambodia Trust Fund, set up in November 1992 to receive funds for rehabilitation activities, received $2.2 million from five Member States; and the Trust Fund for the Demining Programme in Cambodia, set up in July 1993 to support programmes in mine-awareness, mine-marking, mine-clearing and training in mine-clearing, received $713,400 from two Member States.

The estimated amounts due to troop-contributing States—currently 27 with the recent addition of Ireland and the United States—for troop costs for the period 1 March to 30 September 1993 totalled $105,738,100.

Between 1 November 1991 and 30 September 1993, apportionments were made to the combined operations of UNAMIC and UNTAC totalling $1,482,191,600 gross ($1,461,845,400 net), of which $20,023,200 gross ($19,777,200 net) related specifically to UNAMIC. Due to the extension of the UNTAC mandate through 24 September 1993, cost overruns of $65,660,300 gross ($61,850,600 net) had been incurred. Although the UNTAC mandate officially ended on 24 September, for financial reporting purposes, 30 September 1993 was used as the cut-off date for activities relating to the regular mandate. The liquidation phase would therefore begin on 1 October 1993.

The revised cost estimates for the liquidation of UNTAC from 1 October to 31 December amounted to $59,527,400 gross ($57,714,200 net). The costs associated with the final stage of liquidation, projected to be completed on 30 April 1994, amounted to $9,170,600 gross ($8,126,200 net).

In summary, the requirements called for appropriations of: $236 million gross ($233,806,600 net), authorized with prior ACABQ concurrence and apportioned under the terms of Assembly resolution 47/209 B, for the continued operation of UNTAC from 1 May to 31 July 1993; $65,660,300 gross ($61,850,600 net) to meet the additional requirements for 1 August to 30 September 1993; $59,527,400 gross ($57,714,200 net) and $9,170,600 gross ($8,126,200 net) to meet costs associated with, respectively, the liquidation of UNTAC from 1 October to 31 December 1993 and the final liquidation stage; and an additional amount of $34,358,300 gross ($27,691,000 net) to meet the additional requirements of UNTAC, including liquidation costs, taking account of the $100 million gross and net already apportioned in accordance with Assembly decision 48/469 below.

In a later addendum to the above report,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the plan for the disposition of UNTAC assets and gave the status of disposition of assets with a total residual value of $150.23 million as at 7 December 1993.

ACABQ,⁽⁴²⁾ referring to the Secretary-General's 9 December report⁽⁴³⁾ on the financing of 17 peace-keeping and other operations, including UNTAC, stated that it would review the full and separate report on UNTAC financing summarized above at the Assembly's resumed session in February 1994. Pending that review, it recommended that the existing commitment authority of $100 million be maintained through 31 March 1994 and assessed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/469 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 100 million United States dollars gross and net for the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia for the period from 1 September 1993 to 31 March 1994;

(b) Decided to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount indicated in subparagraph (a) above among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992.

General Assembly decision 48/469

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/48/818) without vote, 22 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/48/L.21); agenda item 135. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 87.

UN Military Liaison Team in Cambodia

On 7 October 1993,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported having received a 26 September letter from the First and Second Prime Ministers of Cambodia requesting that he consider the possible dispatch of some 20 to 30 unarmed United Nations military observers to Cambodia for a period of six months following the end of the UNTAC mandate. The request was made in the context of security problems that would still remain in the country, especially in the provinces, after the withdrawal of UNTAC and of the need to build confidence among the Cambodian people. They reiterated their request on 4 October, convinced that a limited United Nations military presence at a crucial time would strengthen confidence among the people and thus enhance the stability of Cambodia and its new Government.

The Secretary-General restated his belief that United Nations efforts and resources in support of Cambodia should henceforth be concentrated on civilian activities in reconstruction and development, human rights protection, reintegration of refugees and displaced persons and mine clearance. He was not fully convinced that a small group of military officers based at Phnom Penh could play an effective part in controlling or resolving the country's remaining security problems; he also voiced doubt about deploying a merely symbolic military presence at a time of acute financial crisis.

However, should the Security Council respond positively to the request, the Secretary-General would recommend that a team of 20 military liaison officers be set up at Phnom Penh for a single six-month period, with a mandate limited to maintaining liaison with the Government on matters affecting security in Cambodia. The team would be separate from the proposed integrated office for United Nations civilian activities.⁽²⁸⁾

The Council, on 12 October,⁽⁴⁵⁾ agreed in principle with the recommendation and asked the Secretary-General to submit the terms of reference of such a team, plans for its dispatch and the funding required. It further asked him to consider incorporating the team into the United Nations office that he intended to establish, also at Phnom Penh.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General, in a 27 October report,⁽⁴⁶⁾ informed the Council that the 20 military liaison officers would maintain liaison with the Government on matters affecting the country's security and assist it in tackling residual military matters related to the Paris Agreements. A Chief Military Liaison Officer (CMLO), reporting directly to the Secretary-General, would head the team. Activities outside the team's base at Phnom Penh would be undertaken at the CMLO's initiative or at the request of the Cambodian authorities.

The officers would be provided by Governments following consultations and with Council concurrence. To the extent possible, they would be drawn from UNTAC military personnel awaiting withdrawal from Cambodia. The team would be assisted by two international and 13 locally recruited civilian support staff. The bulk of the logistic equipment required would be drawn from UNTAC's existing resources.

The Secretary-General recommended that the military liaison team be separate from the proposed integrated office. However, the CMLO would be in regular contact with the United Nations representative at that office regarding security of United Nations personnel. In the interests of economy, it was envisaged that administrative and logistic support services and resources would be shared where possible.

In a 7 November addendum to his report,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the cost of the team's operations at $1,060,000 gross, excluding requirements for air transportation within Cambodia, which he assumed the Government would provide free of charge. A breakdown of that figure by main categories of expenditure was annexed to the addendum. The costs should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States, and the assessments to be levied on them should be credited to a special account to be set up for that purpose.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the Secretary-General's reports on the proposed military liaison team, as well as of the request to extend deployment of certain categories of UNTAC personnel beyond 15 November for security reasons,⁽²⁹⁾ the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 880(1993) on 4 November.

Security Council resolution 880(1993)

4 November 1993 Meeting 3303 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26687), orally revised.

On 16 November,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, having completed the necessary consultations, proposed to the Council President that the military liaison team would be formed from contributions offered by the following 15 countries: Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, China, France, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Poland, Russian Federation, Singapore, Thailand and Uruguay. He also proposed to appoint Colonel A. N. M. Muniruzzaman (Bangladesh) as Chief Military Liaison Officer.

The Council agreed with those proposals on 19 November.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Financing

The Secretary-General, on 12 November,⁽⁵⁰⁾ requested inclusion in the agenda of the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly of an additional item entitled: "Financing of the United Nations military liaison team in Cambodia". Owing to the nature of the item, he further requested that it be allocated to the Fifth Committee.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his 9 December report on the financing of 17 United Nations peace-keeping and other operations,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General included his estimates for the United Nations Military Liaison Team in Cambodia.

The requirements of the operation for the period from its inception to 30 April 1994 were estimated at $890,000 gross ($852,000 net). A breakdown by major line-items of expenditure was provided in an accompanying table. Calculations for subsistence allowance and travel costs took account of the fact that 13 officers were already on location and that 6 travelled to the mission area.

A detailed report covering the six-month period beginning 15 November 1993 was under preparation. ACABQ observed⁽⁵¹⁾ that, pending its consideration of that report, it recommended that the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding $756,500 gross ($724,200 net) for the period from 4 November 1993 to 31 March 1994 and that that amount be assessed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly adopted decision 48/480 without vote.

Southern and Western Asia

Afghanistan situation

Following intensive consultations at Islamabad, Pakistan, eight Afghan leaders, including President Burhan-ud-Din Rabbani of Afghanistan, signed the Afghan Peace Accord on 7 March 1993. Held at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Pakistan, the consultations were also attended by the Deputy Foreign Minister of Iran and Prince Turki al-Faisal of Saudi Arabia. The document was transmitted to the Secretary-General by Pakistan on 10 March⁽¹⁾ and by Afghanistan on 17 March.⁽²⁾

By the Accord, the parties affirmed their commitment to preserving Afghanistan's unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity and recognized the urgency of rehabilitating and reconstructing the country and of facilitating the return of all Afghan refugees. They agreed: to form a Government for a period of 18 months, with President Rabbani to remain as President and Gulbadin Hikmatyar, or his nominee, as Prime Minister; to set in motion an electoral process of 18 months' duration, from 29 December 1992, including the formation of an election commission to hold elections for a constituent assembly within eight months of the signing of the Accord; to formulate a constitution setting forth the terms for the presidential and parliamentary elections; and to form a Defence Council comprising two members from each party, mainly to set up a national army under its authority.

The parties further agreed to: immediately and unconditionally release all Afghan detainees held by the Government and by the different parties during the armed hostilities; return to their original owners all public and private buildings, residential areas and properties occupied by the different armed groups, as well as displaced persons to their homes; constitute an all-party committee to oversee the monetary system and currency regulations; effect an immediate cease-fire, to become permanent upon the formation of the Cabinet; and create a Joint Commission, comprising representatives of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and of all Afghan parties, to monitor the cease-fire and cessation of hostilities.

The document established a division of powers between the President and the Prime Minister, setting forth the specific powers and duties of each.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September report⁽³⁾ on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the Secretary-General stated that the newly established Islamic State of Afghanistan⁽⁴⁾ had not yet succeeded in developing the political and security conditions necessary for the urgent task of rehabilitation. The country was undergoing a difficult transition, characterized by political discord over power sharing and a reluctance to compromise. With the abundance of heavy weaponry and ammunition, the situation often led to intermittent fighting and a resort to blockades and rocket attacks, particularly in Kabul.

A major effort launched early in the year by some countries in the region and reinforced by intra-Afghan negotiations had recently led to a modus vivendi that offered encouraging prospects for peace. The accords reached at Islamabad on 7 March and at Jalalabad on 18 May, however, had neither resolved difficulties within the Government nor removed the potential threat of renewed fighting in Kabul. Acute humanitarian problems were exacerbated by an outbreak of cholera and other diseases in Kabul and elsewhere in the country. The armed conflict on the Afghanistan-Tajikistan border (see below) further complicated the general situation. None the less, authorities in many provinces had successfully collected illegal arms, thus improving security, and reopened major highways and roads, permitting United Nations offices to operate.

Following consultations with Iran, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia and the United States, the Secretary-General issued a statement on 22 June in which he encouraged the international community to support the peaceful political process in Afghanistan, in particular the efforts to observe the cease-fire, and to ensure the safety and well-being of the civilian population; he reminded the donor Governments that his appeal for humanitarian assistance remained seriously underfunded so that essential United Nations programmes might have to be curtailed.

In the view of some Afghan leaders, political normalization and peace in Afghanistan could be reached ultimately through a national gathering, while others favoured holding a general election, as provided for in the Afghan Peace Accord. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, by a letter of 14 July, formally informed the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan (OSGAP) of a plan to hold such an election and invited the United Nations to supervise it and provide financial assistance.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the situation of former President Mohammed Najibullah, who, with members of his entourage, had been in the OSGAP compound since April 1992.⁽⁴⁾ He was suffering from a serious kidney ailment and, in conformity with international law and recognized standards of human rights, should be allowed to leave with his companions in order to receive medical treatment.

The Secretary-General stated that the two peace accords reached in 1993 and the intention to seek the will of the people through a national gathering or general election were encouraging developments; however, peace and stability in Afghanistan were still far from being achieved. The process of political normalization was not yet sufficiently broad based. The paramount problem to be dealt with, however, remained that of creating peace and security in and around Kabul and the rest of the country by collecting the heavy weapons that abounded everywhere and by opening all roads to civilian movement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September and December)

By decision 47/475 of 20 September, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security", including it in the draft agenda of its forty-eighth session.

On 21 December, in resolution 48/208, the Assembly encouraged the Government of Afghanistan to take immediate steps to consolidate further the political process through national rapprochement, thus contributing to the creation of a sound political situation and good security, which would allow the holding of general, free and fair elections in the country, to be observed by the United Nations, as soon as circumstances permitted. It requested the Secretary-General to dispatch as soon as possible a United Nations special mission to canvass a broad spectrum of Afghanistan's leaders to solicit their views on how the United Nations could best assist Afghanistan in facilitating national rapprochement and reconstruction, and to report their findings, conclusions and recommendations for appropriate action to the Secretary-General. It also invited the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the overall situation in Afghanistan and make available his good offices as required.

Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan

The Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan (OSGAP), established in 1990, assisted the Secretary-General in monitoring the political situation in Afghanistan. The Office continued to be headed by the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan, Sotirios Mousouris, who, since 1 January 1993, had been assisted by one Senior Military Adviser and one Senior Political Adviser. Owing to security concerns at Kabul, the international staff of the unit there had been operating from Islamabad, sharing temporary quarters with the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan.

In order to monitor developments and maintain contacts with Afghan government officials, political leaders and other personalities, the Personal Representative made four visits to Kabul, two to Herat and one to Mazar-i-Sharif. He also maintained contact with representatives of other countries in the region.

Financing

The Secretary-General, in December⁽⁵⁾ set out OSGAP's financial performance for the 1992-1993 biennium, which indicated an estimated total expenditure of $6,985,800 against revised appropriations of $7,764,300. The resultant net reduction of $778,500, attributable to savings under staff costs and military staff allowances ($528,500), general operating expenses ($169,600) and travel ($68,800), would be reflected in the second performance report of the 1992-1993 programme budget.

The estimated requirements for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1994 amounted to $1,279,800, which would be required to cover OSGAP costs, excluding provisions for staff assessment of $135,400, to be offset by the same amount under income.

ACABQ, noting that the estimates were based on expenditure in the operational area, recommended an amount of $1 million for OSGAP for 1994 under the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995, with no change in the number of posts requested. By resolution 48/230, section V, of 23 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and the ACABQ recommendations.

The foregoing figures were taken into account in the final programme budget appropriations adopted by the General Assembly for the 1992-1993 and 1994-1995 bienniums (resolutions 48/219 A and 48/231 A).

Afghanistan-Tajikistan

Tajikistan, on 13 July⁽⁶⁾ lodged a protest with the Consulate of Afghanistan at Dushanbe over an attack by some 200 armed persons and Afghan mujahidin on Sarigor village, Shurabad district. Tajikistan recalled that, in April and May, a group led by Kori Hamidullo, the same Afghan commander who launched the July attack, more than once violated the State frontier in the same district, looting and burning Sarigor and penetrating an area where Russian border troops were stationed. Those troops were currently engaged in combat operations to drive the armed bands from Tajik territory.

Tajikistan warned that it viewed the participation of Afghan citizens in those attacks—notably the commanding officer of Afghanistan's 55th Infantry Division, whom it named as being in overall command of the operation—as a hostile and dangerous provocation that could jeopardize its relations with Afghanistan.

The Russian Federation, on 14 July⁽⁷⁾ protested the same large-scale attack on Sarigor stating that it had been launched from Afghanistan and referring to the attackers as irregular forces and bandits. In appealing to Afghanistan to take immediate measures to prevent further attacks, the Russian Federation stressed that its troops would take the strongest action, using the entire military arsenal at their disposal to protect the Afghanistan-Tajikistan border in accordance with the Federation's obligations. It further spoke of the inevitability of retribution for any encroachments on the lives of Russian servicemen or of other Russians.

Afghanistan, on 22 July⁽⁸⁾ referred to a statement issued the day before by the spokesman for the Secretary-General regarding his concern over the border incidents, his appeal for restraint and his readiness to assist the parties to find a peaceful solution. Afghanistan stated that those incidents arose from a massive artillery attack on several Afghan villages on 15 and 16 July by the armed forces of the Russian Federation and Tajikistan. The casualties included 360 civilians killed, more than 400 others injured, over 6,000 families displaced, houses destroyed and wheat harvests burned. Afghanistan rejected as unfounded the accusations by the Russian Federation and Tajikistan, as well as the allegation that Tajik refugees had been trained and armed in Afghanistan and then sent to Tajikistan for destructive activities; it regretted the reference to retribution for the alleged attacks and to the irreparable blow to its good-neighbourly relations with Tajikistan. In response to the Secretary-General's appeal, Afghanistan said it was ready to engage in peaceful talks that would ensure the return of the Tajik refugees to their homeland in safety and honour.

Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, on 10 August⁽⁹⁾ transmitted a Declaration on the Inviolability of Frontiers, signed by them in Moscow on 7 August, together with a document outlining measures for the normalization of the situation on the Afghanistan-Tajikistan border. By the declaration, the signatories pledged collective responsibility for the inviolability of their frontiers with third-party States but stated that none of them had the obligation unilaterally to ensure the security of another State's frontiers. In the second document, they stated that they were counting on the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to support their efforts to normalize the situation on the Afghanistan-Tajikistan border and to send United Nations observers there to provide humanitarian and technical assistance.

In a 7 October letter⁽¹⁾ Afghanistan assured the Secretary-General that it had not taken nor would it take armed action against Tajikistan. It also assured him of its full cooperation with his Special Envoy to Tajikistan, Ismat Kittani. It had undertaken negotiations with Tajikistan and planned to negotiate with UNHCR for the voluntary repatriation of Tajik refugees in Afghanistan. In a 25 October reply, the Secretary-General noted Afghanistan's efforts to reduce tensions with Tajikistan. In recognition of the strain placed on Afghanistan by Tajik refugees, he stated that the United Nations had recently dispatched an assessment mission to Kunduz and would soon re-establish its presence in the area to assist with problems, including those posed by the Tajik refugees. He stated that Afghanistan's continued assistance in addressing the security of United Nations staff would greatly facilitate United Nations work.

Cyprus question

In continuance of his mission of good offices, the Secretary-General undertook new efforts in 1993 to enhance prospects for an overall settlement to the Cyprus problem. At his invitation, the leaders of the two Cypriot communities met in direct meetings for the purpose of agreeing to a number of confidence-building measures hammered out during a lengthy preparatory process at Nicosia, Cyprus. No agreement was reached, however. To forestall a set-back, the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative and two technical teams, immediately renewed contacts with the parties and Governments concerned, widening those contacts to include the leading citizens of both communities.

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), deemed vital for maintaining a climate conducive to continued negotiations, remained deployed, albeit at reduced strength. In December, the Security Council extended its mandate until 15 June 1994, the second extension authorized by the Council in 1993.

During the year, Cyprus and Turkey addressed a number of communications to the Secretary-General on several aspects of the Cyprus question. Those from Turkey transmitted letters from representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community, the majority from Osman Ertug, "Representative of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus".

Among the aspects referred to were: the demographic structure of Cyprus,⁽¹⁾ confidence-building measures⁽²⁾ buffer zone violations⁽³⁾ the Greek Cypriot embargo imposed on the Turkish Cypriot community⁽⁴⁾ the application of Cyprus for membership in the European Community (subsequently renamed European Union),⁽⁵⁾ the alleged destruction of Greek Cypriot cultural property⁽⁶⁾ and the reported designation of an eminent European personality to act as an observer to the intercommunal talks⁽⁷⁾

In the meantime, the General Assembly, by decision 47/476 of 20 September 1993, included the item on the question of Cyprus in the draft agenda of its forty-eighth session.

Secretary-General's good offices

In pursuance of his good offices mission as mandated by the Security Council, the Secretary-General, on 18 March, informed the Council that, following the February elections in Cyprus, he had invited the leaders of the two Cypriot communities—Glafcos Clerides, President of Cyprus, and Rauf R. Denktas, "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus"—to meet with him in New York on 30 March to discuss the timing, modalities and preparations for the resumption of substantive negotiations, based on the Set of Ideas that emerged from the 1991 talks⁽⁸⁾ and endorsed by the Security Council in 1992.⁽⁹⁾

Following informal consultations by the Security Council on 26 March, its President was authorized to issue the following statement⁽¹⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council in connection with its consideration of the item entitled "The situation in Cyprus":

"The members of the Security Council have reviewed the situation related to the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus.

"The members of the Council welcomed the acceptance by the two leaders of the Secretary-General's invitation to attend a joint meeting on 30 March to discuss the timing, modalities, and preparation for the resumption of substantive direct negotiations as mandated by the Security Council.

"The members of the Council reaffirmed their position that the present status quo is not acceptable and that a mutually acceptable overall framework agreement should be achieved without delay on the basis of the Set of Ideas which have been endorsed by the Security Council.

"The members of the Council called on the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus to manifest their goodwill by cooperating fully with the Secretary-General so that the substantive direct negotiations which are due to resume shortly will result in significant progress.

"The members of the Council reaffirmed their determination to remain seized of the Cyprus question on an ongoing basis and to lend their active support to the Secretary-General's effort.

"The members of the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the outcome of the 30 March meeting."

Accordingly, the Secretary-General, on 2 April⁽¹¹⁾ informed the Council that the two leaders had met with him in New York as proposed, separately and then jointly on 30 March, followed by a working luncheon the next day. The outcome of the joint meeting was contained in a statement issued to the press by the Secretary-General's spokesperson on 31 March to the effect that the leaders had reaffirmed their commitment to cooperate with the Secretary-General in the context of his mission of good offices. They had declared their willingness to resume the joint negotiations in New York on 24 May, using the Set of Ideas for the purpose of freely reaching a mutually acceptable overall framework agreement.

Through a preparatory process, the Secretary-General's representatives would meet at Nicosia with the leaders for the purpose of clarifying their specific concerns relating to the draft overall framework agreement contained in the Set of Ideas, with a view to facilitating progress at the negotiations. They would also discuss implementation of the confidence-building measures set out in a 1992 Council resolution⁽¹²⁾ to foster mutual confidence conducive to the success of the negotiating process.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In a 1 July report⁽¹³⁾ on his mission of good offices, the Secretary-General summarized the outcome of the preparatory work at Nicosia, from 15 April to 5 May and from 14 to 19 May. His Deputy Special Representative, Gustave Feissel, held a total of 34 meetings with the two leaders, amounting in duration to almost 50 hours. The extensive discussions made it possible to develop ample material to enable the two leaders, first, to reach agreement on a list of confidence-building measures, including on Varosha and Nicosia International Airport; and, second, to make progress towards reconciling differences on a number of substantive issues as part of the ongoing process to reach agreement on the draft framework contained in the Set of Ideas.

Both leaders agreed on the need to identify issues in the Set that were significant and where an accommodation, to be reached ad referendum, would benefit both sides. In this connection, ways of reconciling differences in three areas were discussed: displaced persons and territorial adjustments; security and guarantee; and the workability of the federal Government.

By the leaders' preference, the focus was on confidence-building measures, discussions on which produced a significant number of measures that both sides would be prepared to implement. These included expert cooperation on the short- and long-term water problem, education, health and the environment; joint cultural and sports events; intra-party meetings; joint journalist meetings; joint commercial projects to be developed by the Chambers of Commerce and Industry of both sides; equitable distribution of international assistance; cooperative arrangements with respect to electric power supply; intercommunal cooperation in Pyla, including free movement of goods in the same manner as agreed in Varosha; identification of joint projects to benefit both communities in Nicosia; cooperation with UNFICYP in extending the unmanning agreement of 1989 to cover all areas of the United Nations-controlled buffer zone where the two sides were in close proximity to each other; a series of nine provisions concerning Varosha; a series of 10 provisions concerning Nicosia International Airport; and periodic meetings of representatives of the two communities to propose additional confidence-building measures.

A major portion of the discussions was devoted to securing agreement in respect of Varosha, specifically that part of it that had been a ghost town since 1974, when it was fenced off by Turkish forces. Bounded on three sides by land under Turkish Cypriot control and to the east by the sea, the fenced area extended approximately four kilometres north-south and about one and a half kilometres east-west. A 1979 high-level agreement⁽¹⁴⁾ accorded high priority to its resettlement under United Nations auspices, and the Council, in 1984⁽¹⁵⁾ reserved it exclusively for settlement by its pre-August 1974 inhabitants (preponderantly Greek Cypriots).

Two proposals emerged during the discussions: one would place the fenced area under United Nations administration, pending a mutually agreed overall solution to the Cyprus problem, for bicomunal contact and commerce; the other would open the Nicosia International Airport for the equal benefit of both sides.

It had been stressed to the leaders that, given the purpose of confidence-building measures, it was essential that neither should seek political advantage or require the other to make political concessions; the benefits to accrue to either side would have to be significant in practical terms, but neither should be asked to adopt measures requiring it, directly or indirectly, to change its position on the political status of the other. It was also stressed that the United Nations would try its best to secure agreement on a package whose practical effect would be to lift most of the commercial obstacles encountered by the Turkish Cypriot side.

In the latter part of the discussions, the two leaders were prepared to consider a package deal including both Varosha and the reopening of Nicosia International Airport for unhindered international traffic of passengers and cargo to and from each side. Located in the United Nations Protected Area (UNPA) on the western outskirts of Nicosia, the airport had been out of use since 1974.

The intensive preparatory process produced three draft papers that brought the proposals to an advanced stage; they would serve as the basis for the joint meetings due to resume on 24 May. The first paper listed 14 confidence-building measures, 12 of which were taken to be acceptable to both sides. The second and third papers contained detailed provisions concerning Varosha and Nicosia International Airport.

The joint meetings resumed in New York on 24 May, under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General and with the newly appointed Special Representative for Cyprus, Joe Clark, in attendance.

The Greek Cypriot side voiced its agreement to the proposed arrangements for Varosha and Nicosia International Airport, provided that no provisions were added that would have the effect, directly or indirectly, of recognizing the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus".

The Turkish Cypriot side reiterated that a proportionate compensation for relinquishing the fenced area of Varosha from its control, even when supplemented with the reopening of Nicosia International Airport, would be the removal of the embargo through the lifting of all restrictions on airports and seaports on the Turkish Cypriot side. The Turkish Cypriot airline should be able to fly from Ercan (Tymbou) airport directly to destinations in Western Europe and restrictions should be lifted from the port of Famagusta.

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and its legal counsel, which were consulted on the matter, stated, however, that since international flights took place in the framework of air service agreements concluded exclusively between States, it did not seem possible, without recognizing a Turkish Cypriot State, to envisage the kind of arrangements requested by the Turkish Cypriot side. In an effort to accommodate the request for the operation of the Cyprus Turkish Airlines, which was an airline registered in Turkey, it was agreed that Nicosia International Airport would be open to foreign airlines, including airlines registered in Turkey. The Greek Cypriot side moreover agreed that both sides would commit themselves to take no action that would in any way prevent or adversely affect the free movement of people or goods through Nicosia airport to and from both sides, that the United Nations would be empowered to look into any complaints by either side and that both would agree to abide by its recommendations.

As to Varosha, the Turkish Cypriot side stated that it would want to exclude from the fenced area to be placed under United Nations administration that part lying to the north of Dhimokratias Street, to serve as a security buffer between the United Nations-administered area and the port of Famagusta. Mr. Denktas added that he would wish to settle the retained section with Turkish Cypriots, in anticipation of the territorial arrangement that would constitute part of an ultimate overall settlement of the Cyprus problem—a position put forward by the Turkish Cypriot side in 1981.

On 28 May, when the leaders were asked to give their considered opinion on the papers, as further adjusted and supplemented during the joint meetings, Mr. Denktas stated that, before he could respond, he would need to consult with his "Government" and "Parliament", as well as with Turkey, giving 15 June as the date of his return to New York. He maintained that position despite the Secretary-General's suggestion that he return on 4 June and Mr. Clerides' stated readiness to wait until then.

A further joint meeting was held on 1 June in the presence of the President of the Security Council and the representatives of its permanent members. It was chaired by the Special Representative, who read out the Secretary-General's statement reviewing the events and concluding that the package of confidence-building measures was eminently fair, containing as it did significant and proportionate economic and other practical benefits for both sides and that the Varosha/Nicosia International Airport package required neither side to compromise on its substantive political positions and contained no surprises, all of its elements having been dealt with exhaustively during the preparatory process.

It was the Secretary-General's expectation, therefore, that both sides should have been able to reach agreement in New York; that the consultations Mr. Denktas intended to undertake would be to promote acceptance of the proposals; and that the two leaders would manifest their good will by taking the modest step proposed, which they owed to their people and to the international community. None the less, Mr. Denktas reiterated his desire to undertake consultations and return for a resumption of the joint meetings no later than 14 June.

During his visit to Ankara, between 8 and 11 June, Mr. Denktas addressed the Turkish Grand National Assembly and made numerous public statements expressing strong criticism of the package, which he would be obliged to reject if pressed for a positive or negative reply. In the circumstances, he saw no point in returning to New York. Consequently, the joint meeting scheduled for 14 June could not take place. The President and Acting Prime Minister of Turkey, however, indicated that Turkey supported the package and encouraged its acceptance.

Kenan Atakol, "Minister for Foreign Affairs and Defence of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", met with the Deputy Special Representative in New York on 14 and 15 June to convey Mr. Denktas's position: for the Varosha/Nicosia International Airport package to be acceptable, the northern part of Varosha, northwards from Dhimokratias Street, must remain with the Turkish Cypriot side. That, Mr. Atakol said, was the "bottom line". In addition, all air and seaport embargoes would have to be lifted from northern Cyprus. The return of Mr. Denktas to New York would depend on the Secretary-General's decision in the light of his evaluation of this message. Mr. Atakol asked no further questions relative to the package.

Despite this regrettable development, the Secretary-General was determined to persevere in his efforts to seek agreement on the package. To that end, he asked his Special Representative to visit Cyprus, Greece and Turkey in the next few weeks.

Security Council communication. The President of the Security Council wrote to the Secretary-General on 7 July⁽¹⁶⁾ to convey the Council's full support for his efforts; its agreement with his assessment that implementation of the package of confidence-building measures relating in particular to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport would have a dramatic impact on overcoming the existing mistrust and in facilitating an overall settlement of the Cyprus problem; and its shared conviction that once the package was fully presented, its significant benefits would be recognized. The Council welcomed his decision to send his Special Representative to the three countries concerned and requested a report on the outcome and, if necessary, his recommendations for Council action.

Report of the Secretary-General (September). The Secretary-General further reported on 14 September⁽¹⁷⁾ that the Special Representative and his Deputy visited Cyprus from 13 to 18 July and held several meetings with the leaders of the two communities, leaders of the main political parties and key business organizations and with persons from the media, academia and other professions of both sides. They then visited Athens, Greece, on 19 and 20 July, where they met with the Prime Minister, and Ankara on 21 and 22 July, where they held meetings with Turkey's Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister. The Deputy Special Representative returned to Cyprus on 23 July, where he held further discussions with the leaders of the two communities.

The discussions with those two leaders did not reveal any change in their positions. Both affirmed their statements made in New York, with Mr. Denktas referring to the deep political division existing within the Turkish Cypriot community which, he maintained, prevented him from effectively fulfilling his functions as negotiator and was the reason why the questions about the package had not been submitted. That domestic problem would have to be resolved by elections, which he hoped would take place in November. Thus it was difficult for the negotiating process to move forward until then.

Several key conclusions emerged from the meeting with the Turkish Cypriot political party leaders and some 60 businessmen: inaccurate and incomplete information had been presented on the impact of the Varosha/Nicosia International Airport package, resulting in considerable confusion among Turkish Cypriots; they looked for guidance to Turkey, whose support for the package, expressed to the Special Representative, had not yet been conveyed either to them or to their leaders; and there was widespread interest in the package among Turkish Cypriots, who desired to consider it seriously and had many questions which they wished to have answered.

The Prime Minister of Greece expressed his full support for the package and for the position adopted by the Greek Cypriot side. The Prime Minister of Turkey and other Turkish leaders reaffirmed their own, as well as their country's, full support for the package, stating that the Turkish Cypriots were aware of that fact but that the ultimate decision was theirs to make. They agreed that all questions which the Turkish Cypriots had should be submitted as soon as possible, but noted that efforts to reach agreement on the package would inevitably be delayed until after the Turkish Cypriot elections.

Mr. Denktas, however, declined to provide any questions, but recognized that this should not prevent the United Nations from addressing Turkish Cypriot concerns, already presented informally at the meetings with political and business leaders.

The Secretary-General was obliged to report that the Turkish Cypriot side had not yet shown the good will and cooperation required to achieve an agreement on the package. However, as part of his determination to bring about such agreement, he proposed sending two teams to Cyprus in October. One, to be assembled with the help of UNDP, would consist of senior experts to address questions regarding the effects of the package, including those relating to the economic imbalance between the two communities. The other team, to be constituted jointly by ICAO and UNDP, would assess the technical requirements for reopening Nicosia airport.

Security Council communication. The Security Council President, by a 20 September letter to the Secretary-General⁽¹⁸⁾ stated that the Council, having considered his 14 September report, conveyed their continuing support for his efforts and full endorsement of his observations on the current Cyprus situation. In expressing disappointment that an agreement on the Varosha/Nicosia International Airport package had not been reached, they agreed that he could not continue his current effort indefinitely, called on the Turkish Cypriot side to give active support to that effort and recognized the important role that Turkey could play.

The Council looked forward to receiving a report on the outcome of his continued efforts, including that of the two technical missions. On the basis of that report, the Council would undertake a thorough review of the situation and, if necessary, consider alternative ways to promote implementation of the resolutions on Cyprus.

UNFICYP

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by the Security Council in 1964,⁽¹⁹⁾ continued in 1993 to discharge its main functions: to maintain the military status quo and prevent a recurrence of fighting; and humanitarian and economic activities to promote a return to normal conditions.

UNFICYP kept the United Nations buffer zone under constant surveillance through a system of observation posts and mobile and standing patrols, with the assistance of high-powered binoculars and night-vision devices.

In keeping with the requirements of the cease-fire called for by the Council in 1974,⁽²⁰⁾ the United Nations maintained that the opposing forces should remain behind their respective cease-fire lines and that neither could exercise authority or jurisdiction beyond its own line. There was no formal agreement between UNFICYP and the two sides on the complete delineation of the buffer zone as recorded by UNFICYP, nor on the zone's use and control. Thus, UNFICYP found itself supervising, by loose mutual consent, two constantly disputed cease-fire lines.

UNFICYP considered the main categories of cease-fire violations to be: any movement of military elements forward of their cease-fire line into the buffer zone; the discharge of any type of weapons or explosives along the lines or up to a distance of 1,000 metres behind them; building of new or strengthening of existing military positions within 400 metres of the opposing cease-fire line, or more than 400 metres from it, if UNFICYP considered this incompatible with the spirit of the cease-fire; overflights of the buffer zone by military or civilian aircraft, or by military aircraft of either side within 1,000 metres of the zone; troop deployment and training exercises in an area closer than 1,000 metres from their cease-fire line without prior notification; and provocative acts between the two sides, such as shouting abuse, indecent gestures or stone-throwing.

On the basis of proposals by the Secretary-General UNFICYP began to be restructured, as a first step, to a strength of three infantry battalions of approximately 350 personnel each, with the addition of a limited number of military observers for reconnaissance.

The operational plan would maintain the Force headquarters in UNPA at Nicosia. UNFICYP would continue to be divided into three sectors and six line companies: Sector West would be responsible for the area from Kokkina to the Ovgos River, Sector Centre for the area covering Nicosia, and Sector East for the area from Nicosia to the east coast. An armoured squadron and a helicopter flight unit would be based in UNPA.

The troop strength of the restructured Force was 1,323, to consist of infantry personnel (1,050), support personnel (223), including 37 military personnel forming the headquarters unit, civilian police (39) and military observers (12).

Civilian police, provided by Australia and Sweden and based in five stations across the island, were charged with: investigating criminal or other matters with inter-communal connotations or with the potential for escalating political tension; assisting in the prevention of civil disorder in the buffer zone; maintaining liaison with the civilian police of either side; and directly supporting the humanitarian activities of the Force. The military observers, provided by Austria, Ireland and Hungary, were assigned liaison and reconnaissance functions.

UNFICYP strength as at 15 November 1993 stood at 1,203 all ranks (down from 1,508 at 31 May). They were contributed by Argentina, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Hungary, Ireland and the United Kingdom.

On 21 May⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to appoint, with immediate effect, Joe Clark (former Prime Minister of Canada) as his Special Representative for Cyprus, a decision the Council welcomed on 24 May.⁽²²⁾

Restructuring

As requested by the Security Council in 1992,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on the results of his consultations with troop-contributing States about restructuring UNFICYP⁽²⁴⁾ He stated that, owing to successive reductions made by those States in the size of their contingents, the established strength of the Force (military personnel and civilian police) had been reduced from 2,141 in May 1992 to 1,513 in March 1993. Canada had announced that it would withdraw its contingent between mid-June and September. The United Kingdom would also reduce its support regiment by 145 personnel and would cease providing military police, mess staff, medical and dental care, the vehicle maintenance workshop or the transport squadron. These additional reductions would bring the Force strength down further to approximately 850. Unless the situation was redressed, UNFICYP would cease to be viable in June 1993.

All of the eight troop-contributing States consulted (Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Sweden and the United Kingdom) on possible options, within the context of the status of the political negotiations between the two communities, agreed on the urgency of taking remedial action.

Consultations focused on two alternative proposals for restructuring the Force. One would entrust its mandate to military observers, backed by a small infantry element. The other would restructure the Force and reduce it to the minimum number of infantry battalions required to maintain effective control of the buffer zone. Under the first proposal, for which most of the troop contributors expressed preference, a minimum of 200 United Nations military observers would patrol the buffer zone, provide random manning of observation posts, perform liaison functions between the parties and continuously monitor the buffer zone in central Nicosia. They would be supported by three or four infantry companies, which would occupy permanently a reduced number of observation posts and provide a reserve in the event of buffer-zone violations or other incidents. The restructured Force would be financed through the normal system of peace-keeping assessment.

The Secretary-General's representatives and advisers supported the second proposal. They pointed out that the conclusions of the 1990 review of the Force⁽²⁵⁾ remained operationally valid: the mandate and the resources required to carry it out had not been altered, nor had the political and military conditions prevailing in Cyprus, which did not justify converting the Force to an observer mission. Under the current mandate, the Force's strength could not be scaled down below six companies on the cease-fire line if it was to remain able to fulfil its primary function of controlling the buffer zone. In a restructured Force retaining its international personality and flexibility, those six companies would be made up of three infantry battalions of at least 350 personnel each.

The battalions should be drawn from existing or new troop contributors under the same financing arrangement as other peace-keeping operations; that is, reimbursement of troop costs at the rates approved by the General Assembly from a special account funded through assessed contributions. The civilian police component, to be kept at its current strength, could assume some of the humanitarian tasks being discharged by the military. Headquarters staffing should be reduced from 56 to 37 military posts to reflect the reduced size of the Force.

It was the unanimous view of the Secretary-General's military and civilian advisers that, were UNFICYP to lose its capacity to maintain control of the buffer zone, there would be real danger that, without either party wishing it, small incidents could quickly escalate and threaten the cease-fire on which depended the security of the Cypriots and the maintenance of an atmosphere conducive to successful political negotiations.

The Secretary-General pointed out that the question was not whether the UNFICYP mandate could better be carried out by infantry or by a mix of infantry and military observers. The two options were comparable in cost (a 12-month estimated cost of $47,130,000 for the infantry-unit option and $47,400,000 for the military-observer option), but neither would be practicable unless the Council could accept funding by assessed contributions. The question before the Council was thus whether to decide on such funding or allow UNFICYP to dissolve into a token presence of a few military observers. He strongly recommended that the Council urgently decide to convert from voluntary to assessed funding, to allow him time to find States willing to contribute replacement contingents.

Cyprus, on 15 April⁽²⁶⁾ confirmed in writing its offer to contribute, on a continuing basis, one third of the annual cost of UNFICYP, clarifying that the offer related to the Secretary-General's preferred option of infantry units estimated at $47,130,000, of which the Cyprus contribution would be $15,710,000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (11 and 27 May)

In the light of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council convened on 11 May to consider a draft resolution sponsored by the United Kingdom⁽²⁷⁾ on the funding and restructuring of UNFICYP, which took account of the contribution offered by Cyprus. By a vote of 14 in favour to 1 against (Russian Federation), the draft was rejected owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

The Russian Federation's vote reflected its objection to that provision of the draft which would have had the Council decide that, with effect from the next extension of UNFICYP's mandate on or before 15 June 1993, the costs of the Force should be treated as expenses of the Organization under Article 17(2) of the Charter of the United Nations.

Meeting number. SC 3211.

The Council met again on 27 May to consider a new draft text, which it adopted as resolution 831(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 186(1964) and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the extension of the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) should be considered every six months,

Noting the recent communication from the Government of Cyprus to the Secretary-General,

Noting that both voluntary and assessed methods of contribution are acceptable for United Nations peace-keeping operations and stressing the importance of maximizing voluntary contributions,

Stressing the importance it attaches to the achievement of early progress towards a political settlement in Cyprus, and also to the implementation of confidence-building measures,

Reiterating in particular its call to both sides to cooperate with UNFICYP in order to extend the unmanning agreement of 1989 to all areas of the United Nations-controlled Buffer Zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other,

Reaffirming that the present status quo is not acceptable, and concerned that the United Nations should not be entering into open-ended peace-keeping commitments,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus;

2. Expresses its appreciation for past voluntary contributions to UNFICYP and for those that have recently been offered for the future, which are essential for the continuation of the Force;

3. Stresses the importance of the continuation of voluntary contributions to the Force and calls for maximum voluntary contributions in the future;

4. Decides that, with effect from the next extension of UNFICYP's mandate on or before 15 June 1993, those costs of the Force which are not covered by voluntary contributions should be treated as expenses of the Organization under Article 17(2) of the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Decides also that UNFICYP should be restructured as a first step on the basis of the proposal in paragraphs 16-19 of the Secretary-General's report, with the addition of a limited number of observers for reconnaissance and with a view to further restructuring in the light of the reassessment referred to in paragraph 7 below;

6. Underlines the responsibility of the parties for minimizing tension and facilitating the operation of UNFICYP, including through the implementation of confidence-building measures, including that the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus undergo a significant reduction and that a reduction of defence spending be effected in the Republic of Cyprus, as envisaged in its earlier relevant resolutions;

7. Decides to conduct a comprehensive reassessment of UNFICYP at the time of the consideration of the Force's mandate in December 1993, including of the implications of progress on confidence-building measures and towards a political settlement for the future of the Force;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report one month before that reassessment, to cover all aspects of the situation, including confidence-building measures, progress in political negotiations and possible progressive steps towards an observer force based on the proposal described in paragraph 12 of the Secretary-General's report;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to implement this resolution.

Security Council resolution 831(1993)

27 May 1993 Meeting 3222 14-0-1

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25831).

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Brazil, Cape Verde, China, Djibouti, France, Hungary, Japan, Morocco, New Zealand, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Pakistan.

Pakistan said it would have been more appropriate if the text had retained its focus on the technical problem of financing UNFICYP, particularly since negotiations between the parties were at a critical juncture, requiring the Council to make every effort to induce the two sides to move towards a mutually acceptable political solution.

On 20 July⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General proposed, and the Council agreed⁽²⁹⁾ that the group of 12 military observers, to be deployed in the first week of August, be composed of elements from Austria, Hungary and Ireland.

Operational activities

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In his report on UNFICYP operations for the period 1 December 1992 to 31 May 1993⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General described UNFICYP's relations with the parties, its maintenance of the cease-fire and the integrity of the buffer zone, its humanitarian work including the activities of the Committee on Missing Persons and the work of the various United Nations bodies and agencies to help promote a return to normal conditions throughout the island. He updated information on his mission of good offices (see above).

The report noted that the number of cease-fire violations had decreased slightly, but that air violations had increased: 30 overflights of the buffer zone by Turkish forces aircraft and 7 by National Guard aircraft; 53 overflights from the north and 5 from the south by civilian aircraft; and 9 by the Cyprus Police Airwing. The National Guard continued its programme of construction all along its cease-fire line, refusing to allow inspections of positions clearly emplaced within the buffer zone. The 1989 agreement on the unmanning of certain positions in Nicosia continued to hold and discussions were ongoing with both sides to extend the agreement to all areas of the zone where troops were in close proximity to each other. The report also noted threats to UNFICYP personnel.

In the mixed village of Pyla, located in the buffer zone, UNFICYP assisted the two mukhtars to exercise the full range of their responsibilities. It continued to urge removal of the Cyprus police control point on the Larnaca-Pyla road, south of the buffer zone, as it blocked the flow of tourists and other visitors to Pyla, severely disrupting its economy. The Turkish Cypriot side continued to restrict the freedom of movement of certain individuals to and from the northern part of the island, hampering UNFICYP's humanitarian work there.

Both sides were urged to take reciprocal measures to lower the tension, including mutual commitments, through UNFICYP, not to deploy along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons other than hand-held ones and to prohibit weapons firing within sight or hearing of the buffer zone. They were also urged to work together so that their own agencies could assume the humanitarian functions carried out by UNFICYP over the years. Both sides had been made aware of the Secretary-General's anxiety over the situation in Pyla and of his view that the bicomunal nature of the village demanded special cooperation and understanding.

In view of the foregoing, the Secretary-General stated his belief that the continued presence of the Force remained indispensable and recommended that its mandate be extended for a further six months, until 15 December 1993.

In a 10 June addendum to his report⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension. Turkey had also indicated its concurrence with and support of the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, as expressed at previous Council meetings on the extension of the UNFICYP mandate.

Having considered the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Security Council, on 11 June, unanimously adopted resolution 839(1993).

The Security Council,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 9 June 1993,

Noting also the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the station-ing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting further that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1993,

Recalling its resolution 831(1993) of 27 May 1993, and in particular its paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on financing, as well as its paragraphs 5 and 7 on the restructuring of the Force and the comprehensive reassessment which is to be conducted in December 1993,

Reiterating in particular its call to both sides to cooperate with UNFICYP in order to extend the unmanning agreement of 1989 to all areas of the United Nations-controlled buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1993;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 15 November 1993 as part of the report called for in its resolution 831(1993);

3. Supports the recommendation of the Secretary-General expressed in paragraph 48 of his report that both sides take reciprocal measures to lower the tension, including mutual commitments, through UNFICYP, to prohibit along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone and requests the Secretary-General to negotiate the necessary agreements between the parties to implement these measures;

4. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate;

5. Calls on both parties to carry forward expeditiously and in a constructive manner the intercommunal talks under the auspices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to report on progress in the current round.

Security Council resolution 839(1993)

11 June 1993 Meeting 3235 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25927).

Report of the Secretary-General (November).

On 22 November⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted the report called for by resolution 831(1993) above. It provided: an overview of the United Nations Operation in Cyprus, including its costs; a description of the functions, strength and deployment of UNFICYP; a summary of its operations from 16 June to 15 December; and an update on developments in respect of the Secretary-General's good offices mission (see above).

The report noted a lack of progress in extending the 1989 unmanning agreement to all areas of the buffer zone, a decrease in the number of air violations by military aircraft, but an increase in violations by other aircraft. The National Guard programme of improving defensive positions along the cease-fire line continued, as did the violation by Greek Cypriot tourist and fishing boats of the seaward extensions of the cease-fire lines known as the maritime security lines. The Cyprus police control point on the Larnaca-Pyla road remained in place.

Two of several Greek Cypriot demonstrations and rallies were marked by serious violence. During one demonstration, a large number of Greek Cypriot motorcyclists entered the buffer zone more than once, confronting the Turkish forces; they also confronted UNFICYP at Ledra Crossing, tearing down UNFICYP barriers and injuring six Australian Civilian Police. Another demonstration of some 5,000 youths entered the buffer zone and injured five UNFICYP members who tried to restrain the demonstrators.

The report stated that the Force Commander had absorbed the effects of successive reductions in the strength of the Force, moving a greater proportion of battalion strengths into the buffer zone, reorganizing the system of observation posts and relying more heavily on mobile patrolling. He had also begun turning over certain UNFICYP humanitarian activities to the two sides. The 12 recently assigned military observers had been integrated into the three sectors to carry out reconnaissance, liaison and humanitarian tasks. On one-year assignments (against the six- to eight-month infantry tour), the observers provided useful continuity from one line unit to its replacement. The Force Commander believed 12 observers to be sufficient.

The report reviewed the options considered thus far for a restructured UNFICYP: an unarmed observer mission or an UNFICYP whose functions were divided between infantry and military observers—neither of which the Secretary-General recommended.

While UNFICYP had successfully kept the peace, the resulting opportunity had not been properly used by the two sides to reach an overall agreement. The question often asked was whether UNFICYP was not part of the problem rather than of the solution. The ancillary question was how long UNFICYP would remain on Cyprus. In weighing these questions, the Council might take account of the following considerations: each side had its own perception of the future of UNFICYP; with the Greek Cypriot side having a vital interest in seeing it maintained, while the Turkish Cypriot side neither objected to nor particularly desired its continued presence, as security was assured by the large-scale presence of Turkish forces; the withdrawal of UNFICYP would lead to incidents that could quickly escalate into a conflict, eliminating any hope of progress in a mission of good offices; the status quo, deemed unacceptable by the Council, was established through the use of force and sustained by military strength—a situation not viable in the long term—so that a negotiated settlement was needed.

The Secretary-General was of the view that there was every justification for demanding that the two sides, as well as Turkey and Greece, work more effectively for a negotiated settlement in return for the great efforts of the international community. It was his intention to resume intensive contacts with both sides and with Turkey after the elections in the Turkish Cypriot community on 12 December. In the meantime, he urged once again that, as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot troops envisaged in the Set of Ideas, the Turkish forces on the island be reduced to their level of 1982 and that this reduction be reciprocated by the Greek Cypriot side by a suspension of its weapons acquisition programmes.

Once again the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the UNFICYP mandate for a further six months, until 15 June 1994.

In a 13 December addendum to his report⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension. Turkey had also indicated its concurrence with and support of the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, as expressed at previous Council meetings on the extension of the UNFICYP mandate.

Earlier, on 14 November⁽³⁴⁾ Mr. Denktas referred to the Secretary-General's call to cooperate with UNFICYP in extending the 1989 unmanning agreement to all areas of the buffer zone, as well as his call for reciprocal measures to lower tension, including mutual commitments, through UNFICYP. He said discussions between the Turkish Cypriot side and UNFICYP on those issues could start without delay so as to reach a mutually acceptable arrangement. He called on the Council to ask the Greek Cypriot side to desist from all activities not conducive to a peaceful settlement, such as its demonstrations along the cease-fire lines.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 December, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 889(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 November 1993 submitted pursuant to resolutions 831(1993) of 27 May 1993 and 839(1993) of 11 June 1993 in connection with the Security Council's comprehensive reassessment of the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus in its present strength and structure for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1993,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) (UNFICYP) for a further period ending on 15 June 1994;

2. Notes the Secretary-General's conclusion that the present circumstances do not allow for any modification in the structure and strength of UNFICYP and requests him to keep those matters under constant review with a view to the further possible restructuring of UNFICYP;

3. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to UNFICYP;

4. Urges all concerned once again to commit themselves to a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus and a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as set out in the Set of Ideas;

5. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides, in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839(1993) of 11 June 1993, to begin discussions with UNFICYP without further delay with a view to entering into mutual commitments to prohibit along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are handheld and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone;

6. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate with UNFICYP in extending the 1989 un-manning agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other;

7. Urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in paragraph 102 of the Secretary-General's report of 22 November 1993;

8. Reaffirms that the status quo is unacceptable, and encourages the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to pursue the Secretary-General's mission of good offices on the basis of the Set of Ideas and the package of confidence-building measures relating to Varosha and Nicosia International Airport referred to in paragraph 45 of the Secretary-General's report of 22 November 1993;

9. Notes with interest the confirmation by the team of international economic experts that the package of confidence-building measures holds significant and proportionate benefits for both sides, and looks forward to receiving the full reports of the economic and civil aviation experts;

10. Welcomes in this context the decision of the Secretary-General to resume intensive contacts with both sides and with others concerned and to concentrate at this stage on achieving an agreement on the package of confidence-building measures, intended to facilitate the political process towards an overall settlement;

11. Further welcomes the declared support of the Government of Turkey for the package of confidence-building measures, would also welcome a statement of support for that package by the Government of Greece and expresses the hope that rapid progress will now be made on achieving agreement on the package;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by the end of February 1994 on the outcome of his efforts to achieve an agreement on the package of confidence-building measures;

13. Decides to undertake, on the basis of that report, a thorough review of the situation, including the future role of the United Nations, and, if necessary, to consider alternative ways to promote the implementation of its resolutions on Cyprus.

15 December 1993 Meeting 3322 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26873), orally revised.

Financing

On 1 April⁽³⁵⁾ and again on 29 November⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General issued appeals to all Member States of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies for voluntary contributions to finance UNFICYP. In his April appeal, he stated that as at mid-March, the accumulated shortfall in the UNFICYP Special Account for the mandate period ending 15 June 1993 was estimated at $204 million and that, for the current period, only $1.68 million had so far been pledged or received against projected expenditures of some $9.5 million. The United Nations had been able to meet the claims of troop-contributing countries only up to December 1981. It was unfair that those countries should have to absorb such a disproportionate share of the cost of UNFICYP.

In his November appeal, the Secretary-General stated that the accumulated shortfall had increased to $208.5 million by 15 June 1993, with only $6.8 million pledged for the mandate period 15 December 1992 to 15 June 1993. Since the Security Council had decided that the costs of UNFICYP not covered by voluntary contributions were to be treated as expenses of the Organization from the extension of its mandate on 15 June, the appeal was for special voluntary financial contribution towards the UNFICYP voluntary account for the period prior to 16 June 1993 to cover amounts remaining unreimbursed to troop contributors.

The Secretary-General, by a note of 15 June⁽³⁷⁾ requested inclusion in the agenda of the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly an additional item, entitled "Financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus". Owing to the nature of the item, he further requested that it be allocated to the Fifth Committee. The Assembly inscribed and allocated the item, as requested, on 22 June⁽³⁸⁾

Report of the Secretary-General (August). In a 20 August report on the financing of UNFICYP,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General set out the operational plan of the Force and the cost estimates for its maintenance for the period 16 June to 15 December 1993. It also provided the historical background of the financing of the Force from its inception in 1964⁽⁴⁰⁾ to 15 June 1993, its financial administration, voluntary contributions received and the status of reimbursement to troop-contributing Governments.

Under agreements concluded prior to 15 June 1993, troop contributors volunteered to absorb the regular costs their contingents would incur (regular allowances and normal expenses for materiel) were they serving at home. However, the cost to the United Nations for maintaining UNFICYP included amounts to reimburse the troop contributors for certain of the expenses they incurred in providing troops, known as extra and extraordinary costs, for which reimbursement was being sought by the troop contributors. Owing to insufficient voluntary contributions, they were last reimbursed in June 1992 for claims pertaining to the six-month period ending December 1981. An amount of over $200 million remained outstanding, based on actual and estimated claims for the period from January 1982 through June 1993.

Beginning on 16 June 1993, cost estimates provided for standard reimbursement of troop costs, based on the rates established by the General Assembly in 1991⁽⁴¹⁾ for peace-keeping operations. No reimbursement to the troop contributors had been made for this period.

The cost of maintaining UNFICYP for the current mandate period from 16 June to 15 December 1993 was estimated at $21,512,000 gross ($21,153,300 net). A summary by budget-line item and supplementary information were annexed to the report.

On 23 June, the Secretary-General sought the concurrence of ACABQ to enter into commitments in an amount not to exceed $6.9 million for the period from 16 June to 30 September 1993, pending submission of a detailed report on UNFICYP financing to the Assembly. Noting that voluntary contributions pledged and expected to be paid shortly exceeded the commitment authority sought and noting also that the Assembly had not yet considered the issue, ACABQ decided not to act on the request.

To enable UNFICYP to meet its operational requirements, and pending submission of the current report to the Assembly, spending authority in an amount not to exceed $2 million was authorized by the Controller under rule 110.6 of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations. On 4 August, payment of the pledged contribution by Cyprus in an amount of $18 million was received, in addition to a payment of $500,000 previously received for the current mandate period.

The action thus required appeared to be an appropriation of $9,012,000 gross ($8,653,300 net) and the apportionment thereof, after taking into consideration voluntary contributions of $12,500,000 for the period 16 June to 15 December 1993.

Having examined the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ,⁽⁴¹⁾ believed that the cost for maintaining UNFICYP for the period specified should not exceed $21,271,000 gross ($20,943,000 net). Should the Assembly decide that the costs not covered by voluntary contributions should be assessed on Member States, the resulting appropriation should not exceed $8,771,000 gross ($8,443,000 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 47/236 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, by which the Council established the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 839(1993) of 11 June 1993,

Recognizing that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force with effect from 16 June 1993, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Noting that voluntary contributions were insufficient to cover all of the costs of the operation, including those incurred by troop-contributing Governments prior to 16 June 1993, and regretting the absence of an adequate response to the various appeals for voluntary contributions, including the one contained in section IV of General Assembly resolution 47/218 A of 23 December 1992,

Appreciating the continued efforts of Governments providing troops to the Force,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its mandate,

1. Reaffirms, in the context of paragraph 4 of Security Council resolution 831(1993) of 27 May 1993, in which the Council addressed the issue of the financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, the role of the General Assembly, as set out in Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, as the organ to consider and approve the budget of the Organization, as well as the apportionment of its expenses among Member States;

2. Expresses concern that advice given to the Security Council by the Secretariat on the nature of the financing of the Force did not respect the role of the General Assembly as set out in Article 17 of the Charter;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly to bring to the attention of the President of the Security Council the contents of the present resolution;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action, in accordance, inter alia, with the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee, to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy, to improve management, and to include in his report on this item to the General Assembly information on the steps taken in this regard;

6. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force promptly and in full;

7. Decides that the costs of the Force for the period beginning 16 June 1993 that are not covered by voluntary contributions should be treated as expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter;

8. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 8,771,000 United States dollars gross (8,443,000 dollars net) for the period from 16 June to 15 December 1993, and, accordingly, requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus in accordance with paragraph 29 of his report;

9. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 8,771,000 dollars gross (8,443,000 dollars net) for the above-mentioned period among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in Assembly resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and Assembly decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 328,000 dollars for the period from 16 June to 15 December 1993 approved for the Force;

11. Decides to establish the contributions of Andorra, the Czech Republic, Eritrea, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Monaco and Slovakia to the Force in accordance with the rates of assessment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-eighth session;

12. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 11 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Decides to maintain as separate the account established prior to 16 June 1993 for the Force, invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to that account, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts in appealing for voluntary contributions to this account;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the voluntary nature of the financing of the Force prior to 16 June 1993, to report, no later than 31 January 1994, on the status of the account referred to in paragraph 14 above;

16. Decides to include in the draft agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus".

General Assembly resolution 47/236

14 September 1993 Meeting 110 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/1015) without vote, 10 September (meeting 76); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L45); agenda item 157.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 73, 76; plenary 110.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In his 9 December report on the financing of 17 peace-keeping operations, including UNIFCYP⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, should the Security Council decide to extend the UNIFCYP mandate beyond 15 December 1993, the estimated cost of UNIFCYP for the period from 16 December 1993 to 30 April 1994 would amount to $17,559,000 gross ($17,232,000 net). The estimate took account of the ongoing restructuring of the Force. A breakdown of the requirements by major line-items of expenditure was provided in a table.

In accordance with the undertakings of Cyprus and Greece to make annual voluntary contributions to UNIFCYP of $25 million, it was estimated that a portion of the cost indicated above would be offset by an amount of $9,375,000, representing the prorated share over four and one half months of the voluntary contributions. Therefore, the balance of resources required to maintain UNIFCYP up to 30 April 1994 would amount to $8,184,000 gross ($7,857,000 net).

ACABQ⁽⁴³⁾ recommended that, for the period 16 December 1993 to 30 April 1994, the Secretary-General be authorized to commit an amount up to $8,184,000 gross ($7,857,000 net). This would also take into account the amount of $9,375,000 representing the prorated share of the pledged voluntary contributions. No assessment on Member States would be necessary for the time being since ACABQ had been informed that a cash balance of $28,500,000 was available to UNFICYP as at 13 December 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/474.

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 6,365,300 United States dollars gross (6,111,000 dollars net), in addition to the pledged voluntary contributions of 9,375,000 dollars, for the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for the period from 16 December 1993 to 31 March 1994;

(b) Decided that no assessment on Member States would be necessary in the light of the current cash balance in the Special Account for the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus.

Iran-Iraq

Iran and Iraq continued in 1993 to communicate to the Secretary-General allegations of violations of the cease-fire agreement concluded between the two countries in 1988.(1)

A majority of the allegations were of violations along the Iran-Iraq international boundary, consisting of intrusions by military elements of either side into the area of separation between the two countries, helicopter overflights of that area, small-arms firing within proximity of the boundary line, fortifying existing guard posts and observation towers within the area of separation or erecting new ones at points closer to it than agreed, digging slit trenches, erecting barbed-wire fences, installing or strengthening communication stations and provocative acts such as flag-raising.

Iran, however, alleged a number of Iraqi incursions into its territory, one of which, it said, took place on 8 February⁽²⁾ by 70 well-trained, armed and equipped mercenaries from Iraq who entered Iran's border village of Beitoush, advanced to Nazarbad and then to Bizdeh, where they laid siege to two military bases, killing 14 Iranians and wounding two others; 33 persons were held captive but later released. The bases, as well as a local radio and television station that was emptied of its equipment, were set ablaze. Four other incursions from Iraq were alleged to have occurred between 7 and 10 April⁽³⁾ during which four Iranians were killed and civilian quarters and military and oil installations were damaged.

In retaliation for those attacks, Iran stated that, on 25 May⁽⁴⁾ it carried out what it described as a brief, necessary and proportionate operation against the military bases of the terrorist group where the attacks had originated. Iran added that its action was purely in exercise of its inherent right to self-defence, without prejudice to its policy of respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq and to its commitment to the cease-fire agreement between them.

In an 11 June letter⁽⁵⁾ Iran alleged that groups of anti-revolutionary elements infiltrated certain areas in the Shatit, Dehloran and Mehran regions on 12 May, attacking Iranian forces and a civilian vehicle; on 13 May, they exploded seven bombs around oil pipelines and an oil station at Abadan; and, on 15 May, a six-man group attacked Iranian forces in the Shalamchek region and destroyed an ammunition depot. The attacks claimed the lives of 10 Iranians, including nine soldiers, and injured a number of others. Iran also alleged violations of its airspace on 23 June⁽⁶⁾ when six Iraqi war-planes overflew Mahabad, Sardasht, Bookan and Baneh; and, the following day, when two Iraqi war-planes flew over the southern section of western Azerbaijan province.

For its part, Iraq alleged a succession of bombardments, mainly by artillery, inflicted by Iran on areas in northern Iraq. On 13 March⁽⁷⁾ an aerial bombing of a civilian hospital in the Raniyah district by six Iranian military aircraft claimed the lives of a number of Iraqi Kurdish citizens and caused extensive damage to the hospital. A further incident occurred on 20 April⁽⁸⁾ in the Qal'at Dizah valley, as Iranian forces massed on their side of the frontier to the east of the Iraqi town of Panjwin, causing the town's inhabitants to flee. On 19 April⁽⁹⁾ again in the Qal'at Dizah valley, as well as in Pishtashan and Qirnago, artillery bombarded civilian areas killing and injuring a number of civilians and forcing more than 3,000 persons to flee their homes. Similar attacks occurred on 26 April⁽¹⁰⁾ in the Tushman region and in the suburbs of Panjwin; on 7 May⁽¹¹⁾ in Pusht and Parwin; and, on 14 May⁽¹²⁾ in Sar Qizil, Kalaw, Dustak and Shurladra slope.

Iraq reported that, on 25 May⁽¹³⁾ Iran carried out an aerial attack on Khalis and Jalula', causing damage to a medical depot, igniting fuel tanks and destroying two private houses. On 8 June⁽¹⁴⁾ Iraq condemned Iran's justification of this naked aggression on the basis of Article 51 of the Charter⁽⁴⁾

On 16 June⁽¹⁵⁾ Iraq, in drawing attention to the continuing Iranian artillery bombardments of villages and townships in northern Iraq since May that had caused widespread death and injury, material damage and large-scale displacement of the populations who were fleeing farther inside Iraq, reiterated that such brutal bombardment constituted blatant and inadmissible aggression threatening security and stability in the region. On 10 June⁽¹⁶⁾ it reported that, from the night of 4 June and most of the following day, the northern section of Qal'at Dizah was subjected to sporadic shelling. Also subjected to intermittent and random bombardment were Shiyuzah and Bardi on 22 June; Ganaw and Qindil on 3/4 July; Shiyuzah, Sunah and Kometan on 15 July; and Qal'at Dizah and Panjwin during the following week.⁽¹⁷⁾

Iraq alleged that an Iranian Guard force entered two Iraqi villages in the Choarta sector on 20 July⁽¹⁸⁾ and, in the ensuing clash with local residents, an Iranian was killed and four were taken prisoner and handed over to United Nations representatives; three days later, Iranian forces fired Katyusha rockets during a three-hour bombardment of the Suleimaniyah area. On 30 and 31 July⁽¹⁹⁾ the border areas of Sunah, Shinah and Shiwarazah, as well as the Balinkan valley, were intermittently shelled. So were the following: on 31 July/1 August⁽²⁰⁾ the Balinkan and Shahidan valleys, the villages of Wasan, Kuwaynah and Karalan, as well as villages on the western section of Qindil slope; and, on the night of 1/2 August, a number of villages in the Irbil Governorate.

On 23 August⁽²¹⁾ Iraq reported that the shelling of Dawlat Dizah on 9 August and of Duwayli the following day set fire to extensive sections of grain fields and displaced a number of families, as did the shelling, during the night of 14/15 August, of villages to the north of Hajj Umran. On 20 August⁽²²⁾ the highway connecting Darbandikhan and Arabit and villages along the highway were shelled for most of the day, damaging a number of vehicles and injuring citizens; areas in Suleimaniyah Governorate were also bombarded, setting cultivated areas ablaze. The shelling of border areas continued into 21 August⁽²³⁾ extending as far as 30 kilometres into Iraqi territory.

On the night of 27/28 August⁽²⁴⁾ Iran bombarded a number of villages in Iraq as well as the Singasir area 20 kilometres inside Iraqi territory; and, on 1 September, two other villages north-east of Panjwin, burning farmlands in that area. Between 19 and 27 September⁽²⁵⁾ Iran mounted a number of artillery attacks on villages around Qal'at Dizah.

In addition to those raids and bombardments, Iraq also alleged that, on 16 March⁽²⁶⁾ a group of 50 to 60 armed Iranians mounted an assault on Iraqi positions from three directions, using medium machine-guns, 60-millimetre mortars and light rocket launchers; Iranian army identity papers were found on one of the eight bodies found after the encounter. On 6 October⁽²⁷⁾ two Iranian military officers committed a provocative act by ordering individuals manning an Iraqi position in the demilitarized zone to pull back their position by afternoon the following day.

Iraq regarded the foregoing incidents as acts of renewed aggression and provocation and deplored the Security Council's failure to take appropriate measures despite repeated requests for United Nations intervention. It pointed out⁽¹³⁾ that, since the United Nations Offices of the Secretary-General in Iran and in Iraq were closed on 31 December 1992, the absence of any machinery for monitoring the cease-fire undoubtedly encouraged Iran to engage in new armed aggressions against Iraq; there was therefore an urgent need to reconsider reopening those offices.

Iraq-Kuwait situation

The United Nations continued in 1993 to oversee Iraq's fulfilment of its obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991)⁽¹⁾ which set the terms of the cease-fire that formally brought to an end the 1991 military action taken to compel Iraq to withdraw from its occupation of Kuwait and provided for other conditions essential to restore peace and security in the Persian Gulf region. The Organization further sought Iraq's fulfilment of its obligations under resolutions 707(1991)⁽²⁾ and 715(1991),⁽³⁾ which were inextricably linked with and elaborated upon certain provisions of the cease-fire resolution.

The United Nations Special Commission, created as a subsidiary organ of the Council under the cease-fire resolution, and IAEA continued to discharge their mandate to ensure Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations. Towards the end of 1993, both reported major positive developments in this regard, the most significant of which was the formal and unconditional acknowledgement by Iraq in November of its obligations under resolution 715(1991).

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission, also created pursuant to the cease-fire resolution, completed its mandate of demarcating the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait. It submitted its Final Report in May.

By decision 47/477 of 20 September, the General Assembly included the item entitled "Consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait" in the draft agenda of its forty-eighth session.

Cease-fire compliance

The status of Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations was summarized by the Special Commission and by IAEA in semi-annual reports issued by each of them in June and December 1993 (see below, under "On-site inspections and ongoing monitoring and verification"). In the course of conducting on-site inspections in Iraq during the year, both bodies exerted efforts to obtain Iraq's full cooperation and compliance to enable both to complete the first and second phases of their work—inspection and survey, and disposal of weapons of mass destruction and the facilities for their production—and proceed to the third phase of ongoing monitoring and verification on a routine basis.

In its June report⁽⁴⁾ the Special Commission noted that Iraq's "full, final and complete" disclosures of its proscribed weapons programmes, due under resolution 707(1991), and its initial declarations under the two plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved by resolution 715(1991) needed to be rectified if they were to form the basis for a definite material balance of Iraq's past weapons of mass destruction programmes and for effective monitoring and verification of compliance. One set of declarations, on Iraq's legal and administrative actions to give effect to its obligations in respect of ongoing monitoring and verification, had never been submitted. Iraq continued to refuse to divulge the names of foreign companies from which it had purchased equipment and materials. Accurate information was essential if the Commission was to establish a material balance for proscribed items and, in cooperation with IAEA and the Committee on sanctions, devise a workable and realistic mechanism for import control required by paragraph 7 of resolution 715(1991).

The IAEA June report⁽⁵⁾ made similar observations in respect of Iraq's nuclear material declarations and procurement-related information.

Serious breaches of the Commission's rights, privileges and immunities included the denial by Iraq in January of the Commission's use of its own aircraft to transport personnel and equipment into and out of Iraq from Bahrain. In February, it threatened to shoot down a helicopter providing overhead surveillance for an inspection team if the aircraft did not leave the vicinity of the site and, in June, it blocked the installation of monitoring cameras at two rocket-test sites. It missed two deadlines for the removal and delivery to the Commission of equipment for the production of chemical-weapons precursors and delayed site inspection by a full day.

In their December reports, however, the Commission and IAEA reported major positive technical and political developments that had evolved during three rounds of talks held between the two bodies and Iraqi officials at the highest levels of Government. Iraq had acknowledged its obligations under resolution 715(1991) and the plans approved thereunder. It had confirmed that the significant new declarations it had made available during the talks and those it had previously presented had been made under and in conformity with that resolution. Its change in attitude had been reflected in the cooperation it had extended during the most recent on-site inspections. It had undertaken to cooperate with the Commission in implementing the plans in order to arrive, at the earliest feasible time, at the stage to permit both the Commission and IAEA to report to the Security Council that, in their view, Iraq was meeting all the requirements of section C of resolution 687(1991).

In the light of these positive developments, the Commission and IAEA were finally in a position to complete the first and second phases of their tasks and proceed to the third.

The status of Iraq's implementation of its other obligations under the cease-fire resolution and compliance with other related resolutions are reflected below, dealing with the Iraq-Kuwait international boundary, the repatriation of Kuwaiti nationals, the return of Kuwaiti property, and obligations with respect to all segments of the Iraqi civilian population.

For its part, Iraq issued a series of communications summarizing the measures it had taken each month between December 1992 and August 1993⁽⁶⁾ to implement resolution 687(1991). They included cooperation extended to the inspection teams verifying Iraqi compliance with the military aspects of the resolution, as well as to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM); steps taken to locate missing Kuwaitis and to return Kuwaiti property; Iraq's participation in the work of the Governing Council of the United Nations Compensation Commission relating to claims for losses and damage resulting from the Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait; and steps to implement the provisions of the 1992 Memorandum of Understanding⁽⁷⁾ for the delivery of humanitarian relief to the civilian population of Iraq.

arising from the cease-fire resolution

By decision 47/471 of 14 September, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991): other activities" and to include it in the agenda of its forty-eighth session.

Iraq-Kuwait boundary

In a number of communications to the Security Council President during 1993, Kuwait drew attention to continuing Iraqi assertions that Kuwait was part of Iraq. To illustrate, Kuwait, in an 8 March letter to the President of the Security Council⁽⁸⁾ cited: the evasive answer given by Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister when asked in a telephone interview (by British television, 31 January) whether, by his statement that the Kuwait chapter was closed, he meant Iraq's recognition of Kuwait as an independent sovereign State; and a press reference to Kuwait as part of Iraq's national territory (Al-Jumhuriyah, 28 February). On 23 March⁽⁹⁾ Kuwait reproduced two newspaper articles, one speaking of the "Governorate of Kuwait" (Babil, 6 March) and the other describing Iraq's acceptance of resolution 687(1991) as an imposed status quo paving the way to a time when it could be overcome and changed in a way to ensure the security and safety of Iraq's territory and people (Al-Khudassiyah, 16 March).

Kuwait further transmitted samples of Iraqi school certificates of students born in Kuwait, recording their birthplace as the "Governorate of Kuwait";⁽¹⁰⁾ it pointed to the standard Iraqi press practice of calling Kuwait an Iraqi Governorate (Babil, 8 November) and referring to the people of Kuwait as Iraqis (Al-Thawra, 8 November), and to general media references to the boundary between Kuwait and Iraq as the "administrative boundary between the governorates of Basrah and Kuwait".⁽¹¹⁾ Also cited were Jordanian press reports of statements by the Iraqi Minister of Culture and Information to the effect that, while the major Powers might change geography, they could not change history: Kuwait remained a part of Iraq (Al-Dustur, 14 November) and the issue was not Kuwait but that Kuwait had been a part of Iraq until 1961 when the British made it a State, a situation which persisted until 1990 (Sawt al-Sha'b, 15 November).⁽¹²⁾

Demarcation Commission

The Chairman of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission, on 20 May, submitted the Final Report on the Demarcation of the International Boundary between the Republic of Iraq and the State of Kuwait to the Secretary-General, who in turn transmitted it to the Security Council with a letter on 21 May⁽¹³⁾ The letter stated that, in addition to the Final Report, the Chairman submitted three certified copies of the list of geographic coordinates demarcating the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait. In forwarding one copy to Iraq and the second to Kuwait for their archives, the Secretary-General drew attention to the Final Report and the large-scale maps of the boundary, along with technical documentation comprising certified records of survey stations and boundary pillars. The third copy was retained in the United Nations archives for safe keeping.

The Final Report described the Demarcation Commission's mandate and terms of reference, composition and rules of procedure, meetings and field sessions, participation, organization of work and its consideration of the historical background and definition of the boundary. It outlined the methods of mapping employed, decisions taken as to the demarcation of the western and northern sections and of the Khawr Abd Allah (Khor Abdullah), the physical representation of the boundary, recommendations for its maintenance, and demarcation documentation. The report presented the Commission's conclusion regarding the international boundary and listed coordinates demarcating it. An annex listed the Commission's documents and progress reports. The corresponding demarcation map was issued as an addendum to the Secretary-General's transmittal letter⁽¹⁴⁾

The Final Report recorded that, to accomplish its mandate, as laid down in Council resolution 687(1991) and in the report of the Secretary-General⁽⁵⁾ on the establishment of the Demarcation Commission pursuant to paragraph 3 of that resolution, the Commission drew upon appropriate material, including, in addition to the maps transmitted by Security Council document S/22412 (a set of 10 topographic maps by the United Kingdom Director of General Military Survey), a 1932 Exchange of Letters referred to in the "Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the Restoration of Friendly Relations, Recognition and Related Matters", signed in 1963, containing the following description of "the existing frontier between the two countries", which constituted the delimitation formula for the demarcation.

"From the intersection of the Wadi-el-Audja with the Batin and thence northwards along the Batin to a point just south of the latitude of Safwan; thence eastwards passing south of Safwan Wells, Jebel Sanam and Urn Qasr leaving them to Iraq and so on to the junction of the Khor Zobeir with the Khor Abdullah. The islands of Warbah, Bubiyan, Maskan (or Mashjan), Failakah, Auhah, Kubbar, Qaru and Umm-el-Maradim appertain to Koweit."

The Commission's task was thus technical, not political. As Council resolution 773(1992)⁽¹⁶⁾ pointed out, the Commission was not reallocating territory between Kuwait and Iraq; it was simply carrying out the technical task necessary to demarcate for the first time the precise coordinates of the boundary set out in the Agreed Minutes, pursuant to resolution 687(1991). The Final Report stressed that the Commission had made every effort to confine itself strictly to that objective.

In its conclusion, the Final Report stated that the Demarcation Commission had fulfilled its mandate: it had demarcated in geographic coordinates of latitude and longitude the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait set out in the Agreed Minutes, had made arrangements for the physical representation of the boundary through the emplacement of an appropriate number of boundary pillars or monuments and had provided for arrangements for continuing maintenance and location accuracy of the surficial boundary representation. The Commission stressed that it carried out this mandate and only this mandate.

Regarding boundary maintenance, the Commission recommended that the Secretary-General request the survey organizations that had been associated with the Commission to provide services, as follows: to inspect the pillars and markers of the boundary annually and report to him after each inspection; to take appropriate measures to reposition, repair or replace those pillars and markers, as necessary; and to monitor the adequacy of and emplace any additional boundary markers, such as buoys, pilings or other markers, as may be deemed useful. The Commission also recommended that an access road to the pillars be built to facilitate maintenance work, the costs to be shared by Iraq and Kuwait. These arrangements would remain in force until other technical arrangements were established between the parties.

In his transmittal letter, the Secretary-General stated that the coordinates established by the Commission constituted the final demarcation of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait set out in the Agreed Minutes. He also stated his intention to set in motion the mechanism for the recommended boundary maintenance, adding that the personnel to be involved, whether of the United Nations or of survey or similar organizations, were to enjoy unimpeded freedom of movement in the area of the demarcated boundary and all other privileges and immunities necessary for the fulfilment of their task.

On 27 May, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 833(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, and in particular paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 thereof, its resolution 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, its resolution 773(1992) of 26 August 1992, and its resolution 806(1993) of 5 February 1993,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 May 1991 concerning the establishment of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission (the Commission), the subsequent exchange of letters of 6 and 13 May 1991, and the acceptance of the report by Iraq and Kuwait,

Having considered the Secretary-General's letter of 21 May 1993 to the President of the Security Council transmitting the final report of the Commission dated 20 May 1993,

Recalling in this connection that through the demarcation process the Commission was not reallocating territory between Kuwait and Iraq, but it was simply carrying out the technical task necessary to demarcate for the first time the precise coordinates of the boundary set out in the "Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the Restoration of Friendly Relations, Recognition and Related Matters" signed by them on 4 October 1963, and that this task was carried out in the special circumstances following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and pursuant to resolution 687(1991) and the Secretary-General's report for implementing paragraph 3 of that resolution,

Reminding Iraq of its obligations under resolution 687(1991), and in particular paragraph 2 thereof, and under other relevant resolutions of the Council, and of its acceptance of the resolutions of the Council adopted pursuant to Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, which forms the basis for the cease-fire,

Noting with approval the Secretary-General's instruction to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) to finalize the realignment of the demilitarized zone with the entire international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait demarcated by the Commission,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's decision to make the necessary arrangements for the maintenance of the physical representation of the boundary, as recommended by the Commission in section X (c) of its report, until other technical arrangements are established between Iraq and Kuwait for this purpose,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the Secretary-General's letter of 21 May 1993 to the President of the Council and the 20 May 1993 report of the Commission enclosed therewith;

2. Welcomes also the successful conclusion of the work of the Commission;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for its work on the land part of the boundary as well as the Khor Abdullah or offshore section of the boundary, and welcomes its demarcation decisions;

4. Reaffirms that the decisions of the Commission regarding the demarcation of the boundary are final;

5. Demands that Iraq and Kuwait in accordance with international law and relevant Security Council resolutions respect the inviolability of the international boundary, as demarcated by the Commission, and the right to navigational access;

6. Underlines and reaffirms its decision to guarantee the inviolability of the above-mentioned international boundary which has now been finally demarcated by the Commission and to take as appropriate all necessary measures to that end in accordance with the Charter, as provided for in paragraph 4 of resolution 687(1991) and paragraph 4 of resolution 773(1992);

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 833(1993)

27 May 1993 Meeting 3224 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25852).

Venezuela stated its understanding that the resolution was not intended to establish any precedent affecting the general principle set forth in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations: that it was the parties directly involved in a dispute who must negotiate and reach an agreement to overcome their differences. In Brazil's view, questions related to definition and demarcation of international boundaries were to be settled directly by the States concerned. China observed that the demarcation of the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait was a special case arising from specific historical circumstance and as such was not generally applicable; for that reason the Council's invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter in that case must not be viewed as setting a precedent.

Communications. Kuwait, on 28 May⁽¹⁷⁾ expressed its appreciation to the Security Council members for adopting resolution 833(1992) and to the Demarcation Commission for their intensive efforts; on 16 June⁽¹⁸⁾ it transmitted a statement affirming that it would be bound by the decisions of the Commission and that it regarded resolution 833(1993) as an enlightened achievement to be added to the series of United Nations achievements in the promotion of international peace and justice.

Iraq, on 7 June⁽¹⁹⁾ reaffirmed its position on the question of demarcating the Iraq-Kuwait boundary on the basis of the Agreed Minutes as communicated to the Secretary-General in 1991⁽²⁰⁾ when the Council adopted resolution 687(1991), and again in 1992.⁽²¹⁾ Iraq also drew attention to what it said were blatant facts concerning the demarcation of the offshore boundary in the Khawr Abd Allah, which was endorsed by resolution 833(1993).

Iraq stated that when the Demarcation Commission first discussed the question at its third (1991) session⁽²²⁾ the Chairman, Mochtar Kusuma-Atmadja (Indonesia), one of the three independent experts on the Commission, affirmed his understanding, shared by his fellow experts, that the mandate of the Commission did not authorize it to deal with the boundary line beyond the junction of the Khawr Zhobeir and the Khawr Abd Allah (i.e., in the sea) unless the two parties so agreed; and that, moreover, the Commission could not confer powers on itself.

The minutes of the Commission's sixth (1992) session recorded the differences that arose regarding the boundary section in question, particularly between the Kuwaiti representative and the Chairman, owing to Kuwaiti pressure on the experts to adopt Kuwait's position on the matter—a fact the Chairman did not hesitate to reveal, along with the interventions by the Deputy Legal Counsel of the United Nations Secretariat.

The letter transmitting the sixth session's report to the Council stated that, as far as the offshore boundary was concerned, the Council might wish to encourage the Commission to demarcate that part of the boundary as soon as possible and thus complete its work—this despite the Secretariat's full knowledge that the Commission had not yet agreed on its competence to do so under its terms of reference, and of the Chairman's position of implied resignation if that task was imposed on the Commission. Those facts, Iraq asserted, and the correspondence between the language of the transmittal letter and that of resolution 773(1992),⁽¹⁶⁾ proved beyond doubt a coordinated effort by Kuwait and certain Council members and circles in the Secretariat to orient the Commission's work in a manner contrary to its mandate under resolution 687(1991), for to have amended the mandate would have meant a political and legal scandal that could not be covered up.

The 4 and 6 November letters of the Chairman explaining his resignation to the Secretary-General and to the Legal Counsel made clear that it was for two reasons. One was personal; the other was his reservation about the Commission's terms of reference: that is, the offshore boundary (Khawr Abd Allah) was not specifically mentioned in the 1932 Exchange of Letters referred to in the Agreed Minutes; hence, the Commission lacked an agreed delimitation on which to base a demarcation of that section. He described a situation that made it impossible for him to continue in office unless certain modifications were made to the Commission's mandate, which the Legal Counsel explained was out of the question.

Iraq asserted that the eighth session (Geneva, 14-16 December 1992), held under the newly appointed Chairman, Nicolas Valticos (Greece), hastily decided that the basic principle governing the demarcation of the offshore boundary must be the median line, it being understood that the purpose of the adjustment was to facilitate navigational access for both parties.

Iraq further asserted that the improper intervention and influence on the Commission's work gave rise to a number of legal questions: the description of the boundary endorsed by the Council for demarcation under resolution 687(1991) in no way touched on a description of the boundary in the Khawr Abd Allah and, since demarcation must be based on a delimitation (description) of the boundary agreed upon by the parties, the Commission had no basis for its demarcation of the Khawr Abd Allah; according to the boundary description in resolution 687(1991), the Khawr Abd Allah was not assigned the characteristic of territorial sea to justify its division between States with opposite or adjacent coasts according to sea law principles; the Khawr Abd Allah, even supposing it were a territorial sea, was correctly described as subject to "special circumstances" by two of the independent experts, which, under article 15 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,⁽²³⁾ permitted delimitation of the boundary of the territorial sea to be made by a method other than the principle of the median line, failing agreement between the two parties on another principle and, since the delimitation of the boundary in this area was being effected for the first time, the "special circumstances" principle applied; since Iraq contended that it had historic rights in the Khawr Abd Allah area in which Kuwait carried no substantial navigation, according to the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea, the area was exempt from the median line rule; the Security Council had no right, pursuant to its functions and powers under the Charter, to impose a boundary delimitation on a Member State because, under international law, that sphere of competence was governed by the principle of agreement between the States concerned and, with the precision legally required, had no relation to questions of the maintenance of international peace and security that were the Council's sphere of competence; the Council had thus acted ultra vires.

Iraq stated that the imposition of the boundary in the Khawr Abd Allah area by the Demarcation Commission, on the basis of a purely political decision, presented a grave threat to Iraq's right to enjoy freedom of access to the sea by exercising its historic right to unrestricted and safe navigation in the Khawr Abd Allah, to an extent that would place it in a position of a land-locked State.

Kuwait, in a detailed response of 21 July⁽²⁴⁾ to Iraq's arguments, drew attention to, among other things, paragraph 97 of the Demarcation Commission's Final Report guaranteeing the right to safe and unrestricted navigation in the offshore area for both Kuwait and Iraq. The paragraph stated in part that navigational access was possible for both States through the Khawr Zhobeir, the Khawr Shetana and the Khawr Abd Allah to and from all their own respective waters and territories bordering their boundary; that the right of navigation and access was provided for under the rules of international law as embodied in the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea; and that it was the Commission's view that the right of access implied a non-suspensible right of navigation for both States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of Iraq's comments on the Iraq-Kuwait international boundary as demarcated, the Security Council met on 28 June, and, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²⁵⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3246.

"The Security Council has noted with particular concern the letter of 6 June 1993 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Iraq to the Secretary-General concerning resolution 833(1993).

"The Council recalls in this connection that the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission did not reallocate territory between Kuwait and Iraq, but simply carried out the technical task necessary to demarcate the precise coordinates for the first time, on the basis of "The Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the Restoration of Friendly Relations, Recognition and Related Matters" signed by them on 4 October 1963, which were registered with the United Nations. The Council reminds Iraq that the Boundary Demarcation Commission acted on the basis of resolution 687(1991) and the Secretary-General's report on implementing paragraph 3 of that resolution, both of which were formally accepted by Iraq. In its resolution 833(1993), the Council reaffirmed that the decisions of the Commission were final, and demanded that Iraq and Kuwait respect the inviolability of the international boundary as demarcated by the Commission and the right to navigational access.

"The Council also reminds Iraq of its acceptance of resolution 687(1991) of the Council, which forms the basis for the cease-fire. The Council wishes to stress to Iraq the inviolability of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait, demarcated by the Commission and guaranteed by the Council pursuant to resolutions 687(1991), 773(1992) and 833(1993), and the serious consequences that would ensue from any breach thereof."

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, established by the Security Council in 1991,⁽²⁶⁾ was mandated to monitor the Khawr Abd Allah waterway and the DMZ established by the Council along the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait, to deter DMZ violations through surveillance and to observe any hostile or potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State into the other. On 5 February 1993, the Council decided to extend the terms of reference of UNIKOM to include the capacity to take physical action to prevent or redress violations of the DMZ or of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary by civilians or police and to deal with problems that might arise from the presence of Iraqi installations, citizens and their assets in the DMZ on the Kuwaiti side of the newly demarcated Iraq-Kuwait international boundary.

The DMZ was described as measuring 200 kilometres long, to which the 40-kilometre-long Khawr Abd Allah waterway had to be added; it was mostly barren and uninhabited, except for the towns of Umm Qasr and Safwan, where there were airfields, as well as a port at Umm Qasr. The boundaries of the DMZ, which extended 10 kilometres into Iraq and five kilometres into Kuwait, had been realigned with the newly demarcated international boundary and marked at one-kilometre (1,000-metre) intervals and at major entry points; in addition, a road had been constructed along the entire length of the land portion of the boundary. As of 31 March, the DMZ was clearly identifiable on both sides.

UNIKOM maintained the DMZ in three operational sectors—northern, central and southern—with a headquarters in each. At the end of February, the emplacement of the 18 patrol/observation bases, six in each sector, was adjusted to strengthen the northern sector so that seven were placed there and six and five in the central and southern sectors respectively. UNIKOM's concept of operations was based on a combination of patrol/observation bases, observation points, ground and air patrols, investigation teams and liaison with Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities at all levels. It employed surveillance aids, including maritime radar for the Khawr Abd Allah, night vision devices, high-powered binoculars and video cameras, as well as the Global Positioning System for the accurate determination of locations in the terrain.

In addition to its mandate, UNIKOM provided technical support to other United Nations missions in Iraq and Kuwait, in particular, air and ground transport, accommodation, communications and engineering support, on at-cost basis, to the Demarcation Commission; and escorts and accommodation to the United Nations Coordinator for the Return of Property from Iraq to Kuwait.

It continued to provide movement control in respect of all United Nations aircraft operating in the area.

UNIKOM maintained liaison offices at Baghdad and Kuwait City, and its Chief Military Observer and other senior staff remained in regular contact with the police of both sides. Iraq and Kuwait had each set up a liaison office in the DMZ; their Governments extended the cooperation necessary for UNIKOM to carry out its mandate.

On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Council extended UNIKOM twice in 1993, each for a six-month period: the first time from 9 April until 8 October 1993 and the second from 9 October 1993 to 8 April 1994.

Special report of the Secretary-General (10 January). In a special report⁽²⁷⁾, the Secretary-General drew to the Security Council's attention a number of serious developments casting doubt on Iraq's continued willingness to cooperate with UNIKOM and to abide by the commitments it had undertaken in this respect.

The developments concerned the former Iraqi naval base at Umm Qasr, comprising six ammunition bunkers and prefabricated buildings, including 19 such buildings in part of the base called Camp Khor, which Iraq had made available to UNIKOM and on which UNIKOM had put up additional prefabricated units. The Demarcation Commission had subsequently determined the naval base to be on Kuwaiti territory. UNIKOM informed the Iraqi authorities of this fact on 24 December 1992, stating that retrieval of Iraqi-owned items on the Kuwaiti side of the newly demarcated boundary would have to cease. Until then, that activity, which began in 1991 once Iraqi ownership had been established, had been allowed under close UNIKOM monitoring.

In accordance with procedures established by the Council and conveyed to the Chief Military Observer of UNIKOM, the contents of the bunkers were to be destroyed by UNIKOM or by a specialized firm under its supervision (letter of 3 November 1992) and removal of Iraqi property and assets was to be undertaken only with UNIKOM prior clearance, or by the Kuwaiti authorities through UNIKOM, and should be completed by 15 January 1993 (letter of 8 January).

On 2 January, however, unauthorized retrieval was conducted by some 250 Iraqis. This was repeated on 10 January, when some 200 Iraqis with trucks and heavy loading equipment forced entry into Umm Qasr, and, despite preventive steps taken by UNIKOM, succeeded in taking away most of the contents of the ammunition bunkers, including HY-2G anti-ship missiles. On the same date, up to 500 Iraqi personnel proceeded to dismantle the prefabricated buildings. Meanwhile, the Chief Military Observer was informed by the Chairman of Iraq's Higher Committee for Coordination, responsible for liaison with UNIKOM, that on 11 January the dismantling operation would be extended to include the units housing UNIKOM and suggested evacuation of those premises. The Secretary-General recalled that, by an exchange of letters dated 15 April and 21 June 1992, the Government of Iraq had agreed that the land and premises made available to UNIKOM were inviolate and subject to the exclusive control and authority of the United Nations.

Annexed to the report were two Council letters establishing the procedures regarding the removal of Iraqi property, as well as a December 1992 letter from the Secretary-General to the Council President, drawing attention to some issues that had arisen as demarcation of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait neared completion. They concerned six Iraqi police posts, part of the Iraqi town of Umm Qasr, several Iraqi farms along the eastern part of the boundary and some well heads of the Ratqah oil field—all of which had been shown to be on Kuwaiti territory.

The Secretary-General's letter also referred to the three Iraqi and two Kuwaiti police posts that were closer to the boundary than the minimum of 1,000 metres from either side of it, which UNIKOM, with the concurrence of the two Governments, had established as a reasonable distance to prevent incidents. The Secretary-General stated that he had instructed UNIKOM to arrange with both parties for the removal of the police posts to the agreed distance, recalling in this connection Iraq's repeated assurance to abide by the Demarcation Commission's decision. He emphasized that the issue of the Iraqi citizens and their assets remaining on Kuwaiti territory was potentially volatile and apt to give rise to increased tension and that he was in touch with the parties in order to promote an early settlement.

In a 19 January addendum to his report⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, on 17 January, Iraq had withdrawn, under UNIKOM supervision, the six police posts located on Kuwaiti territory. As of midday on 13 January, the retrieval of Iraqi assets from Kuwaiti territory had ceased. As to the Iraqi and Kuwaiti posts that were nearer to the boundary than the agreed 1,000-metre distance from it, the Secretary-General stated that, through an oversight, two other Iraqi police posts set up in the central sector in early December 1992 were not included in the count; in Umm Qasr, where the boundary ran through a built-up area, three police checkpoints and a border post were also within the 1,000-metre range.

The Security Council met on 11 January and, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3162.

"The Security Council notes that there have been a number of recent actions by Iraq as part of its pattern of flouting relevant Security Council resolutions. One was the series of border incidents involving the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM); another was the incident concerning the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and UNIKOM flights.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned at the incidents reported in the Secretary-General's special report of 10 January 1993 on UNIKOM. The Security Council recalls the provisions of resolution 687(1991) that established the Demilitarized Zone between Iraq and Kuwait and demanded that both countries respect the inviolability of the international boundary between them. It reaffirms that the boundary was at the very core of the conflict and that, in resolutions 687(1991) and 773(1991), it guaranteed the inviolability of the boundary and undertook to take, as appropriate, all necessary measures to that end in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

"The Council condemns the action taken by Iraq on 10 January 1993 to remove equipment by force from the Kuwaiti side of the demilitarized zone without prior consultation with UNIKOM, and through UNIKOM with the Kuwaiti authorities, as set out in the letter of 8 January 1993 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General. In particular, the Council draws attention to the removal by Iraq of four HY-2G anti-ship missiles and other military equipment from the six bunkers in the former Iraqi naval base at Umm Qasr on Kuwaiti territory, in spite of the objections of UNIKOM and their efforts to prevent this. This action is a direct challenge to the authority of UNIKOM and amounts to clear-cut defiance by Iraq of the Council, which stipulated in the letter of 3 November 1992 from the President of the Council to the Secretary-General that the military equipment in the six bunkers should be destroyed by or under the supervision of UNIKOM. The Council demands that the anti-ship missiles and other military equipment removed by force from the six bunkers at Umm Qasr in Kuwaiti territory be returned immediately to the custody of UNIKOM for destruction, as previously decided.

"The Council also condemns further Iraqi intrusions into the Kuwaiti side of the demilitarized zone on 11 January 1993. It demands that any future retrieval mission be in accordance with the terms set out in the letter of 8 January 1993 from the President of the Council to the Secretary-General. On the UNIKOM facilities at Camp Khor, the Council stresses that the land and premises occupied by UNIKOM shall be inviolate and subject to the exclusive control and authority of the United Nations.

"The Council invites the Secretary-General, as a first step, to explore on an urgent basis the possibilities for restoring UNIKOM to its full strength and to consider in an emergency such as this the need for rapid reinforcement as set out in paragraph 18 of his report of 12 June 1991, as well as other suggestions that he might have to enhance the effectiveness of UNIKOM, and to report back to the Council.

"The Council is also alarmed by Iraq's refusal to allow the United Nations to transport its UNSCOM and UNIKOM personnel into Iraqi territory using its own aircraft. In this connection the Council reiterates the demand in its statement of 8 January 1993 that Iraq permit UNSCOM and UNIKOM to use their own aircraft to transport their personnel into Iraq. It rejects the arguments contained in the letter of 9 January 1993 from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Iraq to the President of the Security Council.

"These latest developments concerning the activities of UNIKOM and UNSCOM constitute further material breaches of resolution 687(1991), which established the cease-fire and provided the conditions essential for the restoration of peace and security in the region, as well as other relevant resolutions and agreements. The Council demands that Iraq cooperate fully with UNIKOM, UNSCOM and other United Nations agencies in carrying out their mandates, and again warns Iraq of the serious consequences that will flow from such continued defiance. The Council will remain actively seized of the matter."

On 12 January⁽³⁰⁾ Iraq reasoned that there could be no disputing the fact that the items retrieved from Umm Qasr belonged to it, that the retrieval was carried out in a peaceful and orderly manner and that the property did not include any item prohibited under resolution 687(1991). The clamour surrounding the matter had been contrived and the situation systematically escalated by the United States and its allies; and fragmentary and alarming information had been provided to the Council with the objective of depicting Iraq's position as one of flouting Council resolutions and defying the Council.

Special report of the Secretary-General (18 January). Responding to the Security Council's invitation to consider the need for rapid reinforcement of UNIKOM units in view of the January incidents, the Secretary-General, in a further special report⁽³¹⁾ observed that, in the circumstances, UNIKOM had performed the functions for which it was designed and for which its strength was sufficient. It had closely monitored the incidents, kept United Nations Headquarters informed and made immediate representations to the Iraqi personnel on the spot and to the Iraqi military authorities through the established liaison channel. For the most part, the representations with the Iraqis proved ineffective because UNIKOM's interlocutors stated that they were powerless to influence a course of events set in motion at the highest levels of the Iraqi Government. Similarly, representations to the United Nations remained without a positive response until the Security Council intervened and Member States threatened other measures, at which point the Council was informed that Iraq would suspend its unauthorized retrieval of property.

However, should the Council decide that UNIKOM's current mandate did not permit an adequate response to such violations as had occurred and that UNIKOM should be able to prevent and redress them, then it would require a capacity to take such physical action. Such action could be taken to prevent or, if that failed, redress small-scale violations of the DMZ, violations of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary by either civilians or police, and problems that might arise from the presence of Iraqi installations and Iraqi citizens and their assets in the DMZ on the Kuwaiti side of the newly demarcated boundary.

The Secretary-General estimated that three mechanized infantry battalions would be required to perform those functions. In addition, UNIKOM's airlift capability would need to be augmented to enable it to lift one company in one wave for rapid reaction. The total additional military support needed to enable UNIKOM to carry out its new mandate would comprise the following elements: 225 Headquarters and communications personnel; 2,250 infantry personnel; 750 logistics personnel; 200 engineers; 100 medical personnel and 120 personnel for the 20 helicopters that would also be required.

If the Council required UNIKOM also to prevent violations of the maritime boundary, it would additionally need naval assets, with the necessary docking facilities, to enable it to patrol the Khawr Abd Allah and intercept any violating vessels.

The current tasks of the unarmed military observers would be assigned to the infantry, which would be deployed at the existing patrol and observation bases and which would patrol the DMZ. The units would need to include a sufficient number of officers to carry out liaison, investigations and other special tasks. As in the past, the Governments of Iraq and Kuwait would be expected to consult with UNIKOM on the regulation of their activities within the DMZ. This would be of particular importance with regard to the maintenance of law and order, as UNIKOM would become an armed force with a mandate in some respects overlapping that of the local police.

UNIKOM would be provided with the weapons integral to its infantry battalions, to be used only in self-defence, which would include resistance to attempts by forceful means to prevent UNIKOM from discharging its mandated duties. UNIKOM would thus not be authorized to initiate enforcement action. It would need to retain the freedom of movement and the privileges and immunities it currently enjoyed; the arrangements governing its presence in Iraq and Kuwait should continue to apply mutatis mutandis.

The Secretary-General emphasized that the above arrangements were based on the assumption that the two Governments would cooperate with the restructured Mission. Without that cooperation, it would be impossible for UNIKOM to carry out its functions, in which case the Council would need to consider alternative measures. He further emphasized that, as restructured, UNIKOM would not have the capacity to prevent a significant military incursion. Should the Council consider that such risk existed, it would be necessary to make other arrangements for dealing with it, while at the same time ensuring the safety of UNIKOM.

In a 26 January addendum⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General estimated that the costs associated with strengthening UNIKOM would amount to some $112 million for the first six-month period, with an estimated additional monthly cost thereafter of approximately $12 million. A breakdown of the first figure by main categories of expenditure was annexed to the addendum. He recommended that the costs should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States with the corresponding assessments to be levied on Member States to be credited to the UNIKOM special account.

On 5 February, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 806(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, and in particular paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5 thereof, and its resolutions 689(1991) of 9 April 1991 and 773(1992) of 26 August 1992, and its other resolutions on this matter,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 18 January 1993,

Noting with approval that work is being completed on the realignment of the demilitarized zone referred to in paragraph 5 of resolution 687(1991) to correspond to the international boundary demarcated by the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission,

Deeply concerned at recent actions by Iraq in violation of relevant Security Council resolutions, including the series of border incidents involving the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM),

Recalling the statements made by the President on behalf of the Council on 8 January 1993 and on 11 January 1993,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Underlines once again its guarantee of the inviolability of the international boundary between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq and its decision to take as appropriate all necessary measures to that end in accordance with the Charter, as provided for in paragraph 4 of resolution 687(1991);

2. Approves the report, and decides to extend the terms of reference of UNIKOM to include the functions contained in paragraph 5 of the report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to plan and execute a phased deployment of the strengthening of UNIKOM taking into account the need for economy and other relevant factors and to report to the Council on any step he intends to take following an initial deployment;

4. Reaffirms that the question of termination or continuation of UNIKOM and the modalities of UNIKOM will continue to be reviewed every six months pursuant to paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 689(1991), the next review to take place in April 1993;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 806(1993)

5 February 1993 Meeting 3171 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25244).

The Secretary-General, on 15 October⁽³³⁾ notified the Council that, despite considerable effort, it had not been possible to identify a Member State able to provide a suitably equipped mechanized infantry battalion for the initial phasing in of three such battalions to reinforce UNIKOM. However, he proposed to accept the offer of Bangladesh to provide an infantry battalion, for which Kuwait had agreed to make available the necessary equipment and to build two camps to accommodate the battalion; he would expedite the battalion's deployment as soon as possible. The Council agreed to that proposal on 22 October⁽³⁴⁾

Reports of the Secretary-General (April and October). The Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council two reports, dated 2 April⁽³⁵⁾ and 1 October⁽³⁶⁾ on the activities of UNIKOM in connection with the six-month review of its mandate. The first report covered the period 1 October 1992 to 31 March 1993 and the second, 1 April to 30 September 1993.

By 31 March, the engineering unit had disposed of 10,000 pieces of ordnance, constructed 3,000 metres of security fencing around UNIKOM headquarters and Camp Khor, built two new airstrips and maintained 1,500 kilometres of existing patrol routes. It assisted the Demarcation Commission by clearing or building access roads to 106 border-pillar sites along the DMZ and in transporting and emplacing the pillars. The unit also cleared and levelled three square kilometres of camp-site for the infantry battalions that were to reinforce UNIKOM and erected durable observation towers at all patrol/observation bases. The logistics unit continued to carry out vehicle maintenance, supply distribution and security-related tasks mainly for the headquarters facilities in the northern sector (Umm Qasr) and its extension, Camp Khor, and for the Doha logistic base. The medical unit, in addition to maintaining a sick-bay facility at Umm Qasr in the northern sector and first-aid stations at the two other sectors, also provided emergency care to civilians injured in the DMZ, mostly by exploding ordnance.

Iran and Kuwait continued clearing their respective sides of the DMZ of unexploded ordnance and debris left over from the 1991 military action against Iraq, with which the Iraqi side particularly was littered.

In May, Kuwait informed the Secretary-General that it would set up a border security system, comprising a trench, an earthen embankment and a patrol road along the entire length of the land portion of the demarcated boundary between Kuwait and Iraq. The project began in June and was nearly completed in the southern and central sectors by the end of September. Four crossing points were constructed for UNIKOM use, one in each sector and a fourth on the main road at Safwan. This arrangement would be reviewed periodically in the light of UNIKOM's operational requirements.

Apart from the incidents described by the Secretary-General in his special report of 10 January⁽²⁷⁾ UNIKOM observed three types of DMZ violations: minor incursions, often inadvertent, by military personnel on the ground; overflights by military aircraft, mostly unidentified; and violations involving the carrying and firing of weapons other than side-arms, committed mainly by policemen. There were 23 such violations by Iraq, 72 by Kuwait, 11 by Member States cooperating with Kuwait and 47 by unidentified parties.

By the end of September, UNIKOM had received 35 written complaints from Iraq and 46 from Kuwait, many of them alleging firings at police posts close to the boundary and airspace violations. Investigations into these complaints revealed the presence of rifles and machine-guns at the posts, in violation of the neutrality of the DMZ.

As at 31 March, there were 13 Iraqi facilities of various kinds (customs posts, police posts and control points) and two Kuwaiti police posts closer to the border than 1,000 metres. Seven of the Iraqi posts were in Safwan and Umm Qasr, which extended right up to the border and where a presence was required to maintain law and order and to control border crossings. The Chief Military Observer was in touch with the authorities concerned in order to reduce such presence in the 1,000-metre zone to the absolute minimum necessary to perform these functions.

As to issues that had arisen with respect to areas determined by the demarcation process to be on Kuwaiti territory and on which Iraqi citizens lived and Iraqi assets were located, including oil well heads at Ratqah and farms at Safwan, Kuwait had indicated that the Iraqis could not remain in those areas and had offered to compensate them for their private properties and assets. At the request of Kuwait, an assessment of those properties was being made by a neutral party designated by the Secretary-General on which to base appropriate compensation. Iraq stated that, while it rejected the principle of relocation and compensation, it would take no action that might provoke dispute or contention with the United Nations.

In his April report⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General observed that the events in January had demonstrated the importance of the United Nations presence at the Iraq-Kuwait border; he thus recommended that UNIKOM be maintained for a further six months until 30 September 1993, with which the Security Council concurred on 13 April⁽³⁶⁾ In his October report⁽³⁷⁾ he recommended extending UNIKOM until 8 April 1994, with which the Council likewise concurred, on 11 October⁽³⁸⁾

Communications. Subsequent to his October report on UNIKOM activities, the Secretary-General received several letters alleging violations in the DMZ.

Iraq wrote on 15 November⁽³⁹⁾ of intermittent firings from the Kuwaiti side in the direction of nearby Iraqi farms (26 September) and of 20 rounds fired at an Iraqi guard post (18 October).

Kuwait, on 16 November⁽⁴⁰⁾ drew attention to orchestrated acts of provocation and incitement against its territorial integrity, including: a reported meeting on that date between Iraq's Minister of Agriculture and the Iraqi farmers on Kuwaiti territory, urging them to remain on their farms; a crowd of some 250 Iraqis in 60 vehicles converged at pillar 95 waving Iraqi flags, taunting and throwing stones at Kuwaiti workers engaged in building a trench; some Iraqis actually entered Kuwaiti territory in an attempt to level the trench and hoist Iraqi flags, bringing the construction to a halt.

On 22 November⁽⁴¹⁾ Kuwait reported a similar incident two days earlier: some 400 Iraqis in buses and jeeps converged on pillars 103 and 104, surrounding Kuwaiti workers; they retreated into Iraq only when a Kuwaiti policeman fired shots into the air. Also on 22 November⁽⁴²⁾ Kuwait reported that two UNIKOM officers on patrol were intercepted 400 metres south of boundary pillar 95 by three Iraqis brandishing AK-47s. The officers were forced out of their vehicle and searched, after which the armed Iraqis hijacked the vehicle into Iraq. The officers were assisted at the Kuwaiti post at Al Mazari'.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the foregoing communications, the Security Council met on 23 November and, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to issue the following statement⁽⁴³⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3319.

"The Security Council is seriously concerned about recent violations of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary as reported by the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), most notably those on 16 and 20 November 1993, when large numbers of Iraqi nationals crossed the boundary illegally. The Council holds the Government of Iraq responsible for these breaches of paragraph 2 of resolution 687(1991).

"The Security Council reminds Iraq of its obligations under resolution 687(1991), the acceptance of which forms the basis of the cease-fire, and under other relevant resolutions of the Council, including most recently resolution 833(1993).

"The Security Council demands that Iraq, in accordance with international law and relevant Security Council resolutions, respect the inviolability of the international boundary, and take all necessary measures to prevent any violations of that boundary."

Composition

UNIKOM continued under the command of Major-General T. K. Dibuama (Ghana), Chief Military Observer, until 20 August 1993; thereafter, Brigadier-General Vigar Aabrek (Norway) served as Acting Chief Military Observer. On 1 December, Major-General Krishna Narayan Singh Thapa (Nepal) assumed his functions as Chief Military Observer. His appointment had been proposed by the Secretary-General on 9 November⁽⁴⁴⁾ and agreed to by the Security Council on 12 November.⁽⁴⁵⁾

As at September 1993, UNIKOM had a strength of 367 military personnel, all ranks⁽³⁶⁾ of which 252 were military observers from 33 Member States and 115 were personnel in the engineering (50), logistics (45) and medical (20) units, provided by Argentina, Denmark and Norway, respectively. Of the 300 military observers authorized, 48 were on stand-by in their countries. UNIKOM strength had increased by 55 since March.

The civilian staff had been reduced from 188 in March to 185, of whom 79 were recruited internationally and 106 locally.

In addition to two small fixed-wing civilian aircraft contributed by Switzerland at no cost to the Organization and three chartered helicopters, UNIKOM had the use of a chartered aircraft for personnel and equipment transport between Baghdad and Kuwait City.

Pursuant to the expanded terms of reference of UNIKOM, calling for its reinforcement with three mechanized infantry battalions that were to be phased in, the military observers were to be retained during the first phase and reinforced with one mechanized battalion to be deployed in the northern sector, where Umm Qasr and Safwan were located. The Secretary-General's June report on UNIKOM financing (see below) reflected cost estimates for such a battalion, comprising 775 troops all ranks, plus 7 military observers and 15 medical and 5 logistics personnel. The battalion's deployment could not be envisaged before mid-September 1993.

Financing

Report of the Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General's June report on the financing of UNIKOM⁽⁴⁶⁾ noted that, as at 24 May 1993, assessments totalling $159,592,821 had been apportioned among Member States in respect of UNIKOM from its inception on 9 April 1991 to 31 October 1993; contributions received for the same period amounted to $126,524,723, resulting in a shortfall of $33,068,098.

Voluntary contributions received between 21 November 1992 and 30 April 1993 for which no budgetary provision was made consisted of: the rental of four road graders, two bulldozers, two excavators and four tractors provided by Kuwait, which had yet to communicate their value to the Secretariat; and the service of two fixed-wing aircraft with crew, provided by Switzerland, valued at approximately $794,702 (SwF 1.2 million).

Resources made available to UNIKOM between 9 April 1991 and 31 October 1993 totalled $162,877,000 gross ($158,139,600 net), consisting of appropriations totalling $143,077,000 and a commitment authorization of $19,800,000. Estimated expenditures for the same period amounted to $151,572,633 gross ($147,827,860 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $11,304,367 gross ($10,311,740 net); interest and miscellaneous income totalled $631,929 and $1,685,902, respectively. The report noted that between 9 October 1991 and 31 December 1992, UNIKOM expenditures attributable to the Demarcation Commission amounted to $1,214,476 and were credited to the UNIKOM Special Account as miscellaneous income.

Due to the shortfall in payment of assessed contributions, $5 million had been borrowed from the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund to meet cash-flow requirements.

On 8 April, the Secretary-General requested authorization to enter into commitments for maintaining UNIKOM for the six-month period from 1 May to 31 October 1993 in the amount of $29,800,000 gross ($28,600,000 net)—composed of $19,800,000 gross ($18,600,000 net) as authorized by the General Assembly in 1992⁽⁴⁷⁾ for the same period and $10 million in accordance with the 1991 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1992-1993 biennium⁽⁴⁸⁾ ACABQ's concurrence, conveyed on 14 April, was for $23,800,000 gross ($22,600,000 net), after having reduced the second component from $10 million to $4 million. The costs related to the strengthening of UNIKOM for the same six-month period were estimated at $24,616,100 gross ($24,505,700 net). Thus, the consolidated cost of maintaining UNIKOM for the period would be $44,416,100 gross ($43,105,700 net).

The Secretary-General estimated the cost of maintaining UNIKOM for the 12-month period from 1 November 1993 to 31 October 1994 at $6,250,825 gross ($6,064,700 net) per month. Should the Security Council decide to extend UNIKOM beyond the expiration of its mandate on 31 October 1993, the Secretary-General requested the Assembly to make appropriate provision for UNIKOM expenses for the period beyond that date.

In sum, actions to be taken by the Assembly for UNIKOM financing were: for the period 1 May to 31 October 1993, the appropriation (a) of $19,800,000 gross ($18,600,000 net) for maintenance authorized with ACABQ concurrence and (b) of $24,616,100 gross ($24,505,700 net) and apportionment thereof for the enlargement of UNIKOM, inclusive of the $4 million authorized by ACABQ; (c) provision by means of appropriation and/or commitment authorization, based on the estimate of $6,250,825 gross ($6,064,700 net) a month, should the Council decide to continue UNIKOM beyond 31 October 1993; (d) a decision to retain the unencumbered balance of appropriations in the UNIKOM Special Account in the light of the outstanding assessed contributions; and (e) a decision to apply to UNIKOM the standing decision contained in the annex to a 1991 Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁹⁾ whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support should be retained beyond the period stipulated under regulations 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations.

ACABQ⁽⁵⁰⁾ recommended approval of the appropriation requested in (a). In view of its observations and the uncertainty of the deployment date of the mechanized battalion, it recommended that the appropriation requested in (b) should not exceed $20 million gross. The total appropriation and apportionment for the period 1 May to 31 October 1993 should, therefore, not exceed $39.8 million gross. As to (c), the Secretary-General was requested to submit a brief report to the Assembly outlining the projected requirements for the period beyond 31 October 1993 and requesting the necessary appropriation. ACABQ recommended acceptance of the requests in (d) and (e).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 14 September, adopted resolution 47/208 B without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to set up the United Nations Iraq-

Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 47/208 A of 22 December 1992,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observation Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Expressing concern about the deteriorating financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities owing to overdue payment by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears,

Also expressing concern about the delays in submission of budget documents until well into the financial period of the Observation Mission, which have contributed to the deteriorating financial situation,

Expressing deep concern about the adverse effect that the deteriorating financial situation has on reimbursement to troop contributors, placing an additional burden on these countries and putting at risk the continuing supply of troops to the Observation Mission and, consequently, the success of the operation,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and approves on an exceptional basis the special arrangements for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Observation Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy, to improve management, and to include in his report on this item to the General Assembly information on the steps taken to improve management;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observation Mission promptly and in full;

4. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in General Assembly resolution 45/260 the amount of 19.8 million United States dollars gross (18.6 million dollars net) authorized and apportioned with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of paragraph 8 of Assembly resolution 47/208 A, for the operation of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1993;

5. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 20 million dollars gross (19,889,600 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 4 million dollars authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991, for the strengthening of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1993, inclusive;

6. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 20 million dollars gross (19,889,600 dollars net) for the above-mentioned period among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/260 of 3 May 1991, 46/197 of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and taking into account the scale of assessments set out in resolution 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and Assembly decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

7. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 110,400 dollars for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1993 approved for the Observation Mission;

8. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 11,304,367 dollars gross (10,311,740 dollars net) for the period from 9 April 1991 to 31 October 1993;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Observation Mission at a rate not to exceed 6,250,825 dollars gross (6,064,700 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 November 1993 to 28 February 1994, should the Security Council decide to continue the Mission beyond 31 October 1993, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for the period beyond 31 October 1993, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

10. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, no later than 8 February 1994, budget proposals, including revised estimates for the period the Security Council might have decided to continue the mandate of the Observation Mission beyond 31 October 1993, as well as budget proposals for the subsequent period of six months;

11. Decides to establish the contributions of Andorra, the Czech Republic, Eritrea, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Monaco and Slovakia to the Observation Mission in accordance with the rates of as-essment to be adopted by the General Assembly for these Member States at its forty-eighth session;

12. Invites the new Member States listed in paragraph 11 above to make advance payments against their assessed contributions, to be determined;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991.

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

General Assembly resolution 47/208 B

14 September 1993 Meeting 110 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/823/Add.1) without vote, 3 September (meeting 74); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.39); agenda item 120 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 5th Committee 68, 69, 72, 74; plenary 110.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In a 9 December report on the financing of 17 peace-keeping operations including UNIKOM,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the cost of maintaining UNIKOM for the six-month period from 1 November 1993 to 30 April 1994 at $36,128,800 gross ($35,122,200 net), assuming full deployment of UNIKOM's enlarged military component by mid-December 1993. Of that amount, it was estimated that $23,414,800 would be received as a voluntary contribution from Kuwait, thereby leaving an unencumbered balance of $12,714,000 gross.

Since the strengthening of UNIKOM had not been implemented as planned, the amount of $20 million gross ($19,889,600 net) provided for by the Assembly in September remained available; consequently, the Secretary-General did not request additional resources for UNIKOM maintenance through 30 April 1994. He requested, however, authorization to enter into commitments up to the amount of $12,714,000 gross ($11,707,400 net) from the unencumbered balance of appropriations, for the period 1 November 1993 to 30 April 1994, should the Security Council continue UNIKOM beyond 8 April 1994. ACABQ., on 17 December⁽⁵²⁾ recommended that the General Assembly grant that request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/466 without vote.

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 8,687,800 United States dollars gross (8 million dollars net), in addition to the pledged voluntary contributions of 23,414,800 dollars for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission for the period from 1 November 1993 to 28 February 1994;

(b) Decided that the amount of 8,687,800 dollars gross (8 million dollars net) referred to in paragraph (a) above shall be offset against the unencumbered balance of appropriations;

(c) Also decided that, in view of the expiration of the commitment authority on 28 February 1994, priority should be given to the cost estimates for the Observation Mission in the consideration by the General Assembly of peace-keeping budgets.

General Assembly decision 48/466

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/48/815) without vote, 22 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/48/L.18); agenda item 132 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 87.

On-site inspections and ongoing monitoring and verification

IAEA inspections

During 1993, IAEA, with the assistance and cooperation of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM), conducted six on-site nuclear inspections in Iraq—the seventeenth to the twenty-second since it began such inspections in accordance with the relevant provisions of Security Council resolution 687(1991) of April 1991. The sites inspected were either previously or newly designated by the Special Commission and the inspection findings were summarized in reports transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General.

The seventeenth inspection (25-31 January).⁽⁵³⁾ conducted: follow-up activities relating to the inventory of material, equipment and machine tools relevant to the revised (1992) annex 3⁽⁵⁴⁾ of the 1991 IAEA plan⁽⁵⁵⁾ for future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with relevant paragraphs of resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991), including a review of the inventory of machine tools under IAEA seal at the Al-Rabiya facility after a cruise missile attack on it; follow-up inspection of nuclear material stored at Tuwaitha, as well as of the Al-Jezira uranium waste pond and the Tarmiya uranium solution tanks; short-notice inspections at selected sites to check seals and verify utilization of key machine tools; and follow-up of the long-promised updated inventory required pursuant to annex 3.

After extensive questioning on the two Arburg jet moulding machines for the manufacture of centrifuge motors reported by a Member State to have been exported to Iraq, the Iraqi authorities acknowledged that the machine discovered in the Ash Shaykili warehouse in 1992 had been acquired for the manufacture of centrifuge motor stators, but firmly stood by their assertion that the only existing stator had been "potted" by hand; they denied knowledge of a second Arburg machine (which might have been procured for the Iraqi missile programme). The Inspectors reiterated that Iraq must locate and present the remaining mixer-settler units; whereas data supplied by a Member State indicated that 178 units had been exported to Iraq, only 70 had been inventoried.

The Al-Rabiya mechanical workshop facility, in the southern part of Baghdad, was targeted and largely destroyed by a cruise-missile attack on 17 January 1993. Documents removed from Iraq by the sixth (1991) inspection⁽⁵⁶⁾ had implicated the facility in the manufacture of EMIS (electromagnetic isotope separation) components. Three subsequent inspections of the site revealed it to be a modern facility with a sizeable machine tool inventory and supporting capabilities in material preparation, chemical cleaning and quality control, but yielded no evidence that the site had been involved in activities related to the nuclear programme code-named "Petrochemical Three" (PC-3), following the 1991 military action against Iraq.⁽⁵⁷⁾

When the fifteenth (1992) inspection⁽⁵⁸⁾ revisited Al-Rabiya for the purpose of updating inventories of machine tools and other equipment, it was undergoing further development as an important part of Iraq's plan for reconstruction and industrialization. Its equipment inventory (primarily machine tools) had increased substantially, its workforce had doubled and a new administration and planning building was under construction. During the inspection on 27 January 1993, 10 days after its bombardment, intense round-the-clock rebuilding by thousands of people was in progress in a determined effort to restore the facility's operations. The inspection focused on accounting for the dual-use equipment of the facility's 86-item inventory as updated in 1992 (consisting of 80 items judged to be of general purpose and six of dual use and thus subject to control under annex 3 of the IAEA plan).

The irradiated fuel assemblies stored in the IRT-5000 reactor pool and adjacent storage pond at Al-Tuwaitha were verified by item counting. Seals were checked at Location B, where additional irradiated fuel assemblies were stored, as were seals at Location C, where the bulk of Iraqi uranium stock was stored, and in several Tuwaitha buildings where hot cells were located; all seals were found undisturbed. At the Al-Jezira plant, recovery from the waste retention basin of residual quantities of natural uranium, removal of uranium-bearing organic solutions and filters and entombment of drums of solid waste were awaiting warmer and drier weather for their completion. Iraq restated its intention to turn the site into a centre to develop processes for recovering minerals from indigenous ores and agreed to begin consolidating the storage of reactor components and spare parts in the Ash Shaykili warehouse.

The issue of procurement-related information was again taken up. Iraq's insistence on a consolidated list of outstanding IAEA and UNSCOM questions limited only to resolution 687(1991) was objected to by the Chief Inspector, as experience had shown that such an approach produced little information and generated further questions. At the end of the inspection, Iraq submitted a revised list of items required under annex 3 of the IAEA plan, described as including all existing items or items that were in existence in Iraq as at 1 January 1989 at facilities of the Iraqi Atomic Energy Commission (IAEC) and supporting universities and state establishments.

The eighteenth inspection (3-11 March)⁽⁵⁹⁾ covered 35 sites. Those relating to weaponization activities included the Al-Kindi establishment for military research and development, the Al-Qa'Qaa high-explosives plant and the Al-Hatteen State Establishment for the manufacture of military ordnance. The follow-up inspection of the RDX (high quality explosive with multiple applications) stored at Al-Hatteen was extended to include workshops; these were found to contain 242 machine tools, 94 of which (series-3 or -4 CNC turning machines manufactured by Matrix Churchill), in the inspectors' opinion, should have been among the dual-use items recently declared by Iraq under annex 3.

Clarification of inconsistencies between verification findings and Iraq's nuclear materials declaration under annex 3 was further sought, as was detailed information about Iraq's foreign procurement and procurement network, including the manufacture and supplier of the 350-grade maraging steel. Negotiations for the removal from Iraq of irradiated fuel during the year were pursued.

Information suggesting possible underground nuclear facilities (not only reactors) led to the inspection of: a large dam under construction near Mosul; the nearby Jaber bin Haytham (SAAD-24) complex dedicated to the production of chemical warfare protective gear; and four sites declared by Iraq to have been considered as possible sites for an electrical power-producing reactor. The immediate in-field conclusions were negative. Based on information suggesting the dispersal of parts of the clandestine PC-3 nuclear programme, three facilities, including the College of Science at Saddam University at Baghdad, were inspected for the first time without prior notice. Iraq's first report under annex 2 of the IAEA plan, which remained outstanding at the end of the inspection, was delivered to IAEA on 22 April.

During the nineteenth inspection (30 April-7 May),⁽⁶⁰⁾ surface water, sediment and biota samples were collected from 15 locations along the Tigris-Euphrates watershed in fulfilment of the periodic radiometric survey of the main water bodies in Iraq required under the ongoing monitoring effort. A number of establishments were visited for the first time by a nuclear team for the specific purpose of continuing the verification of Iraq's equipment and materials declaration under annex 3; neither undeclared relevant equipment nor proscribed activities were discovered. Over Iraqi objections, 54 Matrix Churchill turning machines (in addition to the 94 discovered at the Al-Hatteen workshops by the previous inspection) were tag-sealed for identification. A technical evaluation of the 148 machines inventoried so far found 144 as not falling within annex 3 specifications; judgement was withheld on the remaining four that had a particular controller and encoder configuration, pending accuracy measurements planned for a future inspection.

The twentieth (25-30 June) and twenty-first (24-27 July) inspections⁽⁶¹⁾ reviewed Iraqi preparations for the safe removal from Iraq of the remaining enriched uranium, in the form of 208 irradiated fuel assemblies from Iraqi research reactors. Civil engineering preparations were well under way and support equipment was being located and collected. The inspectors surveyed the route to the airport to ensure the shipment's smooth passage.

Independent information about machine tool deliveries to Iraq led to the inspection of a conventional munitions plant where 50 machines matching procurement data were found and marked for evaluation against the dual-use criteria.

The twenty-first inspection visited an industrial complex of facilities for the production of fibreglass, fibre composites, resin and new materials. None had a uniquely nuclear function, but future monitoring of the site was indicated. An assessment was made of the construction of non-nuclear facilities at the former nuclear sites of Al-Furat, Al-Jezira, Al-Sharqat and Al-Tarmiya, where the nuclear-related capabilities had been destroyed but not the infrastructure; the new activities at those sites bore no relationship to the former nuclear work. Preparations for installing surveillance cameras at machining facilities continued. Specific measurements and surveys were made to ensure the availability of utilities necessary to install surveillance test units at Um Al Ma'arik, where the major components of the EMIS modules had been fabricated.

Routine inventory and monitoring of dual-use equipment were carried out at a number of sites. Preparations began for consolidating the scattered quantities of HMX (high melting point explosive) in a single sealed location at the Muthana complex. The Al-Kindi small-missile development centre, which had capabilities for research with pyrotechnical materials, was also visited. Large-scale movement of equipment for safe keeping took place at Al-Nida (formerly Al-Rabiya) in June during the high political tension occasioned by Iraq's refusal to accept the installation of monitoring cameras at two missile test sites (see below, under "Special Commission activities").

During the twenty-second inspection (1-15 November),⁽⁶²⁾ surface water, sediment and biota samples were again collected at 15 locations along the Tigris-Euphrates watershed. Seventeen establishments were visited in an effort to reconcile Iraqi equipment declarations with information obtained outside of Iraq. Following further discussion and clarification of the reporting requirements, Iraq, by the conclusion of the inspection, submitted updated and revised declarations pursuant to annexes 2 and 3 of the IAEA plan for future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's nuclear activities. (Previous annex 3 declarations had been submitted in January and August.)

Two meetings were held on the subject of technical advice obtained from foreign sources that enhanced Iraq's centrifuge enrichment efforts. The details provided with respect to individual components of the Iraqi prototype magnetic centrifuges and the process through which they evolved were consistent with available information. As to sources of technical expertise that aided Iraq's centrifuge development effort, Iraq would not disclose the names of individuals, the circumstances under which they got involved or details of the technical help provided pending the conclusion of legal action brought by Member States against those individuals. However, Iraq disclosed in general terms that technical help had been provided in respect of: machine tools, vacuum and clean-room technologies and heat treatment of maraging steel; simulation software for design and evaluation applications; procurement of specific components and equipment; two general assembly drawings and 10 to 12 drawings of specific components; and technical specifications for specific components. Iraq also identified an individual as its agent for the procurement of the 350-grade maraging steel, of which it received 100 tonnes in two consignments.

Detailed microscopic examination, bulk density assessment and sampling for chemical analysis were performed on the natural uranium oxide stocked in 201 drums and declared to have come from Brazil. The results of this work, not including the chemical analysis, suggested that in all likelihood the stock was of Brazilian origin, a finding requiring corroboration by Brazil.

Monitoring inspections were conducted at eight "core" sites of the former Iraqi nuclear programme and existing building modifications, new construction and future plans for converting four of them to non-nuclear applications were reviewed. In addition, the filling and sealing of a carbonate mine was completed during the inspection.

IAEA reports (June and December). During 1993, IAEA issued the fourth and fifth semi-annual reports on its implementation of the plan for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of items listed in paragraph 12 of Security Council resolution 687(1991). The fourth report covered the period 17 December 1992 to 17 June 1993, and the fifth, the period 17 June to 17 December 1993. They were transmitted to the Council in June⁽⁵⁾ and December⁽⁶³⁾ respectively.

The reports updated the status of direct-use material, confirming that all of the known fresh (un-irradiated) fuel for the IRT-5000 reactor had been removed from Iraq.⁽⁶⁴⁾ In June, IAEA concluded a contract with the Ministry for Atomic Energy of the Russian Federation, whose principal subcontractor was the Nuclear Assurance Corporation of the United States of America, for the removal from Iraq and subsequent disposal of the remaining enriched uranium in the form of 208 irradiated fuel assemblies from the Iraqi research reactors at Al-Tuwaitha and Location B. The air-shipment out of Iraq of approximately 100 of those assemblies (all manufactured in the former USSR) to a facility in the Russian Federation was successfully completed on 4 December. Removal of the remaining assemblies was expected to take place during the first two months of 1994.

It had not been possible to establish the correctness and completeness of Iraqi nuclear material declarations through traditional material accountability. Independent efforts to confirm quantities of such material not subject to safeguards inspection tion (much of it in the form of yellow cake delivered to Iraq by external sources) had not been successful. Despite considerable origin-based accountability and highly precise isotopic and impurity measurements to match inspection-measured material with Iraqi declarations, the resulting picture did not provide assurance that all nuclear materials had been declared and presented. Thus, uncertainties remained to be clarified in respect of the inventory of natural uranium and the detailed utilization of part of this inventory in Iraq's past nuclear activities.

The Iraqi response to the remaining inconsistencies identified by IAEA in Iraq's "full, final and complete" declaration of 1992⁽⁶⁵⁾—considerably revising the nuclear-material flow chart that Iraq first presented—was that they were attributable to losses during the 1991 bombing of Iraq, to the mixing of the material during evacuation, or to the inaccuracy of the sample analyses. Iraq considered the nuclear-material file closed and declined to provide further clarification, a position IAEA consistently rejected.

Significant progress had been made in verifying the origin of the large natural uranium oxide stock declared as being of Brazilian origin. By the end of the fifth semi-annual reporting period (17 December), most of the remaining natural uranium-containing slurries from Al-Jezira had been recovered and was being transferred in some 59 drums to Location C at Al-Tuwaitha.

As to installations, equipment and other materials relevant to enriched uranium production and to weaponization activities, Iraq had submitted an updated list of material, equipment and other items identified in annex 3 of the IAEA plan for future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with paragraph 12 of Security Council resolution 687(1991).

Future actions included continuing efforts to resolve remaining uncertainties in the nuclear-material flow chart and verification of the completeness of the revised list of items submitted by Iraq pursuant to annex 3.

Special Commission activities

The United Nations Special Commission, headed by the Executive Chairman, Rolf Ekeus, continued to maintain three offices: the Office of the Executive Chairman in New York, a field office at Manama, Bahrain, and another at Baghdad.

Financing the Commission's operations remained a problem in the absence of Iraqi agreement to sell oil for the purposes set forth in resolution 706(1991)⁽⁶⁶⁾ and of Iraq's acknowledgement of its obligations under resolution 699(1991)⁽⁶⁷⁾ to meet the full costs of the tasks authorized in section C of resolution 687(1991). Since the Commission's inception, its expenses had been met from voluntary contributions in cash or in kind (personnel, services, equipment) and advances from Member States, and from funds made available from frozen Iraqi assets as provided for in Council resolution 778(1992).⁽⁶⁸⁾

According to the Secretary-General (see also below, under "Humanitarian assistance"),⁽⁶⁹⁾ the cumulative operational costs through the end of 1993 were estimated at over $72 million, of which only some $38 million would be covered from funds already designated in the escrow account and from other contributions. Further cash contributions had become urgent owing to the recently concluded contract for the removal from Iraq of irradiated uranium fuel currently stored at two sites,⁽⁷⁰⁾ involving the Commission in its largest expenditure to date: a fixed contract fee of $24,565,000 net, plus ancillary costs in the neighbourhood of $800,000.

The status, privileges and immunities of the Special Commission, IAEA and the United Nations specialized agencies involved in the implementation of resolution 687(1991) continued to be regulated by the relevant Council resolutions—687(1991)⁽¹⁾ 707(1991)⁽²⁾ and 715(1991)⁽³⁾—and by a May 1991 exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq.

The agreement in the exchange of letters relating to the facilities, privileges and immunities of the Special Commission and IAEA in Bahrain was extended twice during the year, each for a six-month period, until 30 September 1993 and thereafter until 31 March 1994. Bahrain's formal agreement for the first extension was received by the Secretary-General on 29 April; the second was agreed upon in an exchange of letters dated 20 September and 23 October 1993.

As later reported by the Executive Chairman, Iraq had notified the Commission office at Baghdad in writing on 7 January that, effective immediately, the use of Habbaniyah airfield would be denied to the Commission, which should use either Iraqi aircraft to transport its personnel and equipment between Bahrain and Iraq or the land route from Amman, Jordan. This breach of Iraq's obligation to ensure the complete implementation of the privileges, immunities and facilities of Commission personnel, including their safety and freedom of movement, was orally reported to the Council on 8 January and confirmed in writing the same day.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (8 and 11 January)

After consultations among its members, the Security Council, on 8 January, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁷⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council, in connection with its consideration of the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

Meeting number. SC 3161.

"The Security Council is deeply disturbed by the Government of Iraq's recent Notes to the Office of the Special Commission in Baghdad and to the Headquarters of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) that it will not allow the United Nations to transport its personnel into Iraqi territory using its own aircraft.

"The Security Council refers to resolution 687(1991) requiring Iraq to permit the Special Commission and IAEA to undertake immediate on-site inspection of any locations designated by the Commission. The agreement on facilities, privileges and immunities between the Government of Iraq and the United Nations, and resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) elaborated on Iraq's obligations by demanding, inter alia, that the Special Commission and IAEA be allowed, as they determined necessary, to use their own aircraft throughout Iraq and any airfield in Iraq without interference or hindrance of any kind. Concerning UNIKOM, Iraq is obligated by resolution 687(1991) and committed by an exchange of letters dated 15 April 1992 and 21 June 1992, respectively, to the unrestricted freedom of entry and exit without delay or hindrance of its personnel, property, supplies, equipment, spare parts and means of transport.

"The implementation of the measures set out in the recent communications of the Iraqi Government would seriously impede the activities of the Special Commission, IAEA and UNIKOM. Such restrictions constitute an unacceptable and material breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991), which established the cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region, as well as other relevant resolutions and agreements.

"The Council demands that the Government of Iraq abide by its obligations under all relevant Security Council resolutions and cooperate fully with the activities of the Special Commission, IAEA and UNIKOM. In particular, it demands that the Government of Iraq not interfere with the currently envisaged United Nations flights. The Security Council warns the Government of Iraq, as it has done in this connection in the past, of the serious consequences which would ensue from failure to comply with its obligations."

Iraq explained on 10 January⁽⁷¹⁾ that its notification to the Special Commission to discontinue its use of foreign aircraft was a temporary decision dictated by United States threats to Iraq that endangered foreign flights in Iraqi airspace. Iraq described as incorrect the allegation that it had hampered the Commission's operations and again suggested that, rather than leasing foreign aircraft at Iraq's expense, the United Nations teams could lease Iraqi aircraft instead, or travel by land to Baghdad through Amman, as Iraqis did, including Government officials, who did not consider the United Nations teams higher in rank than themselves.

The Council, in a statement issued through its President on 11 January,⁽⁷²⁾ rejected Iraq's arguments. It reiterated its demand that the Special Commission be permitted to use its own aircraft to transport its personnel into Iraq, as well as its warning of serious consequences that would flow from continued Iraqi defiance.

Responding on 12 January,⁽³⁰⁾ Iraq denied having flouted the Council's resolutions or having any intention of defying the Council. It restated its position, namely, that in the event of military aggression against it by the United States and the United Kingdom, as was being persistently threatened, an Iraqi response in self-defence would put any foreign aircraft in danger; thus the suspension in question was not only temporary but logical and born of a sense of responsibility. Iraq failed to understand the legality or the logic of the Council's rejection of the request that Iraqi aircraft be used instead, or how that request could be interpreted as defiance of the Council. Iraq affirmed its wish for dialogue with the Council but asserted that it would neither relinquish its sovereignty and legitimate rights nor bargain in matters affecting their defence.

In a 2 March report to the Council,⁽⁷²⁾ the Executive Chairman summarized the exchanges of notes on the subject between the Commission and the Iraqi Ministry for Foreign Affairs and other Iraqi authorities between 7 and 19 January. On three occasions in the course of those exchanges, the Commission delivered to Iraq notifications of its flight plans in accordance with established procedures, expressing expectation of acknowledgement and acceptance. Iraq gave a number of reasons for refusing to permit Commission flights. It linked its refusal to the Sanctions Committee decision not to allow Iraqi Airways to resume international operations and restated the alternative transportation it had suggested. Subsequently, it stated that flights would be allowed on a case-by-case basis but that Iraq could bear no responsibility for the safety of Commission aircraft. Flights would be allowed to and from Habbaniyah provided they entered Iraqi airspace from Jordanian airspace and flight notifications were resubmitted accordingly. If the Commission flew the direct route, Iraq would be able to guarantee the safety of the Commission's aircraft, but only if the Commission guaranteed that "coalition" aircraft were not also flying in Iraqi airspace at the same time.

For its part, the Commission persisted in seeking resumption of its operations, immediately responding to each Iraqi note and offering a way for Iraq to meet its obligations by stating that, through the Commission's coordination with the States enforcing the "no-fly zone" (south of the 32nd parallel), the conditions for safe flight would be ensured, provided Iraq did not itself threaten the flights. The issue was resolved on 19 January, when Iraq informed the Commission that, on the basis of a statement by the Revolution Command Council, it would allow the resumption of Commission flights according to established procedures. By telephone, a guarantee was given that Iraq would ensure the safety of the Commission's aircraft.

Reports of the Special Commission (June). In 1993, the Executive Chairman of UNSCOM submitted his fifth and sixth semi-annual reports to the Secretary-General for transmittal to the Security Council. They described the Commission's activities and operational details, together with the main developments arising from those activities. Several appendices contained descriptions of: organizational and administrative issues; on-site inspections relating to chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles; the destruction of Iraq's chemical agents and munitions; activities of the Commission's Information Assessment Unit; ongoing monitoring and verification activities; and the monitoring of suppliers of materials and technical expertise to Iraq (fifth report only).

The fifth report, issued in June, covered the period from 14 December 1992 to 14 June 1993.^(*) An account of UNSCOM's chemical-weapons inspections during that period included the results of the combined chemical and biological weapons inspection of December 1992⁽⁷³⁾ according to which seven potential chemical weapons-related sites, including a pharmaceutical plant, and three biological sites, including the Al-Hakim Single Cell Production Facility, were visited. Three question-and-answer "seminars" were held with the Iraqi authorities on Iraq's "full, final and comprehensive report" on chemical weapons, while two were held on biological weapons issues. No useful information was obtained.

An additional chemical-weapons inspection (6-18 April 1993) visited a number of sites, notably the Fallujah sites, formerly part of the Muthanna State Establishment. The inspection required Iraq to remove by 31 May 11 specific items of equipment at Fallujah to Muthanna for destruction under Commission supervision. UNSCOM had taken account of Iraq's request to reuse the equipment for insecticide production, but decided that irreversible conversion was not an option on the grounds that, besides being readily reconvertible for proscribed use, they had been acquired specifically for the production of chemical-weapons precursors. Moreover, as Iraq still had not accepted the monitoring of dual-purpose equipment under the terms of the ongoing monitoring and verification plans approved by resolution 715(1991), UNSCOM could not guarantee their future use as proposed. Iraq accused the Commission of having gone to extremes in interpreting its mandate, criticizing it, the Sanctions Committee and the Council for their decisions relating to equipment destruction. Since the equipment had not been destroyed by 14 June, a formal report on the matter was made to the Council on 16 June (see below).

Biological weapons inspections (11-18 March) were made at seven sites, including one that had never previously been inspected; an examination of the research equipment, munitions and munition-filling equipment revealed them to be conventional items. However, some sites were found to have a dual-purpose capability; recommendations were made for future compliance-monitoring activities.

Two regular ballistic-missile inspections were undertaken. One (12-21 February) recorded serial numbers of specific machinery and details of raw materials (to assist in the determination of Iraq's supplier network) and assessed the capabilities of certain facilities, including the Taji-Nasr State Establishment, the Al-Yawm Al-Azim Facility and the TECO stand at Zaafaraniyah. The team also supervised the destruction at Taji of dies and moulds used, or intended for use, in proscribed missile activities. The other inspection (22 and 23 February), conducted on short notice, verified specific information that missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres and their associated vehicles were present in an area west of Baghdad. Helicopter and high-altitude surveillance were integrated in the inspection. While no proscribed items or activities were observed, a serious breach of UNSCOM's surveillance rights occurred on 22 February: a helicopter was prevented from conducting aerial surveillance over a site by its Iraqi escort and openly threatened by anti-aircraft guns aimed at it. That incident was reported to the Council on 24 February.

In the absence of Iraq's acknowledgement of resolution 715(1991), which delayed long-term monitoring efforts across the whole spectrum of Iraqi missile-related activities, UNSCOM initiated interim monitoring, the first of which focused on work relating to liquid propulsion systems and associated technologies at the Ibn Al-Haytham Centre over eight weeks (25 January-23 March). A second team's investigations centred on the Al-Rasheed Factory and the Al-Qa'Qaa Establishment over a 52-day period (27 March-17 May), during which the team discussed with Iraq details of its missile designs, its knowledge of solid propellant technology, general capabilities in missile production, its ability to increase the range of existing systems, the current status of its production facilities and its plans for missile research, development, testing and production. The resultant information enhanced the Commission's understanding of Iraq's past weapons programmes and of its technology baseline.

The third interim monitoring team entered Iraq on 5 June. It was accompanied by a sub-team charged with installing remote-controlled cameras to monitor rocket test stands at two sites, of which Iraq was duly informed on 6 June. Iraq blocked the installation on the grounds that the cameras comprised sensors for monitoring under resolution 715(1991), a resolution Iraq would not accept despite its unanimous adoption under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

In addition, the Commission participated in an IAEA survey of the sites (19-24 April) from which irradiated fuel was to be removed and air-shipped to the Russian Federation for reprocessing and permanent storage.

The report noted Iraq's continued refusal to cooperate. During the foregoing inspections, it had exhibited a most unwelcome trend of seeking to restrict the manner in which UNSCOM's rights were implemented. Iraq maintained its position, made known to the Council in 1991,⁽⁷⁴⁾ regarding the ongoing plans for monitoring and verification. It considered the new interim monitoring at Ibn Al-Haytham Centre to be conducted under the terms of resolution 687(1991) and installation of the surveillance cameras as falling within the framework of matters for discussion at a proposed dialogue between Iraq and the Commission, although later clarifying that its request was for a postponement of the installation in question until the dialogue took place.

The report drew attention to Iraqi declarations that required rectification and those that remained outstanding, as well as to Iraq's serious breaches of UNSCOM's rights, privileges and immunities. In consequence, the Commission had been unable to complete the inspection and survey and weapons-destruction phases of its work and proceed to ongoing monitoring and verification, for which preparations were under way.

In response to a wish expressed by Council members, the Executive Chairman prepared a detailed account of Iraq's attitude regarding the installation of monitoring cameras at Yawm Al-Azim and Al-Rafah and the destruction of chemical weapons production equipment, which was transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 16 June.⁽⁷⁵⁾

The Executive Chairman stated that, in his reply of 9 June to Iraq's position that the Commission limit itself to inspection activities specified by resolution 687(1991), under whose purview the installation of the cameras did not fall, he emphasized that the installation was in implementation of the mandate entrusted to the Commission by the same resolution and other relevant resolutions; he further stated his intention to inform the Council of Iraq's refusal to permit installation of essential equipment intended to allow continued determination of whether Iraq was meeting its unconditional undertaking not to use, develop, construct or acquire missiles prohibited under paragraph 8 of the same resolution. This breach of resolution 687(1991), he asserted, was compounded by a breach of the status arrangements of May 1991 between the United Nations and Iraq, pursuant to which the Commission had the "right to install equipment or construct facilities for observation, inspection, testing or monitoring activity".

Iraq, on 11 June, stated that it had requested a postponement of the decision to install the cameras pending a discussion of the matter, together with all other outstanding questions that were still the subject of dialogue. The Executive Chairman pointed out that Iraq's position ignored the fact that resolution 687(1991) called on the Secretary-General to draw up a plan for ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's obligations not to reacquire banned items or capabilities. That plan was unanimously approved by resolution 715(1991) and as such was mandatory and enforceable. Thus the issue was not even up for discussion, let alone "still the subject of dialogue". He characterized Iraq's insistence that the Commission limit itself to activities under resolution 687(1991) as a direct challenge to the authority of the Security Council and to the force of its resolutions adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter.

As to the required removal by 31 May of 11 pieces of equipment acquired for the production of chemical weapons precursors, along with a quantity of precursor chemicals, from Fallujah to Muthanna for destruction, Iraq remained insistent in its request for their reuse for insecticide production. UNSCOM explained that the equipment could not be rendered harmless, being intrinsically capable of use for prohibited purposes and quickly reconverted for such; it gave Iraq until 10 June to complete removal of the items, warning that failure to do so would have to be reported to the Council. Nevertheless, Iraq reiterated its proposal for a technical discussion in order to arrive at a formula that would assure practical guarantees for the peaceful use of the equipment. By 15 June, only five items had been removed. Such non-compliance was an outright violation of Iraq's obligations under resolution 687(1991) and put into question Iraq's overall readiness to implement that resolution and other relevant resolutions.

Among the most serious impediments to the Commission's task had been Iraq's attitude towards the use of helicopters for surveillance and operational support. Since its refusal of a helicopter surveillance flight in 1992,⁽⁷⁶⁾ Iraq had hindered the Commission's work by automatically objecting to any proposed helicopter flight that entailed a "box" in the vicinity of Baghdad. (A "box," usually in the order of 40 square kilometres, was given to Iraqi authorities the night before a flight to enable them to ensure that Iraqi air defences not treat the UNSCOM flight as a hostile intruder while not revealing the precise site to be surveyed.)

The Executive Chairman noted that Iraq, while not explicitly rejecting the monitoring provisions but rather expressing a willingness to renegotiate their terms, by its actions had prevented initiation of implementation of the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved by resolution 715(1991) and amounted to a de facto rejection of the Council's resolutions and decisions in this regard.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the Executive Chairman's 16 June report, the Security Council met on 18 June, and, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁷⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3242.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned by the Government of Iraq's de facto refusal to accept the United Nations Special Commission's (UNSCOM) installation of monitoring devices at rocket test sites and to transport chemical weapons-related equipment to a designated site for destruction, as set out in a report from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission to the President of the Security Council.

"The Council refers to resolution 687(1991) requiring Iraq to permit the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to undertake immediate on-site inspection of any locations designated by the Commission. The agreement on facilities, privileges and immunities between the Government of Iraq and the United Nations, and resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991), clearly establish Iraq's obligation to accept the presence of monitoring equipment designated by the Special Commission, and that it is for the Special Commission alone to determine which items must be destroyed under paragraph 9 of resolution 687(1991).

"Iraq must accept installation by UNSCOM of monitoring devices at the rocket test sites in question and transport the chemical weapons-related equipment concerned to a designated site for destruction.

"The Council reminds Iraq that resolution 715(1991) approved plans for monitoring by the Special Commission and IAEA which clearly require Iraq to accept the presence of such monitoring equipment at Iraqi sites, designated by the Special Commission, to ensure continuing compliance with its obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991).

"Iraq's refusal to comply with decisions of the Special Commission, as set out in the report of the Executive Chairman, constitutes a material and unacceptable breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991), which established the cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region, as well as violations of Security Council resolutions 707(1991) and 715(1991) and the plans for future ongoing monitoring and verification approved thereunder. In this context, it recalls the statements of 8 January 1993 and 11 January 1993, and warns the Government of Iraq of the serious consequences of material breaches of resolution 687(1991) and violations of its obligations under resolution 715(1991) and the above-mentioned plans.

"The Council reminds the Government of Iraq of its obligations under Security Council resolutions and its undertakings to provide for the safety of inspection personnel and equipment. The Council demands that the Government of Iraq immediately comply with its obligations under Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991), and cease its attempts to restrict the Commission's inspection rights and operational capabilities."

Iraq, on 20 June⁽⁷⁸⁾ clarified its position in writing since it had been denied the opportunity to do so when the Executive Chairman brought his views on the matters to the Council's attention. It stated that UNSCOM wanted to begin implementing resolution 715(1991) without informing the Council that Iraq had implemented all the fundamental parts of section C of resolution 687(1991) under UNSCOM supervision and that such compliance made it incumbent upon the Council to begin implementing in earnest that resolution's paragraph 22, that is, lifting the economic sanctions imposed on Iraq. That paragraph was as much mandatory as were all other parts of the resolution.

Iraq repeated its arguments regarding the installation of the cameras, stressing that it neither possessed nor produced any missiles with a range of over 150 kilometres and that the third interim monitoring team was currently discharging its tasks, with Iraq extending the required cooperation. Iraq likewise repeated its arguments for sparing the items of equipment ordered to be removed from Al-Fallujah for destruction at Muthanna, adding that they were brand new, never before used for either prohibited or non-prohibited purposes. Their proposed use in the production of pesticides would fill one of Iraq's agricultural needs, crucial under the deprivations of the current embargo. As to the helicopter flights over Baghdad, Iraq noted the existence of an agreement between its authorities and UNSCOM that no flights be conducted over populated areas anywhere in Iraq, including Baghdad.

Iraq expressed extreme surprise at what it called the Commission's attempt to distort the Iraqi position, to accuse it of non-compliance with resolution 687(1991) and to incite the Council against Iraq when it should be conveying to the Council that Iraq had gone a long way in implementing all the fundamental parts of section C of that resolution. It looked forward to the Council's initiating a professional, legal and technical review of what had been implemented with a view to lifting the three-year economic blockade on Iraq.

Special mission (July)

The UNSCOM Executive Chairman, accompanied by three members of his staff, undertook a special mission to Baghdad from 15 to 19 July 1993. The results, together with an account of the developments that had led to the mission, were described in a report of 20 July, transmitted to the Security Council through the Secretary-General the following day.⁽⁷⁹⁾

The Executive Chairman stated that it had kept the Security Council informed of the status of Iraqi compliance with the Council President's statement, from its issuance on 18 June until 2 July. In that time, Iraq had removed all the chemical-weapons production equipment and precursor chemicals at Fallujah to Muthanna, where UNSCOM supervised and verified destruction of the equipment. The precursors would be destroyed in due course.

However, there had been no progress on the installation of the surveillance cameras at the two designated rocket-engine test sites, a measure that Iraq continued to block as falling within the monitoring plans approved by resolution 715(1991) and thus still a subject for discussion. The installation team, which had been in Iraq for over a month awaiting favourable developments to allow it to proceed with its task, was therefore instructed to withdraw on 5 July. As reported to the Council on 8 July, information had been received to the effect that Iraq had dismantled and removed equipment from the test sites, rendering them inoperative. The inspection team dispatched to Iraq to seal the equipment and facilities at both sites was thus informed by the Director of the Military Industrialization Corporation, General Amer Muhammad Rashid, that sealing was unnecessary and that the dismantled equipment could be inspected any time. The Chief Inspector nevertheless attempted to affix seals but was blocked from doing so. As instructed, the team left Iraq.

On 11 July, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq explained that the issue behind Iraq's refusal to permit sealing of the sites was that UNSCOM had begun implementing resolution 715(1991) without having committed itself to informing the Council that Iraq had complied with the provisions of section C of resolution 687(1991), making it incumbent on the Council to consider lifting the economic sanctions imposed on Iraq.

In reporting to the Council the outcome of the Commission's attempts to seal the two sites and equipment, the Executive Chairman referred to the failure of all efforts either to monitor the sites or to insure their non-use until effective monitoring could begin, as well as to the Iraqi Foreign Minister's 11 July letter. He concluded that Iraq had unequivocally raised the specific issue of monitoring two rocket-engine test sites to the level of the principle of Iraq's acceptance of ongoing monitoring and verification under resolution 715(1991).

The Executive Chairman noted that while an interim solution preventing the use of those sites might be possible, the permanent solution, through the installation of monitoring cameras, would not be found until Iraq could be convinced that it must accept and implement resolution 715(1991), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter. The Commission had always understood resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) to constitute an indissoluble whole and had acted accordingly; it could not, therefore, consider reporting to the Council under paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991) until it deemed Iraq to be in compliance, not only with that resolution, but also with the other two. In the circumstances, the Executive Chairman felt that it might be of some use to convey that message, with the Council's full support, to the highest levels of the Iraqi Government. At an informal session on 12 July, the Council decided that the Executive Chairman should visit Baghdad for that purpose.

The Executive Chairman, accompanied by three of his staff, travelled to Baghdad and held six meetings between 15 and 19 July with Iraqi officials including the Deputy Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister and an Under-Secretary in the Foreign Ministry, the IAEC Chairman, the Director of the Military Industrialization Corporation of Iraq and the Chief Iraqi counterpart in matters concerning the Special Commission inspections. The two sides exchanged position papers on specific points discussed at the first three meetings.

The nine-point Iraqi position paper contained proposed statements of undertakings: (1) by Iraq, on its readiness to comply with the plans approved by resolution 715(1991); (2) by the Security Council and UNSCOM, in implementing those plans, to respect Iraq's sovereignty, internal security and dignity, and (3) to guarantee its right to industrial, scientific and technological progress; (4) by UNSCOM to use Iraqi helicopters and reconnaissance aircraft for its aerial monitoring and verification tasks and (5) to conduct those tasks according to the rules of relevant international agreements; and (6 and 7) by the Council to implement paragraphs 22 and 24 of resolution 687(1991) and (8) to lift the embargo referred to in paragraph 14 of that resolution. The paper also contained (9) a demand that France, the United Kingdom and the United States end their air embargo to the south of parallel 32 and to the north of parallel 36 and cease violating Iraqi airspace and interfering in Iraq's internal affairs.

The Commission paper addressed two issues: acknowledgement by Iraq of its obligations under resolution 715(1991) and the plans approved thereunder; and monitoring of the rocket-engine test sites at Al-Yawm Al-Azim and Al-Rafah. On the first issue, the paper drew attention to part B of the monitoring plan to be executed by UNSCOM, particularly those paragraphs defining the Commission's general rights, which it would be obliged to insist upon if necessary. With Iraq's full cooperation and good will in carrying out the plan, a routine could be developed whereby the Commission could operate unobtrusively, without hampering or delaying normal activities at sites under inspection, with due regard to Iraq's sovereignty, independence, security and dignity.

Without prejudice to its rights to provide its own full logistical support, including transport, UNSCOM intended to avail itself of those provisions in the plan pursuant to which the Government was required to provide on request logistical and technical support, including flights for purposes specified in paragraph 17 of the plan—depending on the prevailing situation of confidence and availability of local logistical and technical support to meet Commission requirements. UNSCOM was further prepared to conduct with the Government a periodic review of the operations and execution of the plan and examine in good faith any Government concerns and determine what action, if any, it could take within the scope of its functions and responsibilities to the Council.

The Commission noted that the comprehensive nature of the Iraqi paper included issues (points 7 to 9) falling outside the Commission's competence; those relating to its responsibilities, however, contained positive elements, which would permit UNSCOM and Iraq to commence high-level technical talks in New York. UNSCOM suggested that point 2 be qualified by the phrase "in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations". Point 5 would be met if it would read "... carried out in the same spirit as relevant international agreements in the field of arms control and disarmament". As to point 6, the Commission would report to the Council when it was satisfied that Iraq was in compliance with its obligations under paragraphs 8 to 13 of that resolution; it was for the Council to decide on the action it would take in the light of such a report.

The Commission further noted Iraq's agreement, on an interim basis, to permit the cameras to be installed. A team would shortly be dispatched to perform the installation. It was agreed that the nature and implementation of the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification, as well as all other outstanding issues between Iraq and the Commission, would be discussed at the talks with a view to resolving them.

High-level talks (August/September)

to 9 September, between an Iraqi delegation headed by the Director of the Military Industrialization Corporation, and the Special Commission and IAEA, led, respectively, by the Executive Chairman and by the IAEA Action Team Leader (Maurizio Zifferero) under Security Council resolution 687(1991).

A report on the talks, submitted by the Executive Chairman on 16 September⁽⁸⁰⁾ gave the background, organization and objectives of the talks; outlined the outstanding issues for compliance as identified by five working groups (annex I); and described the discussions on the nature and manner of the implementation of ongoing monitoring and verification as set out in the plans of UNSCOM and IAEA (annex II), as well as outstanding matters to be resolved in a manner to permit the two bodies to make the reports required under paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991) (annex III).

The outstanding issues, defined in great detail, were communicated to Iraq. In the category of chemical weapons, they concerned the production of chemical warfare agents, precursor chemicals, specific critical equipment suppliers, weaponization of produced agents, suppliers of unfilled munitions and chemical weapons facilities.

As to biological weapons, information was outstanding on: the location of inhalation chambers and aerosol generators known to have been imported into Iraq; the type, quantity, year since 1985, supplier and user of imports of toxins, specific micro-organisms and the complex media for their growth; and whether biological weapons-related activities were being conducted at facilities other than at the Section for Biological Research for Military Defence Purposes. UNSCOM assured Iraq of the expeditious processing of all allowable requests for exceptions to the general prohibition of activities relating to diseases other than those indigenous to Iraq or immediately expected to break out in its environment.

Unresolved missile issues included information on specific foreign suppliers, equipment delivered or ordered for project No. 1728 and the extent of possible foreign assistance in project No. B2000. Specific ways to address those issues were outlined.

Outstanding nuclear issues related primarily to procurement. IAEA restated its requests for the identities of: outside suppliers of the technical and design information for the Iraqi magnetic centrifuge; the manufacturers, suppliers, agents and shippers for the 350-grade maraging steel; the supplier of the carbon-fibre rotor tubes and the means whereby technical specifications were communicated to the manufacturer; and the manufacturer and procurement procedure for the HMX explosive declared by Iraq. Also outstanding was a description of the involvement of H&H Company in the Iraqi centrifuge enrichment programme.

Discussion of the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification focused on the three stages of implementation, the selection of sites for monitoring, the relationship of such monitoring to international disarmament agreements, the frequency and duration of inspections, and use of ground verification and its relation to Iraqi concerns regarding security, sovereignty and independence. It was UNSCOM's intention to implement the plans in the least intrusive manner and in the same spirit as relevant international agreements on arms control and disarmament were being carried out. It was recalled that paragraph 25 of the Secretary-General's plan⁽⁸¹⁾ for on-site inspections foresaw that, at an appropriate time and after the entry into force of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction⁽⁸²⁾ the inspectorate envisaged in it might take over the function of monitoring and verification of compliance in the area of chemical weapons.

The Executive Chairman indicated that UNSCOM must continue to use its own aerial capability for logistical and technical support, as well as for surveillance, which would diminish in frequency as confidence-building measures bore fruit and baseline surveys were completed. The Commission would be prepared to enter into early discussions regarding the use, on a trial basis, of Iraqi helicopters for transportation from Baghdad to the Muthanna State Establishment. In the light of experience gained, discussions could be extended early in 1994 to the use of Iraqi aerial assets for other purposes.

It was pointed out that, for UNSCOM and IAEA to make the necessary reports under paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991), they would need to be satisfied that Iraq had provided all information on outstanding issues in relation to its prohibited programmes to constitute the full, final and complete disclosure—as called for in resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991)—of all programmes to develop prohibited weapons and of all holdings of such weapons, their components, production, research and development facilities and locations.

Given Iraq's fulfilment of its obligation to provide information on the outstanding issues as identified, the Commission and IAEA intended to complete the identification phase of their work under resolution 687(1991), probably before the end of December 1993, assuming Iraq accepted and facilitated forthcoming inspection activities; and to complete destruction of identified chemical weapons and precursors, as well as removal of the irradiated fuel from Iraq. In the same period, it would take decisions regarding the release of items connected with prohibited programmes. There would remain the initiation of the ongoing monitoring and verification required under paragraphs 10 and 13 of resolution 687(1991). With the necessary cooperation from Iraq, this should prove possible within a period of six months after receipt from it of comprehensive declarations on all facilities falling under the plans' provisions.

The Commission repeated its request to be allowed to use Rasheed airfield and to conduct aerial surveillance by both rotary- and fixed-wing aircraft. It reiterated the necessity of immediately activating the cameras at Al-Yawm Al-Azim and Al-Rafah.

High-level talks (October)

In advance of the resumed high-level talks (Baghdad, 2 to 8 October), UNSCOM technical experts went to Iraq in advance of the Executive Chairman to receive additional information from the Iraqi Government. The Executive Chairman's report on the October round of talks was transmitted to the Security Council through the Secretary-General on 12 October.⁽⁸³⁾

The report stated that, with Iraq's provision of the necessary information on critical foreign suppliers, as defined in annex I of the 16 September report⁽⁸⁰⁾ and upon its verification, the Commission could conclude as follows: (a) in the light of all the information made available to UNSCOM in respect of ballistic missiles and biological weapons, the Commission could state that Iraq had discharged its obligation to provide the information necessary to constitute full, final and complete disclosures of its past proscribed programmes in those areas, in compliance with paragraphs 8 and 9 (a) of resolution 687(1991); and (b) the substantial supplementary information relating to chemical weapons covered the full process of chemical weapons production, namely, the quantities of precursors imported, agent produced, equipment acquired for agent production indicating types and capacities, chemical munitions produced or imported and munitions filled by type of agent. The information would be used solely for the purposes of resolution 687(1991). The Commission hoped that verification, assessment and confirmation of the information, to be undertaken in New York, would enable it to make the same determination in the chemical weapons area as it had done in (a) above.

Iraq stated that the information, declarations and answers it had presented from 1991 until the current round of talks, as well as its actions during that period, represented full and complete implementation of its obligations under paragraphs 8, 9, 11, 12 and 13 of resolution 687(1991). It would be ready to declare formal acceptance of the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification when it became clear that the Council's obligations in relation to Iraq, especially under paragraph 22 of that resolution, would be implemented fully without obstructions, restrictions or additional conditions. Without prejudice to this position, it was immediately ready to present the declarations requested by UNSCOM and IAEA to complete the baseline information of the sites to be monitored.

The Commission explained that the most expeditious way for achieving that objective was for Iraq to provide forthwith formal acknowledgement of its obligations under resolution 715(1991) and the plans approved thereunder. UNSCOM could then set in motion full-scale ongoing monitoring and verification to the point where the plans were up and running within the briefest possible time.

The Commission also explained the framework within which it was required to operate: (a) resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991), in respect of weapons of mass destruction, constituted an indissoluble whole, in that their implementation was not sequential and the various stages contained in 687(1991) and 715(1991) overlapped; (b) resolution 715(1991) was a mandatory resolution adopted unanimously under Chapter VII of the Charter and as such was automatically binding on Member States from the date of its adoption on 11 October 1991, and, while there was thus no issue of acceptance, Iraq's formal acknowledgement was a precondition for undertaking effective monitoring on Iraqi territory, with clearly defined rights and assurance of continuity; (c) the Council held⁽⁸⁴⁾ that Iraq's prior acknowledgement was an essential precondition to any reconsideration of the prohibitions (sanctions) referred to in paragraphs 21 and 22 of resolution 687(1991); and (d) as a subsidiary organ of the Council, the Commission was duty-bound to operate within the framework established by the Council and its officially expressed views. The Commission could thus not initiate full-scale ongoing monitoring and verification without the Council's first receiving Iraq's formal acknowledgement of its obligations under resolution 715(1991).

While welcoming Iraq's offer immediately to provide declarations prior to such acknowledgement, UNSCOM pointed out that, in order to achieve full legal value and credibility, declarations should be submitted formally under resolution 715(1991) and the plans approved thereunder. Furthermore, to be fully effective, baseline inspections and monitoring and verification had to be conducted under the acknowledged regime established by that resolution.

Iraq restated its concerns that, in the implementation of the plans, Iraqi aerial assets should replace those of the Commission; that its scientific, technical and economic development not be hindered; and that, in due course, the methods used should be revised to bring them in line with those used in international agreements and conventions.

In response, UNSCOM confirmed its position as recorded in its position paper⁽⁷⁹⁾ discussed at Baghdad in July.

As to the periodic reviews agreed to in principle, agreement was reached that the first review could be held three months after the monitoring plans had been formally initiated and every three months thereafter. The plans themselves could only be revised by the Council, but UNSCOM considered that the annexes to the plans should be revised as and when necessary, in the light of experience and information obtained in the course of their implementation.

In the area of nuclear weapons, IAEA was confident that the essential elements of Iraq's nuclear weapons programme were understood and had been dismantled. Having provided the critical information on the suppliers of prohibited materials and sources of technical advice, Iraq had complied with all disclosure requirements concerning its previous nuclear weapons programme as contained in resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991).

Over the preceding 15 months, IAEA had phased in certain elements of its plan for ongoing monitoring and verification. Those elements, of which Iraq had been aware, included: environmental sampling of air, water and surfaces; inspection of known sites relevant to the past nuclear programme and sites with potential to support a nuclear weapons programme; inspection of new sites that might be identified in the future; control of allowed nuclear materials and dual-use technical equipment; imagery; and surveillance equipment and use of sensors.

With a formal acceptance by Iraq of resolution 715(1991) and the two plans it approved for ongoing monitoring and verification, of which one was the IAEA plan, IAEA would be satisfied that Iraq had complied with the conditions laid down in paragraphs 11, 12 and 13 of section C of resolution 687(1991) and would accordingly report to the Council. Possible additional disclosures or discoveries would be dealt with during the ongoing monitoring and verification phase.

The two sides decided on a further high-level meeting in New York in mid-November.

High-level talks (November)

The high-level talks resumed in New York from 15 to 30 November.⁽⁸⁵⁾ The Iraqi technical team stated that its objectives were to follow up on the supplementary information provided by Iraq during the October talks at Baghdad so as to ensure that UNSCOM and IAEA were satisfied that Iraq's obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) regarding past programmes had been discharged and to discuss ways of expediting the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification. IAEA and UNSCOM welcomed those objectives, and separate expert groups in the chemical, biological, ballistic missile and nuclear fields, as well as a group on operational issues, met to pursue them. In the course of the meetings, Iraq provided further details on past proscribed programmes and sites, equipment and materials to be monitored pursuant to the plans.

The Commission and IAEA informed the Iraqi side that the information available in all areas was deemed credible; they would deploy their best efforts to expedite the process of its further verification in order to arrive quickly at a definitive conclusion. In the firm conviction that that process could be completed substantially in advance of a determination that ongoing monitoring was under way and proceeding satisfactorily, UNSCOM emphasized the advisability of initiating full-scale ongoing monitoring while information verification was being completed. In the unlikely event that some verification elements were unduly held up, they would continue to be pursued during the monitoring phase so that the reporting under paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991) was not needlessly delayed. The Commission and IAEA welcomed Iraq's express recognition of their right to undertake immediate on-site inspections should any new information on past programmes surface after paragraph 22 had been implemented.

In the light of its most recent inspections and the information currently available to it relating to Iraq's past programmes, UNSCOM was finally in a position to complete the identification phase of its work under resolution 687(1991).

Iraq reiterated its position on UNSCOM's use of Iraqi aerial assets, as well as its concerns relating to respect for its sovereignty, security and dignity of its people and to the realignment of the modalities for ongoing monitoring with those for implementing international instruments. On the first item, the Commission referred to its position as recorded in their joint report on the August/September talks⁽⁸⁰⁾ adding that, at the beginning of 1994, it would be prepared to undertake a full survey of Iraqi air assets to determine their technical adequacy and stressing that the use of local logistical and technical aerial and other support would be dependent on the prevailing situation of confidence and availability of adequate assets. Both UNSCOM and IAEA stressed that it was their intention to implement the plans in the least intrusive manner and in the same spirit as relevant international agreements in the field of arms control and disarmament.

In reaffirming their agreement to undertake periodic reviews of the implementation of the plans, both sides agreed that the first such review should take place in February.

Political talks took place between the Deputy Prime Minister and the Executive Chairman on 22, 26 and 29 November, and with the IAEA Action Team Leader on 23 November. The Deputy Prime Minister indicated his intention to hold discussions separately with Council members and other interested Member States in order to assess their understandings of the conditions necessary for lifting the oil embargo in accordance with the terms of paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991). Thereafter, he would meet again with the Executive Chairman to discuss future relations.

On 26 November⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq formally informed the President of the Security Council that the Government of Iraq had decided to accept the obligations set forth in resolution 715(1991) and to comply with the two plans for monitoring and verification approved by that resolution. The Foreign Minister reiterated Iraq's requests as to the manner of implementing those plans. He conveyed Iraq's hope that, with this positive step, the Council would implement paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991) speedily, in full and without obstacles, restrictions or additional conditions.

In the light of this acknowledgement, UNSCOM and IAEA requested Iraq to submit, as soon as possible, consolidated declarations under resolution 715(1991) and the plans. Responding on 30 November, the Government of Iraq issued a statement confirming that the declarations provided to UNSCOM in October 1993 and those provided to IAEA in November 1993, and previously in November 1991 and January and April 1993, were to be considered to have been made and submitted in conformity with the provisions of resolution 715(1991) and the plans.

The joint report on the foregoing talks, together with enclosures giving details of the technical talks (enclosure I) and reproducing the text of the Government's statement (enclosure II), was transmitted to the Council through the Secretary-General on 1 December.⁽⁸⁵⁾

Report of the Special Commission (December). The sixth semi-annual report of the Special Commission, covering the period from 14 June to 14 December 1993, was transmitted to the Security Council on 21 December.⁽⁸⁷⁾

The report noted that recent operational developments had been encouraging in that the inspection teams that had conducted activities in Iraq since the August/September high-level talks⁽⁸⁹⁾ had been well received and their tasks had been facilitated by Iraq.

Two chemical and biological weapons inspections were conducted during the period. One (10 and 11 July) was primarily to verify information that, contrary to initial declarations, Iraq had a larger stock of DB-0 bombs that might have had a biological warfare application. The inspection led to Iraq's declaration of larger stocks, stating that the bomb was a failed prototype munition for chemical weapons and that the larger numbers represented munitions scrapped during the production and testing phases.

A second inspection (19-22 November) was constituted on short notice to investigate persistent reports that chemical weapons had been used by Government troops against opposition elements in the southern marshes of Iraq. The team had come from a fact-finding mission to Iran to obtain clarification about the allegations from persons claiming to be eyewitnesses and about the exact location of the alleged attack. Using vehicles, boats and helicopters, the team conducted a thorough inspection of the alleged site. It collected large samples of soil, water, flora and fauna for analysis, which was under way, and obtained documents that were undergoing forensic examination.

In addition, a ballistic missile inspection (see below) also searched for possible hidden stocks of chemical and biological weapons facilities, but found no proscribed items or activities.

UNSCOM continued intensive and multifaceted inspection efforts in the area of ballistic missiles. A third interim monitoring team was dispatched (4-28 June) to assess existing Iraqi capabilities in the area of precision machining related to ballistic-missile production, in particular gyroscope devices and liquid-fuel engine manufacture. Two military sites and 16 industrial facilities were inspected.

Pursuant to interim arrangements agreed upon during the Executive Chairman's July mission to Baghdad⁽⁷⁹⁾ the installation and testing of the surveillance camera systems at Al-Yawm Al-Azim and Al-Rafah rocket test sites, blocked by Iraq in June, were completed on 3 August. Missile experts were dispatched to Iraq (23 August-27 September) to observe any missile tests that might be declared to UNSCOM and to conduct detailed engineering surveys of test facilities at the two sites and five other test stands capable of performing missile and rocket engine tests. The camera systems were activated on 25 September following Iraq's agreement to the Commission's request for their immediate activation at the August/September high-level talks in New York.⁽⁸⁰⁾

The cameras, arranged so as to enable UNSCOM to assess whether a test was of a prohibited missile, engine or motor, provided round-the-clock coverage of the missile-engine test stands. Missile test monitoring handbooks, including engineering baselines for the test sites, check-lists and reporting forms, were developed for Iraqi use. The camera systems were subsequently upgraded (2-10 December) to include radio links and improved lenses.

The objective of the largest ballistic missile inspection ever to be mounted (30 September-30 October) was twofold: to investigate reports of suspected prohibited activities in Iraq and of the continued concealment of proscribed items, notably missiles; and to verify Iraqi information on its past prohibited activities, especially on the operational use of missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres. These tasks, identified as critical to UNSCOM's intention to complete the identification phase of its work under resolution 687(1991), required the largest inspection team to date, lengthy preparation and intensive training, in-depth analytical work, innovative use of advanced sensors and deployment of additional aerial assets in Iraq. Since much of the information to be checked referred to underground storage for prohibited items, the inspection employed, in addition to proven inspection procedures, new techniques, such as a custom-designed ground-penetrating radar (GPR) mounted on helicopters to maximize detection of prohibited items, especially missiles, missile launchers and possible hide sites. Two additional helicopters—manned and equipped specifically to meet the requirements of the inspection—were deployed to conduct GPR surveys and to perform aerial inspection of specific sites, including at night, using forward-looking infrared radar.

Ground inspections included a number of sites in and around Baghdad. Intensive GPR and ground searches were conducted around known launch positions of Al Hussein missiles in central and western Iraq, to verify critical information on the use of such missiles during the 1991 military action. Two additional sites were investigated on the ground and from the air to determine if they were or had been the locations of prohibited activities. Ground inspections and GPR surveys were made from 25 to 28 October.

In all, the inspection covered more than 30 sites and areas and flew more than 28 GPR missions, totalling more than 56 hours' flying time. Neither undeclared prohibited items nor activities were identified nor was evidence discovered to contradict the information provided by Iraq on issues related to the inspection. Iraq provided all the support requested for the inspection, granted access to all designated sites and areas and honoured all the inspection rights invoked; the inspection encountered no problems in executing its operational plan, including in the introduction and use of its aerial assets.

During the reporting period, UNSCOM introduced special aerial inspections focusing on the detection of gamma emissions, a technique to identify locations warranting more detailed ground inspections. The first such mission (10-25 September) began on 15 September, five days later than scheduled so that coverage was considerably reduced. The delay was due to a dispute regarding the installation of gamma detection sensors aboard an UNSCOM helicopter, which was quickly resolved, however. Partial surveys were conducted at Al-Tuwaitha, Al-Atheer and Al-Jezira, from multiple points of which gamma signals were detected. These sites were extensively covered during the second aerial inspection (2-15 December); the significance of the gamma signals detected from all sites would not be apparent until the results of the analysis became available.

The report summarized the technical and political developments, beginning with the issue that arose from the required removal of certain chemical weapons-production equipment and precursor chemicals from the Fallujah sites to Muthanna for destruction, and described how that became intertwined with the impasse occasioned by Iraq's blocking of UNSCOM's installation of remote-controlled monitoring cameras at two rocket-engine test stands and by the question of "dialogue" between Iraq, on the one hand, and UNSCOM and IAEA, or the Security Council, on the other. The report then traced the resolution of those issues through the Executive Chairman's July mission to Baghdad and the three high-level talks that culminated in Iraq's decision to accept its obligations under resolution 715(1991).

Long-term monitoring and verification

During 1993, the Security Council received from UNSCOM and IAEA their third and fourth reports on the status of the implementation of the plan of each for ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with relevant parts of section C of resolution 687(1991). UNSCOM's third report, covering the period 11 October 1992 to 10 April 1993⁽⁸⁸⁾ was submitted by the Secretary-General on 19 April; the fourth report, submitted by UNSCOM's Executive Chairman and covering the period 11 April to 10 October 1993, was transmitted by the Secretary-General on 5 November.⁽⁸⁹⁾ The third and fourth IAEA reports were submitted by the IAEA Director General on 8 April⁽⁹⁰⁾ and 29 October;⁽⁹¹⁾ they were subsequently transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General.

Prepared in response to resolution 715(1991), which called for a status report at least every six months, the reports outlined the requirements that remained to be fulfilled by Iraq under the two plans approved by that resolution. The underlying obstacle in this connection was Iraq's desire to see an end to the first phase of implementation of its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991), that is, the identification and elimination of proscribed weapons and weapons programmes, and for this to be followed by the Council's implementation of paragraph 22 of that resolution, namely, the lifting of the oil embargo, before proceeding to ongoing monitoring and verification activities.

As a result of the July mission of the Executive Chairman and the three rounds of high-level talks between UNSCOM and IAEA, on the one hand and Iraq on the other (see above), Iraq, in November, formally accepted its obligations under resolution 715(1991) and committed itself to comply with the provisions of the plans for monitoring and verification, thus enabling the Special Commission and IAEA to initiate full-scale monitoring and verification of Iraq's weapons-related activities on a routine basis.

Kuwaiti property

In response to the Security Council's 1991 demand⁽⁹²⁾ that it immediately begin to return all seized Kuwaiti property, Iraq included, in its monthly communications to the Secretary-General on steps taken to implement its obligations under resolution 687(1991) (see above under "Cease-fire compliance"), a continuing account of the return of such property—an operation it conducted at the hand-over point south of Safwan.

On 6 January,⁽⁹³⁾ Iraq reported that, between 29 November and 31 December 1992, it had returned military equipment belonging to Kuwait's Air Force and Army Air Corps, including 2 damaged Skyhawk aircraft, 2 damaged Super Puma helicopters, 10 aircraft dollies, 10 items of equipment relating to aerial munitions, 21 pilot ejector seats for Skyhawk aircraft, 7 ground equipment items, the air defence computer and conditioning system, 10 radar systems and air-launched munitions (rockets and bombs). It stated on 8 March⁽⁹⁴⁾ that the return of all Air Force equipment and weapons had been completed on 16 February, except for a damaged C-130 aircraft for which repair bids were being awaited.

Iraq wrote on 5 April⁽⁹⁵⁾ of the return of the first batch of heavy military equipment. Begun on 28 February, it was completed in March with the hand-over of 18 French 155-mm guns, 18 French 120-mm mortars, 18 French ammunition carriers and 10 French command posts, 88 Ferret armoured cars, 20 American 155-mm guns and 40 Centurion tanks. The return in April of 74 Hawk missiles and related equipment was reported on 10 May,⁽⁹⁶⁾ and, on 10 June,⁽⁹⁷⁾ it was reported that, in May, the transfer had begun of the second batch of heavy equipment, comprising 27 Centurion and 20 Chieftain tanks, 124 Warrior and 37 Saladin armoured vehicles—all of British manufacture.

On 12 August,⁽⁹⁸⁾ Iraq stated that in July it had returned: 11 Chieftain tanks; armour replacement parts; a 20,000-line Swedish switchboard with computer, callback and other related equipment; 28 low-capacity exchanges; a telex exchange and power equipment; and navigation equipment. On 9 September,⁽⁹⁹⁾ it reported having returned the nose and stern of two destroyed A-4 aircraft.

Kuwait, by a letter of 17 May,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ noted that, despite Iraq's apparent cooperation in returning Kuwaiti property, its implementation of that obligation was deficient for the following reasons. Most of the returned items had been intentionally sabotaged or destroyed, even just hours before being handed over, making them valueless or unfit for reuse. Whereas Iraq maintained that it was not responsible for the return of properties stolen from the private sector, valued at hundreds of millions of dollars, copies of officially signed and sealed Iraqi inventories, left behind in 1991 by the retreating Iraqis, proved that specialized Iraqi government agencies supervised the theft and removal of such properties from Kuwait. Moreover, Iraq had not abided by the lists agreed upon with the United Nations Coordinator for the return of property from Iraq to Kuwait and had constantly delayed or hindered the hand-overs, resulting in additional administrative costs to Kuwait.

Kuwait repeated those same observations in letters to the Council President of 16 July⁽¹⁰¹⁾ and 15 September.⁽¹⁰²⁾

UN Compensation Commission and Compensation Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established by the Security Council in 1991⁽¹⁰³⁾ for the resolution and payment of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its invasion and occupation of Kuwait, did not issue any reports in 1993.

At its March/April session, the Commission's Governing Council drew attention to the fact that, although $21 million had been deposited in the Compensation Fund in December 1992, the Commission's work continued to be jeopardized by a lack of financial resources. The Council thus requested its President to take steps to ensure that the Commission be given the necessary financial support. This was confirmed in May by the Secretary-General (see below, under "Escrow account"), who stated that the Commission had received funds to cover most of its projected operational and administrative costs for 1993, but that no funds were currently available to pay any significant amount of actual claims to injured parties.

Activities of the Governing Council. The Governing Council held three regular sessions in 1993, all at Geneva: the ninth (29 March-1 April),⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ tenth (26-28 July),⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ and eleventh (27-29 September)⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ sessions. It also held its first special session on 11 January.

At the ninth session, the Governing Council appointed nine Commissioners nominated by the Secretary-General, to constitute three panels of three members each, dealing with consolidated claims in categories A (departure from Iraq or Kuwait), B (death or serious personal injury) and C (individual claims for damages up to $100,000). The Council was informed that approximately 700,000 claims had been received. Owing to difficulties encountered by a number of Governments in meeting the 1 July 1993 deadline for submitting claims in the four categories, the Council authorized an extension to 1 October to any Government or entity requesting it by 1 July.

At its tenth session, the Governing Council decided that claims in categories B and C would be processed in chronological order. Those in category A would be processed in accordance with the criterion of proportionality, initially among the countries that had submitted claims prior to 1 July 1993; due consideration would be given to claims processed during the first stage of category A, if the criterion of chronological order had been applied. The Council decided to accept consolidated claims in categories A, B and C filed after the deadlines by the United Arab Emirates, Nigeria and Somalia, for processing after the claims submitted on time had been processed.

In view of the difficulties experienced by some Governments in making timely submissions of claims, the Governing Council decided, on an exceptional basis, to grant extensions until 1 January, 1 April and 1 May 1994 for claims in categories D, E and F, respectively, if the extensions were requested prior to the expiry of the current deadlines.

At the opening of its eleventh session on 27 September, the Governing Council was informed by its Executive Secretary that 2.2 million claims had been received. As at its previous two sessions, the Council authorized extensions, on request, this time until 1 January 1994 for the filing of claims in categories A, B and C. It decided to grant Egypt and Kuwait an extension until 1 April 1994 to file approximately 260,000 claims in category C, which were to be submitted in diskette form.

Communications. Iraq, on 12 February,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ communicated its position on decision 16 concerning awards of interest on compensation, adopted by the Governing Council in 1992.⁽¹⁰⁸⁾

Citing paragraphs 16 and 17 of resolution 687(1991) and the 1991 report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ setting forth the institutional framework for the Compensation Commission and the Compensation Fund as approved by resolution 692(1991),⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ Iraq asserted that the texts neither stipulated nor mentioned interest. Had there been any intention to impose it on the compensation to be determined, there should have been some reference to it, however rudimentary. Thus, decision 16 was in conflict with resolution 687(1991), with the legal principles and the trend followed in peace treaties after the Second World War and with the principles of justice and fairness. Iraq therefore called on the Security Council to abrogate decision 16 and reaffirm compliance with its resolutions on this matter.

On 22 March,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ Iraq drew attention to the fact that certain companies and individuals, instead of filing their claims with the Compensation Commission, had begun seeking compensation through their national courts, thereby aiming at Iraqi assets and reserves abroad.

By that procedure, the percentage deducted from Iraq's exports of petroleum and petroleum products would exceed the upper limit for compensation specified by the Council in resolution 705(1991),⁽¹¹¹⁾ i.e., 30 per cent of the annual value of those exports. The resultant harm to the Iraqi economy would be so severe as to curtail Iraq's ability to provide essentials for its people and make impossible the fulfilment of its obligations to the Compensation Fund itself. Iraq requested that the Council take appropriate measures to lay down guidelines to coordinate measures at the national and international levels in order to ensure that the percentage of compensation to be determined was not exceeded.

Arms and related sanctions

Reports of the Committee on sanctions. The Committee established by Security Council resolution 661(1990)⁽¹¹²⁾ (Committee on sanctions) issued four reports—one every 90 days—during 1992, pursuant to the responsibilities entrusted to it under the guidelines approved by the Council in 1991⁽¹¹³⁾ for monitoring the prohibitions against the sale or supply of arms to Iraq and related sanctions. The reports were transmitted to the Council on 19 March,⁽¹¹⁴⁾ 7 June,⁽¹¹⁵⁾ 7 September⁽¹¹⁶⁾ and 13 December.⁽¹¹⁷⁾

Each report stated that, during the period under review, the Committee had received no information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals. It had not been consulted by States or international organizations on either the sale or supply of items to Iraq that might fall within the categories of proscribed items or of dual- or multiple-use items, nor had any allegations of violations in this regard been reported to it. No international organization had reported any relevant information that might have come to its attention.

Communications. Iraq addressed many communications to the Secretary-General during 1993 registering its protest against what it called the unfair practices of the Committee on sanctions. It cited objections raised by France, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States to Iraqi requests for the import of what it described as the most essential humanitarian and civilian needs, such as knitting-machine needles, textiles and thread for the manufacture of clothing and electrical materials.⁽¹¹⁸⁾ Iraq illustrated, by counting the number of requests objected to by each of those countries, that the United States and the United Kingdom objected to the greatest number, on one occasion for nylon cloth, glue for textbooks, 120 tonnes of rock wool felt and blank audio cassettes;⁽¹¹⁹⁾ on another, for Virginia tobacco, caustic soda for fertilizer, sodium phosphate for water treatment, cement, automotive supplies (tyres, oil filters, spare parts, paint) and detergent powder;⁽¹²⁰⁾ and authorization for Iraqi Airways to fly 2,000 pilgrims to Mecca.⁽¹²¹⁾

Other examples of requests rejected under one pretext or another were for 200 tonnes of polyester and acrylic yarn for textile production, 300 tonnes of polyvinyl chloride for hospital use, 103 rolls of galvanized steel plate, cable joints and about 26 tonnes of concrete additives,⁽¹²²⁾ 70 tonnes of wood glue,⁽¹²³⁾ brakes for agricultural tractors, pesticides, water taps, fans and paper products.⁽¹²⁴⁾

Moreover, Iraq communicated periodic reports showing the impact of sanctions imposed on it: increased child morbidity and mortality,⁽¹²⁵⁾ increased malnutrition, diarrhoeal diseases and anaemia in both children and adults⁽¹²⁶⁾ and an overall increase in the population's mortality rate.⁽¹²⁷⁾

After each informal consultation held by the Security Council, on 25 January,⁽¹²⁸⁾ 24 May⁽¹²⁹⁾ and 20 September,⁽¹³⁰⁾ pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991), the Council President issued the following statement on behalf of the Council:

"After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regimes established in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 21 of that resolution."

The Council also held informal consultations on 23 and 29 March,⁽¹³¹⁾ 21 July⁽¹³²⁾ and 18 November⁽¹³³⁾ pursuant to paragraphs 21 and 28 of resolution 687(1991) and paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991). After each of those consultations, the President issued the following statement on behalf of the Council:

"After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President of the Security Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regimes established in paragraph 20 of Council resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 21 of that resolution; in paragraphs 22, 23, 24 and 25 of Council resolution 687(1991), as referred to in paragraph 28 of resolution 687(1991); and in paragraph 6 of Council resolution 700(1991)."

Repatriation of Kuwaitis

The question of the repatriation of Kuwaiti nationals in Iraq, including prisoners and detainees, and the status of missing persons were the subject of several communications from Kuwait to the Security Council President. On 2 March,⁽¹³⁴⁾ it stated that it had recently handed over to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) the individual files of 627 prisoners, detainees and missing persons. Each file contained full and detailed information on the individual concerned and the facts surrounding the place, date and circumstances of their detention as gathered from Iraqi documents left behind in Kuwait. In this connection, Kuwait reiterated its demands that Iraq provide information on all persons deported from Kuwait between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991 and release without delay those who might still be in detention; all persons arrested in Kuwait who died during or after the same period while in detention, including their grave sites; and all persons executed in Kuwait or Iraq during or after the same period, including the whereabouts of their remains. It also asked Iraq to search for persons listed as missing.

In May,⁽¹³⁵⁾ July,⁽¹³⁶⁾ September⁽¹³⁷⁾ and November,⁽¹³⁸⁾ Kuwait reported that no information had been received from Iraq about the 627 files, an indication that Iraq had reneged on its previous undertaking to reply within 10 days of receiving any file. Moreover, Iraq had prevented the efforts of the Secretary-General's Envoy to the League of Arab States, Rashid Idris, as well as of King Hassan II of Morocco, to secure the release of Kuwaiti prisoners and detainees. It had also refused to attend the last two meetings (Geneva, July and October) of the Tripartite Committee dealing with this issue.

For its part, Iraq, in its compliance reports for April⁽⁶⁾ and May,⁽⁷⁾ recalled its repeated affirmation that there were no so-called Kuwaiti detainees in Iraq. However, it reported having recently released to ICRC six Kuwaiti brothers who had illegally crossed over into Iraqi territory on 8 April.

Humanitarian assistance

In a May report,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Secretary-General accounted for the funds transferred to an escrow account (see below, under that topic) to meet, among the specific purposes designated by the Security Council, the financing of a scheme for the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines, materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, in particular health-related materials, for distribution in all regions of Iraq and to all categories of the Iraqi civilian population.

The report stated that, as at 30 April, of the $101.5 million received into the escrow, $41.5 million had been designated for various humanitarian activities in Iraq. Of that amount, $38 million had been expended, primarily by transfer to other executing United Nations agencies; and $1.5 million, designated for activities after 1 April, had been transferred to the United Nations Children's Fund.

The report also gave cost estimates of the ongoing inter-agency humanitarian programme.

Inter-agency humanitarian programme

In its compliance report for the month of December 1992,⁽⁹³⁾ Iraq stated that, in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding signed between Iraq and the United Nations for a six-month period ending 31 March 1993,⁽⁷⁾ it had ensured all the necessary administrative requirements to facilitate the work of organizations and agencies operating within the framework of the relief programme, such as granting visas to additional personnel, issuing permits for the movement and passage of trucks, ensuring their safe arrival in all the country's governorates and making ready reserve depots for the storage of relief goods. Iraq had done so despite the fact that the United Nations had not seriously embarked on implementing the projects outlined in the action plan under the Memorandum.

According to the Secretary-General's May report,⁽⁶⁹⁾ (see below, under "Escrow account") the cost estimates of the ongoing United Nations Inter-agency Humanitarian Programme for Iraq had not been definitively established, but the projected total for specific project proposals submitted to date by various United Nations agencies and programmes for the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 amounted to $489 million. No further funds were currently available from the escrow account for those projects.

(For the extension of the Memorandum of Understanding and the new United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme for Iraq, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Kurds and minority populations

On 2 April,⁽¹³⁹⁾ Iraq addressed identical letters to the Secretary-General and to the President of the Security Council, transmitting a copy of "talking points" delivered to four permanent Council members: France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States. Among the points made was that Iraq could not accept any formula that might be open to the interpretation that it agreed to the air exclusion zones imposed north of the 36th parallel and south of the 32nd. (The zones had been imposed on behalf of the Kurdish minority in the north and the Shi'a minority in the southern marshes.) Iraq called that action iniquitous and unlawful, with no basis in any United Nations resolution; its aim was political: to interfere in Iraq's internal affairs, undermine the situation in the country and dismember it on an ethnic and confessional basis.

Iraq stated that three countries (France, United Kingdom, United States) had imposed the aerial exclusion zones by unilateral decision and had used armed force to maintain them, as they had done in January 1992, had impeded Iraq's ability to defend its sovereignty against acts of aggression by the Iranian air force (April 1992 and March 1993), with those countries standing by watching the aggression take place. However, to avoid friction or misunderstanding, Iraq stressed that it was not opposed to an exchange of views with the States concerned.

On 10 June,⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ Iraq repeated the statement it had made in 1992⁽¹⁴¹⁾ that the governorates of Dohuk, Erbil and Suleimaniyah had not been under the control of government authorities since the autumn of 1991. This anomalous situation resulted from the direct military intervention of France, the United Kingdom and the United States, which were preventing the Iraqi authorities from exercising their functions in those areas, even threatening to use force should they attempt to do so. As a result, the governorates had come under the control of armed bands and had become open to interference by Iran and other States and to widespread anarchy. Iraq could therefore not accept responsibility for incidents occurring there, including threats against United Nations personnel. Given the situation imposed on Iraq, it was surprising that the United Nations should ask it to take measures to improve the humanitarian situation in those governorates and ensure the security of their inhabitants.

Despite the anomalous situation, Iraq had provided facilities to relief convoys destined for the northern governorates and to United Nations personnel in all areas under Iraqi control to ensure implementation of the programmes approved under the action plan. It had cooperated with the humanitarian programme, which had been used for political purposes by certain States, as events had shown. Owing to pressure by these States, the programme had not attracted the necessary funding and had been beset by difficulties for which Iraq was in no way responsible.

On 19 March,⁽¹⁴²⁾ the United States transmitted a "Report on Iraqi War Crimes" to the President of the Security Council. Prepared under the auspices of the Secretary of the Army of the United States, it was submitted in accordance with Council resolution 674(1990),⁽¹⁴³⁾ paragraph 2 of which invited States to collate substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them on the grave breaches by Iraq of Council decisions,⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ the Charter of the United Nations, the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations,⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ and international law.

The six-part report comprised: a 19-page summary of Iraqi war crimes committed during Iraq's 1990 occupation of Kuwait and the 1991 military action taken against Iraq to compel it to withdraw from Kuwait; Iraqi treatment of United States prisoners of war (POWs); Iraqi treatment of protected persons and the occupation of Kuwait; specific examples of Iraqi war crimes in occupied Kuwait; pictorial documentation; and an index of files archived in the United States War Crimes Documentation Center.

According to the Army's investigations, Iraqi violations of the law of war were widespread and premeditated. Specific Iraqi war crimes, extensively documented by the War Crimes Documentation Center, included: the taking of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals in Kuwait as hostages and their individual or mass forcible deportation to Iraq; the taking of third-country nationals in Iraq as hostages and their forcible transfer within Iraq; compelling Kuwaiti and other foreign nationals to serve in Iraq's armed forces; the use of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals as human shields; inhumane treatment, including rape and wilful killing, of Kuwaiti and third-country civilians; the transfer of Iraq's civilian population into occupied Kuwait; and torture and other inhumane treatment of POWs of the United States and other countries cooperating with Kuwait.

Other specific war crimes were the unnecessary destruction of Kuwaiti private and public property; pillage, including that of Kuwaiti civilian hospitals; illegal confiscation or inadequate safeguarding of Kuwaiti public property; indiscriminate Scud-missile attacks against non-combatant civilians of Israel and Saudi Arabia; intentional release of oil into the Persian Gulf and sabotage of the Al-Burgan and Rumalia oil fields in Kuwait; and the employment of unanchored naval mines and mines without self-neutralizing devices.

The report stated that the War Crimes Documentation Center had accumulated several linear feet of files containing substantiating evidence of the crimes enumerated. The categories of documentation included United States documents, captured Iraqi documents, videotaped and written statements of eyewitnesses, POWs, "human shields" and Kuwaiti victims; graphic videotape and still photographic evidence; and general references dealing with the prosecution of war crimes cases.

In a preliminary response to the report, Iraq, on 17 June,⁽¹⁴⁷⁾ described it as full of arbitrary allegations formulated with public-relations assistance and given currency by the media for hostile purposes. It cited as an example the mendacious story of how infants were deprived of incubators at a Kuwait hospital, theatrically recounted by a Kuwaiti ambassador's daughter. As later revealed, an American public relations firm, engaged by the Embassy of Kuwait at Washington, D.C., coached the ambassador's daughter in the delivery of her so-called impartial testimony.

The purpose of the report, Iraq said, was two-fold: to weaken Iraq in order to ensure Israel's ascendancy in the region and to control Iraq's natural resources, primarily oil. The information, gathered by intelligence sources of dubious objectivity and veracity, was compiled in a report by the United States, which was also a party to the conflict. That country alleged Iraqi violations while it ignored its own violations against Iraqi civilians: it had bombarded them savagely, leaving their homes, mosques and churches in ruins, destroying their drinking-water and sewage facilities, historic buildings, shelters where people had sought refuge and civilian plants such as the Baghdad infant formula factory.

Among its other comments on the report, Iraq pointed to the many contradictions it contained, particularly on the question of POWs. Its reference to Israel as being neutral to the conflict was patently untrue since it had carried out many hostile acts against Iraq, and Saudi Arabia was a principal party to the conflict; consequently, Iraqi response against those countries was in accord with the rules of armed conflict.

Escrow account

On 27 May,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report pursuant to paragraph 5 of Security Council resolution 778(1992),⁽⁶⁸⁾ calling on him to ascertain the whereabouts and amounts of petroleum and petroleum products and the proceeds from their sale that were to be transferred to an escrow account to meet the purposes of resolutions 706(1991)⁽⁶⁶⁾ and 712(1991).⁽⁶⁸⁾ Apart from financing purchases for the essential humanitarian needs of the Iraqi population (see above, under "Humanitarian assistance"), the proceeds in escrow were to be used to meet payments to the United Nations Compensation Fund, the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991), the full costs incurred by the United Nations in facilitating the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq and half the costs of the Boundary Demarcation Commission.

As at 30 April 1993, 62 countries had replied to the Secretary-General's request for information on steps taken to implement resolution 778(1992). Of these, four indicated holding amounts, as follows: Greece, $276,000 in proceeds from the sale of Iraqi oil products; Japan, $48.88 million, subject to third-party rights so that none of it could be transferred to the escrow account; Tunisia, $15.8 million, already partially used to settle Iraq's debts to Tunisia; the United States, $637.4 million, $200 million of which it would transfer to the escrow account provided that amount at no time exceeded 50 per cent of total funds contributed or transferred to the account. The remaining 58 countries stated that they had no petroleum or petroleum products or frozen assets subject to the provisions of resolution 778(1992).

The Secretary-General provided a table showing the estimated expenditures for the various activities related to resolutions 687(1991) and 706(1991) from their inception to 31 December 1993, the resources made available from the escrow account or from direct contributions and the estimated amount of funding still needed in 1993.

As at 30 April 1993, a total of $101.5 million had been received into the escrow account, made up of voluntary contributions of $30 million from Saudi Arabia, $20 million from Kuwait and $1.5 million from the United Kingdom; and a transfer from the United States of $50 million in Iraqi frozen assets. As at the same date, the $101.5 million had been earmarked thus: $33 million for the United Nations Special Commission ($31.5 million had been expended); $21 million for the United Nations Compensation Commission ($6.6 million had been expended); $4 million for costs relating to the return of Kuwaiti property (with $2.7 million already expended); $2 million towards Iraq's share of the costs of the Boundary Demarcation Commission ($3.7 million had been expended by the Commission); and $41.5 million for various humanitarian activities in Iraq.

Iraq-United States

Throughout 1993, Iraq addressed numerous communications to the Secretary-General alleging daily violations of its airspace by the United States and accusing it of frequently dropping heat flares on civilian areas and provocative leaflets over southern Iraq. It also transmitted a press account of the use by the United States and its allies of radioactive artillery shells in their 1991 aggression against Iraq and provided a count of hundreds of miscellaneous unexploded bombs, projectiles and missiles found in various parts of the country and disposed of by Iraq.

The United States, on 26 June⁽¹⁾ informed the Security Council President that, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter, it had exercised its right of self-defence by responding to Iraq's unlawful attempt to murder the former President of the United States, George Bush, for actions he had taken while he was President, as well as to its continuing threat to United States nationals. Based on the pattern of Iraqi behaviour, including the disregard for international law and Council resolutions, the United States concluded that there was no reasonable prospect that new diplomatic initiatives or economic measures could influence the Iraqi Government to cease planning attacks against the United States.

As a last resort, the United States had decided to respond by striking at an Iraqi military and intelligence target involved in such attacks. The target had been chosen carefully so as to minimize risks of collateral damage to civilians. It was hoped that such limited and proportionate action might discourage or pre-empt unlawful Iraqi activities.

Owing to the seriousness of Iraq's actions, the United States requested an urgent meeting of the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council convened on 27 June to consider the matter. At its request, Iraq was invited to participate in the discussions without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Before the Council was Iraq's letter of 27 June⁽²⁾ condemning what it called a cowardly act of military aggression against Iraq. United States warships stationed in the Red Sea and the "Arabian Gulf" had fired 23 Tomahawk cruise missiles at the information service headquarters and the nearby civilian districts of Al-Mansour and Al-Ma'moun in the centre of Baghdad, leaving a large number of dead and wounded civilians. The grounds for carrying out such a terrorist act had been concocted with the complicity of Kuwait. United Nations silence in the face of such crimes had encouraged the United States to persist in perpetrating State terrorism and blackmail.

During Council consideration of the matter, the United States declared that every State regarded an assassination attempt against its former head of State an attack against itself and would react. On April 14, at the start of President Bush's three-day visit to Kuwait City, authorities there thwarted a terrorist plot, seizing a powerful car bomb and other explosives and arresting 16 suspects. The ringleaders of the plot were two Iraqi nationals.

Based on investigations conducted by law enforcement, forensic and intelligence professionals of the United States, its Department of Justice and Central Intelligence Agency concluded that Iraq had planned, equipped and launched the terrorist operation that threatened the life of President Bush. Physical evidence supporting that conclusion included forensic data, interviews with the 16 suspects currently on trial in Kuwait and other intelligence.

Iraq denied any role in the alleged attempted assassination, challenging the parties concerned to come up with clear evidence acceptable to an impartial third party. It called the plot a complete fabrication by Kuwait and a pretext for United States aggression against Iraq.

No proposal was submitted on which the Council was required to take action.

Chapter IV

Europe

United Nations concern in Europe in 1993 centred on the former Yugoslavia, on the Baltic States and on those fledgling countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States riven by civil unrest and ethnic strife.

Throughout the year, armed hostilities continued to rage in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia over the irreconcilable imperatives of State sovereignty, ethnic autonomy and territorial claims. Prospects for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina receded in early May when the Bosnian Serbs rejected the peace package worked out in negotiations under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. The United Nations peace-keeping plan for Croatia remained unimplemented. Pending an overall solution to the conflict in those countries, the immediate objectives of the United Nations and the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia continued to be to halt the fighting in order to facilitate negotiations and delivery of humanitarian assistance to the most affected populations, to stop the widespread violations of international humanitarian law and to reverse the effects of ethnic cleansing.

The Security Council adopted a number of resolutions strengthening the sanctions in force against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), designating safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina and authorizing corresponding enforcement measures. It extended and enlarged the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force, and created the International Tribunal to Prosecute Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. In December, the General Assembly urged the Council to lift the arms embargo applicable to the entire territory of the former Yugoslavia in respect of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to enable that country fully to exercise its right of self-defence against the unrelenting onslaught of the Bosnian Serbs—a proposal earlier rejected by the Council.

The United Nations Protection Force continued to maintain a presence in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia as a preventive measure in that potential flashpoint of strife.

The Assembly welcomed the withdrawal of Russian military forces from Lithuania and called for the conclusion of agreements on the withdrawal of such forces from Estonia and Latvia. The Council, responding to the widening conflict in Azerbaijan, where Armenian and Azerbaijani inhabitants of the enclave of Nagorny Karabakh had been fighting for five years, demanded a cessation of hostilities and the withdrawal of forces that had recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan. The Council also authorized the deployment of a United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, where Government and Abkhaz forces had been fighting for the control of Abkhazia. The Secretary-General dispatched a Special Envoy to Tajikistan to help obtain a cease-fire in the armed conflict between the Government and a coalition of so-called democratic and Islamist forces and to initiate negotiations.

Situation in the former Yugoslavia

General aspects

The complex crisis in the former Yugoslavia continued to elude resolution in 1993, notwithstanding international efforts to resolve it. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia were the main focus of concern, but principally the first two where fighting persisted, adding to the already tens of thousands of people dead or wounded and to the more than 3 million refugees and displaced persons.

The Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY) crafted a peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina that failed, however, to receive the approval of the Bosnian Serbs. In Croatia, the Co-Chairmen tried unsuccessfully to persuade the conflicting parties to implement fully the United Nations peace-keeping plan for that country. They also worked towards promoting a settlement of the dispute between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia arising over the name of the latter. In addition, the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) continued to monitor the situation along that country's border with Albania and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Several times during the year the Security Council extended and expanded UNPROFOR's mandate. The Council buttressed the sanctions regime in force against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and created, as its subsidiary organ, the International Tribunal to Prosecute Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.

Following the decision by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to deny continuation in the country of missions by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) that had been monitoring the situation in the towns of Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina as a measure of preventive diplomacy, the Council called on the Government to reconsider that decision and to agree to the resumption of the missions' activities and to an increase in the number of monitors.

The international relief operation, led by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), attempted to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population throughout the war-torn region by delivering convoys of basic humanitarian items and multi-sectoral assistance.

International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia

The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, which in August 1992 replaced the Conference on Yugoslavia under the aegis of the European Community (EC),⁽¹⁾ continued in 1993 to serve as the forum for negotiations to resolve the crisis in the former Yugoslavia.

The Conference's Steering Committee was co-chaired by representatives of the Secretary-General and of the EC presidency, who were, respectively, Cyrus R. Vance (United States), succeeded by Thorvald Stoltenberg (Norway) with effect from 14 May⁽²⁾ and Lord David Owen (United Kingdom). The Steering Committee's membership included representatives of EC, CSCE, the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), the five permanent members of the Security Council, representatives from neighbouring States, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and UNHCR.

In addition to an Arbitration Commission and a secretariat, the Conference maintained six working groups whose work in 1993 was described in reports by the Secretary-General⁽³⁾ and the Co-Chairmen.⁽⁴⁾

Between their first meeting in September 1992⁽¹⁾ and May 1993, the Co-Chairmen devoted their efforts towards hammering out a peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina that evolved into four constituent elements—a series of nine constitutional principles, a military agreement, a 10-province map and an agreement on interim governmental arrangements—and to completing signature of the plan by the three Bosnian sides to the conflict (see below, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina").

In Croatia, the Co-Chairmen sponsored talks aimed at achieving a comprehensive cease-fire in and around the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs), to be followed by discussions on economic confidence-building steps. They also negotiated an agreement between the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities regarding implementation of Council resolution 802(1993), adopted in the wake of the January military incursion by Croatia into a pink zone and a UNPA around the Maslenica Bridge (see below, under "Croatia").

During April, the Co-Chairmen consulted with Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia in an attempt to settle their dispute over the latter's name in connection with its application for membership in the United Nations and to promote confidence-building measures between them (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

United Nations Protection Force

In 1993, the United Nations Protection Force, established in 1992⁽⁵⁾ as an interim arrangement to create the conditions of peace and security required for the negotiation of an overall settlement of the Yugoslav crisis within the framework of the EC Conference on Yugoslavia (subsequently replaced by ICFY), was principally operational in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and had a liaison presence in Slovenia. It maintained its headquarters at Zagreb, Croatia.

In Croatia, the Force continued to be deployed in three UNPAs—areas where Serbs constituted a majority or a substantial minority of the population and where intercommunal tensions had led to armed conflict—divided into four sectors: Sector East (Eastern Slavonia, including Baranja and Western Srem), Sector North (northern Krajina), Sector South (southern Krajina) and Sector West (Western Slavonia). The cornerstone of its mandate remained the United Nations peace-keeping plan set out by the Secretary-General in a 1992 report, approved by the Council and based on which it created UNPROFOR (see below, under "Croatia").

The UNPROFOR mandate in Bosnia and Herzegovina was expanded and its strength correspondingly increased by the Council, which entrusted it with additional tasks: to modify the mechanism for approval and inspection of flights so as to provide for the authorization of humanitarian flights (resolution 816(1993)); and to take the necessary measures, including the use of force, in reply to bombardments of or armed incursions into the safe areas, or to any deliberate obstruction of UNPROFOR's freedom of movement or of protected humanitarian convoys (836(1993)). At the Council's request, the Secretary-General examined options (838(1993)) for deploying international observers on the borders of the country, with priority to its borders with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to monitor the arms embargo and other sanctions.

In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, UNPROFOR was to monitor and report any developments in the border areas that could undermine confidence and stability in that country and threaten its territory (see below, under "Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia"). It was also to coordinate closely with the CSCE mission there⁽⁶⁾

The initial 12-month period for which UNPROFOR was established expired on 21 February 1993. It was, however, extended by Council resolutions during the year for successive additional interim periods ending on: 31 March (resolution 807(1993)), 30 June (815(1993)), 30 September (847(1993)), 1 and 5 October (for 24 hours and for four days (869(1993) and 870(1993)), and 31 March 1994 (871(1993)). The extensions were applicable to all UNPROFOR operations in the former Yugoslavia.

At the last mandate extension, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention to establish three subordinate commands within UNPROFOR—UNPROFOR (Croatia), UNPROFOR (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and UNPROFOR (the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia)—while retaining the existing dispositions in all other respects for the direction and conduct of the United Nations operation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

Composition

As at 31 December 1993, the strength of UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslavia stood at 26,947 troops, all ranks. Of that number, 675 were civilian police and 578 were military observers. The troops were provided by: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, Czech Republic, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, Jordan, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Spain, Sweden, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Lieutenant-General Satish Nambiar (India) served as Force Commander from 4 March 1992 to 2 March 1993; he was replaced by Lieutenant-General Lars-Eric Wahlgren (Sweden), who served from 3 March to 30 June. General Jean Cot (France) was appointed Force Commander from 1 July.

On 1 December,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General proposed the appointment of Yasushi Akashi as his Special Representative for the former Yugoslavia and Chief of Mission of UNPROFOR, to which the Council agreed on 2 December.⁽⁸⁾ The appointment was made to relieve Thorvald Stoltenberg of the duties of Special Representative, since, as Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, he was heavily engaged in peace negotiations.

Financing

Report of the Secretary-General (June). According to a June report of the Secretary-General⁽⁹⁾ assessments apportioned among Member States in respect of UNPROFOR for the period from its inception on 12 January 1992 to 30 June 1993 totalled $716,754,979 as at 24 May 1993, while contributions received for that period amounted to $469,435,688, leaving a shortfall of $247,319,291. Voluntary contributions received from 15 October 1992 to 30 April 1993 in cash, services and supplies were valued at some $7.8 million. Contributions to the Trust Fund for the Common Costs of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Command, established in December 1992 to cover additional administrative expenses resulting from an enlargement of the Force in order to provide protection to humanitarian relief workers, totalled $4,024,261 as at 24 May 1993, while expenditures through 30 April 1993 amounted to $3,735,900.

Having been informed by the Secretary-General on 10 March that the cost of maintaining UNPROFOR for the mandate period from 21 February to 31 March 1993 was estimated at $61,184,000 gross ($60,440,000 net) and that an unencumbered balance of $33,424,100 gross ($33,170,700 net) remained from appropriations for the period 12 January 1992 to 20 February 1993, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) concurred with his request for authorization to enter into commitments of $27,759,900 gross ($27,269,300 net) for the period from 21 February to 31 March 1993. These amounts represented the difference between estimated requirements for the extension period ending 31 March 1993, of $61,184,000 gross ($60,440,000 net) and unencumbered balance of appropriations for the period ending 20 February 1993 of $33,424,100 gross ($33,170,700 net). The Advisory Committee also concurred with the Secretary-General's requests to extend the first financial period of UNPROFOR by 39 days, up to and including 31 March 1993, and to consolidate and administer the resources provided to UNPROFOR from 12 January 1992 to 31 March 1993.

Expenditures from 12 January 1992 to 31 March 1993 totalled $579,309,400 gross ($575,583,200 net) and the cost of maintaining the Force for the period 1 April to 30 June 1993 was projected at $227,584,900 gross ($226,132,800 net). In April, the Secretary-General received ACABQ's concurrence to enter into reduced commitments of $151,193,575 gross ($149,477,002 net) for that period, inclusive of the $141,193,575 gross ($139,477,002 net) authorized by the General Assembly in 1992⁽¹⁰⁾ and $10 million under the terms of a 1991 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1992-1993 biennium⁽¹¹⁾ Not included in that amount were additional start-up requirements for expanded operations (in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia) estimated at $79,137,400.

The estimated cost of maintaining UNPROFOR beyond 30 June 1993 to 30 June 1994, should its mandate be extended, was $77,065,450 gross ($76,484,725 net) per month, or $924,785,400 gross ($917,816,700 net) for the 12-month period. Reimbursements due to troop-contributing States through 30 April 1993 were estimated at $118,757,000.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly extend the first UNPROFOR financial period to 31 March 1993; appropriate $255,344,800 gross ($253,402,100 net), including the amounts for which ACABQ concurrence had been received, for maintaining UNPROFOR from 21 February to 30 June; appropriate and apportion the amount for additional start-up requirements; and appropriate or grant commitment authorization of such additional amounts as necessary for maintaining UNPROFOR beyond 30 June. He also recommended that the Assembly establish for the Force a special financial period of 12 calendar months, from 1 July to 30 June, effective 1 July 1993, and apply special arrangements under article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations dealing with retention beyond the financial period of unliquidated obligations owed to Governments.

ACABQ, in July⁽¹²⁾ reduced the cost of additional start-up requirements to $55 million gross and recommended appropriation and assessment of $200 million gross to maintain UNPROFOR from 1 July to 30 September 1993. It concurred with the Secretary-General's other requests for appropriations for the periods from 21 February to 30 June, including assessments of $86,391,325 gross ($86,655,798 net) for the maintenance of UNPROFOR from 1 April to 30 June. Also in July,⁽¹³⁾ ACABQ considered that certain aspects of peace-keeping operations regarding international contractual personnel needed to be brought to the Assembly's attention, including whether remuneration of civilian staff should reflect primarily their country of recruitment or the quality of service delivered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

On 14 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted resolution 47/210 B without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, in which the Council endorsed the sending of a group of military liaison officers to Yugoslavia to promote maintenance of the cease-fire,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Protection Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 847(1993) of 30 June 1993,

Recalling its resolutions 46/233 of 19 March 1992 and 47/210 A of 22 December 1992 on the financing of the Force,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Expressing concern about the deteriorating financial situation with regard to the Force owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears,

Also expressing concern about the delays in submission of budget documents until well into the financial period of the Force, which have contributed to the deteriorating financial situation,

Expressing deep concern about the adverse effect that the deteriorating financial situation has on reimbursement to troop contributors, placing an additional burden on these countries and putting at risk the continuing supply of troops to the Force and, consequently, the success of the operation,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the terms of the present resolution, and approves on an exceptional basis the special arrangements for the United Nations Protection Force with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Force shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, referred to in paragraph 11 below, relevant information on the steps taken to comply with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee in its report and, in particular, the recommendation contained in paragraph 18 of the report of the Advisory Committee on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy, to improve management, and to include in his report to the General Assembly mentioned in paragraph 2 above the steps taken to improve management;

7. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in General Assembly resolution 46/233 the amount of 27,759,900 United States dollars gross (27,269,300 dollars net), authorized and apportioned with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 47/210 A, for the operation of the Force for the period from 21 February to 31 March 1993;

8. Decides further to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 227,584,900 dollars gross (226,132,800 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 141,193,575 dollars gross (139,477,002 dollars net) authorized and apportioned with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 47/210 A, and the amount of 10 million dollars authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of paragraph 1 of Assembly resolution 46/187 of 20 December 1991, for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1993, inclusive;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 55 million dollars gross to meet the additional start-up requirements owing to the enlargement of the Force in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Force in an amount not to exceed 200 million dollars gross (198,257,825 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 30 September 1993, and, subject to the Security Council deciding to continue the Force beyond 30 September 1993 and to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into, to enter into commitments for the operation of the Force at a rate not to exceed 65 million dollars gross (64,419,275 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 October to 31 December 1993, the said amounts to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

13. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 264,473 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1993, inclusive;

Reports of the Secretary-General (December).

In a 3 December report⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that assessments apportioned among Member States for the period 12 January 1992 to 31 December 1993 totalled $1,250,948,414 as at 12 November 1993, while contributions received for that period amounted to $873,685,791, leaving a shortfall of $377,262,623. The Trust Fund for the Common Costs of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Command received income of $5,426,621 as at 31 October, including contributions from Member States, public donations and interest, while Fund expenditures amounted to $3,131,600, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,295,021.

Resources made available to UNPROFOR from 12 January 1992 to 31 December 1993 totalled $1,256,894,300 gross ($1,248,231,650 net) and expenditures for that period were estimated at $1,237,223,600 gross ($1,228,633,650 net), leaving an unencumbered balance of $19,670,700 gross ($19,598,000 net). An additional $3,631,689 in interest and $75,372 in miscellaneous income were received for the same period. Estimated expenditures from 1 April to 30 June 1993 totalled $263,383,200 gross ($262,003,800 net), leaving an unencumbered balance of $19,201,700 gross ($19,129,000 net). Reimbursements due to troop-contributing States through 30 September 1993 were estimated at $75,201,700.

In a 9 December report on the financing of 17 peace-keeping operations⁽¹⁵⁾ including UNPROFOR, the Secretary-General indicated that the cost of maintaining UNPROFOR from 1 July 1993 to 31 March 1994 was estimated at $897,980,900 gross ($891,993,300 net), an increase of $502,980,900 gross ($500,477,700 net) above the amount already authorized. Cost estimates for the 12-month period after 31 March 1994, should UNPROFOR's mandate be extended beyond that date, amounted to $1,244,806,200 gross ($1,232,835,900 net). The amount thus required for the 10-month period from 1 July 1993 to 30 April 1994 was estimated at $606,714,800 gross ($603,214,000 net), which represented the increased requirements, plus $103,733,900 gross ($102,736,300 net).

Pending consideration at its February 1994 session of the Secretary-General's full budget report, ACABQ, also in December,⁽¹⁶⁾ recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into further commitments up to $450 million gross ($446 million net) until 31 March 1994, in addition to the existing commitment authority of $395 million through 31 December 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/470 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into additional commitments up to the amount of $383,408,000 United States dollars gross (380 million dollars net) for the United Nations Protection Force for the period from 1 July 1993 to 28 February 1994;

(b) Decided at that time to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount of 166,479,800 dollars gross (165 million dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

(c) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,479,800 dollars for the period from 1 July 1993 to 28 February 1994;

(d) Further decided that, in view of the expiration of the commitment authority on 28 February 1994, priority should be given to the cost estimates for the Force in the consideration by the General Assembly of peace-keeping budgets.

General Assembly decision 48/470

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/48/819) without vote, 22 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/48/L.22); agenda item 136.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 87.

International Tribunal

During the year, the Security Council created the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. The first in a series of steps leading to that action was the adoption by the Council in 1992 of two resolutions. One held that persons who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims were individually responsible in respect of such breaches and called on States and international humanitarian organizations to collate substantiated information relating to such breaches (771(1992));⁽¹⁷⁾ the other reiterated the call for substantiated information and requested the Secretary-General to establish an impartial Commission of Experts to examine information submitted and report to the Council on the Commission's conclusions (780(1992)).⁽¹⁸⁾

Communications. In accordance with the 1992 Security Council resolutions cited above, Austria⁽¹⁹⁾ Canada⁽²⁰⁾ Switzerland⁽²¹⁾ and the United States⁽²²⁾ conveyed information to the Secretary-General on acts of wilful killing, torture of prisoners, abuse of civilians in detention centres, obstruction of the delivery of food and medical supplies to civilians, deliberate attacks on non-combatants, wanton devastation and destruction of property, and mass forcible expulsion and deportation of civilians in the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

Additional submissions and related information were provided by Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽²³⁾ Croatia⁽²⁴⁾ and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁽²⁵⁾

Also drawn to the attention of the Council were the 1993 reports of the five-member Commission of Experts, a report on the preliminary exploration of a mass grave site near Vukovar, Croatia, and the periodic reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia (see PART THREE, Chapter X) as well as the report of an EC investigative mission on the massive detention and rape of women, particularly Muslim women, in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see below, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina").

Preparatory to the Tribunal's creation, submissions were transmitted to the Council by France⁽²⁶⁾ Italy⁽²⁷⁾ and Sweden, on behalf of CSCE⁽²⁸⁾ containing proposed modalities for the establishment of such a tribunal, its attributes, features and institutional aspects.

In addition, the Commission of Experts, in its first interim report⁽²⁹⁾ which concluded that grave breaches and other violations of international humanitarian law had been committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, noted that, should the Council or another competent organ of the United Nations decide to establish an ad hoc war crimes tribunal, such an initiative would be consistent with the direction of the Commission's work.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (22 February)

The Security Council convened on 22 February to consider the question of establishing an international tribunal. It invited Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, at their request, to participate without vote under rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 808(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling paragraph 10 of its resolution 764(1992) of 13 July 1992, in which it reaffirmed that all parties are bound to comply with the obligations under international humanitarian law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and that persons who commit or order the commission of grave breaches of the Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches,

Recalling also its resolution 771(1992) of 13 August 1992, in which, inter alia, it demanded that all parties and others concerned in the former Yugoslavia, and all military forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina, immediately cease and desist from all breaches of international humanitarian law,

Recalling further its resolution 780(1992) of 6 October 1992, in which it requested the Secretary-General to establish, as a matter of urgency, an impartial Commission of Experts to examine and analyse the information submitted pursuant to resolutions 771(1992) and 780(1992), together with such further information as the Commission of Experts may obtain, with a view to providing the Secretary-General with its conclusions on the evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia,

Having considered the interim report of the Commission of Experts established by resolution 780(1992), in which the Commission observed that a decision to establish an ad hoc international tribunal in relation to events in the territory of the former Yugoslavia would be consistent with the direction of its work,

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

Expressing once again its grave alarm at continuing reports of widespread violations of international humanitarian law occurring within the territory of the former Yugoslavia, including reports of mass killings and the continuance of the practice of "ethnic cleansing",

Determining that this situation constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to put an end to such crimes and to take effective measures to bring to justice the persons who are responsible for them,

Convinced that in the particular circumstances of the former Yugoslavia the establishment of an international tribunal would enable this aim to be achieved and would contribute to the restoration and maintenance of peace,

Noting in this regard the recommendation by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia for the establishment of such a tribunal,

Noting also with grave concern the "report of the European Community investigative mission into the treatment of Muslim women in the former Yugoslavia",

Noting further the report of the committee of jurists submitted by France, the report of the commission of jurists submitted by Italy, and the report transmitted by the Permanent Representative of Sweden on behalf of the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE),

1. Decides that an international tribunal shall be established for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit for consideration by the Council at the earliest possible date, and if possible no later than 60 days after the adoption of the present resolution, a report on all aspects of this matter, including specific proposals and where appropriate options for the effective and expeditious implementation of the decision contained in paragraph 1 above, taking into account suggestions put forward in this regard by Member States;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 808(1993)

22 February 1993 Meeting 3175 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25314).

Communications. A number of States, responding to the Security Council's request for specific proposals for the establishment of an international tribunal, communicated their views to the Secretary-General. Egypt, Iran, Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal and Turkey (the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina) submitted OIC's recommendations.⁽³⁰⁾ Also communicating their views were: Brazil,⁽³¹⁾ Canada,⁽³²⁾ Mexico,⁽³³⁾ the Netherlands,⁽³⁴⁾ the Russian Federation,⁽³⁵⁾ Slovenia⁽³⁶⁾ and the United States⁽³⁷⁾

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) said on 19 May⁽³⁸⁾ that all perpetrators of war crimes committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia should be prosecuted and punished under national laws. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), among those advocating the establishment of a permanent international tribunal, regarded as discriminatory the attempts to establish an ad hoc tribunal. War crimes, it said, were not committed in the territory of one State alone; hence, the selective approach to the former Yugoslavia was contrary to the principle of universality. The Council had no mandate to establish an international tribunal and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) considered the drive to create one to be politically motivated.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council, the Secretary-General submitted a 3 May report⁽³⁹⁾ which took account of the suggestions put forward by the States mentioned above, in particular proposals submitted by France⁽²⁶⁾ Italy⁽²⁷⁾ and Sweden on behalf of CSCE⁽²⁸⁾ the views of the Commission of Experts and information gathered by that Commission. The report also took account of the suggestions or comments put forward by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Chile, China, Denmark, Germany, Ireland, Italy, New Zealand, Portugal, Spain, and the United Kingdom.

The report examined the legal basis for the establishment of the International Tribunal, set out in detail its competence in respect of the law it would apply, the persons to whom the law would be applied, including considerations as to the principle of individual criminal responsibility, its territorial and temporal reach and the relation of its work to that of national courts. It set out detailed views on the organization of the Tribunal (including the composition of the three Chambers, the qualification and election of judges, rules of procedure and evidence, the Prosecutor and the Registry responsible for servicing the Tribunal), on the investigation and pre-trial proceedings, on trial and post-trial proceedings, and on cooperation and judicial assistance. A concluding chapter dealt with a number of general and organizational issues.

The text of the Statute of the International Tribunal was annexed to the report.

With regard to the legal basis for establishing the Tribunal, the report stated that the Security Council would be establishing, as an enforcement measure under Chapter VII, a subsidiary organ within the terms of Article 29 of the Charter of the United Nations, but one of a judicial nature. That organ would perform its functions independently of political considerations and would not be subject to Council authority or control with regard to the performance of its judicial functions. However, the life span of the Tribunal would be linked to the restoration and maintenance of international peace and security in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and Council decisions related thereto.

In a 19 May addendum to his report⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the costs of the Tribunal at approximately $31.2 million for its first year of operation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (25 May and 20 August)

The Security Council met on 25 May to consider the Secretary-General's 3 May report. At their request, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a The Council unanimously adopted resolution 827(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 2 of resolution 808(1993),

Expressing once again its grave alarm at continuing reports of widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law occurring within the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and especially in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including reports of mass killings, massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of women, and the continuance of the practice of "ethnic cleansing", including for the acquisition and the holding of territory,

Determining that this situation continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to put an end to such crimes and to take effective measures to bring to justice the persons who are responsible for them,

Convinced that in the particular circumstances of the former Yugoslavia the establishment as an ad hoc measure by the Council of an international tribunal and the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law would enable this aim to be achieved and would contribute to the restoration and maintenance of peace,

Believing that the establishment of an international tribunal and the prosecution of persons responsible for the above-mentioned violations of international humanitarian law will contribute to ensuring that such violations are halted and effectively redressed,

Noting in this regard the recommendation by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia for the establishment of such a tribunal,

Reaffirming in this regard its decision in resolution 808(1993) that an international tribunal shall be established for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991,

Considering that, pending the appointment of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal, the Commission of Experts established pursuant to resolution 780(1992) should continue on an urgent basis the collection of information relating to evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of international humanitarian law as proposed in its interim report,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Decides hereby to establish an international tribunal for the sole purpose of prosecuting persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia between 1 January 1991 and a date to be determined by the Security Council upon the restoration of peace and to this end to adopt the Statute of the International Tribunal annexed to the above-mentioned report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the judges of the International Tribunal, upon their election, any suggestions received from States for the rules of procedure and evidence called for in Article 15 of the Statute of the International Tribunal;

4. Decides that all States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with the present resolution and the Statute of the International Tribunal and that consequently all States shall take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of the present resolution and the Statute, including the obligation of States to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under Article 29 of the Statute;

5. Urges States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute funds, equipment and services to the International Tribunal, including the offer of expert personnel;

6. Decides that the determination of the seat of the International Tribunal is subject to the conclusion of appropriate arrangements between the United Nations and the Netherlands acceptable to the Council, and that the International Tribunal may sit elsewhere when it considers it necessary for the efficient exercise of its functions;

7. Decides also that the work of the International Tribunal shall be carried out without prejudice to the right of the victims to seek, through appropriate means, compensation for damages incurred as a result of violations of international humanitarian law;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to implement urgently the present resolution and in particular to make practical arrangements for the effective functioning of the International Tribunal at the earliest time and to report periodically to the Council;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 857(1993)

20 August 1993 Meeting 3265 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26331).

Communications. Following adoption of Security Council resolution 827(1993), the Secretary-General, on 26 May,⁽⁴¹⁾ requested the inclusion of an additional item in the agenda of the forty-seventh session of General Assembly entitled "Election of judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991". He also requested that the item be considered directly in plenary meeting. Based on the urgency of the request, the Assembly, on 28 May, decided to waive rule 40 of its rules of procedure requiring a meeting of the General Committee on the question and approved the request.

On 20 August,⁽⁴²⁾ the Security Council President transmitted resolution 857(1993) to the Assembly President. By a 26 August memorandum,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the list of the 23 candidates nominated by the Council and the procedure for electing the 11 judges of the Tribunal. On 1 September⁽⁴⁴⁾ he further transmitted the curricula vitae of the nominees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 September, following its consideration of the nominees, the General Assembly adopted decision 47/328 without vote. By that decision it elected the following judges of the International Tribunal for a four-year term of office beginning on 17 November 1993: Georges Michel Abi-Saab (Egypt); Antonio Cassese (Italy); Jules Deschenes (Canada); Adolphus Godwin Karibi-Whyte (Nigeria); Germain Le Foyer De Costil (France); Li Haopei (China); Gabrielle Kirk McDonald (United States of America); Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica); Rustam S. Sidhwa (Pakistan); Ninian Stephen (Australia); Lal Chan Vohrah (Malaysia).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 October, the Security Council convened to consider the appointment of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal and adopted without vote resolution 877(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993 and 827(1993) of 25 May 1993,

Having regard to Article 16 (4) of the Statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991,

Having considered the nomination by the Secretary-General of Mr. Ramon Escovar-Salom for the position of Prosecutor of the International Tribunal, Appoints Mr. Ramon Escovar-Salom as Prosecutor of the International Tribunal.

Security Council resolution 877(1993)

21 October 1993 Meeting 3296 Adopted without vote

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26608).

Activities

Following their election on 17 September, the 11 judges of the International Tribunal began their four-year term on 17 November with an inaugural meeting at the Peace Palace (The Hague, Netherlands). They were scheduled to continue meeting until 30 November. At the inaugural meeting, the Tribunal elected Antonio Cassese (Italy) as President and Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica) as Vice-President, determined the membership of its Chambers, undertook a preliminary consideration of its rules of procedure and evidence, and discussed future working arrangements.

The Tribunal scheduled its second and third meetings to take place in 1994 at The Hague from 17 January to 4 February and from 11 to 22 April.

Financing

On 26 May⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991". The Assembly, on 28 May, approved that request.

ACABQ, on 22 July⁽⁴⁵⁾ drew the Assembly's attention to a 2 July request from the Secretary-General, made under the terms of a 1991 resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1992-1993 biennium⁽¹¹⁾ to enter into commitments not exceeding $1,568,500 for the Tribunal's anticipated expenses in 1993. Pending an Assembly decision on the nature of the financing of the Tribunal, ACABQ granted the Secretary-General authority to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding $500,000 for immediate requirements.

In a 20 August Secretariat note⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Secretary-General proposed an article for inclusion in the Statute of the International Tribunal providing that its expenses would be borne by the regular budget of the Organization. The Security Council approved that approach and included the proposed article in the Statute adopted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/235 without vote.

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

The General Assembly,

Having considered Security Council resolution 808(1993) of 22 February 1993, on the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and Council resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, by which the Council adopted the statute of the International Tribunal,

Having also considered the note by the Secretariat on the financing of the International Tribunal and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Reaffirms, in the context of Security Council resolution 827(1993) and with respect to the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the role of the General Assembly as set out in Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, as the organ to consider and approve the budget of the Organization, as well as the apportionment of its expenses among Member States;

3. Expresses concern that advice given to the Security Council by the Secretariat on the nature of the financing of the International Tribunal did not respect the role of the General Assembly as set out in Article 17 of the Charter;

4. Requests the President of the General Assembly to bring to the attention of the President of the Security Council the contents of the present resolution;

5. Endorses the recommendation of the Advisory Committee to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not to exceed 500,000 United States dollars to provide for the immediate and urgent requirements of the International Tribunal for its initial activities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, during the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly and before 31 December 1993, detailed cost estimates for the International Tribunal, separate from the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995, to be financed through assessed contributions and, pending a final decision on the manner of apportioning the expenses of the International Tribunal, to finance its activities through a separate account outside the regular budget;

7. Invites Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the International Tribunal both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

8. Decides to include in the draft agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991".

14 September 1993 Meeting 110 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/47/1014) without vote, 10 September (meeting 76); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/47/L.49); agenda item 155.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an 8 December report⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General revised his initial estimate for financing the International Tribunal during 1993 from $1,568,500 to $450,800, based on the schedule established for the rest of the year.

The Secretary-General presented for approval estimated requirements of $33,200,000 for the Tribunal in the programme budget for the 1994-1995 biennium.

Requirements for staff assessment in respect of posts proposed for the Tribunal were estimated at $4,753,300 and would be offset in the same amount by income from staff assessment.

ACABQ noted on 15 December⁽⁴⁸⁾ that, pending a final decision on the manner of apportionment of the Tribunal's expenses, they were to be financed through a separate account outside the United Nations regular budget and that the General Assembly had invited Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the Tribunal. It further noted that pledges amounting to $3 million had been recorded in the trust fund established by the Secretary-General for that purpose.

ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into commitments not exceeding $5.6 million for the first six months of 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/461 without a vote.

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions:

(a) Endorsed the recommendations of the Advisory Committee contained in paragraphs 8 and 9 of its report;

(b) Authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments not to exceed $5.6 million United States dollars for the first six months of 1994, pending a final decision by the Assembly on the mode of financing the International Tribunal and without prejudice to recommendations that the Advisory Committee may make to the Assembly and the decisions that the Assembly may take thereon with regard to administrative matters, including the location of the Court, the levels and numbers of staff and the conditions of service of the judges and staff;

(c) Decided to consider at its resumed forty-eighth session the question of the mode of financing of the International Tribunal and the conditions of service and allowances of its members.

Sanctions

In 1993, the Security Council took action to strengthen the sanctions regime against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) that had been imposed by it in 1991 and 1992. The sanctions included a general and complete arms embargo applicable to the whole of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (resolution 713(1991)),⁽⁵¹⁾ comprehensive and mandatory sanctions to be implemented by all States (757(1992)),⁽⁵²⁾ and prohibition of transshipment through Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of specific commodities and types of products (787(1992))⁽⁵¹⁾ unless authorized by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) (Committee on sanctions).⁽⁵²⁾

In April, by resolution 819(1993), the Council demanded that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease the supply of arms, equipment and services to Bosnian Serb paramilitary units in Bosnia and Herzegovina and, by resolution 820(1993), it strengthened the sanctions regime against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) effective nine days after the resolution's adoption, unless the Bosnian Serb party signed the Vance-Owen peace plan in full and ceased its military attacks in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see below). The strengthened sanctions would: prevent diversion to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of commodities and products, by land and sea, said to be destined for other places; require authorization by the Committee on sanctions for the transshipment of commodities and products through that country on the Danube River; forbid vessels registered in that country, owned or operated by it, or suspected of violating Council resolutions, to pass through installations within the territory of Member States; and authorize Member States to freeze any funds in their territories belonging to that country. Since the Bosnian Serb party maintained its rejection of the peace plan by the scheduled deadline, the new sanctions went into force on 26 April.

To facilitate the implementation of the sanctions regime, the Council further took action on the possible deployment of international observers on the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina with Croatia and with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), giving priority to its borders with the latter. An exemption from the arms embargo for Bosnia and Herzegovina was initiated by 22 Member States, as well as by that country itself, based on Article 51 of the Charter. (For details on these topics and on the related ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, see below, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina".)

During 1993, a number of States communicated to the Secretary-General the measures they had taken to implement the sanctions mandated by the Council.

Navigation on the Danube

Romania, in a 27 January declaration,⁽⁵³⁾ reported on measures it had taken to implement the sanctions in resolutions 757(1992) and 787(1992). The declaration also described how, on 18, 23 and 25 January, five separate convoys carrying petroleum products and towed by Yugoslav tugboats had succeeded in navigating the Danube from Ukraine to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) despite Romania's efforts to intercept the convoy for inspection. On 28 January⁽⁵⁴⁾ Bulgaria, referring to the 18 January convoy which had passed through the Bulgaria-Romania sector of the Danube, reported that its attempts to intercept it were likewise unsuccessful.

Both Bulgaria and Romania reported having brought these violations to the attention of all concerned, including Ukraine and the Committee on sanctions.

The Security Council, following consultations among its members on 28 January, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁵⁵⁾ to the media on behalf of the Council:

"In connection with letters of 27 January 1993 from the Charges d'affaires of Bulgaria and Romania to the President of the Security Council, the members of the Council heard a report from the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) about Yugoslav vessels carrying oil from Ukraine to Serbia by way of the Danube, a flagrant violation of mandatory Security Council resolutions.

"The members of the Council are concerned that these shipments are reported to have left Ukrainian territory after the adoption of resolution 757(1992) and indeed may have left after the adoption of resolution 787(1992). They call on the Government of Ukraine to ensure that no further such shipments are permitted.

"The members of the Council are also extremely concerned that some of the vessels have already reached Serbia. In this regard, they demand that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) comply fully with the relevant resolutions. They have asked the President of the Council to convey their concern to the representatives of Romania and Bulgaria, to remind them of their clear obligations under the relevant resolutions and to seek an explanation of their failure to fulfil them. They have asked the President to draw particular attention to the relevant resolutions, which make clear the responsibility of all riparian States to take necessary measures to ensure that shipping on the Danube is in accordance with Security Council resolutions, including such enforcement measures commensurate with the specific circumstances as may be necessary to halt such shipping. The members of the Council reaffirm their support for vigorous enforcement of the relevant resolutions, and they are clear that the riparian States have the means to fulfil this obligation and that they must do so forthwith."

Communications. Ukraine responded on 29 January⁽⁵⁶⁾ that, according to its investigations, no oil or petroleum products had been shipped to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) by Ukrainian flag vessels after the adoption of resolutions 757(1992) and 787(1992). Documents showed that the vessels referred to had been loaded in the Danube from tankers with petroleum products shipped by companies of Bulgaria, Cyprus, Greece, the Russian Federation, and Turkey among others, and that their destination was other than Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Ukraine provided data relevant to the movement of vessels with petroleum products through Ukrainian waters in the Danube between 30 November 1992 and 23 January 1993.

Ukraine, in a 29 January statement⁽⁵⁷⁾ said that it had been reliably established that the convoys were to deliver their cargo to Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following further consultations on 10 February regarding the situation on the Danube, the Security Council authorized its President to make the statement below to the media:⁽⁵⁸⁾

"The members of the Security Council have heard a report from the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) about the detention of Romanian vessels on the Danube by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

"They have learned that the Minister of Transport of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) has threatened to detain more Romanian vessels if Romania does not allow the passage of Yugoslav vessels on the Danube. They have also learned that the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) has addressed a letter to the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) informing him that the Romanian vessels would be released without further delay, which according to information provided by the Charge d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of Romania to the United Nations has not yet happened.

"The members of the Council recall their statement of 28 January 1993 about the responsibility of States to enforce mandatory Security Council resolutions, with particular reference to Yugoslav vessels attempting to violate those resolutions by way of the Danube. They commend the Romanian Government for the action it has since taken in this regard and reaffirm once again their full support for vigorous enforcement of the relevant resolutions.

"They also recall that under Article 103 of the Charter, the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the Charter prevail over their obligations under any other international agreement.

"The members of the Council condemn any such retaliatory action and threats of such action by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). It is wholly unacceptable for those authorities to take retaliatory measures in response to action by a State in fulfilment of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. They demand that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) release forthwith the Romanian vessels they have unjustifiedly detained, and that they desist from further unlawful detentions."

Communications. On 26 February⁽⁵⁹⁾ Hungary informed the Security Council President that because Romania had denied Yugoslav convoys access to the "Iron Gate" lock, some 45 Yugoslav barges were blocking the Danube, bringing navigation on that vital international waterway to a complete halt. The situation was inflicting further losses on the economies of the riparian States, already severely damaged by the sanctions regime. Austria, on 2 March⁽⁶⁰⁾ referring to the blockade as illegal and retaliatory, asked the Council to remedy the situation.

On 10 March⁽⁶¹⁾ Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), replying to the Council President's call of 26 February demanding removal of the blockade, stated that all the barges and ships in question, owned by a Yugoslav private holding company, were removed on 2 March and that navigation in the Danube had been restored. The temporary blockade, neither caused nor encouraged by the Government of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), had been instigated by independent trade unions of Yugoslav private shipping companies.

Hungary, on 18 May⁽⁶²⁾ drew attention to the continued collection by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of transit charges from vessels passing through the Yugoslav sector of the Danube. Austria reported on 30 July⁽⁶³⁾ that the Danube situation was deteriorating owing to a recent blockade of the river at Belgrade; it expressed concern that States acting in accordance with the Council resolutions on sanctions were being confronted with acts of retortion. Hungary, referring to the same situation on 11 October⁽⁶⁴⁾ stated that the blockade had been initiated in mid-July by two Serbian non-governmental organizations. Tolls had also begun to be imposed since 30 August by the so-called Republic of Serbian Krajina (also referred to as the Republic of Krajina).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 13 October to consider the item "Navigation on the Danube river in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)" and authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁶⁵⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3290.

"The Security Council has learned with deep concern that the blocking of the Danube by two Serbian non-governmental organizations is still continuing and deplores the acquiescence of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), which is reflected in the fact that they have failed to take any action to prevent these acts. It condemns these deliberate and unjustified acts of interference with the river traffic of several Member States of the United Nations. It emphasizes the importance it attaches to the free and unhindered navigation on the Danube which is essential for legitimate trade in the region. It reminds the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of their previous written commitment to secure free and safe navigation on this vital international waterway.

"The Security Council is also concerned that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continue to impose tolls on foreign vessels transiting the section of the Danube which passes through the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). By extracting these payments, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) violates its international obligations. The Security Council rejects any attempt to justify, on whatever ground, the imposition of tolls on the Danube. It demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and any others imposing similar tolls cease such action immediately.

"The Security Council condemns these illegal actions and reaffirms that it is wholly unacceptable for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take retaliatory measures in response to action by a State in fulfilment of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. It reminds the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of its own international obligations and demands that its authorities ensure free movement of international traffic on the Danube.

"The Security Council remains seized of the matter."

On 20 December⁽⁶⁶⁾ Ukraine drew attention to the customs law enacted by the Yugoslav authorities on 26 November, requiring vessels transiting through the Yugoslav sector of the Danube to pay a deposit equivalent to 50 per cent of the cargo's value. Ukraine asked that the Council take urgent measures to stop the illegal actions to which Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was resorting.

Special economic assistance

Between January and June 1993, Bulgaria⁽⁶⁷⁾ Hungary⁽⁶⁸⁾ Romania⁽⁶⁹⁾ Slovakia⁽⁷⁰⁾ and Ukraine⁽⁷¹⁾ informed the Security Council President and the Secretary-General of economic difficulties they were undergoing as a result of their compliance with Council resolutions 757(1992), 787(1992) and 820(1993) and appealed for special economic assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter. The subject was further addressed in a letter to the Security Council President from Bulgaria, Romania and Ukraine⁽⁷²⁾ regarding sanctions implementation.

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) reported the devastating impact of the sanctions on its economy and on the health and social well-being of its population, owing to the long procedure of the Committee on sanctions⁽⁷³⁾ for granting import approvals⁽⁷³⁾ and complained about the Committee's failure to reply to its requests to import humanitarian items, to export certain commodities or to lift the freeze on its assets abroad.⁽⁷⁴⁾ It also provided data showing a serious decline in the country's health care services.⁽⁷⁵⁾ In November⁽⁷⁶⁾ Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) transmitted an appeal by the Holy Synod of the Serbian Orthodox Church (Cetinje, 31 October-3 November) for the lifting of what the Synod called the inhuman sanctions.

The Security Council met on 18 June and unanimously adopted resolution 843(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 724(1991) concerning Yugoslavia and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious of the fact that an increasing number of requests for assistance have been received under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991), at its 65th meeting, set up a working group to examine the above-mentioned requests,

1. Confirms that the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) is entrusted with the task of examining requests for assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Welcomes the establishment by the Committee of its working group and invites the Committee, as it completes the examination of each request, to make recommendations to the President of the Security Council for appropriate action.

Security Council resolution 843(1993)

18 June 1993 Meeting 3240 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25956).

Recommendations of Committee on sanctions. On 2 July⁽⁷⁷⁾ the Acting Chairman of the Committee on sanctions transmitted to the Security Council President recommendations for special economic assistance to five States—Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, Uganda and Ukraine—together with their applications for such assistance and supporting explanatory material.

The Council President, on 6 July⁽⁷⁸⁾ transmitted the Committee's recommendations to the Secretary-General with a request for their implementation (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Humanitarian assistance programme

Under an international humanitarian assistance programme, various bodies of the United Nations system, EC, a number of non-governmental organizations and ICRC continued to deliver humanitarian assistance to the region. UNHCR remained the lead agency, with UNPROFOR providing escorts to humanitarian convoys, transport and engineering support, and determining the safest routes for the convoys.

The ICFY Working Group on Humanitarian Issues⁽⁴⁾ reviewed the implementation of the programme at Geneva on 16 July. At a meeting on 8 October, it launched a new consolidated appeal revising needs for the period October to December 1993 and putting forward the requirements for the first half of 1994, totalling $697 million.

Contributions to the programme during the year consisted of $297,700,000 in cash and $206,700,000 in kind. Humanitarian assistance in metric tonnage provided to affected populations in the former Yugoslavia in 1993 was as follows: Bosnia and Herzegovina—267,763 metric tonnes; Croatia—92,193; the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—2,967; Montenegro—3,953; and Serbia—38,614. Beneficiaries numbered 4,259,000 as at October 1993.

(See also below, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina"; and PART THREE, Chapters III and XV.)

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Despite numerous cease-fire agreements and reaffirmations of peace, the warring parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina, mainly the Muslim-dominated Government and the Bosnian Serbs, pursued throughout 1993 the armed hostilities that had raged between them since April 1992.

The year began with the assassination by Serbian extremists of Bosnia and Herzegovina's Deputy Prime Minister for Economic Affairs while under UNPROFOR protection. In March, the Bosnian Serbs intensified their offensive in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina, leading the Security Council to declare the besieged towns—Bihac, Gorazde, Sarajevo, Srebrenica, Tuzla and Zepa—and their surroundings as safe areas. The Council increased the presence of UNPROFOR in them, authorizing it to use force in self-defence and in reply to armed incursions and to obstructions of humanitarian convoys.

To further complicate an already complex situation, fighting erupted in April in the central part of the country between the formerly allied Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Muslims, blocking the supply routes for humanitarian assistance to the north. Hostilities between the two parties continued, despite Council calls for a halt to the fighting and a cease-fire arranged by the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee.

Against this background, the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee engaged the leaders of the conflicting parties in continual negotiations during the year to work out an acceptable peace plan. The negotiations resulted in the Vance-Owen peace package, rejected by the Bosnian Serbs in a referendum in May, however. As a result, the Council strengthened the sanctions regime against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to induce acceptance of the plan, but to no avail. A confederal solution, distilled from the parties' own ideas, was alternatively under negotiation under the Co-Chairmen's auspices during the remainder of the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/88 by recorded vote.

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)), indicated as a provisional measure that "the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should immediately, in pursuance of its undertaking in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948, take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide",

5. Requests the Security Council to follow and immediately implement its resolution 838(1993) of 10 June 1993 to ensure that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately ceases the supply of military arms, equipment and services to Bosnian Serb paramilitary units, as demanded in its resolution 819(1993) of 16 April 1993;

6. 14. Condemns vigorously the violations of the human rights of the Bosnian people and of international hu-

15. The abstaining Member States believed that to lift the arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina would only lead to further bloodshed; it would jeopardize the negotiating process and the mission of UNPROFOR and create a real possibility for the fighting to spill over into neighbouring countries in the region. The best means of resolving the conflict, they were convinced, was through a negotiated settlement.

Before adoption of the resolution, Kenya requested separate votes on paragraphs 17 and 19, to which Bosnia and Herzegovina, along with Costa Rica and the Comoros, objected. As a result, a vote was taken on Kenya's request, which was rejected by a recorded vote of 128 to 7, with 24 abstentions.

Armed incident

On 8 January, the Deputy Prime Minister for Economic Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Hakija Turajlic, was assassinated by Bosnian Serb forces as he was returning from Sarajevo's Butmir Airport in an UNPROFOR convoy on a United Nations controlled road. The convoy was blocked by two tanks belonging to Serbian extremists who entered the vehicle carrying Mr. Turajlic and shot him eight times. In bringing the incident to the Secretary-General's attention⁽⁷⁹⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina, which pointed to its understanding that UNPROFOR was not to stop or open their vehicles for inspection under any circumstances, demanded an explanation for UNPROFOR's conduct to the contrary at the time of the incident.

Bosnia and Herzegovina called for an emergency meeting of the Security Council, demanding immediate and resolute action, including the use of force under Chapter VII of the Charter⁽⁸⁰⁾ A similar call was made by Turkey⁽⁸¹⁾

The Security Council convened on 8 January and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁸²⁾ on its behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3159.

"The Security Council is profoundly shocked to learn of the killing of Mr. Hakija Turajlic, Deputy Prime Minister for Economic Affairs of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, by Bosnian-Serb forces, while he was under the protection of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

"The Council strongly condemns this outrageous act of terrorism which is a grave violation of international humanitarian law and a flagrant challenge to the authority and the inviolability of UNPROFOR, as well as to the serious efforts undertaken with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement of the crisis.

"The Council urges all parties and others concerned to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from taking any action which might further exacerbate the situation.

"The Council requests the Secretary-General to undertake a full investigation of the incident and to report to it without delay. Upon receipt of that report the Council will consider the matter forthwith.

"The members of the Security Council extend their sincere condolences to the bereaved family of Mr. Turajlic and to the people and the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina."

On 10 January⁽⁸³⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina, while expressing deep gratitude to General Philippe Morillon, Commander of UNPROFOR in that country, for his prompt release of information related to the assassination, stated that the circumstances leading to the Deputy Prime Minister's murder while under UNPROFOR protection demonstrated that UNPROFOR too often offered neither protection nor force. It laboured under a constricted mandate, passive rules of engagement and inadequate political support, all of which had proved counterproductive, permitting occupation forces to use it as an unwitting vehicle of aggression against Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Report of the Special Commission of Inquiry.

Responding to the foregoing presidential statement, the Secretary-General, on 11 January, appointed a Special Commission of Inquiry to investigate the Deputy Prime Minister's assassination. Co-chaired by Sahabzada Yaqub-Khan (Pakistan), the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Western Sahara, and Lieutenant-General Lars-Eric Wahlgren (Sweden), Commander of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, the Commission convened at Geneva on 12 January and visited the UNPROFOR mission area from 13 to 15 January. Its report established the facts and circumstances surrounding the incident, examined UNPROFOR's standing operating procedures and mandate in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and made recommendations relating to UNPROFOR's functioning.

In an 18 January letter⁽⁸⁴⁾ transmitting the report to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General drew attention to the following points made by the Commission of Inquiry: (1) Escorting members of the Presidency to and from the airport was not part of the UNPROFOR mandate, although it provided such service as a courtesy to the host Government. (2) The request for the transport of an official delegation to the airport was not in conformity with established procedures. (3) Consequently, UNPROFOR failed to adhere to the standing operating procedures normally applied to the escort of civilian officials. (4) Besides the considerable degree of mistrust surrounding the airport operation, false rumours that 60 mujahedin had flown in on the aircraft Mr. Turajlic went to meet added to the tension at the Serb checkpoint. (5) Despite the 5 June 1992 agreement providing for the establishment of security corridors under UNPROFOR control between the airport and Sarajevo City, UNPROFOR vehicles were regularly subjected to inspection at checkpoints manned by all parties to the conflict. (6) The Commission of Inquiry concluded that the assassination was the work of a single assailant acting unilaterally.

Turkey, in a 28 January statement⁽⁸⁵⁾ noted that the report played down what it called UNPROFOR's gross negligence. UNPROFOR had failed to exercise its authority and carry out its duty; the explanations provided to minimize those failures were inadmissible. Turkey said that the report, besides demonstrating the lack of coordination among United Nations entities, appeared to seek excuses for the Serb action. Turkey expected all who bore responsibility for Mr. Turajlic's death to be punished.

Based on its review of the report, Bosnia and Herzegovina requested the Council on 1 February⁽⁸⁶⁾ to authorize a supplementary investigation into the incident by an independent body, in cooperation with UNPROFOR and the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina; to request the Secretary-General to report on steps to implement UNPROFOR control of the corridor linking Sarajevo with the airport; and to clarify UNPROFOR's mandate in relation to the provisions of Council resolution 770(1992)⁽⁸⁷⁾ on measures to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance to Sarajevo and other parts of the country.

Safe areas

Communications. The United States, on 3 March⁽⁸⁸⁾ requested an immediate meeting of the Security Council to discuss reports of continued fighting in Bosnia and Herzegovina. That country made a similar request, notifying the Council President on the same date⁽⁸⁹⁾ that Serbian and Montenegrin extremist forces had overrun the town of Cerska and its surrounding villages pursuing a new round of expulsions and genocide. Srebrenica was under threat of imminent assault. The Serbian leaders had issued an order to wipe out or drive out the inhabitants of both towns and to blockade all humanitarian convoys. Within 72 hours, 2,000 innocent people had been murdered and thousands of others forcibly displaced. Some 40,000 people were in imminent danger of death from military attack, starvation, exposure to the elements and disease.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Responding to the foregoing requests, the Security Council met on 3 March and invited Bosnia and Herzegovina, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

After consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁹⁰⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3180.

"The Security Council, recalling all its relevant resolutions and statements, expresses its grave concern at and condemns the continuing unacceptable military attacks in eastern Bosnia and the resulting deterioration in the humanitarian situation in that region. It is appalled that, even as peace talks are continuing, attacks by Serb paramilitary units, including, reportedly, the killings of innocent civilians, continue in eastern Bosnia. In this connection, the Security Council is particularly concerned about the fall of the town of Cerska and the imminent fall of neighbouring villages. The Security Council demands that the killings and atrocities must stop and reaffirms that those guilty of crimes against international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible by the world community.

"The Security Council demands that the leaders of all the parties to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina remain fully engaged in New York in a sustained effort with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to reach quickly a fair and workable settlement. In this connection, the Security Council also demands that all sides immediately cease all forms of military action throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, cease acts of violence against civilians, comply with their previous commitments including the cease-fire, and redouble their efforts to settle the conflict.

"The Security Council further demands that the Bosnian Serb side as well as all other parties refrain from taking any action which might endanger the lives and well-being of the inhabitants of eastern Bosnia, particularly in the areas near the town of Cerska, and that all concerned allow the unimpeded access of humanitarian relief supplies throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, especially humanitarian access to the besieged cities of eastern Bosnia, and permit the evacuation of the wounded.

"Having determined in the relevant resolutions that this situation constitutes a threat to international peace and security, the Security Council insists that these steps must be taken immediately.

"The Security Council also requests the Secretary-General to take immediate steps to increase UNPROFOR's presence in eastern Bosnia.

"The Security Council remains seized of the matter and is ready to meet at any moment to consider further action."

Communications. In separate statements made on 3 March, EC⁽⁹¹⁾ and OIC⁽⁹²⁾ expressed condemnation of and grave concern at the continuing aggression by Serbian paramilitary forces against the Muslim population in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular in the eastern part of the country.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, on 18 March⁽⁹³⁾ requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to consider further Serbian aggression against Srebrenica, Sarajevo and the Muslim town of Bjelina. A report followed four days later⁽⁹⁴⁾ to the effect that Serbian and Montenegrin forces had again attacked Srebrenica, as well as Gradacac and Tuzla.

The Secretary-General, on 19 March⁽⁹⁵⁾ stated that the Prime Minister of France had expressed his concern over the situation unfolding in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina. The UNPROFOR field commander had reported continuing obstruction by Serb forces of UNHCR relief efforts, despite negotiations with the political and military leaders of the Bosnian Serbs and with the Government of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro); the Force Commander had subsequently reported, however, that six United States aircraft had dropped 32 tonnes of food and one and a half tons of medical supplies in the area, with more air-drops planned, and that a land convoy had been able to enter Srebrenica. None the less, it was evident that a massive humanitarian tragedy might be in the making in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, in a 2 April letter⁽⁹⁶⁾ transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Council President, drew attention to the plight of Srebrenica, where thousands of Muslims fleeing from advancing Serb forces were converging. Despite the cease-fire and air-drops, the humanitarian situation was worsening. People, especially women and children, were dying in military attacks and from starvation, exposure to cold and lack of medical treatment.

UNHCR efforts, at best inadequate to address the increasing human suffering, were hampered by other difficulties. The stampede to flee Srebrenica resulted in people being crushed to death; the Bosnian authorities at Srebrenica and Tuzla (unable to absorb new arrivals of displaced persons) opposed continued evacuation, regarding it as facilitating the Serbian offensive; and the Bosnian Serb military permitted no further delivery of humanitarian aid into Srebrenica, allowing UNHCR only to evacuate civilians.

In the circumstances, the High Commissioner recommended that the enclave be turned into a United Nations protected area with an injection of massive life-sustaining assistance, or that there be a large-scale evacuation of the endangered population.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the UNHCR communication, the Security Council met on 3 April. At its request, Bosnia and Herzegovina was invited to participate in the discussions without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement:⁽⁹⁷⁾

Meeting number. SC 3192.

"The Security Council is shocked by and extremely alarmed at the dire and worsening humanitarian situation which has developed in Srebrenica in the eastern part of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina following the unacceptable decision of the Bosnian Serb party not to permit any further humanitarian aid to be delivered to that town, and to allow only evacuation of its civilian population. The relevant facts are contained in a letter dated 2 April 1993, addressed to the Secretary-General by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

"The Security Council recalls and reaffirms all its relevant resolutions and statements and condemns the continuing disregard and wilful flouting of the relevant Security Council resolutions and statements by the Bosnian Serb party, which once again, in pursuit of its unlawful, unacceptable and abhorrent policy of 'ethnic cleansing' aimed at territorial aggrandizement, has blocked the United Nations humanitarian relief efforts.

"Recognizing the imperative need to alleviate, with the utmost urgency, the sufferings of the population in and around Srebrenica who are in desperate need of food, medicine, clothes and shelter, the Security Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party cease and desist forthwith from all violations of international humanitarian law, including in particular the deliberate interference with humanitarian convoys, and allow all such convoys unhindered access to the town of Srebrenica and other parts in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Security Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party strictly comply with all relevant resolutions of the Security Council. It further demands that the Bosnian Serb party honour forthwith its most recent commitment 'to guarantee the free movement of humanitarian convoys and the protection of endangered civilians'. The Security Council also reaffirms that those guilty of crimes against international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible by the world community.

"The Security Council commends and strongly supports the efforts of the brave people who have undertaken to deliver urgently needed humanitarian assistance, under extremely trying conditions, to the civilian population in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in particular the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

"The Security Council recalls the request it made in its statement of 3 March 1993 to the Secretary-General to take immediate steps to increase UNPROFOR's presence in eastern Bosnia; welcomes the action taken already in that respect; and urges the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to use all the resources at their disposal within the scope of the relevant resolutions of the Council to reinforce the existing humanitarian operations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter."

Communications. The foregoing statement notwithstanding, Bosnia and Herzegovina reported to the Security Council President on 5 April⁽⁹⁸⁾ that the Serbian and Montenegrin aggressors had continued their assault on the Srebrenica region, particularly on the town of Zeleni Jadar and on eastern Srebrenica. Bosnia and Herzegovina further reported on 8 April⁽⁹⁹⁾ that the level of humanitarian assistance, especially in Gorazde and Zepa, had proven largely ineffective because of the continuing blockade by Serbian and Montenegrin forces; it asked that the UNPROFOR mandate be expanded to include those two towns (and to the extent that it needed to be done in Srebrenica) to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian relief to them.

On 15 April⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan and Venezuela (Council members belonging to the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries) requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to discuss the deteriorating situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. That country, referring to the horrifying situation in Srebrenica, demanded on 16 April⁽¹⁰¹⁾ that the Council take all necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to guarantee the safety of the town's remaining inhabitants.

Also on 16 April⁽¹⁰²⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina wrote that forces directed, controlled and supported by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had intensified their assault on Srebrenica. It called the assault an act of genocide in violation of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽¹⁰³⁾ and a violation of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) Order of 8 April asking Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately to take all measures within its power to prevent any military units under its direction or influence from committing genocide (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). Bosnia and Herzegovina requested that the Council take immediate measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to break the siege and enforce the ICJ Order.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (16 April)

The Security Council convened on 16 April, inviting Bosnia and Herzegovina to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 819(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all its subsequent relevant resolutions,

Taking note that the International Court of Justice in its Order of 8 April 1993 in the case concerning application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)) unanimously indicated as a provisional measure that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should immediately, in pursuance of its undertaking in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948, take all measures within its power to prevent the commission of the crime of genocide.

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its call on the parties and others concerned to observe immediately the cease-fire throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, including, in particular, the practice of "ethnic cleansing",

Concerned by the pattern of hostilities by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against towns and villages in eastern Bosnia and in this regard reaffirming that any taking or acquisition of territory by the threat or use of force, including through the practice of "ethnic cleansing", is unlawful and unacceptable,

Deeply alarmed at the information provided by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 16 April 1993 on the rapid deterioration of the situation in Srebrenica and its surrounding areas, as a result of the continued deliberate armed attacks and shelling of the innocent civilian population by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units,

Strongly condemning the deliberate interdiction by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units of humanitarian assistance convoys,

Also strongly condemning the actions taken by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against UNPROFOR, in particular their refusal to guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of UNPROFOR personnel,

Aware that a tragic humanitarian emergency has already developed in Srebrenica and its surrounding areas as a direct consequence of the brutal actions of Bosnian Serb paramilitary units, forcing the large-scale displacement of civilians, in particular women, children and the elderly,

Recalling the provisions of resolution 815(1993) on the mandate of UNPROFOR and in that context acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that all parties and others concerned treat Srebrenica and its surroundings as a safe area which should be free from any armed attack or any other hostile act;

2. Demands also to that effect the immediate cessation of armed attacks by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against Srebrenica and their immediate withdrawal from the areas surrounding Srebrenica;

3. Demands that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease the supply of military arms, equipment and services to the Bosnian Serb paramilitary units in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with a view to monitoring the humanitarian situation in the safe area, to take immediate steps to increase the presence of UNPROFOR in Srebrenica and its surroundings; demands that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully and promptly with UNPROFOR towards that end; and requests the Secretary-General to report urgently thereon to the Security Council;

5. Reaffirms that any taking or acquisition of territory by the threat or use of force, including through the practice of "ethnic cleansing", is unlawful and unacceptable;

6. Condemns and rejects the deliberate actions of the Bosnian Serb party to force the evacuation of the civilian population from Srebrenica and its surrounding areas as well as from other parts of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as part of its overall abhorrent campaign of "ethnic cleansing";

7. Reaffirms its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, in particular the practice of "ethnic cleansing" and reaffirms that those who commit or order the commission of such acts shall be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

8. Demands the unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance to all parts of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular to the civilian population of Srebrenica and its surrounding areas, and recalls that such impediments to the delivery of humanitarian assistance constitute a serious violation of international humanitarian law;

9. Urges the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to use all the resources at their disposal within the scope of the relevant resolutions of the Council to reinforce the existing humanitarian operations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular Srebrenica and its surroundings;

10. Further demands that all parties guarantee the safety and full freedom of movement of UNPROFOR and of all other United Nations personnel as well as members of humanitarian organizations;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with UNHCR and UNPROFOR, to arrange for the safe transfer of the wounded and ill civilians from Srebrenica and its surrounding areas and to urgently report thereon to the Council;

12. Decides to send, as soon as possible, a mission of members of the Security Council to the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to ascertain the situation and report thereon to the Security Council;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter and to consider further steps to achieve a solution in conformity with relevant resolutions of the Council.

Security Council resolution 819(1993)

16 April 1993 Meeting 3199 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25617).

The Council President, in a note of 21 April⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ reported that, as a result of consultations among Council members, agreement had been reached that the mission referred to in paragraph 12 of the resolution would be composed of six members: France, Hungary, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Russian Federation and Venezuela.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (19 and 20 April)

In response to a 15 April request from Turkey, on behalf of the OIC Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ the Security Council held an open debate in three meetings on 19 and 20 April, following its adoption of resolutions 819(1993) and 820(1993) on 16 and 17 April, respectively. The debate focused on all aspects of the Bosnia and Herzegovina situation, especially the ongoing siege of the eastern part of the country.

At the 19 April meeting, the following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussions without the right to vote under rule 37:^a Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Comoros, Croatia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Germany, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Lithuania, Malaysia, Malta, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Slovenia, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine and the United Arab Emirates.

At Turkey's request⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ the Permanent Observer of OIC was invited to address the Council under rule 39.^b Ambassador Dragomir Djokic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at his request, was also invited to address the Council.

Meeting numbers. SC 3201-3203.

During the debate, statements were made by 30 Member States, as well as by the OIC representative and the representative of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Most of the speakers condemned the human rights violations perpetrated in the fighting, in particular the practice of ethnic cleansing, and the intransigence of the Bosnian Serbs. A number of States, besides calling for the creation of safe havens and for enforcement measures to stop Serbian bombardments and ensure the free flow of relief supplies, echoed Bosnia and Herzegovina's call for the placing of heavy weaponry under United Nations control, for the interdiction of supply lines from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to Bosnia and Herzegovina, and for excluding the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter. Other States, said it was time to take more decisive steps, including further measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The representative of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) pointed out that, despite its full cooperation with the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee to bring an end to the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, its repeated statements that it had no territorial claims on any of its neighbours and the fact that, since 1992, not a single soldier of its army remained on Bosnia and Herzegovina's territory, the international community and the Council had persisted in treating Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) as party to the conflict and in calling for its punishment and isolation, thus holding it hostage to the Bosnian Croats, Muslims and Serbs. The conviction that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could order the Bosnian Serbs to accept something that threatened their survival and that they were ready to obey orders from Belgrade was illusory and false. It was doing its utmost to advise the Bosnian Serbs but it could not order a people to capitulate who were dying and sacrificing all they had in order to survive on their land.

Report of the fact-finding mission. The six-member fact-finding mission⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ constituted pursuant to resolution 819(1993), visited Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as Belgrade, Split and Zagreb to ascertain the situation on the ground. During its visit (22 to 27 April), the mission met with Bosnia and Herzegovina's President, Alija Izetbegovic, and Vice-President, Ejup Ganic; Messrs. Radovan Karadzic and Mate Boban, leaders, respectively, of the Bosnian Serbs and Bosnian Croats; and Croatia's President, Franjo Tudjman. The mission also met with the UNPROFOR Commander and field commanders, representatives of UNHCR and ICRC, and local authorities of areas where hostilities were occurring: Gorazde, Sarajevo, Srebrenica, Tuzla and Zepa in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina; and Vitez in central Bosnia. The mission's findings and recommendations were contained in a report transmitted to the Security Council President on 30 April.⁽¹⁰⁷⁾

The mission found Srebrenica practically under siege, with access to it controlled by Bosnian Serb forces. The prevailing conditions were inhuman and reflected neither the spirit nor the intent of Council resolution 819(1993) declaring Srebrenica a safe area. The Serb forces did not appear ready to withdraw; on the contrary, their numbers increased, they maintained their own interpretation of the demilitarization agreement and had little respect for UNPROFOR's authority.

The mission recommended the withdrawal of Serb forces from Srebrenica to points from which they could not attack, harass or terrorize the town; expansion of the designated safe area; immediate restoration of the water supply; and a warning to the Serbs on the implications of international humanitarian law violations. Gorazde, Tuzla and Zepa should be declared safe areas, with UNPROFOR monitors to be deployed around the cease-fire lines in a way that would not prejudice the future implementation of the Vance-Owen peace plan. Sarajevo should immediately become a safe area.

The mission's meeting with President Tudjman and Mr. Boban focused on the hostilities between ^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Muslims at Vitez and on the massacres committed by one group against the other.

It was the mission's belief that the designation of certain towns or enclaves as safe areas deserved serious consideration as an act of preventive diplomacy, but should in no way undermine the Vance-Owen peace plan. The designations would require a larger UNPROFOR presence, a revised mandate to encompass cease-fire and safe area monitoring, and enforcement measures should the Serbs ignore the integrity of the safe areas.

Annexed to the report were: the mission's itinerary; an UNPROFOR-mediated agreement, signed at Sarajevo on 17 April by the military representatives of the Government and the Bosnian Serbs in the presence of UNPROFOR's Lieutenant-General Wahlgren, providing for a total cease-fire in the Srebrenica area effective 18 April and specific arrangements for the demilitarization of Srebrenica within 72 hours of the arrival of the UNPROFOR company to be deployed there; and a joint statement signed by President Izetbegovic and Mr. Boban (for the Croatian Defence Council), witnessed by President Tudjman, by which they undertook to order their respective commanders and military units immediately to halt all hostilities and unconditionally to respect all agreements concluded thus far between the Bosnian Muslims and the Bosnian Croats.

Communications. Bosnia and Herzegovina brought the Security Council President up to date on the continuing armed attacks on several towns in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina and the resultant humanitarian needs of their populations. It wrote on 17 April⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ that, notwithstanding Council resolution 819(1993), the attacks on Srebrenica had escalated. In view of evidence that the Serb commander, General Ratko Mladic, had ordered the massacre of defenceless civilians, Bosnia and Herzegovina asked that the President do all humanly possible to stop it.

A letter of 27 April⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ requested an expansion of UNPROFOR's mandate in Srebrenica. A new offensive was reported on 28 April⁽¹¹⁰⁾ aimed at linking the Serb and Montenegrin territorial gains in the northern and eastern parts of the country to Serbia; Cazin, in the north-west, sustained the heaviest attack and Bihac the heaviest civilian casualties; the Posavina region, particularly the city of Gradacac, had come under renewed attack, as had Goradze, Srebrenica and Zepa.

Subsequent letters included: a formal request for an emergency meeting of the Council in the light of the four-hour attack on Zepa on 4 May,⁽¹¹¹⁾ appeals of 5 May for medical assistance and immediate deployment of UNPROFOR in the area⁽¹¹²⁾ and for the Council to take all steps necessary to save Zepa;⁽¹¹³⁾ and a letter of 6

May⁽¹¹⁴⁾ giving an estimate of civilian casualties from the unremitting bombardment of Zepa and reporting the shelling of Tuzla and Sarajevo.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 May and 4 June)

The report of the fact-finding mission⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ and the foregoing communications were before the Security Council when it met on 6 May. Bosnia and Herzegovina, at its request, was invited to participate without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

The Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, unanimously adopted resolution 824(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming also the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Having considered the report of the Mission of the Security Council to the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina authorized by resolution 819(1993) and, in particular, its recommendations that the concept of safe areas be extended to other towns in need of safety,

Reaffirming again its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, in particular "ethnic cleansing" and all practices conducive thereto, as well as the denial or the obstruction of access of civilians to humanitarian aid and services such as medical assistance and basic utilities,

Taking into consideration the urgent security and humanitarian needs faced by several towns in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as exacerbated by the constant influx of large numbers of displaced persons including, in particular, the sick and wounded,

Taking also into consideration the formal request submitted by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply concerned at the continuing armed hostilities by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units against several towns in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and determined to ensure peace and stability throughout the country, most immediately in the towns of Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zepa, Goradze, Bihac, as well as Srebrenica,

Convinced that the threatened towns and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas, free from armed attacks and from any other hostile acts which endanger the well-being and the safety of their inhabitants,

Aware in this context of the unique character of the city of Sarajevo, as a multicultural, multi-ethnic and pluri-religious centre which exemplifies the viability of coexistence and interrelations between all the communities of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and of the need to preserve it and avoid its further destruction,

Affirming that nothing in the present resolution should be construed as contradicting or in any way departing from the spirit or the letter of the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Convinced that treating the towns referred to above as safe areas will contribute to the early implementation of the peace plan,

Convinced also that further steps must be taken as necessary to achieve the security of all such safe areas,

Recalling the provisions of resolution 815(1993) on the mandate of UNPROFOR and in that context acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Welcomes the report of the Mission of the Security Council established pursuant to resolution 819(1993), and in particular its recommendations concerning safe areas;

2. Demands that any taking of territory by force cease immediately;

3. Declares that the capital city of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Sarajevo, and other such threatened areas, in particular the towns of Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde, Bihac, as well as Srebrenica, and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas by all the parties concerned and should be free from armed attacks and from any other hostile act;

4. Further declares that in these safe areas the following should be observed:

(a) The immediate cessation of armed attacks or any hostile act against these safe areas, and the withdrawal of all Bosnian Serb military or paramilitary units from these towns to a distance wherefrom they cease to constitute a menace to their security and that of their inhabitants to be monitored by United Nations military observers;

(b) Full respect by all parties of the rights of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the international humanitarian agencies to free and unimpeded access to all safe areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and full respect for the safety of the personnel engaged in these operations;

5. Demands to that end that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully with UNPROFOR and take any necessary measures to respect these safe areas;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures with a view to monitoring the humanitarian situation in the safe areas and, to that end, authorizes the strengthening of UNPROFOR by an additional 50 United Nations military observers, together with related equipment and logistical support; and in this connection, also demands that all parties and all others concerned cooperate fully and promptly with UNPROFOR;

7. Declares its readiness, in the event of the failure by any party to comply with the present resolution, to consider immediately the adoption of any additional measures necessary with a view to its full implementation, including to ensure respect for the safety of United Nations personnel;

8. Declares also that arrangements pursuant to the present resolution shall remain in force up until the provisions for the cessation of hostilities, separation of forces and supervision of heavy weaponry as envisaged in the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, are implemented;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 824(1993)

6 May 1993 Meeting 3208 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25722).

Communications. Several countries conveyed their views to the Security Council President in May on various aspects relating to the safe areas and proposed ways for bringing about peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

By a 14 May memorandum⁽¹¹⁵⁾ Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan and Venezuela (Council members belonging to the Non-Aligned Movement) appealed to the Council to consider immediate adoption of measures, including: giving a new mandate for UNPROFOR to enable it to provide effective protection to the safe areas; recognizing Bosnia and Herzegovina's inherent right to self-defence; and extending economic sanctions to Croatia if its offensive actions continued, particularly in Mostar. A memorandum from France, transmitted on 19 May⁽¹¹⁶⁾ proposed options to ensure the protection of the safe areas, including new tasks for UNPROFOR and, to confer added credibility to the concept of safe areas, participation on the ground of the Russian Federation and the United States.

A communique issued by the Council of Ministers of the Western European Union (WEU) on 19 May⁽¹¹⁷⁾ outlined the possible role that WEU might play in respect of the safe areas and UNPROFOR, as well as in the context of the Vance-Owen peace plan, in coordination with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). A declaration of 24 May by OIC⁽¹¹⁸⁾ urged forceful and decisive steps, including lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Council decision not to accept the unjust fait accompli in that country.

On 30 May⁽¹¹⁹⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina wrote about a new offensive against Gorazde, the shelling of Sarajevo and the continuing attacks on the towns of Brcko and Maglaj and requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council. On 2 June⁽¹²⁰⁾ it reported on the continued offensive against Gorazde. Earlier, the Secretary-General, by a letter of 14 May to the Council President⁽¹²¹⁾ transmitted the text of an UNPROFOR-mediated cease-fire agreement concluded at Mostar on 12 May between the Generals of the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat parties. He stated that the situation in Mostar qualified the town as a "threatened area" under the terms of resolution 824(1993), which helped to set the terms of UNPROFOR's active involvement in the cease-fire and in deploying the Spanish battalion in an interposition role at Mostar. UNPROFOR's presence was an integral part of the cease-fire agreement and had helped to defuse the tension and stabilize the situation. None the less, concern had been expressed about the formal mandate of UNPROFOR in this regard, which also applied to the involvement of civilian police officers provided for in the cease-fire agreement, for which no authorization from the Council existed. The Secretary-General therefore requested confirmation as to whether the foregoing interpretation of the UNPROFOR mandate was acceptable. The Council's agreement with that interpretation was conveyed on 22 May.⁽¹²²⁾

The Security Council convened on 4 June and invited Bosnia and Herzegovina and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a Before it were the communications mentioned above.

By 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (Pakistan and Venezuela), the Council adopted resolution 836(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming in particular its resolutions 819(1993) of 16 April 1993 and 824(1993) of 6 May 1993, which demanded that certain towns and their surrounding areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be treated as safe areas,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the responsibility of the Security Council in this regard,

Condemning military attacks, and actions that do not respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which, as a State Member of the United Nations, enjoys the rights provided for in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reiterating its alarm at the grave and intolerable situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina arising from serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming once again that any taking of territory by force or any practice of "ethnic cleansing" is unlawful and totally unacceptable,

Commending the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Croat party for having signed the Vance-Owen Plan,

Gravely concerned at the persistent refusal of the Bosnian Serb party to accept the Vance-Owen Plan and calling upon that party to accept the Peace Plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina in full,

Deeply concerned by the continuing armed hostilities in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina which run totally counter to the Peace Plan,

Alarmed by the resulting plight of the civilian population in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular in Sarajevo, Bihac, Srebrenica, Gorazde, Tuzla and Zepa,

Condemning the obstruction, primarily by the Bosnian Serb party, of the delivery of humanitarian assistance,

Determined to ensure the protection of the civilian population in safe areas and to promote a lasting political solution,

Confirming the ban on military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, established by resolutions 781(1992) of 9 October 1992, 786(1992) of 10 November 1992 and 816(1993) of 31 March 1993,

Affirming that the concept of safe areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as contained in resolutions 819(1993) and 824(1993) was adopted to respond to an emergency situation, and noting that the concept proposed by France in document S/25800 and by others could make a valuable contribution and should not in any way be taken as an end in itself, but as a part of the Vance-Owen process and as a first step towards a just and lasting political solution,

Convinced that treating the towns and surrounding areas referred to above as safe areas will contribute to the early implementation of that objective,

Stressing that the lasting solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina must be based on the following principles: immediate and complete cessation of hostilities; withdrawal from territories seized by the use of force and "ethnic cleansing"; reversal of the consequences of "ethnic cleansing" and recognition of the right of all refugees to return to their homes; and respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting also the crucial work being done throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), and the importance of such work continuing,

Determining that the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls for the full and immediate implementation of all its relevant resolutions;

2. Commends the Peace Plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as contained in document S/25479;

3. Reaffirms the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory by the use of force and the need to restore the full sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Decides to ensure full respect for the safe areas referred to in resolution 824(1993);

5. Decides to extend to that end the mandate of UNPROFOR in order to enable it, in the safe areas referred to in resolution 824(1993), to deter attacks against the safe areas, to monitor the cease-fire, to promote the withdrawal of military or paramilitary units other than those of the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to occupy some key points on the ground, in addition to participating in the delivery of humanitarian relief to the population as provided for in resolution 776(1992) of 14 September 1992;

6. Affirms that these safe areas are a temporary measure and that the primary objective remains to reverse the consequences of the use of force and to allow all persons displaced from their homes in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to return to their homes in peace, beginning, inter alia, with the prompt implementation of the provisions of the Vance-Owen Plan in areas where those have been agreed by the parties directly concerned;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation, inter alia, with the Governments of the Member States contributing forces to UNPROFOR:

(a) To make the adjustments or reinforcement of UNPROFOR which might be required by the implementation of the present resolution, and to consider assigning UNPROFOR elements in support of the elements entrusted with protection of safe areas, with the agreement of the Governments contributing forces;

(b) To direct the UNPROFOR Force Commander to redeploy to the extent possible the forces under his command in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

8. Calls upon Member States to contribute forces, including logistic support, to facilitate the implementation of the provisions regarding the safe areas, expresses its gratitude to Member States already providing forces for that purpose and invites the Secretary-General to seek additional contingents from other Member States;

9. Authorizes UNPROFOR, in addition to the mandate defined in resolutions 770(1992) of 13 August 1992 and 776(1992), in carrying out the mandate defined in paragraph 5 above, acting in self-defence, to take the necessary measures, including the use of force, in reply to bombardments against the safe areas by any of the parties or to armed incursion into them or in the event of any deliberate obstruction in or around those areas to the freedom of movement of UNPROFOR or of protected humanitarian convoys;

10. Decides that, notwithstanding paragraph 1 of resolution 816(1993), Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, may take, under the authority of the Security Council and subject to close coordination with the Secretary-General and UNPROFOR, all necessary measures, through the use of air power, in and around the safe areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to support UNPROFOR in the performance of its mandate set out in paragraphs 5 and 9 above;

11. Requests the Member States concerned, the Secretary-General and UNPROFOR to coordinate closely on the measures they are taking to implement paragraph 10 above and to report to the Council through the Secretary-General;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the Council, for decision, if possible within seven days of the adoption of the present resolution, on the modalities of its implementation, including its financial implications;

13. Further invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, not later than two months after the adoption of the present resolution, a report on the implementation of and compliance with the present resolution;

14. Emphasizes that it will keep open other options for new and tougher measures, none of which is prejudged or excluded from consideration;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter, and undertakes to take prompt action, as required.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Pakistan, Venezuela.

Before adoption of the resolution, Pakistan stated that the text did not address certain core issues of the Bosnia and Herzegovina conflict. Unless the measures it specified were supplemented by further enforcement actions by the Council within a given time-frame and as part of an overall plan, the situation on the ground might be frozen to the advantage of the Bosnian Serbs. It believed that the modality of safe areas as contained in the text could be acceptable only if and when the international community committed itself to the full implementation of the Vance-Owen peace plan, in particular to its provisions on territorial arrangements for Bosnian Muslim communities. All Bosnian Muslim regions, as specified in that plan, should be declared protected areas and those already so declared should be given maximum protection.

Venezuela said that it had serious difficulties with the text. It proposed an initiative incomplete in scope and contrary to its own objectives. Venezuela disagreed with the way in which extending protective measures for a number of urban centres with a predominantly Muslim population was to be achieved. It added that the Council, although traditionally attentive to the opinions of parties to a conflict, did not even consider Bosnia and Herzegovina's position, namely, its rejection of the particular modality of "safe areas" as contained in the text.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council, the Secretary-General, on 14 June, provided an analysis⁽¹²³⁾ of the modalities for implementing resolution 836(1993), for which the tasks under the existing UNPROFOR mandate for Bosnia and Herzegovina would be combined with tasks specifically related to the safe areas, as follows: deterrence of attacks; monitoring of the cease-fire; promotion of the withdrawal of military or paramilitary units other than those of the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina; occupation of key points; protection of humanitarian relief delivery and distribution.

To perform these tasks, UNPROFOR would need to deploy within the safe areas, around their perimeters and at other important points and to respond to attacks against such areas, humanitarian convoys and UNPROFOR personnel. It would have to monitor cease-fire breaches and the surrounding areas for current military actions and future intentions, as well as areas from which units might be withdrawn to ensure that they remained demilitarized.

Any forces deployed must possess appropriate levels of protection, mobility and fire-power, including the availability of a credible air-strike capability provided by Member States.

The analysis included details of the categories of additional Force requirements, currently estimated at some 7,600 personnel, as well as additional equipment, winterized troop accommodations, and civilian personnel.

In a 17 June addendum⁽¹²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the cost associated with the additional responsibilities to be undertaken by UNPROFOR at $249.9 million for an initial six-month period and the monthly cost thereafter at approximately $26 million.

He recommended that the additional cost should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and that the assessments to be levied on them should be credited to the UNPROFOR special account.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 18 June. It had before it, besides the Secretary-General's report, several communications from Bosnia and Herzegovina stating that the attacks on the safe area of Gorazde continued unabated and that its 70,000 inhabitants were vulnerable to genocidal slaughter⁽¹²⁵⁾. At its request, Bosnia and Herzegovina was invited to participate without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 844(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 12 of resolution 836(1993) concerning the safe areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reiterating once again its alarm at the grave and intolerable situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina arising from serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Recalling the overwhelming importance of seeking a comprehensive political solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Determined to implement fully the provisions of resolution 836(1993),

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Decides to authorize the reinforcement of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) to meet the additional force requirements mentioned in paragraph 6 of the report of the Secretary-General as an initial approach;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the consultations, inter alia., with the Governments of the Member States contributing forces to UNPROFOR, called for in resolution 836(1993);
4. Reaffirms its decision in paragraph 10 of resolution 836(1993) on the use of air power, in and around the safe areas, to support UNPROFOR in the performance of its mandate, and encourages Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to coordinate closely with the Secretary-General in this regard;
5. Calls upon Member States to contribute forces, including logistic support and equipment to facilitate the implementation of the provisions regarding the safe areas;
6. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the Council on a regular basis on the implementation of resolution 836(1993) and this resolution;
7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 844(1993)

18 June 1993 Meeting 3241 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/25966).

Sponsors: France, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

The Secretary-General informed the Council on 29 July of his proposal to pursue offers of troops and equipment made by France, Jordan, Malaysia, the Netherlands and Pakistan in respect of the implementation of resolutions 836(1993) and 844(1993)—to which the Council agreed on 2 August⁽¹²⁶⁾. He also notified the Council on 18 August that the United Nations had acquired the initial operational capability for the use of air power in support of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina; the President acknowledged the information on 22 August.⁽¹²⁷⁾

Communications. On 2 July⁽¹²⁸⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina requested the Security Council for an air evacuation of Gorazde, which was under a new artillery offensive; a UNHCR humanitarian convoy destined for it had been blocked. On 19 July⁽¹²⁹⁾ it reported that Sarajevo was under a two-pronged offensive and that Mount Igman, southwest of Sarajevo, was being targeted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting on 22 July in connection with the reported offensive on Mount Igman and Sarajevo, the Security Council invited Bosnia and Herzegovina to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹³⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3257.

"The Security Council has noted with grave concern the letter of 19 July 1993 from the President of the Presidency of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed to the President of the Security Council about the Bosnian Serb military offensive in the area of Mount Igman, close to Sarajevo, a city which has stood for centuries as an outstanding example of a multicultural, multi-ethnic and pluri-religious society, which needs to be protected and preserved.

"The Security Council renews its demand that all hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina cease and that the parties and others concerned refrain from any hostile acts. It supports the call from the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in this regard, designed to facilitate the peace talks.

"The Security Council reaffirms its resolutions 824(1993) and 836(1993), in the first of which the Council declared Sarajevo a safe area that should be free from armed attacks and any hostile acts, and from which Bosnian Serb military or paramilitary units should be withdrawn to a distance wherefrom they cease to constitute a menace to its security and that of its inhabitants. It condemns the offensive by the Bosnian Serbs on Mount Igman aimed at further isolating Sarajevo and escalating the recent unprecedented and unacceptable pressures on the Government and people of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina before the forthcoming talks in Geneva. It demands an immediate end to this offensive and to all attacks on Sarajevo. It also demands an immediate end to all violations of international humanitarian law. It demands an end to the disruption of public utilities (including water, electricity, fuel and communications) by the Bosnian Serb party and to the blocking of, and interference with, the delivery of humanitarian relief by both the Bosnian Serb and the Bosnian Croat parties.

"The Security Council calls on the parties to meet in Geneva under the auspices of the co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. It calls on the parties to negotiate in earnest with the aim of achieving a just and equitable settlement on the basis of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the principles agreed at the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in London on 26 August 1992 and supported by the Council in its statement of 2 September 1992. In particular it reaffirms the unacceptability of ethnic cleansing, or the acquisition of territory by the use of force, or any dissolution of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Security Council emphasizes that it will keep open all options, none of which is prejudged or excluded from consideration."

Communications. Between 23 July and 3 December, Bosnia and Herzegovina addressed further communications to the Security Council President relating to safe areas.

Three of the letters⁽¹³¹⁾ reported the continuing armed attack on the Muslim city of Mostar and its surroundings by the Bosnian Croats and reiterated its request that the Council convene in emergency meeting to designate Mostar as a safe area.

Seven letters spoke of the continuing siege of Sarajevo. They drew attention to: the intensification of an already heavy Serb offensive on Mount Igman;⁽¹³²⁾ the resultant subhuman level to which humanitarian conditions in Sarajevo had deteriorated⁽¹³³⁾ President Izetbegovic's conditioning his continued attendance at the Geneva peace talks on the United States commitment, in conjunction with NATO, to halt the brutal siege of Sarajevo and induce Serb withdrawal from newly occupied positions⁽¹³⁴⁾ the Serbs' use of helicopters in the assault around Sarajevo, in violation of the ban on military flights (see below);⁽¹³⁵⁾ the death of 536 civilians and the wounding of 3,306 others since the declaration of Sarajevo as a safe area in May due to the slow, inconsistent and indecisive implementation of resolution 836(1993);⁽¹³⁶⁾ the targeting of Sarajevans by new and more vicious weapons;⁽¹³⁷⁾ and the daily shelling of Sarajevo, to which NATO and the United States had not responded, despite their commitments to do so.⁽¹³⁸⁾

Further letters concerned the repeated artillery bombardment of Gorazde;⁽¹³⁹⁾ and the intense attacks on Tuzla with ground-to-ground and air-to-ground rockets⁽¹⁴⁰⁾

Bosnian Croats-Bosnian Muslims

Complicating the Serbian aggression against the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina was the outbreak in April of renewed military hostilities between Government forces and Bosnian Croat paramilitary units in central Bosnia and Herzegovina. The fighting intensified in May and widened to other parts of the country, with reports of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law perpetrated by both sides.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (21 April and 10 May)

After consultations among its members on 21 April, the Security Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁴¹⁾ to the media on the Council's behalf:

"The members of the Security Council are deeply concerned by the reports on the outbreak of military hostilities between Bosnian governmental forces and Bosnian Croat paramilitary units north and west of Sarajevo. They are appalled by the reports corroborated by UNPROFOR of atrocities and killings, in particular the setting on fire of Muslim houses and the shooting of entire families in two villages by Bosnian Croat paramilitary units.

"The members of the Security Council strongly condemn this new outbreak of violence undermining the overall efforts to establish a cease-fire and achieve a political solution of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and demand that Bosnian governmental forces and Bosnian Croat paramilitary units cease immediately those hostilities and that all parties refrain from taking any action which endangers the lives and well-being of the inhabitants of the region, strictly comply with their previous commitments including the cease-fire and redouble their efforts to settle the conflict. They call upon all the parties to cooperate with the current efforts in this regard by UNPROFOR and Lord Owen, Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

"The members of the Security Council also demand that the Bosnian Serbs fully implement resolution 819(1993), including the immediate withdrawal from the areas surrounding Srebrenica, and allow UNPROFOR personnel unimpeded access to the town."

Through the efforts of the ICFY Co-Chairmen, a cease-fire agreement between the two forces, including joint military arrangements to eliminate conflict between them in central Bosnia and Herzegovina, was reached on 25 April. The agreement was embodied in a joint statement signed at Zagreb on that date by President Izetbegovic and Mr. Boban (as "President of the Croatian Union of Herceg-Bosna") and witnessed by President Tudjman.⁽¹⁴²⁾

Despite that agreement, fighting continued, as evidenced by Croatia's appeal of 10 May⁽¹⁴³⁾ to President Izetbegovic and Mr. Boban immediately to do their utmost to put an end to a renewed widening of conflict between Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Muslims and restore cooperation between them in their joint struggle against the Serb aggressor. Also on 10 May⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ Croatia, while welcoming the recently concluded cease-fire between Croat and Muslim forces, denounced the Bosnian Croat offensive around the Muslim town of Mostar, as it did the Bosnian Muslim offensive on the Croat towns of Jablanica and Konjic.

The Council, after consultations among its members on 10 May, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3210.

"The Security Council, recalling its statement of 21 April 1993 concerning the atrocities and killings in areas north and west of Sarajevo, expresses its grave concern at the major new military offensive launched by Bosnian Croat paramilitary units in the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica.

"The Security Council strongly condemns this major military offensive launched by Bosnian Croat paramilitary units which is totally inconsistent with the signature of the Peace Plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by the Bosnian Croat party. The Council demands that the attacks against the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica cease forthwith; that Bosnian Croat paramilitary units withdraw immediately from the area and that all the parties strictly comply with their previous commitments as well as the cease-fire agreed to today between the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Croat party.

"The Security Council also expresses its deep concern that the UNPROFOR battalion in the area has been forced under fire to redeploy as a result of this latest offensive and condemns the refusal of Bosnian Croat paramilitary units to allow the presence of United Nations military observers, in particular in the city of Mostar.

"The Security Council once again reiterates its demand that UNPROFOR personnel be allowed unimpeded access throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in this particular case, demands that the Bosnian Croat paramilitary units ensure the safety and security of UNPROFOR as well as all United Nations personnel in the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica. In this connection, the Council expresses its deep concern at the increasing hostile attitude of Bosnian Croat paramilitary units towards UNPROFOR personnel.

"The Security Council calls upon the Republic of Croatia, in accordance with the commitments under the Zagreb agreement of 25 April 1993, to exert all its influence on the Bosnian Croat leadership and paramilitary units with a view to ceasing immediately their attacks, particularly in the areas of Mostar, Jablanica and Dreznica. It further calls on the Republic of Croatia to adhere strictly to its obligations under Security Council resolution 752(1992), including putting an end to all forms of interference and respecting the territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Security Council once again reaffirms the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the inacceptability of the acquisition of territory by force and the practice of 'ethnic cleansing'.

"The Security Council remains seized of the matter and is ready to consider further measures to ensure that all parties and others concerned abide by their commitments and fully respect relevant Council decisions."

Communication. Bosnia and Herzegovina, on 26 October⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ informed the Security Council President of the destruction by Croat extremist forces of the Muslim village of Stupni Do in central Bosnia. More than 80 Muslim civilians, including women, children and the elderly, were reported massacred. Bosnia and Herzegovina urged the Council to take all necessary measures to deter further acts of aggression and slaughter of civilians.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, following consultations among its members on 28 October, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁴⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

"The members of the Council have heard an initial oral report by the Secretariat concerning the massacre of the civilian population in the village of Stupni Do on 23 October 1993 by troops of the Croatian Defence Council (HVO). They also heard accounts of attacks against UNPROFOR by armed persons bearing uniforms of the Bosnian Government forces, and of an attack to which a humanitarian convoy under the protection of UNPROFOR was subjected on 25 October 1993 in central Bosnia.

"The members of the Council unreservedly condemn these acts of violence. They express their profound concern about the preliminary information to the effect that regular and organized armed forces were probably involved. They have requested the Secretary-General to submit as soon as possible a complete report on the responsibility for these acts. The members of the Council are prepared to draw all the relevant conclusions from this report, which will also be transmitted to the Commission of Experts established by resolution 780(1992).

"The members of the Council reiterate their demand that all the parties in the former Yugoslavia comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, and that those responsible for such violations of international humanitarian law should be held accountable in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Council. The members of the Council call upon all the parties in the former Yugoslavia to guarantee the unimpeded access to humanitarian assistance and the security of the personnel responsible for it."

UNPROFOR report. On 12 November⁽¹⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council President a report by UNPROFOR regarding the 25 October incident in which two humanitarian aid convoys were attacked near Novi Travnik in central Bosnia and Herzegovina resulting in one fatality and ten casualties.

The Secretary-General suspended humanitarian convoys in central Bosnia and Herzegovina until an investigation of the incident had been carried out and credible guarantees for safe passage obtained from the warring parties.

Communications. Croatia, on 3 November⁽¹⁴⁹⁾ requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to address the situation in and around the Bosnian Croat town of Vares, in central Bosnia and Herzegovina, under siege by the Bosnian Muslim army. Six days later⁽¹⁵⁰⁾ it reported that the town of Vitez was threatened by the same army, which had already overrun the bordering villages of Zabrđe and Jelike. It warned that ethnic cleansing of the over 40,000 refugees of mostly Bosnian Croats would create a catastrophe; an ammunition factory there, if destroyed, could threaten the town's security. Croatia urged the Council to address this imminent humanitarian tragedy.

Bosnia and Herzegovina also called for an emergency Council session to respond to hostage-taking by Serb forces on 8 November⁽¹⁵¹⁾. It informed the Council President that a delegation headed by Archbishop Vinko Puljić of Sarajevo, while travelling under UNPROFOR protection to Vares on a peace mission, had been intercepted at Rajlovac near Sarajevo by Bosnian Serb forces who then took his two Bosnian Croat escorts hostage.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In accordance with Croatia's request, the Security Council met on 9 November. It invited Bosnia and Herzegovina, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, under rule 37.^a

Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁵²⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3308.

"The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the reports on the deterioration of the situation in Central Bosnia where increased military activities are seriously threatening security of the civilian population.

"The Security Council demands that all parties and others concerned refrain from taking any action that threatens the safety and well-being of the civilian population.

"The Security Council is equally concerned at the overall humanitarian situation prevailing in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It reiterates its demand to all parties and others concerned to guarantee unimpeded access for humanitarian assistance.

"The Security Council, aware of the heavy burden that these developments add to the existing precarious humanitarian situation of the refugees and displaced persons in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the surrounding countries, calls on all parties to assist the competent United Nations agencies and other humanitarian organizations in their efforts to provide relief to the affected civilian population in those countries.

"The Security Council urges all parties and others concerned to exert the utmost restraint and refrain from taking any action which might exacerbate the situation."

The President was further authorized to make a second statement⁽¹⁵³⁾ as follows:

"The Security Council is profoundly shocked to learn of the incident which took place on 8 November 1993 in which two persons were taken hostage by the Bosnian Serb forces, while members of a delegation headed by Monsignor Vinko Puljić, the Archbishop of Sarajevo, travelling to the city of Vares on a mission of peace, under the protection of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

"The Security Council strongly condemns this outrageous act, which is a flagrant challenge to the authority and inviolability of UNPROFOR.

"The Security Council takes note that, despite the prompt and commendable intervention of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, neither of the hostages has been released and demands that the Bosnian Serb forces proceed immediately to release them. The Council reminds the perpetrators of this act that they are obligated to ensure that no harm comes to the individuals being held and that those responsible for violations of international humanitarian law will be held personally accountable for their actions.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to undertake a thorough investigation of the incident and to report to the Council without delay. It urges all parties and others concerned to refrain from taking any action which might further exacerbate the situation.

"The Security Council condemns all attacks and hostile acts against UNPROFOR by all parties in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as in the Republic of Croatia, which have become more frequent over the last weeks, and demands that they cease forthwith."

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to the second presidential statement of 9 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council President an extensive UNPROFOR report regarding the two hostages. The report provided details of the circumstances surrounding the incident. It noted the meticulous observance by UNPROFOR of the normal operating procedures for the escort mission; the refusal of the Serb checkpoint to allow the convoy to proceed to Vares or to return to its unit until the two Bosnian Croats, reported by the Serbs to be war criminals, were surrendered; the negotiations conducted by the escort commander; and the forcible opening of the armoured personnel carrier by the Serbs, who took away the two men.

The Secretary-General's letter of 11 November transmitting the report⁽¹⁵⁴⁾ informed the President that, following intensive negotiations under the direct supervision of his Special Representative for the Former Yugoslavia, the two persons concerned had been released to UNPROFOR on the same date. According to the report, they were to be handed over to the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina for trial.

Ban on military flights

The Secretary-General, by letters, dated 12⁽¹⁵⁵⁾ and 16 March⁽¹⁵⁶⁾ informed the President of the Security Council of the first violations of the 1992 ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, one of them involving combat activity on 13 March 1993. The ban was established by Council resolution 781(1992)⁽¹⁵⁷⁾ and reaffirmed by resolution 786(1992)⁽¹⁵⁸⁾ for the safe delivery of humanitarian assistance and as a decisive step for the cessation of hostilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following consultations on 17 March, the Security Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁵⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3184.

"The Security Council has been informed by the Secretary-General in a letter of 12 March 1993 of the violation on 11 March 1993 by military jets, proceeding from the airport of Banja Luka, of Security Council resolution 781(1992), relating to the prohibition of military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, notwithstanding the fact that the Bosnian Serbs at the airport had received appropriate notification by United Nations observers that such flights would constitute a violation of the said resolution.

"The Security Council equally takes note of the report by the Secretary-General in his letter of 16 March 1993 indicating that on 13 March 1993 new violations of the no-fly zone took place by planes that proceeded to bomb the villages of Gladovici and Osatica in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina before leaving in the direction of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The above flights are the first violations of Security Council resolution 781(1992) observed by UNPROFOR which involved combat activity.

"The Security Council strongly condemns all violations of its relevant resolutions and underlines the fact that since the beginning of the monitoring operations in early November 1992, the United Nations has reported 465 violations of the no-fly zone over the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Security Council demands that these violations cease forthwith and reiterates its strong determination to ensure full respect of its resolutions. It particularly underlines its condemnation of all violations, especially those reported by the Secretary-General in his letters referred to above, at a time when the peace process has reached a critical juncture and when humanitarian relief efforts require full cooperation by all parties.

"The Security Council demands from the Bosnian Serbs an immediate explanation of the aforementioned violations and particularly of the aerial bombardment of the villages of Gladovici and Osatica.

"It requests the Secretary-General to ensure that an investigation is made of the reported possible use of the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to launch air attacks against the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Security Council has mandated its President to convey to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and to the leader of the Bosnian Serbs its deepest concern about the above-mentioned developments, and its demand that they take immediate action to prevent any repetitions of these attacks.

"The Security Council will continue to consider what additional steps may be required to secure implementation of the provisions of relevant Security Council resolutions."

Communications by the Secretary-General.

In accordance with the foregoing presidential statement, the Secretary-General reported on 27 April⁽¹⁶⁰⁾ that only Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had responded to his request for information on the violations. In a statement⁽¹⁶¹⁾ denying the alleged violations of the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, it described the alleged combat use of aircraft on 13 March as a premeditated fraud intended to pressure the Council at a moment when important agreements to end the war were to be reached.

On 22 March⁽¹⁶²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of the UNPROFOR Commander's concern about the proposed enforcement by Member States of the interdiction on military flights. The Commander was apprehensive that the proposed enforcement action would have negative consequences for the viability of UNPROFOR. In particular, its work of protecting the delivery of humanitarian aid would be seriously jeopardized. He was, moreover, worried about the safety and security of UNPROFOR's military observers and civilian personnel, especially those stationed at airfields.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 31 March to consider a draft resolution relating to the Force Commander's concerns. Bosnia and Herzegovina was invited, at its request, to participate without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

The Council adopted resolution 816(1993) by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (China).

The Security Council,

Recalling paragraph 6 of resolution 781(1992) and paragraph 6 of resolution 786(1992) in which the Council undertook to consider urgently, in the case of violations of the ban on military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the further measures necessary to enforce the ban,

Deploing the failure of some parties concerned to cooperate fully with United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) airfield monitors in the implementation of resolutions 781(1992) and 786(1992), Deeply concerned by the various reports of the Secretary-General concerning violations of the ban on military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply concerned in particular by the Secretary-General's letters to the President of the Security Council of 12 and 16 March 1993 concerning new blatant violations of the ban on military flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and recalling in this regard the statement by the President of the Security Council of 17 March 1993, and in particular the reference to the bombing of villages in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Determining that the grave situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the ban established by resolution 781(1992) to cover flights by all fixed-wing and rotary-wing aircraft in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, this ban not to apply to flights authorized by UNPROFOR in accordance with paragraph 2 below;

2. Requests UNPROFOR to modify the mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 781(1992) so as to provide for the authorization, in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, of humanitarian flights and other flights consistent with relevant resolutions of the Council;

3. Requests UNPROFOR to continue to monitor compliance with the ban on flights in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and calls on all parties urgently to cooperate with UNPROFOR in making practical arrangements for the close monitoring of authorized flights and improving the notification procedures;

Authorizes Member States, seven days after the adoption of this resolution, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to take, under the authority of the Security Council and subject to close coordination with the Secretary-General and UNPROFOR, all necessary measures in the airspace of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the event of further violations, to ensure compliance with the ban on flights referred to in paragraph 1 above, and proportionate to the specific circumstances and the nature of the flights;

5. Requests the Member States concerned, the Secretary-General and UNPROFOR to coordinate closely on the measures they are taking to implement paragraph 4 above, including the rules of engagement, and on the starting date of its implementation, which should be no later than seven days from the date when the authority conferred by paragraph 4 above takes effect, and to report the starting date to the Council through the Secretary-General;

6. Decides that, in the event of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia notifying the Council that all the Bosnian parties have accepted their proposals on a settlement before the starting date referred to in paragraph 5 above, the measures set forth in the present resolution will be subsumed into the measures for implementing that settlement;

7. Also requests the Member States concerned to inform the Secretary-General immediately of any actions they take in exercise of the authority conferred by paragraph 4 above;

Abstaining: China.

After the vote, China placed on record its reservations on the invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter to authorize the use of force to ensure compliance with the ban on military flights.

On 9 April⁽¹⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council President that Member States concerned had been coordinating with him and UNPROFOR regarding measures to ensure compliance with the ban. The North Atlantic Council of NATO had adopted necessary arrangements for the operation. The rules of engagement established by the Member States concerned were in conformity with paragraph 4 of resolution 816(1993). Liaison cells had been set up at UNPROFOR headquarters at Zagreb and at Kiseljak in Bosnia and Herzegovina, with an UNPROFOR liaison team to be dispatched to the command headquarters designated by Member States. As requested, UNPROFOR had modified the mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 781(1992).

The Secretary-General further informed the Council on 16 April⁽¹⁶⁴⁾ that France, the Netherlands, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States had offered to make aircraft available; those from France, the Netherlands and the United States had been deployed. He transmitted the further revised guidelines for the authorization of non-UNPROFOR and non-UNHCR flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council took note of the information on 21 April.⁽¹⁶⁵⁾

Violations

The Secretary-General, in a 10 February report⁽¹⁶⁶⁾ stated that the interdiction of military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been violated, by the parties to the conflict on nearly 400 occasions since its imposition. However, the frequency of violations had dropped and, in the four weeks to 8 February, averaged about two violations a day.

In addition, by numerous notes verbales addressed to the Security Council President throughout 1993⁽¹⁶⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported all instances of unauthorized flights, as received by UNPROFOR, in apparent violation of the ban.

Arms embargo: request for exemption

During the general debate held by the Security Council on 19 and 20 April on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, a number of States, invoking Article 51 of the United Nations Charter, called for exempting that country from the 1991 arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia⁽⁴⁹⁾ to enable it to exercise its right of self-defence.

A draft resolution to that effect⁽¹⁶⁸⁾ was submitted for Council consideration in June by 22 nations: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Cape Verde, Comoros, Djibouti, Egypt, Estonia, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Latvia, Libya Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Pakistan, Senegal, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

By that draft, the Council would have reaffirmed the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina, demanded that all hostilities within the country be halted forthwith, and would have decided to exempt the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo imposed on the former Yugoslavia by resolution 713(1991) with the sole purpose of enabling it to exercise its inherent right of self-defence.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council convened on 29 June to consider the draft resolution.

At their request, Afghanistan, Albania, Bangladesh, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Egypt, Estonia, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Latvia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Senegal, Slovenia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a At his request, Dragomir Djokic, Ambassador of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), was also invited to address the Council.

Following statements by some 29 States, the Council voted on the draft resolution, which received 6 votes to none, with 9 abstentions.

In favour: Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Brazil, China, France, Hungary, Japan, New Zealand, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom.

The draft was not adopted, having failed to obtain the required number of votes.

The United Kingdom stated that it was simply not credible that lifting the arms embargo would result in arms reaching only the Bosnian Government forces; already a substantial proportion of the arms clandestinely destined for the Bosnian Government had fallen into other hands. Lifting the embargo would provide an irresistible temptation to the Bosnian Serbs and Bosnian Croats to intensify their military efforts and to ensure that, by the time any substantial delivery of weapons was made, the military threat posed to them by the Bosnian Government forces had been neutralized.

For France, deciding selectively to lift the arms embargo would only interfere with the ongoing negotiating process—a view shared by Japan and the Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation stated that adopting the draft would intensify the fighting, endanger the security of United Nations troops and cause the conflict to spread beyond the country's boundaries. Japan added that ongoing humanitarian assistance could be jeopardized and the possibility of resolving the conflict by peaceful political means would be eliminated.

Hungary wanted to give a last chance to the tireless efforts aimed at achieving a solution to the crisis.

Meeting number. SC 3247.

Subsequently, Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Secretary-General that it had issued a statement of intention, dated 15 November⁽¹⁶⁹⁾ to institute legal proceedings against the United Kingdom before ICJ for violating the terms of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽¹⁰³⁾ of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁽¹⁷⁰⁾ and of the other sources of general international law set forth in Article 38 of the ICJ Statute. The application, besides charging the United Kingdom with failure in its affirmative obligation to prevent genocide against the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina, would further charge it, as a permanent Council member, with having illegally maintained an arms embargo on the Republic in violation of Article 51 of the Charter.

The United Kingdom, on 6 December⁽¹⁷¹⁾ rejected the statement as totally without foundation. On 17 December⁽¹⁷²⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina notified the Council President of its decision not to proceed with its application.

Earlier, on 27 October⁽¹⁷³⁾ Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) drew attention to a 20 October

UNPROFOR report, according to which a commander of the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina admitted that chemical grenades had been used against the Bosnian Serb forces. In addition to that Army's repeated threats to use chemical weapons, President Izetbegovic was quoted by the Turkish News Agency in June as saying he would not rule out the use of such weapons if the United Nations did not exempt Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo.

World Conference on Human Rights. The 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X) adopted a special declaration on Bosnia and Herzegovina, in which it urged lifting the embargo against it to enable it to exercise its right to self-defence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 48/88 of 20 December on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the General Assembly urged the Security Council to consider exempting Bosnia and Herzegovina from the arms embargo as imposed on the former Yugoslavia under Council resolution 713(1991). It likewise urged Member States and the international community to cooperate with Bosnia and Herzegovina in exercise of its inherent right of self-defence in accordance with Article 51 of Chapter VII of the Charter.

Border control

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 June, the Security Council considered a draft resolution relating to the deployment of international observers on the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina to facilitate implementation of the sanctions regime mandated by Council resolutions 713(1991),⁽⁴⁾ 757(1992),⁽⁵⁰⁾ 787(1992),⁽⁵¹⁾ 819(1993) and 820(1993), as well as of resolution 752(1992)(174) demanding immediate cessation of all outside interference.

Before the Council were: the 1992 report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁷⁵⁾ presenting three options for such deployment; a 24 May letter⁽¹⁷⁶⁾ from France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States offering to provide jointly, among other assistance, border monitors or technical expertise or aerial surveillance; a 1 June letter from Croatia⁽¹⁷⁷⁾ accepting international control of its entire border with Bosnia and Herzegovina; and an 8 June letter from Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽¹⁷⁸⁾ supporting the deployment of monitors along its border with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to enable effective control of all border traffic between the two countries.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 838(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the responsibility of the Security Council in this regard,

Reiterating the demands in its resolution 752(1992) and subsequent relevant resolutions that all forms of interference from outside the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina cease immediately and that its neighbours take swift action to end all interference and respect its territorial integrity,

Recalling the demand in its resolution 819(1993) that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease the supply of military arms, equipment and services to Bosnian Serb paramilitary units,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 December 1992 on the possible deployment of observers on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Expressing its condemnation of all activities carried out in violation of resolutions 757(1992), 787(1992) and 820(1993) between the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces,

Considering that, in order to facilitate the implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions, observers should be deployed on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as indicated in its resolution 787(1992),

Taking note of the earlier preparedness of the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to stop all but humanitarian supplies to the Bosnian Serb party, and urging full implementation of that commitment,

Considering that all appropriate measures should be undertaken to achieve a peaceful settlement of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina provided for in the Vance-Owen Peace Plan,

Bearing in mind paragraph 4 (a) of its resolution 757(1992) concerning the prevention by all States of imports into their territories of all commodities and products originating in or exported from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and paragraph 12 of its resolution 820(1993) concerning import to, export from and transshipment through those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council as soon as possible a further report on options for the deployment of international observers to monitor effectively the implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions, to be drawn from the United Nations and, if appropriate, from Member States acting nationally or through regional organizations and arrangements, on the borders of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, giving priority to the border between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and taking into account developments since his report of 21 December 1992 as well as the differing circumstances affecting the various sectors of the borders and the need for appropriate coordination mechanisms;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to contact immediately Member States, nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to ensure the availability to him on a continuing basis of any relevant material derived from aerial surveillance and to report thereon to the Security Council;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 838(1993)

10 June 1993 Meeting 3234 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/25798).

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to the Security Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted a further report, dated 1 July⁽¹⁷⁹⁾ on options for the deployment of international observers on the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, giving priority to its border with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and taking account of the 1993 Council resolutions strengthening the sanctions regime against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Two options for monitoring were developed by UNPROFOR. One option called for the deployment of international monitors at 48 major crossing points on the borders between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and at 75 crossing points between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, in addition to those where the international borders of Croatia coincided with those of the UNPAs, making a total of 123 crossing points along 1,100 kilometres of borderline. The monitoring activity would involve observing and reporting traffic at the crossing points but not checking outgoing and incoming goods. Eight observers and/or troops and four interpreters would be required at each point. For its effectiveness, this option would depend largely on the cooperation of Croatian and Yugoslav customs officers.

The Force Commander suggested dividing the work between UNPROFOR and European Community Monitoring Mission teams, with UNPROFOR in command of arrangements and acting as the sole reporting body to the Council. To reduce military staff requirements and the training time required, the Secretary-General suggested using civilian police monitors and former customs and retired border police officials, to be identified by Member States.

The other option was for full border control, requiring a capability, not only to observe and report, but also to search, to deny passage and to interdict in cases where the borders had been already crossed. UNPROFOR would in effect supersede national authorities in respect of certain national border control functions.

UNPROFOR estimated that such a mission would need an infantry platoon at each crossing point, with a total troop requirement of over 10,000, augmented by a logistics battalion of 1,000 to 1,200 all ranks and a number of civilian police monitors, interpreters, and civilian affairs and administrative personnel. Thus, the total additional essential requirements would range from 10,300 to 10,500 troops and civilian personnel.

The Secretary-General advised that it would be unrealistic for the Council to authorize the second option. As for the first, for which substantial additional observers and equipment would be required, the Council might wish to establish whether Member States would be ready to make available the qualified staff required and to take account of the Organization's precarious financial situation. It might also wish to note that the effectiveness of the first option would depend entirely on the cooperation of the neighbouring countries and the parties concerned in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In an addendum to his report, dated 13 July⁽¹⁸⁰⁾ the Secretary-General estimated that the total cost of the first option would amount to some $94.8 million for an initial six-month period and approximately $8.1 million a month thereafter.

The additional costs should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and the assessments to be levied on them should be credited to the UNPROFOR Special Account.

The Council President, on 7 July⁽¹⁸¹⁾ informed the Secretary-General that the Council continued to believe that international observers should be deployed on the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with priority given to the border between it and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The Council invited him to establish whether Member States were ready to make qualified personnel available, to explore all possibilities for implementing of the border monitors concept, and to seek the full cooperation of the neighbouring countries.

Activities of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee

Efforts to bring peace to Bosnia and Herzegovina proceeded on the basis of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the relevant decisions of the Security Council and the principles adopted by ICFY at its London session in August 1992.⁽¹⁸²⁾ Since that session, the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee had held intensive negotiations with the three sides to the conflict, namely, the Bosnian Government, the Bosnian Serbs and the Bosnian Croats, as well as with Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

In seven rounds of talks during 1993 that took place between 2 January and 2 May—three at Geneva, followed by three in New York and one at Athens, Greece—the Co-Chairmen devoted their efforts to hammering out a peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina and to getting the three sides to sign the plan. Known as the Vance-Owen peace plan, it included a set of nine constitutional principles, an agreement on military and related issues, a map reflecting the country's organization into 10 provinces, and an agreement on interim governmental arrangements. It was endorsed by EC and by the Secretary-General. Although signed by the three sides by 2 May, the plan was rejected three days later by the "assembly" of the Bosnian Serbs and in a mid-May referendum.

Despite this set-back, the Co-Chairmen continued to search for a peaceful settlement.

Vance-Owen peace plan

Report of the Secretary-General (6 January).

In a 6 January report⁽¹⁸³⁾ the Secretary-General gave an account of the first of the three rounds of talks at Geneva held from 2 and 4 January. The report stated that it was the first time since September 1992⁽¹⁾ that the three sides to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina were represented at the highest political and military levels: Bosnia and Herzegovina was led by President Alija Izetbegovic; the Bosnian Croats by Mate Boban; and the Bosnian Serbs by Radovan Karadzic. Also attending were the delegations of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and of Croatia, led, respectively, by President Dobrica Cosic and by President Franjo Tudjman.

Before the talks adjourned, the Co-Chairmen placed before the delegations a comprehensive package that they believed represented a fair, just and lasting peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Referred to as the Vance-Owen peace plan, the package consisted of a draft agreement relating to Bosnia and Herzegovina dealing with the delimitation of provinces in accordance with a map suggesting a future 10-province structure of the republic, with a constitutional framework of 10 principles and with humanitarian issues; and a draft agreement for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina dealing with the observance and monitoring of the cessation of hostilities, restoration of infrastructure, opening of routes, separation of forces, demilitarization of Sarajevo, monitoring of borders and return of forces to designated provinces. It was explained to the three sides that the two agreements were inextricably linked and that any mutually agreed changes they might propose would be incorporated.

Following the first round of talks at Geneva, the Security Council held consultations on 8 January, after which it authorized its President to make the following statement:⁽¹⁸⁴⁾

Meeting number. SC 3160.

"The Security Council fully supports the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia aimed at achieving an overall political settlement of the crisis through a complete cessation of hostilities and the establishment of a constitutional framework for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In this connection, the Council reaffirms the need to respect fully the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Council fully endorses the view of the Secretary-General described in his report that it is the duty of all the parties involved in the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, despite the recent provocation, to cooperate with the Co-Chairmen in bringing this conflict to an end swiftly.

"The Council appeals to all the parties involved to cooperate to the fullest with the peace efforts and warns any party which would oppose an overall political settlement against the consequences of such an attitude; lack of cooperation and non-compliance with its relevant resolutions will compel the Security Council to review the situation in an urgent and most serious manner, and to consider further necessary measures."

Reports of the Secretary-General (13 January, 2 and 8 February).

In a 13 January report⁽¹⁸⁵⁾ the Secretary-General covered the resumed talks from 10 to 12 January, during which the Co-Chairmen considered eight constitutional principles suggested by Mr. Karadzic and arrived at a new version of nine consolidated principles, on the basis of which a new constitution would be drafted. They reviewed the international monitoring and control arrangements envisaged with regard to: interprovincial thoroughways, a constitutional court, progressive demilitarization of the country, non-discriminatory composition of the police, an international commission of human rights, ombudsmen, and a human rights court.

At the conclusion of the talks, Mr. Boban signed the agreement setting out the constitutional principles together with the provincial map and the agreement on military and related issues. President Izetbegovic accepted the constitutional principles and the agreement on military and related issues, but not the provincial map. Mr. Karadzic stated his agreement with the proposed constitutional principles provided his "assembly" confirmed that agreement within seven days; he did not accept the provincial map and had some questions about the agreement on military and related issues.

In a 2 February report⁽¹⁸⁶⁾ the Secretary-General covered the third round of Geneva talks (23 to 30 January). At the end of that round, devoted to the question of the provincial boundaries, the Co-Chairmen informed the parties of their conclusion that the proposed provincial map proposed should be maintained and invited them to sign it. Mr. Boban reconfirmed his acceptance of the map and signed it. President Izetbegovic maintained his non-acceptance because, in his view, the map had the effect of rewarding the ethnic cleansing that had taken place. Mr. Karadzic stated that he could formally accept the map on the understanding that the populations in certain areas would be democratically consulted—a condition which the Co-Chairmen ruled as tantamount to non-acceptance of the map.

The Co-Chairmen also invited the three sides to sign the agreement on military and related issues. Messrs. Boban and Karadzic signed the agreement. His earlier acceptance notwithstanding, President Izetbegovic declined to sign because he felt that the arrangements on the control of heavy weapons were not strong enough. He was therefore invited to clarify his concerns with the UNPROFOR Commander so as to enable him to sign the agreement.

In addition, the Co-Chairmen submitted for comment to the three sides a working paper on interim arrangements for governing Bosnia and Herzegovina as a whole and each of the provinces during a transitional period until a constitution was drafted and elections held.

The next three rounds of talks took place in New York to take advantage of the Security Council's good offices to help the three sides to overcome their outstanding difficulties. The Secretary-General's report of 8 February,⁽¹⁸⁷⁾ on the round held from 3 to 8 February, noted the extensive discussions on 2 February with the Council's President and permanent members, in which the Co-Chairmen explained the process leading up to the peace package and the factors that had influenced its contents.

The Co-Chairmen explained their priorities in terms of the principles laid down by the Council and at the 1992 ICFY London session.⁽¹⁸²⁾ They also expressed concerns about the danger of the conflict spreading and their view that even a selective lifting of the arms embargo would not be in the interests of peace or human rights, and could lead instead to a devastating conflagration engulfing the Balkan region.

The Co-Chairmen conveyed their assessment that the peace package was enforceable and would require a United Nations force of 15,000 to 25,000 to implement it. They urged the establishment of an international criminal court to try persons accused of grave breaches of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia.

The Co-Chairmen also consulted with the OIC Contact Group and, on 6 and 7 February, briefed the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

The possibility of reaching agreed solutions among the three sides was reduced by the refusal of the Bosnian Government side to meet with the other sides or to discuss provincial boundaries. That Government suggested that work should rather concentrate on the drafting of a new constitution and that the interim governmental arrangements should be built around the existing Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It proposed that the Serb side immediately place its heavy weapons under international control, offering to do the same.

The Bosnian Serb side continued to express its readiness to accept and sign the map only if the populations of contested areas were consulted and submitted a map suggesting changes in the proposed provincial boundaries. It could not accept interim arrangements based on the premise that the existing Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina continued to be valid or that the interim Government—which it preferred to call the "central coordinating body"—would be a continuation of the current Presidency.

The Bosnian Croat side was prepared to entertain some changes to make the proposed provincial boundaries more acceptable to the other two sides. It advanced a number of suggestions, particularly in respect of the eastern border of Travnik and the western border of Posavina provinces. Since the revised map was rejected by the Bosnian Serb side, which also reconfirmed its position on the proposed original map, the Co-Chairmen remained committed to their original proposal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At its 24 February meeting, the Security Council invited Bosnia and Herzegovina, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a Following consultations among its members, the President was authorized to make the following statement⁽¹⁸⁸⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3176.

"The Security Council, having heard a report from the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, is concerned that the present opportunity to reach a negotiated settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina should not be allowed to slip by. It endorses fully the statement by the President of the United States of America and the Secretary-General of the United Nations on 23 February, calling on the leaders of the parties involved in the peace talks on Bosnia and Herzegovina to come to New York immediately to resume discussions with a view to the early conclusion of an agreement to end the conflict. The Council urges these leaders to respond quickly and positively to that call, and stands ready to give its full support to the efforts of the Co-Chairmen to bring the talks to a successful conclusion."

Report of the Secretary-General (12 March).

According to the Secretary-General's report of 12 March⁽¹⁸⁹⁾ significant progress was achieved during the resumed New York talks from 1 to 6 March. The Bosnian Government signed the agreement on military and related issues. It took this action in the light of the following important developments: a Canadian battalion had been deployed to Sarajevo near the airport; certain countries had indicated their preparedness to help the United Nations implement an agreed peace settlement; discussions had taken place on the matter of implementing a viable agreement containing enforcement provisions, which involved the Secretariat's Department of Peace-keeping Operations, UNPROFOR, NATO and the Supreme Headquarters of the Allied Powers in Europe. Moreover, the UNPROFOR Commander had informed the Co-Chairmen that, once substantial numbers of additional troops arrived in Bosnia and Herzegovina, it would be possible to undertake control of heavy weapons and ensure the physical separation of opposing forces.

As a result of meetings on the legitimacy of the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Bosnian Government side and the Bosnian Croat side on 3 March signed a provisional agreement on interim governmental arrangements, in particular with respect to the interim presidency.

Discussions proceeded on the basis that, until the entry into force of a new constitution and the holding of elections, the current Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina should continue in force, except to the extent required to implement the proposed provisions in respect of human rights and the reversal of ethnic cleansing, and of the agreed interim governmental arrangements mentioned above. The current powers of the opstinas (municipalities) would continue, as would their boundaries, except as required to conform to the agreed provisional boundaries, or when changed by consensus.

With the Bosnian Government's signature of the military agreement, seven out of nine signatures required for the conclusion of the peace settlement plan had been obtained. Outstanding was the agreement of the Bosnian Government and Bosnian Serbs to the provincial map.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 25 March and invited Bosnia and Herzegovina, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37.^a After consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽¹⁹⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3186.

"The Security Council warmly welcomes the signature by President Alija Izetbegovic and Mr. Mate Boban of all four documents of the Peace Plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina worked out by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

"On this important occasion the Security Council pays tribute to the untiring efforts of the Co-Chairmen, Secretary Vance and Lord Owen.

"The Council commends the action of the two parties who have signed all the documents and calls on the remaining party to sign without delay the two documents of the Peace Plan that it has not already signed and to cease its violence, offensive military actions, 'ethnic cleansing' and obstruction of humanitarian assistance.

"The Council calls for an immediate cessation of hostilities by all parties.

"The Council looks forward to receiving a report from the Secretary-General on the developments in the International Conference and stands ready to take action to follow up on the report and to take the steps required to bring about the peace settlement."

Report of the Secretary-General (26 March).

The Secretary-General's report of 26 March⁽¹⁹¹⁾ covered the round of talks held from 16 to 25 March, at which the interim governmental arrangements were discussed further. The Bosnian Government and the Bosnian Croats felt that Sarajevo province should be increased in size, making it less dominated by Sarajevo City; the province should be governed according to the proportional formula applicable to the other nine provinces and the city itself should be governed by an interim Executive Mayor and Executive Board, under the nominal supervision of the Presidency.

The Bosnian Serb side, whose initial position had been for Sarajevo's governance by Muslims and Serbs on a 50-50 basis, would accept a capital opstina governed equally among the Bosnian Croats, Muslims and Serbs. It continued to argue for the division of Bosnia and Herzegovina into what would effectively be three separate states, taking the view that the nine constitutional principles it had signed were relevant only to the drafting of a new constitution and not applicable for the interim period.

The Bosnian Serb side insisted on the continuation of legislation adopted by its "Republika Sprska". It could not accept the case for any form of interim central government, arguing instead for a central coordinating body with as few functions as possible relating to the coordination of the three peoples' interim constituent structures.

However, the Bosnian Serb side expressed support for the proposed international human rights monitoring mission, with open access to all provinces. It was not convinced of the case for ombudsmen at the national level but considered that each side should appoint four ombudsmen for its constituent structure. Similarly, any human rights court should operate within each constituent structure.

It was thus clear to the Co-Chairmen that the Bosnian Serb position had hardened appreciably on many of the political aspects of an overall settlement since the January round of negotiations.

The Co-Chairmen considered that the interim arrangements should form part of the peace package. Thus, at the last plenary meeting of this round of talks, they presented for signature the final peace package, consisting of the constitutional principles, the map of the provincial boundaries, the military agreement, and the interim governmental arrangements. All had been signed, with the exception of the provincial map and the agreement on interim arrangements, which lacked the signature of the Bosnian Serb side.

In the circumstances, the Co-Chairmen recommended that any enforcement action of the ban on military flights or toughening of sanctions, or the placing of United Nations military observers around the border of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), should be accompanied by the Security Council's endorsement of the peace package.

The Secretary-General observed that the peace package provided the only mechanism for re-establishing peace, with justice and respect for human rights, in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He strongly urged the Council to approve the whole peace package and to call on the Bosnian Serbs to sign the remaining two parts so that attention might be concentrated on its implementation.

The Secretary-General also recommended the early establishment of an international human rights monitoring mission, which all three sides had accepted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Council convened on 17 April in response to two 17 April requests, from France⁽¹⁹²⁾ and from Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan and Venezuela (Council members that were members of the Non-Aligned Movement).⁽¹⁹³⁾ Before it were the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee describing developments regarding the peace package for Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Also before the Council were a number of communications, to the effect that there was no alternative to the peace plan worked out by the Co-Chairmen; that, if accepted in full by the Bosnian Serb side, there would be a gradual lifting of the sanctions in force against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), leading to its full readmittance into the international community; otherwise, the strengthened economic sanctions proposed should be adopted as a measure necessary for the immediate acceptance of the peace package and thereafter for its full implementation in good faith. They included an EC declaration⁽¹⁹⁴⁾ a statement by France, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States⁽¹⁹⁵⁾ a statement by Cape Verde, Djibouti, Morocco, Pakistan and Venezuela;⁽¹⁹⁶⁾ and a letter from Turkey on behalf of the OIC Contact Group⁽¹⁹⁷⁾

At its request, Bosnia and Herzegovina was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37.^a With the Council's consent, Cyrus Vance (United States), Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, was invited under rule 39.^b Ambassador Dragomir Djokic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at his request, was also invited to address the Council.

In his address, Mr. Vance stated that he and his Co-Chairman, Lord Owen, hoped that the Council would adopt the draft resolution at hand in order to send the very clear message to the Bosnian Serb side and its supporters that time was running out and the international community would no longer wait. If the measures envisaged in the resolution should fail to achieve the desired effect, they should be followed by additional measures of sterner persuasion. Mr. Vance added that everything possible must be done to bring humanitarian relief and assistance to the suffering communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Following an oral revision to the text, the Council adopted resolution 820(1993) by a vote of 13 to none, with 2 abstentions (China, Russian Federation).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the peace talks held by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming the need for a lasting peace settlement to be signed by all of the Bosnian parties,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming once again that any taking of territory by force or any practice of "ethnic cleansing" is unlawful and totally unacceptable, and insisting that all displaced persons be enabled to return in peace to their former homes,

Reaffirming in this regard its resolution 808(1993) in which it decided that an international tribunal shall be established for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report at the earliest possible date,

Deeply alarmed and concerned about the magnitude of the plight of innocent victims of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Expressing its condemnation of all the activities carried out in violation of resolutions 757(1992) and 787(1992) between the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Serb-controlled areas in the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply concerned by the position of the Bosnian Serb party as reported in paragraphs 17, 18 and 19 of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 March 1993,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

A

1. Commends the peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina in the form agreed to by two of the Bosnian parties and set out in the report of the Secretary-General of 26 March 1993, namely the Agreement on Interim Arrangements (annex I), the nine Constitutional Principles (annex II), the provisional provincial map (annex III) and the Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (annex IV);

2. Welcomes the fact that this plan has now been accepted in full by two of the Bosnian parties;

3. Expresses its grave concern at the refusal so far of the Bosnian Serb party to accept the Agreement on Interim Arrangements and the provisional provincial map, and calls on that party to accept the peace plan in full;

5. Demands full respect for the right of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the international humanitarian agencies to free and unimpeded access to all areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that all parties, in particular the Bosnian Serb party and others concerned, cooperate fully with them and take all necessary steps to ensure the safety of their personnel;

6. Condemns once again all violations of international humanitarian law, including in particular the practice of "ethnic cleansing" and the massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of women, and reaffirms that those who commit or have committed or order or have ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

7. Reaffirms its endorsement of the principles that all statements or commitments made under duress, particularly those relating to land and property, are wholly null and void and that all displaced persons have the right to return in peace to their former homes and should be assisted to do so;

8. Declares its readiness to take all the necessary measures to assist the parties in the effective implementation of the peace plan once it has been agreed in full by all the parties, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council at the earliest possible date, and if possible not later than nine days after the adoption of the present resolution, a report containing an account of the preparatory work for the implementation of the proposals referred to in paragraph 28 of the Secretary-General's report of 26 March 1993 and detailed proposals for the implementation of the peace plan, including arrangements for the effective international control of heavy weapons, based inter alia on consultations with Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements;

9. Encourages Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, to cooperate effectively with the Secretary-General in his efforts to assist the parties in implementing the peace plan in accordance with paragraph 8 above;

Decides that the provisions set forth in paragraphs 12 to 30 below shall, to the extent that they establish obligations beyond those established by its earlier relevant resolutions, come into force nine days after the date of the adoption of the present resolution unless the Secretary-General has reported to the Council that the Bosnian Serb party has joined the other parties in signing the peace plan and in implementing it and that the Bosnian Serbs have ceased their military attacks;

11. Decides further that if, at any time after the submission of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General reports to the Council that the Bosnian Serbs have renewed their military attacks or failed to comply with the peace plan, the provisions set forth in paragraphs 12 to 30 below shall come into force immediately;

12. Decides that import to, export from and transshipment through the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, with the exception of essential humanitarian supplies including medical supplies and foodstuffs distributed by international humanitarian agencies, shall be permitted only with proper authorization from the Government of the Republic of Croatia or the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina respectively;

13. Decides that all States, in implementing the measures imposed by resolutions 757(1992), 760(1992), 787(1992) and the present resolution, shall take steps to prevent diversion to the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of commodities and products said to be destined for other places, in particular the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces;

14. Demands that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully with UNPROFOR in the fulfilment of its immigration and customs control functions deriving from resolution 769(1992);

16. Confirms that no vessels (a) registered in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or (b) in which a majority or controlling interest is held by a person or undertaking in or operating from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or (c) suspected of having violated or being in violation of resolutions 713(1991), 757(1992), 787(1992) or the present resolution shall be permitted to pass through installations, including river locks or canals within the territory of Member States, and calls upon the riparian States to ensure that adequate monitoring is provided to all cabotage traffic involving points that are situated between Vidin/Calafat and Mohacs;

17. Reaffirms the responsibility of riparian States to take necessary measures to ensure that shipping on the Danube is in accordance with resolutions 713(1991), 757(1992), 787(1992) and the present resolution, including any measures under the authority of the Security Council to halt or otherwise control all shipping in order to inspect and verify their cargoes and destinations, to ensure effective monitoring and to ensure strict implementation of the relevant resolutions, and reiterates its request in resolution 787(1992) to all States, including non-riparian States, to provide, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, such assistance as may be required by the riparian States, notwithstanding the restrictions on navigation set out in the international agreements which apply to the Danube;

18. Requests the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) to make periodic reports to the Security Council on information submitted to the Committee regarding alleged violations of the relevant resolutions, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels, reported to be engaged in such violations;

the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and calls on all States to report to the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) on actions taken pursuant to this paragraph;

22. Decides to prohibit the transport of all commodities and products across the land borders or to or from the ports of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the only exceptions being:

(a) The importation of medical supplies and food-stuffs into the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) as provided for in resolution 757(1992), in which connection the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) will draw up rules for monitoring to ensure full compliance with this and other relevant resolutions;

(c) Strictly limited transshipments through the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), when authorized on an exceptional basis by the Committee established by resolution 724(1991), provided that nothing in this paragraph shall affect transshipment on the Danube in accordance with paragraph 15 above;

23. Decides that each State neighbouring the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) shall prevent the passage of all freight vehicles and rolling stock into or out of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), except at a strictly limited number of road and rail border crossing points, the location of which shall be notified by each neighbouring State to the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) and approved by the Committee;

28. Decides to prohibit all commercial maritime traffic from entering the territorial sea of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) except when authorized on a case-by-case basis by the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) or in case of force majeure;

29. Reaffirms the authority of States acting under paragraph 12 of resolution 787(1992) to use such measures commensurate with the specific circumstances as may be necessary under the authority of the Security Council to enforce the present resolution and its other relevant resolutions, including in the territorial sea of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

30. Confirms that the provisions set forth in paragraphs 12 to 29 above, strengthening the implementation of the measures imposed by its earlier relevant resolutions, do not apply to activities related to UNPROFOR, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia or the European Community Monitor Mission;

C

Desirous of achieving the full readmittance of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to the international community once it has fully implemented the relevant resolutions of the Council,

31. Expresses its readiness, after all three Bosnian parties have accepted the peace plan and on the basis of verified evidence, provided by the Secretary-General, that the Bosnian Serb party is cooperating in good faith in effective implementation of the plan, to review all the measures in the present resolution and its other relevant resolutions with a view to gradually lifting them;

32. Invites all States to consider what contribution they can make to the reconstruction of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

33. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 820(1993)

17 April 1993 Meeting 3200 13-0-2

9-nation draft (S/25558), orally revised.

Sponsors: Cape Verde, Djibouti, France, Morocco, Pakistan, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Brazil, Cape Verde, Djibouti, France, Hungary, Japan, Morocco, New Zealand, Pakistan, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.
Against: None.
Abstaining: China, Russian Federation.

Explaining its intention to abstain, the Russian Federation stated that, although it supported the Part A provisions of the text, strengthening sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was quite untimely. The most reasonable approach would be to delay voting on the draft until 26 April, as previously agreed. It would not, however, hinder adoption of the draft since it would enter into force only nine days after its adoption, thus allowing the Bosnian Serb side to sign the peace plan.

China, while welcoming those elements of the resolution that commended the unremitting efforts of the Co-Chairmen, found it difficult to support the adoption of enforcement measures and strengthening and expanding existing sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). In China's view, the international community should continue to promote negotiations and avoid taking action that might further complicate the issue.

Reports of the Secretary-General (30 April and 3 May). In a 30 April report⁽¹⁹⁸⁾ covering the activities of the Co-Chairmen since 26 March, the Secretary-General described their continued efforts to help alleviate the humanitarian situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, to persuade the Bosnian Serb side to sign the two remaining documents of the peace plan, and to prepare, with the UNPROFOR Commander, for the implementation of the plan upon completion of its signature.

Between 21 and 25 April, Lord Owen, accompanied by Mr. Vance's Special Adviser, led a delegation on behalf of the Co-Chairmen to the area of the former Yugoslavia and held a series of meetings with all the parties at the highest levels at Zagreb and at Belgrade. Despite the urgings of the three Presidents for acceptance of the plan, the Bosnian Serb "assembly", on 26 April, voted against it and decided to put it to a referendum. On 29 April, while continuing efforts to persuade the Bosnian Serb side to sign the outstanding two documents of the peace plan, the Co-Chairmen were informed that the referendum had been superseded by a decision of the "assembly" to hold a fresh meeting on 5 May to reconsider its previous decision against signing the peace plan.

In his report of 3 May⁽¹⁹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported that, in the light of these developments, the Co-Chairmen, together with Mr. Stoltenberg, Co-Chairman-designate to succeed Mr. Vance, held a further round of talks at Athens on 1 and 2 May with the Presidents of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Serbia and Montenegro, and the leaders of the Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Serbs. Also in attendance were observers from the host Government, EC, the Russian Federation and the United States.

During that meeting Mr. Vance provided additional amplifications on the concept of the northern corridor, consisting of the internationally controlled thoroughway linking the provinces of Banja Luka and Bijeljina and a demilitarized zone extending five kilometres into either side of the thoroughway in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The status of the explanations and amplifications was confirmed in a letter from the Co-Chairmen to President Izetbegovic and Messrs. Boban and Karadzic.

On 2 May, Mr. Karadzic signed the agreement on interim arrangements and the provisional provincial map, thus completing all signatures required on the peace plan. He also issued a statement, to be made part of the ICFY official documents, that the signature of the Bosnian Serb side would become invalid, null and void if not supported by the "assembly" of the "Republic of Sprska", scheduled to meet at Pale on 5 May.

Mr. Karadzic's signature was annulled almost immediately by the Bosnian Serb "assembly" at that meeting and by the subsequent referendum on 15 and 16 May, notwithstanding intervention in the plan's favour by Serbia's President and Prime Minister. Immediately after the 5 May meeting, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) announced that it was cutting off all but humanitarian supplies to the Bosnian Serbs.

Statements by the Secretary-General and Security Council. On 6 May, the spokesman for the Secretary-General issued a statement to the effect that the Secretary-General believed that the last word had not been spoken by the Bosnian Serbs, that there would be more negotiations and efforts would continue to overcome the current difficulties to obtaining agreement on the Vance-Owen peace plan.

Following informal consultations by the Security Council on 7 May, its President made a statement to the press reaffirming that the Vance-Owen peace plan remained the basis for a peaceful solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina and that the Bosnian Serbs must return to it. The statement also expressed the conviction that preparatory work for the plan's implementation should continue in the interim.

Confederation proposals

Reports of ICFY Steering Committee Co-Chairmen (July-August). Following the rejection of the Vance-Owen peace plan by the Bosnian Serb "assembly" on 5 May, the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee maintained contact with the different sides to the conflict.

In their 8 July report⁽²⁰⁰⁾ the Co-Chairmen noted that implementation of the Vance-Owen peace plan, in the absence of agreement by the Bosnian Serbs, was premised on, among other things, continued cooperation between the Muslim-led Bosnian Government and the Bosnian Croats. By the second week of May, however, major fighting broke out again between these two sides in central Bosnia.

On 18 May, the Co-Chairmen met with Bosnia and Herzegovina's President Izetbegovic, the Bosnian Croat leader, Mr. Boban, and Croatia's President Tudjman. President Izetbegovic and Mr. Boban reached understandings on: a cessation of hostilities between the Bosnian Croats and the Bosnian Muslims; cooperation in implementing the peace plan in the six predominantly Muslim or Croat provinces; further meetings of the Coordination Body (under the interim arrangements of the Vance-Owen peace plan, the nine-member body for implementing the peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina); organization of regular meetings of the Presidency; and formation of a Government with agreed allocations of ministries and diplomatic posts.

On 20 and 21 May, the Foreign Ministers of France, Spain, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States met to discuss the situation.

In the meantime, the fighting in central Bosnia and Herzegovina increased between the Muslims and Croats as each side tried to contest as much territory as possible, thereby bringing to an end the cooperation that existed between them since the March 1992 referendum.

The Co-Chairmen met with Presidents Milosevic and Tudjman (Belgrade and Zagreb, 9-11 June), who revived the concept of a confederation for Bosnia and Herzegovina. First proposed in March 1992 by Ambassador Jose Cutileiro at Lisbon, Portugal, the concept of a confederal solution had initially been accepted by all three sides; however, from the time President Izetbegovic withdrew his support for the proposal, it had been vigorously opposed by the Bosnian Government side in the context of ICFY.

On 23 June at Geneva, Presidents Milosevic and Tudjman informed the Co-Chairmen that consultations had taken place between the Bosnian Croat and Bosnian Serb leaders, Messrs. Boban and Karadzic, and that a draft providing for the organization of Bosnia and Herzegovina into a confederation of three constituent republics had been prepared, based on the agreed constitutional principles of the Vance-Owen peace plan.

The Co-Chairmen suggested additional elements to the draft, including: establishment of a Confederated Council of Ministers whose Chairman would be Prime Minister, rotating at agreed intervals among the three republics, with a similar rotation for the Foreign Minister; referral of disputes that could not be settled in the Constitutional Court by consensus for binding arbitration by a Chamber of five drawn from ICJ judges; and international monitoring of thoroughways so as to ensure freedom of movement.

Messrs. Boban and Karadzic reconfirmed their acceptance of the Vance-Owen peace plan's military agreement, subject to updating and consequential amendment; they also agreed on texts that maintained key parts of the Vance-Owen agreement on interim arrangements, including those for the protection of human rights. No specific map had been put forward, but the Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Serbs offered to negotiate directly along the lines they had already explained to President Izetbegovic and the collective Presidency.

On 1 July, the Co-Chairmen convened a meeting of the Steering Committee at which they stressed the deteriorating security situation facing UNPROFOR, UNHCR and humanitarian workers; the lack of resources for humanitarian operations; the lack of troops in UNPROFOR to fulfil its various mandates; the importance of continuing the search for negotiated solutions; and the dangers of escalation of the conflict if the parties turned their backs on that search.

The Co-Chairmen circulated the Bosnian Croat-Bosnian Serb revised constitutional principles, military agreements and interim arrangements and gave a detailed presentation on how, as a result of their clarification meetings, a confederation of three republics in Bosnia and Herzegovina might look in terms of territorial boundaries.

In their 3 August report⁽²⁰¹⁾ which covered negotiations during July, the Co-Chairmen said that, owing to the deteriorating humanitarian situation and the persistence of conflict, they had arranged for a resumption of peace talks, which began on 27 July. Discussions concentrated on securing a cease-fire; humanitarian issues; future constitutional arrangements; and allocation of territory to the constituent entities.

On 30 July, acting on the directives of their respective authorities, the military commanders of the three sides signed an agreement providing for a full cease-fire, a freeze on all military activities and free passage for UNPROFOR and humanitarian aid convoys.

Also on 30 July, all sides agreed to a Constitutional Agreement for a Union of Republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to form part of an overall peace settlement. Under consideration were the establishment of an Access Authority (foreseen under the Vance-Owen peace plan) to ensure movement throughout the country; and a map, regarding which the Co-Chairmen were determined to ensure that a Muslim-majority republic should have at least 30 per cent of the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina and have access to the Sava River and to the sea at Ploče.

The Co-Chairmen's report, transmitted on 6 August⁽²⁰²⁾ noted that, in reply to President Izetbegovic's request for clarification of chapter I, article 1, of the Constitutional Agreement, the Co-Chairmen wrote that Bosnia and Herzegovina was already a recognized State Member of the United Nations and, in the spirit of the Charter, the principles of the 1992 London Conference, and those laid down by the Security Council, confirmed their understanding that the meaning of article 1 was that the Union of Republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina would continue as a State Member of the United Nations. They suggested to the Presidency that it could ask the Council to put the matter beyond doubt, adding that the provisions of the Constitutional Agreement made it legally impossible to dissolve the Union without the free consent of all three Constituent Republics.

In subsequent discussions, the following annexes to the Constitutional Agreement were prepared and were accepted by all three sides: composition and competence of the Human Rights Court, list of human rights instruments incorporated in the Constitutional Agreement, and initial appointment and functions of the Ombudsmen.

All three sides agreed that the name of each Constituent Republic would be determined by the competent authorities of that Republic. They also agreed that the map of the three Constituent Republics would be referred to the Boundary Commission established in accordance with article 1 (b) of the Agreement, which should ensure that the territory of the Republic marked as No. 1 on the map should not be less than 30 per cent of the entire territory of the Union of Republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The three sides reaffirmed their acceptance of the Agreement for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which dealt with the military aspects of implementing a peaceful settlement for the republic, and agreed that the document would be updated by the Mixed Military Working Group under the chairmanship of UNPROFOR. They also agreed on the core areas to be allocated to each of the three Constituent Republics. However, unresolved questions relating to Brčko, eastern Bosnia, the Bihac pocket, Posavina and eastern Herzegovina and Sarajevo remained. The last was the most contentious issue, with positions deeply entrenched.

The report provided details of the responsibilities envisaged for a proposed Implementation Force, to be established by the United Nations.

On 9 August⁽²⁰³⁾ Croatia registered its exception to certain passages in the report which it felt could lead to misunderstandings and confusion as to Croatia's position on the peace talks and the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Bosnia and Herzegovina's objections to the same report were communicated to the Council on 11 August⁽²⁰⁴⁾

In their report transmitted on 20 August⁽²⁰⁵⁾ the Co-Chairmen stated that, as of that date, the parties had worked out arrangements to place Sarajevo under United Nations administration for a period of up to two years and Mostar under EC administration for a similar period. Detailed arrangements were worked out in respect of demarcations in the town of Brčko and discussions held regarding the towns of Gornji Vakuf, Donji Vakuf, Bugojno and Travnik. The Bosnian Serb side agreed to a special road linking Gorazde and Zepa, which would be part of the territory of, and administered and policed by, the Muslim-majority republic.

In the light of these developments, the parties issued a 20 August statement acknowledging receipt of constitutional papers and a map, based on the constitutional and related documents already worked out and reflecting the discussions that had taken place, and undertaking to go home to explain the map and return to Geneva for a final meeting on Monday, 30 August.

Those constitutional and related papers were reproduced in an addendum to the report⁽²⁰⁶⁾ as was the map indicating the boundaries of the constituent republics, to be incorporated in annex A of the Constitutional Agreement.⁽²⁰⁷⁾

Following receipt of the August reports of the Co-Chairmen, the Security Council convened on 24 August. At its request, Bosnia and Herzegovina was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 859(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the responsibility of the Security Council in this regard,

Reaffirming further that the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a State Member of the United Nations, enjoys the rights provided for in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina has continued to be subject to armed hostilities in contravention of Security Council resolution 713(1991) and other relevant Security Council resolutions and that, despite all efforts by the United Nations as well as regional organizations and arrangements, there is still no compliance with all relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular by the Bosnian Serb party,

Condemning once again all war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law, by whomsoever committed, Bosnian Serbs or other individuals,

Deeply concerned at the deterioration of humanitarian conditions in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in and around Mostar, and determined to support in every possible way the efforts by the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to continue providing humanitarian assistance to civilian populations in need,

Concerned about the continuing siege of Sarajevo, Mostar and other threatened cities,

Strongly condemning the disruption of public utilities (including water, electricity, fuel and communications), in particular by the Bosnian Serb party, and calling upon all parties concerned to cooperate in restoring them,

Recalling the principles for a political solution adopted by the London International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming once again the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory through the use of force and the practice of "ethnic cleansing",

Stressing that an end to the hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina is necessary to achieve meaningful progress in the peace process,

Mindful of its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Taking into account the reports of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia contained in documents S/26233, S/26260 and S/26337,

Determining that the grave situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Notes with appreciation the report by the Secretary-General's Special Representative on the latest developments at the Geneva peace talks and urges the parties, in cooperation with the Co-Chairmen, to conclude as soon as possible a just and comprehensive political settlement freely agreed by all of them;

2. Calls for an immediate cease-fire and cessation of hostilities throughout the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as essential for achieving a just and equitable political solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina through peaceful negotiations;

3. Demands that all concerned facilitate the unhindered flow of humanitarian assistance, including the provision of food, water, electricity, fuel and communications, in particular to the "safe areas" in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Demands also that the safety and operational effectiveness of UNPROFOR and UNHCR personnel in Bosnia and Herzegovina be fully respected by all parties at all times;

5. Notes with appreciation the Secretary-General's letter of 18 August 1993, stating that the United Nations has now the initial operational capability for the use of air power in support of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

6. Affirms that a solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina must be in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law; and further affirms the continuing relevance in this context of:

(a) The sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

(b) The fact that neither a change in the name of the State nor changes regarding the internal organization of the State such as those contained in the constitutional agreement annexed to the Co-Chairmen's report in document S/26337 would affect the continued membership of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the United Nations;

(c) The principles adopted by the London International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, including the need for a cessation of hostilities, the principle of a negotiated solution freely arrived at, the unacceptability of the acquisition of territory by force or by "ethnic cleansing" and the right of refugees and others who have suffered losses to compensation in accordance with the statement on Bosnia adopted by the London Conference;

(d) Recognition and respect for the right of all displaced persons to return to their homes in safety and honour;
 (e) The maintenance of Sarajevo, capital of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a united city and a multicultural, multi-ethnic and pluri-religious centre;

7. Recalls the principle of individual responsibility for the perpetration of war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law and its decision in resolution 827(1993) to establish an International Tribunal;

8. Declares its readiness to consider taking the necessary measures to assist the parties in the effective implementation of a fair and equitable settlement once it has been freely agreed by the parties, which would require a decision by the Council;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 859(1993)

24 August 1993 Meeting 3269 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26182).

Further reports of the Co-Chairmen. The Co-Chairmen's report covering the resumed talks on 31 August and 1 September⁽²⁰⁸⁾ noted that at the end of the talks the Co-Chairmen had put to the parties the peace package distilled from the parties' own ideas. The Bosnian Croat and Bosnian Serb sides were ready to sign the package and collateral agreements, but the Bosnian Government side wanted further consideration of the question of access to the Adriatic Sea and some of the territorial issues.

A report transmitted to the Council on 23 September⁽²⁰⁹⁾ provided an account of deliberations on the HMS Invincible in the Adriatic Sea on 20 September. On that occasion, President Izetbegovic and Messrs. Boban and Karadzic met in the presence of the Co-Chairmen; Presidents Bulatovic, Milosevic and Tudjman; and Deputy Foreign Minister Vitaly Churkin (Russian Federation) and Ambassador Charles Redman (United States), who attended as observers. At that meeting, provisions for the promotion and protection of human rights were reconfirmed, as were arrangements for implementing and monitoring a cessation of hostilities. Agreements were also worked out providing the Muslim-majority republic with access to the Adriatic Sea via the Neretva River, giving that republic a 99-year lease on an area for the construction of a port at Ploce (in addition to the use of the port of Rijeka) and assuring freedom of transit between the Union of Republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia.

The three sides informed the Co-Chairmen that they would submit the package arrived at on the HMS Invincible to their respective assemblies for ratification. The Bosnian Croat and the Bosnian Serb sides subsequently informed the Co-Chairmen that their assemblies had ratified the package; the Bosnian Presidency reported that its expanded assembly did not.

Both the Bosnian Croat and Bosnian Serb sides then informed the Co-Chairmen that they had made concessions on the HMS Invincible conditional on the acceptance of the package by all sides. They therefore intended to withdraw their concessions. The Co-Chairmen appealed to them not to do so and to continue the search for peace.

In their final report of the year, transmitted on 29 December⁽²¹⁰⁾ the Co-Chairmen described the extensive discussions held with the three sides, as well as with neighbouring countries, between 29 November and 23 December, in a determined push for a peace agreement.

The situation after the meetings held at Geneva and Brussels (Belgium) between 21 and 23 December was summarized by the Co-Chairmen as follows. There was agreement among all three sides (1) that Bosnia and Herzegovina should be organized as a union of three republics and (2) that the Muslim-majority republic should have 33.3 per cent of the territory and the Croat-majority republic, 17.5 per cent. (3) All three leaders accepted the Co-Chairmen's appeal to observe a holiday truce from 23 December 1993 to 15 January 1994 and undertook to instruct their military commanders down to the local level to observe the cease-fire faithfully and (4) agreed to return to Geneva on 15 January 1994 to continue the search for peace. (5) Working groups were set up to help reach agreement, by 15 January, on: the definition of the Mostar City area to be placed under the temporary administration of the European Union (formerly EC); technical arrangements for providing the Muslim-majority republic with road and rail access to Brcko and the Sava River, without prejudice to that republic's continued support for the arrangements agreed on the HMS Invincible; access of the Muslim-majority republic to the sea; and continued discussions on territorial delimitation. (6) All three sides were asked to consult their respective "assemblies" beforehand so that any agreement concluded at Geneva would enter into force immediately upon signature.

Mass rape

Report of EC mission. In response to a 1992 Security Council request⁽²¹¹⁾ Denmark, as representative of the EC Presidency, transmitted to the Council on 2 February 1993 the report⁽²¹²⁾ of the mission dispatched to the former Yugoslavia at the initiative of the EC European Council to investigate reports of massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of Muslim women in the former Yugoslavia.

The mission, headed by Dame Ann Warburton, visited Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina from 18 to 24 December 1992 and from 19 to 26 January 1993, meeting with a wide range of interlocutors including leaders of Catholic and Muslim communities, field staff of international agencies, representatives of the Government of Croatia, governmental and non-governmental organizations, women's groups, gynaecology specialists and mental health experts. It visited refugee centres, shelters for displaced persons, hospitals and food distribution centres. It interviewed victims and eyewitnesses of human rights violations, and examined documentation detailing the process of clearing villages. The mission sought to determine the scale of the problem and whether or not it could be described as systematic.

Reasoned estimates placed the number of victims at around 20,000. Indications were that the rapes had been particularly sadistic in some cases and that, in many, the intention was to make women pregnant and to detain them long enough to make termination of the pregnancy impossible. This raised the problem of adoption of children conceived under those circumstances.

While the majority of victims were Muslim women, the mission also received reports of the rape of Croat and Serb women and children, as well as the sexual abuse of men in detention camps.

The mission concluded that the wide-scale rape of Muslim women and its clearly recognizable pattern suggested that it was an important element of war strategy.

The mission made recommendations calling for coordination of assistance; physical facilities to house the victims of rape; access to psychiatric and counselling services, to gynaecological treatment and to facilities for the termination of pregnancy. Immediate measures included: screening procedures and counselling by cross-disciplinary teams of gynaecological, psychiatric, psychological and other medical expertise; an emergency ambulance service; installation of sanitation and washing facilities at refugee centres; adequate nutrition and health care by mobile medical teams; removal from the refugee camps of the most vulnerable individuals, particularly women victims of trauma and abuse, to better living arrangements. Other recommendations included development of rehabilitation programmes for victims, rapid visa procedures by EC Governments for refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly victims of rape, and temporary accommodation of Muslim women needing medical treatment.

Annexed to the report was a Declaration on the follow-up to the mission, adopted at Brussels on 1 February, by which EC Governments stated their intention to implement the mission's recommendations and to urge the parties to the conflict to bring an end to their abhorrent practices. SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

Following consultations held on 8 April, the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council members, made the following statement to the media⁽²¹³⁾

"The members of the Security Council express their concern at the report of the International Committee of the Red Cross, according to which 17 detainees lost their lives on 26 March 1993 in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, when the vehicle transporting them from the Batkovic Camp (under the control of Serb forces) for work at the front was ambushed.

"The members of the Council, recalling all the relevant resolutions and statements of the Council, remind all the parties that they are responsible at all times for the detainees' safety and that they must not compel detainees to do work of a military nature or destined to serve a military purpose. The ICRC had already repeatedly called on all parties to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina strictly to observe the provisions of international humanitarian law.

"The members of the Council condemn all violations of the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions, which the parties have undertaken to respect, and reaffirm once again that those who commit or order the commission of such acts will be held personally responsible.

"The members of the Council request the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolution 780(1992) to carry out an investigation of these abominable practices and to make a report."

Communication. On 7 September⁽²¹⁴⁾ Croatia communicated to the Secretary-General an appeal of its President calling on the Bosnian Croats to ensure forthwith humane treatment of all detainees and to allow ICRC free access to detention camps. The appeal also called for the prevention and removal of obstacles to the delivery of humanitarian aid and for every assistance to the United Nations and international humanitarian organizations. It invited the other warring parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina to do the same.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

The Security Council met on 14 September, inviting Bosnia and Herzegovina, at its request, to participate without the right to vote under rule 37.^a Following consultations, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²¹⁵⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3276.

"The Security Council expresses its profound concern over recent reports that Bosnian Croats have been holding Bosnian Muslims in detention camps under deplorable conditions. The Council recalls the international revulsion and condemnation that accompanied revelations last year of the conditions under which Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats were being held in Bosnian Serb detention camps.

"The Council reiterates the principle that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) must be given access to all detainees in Bosnia wherever they may be held. It notes that ICRC has recently been given access to some detainees, but recalls with condemnation the obstacles which the Bosnian Croats have previously placed in the way of ICRC's attempts to gain access to the camps in order to ascertain the conditions of the detained. It also notes the recent appeal addressed by the President of Croatia to the Bosnian Croats.

"The Council emphasizes the fact that inhumane treatment and abuses in detention centres violates international humanitarian law. Moreover, as the Council has previously recalled, persons who commit or order the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches.

"The Council calls upon the Bosnian Croats to supply immediately to ICRC complete information on all camps where Bosnian Muslim and other prisoners are being held, and to assure ICRC and all other legitimately concerned international bodies free and unhindered access to the detained, wherever they may be held.

"The Council believes that the Government of Croatia has a responsibility to use its influence with the Bosnian Croats to secure compliance with this statement and calls on the Government of Croatia to take immediate steps to that end.

"The Council further reaffirms that all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and reminds them of its willingness to consider appropriate actions if any of them should fail to abide scrupulously by their obligations.

"The Council decides to remain seized of the matter."

Genocide

In April⁽²¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council an ICJ Order of 8 April indicating provisional measures in the case concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)). Also in April⁽²¹⁷⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina requested the Council to take immediate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter to stop the continuing assault on the country and enforce that Order. On 15 September⁽²¹⁸⁾ it requested the Council to enforce a further ICJ Order concerning the case, made on 13 September, in view of the continuing aggression and genocide against the country and its people (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Humanitarian assistance

Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the President of the Security Council on 12 January⁽²¹⁹⁾ that the unsatisfactory conditions surrounding the delivery of humanitarian supplies to destinations within the country—to remedy which the Council had adopted resolution 770(1992)⁽²²⁰⁾—remained unchanged. It drew attention to reports confirmed by the UNHCR Director of Relief Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina of deaths from cold and starvation, especially in the eastern part of the country. It also attached a report of 11 January from New York Newsday raising concerns warranting an urgent response from the Council about UNPROFOR's ability to deliver humanitarian aid effectively.

On 18 January⁽²²¹⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina drew attention to the UNHCR report of the denial by Serbian and Montenegrin military forces of access for food deliveries to Gorazde and Srebrenica in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It asked the Council to issue a statement emphasizing the severity and urgency of the situation, requesting UNPROFOR-participating States fully to invoke resolution 770(1992) in the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and requesting also that air drops of food commence immediately.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (25 January and 17 February)

The Security Council met on 25 January and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement below⁽²²²⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3164.

"The Security Council notes with appreciation the efforts of the international community to alleviate the plight of the civilian population in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, whose lives have been severely affected by the fighting there. The Council has the highest regard for the efforts of the brave people who have undertaken to deliver urgently needed humanitarian assistance under extremely trying conditions to the civilian population in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular the efforts of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). However, the Council deeply regrets that the situation there has imposed great limits on the international community in the fulfilment of its humanitarian mandate.

"The Council reaffirms its demand that all parties and others concerned, in particular Serb paramilitary units, cease and desist forthwith from all violations of international humanitarian law being committed in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in particular the deliberate interference with humanitarian convoys. The Council warns the parties concerned of serious consequences, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the Security Council, if they continue to impede the delivery of humanitarian relief assistance.

"The Council invites the Secretary-General to keep under continuous review the possibility of air-dropping humanitarian assistance to areas isolated by the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Council will remain actively seized of the matter."

The Council met again on 17 February and, after consultations among its members on the same subject, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²²³⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3173.

"The Security Council recalls all relevant resolutions of the Council and its statement of 25 January concerning the provision of humanitarian relief in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It notes with deep concern that, notwithstanding the Council's demand in that statement, relief efforts continue to be impeded. It condemns the blocking of humanitarian convoys and the impeding of relief supplies, which place at risk the civilian population of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and endanger the lives of personnel delivering such supplies. It remains deeply concerned at reports of pressing humanitarian need in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly in the eastern part of the country.

"The Council reiterates its demand that the parties and all others concerned allow immediate and unimpeded access to humanitarian relief supplies. It further demands that the parties and others concerned give the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees the guarantees she has sought that they will abide by the promises they have made to comply with the Council's decisions in this regard, and thus facilitate the resumption of the full humanitarian relief programme, to which the Council attaches the greatest importance."

Communication. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) drew to the attention of the Security Council President on 23 February⁽²²⁴⁾ information it had received from the United States that it intended to air-drop humanitarian assistance into areas of eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina, citing Council resolution 770(1992)⁽²²⁵⁾ as a legal basis for the operation. The United States had stated that the operation was a temporary emergency effort and had warned the Yugoslav Army not to disrupt it in any way. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in reaffirming its support for the delivery of relief supplies to all warring sides, stressed that the decision could have some negative and grave, though possibly unintended, implications for the ICIFY negotiations in progress. It pointed out that it could not be held responsible for incidents that might take place over Bosnia and Herzegovina in the wake of that decision.

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) assured the Council President that it would not interfere with the air-drops on the understanding that neither its territory nor its airspace would be intruded upon.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At its meeting on 25 February, the Security Council invited Bosnia and Herzegovina to participate without the right to vote under rule 37.^a Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²²⁵⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3177.

"The Security Council, having received a report from the Secretary-General, recalls all its relevant resolutions and its statements of 25 January 1993 and 17 February 1993 concerning the provision of humanitarian relief in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It is deeply concerned that, in spite of its repeated demands, relief efforts continue to be impeded by Serb paramilitary units, especially in the eastern part of the country, namely in the enclaves of Srebrenica, Cerska, Gorazde and Zepa.

"The Security Council deplores the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina at a time when discussions are to resume with a view to reaching a just and durable agreement to end the conflict. It regards the blockade of relief efforts as a serious impediment to a negotiated settlement in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. It notes with concern that the measures taken by Serb paramilitary units to interdict humanitarian convoys, in flagrant violation of relevant Security Council resolutions, expose the personnel of UNPROFOR and UNHCR as well as other humanitarian organizations to physical harm.

"The deliberate impeding of the delivery of food and humanitarian relief essential for the survival of the civilian population in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina constitutes a violation of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, and the Security Council is committed to ensuring that individuals responsible for such acts are brought to justice.

"The Security Council strongly condemns once again the blocking of humanitarian convoys that has impeded the delivery of humanitarian supplies. It reiterates its demand that the Bosnian parties grant immediate and unimpeded access for humanitarian convoys and fully comply with the Security Council's decisions in this regard. The Security Council expresses its strong support for the use, in full coordination with the United Nations and in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions, of humanitarian air drops in isolated areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina that are in critical need of humanitarian supplies and cannot be reached by ground convoys. It reaffirms its firm commitment to the full implementation of the humanitarian relief programme in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"The Security Council remains actively seized of the matter and continues its consideration of further steps, in accordance with its relevant resolutions."

ICIFY Working Group on Humanitarian Issues

The Working Group on Humanitarian Issues met on 16 July at Geneva⁽²⁰¹⁾ The meeting was attended by the Co-Chairmen and representatives of the region's Governments, ICRC, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization and the World Food Programme. Sadako Ogata, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and Chairperson of the Group, informed the meeting of the serious obstacles affecting international relief efforts, including the ongoing denial and obstruction of humanitarian access in many areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina and attacks on and harassment of relief staff. She highlighted the dire conditions of the population of Sarajevo and of those populations trapped in many other areas, such as Srebrenica and Mostar in central Bosnia and Herzegovina. She also cited the shortfall in funding for all United Nations relief agencies as a further serious obstacle, resulting in cut-backs in various support programmes.

The meeting recognized the need to provide temporary protection for refugees and to ease the burden of refugee-receiving States in the region.

On 18 November, Mrs. Ogata, together with the ICRC President, met with the Foreign Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the leaders of the Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Serbs, Messrs. Boban and Karadzic, in order to seek their commitment to create conditions that would allow the international community to provide the necessary humanitarian assistance to the country's population.

On the same date, Mrs. Ogata and the parties signed a joint declaration ensuring the delivery of humanitarian assistance by suspending hostilities and allowing free and unconditional access by the most effective land routes; ensuring complete and secure freedom of movement for all United Nations personnel and international humanitarian organizations; allowing UNHCR and ICRC to determine the content of humanitarian assistance; ensuring that the humanitarian deliveries reached their intended civilian beneficiaries and were not diverted for military or other uses; releasing all civilians unlawfully detained; and ensuring that the military and civilian administrations at all levels honoured the foregoing and previous commitments regarding respect for the freedom of movement and other human rights, the 1949 Geneva Conventions and other applicable international humanitarian law and principles.

During the year, some 267,763 metric tonnes of humanitarian assistance was provided to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Croatia

In 1993, the armed forces of the Government of Croatia launched two incursions into the Serb-controlled UNPAs, one in January and another in September. This undermined efforts by ICFY and the United Nations to nurture a climate of cooperation and confidence between the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in order to get the two parties to implement the United Nations peace-keeping plan for Croatia. The incursions, together with related Government actions regarded by the local Serb authorities as provocations, led to an escalation of the fighting, in particular in September, and, for most of the year at least, to the hardening of what appeared to be irreconcilable positions, putting in doubt the usefulness of UNPROFOR's presence in the country.

By December, however, the Secretary-General was able to report of continuing talks between the parties within the ICFY framework aimed at a comprehensive cease-fire and at implementing the peace-keeping plan.

UNPAs and pink zones

Although the only major success achieved by UNPROFOR in relation to its basic mandate in Croatia had been the 1992 withdrawal of the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) forces from Croatian territory⁽²²⁶⁾ law and order had been enhanced through the gradual reorganization and redeployment of the local police so that, by the beginning of 1993, the position of minority groups had been stabilized somewhat, both inside and outside the UNPAs.

On 22 January, the Croatian Army launched an offensive on Maslenica and other locations in the southern part of Sector South and the adjacent pink zones, claiming the lives of two UNPROFOR soldiers (France) and injuring four others. The attack was immediately brought to the attention of the President of the Security Council by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), claiming that it had taken place in the territory of the so-called Republic of Serb Krajina (also "Republic of Krajina").⁽²²⁷⁾

Croatia explained⁽²²⁸⁾ that its action had been aimed at securing the site for the rebuilding of the Maslenica Bridge; it added that, although it had adopted the general amnesty required as a condition for a reinstatement of Croatian authority in the pink zones, neither the process of reintegrating those zones into Croatia's legal, economic and social systems had begun, nor had Croatian authority in those zones been restored and local police forces re-established in proportion to the zones' demographic structure prior to the conflict, in accordance with the peace-keeping plan. Croatia attributed the deteriorating situation in the UNPAs to the decision by the Knin authorities to create new paramilitary forces there and in the pink zones—an action inconsistent with the demilitarization called for by the plan.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (25 and 27 January)

The Security Council met on 25 January in response to a letter of the same date from France⁽²²⁹⁾ requesting an immediate meeting to consider the grave situation in the UNPAs, especially the attacks to which UNPROFOR had been subjected. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had made a similar request the day before.⁽²³⁰⁾

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 802(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming in particular its commitment to the United Nations peace-keeping plan,

Deeply concerned by the information provided by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 25 January 1993 on the rapid and violent deterioration of the situation in Croatia as a result of military attacks by Croatian armed forces on the areas under the protection of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Strongly condemning those attacks which have led to casualties and loss of life in UNPROFOR, as well as among the civilian population,

Deeply concerned also by the lack of cooperation in recent months by the Serb local authorities in the areas under the protection of UNPROFOR, by the recent seizure by them of heavy weapons under UNPROFOR control, and by threats to widen the conflict,

1. Demands the immediate cessation of hostile activities by Croatian armed forces within or adjacent to the United Nations Protected Areas and the withdrawal of the Croatian armed forces from these areas;

2. Strongly condemns the attacks by these forces against UNPROFOR in the conduct of its duty of protecting civilians in the United Nations Protected Areas and demands their immediate cessation;

3. Demands also that the heavy weapons seized from the UNPROFOR-controlled storage areas be returned immediately to UNPROFOR;

4. Demands that all parties and others concerned comply strictly with the cease-fire arrangements already agreed and cooperate fully and unconditionally in the implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan, including the disbanding and demobilization of Serb Territorial Defence units or other units of similar functions;

5. Expresses its condolences to the families of the UNPROFOR personnel who have lost their lives;

6. Demands that all parties and others concerned respect fully the safety of United Nations personnel;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the safety of the UNPROFOR personnel concerned;

8. Calls upon all parties and others concerned to cooperate with UNPROFOR in resolving all remaining issues connected with the implementation of the peace-keeping plan, including allowing civilian traffic freely to use the Maslenica crossing;

9. Calls again upon all parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and to refrain from any actions or threats which might undermine the current efforts aimed at reaching a political settlement;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 802(1993)

25 January 1993 Meeting 3163 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25160), orally revised.

On 27 January, the Council, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²³¹⁾ on behalf of the Council, in connection with its consideration of the item entitled "The situation prevailing in and adjacent to the United Nations Protected areas in Croatia":

Meeting number. SC 3165.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned to learn from the Secretary-General that the offensive by the Croatian armed forces continues unabated in flagrant violation of resolution 802(1993) of 25 January 1993, at a crucial time in the peace process.

"The Council demands that military action by all parties and others concerned cease immediately. It further demands that all parties and others concerned comply fully and immediately with all the provisions of resolution 802(1993) and with other relevant Security Council resolutions.

"The Council once again demands that all parties and others concerned respect fully the safety of United Nations personnel and guarantee their freedom of movement. The Council reiterates that it will hold the political and military leaders involved in the conflict responsible and accountable for the safety of the United Nations peace-keeping personnel in the area.

"The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter, in particular with a view to considering what further steps might be necessary to ensure that resolution 802(1993) and other relevant Security Council resolutions are fully implemented."

Report of the Secretary-General (February).

As reported by the Secretary-General on 10 February⁽²³²⁾ UNPROFOR made repeated representations with the Croatian Government, the Serb leaders in Zadar and Knin (UNPAs) and with the Government of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) aimed at halting hostile activities and encouraging compliance with the cease-fire arrangements, as called for by resolution 802(1993). Croatia informed the Force Commander on 26 January that it would remove its military, but not its police, from the areas it had taken upon Serb compliance with the resolution. The Serb leaders, however, demanded a return of the Croatian forces to their pre-offensive positions before it could consider compliance.

Following the offensive, President Tudjman of Croatia indicated that his Government was prepared to invade the UNPAs if UNPROFOR was unable to fulfil its mandate in Croatia. The Serb leaders had re-armed, reinforced and remobilized their forces. They had also refused to negotiate with the Croats or to return the heavy weapons wrested from storage unless the Croatian armed forces withdrew to their pre-offensive positions, as called for by resolution 802(1993). Croatia categorically rejected such a withdrawal, claiming that the only issue to negotiate was the return of the UNPAs and the pink zones to Croatian control, with the Serb minority enjoying the rights granted to it by the Croatian Constitution, the Constitutional Law on Human Rights and Rights of National and Ethnic Communities of Minorities in the Republic of Croatia (8 May 1992) and other relevant national legislation. The Serb leadership in the UNPAs, however, refused to regard these territories as part of Croatia and rejected talks on this basis, recalling that the peace-keeping plan was explicitly not intended to prejudge a political solution to the Yugoslav crisis. It argued that two parties to the original plan, the President of Serbia and the Federal Yugoslav military authorities at Belgrade, no longer had any locus standi in the areas where UNPROFOR was deployed. The UNPROFOR mandate and deployment, they insisted, must be discussed anew with them as the sovereign "Republic of Serb Krajina".

These positions appeared to be irreconcilable and the Secretary-General warned that, unless they were addressed, a sound basis would not exist for renewing the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia. As he had informed the Council on 27 January, Croatia's unilateral military offensive had seriously undermined confidence, disrupted the negotiation process, affected cooperation between it and the local Serb authorities and had put in doubt a return to the original peace-keeping plan.

In the circumstances, the Secretary-General presented three possible options regarding the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia: to renew the mandate entrusted to UNPROFOR by resolution 743(1992), to modify it, or to give UNPROFOR no mandate in Croatia. Analysis of those options indicated no clear way forward in a difficult situation not foreseen when the Council established UNPROFOR and attributable to the failure to implement the United Nations peace-keeping plan and to negotiate an agreed settlement to the conflict between Croatia and the Serb populations living in the UNPAs and the pink zones.

The Secretary-General accordingly asked the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee to address these questions so that he could make a substantive recommendation for an extension of the UNPROFOR mandate. As it was unlikely that results could be achieved by the expiration date of the current mandate on 21 February 1993, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the existing mandate for an interim period up to 31 March 1993, in order to give the Co-Chairmen the necessary time.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 19 February and, acting under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, unanimously adopted resolution 807(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Hewing considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 10 February 1993,

Deeply concerned by the lack of cooperation of the parties and others concerned in implementing the United Nations peace-keeping plan in Croatia,

Deeply concerned also by the recent and repeated violations by the parties and others concerned of their cease-fire obligations,

Determining that the situation thus created constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

Taking note in that context of the Secretary-General's request to the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, mentioned in his report, to establish as soon as possible, through discussions with the parties, a basis on which UNPROFOR's mandate could be renewed,

Determined to ensure the security of UNPROFOR and to this end, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the parties and others concerned comply fully with the United Nations peace-keeping plan in Croatia and with the other commitments they have undertaken and in particular with their cease-fire obligations;

2. Demands further that the parties and others concerned refrain from positioning their forces in the proximity of UNPROFOR's units in the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) and in the pink zones;

3. Demands also the full and strict observance of all relevant Security Council resolutions relating to the mandate and operations of UNPROFOR in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Demands also that the parties and others concerned respect fully UNPROFOR's unimpeded freedom of movement enabling it inter alia, to carry out all necessary concentrations and deployments, all movements of equipment and weapons and all humanitarian and logistical activities;

5. Decides, in the context of these demands, to extend UNPROFOR's mandate for an interim period terminating on 31 March 1993;

6. Urges the parties and others concerned fully to cooperate with the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in the discussions under their auspices in order to ensure full implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping mandate in Croatia, including inter alia through the collection and supervision of heavy weapons by UNPROFOR and the appropriate withdrawal of forces;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to work to achieve the rapid implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping mandate and of relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolution 802(1993), thus to ensure security and stability throughout the UNPAs and the pink zones;

8. Invites further the Secretary-General, during the interim period and in consultation with the force-contributing States, to take, in accordance with paragraph 17 of his report, all appropriate measures to strengthen the security of UNPROFOR, in particular by providing it with the necessary defensive means, and to study the possibility of carrying out such local redeployment of military units as is required to ensure their protection;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the further extension of UNPROFOR's mandate, including financial estimates for all UNPROFOR's activities as proposed in his report of 10 February 1993;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 807(1993)

19 February 1993 Meeting 3174 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25306).

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In a 25 March report with a later addendum⁽²³³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to Security Council resolution 807(1993), the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee had held talks in New York and Geneva with representatives of the Government of Croatia and the Serb populations living in the UNPAs and pink zones. While progress had been made, fundamental differences remained between the two sides. More time was thus needed to bring the negotiations to a meaningful conclusion.

Since a termination of the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia would very likely result in an outbreak of renewed hostilities, the Secretary-General recommended that it be extended for a further interim period of three months, from 1 April to 30 June 1993. He urged the parties to cooperate with UNPROFOR to resolve any remaining differences. He also asked the ICFY Co-Chairmen to continue their efforts to obtain from the parties a renewed commitment to the elements of the United Nations peace-keeping plan and to the implementation of Security Council resolution 802(1993) and other relevant resolutions.

In the addendum to his report, the Secretary-General estimated the total cost of maintaining UNPROFOR for the period of the extension at $336.2 million. He recommended that the additional cost should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States; the assessments to be levied on them should be credited to the UNPROFOR Special Account.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council convened on 30 March. At its request, Croatia was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 815(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Reaffirming in particular its commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia and of the other Republics where UNPROFOR is deployed,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 25 March 1993,

Deeply concerned by the continuing violations by the parties and others concerned of their cease-fire obligations,

Determining that the situation thus created continues to constitute a threat to peace and security in the region,

Determined to ensure the security of UNPROFOR and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General, in particular its paragraph 5;

2. Reaffirms all the provisions of its resolutions 802(1993) and 807(1993);

4. Decides, in this context, further to extend UNPROFOR's mandate for an additional interim period terminating on 30 June 1993;

5. Supports the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia in their efforts to help to define the future status of those territories comprising the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs), which are integral parts of the territory of the Republic of Croatia, and demands full respect for international humanitarian law, and in particular the Geneva Conventions, in these Areas;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report urgently to the Council on how the United Nations Peace Plan for Croatia can be effectively implemented;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 815(1993)

30 March 1993 Meeting 3189 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25481).

Reports of the Secretary-General (April and May). On 8 April⁽²³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the Croatian Government and the Serb local authorities had signed an agreement at Geneva on 6 April for the full implementation of Security Council resolution 802(1993). The result of negotiations conducted under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee from mid-February was that the agreement would enter into force when the Co-Chairmen received both parties' assurances that neither would station any police in the areas from which the Croatian armed forces were to withdraw and that UNPROFOR would fulfil all police functions in those areas during an interim period. Croatian assurance was given orally at the time of signature, while assurance from the Serb side required approval of its "assembly".

The agreement provided for: a cessation of hostilities by the Croatian armed forces on the fourth day after the agreement's entry into force and, simultaneously, strict compliance by the Croatian Government and the Serb local authorities with the already agreed 1991 cease-fire arrangements⁽²³⁵⁾ together with the 1992 implementing accords⁽²³⁶⁾ withdrawal of the Croatian armed forces to the lines of confrontation existing before the outbreak of hostilities on 22 January, to be completed within a further five days, and the vacated areas not to be occupied by Serb armed forces; in parallel to that withdrawal, placing all heavy weapons under UNPROFOR supervision; placing the Maslenica Bridge, Zemunik Airport and Peruca Dam, and their facilities, and the roads from Zadar to the bridge and to the airport, from the bridge to Seline via Rovanjaska, and from Sinj to the dam under exclusive UNPROFOR control.

The agreement further provided for the immediate implementation by the parties of the remaining provisions of the peace-keeping plan and of all relevant Council resolutions, including 762(1992);⁽²³⁷⁾ to that end, talks between them, under the Co-Chairmen's auspices, would be undertaken no later than 15 days after the agreement's entry into force. UNPROFOR would re-establish and strengthen its military and police presence in each area from which the Croatian armed forces would withdraw before the area was vacated. The parties would request the United Nations to strengthen UNPROFOR to carry out these functions under the peace-keeping plan.

It was the Force Commander's assessment that, to implement the agreement, UNPROFOR would additionally require two mechanized infantry battalions each of 900 troops all ranks, one engineer company of up to 150 troops all ranks, and 50 military observers. Civilian police requirements would be met by temporary redeployment from existing UNPROFOR resources. The Secretary-General recommended Council approval of the proposed changes.

The Secretary-General's report of 30 April⁽²³⁸⁾ on the Co-Chairmen's activities (which also summarized the 6 April agreement) stated that approval of the agreement from the Serb "assembly" had not been received when the parties resumed talks at Geneva on 30 April.

In his May report⁽²³⁹⁾ submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 815(1993), the Secretary-General pointed out that the Council, by that resolution, had explicitly referred to the UNPAs as integral parts of the territory of the Republic of Croatia, thus formally making clear that the international community would not entertain the local Serb authorities' claim to recognition as a sovereign entity (the so-called Republic of Krajina).

That aspiration to sovereignty, the Secretary-General noted, had largely been the reason for the local Serbs' refusal either to demilitarize or to cooperate in the implementation of resolution 769(1992)⁽²⁴⁰⁾ authorizing UNPROFOR to establish border controls at the international borders of the UNPAs. In the absence of such controls, resolution 820(1993), imposing additional sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), established a regime providing that import to, export from, and transshipment through the UNPAs in Croatia, with the exception of humanitarian supplies, was to be permitted only with proper authorization from Croatia. A meeting held on 27 April by UNPROFOR with the local Serb authorities to secure their agreement to resolution 769(1992) resulted in their declaration that, in view of resolution 820(1993), such agreement could not be considered; they regarded the idea of Croatia regulating UNPA commerce and trade as being in direct breach of the peace-keeping plan.

Regarding resolution 802(1993), the ICFY Co-Chairmen had negotiated with both parties to secure endorsement of the 6 April provisional agreement⁽²³⁴⁾. However, an endorsement from the Serb side had still not materialized by 10 May.

Prospects for the amicable coexistence of the two sides had receded and the situation was likely to deteriorate further. The remaining Croats in the UNPAs had been subjected to relentless persecution, murder, assault, threats, armed robbery and arson. UNPROFOR had had to establish protected villages and relocate several hundred civilians to security in Croatia. UNHCR had put the number of Croatian Serbs who had fled to Serbia as of 19 March at approximately 251,000. Hostilities continued, including repeated shelling of civilian targets by both sides, and reports of further imminent incursions had raised tensions in the UNPAs.

The fighting had also inflicted casualties on UNPROFOR. In addition, the local Serb authorities had imposed greater restrictions on its freedom of movement on the ground and in the air and manifested their hostility towards UNPROFOR. UNPROFOR was thus severely handicapped in the performance of its functions.

The Serb authorities in UNPAs remained unwilling to accept the premises of UNPROFOR's mandate as defined in the Council resolutions. On 30 April, the Secretary-General received a letter from those authorities asking him to clarify whether the original peace-keeping plan still existed, to "relocate" UNPROFOR "along the line of confrontation as it existed in January 1993" and warning of the possible escalation of military conflicts if their demands were not met.

The Secretary-General noted that, although UNPROFOR had succeeded in ensuring the complete withdrawal of JNA, in maintaining peace and reducing the intimidation of civilians in UNPAs, it had not been able to fulfil other aspects of the original peace-keeping plan. The Serbs had failed to demilitarize UNPAs (resolution 743(1992))⁽⁵⁾ so that little progress had been made towards the return of refugees and displaced persons; they had refused to cooperate with UNPROFOR in returning the pink zones to Croatian authority (resolution 762(1992))⁽²³⁷⁾ and to permit establishment of controls at the international borders of UNPAs. Restrictions imposed by them on the freedom of movement of UNPROFOR crippled its monitoring functions. The Croatian side, in turn, had manifested its impatience with the United Nations (June 1992, and January and April 1993), launching military offensives across the lines of confrontation on three occasions. Croatia's view—reiterated in March⁽²⁴¹⁾ April⁽²⁴²⁾ and May⁽²⁴³⁾—was that UNPROFOR should be given enforcement powers to oblige the Serbs to comply with Council resolutions within a fixed timetable. Failing that, Croatia made clear that it would not agree to further extensions of the UNPROFOR mandate.

Given these virtually irreconcilable positions, the Secretary-General presented three options for the future of UNPROFOR in Croatia, together with their advantages and disadvantages. One would be to declare the UNPROFOR mandate unworkable due to Serb non-cooperation and withdraw the Force, or decide that, unless the two sides made progress in political negotiations before the end of the current mandate, the Force would be withdrawn. A withdrawal would almost certainly lead to a resumption of hostilities that the United Nations would again be called upon to end. A second option would be to accept the Croatian view and approve enforcement action to exact compliance from the Serbs, which would put UNPROFOR at war with the Serbs in the UNPAs and pink zones. A third option would be to keep the Force in place, with no change in mandate but with limited enhancements of its military capacity.

The Secretary-General decided not to recommend any of those options, but to await a report from the newly appointed United Nations Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee and Special Representative in the former Yugoslavia, Thorvald Stoltenberg, before making any recommendation on UNPROFOR.

The Secretary-General reiterated the requirements for UNPROFOR's reinforcement in the hope that the Serb authorities would endorse the provisional agreement for the implementation of 802(1991). He called for continued negotiations under ICFY auspices and noted that, even if implementation of the cease-fire agreement became feasible, the Secretariat knew of no Member State willing to contribute the infantry battalion required.

In a 25 May addendum⁽²⁴⁴⁾ to his report, the Secretary-General stated that enhancements of UNPROFOR in accordance with the third option mentioned above would require an additional 2,650 troops and 100 military observers costing some $91.2 million for an initial six-month period. Should the Security Council enlarge the mandate and strength of UNPROFOR as proposed, the related costs should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and the assessments to be levied on them should be credited to the UNPROFOR special account.

On 18 October, the Secretary-General proposed, and on 22 October received the Council's concurrence, to accept Indonesia's offer of 25 military observers in the context of resolution 847(1993).⁽²⁴⁵⁾

Communications. On 27 May⁽²⁴⁶⁾ Croatia informed the Security Council President that local Serb leaders had failed to attend the talks under UNPROFOR's auspices at Zagreb on 26 May, indicating their unwillingness to continue the ongoing dialogue aimed at normalizing the situation in the UNPAs. That meeting had been agreed upon between representatives of Croatia and the local Serbs at a previous meeting (Topusko, 18 May). They had also refused to sign the 6 April agreement on the implementation of resolution 802(1993), scheduled to take effect on 20 May.

Croatia emphasized that it remained open to dialogue with the local Serb leaders and had created a governmental committee to normalize relations with the Serbian population in Croatia. It would continue to follow strictly the relevant Council resolutions, 815(1993) in particular, emphasizing that the UNPAs were an integral part of the territory of Croatia. Croatia stressed that dialogue between the Government and the Serbian population on Croatian territory was an essential part of restoring peace and stability in the entire Balkan region, but must in no way jeopardize Croatia's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 8 June and invited Croatia, at its request, to participate in the discussion under rule 37.^a Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement below⁽²⁴⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3231.

"Having examined the situation in the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) in the Republic of Croatia, the Security Council is deeply concerned by the failure of the Krajina Serbs to participate in talks on the implementation of its resolution 802(1993) which were to be held in Zagreb on 26 May 1993. It deplores the interruption of the dialogue between the parties, which had recently produced encouraging signs of progress.

"The Council stresses its support for the peace process under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and urges the parties to solve all problems which might arise by peaceful means and resume the talks immediately with a view to the rapid implementation of resolution 802(1993) and all other relevant resolutions. The Council expresses its willingness to help ensure the implementation of an agreement on this basis reached by the parties, including respect for the rights of the local Serb population.

"The Council reminds the parties that the UNPAs are integral parts of the territory of the Republic of Croatia, and that no action inconsistent with this would be acceptable.

"The Council reiterates its demand that international humanitarian law be fully respected in the UNPAs.

"The Council urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia, in cooperation with other interested parties, to take all necessary measures to ensure the full protection of the rights of all residents of the UNPAs when the Republic of Croatia exercises fully its authority in these Areas."

Report of the Secretary-General. Following receipt of advice from his Special Representative, the Secretary-General stated in a 24 June report⁽²⁴⁸⁾ to the Security Council that the renewal of the UNPROFOR mandate would apply to all the republics of the former Yugoslavia in which UNPROFOR was deployed. He reiterated that a sound basis would not exist for renewing the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia unless two factors were addressed—the failure of the parties, particularly the Serb side, to permit implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan, and their failure to cooperate in establishing a political process that would offer the prospect of an early agreed settlement. He noted, nevertheless, that the presence of UNPROFOR was indispensable to control the conflict. UNPROFOR not only fulfilled a role in respect of the UNPAs, but also played, in both Sector East and Dalmatia, a deterrent and mediating role between Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro); it provided an operational link between other areas of Croatia to contiguous areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina; and its logistics bases at Zagreb and Split were essential to the support of its operations within Bosnia and Herzegovina. Consequently, the best option for the moment was to keep UNPROFOR with its current mandate in place, in the hope that a changing international environment would facilitate intensified peacemaking efforts by the ICFY Co-Chairmen, with UNPROFOR support.

Although such an option fell short of Croatia's wish that the mandate have enforcement powers, he would seek Croatia's consent to a limited further extension of three months.

The Secretary-General also said that, should the already unacceptable level of threats to the safety and security of United Nations personnel increase, he would have to conclude that a viable basis for their functioning no longer existed.

In recommending that the Council extend the UNPROFOR mandate by a further three months, to 30 September 1993, the Secretary-General stated that significant progress would be required in the peacemaking efforts of the Co-Chairmen if any further renewal was to be contemplated beyond that date.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 30 June and invited Croatia, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37.^a Before the Council were the Secretary-General's reports of 15 May and 24 June.

Also before the Council was a 25 June letter from Croatia⁽²⁴⁹⁾ indicating acceptance of only a one-month extension of UNPROFOR's mandate. If progress were made during that time, Croatia would be willing to accept the prolongation of UNPROFOR's role in the country under a new mandate to be concluded only between Croatia and the United Nations and separated from the UNPROFOR mandates in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. The new mandate must give UNPROFOR the authority and instructions to enforce and implement all of the relevant Council resolutions within a specific timetable.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 847(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 15 May 1993 and of 25 June 1993,

Having considered also the letter by the President of the Republic of Croatia of 26 June 1993 addressed to the Secretary-General,

Recalling the overwhelming importance of seeking, on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, comprehensive political solutions to the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and of sustaining confidence and stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

Strongly condemning continuing military attacks within the territory of the Republics of Croatia and of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reaffirming its commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and of the other Member States where UNPROFOR is deployed,

Calling on the parties and others concerned to reach an agreement on confidence-building measures in the territory of the Republic of Croatia, including the opening of the railroad between Zagreb and Split, the highway between Zagreb and Zupanja, and the Adriatic oil pipeline, securing the uninterrupted traffic across the Maslenica straits, and restoring the supply of electricity and water to all regions of the Republic of Croatia including the United Nations Protected Areas,

Determined to ensure the security of UNPROFOR and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, as regards UNPROFOR in the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 25 June 1993 and the request for additional resources contained in paragraphs 22, 24 and 25 of his report of 15 May 1993;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report one month after the adoption of the present resolution on progress towards implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for Croatia and all relevant Security Council resolutions, taking into account the position of the Croatian Government, and decides to reconsider, in the light of that report, UNPROFOR's mandate in the territory of the Republic of Croatia;

3. Decides, in this context, to extend UNPROFOR's mandate for an additional interim period terminating on 30 September 1993;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on developments in regard to the implementation of UNPROFOR's mandate;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 847(1993)

30 June 1993 Meeting 3248 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26014).

The Adriatic oil pipeline mentioned in the resolution was the subject of letters of 30 June from the States participating in the Central European Initiative—Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Italy, Poland,

Slovakia and Slovenia⁽²⁵⁰⁾—and of 19 July from Ukraine⁽²⁵¹⁾ In the view of those States, UNPROFOR could play a crucial role in the early reactivation of the pipeline, which had been blocked since September 1991.

Communications. Croatia, on 12 July⁽²⁵²⁾ informed the Security Council President of its intention to reopen the Maslenica Bridge to traffic on 18 July. Croatia also advised of its determination to reopen nearby Zemunik Airport to civilian traffic. These steps, it said, were essential to normalize living conditions in the country and to facilitate post-war recovery. It would welcome the help of the Council and UNPROFOR to ensure that the reopening of the bridge would not be interrupted.

Those developments and the danger they posed were drawn to the attention of the Council President by the Secretary-General on 14 July⁽²⁵³⁾ for appropriate action. The authorities of both the local Serbs and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) perceived the planned events as a provocation, said the Secretary-General. On his instructions, the Force Commander had advised Croatia of the need for all concerned to act in a manner conducive to the maintenance of peace, pointing out that the event planned for 18 July was not in keeping with Council resolutions 802(1993) and 847(1993). The Force Commander moreover reminded Croatia that having excluded UNPROFOR from entering the Maslenica area, it could hardly ensure the reopening of the bridge without incident.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 and 30 July)

The Security Council convened on 15 July 1993 and, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²⁵⁴⁾ on its behalf:

Meeting number. SC 3255.

"The Security Council is deeply concerned at the information contained in the letter of the Secretary-General of 14 July 1993 on the situation in and around the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) in the Republic of Croatia. It recalls its resolutions 802(1993) and 847(1993) and in particular the demand in the former that all parties and others concerned comply strictly with the cease-fire arrangements already agreed and the call on them in the latter to reach an agreement on confidence-building measures.

"The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the latest report on hostilities in the UNPAs, including in particular by the Krajina Serbs, and demands that these hostilities cease immediately.

"The Security Council continues to attach the highest importance to securing the reopening of the Maslenica crossing to civilian traffic. In this context it reaffirms its support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia. It recognizes the real and legitimate concern of the Government of the Republic of Croatia in such reopening, as set out in the letter of 12 July 1993 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Croatia. It also recalls the demand in its resolution 802(1993) that the Croatian armed forces withdraw from the areas in question.

"The Security Council considers that the planned unilateral reopening of the Maslenica Bridge and of Zemunik Airport on 18 July 1993, in the absence of agreement between the parties and others concerned in cooperation with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), would jeopardize the objectives of the Council's resolutions and in particular the call in its resolution 847(1993) for agreement on confidence-building measures and the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and UNPROFOR to achieve a negotiated settlement to the problem. It urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to refrain from this action.

"The Security Council expresses its support for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen and UNPROFOR and calls on the parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with them in this regard and to conclude rapidly the agreement on confidence-building measures called for in its resolution 847(1993). It joins the Secretary-General in his call to the parties and others concerned to act in a manner conducive to the maintenance of peace and to refrain from any action which would undermine these efforts, and calls upon the parties to assure UNPROFOR's freedom of access in particular to the area surrounding the Maslenica crossing."

In the light of information subsequently received from the Special Representative regarding an agreement reached by the parties at Erdut and Zagreb on 15 and 16 July (described below by the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee), the Council convened on 30 July, following which it authorized its President to make the following statement⁽²⁵⁵⁾

Meeting number. SC 3260.

"The Security Council has heard with deep concern the report from the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia on the situation in and around the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) in the Republic of Croatia and in particular in respect of the Maslenica crossing.

"The Security Council reaffirms the presidential statement of 15 July 1993. Following this statement the parties reached an agreement on 15 and 16 July 1993 at Erdut which requires the withdrawal of Croatian armed forces and police from the area of the Maslenica Bridge by 31 July 1993 and the placing of the bridge under the exclusive control of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

"The Security Council demands that the Croatian forces withdraw forthwith in conformity with the above-mentioned agreement, and that they permit the immediate deployment of UNPROFOR. The Council also demands that the Krajina Serb forces refrain from entering the area. The Council calls for maximum restraint from all the parties, including the observance of a cease-fire.

"The Security Council warns of the serious consequences of any failure to implement the above-mentioned agreement.

"The Council will remain actively seized of the matter."

Report of the Co-Chairmen of ICFY Steering Committee. According to the Co-Chairmen's report, transmitted to the President of the Security Council on 3 August⁽²⁰¹⁾ an agreement for implementing resolution 802(1993) was signed by the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities on 15 and 16 July, following the Co-Chairmen's contacts with Presidents Milosevic and Tudjman and subsequent discussions at Erdut and Zagreb.

The agreement provided that there would be no Croatian armed forces or police in the areas specified in the agreement after 31 July; UNPROFOR would move into those areas. In the villages of Islam Crcki, Smokovic and Kasic, Serb police, together with United Nations civilian police (UNCIVPOL), would be present. With the withdrawal of the Croatian armed forces and police, Maslenica Bridge, Zemunik Airport and Peruca Dam would be under the exclusive control of UNPROFOR. The building of a pontoon bridge could proceed after the agreement had been signed by both parties. They would intensify efforts to reach a negotiated solution to all problems existing between them, starting with a cease-fire to be negotiated by UNPROFOR.

A cease-fire text, prepared by UNPROFOR, was examined by the parties at Vienna. However, the Croatian Government considered the cease-fire as not linked to the Erdut/Zagreb agreement, while the Serbs insisted that they would not sign any cease-fire before the withdrawal of Croatian forces in accordance with that agreement.

On 23 July, the Croatian authorities signed a unilateral undertaking to the agreement to permit UNPROFOR to start deploying in the Zemunik/Maslenica area and to assume full control by 31 July. The undertaking further provided that, from 1 August, UNCIVPOL, together with five Serb police, armed only with side-arms, would establish their presence in each of the three villages named in the agreement.

On 25 July, UNPROFOR obtained an undertaking from the Serb leadership to refrain from all armed hostilities until 31 July and to allow the withdrawal of the Croatian armed forces and police, as stipulated by the agreement. The Croatian authorities failed to comply with the agreement and the Serbs indicated that they would feel free to resume armed hostilities after 31 July.

Reports of the Secretary-General (August and September). The Secretary-General, reporting on 16 August 1993 on the implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for Croatia⁽²⁵⁶⁾ stated that, despite determined efforts by the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee for implementing resolutions 802(1993) and 847(1993), the situation had not changed. Subsequent to the 30 July presidential statement, 2,000

UNPROFOR troops moved towards the areas from which the Croatian forces were to withdraw but were unable to deploy because the Croatian military authorities restricted access to the areas concerned and did not cooperate in the planning or reconnaissance of the operation.

Following Serb shelling of the area on 2 August, which sank one of the Maslenica Bridge pontoons, the Co-Chairmen arranged for talks between the parties (Geneva, 12 August) on a cease-fire to include the elements of the Erdut/Zagreb agreement.

Pending the outcome of current efforts to persuade both sides to cooperate with UNPROFOR in implementing the two resolutions above, the Secretary-General withheld recommendation on the future of the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia. In this connection, he referred to Croatia's 18 June proposal⁽²⁵⁷⁾ elaborated upon on 30 July⁽²⁵⁸⁾ for the separation of the UNPROFOR mandate into three independent mandates, for Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, which he intended to keep under review.

The Secretary-General subsequently reported in September⁽²⁵⁹⁾ that the intensive discussions between the Co-Chairmen and the parties at Geneva, Zagreb and Knin, most recently on 9 and 10 September, produced an agreement to hold a further meeting, aboard a ship on the Adriatic on 12 September, between the parties' military experts.

Meanwhile, in the UNPAs and pink zones, shelling intensified on both sides of the confrontation line, and, on 9 September, the Croatian Army launched a military incursion into the Medak pocket, destroying three Serb villages. Hostilities worsened on 10 and 11 September. The intervention of the Special Representative and the Force Commander, as well as a call from the Security Council (see immediately below), brought about a cease-fire on 15 September. Some 500 to 600 UNPROFOR troops moved into the areas vacated by the withdrawal of Croatian forces. Efforts continued to reschedule the postponed meeting aboard ship on the Adriatic.

Meeting on 14 September, the Security Council invited Croatia, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote in accordance with rule 37.^a The President was authorized to make the following statement⁽²⁶⁰⁾ on behalf of the Council, in connection with its consideration on the item entitled "The situation in Croatia":

Meeting number. SC 3275.

"The Security Council expresses its profound concern at the reports from the Secretariat of recent military hostilities in Croatia, in particular the escalation of the means employed, and the grave threat they pose to the peace process in Geneva and overall stability in the former Yugoslavia.

"The Council reaffirms its respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia, and calls on both sides to accept UNPROFOR's proposal of an immediate cease-fire. It calls on the Croatian Government to withdraw its armed forces to positions occupied before 9 September 1993, on the basis of that proposal, and calls on the Serbian forces to halt all provocative military actions."

Report of the Secretary-General. In his 20 September report⁽²⁵⁹⁾ the Secretary-General referred to Croatia's proposal that UNPROFOR be divided into three parts—UNPROFOR (Croatia), UNPROFOR (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and UNPROFOR (the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia)—while retaining its integrated military, logistical and administrative structure under the command of one Special Representative of the Secretary-General and one Force Commander. The Secretary-General instructed his Special Representative to put such a division into effect, provided there were no additional financial implications and overall command and coordination were not weakened.

He recommended that the Council renew UNPROFOR's mandate for a further six months, to 31 March 1994; demand that the parties in Croatia conclude an immediate cease-fire and cooperate with UNPROFOR, which must be enabled to fulfil the peace-keeping aspects of its mandate; and direct the parties to cooperate with UNPROFOR in restoring water, power, communications and other economic necessities. By 30 November, he would report to the Council on progress made by the Co-Chairmen and UNPROFOR and make further recommendations on the basis of developments during those two months.

In an addendum to his report,⁽²⁶¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the monthly cost of maintaining the Force would be limited initially to the commitment authority contained in General Assembly resolution 47/210 B and that he would report on additional requirements.

Communication. Croatia, on 24 September⁽²⁶²⁾ informed the Security Council President that its Parliament supported the Government decision to terminate the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia in its current form, for it was undermining Croatia's sovereignty and territorial integrity. The major changes it wanted to the UNPROFOR mandate were based on existing Security Council resolutions and reports of the Secretary-General, including guarantees for the full protection of human rights and minority rights. If these were not incorporated in the resolution extending the UNPROFOR mandate, then, upon the expiration of the current interim extension, Croatia would consider the mandate terminated and would request UNPROFOR's withdrawal by 30 November 1993.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 September, 1 and 4 October)

In the light of the Secretary-General's 30 September report and of the foregoing letter from Croatia, the Security Council, at its meeting on 30 September, unanimously adopted resolution 869(1993).

The Security Council,

The Council met again on 4 October, the day before the expiry of the above extension. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 871(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Reaffirming also its resolution 713(1991) and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 September 1993,

Having also considered the letter of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Croatia dated 24 September 1993,

Deeply concerned that the United Nations peace-keeping plan for the Republic of Croatia, and all relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 769(1992), have not yet been fully implemented,

Reiterating its determination to ensure the security of UNPROFOR and its freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, as regards UNPROFOR in the Republic of Croatia and in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 20 September 1993, in particular its paragraph 16;

2. Takes note of the intention of the Secretary-General to establish, as described in his report, three subordinate commands within UNPROFOR—UNPROFOR (Croatia), UNPROFOR (Bosnia and Herzegovina) and UNPROFOR (the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia)—while retaining the existing dispositions in all other respects for the direction and conduct of the United Nations operation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

3. Condemns once again continuing military attacks within the territory of the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reaffirms its commitment to ensure respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia, the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, where UNPROFOR is deployed;

4. Reaffirms the crucial importance of the full and prompt implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for the Republic of Croatia including the provisions of the plan concerning the demilitarization of the United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs) and calls upon the signatories of that plan and all others concerned, in particular the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to cooperate in its full implementation;

5. Declares that continued non-cooperation in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council or external interference, in respect of the full implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for the Republic of Croatia would have serious consequences and in this connection affirms that full normalization of the international community's position towards those concerned will take into account their actions in implementing all relevant resolutions of the Security Council including those relating to the United Nations peace-keeping plan for the Republic of Croatia;

6. Calls for an immediate cease-fire agreement between the Croatian Government and the local Serb authorities in the UNPAs, mediated under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, and urges them to cooperate fully and unconditionally in its implementation, as well as in the implementation of all the relevant resolutions of the Council;

7. Stresses the importance it attaches, as a first step towards the implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for the Republic of Croatia, to the process of restoration of the authority of the Republic of Croatia in the "pink zones", and in this context calls for the revival of the Joint Commission established under the chairmanship of UNPROFOR;

8. Urges all the parties and others concerned to cooperate with UNPROFOR in reaching and implementing an agreement on confidence-building measures including the restoration of electricity, water and communications in all regions of the Republic of Croatia, and stresses in this context the importance it attaches to the opening of the railroad between Zagreb and Split, the highway between Zagreb and Zupanja, and the Adriatic oil pipeline, securing the uninterrupted traffic across the Maslenica strait, and restoring the supply of electricity and water to all regions of the Republic of Croatia including the United Nations Protected Areas;

9. Authorizes UNPROFOR, in carrying out its mandate in the Republic of Croatia, acting in self-defence, to take the necessary measures, including the use of force, to ensure its security and its freedom of movement;

10. Decides to continue to review urgently the extension of close air support to UNPROFOR in the territory of the Republic of Croatia as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 20 September 1993;

11. Decides in this context to extend UNPROFOR's mandate for an additional period terminating on 31 March 1994;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report two months after the adoption of the present resolution on progress towards implementation of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for the Republic of Croatia and all relevant Security Council resolutions, taking into account the position of the Croatian Government, as well as on the outcome of the negotiations within the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, and decides to reconsider UNPROFOR's mandate in the light of that report;

13. Requests further the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on developments in regard to the implementation of UNPROFOR's mandate;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 871(1993)

4 October 1993 Meeting 3286 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26518).

Report of the Secretary-General. On 1 December⁽²⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the continuing (November) talks within the ICFY framework aimed at achieving a comprehensive cease-fire in and around the UNPAs and on UNPROFOR efforts towards implementing the United Nations peace-keeping plan for Croatia.

The talks took account of the Croatian President's "peace initiative" of 2 November⁽²⁶⁴⁾ advancing proposals on the question, and measures to be undertaken by the three parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina and by all States in the area of the former Yugoslavia for the permanent consolidation of peace.

Further talks chaired by ICFY were held from 1 to 3 November, at which the parties accepted a three-step strategy: discussion of a cease-fire, consideration of economic reconstruction, and discussion of political questions.

The key elements of a cease-fire agreement were the separation of forces along the confrontation lines, with UNPROFOR interposed between the two sides and monitoring heavy weapons on either side. In areas of withdrawal, UNPROFOR would be interposed between the forces at the Maslenica Bridge, Zemunik Airport, Peruca Dam and Miljevci Plateau, all of which would remain under Croatian control. Three villages near Maslenica and a key feature overlooking Obrovac would revert to Serb control.

The main areas of economic interest related to infrastructure and communications, energy and water supply. The parties concurred on the establishment of joint commissions to examine and finalize practical arrangements.

The road from Zagreb to Slavonski Brod, via Kucani was a priority for the Croatian side, which indicated that, following a cease-fire, Zemunik Airport and Maslenica Bridge would be opened for use by both sides. The Serb side asked that a route be opened between Western Slavonia and Hungary, as well as road and railway traffic between Western Slavonia and Baranja, via Osijek; it also asked for access to the open sea from Rovnjska harbour and use of a part of Zadar harbour.

After further talks in November, the Croatian side stated that, with one modification, it could sign the cease-fire proposal. Remaining on the table were modifications proposed by the Serb side, without which it stated it could not sign the document. The parties agreed, however, to set up a military joint commission to continue practical work on outstanding areas of dispute on the lines of separation to be used once a cease-fire was in place.

UNPROFOR had reinforced its support to the ICFY-sponsored talks and to promoting measures in the UNPAs to reduce tensions and thereby establish conditions favourable to a comprehensive cease-fire. The Secretary-General did not recommend reconsideration of UNPROFOR's mandate by the Security Council. However, he pointed out that it was essential for the two sides to intensify their efforts for achieving a cease-fire agreement, for the institution of practical measures of economic cooperation and for the negotiation of a lasting political settlement—an observation which the Council shared.⁽²⁶⁵⁾

Violations of international humanitarian law

Subsequent to a report brought to the attention of the Security Council in February on the preliminary excavation of a mass grave near Vukovar in northern Croatia (see PART THREE, Chapter X), the Secretary-General, by a letter of 20 August⁽²⁶⁶⁾ informed the Council President that the Netherlands had offered to provide, free of cost to the United Nations, an armed military engineer unit of up to 50 personnel to assist in the excavation of mass grave sites in the UNPAs. The Secretary-General proposed including the unit in UNPROFOR on a temporary basis, to be deployed in the area for a period of 10 weeks starting on 1 September, subject to the extension of the current UNPROFOR mandate beyond 30 September.

On 27 August⁽²⁶⁷⁾ the Council President conveyed the Council's agreement to the proposal, adding that it was the Council's understanding that UNPROFOR's connection with the engineering unit would be to provide administrative and logistic support and protection.

Earlier, on 2 February, the report of an EC mission that visited Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia to investigate massive and systematic detention and rape of women was also brought to the attention of the Council. (See "Mass rape" above, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina".)

Humanitarian assistance

The overall United Nations humanitarian effort in Croatia was the subject of a report by the Secretary-General in 1993. Based on that report, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/204 on 21 December, calling on all States to provide special and other assistance to Croatia and asking the Secretary-General to carry out an assessment of the country's needs for rehabilitation, reconstruction and development (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

During 1993, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia was admitted to membership in the United Nations, amid differences with Greece over the name of that republic. The Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee conducted negotiations with the two countries in order to settle their differences and to promote confidence-building measures between them (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

On 27 August, ICFY⁽⁴⁾ mediated "Agreed Minutes" between the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the local Serbs that embodied undertakings and understandings reflecting the requests and complaints put to ICFY by the latter. The Minutes recorded the Government's undertaking to treat the Serbs equally with other nationalities living in the republic, to provide them with instruction in the Serbian language, to guarantee them constitutional religious freedom, to provide equal support to the Serbian-language media, to protect historical monuments and other cultural inheritance of the Serbs in the republic, and to conduct a national census in 1994.

Communication from the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, on 15 June⁽²⁶⁸⁾ drew to the attention of the President of the Security Council an 11 June letter from the United States offering a reinforced company team of approximately 300 troops to operate with UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. The United States stated that its offer was intended to augment the UNPROFOR units already deployed in there, not to replace them.

The Secretary-General estimated that the cost associated with the deployment of the additional troops to reinforce UNPROFOR would amount to some $10.5 million for an initial six-month period and approximately $1.5 million per month thereafter. A breakdown of the estimate, by main categories of expenditure, was also provided. The Secretary-General recommended that, should the Council decide to approve the proposed deployment, the related cost should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and the assessment to be levied on them should be credited to the UNPROFOR special account.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 June, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's letter, unanimously adopted resolution 842(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 743(1992) and all subsequent resolutions relating to the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR),

Recalling in particular resolution 795(1992) of 11 December 1992 which authorized the UNPROFOR presence in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

Welcoming the important contribution of the existing UNPROFOR presence in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to stability in the region,

Seeking to support efforts for a peaceful resolution to the situation in the former Yugoslavia as it relates to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia as provided for in the Secretary-General's report of 10 December 1992 and approved by resolution 795(1992) of 11 December 1992,

Noting with appreciation the offer made by a Member State to contribute additional personnel to the UNPROFOR presence in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and the latter Government's favourable response thereto,

1. Welcomes the offer made by a Member State to contribute additional personnel to the UNPROFOR presence in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and decides to expand the size of UNPROFOR accordingly and to authorize the deployment of these additional personnel;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 842(1993)

18 June 1993 Meeting 3239 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25955).

Report of the Secretary-General. In keeping with a 1992 Security Council request⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported on 13 July 1993⁽²⁶⁹⁾ on the deployment and activities of UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia prior to its reinforcement with United States troops.

The Secretary-General stated that the first UNCIVPOL monitors arrived on 27 December 1992. A Canadian company arrived on 7 January 1993 and remained until 18 February, when its operation was taken over by a 434-man joint battalion from Finland, Norway and Sweden. As at May 1993, there were 18 permanently manned observation posts, 4 along the border with Albania and 14 along the border with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). United States troops numbering about 300 arrived during the first two weeks in July.

Since early January, the northern border and the western border north of Debar had been constantly monitored from observation posts and by regular patrols, first by the Canadian company and then by the Nordic battalion, with a view to reporting activities that might increase tension or threaten peace and stability. UNPROFOR military personnel had a number of encounters with Yugoslav soldiers claiming that UNPROFOR had intruded into the territory of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). That the border, previously an internal one, had not been definitively delineated was a source of potential conflict. The two Governments had yet to set up a joint border commission to resolve the matter conclusively.

The 19 United Nations Military Observers (UNMOs) covering the western border area south of Debar were based at Ohrid. Eleven were responsible for patrolling the area south of Debar; the remaining eight patrolled the northern border area or served at headquarters near Skopje. In connection with their programme of visits to border villages aimed at gaining the confidence of their inhabitants and assisting in defusing possible inter-ethnic tensions, the UNMOs referred complaints about alleged discriminatory practices against the ethnic Albanian population to the relevant national authorities, to ICFY or to the Commission on Human Rights, as appropriate.

UNCIVPOL regularly patrolled specific crossings and the border areas in general to monitor the work of local border police. They reported two shooting incidents on the border with Albania that occurred on 22 February and 19 April resulting from illegal border crossings. An Albanian national, who was shot in the February incident, was believed to have been involved in smuggling arms into the country.

The Secretary-General observed that UNPROFOR had so far been successful in its preventive mandate in the country. He intended to keep the situation there under close review and would report to the Council, as appropriate, in the months to come.

On 22 July⁽²⁷⁰⁾ the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council had taken note of his report; it welcomed the completion of UNPROFOR's reinforcement and the establishment of close coordination with the CSCE mission.

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

CSCE missions

By a 20 July letter⁽²⁷¹⁾ transmitted by Sweden, the Chairman of the CSCE Council informed the President of the Security Council that, at the end of June, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) withdrew its acceptance of the CSCE missions in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina. As recognized by the Government, the missions—established in September 1992 to promote dialogue between the authorities and communities in the three regions, collect information on human rights violations and promote solutions to such problems—had proved invaluable in promoting stability and counteracting the risk of ethnically motivated violence. Hence, their discontinuance would aggravate existing threats to peace and security in the region.

The CSCE Council Chairman, on 23 July⁽²⁷²⁾ underscoring the basic condition as defined by the CSCE Council for the gradual readmittance of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to the international community, called on the Government to revoke its decision and live up to the norms and principles it had accepted as a CSCE participating State.

That Government, responding on 28 July 1993⁽²⁷³⁾ said that a normalization of cooperation between it, as an equal partner, and CSCE would facilitate the future acceptance of the CSCE missions in the country. Despite its unjust suspension from CSCE meetings in July 1992, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had continued its CSCE commitments. The Government stressed that its isolation from CSCE activities was not conducive to continued cooperation and was in nobody's interest. It further stressed, on 3 August⁽²⁷⁴⁾ that it was not Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) that had refused to allow the continued functioning of the CSCE missions, but rather CSCE which had rejected the cooperation offered on a number of occasions. It assured CSCE that the situation in Kosovo, Metohija, Raska and Vojvodina, was under control and posed no danger to international peace and security. It reiterated those views on 9 August⁽²⁷⁵⁾

The Security Council convened on 9 August, inviting without objection Dragomir Djokic, Ambassador of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to be present at the discussion.

By a recorded vote of 14 to none, with 1 abstention (China), the Council adopted resolution 855(1993).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letters of 20 July 1993 and 23 July 1993 from the Chairman-in-Office of the Council of Ministers of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE),

Further taking note of the letters of 28 July 1993 and 3 August 1993 circulated by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Deeply concerned at the refusal of the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to allow the CSCE missions of long duration to continue their activities,

Bearing in mind that the CSCE missions of long duration are an example of preventive diplomacy undertaken within the framework of the CSCE, and have greatly contributed to promoting stability and counteracting the risk of violence in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Reaffirming its relevant resolutions aimed at putting an end to conflict in the former Yugoslavia,

Determined to avoid any extension of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia and, in this context, attaching great importance to the work of the CSCE missions and to the continued ability of the international community to monitor the situation in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Stressing its commitment to the territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the region,

1. Endorses the efforts of the CSCE as described in the letters noted above from the Chairman-in-Office of the Council of Ministers of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE);

2. Calls upon the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to reconsider their refusal to allow the continuation of the activities of the CSCE missions in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to cooperate with the CSCE by taking the practical steps needed for the resumption of the activities of these missions and to agree to an increase in the number of monitors as decided by the CSCE;

3. Further calls upon the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to assure the monitors' safety and security, and to allow them free and unimpeded access necessary to accomplish their mission in full;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Meeting 3262

5-nation draft (S/26263).

Sponsors: France, Hungary, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Brazil, Cape Verde, Djibouti, France, Hungary, Japan, Morocco, New Zealand, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

China was of the view that the issue of Kosovo was an internal affair of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), whose sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity should be respected in line with the basic principles of the United Nations Charter and international law. China cautioned the Council to exercise extreme prudence and act in strict conformity with the Charter's purposes and principles, especially non-interference in internal affairs of States. The CSCE missions to Kosovo and other areas of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) were sent with the consent of that country, and the question of their continuation should be solved through continued dialogue and consultation.

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)-Albania

During 1993, Albania and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) addressed a number of communications to the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General alleging hostile incidents by one against the other along their common border and in the Yugoslav region of Kosovo, whose population included more than 2 million ethnic Albanians.

Albania's concern focused on Kosovo, where it reported, on 24 April⁽²⁷⁶⁾ daily evidence of Serbia's plans for the ethnic cleansing of the Albanians there and asked the Council urgently to take preventive measures, such as deploying United Nations troops, to prevent such an occurrence and armed conflict. On 27 April⁽²⁷⁷⁾ Albania drew attention to two border incidents in the previous two days in which six Albanians were killed when Serb forces opened fire on Albanian villages along the border. On 26 May⁽²⁷⁸⁾ Albania reported a shooting incident at the town of Gillogovc in Kosovo on 22 May, during which two Serbian policemen were killed by unidentified gunmen; as a result, 100 Albanians were arrested and beaten. A series of incidents were also reported on 18 June⁽²⁷⁹⁾ explosions and shootings in the town of Gjakova on 14 June; destructive raids on 12 ethnic Albanian households in the village of Gllanaselle on 17 June under the pretext of an arms search; and, on the same day, an explosion in Pristina (Prishtina) that severely wounded an Albanian woman. In view of what it described as the grave situation in Kosovo, Albania, on 8 July⁽²⁸⁰⁾ expressed concern at the discontinuance of the CSCE mission there.

Albania alleged on 6 August⁽²⁸¹⁾ that Serbian military forces perpetrated two successive acts of provocation by opening automatic rifle fire in the direction of Albanian territory; in view of the escalating tension on its border with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Albania requested an urgent Council meeting to consider the situation. Another border incident was reported to have taken place on 6 August⁽²⁸²⁾ when Yugoslav military forces fired into Albania's territory across the border near Tropoja in northern Albania, killing an Albanian and wounding another. Albania said that, in the first four months of 1993, 14 Albanian nationals had been shot dead by Serbian border guards at different points along its border with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Albania also transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement and reports of the "Council for the Protection of Human Rights and Freedoms of the Republic of Kosovo" on 14 September, alleging increased repression by Serbian police in Kosovo.⁽²⁸³⁾

For its part, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), on 30 April⁽²⁸⁴⁾ accused Albania of flagrant interference in its internal affairs. In categorically rejecting Albania's allegations with respect to Kosovo, it said that it found it absurd that a sovereign State could be charged with attacking its own territory; Albania's main goal, it said, was to further encourage secessionist and terrorist forces in Kosovo and Metohija by provoking incidents at the common border. A letter of 11 June⁽²⁸⁵⁾ listed 18 incidents of border violations committed by Albanian nationals between 12 January and 30 May. By a 20 August letter⁽²⁸⁶⁾ Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) condemned the armed ambush and killing of a Yugoslav guard on Yugoslav territory near the border with Albania. On 15 November⁽²⁸⁷⁾ it refuted each and every allegation made by Albania during the 1993 General Assembly debate as part of that country's anti-Yugoslav campaign. It asserted on 19 November⁽²⁸⁸⁾ that Albania's accusations were but a screen to conceal its responsibility for providing support to the Albanian secessionist movement in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. On 15 December⁽²⁸⁹⁾ Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) accused the Albanian President of openly expressing territorial claims towards it by calling for a "Greater Albania".

The Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee⁽⁴⁾ raised the situation of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo several times in meetings with President Slobodan Milosevic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) during the year and, in particular, urged a reconsideration of the decision not to renew the mandate of the CSCE mission there. The Government did not attend a meeting scheduled by ICFY at Geneva on 8 September for the resumption of talks on educational problems in Kosovo, claiming that minority issues were internal matters. It had not been possible since then to find a mutually agreeable venue for the parties to meet.

A representative of the ICFY Working Group on Ethnic and National Communities and Minorities travelled to Pristina on 26 August to meet with the local Serb authorities and local Albanian representatives.

Baltic States

The Secretary-General kept himself closely informed of the negotiations between the three Baltic States—Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania—and the Russian Federation on the withdrawal of the armed forces of the former Soviet Union from the Baltic States and related issues. The Baltic States had been pressing for the removal from their territories of Soviet, and then Russian, forces since the restoration of their independence in 1991.

In August 1993, the Secretary-General appointed Professor Tommy Koh of Singapore as his Special Envoy to lead a good offices mission to the Russian Federation and the Baltic States. The results of his mission, which visited all four States from 29 August to 9 September, and other related developments were outlined in an October report of the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁾

The situation with respect to Lithuania had almost been resolved, as the last Russian combat unit was withdrawn from that country on 31 August, and a few hundred remaining unarmed Russian troops were to be withdrawn shortly. Russian officials confirmed to the Special Envoy their readiness to withdraw their remaining troops from Estonia and Latvia, but stated that there were outstanding problems regarding the terms and conditions of their withdrawal, as well as the satisfactory resolution of some related issues. These included the status and social benefits of retired Russian military personnel in Estonia and Latvia, an agreement on a former Soviet submarine training centre in Estonia, and three strategic facilities in Latvia. Both Estonia and Latvia wished all Russian troops to be withdrawn before the end of the year, but the Russian Federation offered to withdraw them by the end of 1994.

Following the departure of the Special Envoy from the area, further rounds of negotiations were held between Estonia and the Russian Federation on 14 and 15 September, and between Latvia and the Russian Federation on 27 and 28 September. However, no major progress was achieved on the issue of troop withdrawal.

The Secretary-General urged Member States and regional organizations, such as CSCE and the Council of Europe, to continue to take all possible actions to help resolve remaining questions. He commended countries that had joined in a multinational effort to help the Russian Federation build the necessary housing for troops and their families returning from the Baltic States.

During the year, Latvia, Lithuania and the Russian Federation sent communications to the Secretary-General relating to the troop withdrawal.⁽²⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/18.

Complete withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of the Baltic States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 47/21 of 25 November 1992, Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the complete withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of the Baltic States,

Conscious of the statement in the report of the Secretary-General that "delay in completing the withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories" of Estonia and Latvia "is rightly a matter of concern to the international community".

Considering that the United Nations, pursuant to the provisions of its Charter, has a major role to play in, and responsibility for, the maintenance of international peace and security,

Mindful that the timely application of preventive diplomacy is the most desirable and efficient means of easing tensions before they result in conflict,

Recalling with particular satisfaction that independence was restored in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania through peaceful and democratic means,

Recognizing that the stationing of foreign military forces in the territories of Estonia and Latvia without the required consent of those countries is a problem remaining from the past that must be resolved in a peaceful manner,

Welcoming the withdrawal of the military forces of the Russian Federation from the territory of Lithuania, which was completed on 31 August 1993 in accordance with a previously agreed timetable,

Welcoming also the progress achieved in reducing the foreign military presence in Estonia and Latvia,

Concerned that the bilateral talks on the complete withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of Estonia and Latvia, initiated in February 1992, have not yet yielded agreements, as called for in resolution 47/21,

Recognizing that the completion of the withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of Estonia and Latvia will facilitate the consolidation of their restored independence and the rebuilding of their economies,

Welcoming further the good offices mission that the Secretary-General recently sent to the Baltic States and the Russian Federation in pursuit of the implementation of resolution 47/21,

Recalling the "Helsinki Document 1992 - the Challenges of Change", in particular paragraph 15 of the Helsinki Summit Declaration, agreed upon at the meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe held at Helsinki on 9 and 10 July 1992,

Recognizing also that the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe is a regional arrangement, and as such provides an important link between European and global security,

Recognizing further that regional organizations participating in complementary efforts with the United Nations may encourage States outside the region to act supportively,

1. Calls again upon the States concerned, in line with the basic principles of international law and in order to prevent any possible conflict, to conclude without delay appropriate agreements, including timetables, for the early, orderly and complete withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of Estonia and Latvia;

2. Reaffirms its support for the efforts made by the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to remove the foreign military forces stationed in the territories of Estonia and Latvia without the required consent of those countries, in a peaceful manner and through negotiations;

3. Welcomes the multilateral efforts to help the Russian Federation build housing for troops and their families returning from Estonia and Latvia;

4. Invites the States concerned to avoid any statements or actions that may be provocative or unfriendly;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General aimed at the implementation of resolution 47/21, including the sending of a good offices mission to the Baltic States and the Russian Federation;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to use his good offices to facilitate the complete withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of Estonia and Latvia;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Complete withdrawal of foreign military forces from the territories of the Baltic States".

General Assembly resolution 48/18

15 November 1993 Meeting 55 Adopted without vote

3-nation draft (A/48/L17/Rev.2); agenda item 32.

Sponsors: Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania.

Introducing the draft, Latvia said there had not been significant progress on the part of the Russian Federation in adhering to a 1992 Assembly request(3) for the early, orderly and complete withdrawal of its troops. In fact, the Russian Federation had put forward several conditions and acted in contradiction to such requirements. Rhetoric regarding the Russian-speaking population in Latvia and the desire to retain some military facilities left room for doubt as to whether the Russian Federation had the political will to remove its troops from Latvia, and gave the impression that it still wanted to keep its military presence in the region. Latvia urged the Russian Federation, other Member States and the international community to continue working towards the withdrawal of foreign military forces from Latvia and Estonia.

The Russian Federation stated that it was making active efforts to build full-fledged good-neighbourly relations with Latvia and Estonia and to ensure the earliest possible settlement of problems in those relations, including the presence of military forces of the former Soviet Union in the two States. The full withdrawal of troops from Lithuania within the agreed time-frame showed Russia's good will. Considerable progress had been achieved in reducing the numbers of Russian troops in Latvia and Estonia, where their numbers had been reduced from 57,000 to 17,000, and from 25,000 to 4,000, respectively. The problem of troop withdrawal from those two countries was not political and the Russian Federation was attempting to complete it as early as technically possible. One serious obstacle to speedy withdrawal was the lack of housing in Russia for returning troops and family members. Another problem was that of approximately 90,000 retired Russian military personnel and family members permanently residing in Latvia and Estonia, whose situation could only be described as tragic. The Russian Federation expected that that acute humanitarian aspect of the problem would soon find a civilized solution.

Other States

Armenia-Azerbaijan

The year 1993 marked over five years of fighting between Armenian and Azerbaijani inhabitants in and around Nagorny Karabakh, an enclave in Azerbaijan. Armenia and Azerbaijan—two newly independent States, admitted to the United Nations in 1992—were involved in the situation, and submitted numerous communications regarding it throughout the year to the Security Council.

Armenia, on 22 January 1993,⁽¹⁾ circulated a statement by the Chairman of the Legislature of Nagorny Karabakh, stating that the recognition of the Nagorny Karabakh Republic as a full party to negotiations would help the peace process. Azerbaijan, on 27 January⁽²⁾ protested that that statement, from a citizen of Azerbaijan claiming to be the leader of a non-existent administrative-territorial entity in Azerbaijan, was circulated as a Council document. On the same date⁽³⁾ Armenia warned that its blockade by Azerbaijan turned a critical situation into a catastrophe.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 January)

After Security Council consultations held on 29 January, the President of the Council made a statement to the media on behalf of Council members⁽⁴⁾

"The members of the Security Council express their deep concern at the devastating effect of interruptions in the supply of goods and materials, in particular energy supplies, to Armenia and to the Nakhichevan region of Azerbaijan. They note with serious concern that these interruptions, combined with an unusually harsh winter, have brought the economy and infrastructure of the region to near collapse and created a real threat of starvation.

"The members of the Council urge all countries in a position to help to facilitate the provision of fuel and humanitarian assistance and call on Governments in the region, with a view to preventing a further deterioration of the humanitarian situation, to allow humanitarian supplies to flow freely, in particular fuel to Armenia and to the Nakhichevan region of Azerbaijan.

"The members of the Council reaffirm their full support for the CSCE efforts, designed to bring the parties together and achieve peace in the region. They call upon the parties to agree to an immediate cease-fire, and an early resumption of talks within the CSCE framework.

"The members of the Security Council will keep the matter under consideration."

Communications (February-5 April). Between February and April, Azerbaijan repeatedly accused Armenia of new attacks against its territory, including seizing seven villages in the northern part of Upper Karabakh on 6 and 7 February,⁽⁵⁾ and launching an attack on the Kelbadjar district on 27 March⁽⁶⁾

Armenia, on 1 April⁽⁷⁾ denied the accusations, saying that Azerbaijani forces had launched a massive military offensive on 23 March against the Mardakert area in Nagorny Karabakh and the humanitarian corridor in Lachin. Karabakh Self-Defence Forces had been compelled to take decisive countermeasures, while no military forces from Armenia had taken part in any of those actions.

On 5 April⁽⁸⁾ Azerbaijan charged that Armenian armed forces had virtually completed their occupation of the highland part of Karabakh and the Kelbadjar and Lachin districts of Azerbaijan, and were extending their aggression to the north-west and south of Nagorny Karabakh.

By a joint statement of 16 March⁽⁹⁾ the Presidents of France and the Russian Federation reaffirmed their strong support for settling the conflict in Nagorny Karabakh, within the framework of the Minsk Conference under the auspices of CSCE, and called on all parties to the conflict to bring about an immediate de-escalation in the fighting and an effective cease-fire.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 April)

On 3 April⁽¹⁰⁾ Turkey requested the Security Council urgently to consider the situation between Armenia and Azerbaijan, citing reports of a large-scale offensive by Armenian armed forces in the Azerbaijani district of Kelbadjar. Accordingly, the Council convened on 6 April. Following consultations with the members of the Council, the President made a statement⁽¹¹⁾ on behalf of the Council, in connection with the item entitled "The situation relating to Nagorny Karabakh":

Meeting number. SC 3194.

"The Security Council expresses its serious concern at the deterioration of relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Republic of Azerbaijan, and at the escalation of hostile acts in the Nagorny Karabakh conflict, especially the invasion of the Kelbadjar district of the Republic of Azerbaijan by local Armenian forces. The Council demands the immediate cessation of all such hostilities, which endanger peace and security of the region, and the withdrawal of these forces.

"In this context, the Security Council, reaffirming the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States of the region and the inviolability of their borders, expresses its support for the CSCE peace process. It expresses the hope that the recent preliminary agreement reached by the Minsk Group will be expeditiously followed by agreements on a cease-fire, a timetable for the deployment of the monitors, a draft political declaration and the convening, as soon as possible, of the Minsk Conference.

"The Security Council urges the parties involved to take all necessary steps to advance the CSCE peace process and refrain from any action that will obstruct a peaceful solution to the problem.

"The Council also calls for unimpeded access to international humanitarian relief efforts in the region and in particular in all areas affected by the conflict in order to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population.

"The Security Council requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with CSCE, to ascertain facts, as appropriate, and to submit urgently a report to the Council containing an assessment of the situation on the ground.

"The Council will remain seized of the matter."

Communications (7-27 April). Azerbaijan, in numerous communications, accused Armenia of ignoring the Council's requests and of continuing and escalating its aggression against Azerbaijani territory. On 12 April⁽¹²⁾ Azerbaijan said troops from Armenia had launched an attack in the Zangelan and Kubadly districts, and continued attacking and bombarding in some other districts. On 20 April⁽¹³⁾ Azerbaijan said that the armed forces of Armenia had occupied areas in nine Azerbaijani districts and subjected their inhabitants to "ethnic cleansing", and that areas in 11 districts were being systematically subjected to aggression and aerial, artillery and tank bombardment. Also, some 54,000 Azerbaijanis had been the victims of ethnic cleansing in the Nagorny Karabakh area of Azerbaijan. On 29 April,⁽¹⁴⁾ Azerbaijan said that a three-day emergency meeting of the Committee of Senior Officials of CSCE had been counter-productive because of Armenia's unyielding position.

On 17 April⁽¹⁵⁾ Armenia reported that Azerbaijan had spread its scope of military activity by directing several attacks towards frontier villages on the Armenian side, which were clearly attempts to draw Armenia into the armed confrontation. Several districts in Armenia had been shelled and, on 10 April, Azerbaijani forces had captured the villages of Srashen and Nerkin Hand in the Kapan region of Armenia, but were driven away the next day. Attacks had also taken place against Nagorny Karabakh. Armenia said that Turkey had followed unfriendly statements with some practical actions, including delivering weapons to Azerbaijan and cutting completely the flow of humanitarian shipments destined for Armenia.

Turkey, on 16 April⁽¹⁶⁾ said allegations of weapons shipment to Azerbaijan, as well as of transportation from Turkey of servicemen disguised as civilians to Nakhichevan, were totally unfounded and deliberately fabricated by the Armenian authorities.

EC, in a 7 April statement⁽¹⁷⁾ urged Armenia to use its influence on the Nagorny Karabakh forces for an immediate withdrawal from the Azeri territory in the Kelbadjar and Fizuli areas, and requested all parties not to withdraw from the negotiations of the Minsk Group.

Report of the Secretary-General (14 April).

In accordance with the Security Council's request of 6 April, the Secretary-General, on 14 April, submitted a report⁽¹⁸⁾ in connection with the situation relating to Nagorny Karabakh. He reported that he had instructed the heads of the United Nations Interim Offices in Armenia and Azerbaijan to undertake field missions to the areas of conflict, which took place between 6 and 12 April.

The United Nations representative in Azerbaijan stated that authorities in the district of Ganja indicated that Azeri forces had lost control over the entire Kelbadjar district, and the fighting in Kelbadjar had led to the displacement of 40,000-50,000 residents. The town of Fizuli appeared to be under military attack. At Koubatly, the mission was told that shelling had occurred from the territory of the Republic of Armenia, as well as from the Lachin corridor and Nagorny Karabakh itself.

In Armenia, the acting United Nations representative reported that there was evidence of substantial destruction, resulting from mortar shelling, in several villages near the Azeri border. Also, a shell exploded near a United Nations vehicle in the town of Khndzorsk, and the mission had to leave the village of Korndzor when tank fire began, apparently from the territory of Azerbaijan. A helicopter reconnaissance of the border between Armenia and the Kelbadjar district of Azerbaijan saw no sign of hostilities, military movements or presence of the armed forces of Armenia.

In his observations, the Secretary-General said that the intensification of fighting in and around Nagorny Karabakh, especially the recent attacks against the Kelbadjar and Fizuli districts of Azerbaijan, posed a serious threat to peace and security in the entire Transcaucasus region. He strongly urged all parties to cease fighting and return to the negotiating table within CSCE's Minsk process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 April)

On 30 April, the Security Council convened to consider the Secretary-General's report. The Council invited Armenia and Azerbaijan to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37^a of its provisional rules of procedure. The Council unanimously adopted resolution 822(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling the statements of the President of the Security Council of 29 January 1993 and of 6 April 1993 concerning the Nagorny Karabakh conflict,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 April 1993,

Security Council resolution 822(1993)

30 April 1993 Meeting 3205 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25695).

Communications (1 May-27 July). Armenia accused Azerbaijan several times of aggression against it, including shelling of border areas and penetrating into Armenian territory in May,⁽¹⁹⁾ and an air attack on the city of Vardenis in July.⁽²⁰⁾ On 22 July⁽²¹⁾ Armenia countered what it said was disinformation about the capture of the city of Agdam, stating that Azerbaijani forces had attacked the Karabakh Self-Defence Forces from near Agdam, and that the Karabakh forces had then gone on a counter-offensive to repel the adversary.

Azerbaijan also repeatedly charged Armenia with continued acts of aggression, including: seizing villages in the Kazakh district in May⁽²²⁾ beginning an offensive, including air attacks, in the direction of the Agdam and Agjabedi districts in Azerbaijan in June⁽²³⁾ and occupying the city of Agdam on 23 July, and bombarding villages where refugees from Agdam were settled in tent encampments⁽²⁴⁾

An outline of the diplomatic efforts of CSCE was contained in a 27 July report⁽²⁵⁾ by the Chairman of the Minsk Conference of CSCE on Nagorny Karabakh. He said that both the President of Armenia and the acting President of Azerbaijan had reconfirmed their support for the Minsk Group's timetable of steps to implement Security Council resolution 822(1993), but that the attitude of local Armenian community leaders in Nagorny Karabakh appeared to be rigid and governed by military rather than diplomatic considerations. The Chairman convened a meeting of the nine countries of the Minsk Group in Rome on 22 and 23 July. While the meeting was in process, news was received of the seizure of the Azerbaijani city of Agdam, which prompted a statement unanimously endorsed by the nine States. They strongly condemned the seizure, calling it an unacceptable act, and stated that it was in the interest of the Armenian community of Nagorny Karabakh to withdraw immediately from territories recently seized by force.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 July)

In response to requests of Azerbaijan⁽²⁶⁾ and Turkey⁽²⁷⁾ the Security Council convened on 29 July to consider the situation relating to Nagorny Karabakh. The Council invited Armenia, Azerbaijan and Turkey to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37^a of its provisional rules of procedure. It unanimously adopted resolution 853(1993).

Expressing its serious concern at the deterioration of relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic and at the tensions between them, Welcoming acceptance by the parties concerned of the timetable of urgent steps to implement its resolution 822(1993),

Noting with alarm the escalation in armed hostilities and, in particular, the seizure of the district of Agdam in the Azerbaijani Republic,

Concerned that this situation continues to endanger peace and security in the region,

Expressing once again its grave concern at the displacement of large numbers of civilians in the Azerbaijani Republic and at the serious humanitarian emergency in the region,

Reaffirming the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Azerbaijani Republic and of all other States in the region,

2. Further condemns all hostile actions in the region, in particular attacks on civilians and bombardments of inhabited areas;

Security Council resolution 853(1993)

29 July 1993 Meeting 3259 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26190), orally corrected.

Communications (14 August). Azerbaijan, on 14 August⁽²⁸⁾ said that despite Armenia's stated commitment to implement resolution 853(1993), Armenian armed forces had considerably stepped up their military operations in the territory of Azerbaijan, including seizing six populated areas in the Agdam district. Armenia, also on 14 August⁽²⁹⁾ said Azerbaijani armed forces had bombarded towns in the Tavush and Ijevan regions in the north-eastern part of Armenia with unprecedented intensity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (18 August)

On 17 August⁽³⁰⁾ Azerbaijan requested a convening of the Security Council, accusing Armenia of continuing aggression and of ignoring previous Council resolutions. Turkey, on the same date⁽³¹⁾ also charged Armenia with continuing its aggression and occupying more Azerbaijani territory, namely in the Fizuli, Djabrail and Agdam districts. Armenia, on 18 August⁽³²⁾ requested an urgent meeting of the Council to assess the most recent evidence of Azerbaijani aggression and to condemn Azerbaijan's continuing policy of expanding its war against Nagorny Karabakh to the borders of Armenia.

The Council convened accordingly on 18 August. Following consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement⁽³³⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3264.

"The Security Council expresses its serious concern at the deterioration of relations between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic and at the tensions between them. The Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Armenia to use its influence to achieve compliance by the Armenians of the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic with its resolutions 822(1993) and 853(1993).

"The Council also expresses its deep concern at the recent intensification of fighting in the area of Fizuli. The Council condemns the attack on the Fizuli region from the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic, just as it has previously condemned the invasion and seizure of the districts of Kelbadjar and Agdam of the Azerbaijani Republic. The Council demands a stop to all attacks and an immediate cessation of the hostilities and bombardments, which endanger peace and security in the region, and an immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal of occupying forces from the area of Fizuli, and from the districts of Kelbadjar and Agdam and other recently occupied areas of the Azerbaijani Republic. The Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Armenia to use its unique influence to this end.

"The Council reaffirms the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Azerbaijani Republic and of all other States in the region and the inviolability of their borders, and expresses its grave concern at the effect these hostilities have had on the efforts of the Minsk Group of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict. The Council stresses its full support of the CSCE peace process, and notes particularly the opportunity that the current round of Minsk Group talks have afforded the parties to the conflict to present their views directly. In this context, the Council calls upon all of the parties to respond positively and within the agreed time-frame to the 13 August adjusted version of the Minsk Group's 'Timetable of urgent steps to implement United Nations Security Council resolutions 822(1993) and 853(1993)' and to refrain from any actions that would obstruct a peaceful solution. The Council welcomes the intention of CSCE to send a mission to the region to report on all aspects of the situation.

"In the light of this most recent escalation of the conflict, the Council strongly reaffirms its call in resolution 853(1993) for States to refrain from supplying any weapons and munitions which might lead to an intensification of the conflict or the continued occupation of territory of the Azerbaijani Republic. The Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Armenia to ensure that the forces involved are not provided with the means to extend their military campaign still further.

"The Council also renews its calls in resolutions 822(1993) and 853(1993) for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief efforts in the region, in all areas affected by the conflict, in order to alleviate the continually increasing suffering of the civilian population. The Council reminds the parties that they are bound by and must adhere to the principles and rules of international humanitarian law.

"The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter and will be ready to consider appropriate steps to ensure that all parties fully respect and comply with its resolutions."

Communications (1 September-8 October).

On 1 September⁽³⁴⁾ Armenia notified the Security Council that Azerbaijan and the Republic of Nagorny Karabakh had signed a cease-fire on 31 August and that their leaders had agreed to meet by 10 September. By a statement of 6 September⁽³⁵⁾ EC condemned the recent offensives by local Armenian forces in Nagorny Karabakh, which were making deeper and deeper incursions into Azerbaijani territory.

On 1 October⁽³⁶⁾ the Chairman of the Minsk Conference reported on efforts for a peaceful settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict. He said contacts between the parties to the conflict in Moscow on 12 and 13 September and again around 24 September resulted in the cease-fire of 31 August being extended to 5 October. The consultations had led to the creation of an adjusted timetable of urgent steps to implement Council resolutions 822(1993) and 853(1993) between 18 October and 18 November. Those steps included: the announcement by the Nagorny Karabakh leadership of readiness to withdraw from all recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan, and subsequent gradual withdrawal of forces; the reopening of the main gas pipeline from Azerbaijan into Armenia and Nakhichevan; the reopening of communications and transportation; and the exchange of hostages and prisoners of war. Those and other steps were to be verified by a CSCE mission.

Armenia, on 6 October⁽³⁷⁾ said the adjusted timetable was acceptable, while Azerbaijan, on 8 October⁽³⁸⁾ said it could not agree to the timetable as it stood, citing, among other things, the following reasons: it introduced prior conditions for a withdrawal of forces from the occupied areas of Azerbaijan, in violation of the Council's demand for unconditional withdrawal; it did not mention the Lachin district or occupied areas in the Zangezan and Kazakh districts, or measures for the liberation of localities in the Nagorny Karabakh region in Azerbaijan; and it did not provide for measures to solve the problem of refugees and displaced persons in Azerbaijan.

14 October 1993 Meeting 3292 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26582).

On 8 November⁽³⁹⁾ in connection with the consideration of the situation in Georgia, the President of the Council, in a statement on behalf of the Council, noted the effects of the continuing disorder in the Republic of Georgia on the humanitarian situation in neighbouring Armenia and Azerbaijan (see below).

Azerbaijan, on 26 October⁽⁴⁰⁾ charged that the armed forces of Armenia had violated the cease-fire agreement and launched a massive attack in the Djebrail, Fizuli, Zangelan and Kubatly districts of Azerbaijan, and had reached the frontier between Azerbaijan and Iran. Turkey, on 27 October,⁽⁴¹⁾ requested the Council to convene urgently in order to take effective enforcement measures to stop the Armenian aggression. Iran, on 28 October,⁽⁴²⁾ also requested an urgent Council meeting, as fresh Armenian military offensives close to Iran's northern border endangered peace and security in the entire area and threatened the national security of Iran.

On 9 November,⁽⁴³⁾ the Chairman-in-Office of the Minsk Conference transmitted a declaration by the nine countries of the Minsk Group, condemning the most recent cease-fire violation and seizure of additional territory by force. He also presented a package proposal resulting from a meeting of the Group from 2 to 8 November. The proposal contained a new version of the adjusted timetable of urgent steps to implement Council resolutions 822(1993) and 853(1993) (see above), to which the parties were required to reply by 22 November.

the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic, would endanger peace and security in the region.

Calls upon the Government of Armenia to use its influence to achieve compliance by the Armenians of the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic with resolutions 822(1993), 853(1993) and 874(1993), and to ensure that the forces involved are not provided with the means to extend their military campaign further;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 884(1993)

12 November 1993 Meeting 3313 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26719).

Georgia

Report of the Secretary-General (January).

On 28 January,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported on developments in Abkhazia, in the north-western part of Georgia, where armed conflict had broken out in 1992.⁽⁴⁵⁾ He said the situation in Abkhazia had further deteriorated since he reported to the Security Council in November 1992.⁽⁴⁶⁾ An agreement resulting from a meeting between the President of the Russian Federation and the Chairman of the State Council of the Republic of Georgia on 3 September 1992⁽⁴⁷⁾ still offered the best basis for a resumption of the peace process.

The main military confrontation lines between the Georgian and Abkhaz forces had remained virtually unchanged since early October 1992, despite intensified fighting in some areas. The unabated fighting in Abkhazia had led to the displacement of tens of thousands of civilians and created a serious humanitarian situation which had been aggravated by the winter season. The Georgian authorities had expressed concern that some of the Russian military units stationed in Abkhazia were supporting the Abkhaz forces. In order to assess the situation, the Secretary-General considered dispatching a new mission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

In accordance with an understanding reached in prior consultations and in response to a request by Georgia contained in a letter of December 1992,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Security Council convened on 29 January to consider the situation in Georgia, including the Secretary-General's 28 January report. At its request, the President of the Council invited Georgia under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a The President made a statement on behalf of the Council:⁽⁴⁸⁾

Meeting number. SC 3169.

"The Security Council notes with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia.

"The Council expresses its grave preoccupation regarding the further deterioration of the situation in Abkhazia and calls on all the parties immediately to cease the fighting and to observe and implement faithfully the terms of the agreement of 3 September 1992, which affirms that the territorial integrity of Georgia shall be ensured, which provides for a cease-fire and the commitment by the parties not to resort to the use of force, and which constitutes the basis for an overall political solution.

"The Council shares the observation of the Secretary-General that the restoration of a viable peace process in Abkhazia, based on the agreement of 3 September 1992, may require more active support by the international community to assist the parties to agree to a cease-fire, to the return of refugees and to work out a political settlement; and in that context, the Council reiterates its support for the current efforts undertaken by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE).

"The Council endorses, to this end, the proposal of the Secretary-General to send a new mission to Georgia to review the situation in Abkhazia and it stresses the need to ensure effective coordination between the activities of the United Nations and those of CSCE aiming at restoring peace. The Council believes that it is necessary to assess the overall political situation and to discuss and provide advice on practical matters such as the establishment and monitoring of an immediate cease-fire, the monitoring of the border in Abkhazia between Georgia and the Russian Federation, and the protection of the railway and communication links in Abkhazia.

"The Council also endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to Abkhazia to look into the allegation of violations of international humanitarian law by both sides.

"The Council requests the Secretary-General to report on the outcome of the mission and to propose measures to consolidate the cease-fire and for an overall political settlement."

Communications and report of the Secretary-General (May and July). On 5 May,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Secretary-General notified the President of the Security Council that in view of the further deterioration of the situation in Abkhazia, he found the dispatch of another visiting mission an inadequate approach to revive the peace process and had decided to appoint Edouard Brunner of Switzerland as his Special Envoy for Georgia. His tasks would be to: obtain a cease-fire agreement; assist the parties in reviving the process of negotiations to find a political solution to the conflict; and enlist the support of neighbouring countries and others concerned for those objectives. The Council members welcomed the Secretary-General's decision, according to a letter of 11 May from its President.⁽⁵⁰⁾

In a 1 July report,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General described the first mission of his Special Envoy to Georgia from 20 to 25 May, as well as intensified efforts of the United Nations to seek a settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia. He characterized the situation in Georgia as deteriorating and as having a devastating effect on the country's economy.

A cease-fire agreement, which came into effect on 20 May, held for two weeks or so, but later was violated daily, especially by Abkhaz shelling of Sukhumi, the capital of Abkhazia, which was still held by forces loyal to the Government. Civilian casualties were on the rise, and Eduard Shevardnadze, Georgia's head of State, feared an imminent assault on Sukhumi across the river Gumista, which constituted a no-man's land between the opposing forces to the north of the city itself.

The Special Envoy met with Georgian officials at Tblisi, the capital of Georgia, and Sukhumi, and with Abkhaz leaders at Gudauta, the seat of the Abkhaz party. In Moscow, he met with Russian leaders, and at Stockholm, with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Sweden, who was Chairman-in-Office of CSCE. Those consultations revealed that the Georgian Government and its supporters at Sukhumi supported the Secretary-General's approach of a solution along three tracks: consolidation of the cease-fire, the launching of a political negotiating process, and support for those processes by neighbouring countries, pre-eminently the Russian Federation. The Abkhaz side favoured a United Nations-sponsored peace conference, but not the deployment of military observers, while the Russian side favoured such deployment, but had reservations about a conference.

In view of the urgent need to get the conflict under control, the Secretary-General recommended that a group of 50 United Nations military observers be deployed to Georgia, initially in the Sukhumi and Ochamchira districts of Abkhazia, with a mandate to: discourage further escalation of the conflict; use its good offices to reinstate the cease-fire agreement; report cease-fire violations and endeavour to restore the status quo; and attempt to establish communications between the two sides to forestall violations.

On 7 July⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-General, describing a serious deterioration in the military situation in and around Sukhumi, said that it would not be wise to proceed with the actual deployment of 50 military observers until the cease-fire was re-established and was being respected.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July and August)

On 2 July⁽⁵³⁾ Georgia requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council, citing intense artillery bombardment of the residential areas of Sukhumi, causing civilian casualties at a catastrophic rate. Abkhazian separatists had commenced a wide-scale offensive along the entire front, Georgia said, and, in the coastal area controlled by frontier troops of the Russian Federation, assault forces were landing, consisting primarily of citizens of the Russian Federation.

Following consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement on 2 July⁽⁵⁴⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3249.

"The Security Council has considered the letter dated 2 July 1993 from the Head of State of the Republic of Georgia concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. The Council expresses its deep concern at the reports of increased fighting around Sukhumi. The Council calls on all the parties to cease military action immediately, and to respect the cease-fire agreement of 14 May 1993. The Council will consider without delay the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1993, and the recommendations therein."

On 9 July, the Council convened again to consider the situation in Georgia, including the Secretary-General's July report. The Council invited Georgia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37 of its provisional rules of procedure.^a The Council adopted unanimously resolution 849(1993).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1993,

Recalling the statements made by the President of the Security Council on 10 September 1992, 8 October 1992 and 29 January 1993 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Recalling the Moscow Agreement of 3 September 1992,

Endorsing the approach set out in the Secretary-General's letter of 5 May 1993 to the President of the Security Council,

Noting with concern the recent intensification of fighting around Sukhumi,

Reaffirming the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 2 July 1993, which called in particular on all parties to respect the cease-fire agreement of 14 May 1993,

Stressing the importance it attaches, in the context of the deployment of military observers, to the existence and implementation of a cease-fire and a peace process with the effective involvement of the United Nations,

1. Notes with appreciation the observations contained in the Secretary-General's report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to send his Special Envoy to the region to assist in reaching agreement on the implementation of the cease-fire; and to begin immediately the necessary preparations, including contacting Member States which may be able to make observers available and sending a planning team to the area, for the dispatch of 50 military observers to Georgia once the cease-fire is implemented;

3. 7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 849(1993)

9 July 1993 Meeting 3252 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26053), orally revised.

On 2 August⁽⁵⁵⁾ Georgia stated that an agreement on a cease-fire in Abkhazia had been signed. On 4 August⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had dispatched a planning team to Abkhazia on 19 July, which returned to New York on 27 July. In view of the fact that the cease-fire agreement of 27 July took effect on 28 July and conditions now permitted the immediate deployment of observers, he proposed to dispatch an advance team of 5-10 observers to the conflict area as soon as possible.

The Council convened on 6 August, in accordance with an understanding reached in prior consultations, to consider the Secretary-General's 4 August letter. It unanimously adopted resolution 854(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 849(1993) of 9 July 1993, which reserved to the Council a decision on the deployment of military observers, following implementation of a cease-fire,

Welcoming the signing on 27 July 1993 of the agreement establishing the cease-fire in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

1. Approves the Secretary-General's proposal as contained in his letter of 4 August 1993 to the President of the Security Council that an advance team of up to ten United Nations military observers be deployed to the region as soon as possible to begin to help to verify compliance with the cease-fire as envisaged in the cease-fire agreement, the mandate of the team to expire within three months, and contemplates that this advance team will be incorporated into a United Nations observer mission if such a mission is formally established by the Council;

2. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General on the proposed establishment of a United Nations observer mission, including in particular a detailed estimate of the cost and the scope of this operation, a time-frame for its implementation, and the projected conclusion of this operation;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 854(1993)

6 August 1993 Meeting 3261 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26258), orally revised.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). On 6 August⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the efforts of his Special Envoy and an international planning team to prepare for the deployment of military observers in the light of the 27 July cease-fire agreement, which was annexed to the report. He described his concept of operation for a military observer mission to be known as the "United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia" (UNOMIG) which, he said, would provide a major stabilizing effect for the observance of the cease-fire. After considering the findings of the planning team, the Secretary-General reached the conclusion that the dispatch of 50 military observers would not be sufficient to cope with the situation that had developed since the 27 July agreement, so he suggested that its mandate be expanded to include 88 military observers and supporting staff.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August and September)

The Security Council convened on 24 August to consider the Secretary-General's report and unanimously adopted resolution 858(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 849(1993) of 9 July 1993, which reserved to the Council a decision on the deployment of observers, following implementation of a cease-fire,

Welcoming the signing of the cease-fire agreement of 27 July 1993 between the Republic of Georgia and forces in Abkhazia,

Noting that the parties to the conflict have committed themselves to withdrawal of forces from Abkhazia and that this withdrawal is at present under way,

1. Welcomes the Secretary-General's report of 6 August 1993;

2. Decides to establish a United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) in accordance with the above-mentioned report, comprising up to eighty-eight military observers, plus minimal staff necessary to support UNOMIG, with the following mandate:

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report as appropriate, but in any event within three months, on the activities of UNOMIG;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue energetically, through his Special Envoy, efforts to facilitate the peace process and negotiations, starting as soon as possible, towards the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement;

10. Expresses its continuing support for the Secretary-General's ongoing cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in efforts to bring peace to Georgia and elsewhere in the region;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 858(1993)

24 August 1993 Meeting 3268 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26348).

On 16 September⁽⁵⁸⁾ Georgia requested an urgent Council meeting to discuss what it called a full-scale offensive by the Gudauta grouping of Abkhazia against the cities of Sukhumi and Ochamchira.

The Council convened accordingly on 17 September. Following consultations among its members, the President of the Council made the following statement⁽⁵⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

Meeting number. SC 3279.

"The Security Council expresses its extreme concern at the outbreak of fighting in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, arising from the attacks by the Abkhaz forces on the towns of Sukhumi and Ochamchira.

"The Council strongly condemns this grave violation by the Abkhaz side of the Sochi cease-fire agreement of 27 July 1993, which was mediated by the Russian Federation and welcomed by the Security Council in resolutions 854(1993) of 6 August 1993 and 858(1993) of 24 August 1993.

"The Council strongly demands that the Abkhaz leadership end immediately the hostilities and promptly withdraw all its forces to the cease-fire lines agreed upon in Sochi on 27 July 1993. Failure to take such action can entail the risk of serious consequences.

"The Council urges all countries to encourage the re-establishment of the cease-fire and the resumption of the peace process.

"The Council expresses its strong desire to see the Abkhaz side enter fully into the peace process without further delay.

"The Council notes the oral report of the Secretary-General on 17 September 1993 regarding the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and welcomes his intention to send his Special Envoy for Georgia to Moscow and to the area to assess the situation and to establish a way forward to a peaceful settlement to the dispute.

"The Council looks forward to receiving the Secretary-General's report at an early date."

Report and communications (September and October). On 7 October⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the initial efforts to implement the mandate of UNOMIG and the efforts to start a political process in view of the collapse of the cease-fire and the military advances by the Abkhaz party.

UNOMIG had been in its early stages of deployment when the cease-fire broke down on 16 September and Abkhaz forces launched attacks on Sukhumi and Ochamchira. Patrols and further deployment of both civilian and military staff were suspended, with the strength of the mission standing at 12 military observers. On 27 September, Sukhumi was occupied by Abkhaz forces, and all efforts by Georgian forces to defend their remaining positions in Abkhazia ceased on 1 October.

It was evident that UNOMIG's mandate had been invalidated as a result of the general breakdown of the cease-fire and the collapse of the tripartite machinery responsible for its implementation. The Secretary-General proposed to maintain the current strength of UNOMIG at Sukhumi, where the Chief Military Observer had established contact with officials that arrived with the Abkhaz forces.

Expressing sadness at the suffering inflicted by the fighting on civilians, the Secretary-General said he was particularly shocked by the deliberate attacks on Georgian aircraft on three consecutive days, which had resulted in a heavy toll on human life, and by the large number of displaced persons. There were also alarming reports of atrocities and allegations of ethnic cleansing. He called on the Abkhaz leadership to exercise maximum restraint regarding the civilian population remaining at Sukhumi and elsewhere in Abkhazia.

Georgia sent several communications to the Council after the breakdown of the cease-fire, including a statement of 23 September⁽⁶¹⁾ accusing Abkhaz forces of carrying out a massacre in the village of Akhaldaba and of shooting down two civilian aircraft with the loss of 67 lives. On 2 October⁽⁶²⁾ Georgia said that the Gudauta separatists continued hostilities in the direction of Ochamchira and Gali, even as the defenders of Sukhumi had left the city, and over 100,000 refugees were seeking shelter in the mountainous region of Svaneti.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (19 October)

In response to a request by Georgia⁽⁶³⁾ the Security Council convened on 19 October to consider the situation there. The Council again invited Georgia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37 of its provisional rules of procedure.^a The Council unanimously adopted resolution 876(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849(1993) of 9 July 1993, 854(1993) of 6 August 1993 and 858(1993) of 24 August 1993,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Council on 17 September 1993, in which the Security Council expressed its extreme concern for the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and urged all countries to encourage the resumption of the peace process,

Having considered the letter from the Chairman of the Parliament, head of State of the Republic of Georgia, dated 12 October 1993,

Having also considered the Secretary-General's report of 7 October 1993,

Deeply concerned at the human suffering caused by conflict in the region, and at reports of "ethnic cleansing" and other serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Determining that continuation of the conflict in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, threatens peace and stability in the region,

1. Affirms the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia;

2. Reaffirms its strong condemnation of the grave violation by the Abkhaz side of the cease-fire agreement of 27 July 1993 between the Republic of Georgia and forces in Abkhazia, and subsequent actions in violation of international humanitarian law;

3. Condemns also the killing of the Chairman of the Defence Council and Council of Ministers of the Autonomous Republic of Abkhazia;

4. Demands that all parties refrain from the use of force and from any violations of international humanitarian law, and welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to the Republic of Georgia in this regard, in particular to investigate reports of "ethnic cleansing";

5. Affirms the right of refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes, and calls on the parties to facilitate this;

6. Welcomes the humanitarian assistance already provided, including by international aid agencies, and urges Member States to contribute towards the relief efforts;

7. Calls for unimpeded access for international humanitarian relief assistance in the region;

8. Calls on all States to prevent the provision from their territories or by persons under their jurisdiction of all assistance, other than humanitarian assistance, to the Abkhaz side and in particular to prevent the supply of any weapons and munitions;

9. Reiterates its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, in cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation as a facilitator, to carry forward the peace process with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement;

10. Notes the provisional steps the Secretary-General has taken with regard to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), and welcomes his intention to provide a further report both on the future of UNOMIG and on the political aspects of the United Nations role in trying to end the conflict in Abkhazia;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 876(1993)

19 October 1993 Meeting 3295 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26592).

Report of the Secretary-General (27 October).
A report of the Secretary-General dated 27 October⁽⁶⁴⁾ updated his political efforts and those of his Special Envoy, as well as the status of UNOMIG. The Special Envoy had discussions at Geneva with the Abkhaz side on 6 and 7 October and with Georgian representatives on 17 and 18 October. In view of the expressed willingness of both sides to meet, the Secretary-General planned for the Special Envoy to hold a first round of discussions with both parties in late November, under United Nations auspices and with the Russian Federation as facilitator. The mandate of UNOMIG having been invalidated by the military developments of 16 to 27 September, he recommended that the Mission be continued at its current military strength of five observers with minimal support staff for a further three months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

The Council convened on 4 November to consider the Secretary-General's report. It invited Georgia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote under rule 37 of its provisional rules of procedure.^a

It unanimously adopted resolution 881(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849(1993) of 9 July 1993, 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, 858(1993) of 24 August 1993 and 876(1993) of 19 October 1993,

Recalling in particular resolution 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, in which the Council decided to establish a United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG),

Having considered the Secretary-General's report of 27 October 1993 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Noting with concern that the original mandate of UNOMIG has been overtaken by the military developments of 16 to 27 September 1993,

Expressing its serious concern that continuation of the conflict in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, threatens peace and stability in the region,

1. Welcomes the Secretary-General's report of 27 October 1993;

2. Welcomes also the continued efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, in cooperation with the Chairman-in-Office of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and with the assistance of the Government of the Russian Federation as facilitator, to carry forward the peace process with the aim of achieving an overall political settlement, and in particular to bring both parties together in late November 1993 in Geneva;

3. Reiterates the demand in its resolution 876(1993) that all the parties to the conflict in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, refrain from the use of force and from any violation of international humanitarian law, and looks forward to the report of the fact-finding mission sent by the Secretary-General to the Republic of Georgia in this regard;

4. Approves the continued presence of UNOMIG in Georgia until 31 January 1994 comprising up to five military observers plus minimal support staff, with the following interim mandate:

(a) To maintain contacts with both sides to the conflict and military contingents of the Russian Federation;

(b) To monitor the situation and report to headquarters, with particular reference to any developments relevant to the efforts of the United Nations to promote a comprehensive political settlement;

5. Decides that UNOMIG will not be extended beyond 31 January 1994 unless the Secretary-General reports to the Council that substantive progress has been made towards implementing measures aimed at establishing a lasting peace or that the peace process will be served by the prolongation of its mandate, and requests the Secretary-General to report as appropriate, but in any event by late January 1994, on the activities of UNOMIG;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take planning steps which would enable, upon a further decision by the Council, prompt deployment of additional personnel within the originally authorized strength of UNOMIG if the Secretary-General reports that the situation on the ground and in the peace process warrants it;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 881(1993)

4 November 1993 Meeting 3304 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26688).

At an 8 November meeting, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽³⁹⁾

Meeting number. SC 3307.

"The Security Council is following with deep concern developments in the Republic of Georgia, where the continuing disorder has led to mass suffering of the civilian population and threatens to worsen seriously the humanitarian situation in neighbouring Azerbaijan and Armenia.

"In this connection, the Security Council notes the appeal by the Government of the Republic of Georgia to the Russian Federation, the Azerbaijani Republic and the Republic of Armenia for assistance to protect and ensure the uninterrupted operation of railroads in the Republic of Georgia. These are crucial communication links for the three Transcaucasian countries. The Council welcomes the improvement in security for the lines of communication that has followed the Russian Federation's response, which was made in accordance with the wishes of the Government of the Republic of Georgia.

"The Security Council appeals to the international community to continue its efforts to provide emergency humanitarian assistance to the population of the Republic of Georgia.

"The Security Council will remain seized of the matter, and asks to be kept informed of developments by the parties concerned on a regular basis."

Report of the fact-finding mission. On 17 November⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report of a fact-finding mission he dispatched to investigate the situation of human rights violations in Abkhazia, Georgia, including allegations of "ethnic cleansing". The mission visited the area from 22 to 30 October, interviewing authorities, as well as victims and witnesses to human rights violations, in Abkhazia and Tbilisi.

The mission concluded that numerous and serious human rights violations had been committed and continued to be committed in Abkhazia since the outbreak of the armed conflict between Georgian government forces and Abkhazian forces in August 1992. Violations of the right to life had taken place on a large scale; the victims were mainly civilians, but also many combatants had been wounded or captured. Other human rights violations included torture and ill-treatment, property rights violations and forced displacements. Both Georgian government forces and Abkhazian forces, as well as irregulars and civilians, had been responsible for such human rights violations, and the victims included members of all ethnic groups inhabiting Abkhazia. The conflict had led to almost complete devastation of huge areas of the country and a massive displacement of population.

In its recommendations, the mission said that investigations should be carried out by both parties to the conflict into all allegations of human rights violations, with a view to clarifying the circumstances and identifying those responsible. Compensation should be granted to the victims or, in the case of extrajudicial executions, to their families, and all illegally occupied houses should be restored to their owners. The right of displaced persons to return to Abkhazia should be ensured. Measures should be taken to ensure that, in carrying out their tasks, the security forces fully respected human rights and observed, in particular, the restrictions on the use of force and firearms as set out in international human rights instruments.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

By a letter to the Security Council President dated 16 December⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that a Memorandum of Understanding between the parties, signed at Geneva on 1 December, manifested encouraging progress towards lasting peace in the area. Therefore, he was seeking from the Council a contingent authority to deploy up to 50 additional military observers. The Memorandum of Understanding, signed in the presence of representatives of the United Nations, the Russian Federation and CSCE, was appended to a 9 December letter from Georgia.⁽⁶⁷⁾

The Council convened on 22 December to consider the Secretary-General's letter. It invited Georgia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, under rule 37 of its provisional rules of procedure,⁶⁸ and adopted unanimously resolution 892(1993).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849(1993) of 9 July 1993, 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, 876(1993) of 19 October 1993 and 881(1993) of 4 November 1993,

Also reaffirming its resolution 868(1993) of 29 September 1993 concerning the security of United Nations operations,

Having considered the Secretary-General's letter of 16 December 1993 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia,

Noting the letter of 9 December 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Georgia to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the Memorandum of Understanding between the Georgian and Abkhazian sides signed in Geneva on 1 December 1993,

Welcoming the signature of the Memorandum of Understanding,

Taking note that the parties to the Memorandum of Understanding consider that the maintenance of peace would be promoted by an increased international presence in the zone of conflict,

Taking note also of the first expert-level talks held between the parties in Moscow on 15 and 16 December 1993 and of the intention to convene a new round of negotiations in Geneva on 11 January 1994 with a view to achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict,

Noting that encouraging progress has been achieved in the negotiations between the parties, which justifies the deployment of additional United Nations military observers,

Noting also the decisions of the ministerial meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) held in Rome on 30 November and 1 December 1993, and welcoming further the continuing cooperation between the United Nations and CSCE in this matter,

Deeply concerned at the humanitarian situation in Georgia, in particular at the number of displaced persons and refugees,

1. Welcomes the Secretary-General's letter of 16 December 1993;

2. Authorizes the phased deployment of up to 50 additional United Nations military observers to UNOMIG as recommended by the Secretary-General in his letter to perform the functions described in paragraph 4 of Security Council resolution 881(1993) and in this manner to contribute to the implementation by the parties of the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding of 1 December 1993; and requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council on the duties of new observers as additional deployments beyond the initial 10 referred to in the Secretary-General's letter are undertaken;

3. Notes the intention of the Secretary-General to plan and prepare for a possible further expansion of UNOMIG to ensure prompt deployment should the situation on the ground and the course of negotiations warrant it;

4. Expresses its willingness to review the existing mandate of UNOMIG taking into account any progress achieved towards the promotion of a comprehensive political settlement and in the light of the report of the Secretary-General due late January 1994; this report should cover, inter alia, the specific activities UNOMIG will undertake, prospects for the mission, and anticipated costs, in the light of the situation on the ground and in the negotiations;

5. Urges the parties to comply fully with all the commitments they have undertaken in the Memorandum of Understanding, and in particular with the commitments undertaken in accordance with the main provisions of the cease-fire agreement of 27 July 1993, set out in paragraph 1 of the Memorandum of Understanding;

6. Urges also the parties to take all steps necessary to ensure the security of UNOMIG personnel and welcomes the readiness of the Government of the Russian Federation to assist the Secretary-General in this regard;

7. Urges also the parties fully to comply with their undertakings in the Memorandum of Understanding to create conditions for the voluntary, safe and speedy return of refugees to the places of their permanent residence and to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance to all victims of the conflict;

8. Urges also the parties not to take any political or any other steps that could aggravate the existing situation or hinder the process towards a comprehensive political settlement;

9. Encourages donor States to make contributions in response to the United Nations humanitarian appeal;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 892(1993)

22 December 1993 Meeting 3325 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26909).

UN Observer Mission in Georgia

The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia was established in August 1993 by Security Council resolution 858(1993), with a threefold mandate: to verify compliance with the cease-fire agreement of 27 July 1993, with special attention to the situation in the city of Sukhumi; to investigate and attempt to resolve cease-fire violations; and to report to the Secretary-General on the implementation of its mandate (see above).

UNOMIG was to establish its headquarters at Sukhumi and maintain three sector headquarters (at Sukhumi and Ochamchira, and at the Psou River) and a liaison office at Tbilisi.

When the cease-fire in Abkhazia broke down on 16 September, UNOMIG consisted of the Chief Military Observer, 10 military observers and 11 civilian staff. The Secretary-General noted that, as a result of the breakdown, UNOMIG's mandate was invalidated, and further deployment of both military and civilian staff was suspended.

On 27 October, the Secretary-General, noting ongoing efforts towards a political settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, recommended the continuation of UNOMIG for a further three months. The Council, by resolution 881(1993) of 4 November, approved the continued presence of UNOMIG in Georgia until 31 January 1994, comprising up to five military observers, with the following interim mandate: to maintain contacts with both sides to the conflict and military contingents of the Russian Federation; and to monitor the situation and report to United Nations Headquarters, with particular reference to any developments relevant to United Nations efforts to promote a comprehensive political settlement. The Council also decided that the mandate of UNOMIG would not be extended beyond 31 January 1994 unless the Secretary-General reported that substantial progress had been made towards a lasting peace or that the peace process would be served by the prolongation of its mandate.

In response to a 27 August letter by the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Security Council, on 31 August⁽⁶⁹⁾ agreed with his proposal to appoint Brigadier-General John Hvidegaard of Denmark as Chief Military Observer of UNOMIG. On 3 September⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Council agreed to the Secretary-General's 1 September proposal⁽⁷¹⁾ that the military observers of UNOMIG come from the following States: Austria, Bangladesh, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Poland, Sierra Leone, Sweden and Switzerland.

Financing of UNOMIG

On 7 July⁽⁷²⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the total cost of UNOMIG at $9,005,000 gross for an initial six months. He said that he would recommend to the General Assembly that the costs relating to UNOMIG be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and that the assessments to be levied on Member States be credited to a special account to be established for that purpose.

On 7 August⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretary-General estimated that an operation consisting of 88 instead of 50 military observers would cost $16,195,000 gross for a six-month period, and $1,950,000 gross per month after that. On 3 November⁽⁷⁴⁾ he stated that the cost of the continuation of UNOMIG at its then current strength—consisting of the Chief Military Observer, four military observers and six international staff—would amount to $612,000 gross for a further three months, with monthly costs thereafter of $204,000 gross.

In a 6 December report to the Assembly⁽⁷⁵⁾ on the financing of UNOMIG, as well as in a 9 December report to the Fifth Committee on the financing of 17 peace-keeping operations⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the cost of UNOMIG from its inception in August 1993 to 31 January 1994 would amount to $2,278,800 gross ($2,198,400 net). Should the Council decide that UNOMIG be maintained beyond 31 January 1994, its monthly maintenance cost was estimated at $252,800 gross ($240,900 net); consequently the cost of the Mission from inception to 30 April 1994 would amount to $3,037,200 gross ($2,921,100 net). ACABQ, also in December⁽⁷⁷⁾ recommended that the Assembly authorize the commitment and assessment of that amount.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 48/475.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 2,786,600 United States dollars gross (2,680,100 dollars net) for the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia for the period from 24 August 1993 to 31 March 1994, should the Security Council extend the mandate beyond 31 January 1994, and requested the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Observation Mission;

(b) Decided at that time to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount of 2,536,200 dollars gross (2,439,300 dollars net) for the period ending 31 January 1994 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

(c) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 96,900 dollars for the period from 24 August 1993 to 31 January 1994.

Republic of Moldova

In 1993, the Republic of Moldova addressed letters to the Secretary-General concerning the presence of Russian troops in the country. On 19 February⁽⁷⁸⁾ it said that the fourteenth Army of the Russian Federation had started large-scale military manoeuvres, ignoring Moldova's opposition to such action. On 16 June⁽⁷⁹⁾ Moldova declared unacceptable a proposal of the President of the Russian Federation regarding the possible creation of military bases on the territories of some former Soviet republics, but considered his second proposal to withdraw Russian military forces from all former Soviet republics a realistic and just solution. On 16 September⁽⁸⁰⁾ Moldova reported that the Commander of the Fourteenth Russian Army had been elected a member of the so-called parliament of the self-proclaimed Dniester Moldovan Republic, an act which Moldova considered a new attempt by certain forces in Russia for a de facto recognition of the Dniester Republic, as well as a clear signal of the unwillingness of the Russian side to withdraw its military units.

Tajikistan

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) became operational on 21 January 1993. It provided the Secretary-General with up-to-date information on the conflict in Tajikistan, and was instrumental in coordinating the international community's response to the humanitarian situation in the country, the Secretary-General said in a 26 April letter⁽⁸¹⁾ to the President of the Security Council.

In that letter, he also announced his decision to appoint Ismat Kittani as his Special Envoy for Tajikistan, with the mandate to: obtain agreement on a cease-fire and make recommendations on an international monitoring mechanism; ascertain the positions of all the concerned parties and make good offices available to help establish negotiations for a political solution; and enlist the help of neighbouring countries and others concerned in achieving the above objectives.

The Secretary-General stated that recent reports from UNMOT had led him to conclude that there could be an escalation of the confrontation, especially in the border areas between Tajikistan and Afghanistan, unless urgent action was taken to establish a cease-fire and start a political dialogue. He suggested an extension of the mandate of UNMOT for another three months.

The Secretary-General's proposals were welcomed by the members of the Security Council, as stated in a letter of 29 April of its President⁽⁸²⁾

On 30 April⁽⁸³⁾ the Russian Federation informed the Secretary-General that it had agreed to make available up to 500 men to participate in the military contingent of joint forces for the maintenance of peace in Tajikistan, together with Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan.

In statements of 13⁽⁸⁴⁾ and 15 July⁽⁸⁵⁾ Tajikistan said that, on 13 July, anti-government troops, supported by Afghan mujahidin and subunits under the Ministry of Defence of Afghanistan, had attacked the frontier village of Sarigor in the Shurabad district, resulting in loss of life and injury. Terrorist groups had entrenched themselves in Afghanistan, threatening the situation in Tajikistan as it was healing from its civil war and welcoming returning refugees. On 14 July⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Russian Federation protested to Afghanistan about the 13 July attack on Sarigor and the twelfth frontier post of the Moscow border detachment of the Russian border troops in Tajikistan. The Russian Federation regarded that attack launched from Afghan territory as an act of aggression against its troops and against Tajikistan. (See also PART TWO, Chapter III, on Afghanistan-Tajikistan situation.)

On 4 August⁽⁸⁷⁾ Tajikistan said it had just concluded an operation to rout anti-government guerrillas and Afghan mujahidin from one border area, but the build-up of Tajik armed opposition forces and Afghan mujahidin was continuing in Afghanistan along the frontier with Tajikistan.

The heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, at a 7 August meeting, adopted a declaration on the inviolability of frontiers; an announcement of measures for the normalization of the situation on the Tajik-Afghan border; and a message of the five countries to the Secretary-General⁽⁸⁸⁾ in which the Foreign Ministers stated that, recently, specific military operations had been undertaken aimed at breaching the frontier and stirring up armed conflict in Tajikistan. The five countries—in accordance with the Treaty on Collective Security that they had signed within the framework of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), and in implementation of the right of individual and collective self-defence under Article 51 of the United Nations Charter—had decided to provide Tajikistan with emergency supplementary assistance, including military assistance.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). On 16 August⁽⁸⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the efforts of his Special Envoy for Tajikistan and on developments in that country. The Special Envoy arrived at Dushanbe, the capital of Tajikistan, on 14 May, where he held talks with the President and other officials. At Khorog, the regional capital of Gorno-Badakhshan, he had discussions with various groups, including the field commanders of the major groups opposing the central Government. He also visited neighbouring and other concerned States for talks with their leaders.

In outlining the background to the situation, the Secretary-General said the conflict in Tajikistan had resulted in thousands of deaths and more than 400,000 refugees and displaced persons. The political and economic structures of the country were disrupted by the disintegration of the Soviet Union, resulting in a struggle between different clans for a redistribution of power. Some members of the Islamic clergy were active in the opposition to the current Government, much of which was based in northern Afghanistan, where there were approximately 60,000 Tajik refugees. As for the latest developments, the Secretary-General said the most serious one was a large-scale attack on 13 July by fighters who crossed in from Afghanistan and occupied a Russian military border post, resulting in 27 deaths.

A solution to the problems of Tajikistan, as emphasized by the Special Envoy, could come about only through peaceful reconciliation with the widest possible participation of all political groups and regions of the country. Given the escalating crisis on the Tajik-Afghan border, the Secretary-General asked the Special Envoy to visit Kabul for discussions with government leaders there. The situation in Tajikistan contained the seeds of a major threat to peace and security for Central Asia and beyond, and required a concerted effort to persuade the Government and the opposition to accept the need for a political solution and to participate in a negotiating process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 23 August to consider the situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border. It invited Tajikistan, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a Following consultations with the Council members, the President made a statement on their behalf: ⁽⁹⁰⁾

Meeting number. SC 3266.

"The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the continuing violence and armed conflict in Tajikistan, at the escalating crisis along the Tajik-Afghan border, and at the risk of the conflict threatening the peace and stability of Central Asia and beyond.

"The Council stresses the urgent need for the cessation of all hostile actions on the Tajik-Afghan border. It urges the Government of Tajikistan and all opposition groups to accept as soon as possible the need for an overall political solution and to participate in a negotiating process for the early establishment of a cease-fire and eventual national reconciliation with the widest possible participation of all political groups and all the regions of the country. The Council looks to the Government of Tajikistan and all opposition groups to observe basic political rights of all groups in Tajikistan, in order to promote a lasting reconciliation and to achieve full compliance with the principles to which Tajikistan is committed as a participating State in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE).

"The Council reaffirms the necessity to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Tajikistan and all other countries of the region and the inviolability of their borders.

"The Council welcomes efforts by regional parties aimed at stabilizing the situation. In particular, the Council welcomes the 7 August 1993 Moscow summit of heads of State and Government from the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, the Russian Federation, the Republic of Tajikistan and the Republic of Uzbekistan, at the initiative of the Russian Federation, and the 6-7 July 1993 Istanbul summit of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and their decisions aimed at peaceful solutions to the problems on the border between Tajikistan and Afghanistan. Furthermore, it welcomes the efforts of CSCE. The Council recognizes the actions of the Governments of Afghanistan and Tajikistan which created new negotiating bodies aimed at reducing tension along their common border.

"The Council draws attention to the critical humanitarian situation in Tajikistan and the Tajik refugee camps in northern Afghanistan and the need for additional humanitarian assistance. Stabilizing the situation along the Tajik-Afghan border should assist UNHCR in performing its mission. The Council calls upon the Government of Tajikistan to continue to assist in the return and reintegration of all Tajiks who fled this civil war and who wish to return to their homes.

"The Council expresses appreciation for the Secretary-General's report of 16 August 1993 and welcomes the Secretary-General's proposals to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy until 31 October 1993 and to extend the tenure of United Nations officials currently in Tajikistan for a period of three months. In the light of the unstable situation on the Tajik-Afghan border, the Council welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to dispatch his Special Envoy to Afghanistan and other countries in the region. The Council also welcomes the receptivity of the Secretary-General to possible requests from the parties for United Nations assistance in their efforts already under way and requests that he and his Special Envoy maintain close contact with the parties.

"The Council looks forward to receiving periodic reports from the Secretary-General on his Special Envoy's mission and the Secretary-General's recommendations for ways the United Nations may assist in resolving the situation and for defining more clearly the possible ambit of United Nations involvement.

"The Security Council will remain seized of the matter."

Communications (August-October). On 24 August⁽⁹¹⁾ Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan announced an agreement of that date concerning the situation on the Tajik-Afghan border, concluded at a joint meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and the Ministers of Defence of the States members of CIS in Moscow. The agreement provided for the establishment of coalition defence forces in Tajikistan, which was viewed as a regional arrangement concluded in accordance with the purposes and principles of Chapter VIII of the Charter. The text of the agreement and other documents relating to the coalition forces were contained in a 20 October letter⁽⁹²⁾ from the Russian Federation.

On 7 October⁽⁹³⁾ Afghanistan said it had not taken nor would it take armed action against Tajikistan. It assured the Secretary-General of its full cooperation with his Special Envoy. On 25 October, the Secretary-General expressed his appreciation for such assurances.

The establishment in Tajik territory of coalition forces from five States members of CIS was an important step in the de-escalation of the conflict, Tajikistan said on 27 October⁽⁹⁴⁾ There was continued tension along the Tajik-Afghan border, but Tajikistan appreciated the efforts of the Afghan authorities to improve the situation.

In a 10 September letter to the Security Council President⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the outcome of discussions that his Special Envoy had with leaders in Afghanistan, Iran, Pakistan and Tajikistan from 17 to 26 August. All the Afghan leaders stated that the conflict in Tajikistan was a purely internal matter that should be resolved through discussions between the Tajik Government and opposition. The Tajik opposition leaders said they too favoured a peaceful solution through negotiations, but wanted to hold discussions with the Russian Federation before they would consider discussions with the Tajik Government. The Government of Tajikistan indicated that it wanted a peaceful settlement and supported the idea of negotiations with opposition leaders who accepted the existence and structures of the State of Tajikistan, and did not wish to impose an Islamic State on it.

The Secretary-General stated that the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation had expressed the belief that the United Nations and the Russian Federation could cooperate closely together to bring about a political settlement in Tajikistan. The Secretary-General welcomed the Russian initiative and stated that it was clear that a consensus was emerging on the need for a political settlement.

Report of the Secretary-General (November). In a 14 November report⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that recent developments in Tajikistan and the neighbouring region gave grounds both for hope for a political solution of the conflict and for serious concern about the risk of further deterioration of the situation.

Fighting, however, continued to escalate. Cross-border infiltration by armed opposition groups from Afghanistan and fighting between them and government and CIS forces occurred almost on a daily basis, and the armed confrontation inside Tajikistan was intensifying, particularly in Khatlon and Gorno-Badakhshan regions.

The Secretary-General said he hoped that the implementation of the decision to establish CIS coalition peace-keeping forces in Tajikistan could contribute to the achievement of early agreement on political dialogue, cessation of hostilities and national reconciliation.

Concerted efforts were needed to overcome the remaining difficulties and persuade the Government as well as the major opposition groups to start a serious negotiation process without further delay. The Secretary-General stood ready to respond to any reasonable request by the parties and to recommend to the Security Council an international monitoring mechanism to help implement any agreement concluded by them. In those circumstances, he added, he had decided to extend the mandate of his Special Envoy for a further five months, until 31 March 1994.

On 22 December⁽⁹⁷⁾ the Security Council welcomed the Secretary-General's decision, transmitted in a 16 December letter⁽⁹⁸⁾ to appoint Ramiro Piriz-Ballon as Mr. Kittani's successor as Special Envoy for Tajikistan.

Ukraine

Responding to a request by Ukraine⁽⁹⁹⁾ the Security Council convened on 20 July to discuss a complaint by Ukraine regarding the Decree of the Supreme Soviet of the Russian Federation concerning Sevastopol.

In forwarding its request, Ukraine said the Ukrainian city of Sevastopol alleged so-called

"Russian federal status" for the city and entrusted the Government of the Russian Federation with the task of working out a State programme to ensure the city's status. That, Ukraine said, was a flagrant disregard of international law and overt encroachment on its territorial inviolability. Implementation by Russian authorities of the Decree would have led to adequate actions by Ukraine in defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The Russian Federation⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ on 19 July, transmitted a statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs stating that the Decree departed from the policy followed by the President and the Government in upholding Russian interests with regard to matters relating to the Black Sea fleet and in maintaining bases for the Russian Navy on the territory of Ukraine, in the Crimea and Sevastopol. It impeded the already difficult task of reaching a settlement; any problem could be settled only through political dialogue.

After consultations among the Security Council members, the President made a statement on their behalf:⁽¹⁰¹⁾

Meeting number. SC 3256.

"The Security Council has considered the letter dated 13 and 16 July 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Ukraine to the President of the Council, transmitting a statement by the President of Ukraine on the Decree adopted by the Supreme Soviet of the Russian Federation on 9 July 1993 concerning Sevastopol and a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ukraine on the same matter.

"The Security Council has also considered the letter dated 19 July 1993 from the Permanent Representative of the Russian Federation, circulating a statement by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation concerning the aforementioned Decree.

"The Security Council shares the deep concern, and welcomes the position, expressed by the President and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ukraine concerning the Decree of the Supreme Soviet of the Russian Federation. In this context, it also welcomes the position taken by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on behalf of the Government of the Russian Federation.

"The Security Council reaffirms in this connection its commitment to the territorial integrity of Ukraine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. The Security Council recalls that in the Treaty between the Russian Federation and Ukraine, signed at Kiev on 19 November 1990, the High Contracting Parties committed themselves to respect each other's territorial integrity within their currently existing frontiers. The Decree of the Supreme Soviet of the Russian Federation is incompatible with this commitment as well as with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and without effect.

"The Security Council welcomes the efforts of the Presidents and the Governments of the Russian Federation and Ukraine to settle any differences between them by peaceful means and urges that they take all steps to ensure the avoidance of tension.

"The Security Council will remain seized of the matter."

United Nations interim offices

During the year, United Nations interim offices were established in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan for the purpose of coordinating operational development activities of the Organization in those countries (see PART THREE, Chapter II; see also PART ONE, Chapter V, for the funding of those offices).

As reported by the Secretary-General in November⁽⁹⁶⁾ Tajikistan had requested him to establish a United Nations integrated office at Dushanbe to provide advice and assistance in developing the country's economic and social infrastructure, as well as to coordinate the humanitarian efforts of the international community. The Government had also sought United Nations advisory services in the field of human rights and democratic institutions. Pending a decision by the General Assembly, a small team of United Nations officials would continue to perform their functions until the establishment of an integrated office.

Other questions relating to Europe

Cooperation with CSCE

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in November 1993 a report⁽²⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, including a practical division of labour. Thus, CSCE had taken the lead in peacemaking efforts in Nagorny Karabakh, Moldova and South Ossetia, Georgia, while the United Nations had the lead in Tajikistan and Abkhazia, Georgia. In the former Yugoslavia, cooperation had taken place between the two organizations in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and CSCE long-term missions in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina provided the only international presence at the governmental level.

The text of a framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations Secretariat and CSCE, signed on 26 May, was annexed to a letter to the Secretary-General from Sweden⁽³⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/19.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/10 of 28 October 1992 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming its resolution 48/5 of 13 October 1993 on observer status for the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in the General Assembly,

Welcoming also the declaration at the 1992 Helsinki Summit by the heads of State or Government of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of their understanding that the Conference is a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and as such provides an important link between European and global security,

Recalling also the documents of the Conference, in particular the Final Act signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, the Charter of Paris for a New Europe, the Prague Document on Further Development of the Institutions and Structures of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Vienna Document 1992 on Confidence and Security-building Measures, the Helsinki Document 1992 and the Summary of Conclusions of the Third Meeting of the Council of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, held at Stockholm on 14 and 15 December 1992,

Noting the crucial role of the Conference in the efforts to forestall aggression and violence in the Conference area by addressing the root causes of problems and to prevent, manage and settle conflicts peacefully by appropriate means,

Noting also the comprehensive character of the commitments of the Conference and its concept of indivisible security; its role in promoting human rights, the rule of law and democratic values; its increased capabilities in early warning, conflict prevention, crisis management and security cooperation, including the appointment of the High Commissioner on National Minorities of the Conference; planning for peace-keeping operations and initiatives for further enhancing mechanisms for the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Noting further that the new tasks before the Conference are of an evolving character and require enhanced coordination and cooperation with international organizations, in particular with the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the concrete results in the field already yielded as a result of the framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations Secretariat and the Conference, signed on 26 May 1993,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the cooperation between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe,

1. Reiterates the need for enhanced cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe;

2. Endorses the Framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations Secretariat and the Conference;

Chapter V

Middle East

United Nations efforts in 1993 focused on helping to bring about a comprehensive settlement of the complex Middle East conflict, while the parties to the conflict themselves were engaged in an ongoing peace process sponsored by the Russian Federation and the United States and aided by Norway. In its multilateral negotiations, the United Nations acted as a full participant. Those negotiations resulted in the signing, on 13 September in Washington, D.C., of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), a historic breakthrough that was welcomed by many States and international organizations. The handshake at that ceremony between Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat provided a compelling symbol of the possibility of peace between former enemies. Prior to that, on 9 September, Israel and PLO had exchanged letters of mutual recognition, thereby paving the way to further political negotiations. The General Assembly expressed full support for the Declaration of Principles as well as the Agreement between Israel and Jordan on the Common Agenda, signed on 14 September, as an important initial step in achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, and urged all parties to implement the agreements (resolution 48/58).

In addressing the question of Palestine, reaffirmed to be the epicentre of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the Assembly stressed the need for the United Nations to play a more active and expanded role in the current peace process and in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles. It urged Member States to provide economic and technical assistance to Palestinians and underlined that the realization of their legitimate national rights, primarily to self-determination, withdrawal of Israel from Palestinian territory; guaranteeing arrangements for peace and security of all States in the region and resolution of the refugee and settlements problems were elements of a comprehensive peace (48/158 D). The United Nations system also addressed the Palestine question and the policies and practices of Israel in the occupied territory including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, while a variety of United Nations organizations and specialized agencies maintained their programmes of economic and social assistance to Palestinians throughout the year. The Assembly welcomed the results of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace, convened in Washington, D.C., in October, and the Secretary-General's establishment in September of a high-level United Nations task force to support the economic and social development of the Palestinian people. It also urged Member States to provide economic, financial and technical assistance to the Palestinians during the interim period (48/58).

The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights) continued to press for the implementation of its original (1976) recommendations—on Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Palestinian territory and on the rights of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine.

To help keep the region's latent volatility in check, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and that of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in the Golan Heights, so that both peace-keeping forces remained operative during the year.

Israel's policies and practices in the Arab territories it occupied were monitored constantly by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices), whose findings in 1993 reflected a critically tense situation and a high level of violence engendered by the uprising and Israel's suppression of it by military force and collective punishment, including the closure of the territories in March and mass deportations of Palestinians despite political breakthroughs at the negotiation table between Israel and PLO. The refusal by Israel to ensure the safe and immediate return, as demanded by the Security Council in resolution 799(1992), of the 415 Palestinians whom Israel had deported in December 1992 to Marj al Zahour in southern Lebanon, challenged, in the Secretary-General's view, the Council's authority. It was not until 15 December 1993 that Israel heeded the Council's demand and allowed the return of all deportees.

The Commission on Human Rights reiterated the Palestinians' right to self-determination and called on Israel to desist from human rights violations in the territories.

The United Nations Relief Works and Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continued to provide a wide-ranging programme of education, health, relief and social services for the Palestine refugees. It appealed for increased contributions from Governments to meet the anticipated needs of a refugee population of 2.8 million (48/40 A). By a series of resolutions, the Assembly addressed specific aspects of the refugee problem.

The Economic and Social Council deplored Israel's confiscation of land, appropriation of water resources and depletion of other economic resources, (1993/52), while the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of Palestinians to their natural and all other economic resources and regarded any infringement thereof as illegal (48/212).

Middle East peace process

Multilateral negotiations among Israel, Arab countries and other States, in which the United Nations acted as a full participant and which were sponsored by the Russian Federation and the United States and assisted by Norway, as well as bilateral talks between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), resulted in the signing, on 13 September in Washington, D.C., of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government between Israel and PLO (see below). In December, the General Assembly, by adopting resolution 48/58, sponsored by 110 nations, welcomed the peace process started in 1991 at Madrid⁽¹⁾ Spain, and supported the subsequent bilateral negotiations. It expressed full support for the achievements of that process thus far, in particular the Declaration of Principles and the Agreement between Israel and Jordan on the Common Agenda, which constituted an important initial step in achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. The Assembly urged all parties to implement the agreements reached and stressed the need to achieve rapid progress on the other tracks of the Arab-Israeli negotiations. Welcoming the results of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace (Washington, D.C., 1 October) and the establishment of a high-level United Nations task force to support the economic and social development of the Palestinian people, it urged Member States to provide economic and other assistance to Palestinians during the interim period. It finally considered that an active United Nations role in the Middle East peace process and in assisting in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles could make a positive contribution.

Despite the large number of sponsors of the text, reflecting almost universal support for the Middle East peace process, it proved impossible to reach consensus on it, owing to the lack of a reference to Security Council resolution 425(1978) relating to Lebanon.

Effective January 1993, Chinmaya Rajaninath Gharekhan (India), as the Secretary-General's Special Representative, coordinated the role of the United Nations in the working groups on arms control and regional security, economic and regional development, environment, refugees and water, having been appointed in November 1992⁽²⁾ after the United Nations was invited to be a full participant in the multilateral negotiations following the Madrid Peace Conference.

Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements between Israel and PLO

Israel and PLO signed, on 13 September in Washington, D.C., the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, which emanated from previous bilateral and multilateral negotiations. Prior to that, on 9 September, the two parties had exchanged letters of mutual recognition, whereby PLO recognized the right of Israel to exist in peace and security, accepted Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and renounced terrorism and violence, while Israel recognized PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people. The signed Declaration, consisting of 17 articles, 4 annexes and agreed minutes, was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 8 October⁽³⁾ by the Russian Federation and the United States, co-sponsors of the peace process. The Declaration, which was to enter into force one month after its signing, pertained to the aim of the negotiations (Article I), the framework for the interim period (II), elections (III), jurisdiction (IV), the transitional period and permanent status negotiations (V), the preparatory transfer of powers and responsibilities (VI), an interim agreement (VII), public order and security (VIII), laws and military orders (IX), a joint Israeli-Palestinian Liaison Committee (X), Israeli-Palestinian cooperation in economic fields (XI), liaison and cooperation with Jordan and Egypt (XII), the redeployment of Israeli forces (XIII), Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and Jericho area (XIV), the resolution of disputes (XV), Israeli-Palestinian cooperation concerning regional programmes (XVI) and miscellaneous provisions (XVII). Attached to the Declaration were protocols on the mode and conditions of elections (Annex I), on withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Gaza Strip and Jericho area (II), on Israeli-Palestinian cooperation in economic and development programmes (III), and on Israeli-Palestinian cooperation concerning regional development programmes (IV).

By the Declaration, Israel and PLO agreed that it was time to recognize their mutual legitimate and political rights, to strive to live in peaceful coexistence and mutual dignity and security and to achieve a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement and reconciliation through the agreed political process. According to the text, the aim of the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations within the current Middle East peace process was to establish a Palestinian Interim Self-Government Authority, as proposed by PLO in 1992,⁽⁴⁾ as the elected Council for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza, for a transitional period of not more than five years, leading to a permanent settlement based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967)⁽⁵⁾ and 338(1973).⁽⁶⁾ It was understood that the interim arrangements were an integral part of the peace process and that the permanent status negotiations would lead to the implementation of those resolutions.

In order that the Palestinian people in the West Bank and Gaza might govern themselves according to democratic principles, direct, free and general political elections would be held for the Palestinian Council not later than nine months after the Declaration's entry into force under agreed supervision and international observation, with the Palestinian police ensuring public order. The Council's jurisdiction would cover West Bank and Gaza territory, except for issues to be negotiated in the permanent status negotiations. The two sides viewed the West Bank and Gaza as a single territorial unit, whose integrity was to be preserved during the interim period. The five-year transitional period would begin upon Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza and Jericho areas. Permanent status negotiations between Israel and Palestinian representatives were to commence as soon as possible, but not later than the third year of the interim period, and were to cover remaining issues, including Jerusalem, refugees, settlements, security arrangements, borders, and relations and cooperation with other neighbours.

The agreement provided that upon the entry into force of the Declaration and Israeli withdrawal, authority would be transferred from the Israeli military government and its Civil Administration to the Palestinians authorized for that task until the inauguration of the Palestinian Council. With a view to promoting economic development, authority would also be transferred to the Palestinians in the spheres of education and culture, health, social welfare, direct taxation and tourism. The Palestinian side was further to begin to build a Palestinian police force. Not later than the eve of elections for the Council, Israeli forces in the West Bank and Gaza were to be redeployed outside populated areas, in addition to the military withdrawal (see below).

An interim agreement was to be negotiated specifying the structure of the Council, the number of its members, the transfer of powers to it from Israel, its executive and legislative authorities and independent Palestinian judicial organs. In order to promote economic growth, the Council would establish a Palestinian Electricity Authority, a Gaza Sea Port Authority, a Palestinian Development Bank, a Palestinian Export Promotion Board, a Palestinian Environmental Authority, a Palestinian Land Authority, a Palestinian Water Administration Authority, and any other authorities agreed upon. After the Council's inauguration, the Israeli Civil Administration would be dissolved and its military government withdrawn. The Council was charged with establishing a strong police force to guarantee public order and internal security for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza, while Israel was to continue to bear the responsibility of defending against external threats, as well as for the overall security of Israelis.

In order to ensure the smooth implementation of the Declaration and subsequent agreements pertaining to the interim period, a Joint Israeli-Palestinian Liaison Committee was to be established to deal with issues requiring coordination, other issues of common interest and disputes. The Joint Liaison Committee was also to resolve disputes arising out of the Declaration's application or interpretation. Any disputes not settled through conciliation would be addressed by an Arbitration Committee to be established by the parties. The parties agreed to invite Egypt and Jordan to participate in establishing further liaison and cooperation arrangements between Israeli and Palestinian representatives on the one hand, and Egypt and Jordan on the other, including the constitution of a Continuing Committee which would decide by agreement on the modalities of admitting persons displaced from the West Bank and Gaza in 1967, together with measures necessary to prevent disruption and disorder. In addition, an Israeli-Palestinian Economic Cooperation Committee was envisaged to develop and implement economic and regional development programmes as provided for in Annexes III and IV to the Declaration.

The Protocol on the Mode and Conditions of Elections provided Palestinians living in Jerusalem with the right to participate in the election process, while not prejudicing the future status of those registered as displaced on 4 June 1967 as a result of their being unable to participate in elections owing to practical considerations. In accordance with the Protocol on Withdrawal of Israeli Forces from the Gaza Strip and Jericho Area, the two sides would conclude and sign an agreement on such withdrawal within two months of the Declaration's entry into force. Israel would implement an accelerated and scheduled withdrawal immediately after signing the agreement and complete it within four months. The agreement would include arrangements for a smooth and peaceful transfer of authority from the Israeli military government and its Civilian Administration to Palestinian representatives; the structure, powers and responsibilities of the Palestinian authorities in the two areas except for matters relating to external security, settlements, Israeli citizens and foreign relations; and arrangements for the assumption of internal security and public order by a Palestinian police force consisting of locally recruited officers and officers recruited from abroad holding Jordanian passports or Palestinian documents issued by Egypt. The withdrawal agreement would also provide for a temporary international or foreign presence; establishment of a joint Palestinian-Israeli Coordination and Cooperation Committee for mutual security purposes; an economic development and stabilization programme, including an emergency fund, to encourage foreign investment and financial and economic support; and safe passage for persons and transportation between Gaza and Jericho.

The Protocol on Israeli-Palestinian Cooperation in Economic and Development Programmes set out terms of reference for establishment of an Israeli-Palestinian Continuing Committee for Economic Cooperation, focusing on water, electricity, energy, finance, transport and communications, trade, industry, labour relations and social welfare issues, human resource development and cooperation, environmental protection, and communications and media. The Protocol on Israeli-Palestinian Cooperation concerning Regional Development Programmes outlined a two-part development programme for the region, including an economic development programme for the West Bank and Gaza and a regional economic development programme, to be initiated by the seven most powerful industrialized nations (Group of Seven). The West Bank and Gaza programme would deal with social rehabilitation, including housing and construction; small and medium business development; infrastructure development; and human resources. The regional programme might address the establishment of a Middle East Development Fund, to be followed by a Middle East Development Bank; a joint Israeli-Palestinian-Jordanian plan for coordinated exploitation of the Dead Sea area; the Mediterranean Sea-Dead Sea Canal; desalinization and water development; a regional plan for agricultural development and the prevention of desertification; interconnection of electricity grids; transfer, distribution and industrial exploitation of gas, oil and other energy resources; and a regional tourism, transportation and telecommunications development plan.

Subsequent to the signing of the Declaration, Israel and Jordan agreed on 14 September in Washington, D.C., to a Common Agenda which searched for steps to arrive at a state of peace based on resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) in all their aspects, and regulated matters in the fields of security, water, refugees and displaced persons and borders, and explored potentials of future bilateral cooperation in natural and human resources, infrastructure and economic areas, including tourism.

By a decision taken on 4 November at Tunis, Tunisia, the PLO Executive Committee established the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Construction, which was to define the priorities of development projects, as well as their implementation, control and management.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

During the General Assembly's consideration of the Middle East situation in December, Israel stated that the political breakthroughs represented by the signing of the Camp David Accords in 1978,⁽⁷⁾ the Declaration of Principles and the Common Agenda must be accompanied by economic growth and development in order to build stable peace. Economic and human progress were twin pillars supporting the political achievements.

Israel noted that 46 countries and organizations had come together at the Conference to Support Middle East Peace (Washington, DC., 1 October), pledging $2 billion over five years to finance social and economic development in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and that the United Nations had established a high-level task force to achieve the same goal. Israel further noted that it was making progress with the Palestinians and 13 other Arab delegations in the multilateral negotiations, thus creating opportunities for regional cooperation. Forty-seven countries and international organizations, including the United Nations, were participating in those multilateral talks, and five working groups were discussing refugees, arms control, regional economic cooperation, water and environment. For the first time, Israel went on to say, all States participating in the talks on regional economic development had agreed on a plan of action, which included 35 projects, workshops and studies in diverse areas. Also for the first time in the multilateral negotiations, talks about the Middle East were being held in the Middle East.

Israel said it sought a quiet and secure border with Lebanon, on which it had no territorial claims. It looked forward to a peace treaty and hoped that the Lebanese Government would assert its sovereignty and disarm those who used its land as a base for attacks on Israel. It called upon King Hussein of Jordan to sign a peace treaty with it and expressed desire for a comprehensive peace, based on individual treaties with the Gulf States, the North African States and all other Arab and Muslim countries. It further called on its negotiating partners to lay down economic weapons and end the Arab boycott, which was an obstacle to peace, impeding prosperity and hurting all societies in the Middle East. Science, education, health and technology would advance as countries of the region diverted human energies and resources away from conflict and shifted funds from the military to the civilian sector.

Jordan termed the Israeli-Palestinian Declaration of Principles the first tangible step towards peace. Progress on the Israeli-Jordanian, Israeli-Lebanese and Israeli-Syrian talks would ensure movement towards the comprehensive peace which the countries of the region and the international community had longed for as a prelude to lasting regional peace and security. The multilateral track was no less important than the bilateral track, as it involved 13 Arab States and Israel, together with the two co-sponsors of the peace process—the Russian Federation and the United States—in addition to other participants from outside the region, as well as the United Nations and the World Bank. So far, that track had yielded results which went beyond the exchange of abstract ideas to cover tangible matters, such as feasibility studies, training programmes and the establishment of a joint American-Israeli-Jordanian committee. Jordan maintained that the United Nations had a still more vital and larger role to play along two lines: it should continue acting as the baseline of international legality and conscience in its reaffirmation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967)⁽⁵⁾ and 338(1973)⁽⁶⁾ and all other relevant resolutions, and should explore ways to reinforce the two peace camps on the Arab and Israeli sides by providing support and assistance. The United Nations must continue to play an active role until the protagonists reach the stage of implementing resolution 242(1967)⁽⁵⁾ and the Palestinians were able to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination on their national territory and establish an independent State of their own with Arab Al-Quds as its capital.

In the continuing debate, Lebanon said it understood that the Declaration of Principles would lead to the transfer from Israel to the Palestinians of authority over East Jerusalem and all of the cities, towns and villages of the West Bank and Gaza. Equally, it emphasized that the signing of the agreement in Washington would not achieve genuine peace unless there was substantive progress on the Lebanese and Syrian tracks of the Arab-Israeli negotiations, leading to full Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon and the Golan Heights. It stressed the need for the United Nations to play a more active role in the peace process, the success of which, it said, was dependent on implementing resolutions 242(1967), 338(1973) and 425(1978).⁽⁸⁾ Lebanon expressed alarm at what it called Israel's opposition to internationally recognized principles central to the achievement of a comprehensive peace settlement, over which discussion had been postponed, and which included Israeli withdrawal from all occupied territory, including Jerusalem, the dismantling of all settlements in those lands and the repatriation of Palestinian refugees.

On 14 December, Norway, introducing the draft resolution on the Middle East peace process⁽⁹⁾ noted that paragraph 4 stressed the need for achieving rapid progress on the other tracks of the Arab-Israeli negotiations, those between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, and between Israel and Lebanon. With regard to the latter, it said that, though not mentioned in the text, resolution 425(1978) would be an important point of reference. Norway introduced the draft together with the Russian Federation and the United States on behalf of 87 additional sponsors⁽¹⁰⁾ who were joined later by 20 others.

The Russian Federation underlined that, besides the mutual recognition by Israel and PLO and their signing of the Declaration of Principles, no less vital for a comprehensive and lasting settlement was the task of spurring talks between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and Lebanon. Success required stalwart diplomatic efforts through the framework defined by the Madrid process. The goals for settling the key problems, especially in southern Lebanon, were set out in resolution 425(1978). The Russian Federation was convinced that adoption of what it called the constructive, balanced and non-confrontational draft would open a new page in the history of United Nations consideration of the situation in the Middle East and enable the Organization to be more fully included in the agreements.

According to the United States, the draft allowed the Assembly to record for the first time its support for the Middle East peace process inaugurated at Madrid and to speak, after decades of division and discord, with one voice about the imperative of a Middle East peace.

Before voting on the draft, Lebanon pointed out that it had not been a party to the wars of 1967 and 1973 and, as a result, neither resolutions 242(1967) or 338(1973) nor the "land for peace" formula was applicable to it. Therefore, resolution 425(1978) must be mentioned in the text if the Assembly was seriously to consider it as a show of support for the Madrid Conference and subsequent negotiations. Lebanon said that it and the entire Arab Group had worked hard to impress on the sponsors the imperative of including a reference to resolution 425(1978), without which the text could be misconstrued to mean that Lebanon had participated in the Madrid Conference and subsequent negotiations on the basis of Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). Although it was committed to continuing the bilateral negotiations based on all three resolutions, Lebanon would refrain from entering into the multilateral talks until there was real progress in the bilateral negotiations.

Similarly, the Syrian Arab Republic said it could not agree to a text on the Middle East peace process that failed to make reference to resolution 425(1978) concerning Lebanon, which had participated in the Madrid Conference and subsequent bilateral talks on the basis of that resolution.

On 14 December 1993, the Assembly adopted resolution 48/58 by recorded vote.

Proposed peace conference under UN auspices

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a progress report on 19 November 1993⁽¹²⁾ on his continuing efforts and developments in regard to convening an international peace conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices, which was first endorsed by the Assembly in 1983.⁽¹³⁾ The report stated that no reply had been received from the Security Council to his request for its views. However, Israel and PLO had communicated their positions in response to a note verbale of 14 September seeking information on steps taken to implement the 1992 resolution.

In its note of 12 October, Israel said it had long advocated direct negotiations as the only framework to advance peace in the Middle East, an approach vindicated by the negotiations currently taking place in the framework of the Madrid peace process and recent achievements in the Israeli-Palestinian and Israeli-Jordanian talks. The 1992 resolution on the conference ran counter to the principle of direct negotiations, Israel continued, stating that while the resolution referred to Security Council resolutions 242(1967)⁽⁵⁾ and 338(1973),⁽⁶⁾ it also offered a series of principles that prejudged and even predetermined the outcome of those negotiations. Israel said that the resolution was outdated and out of touch with reality, and that it continued to oppose it and believed such a text should not be adopted again by the Assembly in 1993.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine stated in his note of 21 October that the most significant development emanating from the peace process, the recent signing of the Declaration of Principles between Israel and PLO containing agreement on mutual recognition, was an important and positive step towards a comprehensive, just and lasting peace. The most crucial elements yet to be negotiated included the final status of Jerusalem, the illegal settlements, the rights of Palestinian refugees and border questions. Similar progress on other tracks of the peace process between the concerned Arab States and Israel was necessary for the process to proceed smoothly. PLO strongly stressed the need for the United Nations to play a more active and expanded role in the peace process and called for the Organization's full engagement in it, as well as in the provision of assistance to Palestinians in their efforts to build their new life and own authority and effectively to implement the Declaration. It believed that the Assembly should reaffirm once more the principles for achieving a comprehensive peace and emphasized the permanent responsibility of the United Nations regarding the question of Palestine until its resolution in all aspects. PLO stood ready to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General to carry out his efforts to promote peace, as called for in the 1992 Assembly resolution, in an effective and successful manner.

The Secretary-General observed that the United Nations had always supported a comprehensive, just and lasting peace based on resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), taking into account the legitimate political rights of the Palestinians, including self-determination. In that connection, he welcomed the Declaration, hoping that it would lead to a peace acceptable to all parties concerned. The United Nations stood ready to support the peace process and had, over the past year, participated actively in the multilateral working groups established in the framework of the Madrid Conference in 1991.⁽¹⁾ To help sustain the momentum of the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations and in an effort to support the implementation of the Declaration of Principles, the United Nations had begun to enhance its economic and social assistance to the West Bank and Gaza, which would intensify in the months ahead.

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

Three peace-keeping operations remained in place in the region: two peace-keeping forces—the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) (see below, under "Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic") and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) (see below, under "Lebanon")—and an observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). Headquartered at Jerusalem, with liaison offices at Amman, Jordan, and Beirut, Lebanon, UNTSO's 57 unarmed military observers continued to assist UNDOF and UNIFIL in performing their tasks. They manned five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line and operated four mobile teams in the Israeli-controlled section of the UNIFIL area. Two observers were assigned to UNIFIL headquarters.

Palestine question

During 1993, the question of Palestine continued to be of undiminishing concern to the General Assembly, which, aware of the mutual recognition between Israel and PLO and the signing between the two parties of the Declaration of Principles, reaffirmed the need to achieve a peaceful settlement. Following its consideration of the 1993 report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the Assembly in December adopted four resolutions addressing the question.

By resolution 48/158 D, the Assembly stressed the need for the United Nations to play a more active and expanded role in the current peace process and in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles; urged Member States to provide economic and technical assistance to the Palestinian people; and reaffirmed the following principles for the achievement of a final settlement and comprehensive peace: realization of the legitimate national rights of Palestinians, primarily to self-determination; withdrawal of Israel from Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from other occupied Arab territories; guaranteeing arrangements for peace and security of all States in the region within secure and internationally recognized boundaries; and resolution of the problem of the Palestine refugees and the illegal Israeli settlements. By adopting resolution 48/158 A, it endorsed the Committee's recommendations on the Palestine question and, requesting it to keep the situation under review, to make suggestions to it and the Security Council, as appropriate. It once again requested resources for the Division for Palestinian Rights, as well as continued cooperation with it (48/158 B); and further requested the Department of Public Information (DPI) to continue its special information programme on the question during the 1994-1995 biennium (48/158 C). It again determined that Israel's 1980 decision⁽¹⁾ to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on Jerusalem was illegal and therefore null and void; and deplored the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980)⁽²⁾ (48/59 A).

Having reviewed the assistance provided by the United Nations system to Palestinians throughout the year, the Assembly (48/213) and the Economic and Social Council (1993/78) appealed for increased international assistance to the Palestinian people, in cooperation with PLO. The Assembly urged States to open their markets to exports from the West Bank and Gaza on the most favourable terms.

In related actions, the Assembly demanded that Israel acknowledge the de jure applicability of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, and to comply scrupulously with that Convention. It determined that all measures and actions taken by Israel with respect to those territories in violation of the Convention were illegal and without validity, demanding that it desist forthwith from any such actions; called on Israel to respect all fundamental freedoms of Palestinians, including education; and reaffirmed that the Israeli settlements in the above territories were illegal and an obstacle to peace (see below, under "Territories occupied by Israel"). The Assembly again proposed the establishment of a university "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees and called on Israel to remove the hindrances it had put in the way of its establishment (see below, under "Palestine refugees").

On 29 November, the Committee on Palestinian rights organized at the United Nations Headquarters and Offices at Geneva and Vienna observances of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian people.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. As mandated by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽³⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights, established in 1975,⁽⁴⁾ continued to observe developments in the Israeli-occupied territories and actions by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. It brought such actions—including Israeli settlement activities, Israeli exploitation of Arab-owned land and human rights violations such as deportations and other matters affecting Palestinian rights—to the attention of the Assembly and the Security Council⁽⁵⁾ It continued to press for the implementation of its original (1976) recommendations⁽⁶⁾—on Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Palestinian territory and on the rights of Palestinians to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine. The Committee considered that the principled position adopted by the international community on the Palestine question had begun to bear fruit due to the shift from confrontation to cooperation and a renewed determination to resolve long-standing regional conflicts.

The Committee submitted a report on its activities to the Assembly in November 1993,⁽⁷⁾ reiterating its invitation to all Member States and Permanent Observers, as well as PLO, to participate as observers in its work. It also re-established its Working Group to assist in the preparation and expedition of its work.

The Committee and, under its guidance, the Division for Palestinian Rights, continued to expand cooperation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in order to promote awareness of the Palestine question and create conditions favourable for the implementation of its recommendations. To that end, the Committee carried out its approved programme of regional NGO symposia and seminars for 1993. It affirmed the importance of the contribution of the NGO community to international efforts on behalf of the Palestinian people and considered that its support would become even more necessary during the future transition period.

The Committee decided to devote its seminar for the European region to assistance to the Palestinian people (see below under "Assistance to Palestinians"). The North American regional seminar (New York, 28 and 29 June), the theme of which was priorities for United Nations action, discussed the United Nations and the implementation of international human rights instruments and relevant Security Council resolutions; the role of the Organization in promoting economic development in the occupied Palestinian territories; and the United Nations and the peace process. It was followed immediately by an NGO symposium, which included several workshops and four panels: building for peace and Palestine: priorities for the second decade of the NGO movement; rights, resources, refugees: the need for protection; ending the occupation: a prelude to peace and security; and NGO priorities for the second decade. The African regional seminar (Dakar, Senegal, 30 August-3 September) was held jointly with an NGO Symposium and addressed Africa, the Middle East, and the question of Palestine. Discussions topics were: towards a just solution of the Palestine question; building peace in Jerusalem—the holy city of three religions; towards self-determination and statehood; and the need to revive the economy in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. Two additional workshops for NGOs dealt with action by African NGOs to promote efforts to end Israel's violation of human rights of Palestinians; and mobilization and networking by NGOs to promote a just, comprehensive and lasting solution to the Palestine question. The European regional NGO symposium (Vienna, 23 and 24 August) was on the Middle East peace process: Palestinian rights and development—a challenge to Europe. It was immediately followed by an international NGO meeting (25-27 August), the theme of which was renewing the NGO commitment to Palestinian national and human rights.

In order to strengthen its programme of research, monitoring and publications, the Division for Palestinian Rights during 1993 continued work on the establishment of a computer-based United Nations information system on the question of Palestine (UNISPAL), as requested by the Committee and endorsed by the Assembly in 1992.⁽⁸⁾ The Committee requested that provision for further development of the system be made in the 1994-1995 budget, stressing the importance and usefulness of UNISPAL for the work of the Committee, the United Nations and the international community.

In its 1993 recommendations, the Committee welcomed the peace process started at Madrid in 1991,⁽⁹⁾ the exchange of letters of mutual recognition between Israel and PLO and the subsequent signing by the two sides of the Declaration of Principles as important steps towards a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967)⁽¹⁰⁾ and 338-

(1973).⁽¹¹⁾ It called for intensified international support and assistance to Palestinians, with PLO as its recognized leadership, to ensure the successful implementation of the agreements reached. It further stressed the need for full United Nations engagement in the peace process and in building the forthcoming Palestinian National Authority, as well as providing assistance to Palestinians in all fields.

The Committee considered that the following priority tasks required immediate and sustained attention in its future programme of work: promoting support for the ongoing peace process and for the Declaration of Principles, and monitoring closely the situation to promote effective implementation of the agreements reached and full realization of Palestinian rights; promoting intensified assistance to the Palestinian people by the whole United Nations system and other donors, for immediate relief and nation-building; and encouraging constructive debate of the major issues to be negotiated at a later stage with a view to promoting a final settlement based on international legitimacy. Finally, it attached greatest importance to the intensified mobilization of NGOs throughout the transitional period to monitor developments, promote the full exercise of Palestinian rights in accordance with United Nations resolutions and provide the assistance needed for institution-building.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Addressing the question of Palestine before the General Assembly in November, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights stated that the Declaration of Principles had opened a new chapter in the long history of that question, symbolized by the handshake between Israeli Prime Minister Rabin and PLO Chairman Arafat. The Committee supported those developments and strongly urged the parties to continue their efforts so as to ensure that the process led to a definitive peace, especially since many sensitive aspects relating to implementing the Declaration, such as Israeli withdrawal, permanent status arrangements regarding Jerusalem, refugees, settlements, security arrangements, borders and other issues remained to be negotiated. He stressed once again the need for full United Nations engagement in the peace process and in building the national Palestinian institutions as well as in providing broad assistance, in which regard he welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to develop a concerted United Nations response to support implementation of the Declaration.

The Observer of Palestine noted that the Declaration left for negotiations at a later stage issues of paramount importance, such as Al-Quds, settlements, refugees and boundaries. He emphasized that their solution and form of final settlement must be based fully on international legality, in particular on relevant Security Council and Assembly resolutions that conformed to international law in addition to providing a pragmatic and practicable solution. The Security Council in particular had a clear position on Israeli settlements, having in 1980⁽¹²⁾ declared them to be a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and a serious obstruction to peace, and calling for their dismantlement. He stressed that the settlements continued to be illegal regardless of any political developments.

Israel told the Assembly that, far from the limelight, Israeli-Palestinian committees were working hard to negotiate security arrangements and modalities of transferring authority in Gaza and Jericho. The Economic Cooperation Committee had begun its work in Paris, guided by the principles of reciprocity, equity and fair relationships, and exploring joint action in water, energy, industry and infrastructure, on which issues specific working groups were established. Commending activities of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), Israel appealed to the Secretary-General to double their budgets and the efforts of the United Nations.

Following consideration of the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted four resolutions on the question of Palestine, all by recorded vote. Resolution 48/158 D reaffirmed the need for a peaceful settlement of that question.

Peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, the most recent of which was resolution 47/64 D of 11 December 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 November 1993,

Stressing that achieving a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine, will constitute a significant contribution to international peace and security,

Noting the convening at Madrid, on 30 October 1991, of the Peace Conference on the Middle East and the subsequent bilateral negotiations, as well as meetings of the multilateral working groups,

Noting also that the United Nations has participated as a full, extraregional participant in the work of the multilateral working groups,

Aware of the mutual recognition between the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, as the representative of the Palestinian people, and the signing between the two parties of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, as well as their subsequent negotiations,

Welcoming the convening of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace in Washington, D.C., on 1 October 1993,

1. Reaffirms the need to achieve a peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in all its aspects;

2. Expresses its support for the ongoing peace process, which began in Madrid, and the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, and expresses the hope that the process will lead to the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

3. Stresses the need for the United Nations to play a more active and expanded role in the current peace process and in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles;

4. Urges Member States to provide economic and technical assistance to the Palestinian people;

5. Also stresses the upcoming negotiations on the final settlement, and reaffirms the following principles for the achievement of a final settlement and comprehensive peace:

(a) The realization of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people, primarily the right to self-determination;

(b) The withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories;

(c) Guaranteeing arrangements for peace and security of all States in the region, including those named in resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, within secure and internationally recognized boundaries;

(d) Resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and subsequent relevant resolutions;

(e) Resolving the problem of the Israeli settlements, which are illegal and an obstacle to peace, in conformity with relevant United Nations resolutions;

(f) Guaranteeing freedom of access to Holy Places and religious buildings and sites;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, for the promotion of peace in the region and to submit progress reports on developments in this matter.

General Assembly resolution 48/158 D

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 92-5-51 (recorded vote)

12-nation draft (A/48/L.44 & Add.1); agenda item 35.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Comoros, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Malaysia, Malta, Pakistan, Senegal, Tunisia, Yemen.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: plenary 65, 66, 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Gambia, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Dominican Republic, Israel, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Bulgaria, Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

In explanation of its vote, Israel asserted that the principles contained in the resolution prejudged and even predetermined the outcome of the ongoing negotiations, thus contradicting itself. On the one hand, the text claimed to support the peace process begun in Madrid, while on the other, it ignored the basic principle of direct negotiations without preconditions on which that very process was based. Israel had long advocated direct negotiations as the only framework for advancing Middle East peace, and recent achievements vindicated that approach. Any attempt to internationalize the issues or to perpetuate the existence of bodies which did so would lead nowhere.

The United States said that the resolution was greatly improved over its predecessor texts that called for convening an international peace conference on the Middle East; however, it spoke conclusively to issues under direct negotiation between the parties. Instead, the Assembly should support those negotiations without prejudice in order for all the parties to resolve their differences directly and avoid focusing on divisive and polarizing statements.

The Russian Federation regretted that the text had retained the traditional array of principles for a Middle East settlement, which, it said, were an attempt to predetermine the bilateral Arab-Israeli negotiations and could complicate their course.

A draft resolution⁽¹³⁾ on the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people, which was tabled under the agenda item on the Palestine question, was withdrawn by its sponsors (Afghanistan, Cuba, Indonesia, Jordan, Malaysia, Malta, Senegal, "Tunisia and Yemen"). The text condemned those Israeli policies and practices which violated the human rights of Palestinians in the occupied territories, and requested the Security Council to examine with urgency the situation in the territories with a view to considering measures needed to provide international protection to Palestinian civilians.

By adopting resolution 48/158 A, the Assembly requested the Committee on Palestinian rights to keep under review the situation relating to the Palestine question.

A fourth resolution, 48/158 C, concerned United Nations information activities on the Palestine question.

Public information activities

The Committee on Palestinian rights⁽⁷⁾ followed up on the implementation of a 1992 General Assembly request⁽¹⁴⁾ that DPI continue its 1992-1993 special information programme on the Palestine question, with emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America.

DPI in 1993 accordingly continued to provide press coverage of all United Nations meetings relevant to the question, including those of the Security Council and the Committee, and issued 47 press releases in English and 43 in French containing statements by the Secretary-General relating to it and the situation in the occupied Arab territories. Ongoing coverage of United Nations activities on the question was provided by the United Nations Information Centres, which produced and distributed newsletters, press releases and television news programmes and regularly briefed media representatives. The UN Chronicle continued to publish stories relating to Palestinian issues, while the Department's Public Inquiries Unit responded to 324 information requests on the topic. The issue was also included in the presentation made during the guided tour of Headquarters, and the Group Programme and Community Liaison Unit of DPI arranged briefings on Palestine.

The Department continued to distribute its publications, including the booklet Building for Peace in the Middle East: An Israeli-Palestinian Dialogue and a revised edition of For the Rights of Palestinians: The Work of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. Cooperation with the French production company Point du Jour resulted in the production of a two-hour video documentary on the history of Palestine. DPI was currently editing a 30-minute version of that documentary to highlight United Nations involvement, as well as the struggle of Palestinians to achieve their national rights. It further provided feature coverage of various aspects of the question in its weekly radio news magazines, highlighting in particular the deportation of Palestinians. It produced feature programmes on assistance to the Palestinian people and on international protection of Palestinian refugees in Arabic, Bangla, English, French, Hindi, Indonesian, Kiswahili, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Urdu.

In cooperation with Greece, DPI sponsored an encounter for Greek journalists (Athens, 27 and 28 April) on the theme of Jerusalem: visions of reconciliation, that brought together 11 international expert panellists. The Department sponsored an international encounter for European journalists (London, 9-11 June) in cooperation with the United Kingdom and supported by The Guardian on promoting a culture for peace in the Middle East. Based on those encounters, DPI initiated the production of three publications.

Among its recommendations, the Committee considered that the bulletins published by the Division for Palestinian rights should be expanded and restructured, and that the Division's studies, information notes, reports and other material should focus specifically on the main issues addressed by the Committee to enhance their usefulness. It believed that the information work of the United Nations related to the Palestine question would become even more important. Thus, the information programme should follow and reflect the realities and experiences of Palestinians, provide assistance to Palestinian media development and continue disseminating information about the just cause of the Palestinian people, in addition to supporting dialogue in the effort to build peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1993, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/158 C by recorded vote.

Jerusalem

In October 1993,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report containing the replies of two Member States to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1992 resolution of the General Assembly deploring the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem and calling on them to abide by the relevant United Nations resolutions.⁽¹⁶⁾ Of those States, Ecuador pointed out that it maintained its embassy at Tel Aviv. Ghana stated that, since it had severed all relations with Israel in 1975, the resolution did not apply to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1993, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/59 A by recorded vote.

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, 45/83 C of 13 December 1990, 46/82 B of 16 December 1991 and 47/63 B of 11 December 1992, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called

"Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 25 October 1993,

1. Determines that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Following the vote, the United States emphasized that, after the breakthroughs that changed traditional approaches to the Arab-Israeli conflict, it was important to avoid focusing on divisive or polarizing statements. It was convinced that Jerusalem must remain undivided, but that its final status should be decided through negotiations. Instead of addressing the issue in the manner of this resolution, the United States said that the parties had agreed that Jerusalem would be considered in the final status negotiations.

Assistance to Palestinians

In an effort to support the momentum of the Israeli-Palestinian peace talks, and in response to requests received from Israel and PLO, the Secretary-General on 8 September established a high-level United Nations task force on economic and social development of the Gaza Strip and Jericho. Members of the task force included UNDP Administrator James G. Speth, United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) Executive Director James Grant, UNRWA Commissioner-General Imer Turkmen, Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs Jan Eliasson, Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs James Jonah and Special Political Adviser to the Secretary-General Chinmaya Rajaninath Gharekhan. The priorities of the task force, whose work commenced immediately, were to establish an integrated United Nations approach towards development in Gaza and Jericho, with a particular focus on Gaza, where needs were greatest; to coordinate with other institutions, agencies and NGOs involved in ongoing development projects; and to mobilize international financial support.

Overall, the United Nations system in 1993 expanded its programmes of assistance to the Palestinian people, as requested by the General Assembly in 1992.⁽¹⁷⁾ Summaries of the assistance activities undertaken by 10 bodies and 6 specialized agencies of the system were contained in a report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, in September 1993,⁽¹⁸⁾ and later updated⁽¹⁹⁾

In early September 1993, when news of the breakthrough in Israeli-Palestinian negotiations became public, the Secretary-General established a high-level task force to identify new activities and projects that could be rapidly implemented by UNRWA, UNDP and UNICEF, and the United Nations agencies with an established presence in the occupied territories. Those activities would be carried out in addition to the agencies' regular programmes and would be launched as soon as funding was secured. The report of the task force, which identified immediate additional needs for the Palestinian people at $138 million, was circulated to the Conference to Support Middle East Peace on 1 October. Conference participants acknowledged that, in view of its extensive operations in the area, the United Nations would be an effective channel for such assistance, especially in the short term.

In addition to implementing projects with an immediate impact on the economy of the West Bank and Gaza, thereby generating new employment, with a resulting multiplier effect, the Secretary-General was committed to strengthening Palestinian institutions, in particular those which would support the Palestinian Authority. On 14 September, the day after the signing of the Declaration of Principles, PLO Chairman Arafat, in a meeting with the Secretary-General, requested United Nations technical assistance in a variety of sectors, in particular for building the Palestinian administration to be entrusted with the tasks of self-government. He subsequently requested, in a letter of 10 December to the Secretary-General, United Nations assistance in training the Palestinian police force envisaged in the Declaration.

In response to those requests, the Secretary-General in October dispatched a technical mission to Tunis and the occupied territories, for consultation with the Palestinian leadership. The mission also met with officials in Egypt, Israel and Jordan. The parties welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to ensure a unified and coherent approach in the provision of economic, social and other assistance in the territories. The mission also met with representatives of the United Nations agencies and programmes in the West Bank and Gaza, as well as the World Bank team visiting the area at the time. In the light of the mission's findings, the Secretary-General was persuaded of the need to appoint a high-level personality who would serve as a focal point for all United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in the territories.

Conference to Support Middle East Peace.

The Conference to Support Middle East Peace, co-sponsored by the Russian Federation and the United States, was held at the United States Department of State (Washington, DC., 1 October). Forty-six attending States and international organizations, including the United Nations, pledged $2 billion over five years to finance social and economic development in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. At the occasion of the Conference, the UNDP Administrator stated that the United Nations system was in 1993 providing services and implementing special projects in the West Bank and Gaza that amounted to $250 million, a figure accounting for one third of all public expenditure in the West Bank and about one half in Gaza. The system employed more than 8,000 Palestinians and some 70 international staff. He estimated the cost of additional activities in economic and social infrastructure, education, health, public management and training, social services, agriculture, industry and emergency activities, that were to be carried out by UNDP, UNICEF and UNRWA, at $138,250,000.

In November, the Observer of Palestine welcomed before the Assembly the results of the Conference; meanwhile the Palestinian side had established the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction and had maintained constant contact with donor countries and international institutions. PLO expected more United Nations organizations to establish a presence in the Palestinian territory and further expected their close coordination under the direct supervision of the Secretary-General or his representative.

Report of the Secretary-General. According to the Secretary-General's June 1993 report⁽¹⁸⁾ the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) prepared and submitted to the April/May session of the Commission on Human Settlements a report on housing requirements of the Palestinian people⁽²⁰⁾ as part of a plan for the implementation of a shelter strategy for Palestinians to the year 2000. After consideration of the report, the Commission on Human Settlements on 5 May adopted a resolution by recorded vote, requesting the Secretary-General, in consultation with Habitat's Executive Director and in cooperation with PLO, to take all appropriate measures for implementing a national Palestinian housing strategy in accordance with the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000. It also requested the Executive Director to take all appropriate measures and conduct consultations with a view to facilitating the training and formation of the Palestinian technical cadres necessary to the secure national housing requirements for the Palestinians.⁽²¹⁾

In implementing its 1992-1994 programme of cooperation for the West Bank and Gaza Strip, UNICEF was committed to providing $2,175,000 from its general resources and was to seek an additional $2,175,000 from specific-purpose contributions, of which almost $1 million had been received during the programme's first year, with additional pledges under negotiation. Major objectives included the reduction of child and maternal mortality, the expansion and upgrading of early childhood development activities, educational improvements, and the extension of rehabilitation services for disabled children, while UNICEF's overall strategy was to strengthen the implementation capacity of local organizations and promote cooperation among service providers through joint policy planning, information sharing and implementation. UNICEF was committed to providing support to 42 local clinics run by UNRWA to sustain and expand immunization coverage for 200,000 Palestinian children, aimed at controlling diarrhoeal diseases; reaching 500,000 mothers and children under the anaemia control project; strengthening the capacity of 200 local clinics to control acute respiratory infections; supporting 500 primary schools; providing training for 5,000 teachers as well as local physiotherapists and social and health workers; providing physiotherapy to 3,000 children and supporting the rehabilitation of children with psychological and social problems arising from exposure to conflict situations. UNICEF undertook those activities in close cooperation and coordination with international and national agencies, notably UNRWA and the Palestinian Red Crescent Society.

UNICEF implemented specific programmes of assistance to Palestinian children in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The programme in Jordan, with annual funding of $200,000 from general resources and the same amount from specific-purpose contributions, was directed at the needs of Palestinians who resided not in camps but in squatter and poor areas of the Amman-Zarqa region and other major urban areas. To better reach this target group, the Fund cooperated with more than 40 international and local NGOs in carrying out the programme which included three components: child and maternal health, education and the urban family. The programme in Lebanon had an approved annual financing level of $350,000 from general resources and the same amount from specific-purpose contributions. Its objectives included the reduction of child and maternal mortality; promotion of early childhood stimulation opportunities and facilities; empowering women with education and vocational skills; and expanding and improving water supply and sanitation, primarily for displaced Palestinians. The programme in the Syrian Arab Republic was based on the same funding scheme as that for Jordan, and comprised three elements: child and maternal health, women's development and early childhood development, while special emphasis was placed on fostering community action and mobilizing the extensive network of NGOs in the Palestinian community.

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), fielded a joint project identification/formulation mission to the occupied territories (10 February-2 March) in order to prepare a plan of action for the rehabilitation of the agricultural sector and to make recommendations for developing the institutional structure as well as to prepare priority project documents. Based on the mission's findings, ESCWA in November completed a study on the rehabilitation of the agricultural sector in the occupied Palestinian territories.⁽²²⁾ The study concluded that, since the beginning of occupation, the policy pursued by the Israeli military authority was to expedite the integration of the territories' economy with that of Israel, to discourage indigenous economic development and to ensure the suppression of any competition that could prove detrimental to Israeli interests. Now the territories were almost totally dependent on trade with Israel, and many Palestinians earned their income either by working as labourers in Israel or through subcontracting work with Israeli firms. The sharp reduction in remittances by Palestinians who worked in the Gulf States exacerbated that dependency. The outstanding issues facing the agricultural sector were defined as confiscations and restrictions, reduced services, lack of infrastructure, market constraints, particularly with respect to access to export markets, institutional handicaps and the absence of planning and coordination. Project documents on land reclamation and development, rehabilitation of deep wells for irrigation purposes, rehabilitation of springs and irrigation canals, establishment of a central laboratory for veterinary services and establishing a dairy production training centre in the West Bank were finalized and annexed to the study.

At the conclusion of a mission fielded by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO headquarters at Tunis, it was noted that the establishment of environmental information systems for the occupied Palestinian territories was a necessary first step for assessing the environmental situation. The mission, which was unable to visit the occupied territories, recommended that such an information system be established with technical, financial and training support and a back-up system at an institution in the West Bank with a sub-centre in Gaza. The findings and recommendations of the mission were discussed by UNEP's Governing Council, which, by a decision of 21 May⁽²³⁾ expressed concern over the deterioration of the environmental conditions in the territories, stressed the need for protecting their environment and natural resources and requested UNEP's Executive Director to implement the recommendations. The Council also requested him to complete and update the report on the state of the environment in the territories for submission to the Council's 1994 session, and to provide the necessary technical assistance in Palestinian institutional and self-capacity building, including training (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). UNEP further participated in a working group on environment (Tokyo, 24 and 25 May), which conducted discussions in the framework of the Middle East peace process.

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1992,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights devoted its 1993 seminar for the European region⁽²⁴⁾ to assistance to the Palestinian people. Held at the headquarters of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (Paris, 26-29 April), the seminar considered assistance to the Palestinian people: priorities and needs and the role and experience of the United Nations system, regional organizations, countries involved in assistance projects in the occupied territories and of Palestinian and international NGOs. The seminar underlined the need for coordination between various donors and United Nations organizations and agencies on the one hand, and the Palestinian central authority on the other. In this connection, it welcomed the introduction of the Palestine Development Programme prepared by the Department of Economic Affairs and Planning of PLO. The seminar asked the Committee to recommend that the Secretary-General convene a meeting of representatives of the United Nations system and PLO officials to consider mechanisms for coordinating and channelling assistance, as well as for deciding on priorities. It finally called for urgent action by the international community to meet the emergency needs of Palestinians living under occupation. ESCWA contributed actively to the discussions at the seminar and gave a presentation that centred on its recent experience and priority areas and projects related to Palestinian development assistance. UNESCO itself granted Palestine, under its Participation Programme for 1992-1993, financial aid amounting, in February 1993, to $93,000.

UNRWA maintained an extensive programme of education, health and relief services and other humanitarian assistance to Palestine refugees (see below, under "Palestine refugees").

As to assistance by specialized agencies, the current projects of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in the territories covered trade union training and vocational rehabilitation for handicapped persons. A continuation of activities was foreseen in other areas, with ILO attaching considerable importance to the extension of its technical cooperation programmes to assist Palestinians. A multidisciplinary ILO mission to the territories in October, which explored modalities of future ILO involvement, received logistical support from UNDP.

The World Health Organization (WHO) cooperated with the Union of Palestinian Medical Relief Committees in completing a study of rural health centres and services in the occupied territories to locate the infrastructure, analyze the services it offered and establish how that infrastructure could form the backbone of a cohesive primary health care system. Work financed by WHO to remodel a maternity wing in the Red Crescent Society hospital in Jerusalem was completed in late 1992. During the period under review, two donations totalling $230,000 were received from Belgium and Italy in response to an appeal for $3.5 million.

UNDP activities. UNDP's Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People in 1993 achieved a substantially increased level of expenditures over previous years. Its overall objectives evolved in response to the rapidly changing political situation and especially the signing in September of the Declaration of Principles between Israel and PLO (see above). To help meet the challenge, UNDP formulated 34 capacity-building projects involving governance, agriculture, industry, urban development, trade promotion, statistics, water, sanitation and environment and gender in development. By the end of 1993, Governments had pledged more than one third of the $75 million required to complete those projects. During the year, UNDP investment in the occupied Palestinian territories totalled $15 million, bringing its total investment there to more than $50 million.

The programme strategy for 1993, formulated in full collaboration with Palestinian counterparts, focused on four primary development areas. The first of those represented a concerted effort to support the public sector, especially in the emerging central governance institutions, such as the Palestinian Bureau of Statistics, local public institutions, municipalities and water departments. UNDP extended assistance to the newly established Palestinian institutional structures to enable them to rise to their substantive challenges. The second area of focus stimulated and encouraged economic development, particularly in industry, commerce and trade, agriculture and tourism. Human development, the third area, sought to alleviate poverty and narrow the social, economic and gender gaps in the West Bank and Gaza. The fourth strategic development objective addressed environmental protection and development.

The programme launched a number of projects in 1993 aimed at economic expansion and employment generation. Six industrial companies benefited from the Business Development Centre revolving loan fund, which also provided technical cooperation to the Palestinian Chambers of Commerce and to vocational training institutions through advisory services. A modern irrigation project provided some 600 farmers in Gaza with irrigation equipment and training, enabling them to save water and increase productivity in a cost-effective manner. Under an integrated rural development project, two villages in the northern West Bank were selected on a pilot basis, with the aim of alleviating poverty, upgrading health and education services, and improving water and sanitation systems. The completion of the Princess Alia Hospital at Hebron and the start of construction on the Beit Jala Hospital brought expanded and improved health care facilities to the West Bank, while ambulances, medical equipment and assistance to the handicapped were provided to various health institutions. The construction of nine schools, mainly in rural areas, allowed better access to education facilities, particularly for girls, improved the physical classroom environment and reduced the teacher-student ratio. As the integration of women into the economy and their empowerment in governance structures continued to be a main thrust of the programme, UNDP launched a project that particularly targeted women and their promotion in the Palestinian society and economy. UNDP designed and began construction of water distribution networks to improve the quality and quantity of the water supply to 20,000 residents of the old city of Nablus and for nearly 100,000 residents of Rafah in the Gaza Strip. The completion of a project to deepen and upgrade the well at Ein Samia provided 200,000 residents with a better and more reliable water supply. Under the water resources action programme, launched by UNDP in 1993, the efforts of a task force of Palestinian professionals was coordinated to plan for and manage the region's water resources.

The World Food Programme launched, in close cooperation with UNDP, a $3.4 million project for emergency food assistance to Gaza's non-refugee population. A joint UNDP/UNICEF/UNRWA project was initiated in the context of the Middle East peace process's multilateral working group on refugees to expand community services serving children and youth. The programme provided considerable logistical and advisory support to World Bank missions fielded to the West Bank and Gaza throughout 1993. In July, UNDP published and widely circulated the second Compendium of On-going Technical Assistance Projects in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

By a decision of 18 June,⁽²⁵⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Administrator's 1993 report on the programme of assistance⁽²⁶⁾ recommending that it continue to address the serious economic and social situation of the Palestinians, and appealing to the international community, Governments and intergovernmental organizations to expand financial and other support for activities of the programme to cover the projected shortfall in resources available to UNDP's fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle.

The Report of the Mission to Review UNDP's Programme in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (10-31 October 1992), which was published in March 1993, stated that Gaza's aquifers were severely over-exploited and salinated to the extent that wells were going out of operation and water was becoming unpalatable or even unusable for irrigation. That was the core of Gaza's environmental problems, which were compounded by abundant waste water and solid waste throughout the urban landscape. Only 20 per cent of the refugee camp population and 40 per cent of those outside were served by sewers, which posed health risks. UNDP reported a life expectancy at birth of 65 years in the occupied territories as opposed to 76 years in Israel. While the estimated infant mortality rate ranged from 40 to 70 per 1,000 live birth in the occupied territories, it was 10 per 1,000 for Israel. The mission concluded that the constraints imposed by the Civil Administration, insecurity, civil strife and strikes created an extremely unfavourable climate for economic activities, while Israeli practices and the Arab economic boycott hampered exports. The suspension of concessional flows, especially from the Gulf countries, seriously threatened the functioning of public services, while the economic situation in Israel, combined with the inflow of new immigrants, reduced opportunities for Palestinian workers on Israel's labour market. Among its recommendations, the mission deemed it important that UNDP not wait for agreement in the peace process before it launched a more coherent programme, requiring increased financial resources. It should assist Palestinian efforts to draw up an initial development plan, as well as sector plans based on it. An economic adviser of international reputation should be sent to Jerusalem, to be attached to the Special Representative's Office for a period of three to six months. Those initiatives were to involve from the beginning major bilateral donors as well as interested neighbours such as Egypt and Jordan, and be undertaken in close cooperation with the World Bank. The mission identified as the main objective of any development effort the strengthening of the self-reliance of the Palestinian economy and people and the gradual movement of Palestinians out of dependency into a phase of rehabilitation and revitalization. UNDP should thus, in accordance with Palestinian priorities, focus on three themes: human resources development, including institution-building at central and local levels; employment and income-generating projects; and infrastructural improvements. Within this context, environment, water and sanitation were to receive priority attention. The mission finally recommended the strengthening of the Office of the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People in New York so as to facilitate a policy dialogue between Headquarters and the Office at Jerusalem on major issues and to ensure the provision of highly qualified technical advice.

UNCTAD activities. Assistance to Palestinians by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) from March 1992 to March 1993 was intensified in four main areas: monitoring and analysis of Israeli policies and practices hampering Palestinian economic development; investigation of the impact of those policies and practices on the main economic sectors; development of a database on the economy in the territories and information dissemination; and coordination of activities with other United Nations organs. This assistance, including recent developments in the Palestinian economy, the status of the environment and measures to improve it, were reviewed in a July report of the UNCTAD secretariat⁽²⁷⁾. On 1 October, the Trade and Development Board⁽²⁸⁾ took note of the report.

Within the context of the intersectoral UNCTAD project investigating prospects of sustained economic and social development in the West Bank and Gaza, work was intensified on the preparation of 25 in-depth field studies covering the main economic and social sectors. As part of the project's requirements, work on the secretariat's database on the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory was intensified. A statistical series covering national income, population, labour and employment, balance of payments and external trade for the period 1968-1987 was standardized and classified along the lines of the economic time series in use in the secretariat and stored in its computer facilities for future reference. The series was also published⁽²⁹⁾ and widely disseminated to research and educational institutions so as to provide a uniform set of economic statistics on the West Bank and Gaza. In September, UNCTAD reported on the prospects for sustained development of the Palestinian economy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip⁽³⁰⁾ whereby it assessed the main economic and social problems, identified needs and specific measures for immediate action and outlined prospects for sustained development.

In accordance with principle 23 of the 1992 Rio Declaration on Environment and Development⁽³¹⁾ stating that the environment and natural resources of people under oppression, domination and occupation shall be protected, the UNCTAD secretariat initiated an in-depth study of the environmental dimension of Israeli policies in the West Bank and Gaza and their impact on the economic and social situation of Palestinians. Another UNCTAD study on the agricultural sector of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, issued in October⁽³²⁾ identified as strategic objectives of agricultural development generating the maximum number of employment opportunities; targeting the production process to cater for domestic consumption needs; maximizing the area of land under cultivation; expanding the irrigated farming area; and striving to improve the competitiveness of farmers as regards produce quality, production costs and level of auxiliary marketing services. The study recommended policies and projects in the planning of agricultural development, credit, education and research, land, water, agricultural trade, infrastructure and auxiliary services, diversification of cropping patterns, livestock, subsidiary components, and cooperatives.

Urges Member States, international financial institutions of the United Nations system, international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and regional and interregional organizations to extend, as rapidly and as generously as possible, economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in order to assist in the development of the West Bank and Gaza, and to do so in close cooperation with the Palestine Liberation Organization and through official Palestinian institutions;

6. Considers that an active United Nations role in assisting in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, including its Annexes and its Agreed Minutes, can make a positive contribution;

7. Calls upon relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system to intensify their assistance in response to the urgent needs of the Palestinian people and to improve coordination through an appropriate mechanism under the auspices of the Secretary-General;

8. Urges Member States to open their markets to exports from the West Bank and Gaza on the most favourable terms, consistent with appropriate trading rules;

9. Suggests the convening in 1993/94, under the appropriate United Nations auspices, of a seminar on Palestinian trade and investment needs in light of the new developments;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the coordinated work of the United Nations system for an adequate response to the needs of the Palestinian people and to mobilize financial, technical, economic and other assistance;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution, containing:

(a) An assessment of the assistance actually received by the Palestinian people;

(b) An assessment of the needs still unmet and specific proposals for responding effectively to them;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Assistance to the Palestinian people".

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/715) without vote, 13 December (meeting 48); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.90), based on informal consultations on 12-nation draft (A/C.2/48/L.18); agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 12-14, 45, 48; plenary 86.

Assistance to Palestinian women

In response to the Economic and Social Council's 1992 request⁽³³⁾ that he review the situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied territory and in the refugee camps, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1993 session.⁽³⁴⁾ In a later report⁽³⁵⁾ covering developments during 1993, the Secretary-General noted that during that year no missions of experts to the territory, requested by the Council in resolution 1993/15 of July 1993 (see below), could take place in view of the changing political situation. He stated that despite positive developments and increased hope for peace after the signing of the Declaration of Principles⁽³⁶⁾ in September between Israel and PLO, no substantive or immediate improvement of living conditions of Palestinian women and children, whose status was profoundly affected by the political consequences of occupation, could be reported.

The number of fatalities and injuries, particularly among children, was significantly higher in 1993 than during the preceding year. UNRWA reported that Israeli security forces were responsible for the deaths of 80 Palestinians from the West Bank, including 8 children, and 120 persons from Gaza, among them 28 children. Approximately one fourth of all fatalities continued to be children under 16 years of age. Palestinian women similarly experienced violence and maltreatment caused by the unrest and armed conflict. In Gaza, 722 women reported serious injuries requiring medical treatment, as did 108 women in the West Bank. Eight of 48 female prisoners suffering from injuries and maltreatment were reportedly denied adequate medical treatment, and 9 Palestinian females were said to have been killed through actions of the Israeli security forces and settlers, among them three schoolgirls under 13 years of age and one 4-year-old girl. Women and children were especially affected by measures of collective punishment.

The Israeli-ordered closure of Gaza and the West Bank on 30 and 31 March, respectively, resulted in a substantial rise in socio-economic hardship since some 130,000 Palestinians were suddenly cut off from their income sources, which in turn changed consumption patterns and nutritional habits. Concern was expressed that the percentage of growth-retarded children under three years of age and the number of child deaths could rise, since protein-energy malnutrition was closely associated with infant and child mortality. The rapidly worsening dimension of environmental contamination and degradation in the territories, especially in Gaza, which stemmed mostly from the over-exploitation by Israeli authorities and settlers of the available water resources, the lack of adequate waste management systems and destruction of thousands of olive and fruit trees, presented a direct health threat to the population, in particular to children.

The life of Palestinian families was characterized by frequent separations, and the absence of male family members due to detention, expulsion, imprisonment or death increased the number of female-headed households. That number was likewise high among the Palestinian refugee population since men tended to leave the camps in search of work. Thus, the camps' population consisted mainly of women, children and the elderly, women being the backbone of refugee camp life. According to UNRWA, some 30 per cent of households in the West Bank's refugee population and 20 per cent in Gaza were female-headed. A reported 22 per cent of families qualifying for UNRWA's special hardship programme were headed by women. In addition, family reunification laws led to the deportation of family members, including children, denying them the right to permanent return, while children were even denied registration.

Female-headed households were particularly vulnerable to poverty, as women had traditionally depended on men as providers. Impeded by lack of education, vocational training, skills and employment, and subject to socio-cultural restrictions in their freedom of movement, the majority of Palestinian women could not ensure a living for their families. The condition of widows was exceedingly difficult, not having received sufficient attention regarding de jure headship, property rights and guardianship of the children. Social and legal pressures often forced single women and their children to join the household of their kin and give up independent living in the absence of a male head of family. Thirty-seven per cent of the female population married under the minimum legal age of 17, with the increase in such early marriages reportedly linked to long-term school closures and the deteriorating economic situation, which discouraged parents from continuing their daughters' education.

The Secretary-General anticipated, however, that the implementation of the Declaration of Principles would have an impact on the situation of Palestinian women as it transformed the region's political perspective. With political developments entering a new phase, the concerns of women could be considered part of the development agenda. All areas addressed in the Agreement, starting from direct, free and general elections for the Palestinian Council to human resources development, environmental protection and communications and media, could benefit from the scrutiny of women. Development projects in agriculture and the setting up of infrastructure, housing, education and health facilities could best be elaborated with the participation of female experts. At the outset, it was of paramount importance to strive for de jure equality for women.

The Secretary-General stated that the Palestinian Federation of Women's Action recognized the urgent need for women's equality to be enshrined in the constitutional declaration of the national authority and for women's participation in the drafting of laws and regulations and in the new legislature and community life to be guaranteed. The Federation asked for the participation of leading female professionals in the formation of the transitional national government and for a larger proportion of women in principal and subsidiary organizations and institutions dealing with social, economic, educational, administrative and other matters. Its request covered civil rights, education, health provision, the planning and implementation of growth and development and the media.

Adequate funds and resources should be given to women-in-development programmes, and female personnel of sufficient authority should be included in all policy, planning and programming activities, the Secretary-General continued. Appropriate quantitative and qualitative national targets needed to be identified, and while a national machinery for the advancement of Palestinian women was already in place, it was in need of recognition, authority and influence at the highest political level. Women needed to participate in future governance structures and existing development institutions and, most importantly, be involved in the formulation of development strategies. Skills training and gender awareness were important tools for achieving those goals. The most important programme, besides providing adequate health services and improving education, the Secretary-General concluded, was the development of sustainable income-generation activities for women, which required the identification of realistic, feasible possibilities and basic support facilities, as well as support from the international community, NGOs and donor agencies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/15 by roll-call vote.

Situation of and assistance to Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered with appreciation the report submitted by the Secretary-General on the situation of Palestinian women in the occupied territory and previous reports concerning the situation of Palestinian women inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territory.

1. Reaffirms that for Palestinian women, equality, self-reliance and integration in the national development plan can be achieved only through the termination of the Israeli occupation and the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to respect the provisions of the Convention;

Incidents and disputes involving Arab countries and Israel

Iraq and Israel

By decision 48/436 of 20 December 1993, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations and included it in the draft agenda of its forty-ninth (1994) session. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981,⁽¹⁾ following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad.

Israel and Lebanon

The overall situation in Lebanon improved at a steady pace during 1993 following the election of a new Government, which put national reconciliation and reconstruction at the top of its agenda. The extension of governmental authority throughout the country progressed further, and the security situation improved as political stability returned after nearly 16 years of conflict. However, continued military and civil violence characterized a tense security situation in the southern part of the country, which remained under Israeli occupation. The area north of the border with Israel and the western Bekaa were theatres for frequent armed confrontations between Israeli and South Lebanon Army (SLA) troops on the one hand and Islamic guerrilla resistance groups, most notably Hezbollah, on the other. Sporadic fighting also occurred involving Israeli troops and SLA personnel. In July, Israel launched an unprecedented week-long military campaign into southern Lebanon, which erased entirely dozens of villages, left some 130 people dead and many hundreds wounded and caused an exodus of an estimated half a million people fleeing towards Beirut and northern areas of the country.

Following the establishment of a cease-fire on 31 July and after consultations with the United Nations, the Lebanese Government, on 9 August, sent an army unit to the area of operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) for the purpose of maintaining law and order. The unit, which comprised some 300 personnel of all ranks, remained deployed in garrisons at Qana, Jwayya, Arzun and Bir as Sanasil.

Lebanon continued in 1993 to press for the withdrawal of Israel from that part of southern Lebanon proclaimed a "security zone" by Israel and manned by the Israel Defence Force (IDF), with the assistance of the so-called South Lebanon Army, referred to as the de facto forces (DFF). The boundaries of the Israeli-controlled Lebanese territory—an area along the armistice demarcation line—were determined by the forward positions of DFF and IDF. As of July 1993, the two forces maintained 72 military positions. Within the Israeli-controlled area, Israel maintained, in addition to DFF, a civil administration and a security service with broad powers to pursue suspected opponents of the occupation. Movement between that area and the rest of Lebanon was strictly controlled, and the area remained largely dependent on Israel for economic assistance. An estimated 3,000 jobs in Israel were held by Lebanese from that area, and access to them was controlled by DFF and the security services. In justification of its refusal to withdraw, Israel maintained that its presence was in self-defence against attacks on northern Israel by what it claimed were several terrorist factions, particularly the Shiite Muslim group Hezbollah, which used Lebanese territory as their staging area.

The situation in Lebanon, as well as Israel's and Lebanon's positions on issues related to it, were reflected in the Secretary-General's reports on UNIFIL (see below), as well as in a number of communications addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council during the year.⁽²⁾

In connection with its requests to the Security Council to further extend UNIFIL's mandate, which was due to expire on 31 January and 31 July (see below), Lebanon reported on positive developments in the country. They included, according to a letter of January⁽³⁾ the formation of a new Government headed by Prime Minister Rafic Hariri, which commenced its agenda to broaden and strengthen national reconciliation, accelerate reconstruction and development, and promote national stability and security through social, economic and administrative reform and the liberation of occupied Lebanese territory. In spite of those developments and contrary to the participation of both countries in the peace talks, Israel intensified its efforts to destabilize Lebanon by perpetuating its occupation of the south. Recently, it had uprooted 415 Palestinians from their homes and deported them to Lebanon in violation of Lebanese sovereignty and territorial integrity and the principles of the Charter (see below, under "Expulsion and deportation of Palestinians").

Throughout 14 months of negotiations, Lebanon worked to secure implementation of resolution 425(1978),⁽⁴⁾ which Israel, however, refused to implement. The time had come for the Security Council to demonstrate its clout as the ultimate guarantor of Member States' compliance with international law and invoke Chapter VII of the Charter. In this context, the presence of UNIFIL remained of utmost necessity to provide assistance and international support to the civilian population facing occupation. However, this assistance could not be substituted for the fulfilment of UNIFIL's original mandate as stipulated in resolution 425(1978) to ensure Israeli withdrawal and assist the Lebanese Government in re-establishing its authority.

In July⁽⁵⁾ Lebanon reported that major positive developments had accelerated the establishment of national peace, stability and security on its territory. The Lebanese army and internal security forces deployed throughout the country, with the exception of the Israeli-occupied area, were constantly being upgraded. Law and order were rigorously enforced and travel throughout the country was safe and unrestricted. Those achievements allowed the Government to focus on its reconstruction and development plans, for which the World Bank had approved a $175 million loan. Concurrently, Lebanon was exerting great efforts to resettle thousands of civilians displaced by civil strife, two Israeli invasions and the sustained occupation of the south. Despite the ongoing bilateral peace negotiations which had commenced in Madrid, Israel continued to perpetuate its occupation irrespective of Lebanon's significant achievements in consolidating national unity and central authority. As long as Israel continued its occupation, hostilities and bloodshed on Lebanese soil would persist, while its people would exercise their legal right, as sanctioned by the Charter, of individual and collective resistance until Israel withdrew all its forces in accordance with resolution 425(1978). Lebanon reaffirmed UNIFIL's valuable international commitment to its sovereignty and population which, however, could not substitute for its original mandate as stipulated in resolution 425(1978).

The Committee on Palestinian rights⁽⁶⁾ expressed alarm at those persistent Israeli air, naval and ground assaults against vast areas of Lebanon in July, which caused the displacement of and high numbers of casualties and suffering among Palestinians living in refugee camps of Beddawi and Nahr el-Bared in northern Lebanon, and Ein el-Hilweh, Mieh Mieh and Rashidieh in the country's southern part.

During the General Assembly's debate on the Middle East situation in December, Lebanon called it unfortunate that in the face of optimistic developments, it remained crippled by a painful thorn in its side, the Israeli occupation of parts of southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa valley. The international community had permitted that ordeal to continue for 15 years in spite of Security Council resolutions 425(1978)(4) and 426(1978).⁽⁷⁾ As Israel and Lebanon were sitting at the conference table at Madrid in 1991, shells came raining down on Lebanon. In Washington, Lebanon was presented with vague promises for future withdrawal, while being subjected on the ground to bombardment for the slightest "provocation", which was, in fact, Lebanese resistance against occupation as sanctioned under Article 51 of the Charter. Such was the case in July and August, when Israeli military, in retaliation for the killing of seven of its soldiers on Lebanese soil, killed 140 civilians, levelled scores of villages and caused the exodus of half a million people in response to Prime Minister Rabin's announcement that a major objective of his so-called "operation accountability" was the displacement of the civilian population and the flooding of Beirut with refugees.

UNIFIL

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNIFIL during 1993, in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

Established by the Council in 1978,⁽⁴⁾ following Israel's invasion of Lebanon in March of that year⁽⁸⁾ UNIFIL was entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion, launched in June 1982,⁽⁹⁾ radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Shortly thereafter, the Council authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim tasks of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in its area of deployment⁽¹⁰⁾ which tasks it continued to carry out during 1993. The Force was assisted by the Observer Group Lebanon, composed of 57 unarmed military observers organized from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization and under the operational control of the UNIFIL Commander.

Composition and deployment

As at January 1993⁽¹¹⁾ UNIFIL had a strength of 5,250 military personnel provided by 10 countries: Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway, Poland and Sweden, reflecting a 10 per cent reduction in its military strength, as requested by the Security Council in 1992.⁽¹²⁾ In addition, UNIFIL had reduced the number of internationally recruited civilian staff by 17 per cent. Civilian support was provided by a staff of 524, of whom 155 were recruited internationally and 369 locally. By July⁽¹³⁾ at the beginning of the second mandate period, the numbers had changed to 526, 161 and 365, respectively, while troop strength had decreased slightly, to 5,247.

UNIFIL remained deployed in southern Lebanon in six sectors: the Fijian, Finnish, Ghanaian, Irish, Nepalese and Norwegian battalion sectors. The entire Norwegian battalion sector was within the Israeli-controlled area, as were parts of the other five sectors. In accordance with operational requirements, the Force adjusted the boundaries of the battalion sectors and relocated a number of positions. In mid-February, the headquarters of the Ghanaian battalion was moved from Marakah to Al Qaranis near Bir as Sanasil. On 16 February, UNIFIL handed over to the Lebanese army an area comprising the villages of Marakah, Jinnata and Yanuh, including the former Ghanaian headquarters complex. Work continued on the new Irish battalion headquarters near Tibnin. Military logistic support was provided by the Swedish logistic battalion, elements of the French composite battalion, the Norwegian maintenance company, the Ghanaian engineer company, the Italian helicopter unit and some civilian staff, especially in communications and vehicle maintenance.

The Force Mobile Reserve, a composite mechanized company, consisting of elements from seven contingents (Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Norway and Sweden), frequently reinforced UNIFIL battalions when serious incidents occurred and during rotations. One platoon of the Reserve was deployed in the Nepalese battalion sector.

As proposed by the Secretary-General and agreed to by the Security Council in 1992⁽¹⁴⁾ Major-General Trond Furuhoide (Norway) took over as Force Commander on 22 February to succeed Lieutenant-General Lars-Eric Wahlgren (Sweden), who had been appointed in 1988.⁽¹⁵⁾

Activities

Report of the Secretary-General (January).

The Secretary-General gave an account of developments in the UNIFIL area between 22 July 1992 and 22 January 1993.⁽¹¹⁾ During that period, UNIFIL suffered two casualties due to firing (Ireland, Nepal), while 12 others were injured as a result of firing or explosions. This brought the number of soldiers who had died since UNIFIL's inception to 190 and the wounded to 292.

UNIFIL continued to oppose attempts by armed elements to enter or operate within its area of deployment, which at times led to friction or violent incidents at its checkpoints. During the review period, 19 operations by resistance groups against IDF/DFF were recorded by the Force, and other attacks against IDF/DFF were reported north of the Litani River, in which armed elements employed rockets, mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and AT-3 anti-tank missiles. The use of roadside bombs continued, especially in the Israeli-controlled area. In responding to such attacks or initiating action themselves, IDF/DFF employed artillery, mortars, tanks and aircraft, often firing into villages. Over 6,000 rounds of artillery mortar and tank fire were recorded as being fired by IDF/DFF during the reporting period, and 242 instances of their firing at or close to UNIFIL positions, which marked a 67 per cent increase over the previous six months. UNIFIL carried out 180 controlled explosions in connection with a programme to clear its deployment area of various types of unexploded ordnance. It continued to extend humanitarian assistance to the civilian population in the form of food, fuel, water, electricity, clothes, medical supplies, engineering work and repairs to buildings damaged as a result of fighting, as well as providing escorts to farmers. From resources made available by troop-contributing countries, it provided water projects, school materials and equipment, and supplies for social services. UNIFIL medical centres and mobile teams rendered care to an average of 2,000 patients a month, and a field dental programme was established. Its personnel contributed some $11,000 for humanitarian work.

The Secretary-General observed that during a period of high tension, volatility and unpredictability, UNIFIL continued to prevent its area from being used for hostile activities and to protect its inhabitants. In carrying out its tasks, the Force was again severely hampered by the amount of fire directed against it, in which respect he appealed to all parties concerned to respect UNIFIL's international and impartial status. In view of UNIFIL's contribution to stability in such a volatile area, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council accept Lebanon's request⁽³⁾ for an extension of the UNIFIL mandate for another six months, until 31 July 1993.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 28 January 1993 to consider the Secretary-General's report and the request by Lebanon, following which the Council unanimously adopted resolution 803(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 22 January 1993 and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 18 January 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of UNIFIL for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1993;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 803(1993)

28 January 1993 Meeting 3167 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25180).

Following adoption of the resolution and consultations among Council members, the President made a statement⁽¹⁶⁾ on behalf of the Council:

"The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) submitted in conformity with resolution 768(1992).

"They reaffirm their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, they assert that any State shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

"As the Security Council extends the mandate of UNIFIL for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), the members of the Council again stress the urgent need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. They reiterate their full support for the Taif Agreement and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The members of the Council commend the Lebanese Government for its successful efforts to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with UNIFIL.

"The members of the Security Council express their concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regret the loss of civilian life and urge all parties to exercise restraint.

"The members of the Security Council take this opportunity to express their appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard and commend UNIFIL's troops and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances."

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In his report to the Security Council on developments during the six-month period from 23 January to 20 July 1993,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that one Nepalese soldier had lost his life as a result of firing and two others had suffered injuries. This brought the number of UNIFIL's accumulated casualties to 192 and of those wounded to 294.

In continuing to oppose attempts by armed elements to operate in its area of deployment, UNIFIL noted an increase in dangerous confrontations between them and the Force. It recorded 63 operations by resistance groups against IDF/DFF—44 more than in the previous six-month period. Altogether, there were 168 instances of firing at or close to UNIFIL positions, for which the Irish and Finnish battalion sectors accounted for more than 70 per cent. The Force carried out 44 controlled explosions to clear undetonated remnants of war.

The Secretary-General observed that during the reporting period, attacks by armed elements against Israel and associated military targets on Lebanese territory were generally more effective than in the past, and the severity of Israeli retaliation rose concomitantly. Despite repeated appeals, the highly escalatory practice of firing into populated areas continued, causing casualties among men, women and children. Meanwhile, UNIFIL ensured to the best of its abilities the peaceful character of its operation area, limited the conflict to the extent possible and protected the inhabitants from the effects of violence. He stressed again that respect by all concerned for the Force's international and impartial status was essential for its effective functioning. He noted with satisfaction the improvement of the situation in other parts of Lebanon, which made it possible to use Beirut's international airport for the rotation of UNIFIL's contingents. The hand-over of a part of UNIFIL's area of operation to the Lebanese army was another step forward. Referring to UNIFIL's contribution to stability and protection in the area, he recommended that the Council accept Lebanon's request of 14 July⁽⁵⁾ for an extension of the Force for a further six months, until 31 January 1994.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 28 July 1993, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report and by Lebanon's request, unanimously adopted resolution 852(1993).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 20 July 1993, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 14 July 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1994;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 852(1993)

28 July 1993 Meeting 3258 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26177).

Following the vote and consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement⁽¹⁷⁾ on behalf of the Council:

"The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) submitted in conformity with resolution 803(1993) of 28 January 1993.

"They reaffirm their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, they assert that any State shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

"As the Security Council extends the mandate of UNIFIL for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, the members of the Council again stress the urgent need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. They reiterate their full support for the Taif Agreement and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The members of the Council commend the Lebanese Government for its successful efforts to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with UNIFIL.

"The members of the Security Council express their concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regret the loss of civilian life and urge all parties to exercise restraint.

"The members of the Security Council take this opportunity to express their appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard and commend UNIFIL's troops and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances."

Financing

A report of the Secretary-General on the financing of UNIFIL⁽¹⁸⁾ indicated that as at 31 October 1993, assessments totalling $2,152.3 million had been apportioned among Member States from UNIFIL's inception on 19 March 1978 to 31 January 1994, against which contributions of $2,044.9 million had been received. Additional commitments were authorized in the amount of $146.3 million less applied credits of $22.2 million. The resulting outstanding balance due of $231.5 million included an amount of $19.6 million due from China, transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁹⁾ leaving $211.9 million due as at 31 October 1993. The budget performance for the period from 1 February 1993 to 31 January 1994 reflected estimated savings of $1,194,000.

Voluntary contributions in services and supplies continued to be received from Switzerland. Cash contributions to the Suspense Account, created in 1979,⁽²⁰⁾ amounted to $9.8 million as at 31 October 1993, of which $1.4 million was received from Switzerland.

As at 31 October 1993, amounts due to former and current troop-contributing States for troop costs stood at $65.6 million, and an additional $6.2 million was owed to Governments for contingent-owned equipment. Unpaid assessed contributions to the UNIFIL Special Account for the period since its inception amounted to $228.1 million as at 31 January⁽¹¹⁾ and to $228.7 million as at 31 July.⁽¹³⁾ Reimbursements due were met only up to 31 January 1991.

In a December report on the financing of peace-keeping operations,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly authorize monthly commitments for UNIFIL for the period beginning 1 February 1994 at the current level of $12,190,000 gross ($11,931,500 net), should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond 31 January 1994. Based on those estimates, the amount required for the period from 1 February to 30 April 1994 would be $36,570,000 gross ($35,403,000 net).

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended⁽²²⁾ that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into commitments for the Force in an amount up to $24 million gross ($23.5 million net) for the period 1 February to 31 March 1994, and that that amount be assessed to Member States.

In a second report,⁽²³⁾ ACABQ noted that its recommendations were for commitment authority rather than appropriation in view of the fact that the relevant budgets had not been considered and approved; however, consistent with past practice, amounts authorized by the Assembly for commitment could be assessed and apportioned. The Committee further pointed out that in a number of instances its recommendations related only to periods up to 31 March 1994 rather than 30 April. The amounts it would recommend in the future would take into account the performance during the initial months, thereby effecting a de facto adjustment as necessary to the amounts now being recommended.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1993, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/464 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 24 million United States dollars gross (23.5 million dollars net) for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for the period from 1 February to 31 March 1994, should the Security Council decide to extend the Force beyond 31 January 1994;

(b) Decided at that time to apportion, as an ad hoc arrangement, the amount of 22,876,000 dollars gross

(22.4 million dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994 as set out in Assembly resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991 and 48/223 A of 23 December 1993 and its decision 47/456 of 23 December 1992;

(c) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 476,600 dollars for the period from 1 February to 31 March 1994.

General Assembly decision 48/464

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/48/813) without vote, 22 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/48/L.16), orally revised; agenda item 130 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 87.

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

The General Assembly in 1993 continued to call for Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights, a part of the Syrian Arab Republic near its borders with Israel and Lebanon, which came under Israeli occupation in 1967. Israel effectively annexed the area when it decided to extend its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory towards the end of 1981,⁽²⁴⁾ and the annexation was confirmed by a decision of the Israeli Knesset in November 1991.⁽²⁵⁾

The issue of Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the population in the Syrian Arab Golan was continuously monitored by the Committee on Israeli practices and was the subject of resolutions by the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly (see below, under "Territories occupied by Israel").

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁶⁾ calling on the international community to urge Israel to withdraw from the Syrian Golan Heights, the Secretary-General in October 1993 submitted a report⁽²⁷⁾ on steps taken or envisaged by Member States in implementing that resolution. As at 1 October, replies from Ecuador and Ghana had been received in reply to his notes verbales of 16 August requesting information in that regard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/59 B by recorded vote.

Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 25 October 1993,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in the annex to which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Noting that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, to accept and carry out Security Council resolution 497(1981),

Deeply concerned that Israel has not withdrawn from the Syrian Golan, which has been under occupation since 1967, contrary to the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the convening at Madrid of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973, but regretting that a just and comprehensive peace has not yet been achieved after two years of negotiation in Washington, DC.,

1. Declares that Israel has failed so far to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981);

2. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

3. Declares also that the Knesset decision of 11 November 1991 annexing the occupied Syrian Golan constitutes a grave violation of Security Council resolution 497(1981) and therefore is null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares further all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the occupied Arab territories since 1967, including the occupied Syrian Golan, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decisions relating to the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under those instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan since 1967 and its de facto annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to peace and security in the region;

8. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan, and its decision of 11 November 1991, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

9. Demands once more that Israel withdraw from the occupied Syrian Golan in implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions;

10. Calls upon the international community to urge Israel to withdraw from the occupied Syrian Golan and other occupied Arab territories for the establishment of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 48/59 B

Abstaining: Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zambia.

After adoption of the resolution, the United States expressed disappointment and indicated that it had already outlined its position on the status of the Golan Heights by voting in favour of Security Council resolution 497(1981).⁽²⁸⁾ Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic would again soon engage in bilateral negotiations, and it was important not to prejudge or prejudice the outcome of those talks.

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established by the Security Council in 1974,⁽²⁹⁾ as called for by the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded that year,⁽³⁰⁾ was charged with supervising the observance of the cease-fire between the two countries in the Golan Heights area and ensuring the separation of their forces. Assisting the Force as required were observers from UNTSO.

The UNDOF mandate was renewed twice in 1993, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

Composition

In November 1993, UNDOF had a strength of 1,110 military troops (reduced from 1,124 in May) from Austria, Canada, Finland and Poland, plus five observers from UNTSO. In addition, it was assisted by 85 UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission.

UNDOF, under the command of Major-General Roman Misztal (Poland), remained deployed within and close to the area of separation, with most of the military component of its headquarters located at Camp Faouar and some elements deployed in Camp Ziouani. Its civilian administrative staff operated at Damascus, while the Force Commander maintained offices at both Camp Faouar and Damascus. The Austrian battalion, based at Camp Faouar, maintained 16 positions (reduced from 18 in May) and 9 outposts (up from 7 in May) in the northern operational area, conducting 26 patrols daily at irregular intervals on predetermined routes. In the southern area, the Finnish battalion, which was based at Camp Ziouani, manned 14 positions and 8 outposts (16 and 6, respectively, in May), patrolling 19 times daily. The military police had detachments at Camps Faouar and Ziouani, in addition to Checkpoint C.

Damascus international airport served as UNDOF's airhead; the Tel Aviv airport was also used. The seaports of Latakia, Ashdod and Haifa were used for sea shipments, while in-theatre air support was provided by UNTSO on request.

On 2 August,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the Finnish infantry battalion would be replaced by a Polish unit and that logistic support for the Force would be consolidated in the Canadian logistic unit. The Council took note of the foregoing on the same date.⁽³²⁾ The Canadian logistic unit was reinforced on 1 October by 26 men. In addition to its previous functions, it commenced to perform second-line general transport tasks, ration transport, and control and management of goods received by UNDOF, as well as maintenance of heavy equipment, for which reason part of the unit was deployed to Camp Faouar. The Polish logistic unit ceased to function on that date, leaving behind a team of 25 for hand-over and preparations for the arrival of the Polish infantry battalion, whose advance party arrived on 1 November, the full unit being scheduled to replace the Finnish battalion by mid-December.

A restructuring of the Force was put into effect following Finland's withdrawal of its battalion on 9 December, at which time its operational responsibilities were handed over to the Polish battalion. As a consequence of the restructuring, UNDOF's authorized military strength was reduced by 88.

Activities

Reports of the Secretary-General (May and November). Before the expiration of the mandate of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1993, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities for the mandate periods, covering 20 November 1992 to 21 May 1993⁽³³⁾ and 22 May to 22 November 1993.⁽³⁴⁾ UNDOF suffered one fatality due to natural causes, bringing the number of deaths to 32 since its inception, 19 as a result of hostile action or accidents and 13 from other causes.

The reports noted that the Force continued to perform its functions effectively with the cooperation of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. The cease-fire was maintained and the operational situation in UNDOF's area of supervision remained calm. To ensure that no military forces were deployed in the area of separation, UNDOF supervised it from permanently manned positions and observation posts and by foot and mobile patrols operating day and night at irregular intervals on predetermined routes. Temporary outposts were set up and additional patrols were conducted as necessary. In the Wadi Ar Raqqad, new patrol paths were created enabling UNDOF to operate more easily on the difficult terrain. Through frequent patrolling and the establishment of standing patrols, it continued its efforts to prevent incidents involving Syrian shepherds who grazed their flocks close to and west of the A-line. UNDOF conducted fortnightly inspections of armaments and force levels in the area of limitation, accompanied by liaison officers from the two parties. As in the past, both sides restricted the movement of inspection teams, denying access to some positions.

The Syrian authorities continued to lay mines and replace old ones along the eastern edge of the separation area. As reported in May, the Polish mine-clearing teams cleared a total area of 21,965 square metres and destroyed a number of other explosive devices. UNDOF assisted the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) with mail facilities and safe passage of persons—a total of 533 between May and November. It also provided medical treatment to the local population within available means.

In his observations, the Secretary-General cautioned that despite the relative quiet in the Israel-Syrian Arab Republic sector, the situation as a whole remained potentially dangerous, unless and until a comprehensive Middle East settlement was reached. Stating in each report that he considered UNDOF's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the Syrian Arab Republic's assent and Israel's agreement, recommended that its mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1993 in the first instance and until 31 May 1994 in the second.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and November)

Meeting on 26 May 1993, the Security Council, without debate, unanimously adopted resolution 830(1993).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1993;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 830(1993)

26 May 1993 Meeting 3220 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/25838).

On 29 November, the Council, also without debate, unanimously adopted resolution 887(1993).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1994;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 887(1993)

29 November 1993 Meeting 3320 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/26808).

Following the adoption of each resolution, the President stated that he had been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Council:(35)

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 19 (21 in the May report): 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation ("in the Middle East as a whole" added in the May report) continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Financing

In a December report on the financing of UNDOF,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that assessed contributions apportioned to Member States in respect of the Force—from its inception in 1974⁽³⁷⁾ to 30 November 1993—and of the United Nations Emergency Force II (UNEF II) (from its inception at the end of 1973 to its liquidation in 1980)—totalled $1,034.1 million, against which $968.3 million had been received as at 31 October 1993. The resultant outstanding balance of $58.6 million included $36 million due from China, which was transferred to a special account pursuant to a 1981 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁹⁾ leaving $22.6 million in unpaid contributions.

UNDOF's performance record for 1 December 1992 to 30 November 1993 showed estimated savings of $706,000 gross ($640,000 net), which the Secretary-General recommended to the Assembly for credit to Member States against their assessments for future mandate periods.

The unaudited UNDOF/UNEF II financial statement, as at 30 June 1993, covering the 12 months from 1 December 1991 to 30 November 1992, showed a "surplus" balance of $5,109,799, representing excess of income (including assessed contributions, irrespective of collectibility) over expenditure and consisting of interest income ($1,309,685) and other accrued miscellaneous credits including savings from liquidation of prior obligations. The Secretary-General proposed that, until the level of $22.6 million unpaid contributions was reduced, that surplus, which otherwise would be surrendered as credits to Member States under certain provisions of the Financial Regulations, be entered into the Suspense Account set up by the Assembly in 1978.⁽³⁸⁾

For the 12-month period beginning 1 December 1993, the average Force strength would be reduced, due to the Finnish withdrawal, by 88, from 1,124 to 1,036 troops, for an overall reduction of 7.8 per cent in military personnel. Likewise, the civilian staff was to be reduced by 6 to 120, including 84 recruited locally, in line with a proposed 6.7 per cent reduction in local-level posts. On this basis, and assuming continuation of its existing responsibilities, the Secretary-General estimated the cost of maintaining UNDOF at $32,160,000 gross ($31,188,000 net) for the 12-month period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994, which equalled $2,680,000 gross ($2,599,000 net) monthly. Accordingly, subject to the renewal of UNDOF's mandate, he requested the Assembly to make appropriate provision for UNDOF's expenses for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994.

ACABQ, in December,⁽³⁹⁾ concurred with the Secretary-General in his December report on the financing of peace-keeping operations,⁽²¹⁾ and recommended that he be authorized to enter into commitments for UNDOF up to $13,400,000 gross ($12,995,000 net) for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 April 1994 inclusive. However, no assessment on Member States would be necessary in this connection since the cash balance available to UNDOF as at 13 December stood at $30,700,000.

In a second report,⁽²³⁾ ACABQ pointed out that its recommendations were for commitment authority rather than appropriation in view of the fact that the relevant budgets had not been considered and approved; however, consistent with past practice, amounts authorized by the Assembly for commitment could be assessed and apportioned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December 1993, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/463 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, in accordance with the framework set out in its resolution 48/227 of 23 December 1993, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of seventeen peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and concurring with the observations of the Advisory Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments up to the amount of 10,720,000 United States dollars gross (10,396,000 dollars net) for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1993 to 31 March 1994;

(b) Decided that no assessment on Member States would be necessary in the light of the current cash balance in the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force.

General Assembly decision 48/463

Adopted without vote

Territories occupied by Israel

The Palestine territory and other Arab territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflicts in the Middle East comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic. The inhabitants of those territories, which in 1993 had been under Israeli occupation for more than a quarter of a century, continued to reject the occupation as a permanent fact, which was manifested by the widespread uprising (intifadah) that persisted during the year. Israel's policies and actions in the territories remained under constant monitoring by the Committee on Israeli practices, whose reports in 1993 reflected a critically tense situation and a high level of violence engendered by the uprising and Israel's suppression of it by military force and collective punishment, including mass deportations of Palestinians despite political breakthroughs at the negotiation table between Israel and PLO.

Transmitting the report of the Committee, the Chairman stated that the civilian population of the occupied territories continued to suffer a heavy toll of casualties due to the disproportionately harsh and violent methods employed by the Israeli authorities to repress the popular Palestinian uprising. Those measures resulted in an increased loss of life and severe injuries among civilians, including small children who clearly represented no security threat.⁽¹⁾ According to the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights,⁽²⁾ the total number of Palestinians killed as a result of shooting, beating and tear-gas from the beginning of the intifadah in December 1987⁽³⁾ up to August 1993 had risen to 1,240, approximately 25 per cent of whom were children under 16 years of age.

The continued deployment of Israeli undercover units, a further relaxation of the rules for opening fire and the use of live ammunition as well as rubber and plastic-coated bullets led to a greater than 180 per cent increase in fatalities among children alone. At the end of 1992, IDF started to carry out a new form of collective punishment, which consisted of destroying entire neighbourhoods with heavy artillery fire during searches for wanted persons. A number of such operations aimed at capturing a single fugitive left scores of innocent people homeless.

The increase in violence in both the territories and Israel, specifically the killing of an Israeli in the Nissanit settlement in Gaza on 28 March and the killing of two Israeli policemen inside Israel on 30 March, led Israeli authorities to impose a complete closure of the territories on 31 March, which virtually divided them into five distinct areas, namely: Gaza, the northern West Bank, the southern West Bank, Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan Heights. The closure created unprecedented hardship to the population of the territories, the majority of whom already lived below the poverty line. It also deprived approximately 120,000 persons of their means of livelihood, as they were suddenly cut off from $2.75 million per day in wages previously earned in Israel. As special permits were required for entry into Jerusalem and Israel as well as for travel between the West Bank and Gaza and within the West Bank itself, the measure had a seriously negative impact on commerce, medical care, education and access to services, including those provided by UNRWA, according to the Secretary-General's report on assistance to the Palestinian people.⁽⁴⁾ In some areas, roadblocks created enclaves, depriving Palestinians living in them of access to their families, work, schools, medical facilities, utility services and places to worship in Jerusalem.

Commerce was rendered virtually impossible, and agriculture was similarly affected by the drop in consumer income, the closure of external markets and the division of the territories itself. Unemployment rose to nearly 60 per cent in Gaza and to almost that level in the West Bank during April and May, as noted in the annual report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA.⁽⁵⁾ Palestinians began liquidating savings and selling personal belongings to purchase food, pay debts and cover rents.

Freedom of movement was further restricted by the continued practice of imposing prolonged curfews on refugee camps and entire localities. Many families requested urgent food aid. In addition, difficulty and delay in obtaining permits to circulate from one area to the other prevented numerous farmers from reaching the markets for their products. The closure had a negative bearing on the health situation in the territories, since the most important medical facilities serving Palestinians were located in Jerusalem. It was felt in the education sector as students were prevented from attending classes in areas in which they did not reside, with more than 25 per cent of them unable to register in schools and universities despite the prolongation of registration periods. Those limitations furthermore negatively affected access to both Christian and Muslim holy sites.

1993, closed the Hebron-based Al Zahra Press Service for six months on charges that seditious material had been found on its premises. Journalists were often harassed, beaten or arrested when covering confrontations between Palestinians and Israeli soldiers. On the positive side, however, military authorities in June issued licences for a new Palestinian weekly and a new daily to be distributed in Jerusalem and the West Bank.

The administration of justice continued to be a source of concern, as it was characterized by a lack of due process of laws and the frequent absence of basic legal safeguards for the Arab population. In addition, the practice of torture and ill-treatment during interrogation and even after sentencing continued. It was revealed that physicians were required to examine prisoners for the purpose of determining whether they were physically fit for certain types of interrogation practices.

The General Assembly, in four resolutions adopted in December, demanded that Israel desist from taking any measures or actions in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, that were in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention, determining them to be illegal and without validity; demanded that Israel facilitate the return of all deported Palestinians and accelerate the release of all Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned; and reaffirmed that the Israeli settlements were illegal and an obstacle to peace (48/41 C). It demanded that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention in those territories, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 (48/41 B), and expressed the hope that, in the light of the recent positive political developments, those policies and practices of Israel which violated the human rights of Palestinians and other Arabs there would be brought to an immediate end (48/41 A). The Assembly also condemned Israel's persistence in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan, in particular the establishment of settlements, and determined that all measures and actions by Israel purporting to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan were null and void (48/41 D). In addition, both the Economic and Social Council (1993/52) and the Assembly (48/212) recognized the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on Palestinians and deplored Israel's confiscation of land, appropriation of water resources, depletion of other economic resources and displacement and deportation of the population of the territories, reaffirming the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the population of the occupied Syrian Golan to their natural and all other economic resources, any infringement thereof being without legal validity.

Earlier, in February, the Commission on Human Rights adopted five resolutions relating to the occupied territories, specifically on: the situation in occupied Palestine,⁽⁶⁾ Israeli settlements,⁽⁷⁾ human rights violations⁽⁸⁾ and human rights in the Syrian Golan⁽⁹⁾ (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

Numerous communications addressed to the Secretary-General throughout 1993 drew attention to an escalation of Israeli acts of repression that caused many casualties and resulted in a dangerously deteriorating security situation in the occupied territories. The reported incidents involved the killing and wounding of Palestinians, including women, youth and children, by Israeli armed forces and settlers. In those communications, the Permanent Observer of Palestine⁽¹⁰⁾ as well as the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights⁽¹¹⁾ appealed urgently and repeatedly to the Security Council to ensure the protection of Palestinians in accordance with resolution 681(1990).⁽¹²⁾

In view of the serious situation, Egypt, chairing the Group of Arab States, on 22 March⁽¹³⁾ requested a formal meeting of the Security Council.

Israel, on the other hand, on 29 March⁽¹⁴⁾ stated that militant Islamic fundamentalist groups, such as Hamas and the Islamic Jihad, as well as PLO, had blazed a trail of bloodshed and violence as a diversion away from the road towards reconciliation and peace. Meanwhile, Palestinians, resorting to stabbings, shootings and stonings, had stepped up their campaign of iniquity. It noted that Palestinians were also targeted, 864 of them having been killed since the start of the intifadah and 2,242 injured by fellow Palestinians. On 2 July,⁽¹⁵⁾ Israel, giving an account of an attack against a bus at the northern entrance to Jerusalem, expressed its commitment to doing its utmost to promote the peace process, despite provocations and terrorist attacks.

Reports of the Committee on Israeli practices. As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices in 1993 presented three periodic reports—in April,⁽¹⁷⁾ August⁽¹⁸⁾ and November⁽¹⁾—covering developments in the occupied territories between 27 August 1992 and 27 August 1993. The reports incorporated excerpts or details of written information from various sources, including individuals, organizations and the Israeli and Arab press; oral testimonies of 42 persons with first-hand experience of the human rights situation in the territories, obtained through hearings conducted between 28 April and 7 May at Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic), Amman (Jordan) and Cairo (Egypt); and official Israeli statements reflecting Israel's policies in the territories, as well as reports on measures taken to implement them.

On the basis of the information placed before it, the Committee concluded⁽¹⁾ that the situation of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms for Palestinians and other Arabs in the occupied territories continued to be critical. In violation of its obligations as a State party to the fourth Geneva Convention, Israel continued to implement its policy based on the consideration that the territories it had occupied since 1967 constituted a part of the State of Israel, and persistently imposed its laws, jurisdiction and administration on them. It pursued a policy of annexation which resulted in the expropriation of land, the diversion of water resources, the uprooting of trees and the building of an infrastructure of roads linking settlements. Although Israeli authorities suggested a shift in budget allocations away from settlements, the expansion of existing ones continued.

Detailing its observations, the Committee noted that Israel had been implementing unproportionally harsh measures to quell the uprising and resistance to occupation. It was concerned by the increasing fatalities of innocent civilians, particularly small children, as the result of indiscriminate and random shooting by Israeli troops. Numerous persons who were killed had not been involved in violent actions but were simply bystanders. According to B'tselem, the Israeli Information Centre for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, 125 Palestinians were killed during the first nine months of the new Israeli administration of Yitzhak Rabin, as opposed to 79 during the last nine months of the Shamir Government. The number of children killed during the first six months of the current Government represented a 180 per cent increase in comparison with the corresponding period of the previous administration. In a report published in the Jerusalem Post on 18 May, B'tselem maintained that more youths under 16 (a total of 34) had been killed between 9 December 1992 and 16 May 1993 than in any corresponding period during the past five years. The pronounced increase in the number of deaths among the civilian population was attributed to an additional modification of instructions issued to soldiers regarding rules for opening fire. On 31 March, Ha'aretz and the Jerusalem Post reported the implementation of new measures by the army, which included the opening of fire without warning at armed Palestinians. According to instructions issued by the IDF Judge Advocate-General's office, soldiers and other security personnel were now authorized to shoot Palestinians carrying guns even if they did not actually threaten to open fire at them, and in all cases of riots.

During the reporting period, Israel implemented on a large scale new and particularly harsh measures of collective punishment. Entire blocks of houses and apartments in which wanted persons were suspected to be hiding were destroyed in the search for such persons. Those measures were completely disproportionate to the alleged offence, as they affected several unrelated houses or neighbourhoods at a time. At incidents in both Gaza and the West Bank, the army shelled entire neighbourhoods with heavy artillery fire, including anti-tank missiles and attacks from helicopters. The reason invoked was to avoid Israeli soldiers' finding themselves in a life-threatening situation while searching for fugitives. Many houses were looted during those operations or destroyed by mistake.

Proclaiming the closure of the territories on 31 March, Israel denied all Palestinian-owned vehicles the right of entry into them. Palestinians were forbidden to stay overnight and were subject to a $358 fine if caught. Those restrictions had particularly severe repercussions on health services, since the principal hospitals serving the territories were located in East Jerusalem. In April, Palestinians were reportedly denied access to the only hospital for registered refugees (August Victoria), to the largest and most advanced hospital in the territories (Makassed) and to the area's only ophthalmological hospital (St. John's), all of which were located in East Jerusalem. The closure left approximately 120,000 Palestinians and Arabs without work, and numerous Palestinians who used to work inside Israel were not remunerated for their work during March, compounding an already serious economic situation resulting from the replacement of Arab workers in Israel by new immigrants and the significant decrease in transfers of funds from Palestinians abroad in the aftermath of the Gulf war. The loss of earnings for the population of the territories was estimated at $100 million for April alone. In June, 50,000 residents of Gaza reportedly received food and financial aid from the Israeli Civil Administration. The dire circumstances caused the European Union on 9 July to announce that it would send $2.82 million worth of urgent food aid to Palestinian families in Gaza.

Deliberate economic pressure, which included the uprooting of trees, tax raids and administrative harassment, continued to be applied. The uneven application of laws and preferential treatment of Israeli companies reduced the competitiveness and number of Palestinian enterprises and factories. Unlike settlers, the population of the territories was systematically denied access to water resources and permission to repair old artesian wells and drill new ones. The systematic diversion of water led, especially in Gaza, to its scarcity. The problem of insufficient water was often tied to its excessive use by settlers who were not subjected to any quantitative restrictions, which resulted in an ecological imbalance and increased water salinity, making it unfit for domestic consumption and unsuitable for the cultivation of certain crops.

In view of these policies, the Committee on Israeli practices once again stressed the need for urgent measures to ensure effective protection of the basic rights and freedoms of the inhabitants of the territories. Pending a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, it recommended: full application by Israel of the fourth Geneva Convention, the main international instrument of humanitarian law applicable to the territories; full compliance with all resolutions relevant to the Palestine question adopted by the United Nations and by ILO, UNESCO and WHO; full Israeli cooperation with ICRC in its efforts to gain access to and protect detained persons; full support by member States of ICRC activities on behalf of the unprecedentedly increasing number of detained persons, as well as of UNRWA activities on behalf of the refugee population; and full respect by the Israeli authorities of UNRWA's privileges and immunities. The Committee further recommended renewed efforts by Member States to convince Israel of the need for increased human rights protection through international monitoring, inter alia by granting it access to the territories; and full recognition of the need to give priority consideration in the peace negotiations to protection of the population's basic rights.

Consideration by the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights,⁽²⁾ while welcoming the positive developments between Israel and PLO, remained greatly concerned at the continued grave situation in the occupied Palestinian territories and called on Israel to recognize the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention, implement its provisions immediately, and restore respect for human rights. In particular, it called on Israel to end the shooting of unarmed demonstrators by IDF and its undercover activities, which had resulted in many summary executions; to release all political prisoners and detainees; and to end the imposition of collective punishments such as curfews, closures of the territories, the destruction or sealing of houses and the deportation of Palestinians, calling for the return of all those deported since 1967. It further called on Israel, pending its complete withdrawal from the territories, including Jerusalem, immediately to end its confiscation of Palestinian land and its settlement activities, including the building of roads and control over water resources, and to repeal military orders restricting political, economic and social activities by Palestinians.

Reports reaching the Committee left no doubt that the continuation of occupation, buttressed by armed force, increasingly endangered the very fabric of Palestinian society and its livelihood, and resulted in grave human rights violations. In this context, the Committee welcomed the appointment by the Commission on Human Rights of a Special Rapporteur mandated to investigate Israel's violations of the principles and bases of international law, international humanitarian law and the fourth Geneva Convention (see PART THREE, Chapter X). Also reported was the continuation of repressive measures by the occupation forces and armed settlers despite the ongoing peace process and the election of a new Israeli Government in 1992. The Committee expressed great concern that the number of Palestinians killed by the armed forces or their agents following the killings of Israelis had risen sharply in the year under review. Since the beginning of the intifadah⁽³⁾ until August 1993, the total number of Palestinian casualties by shooting, beating or tear-gas had risen to 1,240, while 130,000 were estimated to have been injured.

The Committee noted an intensification of the campaign by the previous Israeli Government to pursue persons declared as "wanted" by the authorities, primarily through increased harassment of their families, increased use of large-scale military operations using excessive force and the application of Israel's military order No. 1076 of April 1992, which permitted a seven-year prison term without trial for failure to respond to a summons, as well as the widespread use of undercover units engaged in extrajudicial killings. Military assaults against the homes of fugitives, using large-calibre machine-gun ammunition, anti-tank missiles and dynamite, took place in February and April in Gaza, thereby rendering hundreds of Palestinians homeless. The Committee furthermore deplored that in October, after the signing of the Declaration of Principles, a similar attack took place, in which the homes of another 18 families in Gaza were blasted. Human rights organizations reported that from the intifadah's beginning to August 1993, more than 2,400 homes had been demolished or sealed, over 166,000 trees had been uprooted, and curfews had been imposed in more than 12,000 instances.

According to the Committee, the closure in March of the West Bank, including Jerusalem, and Gaza had a particularly negative effect on the Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem, who became almost totally isolated and deprived of any freedom of movement.

The Committee also observed with the greatest concern the rapid worsening of the environmental situation in the territories, due mostly to over-exploitation by Israeli authorities and settlers of the water resources, the lack of an adequate waste management system and the destruction of thousands of olive and fruit trees. Contamination and degradation of the environment reached especially severe proportions in the overpopulated Gaza Strip, where the problem acquired crisis dimensions representing a direct health threat to the population, especially children.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October 1993(19) that Israel had not replied to his July request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1992 Assembly resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ demanding inter alia that Israel allow the Committee on Israeli practices access to the occupied territories and condemning certain Israeli policies and practices there. He also drew the attention of States and international organizations, including the specialized agencies, to the Assembly's call not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, that might be used by Israel in its annexation or other policies.

The Secretary-General noted that, in response to the resolution's request that he ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Committee and of information on its activities and findings, DPI continued to provide press coverage of all meetings of the Special Committee on Israeli practices and of the Commission on Human Rights, published stories relating to Palestinian issues in the UN Chronicle, covered various aspects of the Palestine question in weekly radio news and feature programmes, continued distributing its booklet Life of Palestinians under Israeli Occupation⁽²⁰⁾ and publicized the Committee's 1993 mission to the Middle East. (For further details on DPI activities, see above, under "Public information activities".)

In the Fourth Committee, Israel said the draft resolutions based on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, though somewhat modified, ignored the recently signed Declaration of Principles and disregarded the understandings reached. Moreover, they touched on the subjects of boundaries, settlements and Jerusalem, which should properly be discussed only in the negotiations stipulated in the Declaration. The resolutions under consideration prejudged the outcome of the negotiations. Since the Committee on Israeli practices was established in 1968 in an atmosphere of open hostility, it should be disbanded and the resolutions based on its reports discontinued.

Fourth Geneva Convention

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its November 1993 report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices underlined that the fourth Geneva Convention stipulated that military occupation was to be considered a temporary, de facto situation giving no right whatsoever to the occupying Power over the territorial integrity of the territories it occupied. The Israeli authorities, however, continued to pursue their policy of annexation, which resulted in the expropriation of land, diversion of water resources, uprooting of trees and building of an infrastructure of roads linking its settlements, in violation of the Convention. Thus, the Committee recommended full application by Israel of the Convention as the main international instrument of humanitarian law applicable to the territories, which had been repeatedly reaffirmed by the Security Council, the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations organs.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1993,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his April request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1992 Assembly resolution⁽²²⁾ demanding that it accept the de jure applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention and comply with its provisions in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories it had occupied since 1967.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/41 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Stressing that Israel, the occupying Power, should strictly comply with its obligations under international law,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Demands that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and that it comply scrupulously with the provisions of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention, in accordance with article 1 common to the four Geneva Conventions, to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for its provisions by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Expulsion and deportation of Palestinians

As the latest incident in a series of expulsions and deportations, Israel had, on 17 December 1992,⁽²³⁾ expelled on alleged security grounds 415 Palestinians, in violation of article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention, from the occupied territories to Marj al Zahour in its so-called security zone in southern Lebanon, apparently in punishment for the recent killing of an Israeli soldier. The deportation was to be for a period of two years. On the following day, the Security Council adopted resolution 799(1992),⁽²⁴⁾ by which it demanded the immediate return to the territories of all those deported. It was not before December 1993 that Israel heeded the Council's demand and allowed the return of the last remaining deportees.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to resolution 799(1992), the Secretary-General on 25 January submitted a report⁽²⁵⁾ on developments in the deportation case. He had informed Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of his decision to send the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, James Jonah, to the region, and expressed hope that a solution would be achieved in conformity with the position unanimously adopted by the Security Council.

The Under-Secretary-General visited the area from 27 to 30 December 1992. While in Israel, he held extensive discussions with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and the Foreign Minister. In Jerusalem, he met with a group of Palestinians, led by Faisal Hussein, the head of the Palestinian delegation to the peace talks with Israel. In Lebanon, he convened with President Elias Hrawi and Prime Minister Rafik Hariri, as well as with the Minister of Health and Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, Marwan Hamadieh. Although he was prevented from meeting with the deportees themselves, the Under-Secretary-General met with representatives of their families, at their request, as well as with Israeli families who had suffered from acts of terrorism. In addition, he was briefed by representatives of UNIFIL and UNRWA, it being noted that 16 of the deportees were UNRWA staff members.

On 2 January 1993, Mr. Jonah briefed the Secretary-General in Addis Ababa on his discussions in the region, which had been inconclusive because it had not proved possible to persuade Israel to fulfil its obligations under resolution 799(1992). The Secretary-General subsequently informed Prime Minister Rabin of his intention to deploy a second mission, led by his Special Political Adviser and representative to the multilateral Middle East talks, Under-Secretary-General Chinmaya Gharekhan, in order to achieve a solution in accordance with the will of the Security Council. On 4 January, the Secretary-General conveyed to the Council President that an important principle was at stake, as Israel's deportation of 415 Palestinian civilians was illegal under international law, in contravention of the fourth Geneva Convention and in fundamental disregard of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽²⁶⁾ as well as of repeated Council resolutions, most recently resolution 799(1992). The Secretary-General regretted that Mr. Jonah's mission had been unsuccessful, which was attributable to Israel's non-compliance with that resolution. Recalling the unanimous and unequivocal position taken by the Council in that resolution, he said there was no alternative to the safe and immediate return to the territories of all those deported. If Israel did not recognize the need to comply with resolution 799(1992), he might have to recommend that the Council consider taking further steps to ensure respect for its decision.

The Secretary-General briefed Mr. Gharekhan at Cairo on 6 January about his renewed mission, stressing that, in his discussions with Israel, he should focus solely on implementation of resolution 799(1992). While the United Nations was concerned over the humanitarian plight of the deportees, this aspect was not addressed by the Council. Rather, it was appropriate for ICRC, which under the fourth Geneva Convention had special responsibility for civilians under occupation, to address the humanitarian needs of the deportees.

Visiting Israel from 7 to 12 January, Under-Secretary-General Gharekhan conferred extensively with Israeli authorities, including the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister. The Prime Minister emphasized that the "temporary expulsion" could not be rescinded. The decision had been taken in the light of acts of violence by supporters of the Hamas and Islamic Jihad movements against Israeli citizens, which had culminated in the kidnapping and murder of an Israeli border policeman. He mentioned that a number of petitions had been filed with the Israeli High Court of Justice, including one that challenged the legality of the deportation decision which, unlike previous ones, did not stem from the British Mandatory Emergency Regulations of 1945. Should the High Court rule that the decision was illegal, the deportees would be returned. Otherwise, each expelled individual had the right to appeal. In Israel's opinion, the expulsion orders were not inconsistent with the position taken by the Security Council. All those deported would be permitted to return, as requested by the Council; the only difference was regarding the timing. Each deportee had been informed, at the time of his expulsion, of the period he would have to remain away. If the Council were to adopt measures against Israel, it might lead to a collapse of the peace process, for which the Council would be held responsible.

For his part, Mr. Gharekhan underlined that the objective of his mission was to find a solution in accordance with resolution 799(1992). If Israel failed to fulfil its obligations under that resolution, the Secretary-General would have no choice but to submit an unambiguous report to the Security Council as a follow-up to his 4 January communication to its President. He firmly rejected the view that the Council could be held responsible for a collapse in the Middle East peace process. Should such an eventuality arise, Israel alone would be responsible. Israel could place the deportees in prison or under administrative detention, which, at least, would not violate the fourth Geneva Convention. During his visit to Jerusalem, Mr. Gharekhan met, at their request, with a representative group of Palestinians led by Faisal Hussein, who said that unless the deportees were permitted to return, the Palestinian delegation would not resume peace talks with Israel.

While his mission did not concern humanitarian matters, the Under-Secretary-General conferred twice with the head of the ICRC delegation at Tel Aviv, who briefed him on the visit of ICRC to the deportees on 9 January, which had been agreed to on a one-time basis by Lebanon, Israel and UNIFIL. The ICRC delegate and the medical doctor conducting the visit had decided, and were given permission by Israel, to evacuate two deportees on humanitarian grounds. One, a 16-year-old boy, had been expelled "by mistake", while the other was evacuated for medical reasons.

On 13 January, the Secretary-General met in Paris with the Israeli Foreign Minister, reiterating to him the need for Israel to comply immediately with the Security Council decision. On the following day, agreement was reached with the Prime Minister to send Mr. Gharekhan again to Jerusalem in a further effort to secure implementation of resolution 799(1992).

During the Under-Secretary-General's return trip to Israel, from 19 to 22 January, he again met with the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister. In the meantime, the Israeli High Court, on 17 January, had begun consideration of the appeal challenging the deportation order's legality. As at the date of the present report, the Court hearings were continuing. Mr. Gharekhan again received a group of Palestinians who expressed support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and demanded implementation of resolution 799(1992) without delay. The Palestinians reiterated their position that they could not take part in the peace talks unless the deportation issue was resolved.

Summing up his observations, the Secretary-General underlined that in order to understand fully the gravity of the situation addressed in resolution 799(1992), it was important to recall that the deportations of 17 December 1992 were only the most recent in a series of Israeli violations of the fourth Geneva Convention. To ensure the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation, he intended to initiate discussions with Israel regarding the establishment of a United Nations monitoring mechanism in the occupied territories, as suggested by the Council in resolution 681(1990).⁽¹²⁾ The Palestinians' need for safety and protection had to be met regardless of progress in the peace talks.

Israel's refusal to ensure the safe and immediate return of the deportees challenged, in the Secretary-General's view, the authority of the Security Council. Additionally, there was a growing perception throughout the international community that the Council, by not pressing for Israeli compliance, did not attach equal importance to the implementation of all of its decisions. In these circumstances, he would be failing in his duty by not recommending that the Council take whatever measures were required to ensure that its unanimous decision, as set out in resolution 799(1992), was respected. The developments outlined above underscored the need to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East peace, and the international community should spare no effort in its pursuit of a settlement. For his own part, the Secretary-General remained committed to doing everything possible to help in that endeavour.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The Committee on Israeli practices⁽¹⁾ reported that, as at August 1993, 396 deportees still remained at the Marj al Zahour tent camp.

On 28 January, Israel's High Court of Justice had ruled the expulsion order to be invalid but indicated that Israel was not obliged to return the deportees and allowed the order to remain in force because of an emergency mandatory regulation providing for individual deportations. The judges concluded that the deportations amounted to 415 individual expulsions, with each man deported on the basis of evidence brought against him. The Committee emphasized, however, that under article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention, individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, were prohibited, regardless of their motive. On 1 February, the Israeli Government voted unanimously to allow some 100 selected deportees to return and reduced the duration of expulsion of those remaining by half. The deportees refused this "package deal", and 396 remained at the Marj al Zahour camp; but in August, they accepted Israel's offer to allow them to return from exile in two stages.

In another case, Israel announced on 28 April that it would allow 30 long-term Palestinian deportees to return to the territories, of whom the first 15 returned on 30 April, with the rest returning on 3 May.

Consideration by the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights, extremely concerned by the deportation of the 415 Palestinians, on 21 January adopted a statement⁽²⁷⁾ by which it strongly condemned that action as contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention and numerous Security Council resolutions. The Committee noted that the deportees were enduring extremely harsh conditions, being exposed to winter weather and lacking adequate food, water and medical care. They also faced the threat of possible violent actions, including artillery shelling, from Israeli or Israeli-controlled forces. The Committee called on the Security Council to take all necessary measures, including the application of Chapter VII of the Charter, to bring about the implementation of resolution 799(1992). It again urgently appealed to the Council to provide protection to Palestinians in the territories, including Jerusalem, in accordance with the fourth Geneva Convention, and in particular with resolution 681(1990).⁽¹⁵⁾

In its November report,⁽²⁾ the Committee expressed the view that in spite of having permitted some of the deportees to return to their homes, Israel had yet to implement resolution 799(1992).⁽²⁴⁾

Communications. In a memorandum⁽²⁸⁾ of 8 January to the Secretary-General on the December 1992 deportations by Israel and Israeli deportations as a whole, the Permanent Observer of Palestine stated that, as the deportees, who had been blindfolded and bound and driven in buses to Israel's northern border, tried to return on foot, they were prevented from doing so by shooting and shelling directed at them by the Israeli army. Such shelling was repeated several times at later dates. He noted that the situation of the deportees was deteriorating due to the harshness of weather and a lack of all essentials, including water, medicine and foodstuffs. A number of them had become sick and several were injured. Meanwhile, Israel rejected a formal request by ICRC to provide the deportees with the essential materials through Israel's borders. According to the memorandum, Israel had deported some 2,500 Palestinian civilians since 1967. The Permanent Observer concluded that the deportation was illegal under international law and the fourth Geneva Convention, in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽²⁶⁾ and all other human rights instruments and standards, as well as applicable domestic law. The deportation of December 1992 also constituted a form of collective punishment, which had a detrimental effect on the peace process and which could not succeed as long as that situation was not brought to an end. He emphasized that the Security Council was duty-bound to compel Israel to abide by its obligations under Article 25 of the Charter and to guarantee respect for international law. PLO called on the Council to adopt a new resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter to ensure Israel's acceptance and implementation of resolution 799(1992).

On 4 February,⁽²⁹⁾ the Permanent Observer brought to the Secretary-General's attention statements reportedly made by Prime Minister Rabin to the Israeli Parliament to the effect that an "agreement" had been negotiated between Israel and the United States on the deportation issue. The New York Times had quoted the Prime Minister as saying that "his agreement with the United States to bring back a quarter of the 400 Palestinians banished to Lebanon had preserved his right to deport hundreds of more people in the future". Such an "agreement", PLO said, was not in accordance with resolution 799(1992), and its acceptance would be tantamount to legitimizing deportation. It called on the Council to consider immediately the Secretary-General's January report⁽²⁵⁾ on the matter and keep it actively under review, a demand which was reiterated on 16 February.⁽³⁰⁾

Israel informed the Secretary-General on 9 February⁽³¹⁾ of a government decision of 1 February which allowed the return of 101 Palestinians to the locations from which they had been temporarily deported. Those returning would be persons whose circumstances surrounding their temporary deportation were relatively less severe in comparison to others. Also, the military commanders would be instructed to reduce by one half the term of deportation of those still remaining under the deportation order. With regard to them, the decisions of the Supreme Court were to be carried out, including their right to appeal before an advisory committee and contact with an attorney, in addition to a review of the security information concerning those who did not appeal. The delivery of necessary humanitarian provisions to the deportees would be allowed by helicopter. Israel noted that this decision provided for the return of all excluded persons before the end of 1993.

Accordingly, Israel reported, on 20 December,⁽³²⁾ the phased return of the deportees during the year. In January and February, 19 deportees who were either ill or mistakenly expelled were returned. On 1 February, Israel decided to allow the return of 101 Palestinians to their original locations, and to reduce by one half the term of exclusion for those against whom the deportation orders remained in force. However, the deportees whose exclusion was lifted chose not to return at that time. On 9 September, 181 persons were allowed to return, and on 15 December, the remaining 215 deportees were allowed to do so, of whom 197 returned while 18 chose not to.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General informed the General Assembly in October 1993⁽³³⁾ that no reply had been received from Israel to his note verbale of April requesting information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1992 Assembly demand⁽³⁴⁾ that Israel rescind the illegal deportation of Palestinians and facilitate their immediate return.

Palestinian detainees

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The Committee on Israeli practices in November⁽¹⁾ reported that the status and treatment of Arab prisoners in Israeli custody continued to be critical. Detainees were still subjected in a systematic manner to various forms of both physical and psychological torture and ill-treatment, such as long periods in isolation cells, uninterrupted interrogation sessions, food and sleep deprivation, denial of use of sanitary facilities, having to remain in uncomfortable positions for long periods, confinement in refrigerated rooms with cold water poured over them and having their heads covered with sacks. According to statistics on 500 local residents, over 96 per cent reported having been subjected to various forms of torture while in prison or detention, for periods ranging from 6 months to 10 years (Ha'aretz and Jerusalem Post, 9 June). It was revealed that doctors examining security detainees had to sign a form declaring that prisoners were medically fit to be chained and blindfolded (Jerusalem Post, 14 June).

Deaths in custody and suicides of prisoners continued to occur. Ayman Nasser, a 23-year-old member of the Fatah Hawks, died on 3 April in Barzilai Hospital as a result of lung damage and septic shock reportedly caused by smoke inhalation and injuries sustained during his arrest on 20 March and the ensuing extensive interrogation. He was said to have been beaten, handcuffed, hooded and subjected to food and sleep deprivation and did not receive adequate medical care in time. On 15 February, a 34-year-old security prisoner was found hanging in his cell in Beersheba prison after having served almost eight years of his 18-year sentence.

Consideration by the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights in November⁽²⁾ noted with concern that approximately 14,000 Palestinian political prisoners were still being held in Israeli prisons and detention camps, many of whom were in administrative detention without having been brought to trial. Reports of inhuman conditions in jails and mistreatment of prisoners included beatings and torture. The Committee observed with alarm that 14 Palestinians had died in custody since the beginning of the intifadah in 1987.⁽³⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October 1993⁽³⁵⁾ that Israel had not replied to his April request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement an Assembly resolution of 1992⁽³⁶⁾ calling on it to release all Palestinians and other Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Israeli measures against educational institutions

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In November,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices reported that the closure on 31 March of the occupied territories by Israel had had adverse consequences on education since more than 25 per cent of the students there were unable to register at universities or attend classes. Students living in a location different from that of their educational facility were denied permits to commute, while many were unable even to register despite the extension of registration periods. Children whose parents were residents of different localities were at times denied education altogether. The Committee was also informed of the persistent lack of appropriate educational infrastructure, manifested in a severe shortage of classrooms, buildings that failed to meet the requisite standards and extremely short teaching hours due to overcrowding and inadequate teaching conditions.

The Committee was informed of the closure on 21 November 1992 by IDF of the UNRWA Technical Training Centre in Gaza for one month because its students were celebrating the declaration of independence of the Palestinian State. The Gaza Secondary School was ordered closed for the same reason. On 5 April 1993, the Hashimiya Secondary School for Boys was closed for two weeks following student protests. As a positive development, the Committee noted the opening on 4 October 1992 of the first four-year college in Gaza.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General informed the General Assembly in October 1993⁽³⁷⁾ that no reply had been received from Israel in response to his note verbale of April requesting information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1992 Assembly demand⁽³⁸⁾ that it rescind all actions and measures against educational institutions, ensure their freedom and refrain from hindering their effective operation.

Golan Heights

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The Syrian Arab Republic provided the Committee on Israeli practices⁽¹⁾ with information on the situation in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights. It referred to the lack of most health and educational services and the neglect of public utilities, which had led to a constant deterioration of the situation in the villages. Israeli settlements were given names derived from the Torah, and Arabic signboards were replaced with Hebrew and English ones, which revealed attempts to endow that territory with a Hebrew identity and the intention to perpetuate the Israeli occupation. Many archaeological sites were reportedly destroyed as a result of military manoeuvres by IDF, which used various types of explosives and armour-piercing shells. Israeli agricultural exploitation continued to be characterized by the expropriation of land and the seizure and exploitation of water resources. While the Arab population was prohibited from drilling new wells or even using old ones, Israeli authorities drilled numerous wells for the benefit of the settlements. As to educational affairs, Arab students were forced to learn Hebrew as a basic subject and therefore had to study three languages, to the detriment of scientific and social subjects. In health services, there was a shortage of all types of first-aid facilities and of medical specialists. Israel furthermore did not abandon its attempts to impose compulsory conscription on young Arabs and enlist them in the ranks of the very army which occupied their land.

The Committee also observed the pursuance by Israel of its policy of annexation and settlements in the Golan Heights. In addition to the expropriation of land, its inhabitants were coerced into selling land at prices considerably lower than its real value.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1993,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his April request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement a 1992 Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ condemning the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Golan and calling on it to desist from repressive measures against the population there.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 48/41 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984, 40/161 F of 16 December 1985, 41/63 F of 3 December 1986, 42/160 F of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 F of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989, 44/48 F of 8 December 1989, 45/74 F of 11 December 1990, 46/47 F of 9 December 1991 and 47/70 F of 14 December 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 29 October 1993,

Recalling further its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of the decision of 14 December 1981 taken by Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, Reaffirming the applicability of the Convention to the occupied Syrian Golan, Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

1. Condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan, and in particular Security Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Also condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and in particular the establishment of settlements;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Denounces attempts by Israel forcibly to impose Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the occupied Syrian Golan;

5. Deplores the violations by Israel of the Convention;

6. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israeli settlements

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

In its November 1993 report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Israeli practices noted that, although Israel had pledged not to build any new settlements, the expansion of existing ones was pursued. At the settlements of Asfad, Enab, Kfar Sifar, Kiryat, Kiryat Sefer, Ma'aleh Adumim, Ma'ali Amos, Moshav Ganai Tal, Ofra, Sweish and Takoa, the construction of 1,800 new housing units reportedly began on 6 July. According to Al-Tali'ah of 11 March, 43 settlements were being expanded, with those activities being especially intensive in the district of Bethlehem, followed by Nablus and Tulkarm. Although the Committee received no evidence that new settlements had been established since the new Rabin Government took office, Al-Tali'ah reported on 1 July that work was under way for the construction of a new settlement to be named Talmoun 4.

The Council of Jewish Communities in the West Bank and Gaza indicated that 127,000 Jews were already living in settlements. Ha'aretz and the Jerusalem Post reported on 1 December 1992 that according to a demographic study by the Peace Now movement, 144 settlements existed in the territories. Another survey indicated new settlement activities under the Rabin Government, in addition to the pledged completion of 11,000 housing units. Some 277,000 dunums of land were confiscated during the first five years of the intifadah, and the total of confiscated land amounted to 3,700,944 dunums. Those figures represented, at the end of 1992, 63 per cent of the total land surface in the West Bank and 44 per cent in Gaza.

The period under consideration was marked by frequent acts of violence and aggression by settlers against Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories. Jewish settlers engaged in and on occasion stepped up indiscriminate attacks against individuals and raided villages and refugee camps, wantonly destroying Arab-owned property, as well as places of worship, and uprooting trees. According to witness testimony before the Committee, Israeli settlers stormed the Al Akkad Mosque in Khan Younis on 29 March and burnt it down. On 11 April, the mosque of Al Bureij was desecrated, and four days later the mosque of Al Isslah in the Shejaya district was profaned.

Consideration by the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights noted in November⁽²⁾ that construction in the critical area of greater Jerusalem proceeded apace, with the Government considering ambitious plans to link the city centre with the southern block of settlements. Among those plans was completing the Jerusalem-Efrat highway, an estimated $42 million project intended to link the Jerusalem suburb of Gilo with the Etzion block of settlements and to benefit the economic development of Jerusalem's so-called "bedroom suburbs". The Committee reaffirmed that those settlement policies and practices were in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General informed the General Assembly in October 1993⁽³⁾ that no reply had been received from Israel to his April request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1992 Assembly demand⁽⁴⁾ that it desist from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the territories.

Economic and social repercussions of Israeli settlements

In a report of July 1993,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General highlighted the economic and social consequences of the establishment of settlements by Israel in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, as well as in the Syrian Golan. Prepared in response to a General Assembly request of 1992,⁽⁶⁾ the report was submitted to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

According to the report, settlers were encouraged to settle in the territories through financial and tax incentives offered by the Government. Loans were more concessionary, infrastructure was provided free of charge and taxes were substantially discounted. The New York Times had reported in 1990 that settlers who built their own houses received the land virtually for free, while more than 50 per cent of the mortgage was interest-free. In addition, the Jewish Agency reported that the Government provided contractor subsidies that included interim financing for construction, a grant of 50 per cent of the cost of development (some $20,000 per housing unit), and a government guarantee of partial purchase of apartments not sold. The Government also provided buyer subsidies, under which the average mortgage for a family of three in development areas amounted to $32,000.

A report by UNCTAD⁽⁴⁵⁾ was cited as stating that the new "Stars Plan" settlement programme envisaged the establishment of a dozen new settlements, including many in the northern West Bank along its pre-1967 border with Israel. Another important plan under implementation was the continued expansion of Maaleh Adumin, which recently became the first Israeli "city" in the occupied territories. Its extension was intended to link up with settlements encircling East Jerusalem and with other settlements planned for construction west of the Palestinian city of Jericho. Israeli officials reportedly said that their settlement activity until mid-1992 was aimed at boxing in Palestinian areas, establishing Palestinian "islands of autonomy" and preventing Palestinian territorial congruity. It was estimated that by 1993 an additional 50,000 Israelis might reside in those settlements under construction. By the end of 1992, around 247,000 to 290,000 Jewish settlers lived in the following areas: East Jerusalem (120,000-140,000 settlers and 8 settlements); West Bank (110,000-130,000 settlers and 156 settlements); Gaza (4,000-5,000 settlers and 18 settlements); and Golan Heights (13,000-15,000 settlers and 33 settlements).

Since mid-1992, two main political issues affected the pace of Israeli settlement: the formation of a Labour coalition Government in July 1992 and American loan guarantees which were approved in October 1992. Those loan guarantees, as requested by Israel and approved by the President of the United States, stipulated that Israel would receive up to $2 billion annually in United States guarantees for fiscal years 1993-1997, but could not use them for activities outside its pre-1967 borders, and that the United States President retained the right to suspend or terminate the loans if their terms or conditions were violated. He was also entitled to reduce the loans by the amount Israel had spent in previous years on settlement construction and other activities deemed inconsistent with the agreements. However, it was nearly impossible to determine the source of funding of settlements, since the Israeli Government and the Jewish Agency could free funds for use in the territories by using money obtained under the United States loan guarantees for projects inside Israel.

As to the policies of the new Labour coalition Government, it had announced a change of national priorities by giving more attention to the absorption of immigrants, and had declared its intention to curtail its housing programme in the occupied territories. A careful review of that new policy revealed, however, that settlement construction was not frozen since the Government remained committed to continuing the construction of 11,000 housing units in the territories, while it simultaneously intended to halt construction of 6,681 units approved by the Shamir Government in the 1992 budget. According to the Minister of Construction and Housing, it was decided to complete 9,850 units in settlements throughout the West Bank, and 1,200 each in Gaza and the Golan Heights. Of those units approved for the West Bank, 1,700 were in Greater Jerusalem; 2,150 were located throughout the area and were in the framing stage; 5,000 were near completion; while 1,000 were being constructed by individual settlers. As at September 1992, Israeli settlements in the Greater Jerusalem region had a population of 184,878, and 16,235 housing units were under construction.

Land, the mainstay of the territories' economy, continued to be subject to expropriation and confiscation for the purpose of establishing new settlements and expanding old ones. A total of 19,145 dunums were confiscated during 1992, and 3,381 dunums were confiscated for settlements during the first four months of 1993.

Along with land confiscation, water continued to be one of the most sensitive issues affecting economic and social development. A series of military orders established rules and regulations on water extraction, consumption, sale and distribution; control of water use; sharing and rationing; construction of water installations; drilling of wells; and granting of permits, making it easier for Israeli authorities and settlers to seize and utilize the resource. They regulated all matters regarding water resources, whether groundwater or surface water, including springs, ponds, streams and rivers, as well as price-setting and quantities allowed for use by Arab inhabitants and farmers. As a result, Israeli authorities continued to gain control over water resources. Settlements were often established on sites with good quality and quantity of groundwater as well as fertile land. Many existing Arab wells were blocked or sealed by the occupation authorities to protect the wells drilled for Israeli settlements. Other wells had dried up owing to overexploitation of the groundwater reservoirs in upstream areas by new wells drilled for settlements. Out of the total annual water supply of 700 million cubic metres in the West Bank and 60 million cubic metres in Gaza, between 515 million and 530 million cubic metres were transferred for use by Israel and its settlements. About 30 per cent of the total water used in Israel was taken from resources of the West Bank, representing 80 per cent of its groundwater potential. This water distribution policy, combined with over-pumping in some areas, severely strained the availability of Palestinian water resources and their ability to meet growing needs. Palestinians' access to water resources remained far less than that afforded to settlers, whose allowance per capita for agricultural use was 13 times greater than that for Palestinians in the West Bank and 7 times the entitlement of those living in Gaza. Private water consumption among Palestinians in the West Bank amounted to approximately 35 cubic metres per year per person, compared to 100 cubic metres for settlers. Deep wells drilled by Israeli authorities affected the level and quantity of water in Arab wells, resulting in a reduction in their productive capacity and the drying up of some wells and, consequently, of agricultural land that depended on them for irrigation water. Additionally, overexploitation of groundwater in Gaza and the great increase in water use by settlers augmented salinity due to sea-water intrusion. As in the West Bank and Gaza, continued arbitrary Israeli practices of land confiscation and water control reduced the cultivation area, curtailed local development and lowered the local level of income from agriculture in the Syrian Golan.

Agriculture was also heavily affected by such Israeli policies as curfews, military orders, uprooting of trees, land confiscation and the establishment of new settlements, under which circumstances it operated on the basis of a decreasing cultivated area and limited water supply, coupled with low productivity, cyclical fluctuations, insufficient diversification and often unequal competition with Israeli exports to the territories, which received generous government subsidies. With the justification of "security requirements", Israeli authorities engaged in an unprecedented practice of uprooting olive and fruit trees, thereby depriving farmers of their main source of income and forcing them to leave their land. During the first four months of 1993, approximately 3,180 trees were uprooted in the territories. The occupation authorities followed the same policy in the Syrian Golan by uprooting tree seedlings planted by Arab farmers for their failure to obtain permits for planting from the so-called Israel Land Administration.

Curfews imposed by Israel brought hardship to all spheres of daily life in the territories and halted all economic activities, sometimes being the first step which enabled settlers to establish new settlements or expand existing ones. After curfews were lifted, those settlements became "de facto" and gained the protection of the military authorities. Fishing in Gaza was also affected by curfews and Israeli seaside settlements, reducing the area allowed for fishing.

Consideration by the Committee on Palestinian rights. It was noted by the Committee on Palestinian rights in November⁽²⁾ that the Palestinian economy, which witnessed significant structural changes over 26 years of Israeli occupation, was made dependent on and inferior to the highly capitalized and technologically advanced Israeli economy. Continued human rights violations by Israeli authorities, control of water resources, the demolition of houses and other property and the destruction of olive trees and crops further exacerbated the living conditions of the Palestinian population.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/52 by recorded vote.

Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/172 of 22 December 1992,

Recalling its resolution 1992/57 of 31 July 1992,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force and recalling Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and other resolutions affirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Expressing its concern at the establishment by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the settlements of new immigrants therein,

Welcoming the Middle East peace process started at Madrid on 30 October 1991 and recognizing that a complete freeze of settlement activity would significantly enhance the prospects for progress in that process,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the economic and social consequences of the establishment of settlements by Israel in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and the Syrian Golan;

2. Deplores the establishment of settlements by Israel in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the other Arab territories occupied since 1967, and regards the settlements as illegal and an obstacle to peace;

3. Recognizes the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied by Israel since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan;

4. Strongly deplores Israel's practices in the occupied Palestinian territory and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, in particular its confiscation of land, its appropriation of water resources, its depletion of other economic resources and its displacement and deportation of the population of those territories;

5. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the population of the occupied Syrian Golan to their natural and all other economic resources, and regards any infringement thereof as being without any legal validity;

In the view of the United States, the text was politically inflammatory and could compromise the peace process. The Economic and Social Council, which was not the appropriate body to settle political questions, should not compete with the negotiations that had been initiated.

Speaking before the vote, Israel said the resolution ran counter to the modalities envisaged in the Declaration of Principles signed on 13 September between Israel and PLO and prejudged the outcome of the negotiations, which were the proper forum in which to resolve such issues as the settlements.

Living conditions of Palestinians

The Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council by a note of May 1993⁽⁴⁶⁾ that a progress report on the implementation of a 1991 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁷⁾ concerning the living conditions of Palestinians was being finalized for submission directly to the General Assembly. On 29 July, by decision 1993/309, the Economic and Social Council deferred the issue to its resumed substantive 1993 session, since the report was not yet available.

By a letter of 11 March,⁽⁴⁸⁾ Israel brought to the Secretary-General's attention steps it had taken to improve the welfare and standard of living of Palestinians in the territories. According to that communication, emphasis was recently placed on expanding employment opportunities and developing the local economy. This policy was pursued through legislation to encourage private initiative and local industry in order to promote investment and provide jobs, and through improvement of the general climate in the territories in order to create an attractive environment for investment. As a means of encouraging investment and employment, Israel had recently introduced income tax reform, encouraged capital and foreign investments and legislated labour rights for Palestinians working in Israel. Under those provisions, every Israeli employer was required to record officially employees from the territories to ensure that they received appropriate wages and social benefits. As a result, 70 per cent of those employed in Israel were legally registered, compared to 30 per cent in the past. All restrictions on the transfer of funds to the territories were rescinded. Israel also encouraged: the establishment of new banks and financial establishments; exports; new factories; conversion of agricultural land to increase profitability; and industrial parks. It rescinded or reformed legislation dealing with arrest, detention and legal procedures in security-related cases. Additionally, the automobile surtax was abolished, all universities were reopened, and the opening of new polytechnic colleges at Khan Younis and Gaza was approved. Elections were conducted for chambers of commerce in all municipalities except Bethlehem; the age below which persons required a permit to enter Israel was lowered from 60 to 50 years; houses sealed for security reasons over five years ago were reopened on a case-by-case basis; and the distribution of Arabic newspapers was expanded to include el-Ittihad, Sabah al-Hir, el Khateb and Kol el-Arab.

Palestine refugees

The number of Palestine refugees registered with UNRWA as at 30 June 1993, was 2,797,179.(1) They lived in and outside camps in the Israeli-occupied West Bank (479,023) and Gaza Strip (603,380), Jordan (1,072,561), Lebanon (328,176) and the Syrian Arab Republic (314,039). By the end of 1993, UNRWA put the total number of refugees at over 2.9 million.

The various aspects of the Palestine refugee problem, as well as the activities of UNRWA, were addressed by the General Assembly through 10 resolutions, adopted in December, concerning: assistance to Palestine refugees (48/40 A) and to displaced persons (48/40 C); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (48/40 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (44/40 D); refugees in Israeli-occupied territory (48/40 E); return of displaced population and refugees (48/40 F); revenues from refugees' properties (48/40 G); refugee protection (48/40 H); proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (48/40 I); and protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding of UNRWA facilities (44/40 J). In addition, the Assembly adopted a decision on the participation of Palestine in the Advisory Commission of UNRWA (48/417).

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

The UNRWA Commissioner-General observed in the Agency's report covering the period 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993(1) that the exchange of letters on recognition and the signing of the Declaration of Principles between PLO and Israel marked a turning point in the region. It was clear that the political developments would have an impact on UNRWA's operations and programmes. Because of the scale of its presence in the area, its largely Palestinian staff and its historical experience, UNRWA was predestined to be a major contributor to a combined effort to assist in the economic and social development of the West Bank and Gaza. At the same time, the need for continued assistance to Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic should not be overlooked. He noted that, unfortunately, the negotiations had not been accompanied by an improvement in the political, security and economic environment affecting Palestinians. On the contrary, there had been a serious deterioration in the situation, culminating in the highest fatality figures recorded in Gaza since the beginning of the intifadah and an unprecedented worsening of economic and social conditions. A new dimension was introduced by the closure of the occupied territories on 31 March, with UNRWA responding to the resulting hardship by distributing food to nearly 80,000 persons. The closure, accompanied by stern security measures, including an intensified military presence in refugee camps, severely disrupted the Agency's efforts to render medical and educational services, particularly in Jerusalem.

Against this background of setbacks, UNRWA in 1993 provided a wide-ranging programme of education, health, relief and social services for Palestine refugees in its five areas of operation. The Agency also continued to undertake extraordinary measures of assistance for Lebanon and the occupied territories. Following the signing of the Declaration of Principles, UNRWA on 6 October launched a new initiative, the Peace Implementation Plan (PIP), to enhance services and infrastructure for Palestine refugees, as well as to create new job opportunities through expanded project investment. Under the plan, which was developed in close consultation with UNRWA's Advisory Commission, major donors and the Palestinian leadership, the Agency began to undertake special construction and development projects that addressed the needs of Palestine refugees in education, environmental health, primary health care, income generation and social services. Its projects responded to objectives identified by the Secretary-General's Task Force on Economic and Social Development of the Gaza Strip and Jericho and formed part of the United Nations' integrated approach in support of the transition period. As at 31 December, total pledges for PIP amounted to over $30 million.

The 2.8 million registered refugees had access to UNRWA schools and training centres and specialist clinics, as well as to basic food and clothing if they had no resources of their own. Agency-wide, more than 392,000 pupils were enrolled in 641 elementary and preparatory schools, and more than 5,000 in eight training centres. Refugees had guaranteed access to primary health care through the Agency's health centres and clinics. Social services, increasingly provided with the active participation of Palestine refugee communities, were available through 71 women's programme centres, reaching 12,800 women. Eighteen locally run community rehabilitation centres provided services for disabled persons and their families, including 1,500 disabled refugee children and adolescents, with technical assistance from UNRWA. Agency-wide, 6.5 per cent of the refugee population were registered as special hardship cases, qualifying them for basic food rations, childrens' clothing, shelter rehabilitation and preferential access to vocational training centres.

The education programme, UNRWA's largest activity, grew substantially during the reporting period as a result of adding a tenth year to the basic education cycle in Jordan in conformity with that Government's reform programme. A total of 392,757 elementary and preparatory pupils attended 641 schools, 18,350 more than in the previous year. Vocational training, comprising two-year post-preparatory trade courses and post-secondary technical courses, expanded as well, with the number of training places increasing to 4,496 from 4,296. The number of education staff benefiting from the in-service training programme increased to 1,075 from 857, while university scholarships for outstanding students rose to 746 from 661. The education programme followed the host Government's curricula, in close cooperation with UNESCO, which seconded 12 of its staff to UNRWA. To meet the changing educational needs of the Palestine refugee community and to provide more technical support to the five fields, the Agency reorganized its department of education by integrating all divisions into the UNRWA Institute of Education at Amman and by moving the office of the Director of Education from Vienna to the UNRWA Headquarters Branch at Amman effective 1 July. Another aspect of education reform in Jordan was the raising of minimum qualifications for certification of basic-education-cycle teachers to include possession of a four-year university degree. In line with UNRWA's decision to phase out its two-year teacher training programme in June, the number of teacher training places Agency-wide was reduced to 645 from 850. Following consultations with Jordan and Palestinians, UNRWA decided to replace the phased-out teacher training courses in Jordan and in the West Bank with educational science faculties offering a first-level university degree.

The 201 UNRWA schools in Jordan provided basic education to 152,350 pupils, an increase of 12,350 over the previous year. The schools operated normally, as did the Amman and Wadi Seer training centres. To accommodate the increased school population, UNRWA employed more than 450 additional teachers and constructed over 60 new classrooms. In addition, it built three new schools in the Baqa'a, Marka and Suf camps to replace dilapidated prefabricated buildings. Five other schools were under construction. More than 180 Palestine refugee students received UNRWA scholarships to Jordanian universities. The 76 schools in Lebanon, attended by 33,172 pupils, enjoyed an almost normal school year owing to the improved security situation in the country. The Sibli Training Centre provided training places for 644 students during the 1992/93 academic year. UNRWA awarded 42 university scholarships to refugee students in Lebanon. Enrolment in UNRWA's 111 schools in the Syrian Arab Republic increased by 1,427 students to 60,216, while 857 trainees were enrolled in 20 courses at the Damascus Training Centre, exceeding its 776 budgeted places. Agency premises in the country remained inadequate, insufficient and severely overcrowded, with 97.3 per cent of elementary classes operating on a double shift. Furthermore, 24.3 per cent of schools were accommodated in unsatisfactory rented premises lacking proper facilities, such as adequate light and space, laboratories, libraries and playgrounds. Some progress was nevertheless achieved, including the building of two new schools, two specialized rooms and 26 classrooms to avoid the need for triple shifts.

As a result of school closures due to military orders, curfews and general strikes, the Agency's 100 schools in the West Bank, which served a population of 42,310 pupils, lost 14.8 per cent of school days and were particularly hard hit by the closure of the territories in March. The three Agency training centres at Kalandia and Ramallah provided a total of 1,156 additional training places, 84 more than in the previous academic year. New courses in ceramic production, social work and marketing and financial management were introduced at the two Ramallah centres, while the institution at Kalandia received a special contribution of $2 million to upgrade its facilities and services. The Agency's 153 schools in Gaza served a student population of 104,709, an increase of more than 4,650 pupils over the preceding school year, including some 800 new returnees from the Gulf States. However, 16.4 per cent of school days had been lost by the end of June due to military-ordered closures, curfews and general strikes. The Gaza Training Centre, which offered 728 training places in 13 two-year courses in mechanical, electrical and building trades and three two-year semi-professional courses in physiotherapy, industrial electronics and business and office practice was closed twice during the academic year by military order for periods exceeding one month in each case. In response to lost teaching time, UNRWA applied exceptional measures, such as extending the school day by one or two periods, extending the training year, distributing self-learning materials and offering special classes to pupils with learning problems.

UNRWA's primary health care included both preventive and curative medical care, environmental health services and supplementary nutritional assistance to pregnant and nursing women and children under the age of three. Medical care at the primary level was complemented by secondary services such as hospitalization and other referral and support services. More than 3,000 professional and support staff, the majority of whom were locally recruited Palestinians, provided those services through a network of 119 health centres or points and mother and child health clinics; 62 dental clinics; 65 laboratories; 39 specialist clinics for paediatrics, obstetrics and gynaecology, cardiology, ophthalmology, chest diseases and ear, nose and throat illnesses; and 204 special care clinics for the treatment of diabetes mellitus and hypertension. UNRWA's health clinics received nearly 6.1 million patient visits during the reporting period. The Agency introduced or expanded a number of services during the year. Of particular significance was the integration of family planning services, comprising health education, counselling and provision of contraceptive techniques, within the maternal and child health care programme. New efforts were made to control non-communicable diseases such as diabetes mellitus, hypertension, hereditary anaemia and management of iron-deficiency anaemia. UNRWA further developed its mental health programmes in the West Bank and Gaza, with special emphasis on post-traumatic stress disorders among children. In Jordan, the increase in demand for health services created by the influx of more than 300,000 Palestinians from the Gulf States continued to be felt, thus medical, dental and other consultations increased by 10 per cent over 1991 to exceed 1.5 million. To prepare for the introduction of family planning services in all health centres in 1993, UNRWA, in coordination with UNICEF, conducted nine workshops to train 130 medical and nursing staff in planned parenthood education and family planning. In cooperation with the Jordan University of Science and Technology, the Agency held a workshop for its staff from all fields (Irbid, Jordan, January). UNRWA continued with its project to construct, equip and commission a 232-bed hospital in Gaza at a cost of $35 million, $20 million of which represented capital cost and $15 million operating cost for the first three years.

The demand for relief and social services grew beyond the Agency's financial capacity. The drastic curtailment in Palestinian economic activity in the occupied territory and continued restrictions on obtaining work permits in Lebanon further reduced self-reliance. Deteriorating socio-economic conditions, especially in the Gaza Strip, led to increased insistence by refugees that UNRWA provide sustained direct relief for larger numbers. By 30 June, the number of refugees qualifying for special hardship assistance rose to 180,647 from 178,323 one year earlier. The difficulties were exacerbated through the increase of registered refugees to 2.8 million from 2.65 million one year earlier, partly as a result of refugees' requesting the updating of their files. Palestinians remaining in Kuwait were particularly concerned with ensuring that their records were correct. During the year, 1,102 of those families requested and received certification of their status as registered refugees. A major effort was directed at building up the community's capacity to provide social services of its own, with technical support and additional funding from UNRWA. By the end of the reporting period, 5 of the 71 women's programme centres were managed by committees of Palestine refugee women themselves. Locally run community rehabilitation projects for disabled refugees increased to 18 from 14, with growing attention to home-based intervention and vocational rehabilitation. The number of active self-support projects for the poorest refugees, assisted by grants or, increasingly, loans, rose to 672, of which 593 were ongoing.

For the sixth successive year, UNRWA ran a programme of extraordinary measures for refugees in Lebanon and the occupied territory (EMLOT) to alleviate the difficulties experienced as a result of the intifadah and the Israeli response to it. The programme provided assistance to refugees in Lebanon, where the socio-economic conditions remained precarious despite the improved security situation. The measures included a refugee affairs officer programme, a legal assistance scheme, emergency food distribution, cash grants to families in distress and a variety of emergency health services, including increased hospitalization subsidies. During the five-year period ending December 1992, expenditures on EMLOT totalled more than $139 million. For 1993, $2.6 million in cash and in kind was budgeted for Lebanon, $8.8 million for the West Bank and $14 million for Gaza. To meet the demands for emergency food distribution during the review period, food commodities amounting to 14,270 tonnes in Gaza and 7,237 tonnes in the West Bank were budgeted at a cost of $7.7 million. However, curfews and closures and the resulting lack of income meant that the demand for emergency food aid greatly exceeded those amounts. In May, the Agency began distributing available stocks and issued an urgent appeal for special donations of flour, rice and sugar for 120,000 families in Gaza and 39,000 families in the West Bank. UNRWA provided $1,044,000 in cash plus tents and blankets worth $46,000 for emergency assistance to needy refugee families whose breadwinners were detained, deported, killed or injured, or whose shelters had been damaged or demolished by military orders. In response to the severe damage to 58 homes, 26 of which were rendered uninhabitable, caused by military operations between February and April, the Agency expended $10,000 for immediate in-kind emergency assistance. An additional $60,250 in emergency cash assistance was disbursed to the affected families. Among other extraordinary measures, UNRWA maintained, in cooperation with UNICEF, six physiotherapy clinics in the West Bank and six in Gaza. It also provided $895,000 from emergency funds to infants considered to be nutritionally at risk as well as to school-age children and pregnant and nursing mothers.

In Lebanon, flour, rice, sugar, oil, skim milk and other commodities were distributed to 15,700 families, totalling 81,000 persons, and financial assistance amounting to $461,000 was provided to assist refugees with repair or reconstruction of their shelters. The Agency subsidized hospital expenses for registered as well as needy non-registered refugees in the amount of $104,000. In the initial period following the deportation of 415 Palestinians from the occupied territory to southern Lebanon, a group that included 16 UNRWA staff members, the Agency provided medical care and relief assistance, including water, food, tents, blankets, heating oil, medical supplies and other essential items.

Under the expanded programme of assistance (EPA), set up in 1988 with a target of $65 million, some $54 million had been received or pledged by mid-1993. The objectives of the programme were to improve living conditions in camps and upgrade the infrastructure through which Agency services were delivered. EPA also included specific objectives such as promoting sustainable employment, upgrading Agency installations, rehabilitating infrastructure and improving sanitation in the camps. In October, with the introduction of the Peace Implementation Plan, it was decided to phase out EPA. Projects under implementation would be completed, but no additional funding would be sought.

Under a revolving loan fund set up in 1991 to assist the local Palestinian economy in the aftermath of the Persian Gulf war, 105 loans amounting to over $2 million had been disbursed in Gaza by the end of June. In the West Bank, 37 projects had received loans amounting to $1.3 million, including some $250,000 which had been repaid by borrowers and disbursed as new loans. The Agency disbursed 28 loans totalling $180,000 in Jordan and 13 loans totalling $82,000 in Lebanon. By the end of the reporting period, donors had contributed or pledged $4.2 million specifically for revolving loan funds.

Approximately $10.7 million was allocated to address environmental conditions in refugee camps through sewerage schemes, water supply projects and improved refuse disposal systems. Some $3.6 million was budgeted for housing improvement in camps in the occupied territory and Jordan. As at 30 June, 45 projects with a value of $27.7 million were under negotiation with potential donors, and 142 projects amounting to $46.1 million were being implemented. The Agency employed approximately 20,800 staff, the majority of whom were themselves Palestine refugees, and was thus one of the largest employers in the Middle East.

Introducing the report to the Fourth Committee, the UNRWA Commissioner-General pointed out that the establishment of a Palestinian authority would put the Agency in a radically different position, for it would continue its activities to the extent requested by that authority, in close coordination and consultation with it. PLO had indicated its desire to see UNRWA continue its programmes of assistance to Palestinian refugees and had asked the Agency to expand them to promote social and economic development. Notwithstanding the above, UNRWA was coming to the end of a task entrusted to it 40 years earlier, and its main concern was to complete that task as successfully as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 A by recorded vote. Passed in the wake of the signing by Israel and PLO of the Declaration of Principles, its text was amended from that of recent years. In broadening UNRWA's role, it called on the Agency to make a decisive contribution towards giving a fresh impetus to the economic and social stability of the occupied territories.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/69 A of 14 December 1992 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993, and, in particular, of the hope expressed by the Commissioner-General "that this report covers an era which is gone forever",

Welcoming the signature by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, including its Annexes and its Agreed Minutes, at Washington, DC., on 13 September 1993,

1. Notes with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), has not yet been effected and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and to private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Requests that the headquarters of the Agency be transferred as soon as practicable to its area of operations;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1994;

5. Notes that the new context created by the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government, including its Annexes and its Agreed Minutes, signed by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, will have major consequences for the activities of the Agency, which is henceforth called upon, within the framework of strengthened cooperation with the specialized agencies and the World Bank, to make a decisive contribution towards giving a fresh impetus to the economic and social stability of the occupied territories, and notes also that the functioning of the Agency remains essential throughout its area of operations;

6. Welcomes the results of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace, held in Washington, D.C., on 1 October 1993, concerning urgent financial and economic assistance in support of the Israeli-Palestinian accord, and urges all Member States to extend aid and assistance with a view to the economic development of the occupied territories;

7. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

8. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-

General to collect additional contributions, the increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the current year and that, at the currently foreseen levels of contributions, deficits will recur each year;

9. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

UNRWA financing

The UNRWA Commissioner-General, in his report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ stated that the financial outlook for 1993 was critical, with a deficit of $28.5 million projected at the beginning of the year: $17 million in the regular budget and $11.5 million in the EMLOT budget. Despite concerted efforts to expand the donor base, particularly among countries in the region, and secure additional contributions from the Agency's traditional major donors, only $6.5 million was provided to UNRWA by the end of June. Merely to maintain a constant level of services, the Agency's budget had to increase by 5 per cent per annum to accommodate population growth and rising costs. However, more than at any other time in recent years, UNRWA's financial needs competed with shrinking donor aid budgets and the large increase in emergencies worldwide. Exchange rate losses incurred as a result of the fluctuating currency markets further exacerbated the Agency's financial situation. In anticipation of the shortfall, the Agency was forced to implement austerity measures, which had an immediate impact on the quality of its services.

The General Fund budget approved for 1992-1993 amounted to $572 million, of which $297.2 million represented the 1993 portion. With the additional sums earmarked for EMLOT, EPA and the Gaza Hospital project, the grand total for the biennium amounted to $644.7 million.

In 1992-1993, a total of $473.4 million (including $34.4 million in late arrivals) was received under the UNRWA General Fund ($443.5 million in cash and $30 million in kind). An additional $52.5 million (including $3.9 million in late arrivals) was received for funded ongoing activities ($18.7 million in cash and $33.8 million in kind). Expenditures for the biennium totalled $476.5 million under the General Fund and $50.7 million for funded ongoing activities. For the 1994-1995 biennium, expenditures under the General Fund were estimated at $632.3 million (including $79.4 million in food donations), representing an increase of $60.3 million, or about 10 per cent, over the approved General Fund budget for 1992-1993.

The regular budget was not completely funded for 1993, and substantial amounts were still required for EMLOT, EPA and the Gaza Hospital project. Only limited success was achieved in broadening the Agency's donor base. None the less, donor and host government support remained strong, as Agency services alone were not sufficient to maintain even basic life-sustaining needs.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

The Chairman of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, by a letter dated 7 April 1993,⁽²⁾ expressed concern at the Agency's critical financial situation, as the budget constraints faced by it could not have come at a worse time. With efforts under way to invigorate the Middle East peace process, a reduction in services by the Agency charged with providing for the basic human needs of Palestine refugees would send the wrong signal. The peace process should at all stages be accompanied by socio-economic measures to increase confidence in the negotiations. The UNRWA Commissioner-General had issued three appeals to major donors, most recently in February, and followed up with visits to the capitals of Bahrain, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates to increase their hitherto limited contributions. A special meeting of the UNRWA Advisory Commission was held at Vienna in March, followed by a briefing to major donors. The Chairman added the voice of the Working Group to those appealing for increased financial support to the Agency's vital humanitarian programme.

The Working Group held two meetings in 1993, on 9 September and 22 October.⁽³⁾ In its report to the General Assembly, the Working Group noted that UNRWA ended the first year of the 1992-1993 biennium with a deficit of $10.2 million. This included a shortfall of $2.6 million in its General Fund, which reduced its working capital by the same amount, from $33.7 million to $31.1 million. The working capital was sufficient only to cover expenditures for the Agency's regular operations for about five or six weeks. In addition to that working capital, $6.5 million remained set aside for emergencies and other contingencies. The total 1992 deficit also reflected an accumulated deficit of $6.4 million, which was related to major funded ongoing activities that were a core part of the Agency's regular programmes.

The EMLOT fund also showed a negative balance—$1.2 million—at the end of 1992, which remained a matter of serious concern. In addition to the shortfalls in the Agency's regular and emergency programmes, the Agency's Fund for capital and special projects, which was budgeted at $12.8 million for 1992, was only partially funded by special contributions. Consequently, the implementation of a number of construction projects had to be deferred to 1993 or even later.

UNRWA's financial prospects for 1993 were unfavourable due to the fact that growth in the level of contributions was not keeping pace with the combined factors of growth in the number of beneficiaries of its programmes and their rising costs. At the beginning of the year, the Commissioner-General informed donor Governments of the projected cash shortfall for 1993 of $28.5 million. To avoid further serious deterioration of the financial situation, he decided to introduce a number of austerity measures amounting to some $13.5 million, aimed at reducing planned expenditures, particularly in travel and recruitment. Those measures, while reducing expenditures in the immediate term, would be difficult to sustain beyond 1993. The Working Group felt that the negative cumulative impact such measures had on the level and quality of the services could adversely affect the region's overall situation at a critical time. In view of the above, the Commissioner-General appealed in February to Governments and intergovernmental organizations for increased funding to compensate for the anticipated cash budget deficit. Another appeal for additional food donations for emergency distribution was issued after Israel's closure in March of the occupied territories, but responses fell far short of the Agency's requirements.

The report also noted that in response to recent political developments and in order to support the peace process, UNRWA had introduced PIP to cover an improvement in, and expansion of, ongoing programmes and services, as well as short-term projects related to the infrastructure of basic and social services. Although the initial focus of the latest development towards peace was on the West Bank and Gaza, it was important that the needs of the 1.7 million refugees in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic not be overlooked. Therefore, UNRWA had to maintain and improve the services that it provided in all five fields of operation.

Sharing the Commissioner-General's concern about the funding prospects for 1994, the Working Group strongly urged Governments to continue making generous contributions and consider making additional contributions in support of both emergency-related programmes and special projects, as well as to expanded programmes planned by the Agency in response to the peace process and special contributions for construction projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 B without vote.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 47/69 B of 14 December 1992 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, by which it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,

Deeply concerned about the critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of the necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the present minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the financial security of the Agency;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Legal matters

UNRWA staff

The Commissioner-General reported that for the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,⁽¹⁾ there was a substantial increase over the preceding year in the number of staff members arrested in the occupied territory and held in detention without trial. The number of staff arrested and detained in Jordan and Lebanon decreased, while three new cases were reported in the Syrian Arab Republic. The total number of staff detained during the reporting period was 71, of whom 40 were arrested and released without charge or trial, 3 were charged, tried and sentenced, and 28 remained in detention. Of the 415 Palestinians who were deported into southern Lebanon in December 1992,⁽⁵⁾ 16 were UNRWA staff members. None of them were among those who returned with Israeli permission in the subsequent months; the Agency's protests against those deportations were to no avail.

Two UNRWA staff members were killed by Israeli security forces in Gaza. In February, a 28-year-old nurse was shot in the back of the head while rendering assistance to a wounded youth in Rafah. In March, a 47-year-old teacher was shot and killed outside a wake house, also in Rafah. One locally recruited staff member was killed by Palestinians in Gaza for alleged collaboration with the Israeli authorities.

In spite of the Agency's frequent approaches to the relevant authorities, it was not provided with adequate and timely information on the reasons for the arrest and detention of its staff members. It could thus not determine whether their arrest and detention arose out of their official duties. However, it had access to 18 staff members from Gaza and 11 from the West Bank who were in prisons and detention centres in the occupied territory and in Israel. The treatment of staff members in detention remained of major concern, with staff members upon their release complaining of ill treatment, including beatings and psychological abuse. Despite efforts on the part of the Agency, it was unable to visit staff in detention elsewhere. In the performance of their duties, both international and locally recruited staff continued to be subjected to various forms of mistreatment by Israeli security forces, including beatings, threats, insults, intimidation and temporary detention. Thirty-nine such cases of mistreatment were recorded in Gaza and 64 in the West Bank.

Difficulties related to the movement of locally recruited staff in and out of the West Bank increased substantially. There were lengthy delays in clearance by the Israeli authorities of staff members for travel on official duty. These included difficulties in obtaining entry for locally recruited drivers to Ben Gurion international airport in Israel, despite assurances from the authorities that such entry would be facilitated. The freedom of movement of staff members was further impeded by frequent curfews and the continued insistence of Israeli authorities that locally recruited staff members be in possession of curfew permits. The Agency's efforts to obtain curfew permits for such staff in Gaza were subjected to lengthy bureaucratic delays, and the number made available consistently fell short of that requested by the Agency. The arbitrary designation of closed military areas also impeded the legitimate movement of staff members, including international staff.

UNRWA services and premises

The Commissioner-General reported⁽¹⁾ that between 1 July 1992 and 30 June 1993 Israeli security forces made 77 incursions into UNRWA installations in the West Bank and 186 in Gaza, at times resulting in injury to staff and damage to property. There were 78 recorded intrusions into health clinic premises, and Israeli security forces on occasion also used Agency premises during military operations. Particularly in Gaza, UNRWA schools were at times used as temporary interrogation centres. The Agency protested such actions as a violation of its privileges and immunities.

Interference by the security forces with UNRWA ambulance and medical services became more frequent. In Gaza, 61 incidents were recorded in which ambulances were stopped, searched and on occasion shot at, and ambulance drivers and accompanying medical personnel were at times beaten and had their identity documents confiscated. There were 11 such incidents in the West Bank. Israeli authorities continued to object to the Agency's reconstruction of demolished camp shelters, despite assurances by Israel's Ministry of Foreign Affairs that there would be no objection to it. Construction projects were also subjected to detailed and time-consuming procedures. At least 105 homes in the West Bank and 38 in Gaza were demolished by Israeli authorities on the grounds that proper building permits had not been obtained by the owners. Restrictions were imposed on the quantity of items imported for the Agency's essential operations, and incoming goods were often subjected to delays at the port of entry.

As from 1 January 1992, Israel resumed payment of current charges for clearance, warehousing and transport of UNRWA supplies, for which it was responsible under the 1967 Comay-Micheltmore Agreement and which it had suspended from 1988 to 1991. Israel also agreed to reimburse the Agency 4.2 million, which it had advanced to cover payments during the suspension, in three equal instalments, the first of which was paid in April 1993.

In resolution 48/40 J (see below), the General Assembly condemned the repeated Israeli raids on UNRWA premises and installations and called on Israel to refrain from such acts.

Compensation claims

In 1993, UNRWA reported⁽¹⁾ that no progress had been made with regard to its claims against the Governments of: Israel (for loss and damage to UNRWA property during the 1967 Middle East hostilities, Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and its military action before then); Jordan (arising from the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances of 1970 and 1971); and the Syrian Arab Republic (relating mainly to the levy of certain taxes from which UNRWA believed it was exempt under existing agreements). Those claims had been reported in 1986.⁽²⁾ The Secretary-General, in September 1993,⁽³⁾ also stated that there had been no progress with regard to UNRWA claims against Israel resulting from its 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

In resolution 48/40 H (see below), the General Assembly called on Israel to compensate UNRWA for damages to its property and facilities resulting from its invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion.

Other aspects

Displaced persons

During the reporting period, the future of displaced Palestinians and the need to provide housing for them became an even larger concern to UNRWA. Among the displaced in Lebanon were some 6,000 Palestinian families, or about 30,000 persons, who were identified by UNRWA as requiring assistance. The return of property to the lawful owners involved evicting displaced Palestinians squatting on those sites. By June, more than 1,000 Palestinian families had been served with official eviction notices. The situation of 315 displaced families living along the coastal road between Beirut and Saida was the focus of discussions between representatives of Lebanon, UNRWA and the Palestinians. Many displaced families continued to live in intolerable conditions, having taken refuge years earlier in shacks which lacked decent sanitary facilities and access to safe water supply. The Agency reprogrammed funds for the reconstruction of damaged shelters, but those amounts fell far short of what was required for rehousing.

Humanitarian assistance

In 1993, in addition to providing relief in the form of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide a small measure of humanitarian assistance to persons who had been displaced as a result of the June 1967 war and subsequent hostilities in the Middle East but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 48/40 C without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/69 C of 14 December 1992 and all its previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 47/69 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Repatriation of refugees

The Secretary-General reported in September 1993⁽⁸⁾ on compliance with the General Assembly's 1992 call on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants and to desist from measures obstructing their return.⁽⁹⁾ By a note of 15 June, Israel had stated that its position on the matter had been detailed fully in successive annual replies, the latest of which was included in a 1992 report by the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁰⁾ Because of Israel's continued effort to review individual cases of resettlement based on the merits of each case, 94,439 persons had returned to the administered territories.

The Secretary-General also included information from UNRWA on the return of refugees registered with it. Since the Agency was not involved in arrangements for either refugees or displaced persons not registered as refugees, its information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their service entitlements to their areas of return; UNRWA was not necessarily aware of the return of registered refugees who had not made such requests. Its records indicated that, between 1 July 1992 and 30 June 1993, 275 registered refugees had returned to the West Bank and 65 to the Gaza Strip. Some of them might not have been displaced in 1967 but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they had accompanied on return or later joined. Displaced refugees known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 numbered about 12,740. The Agency was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned, as it kept records only of registered refugees, and even those records, particularly with respect to the location of registered refugees, might be incomplete.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 F by recorded vote.

Return of population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,
Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,

Taking note of the relevant provisions of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, including its Annexes and its Agreed Minutes, signed in Washington, DC., on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

Food aid

The Secretary-General reported in September 1993(11) that UNRWA continued to provide food assistance to the neediest of the refugee population, known as special hardship cases, who had numbered 179,397 persons in December 1992. It also continued emergency distributions of basic commodities, such as flour, rice, sugar, animal protein and skim milk to the needy, including non-registered Palestinians, in the occupied territory and Lebanon. In 1992, 15,036 tons of those commodities were distributed in Gaza, 7,970 tons in the West Bank and 3,202 tons in Lebanon. Given the lack of additional resources, it had not been possible for the Commissioner-General to consider resuming the interrupted general distribution of basic food rations to all refugees, as requested by the Assembly in several resolutions, most recently in 1992.⁽¹²⁾

On 8 December, the Fourth Committee decided not to take action⁽¹³⁾ on a draft resolution on the resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees,⁽¹⁴⁾ which was therefore not considered by the General Assembly at its 1993 session. Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors (Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Comoros, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan), Indonesia stated that they would not insist on a vote on the understanding that UNRWA and the Commissioner-General would respond positively within the available resources should the need for ration distribution arise.

Education and training services

Protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions

In September 1993,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reproduced Israel's reply of 15 June to his 18 February note verbale referring to a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ calling on Israel to open immediately all closed educational and vocational institutions, a large number of which were operated by UNRWA, and to refrain from closing them thereafter.

Describing the resolution as unbalanced, Israel reiterated its position that it distorted the Government's role and policy, which had always been to encourage development of the educational system in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District. During its administration, the level of education and literacy in those territories had markedly improved and many new institutions of learning had been established. Since December 1987, however, the schools had frequently been exploited as centres for organizing and launching violent activities. Measures taken by the authorities were in reaction to activities having nothing to do with education. Those measures had enabled Israel to permit the reopening of all educational institutions, including all seven institutions of higher education, as recently recognized by UNESCO.

The Secretary-General also quoted reports of the UNRWA Commissioner-General to the effect that of 77 cases of unauthorized entry into UNRWA premises in the West Bank during the period 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993, 34 related to schools; of the 186 such cases in Gaza, 86 related to schools. During the same period, two deaths and 39 cases of injury among students and trainees occurred at UNRWA educational institutions in the West Bank, and 20 deaths and 1,077 injuries occurred at institutions in the Gaza Strip, all of which were attributable to beatings, tear-gas inhalation, rubber bullets and live ammunition. In addition, 76 students and trainees in the West Bank and 159 in Gaza were detained, of whom 53 and 94, respectively, had been released by 30 June 1993.

During the 1992/93 academic year, an average of 21 per cent of training time was lost at the Kalandia and Ramallah men's and women's training centres in the West Bank due to general strikes, curfews and severe weather conditions. The Gaza training centre lost 29 per cent of days as a result of military closure orders and 10 per cent owing to general strikes and curfews. Of the 361 students from Gaza attending the three training centres in the West Bank, 33 did not receive permits to study there after the March closure. Between September 1992 and June 1993, 8 per cent of school days were lost in the West Bank and 16.8 per cent in the Gaza Strip, owing primarily to military closures, general strikes and curfews. Alternative places were used for teaching classes from schools closed by military order. The Agency provided students in the territories with distance education and self-learning materials, but such measures could only partially compensate for lost classroom time, which had a detrimental effect on educational performance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 J by recorded vote.

Protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding of the security of the facilities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in the occupied Palestinian territories

Concerned about the situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Condemns the repeated Israeli raids on the premises and installations of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, and calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to refrain from such raids;

2. Deplores the policy and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which have led to the prolonged closure of educational and vocational institutions, a large number of which are operated by the Agency, and the repeated disruption of medical services;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al Quds"

In keeping with a General Assembly request of 1992⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1993⁽¹⁸⁾ on the establishment of a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem. The proposed university, first considered by the Assembly in 1980,⁽¹⁹⁾ had since been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General with regard to measures taken towards its establishment, including a functional feasibility study.

To assist in the preparation of the study and at the Secretary-General's request, the Rector of the United Nations University made available the services of a highly qualified expert, Dr. Mihaly Simai, who would visit the area and meet with competent Israeli officials. By a note verbale of 16 August, the Secretary-General had requested Israel to facilitate the expert's visit at a mutually convenient time. Recalling the position of Israel on the proposed university and the questions it had raised, as well as the clarifications already given by the Secretariat, the Secretary-General expressed the opinion that those questions could best be discussed during the proposed visit.

Israel had replied on 23 August that its position remained unchanged, and recalled its note of 15 June underscoring its consistent vote against the Assembly resolutions calling for the establishment of the proposed university, whose sponsors sought to exploit higher education in order to politicize issues extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. In Israel's opinion, a visit by the expert would serve no useful purpose, and so it was unable to assist in taking this matter further.

The Secretary-General thus concluded that the feasibility study could not be completed as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, on the basis of the Fourth Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 I by recorded vote.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported in September 1993⁽²⁰⁾ on responses to the General Assembly's 1992 appeal⁽²¹⁾ to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In the 1992/93 academic year, Japan offered 23 vocational fellowships for study in that country to Palestine refugees in UNRWA's employ. Under the UNRWA university scholarship programme for secondary school graduates, 135 Palestine refugee students received scholarships funded by Japan's contribution of $1 million in 1989, to be spread over five years. An additional 68 Palestinian students participated in the programme in 1992/93 under another five-year grant of $400,000 made by Japan in 1992, and 169 Palestinians were awarded scholarships made possible by a contribution from Switzerland of $197,300 in 1992. Twenty-nine applications from Palestine refugee students were referred to Iranian authorities, whose Government had offered 30 university scholarships in 1992. Those awards, while not specifically in response to Assembly resolutions, were in keeping with their spirit. In addition, 119 Palestinian students at Egyptian universities benefited from a 1992 contribution from the Netherlands, which granted $426,533 to cover their tuition.

During the 1992/93 academic year, UNESCO awarded 13 scholarships to Palestinians from its regular programme and budget, and four under its Participation Programme. Four Palestinians were awarded international fellowships under the WHO postgraduate fellowship programme aimed at developing technical and managerial skills of UNRWA's Department of Health staff and at meeting future replacement needs under various health disciplines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 D by recorded vote.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, 36/146 H of 16 December 1981, 37/120 D of 16 December 1982, 38/83 D of 15 December 1983, 39/99 D of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D of 16 December 1985, 41/69 D of 3 December 1986, 42/69 D of 2 December 1987, 43/57 D of 6 December 1988, 44/47 D of 8 December 1989, 45/73 D of 11 December 1990, 46/46 D of 9 December 1991 and 47/69 D of 14 December 1992,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last four decades, lost their homes, lands and means of livelihood,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,

1. Urges all States to respond to the appeal in its resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 and reiterated in subsequent relevant resolutions in a manner commensurate with the needs of Palestine refugees for higher education, including vocational training;

2. Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 General Assembly resolution,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General, in August 1993,⁽²³⁾ submitted a report on the status of steps taken to protect and administer Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners. The Secretary-General indicated that he had transmitted the resolution to Israel and to all other Member States for their comments, as well as to the Chairman of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine.

According to Israel's reply of 15 June, reproduced in the report, the 1992 resolution demonstrated misuse of the Assembly for an ongoing propaganda campaign against Israel. Its position had been set out in statements to the then Special Political Committee on three occasions and in a 1992 report of the Secretary-General.⁽²⁴⁾ Israel again asserted that there was no legal basis for taking the steps proposed, as property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were subject exclusively to that State's domestic laws; the rights of States to regulate and dispose of property within their territory (and income derived from that property) was a generally accepted principle. Significantly, the resolution's sponsors had not proposed that similar steps be taken regarding the confiscated Jewish property in Arab countries—suggesting that Israel's sovereignty was limited or restricted by some provision that did not apply to other States Members of the United Nations. The property left behind by approximately 800,000 Jewish refugees who resettled in Israel as a result of the 1948 war, estimated to be in the billions of dollars, was expropriated by the Arab countries in which they had lived. Israel stressed that there could be no difference in law, justice or equity between the claims of the Arab and Jewish property owners.

The Secretary-General added that no reply had been received from any other Member State regarding implementation of the resolution.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its report covering the period from 1 September 1992 to 31 August 1993,⁽²⁵⁾ stated that it had nothing new to report since the submission of its September 1992 report,⁽²⁴⁾ in which it had noted that the circumstances which unfortunately limited its possibilities of action regarding compensation for Palestine refugee properties remained unchanged.

Refugee protection

The Secretary-General reported in September 1993⁽²⁶⁾ on implementation of a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁷⁾ holding Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, and calling on it to compensate UNRWA for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon and its policies and practices in the occupied territory.

The report reproduced Israel's note verbale of 15 June 1993 to the Secretary-General's request for information on steps taken or envisaged to comply with the resolution. Israel said that it had fully set forth its position on the subject in statements to the then Special Political Committee and in a 1992 report of the Secretary-General.⁽²⁸⁾ The note stated that adopting the resolution was hypocritical, anachronistic and out of place. Despite its withdrawal from Lebanon in 1985, Israel was still being blamed for the "suffering" of Palestinians there and, not surprisingly, for Arab persecution of Palestinian refugees. In recent years, thousands of Palestinians had been killed and wounded in Lebanese refugee camps in vicious fighting totally unconnected with Israel; likewise, Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were the scenes of considerable human misery. The selective and distorted presentation of the Palestinian refugees' situation in Arab countries clearly illustrated the resolution's double standards and its blatant disregard for the refugees' general welfare. Israel emphasized that, in keeping with international law, it alone was competent to ensure full protection to all inhabitants of Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District.

The Secretary-General went on to cite the UNRWA Commissioner-General's report for the period 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993,⁽¹⁾ to the effect that the Commissioner-General had continued his efforts in support of the Palestine refugees' safety and legal and human rights, as called for in the 1992 Assembly resolution. UNRWA international staff, in particular the refugee affairs and legal officers, continued to help reduce tension and prevent maltreatment of refugees, especially vulnerable groups such as women and children. The Commissioner-General also protested to Israel against the excessive use of force and collective punishments, such as the punitive demolition and sealing of shelters, as a failure on Israel's part to uphold standards required under international humanitarian law. As part of the Commissioner-General's efforts in that regard, legal advice and financial assistance were provided for refugees seeking to assert their legal rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 H by recorded vote.

5. Calls once again upon Israel to desist forthwith from acts of aggression against the Lebanese and Palestinian populations in Lebanon in violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the norms of international law;

6. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, release forthwith all arbitrarily detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the Agency;

7. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for damages to its property and facilities resulting from the invasion of Lebanon by Israel in 1982, without prejudice to the responsibility of the latter for all damages resulting from that invasion, as well as for other damages resulting from the policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-ninth session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Removal and resettlement of refugees

In a September 1993 report,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reproduced Israel's reply of 15 June to his note verbale of 18 February referring to a 1992

General Assembly resolution⁽³⁰⁾ demanding that Israel desist from removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by it since 1967 and from destroying their shelters. The reply stated that Israel's position had been made known in successive annual replies to the Secretary-General in recent years, the latest of which was contained in his 1992 report on the subject.⁽³¹⁾

Israel considered the resolution unbalanced and distorted in that it intentionally ignored the improved living conditions in Gaza since 1967. Nothing could be more indicative of that approach than the resolution's condemnation of refugee rehabilitation projects. By initiating community development projects in Gaza, Israel had enabled some 20,000 families (approximately 150,000 persons) to leave the refugee camps on a voluntary basis and relocate to nearby residential areas. Its vital role in planning and implementing those housing projects had been recognized in 1985 by both the Secretary-General⁽³²⁾ and the Commissioner-General. Israel continued to do as much as it could to improve living conditions of Palestinians in the territories; it had outlined recent steps to the Secretary-General in March⁽³³⁾ (see above, under "Living conditions of Palestinians").

The resolution's request that the Secretary-General resume issuing identity cards irrespective of the refugees' need for them was yet another indication of its patent political bias. Notwithstanding subversive efforts to the contrary, Israel was determined to pursue the task of improving the refugees' living conditions through projects such as the refugee housing programmes, welcoming all assistance from the international community in that regard.

The Secretary-General stated that, according to information from UNRWA, Israeli authorities continued to inflict collective punishment through punitive demolition and sealing of refugee shelters in the West Bank and Gaza. As at 30 June 1993, of the 87 refugee families affected by the 1971 demolition of shelters in Gaza,⁽³⁴⁾ 12 continued to live in conditions of hardship and 19 remained in unsatisfactory housing. Despite assurances by Israel that those families would be rehoused, no progress had been made.

The situation of the families living on the northern perimeter of Jabalia camp,⁽³⁵⁾ who had been told to remove some of their shelter extensions, remained the same: no demolitions had taken place, but the shelters remained isolated by the bulldozing of sand around them. Of the 35 families whose shelters on the perimeter of Beach camp were demolished in 1983,⁽³⁶⁾ 18 had been allocated plots of land at the Sheikh Radwan and Beit Lahiya housing projects, one was housed in a vacant shelter at Beach camp, and the other 16 remained in the same situation as previously reported—in temporary shelters near the camp site. Of the 12 families at Rafah camp who had agreed, at the request of the Israeli authorities, to relocate to the Israeli-sponsored Tel-es-Sultan housing project,⁽³⁷⁾ two had moved there, leaving the remaining 10 shelters isolated by sand ramparts. Thirty families (150 persons) from Canada camp in Egypt had returned to Gaza to accommodations at Tel-es-Sultan.

The Israeli authorities had to date allocated approximately 3,914 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. A total of 2,605 plots had been built on by 3,714 refugee families comprising 22,946 persons; buildings on 236 plots were under construction, while 936 plots were still vacant and 137 had been built on by non-refugee families. In addition, 3,034 refugee families, consisting of 18,823 persons, had moved into 2,666 completed housing units consisting of 5,893 rooms.

As to the Assembly's request that he address the acute situation of the refugees, the Commissioner-General advised that UNRWA, in addition to extending to refugees its regular services plus emergency food, medical and other assistance, also pursued its long-term programme to upgrade infrastructure, especially in the camps, and, in general, to improve the economic and social welfare of the refugees.

The Secretary-General regretted his inability to comply with the Assembly's request that he resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied territory, whether or not they were recipients of UNRWA rations and services. Under an arrangement in effect for 40 years, all families registered with UNRWA were in possession of Agency-issued registration cards indicating the number of family members and their eligibility for services. However, the Commissioner-General did not have the means to issue identity cards as such. He would keep the matter under review to see whether appropriate documentation regarding the registration status of individual members of refugee families could be issued.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December 1993, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/40 E by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 away from their homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of the obligation of Israel under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Demands once again that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and accordingly to extend all the services of the Agency to those refugees;

Chapter VI

Regional economic and social activities

During 1993, the five United Nations regional commissions continued to promote economic and social development in their respective regions. Three of the five commissions held their regular sessions during the year. The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its twenty-eighth session/nineteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers and the fourteenth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its forty-ninth session at Bangkok, Thailand; and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) held its forty-eighth session at Geneva. However, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 1993. In July, the Economic and Social Council called for the role of the regional commissions to be strengthened (resolution 1993/61).

The Council amended the terms of reference of ECE, to allow Member States located in the Central Asian part of the former USSR to be admitted to the Commission (decision 1993/317). It also upheld ECE's decision to bar the participation of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the Commission's work as long as it did not participate in the work of the General Assembly (1993/316).

The Council endorsed ESCAP's resolution on population and sustainable development, dealing with goals and strategies into the twenty-first century (1993/319) and ECA's resolution on preparations for the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (1993/64), and called for a constructive dialogue between industrialized and developing countries (1993/62). It recommended to the General Assembly a resolution on resource mobilization to implement the regional action programme for phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1993/63), subsequently adopted by the Assembly in December (resolution 48/177). The Council also called for resource mobilization and financial support to implement the programmes of the Second Industrial Decade for Africa, 1993-2002 (1993/65) and the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, 1991-2000 (1993/66). It further addressed ECA activities in its resolutions on strengthening development information systems for regional cooperation and integration in Africa (1993/67) and the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (1993/68).

In November, the Assembly urged United Nations agencies and organizations to continue and intensify their cooperation with the Latin American Economic System (48/22) and in December, it invited the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to elaborate a programme for improving transit facilities in the land-locked States of Central Asia (48/170). It renewed its appeal for increased financial and technical support to the Southern African Development Community (48/173).

Regional cooperation

During 1993, the General Assembly continued to consider the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, including the regional commissions. By resolution 47/212 B of 6 May, the Assembly noted that the Secretary-General had indicated, in 1992,⁽¹⁾ that further restructuring of the Secretariat would entail decentralization of activities to the field and to the regional commissions. It requested him to review the role of the commissions, with a view to improving the distribution of responsibilities among them on the basis of their relative advantages.

The Secretary-General established the inter-departmental Task Force on Decentralization at the Secretariat level, with the participation of the regional commissions, to examine Headquarters activities that could be carried out more effectively at the regional level. Following working-level consultations and deliberations within the framework of the Task Force, from 3 to 7 May, the executive secretaries of the regional commissions met in New York on 10 and 11 May. They agreed on a number of principles for the distribution of responsibilities and tasks between global components of the United Nations and the commissions. They identified several types of activities for decentralization including empirical research and analysis of data and information within the regional or subregional context; regional, subregional and national follow-up to global events; planning and management of human resources development; preparation of inventories of specific capabilities and capacities; promotion of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries; identification of priority subprogrammes providing comparative advantages to their respective commissions and possibilities for a cost-effective decentralization; and advisory services.

The executive secretaries proposed: a new ratio for the distribution of advisory services; a high degree of decentralization in natural resources and energy and adjustments in a variety of other programmes; ways to make the commissions' contribution to major humanitarian assistance programmes more continuous and systematic and to establish or strengthen joint units and develop joint programmes; and the establishment of a task force comprising the United Nations Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis and the commissions' statistical divisions to enhance interaction in the information area.

The executive secretaries highlighted important issues that had emerged from the recent sessions of ESCAP, ECE and ECA and examined preparations for and follow-up to global programmes and conferences and interregional cooperation in energy, trade facilitation and transport. They expressed concern about the sharp decline in funds available to the commissions under the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and a reduction of funding support from the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA).

Report of the Secretary-General. In a June report to the Economic and Social Council on regional cooperation,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the work of the five regional commissions, including matters and decisions requiring action by or brought to the attention of the Council. In response to a 1992 Council request for information on action taken to strengthen the role of the regional commissions,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General provided a detailed account of the May meeting of the executive secretaries and the extensive consultations which took place on that matter and on the question of decentralization within the framework of the interdepartmental Task Force. The Secretary-General pointed to the commissions' joint recommendation that the Council consider the question of their contributions to the implementation of Agenda 21,⁽⁴⁾ adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 February, by decision 1993/202, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's 1992 report on regional cooperation.⁽⁵⁾ By decision 1993/213 of 12

February, the Council requested the regional commissions to report on their plans to implement Agenda 21 and to make those reports available to the Commission on Sustainable Development in 1994 at the latest.

On 30 July, the Council on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/61 without vote.

Strengthening the role of the regional commissions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1992/43 of 31 July 1992 and General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 45/264 of 13 May 1991, 46/145 of 17 December 1991 and 46/235 of 13 April 1992,

Noting with interest the recommendations made by the regional commissions, in response to General Assembly resolution 46/235, to strengthen their effectiveness, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,^a

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on regional cooperation, including the account of steps being taken to decentralize functions and responsibilities to the regional commissions in order to strengthen the regional presence of the Organization and to enhance its effectiveness,

1. Reaffirms its support for decentralization in order to achieve a more effective distribution of responsibilities and tasks between global, regional and national entities in the economic, social and related fields;

2. Takes note of the measures taken by the Secretary-General to strengthen the work of the Organization at the regional level, and urges him to continue his efforts in that direction, as appropriate;

3. Recommends to the General Assembly that, in connection with the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, it consider the recommendations made by the regional commissions.

Africa

On 12 February, the Economic and Social Council decided that the 1993 session of ECA/nineteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of the Commission would be held at Libreville, Gabon, from 19 to 22 April (decision 1993/203).

However, no action was taken on that decision and ECA held its twenty-eighth session/nineteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 3 to 6 May.⁽¹⁾ The Conference had as its theme: perspectives of Africa's socio-economic development into the twenty-first century; implementation of the 1991 Abuja Treaty, adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1991, establishing the African Economic Community; and Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992.⁽²⁾ The Ministers reviewed issues related to development management and the human development agenda, trade, industrial and infrastructural development, preparations for forthcoming international conferences, and programme, administrative and organizational questions.

In his message to the Conference, the Secretary-General stated that implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽³⁾ was a key United Nations priority. He urged African countries to seize the opportunity of the International Conference on African Development, to be held in October in Tokyo (see PART THREE, Chapter III), to work towards a new partnership based on a clear rationalization of the region's development needs and priorities. However, he stressed the vital importance of achieving peace, stability and security as integral components of development through prevention and peaceful resolution of conflicts, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and greater government responsiveness and accountability. The continent also had to develop political institutions capable of building and sustaining a competitive economy and expand its production and market opportunities through regional economic integration and cooperation to facilitate Africa's integration into the global economy.

In his statement to the Conference, the Executive Secretary of ECA noted the need for a pragmatic approach to socio-economic restructuring, so as to preserve an equitable social structure in spite of rapid transformation and for galvanizing national consensus behind economic reforms. He observed that the structural adjustment programmes applied since the mid-1980s were taking too long to achieve self-sustained growth, because they did not go far enough in correcting the structural causes of Africa's underdevelopment and because of continued administrative and political instabilities.

He called for bold initiatives to reduce external debt and increase official development assistance (ODA) to Africa, along with private credit and foreign direct investment (FDI).

The Conference of Ministers was preceded by the fourteenth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (Addis Ababa, 26 April-2 May),⁽⁴⁾ which considered strategic objectives for Africa's socio-economic development in the 1990s,⁽⁵⁾ noting that Africa's efforts and those of its partners should focus on issues of a negotiated continental framework for regional security, stability and peace; implementation of the Abuja Treaty establishing the African Economic Community; effective participation in all ongoing global negotiation processes; a comprehensive programme for building human capacities, including entrepreneurial skills, coupled with the indigenization of science and technology; redefining the role of the state in Africa and improving the quality of governance; sustainable development of the continent's agricultural potential; sustainable industrialization; upgrading of continental transport, communications and energy infrastructures for the creation of a single African market; a new pragmatic approach to Africa's external cooperation; and mobilization of the required financial resources, with primary emphasis on domestic resources.

The Committee also reviewed the continent's economic performance in 1992 and the outlook for 1993 and examined strategies for financial resource mobilization for Africa's development in the 1990s.⁽⁶⁾ It studied proposals for the implementation of the Abuja Treaty establishing the African Economic Community⁽⁷⁾ and for the African Strategies for the implementation of Agenda 21,⁽⁸⁾ and issues relating to regional cooperation for development. The Committee noted that, in response to the Commission's 1992 resolution on strengthening ECA,⁽⁹⁾ subsequently endorsed by the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹⁰⁾ steps had been taken to reinforce ECA's internal capacity, strengthen its programmes of assistance to member States and enhance its advocacy role with regard to the region's economic and social policy.

The Committee endorsed the proposed new structure of the Commission's intergovernmental machinery⁽¹¹⁾ and made recommendations concerning rationalization and harmonization of ECA-sponsored institutions and strengthening of the ECA Multidisciplinary Regional Advisory Group and its Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCs). It also endorsed the proposed programme of work and priorities for the biennium 1994-1995⁽¹²⁾ and took note of the first revisions to the medium-term plan for 1992-1997.⁽¹³⁾ (For more details, see below, under specific headings.)

The Conference of Ministers reviewed, amended and adopted the Committee's report,⁽⁴⁾ including its resolutions and declaration on the implications of the Uruguay Round on Africa's trade. It called on member States to be guided by the strategic objectives for Africa's economic development in the 1990s in their programmes of structural adjustment, transformation and development⁽¹⁴⁾ The Ministers also called on the Secretary-General to strengthen ECA's role as team leader and coordinator of United Nations activities with a regional perspective in Africa in order to ensure rational implementation of the strategic objectives for Africa's economic development within the context of the New Agenda, called on the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to provide an updated legislative framework for the regional commissions and urged United Nations bodies active in Africa to work in close partnership with EGA.⁽¹⁵⁾

The Conference of Ministers adopted a new structure of the Commission's intergovernmental machinery,⁽¹⁶⁾ which would consist of the following: the Conference of Ministers responsible for economic and social development and planning (the Commission) and its Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole; intergovernmental committees of experts of MULPOCs; seven thematic conferences of ministers (on human development; sustainable development and the environment; finance; trade and regional cooperation and integration; transport and communications; industry; and on development and utilization of mineral resources and energy) and their committees of experts; and four technical subsidiary bodies: the United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Africa; the African Regional Conference for Science and Technology; the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians, Demographers and Information Scientists; and the Africa Regional Coordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development. The terms of reference of those bodies were annexed to the Conference's resolution.

The Conference agreed to revive its Ad Hoc Committee of 10 member States to examine proposals on the harmonization and rationalization of ECA-sponsored institutions, requested the Executive Secretary to undertake a cost-benefit analysis on institutions to be merged and urged United Nations organizations to make greater use of their services.⁽¹⁷⁾ It further requested the Executive Secretary to prepare a programme for the strengthening and rationalization of MULPOCs, and urged MULPOCs to assist intergovernmental organizations to coordinate, harmonize and rationalize activities with a view to establishing a single community in their subregions.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Conference called on member States to make increasing use of the resources and expertise of the Multidisciplinary Regional Advisory Group in seeking solutions to their socio-economic development problems.⁽¹⁹⁾

In a Declaration on the implications of the Uruguay Round of international trade negotiations on Africa's trade, adopted on 6 May, the Conference called on African countries to establish strong common positions in multilateral trade negotiations. It urged the major negotiating partners to set aside, in an annex to the Final Act of the Uruguay Round negotiations, African preferences and derogations for a transitional period of economic restructuring and called on ECA, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) to undertake studies on the potential impacts of the post-Uruguay Round trading regime on specific economic sectors of African countries and develop measures to mitigate the negative effects (see also PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Africa's economic situation remained precarious and disturbing in 1993, according to a summary of the survey of economic conditions in its various subregions.⁽²⁰⁾ Overall regional output grew by only 1 per cent, after virtually stagnating in 1992, perpetuating the decline in per capita income. The combined gross domestic product (GDP) of the continent's non-oil-exporting countries increased by 1.4 per cent, having declined by 0.7 per cent in 1992, while the growth rate of the oil-exporting States declined from 1.1 per cent in 1992 to 0.8 per cent in 1993, as a result of lower oil prices, persistent structural problems and reduced external demand. Output in the mineral-exporting countries was estimated to have declined by 3.2 per cent, following a 3.6 per cent fall in 1992, whereas beverage-exporting States were expected to have registered a 3.2 per cent growth, compared with a 0.3 per cent fall in 1992.

Manufacturing value-added increased by a mere 1.3 per cent in 1993, from a decline of 0.8 per cent in 1992. The manufacturing sector was adversely affected by a host of structural problems, including the non-availability and high cost of imported inputs, difficulties with domestic supply of raw materials and rising costs of labour, credit and other supporting facilities. Civil wars and widespread political conflicts paralysed industrial production in many countries resulting in the virtual stagnation of industrial output. Drastic reduction of public investment under structural adjustment programmes, coupled with a lack of private and foreign investment also weakened the industrial sectors.

In the mining sector, total oil production fell by an estimated 1.1 per cent to 338.2 million tons, as a result of lower outputs in member States of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) (Algeria and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) and in Angola, Cameroon and Tunisia. Oil production increased only in the Congo, Egypt and Nigeria. Overall mineral production was hard hit by the collapse of the mining industry in Zaire, a drop in international prices of ores and metals and sluggish growth of the world economy and the destabilization of markets by unusually large volumes of mineral exports from countries of the former USSR.

The annual inflation rate decreased slightly in 1993 but remained high at 35.5 per cent, compared with 40 per cent in 1992, largely as a result of the impact of devaluation of national currencies, removal of subsidies, higher tariffs on utilities and the rise in import prices which coincided with generally poor output growth. The greatest inflationary tendencies were in Nigeria, Sudan, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe. However, the franc zone economies (Benin, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Mali, Niger, Senegal, Togo) had an average inflation of only 1.4 per cent.

The average budget deficit as a proportion of GDP was 6.5 per cent in the 1992/93 fiscal year, an increase from 5.4 per cent the previous year. However, many countries pursued rigorous fiscal measures aimed at rationalizing expenditure through reducing wage bills and retrenching staff in the wider public sector. On the revenue side, an increasing number of countries were placing more emphasis on revenue generation through broadening the tax base, changing the tax rate and improving the collection of revenue arrears. Some rationalization measures, however, caused substantial economic dislocations in the development of infrastructure, health and education services and aggravated overall unemployment and poverty.

External debt

Africa's external debt reached $285.4 billion in 1993, a 2.4 per cent increase over 1992. The debt-to-GDP ratio increased to 95.9 per cent of regional GDP, from 89.6 per cent in 1992. The debt/export ratio also rose from 287.4 per cent in 1992 to 288.9 per cent in 1993. Actual debt services, however, fell slightly from 26.3 per cent of exports to 24.4 per cent, due to debt rescheduling for major indebted countries, but remained unmanageable for the greater number of States. In addition, some 21 per cent of the African debt was owed to multilateral institutions, which could not engage in debt rescheduling in accordance with their statutes. The debt burden compromised the creditworthiness of most Governments and imposed additional constraints on their ability to obtain new credits and loans. During the year, there was no change in the strategy adopted by the donor community to address the African debt problem, nor any measurable progress in implementing recent initiatives on debt.

Agriculture

Total agricultural output for the region as a whole grew by 3.1 per cent in 1993, compared to a decline of 3.7 per cent in 1992, owing to favourable rainfall in southern Africa after the severe drought the previous year. Food production rose by 3.3 per cent, having decreased by 3.7 per cent in 1992. Total cereal output reached 80.3 million tons from 70.1 million tons in 1992, representing a 15 per cent increase. The cereal crop increased from 9.8 million tons to 19.6 million tons in East and southern Africa, but declined by 1.1 million tons, to 8.7 million tons, in such countries as Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco and Tunisia. The production of roots and tubers increased by 12 per cent, from 81.9 million tons to some 91.7 million tons in 1993, owing largely to a 48 per cent expansion in Nigeria, which compensated for production shortages in strife-torn Angola, Burundi, Liberia, Rwanda and elsewhere. The production of coffee and tea was also on the rise, while cocoa output declined by 4 per cent, from 1,287 tons in 1992 to 1,236 tons in 1993. Production gains in coffee and tea were offset, however, by declining world prices for those commodities. In an effort to boost agricultural exports, many African countries continued to pursue liberalization policies. However, despite the increase in agricultural output, the aggregate food aid needs of the region for 1993-1994 remained high, with 14 countries financing exceptional food emergencies and drought relief and recovery continuing to be a major focus of agricultural development policy.

Trade

Africa's external sector continued to be affected by falling export prices, deteriorating terms of trade, compressed imports, rising debt and reduced resource flows. Despite an impressive 8 per cent growth in the volume of African exports, their value decreased by 0.2 per cent to $74.3 billion in 1993, following a 1.7 per cent contraction in 1992. The oil-exporting countries accounted for $47.6 billion, or 64.1 per cent, of the region's total exports, compared with $50.2 billion, or 67.5 per cent, in 1992. The drop of 12 per cent resulted from the decline in oil prices. At the same time, import values rose by 1.3 per cent to $75.9 billion, with volumes increasing by 3.5 per cent. Thus, Africa's terms of trade deteriorated by 5.5 per cent in 1993, compared with a 4.1 per cent drop the previous year.

As a result of those trends in exports and imports, coupled with the persistent deficit on the services account, Africa's overall balance of payments amounted to a deficit of some $500 million, compared to a surplus of $700 million in 1992. The trade balance and services account registered higher deficits in 1993 and unrequited transfers grew by $400 million. Total ODA receipts by developing Africa fell from $24.7 billion in 1991 to $23.3 billion in 1992, which included a decline from $17.2 billion to $16.7 billion in sub-Saharan Africa alone.

Subregional economic performance

Central Africa was the continent's only subregion to register a negative growth rate in 1993, with output falling by 4.6 per cent, following a 4.8 per cent contraction in 1992. GDP fell by 13 per cent in Zaire, after a 12 per cent decline the previous year, as the continuing political and economic crisis paralysed that country's institutions and brought its major economic infrastructure into a state of disrepair. The subregion's three oil-producing countries (Cameroon, Congo and Gabon) also experienced serious economic difficulties. Economic growth in North Africa fell to 0.8 per cent in 1993 from 0.9 per cent in 1992, due largely to the drought in the Maghreb countries and difficulties in the oil sector, with the exception being Tunisia which recorded a 4.1 per cent increase in GDP. In West Africa, 1992/93 was a good agricultural season and, as a result, GDP increased by 2.7 per cent, although slightly down from the 3 per cent growth level experienced the previous year. Nigeria, the largest economy in the subregion, grew by 4.5 per cent, somewhat slower than in 1992. Southern Africa's aggregate output rose by 1.2 per cent, after a 1.3 per cent decline in 1992, while that of East Africa grew by 2.6 per cent, compared with a fall of 1.4 per cent the previous year. A huge 9.3 per cent increase was registered in Ethiopia, as the country was recovering from years of low output growth because of civil war and drought, while the Sudan's economy expanded by an estimated 5.9 per cent, down from 12.9 per cent in 1992.

The economies of Africa's least developed countries (LDCs) grew by 1.9 per cent in 1993, having contracted by 0.7 per cent in 1992. The positive growth rate was mainly due to the improved performance of the Sahel group, whose GDP increased by 2.4 per cent. The economic performance of many LDCs, however, was adversely affected by the decline in their terms of trade, insufficient ODA flows and the growing burden of debt service obligations, as well as by political conflicts and civil wars, which were destroying physical and social infrastructure and precipitating an escalation of refugees and displaced persons.

Social trends

Unemployment, poor health facilities, high levels of illiteracy and general instability characterized the social scene in Africa in 1993.⁽²⁰⁾ The situation was aggravated by internal strife, political crisis and civil war in several countries and by the high social cost of adjustment programmes, as previous economic strategies paid scant attention to social development issues. Unemployment continued to be a major problem, with few countries having any effective plan to combat it, and the development of the rural sector was marginal in contrast to the limited progress made in respect of urban development. The legacy of the region's economic crisis in the 1980s continued to manifest itself in deteriorating social and human conditions and escalating absolute and relative poverty. An estimated 220 million Africans—almost half of the population in sub-Saharan Africa—lived in absolute poverty, unable to meet their most basic needs. Efforts to overcome problems of education and health were still wanting in the face of high population growth and inadequate resources.

As national development strategies were characterized by massive underinvestment in human and social development, due priority had to be given to social planning and social programmes, focusing on employment generation, poverty alleviation, environmental protection, family planning, health, education, and the nutrition of Africa's children. Efforts for social integration also focused on the protection of children's rights and welfare, promotion of the status of women and enhancement of the capacity of African families to meet their socio-economic needs.

Activities in 1993

The biennial report of the Executive Secretary for 1992-1993⁽²¹⁾ focused on ECA's activities to promote reform measures and bring about structural change in the region, as advocated in major regional development policy and strategy frameworks such as the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action,⁽²²⁾ the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,⁽³⁾ the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation (AAF-SAP)⁽²³⁾ and the Abuja Treaty establishing the African Economic Community. Those activities covered a wide range of issues and concerns, including development policies, human resources development and utilization, information systems development, economic cooperation and integration, agriculture and rural development, marine affairs, special problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, public administration and fiscal affairs, social development, women in development, the environment and development, human settlements, industrial development, trade development and cooperation, the external debt crisis, monetary and financial policies and strategies, natural resources and energy, science and technology, population, transport and communications, tourism, and statistical development. The report grouped the activities under four main categories, namely conferences and meetings; research and analysis; information packaging and dissemination; and technical assistance through advisory services, workshops, seminars and training, fellowships and operational field projects.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation activities

At its 1993 meeting, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole reviewed a preliminary study of proposed strategies for financial resource mobilization⁽⁶⁾ to implement the New Agenda during the period 1993-2005. Africa's external financial requirements for that period were estimated at $950 billion, comprising $490 billion for debt-service obligations and $460 billion for capital investment. However, the dominant share of gross domestic investment had to be financed from domestic savings—between 52 and 78 per cent in the lower-income group of countries and between 87 and 93 per cent in the upper-income group. To meet the growth target set in the New Agenda, gross domestic investment in the former group had to increase to 26 per cent of GDP in 1993, 40.7 per cent in 1998 and 37.3 per cent in 2005, and in the latter group to 24.4 per cent, 32.8 per cent and 33.5 per cent. In turn, that strategy required the gross domestic savings rate to reach 20.5 per cent of GDP in 1993, 26.1 per cent in 1998 and 19.5 per cent in 2005 in the former group and 22.9 per cent, 28.6 per cent and 31.4 per cent for the same years in the latter group.

The Committee emphasized the importance of the region's public and private sectors in boosting aggregate savings rates and urged African Governments to draw a lesson from Asian countries in that regard. It called on them to improve conditions conducive to the mobilization of domestic resources, particularly through the establishment of a peaceful political, social and economic environment as a prerequisite for attracting foreign investment.

Having considered proposals for implementing the Abuja Treaty,⁽⁷⁾ the Committee noted that regional cooperation and economic integration were key to Africa's accelerated economic development and stressed the need to establish national institutional mechanisms to deal with those issues.

In May,⁽²⁶⁾ the Conference of Ministers called on member States to speed up the ratification of the Treaty and its protocols and establish sound structures to further the objectives of the African Economic Community. It urged ECA, OAU and the African Development Bank (AfDB) to assist in furthering subregional economic integration programmes and in setting up self-financed mechanisms to fund Community activities, and appealed for measures to facilitate the integration of subregional economic institutions.

In a 4 May resolution on strategic objectives for Africa's economic development in the 1990s,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Conference called on African Governments to boost their economies' absorptive capacities for external resources, improve their investment climate and implement financial sector reforms to raise the gross domestic saving rate to 25 to 30 per cent of GDP and the gross domestic investment rate to the range of 30 to 35 per cent. The Ministers appealed for increased ODA to the continent, the opening of external markets to Africa's non-traditional agricultural and industrial exports and for external measures to encourage investment and reduce the region's external debt.

The ECA secretariat and MULPOCs coordinated their efforts to assist subregional economic groupings to rationalize their respective programmes. In March, the five MULPOCs organized meetings of their intergovernmental committees of experts for each subregion, to review progress made in economic cooperation and integration at the subregional level. A joint meeting of chief executives of African intergovernmental organizations and United Nations specialized agencies (Addis Ababa, April) considered system-wide proposals for the implementation of the Abuja Treaty, while a conference of chief executives of ECA-sponsored institutions, also held in April, examined proposals for merging and streamlining their activities. A regional seminar on the African Economic Community was conducted in July.

ECA's annual report, covering 7 May 1993 to 5 May 1994,⁽²⁵⁾ noted that the Multidisciplinary Regional Advisory Group provided technical support for training, seminars and workshops for improving public sector performance, privatization and public enterprise, public financial management, and strengthening the capabilities of national and subregional training and research institutions.

Major reports prepared by ECA in the socio-economic area included a survey of economic and social conditions in Africa for 1992/1993 and an annual economic report on the region which reviewed the economic situation in African countries, including the structure of GDP, developments in major economic sectors, development policy analysis, assessment of trade and balance of payments, debt issues, general forecasts for the region as a whole and its main subregions, as well as the implications for growth and development. Other studies dealt with issues of production bases, strategic planning of the food sector, trade structures and liberalization in the context of structural adjustment programmes, the debt crisis, policy constraints in implementing health programmes, the continent's growth performance, determinants for private investment and macroeconomic policy responses to external shocks in Africa. ECA also organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on the revitalization of investment for Africa's development (Addis Ababa, 29 November-1 December).

The United Nations Trust Fund for African Development continued to finance various projects in the economic and social fields. At a biennial pledging conference, held in conjunction with ECA's 1993 session, the Fund received total contributions in excess of $1 million, compared with $285,000 in 1991. Also at the 1993 session, the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution on the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning.⁽²⁶⁾

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/68 without vote.

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolutions 285(XII) of 28 February 1975, 433(XVII) of 30 April 1982, 537(XX) of 29 April 1985, 574(XXI) of 19 April 1986, 612(XXII) of 24 April 1987 and 622(XXIII) of 15 April 1988 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on the financing and future development of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning,

Recalling also resolutions 669(XXIV) of 7 April 1989 and 680(XXV) of 19 May 1990 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, in which the Conference of Ministers appealed to the General Assembly, as a matter of urgency, to approve the incorporation of four core posts of the Institute into the regular budget,

Bearing in mind resolution 726(XXVII) of 22 April 1992 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on strengthening the Economic Commission for Africa to face Africa's development challenges in the 1990s, in which the Conference of Ministers expressed gratitude to the General Assembly for providing the Institute with a grant to cover the costs of four Professional posts for the biennium 1992-1993, thus enabling the Institute to contribute to the process of strengthening the operational capacity of the Commission in meeting the challenges facing Africa in the 1990s,

Recalling its resolutions 1985/62 of 26 July 1985 and 1990/72 of 27 July 1990, in which the Council, inter alia, recommended the incorporation of four core Professional posts into the United Nations regular budget as a contribution to the long-term financing of the Institute and to enable it to carry out its approved work programme and functions on a continued and sustained basis,

Noting that the Joint Inspection Unit, after a thorough examination of the Institute's situation, had recommended in its 1990 report that eight permanent posts be created in the regular budget to erase annual uncertainty about the Institute's budget and to offset dependency on United Nations Development Programme funding,

Bearing in mind that United Nations Development Programme policy requires that funding of core posts in institutions such as the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning should be discouraged, and that the Programme is currently supporting a preparatory-phase project designed to improve operational capacities for research, short-term training and networking, advisory/consultancy services and management audit,

Commending the increasing efforts of member States to meet their obligations to the Institute on a regular basis by paying their annual assessed contributions,

Noting with appreciation that the resources put at the disposal of the Institute, in the form of a grant for the four Professional posts for the years 1991 to 1993, have been productively used and that recent achievements in revitalizing the Institute and in improving its delivery capacities would not have been realized without those resources,

Noting with interest the increasingly successful attempts to generate independent income by various means and to develop operational projects for possible funding from diversified bilateral and other donor agencies,

Convinced that, with the expansion in the fields of its activities to include subject areas related to development management in general, the Institute will, in future years, play an even more important role in the promotion of the sustained development of Africa,

Considering that the Institute is the only bilingual regional institution of its kind in Africa and that it has an outstanding record of providing training and research services to African countries in the area of economic development and planning,

Considering also that there are increasing demands being made by member States and their intergovernmental organizations for the services of the Institute, particularly for tailor-made training programmes,

Considering further that counterpart United Nations institutions in other regions have benefited from regular budget posts,

Conscious of the urgency of stabilizing the financing of the core posts in the Institute,

1. Calls upon the General Assembly, in considering the proposed programme budget for the Economic Commission for Africa for the biennium 1994-1995, to take adequate steps to ensure sufficient staffing at the Professional level for the Commission to implement its mandates;

2. Appeals to all States to provide extrabudgetary resources for programme implementation, as requested in the Institute's component of the proposed programme budget for the Commission for the biennium 1994-1995;

3. Requests all States to sustain their support to the Institute through payment of their contributions and increased use of the various types of services it provides;

4. Urges the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa and the management of the Institute to continue their efforts to mobilize extra-budgetary and other supplementary resources in order to enable the Institute to implement its expanded programmes.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/68
 30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote
 Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/109) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by ECA (E/1993/85), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 14.
 Financial implications. S-G, E/1993/85/Add.I.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 48/454 of 21 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution and agreed to take steps to meet ECA's staffing requirements under the 1994-1995 programme budget.

Statistical development

During the year, the ECA secretariat continued to provide assistance in implementing the Addis Ababa Plan of Action for Statistical Development in Africa in the 1990s⁽²⁷⁾ and to support national programmes in the collection, analysis and dissemination of socio-economic statistics. The Coordinating Committee on African Statistical Development held its annual meeting at Addis Ababa in July. The secretariat produced draft guidelines for the development of quantitative indicators for monitoring statistical development and guidelines for statistical needs assessment and strategy development. It assisted 14 countries in conducting needs assessment and strategy development exercises and undertook some 45 technical advisory missions to provide on-the-job training in the area of statistics. The secretariat issued a publication on African socio-economic indicators for 1992, a bibliography of African statistical publications for 1992-1993 and the African Statistical Yearbook, 1990-1991, Volume I, Part 2: West Africa and Volume I, Part 3: East and Southern Africa. Other publications related to the contribution of women to statistics in the informal sector, the role of the International Comparison Programme in strengthening price statistics, development of statistical databases and the impact of new technology on statistical computing and concepts, definition and classification used in Africa's demographic surveys.

Information for development

The Regional Technical Committee for the Pan-African Development Information System (PADIS), at its sixth meeting (Addis Ababa, 21 and 22 April), reviewed activities of subregional centres—the West African Development Information System (WADIS) and the East and Southern African Development Information System (ESADIS), the latter having become operational in February 1993. In May, ECA, on the recommendation of the meeting, requested the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, to ensure staffing and resources to strengthen information systems development for regional cooperation and integration in Africa.⁽²⁸⁾ The Council and the Assembly both took action on that request (see below). The Subregional Technical Committee for PADIS in North Africa also held a meeting in 1993 (Tangier, Morocco, 30 March-3 April).

PADIS continued to assist member States to improve their information infrastructure in support of development planning and management through feasibility and needs assessment missions, training in software and database management and information management methodologies, and in the use of electronic mail and computer-mediated communications. Workshops were organized on networking among libraries and documentation centres in southern Africa (Harare, Zimbabwe, February), communication in Ethiopian government offices (Addis Ababa, 6-8 December) and electronic communications for West African universities (Accra, Ghana, 15-17 December).

PADIS continued to publish its quarterly newsletter on information management and technology in the region and produced databases on socio-economic, scientific and technical aspects of development in Africa and on African experts in those aspects.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/67 without vote.

Strengthening development information systems for regional cooperation and integration in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned about the wide North-South gap in the flow of vital information and in the acquisition and utilization of information technology,

Conscious of the importance of information in fostering African regional cooperation and integration, in particular through the strengthening of existing regional groupings and the establishment of the African Economic Community,

Bearing in mind the need to establish data networks and databases as specified in the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community, as well as the emphasis on information technology delineated in the Fourth Lome Convention, signed at Lome on 15 December 1989,

Recalling resolutions 716(XXVI) of 12 May 1991 and 726(XXVII) and 732(XXVII) of 22 April 1992 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Appreciating the continuing support given by the International Development Research Centre to the Pan-African Development Information System in order to carry out activities to strengthen the information capabilities of member States,

Appreciating also the support given by eleven member States for the submission of the project on information technology for Africa for further consideration by the Commission of the European Communities in the framework of the Fourth Lome Convention,

Noting with satisfaction the performance of the Pan-African Development Information System of the Economic Commission for Africa in the delivery of technical assistance to member States,

Also noting with satisfaction the proposal of the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to incorporate the activities of the System into the programme budget of the Commission,

Bearing in mind the need to strengthen the subregional development information centres of the Commission as information support for subregional economic cooperation and integration,

Noting with concern the decreasing availability of extra-budgetary resources for implementation and utilization of development information systems and technology,

Also noting with concern the precarious financial situation of the Pan-African Development Information System and the need to end its reliance on extrabudgetary sources of funding,

Welcoming the intention of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to provide adequate resources for mandated programmes in Africa, with special attention to those programmes in science and technology for development, in the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995,

1. Requests the Pan-African Development Information System to build elements of cost recovery into its delivery of information services and products;

2. Urges member States, in order to receive further needed technical assistance in information systems development:

(a) To give priority to information systems development in the use of their United Nations Development Programme country indicative planning figures;

(b) To consider development information activities in their 1993 pledges to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development;

(c) To use, where appropriate, the financial provision under the Fourth Lome Convention for this purpose;

3. Urgently appeals to the donor community to support the activities of the Economic Commission for Africa to strengthen development information capabilities in the African region;

4. Requests the Commission to continue its leadership role in the coordination of development information and technology to respond to pressing development problems of Africa;

5. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to seek additional resources, through voluntary contributions, for the subregional development information centres of the Commission in the framework of the subprogramme on statistical and information systems development;

6. Requests the General Assembly to ensure the provision of adequate staffing and resources to permit the implementation of activities under the subprogramme of the Commission on information systems development, beginning with the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/67

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/109) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by ECA (E/1993/85/Add.1), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 14.

Financial implications. S-G, E/1993/85/Add.1.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 48/453 of 21 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution and agreed to ensure the provision of staff and resources to permit the delivery of activities on information systems development under the 1994-1995 programme budget.

Public administration and finance

An international conference on development management in Africa (Addis Ababa, 8-12 March) reviewed the region's past experience, emerging challenges and future priorities in that field and emphasized the need for a new approach of shared responsibility among national, regional and external actors to enhance development management capacity in Africa. The conference adopted the Strategic Agenda for Development Management in Africa in the 1990s,⁽²⁹⁾ which identified priorities for enhancing development management, including improving the public policy-making process; enhancing efficiency and quality of African civil services; promoting ethics and strengthening accountability mechanisms as well as the resource mobilization and financial management capacity of African Governments; undertaking public enterprise sector reforms to improve public enterprise performance and privatization; promoting economic and institutional decentralization for sustained development; enhancing entrepreneurial capacity and promoting private sector development; ensuring effective popular participation in development and governance; enhancing the participation and skills of women in development management; and optimizing the use of information technology in African public administration.

In May,⁽³⁰⁾ the Conference of Ministers endorsed the Strategic Agenda, recommended its use as a guide for action by African Governments as well as by regional and international organizations, and requested the Executive Secretary to coordinate and monitor its implementation. It also called on member States and international organizations to mobilize support to continue the Special Action Programme for Public Administration and Management in Africa and to ensure the realization of the Agenda's objectives.

The secretariat's work in public administration and fiscal affairs focused on research to identify policy options and measures to improve the operations of public institutions and enhance their role in the development process. It conducted studies on improving government financial management, tax reforms and administration. It organized a national training workshop on senior financial management in the public sector (Lusaka, Zambia, March) and prepared a directory of African institutions offering management education and training. Other areas of research dealt with the legal and regulatory constraints to private sector development, strengthening of credit and capital markets and the development of human resources, fiscal policies to promote indigenous private investment, assessment of the performance of reformed public and recently privatized enterprises, various approaches to privatization in Africa and measures for stimulating, developing and promoting indigenous entrepreneurial capability.

International trade and development finance

ECA activities in international trade and development finance continued to focus on mobilizing financial resources for development and Africa's international trade.

The Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole considered issues related to the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and their implications for Africa's trade. It expressed concern that issues of importance to African and other developing countries had been sidetracked in those negotiations and that could result in an inequitable international trading system after their conclusion. The Committee noted that, given its vulnerable position, Africa needed to be granted preferential treatment and longer transitional periods of adjustment for implementing structural reforms. The Committee also observed that the region's access to markets of industrialized countries was becoming more restricted and called on African States to exercise pragmatism in their trade liberalization policies. It underlined the need for members of the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) Group to prepare for the mid-term review of the Lome IV Convention on trade between the Group and the European Community. On the Committee's recommendation, the Conference of Ministers called on African countries to establish strong common positions on key issues in the forthcoming mid-term review of the Lome Convention, with the objective of expanding their exports to the European Community.⁽³¹⁾

In 1993, the secretariat assisted African countries to formulate and implement policies and measures to expand domestic and intra-African trade and the continent's international trade, alleviate the debt burden and improve their debt management capabilities and to facilitate monetary and financial integration in Africa. It undertook studies on Africa's competitiveness in traditional markets, on its export prospects after the Uruguay Round, on mechanisms for facilitating the development of rural trade and stabilizing export earnings and on factors contributing to the underdevelopment of African domestic trade. It also continued to publish the African Trade Bulletin and its Flash newsletter on trade opportunities and issued an African trade directory dealing with the external debt crisis and the fourth edition of a directory of chambers of commerce, agriculture and mines.

The secretariat initiated the creation of a database on the region's external debt profile and organized a seminar on the impact of declining commodity prices on Africa's capacity to grow and service its external debt (Addis Ababa, 15 and 16 November), followed by a workshop on ways of alleviating Africa's debt burden (Addis Ababa, 17 and 18 November).

The Conference of African Ministers of Trade (twelfth session, Tunis, Tunisia, 22-24 October)⁽³²⁾ considered issues related to the region's effective participation in international trade, the impact of the Uruguay Round and preparations for the mid-term review of the Lome IV Convention, focusing on policies, strategies and measures to foster an enabling environment for Africa's trade. The Conference also discussed the continuing decline in prices of commodities of export interest to Africa, the role of the private sector in promoting intra-African trade, and policy measures to enhance the role of women in domestic trade and to facilitate the development of rural trade through the provision of services and rural credit. The Conference adopted the Tunis Declaration on the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations and agreed that an international conference on technical assistance to African countries to assist them to adapt their economies to the new trade environment should be organized jointly by ECA, OAU, UNCTAD and GATT. It also adopted recommendations concerning the promotion and expansion of intra-African trade and strategies for the revitalization, recovery and growth of Africa's trade in the 1990s and beyond.

Transnational corporations

Activities of the Joint ECA/UNCTAD Unit on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) focused on research to encourage private sector activities and enhance the role of foreign direct investment (FDI) in the financing of African development. The Unit carried out case studies on FDI from developing countries, the role of trading TNCs on industrialization in developing countries, investment flows from Central and Eastern Europe, Japanese FDI and prospects for future increased activity, and technology transfer through Japanese foreign investment.

Industrial development

The secretariat continued to assist member States in formulating and implementing industrial policies and programmes aimed at the revitalization and restructuring of the region's industrial sector. It published the annual bulletin entitled Focus on African Industry and a study of investment and financial policies and their impact on the development of indigenous industries. It organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on the possibility of producing basic chemicals from natural gas and a seminar on policy options for Africa in the 1990s in the light of the report of the South Commission on South-South economic cooperation (Addis Ababa, 15 and 16 September) (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

In the context of the second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA II), 1993-2002, publications were issued on lessons and experiences from selected newly industrialized countries for the Decade's implementation, application of compact mini-plant technology to manufacture steel products in African countries and production and utilization of nitrogen, phosphate and potash fertilizers in Africa and perspectives for their integrated development, as well as a technical handbook on composite and non-wheat flours. The secretariat provided technical assistance to promote 11 selected subregional projects in the priority areas of metal, chemicals, engineering and agro-industries and organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on the promotion of investment in industrial projects (Addis Ababa, 22-25 November).

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole emphasized the need for harmonization and coordination of the programme of IDDA II, which was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in 1992⁽³³⁾ and later adopted by the General Assembly,⁽³⁴⁾ and the programme of the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (see below). The Committee considered a proposed programme for the coordination of activities.⁽³⁵⁾ In May, on the Committee's recommendation, the Conference of Ministers adopted a resolution on IDDA II,⁽³⁶⁾ elements of which were included in action taken by the Economic and Social Council later in the year.

The Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Port Louis, Mauritius, 31 May-3 June) adopted the Plan of Action for the harmonization of the implementation of IDDA II and requested the Executive Secretary of ECA and the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) to take concrete action to coordinate related activities. The Conference called on African Governments, ECA and UNIDO to support the development of the private sector for the accelerated implementation of IDDA II and the development of basic industries for the structural transformation of African economies. It adopted the Mauritius Declaration on Africa's accelerated industrial recovery and development in the context of IDDA II and beyond, underscoring the importance of the private sector and natural resource-based core industries in the continent's self-reliant and self-sustained development. It also adopted the African common position for the fifth session of the General Conference of UNIDO, to be held at Yaounde, Cameroon, in December (see PART SIX, Chapter XVII). That common position emphasized the importance of UNIDO's contribution to the implementation of IDDA II, human resources development through industrial and technical training, the development and transfer of technology and rehabilitation of existing industries, industrialization of African LDCs, external debt and the industrial sector and new concepts and approaches for industrial development cooperation.

Follow-up meetings on the implementation of subregional programmes for IDDA II were held for West Africa (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 14-18 June), North Africa (Tunis, 22-26 November) and eastern and southern Africa (Addis Ababa, 16-19 December).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/62 without vote.

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002), and fifth session of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling decision IDB.9/Dec.16 of 22 May 1992 of the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in which the Board accepted the offer of the Government of Cameroon to act as host to the fifth session of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization at Yaounde from 6 to 10 December 1993,

Considering the importance of the Conference, one of whose objectives will be to reassess the role and mission of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with a view to increasing its effectiveness and enabling it to respond more fully to the needs and interests of all member States, in particular developing countries,

Bearing in mind the joint African position on the revitalization of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization adopted by the Conference of African Ministers of Industry at its eleventh meeting, held at Port Louis from 31 May to 3 June 1993,

3. Notes with satisfaction the offer of the Government of Cameroon to act as host to the fifth session of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

4. Welcomes the measures adopted and those still to be taken by the Government of Cameroon with a view to ensuring the success of the Conference, and invites States Members and the organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to its full success.

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/237 of 22 December 1989, by which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1991-2000 the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/177 of 22 December 1992, in which the Assembly adopted the programme for the Second Decade and decided to adjust the period for the programme for the Decade to cover the years 1993-2002,

Bearing in mind resolution 739(XXVII) and decision 1 (XXVII) of 22 April 1992, of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Aware of the need to harmonize the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Considering the relevant provisions of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

1. Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/65

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/109) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by ECA (E/1993/85/Add.1), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 48/456 of 21 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Council resolution on IDDA II and agreed to provide adequate resources for the Decade's implementation.

Transport and communications

Activities in the field of transport and communications focused on projects dealing with human resources and institutional development, transport data gathering and processing for the eventual establishment of a transport database, and the feasibility of manufacturing transport equipment in Africa. The secretariat organized an ad hoc expert group meeting to review guidelines on development of subregional cooperation in shipping and issued guidelines for improving clearing and forwarding operations in the region, management of shipping, coordination among port authorities and port users, inland water port efficiency and intra-African mail routing plans, developing human resources in freight forwarding and efficient transport chains along transit corridors. The secretariat prepared a report on the status of cooperation among African ports and its promotion for an intergovernmental meeting of African port experts and senior officials and published newsletters on activities of the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa.

Transport and Communications Decade

The Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (ninth meeting, Addis Ababa, 12 and 13 March) reviewed the implementation of the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

(UNTACDA II), which was adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1991⁽³⁷⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽³⁸⁾ Acting on the recommendation of the Conference, the ECA Conference of Ministers adopted a resolution on UNTACDA II,⁽³⁹⁾ which the Economic and Social Council drew on later in the year in taking action on the subject. Also on the Conference's recommendation, the Ministers appealed to African Governments to give priority to the employment of skilled Africans, particularly in the transport and communications sector, and the establishment of an incentive package to retain such skilled manpower, and called on agencies financing projects in Africa to use skilled Africans in implementing those projects.⁽⁴⁰⁾

In other action,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Conference of Ministers decided to reactivate the Trans-African Highway Bureau and called for every effort to enable the Bureau to start functioning in 1994. In response to that resolution, a meeting of plenipotentiaries (Rabat, Morocco, 14 September) adopted the statutes of the Bureau, which were to become effective after their ratification by 26 member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/66 without vote.

Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 710(XXVI) of 12 May 1991 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, in which the Conference of Ministers adopted the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Recalling also its resolution 1991/83 of 26 July 1991, in which it requested the General Assembly formally to launch the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Referring to General Assembly decision 46/456 of 20 December 1991, in which the Assembly approved the programme for the Second Decade, including the provision of resources for its implementation,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 48/455 of 21 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution and agreed to provide adequate resources for the Decade's implementation.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

In response to a 1991 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a June evaluation report, prepared by the Executive Secretaries of ECA and ECE, on the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar.⁽⁴³⁾ The report analysed studies carried out on the project between 1982 and 1992, under 1980 and 1989 cooperation agreements between Morocco and Spain, dealing with its geological, economic and legal aspects, as well as with traffic estimates and the feasibility of a tunnel or a bridge. The report concluded that the project was technically feasible and economically acceptable, and that it could be justified as a multilateral project because some 40 per cent of the gain from constructing a permanent link would be for users in countries other than Morocco and Spain. The report recommended that additional studies be carried out on the project's impact on local development and that structures built in similar terrain elsewhere in the region be examined, a parallel analysis of one tunnel option and two bridge options be undertaken and the impact of the construction of bridge piers on the undersea environment and the technical, economic and financial feasibility of the partial start-up of the project be evaluated.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/60 without vote.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, 1985/70 of 26 July 1985, 1987/69 of 8 July 1987, 1989/119 of 28 July 1989, 1991/74 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/45 of 31 July 1992,

Referring to General Assembly resolution 43/179 of 20 December 1988, by which the Assembly declared the period 1991-2000 the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Also referring to resolution 912(1989), adopted on 1 February 1989 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in south-western Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Conscious that the project for the permanent link will help offer better prospects for the improvement of the transport networks connected to it and for the development of broader cooperation between Europe and Africa,

Also conscious of the economic impact and regional and interregional integration effects of the project,

Taking account, firstly, of the considerable work done on the project in terms of the surveying of the Strait of Gibraltar site and the engineering and socio-economic studies carried out and, secondly, of the ongoing programme of work, which, by the end of the year, should lead to the choice of the most advantageous solution,

Taking note of the recommendations and conclusions of the evaluation report on the studies relating to the project undertaken during the period 1982-1993, prepared by the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe in accordance with Council resolution 1991/74,

1. Welcomes the cooperation on the project among the Governments of Morocco and Spain, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe;

2. Also welcomes the favourable response of the International Tunnelling Association and the Transport Study Centre for the Western Mediterranean to the appeal made by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1991/74;

3. Commends the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the work done in preparing the project evaluation report requested by the Council in resolution 1991/74;

4. Invites the scientific and technical institutions concerned to take part in the special session on the permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar, to be held at Cairo in April 1994 under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe and the International Tunnelling Association;

5. Invites the States concerned and the competent bodies to cooperate with the Governments of Morocco and Spain in carrying out studies for the implementation of the project and to take part in the International Colloquium on the Permanent Link, to be held at Seville, Spain, in 1994;

6. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to take an active part in the follow-up to the project and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1995;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to give his full support to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to enable them to carry out the activities mentioned above and, within existing priorities, to provide them with the necessary resources.

Tourism

In the area of tourism development, the ECA Conference of Ministers recommended⁽⁴⁴⁾ that member States should take steps to recognize the positive role of tourism in socio-economic development, allocate necessary resources to it and develop human resources for tourism development; improve and develop the quality and diversity of tourism products; protect the natural and human environment for sustainable tourism; constitute an African association of tourism and hotel training establishments; facilitate tourist flows through a concerted policy; and establish inter-State tourism circuits based on complementarity, on joint promotion of tourism products and on African integration policies.

ECA organized an experts workshop on tourism development (Addis Ababa, 16 and 17 June), conducted a study on traditional crafts-producers in Kenya and prepared project proposals for the integration of traditional arts and crafts into African tourism products and for the development of human resources for tourism. It participated in a meeting of European tourism operators in Africa, convened by the European Community in November, and provided assistance in developing terms of reference for a pan-African tourism organization, organizing a festival of arts and culture in Madagascar and elaborating a tourism programme and a strategy for tourism development in the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States.

Science and technology

ECA's activities in science and technology focused on strengthening the infrastructure for policy-making and planning in the development and application of science and technology, human resources development and utilization and promotion of subregional and regional cooperation. The secretariat undertook a study on the subregional and regional professional scientific and technical associations and institutions in the area of science and technology and organized a training workshop on integration of science and technology and economic development policies (Kampala, Uganda 17-21 May). It also carried out a feasibility study on the proposed establishment of an African Foundation for Research and Development (AFRAND), and set up a Task Force on AFRAND. The proposal was supported by the Presidential Forum on Management of Science and Technology for Development in Africa (Gaborone, Botswana, 31 October-1 November). Science and technology issues were also considered by the North Africa Subregional Working Group (Tunis, 13-16 December), which examined the basis for a subregional policy in that field.

The eighth meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Science and Technology Development (Addis Ababa, 22-26 November) welcomed the Committee's upgrading to the African Regional Conference on Science and Technology, in accordance with the new structure of ECA,⁽⁶⁾ and requested ECA, UNESCO, OAU and UNIDO to develop and recommend mechanisms for evaluating developments in and management of science and technology in member States. It also made recommendations on methodologies for planning and managing science and technology policy, the role of subregional and regional technology associations and professional institutions, acquisition and transfer of nuclear science and technology for agricultural production and food preservation, institutional capacity-building, integrating science and technology and economic development policies, and technology assessment for better technological priorities and choices.

Marine affairs

In the marine affairs area, the ECA secretariat provided advisory services in the application of legal mechanisms established by the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁽⁴⁵⁾ for the exploitation of non-living marine resources. It undertook missions to various States and conducted a technical study on the status of awareness, ratification and progress in implementing the Convention's provisions.

Natural resources

Natural resources activities covered the exploration and development of mineral resources, the development and management of water resources and the development and provision of cartographic and remote-sensing services.

On the recommendation of the Eighth United Nations Cartographic Conference for Africa (Addis Ababa, 22-26 February), the Conference of Ministers requested the Executive Secretary to assist member States in coordinating their activities in cartography, remote sensing and geographic information systems (GIS) and called for action to establish hydrographic services in eastern and southern Africa and extend them to the rest of the continent. It urged industrialized countries and the international community to strengthen efforts for the education of African scientists and users of earth observation data, GIS and cartography, and requested countries advanced in space technology to facilitate access to satellite data and extend their data acquisition network to improve coverage of African countries.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The Ministers also called for efforts to set up suitable facilities for data acquisition, processing and dissemination at the Regional Centre for Services in Surveying, Mapping and Remote Sensing in Nairobi and the Regional Remote Sensing Centre in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, and appealed to ECA and UNDP to set up, strengthen and support national, subregional and regional environment information systems programmes.⁽⁴⁷⁾ The Ministers also invited ECA and the African Organization for Cartography and Remote Sensing to work to establish a cartographic data bank for Africa.⁽⁴⁸⁾

ECA assisted member States and relevant institutions to obtain information on surveying, mapping, remote sensing and GIS and prepared technical papers for a meeting on international mapping from space (Hanover, Germany, September) and the United Nations Regional Conference on Space Technology for Sustainable Development in Africa (Dakar, Senegal, 25-29 October). It published the sixth issue of the MAJI annual information bulletin on water resources activities and undertook studies on problems and prospects for integrated development of the Nile basin, existing transboundary river/lake basin organizations and conservation and rational use of water resources in selected North African countries.

The secretariat carried out a comparative study of policies for mineral resources development in the region and provided technical assistance for a round-table meeting on small-scale gold mining (Niamey, Niger, October) and a conference on financial and technical support for mining ventures (Johannesburg, South Africa, November). It also provided assistance in the restructuring of Equatorial Guinea's Mining Department, in preparing studies on copper and aluminium fabricating facilities in Africa and in small-scale gold mining activities in Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana and Guinea. ECA organized and serviced the fifth Regional Conference on Mineral Resources Development and Utilization in Africa (Addis Ababa, 10-17 November), which made a wide range of recommendations concerning mineral development policies, national legislation on environmental impact assessment, resource mobilization and strengthening of geological and mining institutions, small-scale mining and the environment, the establishment of data banks, and cooperation and integration in mineral resources and energy development and utilization.

Energy

ECA continued to assist member States in developing indigenous energy sources, formulating adequate energy policy and strengthening institutional capacity through training African experts in the energy sector. An ad hoc expert group meeting was held for senior advisers (Addis Ababa, 17-19 May) on energy policy and strategies in Africa, and publications were prepared on energy supply and use and related policy options in African countries, as well as on the potential contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to the African energy supply.

Food and agriculture

Activities in the field of food and agricultural development included a workshop on the improvement of public sector capacities in project management and administration. Technical publications were prepared on measures for the increased operational effectiveness of planning and policy-making institutions, on the promotion, rehabilitation and conservation of green belts and soils in North Africa, and on approaches to improve agricultural data collection, processing and interpretation in eastern and southern Africa. The secretariat developed curricula for training in agricultural marketing extension services and in basic marketing principles and prepared a comparative analysis of the structural advantages of agricultural export-oriented products of Africa and South-East Asia. Other studies dealt with measures for alleviating infrastructural constraints to intraregional food trade, intervention policies and measures for enhancing small farmers' access to credit facilities, and small-farmer credit programmes.

ECA convened meetings on critical food security issues for Central and West African countries and produced a manual on measures to expand food availability through the exploitation of non-conventional food resources. It provided assistance in programming and promoting comprehensive food security programmes, improving national capacities in food security policy analysis and developing an information base for maize and non-conventional food resources. It also carried out the testing of livestock models in Central and West Africa, prepared an in-depth study on land privatization in Africa and launched a project on massive rehabilitation and development of agriculture in Ethiopia's Tigray region. It published one issue of the Rural Progress newsletter and produced a report on strengthening financial institutions for rural Africa and providing credit for agricultural and other income-generating activities in selected countries.

Fisheries

Activities in the areas of fisheries and living marine resources included seminars on the continent's aquaculture sector and on fisheries policies and strategy in Ethiopia. ECA also provided advisory services on fisheries-related issues for the post-conflict reconstruction and rehabilitation of affected African countries, such as Mozambique, and a follow-up fact-finding mission to Eritrea to formulate a master plan for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development. It assisted in developing a subregional maritime data bank for members of the Indian Ocean Commission and in elaborating aquaculture development strategies in various subregions. Several publications were prepared, dealing with cooperation in the exploitation and management of shared inland fisheries resources, updating and treatment of data in agriculture and fisheries, cooperation in the implementation of exclusive economic zones in fisheries, the status of agriculture and fisheries in Africa and analysis of fisheries activities, a proposed strategy for developing the fisheries sector and harmonizing and coordinating its activities, and aquaculture development in selected African countries.

Environment

The ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole considered the African Strategies for the implementation of Agenda 21⁽⁸⁾ in seven priority areas: managing demographic change and population pressures; achieving food self-sufficiency and security; ensuring efficient and equitable use of water resources; securing greater energy self-sufficiency; optimizing environmentally clean industrial production; managing species and ecosystems; and preventing and reversing desertification. The Committee noted the general inadequacy of human resources and institutional capacity in the priority sectoral programmes and made recommendations to mitigate the situation. It welcomed measures to prepare an African common position in negotiations on an international convention to combat desertification and urged that the position should include modalities for eradicating poverty through sustainable development, promoting alternative development of livelihoods for people, assessing and monitoring drought and desertification and their interaction with climate change, and reaching consensus on the role of multilateral institutions, NGOs and the private sector.

On the Committee's recommendation, the Conference of Ministers adopted the African Strategies for the implementation of Agenda 21 and urged member States to incorporate them into national strategies and to mobilize resources for their implementation.⁽⁴⁹⁾ The Ministers also urged ECA, OAU and AfDB to explore the possibility of establishing an African environment fund in support of the Strategies' implementation and requested the Executive Secretary to organize a ministerial conference to evaluate negotiations on the Convention to combat desertification.

In other action,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Ministers urged member States to advocate greater support for the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development in Niamey, called on them to ratify the Centre's constitution and appealed for financial support.

The fifth session of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (Addis Ababa, 22-27 November) took note of the Strategies and encouraged African countries and organizations to use them as a framework for formulating their national action programmes in the implementation of Agenda 21. The Conference adopted a new policy orientation and its indicative programme for 1994-1995, which focused on combating poverty and environmental degradation. It also considered issues related to desertification, natural disasters and a proposed African regional meeting on biological diversity.

ECA's activities in environment and development focused on developing common interpretations, strategies and action programmes as a follow-up to UNCED, ensuring coordination of regional and subregional activities and contributing to Africa's regional position at the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, to be held in 1994, and an African perspective on the international convention to combat desertification. The secretariat assisted in servicing an expert group meeting on the convention (Addis Ababa, 5-8 August) and a high-level meeting of the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development (Addis Ababa, September).

Social development and humanitarian affairs

The ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole noted the widespread deterioration in living conditions in Africa as a result of continuing disease, illiteracy, undernourishment and malnutrition, unemployment and poverty. A comprehensive and integrated strategy for development and structural transformation, centred on human development, was required to bring about improvements in those conditions. The Committee adopted the Human Development Agenda for Africa in the 1990s,⁽⁵¹⁾ which outlined a human-centred programme of action in the priority areas of education for development, improved health care, food security and nutrition, safe water and sanitation, generation of productive employment opportunities and promotion of popular participation, good governance and civic society, and set out financial requirements for the programme's implementation.

The ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the Agenda and urged African Governments to give priority to improving human development conditions and to redirect their policies to ensure the implementation of human-centred development strategies.⁽⁵²⁾ The Ministers requested the Executive Secretary to initiate actions for the establishment of a regional human development fund in Africa, as outlined in the Agenda. In separate action, the Ministers recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a resolution on the preparations for the 1995 World Summit for Social Development⁽⁵³⁾ (see below).

The Ministers further called on African Governments to intensify preparations for the observance of and follow-up to the International Year of the Family (1994) and urged that observance activities be concentrated at the local and national levels.⁽³⁴⁾ It invited African Governments to develop policies to support, strengthen and protect the family and to provide mechanisms for mitigating negative socio-economic consequences of national development policies. It urged them to develop measures to address and resolve the problems of armed and civil conflicts, hunger and famine and their impact on the family. The Ministers noted the recommendations of the United Nations Africa and Western Asia Preparatory Meeting for the International Year of the Family (Tunis, 29 March-2 April), which examined the situation of families in the ECA and ESCWA regions.

The secretariat carried out several activities to promote human resources development, including measures to establish a human development fund, which would subsume the previously proposed African fund for youth. Technical publications were produced dealing with status, policies and programmes on human resources development and utilization in Africa; the impact of structural adjustment programmes on the effective utilization of human resources; refinement of human development indicators; an exchange programme of high-level manpower in the region; problems and constraints on productivity in agriculture; planning, development and utilization of human resources for industrial development; and measures for employment generation and stimulation of growth in the urban informal sector and among women workers in rural areas. It also organized workshops, seminars and symposia to assist member States in various fields. National workshops were held on enhancing cooperation and interface between the Government and popular development organizations in Namibia (Windhoek, 11-13 August) and on creating an enabling environment for the informal sector in Ethiopia (Addis Ababa, 12-14 October). In collaboration with the United States Institute for Peace, a symposium was organized on cooperation in the Horn of Africa (Addis Ababa, 8-12 July) to consider the socio-economic and cultural content of the conflict in the Horn of Africa and the human dimensions of the post-conflict reconstruction and development.

In the area of education, ECA carried out research on the role of Africa's higher-education institutions in economic integration, implications of regional development strategies for education, the status of and requirements for training programmes and organizational development policies for university staff, non-formal education and training, guidelines for the preparation of manpower profiles and identification of training needs, and problems, constraints and methods of identifying alternative sources of financing higher education in Africa. Curriculum development was another area of research and included publications on past attempts towards curriculum reform, further steps in curriculum development for socio-economic transformation in the region, curriculum development for promoting self-confidence, assessment of confidence-building factors in school curricula and attitude formation. The secretariat, in cooperation with UNESCO, organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on curriculum reform for development and self-confidence-building in Africa (Addis Ababa, 18-21 October).

Activities in the social development area focused on issues concerning youth, the family, disabled and ageing persons and crime. The secretariat conducted research on the role and contribution of youth to conserving the African environment and on the administration of juvenile justice in eastern and southern Africa, and cooperated with OAU in organizing a meeting on youth and development (Cotonou, Benin, 19 and 20 August). It undertook a study on the social and economic situation of the ageing in Africa, and organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on the impact of economic and social changes on the African family (Addis Ababa, 13-17 December), which reviewed long-term strategies and programmes. The secretariat continued to provide technical and substantive support to the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and participated in the fourth meeting of its Governing Board (Kampala, 22 and 23 November).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/64 without vote.

Preparations for the World Summit for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/92 of 16 December 1992 on the convening in 1995 of a world summit for social development,

Convinced that the World Summit for Social Development would provide a unique opportunity to focus the attention of all countries on the main social and human concerns and to promote policies and strengthen international cooperation in order to effectively address those concerns,

Further convinced that Africa has a special stake in the Summit and its outcome,

Cognizant of the continuing severe deterioration of social and human conditions in Africa and the need to reverse this unacceptable situation as a matter of urgency,

Determined to ensure the effective participation of Africa in the preparatory process for the Summit and at the Summit itself,

1. Urges States members of the Economic Commission for Africa to participate actively in the preparatory activities for the World Summit for Social Development, particularly the meetings of the Preparatory Committee established by the General Assembly;

2. Stresses the need for members of the Commission to adopt an African common position on the issues to be discussed at the Summit;

3. Decides that an African common position on the issues before the Summit should be formulated by the meeting of the Conference of African Ministers Responsible for Human Development, to be held in January 1994, which should serve as the regional preparatory meeting for the Summit;

4. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to prepare, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and other African regional and subregional organizations, the necessary documentation for the meeting, including a draft African common position on the issues before the Summit;

5. Further requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission to transmit the African common position to the Preparatory Committee for the Summit, at its first session, which is scheduled to be held in New York from 31 January to 11 February 1994.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/64

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/109) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by ECA (E/1993/85); agenda item 14.

Population

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May,⁽⁵⁵⁾ approved the Dakar/Ngor Declaration on Population, Family and Sustainable Development, adopted by the third African Population Conference in 1992,⁽⁵⁶⁾ and requested African Governments to use the Declaration in preparing for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. The Executive Secretary was invited to have the Declaration's principles, objectives and recommendations incorporated in ECA's work programme and to establish a follow-up committee of member States on the Declaration's implementation.

Activities in population issues emphasized the integration of population factors in development planning and research in population dynamics, family planning and HIV/AIDS and their interrelationships with sustainable development. The secretariat prepared an assessment of national population programmes in member States during the 1990s and a manual for the integration of population factors in human resources development. Other publications dealt with the correlation of changing infant and child mortality and fertility to development programmes in selected countries; mortality levels, patterns, trends, differentials and their socio-economic interrelationships in Africa; the relationship between population and the environment; alternatives to traditional approaches in family planning programmes in Africa; and consistency of United Nations projections with those produced in selected ECA member States. In addition, ECA continued to provide advisory services to the region in the field of population.

Human settlements

On the recommendation of the seventh meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (Addis Ababa, 29 March-2 April), the ECA Conference of Ministers supported the development of the ECA project on the building materials industry in Africa and invited African Governments to support its implementation and ensure the use of environmentally acceptable materials and practices under the project. The Ministers requested the Executive Secretary to mobilize resources and ensure the continuation of the project and its extension to other African countries under the programme of IDDA II dealing with industrial development.⁽⁵⁷⁾ They further called for cooperation in implementing projects to promote local building materials, provide manpower training in the production of those materials and construction techniques, and formulate unified standards for building materials to ensure product quality.

The secretariat's work in human settlements focused on redressing the rural/urban imbalance in the region. It developed and promoted guidelines for the formulation and implementation of national policies on settlements, aimed at balanced spatial distribution of population and economic activities in the context of a sound environment, land reforms, promotion of rural townships and strengthening the indigenous construction sector through the development of indigenous skills, low-cost building materials and small-scale production units and transfer of appropriate technology. Pilot plants were introduced or under construction in selected countries for the commercial manufacture of stabilized soil blocks, fibre concrete roofing tiles and lime kilns. The secretariat published a bulletin on human settlements in Africa, prepared guidelines on shelter indicators in the region and issued publications on the formulation of efficient land-use planning within the framework of the urban economy and physical planning, applicable to arid and semi-arid areas as well as coastal and tropical forest zones.

Integration of women in development

At its fourteenth meeting, the Africa Regional Coordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development (Addis Ababa, 19-21 April) reviewed ECA's activities and programme on women in development; discussed implementation of the Abuja Declaration on Participatory Development: the role of women in Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the 1989 Conference on the Integration of Women in Development and endorsed by the ECA Conference of Ministers in 1990;⁽⁵⁸⁾ considered a progress report on establishing a federation of African women entrepreneurs and an African bank for women; and reviewed preparations for the fifth African Regional Conference on Women, scheduled for Dakar in November 1994 in preparation for the 1995 World Conference on Women. The Committee's draft provisional agenda for the Regional Conference focused on women in the peace process; equality, education and social issues; women empowerment; and women, environment and sustainable development. Other matters considered by the Committee included violence against women and strategies for improving the flow of information on gender issues in Africa.

On the Committee's recommendation, the ECA Conference of Ministers adopted the agenda and thematic outline of the fifth African Regional Conference on Women, urged African Governments to initiate preparation of national reports for submission to the Conference and to institute information and communication campaigns and called on them to establish national preparatory coordinating committees.⁽⁵⁹⁾ The Ministers also called on ECA, OAU and the Africa Regional Coordinating Committee to help define Africa's plan of action for consideration by the World Conference as part of the global platform for action, appealed for support to subregional and regional women's programmes and efforts to create a federation of African women entrepreneurs and an African bank for women, and urged ECA and OAU to assist Uganda in organizing the Regional Conference on Women, Peace and Development to be held in Kampala in 1993.

Activities for the integration of women in development focused on preparations for the fifth African Regional Conference and on enhancement of women's role in mainstream development by reinforcing their business and managerial capabilities and strengthening the database and information network on women. Following a regional inter-agency meeting at Addis Ababa in March, an Inter-Agency Task Force was established to coordinate preparations for the Regional Conference. At meetings at Addis Ababa in April and September, the Task Force adopted information and communication strategies for the Conference and agreed on regional and agency inputs. ECA also developed guidelines for preparing national reports and participated in a preparatory meeting for the Conference of French- and Portuguese-speaking African Ministers of Women's Affairs and Rural Development in November and the Regional Conference on Women and Peace (Kampala, 22-25 November), which adopted the Kampala Action Plan on Women and Peace.

The African Training and Research Centre for Women (ATRCW) organized a training-of-trainers workshop for promotion of women entrepreneurs and their access to credit and an ad hoc expert group meeting on strategies for the enhancement of women's skills in mainstreaming and decision-making (Addis Ababa, 6-10 December). The African Federation of Women Entrepreneurs was established in 1993 and held its inaugural meeting (Accra, Ghana, 1-3 June) and a pre-feasibility study was carried out on the establishment of an African bank for women. Other studies dealt with the external debt crisis and its impact on African women and the participation of women in food processing, preservation, storage and agro-industries. The secretariat continued to issue the ATRCW Update newsletter and launched the FEMME-LINE newsletter covering preparations for the Regional Conference.

Programme, administrative and organizational questions

The ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole considered a report on the medium-term plan for 1992-1997,⁽¹³⁾ the first revision of which was undertaken by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) in 1992⁽⁶⁰⁾ following that year's session of the Commission. Under the revised plan, ECA's activities were clustered around nine sub-programme areas: development issues and policies; trade, regional economic cooperation and integration; poverty alleviation through sustainable development; development administration and management; human resources development and social transformation; statistical and information systems development; natural resources and energy development; infrastructural and structural transformation; and women in development. The Committee took note of the first revision, called on the secretariat to continue efforts for greater programme focus and urged ECA to be more proactive in its advocacy role on African development issues.

The Committee also considered the proposed programme of work and priorities for the biennium 1994-1995,⁽¹²⁾ prepared within the framework of the medium-term plan. The programme focused on factors required to sustain rehabilitation, long-term development and transformation in Africa, with an emphasis on strengthening institutional capacities for development management in the public and private sectors, and specifically addressed the debt problem and issues related to human development, poverty alleviation, women in development and popular participation. The Committee further reviewed the Commission's programme evaluation⁽⁶¹⁾ and underscored the need for reforms to bring ECA's activities in line with priorities identified in the medium-term plan.

In May,⁽⁶²⁾ the Conference of Ministers endorsed the 1994-1995 work programme and called for allocation of adequate resources under the United Nations programme budget to implement programmes for African development under the 1992-1997 medium-term plan.

Cooperation between SADC and the United Nations

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community (SADC).⁽⁶⁴⁾ SADC was established in 1992 at Windhoek as successor to the 10-member Southern African Development Coordination Conference. The report described assistance provided to southern African countries by the United Nations system and by various Member States.

The United Nations Secretariat continued to implement the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which was expanded to include educational and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans. ECA cooperated with SADC in promoting the southern African community, organizing seminars and workshops, conducting various studies, drafting protocols, managing negotiations and promoting trade and industrial cooperation. UNDP-assisted projects on trade development and promotion generated more than $120 million in additional trade among eastern and southern African countries and was expected to bring $300 million more in new trade. UNDP also supported an expanded fever vaccine production programme for the east coast within the framework of a $15 million tick-borne diseases programme.

Other United Nations programmes and agencies provided support to SADC members in such areas as environmental issues, food and agriculture, human settlements, employment and training, industrialization and health.

Financial assistance totalling more than $1 billion for the 1993 fiscal year was provided by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank through their lending operations. The International Fund for Agricultural Development extended 24 loans in excess of $234 million for 22 projects in SADC countries, with a total commitment of $486.7 million, focusing on drought relief and agricultural rehabilitation.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, at its forty-ninth session (Bangkok, Thailand, 21-29 April 1993),⁽¹⁾ had as its theme topic "Expansion of investment and intraregional trade as a vehicle for enhancing regional economic cooperation and development in Asia and the Pacific". On 29 April,⁽²⁾ it called on its Executive Secretary to give priority to the implementation of the action programme for regional economic cooperation in trade and investment, especially the review and analysis of regional trade patterns; the strengthening of the Regional Trade Information Network; the establishment of a regional investment information and promotion service; networking of trade-related research institutions; the enhancement of national capabilities in quality control; sectoral foreign direct investment (FDI) inflows and analysis of FDI policies; the development of export-oriented small and medium enterprises; environmental issues related to trade and investment; assistance to disadvantaged economies in transition; the integration of the Central Asian economies into the region; and inter-subregional cooperation in trade and investment. The Commission called for the active participation of its members and the collaboration of international donors in the programme's implementation, and requested the Executive Secretary to report annually, beginning in 1994, on the progress made.

ESCAP reviewed the implementation of its 1992 resolution on its role and functions in the context of United Nations restructuring.⁽³⁾ It reaffirmed its recommendations,⁽⁴⁾ which were included in the Secretary-General's report⁽⁵⁾ submitted in response to a 1992 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ calling for the strengthening of the regional commissions. In a resolution on the strengthening of its role in the coordination of regional operational activities,⁽⁷⁾ ESCAP called for measures to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the United Nations system at the regional level. It urged that ESCAP's role be strengthened in the coordination of operational activities among United Nations organizations, programmes, funds and specialized agencies, taking into account its comparative advantages in collecting information, monitoring economic developments and promoting cooperation with and among its member Governments. The Executive Secretary was requested to continue following the reform process and to report in 1994 on developments in that regard.

The Commission also adopted resolutions on the second phase (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific; the Tehran Declaration on Strengthening Regional Cooperation for Technology-led Industrialization in Asia and the Pacific; goals and strategies for population and sustainable development into the twenty-first century; the regional programme on space applications for development; the Proclamation and Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002; implementation of General Assembly decisions on UNCED in the ESCAP region; the strengthening of assistance to LDCs; and the eradication of preventable diseases in the region. (For information on those resolutions, see below, under relevant subject headings.)

In a message to the session, the Secretary-General observed that political progress following the relaxation of tensions in the post-cold-war era would be difficult to sustain without improvements in economic and social conditions. He emphasized that the United Nations political mission was inseparable from its economic and social mission and that the regional commissions should continue to play an important role in the strengthening of regional cooperation. Despite the recent slow-down in the global economy, many Asian and Pacific countries continued to show a capacity for sustained economic growth and were a source of encouragement to developing countries in other parts of the world. The continued expansion of intra-regional trade, investment and technology contributed to a dynamism that was characteristic of much of the region. At the same time, however, poverty, malnutrition, disease and illiteracy were widespread in Asia and the Pacific. The least developed and Pacific island countries, as well as ESCAP's new members from Central Asia, had generally failed to make significant economic progress and needed special assistance to accelerate their development. The Secretary-General called for support for ESCAP as the main regional arm of the United Nations in Asia and the Pacific.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1993⁽⁸⁾ reviewed world economic developments and their implications for the ESCAP region. It discussed the region's macroeconomic performance and policies, regional performance and policies in international trade and balance of payments, fiscal reforms, economic transformation and social development, and population dynamics and their implications for development.

A summary of the survey⁽⁹⁾ noted that the region's robust economic performance in 1993 was remarkable given the recession in the world economy. The average rate of growth for its developing economies was estimated at 6.7 per cent, unchanged from 1992. China achieved a spectacular growth rate of 13 per cent and India's economy was expected to grow by 4.6 per cent. Although the economic performance of various groups of countries continued to diverge, their approaches to development policy, and to some extent their performance, converged, giving greater scope for private participation and market forces. Economic growth rates exceeded 5 per cent in most South Asian countries and ranged between 6 and 8 per cent in South-East Asia, with the exception of the Philippines. Although the small island economies of the Pacific remained vulnerable to external factors, some achieved success in their stabilization and restructuring efforts, and their overall economic performance was expected to improve. Growth rates also strengthened in most of the region's LDCs, ranging from 5 to 7 per cent.

In 1993, the region's three developed economies (Australia, Japan, New Zealand) suffered from the recessionary symptoms that had affected all industrialized countries since 1990. Japan's economy stagnated, having seen its growth rate fall from 4 per cent in 1991 to 1.3 per cent in 1992. Despite the lowest interest rates in decades, Japan's recovery was expected to be slow given the need for economic adjustment after years of high growth, large trade and balance-of-payments surpluses and unrealistically high asset values. Australia and New Zealand, however, showed definite signs of recovery. Their output grew by 2.4 per cent and 3.6 per cent, respectively, and annual inflation rates fell below 2 per cent.

In East Asia, the high rate of growth in China's GDP, buttressed by a 20 per cent increase in industrial production and an estimated 4 per cent growth in agricultural output, raised concern that the economy was overheating and that inflation was out of control. The annual inflation rate rose from 5.4 per cent in 1992 to 12.3 per cent in 1993. Following government policy action, however, the economy appeared well positioned towards the end of the year to restrain inflation without a drastic reduction in growth. Hong Kong reduced its annual rate of inflation from 9.3 per cent in 1992 to about 8.5 per cent in 1993, while in the Republic of Korea the inflation rate rose from 4.5 to 5 per cent over the same period.

The economy of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea made no progress towards growth or stability in 1993, having contracted by 5.2 per cent in 1991 and 5 per cent in 1992. The Government attempted to redress the situation with cautious reform measures, relaxing its central planning regime and encouraging foreign investment and trade, especially with neighbouring countries. In Mongolia, which initiated major reforms for transition from a centrally planned economy to a market system, price adjustments resulted in high inflation and real national income decreased by 33 per cent in 1992. Mongolia's economic situation was aggravated by a severe winter and internal dislocations that affected domestic production.

The six Central Asian economies that became members of ESCAP in 1992 also faced the daunting task of transition to a market system. The challenges included the reorientation of their foreign trade, the settling of national currency and exchange rate questions, the establishment of a viable banking and credit network, and the restructuring, revitalization and reorientation of production and trade. Their situation in 1992-1993 was characterized by high inflation and falling production, resulting from the disruption of supplies and the loss of markets after the dissolution of the USSR. In 1992, the net material product had dropped by 31 per cent in Tajikistan, 28.2 per cent in Azerbaijan, 26 per cent in Kyrgyzstan, 14.2 per cent in Kazakhstan and 12.9 per cent in Uzbekistan, while inflation rates varied from 640 per cent in Uzbekistan and 980 per cent in Turkmenistan to 1,450 per cent in Tajikistan, more than 1,700 per cent in Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan and 2,280 per cent in Azerbaijan. At the same time, the terms of trade improved significantly in Turkmenistan and Kazakhstan and marginally in Kyrgyzstan, owing to a shift to world prices, but worsened in the three other countries, especially in Azerbaijan and Tajikistan where armed conflicts added to the economic disruption. During 1993, all six countries except Tajikistan introduced national currencies and were becoming more diverse in their macroeconomic policies, as evidenced by the encouragement of foreign investment in Kazakhstan, economic conservatism in Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan and the dominance of security concerns over reform issues in Azerbaijan and Tajikistan.

The South Asian countries achieved considerable success in reducing their budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits and inflation rates. Iran's economy was expected to grow by 6.2 per cent in 1993, compared with 6.6 per cent in 1992, while its inflation declined from 21.6 per cent in 1992 to 10 per cent. Sri Lanka's GDP increased from 4.3 per cent in 1992 to about 5.8 per cent in 1993, while its inflation rate was expected to remain at 11.5 per cent. India registered growth in its industrial, agricultural and services sectors and a drop in inflation. Pakistan's growth rate fell from 7.7 per cent in 1992 to 3 per cent, following extensive flood damage to agriculture, physical infrastructure and related manufacturing activities. It also suffered the effects of global recession on its terms of trade and political uncertainties prior to the October 1993 general elections.

In South-East Asia, Singapore's growth rate accelerated from 5.8 per cent in 1992 to 8.1 per cent in 1993 and Indonesia's economy was estimated to grow from 5.8 to 6.3 per cent over the same period. The Philippine GDP increased by 1.8 per cent compared with 0.3 per cent in 1992, and Thailand sustained a 7.5 per cent growth rate for the second consecutive year. Growth rates were expected to decline in Malaysia from 8 per cent in 1992 to 7.6 per cent in 1993 and in Viet Nam from 8.3 per cent to 7.5 per cent over the same period.

The annual inflation rate rose to 9.5 per cent in Indonesia and remained at about 2.5 per cent in Singapore. It fell in all other countries.

Among the subregion's LDCs, Cambodia's GDP growth rate slowed from 7.6 per cent in 1991 to 7 per cent in 1992, due largely to a downturn in agricultural production caused by late and insufficient rainfall. Its growth was expected to increase steadily in 1993, however, with the expansion of its industrial and services sectors. The economy of the Lao People's Democratic Republic was also expected to grow steadily, having achieved a 4 per cent rate of increase in 1991 and a 7 per cent growth rate in 1992. Myanmar anticipated a 5.8 per cent growth rate after 10.9 per cent growth in 1992. Although inflation rates remained high, they had decreased between 1991 and 1992 from 197 to 75 per cent in Cambodia, from 32.3 to 21.9 per cent in Myanmar and from 13.4 to 9.8 per cent in the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

The fortunes of South Asia's five LDCs were mixed. Afghanistan's war-ravaged infrastructure and lack of civil order contributed to crop yields that were up to 70 per cent lower than pre-war levels and manufacturing output that was well below capacity. Bangladesh expected growth to expand from 4 per cent in 1992 to 5 per cent in 1993, while inflation fell from 5.1 per cent in 1992 to an all-time low of 1.4 per cent in 1993. Real GDP growth in the Maldives was projected to be around 6 per cent in 1993 compared with 7.6 per cent in 1991 and 6.3 per cent in 1992. The economy of Nepal grew by 2.9 per cent in 1993 following sharp increases in industrial output and tourism, and inflation stabilized at an annual average of 11 per cent, down from 21 per cent in 1992. Bhutan's growth had stabilized at 5 per cent a year in 1991-1992.

With Australia and New Zealand recovering from recession, the economies of most Pacific island countries were expected to grow in 1993 despite cyclones in Samoa and Vanuatu and a drought in Tonga. GDP growth rates were estimated to rise from 8.6 per cent in 1992 to 10.6 per cent in 1993 in Papua New Guinea, from 2.8 to 4.5 per cent in Fiji and from 1.9 to 2.5 per cent in Tonga. Vanuatu's economy expanded by 1.9 per cent, having stagnated in 1992. Samoa rebounded with 1.9 per cent growth after a 5 per cent contraction the previous year. The growth rate was expected to decline in the Solomon Islands, however, from 8.2 per cent in 1992 to 4.8 per cent in 1993. Inflation increased from 4.1 to 7.5 per cent in Vanuatu, but declined to 7 per cent in Samoa and was stable at 4.5 per cent in Papua New Guinea, about 5 per cent in Fiji, 8 per cent in Tonga and 10 per cent in the Solomon Islands.

International trade continued to underpin the economic resilience of the ESCAP region. In 1993, growth rates appeared to have slowed somewhat, but ranged between 12 and 16 per cent in a number of countries. Regional imports accelerated in several countries, spurred by the rapid pace of domestic economic activities, infrastructural investment and growing consumer demand in response to rising income.

Among the factors contributing to high growth rates were a shift in export composition from primary commodities to manufactured goods; sustained demand for manufactured products in the developed economies despite the recession; the successful diversification of markets; capital inflows, encouraged by policy reforms; and increasing foreign participation in the region's emerging capital markets.

The region received more than half of all FDI and over 70 per cent of the medium- and long-term international bank lending directed to developing countries in 1991-1992. The total volume of capital inflows to Asian countries was estimated at $144 billion for the period 1989-1992, compared with $82 billion during 1985-1989; FDI accounted for 44 per cent of the increase.

Exports from the region in 1992 totalled $893.8 billion, an 11.2 per cent increase over the previous year, with the developing economies accounting for more than half of that amount, having increased their exports by 13.9 per cent in 1992. Total regional imports for 1992 grew by 8.2 per cent over 1991 to reach some $812.6 billion. The developing countries' share was about 65 per cent, as they expanded their imports by 13.3 per cent for the year. Exports increased by 28.7 per cent in the Pacific island economies, 15.7 per cent in East Asia, 12 per cent in South-East Asia, 7.9 per cent in the developed countries and 7.4 per cent in South Asia.

Policy liberalization and initiatives for regional economic cooperation in Asia and the Pacific included efforts to form subregional free trade areas, notably the ASEAN (Association of South-East Asian Nations) Free Trade Area and the South Asia Preferential Trading Arrangement, as well as the establishment and expansion of regional and subregional organizations, such as the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation, the East Asia Economic Caucus, the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC), the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) and the South Pacific Forum. Localized economic cooperation zones, dubbed growth triangles, also emerged among countries at different stages of development to exploit complementarities arising from differences in their labour, capital and natural resources. The most successful growth triangles were those linking southern China, Hong Kong and Taiwan, and Singapore, the Johore State of Malaysia and the island of Batam in Indonesia. There were also proposals to establish five new triangles.

Social trends

The quality of life in many ESCAP countries improved in terms of health, nutrition, literacy and education, life expectancy and mortality, and a sizeable proportion of the population achieved truly affluent living standards. At the same time, however, structural transformations resulted in wide income and welfare disparities, and persistent poverty remained the most crucial of the region's problems. The rapid pace of urbanization led to growing urban slums and squalor, and concern was also growing about the lack of safety, security and health protection in industrial workplaces. Atmospheric pollution was also a serious health hazard, among wide-ranging environmental problems. Many epidemic diseases re-emerged, and the AIDS pandemic posed a serious threat to public health.

Among other emerging issues were the declining influence of the family and the high incidence of divorce, single parenthood and parentless childhood, homelessness and street-begging by children, young adults and elderly people. Child and sex abuse, drug abuse and homicidal and suicidal violence were also increasing.

Although annual population growth rates in many parts of the region slowed considerably from the 2 to 3 per cent of earlier decades, a current average growth rate of 1.7 per cent meant that more than 50 million people were being added annually to the total population of Asia and the Pacific in the 1990s and that about 48 million people were likely to be added annually from 2000 to 2010. Population growth rates in South Asia were well above the regional average and were expected to account for 60 per cent of the region's population increase between 2000 and 2010. While expanded education programmes in many countries enabled high levels of basic literacy, opportunities for higher education remained much more limited. In most countries, there were also considerable deficiencies in health services, particularly for the rural majority. To cope with the enormous projected cost of future health needs, Governments adopted the goal of "Health for All by the Year 2000", based on the use of less costly primary health-care methods and emphasis on the need to control epidemic and vector-borne diseases and to provide adequate prenatal and postnatal care and health education.

Population dynamics demanded that some countries expand employment opportunities beyond the traditional agricultural sector. Population growth also contributed to greater exploitation of natural resources and the serious depletion of forests, flora and fauna, water and soil resources. Industrialization, more intense land use and technological changes also had adverse environmental consequences. However, awareness of the interaction between population, environment and development was growing, and population policies were increasingly being integrated with other economic and social development policies.

Activities in 1993

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

At its 1993 session,⁽¹⁾ the Commission had before it a study on the expansion of investment and intraregional trade as a vehicle for enhancing regional economic cooperation and development in Asia and the Pacific.⁽¹⁰⁾ The report examined regional links in trade and investment and analysed the trade-investment nexus, including the integration of FDI and trade flows and the role of foreign investment in industrial restructuring. It also reviewed constraints on the expansion of intraregional trade and investment, specific problems of the Pacific island countries, LDCs and economies in transition, and policy options for enhancing cooperation and development. During its discussion of the study, the Commission emphasized that, despite the rapid rise of intraregional investment in recent years, the distribution of such flows and the impact of the trade- and investment-led growth strategy remained skewed, and it recommended measures to balance that situation. It endorsed the study's contention that long-term regional and global prosperity lay in multilateralism and the openness of economies.

The Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation, at its second session (Bangkok, 19 and 20 April 1993),⁽¹¹⁾ adopted the action programme for regional economic cooperation in trade and investment, approved by the Committee's Steering Group at its first meeting in 1992⁽¹²⁾ and revised at the Group's second meeting (Bangkok, 15, 16 and 19 April 1993). The programme called for activities and studies dealing with the growth of intraregional trade, the role of foreign investment and the private sector, the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, emerging trade and investment-related concerns, economies in transition and inter-subregional cooperation. At its 1993 session, the Commission endorsed the action programme and adopted a resolution on its implementation (see above). It agreed that priority should be given to studies on trade and investment flows in the region and to the requirements of the Pacific island and land-locked countries, LDCs and economies in transition.

The ESCAP secretariat organized a meeting of consultants during 1993 to discuss recent tax system reforms and their impact on income distribution and poverty (Bangkok, 27-29 September) and an expert group meeting on development issues and policies (Bangkok, 7-9 December). ESCAP also signed memoranda of understanding with the Asian Development Bank and with ECO, and prepared a draft framework agreement for cooperation with SAARC and a memorandum of understanding with ASEAN. In December, the SAARC Standing Committee endorsed the framework agreement.

Least developed and land-locked developing countries

The Special Body on Least Developed and Land-locked Developing Countries (first session, Bangkok, 22-24 February 1993)⁽¹³⁾ reviewed development trends, issues and policies of those countries, international cooperation for their development and implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s, adopted in 1990 by a United Nations conference (known as the Paris Conference)⁽¹⁴⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Special Body also endorsed the proposed programme of work for 1994-1995, which concentrated on macroeconomic policies, trade, transport and private foreign investment.

Discussions focused on political, economic and social reforms launched by LDCs, as well as on issues related to official development assistance (ODA), external debt, international trade and regional cooperation. It was noted that, despite gains by some LDCs including Bhutan and Maldives, progress since the Paris Conference had been discouraging. LDCs continued to face an uncertain global economic environment, mounting obstacles to their exports, a heavy debt burden and major dislocations stemming from natural disasters, wars, civil unrest and ethnic strife. The Special Body urged donor countries to increase substantially their assistance to LDCs that remained critically dependent on ODA, and emphasized the importance of promoting economic and technical cooperation among developing countries (ECDC/TCDC) as well as intra- and inter-subregional economic cooperation. It noted the growing assistance to LDCs by China, India, Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand, and it welcomed an offer by UNCTAD to assist with a feasibility study on a proposed centre for research on LDCs at Dhaka, Bangladesh.

On 29 April,⁽¹⁶⁾ ESCAP reaffirmed that LDCs had the primary responsibility for their own development and called on its members and international organizations to support their efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the 1990s. It invited member Governments to assist with preparations for the 1995 mid-term regional review of the Programme's implementation. It urged the secretariat to strengthen programmes that focused on the priority needs of LDCs in the region.

The Executive Secretary was requested to report in 1994 on the progress made.

ESCAP activities to assist LDCs during 1993 included nine country courses, four fellowship programmes, seven training courses and 61 advisory and other missions to 12 countries. The secretariat sponsored a comparative study programme on management of technical cooperation for Nepal and an exhibition of gift items from Asian LDCs (Tokyo, 16-18 November), and organized study visits on urban development for Samoa and on TCDC national focal points and on innovative slum improvement for Bangladesh. It also convened a training workshop on information technologies and population science (Beijing, 12-21 October) and workshops on the transport, financial and economic planning model for inland container depots (Phnom Penh, Cambodia, 26 April-4 May), information needs assessment (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 8-11 November) and expansion of trade and the promotion of business opportunities (Dhaka, 29 November).

A consultative expert group meeting on technological upgrading of agro-based industries (Bangkok, 22-26 November) focused on the development and popularization of food-processing technology in LDCs and land-locked developing countries. Seminar topics included Japan's generalized system of preferences (Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, 1-3 March), comprehensive flood-loss prevention and management (Yangon, Myanmar, 30 and 31 March), access to the Japanese market (Tokyo, 15 and 19 November) and manpower development in trade facilitation (Male, Maldives, 12-16 December). LDCs also participated in activities organized for developing countries in general.⁽¹⁷⁾

Land-locked States in Central Asia

The newly independent States in Central Asia had the additional disadvantage of being land-locked and, in 1993, the Meeting of Governmental Experts from Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions (New York, 17-19 May),⁽¹⁸⁾ convened by UNCTAD, concluded, inter alia, that to enter world markets those countries required a complex multi-country transit system, including links between the Central Asian States and neighbouring and southern Asian transit countries. The Meeting proposed an evaluation of Central Asian transit systems and a programme to improve the transit environment (see also PART THREE, Chapter I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/170 without vote.

Assistance to land-locked States in Central Asia

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its resolution 48/169 of 21 December 1993, entitled "Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries", and expecting that the newly independent land-locked States in Central Asia will participate in the activities and meetings referred to in that resolution,

Recalling the agreed conclusions and recommendations on priority areas and modalities for further action to improve transit systems in land-locked and transit developing countries of the Meeting of Governmental Experts from Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions, convened by the Trade and Development Board in New York from 17 to 19 May 1993, as set forth in the report of the Meeting of Governmental Experts,

Recalling in particular those paragraphs of the agreed conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts pertaining to the newly independent and developing land-locked States in Central Asia and their transit developing country neighbours,

Noting that those countries are seeking to enter world markets and that such an objective requires the establishment of a multi-country transit system,

Emphasizing the importance of elaborating a programme for improving the efficiency of the current transit environment, including better coordination between railway and highway transport, in the newly independent and developing land-locked States in Central Asia and their transit developing country neighbours,

Recognizing the important role played by bilateral cooperative arrangements, multilateral agreements and regional and subregional cooperation and integration in comprehensively solving the transit problems of the land-locked developing countries and improving the transit transport systems in the newly independent and developing land-locked States in Central Asia and their transit developing country neighbours,

1. Recognizes that various forms of international technical and financial assistance will be required to improve the efficiency of the current transit environment in the newly independent and developing land-locked States in Central Asia and their transit developing country neighbours, including a general survey of transit infrastructure and rehabilitation needs in support of national and regional efforts and programmes;

2. Also recognizes that the work being done in this context by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and by the Economic Cooperation Organization can provide a basis for further elaboration;

3. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, to evaluate the transit system of the newly independent and developing land-locked States in Central Asia and their transit developing country neighbours and to elaborate a programme for improving their transit facilities, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 48/170

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.2) without vote, 10 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.79), based on informal consultations on 3-nation draft (A/C.2/48/L.23); agenda item 91 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 30-32, 39, 47; plenary 86.

Special problems of Pacific island countries

The Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries (first session, Bangkok, 25-27 February 1993)^(b) reviewed recent development trends and their policy implications for economic growth and structural transformation, considered ESCAP activities in the Pacific and adopted the proposed work programme for 1994-1995. The Special Body noted that a lack of marketing expertise and market opportunities, as well as volatile export demand conditions, constrained economic activity in several island countries. It emphasized the need to develop human resources and to improve trade and investment relationships between the subregion and East and South-East Asia. It expressed concern at the marked decline in ESCAP activities in the Pacific and requested the secretariat to make every effort to reverse that trend. The Special Body noted the environmental problems faced by many Pacific island countries and reviewed contributions from the ESCAP region to the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, scheduled for 1994, including the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme.

In April, the Commission emphasized the need to put the technical assistance activities of the Pacific Operations Centre on a more permanent basis. It welcomed the secretariat's decision to resume the ESCAP training and orientation programme in 1994, and to increase the Centre's advisory staff to 10. The Pacific Trust Fund, which was established to ensure the participation of Pacific island countries in ESCAP's annual sessions, had received contributions from 20 members and two associate members of ESCAP by 1993; its balance was projected to reach $299,400 by the end of the year.

ESCAP transition economies

The 10 Asian and Pacific disadvantaged economies in transition to a market system (Azerbaijan, Cambodia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Viet Nam) needed various forms of assistance to develop their financial, industrial, infrastructural, trading and other institutional frameworks in 1993. They also needed assistance in the areas of human resources and social development. In April, the Commission noted their need for price and enterprise reforms and identified a number of economic and social problems requiring immediate attention. They included a lack of competitive structure, the need for military conversion and the valuation of assets for privatization, and a social safety net to protect those who suffered as a consequence of reforms. The Commission also noted the closed nature of existing trading systems and the absence of transport and communications links with market-oriented neighbours.

Activities to address those concerns were incorporated into ESCAP's work programme for 1994-1995 and into the action programme for regional cooperation in trade and investment (see above). Advisory missions during the year included extended visits to Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Mongolia.⁽²⁰⁾ The secretariat provided advice to the Lao People's Democratic Republic on the utilization of GSP schemes and the introduction of multi-modal transport; to Viet Nam on the social integration of disabled persons, census data preparation and the processing and compilation of price data; and to Cambodia and Viet Nam on population censuses and surveys.

The secretariat established a trust fund and orientation programme for the Asian republics of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and conducted a number of training projects, seminars and workshops for them. These included national workshops on economic reform in Kazakhstan (Almaty, July) and Mongolia (Ulan Bator, September); a training workshop on environmental issues associated with the use of fertilizers in the Lao People's Democratic Republic (October); training courses on statistics and various aspects of trade and investment for Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Viet Nam; and national seminars on Japan's GSP scheme in the Lao People's Democratic Republic (March) and Viet Nam (September). An international symposium on the development of transitional economies through intraregional trade expansion and economic cooperation with neighbouring countries (Chanchun, China, June/July) was based on a case-study of the North-East Asian subregion.

Other activities included advisory services on the rehabilitation of the Port of Sihanoukville in Cambodia, the preparation of a seminar on population, environment and development in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, and a needs assessment mission on population policy and development planning in Cambodia.

Economic and technical cooperation

During 1993, ESCAP received $16.02 million in contributions for technical cooperation activities, 18 per cent less than in 1992.⁽²¹⁾ The decrease was mainly due to reduced funding by UNDP. Donor States and developing member countries provided 230.25 work-months of expert services, compared with 300.25 in 1992. The Project Review Committee considered 109 new project proposals for bilateral funding in 1994 (compared with 135 in 1992), and recommended 91 of them, totalling $8.47 million, for approval and submission to potential donors. Bilateral donors approved 78 projects, totalling $6.27 million, for execution under ESCAP's work programme, excluding special projects and regional institutions. A corps of 10 regional advisers undertook 40 missions to 34 developing countries of the region.

The Commission urged the secretariat to enhance its catalytic role as a regional focal point for TCDC for the benefit of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, using the ESCAP TCDC supplementary fund.

During the year, the secretariat carried out more than 80 promotional TCDC activities financed from extrabudgetary resources.⁽²²⁾ With the support of China, the Netherlands, Norway and the Republic of Korea, 33 operational TCDC activities were implemented through the supplementary fund, 25 of them for least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and economies in transition. Overall, 22 ESCAP members benefited from the fund in 1993. Areas of TCDC activity included agriculture, the environment, human settlements, natural resources, population, rural development, social development and issues related to disabled and elderly persons, statistics, telecommunications, trade promotion and women in development. Training courses within the framework of TCDC were offered by China, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Thailand. A workshop for TCDC national focal points was organized and funded by UNDP (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 5-7 April). Technical cooperation activities, however, continued to suffer from a lack of commitment by the region's developing countries, the inadequacy of financial and human resources for national follow-up activities, and ineffective TCDC national focal points.

International trade and finance

The year's activities in international trade and finance focused on implementation of the action programme for regional economic cooperation in trade and investment, which was endorsed by the Commission in April (see above, under "Development policy and regional economic cooperation"). The secretariat prepared studies on intraregional trade flows in Asia and the Pacific; patterns and policies that determine intraregional commodity trade flows; FDI flows and policies; the feasibility of developing a regional investment-information and promotion service; and the development of electronic goods for export.⁽²³⁾ The secretariat began to develop a regional database on goods and services under the ESCAP/UNDP Regional Trade Programme, and made an arrangement to link the Regional Trade Information Network with the electronic trading opportunities system, developed under UNCTAD's Special Programme for Trade Efficiency.

A seminar was held on the expansion of manufactured exports by small and medium enterprises (Bangkok, 30 November-2 December), and projects were formulated to enhance indigenous quality control, to promote investment in the least developed and island developing countries and economies in transition, and to analyse interrelationships between trade and the environment. The secretariat also designed programmes to promote intraregional trade in agricultural commodities and to stimulate intraregional trade research through a network of research institutions. The latter programme was finalized at a regional workshop (Kathmandu, Nepal, 8-10 December). Other activities included consultations among jute-producing countries (Bangkok, 12-14 May), an expert group meeting on an international silk information system (Bangkok, 14-17 September), a second symposium on economic and trade cooperation between China and the Asian and Pacific region (Beijing, 20-26 October), and a seminar on the enhancement of national trade information capabilities through modern technology (Manila, Philippines, 9-11 November). The Asia-Pacific Consultative Forum on Coffee held its first session in 1993 (Bangkok, 17 and 18 March).

Implementation of the action programme was reviewed by the Steering Group of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation at its third session (Tokyo, 12-15 October).

Transnational corporations

In 1993, the ESCAP/TCMD (United Nations Transnational Corporations and Management Division) Joint Unit on Transnational Corporations continued to facilitate a better understanding of TNCs and their impact on host countries in Asia and the Pacific, and to help the region's developing countries attract FDI. The Unit prepared policy recommendations for publication and distribution among ESCAP members and collected data on FDI in the region. It also initiated a project on the impact of service regulations on FDI and organized an expert group meeting on TNCs and backward linkages in the electronics industries (Bangkok, 30 November-4 December).

Transport and communications

The Committee on Transport and Communications held its first session under the new ESCAP conference structure in Bangkok from 13 to 17 December.⁽²⁴⁾ The Committee reviewed regional developments in transport and communications, including activities under phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (see below).

The Committee recognized that further expansion in transport and communications was indispensable for economic and social development in the region, and requested that in future research the secretariat highlight the impact of infrastructure and transport development on poverty alleviation. It emphasized the need to promote land transportation links between Eastern Asia and Western Europe through the Asian land transport infrastructure development (ALTID) project, and proposed the creation of a special body to act as a focal point for infrastructure development in the region. It supported the development of a Maritime Policy Planning Model within its regional maritime strategy study project, and endorsed further studies and databases on trade, shipping and ports. The Committee also proposed an expert group meeting on the development of transport management information systems.

A study on the development of the Asian Highway network under the ALTID project was endorsed at an expert group meeting (Bangkok, 29 November-3 December). Other activities included a review seminar on multimodal transport (Karachi, Pakistan, 18 February), country-level workshops on a container terminal module (Kota Kinabalu, Malaysia, 22-26 February) and the facilitation of maritime traffic (Manila, November), and a fellowship scheme in port middle management, offered by Australia in May/June. A seminar-cum-study tour on compressed natural gas for road transport was held in Germany (30 August-11 September) and an Asian road-safety conference was held at Kuala Lumpur (25-28 October). A meeting of Transport Ministers of ECO members (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 25-27 October) adopted an outline plan for the development of the transport sector in the ECO region.

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

In April 1993, the Commission endorsed decisions of the 1992 Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Transport and Communications⁽²⁵⁾ relating to phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994.⁽²⁶⁾ The Commission adopted a resolution on resource mobilization for phase II.⁽²⁷⁾

The Committee for Transport and Communications, in December,⁽²⁴⁾ endorsed the regional action programme and its activities and took note of developments related to resource mobilization.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/63 without vote.

Resource mobilization for the implementation of the regional action programme for phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 48/177 below.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/63

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/109) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by ESCAP (E/1993/85), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/177 without vote.

Resource mobilization for the implementation of the regional action programme for phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly,

Taking note of resolution 49/2 of 29 April 1993 of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific on resource mobilization for the implementation of the regional action programme for phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific,

Recalling its resolution 39/227 of 18 December 1984, by which it proclaimed the period 1985-1994 the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/78 of 27 July 1984 on the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/75 of 26 July 1991, in which the Council urged all appropriate international organizations, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, to contribute effectively to the formulation and implementation of a regional action programme for the second half of the Decade, and General Assembly decision 46/453 of 20 December 1991, in which the Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1991/75,

Reaffirming the importance of phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific,

Noting that it may not be possible to implement the regional action programme effectively and efficiently without adequate funds, and noting the decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme in this regard,

1. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to keep under review the level of funding to be provided for the implementation of the regional action programme, so that phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific will have a greater impact;

2. Requests bilateral donors to take note of General Assembly decision 46/453, so as to ensure that the programme approved by the Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Transport and Communications held at Bangkok from 3 to 5 June 1992 will be implemented effectively;

3. Invites all Governments in a position to do so to contribute to the implementation of the programme approved by the Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Transport and Communications;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 48/177

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.8) without vote, 13 December (meeting 48); draft in ESC resolution 1993/63; agenda item 91 (g). Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 36-40, 48; plenary 86.

Tourism

In April, the Commission recognized the linkage between the development of transport and communications and the increasingly important role of tourism in Asian and Pacific countries. The Committee for Transport and Communications observed that the rapid growth of tourism had created a pressing need for planned tourism development to maximize its socio-economic benefits and minimize its adverse impact.

Activities during the year included expert group meetings on the environmental management of coastal tourism development (Bali, Indonesia, 8-12 March) and tourism training (Bangkok, 30 November-3 December), and a seminar on investment and economic cooperation in the tourism sector in Pacific island countries (Tokyo, 18-23 October). The secretariat continued to disseminate technical information and data on tourism development through the ESCAP Tourism Review and the ESCAP Tourism Newsletter.

Industrial and technological development

At its 1993 session, the Commission endorsed the Regional Strategy and Action Plan for Industrial and Technological Development, and the Tehran Declaration on Strengthening Regional Cooperation for Technology-led Industrialization in Asia and the Pacific, adopted at the 1992 Meeting of Ministers of Industry and Technology.⁽²⁵⁾ The Commission invited the international community to provide technical and financial support for the early implementation of both and called on the Executive Secretary to report on progress in 1995.⁽²⁶⁾ The Executive Secretary was also requested to convene a regional conference in 1996 to review and assess progress, and to report in 1994 on an offer by Iran to upgrade the Institute for Research in Planning and Development at Tehran to provide regional and subregional facilities.

The Commission urged the secretariat to strengthen activities to promote enterprise-to-enterprise cooperation; to explore innovative means of industrial financing; and to mobilize resources to assist Central Asian States, especially in the areas of market-oriented reforms, industrial restructuring and rehabilitation. The secretariat was requested to develop special programmes for newly independent States in the areas of industrial restructuring and technological development and the development of human resources in technology and vocational training. The Commission also suggested that the secretariat study the impact of liberalization, deregulation and restructuring measures on small and medium industries, and their regional export experience in the areas of textiles, leather and electronics. It was asked to organize a regional seminar on the subject. The Commission urged its members to strengthen their economic, industrial and technological reform efforts and to participate in the Taejon International Exposition in the Republic of Korea (August-November).

The main focus of the secretariat's efforts during the year was related to the promotion of industrial restructuring, investment, skills development, enhancement of the role of the private sector and privatization, small and medium industries, and the participation of women in industrial development. Activities included a national seminar on private sector growth, technology choice and investment in the industrial development of Bangladesh (Dhaka, 23-25 January), a regional seminar on investment promotion and enhancement of the role of the private sector (Dhaka, 26-30 January), an expert group consultation on strategies for technology-led industrial development and restructuring in the region (Bangkok, 26-28 October), an expert group meeting on the financing of small and medium enterprises (New Delhi, India, 12 and 13 November), and a regional forum for sustainable industrial restructuring (Kuala Lumpur, 6-12 December). The secretariat also co-sponsored the World Convention of Small and Medium Enterprises in Beijing in March, and studied options for regional and subregional cooperation with the Tehran Institute for Research in Planning and Development.

Asian and Pacific Development Centre

The Asian and Pacific Development Centre (APDC) issued seven publications and carried out 19 projects in 1993 in the programme areas of energy, economic management, information technology, poverty alleviation, public management, regional cooperation and women in development. Eight projects were funded by UNDP and 11 by other agencies and countries, including Canada, Germany, the Netherlands and Sweden. Total funds available to APDC for 1993 amounted to $3,047,377, an increase of 2.4 per cent over 1992. The 1993 operating budget, however, showed a deficit of $81,497 compared with a surplus in 1992. On 4 October, Macau signed the Charter of APDC, bringing to 22 the total number of the Centre's members and associate members.

Natural resources and marine affairs

Mineral resources

Mineral resources activities in 1993 concentrated on geological and mineral resource assessments in selected LDCs, and on mineral commodities such as gold, base metals, bauxite, non-metallic and fertilizer minerals and construction materials. The secretariat continued to promote foreign investment in the mining industry and assisted with mineral development strategies, mining codes and related investments in Bhutan, Cambodia, China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam. Those countries also received assistance with the formulation of project proposals and national policies, and with the evaluation of their minerals potential. Two projects were under way on a review of policies for mining development and investment promotion in selected Asian and Pacific countries and on training and other support for mineral-based industries in Central Asian States. Efforts were made to integrate geoscientific knowledge into land-use planning, and the secretariat organized round-table conferences on legal and fiscal regimes for foreign investment in the mining industry (Beijing, May), and on mining law (Hanoi, October). The final meeting of the working group on quaternary correlation in the region was held at Khon Kaen, Thailand (October), and a second workshop-cum-study tour on industrial minerals development was held at Hangzhou, China (26 October-1 November).

The 1993 activities of the Committee for Coordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas focused on fundamental geological research and offshore oil and gas exploration.

Water resources

The secretariat continued to provide advisory services on water resources development and management. During the year, it organized a regional workshop on computer applications for groundwater assessment and management (Bangkok, 19-28 January), regional and national seminars on water management in urban areas (see below, under "Human settlements") and roving seminars on comprehensive flood-loss prevention and management in Iran, Myanmar, Pakistan and Solomon Islands. The secretariat also participated in the international conference on environmentally sound water resources utilization (Bangkok, November). The Inter-Agency Task Force on Water for Asia met at Bangkok in May and December.

Marine affairs

Work in marine affairs centred on the evaluation of offshore construction aggregates in East Asia and the development of an integrated marine policy within the framework of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁽²⁹⁾ (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). A study was undertaken on protection of the marine environment in Sri Lanka, and a workshop was held on management strategies for the protection of the coastal and marine environment in the South Asian Seas region (Colombo, December).

Mekong River basin development

The Interim Committee for Coordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin⁽³⁰⁾ had resumed its operations in 1992, following agreements among the four riparian States (Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam) on basic principles for future cooperation. These were officially signed at their 1993 meeting (Hanoi, February) and the future modality for cooperation was being discussed by a Mekong Working Group, established in December 1992.

The Committee's activities, implemented through its annual work programme, comprised feasibility studies on the delta master plan, run-of-the-river hydropower possibilities, the Srepok action plan, a development plan for Tonle Sap and the identification of priority hydropower projects in Cambodia, and the Ya-Soup multi-purpose project in Viet Nam. Other projects dealt with the development of the Mekong geographic information system, aerial photography for resources mapping in Cambodia, assessment and monitoring of the forest cover and the sustainable protection of natural resources, updating of the hydrographic atlas, and participation in the UNEP/WHO Global Environmental Monitoring System. Investment in data and information systems provided capabilities for annual flooding and salinity-intrusion forecasting and water-quality assessment, while rural projects addressed the development of fishermen's communities in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the improvement of land and water use in northern Thailand. Programmes were formulated to support fisheries and navigation along the Mekong River from China to the South China Sea. An expert group meeting on Mekong water-quality monitoring and assessment was held at Bangkok in November.

New donor commitments for the Committee totalled more than $16 million in 1993, while financing of its project portfolio rose to about 40 per cent, from 7 per cent in 1985. The portfolio for 1994 included 117 projects with a funding requirement of $197 million. During 1993, the Republic of Korea joined the Committee's donor community, and Denmark and UNDP made considerable new contributions.

Energy

In 1993, the secretariat prepared six country reports on sectoral energy demand, issued eight publications on energy issues and completed five others. Advisory services were provided to Cambodia on hydrocarbon exploration and hydrocarbon contract agreements, and to the Philippines on industrial energy conservation. Activities under the UNDP-funded Programme for Asian Cooperation in Energy and the Environment included an executive seminar on coal technology and the environment (Sydney, Australia, July), a training course on coal production, utilization and environmental protection (Sydney, August-October), and two workshops on coal technology (Bangkok, October; Kuala Lumpur, November). Among other activities were a regional workshop on environmentally sound coal technologies (Bangkok, 7-10 April), TCDC consultations on wind energy in Fiji, a mission to Indonesia and New Zealand in November/December to prepare for activities related to natural gas, a training workshop on the promotion of energy consultancy services, and a training course on business opportunities in marketing energy efficiency (Bangkok, December).

Agricultural and rural development

ESCAP activities in agriculture and rural development during 1993 continued to focus on the alleviation of rural poverty, integrated rural development, and interdivisional, inter-agency and multisectoral activities. The secretariat implemented a project to promote rural non-farm employment and initiated, in cooperation with FAO, a project to assist LDCs in formulating macroeconomic strategies for sustainable agricultural development. Drought early-warning teams to analyse rainfall data and satellite images were established under phase II of the satellite crop-monitoring project. The secretariat organized a workshop on employment strategies for the rural poor (Bangkok, 14-16 July) and an expert group meeting on the sensitizing of agricultural research to community development needs (Bangkok, 17-20 August).

The ESCAP/FAO/UNIDO/Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific continued to provide training activities, information dissemination and advisory services for its members. It carried out a marketing management training programme (Kathmandu, 13-22 September), and convened a regional workshop on cooperation in soil-testing (Bangkok, 16-18 August), a regional consultation on the sustainability of national cooperation centres (Bangkok, 8-12 November) and a regional fertilizer conference (Manila, 30 November-3 December). Activities under the Inter-Agency Coordinated Plan of Action for Integrated Rural Development in the ESCAP Region included publication of the Poverty Alleviation Initiatives newsletter and preparation of a compendium of United Nations programmes on rural poverty alleviation.

In April, the Commission urged the donor community to fund activities of the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (RNAM) during its fifth phase (1992-1996), and approved Viet Nam's application for membership in RNAM. In 1993,⁽³¹⁾ RNAM carried out expert missions to eight countries under a UNIDO special project on the promotion and development of agro-related metalworking industries in LDCs, organized the third Agricultural Machinery Exhibition and Symposium (Jakarta, Indonesia, 6-12 December), and conducted a tour for manufacturers from Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand to study the production of agricultural equipment in China. It also prepared a paper on international cooperation among small- and medium-scale industries in agricultural machinery manufacturing in RNAM countries, presented at a colloquium on small farm equipment and a workshop on micro-enterprise development (Los Baños, Philippines, June); produced a document on existing policies and strategies for agricultural mechanization in RNAM countries; and published three issues of the RNAM Newsletter. The Network's activities were reviewed by its Technical Advisory Committee (Jakarta, 6-8 December) and by its Governing Body (Jakarta, 9-11 December).

The Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific completed a regional cooperative programme for the improvement of food legumes and coarse grains, which included eight country studies on the employment and income-generation effects of their processing and marketing, and a related workshop on the expansion of rural employment in Asia (Serdang, Malaysia, May). The Centre began to implement projects on women's role in upland farming development and farmers' strategies for agricultural diversification, organized a seminar on upland agriculture in Asia (Bogor, Indonesia, April), and provided training courses on the application of regional crop databases. Data collection and compilation activities were carried out in Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam, and related training was provided to Indonesia, Myanmar and Pakistan. Indonesia and Myanmar also received assistance with agricultural planning, research and development. In addition to its quarterly newsletter, Polawija News, the Centre issued several publications dealing with soybeans, vegetables and other crops in Asia. It also provided five databases on crop production and costs in Viet Nam.

The Centre's activities were reviewed by its Governing Board at its eleventh and twelfth sessions, held at Bogor in January⁽³²⁾ and December.⁽³³⁾

Science and technology

At its 1993 session, the Commission noted the secretariat's efforts to create a climate conducive to technology transfer, the development of human resources in science and technology, and the development, transfer and application of new and emerging technologies. It stated that the secretariat should strengthen its efforts to help countries adopt appropriate industrial technologies, including advanced materials technologies, biotechnology, automated manufacturing systems and process planning controls, and to facilitate the technology flow from the most advanced developing countries to the less developed economies.

On 29 April,⁽³⁴⁾ the Commission decided to convene a ministerial-level meeting in Beijing in September 1994 to launch a regional space applications programme for development. It urged ESCAP members to participate actively in the meeting and urged the secretariat to continue to promote the integration of Earth space-information technology with the management of natural resources and with development planning. The Executive Secretary was requested to report on progress in 1994.

A meeting of directors of national remote-sensing centres and programmes in the region was held in preparation for the ministerial meeting in conjunction with the ninth session of the Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on the Regional Remote-Sensing Programme (Islamabad, Pakistan, 8-12 May).⁽³⁵⁾ The meeting adopted a conceptual framework for the space applications programme, which was intended to increase the awareness, knowledge and understanding of space applications for natural resource accounting, environmental monitoring, disaster mitigation and development planning. The framework was subsequently revised and endorsed by the Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development (see below, under "Environment").

A meeting of experts on space applications in the Asia-Pacific region (Bangkok, 27-30 October) also proposed general guidelines for the meeting's preparations. Other activities during the year included a workshop-cum-study tour on science and technology for plant-growth regulators (Beijing, 25-27 August), a regional remote-sensing seminar on tropical ecosystem management (Kuching, Malaysia, 8-14 September), and an international seminar on remote sensing for coastal zone and coral reef applications (Bangkok, 25 October-1 November). In May, UNDP approved a new geographic information systems/remote-sensing programme for 1993-1996.

Asian and Pacific Centre for Technology Transfer

In April, the Commission reviewed activities of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology, suggested further action and elected members of its Governing Board for 1993-1996. In July, the Centre was relocated from Bangalore to New Delhi.

During 1993, the Centre completed the first phase of a UNDP-funded project on technology transfer and management, and began to implement a project on the transfer of small-scale productive technologies to encourage entrepreneurship among rural women. A regional expert group meeting was held (New Delhi, 29 and 30 July) to evaluate printed resource materials for the women's project, and the first in a series of national workshops for participating countries was organized (Kathmandu, December). The Centre also organized a demonstration workshop on solar cookers (New Delhi, April) and an international exhibition-cum-seminar on selected technologies from India and China (New Delhi, April). It assisted with technology exchanges among small and medium-sized enterprises and issued a number of publications dealing with waste management and recycling, technology transfer contracts, the preparation of the solar cooking device, hydrogen energy for developing countries and the dimensions of technology exchange. Six issues of the Asia-Pacific Tech Monitor were published in 1993, as well as a compendium of 101 environmentally friendly technologies. A Value-Added Technology Information Service was initiated to disseminate information on new ideas, technologies, products, processes and machinery, and trade and technology policies.

The Centre's activities were reviewed by its Technical Advisory Committee (New Delhi, 16 and 17 November) and by its Governing Board (eighth session, New Delhi, 18 and 19 November).⁽³⁶⁾

Social development

At its 1993 session, the Commission reviewed implementation of the Social Development Strategy for the ESCAP Region Towards the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted in 1991.⁽³⁷⁾ It observed that the Strategy's principal objective was poverty alleviation and that priority attention should continue to focus on health, education, disability and ageing. Other priorities included cooperation between Governments and NGOs, and policies to strengthen the role of the family in society, to enhance the participation of youth in development, to prevent juvenile delinquency, to increase collaboration with the Commission on Human Rights, and to promote functional literacy, especially among girls and young women.

In a resolution on the eradication of preventable diseases in Asia and the Pacific,⁽³⁸⁾ the Commission urged ESCAP members to achieve the WHO goal of eradicating poliomyelitis in the region by the year 2000, and to coordinate action against the spread of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases by, inter alia, providing health information and education to promote responsible behaviour. It encouraged its members to give priority to preventive health care. WHO was urged to strengthen its collaboration with ESCAP members and was invited to report in 1994 to the regional ministerial preparatory conference for the 1995 World Summit for Social Development. The Executive Secretary was requested to work closely with WHO in preparing that report.

The Committee on Poverty Alleviation through Economic Growth and Social Development (first session, Bangkok, 20-24 September)⁽³⁹⁾ reviewed regional poverty, national policy approaches and international initiatives, and examined strategies to promote people's participation in poverty alleviation. It considered the recommendations of an expert group meeting on national poverty concepts and measurement in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 15-17 September) and adopted its own recommendations for action by Governments and by ESCAP.

Among other activities in 1993 were a senior officials meeting on the strengthening of the Regional Network of National Focal Points on Drug Abuse Demand Reduction (Bangkok, 1-4 February), three subregional workshops on the subject (Bangkok, 9-13 August and 16-20 August; Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea, 18-21 October), a training course on demand reduction for narcotics in border areas of China and Myanmar (Bangkok, 20 September-15 October) and a regional preparatory meeting (Beijing, 24-28 May) for the International Year of the Family (1994). The implementation of the Social Development Strategy was considered at the second session of the Inter-Agency Task Force on the subject (Bangkok, 26 November). The secretariat initiated a project to strengthen the integration of youth into the development process, and two case-studies were prepared on policies and programmes for the integration of elderly persons in development.

Disabled persons

On 29 April,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Commission adopted the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, having proclaimed the Decade in 1992.⁽⁴¹⁾ It urged ESCAP members to sign the Proclamation on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asian and Pacific Region, adopted at the launching of the Decade,⁽⁴¹⁾ and to implement the Agenda for Action. It also called for contributions to the trust fund for the Decade. The Executive Secretary was requested to develop regional activities supporting the Agenda for Action and to report on the progress achieved at the 1994 ministerial preparatory conference for the 1995 World Summit for Social Development.

The Agenda for Action covered 12 areas of concern: national coordination, legislation, information, public awareness, accessibility and communication, education, training and employment, prevention of causes of disability, rehabilitation services, assistive devices, self-help organizations and regional cooperation.⁽⁴²⁾ The secretariat launched two regional projects related to self-help organizations and the promotion of non-handicapping environments, and held a South Asia workshop on the management of self-help organizations for disabled persons (Dhaka, 5-14 December). The workshop led to the establishment of a South Asian network of self-help organizations.

The secretariat joined a number of NGOs in organizing a Conference of Deaf People in Asia (Bangkok, 9-12 March) and the First Regional Conference of NGOs on the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons (Okinawa, Japan, October). The Okinawa Conference led to the establishment of a regional NGO network to promote the Decade, several commemorative publications and a directory of self-help organizations of disabled people in the region. Other regional activities included a leadership training seminar for the disabled (Dhaka, November/December), a consultative expert meeting on national disability legislation for Asia and the Pacific (Kuala Lumpur, December) and a conference on independent living and changing attitudes (Singapore, April). The revitalized Asia-Pacific Inter-organizational Task Force on Disability-related Concerns held its seventh meeting in 1993 (Bangkok, 29 March).

Women in development

At its 1993 session, the Commission considered preparations for the Second Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Women in Development, to be held in 1994, and endorsed the Seoul Statement on Empowering Women in Politics, adopted in 1992.⁽⁴³⁾ The Commission urged its members to establish national preparatory committees for the Conference, and made suggestions for a regional plan of action for the advancement of women.

ESCAP convened a second inter-agency meeting on preparations for the Conference (Bangkok, 18 May) and an Asian and Pacific symposium of NGOs on women in development (Manila, 16-20 November)⁽⁴⁴⁾ The symposium comprised workshops dealing with health, labour rights, agriculture, culture and education, political empowerment, economic empowerment, violence against women, human rights, science and technology, indigenous women, family and the environment, and it initiated a regional NGO plan of action. In addition, ESCAP organized a workshop on a women's information network in Mongolia (9-11 November), and published a 1993 directory of national focal points for the advancement of women in Asia and the Pacific, and a directory of women experts in the region.

Population

In April, the Commission endorsed the Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development, adopted by the Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference in 1992.⁽⁴¹⁾ The Declaration was the main regional input to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development; ESCAP urged the secretariat to play a greater role in creating awareness of its implications and monitoring its implementation. The Commission urged countries with high infant, child and maternal mortality rates to strengthen efforts to improve health conditions, and to ensure that women's concerns were addressed in all population and development activities and programmes. The Commission adopted a resolution on population and sustainable development,⁽⁴⁵⁾ which was brought to the attention of the General Assembly by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

As a follow-up to the Fourth Asian and Pacific Conference, ESCAP convened a number of subregional meetings and conferences on population issues.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The Ministerial Meeting on Population and Sustainable Development in the Pacific (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 9 and 10 September) adopted the Port Vila Declaration, which highlighted the interrelationship between population and sustainable economic growth and development, the need for gender equality and empowerment of women, the role and importance of the family, and issues of reproductive rights, reproductive health and family planning. The SAARC Ministerial Conference on Women and Family Health (Kathmandu, 21-23 November) was held in compliance with the Dhaka Declaration of the Seventh Summit Conference of SAARC (Dhaka, April). It adopted the Kathmandu Resolution, which identified major factors underlying high maternal and child mortality rates in the subregion, and pledged to take steps to reduce those rates. The Fourth Conference of the Asian Forum of Parliamentarians on Population and Development (Kuala Lumpur, 26-28 October) reviewed the population and development situation in Asian countries and discussed the status of family planning and maternal and child health; the status of women and health; population growth, ageing and youth; and population, the environment and food.

A round table on population and development strategies (Bangkok, 17-19 November), organized jointly by ESCAP and UNFPA, adopted 13 recommendations dealing with institutional arrangements for integrated population and development planning. Other activities included a country case-study on the integration of the elderly into the mainstream of economic and social development in Bangladesh; a training workshop on field research on ageing issues (Beijing, August/September); study directors' meetings on local-level policy development to deal with ageing (Chiang Mai, Thailand, 2-5 November) and on rural-urban migration (Bangkok, 8-10 December); an ASEAN and East-Asia workshop on the Population Information Network (Kuala Lumpur, 12 and 13 November); and an international seminar on the consequences of replacement and below-replacement level fertility in East and South-East Asia (Seoul, 29 November-3 December). A regional conference on family planning (Tehran, September) identified the urgent maternal and child-health and family-planning needs of Central Asian States.

The secretariat assisted Governments in analysing trends associated with urbanization.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Economic Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1993/319 without vote.

Population and sustainable development: goals and strategies into the twenty-first century

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 30 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council decided to bring to the attention of the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session resolution 49/4 of 29 April 1993, adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at its forty-ninth session, the text of which is annexed to the present decision.

ANNEX

Resolution 49/4 of 29 April 1993, adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at its forty-ninth session

Population and sustainable development: goals and strategies into the twenty-first century

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, Recalling its resolution 48/4 of 23 April 1992 on the Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference, held at Denpasar, Indonesia, from 19 to 27 August 1992, in which it recalled its decision to organize the Conference as a ministerial meeting jointly with the United Nations Population Fund in order to review the changes in the population situation that had occurred during the 1980s and highlight the perspectives of population policies and programmes during the 1990s in countries and areas of Asia and the Pacific,

Recognizing that integration of population factors in the socio-economic development process is crucial and that the alleviation of poverty is fundamental to the achievement of sustainable development,

Mindful of the substantial progress achieved by members and associate members in responding to the Asia-Pacific Call for Action on Population and Development adopted by the Third Asian and Pacific Population Conference, held at Colombo from 20 to 29 September 1982, and the role played by the secretariat and donors, particularly the United Nations Population Fund, in its implementation,

Taking note of the importance of the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994,

1. Welcomes the adoption by the Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference, held at Denpasar, Indonesia, from 19 to 27 August 1992, of the Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development, and endorses the recommendations of that Declaration;

2. Urges all members and associate members to take early and effective action to implement the Bali Declaration through the provision of adequate financial and human resources;

3. Also urges all members, associate members and the Executive Secretary to make every effort to incorporate population, environment and development concerns in their inputs to the forthcoming International Conference on Population and Development;

4. Calls upon donor countries and funding agencies, in particular the United Nations Population Fund, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, inter-governmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, to provide substantive and financial support for the implementation of the Bali Declaration;

5. Requests the Executive Secretary, as head of the main centre within the United Nations system for the general economic and social development of the Asian and Pacific region:

(a) To assist the members and associate members in the implementation of the Bali Declaration by initiating appropriate activities, and to review and appraise their progress;

(b) To cooperate with members and associate members in implementing the Bali Declaration and, in the light of the declining financial and human resources devoted to the Asian and Pacific regional population programme, to seek to mobilize resources for this purpose;

(c) To continue to play an advocacy role in the planning and implementation of population programmes in the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific region, and even more vigorously in the light of the Bali Declaration;

(d) To disseminate information through regular publications and other appropriate means concerning the implementation of the Bali Declaration and the challenges faced by countries in the region in its implementation;

(e) To report to the Commission at periodic intervals on the progress made;

(f) To organize a meeting of senior planners and policy makers to incorporate concretely the recommendations of the Bali Declaration within the regional document for the International Conference on Population and Development;

6. Invites the Executive Secretary, in transmitting the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council, to request that it be brought to the attention of the General Assembly.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/319

Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/109) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 14.

Human settlements

The highlight of 1993 activities associated with human settlements was the Ministerial Conference on Urbanization in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 27 October-2 November).⁽⁴⁷⁾ The Conference adopted the Bangkok Declaration on Sustainable Urban Development and Management in Asia and the Pacific and endorsed a Regional Action Plan on Urbanization. It incorporated a preparatory meeting of senior officials, and symposia of local authorities, NGOs and the media, and it established an Asia-Pacific Urban Forum, which held its first meeting in conjunction with the Conference.

The Bangkok Declaration urged ESCAP members to prepare national strategies and action plans on urban development; strengthen inter-agency coordination to ensure an integrated approach to decision-making in urban development; recognize housing construction as a productive sector of the economy; ensure cooperation between all urban actors; strengthen the planning and management capacity of local authorities to deal effectively with urban poverty and environmental issues; and improve the availability of information, research, monitoring and evaluation mechanisms in the urban sector. ESCAP members were urged to appoint focal points for the implementation of the Regional Action Plan, and the Executive Director was requested to convene a ministerial conference on urbanization and the Asia-Pacific Urban Forum in 1998. The Conference also called on ESCAP members to promote broad-based participation in preparations for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in 1996 (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

The Regional Action Plan on Urbanization⁽⁴⁸⁾ contained 40 proposals for action and seven recommendations related to urbanization strategies and policies, resource allocations, intragovernmental coordination and cooperation, human resources development, information and research, and monitoring and evaluation.

The Network of Training, Research and Information Institutes in Human Settlements in Asia and the Pacific was formally established at a meeting convened for that purpose (New Delhi, 27-29 September), and its Steering Committee held two meetings in 1993 (New Delhi, September/October; Bangkok, October). The ESCAP secretariat organized an intergovernmental expert group meeting on urbanization (Colombo, 30 March-1 April), a workshop on subnational area planning (Ho Chi Minh City, July), a high-level seminar on shelter for the urban poor (Bombay, India, 24 November) and an international training course on dwelling construction technology (Nanjing, China, 1-19 December). It launched a project on urban water management, which included a regional seminar on water management in urban areas (Bangkok, 22-26 March) and a workshop on urban water management in Viet Nam (Hanoi, November). It also published a directory of research and training institutes in human settlements and the State of Urbanization in Asia and the Pacific, 1993 report.

The secretariat assisted the Regional Network of Local Authorities for the Management of Human Settlements (CITYNET) to convene the fourth session of its Executive Committee (Colombo, 2-3 April) and the third CITYNET Congress (Bombay, 20-24 November).

Environment

The focus of ESCAP's environment sub-programme in 1993 was on the integration of environmental considerations into planning and decision-making.

The ESCAP/UNDP High-level Meeting on Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific (Kuala Lumpur, 15-19 February)⁽⁴⁹⁾ reviewed the regional dimensions of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992,⁽⁵⁰⁾ and implementation of the Regional Strategy on Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development, endorsed by ESCAP in 1991.⁽⁵¹⁾ It also developed a regional framework of action for sustainable development.

On 29 April,⁽⁵²⁾ the Commission requested the General Assembly to reinforce ESCAP's technical capacity for coordinating the implementation of Agenda 21 at the regional and subregional levels. The Executive Secretary was requested to explore the needs of Governments for its implementation, identify cooperation among Governments on environment and development issues, seek the cooperation and involvement of subregional organizations and NGOs, seek funding support from donors and the Global Environmental Facility, report in 1994 on the implementation of Agenda 21, and convene a ministerial-level conference on environment and development in 1995.

The ESCAP Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development held its first session at Bangkok from 4 to 8 October,⁽⁵³⁾ preceded by a preparatory expert group meeting (Bangkok, 30 September-2 October). The Committee considered Agenda 21 priorities and their implications for the Regional Strategy, examined environment and sustainable development issues and policies, and adopted 51 recommendations concerning, inter alia, energy and sustainable development, natural resources development and management, the integration of environmental considerations into economic decision-making, the impact of population growth and distribution on the environment, natural disaster reduction, and programme planning and implementation.

Following up on the Committee's recommendations, the secretariat initiated work on a state-of-the-environment database, studied models of national strategies for sustainable development in Mongolia, Nepal and the Philippines, held a workshop on environmental awareness (Kathmandu, November) and launched a UNDP/ESCAP programme for Asian cooperation in energy and the environment in Beijing in October. It also conducted case-studies on environmentally sound and sustainable development issues, including the development of environmentally sound coastal tourism and national plans of action to combat desertification. The Regional Network of Research and Training Centres on Desertification Control in Asia and the Pacific cooperated with UNEP to promote a methodology for mapping desertification and to establish an intergovernmental mechanism for capacity-building in desertification control. The Inter-Agency Committee on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific held its fourth meeting in 1993 (Manila, 15 and 16 March), and its Working Group met at Bangkok in February and September.

Among other activities were a meeting of senior officials on environmental cooperation in North-East Asia (Seoul, 8-11 February), a second Asia-Pacific seminar on climate change (Bangkok, 29-31 March), a regional meeting on the financing of environmentally sound development (Bangkok, June), a workshop on hazardous waste management (Bangkok, August), and consultative meetings on the development of a regional strategy on climate change (Bangkok, October) and on resource valuation in subnational planning (Bangkok, December).

Natural disaster reduction

The Typhoon Committee (twenty-sixth session, Quezon City, Philippines, 2-8 November)⁽⁵⁴⁾ reviewed, inter alia, ESCAP activities related to natural disaster reduction, including advisory services on flood-loss prevention and management; the preparation of guidelines for storm-surge mapping; the assessment of preparedness programmes, forecasting systems and operational methods for water-related natural disaster reduction; a publication on natural disaster reduction in Asia and the Pacific; and an exhibition on the International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction (13 October).

The ESCAP secretariat also organized a South and East Asia symposium on tropical storm and related flooding (Guangzhou, China, 22-25 November). The WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones held its twentieth session in 1993 (Karachi, Pakistan, 16-22 February).

Statistics

Statistics development activities in 1993 continued to focus on the strengthening of national capabilities. The secretariat initiated projects on the development of gender statistics and on environmental and resource accounting, and sent 36 advisory missions to address various aspects of national accounts, the compilation of price and expenditure statistics, the use of statistical software packages and planning, and the processing and analysis of population censuses and surveys. It also continued to gather demographic, social, economic and other statistics on the Asian and Pacific countries and to issue regular statistical publications.

In April, the Commission endorsed the 1992 recommendations of the Committee on Statistics⁽⁵⁵⁾ and urged the secretariat to undertake activities to improve statistics on trade in services and indicators on poverty. The secretariat was also urged to support implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts.

During the year, ESCAP organized an expert group meeting on environment statistics (Bangkok, 9-12 March) and a workshop on the development and improvement of environment statistics (Kathmandu, 31 May-4 June). A workshop on the management of national statistical services in the 1990s (Bangkok, November) focused on data dissemination in monitoring human development. The Working Group of Statistical Experts held its eighth session (Bangkok, November).

Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific

The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific⁽⁵⁶⁾ (Tokyo) continued to train statisticians in government services. In April, the Commission urged it to expand its programme on analysis and statistical interpretation and to increase its number of in-country courses. It was requested to provide training in techniques of data dissemination, expand the training of trainers, and produce printed and audiovisual training materials to support national training capability.

During the year, 610 people participated in the Institute's training courses on practical statistics, automatic data processing, analysis and interpretation of statistics and training of trainers in microcomputers, as well as its 21 in-country courses and a subregional course on food security statistics. Two research projects and a meeting of national focal points for human development indicators were held in conjunction with the workshop on the management of national statistical services in the 1990s (see above). The modalities of the sixth phase of the Institute's work, which commenced in 1992, were considered by its Advisory Council (Tokyo, 20 and 21 October).

Programme and organizational questions

Work programmes for 1992-1993 and 1994-1995

In April,⁽¹⁾ the Commission reviewed the implementation of its 1992-1993 programme of work and endorsed the proposed programme changes for 1993.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The changes related to the special needs of children, the elderly and disabled persons; ESCAP urged the secretariat to involve NGOs and the private sector in services to enhance governmental support for those groups.

The Commission also adopted the draft programme of work and priorities for 1994-1995,⁽⁸⁾ with modifications. The programme focused on regional economic cooperation, environment and sustainable development, poverty alleviation through economic growth and social development, transport and communications, statistics, and the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. The Commission stressed that higher priority should also be given to macroeconomic policies and mineral resources development.

Fiftieth session of ESCAP

At its forty-ninth session, the Commission decided to hold its fiftieth session at New Delhi, India, between February and April 1994. It chose "Infrastructure development as key to economic growth and regional economic cooperation" as its theme topic for that session.

By decision 1993/318 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision regarding the time and venue of its fiftieth session.

Europe

The forty-eighth session of the Economic Commission for Europe was held at Geneva from 19 to 27 April 1993,⁽¹⁾ at a time when unprecedented changes in ECE countries continued to pose new challenges to regional cooperation.

The dominant concerns in the period following the 1992 session included the continuing, and in some cases deepening, recession, high levels of unemployment, slow economic recovery in Europe and North America, currency fluctuations in Europe, increased protectionist pressures, slow and difficult adjustment to market economies in Eastern Europe and the former USSR, and migration policies. The economic outlook in Western Europe in 1993 was judged to be rather bleak, with high and rising unemployment.

The process of transition to a market economy in Central and Eastern European countries continued to require international financial and technical assistance and counselling, although reforms were beginning to bear fruit and economic indicators were improving. The establishment of a single internal market for capital, labour, goods and services was completed in Western Europe, and integration continued at the regional and subregional levels with the completion of cooperation and free-trade agreements.

At its 1993 session, the Commission reviewed its implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Act, the 1990 Charter of Paris for a New Europe and the 1992 Helsinki Declaration of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE). Particular attention was given to the strengthening of security and economic cooperation in the Mediterranean region. On 26 April,⁽²⁾ the Commission stressed the need for continued efforts to protect the Mediterranean ecosystem. The ECE Executive Secretary was requested to continue efforts to increase interregional cooperation on matters within the competence of ECE and of common interest to Mediterranean countries, and to facilitate consultations on the Mediterranean Technical Assistance Programme and the Mediterranean Special Programme of Action to strengthen environmental management and development in the subregion. He was to report in 1994 on the progress made.

During the year, ECE participated in the first CSCE Economic Forum (Prague, Czech Republic, 16-18 March), the CSCE Mediterranean seminar on environmental issues of importance to the subregion (Valletta, Malta, 17-21 May) and the CSCE Council meeting (Rome, Italy, 30 November and 1 December). In April, the Commission invited its subsidiary bodies to contribute to the follow-up of the Economic Forum and requested them to take provisions of the CSCE documents into account in their work.⁽³⁾ It requested the subsidiary bodies to implement its 1990 decisions on restructuring within ECE and asked the Executive Secretary to report on the subject in 1994. The Commission considered its activities and future work in the priority areas of environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation and economic analysis. It discussed its efforts to assist countries in transition to a market economy and international cooperation to address the consequences of the 1986 nuclear accident at Chernobyl (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Commission adopted organizational decisions related to resources for its priority and other sectors;⁽⁴⁾ reporting from its subsidiary bodies;⁽⁵⁾ the preparation and organization of its annual session;⁽⁶⁾ and the amendment of its rules of procedure.⁽⁷⁾ The Commission approved its work programme for 1993-1994 and endorsed the programme for 1993-1997,⁽⁸⁾ subject to review at its 1994 session. The programme of work included its five priority areas, as well as energy, international trade, industry and technology, agriculture and timber, and human settlements.

On 26 April,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council amendments to its terms of reference to the effect, inter alia, that new Member States of the United Nations located in the Asian part of the former USSR were entitled to be members of ECE insofar as the former USSR was a European Member of the United Nations. By decision 1993/317 of 30 July, the Council approved the amendments and modified ECE's terms of reference accordingly.

As a result of that decision, seven countries that were admitted to the United Nations in 1992 (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) became members of ECE in 1993, and five other countries (Andorra, the Czech Republic, Monaco, Slovakia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia) automatically gained membership by virtue of their admission to the United Nations in 1993, bringing ECE membership at the end of 1993 to 54.

In response to a 1991 Commission request,⁽⁹⁾ its Chairman continued to convene ad hoc informal meetings of ECE to consult on policy matters, assist with preparations for the annual sessions, monitor progress in the work programmes and offer guidance to the Executive Secretary. In accordance with a 1992 Commission decision on the provision of adequate resources,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Chairman also arranged consultations between the Executive Secretary and ECE's subsidiary bodies.

As agreed at an ad hoc informal meeting on 24 September, the Commission, at a special session on 26 November,⁽¹¹⁾ designated its Vice-Chairman as the new Chairman and elected a new Vice-Chairman.

The Commission continued to provide a bridge between the United Nations and other regional economic institutions, including the European Community (EC), the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), the Council of Europe and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

On 20 April,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission, by 34 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should not participate in the work of ECE as long as it did not participate in the work of the General Assembly pursuant to a 1992 Assembly resolution.⁽¹³⁾ By decision 1993/316 of 30 July, the Council endorsed that decision.

Economic trends

The economic situation in the ECE region in 1993 was characterized by continuing recession in Western Europe and recovery in North America. The United States and Canada registered growth rates of about 3 per cent and 3.6 per cent, respectively, while the economy of EC as a whole was estimated to have contracted by 0.3 per cent. The United Kingdom was the only country in the region to have shown signs of recovery. Output grew by an estimated 1.5 per cent in the United Kingdom and a mere 0.5 per cent in Italy, but stagnated in France and declined by almost 1 per cent in Germany, although eastern Germany recorded growth of about 8 per cent because of government consumption and investment. Regional unemployment rose to exceed 10 per cent in 1993, but, by the end of the year, the recession appeared to have bottomed out in Western Europe and a modest recovery was forecast for 1994.

In Eastern Europe, total output fell by 3 per cent in 1993, less than half the 1992 rate of decline, according to the summary of the survey of economic conditions in the ECE region, 1993-1994.⁽¹⁴⁾ However, the collapse in output continued virtually unchecked in the Russian Federation and other members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), with an average drop of 13 per cent following a 20 per cent drop in 1992. The depression in CIS was greatly intensified by the collapse of trade among its members. Following the breakup of the rouble zone in 1993, most CIS countries faced a large deterioration in their terms of trade with the Russian Federation and with other suppliers of energy, which raised their oil and gas prices to world market levels. They also suffered interruptions in deliveries because of non-payment of debts and inadequacies in their distribution systems. Similar problems in the Baltic States were aggravated by the loss of markets in the former USSR and the introduction of tough stabilization policies. At the same time, GDP rose by 4 per cent in Poland and increased modestly in Romania and Slovenia. Output was on the rise in Hungary and Albania, due to a sharp increase in agricultural production, and the recession was levelling out in the Czech Republic. With the exception of Slovenia and Albania, however, production continued to fall in other southern European economies in transition, especially in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

The economic transition in Central and Eastern European countries was accompanied by a pronounced deterioration in social indicators for poverty, mortality, marriages and births, preschool and youth education, and crime. The unemployment level rose threefold in Eastern Europe between 1991 and the end of 1993 to almost 7.6 million people, or some 14 per cent of the labour force, although national figures ranged from 3.5 per cent in the Czech Republic to about 30 per cent in Albania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Official unemployment rates ranged between 0.2 per cent and 1.3 per cent in CIS countries, except Armenia (6.2 per cent), and began to increase sharply in the Baltic States. Although the official rate in the Russian Federation was 1.1 per cent, the unofficial rate was more than 10 per cent.

Annual inflation rates ranged from between 20 and 37 per cent in the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia to more than 70 per cent in Bulgaria and 350 per cent in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. The rate was between 20 and 26 per cent per month in the Russian Federation and averaged more than 1,000 per cent for 1993 in virtually all other CIS States. Hyperinflation continued unchecked in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), while a number of other countries, including Georgia and Ukraine, had passed, or were dangerously close to, that threshold. The year also brought a sharp deterioration in the current account balances of all economies in transition except that of the Czech Republic, as export growth declined and imports expanded, in many cases substantially. Export values fell by 13 per cent in Bulgaria and 16 per cent in Hungary but increased by 7 per cent and 17 per cent in Poland and the Czech Republic, respectively. The growth of imports ranged from less than 1 per cent in Bulgaria to about 25 per cent in Poland. Hungary had the largest current account deficit ($3.5 billion), followed by Poland ($2.3 billion) and Romania ($1.5 billion). A large reduction in subsidized imports, coupled with weak domestic demand and the depreciation of the rouble, brought a 27 per cent drop in imports into the Russian Federation, while exports continued to rise, creating a $15 billion surplus in the current account balance.

Although the transition to a market economy in Central and Eastern European countries led to a drastic reduction in both agricultural and industrial output, restructuring and privatization yielded an expansion of the services sector, improvements in the availability, range and quality of goods and services and the re-emergence of an entrepreneurial middle class. The private sector's share of total output increased from 29 per cent of GDP in Poland to 47 per cent in 1992 and from virtually zero in the Czech Republic to around 50 per cent in 1993. Agricultural land was returned to private ownership in Albania and Romania, and the mass privatization of medium- and large-sized enterprises began in the Russian Federation. By the end of 1993, about 85 per cent of small enterprises employing fewer than 200 people had been privatized. Nevertheless, industrial sectors continued to be dominated by large State-owned enterprises whose share in output and employment remained considerable, and some countries made little progress in the transition process in general.

The economic situation in 1993 was also characterized by the collapse of fixed investment, which had declined since 1989 by an average of 40 per cent in Eastern Europe, 56 per cent in the Russian Federation and Ukraine and 80 per cent in the Baltic States. In 1993, some recovery of fixed investment appeared to be taking place in Poland and Hungary and in some sectors in the Czech Republic. Investment rose by about 11 per cent in Slovenia. At the same time, deficiencies in traditional fiscal and monetary policy instruments caused the emphasis of macroeconomic stabilization policies to be placed on reductions in government expenditure, threatening further unemployment and cuts in social security benefits. Attempts to cut large budget deficits by increasing tax revenue were inhibited by underdeveloped tax collection systems and widespread tax evasion.

Western economic assistance to Eastern Europe

Gross financial flows to the economies in transition from western market economies and international financial institutions increased from $31.3 billion in 1990 to an estimated $45 billion in 1993, with special financing (debt write-offs, rescheduling, deferrals and arrears) accounting for more than half of the total. About two thirds of the total went to the Russian Federation and other CIS States. Inflows to Eastern Europe concentrated on four "advanced" transition economies (the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland and Slovenia), which had received more than 70 per cent of development bank commitments to the subregion and more than 90 per cent of FDI flows since 1990. During that period, development bank loans to Eastern Europe totalled about $5 billion, to which $5.4 billion in official grants from western Governments could be added.

ODA, excluding bilateral credits, for the period 1990-1993 was roughly equal to FDI flows and totalled less than $10 billion, including $3.5 billion for 1993. The level of FDI was considerably less than hoped for, because of the perceived high risks and uncertainty of investment in transition economies and operational problems encountered by foreign investors. According to the survey summary,⁽¹⁴⁾ economies in transition needed to concentrate on the creation of essential infrastructure for a market economy, including a non-discriminatory legal framework for foreign investment. Given the relatively small size of domestic markets, they also needed to facilitate intraregional trade and access to the much larger markets of the successor States of the former USSR as a means of attracting FDI.

Activities in 1993

The main emphasis of ECE activities in 1993 remained on the transition process in Central and Eastern European countries and their integration into the European and global economies.⁽¹⁵⁾ Since the inception of its programme to assist economies in transition in 1990, ECE had organized a total of 113 workshops, including 30 in 1993, on issues relating to energy, human settlements, industrial development, statistics, environment, transport, trade, timber, agriculture, and development issues and policies. Its subsidiary bodies continued their special assistance programmes in these and other areas, including trade, population activities, industry and technology. The United Nations/ECE Trust Fund for Assistance to Countries in Transition became operational in 1993, received $130,657 in contributions during the year and had a balance of $70,000 by year's end. ECE was introducing a programme of regional advisory services and considered proposals to diversify and strengthen its assistance. Particular attention was paid to market access for countries in transition, which assumed special importance late in the year with the successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

In April,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission requested its Executive Secretary to present proposals for the diversification of ECE assistance to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth (1993) session and to report on the subject in 1994.

Other areas of concern were ECE's continuing assistance to developing countries of other regions and its contribution to United Nations global programmes,⁽¹⁷⁾ as well as its participation in CSCE.⁽¹⁸⁾ In April,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission decided to convene a high-level regional preparatory meeting in 1994 for the fourth World Conference on Women (1995) and invited member States and relevant international organizations to contribute to its preparation.

International trade

In accordance with the 1992-1995 programme of work of the Committee on the Development of Trade, endorsed by ECE in April 1993, activities focused on trade facilitation, promotion and analysis. The ECE secretariat continued to publish its quarterly East-West Investment News and prepared studies on the implications of privatization for economies in transition, their place in the world market, and conditions conducive to expanded trade among those economies. A business forum was organized in Belarus (Minsk, November) and a workshop was held on the promotion of FDI in a small country in transition (Ljubljana, Slovenia, 29 and 30 November). A guide on financing East-West trade and privatization in Central and Eastern Europe was revised at a seminar on the subject (Geneva, 13 September) and approved for publication by the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry (forty-second session, Geneva, 13-15 September). The Working Party also began to prepare a new guide on property law in Central and Eastern Europe, which dealt with questions of ownership, valuation, security and restitution.

The Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures held two sessions at Geneva in 1993 (thirty-seventh, 16-19 March; thirty-eighth, 21-24 September). It approved a number of new messages for the United Nations Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (UN/EDIFACT) as a standard for world trade. In total, there were 168 messages at various stages of development by the Working Party. It also approved the establishment of an African EDIFACT Board, in addition to existing regional boards for Pan America, Western Europe, Eastern Europe, Australia/New Zealand and Asia.

An intersecretariat task force of ECE, UNCTAD and the International Trade Centre was also established in 1993 to coordinate activities among the three bodies, and the Inter-Agency Working Group for Coordinated Open Electronic Data Interchange Standards Development approved its final report.

Industry

In April 1993, ECE stressed the importance of follow-up to the 1992 high-level meeting on cooperation and sustainable development in the chemical industry⁽²⁰⁾ and encouraged the Working Party on the Chemical Industry to continue its efforts to achieve sustainable development in that sector.⁽²¹⁾

As a follow-up to the high-level meeting, a meeting of experts was held (Warsaw, Poland, 15 and 16 April) to assist with a detailed project proposal and feasibility study for the establishment of a Regional Environmental Management Centre for the Chemical Industry. The Working Party (third session, Geneva, 6-8 October)⁽²²⁾ welcomed the proposal in principle and invited interested parties to help fund the Centre. It endorsed the reports of the meeting of experts on the periodic survey of the chemical industry and of the annual meeting of rapporteurs on aromatic hydrocarbons and olefins. It also organized a round-table discussion on conditions for economic recovery and sustainable development in the chemical industry. Discussion focused on the competitiveness of the European chemical industry.

The Working Party took note of the study on the management of plastic wastes in the region and of progress in preparing the ECE Directory of Chemical Producers and Products. It was agreed that the secretariat should publish an annual review of the chemical industry in 1993. The Working Party considered proposals for a pilot project to demonstrate the clean-up of selected chemical waste sites and for a comparative study of chemical legislation in ECE member countries. It noted proposals to hold workshops in 1994 on waste treatment in industrial parks and on the rational use of raw materials and energy in the chemical industry. It decided to convene a preparatory meeting in 1994 for the seminar on the complex utilization of raw materials using advanced low- and non-waste process technologies. The seminar was scheduled to be held in Moscow in 1995. The Working Party adopted its programme of work for 1994-1998 and agreed to include a study on trends in structural and ownership changes in the chemical industries of the economies in transition.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (twelfth session, Geneva, 24-26 February)⁽²³⁾ considered the report of the first ad hoc meeting on the study of medium- and long-term trends and prospects in the sector, endorsed annual reviews of the sector for 1990 and 1991 and decided to add short-term forecasts of research, production and trade in engineering industries for selected countries to the annual review. It examined studies of low-waste technologies in engineering industries and of food-processing machinery and packaging techniques, as well as the results of workshops on rehabilitation engineering for disabled and elderly persons. It took note of preparations for a workshop on industrial robots, automatic handling and assembly equipment in present and future manufacturing systems, scheduled for 1994, and for a seminar on foundry production and ecology, held at Minsk (24-28 May).

The Working Party also considered reports of the thirteenth and fourteenth meetings on statistical questions concerning engineering industries and automation and agreed to organize a workshop on PRODCOM—EC's system of product statistics. It reviewed seminars and workshops held in 1992, discussed proposals for future workshops and adopted its work programme for 1993-1997.

The Working Party on Steel (third session, Geneva, 20-22 October)⁽²⁴⁾ considered reports of a meeting of experts on the steel market and of an intersecretariat meeting on steel statistics. It examined developments in 1993 and prospects for 1994. It reviewed the preparation of bulletins on steel statistics and a study on iron and steel scrap, and considered a study on the impact of scrap reclamation and preparation on the world steel industry. It also considered the report of the first ad hoc meeting for a study on recent developments in steel consumption and trade in ECE member countries. The Working Party was informed of a study tour of steel plants in the Czech Republic and Slovakia (6-11 June) and accepted Japan's invitation for a study tour of its steel installations in 1994.

Acting on a recommendation of a seminar on metallurgy and ecology (Nancy, France, 10-14 May), the Working Party decided to convene an expert group meeting in 1994 on ecological issues in the iron and steel industry. Discussion was to focus on environmental management, the recycling of iron and steel products and by-products, environmental safety standards and the harmonization of regulations in ECE member countries. The programme of work for 1994-1998 included seminars on recycling, privatization and structural changes in the steel industry of countries in transition, a workshop on restructuring the iron and steel industry in Ukraine, and a study on restructuring and changing ownership in the steel industry.

In April, ECE endorsed the 1993-1997 work programmes of the three Working Parties.

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee (fifty-fifth session, Geneva, 1-5 February 1993)⁽²⁵⁾ analysed the transport situation in member countries and considered activities to assist economies in transition. It discussed, among other things, transport policy and economics; road, rail and inland water transport; customs questions; the transport of dangerous goods and perishable foodstuffs; follow-up to the 1991 Pan-European Transport Conference (the Prague Conference); traffic flows; transport in the Mediterranean; road traffic safety; international harmonization of technical requirements for the construction of road vehicles; and preparation of the 1995 census of road traffic.

The Committee decided to study further the feasibility of organizing a regional conference on transport and the environment. It also decided to convene an ad hoc expert group meeting on the development of a European railway network and to launch a study on the establishment of a main inland waterways network. It endorsed the draft Convention on Customs Treatment of Pool Containers used in International Transport (Container Pool Convention), prepared by its Working Party on Customs Questions affecting Transport. By three separate resolutions, the Committee decided to designate a second Road Safety Week in the spring of 1995; approved provisions relating to inland water transport and requested its Working Party on Combined Transport to study possibilities for establishing a legally binding international instrument on combined inland water transport, to deal with, inter alia, coastal shipping and the handling of dangerous goods; and endorsed recommendations for the introduction of larger containers in combined transport, adopted by a 1992 global seminar on the subject. In April, ECE acted on those resolutions by adopting a decision on cooperation in the field of transport.⁽²⁶⁾

In another resolution, the Committee recommended that Governments harmonize customs controls at border crossings to improve traffic flow. It also adopted its revised terms of reference and its programme of work for 1993-1997, endorsed by ECE in April.

Also in April, the Commission stressed the need to complete provisions for the carriage of dangerous goods by inland waterways, and underlined the need to harmonize further international regulations for their transportation. It welcomed the revision of the 1968 Convention on Road Signs and Signals and the 1971 European Agreement supplementing it. It called for the early completion of joint road and rail infrastructure projects and invited the Inland Transport Committee to consider ECE's role in implementing a coherent European system of transport infrastructure networks.

During the year, the ECE secretariat continued to participate in preparations for the second Pan-European Transport Conference, scheduled for 1994, including its draft Declaration and a European Transport Charter. It supported the Trans-European North-South Motorway (TEM) and Trans-European Railways (TER) projects and undertook studies on traffic forecasting and the upgrading of non-motorway sections of the TEM network. A trust fund agreement for the TER project became operational in 1993. The secretariat studied bottlenecks and gaps in international infrastructure networks and completed its revision of provisions concerning the carriage of dangerous goods by inland waterways.

During 1993, 23 States, including one non-ECE member, became contracting parties to a total of 31 ECE legal instruments. An ECE infrastructure agreement for combined transport entered into force on 20 October, and an inventory of its infrastructure parameters was published. The Conference of the Contracting Parties to the 1957 European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road (first session, Geneva, 28 October) adopted a Protocol amending the definition of vehicles and the procedure for amendments to the annexes. Other activities included workshops on privatization of the road haulage industry (Berlin, 1 and 2 April) and on transport infrastructure planning for economies in transition (Aachen, Germany, 8 and 9 April), and ad hoc meetings at Geneva on the development of a European railway network (15 September), the facilitation of border crossings for international rail transport (16 September) and the road traffic census (22 and 23 November).

Energy

At its third session (Geneva, 9-11 November),⁽²⁷⁾ the Committee on Energy reviewed the energy situation and policies in the region, particularly the economies in transition. It adopted its programme of work for 1993-1997, covering energy reform in Central and Eastern Europe and the broad objectives of more rational energy use and sustainable development. The Committee also reviewed activities to enhance energy efficiency, promote cooperation in the field of renewable sources of energy and assist in the transition of the coal, gas and electric power industries in Central and Eastern Europe. It agreed, in principle, to create a working party on renewable sources of energy, and requested the secretariat to reconvene the Steering Committee of the project entitled "Global Energy Efficiency 21: An Interregional Approach", in consultation with other regional commissions and relevant United Nations bodies.

The Working Parties on Coal, Gas and Electric Power held their third sessions at Geneva. The Working Party on Coal (11-13 October) focused on the transition of coal industries in Central and Eastern Europe to market economy conditions. Its emphasis was on the social and environmental consequences of restructuring, as well as the use of clean technologies and environmental impact assessments in underground and opencast coal mining, international coal trade and transport. It also examined the prospects for coal in the ECE region. Activities during the year included a symposium on new coal utilization technologies (Helsinki, Finland, 10-13 May), which focused on gasification, liquefaction, combustion and environmental issues; and a preparatory meeting for the symposium on the sustainable development of opencast coal mining regions (Most, Czech Republic, 11 November). Workshops were held on the restructuring of coal industries in Central and Eastern Europe (Katowice, Poland, 1-3 June) and on opportunities to develop new economic activities in the coal mining regions of Central and Eastern Europe (Brussels, Belgium, 18-21 October).

The Working Party on Gas (25-27 January) considered a programme to assist the adaptation of gas industries in Central and Eastern Europe to market conditions and approved a technical cooperation programme to promote and develop a market-based gas industry. The programme was to be operated through a trust fund, which was further considered at an ad hoc meeting (Geneva, 10 May). Workshops were held on gas pricing and gas market structure (Groningen, Netherlands, April), the rehabilitation of gas transportation systems (Minsk, Belarus, 8 and 9 June) and coal-bed methane recovery (Donetsk, Ukraine, 15-17 June). A symposium (Istanbul, Turkey, 4-8 October) addressed prospects for gas markets and the region's gas industry in the years 2000-2010. In November, the Committee on Energy invited European Governments and gas enterprises to follow up on the symposium's recommendations.

The Working Party on Electric Power (11-13 May) concentrated on the implications of economic reforms in Central and Eastern Europe for electric power demand and supply, the environment, sustainable development, and energy policies and strategies. A study was carried out on prospects for the natural gas and electric power industries, and a workshop was organized on the possibilities of refurbishing fossil-fired power stations, taking environmental requirements into account (Ankara, Turkey, April).

The Steering Committee of the "Energy Efficiency 2000" project to reduce the gap between energy-intensive industries in Eastern Europe and the energy-saving technologies of the West held its third and fourth meetings in 1993 at Geneva (2-4 March and 12-14 October). The Committee considered developing a new UNDP/ECE project on demonstration zones for the implementation of energy-efficiency strategies in Central and Eastern Europe, supported by the Global Environment Facility. Activities during the year included a seminar on energy efficiency and economic transition in Central and Eastern Europe (Paris, 25-28 May), an ad hoc meeting on methods of financing energy-efficiency demonstration zones (Newcastle, United Kingdom, 15 and 16 June), and a symposium on the environmental benefits of energy conservation (Moscow, 20-24 September). In November, the Committee on Energy invited its members to meet their pledges to the project trust fund, and requested the Executive Secretary to determine requirements for the second phase of the project, including work on energy-efficiency standards.

The secretariat issued a publication on solar power systems and made a presentation at a UNESCO high-level meeting for a world solar summit (Paris, July).

Agriculture

The Committee on Agriculture (forty-fourth session, Geneva, 8-10 March)⁽²⁸⁾ reviewed recent developments and prospects for agriculture in the region, and agricultural policy reforms in the economies in transition in particular. It adopted its work programme for 1993-1997, focusing on economic analysis of the agri-food sector and farm management, agriculture and the environment, the standardization and quality of perishable produce, and food and agricultural statistics. The Committee also reviewed European trade in agricultural products and the market situation for selected commodities, including grains, livestock and meat, and dairy products. The Committee welcomed the 1992 decision by the FAO Council to establish Working Parties on the Economics of the Agri-food Sector and Farm Management, and on Relations between Agriculture and the Environment, as joint FAO/ECE bodies. The Working Parties held their second sessions at Geneva in 1993 (15-18 February and 24-28 May, respectively).

The Committee requested its Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development to study the legal aspects of commercial standards for perishable produce in economies in transition. The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems (see below, under "Environment") were requested to consider establishing a task force on the prevention and control of water pollution from fertilizers and pesticides.

ECE endorsed the Committee's programme of work in April, and the coordination of related activities between ECE and FAO was examined at a joint meeting of the Committee's Bureau and the Executive Committee of the FAO European Commission for Agriculture (Budapest, Hungary, 5-7 July).

The Timber Committee held its fifty-first session in 1993 (Rome, 11-15 October),⁽²⁹⁾ jointly with the twenty-sixth session of the FAO European Forestry Commission. The joint session reviewed market developments for forest products in 1993 and prospects for 1994, and considered the policy implications of and follow-up to the 1990 ECE/FAO forest resource assessment (temperate zones) and preparations for the assessment 2000. It also examined the implications of UNCED for forestry in Europe. It was informed of the outcome of the second Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe (Helsinki, June) and of a seminar on the sustainable development of boreal and temperate forests (Montreal, Canada, September), sponsored by CSCE. The joint session endorsed the programme of assistance to countries in transition and agreed that a team of specialists should monitor its implementation at regular intervals. It also endorsed the terms of reference for a team of public relations specialists to prepare a "public relations tool kit" for those countries that wished to use it in the forestry and forest industries sector.

Acting on the recommendations of an ad hoc meeting (Geneva, 15-17 February) and the Joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics (nineteenth session, Geneva, 7-9 June), the joint session approved proposals to improve the collection and dissemination of statistics. On the recommendation of another ad hoc meeting (Geneva, 22-24 February), it agreed to launch a study on the outlook for non-wood forest goods and services. The joint session also reviewed developments in the tropical forests action programme, progress with the European timber trends and prospects study, and a pilot study of long-term historical changes in temperate-zone forest resources. The Timber Committee approved its programme of work for 1994-1998, focusing on developments affecting forestry and forests products; the collection, dissemination and improvement of statistics on forests and forest products; forest technology, management and training; the sustainable development of forests and forest products; and assistance to economies in transition.

Activities during the year included an ad hoc FAO/ECE meeting on global forest resource assessment (Kotka, Finland, 3-7 May), a seminar on the use of multifunctional machinery and equipment in logging operations (Olenino, Russian Federation, 22-28 August), and workshops on new forestry law for countries in transition (Debe, Poland, 27 September-1 October) and on sustainable development in the management of a forest enterprise (Switzerland, 21-26 November). The Steering Committee of the Joint FAO/ECE/ILO Committee on Forest Technology, Management and Training held its eleventh session (Geneva, 21 and 22 September). A team of specialists established to discuss problems in the forestry and forest industries arising from radiation contamination, and from the Chernobyl disaster in particular, met for the first time in November. The secretariat issued forest and forest-products country profiles for Albania, Estonia, Hungary, Poland and Romania.

Economic analysis

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (twenty-ninth session, Geneva, 7-11 June)⁽³⁰⁾ held a round-table conference on structural change, employment and unemployment in market and transition economies. The conference discussed the factors necessary for economic recovery in the transition countries, long-term projections and perspectives for the world economy, and issues related to interregional and intraregional trade, sustainable economic development, and structural changes in employment, labour productivity and working patterns and their impact on economic growth.

During 1993, the secretariat's activities in the field of economic analysis and projections focused on population research dealing with international migration, the elderly, fertility and family surveys, and population-related policies. ECE cooperated in organizing the European Population Conference, held at Geneva in March in preparation for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

Environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems (sixth session, Geneva, 16-19 March)⁽³¹⁾ reviewed preparations for the "Environment for Europe" conference, to be held later in the year (see below), and adopted their contribution to it. They also reviewed the implementation of ECE Conventions, on Environmental Impact Assessment in a Transboundary Context, on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents and on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes. They also examined the implications of UNCED for the ECE region and progress towards cooperation in water management, environmentally sound technology and products, the management of hazardous chemicals, integrated pollution prevention and control, environment and economics, and bilateral and multilateral financial cooperation.

The Senior Advisers adopted recommendations on water-quality criteria, including the control of water pollution from fertilizers and pesticides, and requested the secretariat to publish them in the Water Series. They endorsed the work programme of the Joint Working Group on Environment and Economics (third session, Geneva, 19-21 January), as well as their own, which focused on policy issues, environmental impact assessment, environmentally sound technology and products, water management and industrial accidents.

In April, ECE endorsed the Senior Advisers' work programme and adopted a decision on cooperation in the field of environment and sustainable development.⁽³²⁾ It called on member States to ratify or accede to the ECE environmental Conventions, underlined the need to extend the OECD system of environmental performance reviews to other ECE countries, and requested the Executive Secretary to carry out a feasibility study on the organization of a regional conference on transport and the environment (see also above, under "Transport"). In separate action,⁽³³⁾ ECE called on its subsidiary bodies to participate in international activities to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl accident, and requested the Executive Secretary to study the possibility of contributing to the United Nations review of those activities.

The Declaration of the Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe" (Lucerne, Switzerland, 28-30 April) provided for ECE to have a central role in coordinating the "Environment for Europe" process, including follow-up to the Conference, preparations for the next conference in 1995, and development of the environmental programme for Europe. Pursuant to the Declaration, the Senior Advisers, at a special session (Geneva, 21 October),⁽³⁴⁾ established the Working Group of Senior Governmental Officials "Environment for Europe" and invited it to give particular consideration to the short-term needs of economies in transition. The Senior Advisers also recommended that they become the Committee on Environmental Policy.

At its eleventh session (Geneva, 1-3 December), the Executive Body for the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution adopted the introduction and part I of the revised technical annex to the protocol for the control of nitrogen oxide emissions, and adopted a framework for a second protocol for the further reduction of sulphur emissions, expected to be finalized early in 1994. It reviewed activities of the Working Group on Effects (twelfth session, Geneva, 6-8 July) and requested it to prepare information on the critical-loads approach and its application for the new sulphur protocol. The Executive Body also considered activities of the Steering Body to the Cooperative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe (EMEP) (seventeenth session, Geneva, 6-8 September).

By the end of 1993, there were 37 parties to the 1979 Convention. There were 35 parties to its protocol on long-term financing for EMEP, 21 to the protocol on the reduction of sulphur emissions, 23 to the protocol on the control of nitrogen oxide emissions, and four to the protocol on the control of emissions of volatile organic compounds. The 1991 Convention on Environmental Impact Assessment in a Transboundary Context had been ratified by four Governments. The 1992 Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes had been ratified or acceded to by three countries, and the 1992 Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents had been approved by one Government. In 1993, the status and implementation of the last Convention was reviewed at the second meeting of its signatories (Geneva, 14-17 June).

The Working Group on Strategies met three times at Geneva during the year, for its ninth (1-5 March), tenth (24-28 May) and eleventh sessions (30 August-3 September), and the Working Group on Technology held its second session (Geneva, 28 and 29 June). Other activities included workshops on costing techniques for environmental policies (Geneva, 18 and 19 January) and on the impact of economic restructuring on the environment (Budapest, 9 and 10 March), and a seminar on low-waste technology and environmentally sound products (Warsaw, 24-28 May).

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements (fifty-fourth session, Geneva, 21-23 September)⁽³⁵⁾ discussed the human settlements situation in the region and related trends and policies. It reviewed work accomplished or in progress on the promotion of sustainable human settlements policies; practical transition problems; modernization policies for built-up areas; the management of land, housing and building; major trends influencing human settlements development; housing forecasting; building pathology and prevention of disorders; cooperation with the Energy Efficiency 2000 project (see above, under "Energy"); development of human settlements statistics; human settlements problems in southern Europe; and the ECE compendium of model provisions for building regulations. The Committee also discussed its contribution to the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in 1996 (see PART THREE, Chapter IX). It recommended that ECE convene a high-level regional preparatory meeting for Habitat II.

The Committee adopted terms of reference for its new Working Parties on Sustainable Human Settlements Planning and on Housing Development, Modernization and Management (formerly Housing, Modernization and Management), and agreed on a draft programme of work, focusing on the sustainable development of human settlements and the process of socio-economic transition. It established a task force to elaborate draft guidelines on sustainable human settlements planning and management and approved a new set of regional recommendations on current housing and building statistics.

In 1993, the Working Parties on Housing, Modernization and Management and on Sustainable Human Settlements Planning held their first sessions at Geneva (2-4 June and 28-30 June, respectively). The secretariat convened a consultation with NGOs to intensify their involvement in the Committee's programme of work. It issued housing policy guidelines with special reference to economies in transition, as well as an information leaflet on human settlements in the 1990s. During the period from September 1992 to September 1993, 12 workshops and three seminars were organized on issues related to human settlements. They included a seminar on reform of real property, land registration and cadastre for promoting economic development and improving urban management and planning (Copenhagen, Denmark, 25-29 October).

Standardization

The Working Party on Standardization Policies (third meeting, Geneva, 12-14 May)⁽³⁶⁾ reviewed developments in the field of standardization, including coordination, harmonization, conformity assessment and metrology in testing. The Working Party and the Committee on Energy organized a seminar on energy-efficiency standards and labelling systems (Geneva, 11 May), and the Working Party adopted its programme of work for 1993-1997.

In October, the Working Party decided to publish a third revised version of the ECE recommendations on standardization policies and a list of contact points in ECE member countries, which provided information on national standards, conformity assessment procedures and metrology.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (forty-first session, Geneva, 14-18 June)⁽³⁷⁾ considered the consequences of increased ECE membership, recent developments in countries in transition and a framework for priority-setting. It examined ways to improve the efficiency of the statistical process and discussed the proposed new economic classification for the United States. The Conference reviewed activities in its programme areas, including the organization and operation of statistical services, statistical information technology, and support for ECE publications, studies and projects. It noted the report of a seminar for statistical offices of Mediterranean countries (Palermo, Italy, September 1992) and adopted recommendations concerning electronic data processing and statistical metadata, statistical data editing and survey processing, the European Comparison Programme (a comparative analysis of national accounts), labour statistics, cultural statistics, fertility and family surveys and migration statistics, housing and building statistics, quality measures and specific methodological issues in environment statistics, and physical environmental accounting.

The Conference welcomed the publication by the ECE secretariat of a guide to statistics on the hidden and informal economy, and commended activities to assist economies in transition to establish agricultural statistics. It expressed satisfaction with the activities of the Intersecretariat Working Group on Service Statistics to coordinate work between ECE, the Statistical Office of EC (EUROSTAT) and OECD. It approved proposals to improve the Annual Bulletin of Housing and Building Statistics for Europe and the ECE specialized energy bulletins, and agreed to discontinue the Annual Bulletin of General Energy Statistics and to incorporate it in the ad hoc publication on energy balances for Europe and North America for 1970-2000. It considered its programme of work for 1993-1994, requested its Bureau to develop a minimum programme of recommended statistics for countries at the initial stages of transition, and agreed to establish a new Intersecretariat Working Group on Censuses with the participation of ECE and EUROSTAT.

The Bureau of the Conference, at a meeting with directors of EUROSTAT and OECD (Geneva, 15 and 16 February), reviewed cooperation and coordination through intersecretariat working groups and joint programme review meetings, and agreed to integrate the draft work programmes of the three bodies in all fields of statistics into a single document.

The Joint ECE/OECD Meeting on National Accounts (Paris, 21-25 June) reviewed implementation of the revised System of National Accounts (SNA) (see PART THREE, Chapter XVII) and considered statistics on the hidden and informal economy. The implications of the revised SNA for consumer price indices were among matters considered at a joint ECE/ILO meeting (Geneva, 25-28 October). The effectiveness of technical assistance programmes in statistics was discussed by major donors and recipient countries at a workshop in Romania. Participants noted that a lack of electronic data-processing equipment in recipient countries was a particular problem. Activities of the ECE secretariat during the year focused on the development of classifications and other norms in the areas of agriculture, the hidden economy, international price statistics, environment, transport, energy, housing, population censuses and electronic data processing.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean did not meet in 1993. In accordance with a 1992 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽¹⁾ the Commission's twenty-fifth session was to be held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, in 1994.

Economic trends

A summary of the 1993 economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean⁽²⁾ stated that economic activity in the region as a whole increased by 3.2 per cent during the year, while regional per capita output rose by 1.3 per cent. Unlike previous years, Brazil was a major positive factor in the region's continued recovery. After three years of poor performance, Brazil registered a 4.5 per cent increase in its GDP. If Brazil's growth were excluded, the region's growth rate would have declined from 4.3 per cent in 1992 to 2.6 per cent in 1993. Other positive influences on regional performance in 1993 were the cumulative effect of adjustment policies and reforms adopted in previous years and a drop in international interest rates. At the same time, however, limited growth in global demand and the deterioration of international commodity prices had adverse consequences for the region's economic performance.

Growth rates varied considerably among countries, reaching 6 per cent in Argentina, Chile and Costa Rica and 5.5 per cent in Panama, but only 1 per cent in Mexico. Peru registered a 6.5 per cent expansion after five years of recession, while GDP in Belize, Bolivia, Honduras and Paraguay grew by between 3 and 3.5 per cent. Brazil, Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala and Guyana showed a 4 to 5 per cent increase. Growth rates in the Bahamas, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Jamaica and Uruguay varied between 1.5 and 2.5 per cent. Output fell by 1 per cent in Nicaragua, Trinidad and Tobago and Venezuela and by 11 per cent in Haiti, while Cuba's level of activity worsened for the fourth consecutive year.

Economic expansion generally exceeded population growth, with increases in per capita output of more than 3 per cent in Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica, Panama and Peru and between 1 and 3 per cent in eight other countries. In another 10 States, however, per capita output grew only slightly or shrank. The unemployment rate was largely unchanged. It declined significantly only in Colombia and Panama, while Argentina, Ecuador, Honduras and Mexico registered higher rates. Slight decreases occurred in Bolivia, Brazil, Guatemala, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The annual regional inflation rate, excluding Brazil, declined from 22 per cent in 1992 to 19 per cent in 1993 and was below 15 per cent in most countries. Brazil was the exception, with its three-digit inflation rate soaring even higher.

The unit value of exports from Latin America and the Caribbean was adversely affected by foreign markets; it fell by 4 per cent in 1993 and slowed growth in the unit value of imports to only 1 per cent. The result was an almost 5 per cent decline in the terms of trade in most countries. Argentina, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Uruguay were exceptions. Due to an increase of some 9 per cent in export volume, however, the total value of regional exports grew by 4.5 per cent to reach $133 billion. The value of exports increased considerably in Costa Rica (11.7 per cent), El Salvador (22.7 per cent), Nicaragua (19.3 per cent) and Paraguay (32.6 per cent), by between 6 and 8 per cent in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico, and by 3 to 5 per cent in Bolivia, Guatemala, Honduras and Panama. It fell by 3 to 8 per cent in the Dominican Republic, Chile, Ecuador, Peru and Uruguay and by almost 32 per cent in Haiti.

Total merchandise imports to Latin America and the Caribbean increased for the third consecutive year, growing by 6.5 per cent in volume and by 8 per cent in value, to reach $147.7 billion. The expansion of imports, facilitated by large capital inflows, was widespread in the region. The oil-exporting countries registered a 3 per cent rise in their imports, largely due to increased unit values, while the non-oil-exporting States saw their imports grow by 13 per cent through expanded volume. Brazil and Colombia accounted for 25 per cent of the region's import growth, expanding by $5 billion and $2.7 billion, respectively. They were followed by Argentina and Chile, with increases of almost $1 billion each. Imports declined in Bolivia, Ecuador, Haiti, Nicaragua, Peru and especially Venezuela, where they fell by $1 billion after two years of vigorous expansion.

A more rapid growth of imports over exports, and the resultant deterioration of trade balances in Brazil, Chile and Colombia, was only partially offset by better results in Mexico and Venezuela, causing an increase in the region's trade deficit from $10 billion in 1992 to $15 billion in 1993 and a $43 billion deficit on the current account of the balance of payments. Net capital inflows declined slightly but continued to be very positive, amounting to $55 billion. The largest reductions were registered in Argentina, Brazil and Chile. Uruguay and Paraguay recorded strong increases.

Most capital entering the region came from private non-banking sources and consisted of foreign direct investment (FDI), trade credits, time deposits in local banks and public debt instruments denominated in local currency. Most countries also attracted new kinds of foreign capital from non-banking sources, including bond issues and stock portfolio investments. With capital inflows exceeding the deficit on the current account, the global balance of payments fell from $25 billion in 1992 to $12 billion in 1993, resulting in considerably increased reserves in all but five countries.

Real exchange rates also declined in all but five countries of the region. Real parity remained unchanged in Chile and Venezuela, while exchange rates increased in Honduras, Paraguay and Peru.

The net transfer of financial resources was positive for the third consecutive year and stood at $25.7 billion. Many countries improved their fiscal management as a result of ongoing stabilization programmes. Nine had their fiscal accounts under control, three had imbalances of less than 2 per cent of GDP, and seven had major financial deficits.

External debt

The region's external debt grew by 4 per cent in 1993 to $487 billion on the strength of bond placements totalling $19 billion, loans from bilateral and multilateral sources, and debt in the form of trade credits. At the same time, financing, in such forms as direct investment, time deposits and fund-raising through equity markets, limited debt growth. Some debt reduction operations also took place during the year, especially in Argentina. Although debt increased in most countries, it contracted by 14 per cent in El Salvador, 12 per cent in Trinidad and Tobago, 4 per cent in Guatemala and 1 per cent in Panama. The debt increase rate varied from almost 10 per cent in Mexico and 6 per cent in Paraguay to between 4 and 5 per cent in Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica and Ecuador and 1 to 3 per cent in the rest of the region.

The region's external debt burden continued to fall during 1993, prolonging the trend of the past decade. The share of debt interest in total exports from Latin America and the Caribbean declined from 19.2 per cent in 1992 to 17.6 per cent in 1993, but still ranged from 116 per cent in Nicaragua to between 20 and 25 per cent in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Honduras and Peru, and 10 to 20 per cent in most other countries. Only five States (Chile, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Haiti and Paraguay) were below 10 per cent.

Activities in 1993

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

The economic development work of the ECLAC secretariat included studies by the Economic Development Division and information and documentation activities carried out by the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation (GLADES). The Economic Development Division monitored the economic evolution of countries in the region, including their economic and social policies and development strategies to harmonize macroeconomic stability with social equity and structural change.

The report on the Commission's activities between its 1992 and 1994 sessions⁽³⁾ stated that ECLAC continued to publish the annual Economic Panorama of Latin America, Preliminary Overview of the Economy of Latin America and the Caribbean and Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean. These publications presented, respectively, a timely overview of economic trends in the nine major economies of the region for the first eight months of the year, the performance of the entire region during 1993, and complete and comparable breakdowns on the region's economic trends. ECLAC also examined alternative policies for managing the external debt, for bringing about expansive adjustments and lowering inflation without causing recession, and for analysing the impact of real exchange rates on exports from Chile and Brazil.

In 1993, a regional project on fiscal decentralization included case-studies in Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Colombia and technical seminars in Porto Alegre, Brazil (7 July), Bogotá, Colombia (26 July) and Medellín, Colombia (28 July). A fifth regional seminar on fiscal policy, stabilization and adjustment (Santiago, Chile, 25-28 January) examined the relationships between fiscal policy and other macroeconomic factors. A workshop on public policy reforms and social spending (Santiago, 14-15 June) discussed policies for providing services and government regulation in the social sectors of Latin America. A seminar on fiscal decentralization in the region was held in Argentina (Buenos Aires, 20 October) and a technical cooperation programme on fiscal issues was initiated between ECLAC and Cuba.

CLADES focused its activities on strengthening the management of information and documentation for economic and social development in the region. It held two regional meetings on information management (Santiago, 17-21 May; San Jose, Costa Rica, 8-12 November), continued to issue the periodicals PLANINDEX and Informativo terminológico and published an edition dedicated to the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR) as part of its INFOPLAN series.

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) organized a high-level international training programme in regional development (Santa Cruz, Bolivia, 9 August-10 September). It also organized a number of courses, including one on the Integrated Laboratory on the Design of Regional Strategies (Popayán, Colombia, 31 May-2 July). Others were held on policy formulation and project evaluation (Santiago, 4 October-6 November) and economic reforms and strategic public management (Santiago, 5 November-10 December). Special attention was given during the year to budget policies in public sector programming, resource allocation and social spending, and the strengthening and development of municipal management. ILPES organized workshops on integrated systems of financial administration (Santiago, 28-30 April), methodological problems in the measurement of public social spending and its redistributive impact (Santiago, 3 and 4 June), a seminar on municipal management and training (Santiago, 27 and 28 September) and an inter-American seminar on local statistical information systems to help overcome poverty (Santiago, 28 and 29 October). Advisory assistance missions were undertaken to more than 15 countries at the request of their Governments, and progress was made in the conceptualization of regional development management and its interaction with decentralization processes and international competitiveness.

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning, at their sixteenth meeting (Brasilia, Brazil, 24 and 25 November) emphasized the need for ILPES to continue to promote technical cooperation in public sector restructuring, regulation and privatization; citizen participation in quality control of public services; and financial relations between different levels of government. They endorsed the Institute's new training policy, noting in particular an international course on economic reforms and strategic State management.

Industrial, scientific and technological development

The Joint ECLAC/UNIDO Industrial and Technological Development Unit assigned special importance in 1993 to industrial restructuring to achieve competitiveness. Its efforts were channelled through the ECLAC/UNDP project on "Design of policies to strengthen the capacity for technological innovation and enhance the international competitiveness in the Latin American entrepreneurial environment". Technical advisory services in export policies, technological innovation and human resources development were provided to Chile, Mexico and Venezuela and studies were prepared on regional technological policies, innovations and the impact of regional integration on long-term growth. A two-year project on production restructuring, industrial organization and international competitiveness in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia and Mexico was initiated with the International Development Research Centre, and a joint study on health system reforms in the region was launched by ECLAC and the Pan-American Health Organization.

Competitiveness was the subject of two informal forums on the quality of education in Chile (Santiago, 15 April and 24 May), a meeting of authors on the integration of competitiveness, sustainability and social development (Paris, 17-19 June), and of seminars on industrial organization, innovation systems and international competitiveness in Latin America and the Caribbean (Termas de Cauquenes, Chile, 15 and 16 July), and policies for technological innovation, human resources development and international competitiveness (Santiago, 2 and 3 December).

ECLAC continued its cooperation with the Latin American Association of Capital Goods Industries and published a regional directory of capital goods manufacturers for 1993.

Other publications included a book on competitiveness, technological policies and industrial innovation in Uruguay; essays on industrial policy and on FDI by leading Latin American companies; articles on the region's experience with technological policies and innovation systems; a document on policies, institutional mechanisms and measures to support small and medium-sized industries and extraregional industrial cooperation; and two issues (Nos. 14 and 15) of the journal Industrialización y Desarrollo Tecnológico.

International trade and development finance

The activities of the ECLAC International Trade and Development Division focused mainly on the design of policies and mechanisms to permit the continued expansion and improvement of the commercial linkages of the region in the changing world economy. A number of documents were prepared on aspects of trade and economic relations. The role of foreign ministries in the cooperation process was discussed at a seminar on the management of international cooperation between Latin America and the European Community (Rome, 15 and 16 April).

In the context of its activities in regional integration and cooperation, ECLAC published a document on Latin American economic integration and cooperation among developing countries (South-South cooperation), conducted studies on various aspects of integration, gave a course on international trade and integration (Quito, Ecuador, 19-25 May), co-sponsored a conference with the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) on trade liberalization in the Western Hemisphere (Santiago, 24 and 25 May), and organized a meeting of representatives of Latin American and Spanish diplomatic academies (Santiago, 29 and 30 November).

Activities in development finance included studies on financing for small and medium-sized enterprises, a technical seminar on the development of regional capital markets (Santiago, 18 and 19 October) and a regional seminar on pension system reform and the development of capital markets in Latin America (Asuncion, Paraguay, 22 and 23 November). The development of capital markets was also considered at a seminar in Chile (Santiago, 11 and 12 January) and pension system reform was the subject of a seminar-workshop in El Salvador (San Salvador, 31 March and 1 April).

Seminars dealing with bank regulation and supervision were held in Honduras (Tegucigalpa, 28-30 March) and in Brazil (Brasilia, 26 November). A seminar-workshop on social security was held in Paraguay (Asuncion, 26-28 May).

Natural resources and energy

ECLAC's support for natural resources and energy management included workshops on water resources management (Lima, Peru, 6 and 7 August) and on the development of small-scale mining in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 15-17 November). A meeting of the expert group on the possible effects of climate change on regional water resources was held in Chile (Santiago, 23-25 November) and courses on integrated water resources management and on water resources legislation were held at Guatemala City, from 15 to 25 March and from 24 to 28 May, respectively. ECLAC also offered training in the management of hydrographic basins (Temuco and Concepción, Chile, 7-12 May and 28 May), the sound management of hazardous wastes (Santiago, 2-13 August), and natural resources management (Mendoza, Argentina, 22 November-15 December).

In the area of marine resources, the secretariat supported UNCED follow-up related to coastal management, fishing on the high seas, the transboundary shipment of wastes by sea, the establishment of protected coastal and marine areas, and the influence of coastal human settlements on marine ecosystems.

Studies were prepared on the technological research and financial development needs of the mining and metallurgy sector and ECLAC assisted in a study of the mineral trade in the Latin American Integration Association. Presentations were made on trends in metal consumption within regional blocs at an international seminar on regionalism and mining resources (Santiago, 4-6 October); on economic reforms and energy policy at the Energy Conference of Latin America and the Caribbean (Bogotá, 15-18 June); and on the role of the state in the energy sector at the first Latin American energy seminar (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 18-22 October). ECLAC launched a technical cooperation project with the Latin American Energy Organization to recommend policies for regional economic development and undertook various other tasks related to the economic appraisal of the region's natural resources, the maintenance of mining statistics, and natural resources management.

Transport

The focus of ECLAC's transport programme was on technical cooperation among Latin American countries in railways, urban public transport, port management and road maintenance. It published eight issues (Nos. 101-108) of its Boletín FAL on the facilitation of trade and transport in the region and supported national seminars on road network conservation and management in Argentina, Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Puerto Rico and Venezuela. Activities included a seminar on multimodal transport in Latin America (Montevideo, Uruguay, 21-23 June), organized jointly with the Latin American Integration Association, and the first maritime trade meeting (Santiago, 10 and 11 November), co-sponsored by the Chilean Maritime League.

Social development

During 1993, the ECLAC Social Development Division continued to study characteristics and trends of poverty and policies to overcome it. It also served as the regional focal point for youth and social policy activities in the United Nations system.

The Division played a key role in the Latin American and Caribbean Regional Preparatory Meeting for the International Year of the Family (Cartagena, 9-13 August), which reviewed the situation and prospects of the family in the region and adopted the Cartagena Declaration. As a follow-up to the Meeting, a book was published on changes that had affected families in the region over the past three decades and a meeting of experts was held on indicators in family policy issues (Mar del Plata, Argentina, 16 and 17 December).

The Division participated in the international Conference on Social Development and Poverty (Oaxaca, Mexico, 8-11 September), organized by Mexico with the support of UNDP and the World Bank, and published the 1993 edition of Panorama social de America Latina, which reviewed recent employment indicators, poverty and its impact on youth, and the effect of family organization on children's educational performance.

Seminars were held on postgraduate training in social policies (Santiago, 13 and 14 December), social policy and project management and evaluation (Santiago, 14-16 December), rural youth, modernity and democracy in Latin America (Santiago, 26-28 October), and global youth policies (Santa Cruz, 22-25 November). Training courses during the year dealt with social planning and project evaluation (Santiago, March-July and October-November; Buenos Aires, November), youth policies (Caracas, Venezuela, 26 April-8 May), development co-operation (Madrid, Spain, 7-27 May), social policy rationalization (Tegucigalpa, July) and social policy and governability in Latin America (Madrid, 22-29 September).

Integration of women

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean met twice in 1993. At their sixteenth meeting (Caracas, 27 and 28 May), they analysed ongoing activities, considered the first draft of the new regional programme of action and made recommendations on national and regional preparations for the 1995 World Conference on Women.

Studies were under way on the situation of women in the region, new theoretical approaches to understanding women's status in society, the gender perspective and its links with development issues, women's participation in decision-making, women in the informal sector, domestic violence against women, women and culture, and teenage pregnancy. Comparative studies of active legislation on women were also conducted under a technical cooperation project in Colombia, Ecuador, Honduras and Paraguay, along with analyses of relevant government agencies and NGOs and technical meetings aimed at improving the legal and institutional framework for including women in development activities.

Other activities included meetings on teenage pregnancy and women heads of household (Santiago, 2 March) and on women leaders (Santiago, 4 and 5 June), a seminar on culture, modernity and gender (Santiago, 1-3 December) and courses on gender policies (Santiago, 15 March-15 December) and social policies in relation to gender (Santiago, 4 October-6 November).

Environment

A primary task of ECLAC's Environment and Human Settlements Division was the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992,⁽⁴⁾ in which ECLAC was assigned the role of regional coordination body.

A regional meeting was convened on the application of the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal⁽⁵⁾ (Santiago, 15-19 November). The meeting discussed the environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes in Latin America and the Caribbean. The legal aspects of waste management were considered at a national seminar on environmental law in Chile (Santiago, 7 October). Activities under an ongoing technical cooperation project for environmental planning and management dealt with environmentally sustainable agricultural development in Chile, Mexico and Peru, and ways of incorporating the environmental dimension into development management. ECLAC also continued work on the management of urban and industrial waste (see below) and organized a meeting of the regional expert group on deep sea fishing (Santiago, 25 and 26 November).

Human settlements

The Joint ECLAC/UNEP Development and Environment Unit had under execution a project on controlled environmentally sound waste management. The project provided guidelines and advisory services for municipalities in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica and Ecuador. Legal, institutional and technological policy aspects of waste management were addressed and a seminar was held on municipal policies (Cordoba, Argentina, 9-12 June).

A project on urban management in selected medium-sized Latin American cities, focused on the refinement of urban management tools, environmental questions and citizen participation in the cities of San Pedro Sula (Honduras), Cordoba, Ibagué (Colombia) and Temuco (Chile). Studies were conducted on industrial development and municipal plans for waste management in Buenos Aires and Cartagena and two international courses were offered on policies for the environmentally sound management of urban and industrial wastes (Cartagena, 19-30 July; Santiago, 2-13 August). ECLAC continued a study of the environmental information needed for development management in the region's human settlements and participated in the Second Regional Meeting of Ministers and Senior Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 29 November-2 December).

Population

The Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), the institution responsible for ECLAC's regional population programme, focused its activities during 1993 on applied research, technical cooperation, training and dissemination of demographic data. The Centre fielded some 40 missions and provided advisory services in such areas as census processing, demographic analysis, the elderly, maternal and infant mortality, computerized birth and other data, population and the environment, population projections, spatial distribution, the demographic dynamics of poverty, and population policies.

CELADE's training and teaching activities included a third postgraduate course on population and development under the UNFPA Global Programme of Training in Population and Development (Santiago, 15 March-15 December), the sixteenth intensive regional course on demographic analyses for development (Santiago, 17 August-17 December), intensive national courses on population and development in Colombia (Santa Fe de Bogotá, 1 March-28 May) and El Salvador (1 October 1993-June 1994), and three workshops on the application of a population database programme (Concepción, Chile, 4-8 January; El Salvador, 8-19 March; Caracas, 22-26 November).

In preparation for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, the Centre joined ECLAC and UNFPA in organizing the Latin American and Caribbean Regional Conference on Population and Development (Mexico City, 29 April-4 May),⁽⁶⁾ attended by representatives of 52 Governments, United Nations agencies and NGOs. The Conference adopted the Latin American and Caribbean Consensus on Population and Development and recommended guidelines for preparing a regional programme of action.

Among other activities in 1993 were a meeting on indigenous reservations (Temuco, 15 and 16 January), a seminar-workshop on contemporary socio-demographic research on indigenous peoples (Santa Cruz, 18-22 October) and seminars on new international migration patterns and trends in the context of integration (Montevideo, 27-29 October) and on the regional population information network (Santiago, 17-19 November). The Centre continued to publish research studies on population and produced several issues of DOCPAL: Latin American Population Abstracts, Notas de Población and the Demographic Bulletin.

Food and agriculture

Most Latin American and Caribbean countries in 1993 were seeking to increase their exportable supply of non-traditional agricultural goods, and a number of ECLAC documents reviewed aspects of recent experience in agro-exports. An analysis was begun of the experiences of such traditional extraregional exporters of horticultural products as Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to determine the implications for the ECLAC region of its efforts to diversify exports. Although there were some instances of successful trade expansion within the region, serious constraints were encountered in exporting those goods to other regions. An ongoing project on policy formulation for the transformation of agricultural production included a seminar on policies for agricultural restructuring in Paraguay (Asunción, 2-4 November) and missions to several Central American countries to discuss this subject with government authorities and the private sector.

Statistics and economic projections

The ECLAC Statistics and Economic Projections Division continued to analyse the region's position in the global economy, to carry out activities to expand the regional network of statistical information and to undertake medium- and long-term studies on Latin American and Caribbean development. The Division was developing a database of short-term indicators, a regional data bank on external trade, a household survey data bank, and databases on external debt and on social statistics. It participated in a technical meeting of the United Nations working group on the implementation of the System of National Accounts (Santiago, 26-30 July) and organized a regional seminar on the subject (Santiago, 22-26 November). The Division supported national efforts to develop statistical databases to measure poverty and to implement the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System. It helped convene an international workshop on poverty and a colloquium on measuring and analysing poverty (Aguascalientes, Mexico, 20 March-3 April and 21 and 22 October) and provided technical assistance and training for government officials in Brazil and Mexico for the management of social indicators. Information on the situation of women was prepared from household survey data.

Transnational corporations

The joint ECLAC/UNCTAD unit on TNCs continued to research the contribution by and impact of TNCs on the region's development. The unit concentrated on: legal and statistical information on FDI and TNCs in the region; TNCs and changes in the world economy; the role of TNCs in industrial restructuring of the region's economies; and technical cooperation related to TNCs and international competitiveness.

Documents published in 1993 dealt with legal and statistical information on foreign investment in the region and with TNCs in relation to economic transition in Argentina, industrial modernization in Brazil and Colombia, and the restructuring of Brazil's manufacturing sector. Surveys of the main foreign-owned manufacturing companies were carried out in Costa Rica. The unit also issued a study on structural aspects of the "new international industrial order". It examined the impact of global economic changes on developing countries and the role of foreign investment and technology in the region's development and on restructuring of the automotive industry in particular.

Technical cooperation assistance

During 1993, the ECLAC Programme Planning and Operations Division completed 20 regional, 8 subregional and 17 country projects funded from multilateral and bilateral extrabudgetary funds. It launched 12 new projects and a further 22 projects were at various stages of implementation. The new projects focused on the areas of poverty, the reformulation of Argentina's foreign trade system, welfare and social assistance in Brazil, demographic analysis and policy formulation in the British Virgin Islands, rural economic organization in Mexico, and energy and petroleum supply questions in Central America. A technical cooperation agreement was signed between ECLAC and Saint Lucia.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

During 1993, the Programme Planning and Operations Division continued its work within the framework of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries.⁽⁷⁾ Its efforts focused on the incorporation of TCDC elements in projects to strengthen national institutions, support for cooperation networks and information systems to expedite the flow of technical cooperation, and the consolidation of national TCDC focal points. The Division also supported seminars and technical meetings to exchange experiences. Those activities were coordinated through a regional mechanism, established by ECLAC and the Latin American Economic System (SELA) with UNDP support, and were reviewed at the eighth meeting of the Coordination Mechanism for International Bodies and Regional Forums Engaged in TCDC Activities (Montevideo, 29-31 March). TCDC issues were also considered at a regional meeting of national directors for international technical cooperation (Caracas, 24-26 August).

ECLAC also collaborated with SELA and UNCTAD in preparing a regional TCDC programming exercise in international trade, and with UNCTAD and ESCAP in a joint project to promote cooperation among countries of the Pacific Rim. It continued to publish the quarterly bulletin Cooperation and Development, which described the Commission's TCDC initiatives.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean, at Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, continued to analyse socio-economic development in the subregion and to support the activities of subregional bodies, including the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC), the Caribbean Council for Science and Technology (CCST) and the Caribbean Documentation Centre (CDC). It also provided technical assistance to the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) in an effort to achieve a closer political union of countries in the subregion. The subregional headquarters continued to review the economic performance of Caribbean countries and relevant international economic developments, to publish technical studies and reports on research activities and projects and to disseminate information on economic development and trade and related activities through its quarterly bulletin, External Sector Briefing Notes and the quarterly newsletter, Focus. It prepared the second edition of the Women in Development Bibliography and documents on the implications of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) from the Caribbean perspective and on the use of basic indicators to construct databases on women engaged in selected activities.

An ad hoc expert group meeting of national economic managers and planners of CDCC countries (Port of Spain, 23 and 24 November) reviewed the state of national economic management and planning in the Caribbean and examined issues relating to development with social equity from the subregional perspective. Social development questions in the context of the structural adjustment process in the subregion were considered at another expert group meeting (Port of Spain, 25 and 26 November). The subregional headquarters continued to issue the CCST quarterly newsletter and the PATNEWS update, which provided patent information in support of industrial development and technology transfer.

Activities for the integration of women in development included an ad hoc meeting of experts to consider a framework for discussing relations between men and women in changing Caribbean social structures (Port of Spain, 22 and 23 March). Preparations for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development concentrated on national policy formulation and the analysis of census data and population projections. The framework of a Caribbean plan of action on population and development was adopted at the first meeting of a working group set up for that purpose (Port of Spain, 29 and 30 July). Training courses were offered in the use of demographic variables for a national work plan on population (Port of Spain, 6 and 7 April), the analysis of census data using a computerized database (Saint Lucia, 19-21 April), and the preparation of population projections and the creation of a data bank (Saint Lucia, 14-18 June). A training workshop was held on adolescent fertility and population policy (Castries, Saint Lucia, 15 June).

The subregional headquarters studied the consequences of climate change and the rise in sea level, in collaboration with UNEP and the University of Miami, and analysed the vulnerability of coastal areas in the Caribbean basin. It established an electronic system for the exchange of environmental information (AMBIONET) and offered a training workshop on AMBIONET's implementation (Mexico City, 25-28 April). A technical meeting was held for the Atlantic, Caribbean and Mediterranean island countries (Port of Spain, 12-16 July) in preparation for the 1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing Countries.

Mexico and Central America

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for Mexico and Central America (Mexico City) continued its activities in Central America, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Mexico, with the aim of reviving and modernizing the subregion's economies and consolidating Central American integration. A significant share of the work, focusing on economic, social and industrial development, international trade, food and agriculture and energy, was devoted to analysing stabilization and structural adjustment policies implemented in the 1980s and Central America's development options for the 1990s. Studies were made of the subregion's strategic options in trade negotiations, the financing of micro-enterprises through NGOs, investment initiatives for reviving the industrial sector and methodologies for evaluating the international economic situation and its impact on the subregion. An investment and technical cooperation project bank was established under a project sponsored by Italy.

The financial implications of the El Salvador peace agreement and their impact on the economic stabilization programme were analysed by the subregional headquarters, which also examined the possibility of growing medicinal plants and industrializing their cultivation in the subregion. Two seminars were organized on the subregion's economy (Guatemala City, 22 and 23 February; Tegucigalpa, 22 and 23 July). Through the subregional headquarters, ECLAC provided advisory services to Cuba on free trade agreements, analysed the implications of NAFTA for the subregion and conducted studies on economic relations between Mexico and Central America, various aspects of Mexican agriculture, recent trends in traditional exports, the incorporation of women into changing production patterns in Mexico, and the health situation and health policies in Central America.

In the field of energy, a frame of reference was formulated for an electrical interconnection project between Guatemala and Mexico and work was completed on a load shedding plan for the interconnected systems of El Salvador and Guatemala. The subregional headquarters assisted Mexico in organizing discussion panels on electrical integration and on the exchange of experiences in efficient energy use. It cooperated with the Latin American Energy Organization in formulating alternatives for the supply of hydrocarbons for electricity generation and cooperated with IDE in a study of problems in Central America's electricity subsector. Project profiles and studies on electrical interconnection were prepared under a joint project with the World Bank, co-sponsored by UNDP.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October 1993 report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System.⁽⁹⁾

Cooperation between SELA and the United Nations system had intensified since SELA's establishment in 1975, particularly through ECLAC, which provided support to various SELA projects and participated in its meetings. The two organizations collaborated on matters related to social policy, population, information and trade development. Within the framework of the inter-agency group on integrated social policies, they studied the feasibility of establishing a social project bank and an information and communications network. They updated their database on regional cooperation and cooperated on projects to form a network of regional development financing institutions and to train managers of regional information networks.

Under the SELA/UNESCO/IDB Simon Bolivar Programme, launched in 1992, 120 projects were identified to establish links between the productive sector and the main research centres and universities of the region.

SELA, UNDP, UNCTAD and the Governments of Honduras and Italy held a regional seminar on external debt conversion for economic, social and environmental projects (Tegucigalpa, 19-21 May), and SELA, UNDP and WHO collaborated on "Project Convergence" which was designed to promote technological development in the region's health sector. An agreement establishing an Inter-Agency Committee to support Project Convergence was signed by SELA, UNDP, WHO, ECLAC and UNESCO.

Joint activities of SELA and UNCTAD focused on a new regional programme of technical cooperation in international trade and trade relations (LATINTRADE) and included collaboration on the sixth consultative meeting on the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and on the needs of countries in the region for technical assistance in trade negotiations (Geneva, 12 and 13 July).

The Latin American Council of SELA held its nineteenth ordinary ministerial meeting in Caracas, Venezuela, from 25 to 29 October.⁽¹⁰⁾

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia did not meet in 1993, having held its sixteenth session at Amman, Jordan, in 1992. On 2 February 1993, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's 1992 decision(1) to convene sessions of the ESCWA Technical Committee in alternate years when no Commission session was held, starting with a three-day meeting in 1993 (resolution 1993/1).

The Technical Committee held its eighth session at Amman (11-13 October).(2) It reviewed activities of the ESCWA secretariat, examined economic and social developments in the region, and considered a proposed work programme for the 1994-1995 biennium. The main discussion themes included obstacles facing the Commission, the strengthening of interaction between ESCWA and its members, coordination questions, and the impact of the Persian Gulf crisis on labour in the region. The Committee recommended to the Commission a resolution by which meetings of the Technical Committee would be linked with the Commission's sessions, in accordance with previous practice, and that ESCWA sessions would be held in odd years, beginning in 1995.

Economic trends

Overall economic performance in the region slowed considerably in 1993, according to a summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1993.(3) All countries except Qatar and Yemen recorded positive growth rates, but the aggregate GDP growth rate was estimated at 3.5 per cent, compared with 6.8 per cent in 1992. Factors contributing to the slow-down in economic activity included lower oil prices and revenues, depressed export performance, continued economic sanctions against Iraq and their adverse impact on countries with traditional economic ties with Iraq, limited progress in mobilizing resources for reconstruction, attacks on tourists in Egypt and their negative effect on the confidence of foreign investors, a persistent political crisis in Yemen, and the depressed state of regional cooperation in general. The slow-down was partially offset, however, by the momentum of economic reforms in Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic, which were aimed at stabilization, deregulation and a greater role for the private sector. Other positive developments included good harvests, a rise in domestic demand in the oil-producing countries, and buoyant private sector activity, including significant private sector capital repatriation.

Economic activity in the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) group of countries grew by an estimated 3.3 per cent, compared with 7.5 per cent in 1992. The highest growth, 25 per cent, was recorded in Kuwait, which sharply increased its oil production and revenues for the second consecutive year and continued its reconstruction and rehabilitation activities. The oil sector in the other GCC countries declined by more than 10 per cent, and growth in the non-oil sector failed to compensate. GDP growth rates between 1992 and 1993 fell from 6.8 per cent to 4 per cent in Oman and from 4.3 per cent to about 1 per cent in Saudi Arabia. Growth held at 2 per cent in Bahrain over the same period, and the United Arab Emirates' economy grew by 1 per cent. With the decline in oil revenues, GCC countries had to borrow from international markets and draw on their financial assets to meet the high costs of defence, reconstruction and rehabilitation. The downturn also provoked more intense efforts to privatize the non-oil sector and to rationalize public expenditure.

With the exception of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, economic growth in the more diversified economies also slowed to an estimated 4.1 per cent in 1993, against 5.6 per cent the previous year. Although well below the 11 per cent expansion of 1992, Jordan's growth rate was estimated at a still impressive 6 per cent, due to the success of structural adjustment policies which reduced external and internal imbalances and created a favourable investment climate. Egypt's economy grew by 1.8 per cent, compared with 3 per cent in 1992, as tourism revenues fell by some 30 per cent and difficulties persisted with privatization, trade liberalization and regulation of the labour market. Economic and social conditions in Iraq continued to deteriorate as a consequence of the Persian Gulf hostilities and United Nations sanctions. This was reflected in the depreciation of its currency, high inflation and shortages of foodstuffs, medicines and intermediate products.

Lebanon's GDP growth accelerated from 5 per cent in 1992 to 7 per cent in 1993, reflecting an improved investment environment and increasing donor confidence. The economy of the Syrian Arab Republic grew at an estimated 6 per cent compared with 5 per cent in 1992, following the promotion of private sector investment, a good harvest, a budget deficit reduction, and the gradual elimination of price distortions. In Yemen, however, GDP declined by 1 per cent, owing to a political crisis that aggravated economic conditions and reduced the availability of external financial resources such as workers' remittances and aid.

With the exception of Iraq and Yemen, inflation in the region ranged between 1 and 4 per cent in the GCC countries and between about 5 and 12 per cent in the rest of Western Asia. The inflation rate hit a three-year low of 7.4 per cent in Egypt and fell from 131 per cent to 8.9 per cent in Lebanon, its lowest level in 10 years. Inflation fell below 5 per cent in Jordan, but rose in the Syrian Arab Republic from 9 per cent in 1992 to 12 per cent in 1993, following the gradual elimination of subsidies. Shortages of foreign currency and a widening budget deficit boosted inflation in Yemen to 55 per cent. Iraq also continued to suffer from excessively high inflation. Although significant progress was achieved in reducing macroeconomic imbalances in some of the more diversified economies, unemployment remained a major problem. The official unemployment rate in Egypt was some 12 per cent of the labour force but unofficial estimates ran as high as 20 per cent. In Jordan, unemployment declined but remained high at 11 per cent. The unofficial rate in Yemen was estimated at 25 per cent in 1993.

Fiscal developments in the GCC countries in 1993 were still affected by the ramifications of the Gulf crisis as well as by the drop in oil revenues, which increased projected budget deficits significantly, especially in Kuwait, Oman and Saudi Arabia. Budget deficits decreased in most other countries except Yemen, where it was more than double the projection. At the same time, banks in Western Asia continued to suffer under a mounting burden of non-performing loans. These were estimated at $25 billion at the end of 1993 and constituted about 35 per cent of total bank lending, 9 per cent of total bank assets and five times the banks' combined profits. Regional stock markets surged however, with the value of traded shares reaching some $7.6 billion, 31 per cent more than in 1992 and 65 per cent above the 1991 figure. In 1993, the International Finance Corporation included the Jordanian stock market among the 20 emerging markets of the developing countries. The Saudi Arabian stock market became the largest in the ESCWA region in terms of capitalization, although it remained closed to foreign investors. Plans were being made to open the Bahrain stock market to foreign investors, and to modernize the trading system at the Cairo stock exchange in Egypt and introduce new legislation to regulate its activities.

The external debt of the ESCWA region increased from $180 billion in 1992 to $186 billion in 1993. This represented 62 per cent of the region's aggregate GDP of about $298.8 billion and 11.5 per cent of the total debt of the developing countries. The GCC countries accounted for some 60 per cent of the region's total debt and for its overall increase. Debt-reduction agreements were reached between Egypt and IMF and between Jordan and commercial lenders.

Sectoral developments

Oil and natural gas

In 1993, oil prices averaged $16.3 per barrel, the lowest level in four years and 11.3 per cent less than in the previous year. Underlying factors included a 0.2 per cent drop in world demand, the inability of the OPEC countries to agree on lower production ceilings, higher output by non-OPEC members and speculation about the lifting of sanctions against Iraq's oil exports. As a result, oil revenues in the region declined by 8.2 per cent from $78.1 billion in 1992 to $72.5 billion in 1993. The drop in revenues came despite a 4.5 per cent increase in production and ranged from 18.6 per cent in Qatar and 15.9 per cent in Saudi Arabia to 8.3 per cent in Egypt and 2 per cent in the United Arab Emirates. Output declined by 2.1 and 2.3 per cent in the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia respectively. Revenues grew, however, by 46.8 per cent in Kuwait and by 12.6 per cent in the Syrian Arab Republic where daily production increased by 75.5 per cent and 7.5 per cent, respectively. Iraq's oil exports were limited under United Nations sanctions to 50,000 barrels a day to Jordan as debt payment.

Proven oil reserves in Western Asia declined by 0.4 per cent to 572.3 billion barrels, but they accounted for 57.3 per cent of the world's total. Proven reserves in Saudi Arabia, which accounted for 45.2 per cent of the regional total and some 26 per cent of global oil reserves, decreased by 0.6 per cent and totalled 258.7 billion barrels. Iraq followed with 100 billion barrels, the United Arab Emirates with 98.1 billion and Kuwait with 94 billion. The region's production in 1993 rose from 22.9 per cent to 24 per cent of the world's total.

Proven gas reserves in the ESCWA region reached 24,619 billion cubic metres in 1993, an 18.9 per cent increase over three years, accounting for about 17 per cent of the world total. Since 1990, marketed production of natural gas had grown by more than 78 per cent in Qatar, which had some 20 per cent of the region's total reserves, and by almost 50 per cent in the United Arab Emirates.

Most of that production was intended for local consumption, but Western Asian countries with large reserves also pursued export strategies. Oman was analysing export opportunities in southern Europe and planned to export gas to India. Qatar's marketed output had increased by 78 per cent since 1990 and the United Arab Emirates planned to increase its liquefied natural gas production in 1993 following a Japanese undertaking to double imports over a 25-year period.

Agriculture

The region's agricultural production index grew by 2.6 per cent in 1993. Growth rates varied from 7.5 per cent in Iraq to 4.8 per cent in the Syrian Arab Republic, 3.8 per cent in Lebanon, 2.6 per cent in Egypt and 1.2 per cent in Yemen. Jordan and Saudi Arabia registered decreases of 5.9 per cent and 0.5 per cent, respectively. The region's food production index increased by almost 3 per cent and its cereal production by 7.5 per cent, due mainly to a 30 per cent expansion in the Syrian Arab Republic and 9.1 per cent growth in Iraq. Regional wheat production was 4.7 per cent higher than in 1992. The Syrian Arab Republic achieved the largest growth rate (21.5 per cent), followed by Iraq (18 per cent), and Egypt (3.6 per cent). Growth declined by 29.3 per cent in Jordan, 8.5 per cent in Saudi Arabia, 7.9 per cent in Yemen, and 3.8 per cent in Lebanon.

The value of Western Asian agricultural exports totalled $2.6 billion in 1992, the most recent date for which statistics were available, compared with $2.4 billion in 1991, but agricultural imports also grew from $13.8 billion to $15.4 billion over the same period.

Industrial development

The rate of industrialization in Western Asia continued to advance, albeit at a slower pace. Most countries gave greater emphasis to export-oriented small- and medium-scale private industries, while the GCC countries paid increased attention to downstream operations to accelerate the diversification of their economies. The expansion of industrial capacity, in that subregion in particular, through heavy industries such as petrochemicals and basic metal industries, created opportunities for the further development of downstream industries and for greater integration of the subregional industrial sector. Apart from cost and revenue incentives to improve the investment environment in the GCC subregion, most Western Asian countries granted additional benefits to foreign investors to help upgrade industries with better technologies, management and marketing techniques.

The relative contribution of the industrial sector, however, declined from 11 per cent of GDP in 1989 to 9.7 per cent in 1991, due largely to the devastating effects of the Persian Gulf hostilities on Iraq and Kuwait. The region's manufacturing sector continued to be constrained by the size of the domestic market and a contraction in aggregate demand, while global recession, competition from industrialized countries and protectionist measures against manufacturing products, particularly petrochemicals, caused the loss of traditional markets and increased difficulties in accessing new ones.

Trade

The total value of exports from the region reached $99.2 billion in 1992, 10.3 per cent more than in 1991. The increase was attributed entirely to the GCC subregion. Exports from other ESCWA countries declined slightly. The value of Kuwait's exports rose from $0.5 billion in 1991 to $6.5 billion in 1992, followed by Saudi Arabia with an increase of some $2 billion. Although the developed market economies remained the region's main trading partners, their share of its total exports fell from an average of 54 per cent in previous years, to an estimated 51.3 per cent in 1993. Intraregional exports accounted for about 10 per cent, while exports to other developing countries reached 26.3 per cent of the total, the highest level since 1985. The share of the former centrally planned economies dropped by more than 40 per cent against the 1992 level, to 1.3 per cent.

Imports to the region totalled $87.1 billion in 1992, a 16 per cent increase over 1991. They grew by $4.5 billion in Saudi Arabia, $3.6 billion in the United Arab Emirates and $2.7 billion in other ESCWA countries. The share of the developed economies in the regional total remained more than 60 per cent in 1993, with the United States accounting for 17 per cent. Intraregional imports rose from 6 per cent in 1992 to 6.3 per cent in 1993, considerably less than the 1989-1990 level of 10.4 per cent. As imports increased faster than exports, the region's export/import ratio declined in 1992 from 1.44 in 1990 and 1.21 in 1991 to 1.14.

The combined current account balance of the region, excluding Iraq, Lebanon, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, showed a deficit of $19.6 billion in 1992, compared with a 1991 deficit of $39.3 billion. The GCC countries reduced their deficit from $42.4 billion to $21.7 billion, owing to a significant drop in the deficit in services and unrequited transfers, while the surplus of the more diversified economies fell from $3.1 billion to $2.1 billion. At the same time, the international reserves of Western Asia, excluding Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen, reached about $38 billion in 1992, up from $36.4 billion in 1991, following a $5.5 billion increase in Egypt's reserves. Reserves of the GCC countries, however, decreased by $3.8 billion in 1992 and continued to decline in the first nine months of 1993, from $19.4 billion to $18.4 billion, excluding Oman, while the reserves of other ESCWA countries grew by $0.7 billion over the same period. The reserves/import ratio for the region dropped from 5.86 months in 1991 to 5.23 months in 1992.

Social trends

While the quality of life in the ESCWA region continued to improve in general, rapid political, economic and social developments and the inequitable distribution of the benefits of development increased the gap between the rich and poor in some countries. The poor and rural populations in most countries continued to be deprived and marginalized. In Jordan, the number of families living below the poverty line rose by 6.6 per cent in 1992 and accounted for 21.3 per cent of the total number of households in the country, up from 18.7 per cent in 1989. The impoverishment of Iraq's population also increased as a consequence of the Persian Gulf crisis and the Government's impaired ability, because of economic sanctions, to act as a welfare State.

Despite improvements in basic health conditions, children in Western Asia continued to suffer from malnutrition in poor and war-torn communities. Unemployment was running high among young people in 1993 as education geared towards "prestigious" professions, rather than technical and vocational training, caused surplus labour in certain occupations. Although progress was made in channelling human and physical resources towards the prevention of disability and care for the disabled, most disabled persons, particularly in rural areas, were marginalized from the mainstream of development in ESCWA countries. Disability-related problems increased in size and scope as a result of armed conflicts, civil unrest and the suppression of Palestinians in the occupied territories (see PART TWO, Chapter V). Minimal progress was made towards improving the status of women by giving them a voice at decision-making levels or creating legal awareness. Failure to make progress was attributed largely to political instability, increasing economic vulnerability and external dependence, coupled with inappropriate legislation that limited women's contribution to economic activity and withheld their full integration into the development process in Western Asia.

On the positive side, mortality rates for children under five decreased significantly in all countries of the region. Many ESCWA members pursued policies and measures to ensure higher standards of health and to provide free health care services to their citizens. Public expenditure on preventive and curative health services increased, as did the number of hospitals. Improvements in the overall health situation and access to health facilities had a positive impact on infant and maternal mortality, fertility and life expectancy. Better health and rising literacy rates also correlated favourably with family planning, resulting in lower birth rates in the region.

Encouraging results were achieved in education, health and employment for women and the literacy gap between men and women narrowed considerably through the promotion of higher enrolment rates for women in schools under the new "Education for All" policy. Women's literacy rates ranged from 83 per cent in the case of the former Democratic Yemen and about 70 per cent in Jordan, Kuwait and Lebanon to a low of 34 per cent in Egypt and 28 per cent in Yemen. The share of education in total expenditures grew significantly, although the situation remained critical in rural areas.

Activities in 1993

Development planning, development finance and international trade

Activities under ESCWA's subprogramme on development issues and policies during 1993(4) included the annual survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region. The survey considered, among other things, the implications of economic reform and structural adjustment policies in Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon. Other studies outlined a conceptual and methodological framework for poverty alleviation in Western Asia and discussed major economic issues and challenges facing unified Yemen. Four quarterly notes were issued on major economic developments in the region.

In the area of international trade and development finance, the secretariat issued an analytical review of developments in the external trade and payments situation of Western Asian countries, which focused on the commodity structure and geographical distribution of trade, intraregional trade, balance-of-payments flows and international reserves. Another review dealt with the region's monetary and financial sectors and covered privatization issues in particular. The secretariat also prepared regional studies on export finance mechanisms, the link between production policies and export activity, finance and development in the region, management and the organization of Government, and external debt problem.

Consultations were held with member Governments and relevant agencies on financing the Reconstruction and Rehabilitation Decade for Western Asia, 1994-2003, which was declared by the Commission in 1992.(5) ESCWA also cooperated with the League of Arab States (LAS) and OAU in organizing the First Arab-African Trade Fair (Tunis, Tunisia, October) and prepared a paper on trade relations between Western Asia and African countries.

Food and agriculture

Activities under ESCWA's food and agriculture subprogramme focused on resource conservation, rural development, rehabilitation of the agricultural sector, project planning and policy analysis, food consumption and distribution, and dissemination of information on agriculture. ESCWA continued to issue its annual publication Agriculture and Development in Western Asia and prepared national farm data handbooks for Jordan and Lebanon. The secretariat assisted Oman and the United Arab Emirates in formulating national plans of action to combat desertification and completed desertification control projects in Bahrain and Yemen. It recommended a plan of action to restrict the use of qat and to ensure its eventual eradication in Yemen and undertook studies on the rehabilitation of agriculture in Lebanon and in the occupied Palestinian territories. Two project documents were prepared on the rehabilitation of deep wells and springs and related irrigation canals.

Policies and programmes for rural development were assessed at an ad hoc expert group meeting (Amman, 10-14 October) and in a regional study and country studies of Lebanon and Oman. Another study examined intraregional trade in agricultural commodities and related trade policies and identified constraints and prospective improvements in that field. Activities in project planning and analysis included the third Arab symposium on the planning and development of fisheries and Crustacea in the Arab world (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 9-12 May) and the fifth regional training workshop on food and agricultural policy analysis (Cairo, 21 November-8 December). The secretariat also organized a national training workshop on farm management, project planning and analysis (Beirut, Lebanon, 13-25 September) and a two-stage training workshop on the planning and appraisal of agricultural and rural development projects (Amman, 22-26 August and 21-25 November).

In 1993, ESCWA signed a memorandum of understanding for collaboration and coordination with the International Centre for Agricultural Research in Dry Areas and concluded agreements with FAO and the Near East and North Africa Regional Agricultural Credit Association, for the preparation of a textbook on agricultural credit for Arab universities, and with the Arab Centre for the Study of Arid Zones and Dry Lands on cooperation in the fields of desertification and natural resources.

Industrial development

Under its industrial development subprogramme, ESCWA published a biennial review of recent developments in manufacturing and industrial prospects in the region. It prepared an assessment of the industrial sector in Yemen and sectoral studies on the manufacture of machinery for agro-food industries and the development of the pulp and paper industry in a number of Arab countries. A regional survey of the production and consumption of substances harmful to the ozone layer was completed and case studies of Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic formed the basis for a publication dealing with the productive employment of women in the Western Asian pharmaceuticals and electronics industries. Missions were fielded to the Syrian Arab Republic (6-8 April), the United Arab Emirates (10-23 May) and Lebanon (28 June-13 July) to provide advice on existing industries in those countries.

The ESCWA Industry Division gave special attention to the promotion of entrepreneurship in the region. An expert group meeting on the creation of indigenous entrepreneurship and opportunities for small- and medium-scale industrial investment (Damascus, 11-14 April) identified obstacles to and perspectives for the development of entrepreneurship in Western Asia. Another expert group meeting, on the operation of enterprises under severe and fast-changing conditions (Beirut, 24-26 November), made recommendations on enhancing disaster management at the level of industrial enterprises, firms and institutions. A regional training-of-trainers workshop (Cairo, 23 October-11 November) addressed ways to start a small business. Efforts to promote the diffusion of advanced industrial technologies included a joint UNIDO/ESCWA expert group meeting on automation and microprocessor controls (Amman, 15-17 November) and a training course on tissue culture techniques and applications in industry and agriculture (Cairo, 9-21 October). The Second Arab Conference on Perspectives of Modern Biotechnology (Amman, 24-28 April), co-sponsored by FAO and UNEP, dealt with applications for biotechnology and genetic engineering in industry, agriculture, pharmaceuticals and medicine, as well as investment in biotechnology-based projects and their commercialization.

Natural resources and energy

ESCWA's activities under the natural resources subprogramme addressed water resources management and conservation, the promotion of regional cooperation in water resources development and the establishment of an ESCWA water resources database (EWDB). A regional survey of water resources activities was prepared, together with studies on the operation and maintenance of dams in selected countries and on water resources planning, management, use and conservation. Another publication dealt with the planning and design of EWDB. A symposium on water use and conservation (Amman, 28 November-2 December) examined ways to meet the growing demand for water as well as problems aggravated by the region's limited water resources. It also discussed mechanisms for regional and interregional cooperation in the water sector. The secretariat completed the preparatory stage of a three-year regional project to assess water resources using remote-sensing techniques and reviewed cooperation among ESCWA members in the area of shared water resources. It also produced reports on the proposed establishment of a regional committee on natural resources and on the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan adopted by the 1977 United Nations Water Conference.⁽⁶⁾ In the area of mineral resources, a regional study was completed on down-stream phosphate industries and their prospects.

During the year, ESCWA cooperated with LAS in studying the possible establishment of a regional training network on water issues and a regional water resources council and of conducting a conference on water resources in the occupied Arab territories. It coordinated its activities with the Inter-Islamic Network on Water Resources Development and Management and participated in the first meeting of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Land and Water Resources (Alexandria, Egypt, 22 February), which discussed cooperation and coordination among United Nations organizations and the Arab regional agencies. A Steering Committee was set up by ESCWA, UNESCO and the Arab Centre for the Study of Arid Zones and Dry Lands to coordinate water-related activities, including projects on remote sensing, sea water intrusion, and the preparation of a water atlas for the Arab world.

The secretariat continued to promote regional energy strategies and policies, the use of renewable and non-conventional energy technologies and energy conservation through good management. It published the annual survey and assessment of energy-related activities in the ESCWA region and undertook a study on optimal energy use in oil-refining, based on case studies of oil refineries in Jordan and Yemen. It also reviewed the promotion of selected renewable energy projects and implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.⁽⁷⁾

Science and technology

Activities under the Commission's science and technology subprogramme included a study on the integration of science and technology in the region's development planning and management process, a workshop on the same subject (Amman, 27-30 September) and an expert group meeting on the substitution of ozone-depleting substances (ODS) in Western Asia (Amman, 1-2 December). The expert group reviewed national and regional ODS use, considered ways of controlling ODS consumption and of implementing ODS-substitution strategies. The secretariat also continued preparations for the establishment of a regional centre for space science and technology education.

Transport and communications

Activities under the transport and communications subprogramme in 1993 included studies on the assessment of manpower development in the transport sector of selected ESCWA countries and on maritime hydrographic surveying and the maintenance of hydrographic surveying equipment in Western Asia. They also included the publication of documents on maritime transport statistics, information classification, the coordination of investments in the transport sector, pricing policies for port services and facilities and the use of computers in transport management. The secretariat continued to publish its annual Transport Bulletin and co-sponsored, with UNCTAD, a workshop for senior officials on multimodal transport (Amman, 25-27 January). Advisory services were provided on the creation of free zones and port tariffs in Jordan and for evaluating a study on a new seaport in Oman. Expert group meetings were held on training needs in the transport sector (Amman, 23 and 24 January) and transport information systems (Beirut, 15-18 November).

Environment

Work under the environment subprogramme was directed towards the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,⁽⁸⁾ and the 1991 Arab Declaration on Environment and Development and Future Prospects,⁽⁹⁾ which was endorsed by the Commission in 1992.⁽¹⁰⁾ It also focused on the incorporation of the environmental dimension in the development process and the establishment of an environment database.

In accordance with the Arab Declaration and a 1992 Commission resolution on the subject,⁽¹⁰⁾ a Joint Committee on Environment and Development in the Arab Region was established at a preparatory meeting (Amman, 7 and 8 April), organized by ESCWA, LAS, FAO and UNEP. The Joint Committee's objectives were to coordinate environment and development activities among members of the United Nations system, the LAS system and other Arab and international organizations, to develop proposals for an Arab environmental work programme, and to attract financial and other support. At its first session (Cairo, 15 and 16 September),⁽¹¹⁾ the Joint Committee adopted the revised Integrated Environmental Information Network, approved in 1992 by the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for Environment as part of the Arab Programme of Action for Sustainable Development. The Joint Committee appealed to its members for greater efforts to implement Arab environmental action programmes and activities. It also invited the ECA to join the Committee and decided to convene an Arab Ministerial Conference on Sustainable Agricultural and Rural Development in November 1994. A Preparatory Committee for the Conference held its first meeting on 13 September to consider technical, financial and organizational requirements.

ESCWA operational activities in the area of environment and sustainable development were directed towards capacity-building programmes to enable member States to identify and solve their environmental problems, formulate policies to encourage sustainable development, prepare management plans for environmentally sensitive States and areas, assess national and regional conditions and trends in environment and development, develop regional and subregional environmental legislation, rationalize the use of natural resources, and encourage follow-up to Agenda 21. The Commission also identified priority areas for action under Agenda 21, including the consideration of environment and development issues in decision-making; sustainable agriculture and rural development; water resources management; changing consumption and production patterns; poverty, sustainable development and human well-being; and technologies for sustainable development. An Environment Coordination Unit was set up within ESCWA in July.

During the year, the ESCWA secretariat reviewed the follow-up to Agenda 21 and the implementation of the Arab Declaration and compiled and computerized an environment database. It convened a national workshop on environmental planning and management capabilities in Jordan (Amman, 12 and 13 December).

Social development and the role of women

In 1993, the secretariat issued the biennial Survey of Social Trends and Indicators in Countries of the ESCWA Region and parts of the Commission's contribution to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development. It prepared a study on the impact of drug abuse among youth in Western Asia, and substantially completed a study of the social impact of the Persian Gulf crisis on the region. A project on rural community development in Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic was in the formulation stage. The secretariat organized a workshop on prosthetics and orthotics for key medical and technical personnel in Western Asia and the Eastern Mediterranean (Amman, 8-15 October). An expert group meeting on policies and programmes for the elderly in the ESCWA region was held in Cairo (19-21 October).

The women and development subprogramme included preparations for the International Year of the Family (1994) and the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995) and activities to integrate women into the development process. A study on the reintegration of women returnees and their families into their societies of origin compared the socio-economic problems facing women returnees and their families affected by crises in Egypt, Jordan and Yemen and proposed ways of alleviating them. The secretariat updated the directory of professional Arab women for technical cooperation projects and substantially completed a regional guide on employment laws and legislation for Arab women, a survey of the situation and needs of women in southern Yemen and a study on the socialization of children in the Persian Gulf region. It also reviewed technical assistance projects for the development and empowerment of women and the eradication of legal illiteracy among women. ESCWA cooperated with the United Nations Development Fund for Women in a project to strengthen statistics on women in development.

A technical assistance project to set up national preparatory committees for the Fourth World Conference on Women included missions in November/December to Bahrain, Egypt, Kuwait, Lebanon, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. Expert consultations on a policy framework and regional programme of action for Arab women in agriculture in the Near East (Cairo, 29 November-2 December) were held in cooperation with FAO and a UNICEF/UNDP/ESCWA workshop and briefing on regional preparations for the World Conference was convened for Egyptian NGOs (Cairo, 14 and 15 December). Other activities included a proposal for an expert group meeting on the Arab family in a changing society, to be held in 1994 in the context of the International Year of the Family, and a regional and national seminar for business and professional women (Amman, 26-28 April), which discussed the participation of Arab women in business and professional fields and their access to higher education and vocational training.

Population and human settlements

During the year, the secretariat published three issues of the Population Bulletin of ESCWA, produced the biennial demographic and related socio-economic data sheets for countries of Western Asia, issued a bibliography of population literature in the Arab world and prepared a computerized database on population and labour. Studies dealt with return migration, instructors and trainers in the Arab world and the spatial distribution of population. Expert group meetings were held on unemployment in ESCWA countries (Amman, 26-29 July) and human development in the Arab world (Cairo, 6-9 December). Regional population trends, policies and activities were reviewed at the Arab Population Conference (Amman, 4-8 April). The Conference adopted the Second Amman Declaration on Population and Development in the Arab World as a regional input to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development.

Work in the field of human settlements focused on urban development, affordable housing and planning and design standards and techniques. Studies were prepared on housing trends during the last two decades, shelter and public amenities in urban areas, planning and design standards and community cohesiveness in urban life. Advisory missions were fielded to Yemen to help upgrade secondary settlements in the city of Thula (October) and to provide advice on a proposed national housing strategy (December). An expert group meeting was held on the social and cultural context of physical planning of the Arab city (Amman, 6-9 June). A cooperation agreement was reached between ESCWA and LAS concerning preparations for the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II).

Statistics

In February 1993 (see below), the Economic and Social Council established a Statistical Committee within ESCWA, as recommended by the Commission in 1992.⁽¹⁾ The Fourth Meeting of Heads of Central Statistical Organizations in the ESCWA Region (Amman, 26-28 October)⁽²⁾ decided on the Committee's composition and activities. The Meeting also considered the implementation of its previous recommendations, technical cooperation in statistics, issues related to the United Nations System of National Accounts, the improvement of civil registration and vital statistics systems, the development of indicators and improved statistics on the status of Arab women and the National Household Survey Capability Programme.

Three biennial publications were issued in 1993: the Bulletin of Industrial Statistics for the Arab Countries, Prices and Financial Statistics in the ESCWA Region and Compendium of Social Statistics and Indicators. The status of civil registration and vital statistics systems in Western Asia and strategies for their improvement were the subject of a regional workshop (Damascus, 20-24 June). The first in a series of studies on social statistics in the region was issued, which also dealt with civil registration and vital statistics. A computerized database on labour statistics was produced and a database software program for registering live births and generating statistical reports was being developed. ESCWA continued to provide its members with advisory and training services under the Regional Household Survey Project.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/2 without vote.

Establishment of a statistical committee within the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Realizing the importance of coordinating statistical work at the regional level and of standardizing statistical methods and concepts in accordance with the circumstances and potential of the countries of the region covered by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and their economic and social development requirements, which induced other United Nations regional commissions to establish standing statistical committees to undertake the coordination of statistical work in their regions,

Aware of the necessity of supporting the participation of the statistical organizations of States members of the Commission in planning and developing statistical activities and in identifying the priority of statistical plans and programmes in the regions,

Aware also of the need to strengthen coordination and integration with regard to statistical policies, programmes and activities between regional Arab organizations and the Commission, with a view to meeting the needs and requirements of statistical organizations in member States and to developing those organizations in order to achieve the economic and social development goals of the countries of the region,

Noting that the meetings of heads of central statistical organizations of the States members of the Commission, held in 1985, 1987 and 1989, have proved effective in directing, coordinating and evaluating the statistical programmes of the Commission and in associating them with the statistical programmes and activities of regional Arab organizations and of member States,

Stressing the need for the meetings of heads of central statistical organizations of the States members of the Commission to assume a permanent institutional form,

1. Decides to establish a Statistical Committee of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia comprising representatives of the central statistical organizations of the States members of the Commission to undertake the following activities:

(a) To familiarize itself with the statistical activities of the States members of the Commission and to follow up the progress made in those countries in the development of their statistical programmes, drawing up recommendations regarding the status, implementation and evaluation of programmes of statistical work and organizing symposia, workshops and seminars related to statistics;

(b) To study international statistical systems, classifications and projects, adapting them to suit the conditions and priorities of the countries of the region;

(c) To provide advice on the statistical training requirements of the States members of the Commission, proposing training programmes in coordination with appropriate regional institutions as needed;

(d) To standardize national statistics to make them more comparable at regional and international levels, taking into consideration relevant recommendations of the Statistical Commission and other appropriate bodies;

(e) To coordinate the exchange of statistical data and information between the Commission and its member States for the benefit of all concerned;

(f) To coordinate the statistical programmes of the States members of the Commission, in particular in matters relating to statistical surveys and censuses and dates of implementation;

2. Recommends that the Statistical Committee meet biennially;

3. Calls upon the Executive Secretary of the Commission to follow up the present resolution and to submit to the Commission at its seventeenth session a report on the achievements of the Statistical Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/2

2 February 1993 Meeting 2 Adopted without vote

Draft by ESCWA (E/1992/65/Add.1); agenda item 2.

Technical cooperation

ESCWA continued its technical cooperation activities through short-term regional advisory services and the monitoring and substantive support of technical assistance projects.⁽¹³⁾ During 1993, the secretariat continued to implement projects to encourage industrial ventures in ESCWA countries; establish engineering-infrastructure projects; conduct household surveys; and provide advice on data processing, energy, environment, human resource development, development planning and policy, promotion and industrial management, national accounts and economic statistics, science and technology, transport and communications, water resources development and social statistics.

Organizational questions

During the Persian Gulf hostilities, ESCWA's headquarters were temporarily relocated from Baghdad to Amman and, at its 1992 session,⁽¹⁾ the Commission considered offers to host its permanent headquarters and recommended a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 2 February, the Council adopted resolution 1993/3 without vote.

Permanent headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Referring to the request submitted by the Government of Lebanon regarding the transfer and hosting of the permanent headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in Beirut,

Referring also to the memorandum of the Government of Iraq, containing a request that the staff of the Commission return to Baghdad by 31 December 1992, failing which the Government would take back the present buildings, but would be prepared to provide other buildings for the same purpose,

Referring further to the request submitted by the Government of Jordan regarding the transfer and hosting of the permanent headquarters of the Commission in Amman,

Referring to the note by the Executive Secretary concerning the permanent headquarters of the Commission,

Taking into consideration the need to provide stability for the secretariat of the Commission, which is vital for the performance of the tasks entrusted to it,

1. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to take the necessary measures to study the requests submitted by the Government of Lebanon and the Government of Jordan, as well as any other request that may be received from any State member of the Commission regarding the transfer and hosting of the permanent headquarters of the Commission, and also requests the Executive Secretary to submit to the Commission at its next special session a detailed report on the contacts he makes with regard to the Commission's permanent headquarters, which should contain an appraisal of the offers made in that respect;

2. Decides that a special session of the Commission shall be held at Beirut within one year of the date of the adoption of the present resolution to discuss the question of the permanent headquarters of the Commission;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Lebanon for its offer to act as host to the special session of the Commission and for being prepared to meet the expenses involved;

4. Expresses its thanks to the Government of Iraq, as the present host of the Commission, for the facilities it has provided and is providing to the Commission, and appeals to that Government to consult with the Executive Secretary of the Commission before taking any measures related to buildings allocated for the permanent headquarters of the Commission at Baghdad in the light of the agreement concluded between the United Nations and the Government of the Republic of Iraq relating to the headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, signed at Baghdad on 13 June 1979;

5. Expresses its thanks also to the Government of Jordan for hosting the Commission on a temporary basis since August 1991 and for providing it with all the necessary facilities.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/3

2 February 1993 Meeting 2 Adopted without vote

Draft by ESCWA (E/1992/65/Add.D; agenda item 2.

By September 1993, no written offers to host ESCWA's permanent headquarters had been received, despite several indications of interest from member States. The special session of the Commission on that subject was cancelled as the issue was included as an agenda item of ESCWA's seventeenth (1994) session.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

The world economy continued to be sluggish in 1993, after three years of virtual stagnation. This was largely a reflection of the persistent weakness of the developed economies, which accounted for over 70 per cent of world output, and, to a lesser extent, of the decline in output in countries in transition from centrally planned to market economies. As to the developing countries, there was improvement in all major regions except Western Asia.

The issue of sustainable development received considerable attention throughout the United Nations system during 1993. The Economic and Social Council established a Commission on Sustainable Development, which held its first session in June, and a High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development met in organizational session in September. The Administrative Committee on Coordination established an Inter-agency Committee on Sustainable Development.

Eradication of poverty was also widely discussed during the year. The newly established Standing Committee on Poverty Alleviation of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development met in January and the General Assembly considered the matter in December. The Assembly stressed the importance of domestic policies to mobilize resources to eradicate poverty and requested the Secretary-General to urge United Nations organizations to strengthen implementation of their poverty eradication programmes (resolution 48/184). The Assembly also proclaimed 1996 International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (48/183).

Preparations began for the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States; the first session of the Conference's Preparatory Committee was held in August/September. In December, the Assembly decided to convene the Conference from 25 April to 6 May 1994 in Barbados and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that its goals and purposes received the widest possible dissemination (48/193).

The Assembly also considered the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries. It called on donor countries and multi-lateral financial and development institutions to assist them in the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport and related facilities (48/169).

International economic relationsDevelopment and international economic cooperation

Many aspects of development and international economic cooperation were discussed in 1993 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other United Nations bodies. However, the Committee for Development Planning did not meet in 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee considered various issues of development and international economic cooperation during the forty-eighth (1993) session of the General Assembly and made a number of recommendations. By decision 48/441 of 21 December, the Assembly took note of part one of the Committee's report. (1)

Also on 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 48/165 without vote.

Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the validity of the objectives and commitments with regard to development adopted by the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies, especially the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the Declaration on the Right to Development, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, the Cartagena Commitment, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21, which provide an overall framework for furthering international economic cooperation for development,

Noting the ongoing work of the Secretary-General in the preparation of a report on an agenda for development, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/181 of 22 December 1992,

Recognizing the trends towards regional cooperation and integration, interdependence of nations and the globalization of economic issues and problems,

Convinced that universal peace, security and prosperity cannot be fully achieved in the absence of economic and social development and improvements in international economic relations,

Bearing in mind the interlinkages between economic problems and between the economic and social aspects of development, and aware that among the most compelling challenges facing the world community are the acceleration of development, the eradication of poverty, and the need to address disparities among countries and to forge genuine international economic cooperation and partnership for development,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role to play in promoting international cooperation for development and in bringing development issues to the attention of the international community,

Noting the role of the Secretary-General in encouraging all countries to engage in a constructive dialogue for advancing development and in facilitating their efforts in that regard,

Convinced that the commitment to cooperation and partnership for development, which has been evolving in various forums in recent years, constitutes a good foundation from which to advance and promote international economic cooperation for development, the commitment to which has been clearly manifested in several documents, especially the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the Declaration on the Right to Development, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, the Cartagena Commitment, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21,

Also convinced of the importance of continuing to build upon the spirit of cooperation and partnership for development through constructive dialogue among all countries, in particular between the developed and developing countries, for the purpose of promoting an international economic environment conducive to sustainable development,

1. Reaffirms the need to strengthen constructive dialogue and partnership in order to promote further international economic cooperation for development;

2. Also reaffirms that such a dialogue should be conducted in response to the imperatives of mutual interests and benefits, genuine interdependence, shared responsibilities and the partnership for sustainable development as established at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and that the United Nations system should play a central role in facilitating such a dialogue;

3. Further reaffirms that the United Nations has a central role to play in promoting international cooperation for development and in bringing development issues to the attention of the international community;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session an analysis and recommendations on ways and means to promote such a dialogue, reflecting the ongoing work on an agenda for development and taking into account the progress achieved in fulfilment of the commitment referred to in the eighth preambular paragraph above.

General Assembly resolution 48/165

Agenda for development

In a note of 29 November,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on progress in implementing a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁾ on the preparation of an agenda for development. The note provided information on 17 replies received from Member States to a communication from the Secretary-General eliciting their views on the agenda. Based on those replies and on consultations within the United Nations Secretariat and with organizations of the United Nations system, including at the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) session of 28 and 29 October 1993,⁽⁴⁾ the note also presented initial indications of approaches and broad themes that the Secretary-General proposed to pursue in an agenda for development. He also referred to the subject in his report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3).

In view of the complexity of the issues to be addressed in an agenda for development, the Secretary-General proposed that the subject be considered by the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly in 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/166 without vote.

An agenda for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/181 of 22 December 1992,

Convinced of the need to elaborate a framework to promote international consensus in the field of development,

Committed to strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in the economic and social sectors, and recognizing, in this respect, the need to revive the role of the United Nations in fostering and promoting international cooperation for economic and social development,

Taking note of the views expressed by States on an agenda for development,

Welcoming the intention of the Secretary-General to issue in the early months of 1994 the report requested in its resolution 47/181,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the note by the Secretary-General on progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 47/181;

2. Decides that the intergovernmental discussions to consider an agenda for development and the reports of the Secretary-General thereon should be held at the substantive session of 1994 of the Economic and Social Council and at the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

3. Invites the President of the General Assembly to promote, as early as possible in 1994, in an open-ended format, broad-based discussions and an exchange of views on an agenda for development, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General requested in its resolution 47/181;

4. Also invites the President of the General Assembly, in order to ensure the broad-based nature of those discussions, to invite relevant programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations system, relevant multi-lateral institutions and other relevant organizations, including scientific and academic institutions, to participate fully in or present their views during those discussions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session further recommendations, as appropriate, to follow up his report on an agenda for development, taking into account the views expressed during the substantive session of 1994 of the Economic and Social Council, as well as the views expressed during the discussions promoted by the President of the General Assembly and summarized under his own responsibility;

6. Recommends that the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1994, consider "An agenda for development" as a possible topic for the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1994;

7. Decides to hold special plenary meetings at a high level, at its forty-ninth session, to consider ways of promoting and giving political impetus to an agenda for development;

8. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "An agenda for development".

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.12) without vote, 13 December (meeting 48); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.87), based on informal consultations on draft by China, and Colombia (for Group of 77) (A/C.2/48/L.74); agenda item 91.

UN initiative on opportunity and participation

On 28 April 1993,⁽⁵⁾ Papua New Guinea requested that an item entitled "United Nations initiative on opportunity and participation" be included in the agenda of the General Assembly's 1993 session. It expressed appreciation for the work being carried out by the United Nations, particularly in the context of the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000) and preparation of a proposed agenda for development, to identify, publicize and deal with the international aspects of the difficulties limiting economic opportunity and participation in developing countries. However, it believed that it would be appropriate in 1993 to establish a panel to study and report on opportunity and participation in the economies of developing countries, since it was the International Year of the World's Indigenous People, the year immediately following the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), and the year preceding the International Conference on Population and Development and the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States.

On 22 October,⁽⁶⁾ Papua New Guinea submitted supplementary documentation on its proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/60 by consensus.

United Nations initiative on opportunity and participation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, which provide the overall framework for economic growth and development,

Taking into account the Cartagena Commitment, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s and Agenda 21 and all other relevant decisions of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Bearing in mind that the reactivation of economic growth and sustainable development in all countries requires, inter alia, a dynamic and a supportive international economic environment,

Noting the views of the Secretary-General on an agenda for development, as contained in his report on the work of the Organization, and his note of 29 November 1993 on the progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 47/181,

Determined to uphold the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the commitment to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recognizing that one of the fundamental prerequisites for the achievement of sustainable development is broad public participation in decision-making,

Acknowledging the relevance of the issue of opportunity and participation in the economic and social development agenda of the United Nations system,

Pledged to support efforts, particularly of the developing countries, to increase their opportunity and participation in the world economy and those of the individuals and communities in those countries for accelerated and sustainable development,

Taking special note of the request dated 28 April 1993 for the inclusion of the present item in the provisional agenda of the forty-eighth session, and of all related documents on the United Nations initiative on opportunity and participation, including the document of 26 October 1993,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, in particular as it concerns the preparation of the report on an agenda for development, and his note on the progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 47/181;

2. 3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to appoint the members of the Panel from lists of experts within the United Nations system, in particular members of the Committee for Development Planning, taking into account the outcome of discussions on Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/81 of 30 July 1993 and the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992, so that they will commence their study as early as possible in 1994 in order to prepare a comprehensive, systematic and thorough report, including appropriate conclusions and practical recommendations, guided by the consensus and principles on international cooperation for development as enshrined in various agreements and declarations referred to in the preamble of the present resolution, and based on their own independent judgement, in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session in 1995;

4. Invites Member States and international organizations to contribute on a voluntary basis towards implementation of the present resolution;

5. Invites the United Nations Panel on Opportunity and Participation, in the preparation of the above-mentioned study, to draw, inter alia, on the ongoing discussions in the context of the preparation of an agenda for development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a progress report on the work of the Panel;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session a sub-item entitled "United Nations initiative on opportunity and participation" under the item entitled "Development and international economic cooperation".

International cooperation for economic growth and development

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on regional economic integration among developing countries,⁽⁸⁾ which was discussed by the Second Committee in the context of the implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,⁽⁹⁾ and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,⁽¹⁰⁾ both adopted by the Assembly in 1990.

The report described measures to promote regional economic integration envisaged by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia. It noted that the efforts of UNCTAD and the regional commissions in preparing, formulating and implementing joint projects to promote regional economic integration could help to avoid duplication and mobilize the required extra-budgetary resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/185 without vote.

Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, which provide the overall framework for economic growth and development,

Recalling its resolutions 46/144 of 17 December 1991 and 47/152 of 18 December 1992 on the implementation of the Declaration and the International Development Strategy,

1. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General, as requested in its resolution 46/145 of 17 December 1991, on regional economic integration among developing countries;

2. Stresses the need for the full and timely implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and in the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade;

3. Encourages Member States that have not yet submitted their reports on the implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration and in the International Development Strategy to do so;

4. Decides, in order to monitor the progress made in the implementation of the Declaration and the International Development Strategy and to facilitate the deliberations on the analytical and comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the subject, as requested in its resolution 47/152, to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "International cooperation for economic growth and development: (a) Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries; (b) Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade";

5. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his analytical and comprehensive report on the implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration and in the International Development Strategy information on the difficulties encountered in implementing the commitments and the measures that have to be taken by Member States for the expeditious and full implementation of the agreements contained therein.

Integration of economies in transition into the world economy

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in October 1993, a report on the role of the United Nations in the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy.⁽¹²⁾

The report described the overall setting of the transition economies—that is, countries in Eastern Europe formerly characterized by one-party rule and by an economic system anchored to some form of administrative planning—and discussed the process of their integration into the world economy. It further addressed the need to promote the flow of information for a market-based economy, and particularly to transform statistical capabilities. With regard to the role of the United Nations, the report noted that most agencies were already involved in the issues of the transition economies, with many of them rendering assistance indirectly. More direct assistance was being provided by the Bretton Woods institutions (the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank). The report also provided information received from a number of United Nations bodies, programmes and agencies on assistance provided to those economies.

The report concluded that a more buoyant international economy, particularly in Western Europe, and increased access to markets could do much to quicken the process of integrating the transition economies into the world economy. However, international cooperation policies also had a major role to play in enhancing that process. Most United Nations bodies had been involved in this regard, either by transferring financial resources or by delivering technical assistance, including information about the broader environment into which the transition economies wished to integrate. Far more technical assistance, including information aid, could be rendered by United Nations agencies to enhance the integration process, but financial constraints had restricted many agencies from doing so. Nevertheless, policy makers in the transition economies and technical assistance institutions recognized that the aid provided by the international community in general and United Nations agencies in particular could be improved through better coordination and more effective targeting, and by concentrating on: needs assessments carried out by transition economies themselves; ascertaining the commitment of donors to transferring resources, the form of aid and the timetable for its availability; and sequencing of aid delivery from donors to potential recipients.

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General, in a September report,⁽¹⁴⁾ reviewed the impact of the recent evolution of the economies in transition on the world economy. The report, in part an update of reports on the subject submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1991⁽¹⁵⁾ and to the Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁶⁾ discussed the process of transition of the economies of Eastern Europe and the former USSR from central planning and autarky to price mechanisms and openness, as well as the evolution of trade relationships of those economies. It also described the impact of the changes in Eastern Europe on some developing countries and the need for external resources for the transition process, including the implications that the large additional demand for financial resources would have for finance for the development of developing countries.

The report concluded by noting that the economies in transition needed greater opportunities to trade with the rest of the world, as well as among themselves. Their trade expansion could take place with less friction in export markets when world output and trade were growing reasonably fast. In addition, the need for increased external resources for the transition process could be met without impinging on the needs of other countries only if the industrial economies were growing and generating sufficient resources. Although an assessment of those implications was bound to be speculative, there was little doubt that, in the long term, the impact of the changes in the transition economies would be positive for the growth of the world economy.

UNDP action. In his annual report covering 1992,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) described programmes under way or planned for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States.⁽¹⁸⁾

On 18 June 1993,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to develop further UNDP's strategy in assisting the countries in transition to a market economy and encouraged him to share the experience gained with interested countries. It invited the international community to increase resources to assist those countries through UNDP's technical cooperation activities, taking fully into account that it should not be to the detriment of existing programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/181 without vote.

Integration of the economies in transition into the world economy

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 47/175 and 47/187 of 22 December 1992 and all its other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the relevant decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, decision B(48), adopted by the Economic Commission for Europe on 26 April 1993, and resolution 49/1, adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific on 29 April 1993,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the United Nations system in addressing problems facing countries with economies in transition, including the difficulties that those countries are encountering as they integrate their economies into the world economy,

1. Reaffirms the need for the full integration of the countries with economies in transition as well as of all other countries into the world economy, in particular through improved market access for their exports of goods and services, which integration will simultaneously support the systemic transformation of countries with economies in transition towards market-oriented policies and have a positive impact on world trade and global economic growth and development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen, within existing resources and through appropriate arrangements within the United Nations Secretariat, the ability of the United Nations system to conduct analytical activities and provide policy advice and technical assistance to the countries with economies in transition, as well as to promote and enhance mutual cooperation with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, within their respective mandates;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to study, within the scope of the implementation of the present resolution and while continuing the existing cooperation with relevant international institutions and entities, possible areas of economic and technical cooperation among countries with economies in transition, as well as with the developing countries, identifying the role that the United Nations system could play in this field, with a view to encouraging greater participation by those countries in the world economy;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, and biennially thereafter, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

The private sector in development

Entrepreneurship and national development

In response to General Assembly requests of 1991⁽²⁰⁾ and 1992,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1993 on entrepreneurship and national development.⁽²²⁾ The report discussed possible government policies to create an enabling environment that would allow entrepreneurship to flourish, suggested possible sources of entrepreneurial ability and measures for the development of entrepreneurship, and described the role of the international community in encouraging the growth of entrepreneurship.

The report concluded by noting that an increasing number of Governments had privatized activities by either selling them, contracting out activities or withdrawing from particular sectors, thus opening up wider vistas for private entrepreneurs. Although insufficient attention had been paid to primary, technical and commercial education, that imbalance was slowly being corrected and the process was likely to accelerate in the 1990s. Governments and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) had made efforts to broaden entrepreneurial sources and mobilize the talents of women and other groups who were formerly limited to micro-enterprises. They had also moved to reduce discrimination against entrepreneurs in the informal sector, which had formerly been considered as a negative social phenomenon, and had sought to draw informal entrepreneurs into the general economy. All those trends would require support from the international community, including maintaining open markets and increasing flows of investment and economic assistance to permit the newly entrepreneurial economies to flourish.

Measures undertaken by Governments included providing credit facilities, training and extension services and special programmes for women entrepreneurs and others from previously disadvantaged groups, promoting technology parks, incubators and industrial estates, subcontracting, franchising and licensing, as well as funding institutions for promoting new enterprises. In the 1980s and 1990s those measures were being subjected further to market forces and entrepreneurship promotion was also being pursued.

Privatization

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Comparative Experiences with Privatization, established by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) in 1992,⁽²³⁾ held its second and third sessions in 1993. At the second (Geneva, 7-11 June),⁽²⁴⁾ it reviewed 31 country presentations that had been submitted to the secretariat. It also had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the design, implementation and results of privatization programmes, including a cross-country analysis of national experiences,⁽²⁵⁾ and a preliminary version of a directory of national focal points dealing with privatization.⁽²⁶⁾ The Working Group also considered techniques for privatization and financing of privatization, including the role of foreign investment, international agencies and bilateral donors.

It annexed to its report a summary of the main points made in its discussion of policy issues and approaches relating to the techniques and financing of privatization.

At its third session (Geneva, 29 November-3 December),⁽²⁷⁾ the Working Group continued its consideration of the design, implementation and results of privatization programmes as presented in updated versions of the report on those issues⁽²⁸⁾ and of the directory of national focal points dealing with privatization.⁽²⁹⁾ It also had before it an issues paper by the UNCTAD secretariat, dealing with competition and the regulation of privatized monopolies and social impact and socially related support measures,⁽³⁰⁾ as well as five country presentations.

A summary of the Working Group's discussion on competition and the regulation of privatized monopolies and social impact and socially related support measures was annexed to its report.

Documents prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for the Working Group were also submitted to the

UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices (Geneva, 18-22 October).⁽³¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/180 without vote.

Entrepreneurship and privatization for economic growth and sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/98 of 14 December 1990, 45/188 of 21 December 1990, 46/166 of 19 December 1991 and 47/171, 47/181 and 47/199 of 22 December 1992,

Taking note of Agenda 21, the Cartagena Commitment, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade and the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on entrepreneurship and national development,

Taking note also of chapter VII of the World Economic Survey, 1993,

Taking into account the activities of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Comparative Experiences with Privatization and the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recognizing the importance of the market and the private sector for the efficient functioning of economies in various stages of development,

Recognizing also the sovereign right of each State to decide on the development of its private and public sectors, taking into account the comparative advantages of each sector, bearing in mind the economic, social and cultural diversity in the world,

Acknowledging that broad participation by individuals and major groups in decision-making is a fundamental prerequisite for the achievement of economic growth and sustainable development, with entrepreneurship as an important element of that goal,

Noting that many countries continue to attach major importance to the privatization of enterprises, demopolization and administrative deregulation in the context of their economic restructuring policies, as a means to increase efficiency, economic growth and sustainable development,

Recognizing further the important role of Governments in creating, through transparent and participatory processes, the enabling environment supportive of entrepreneurship and facilitative of privatization, in particular the establishment of the judicial, executive and legislative frameworks necessary for a market-based exchange of goods and services and for good management, as described in paragraphs 27 and 28 of the Cartagena Commitment,

Emphasizing the importance of a supportive international economic environment, including investment and trade, for the promotion of entrepreneurship and privatization in all countries,

Noting also the difficulties that countries encounter in promoting entrepreneurship and in implementing privatization programmes owing to a lack of appropriate experience and technical capacities in those areas,

Welcoming the activities that have been and will be undertaken by the organizations, bodies, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system for the benefit of recipient countries and in conformity with their own policies and priorities for development, in supporting national efforts aimed at creating enabling environments for entrepreneurship and for the implementation of privatization programmes,

Recalling with satisfaction the active collaboration between the United Nations system and private-sector associations, such as the ongoing efforts of the United Nations Development Programme with the International Chamber of Commerce, the Business Council for Sustainable Development and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the Group of 77,

Mindful of the resource constraints of the Secretariat and, therefore, of the need to rationalize related agenda items and requests for reports,

1. Invites interested Member States to enhance the exchange of information among themselves and all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system on activities, programmes and experiences of Member States and the United Nations system concerning entrepreneurship, privatization, demonopolization and administrative deregulation, in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of technical cooperation in this field;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen, within existing resources and with due priority, the activities of the United Nations system related to the promotion of entrepreneurship and to the implementation of privatization programmes, demonopolization and administrative deregulation, through, inter alia, better coordination;

3. Calls upon the relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, according to their mandates, to develop and, upon request, increase technical assistance and to incorporate in their respective programming and activities specific objectives that will:

(a) Facilitate, as appropriate, the creation of enabling environments for the establishment and growth of small and medium-size enterprises and for the support of local entrepreneurs;

(b) Facilitate, as appropriate, the design and implementation of privatization, demonopolization and administrative deregulation policies and assist relevant national institutions in developing the capacities to institute appropriate policy, legal, regulatory and fiscal frameworks and incentives to promote entrepreneurship;

4. Encourages the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in pursuing those activities, to foster active partnerships between public and private entities, taking into account the capacities for self-organization of entrepreneurs, through, for example:

(a) Mechanisms for discussion and consultation by relevant parties as to the appropriate ways to enhance the environment for entrepreneurship, privatization, demonopolization and administrative deregulation;

(b) Promoting initiatives, such as national and, where appropriate, regional workshops, to review and disseminate experience and lessons learned locally and internationally on the promotion of entrepreneurship and on the implementation of privatization, demonopolization and administrative deregulation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a biennial report, in consultation with the heads of relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, on policies and activities related to entrepreneurship, privatization, demonopolization and administrative deregulation, clarifying the focus of their respective activities;

6. Decides to review and appraise at its fiftieth session the activities related to the present resolution under an item entitled "Development and international economic cooperation: Entrepreneurship and privatization for economic growth and sustainable development".

Coercive economic measures

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a note in October 1993 on economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries.⁽³³⁾ He described his recent restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the Secretariat and drew attention to the fact that UNCTAD VIII, held in 1992,⁽³⁴⁾ had redefined UNCTAD's programme of work. In view of those new arrangements and newly established priorities, and due to the fact that no further conceptual work had been carried out on the subject, the assignment of responsibilities for further work in the area had yet to be determined.

The Secretary-General stated that the conclusions of a 1989 expert group on coercive economic measures⁽³⁵⁾ should be considered. They included the precise definition and classification of coercive economic measures; the further elaboration of specific legal norms; the refinement of methodologies to measure the impact of such measures; the establishment of adequate monitoring procedures; the definition of specific criteria to assess coercive measures; the consideration of options for possible compensation mechanisms in qualified cases; the examination of an appropriate institutional capacity to deal with information gathering and assessment of concrete cases; and the examination of common conceptual features and differences between economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations and coercive economic measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/168 by recorded vote.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade and trade policies for development contained in the relevant resolutions and rules of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 44/215 of 22 December 1989 and 46/210 of 20 December 1991,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive economic measures adversely affects the economy and development efforts of developing countries and has a general negative impact on international economic cooperation and on the world-wide effort to move towards a non-discriminatory, open trading system,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/210 and the ideas contained therein,

Concerned that the mandate referred to in paragraph 4 of its resolution 46/210 has not been fully implemented,

Taking into account the restructuring of the United Nations Secretariat and the consequent reallocation of functions,

1. Calls upon the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures to eliminate the use by some developed countries of unilateral economic coercive measures against developing countries that are not authorized by relevant organs of the United Nations or are inconsistent with the principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations, as a means of forcibly imposing the will of one State on another;

2. Urges the implementation of its resolutions 44/215 and 46/210;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to assign to the Department of Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis of the Secretariat, in cooperation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the function of continuing to monitor the imposition of measures of this nature, as well as to continue the preparation of studies in this field as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolutions 44/215 and 46/210;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic stabilization programmes

Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1993 on economic stabilization programmes in developing countries.⁽³⁷⁾ He discussed the broadening of the debate on adjustment, noting that views on stabilization and adjustment had changed between the start of the debt crisis in 1982 and the end of the 1980s, when structural adjustment programmes came to encompass a far broader range of policy areas than balance-of-payments and price stability. He also considered changes in the international environment in the 1990s and the effect of those changes on the developing countries.

The Secretary-General concluded that successful adjustment creating the conditions for resumption of economic growth depended on three main elements: there had to be government commitment to a consistent set of macroeconomic and sectoral policies for a period of time sufficient to create confidence in the rules concerning investment and production; the international economic environment to which each country was adjusting needed to be more stable; and there was a need for international economic cooperation, which could increase the chances of success of adjustment policies.

By decision 48/440 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Economic cooperation among developing countries

The UNCTAD Standing Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (ECDC), established in 1992,⁽³⁸⁾ held its first session at Geneva from 11 to 15 January 1993.⁽³⁹⁾ It had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on issues for consideration in the establishment of the Committee's work programme⁽⁴⁰⁾ and a report reviewing major developments in the area of ECDC.⁽⁴¹⁾

The Committee adopted its programme of work which consisted of: promotion and expansion of trade; cooperation at the enterprise level; policy dialogue to mobilize support and explore potentials for cooperation among developing countries and with other interested countries and groupings; strengthening integration and fostering inter-regional cooperation; enlarging and deepening monetary, financial and investment cooperation; and technical support and skill development. It also adopted the provisional agenda for its second session, to be held in 1994.

South Commission report

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1993 a report⁽⁴³⁾ on developments pertaining to the implementation of the recommendations of The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission.⁽⁴⁴⁾ The report considered South consciousness, including the reflection of South-South cooperation priorities in national development plans and the establishment of national follow-up mechanisms; examined progress in financial cooperation in the areas of clearing, payments and credit arrangements, the proposed debtors forum and the South Bank; and reviewed progress within the global system of trade preferences (GSTP) among developing countries, including the launching of the second round of GSTP negotiations and a summary of South-South trade flows. It also discussed cooperation among developing-country producers of agricultural commodities, within the context of the renewal of global commodity agreements, and cooperation among enterprises to foster contacts and encourage businesses; considered cooperation in promoting food security and in education, science and technology; appraised the recently resumed dynamism of regional and subregional cooperation and integration processes in the South; and considered the call for improved cooperation and organization of the South at the global level, including regular consultations of heads of State.

The report noted that, at the sectoral level, South-South initiatives had been vigorously promoted, for example, in the food security sector. A more significant development was the resumed dynamism of regional and subregional cooperation and integration processes in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean. Those changes also presented a case for the United Nations, multilateral financial institutions and developed countries to provide significant assistance to the South-South cooperation process. Support by the United Nations at the sectoral, regional and thematic levels needed to be monitored and analysed by the General Assembly on a comprehensive and regular basis; the Secretary-General's report represented a start in that direction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/164 without vote.

Follow-up to the report of the South Commission

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/155 of 19 December 1991, in which it recognized the relevance of the report entitled The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission in addressing the issues of interest to the South in the 1990s, especially the North-South dialogue, trade, finance, technology, regional cooperation and integration among developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on developments pertaining to the implementation of the recommendations of the report of the South Commission, in which he proposed a comprehensive approach to the questions of South-South cooperation,

Welcoming the support given by the United Nations Development Programme in distributing copies of the report of the South Commission in developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to draw upon the discussions and conclusions in the report in elaborating an agenda for development;

2. Considers that a comprehensive and systematic overview and analysis of South-South cooperation worldwide is required to stimulate intergovernmental debate, decisions and actions, as appropriate, within the United Nations system and to promote such cooperation within and between regions of the South, and globally;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report entitled "State of South-South cooperation", containing quantitative data and indicators on all aspects of South-South cooperation and prepared with the help of all relevant organizations of the United Nations, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

4. Calls upon all organs, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, in particular the regional commissions and subregional organizations, to provide analytical and empirical materials for the preparation of the report;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit his report on the state of South-South cooperation to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, at which time the Assembly will decide on the need for further reports on the matter.

Procedural arrangements for the Commission on Sustainable Development

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 12 February 1993, the Economic and Social Council:

(a) Decided that, with the following supplementary arrangements, the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council should apply to the Commission on Sustainable Development:

Participation of and consultation with specialized agencies and participation of other intergovernmental organizations

- (vi) The relevance and competence of non-governmental organizations to be included in the Roster shall be determined by the Council on the recommendation of the Secretary-General;

(b) Requested the Commission to encourage equitable representation of non-governmental organizations from the developed and developing countries and from all regions, and also to strive to ensure a fair balance between non-governmental organizations with an environmental focus and those with a development focus;

(c) Decided that any non-governmental organization which was accredited to participate in the work of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development by the conclusion of its fourth session could apply for and should be granted Roster status, subject to approval by the Council and bearing in mind the provisions of Article 71 of the Charter of the United Nations;

(d) Invited non-governmental organizations, with a view to enhancing their effective and coordinated contribution to the work of the Commission and to the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in general, to consider or continue organizing themselves in various constituencies and interest groups and to set up non-governmental networks, including electronic networks, for the exchange of relevant information and documentation;

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/215

Adopted without vote

Draft by President and Bureau (E/1993/L.11), based on informal consultations; agenda item 5.
Meeting numbers. ESC 2, 3.

In other action, the Council, by decision 1993/219 of 29 April, decided that the Commission's Bureau would consist of a Chairman and four Vice-Chairmen, one of whom would also serve as Rapporteur. By decision 1993/220 of 26 May, the Council decided to accredit to the Commission NGOs listed in a Secretariat note.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Activities of the Commission. The Commission on Sustainable Development held an organizational session in New York from 24 to 26 February.⁽⁵⁰⁾ It considered a report by the Secretary-General containing an outline of the Commission's multi-year (1993-1997) thematic programme of work⁽⁵¹⁾ and reviewed the provisional agenda for its first session as well as issues relating to its future work.

By decision 1993/217 of 29 April, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its organizational session and approved the provisional agenda for its first session.

The Commission held its first session in New York from 14 to 25 June.⁽⁵⁰⁾ Among other documents, the Commission had before it a revised programme of work;⁽⁵²⁾ a report by the Secretary-General on progress in incorporating UNCED (1992) recommendations⁽⁵³⁾ in the programmes of the United Nations system;⁽⁵⁴⁾ his recommendations and proposals for improving coordination of programmes related to development data in existence within the United Nations system;⁽⁵⁵⁾ his report on the transfer of environmentally sound technology, cooperation and capacity-building (see PART THREE, Chapter VII); his report on financial arrangements to give effect to UNCED decisions;⁽⁵⁶⁾ and his notes on information provided by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board⁽⁵⁷⁾ and the United Nations Environment Programme⁽⁵⁸⁾ on the implementation of Agenda 21.

The Commission brought a number of matters to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, including its multi-year thematic programme of work; issues relating to its future work; information regarding the implementation of Agenda 21 at the national level; the incorporation of UNCED recommendations in the activities of international organizations and action taken by ACC to ensure incorporation of sustainable development principles in United Nations programmes and processes; progress in the transfer of environmentally sound technology, cooperation and capacity-building; financial arrangements to give effect to UNCED decisions; and the provisional agenda for its second (1994) session.

By decision 1993/314 of 29 July, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on its first session,⁽⁵⁰⁾ endorsed its decisions and recommendations and approved the provisional agenda for its second session. By resolution 1993/72, the Council called on the Commission on Sustainable Development to work closely with the Commission on Science and Technology for Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VII) and to take advantage of its work while reviewing the implementation of Agenda 21.

High-level Advisory Board

Following the General Assembly's 1992 endorsement⁽⁵⁵⁾ of his view concerning the establishment of a High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in February 1993 a report⁽⁵⁹⁾ describing the proposed functions of and arrangements for the Board.

By decision 1993/216 of 12 February, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's proposals on the Board and decided to revert to the matter at its resumed organizational session in April. However, at that session, the Council had before it a revised version of the Secretary-General's report⁽⁶⁰⁾ but took no action on it.

The High-level Advisory Board, appointed by the Secretary-General in July, held its first (organizational) session on 13 and 14 September in New York. The Board focused on the themes: linkages between economic, social and political development; new approaches to finance and technology; and establishment of new partnerships between the United Nations system and other bodies active in the field of sustainable development. It established panels to carry forward work on those themes between its first and second sessions.⁽⁶¹⁾

Inter-agency Committee

The Inter-agency Committee on Sustainable Development, established by ACC in 1992,⁽⁶²⁾ held its first meeting in New York from 23 to 25 March 1993.⁽⁶³⁾ With regard to the review of ACC's subsidiary bodies, the Inter-agency Committee recommended that: the Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources should be continued and its terms of reference updated to include the implementation of Agenda 21; the Task Force on Rural Development should be retained and consideration given to reassessing its terms of reference; and there should be a coordination mechanism for the oceans under the Inter-agency Committee. It also recommended that a draft statement on the follow-up to UNCED, annexed to its report, should be considered and adopted by ACC (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

The Inter-agency Committee held its second meeting in New York from 8 to 10 September.⁽⁶⁴⁾ It brought to ACC's attention its recommendation regarding the establishment of an ACC subcommittee on oceans and coastal areas and its conclusions relating to Agenda 21 financing and reporting requirements of the United Nations system.

At its second regular session of 1993 (New York, 28 and 29 October),⁽⁶⁵⁾ ACC established a Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas.

Other action

On 26 March,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decided on areas of future activities for UNCTAD in sustainable development and agreed that the theme of trade and environment should feature on the agenda of its future sessions (see PART THREE, Chapter IV). It annexed to its decision a report on its specific plans to implement Agenda 21 and transmitted it to the General Assembly, through the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council.

The Governing Council of UNDP, on 18 June,⁽⁶⁷⁾ noted the establishment of a sustainable development network by UNDP and requested the Administrator to ensure that the network took into consideration other similar networks to avoid duplication and to provide linkage between them. The Council also made recommendations regarding UNDP's Capacity 21 initiative (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

The Joint Meeting (twenty-seventh series) of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Administrative Committee on Coordination (New York, 27 October) considered the results of UNCED and their implications for the United Nations system.⁽⁶⁸⁾ The meeting had before it a paper⁽⁶⁹⁾ that highlighted matters related to coordination, financing and programme questions. The meeting concluded that policy coordination should start at the national level through establishing national coordinating structures, while the United Nations system, through its resident coordinator network, could play a key role in coordinating international support for national follow-up activities. In addition, adequate support should be given to elaborating national sustainable development strategies. The meeting considered it essential to ensure effective interaction and collaborative arrangements in the area of transfer of environmentally sound technologies, cooperation and capacity-building (see PART THREE, Chapter VII) and recommended that the Economic and Social Council consider science and technology at the coordination segment of its 1994 session. It underscored the need for broader agency participation in the Global Environment Facility and UNDP's Capacity 21 Programme and for further development of partnership between the United Nations system and NGOs, as well as the private sector.

Eradication of poverty

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November 1993 report,⁽⁷⁰⁾ prepared in response to a 1992

General Assembly request,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed progress achieved since 1992 in coordinating action in the fight against poverty. With regard to general trends, he noted that a preliminary review had indicated that poverty alleviation programmes were becoming central to technical cooperation provided by the United Nations in most developing countries and that there was broad recognition that a multisectoral, coordinated response by the system was essential. Because of the complex, cross-sectoral nature of poverty, agencies had found it effective to work together and, as a result, United Nations technical cooperation efforts were increasingly characterized by broad inter-agency collaboration.

At the conceptual level, there was recognition that poverty eradication required a two-pronged approach: employment creation and the increase of household income; and provision of basic human services. Even when both approaches were being promoted, it might be necessary to create social safety nets to protect the most vulnerable. It was apparent that the United Nations development system had taken many steps to meet the challenge of poverty, and initiatives were being taken to further ensure a coordinated response.

The report further described the scope of coordination at the country level and the strengthening of the preparatory stages of poverty-oriented programmes, including data collection and analysis. It also discussed efforts to establish new partnerships to promote an integrated and participatory approach, resource mobilization and the inter-agency focus on improved technical cooperation for poverty alleviation.

UNCTAD action. The Standing Committee on Poverty Alleviation, established by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board in 1992,⁽⁷²⁾ held its first session at Geneva from 18 to 22 January 1993.⁽⁷³⁾ On 22 January, it adopted and annexed to its report its work programme, which consisted of the following: review of existing information and analyses on causes of poverty; programmes and policies; development assistance and poverty; international trade and poverty alleviation; alleviation of poverty and sustainable development; and population, migration and poverty alleviation. In addition, the Committee would identify, for further consideration, areas in which technical cooperation should be strengthened. For consideration of the work programme, the Committee had before it two notes by the UNCTAD secretariat, one on the issues⁽⁷⁴⁾ and the other giving background information.⁽⁷⁵⁾

The Committee recommended that its second session take place in early 1994 and that an inter-governmental group of experts meet to exchange experiences on poverty reduction impacts of social funds and safety nets, including mobilization of domestic and external resources for poverty alleviation.

With the support of UNDP and the Netherlands, the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened a workshop on social mobilization and organization of the poor (Tunis, Tunisia, 15-18 November 1993).⁽⁷⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/184 without vote.

International cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 43/195 of 20 December 1988, 44/212 of 22 December 1989, 45/213 of 21 December 1990, 46/141 of 17 December 1991 and 47/197 of 22 December 1992 related to international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Reaffirming also its resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990 and 45/199 of 21 December 1990, as well as all the declarations, commitments, plans and programmes of action containing provisions related to the eradication of poverty in the framework of activities of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming further the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, in particular principle 5 thereof, Agenda 21, in particular chapter 3 thereof entitled "Combating poverty", the Non-legally Binding Authoritative Statement of Principles for a Global Consensus on the Management, Conservation and Sustainable Development of All Types of Forests, in particular principle 7 (a) thereof, and all other decisions and recommendations adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development relating to the eradication of poverty,

Underlining that the eradication of poverty, especially in developing countries, is one of the priority development objectives for the 1990s,

Recognizing that poverty is a complex and multidimensional problem with origins in both the national and international domains, and that its eradication constitutes an important factor in ensuring sustainable development,

Recognizing also the central role that women play in the eradication of poverty and the necessity of addressing the needs of women in poverty eradication programmes,

Considering that the efforts made at the national and international levels need to be enhanced to ensure the eradication of poverty, in particular in the least developed countries, the countries in sub-Saharan Africa and other countries that have areas of concentrated poverty,

Reaffirming the need for the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to coordinate better and harmonize their activities in the field of the eradication of poverty, bearing in mind the relevant paragraphs of General Assembly resolution 47/199 of 22 December 1992, in particular the paragraphs dealing with mechanisms and instruments of coordination at the field level,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Stresses the importance of domestic policies, including effective budgetary policies, to mobilize and allocate domestic resources for the eradication of poverty through, inter alia, the creation of employment and income-generating programmes, the implementation of food security, health, education, housing and population programmes and the strengthening of national capacity-building execution programmes;

2. Reaffirms that a supportive international economic environment which takes into account resource flows and structural adjustment programmes, in which social and environmental dimensions are integrated, is vital to the success of efforts of developing countries, in particular, to deal with the eradication of poverty;

3. Invites all countries to undertake national strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty that are, inter alia, sensitive to gender considerations, taking into account cultural, religious and social particularities, and that involve more active participation by the targeted communities, as well as by the most vulnerable groups, in initiating, implementing, following up and evaluating specific projects;

4. Reiterates its request to the international community to adopt specific and effective measures designed to increase financial flows to developing countries, and urges the developed countries, which have reaffirmed their commitment to reach the accepted United Nations target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance, to the extent that they have not yet achieved that target, to agree to augment their aid programmes in order to reach that target as soon as possible, some developed countries having agreed to reach the target by the year 2000, while other developed countries, in line with their support for reform efforts in developing countries, agree to make their best efforts to increase their level of official development assistance;

5. Invites the international community and the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to support development programmes in developing countries, including the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development related to the eradication of poverty, particularly chapter 3 of Agenda 21 entitled "Combating poverty";

6. Requests the Secretary-General to urge the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in the framework of the help they give to developing countries, to strengthen their institutional capacities for implementing their poverty eradication programmes and to adopt a coordinated and integrated approach that takes into account, inter alia, the role and needs of women, with attention to social services, income generation and the increased participation of local communities;

7. Invites preparatory bodies and all relevant forthcoming major meetings and conferences of the United Nations system, particularly the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to take specific measures and decisions to meet, by the early part of the twenty-first century, the challenge of the eradication of poverty;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session an updated report focusing, inter alia, on the development of appropriate inputs to country programmes by relevant agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, based on exchange of information on and analysis of the operations of actual programmes and on the identification of constraints and weaknesses of operational and coordinating capacities owing to a lack of resources, as well as focusing on elements for the elaboration of multisectoral strategies;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "International cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries".

General Assembly resolution 48/184

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996)

On 21 December 1993, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/183 without vote.

International Year for the Eradication of Poverty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992 entitled "Observance of an international day for the eradication of poverty",

Reaffirming its resolutions 43/195 of 20 December 1988, 44/212 of 22 December 1989, 45/213 of 21 December 1990, 46/141 of 17 December 1991 and 47/197 of 22 December 1992 related to international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Recognizing that poverty is a complex and multidimensional problem with origins in both the national and international domains, and that its eradication in all countries, in particular in developing countries, has become one of the priority development objectives for the 1990s in order to promote sustainable development,

Noting that the efforts made at the national and international levels need to be enhanced to ensure the eradication of poverty, in particular in the least developed countries, the countries in sub-Saharan Africa and other countries which have areas of concentrated poverty,

Welcoming the success achieved in organizing and observing the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty,

Taking into account its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Stressing the positive impact of a favourable international economic environment, in particular in the area of trade, on combating poverty in all countries, especially in developing countries,

Stressing also the importance of international cooperation in combating poverty through, inter alia, exchange among Governments that have had successful experiences in the field,

1. Proclaims 1996 International Year for the Eradication of Poverty;

2. Decides that the major activities for the observance of the Year should be undertaken at the local, national and international levels, and that assistance should be provided by the United Nations system with a view to creating among States, policy makers and international public opinion a greater awareness that the eradication of poverty is fundamental to reinforcing peace and achieving sustainable development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with States, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, to prepare a draft programme on the preparations for and observance of the Year, setting out the objectives, principles and main recommendations for the Year, and to submit a progress report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to give widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations system, including those described in chapter 3 of Agenda 21, related to the eradication of poverty;

5. Invites all States, organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations concerned and interested national organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to exert every possible effort in the preparations for and observance of the Year and to cooperate with the Secretary-General in achieving the objectives of the Year;

6. Designates the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat as the preparatory body, and the Economic and Social Council as the coordinating body, for the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty;

7. Recommends that the preparatory body and the coordinating body work in close collaboration with all relevant organizations inside and outside the United Nations system in the preparations for and observance of the Year;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session, under the item entitled "International cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries", a sub-item on the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty.

Rural development

In April 1993, the ACC Task Force on Rural Development was renamed the Subcommittee on Rural Development.⁽⁷⁷⁾ The Subcommittee, which met in Washington, DC., from 5 to 7 May,⁽⁷⁸⁾ considered work accomplished by agencies during 1992 in rural development and related areas. It also discussed the report of a joint session of the Panels on Monitoring and Evaluation and on People's Participation (Washington, D.C., 3 May) and the report of the Working Group on Industrial Contribution to Rural Development (Washington, DC., 4 May). Other issues addressed by the Subcommittee included coordination and collaboration on rural development and agrarian reform activities and programmes (1993-1994 biennium); the impact of national macroeconomic policies on the rural poor; implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women⁽⁷⁹⁾ as they related to rural women; an enabling approach to shelter improvement in rural areas as a contribution to sustainable rural development and poverty alleviation; women and the environment; refugee/returnee aid and development; and the programme of work and time-frame for 1993-1994.

The Subcommittee agreed that its main focus in future should be on sustainable rural development and that the thematic topic for its next (1994) meeting would be policy approaches to rural poverty alleviation.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1993⁽¹⁾ noted that in 1993, for the third year in succession, the rate of growth of world output would be below that of world population. While stagnation characterized the developed market economies and decline continued to be a feature of the economies in transition from centrally planned to market economy, the developing countries were growing at a pace not seen since the 1970s. Those in Asia, including the most populous, and in the Southern Cone of Latin America were expanding rapidly. The growth was widely dispersed, helping to raise the living standards of a large majority of the population of the developing countries and about 60 per cent of the world population. However, in a large number of countries, particularly in Africa, which accounted for as much as a fifth of the population of the developing countries, per capita output continued to decline. While world output barely increased, world trade grew surprisingly fast. The volume of world exports increased by about 4.5 per cent in 1992, after a 3.6 per cent growth in 1991.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the Survey by decision 1993/303 of 29 July.

In a note giving an update of the world economy at the end of 1993,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that total world output was estimated to have increased by only 1 per cent in 1993, after three years of virtual stagnation.

The United States economy was estimated to have grown by around 3 per cent, close to its projected rate, but Japan's economy did not grow at all in 1993 and the economies of the European Union (formerly the European Community) contracted by around 0.3 per cent. In the transition economies, output declined by some 10 per cent in 1993, following a 30 per cent drop over the previous three years. However, the rate of decline differed widely among countries, and in Poland output actually increased.

In the developing countries, overall output increased by slightly over 5 per cent in 1993, with much of the growth contributed by China and South and East Asia. In Africa, the production growth rate remained considerably below the population growth rate.

As to the outlook for 1994, the world economy was expected to grow at a modest pace of 2.5 per cent, with recovery largely based on an expected acceleration of growth in the developed economies from 1 per cent in 1993 to slightly over 2 per cent in 1994. The transition economies were expected to stop contracting, while the growth of developing countries was likely to remain unchanged at around 5 per cent.

In the context of the stagnating world economy, the Trade and Development Report, 1993⁽³⁾ noted that, as a result of the North's failure to recover, commodity prices were falling yet again, intensifying poverty in the South, and the unemployed were multiplying, intensifying poverty in the North.

Prospects for recovery in the developed world continued to be affected by persistent high interest rates in Europe, adjustment to debt deflation in some major industrial countries, tensions in currency markets, weak business and consumer confidence and efforts to reduce budget deficits. Prospects for developing countries that had been expanding continuously were positive, but overshadowed by the threat of increasing protectionism through the formation of trading blocs, and by managed trade. The increasing need to adopt or strengthen environmental measures could also have significant macroeconomic implications. Crucial to the prospects of the Asian economies was the sustainability of China's economic performance, which was already showing signs of overheating and was confronted by serious bottlenecks in transportation, energy and raw material production. Growth in Africa continued to depend on the evolution of terms of trade, external aid and the weather, as well as on progress in resolving armed conflicts and civil strife. Latin America's prospects depended to a large extent on the continuity of capital inflows and the ability to translate them into investment-led growth.

UNCTAD action. On 1 October,⁽⁴⁾ the Trade and Development Board, in its conclusion on the international implications of macroeconomic policies and issues concerning global interdependence, noted the effects of the continuing recession in the developed market economies. It recognized that, while stimulative macroeconomic policies might overcome the recession, many Governments faced the dilemma that demand and employment-generating fiscal policies would further raise government deficits and debt, whereas fiscal retrenchment would exacerbate unemployment. Some support was expressed for the solution put forward in the Trade and Development Report, 1993, advocating relaxation of monetary and fiscal stances to boost activity, combined with privatization and a one-time capital levy to reduce public indebtedness. It was recognized that the global financial and trading environment was important for growth of the world economy. The Board agreed that the growth that had occurred in certain developing regions had been a source of strength for the world economy, and that more rapid growth in developing countries would be of benefit all round. Attention was also drawn to the need for adequate and stable levels of financing, both public and private, to underpin growth-oriented domestic policies. Calls were made for multilateral modalities to improve the perception of commercial banks of the creditworthiness of developing countries, for universally accepted guidelines for supervisory and regulatory procedures of financial markets and for the replenishment of international financial institutions. Reference was also made to the trade measures needed to stimulate growth (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Development planning and public administration

Development planning

In his April report to the Economic and Social Council on the establishment of the High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General recalled that the General Assembly, in 1992,⁽²⁾ had noted his view that areas covered by the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) were potentially similar to those of the Advisory Board and his proposal that a single body should be established to provide high-level advice on all questions relating to environment and development. He noted that CDP's mandate, which was to be subsumed under that of the Advisory Board, had evolved from providing assistance to the Council in evaluating United Nations activities relating to economic planning and programming towards consideration of world development trends and prospects and formulation of recommendations in the areas of development and international economic and financial cooperation. Within CDP itself, it had been suggested that there was a need to strengthen the capacity of its membership to deal with sustainable development issues.

Since the Secretary-General's proposal that CDP's functions should be subsumed under those of the High-level Advisory Board was under consideration by the Council, expert members were not appointed in time for CDP's scheduled April 1993 session, thus resulting in the session not taking place.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/81 without vote.

Committee for Development Planning

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1079(XXXIX) of 28 July 1965 on economic planning and projections, Recalling also its resolution 1625(LI) of 30 July 1971 on the Committee for Development Planning,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992 on institutional arrangements to follow up the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

1. Reaffirms the existing mandate of the Committee for Development Planning, as set out in relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council, without prejudice to the outcome of the ongoing process of reform of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields;

2. Expresses its deep concern that the experts members of the Committee for Development Planning were not appointed in time for the session of the Committee scheduled for 1993;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to convene the 1993 session of the Committee for Development Planning no later than December.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/81

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Draft by China, and Colombia (for Group of 77) (E/1993/L.45), orally revised; agenda item 15.

By decision 1993/334 of 30 July, the Council decided to consider an item entitled "Committee for Development Planning" at its resumed substantive session of 1993. At that session, on 8 December, the Council had before it a draft resolution⁽³⁾ by which it would have established a Group of Experts on Development to replace CDP. Consideration of that draft text was deferred to a later date. On 8 December, by decision 1993/338, the Council decided that the twentieth session of CDP should be held in New York from 12 to 14 January 1994.

Public administration

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1993/228 of 16 July, the Eleventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance was held at Geneva from 6 to 14 October 1993.⁽⁴⁾ The Experts reviewed current issues in public administration and finance in developing countries, development management in Africa in the 1990s and the public management problems of transition economies. They also discussed the United Nations work programme in public administration and finance and public administration and finance issues for the turn of the century. The Experts recommended action on those issues at both national and international levels.

Commenting on the Experts' recommendations, the Secretary-General noted that actions at the national level were the responsibility of Member States and suggested that the Economic and Social Council might wish to call their attention to those recommendations. Actions recommended at the international level would be implemented within resources available for the United Nations programme in public administration and development management. The Secretary-General believed that every attempt should be made to incorporate those recommendations within the broad framework of the medium-term plan for 1992-1997.

The Experts recommended that their next meeting be convened in 1995 to review current issues and problems in public administration and development management in developing and transition-economy countries; examine progress made in implementing recommendations made at the Eleventh Meeting; and review the United Nations regular programme of work. The Secretary-General suggested that future Meetings focus mainly on prevailing public management issues, especially in the context of global concerns such as governance, accountability, productivity and responsiveness with a view to providing timely policy and technical guidance to developing countries.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

During 1993, the General Assembly, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, the UNDP Governing Council and other United Nations bodies reviewed the problems of the officially designated least developed countries (LDCs).

The number of countries on the United Nations list of LDGs remained at 47, namely: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia.

In June, the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Governing Council a communication from Albania,⁽¹⁾ in which it requested classification as an "as if LDC and provided information on its socio-economic situation. In a May note,⁽²⁾ the Administrator outlined Albania's economic reform efforts during its transition from a rigid form of communism to democracy and a market-oriented economy. He observed that it was expected that Albania's per capita gross national product (GNP) in 1992 or 1993 would fall below the threshold for LDC eligibility but that there was difficulty in obtaining accurate data, particularly for 1990 and earlier. Noting that the granting of "as if LDC status would give Albania access to increased UNDP and United Nations resources, which would greatly facilitate its efforts to overcome the extraordinary difficulties it was facing, the Administrator recommended that the Governing Council grant such status.

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the Governing Council requested the Administrator to provide additional information on the subject for further consideration at its 1994 special session.

Programme of Action for the 1990s

Several United Nations bodies reviewed progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris Conference)⁽⁴⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly the same year.⁽⁵⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to requests by the General Assembly in 1991⁽⁶⁾ and 1992,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1993 on the implementation of the Programme of Action.⁽⁸⁾ The report, which covered the period up to the end of June 1993, gave special attention to the outcome of the third annual review of the Programme undertaken by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) (see below). Several sections of the report drew on the report entitled The Least Developed Countries—1992 Report.⁽⁹⁾

The Secretary-General noted that most LDCs had made substantial efforts to reorient their macroeconomic and sectoral policies with a view to creating a favourable environment and sound basis for sustained growth and development. They had also taken steps to expand and modernize their economic base, promote popular participation in the development process, and enhance human and institutional capacities, as recommended in the Programme of Action. Although the LDCs' drive towards policy reform was one of the most striking aspects of the Programme's implementation and that drive continued to gather momentum in a growing number of countries, it was faltering in certain others.

With regard to recent economic performance, for the LDCs as a whole there had been economic stagnation and a fall in per capita income since 1990, with negative to zero real growth in overall gross domestic product (GDP) in 1991 and 1992. Population growth continued to outpace the rise in output. However, a slight recovery in growth was forecast for 1993, with overall GDP being projected to increase at a rate of 1.4 per cent.

The report concluded that the fledgling reform process in many LDCs needed to be nurtured, while in others even more fundamental conditions for reactivating growth and development had to be promoted. A significant improvement in the external environment would be a critical factor in the LDCs' attaining the Programme's objectives.

In accordance with the Assembly's 1990 decision⁽¹⁰⁾ that the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs should carry out a mid-term review of the situation in those countries in 1995, TDB planned to convene the Group in September/

October of that year and stressed the need for adequate and timely preparations for it.

UNCTAD action. At its March 1993 session,⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB carried out its annual review of progress in implementing the Programme of Action for LDCs. As decided in 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ the Board reviewed two issues in depth: domestic and external resource mobilization, including the debt situation and management; and improving trading opportunities.

TDB had before it The Least Developed Countries—1992 Report,⁽⁹⁾ which reviewed the recent economic performance of LDCs against the background of the slow-down of the world economy, analysed demographic trends and policies in those countries, examined food-security issues and reviewed progress in implementing support measures for LDCs' efforts, particularly with regard to resource flows to them and their debt and debt-service burden. It also discussed issues of domestic resource mobilization in LDCs, the impact of the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations on trading opportunities for them and the role of NGOs in LDCs.

On 26 March,⁽¹²⁾ TDB noted that LDCs had reaffirmed their commitment to implementing reforms, including structural adjustment programmes. It emphasized the need to formulate medium- to long-term strategies for socio-economic development, for which a stable political environment was necessary, and stressed that Governments should prioritize their short-, medium- and long-term objectives, and the mechanisms for achieving them. It was agreed that progress could not be achieved without sustainable good governance and economic and social development efforts. Among priorities emphasized were the need for human resource development; strengthened policies to combat population growth; revitalization of the agricultural sector and improvement in food security; mobilization and effective use of domestic savings; and fiscal reforms and rationalization of public expenditure in coordination with other macroeconomic and sectoral reforms, including trade-policy reforms.

Both LDCs and donor countries noted with concern that in 1991 official development assistance to LDCs fell from 0.09 per cent to 0.08 per cent of Development Assistance Committee (DAC) (of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development) donors' combined GNP in the preceding two years. DAC donors were urged to fulfil aid targets and commitments to LDCs. In addition, urgent consideration should be given to the implications of the enlarged list of LDCs on their resource requirements. The heavy debt burden of LDCs continued to be a major strain on export earnings and a hindrance to their efforts to adjust and expand their economies. LDCs and some donors called for improvements in the scope and coverage of debt-relief schemes and mechanisms, including those relating to debt-service obligations to multilateral institutions.

It was stressed that properly conceived foreign direct investment could be an important vehicle for stimulating the manufacturing and processing sectors, for mobilizing savings in LDCs and for the transfer of technology and managerial skills. Fair access to all markets was also stressed as a key instrument for promoting trade and development. LDCs proposed that the Final Act of the Uruguay Round should include a chapter embodying provisions for LDCs covering the elimination of tariff and non-tariff barriers for both primary and processed products. LDCs, and a number of other delegations, requested that a high-level group be organized to examine the provisions of the draft Final Act of the Uruguay Round as they related to LDCs and to propose measures for inclusion in the Final Act.

The need for adequate preparations for the 1995 mid-term review of the Programme of Action was stressed. It was felt that UNCTAD's participation in country-level monitoring should be strengthened, notably through enhanced participation in the country review process.

UNDP action. In response to a 1991 UNDP Governing Council request,⁽¹³⁾ the Administrator submitted in May 1993 a report on matters relating to LDCs.⁽¹⁴⁾ The report discussed UNDP's financial contributions to the development of LDCs, aid coordination and economic management, and human development.

The report concluded that, while UNDP support to LDCs included the whole range of sectors and activities in the Programme of Action, the areas of aid coordination and economic management and human development had been recognized as priorities for UNDP. UNDP had developed various instruments in the area of aid coordination, such as the round-table process, which assisted LDCs to obtain financial resources from donor countries, the national technical cooperation assessments and programmes, and the programme approach. The challenge would be to integrate those mechanisms into a comprehensive strategy for strengthening the national institutions in charge of defining and implementing development policies. With regard to human development, UNDP had traditionally been active in various sectors that were included under the human development concept. However, following the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action and in line with the Human Development Report (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), it appeared necessary to define comprehensive approaches to human development in LDCs. UNDP was following that strategy in a growing number of LDCs and it was being reflected in their country programmes.

On 18 June,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Governing Council endorsed the priorities identified by the Administrator to assist in implementing the Programme of Action, namely, aid coordination and economic management and human development. It stressed the need to strengthen the national capacities of LDCs and requested the Administrator to strengthen UNDP's efforts to address their special needs and priorities, particularly in the areas of environment and poverty alleviation. The Council invited UNDP to contribute towards forging stronger links between national and global follow-up of the Programme of Action by enhancing its collaboration with UNCTAD, and requested it to assist in the preparations for the 1995 mid-term review of the Programme and in mobilizing funding for the participation of LDCs. The Council reiterated its appeal to all countries to support LDCs through UNDP facilities that focused on their needs, such as the United Nations Capital Development Fund, trust funds and cost-sharing arrangements. It requested the Administrator to strengthen UNDP's overall capacity to deal with the needs of LDCs in line with the Programme of Action's recommendations and to report to the Council in 1995 on specific measures taken by UNDP to address the special needs and priorities of LDCs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/171 without vote.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/206 of 21 December 1990, in which it endorsed the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, 46/156 of 19 December 1991 on the implementation of the Programme of Action and 47/173 of 22 December 1992 on the implications of the application of the new criteria for identifying the least developed countries in the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling also its resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of the Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and 45/199 of 21 December 1990, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, as well as the document entitled "A New Partnership for Development: The Cartagena Commitment", adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session, and the texts adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, particularly Agenda 21,

Taking note of the declaration adopted at the Ministerial Meeting of the Least Developed Countries, held in New York on 30 September 1993, in pursuance of the decision taken at the Ministerial Meeting held at Dhaka in February 1990,

Recalling further that the prime objective of the Programme of Action is to arrest the further deterioration in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries, to reactivate and accelerate their growth and development and to set them on the path of sustained growth and development,

Noting that while many least developed countries, for their part, have been implementing courageous and far-reaching policy reforms and adjustment measures in line with the Programme of Action, implementation of international support measures and commitments by a number of donor countries has fallen short of the provisions of the Programme of Action,

Expressing serious concern about the continued deterioration in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries as a whole,

Also expressing concern about the heavy debt stock and debt-service burden of the least developed countries, the limited market for their products and the reduced flow of development resources,

Stressing that the mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action provides a unique opportunity for the least developed countries and their development partners to take new measures as necessary, with a view to enhancing the implementation of the Programme of Action during the rest of the 1990s,

Also stressing that the implementation of the Programme of Action provides for a mid-term review conducted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in accordance with paragraph 140 of the Programme of Action, the results of which will be submitted to the General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

2. Calls upon all Governments, international organizations, multilateral financial institutions and development funds, the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and all other organizations concerned to take concrete measures to implement fully the Programme of Action as a matter of urgency;

3. Welcomes the fundamental and far-reaching domestic reforms that have been or are being implemented by the least developed countries, and notes that such efforts should be continued;

4. Notes the efforts of the international community, in particular the donor countries, to try to fulfil their commitments in all areas, as set out in the Programme of Action, and urges the provision of adequate external support to the efforts of the least developed countries, keeping under review the possibility of implementing further new steps in specific areas of importance to the least developed countries;

5. Calls upon the donor countries to fulfil their aid commitments as contained in the Programme of Action on a priority basis and to adjust them upwardly so as to reflect fully the additional resource requirements of the least developed countries, including those added to the list of least developed countries following the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

6. Stresses that progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action will require effective implementation of national policies and priorities by the least developed countries for their economic growth and development, as well as a strong and committed partnership between those countries and their development partners;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in conformity with paragraph 142 of the Programme of Action, to continue to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the implementation of and follow-up to the Programme of Action, in close collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the secretariats of the regional commissions and the lead agencies of aid programmes;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to initiate further innovative measures to provide and mobilize financial and technical support for the effective implementation of the Programme of Action;

9. Also stresses the importance of effective follow-up and monitoring mechanisms for the Programme of Action, and notes that the annual follow-up of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action undertaken by the Trade and Development Board on the basis of the annual report on the least developed countries helps to contribute to the development dialogue between those countries and their development partners, and urges that that exercise be strengthened;

10. Notes with concern the constrained resource position of the United Nations Development Programme during its fifth programming cycle and its impact on the least developed countries, and urges all concerned to take steps to carry out their agreed development programmes;

11. Welcomes the initiatives of some donor countries to write off and/or reduce, as appropriate, the official debt of the least developed countries, and invites others to take similar measures;

12. Reiterates that increased opportunities for trade can help reactivate economic growth in the least developed countries, and calls for significantly improved market access for their products, particularly through the elimination, wherever possible, or substantial reduction of tariff and non-tariff barriers, as well as giving special attention to the problems of the least developed countries within the context of the Final Act of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, with a view to integrating them in the global trading system;

13. Also notes with concern the environmental and development challenges facing the least developed countries and their vulnerability in this regard, and urges development partners to provide those countries with additional resources to enhance their capacity to achieve sustainable development;

14. Invites the preparatory bodies and all relevant forthcoming major meetings and conferences of the United Nations system, particularly the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to take into account the particular needs and requirements of the least developed countries in formulating their final documents;

15. Welcomes the positive contribution of the non-governmental organizations in the least developed countries in the field of socio-economic development;

16. Decides to convene a high-level intergovernmental meeting to conduct a mid-term global review, in accordance with paragraph 140 of the Programme of Action and General Assembly resolution 45/206, on the implementation of the Programme of Action, to be held in the early part of September 1995 or at any other suitable date during the second half of 1995;

17. Stresses the importance of timely, adequate and thorough preparations for the mid-term global review;

18. Requests the Trade and Development Board to consider, at its spring session in 1994, the elaboration of the preparatory activities for the mid-term global review meeting, including intergovernmental, expert, sectoral and inter-agency preparatory meetings and the substantive documentation;

19. Urges all Governments and international organizations, including multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance institutions, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, to take adequate steps to ensure appropriate preparations for an in-depth mid-term global review of the Programme of Action;

20. Requests all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to submit reports containing a review of the implementation of the Programme of Action within their respective fields of competence, with special emphasis on areas where commitments have remained unfulfilled, and proposals for new measures, as necessary, as further inputs to the preparation for the mid-term global review;

21. Stresses the importance of maintaining the institutional identity and visibility of the Division for the Least Developed Countries in the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which is entrusted with the task of global-level monitoring of and follow-up to the Programme of Action, and welcomes the action taken by the Secretary-General to fill the vacant post of Director of the Division;

22. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, in resolution 46/156, to mobilize extrabudgetary resources to ensure the participation of at least one representative from each least developed country at the spring sessions of the Trade and Development Board, as well as at the intergovernmental, expert, sectoral and inter-agency preparatory meetings for the mid-term review process;

23. Decides to consider at its forty-ninth session the recommendations of the Trade and Development Board on preparations for the mid-term global review, as well as the question of meeting the cost of full and effective participation of representatives of the least developed countries at that meeting;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Island developing countries

1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

As decided by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Preparatory Committee for the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, to be held in 1994, held its organizational and first sessions in 1993.⁽¹⁷⁾

At the organizational session (New York, 15 and 16 April), the Committee had before it reports of the Secretary-General on the preparations for the Conference⁽¹⁸⁾ and on its draft provisional rules of procedure.⁽¹⁹⁾ On 16 April, the Committee adopted a decision, which it drew to the attention of the Assembly, recommending the participation of associate members of regional commissions in the Conference and its preparatory process. It also adopted guidelines for its work, recommended to the Conference for adoption a set of provisional rules of procedure, decided to invite NGOs to contribute to the Conference and its preparatory process and adopted the provisional agenda for its first session.

At the first session (New York, 30 August-10 September), the Secretary-General submitted a report on Sustainable development of small island developing States (SIDS).⁽²⁰⁾ The report described trends in the socio-economic development of SIDS and the major constraints to their Sustainable development, their special vulnerabilities and options for their Sustainable development. Basic constraints on the sustainable development of SIDS were the lack of land-based and proved marine resources; susceptibility to natural disasters; fragility of ecosystems; depletion of non-renewable resources and, in some, problems of obtaining freshwater supplies; limited resource assessment capabilities; high costs of infrastructure and public service provision associated with a lack of economies of scale; high internal transport costs and deteriorating inter-island transport services in archipelago States; poor accessibility to markets and sources of supply; a demographic structure with a large proportion of young and old people because of emigration; shortage of skilled personnel, both entrepreneurial and administrative; high dependence on foreign capital but little attractiveness for foreign investment; and small internal markets.

Sustainable development options open to SIDS included export of services, such as tourism, off-shore financial activities, electronic data entry and flexible specialization as a method of organizing export production of light manufactures that offered the potential to increase international competitiveness and responsiveness to external economic changes.

The report identified the major priority areas for the sustainable development of SIDS as being environmental problems, management of resources and external transport constraints. It then discussed policies and measures for addressing those issues at the national, regional and international levels.

Also before the Preparatory Committee were reports of the Secretary-General on a review of activities being carried out within the United Nations system in the area of the sustainable development of SIDS⁽²¹⁾ and on the activities of the Conference secretariat.⁽²²⁾ In addition, the Committee considered the provisional agenda for the Conference⁽²³⁾ and a paper outlining the position of the Group of 77 developing countries and China on basic elements for an action programme for the sustainable development of SIDS.⁽²⁴⁾

The Preparatory Committee also considered the reports of two regional technical meetings held during the year—one for the Indian and Pacific Oceans (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 31 May-4 June)⁽²⁵⁾ and the other for the Atlantic/Caribbean/Mediterranean (Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, 12-16 July).⁽²⁶⁾

The Preparatory Committee adopted three decisions requiring action by the General Assembly, on the dates of the Conference, the date for pre-session consultations and options for the continuation of the Committee's preparatory work. Other decisions, which were brought to the Assembly's attention, dealt with the accreditation of NGOs to the Conference and its preparatory process; the position of the Group of 77 and China on basic elements for an action programme; information needs on donor activities in support of sustainable development in SIDS; a statement by Vanuatu on behalf of the member States and observers of the Alliance of Small Island States, which was annexed to the Committee's report; and the provisional agenda for the Conference. Also annexed to the Committee's report was the text of a draft programme of action for the sustainable development of SIDS.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/193 without vote.

Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling the report of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and in particular Agenda 21, chapter 17, section G, relating to the sustainable development of small island developing States,

Recalling also its resolution 47/186 of 22 December 1992 on specific measures in favour of island developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolution 47/189 of 22 December 1992, in which it decided to convene the first Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Reaffirming, in particular, the goals and objectives of the Global Conference identified in paragraphs 4 and 5 of resolution 47/189, and mindful of the important contribution that their successful accomplishment could make to the promotion of sustainable and environmentally sound development with respect to small island developing States,

Stressing that, because the development options of small island developing States are limited, there are special challenges to planning for and implementing sustainable development, and that small island developing States will be constrained in meeting those challenges without the cooperation and assistance of the international community,

Also stressing the need for the intergovernmental preparatory process for the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States to be completed before the Conference itself,

1. Takes note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States on its organizational and first sessions;

2. Decides to convene the first Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in Barbados from 25 April to 6 May 1994, including a high-level segment on 5 and 6 May;

3. Urges once again that representation at the Conference be at the highest possible level;

4. Also decides to convene one day of pre-Conference consultations at the venue of the Conference on 24 April 1994;

5. Further decides that the first session of the Preparatory Committee shall be resumed in New York for a period of five working days, from 7 to 11 March 1994, to complete the preparatory work assigned to it in paragraph 11 of resolution 47/189, including the draft programme of action for the sustainable development of small island developing States contained in annex III to the report of the Preparatory Committee, and that adequate facilities shall be made available for this purpose within the approved budget limit set for the biennium 1994-1995;

6. Endorses Preparatory Committee decisions 1 and 4 concerning the participation of associate members of regional commissions and of non-governmental organizations, including major groups, in the Conference and its preparatory process;

7. Also endorses Preparatory Committee decisions 3 and 13 and decides to transmit the provisional rules of procedure and the provisional agenda to the Conference for adoption;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the relevant United Nations agencies and organizations, and taking into account the submissions he may receive from bilateral, regional and multilateral donor agencies as well as from non-governmental organizations, to ensure the timely submission to the Preparatory Committee, at its resumed session, of the report requested in decision 11 of the Preparatory Committee;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to ensure that the goals and purposes of the Conference receive the widest possible dissemination within Member States, non-governmental organizations and national, regional and international media, with a view to encouraging their active contribution to and support for the Conference and its preparatory process;

10. Expresses its appreciation for the contributions made to the voluntary fund established for the purpose of assisting small island developing States and the least developed countries to participate fully and effectively in the Conference and its preparatory process, and invites all Member States and organizations in a position to do so to contribute generously to the fund;

11. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-ninth session, under the item entitled "Implementation of decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development", the sub-item entitled "Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session the report of the Global Conference.

Land-locked developing countries

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽²⁷⁾ the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened in 1993 a Meeting of Governmental Experts from Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions (New York, 17-19 May).⁽²⁸⁾ The Meeting reviewed the problems of land-locked and transit developing countries and considered action to address them. It adopted and annexed to its report a set of conclusions and recommendations which identified priority areas for transit cooperation and suggested modalities for action to improve transit systems at the national, subregional and international levels. As follow-up action, the Meeting recommended the holding of similar meetings of governmental experts every two years and of regular regional symposiums to monitor progress of implementation of the conclusions.

At its September/October 1993 session, TDB had before it, in addition to the report of the Meeting, reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on the results of studies related to transit and its alternatives,⁽²⁹⁾ and on information received from Governments, international and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs regarding action taken by them in favour of land-locked developing countries.⁽³⁰⁾

On 1 October,⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts,⁽²⁸⁾ and took note of the reports by the UNCTAD secretariat. It decided to forward those documents, together with its comments, to the General Assembly for action.

On 19 October,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report on progress in implementing specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries. The report comprised the conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts, the results of studies related to transit and its alternatives, and information received from the international community on action taken in favour of land-locked developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/169 without vote.

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 44/214 of 22 December 1989 and 46/212 of 20 December 1991,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on the overall socio-economic development efforts of the land-locked developing countries,

Recognizing also that fifteen of the land-locked developing countries are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries and that their geographical situation is an added constraint on their overall ability to cope with the challenges of development,

Recognizing further that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious economic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Recalling that measures to deal with the transit problems of land-locked developing countries require closer and even more effective cooperation and collaboration between those countries and their transit neighbours,

Recalling also the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, adopted on 10 December 1982,

Recognizing the important role played by bilateral cooperative arrangements and regional and subregional cooperation and integration in comprehensively solving the transit problems of the land-locked developing countries and improving the transit transport systems in land-locked and transit developing countries,

Noting the importance of strengthening the existing international support measures with a view to addressing further the problems of land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with international law;

2. Also reaffirms that transit developing countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for land-locked developing countries in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

3. Calls upon both the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours, in the spirit of South-

South cooperation, including bilateral cooperation, to implement measures to strengthen further their cooperative and collaborative efforts in dealing with their transit problems;

4. Appeals once again to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in the previous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and in the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade and the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted at the eighteenth special session of the General Assembly and contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, as well as the relevant provisions of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

5. Invites the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours to intensify further their cooperative arrangements for the development of transit infrastructures, institutions and services to facilitate the faster movement of goods in transit with financial and technical assistance from donors and financial agencies;

6. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transport-transit facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategies of the land-locked and transit developing countries and that donor assistance should consequently take into account the requirements for long-term restructuring of the economies of the land-locked developing countries;

7. Calls upon donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide land-locked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme further to promote, as appropriate, subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes and to expand its support in the transport and communications sectors to the land-locked and transit developing countries and its technical cooperation for development geared towards promoting national and collective self-reliance among them;

9. Takes note of the report of the Meeting of Governmental Experts from Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions held in New York from 17 to 19 May 1993, and endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to convene in 1995, within the overall level of resources for the biennium 1994-1995, another meeting of governmental experts from land-locked and transit developing countries, representatives of donor countries and financial and development institutions to review progress in the development of the transit systems in the land-locked and transit developing countries on the basis of an evaluation of the transit systems of those countries to be made by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in cooperation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and to recommend further appropriate action, including elaboration of programmes for further improvement of those transit systems, to the Trade and Development Board and to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session;

11. Takes note of the results of the specific studies on transit issues prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and encourages the international community to make use of them, as appropriate, when devising strategies to address the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries;

12. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to organize, within the overall level of resources for the biennium 1994-1995 and in collaboration with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of the regional commissions, a symposium in 1994 for land-locked and transit developing countries to address specific regional problems in implementing the recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts held in May 1993 and to submit the results of the studies referred to in paragraph 11 above to that symposium;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to seek voluntary contributions to ensure participation of representatives of land-locked and transit developing countries in the meeting and symposium referred to, respectively, in paragraphs 10 and 12 above;

14. Takes note with appreciation of the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in formulating international measures to deal with the special problems of the land-locked developing countries, and urges the Conference, inter alia, to keep under constant review the evolution of transport-transit infrastructure facilities, institutions and services, monitor the implementation of agreed measures, collaborate in all relevant initiatives, including those of private-sector and non-governmental organizations, and serve as a focal point on cross-regional issues of interest to land-locked developing countries;

15. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take appropriate measures to enhance the capacity of the Conference, within existing resources for the biennium 1994-1995, in the area dealing with land-locked developing countries so as to ensure the effective implementation of the activities called for in the present resolution and of existing measures in support of land-locked developing countries;

16. Invites the international community and the preparatory bodies for all relevant forthcoming major meetings and conferences of the United Nations system to take into account, in the preparation of documentation, the specific needs and requirements of land-locked and transit developing countries and the participation of those countries in those meetings and conferences;

17. Welcomes the reports of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on specific action related to the specific needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to prepare another report, taking into account the provisions of the present resolution, for submission to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1993, the United Nations system experienced a significant downturn in contributions for operational activities for development, which obliged organizations to restrict assistance commitments.

The Economic and Social Council, in following up the 1992 biennial policy review of operational activities, requested the Secretary-General to set result-oriented targets (resolution 1993/7). The General Assembly authorized the establishment of nine field offices of the United Nations development system in successor States of the USSR and reaffirmed that they should be funded through voluntary contributions (resolution 48/209).

During 1992, the most recent year for which detailed figures were available, expenditure by the United Nations system on operational activities for development totalled $8.9 billion. Of that amount, $4.6 billion was in the form of development grants and $4.3 billion in concessional loans.

The United Nations Development Programme—the central funding body in the United Nations system for providing technical assistance to developing countries—spent $1.031 billion on programme activities in 1993, compared with $1.027 billion in 1992. The organizational entities of the United Nations—mainly through the newly established Department for Development Support and Management Services—delivered a technical cooperation programme of $209 million in 1993, compared with $243 million in 1992.

Expenditure in 1993 by the United Nations Capital Development Fund, a multilateral agency providing small-scale capital assistance to the least developed countries, amounted to $59 million.

With regard to technical cooperation among developing countries, the Assembly endorsed the decisions of the May/June meeting of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation Among Developing Countries and urged that high priority be given to cooperation in science and technology, transfer of technology, capacity-building, education and technical training and know-how (48/172).

General aspectsStrengthening operational activities

In 1993, the General Assembly (resolution 48/162), within the context of restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, stated that the aim of the segment of the Economic and Social Council dealing with the operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation would be to improve the quality and impact of the United Nations operational activities through an integrated approach and to ensure that policies formulated by the Assembly, particularly during the triennial policy review of operational activities, were implemented on a system-wide basis. The segment would also include a high-level meeting on international development cooperation.

With regard to the need for increased resources for operational development, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to analyse possible improvements in the present funding system, including multi-year negotiated pledges, and to submit recommendations to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Governing Council in April 1994. He could also assess the likely impact of various options on overall levels of funding and contributions.

The Assembly decided to review efforts to improve United Nations functioning in operational activities, as well as decisions on financing, possibly at a high-level meeting of the Council and at the Assembly in 1995. (See also PART THREE, Chapter XVIII.)

Follow-up to the 1992 triennial policy review

ACC consideration. Implementation of 1992 General Assembly resolution 47/199(1) on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development within the United Nations system was discussed in committees of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) during 1993. The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Geneva, 16-19 March)^(c) discussed and adopted guidelines with regard to the country strategy note called for in the resolution. It also agreed on a common interpretation of national execution.

At the first session of the newly established ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) (New York, 20-24 September),^(c) a work programme for implementing resolution 47/199 was discussed in response to a request contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/7 (see below). CCPOQ, also reviewed the resident coordinator system, decentralization, operational activities training, monitoring of ACC guidelines, evaluation and programme coordination issues.

UNDP action. In May,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator reported on measures taken to implement resolution 47/199. He stated that UNDP was reviewing the concept of a country strategy note for the United Nations system, which would serve as a framework and a reference for organizations and their governing bodies when considering country programmes. In terms of a common programme approach, UNDP had issued its own guiding principles for use by its field offices and had introduced a programme support document for building capacity for implementing and sustaining national programmes. As regards a common interpretation of national execution, it had revised its operational guidelines and was ensuring that those activities were appropriately supported. Considerable progress had been made in harmonizing the programme exercises and cycles of organizations in about 33 per cent of countries, and a work plan had been developed to increase synchronization. UNDP was collaborating with its partners in the United Nations system in formulating common processes, formats and procedures and in producing a common manual. It was also co-financing a study on rationalizing aid accountability requirements among multilateral and bilateral donors, and had proposed the development of system-wide approaches to harmonize monitoring and evaluation. The pool of candidates for the selection of resident representatives/resident coordinators was being widened, and, in collaboration with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNDP was studying the possible expansion of the number of their common premises.

On 18 June,⁽⁵⁾ the UNDP Governing Council requested the UNDP Administrator to strengthen implementation of resolution 47/199 and to ensure feedback to the Council, especially at the field level. He was asked to report to the Council in 1994.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a June report to the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General described progress in implementing resolution 47/199. He outlined the current context of operational activities for development and progress made in relation to programme development, implementation and support. He also discussed efforts to strengthen the resident coordinator system and addressed a number of thematic issues. Annexed to the report were the work programme for implementing resolution 47/199 and texts developed by ACC on the country strategy note, the programme approach and national execution.

In addition to summarizing ACC's efforts to implement resolution 47/199, the report stated that the Joint Consultative Group on Policy (JCGP), comprising UNDP, UNICEF, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and the World Food Programme (WFP), had also initiated action on various aspects of the resolution and assigned specific tasks to its subgroups.

Both CCPOQ, and JCGP were devoting attention to evaluation, monitoring and auditing, the expansion of common premises and training. CCPOQ had established a working group to consider the functioning of the resident coordinator system. Communication with resident coordinators was being reinforced to ensure that guidance was available to them when needed, and the provision of additional support to resident coordinators was being reviewed by a CCPOQ working group.

In a later report,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General stated that a country strategy workshop had been held at Turin, Italy, from 11 to 14 October. The workshop, attended by 11 senior national officials, resident coordinators and other United Nations officials, had helped to clarify some practical questions in connection with the country strategy note and the ACC guidelines.

As to the adaptation and harmonization of programme cycles, JCGP had established several targets: to achieve, by 1996, 80 per cent harmonization of countries with the programming cycles of UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF and to relate them to WFP projects; in countries with a national plan, to adapt UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF programming cycles to the plan; and, in countries without formal plans, to harmonize the programming cycles among themselves.

Based on those targets, JCGP, in late 1993, issued a joint UNDP/UNFPA/UNICEF letter to resident coordinators, country directors and field representatives containing guiding principles on how to proceed with country programme cycle harmonization.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/7 without vote.

Operational activities for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/211 of 22 December 1989 and taking note of Assembly resolution 47/199 of 22 December 1992,

Noting with concern that the results of the 1992 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities were well below expected levels and that the current trend of contributions in real terms to funds and programmes, particularly core contributions, is downward,

Reiterating that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, neutrality and multilateralism, and that recipient Governments have the primary responsibility for coordinating all types of external assistance,

1. Takes note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 47/199, including the annexes thereto on the country strategy note, national execution and the programme approach;

2. Urges the heads of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to make every effort further to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of their organizations, and to inform their governing bodies of measures taken in this regard in their annual reports;

3. Urges developed countries, in particular those countries whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacity, taking into account established official development assistance targets, including targets established at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and current levels of contribution, to increase their official development assistance substantially, including contributions to the operational activities of the United Nations system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to seek to ensure that an effective methodology for evaluation of the programme approach, as called for in paragraph 13 of Assembly resolution 47/199, has been developed by June 1994, and to review the progress made by the United Nations system in promoting greater integration of its activities with national development programmes and in providing more coherent United Nations system support, including an assessment of the experience gained in the implementation at the field level of the common United Nations system framework for the programme approach;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to undertake a review of the progress made by the United Nations system in applying national execution at the country level, including an assessment of the experience gained in the implementation at the field level of the common United Nations system guiding principles for national execution, contained in the progress report on the implementation of Assembly resolution 47/199;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to provide information on a regular basis to all participating countries regarding the steps being taken in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 9 of Assembly resolution 47/199 dealing with the country strategy note, including information on the forthcoming seminar on this topic, to be held at the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organisation at Turin, Italy;

7. Emphasizes the need to take full account of the factors outlined in paragraph 38 of Assembly resolution 47/199 in order to ensure an effectively functioning resident coordinator system, and invites the organs of the United Nations system, at the country level, to contribute, where appropriate, to the provision of the resources necessary to assist the resident coordinator in fulfilling his responsibilities;

8. Stresses the importance it attaches to the early and complete implementation of paragraphs 39 to 41 of Assembly resolution 47/199, on the strengthening and support of the resident coordinator system, including paragraphs 39 (d) and (g) on widening the pool of qualified development professionals eligible for appointment as United Nations Development Programme resident representatives or resident coordinators and on enhancing the responsibility and authority of the resident coordinator for the planning and coordination of programmes;

9. Underlines the importance of making early progress on decentralization and delegation of authority to field offices, including approval authority within approved programmes, in the context of enhanced accountability;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to develop further the work programme for the implementation of Assembly resolution 47/199, contained in annex I to his report, with a view to setting result-oriented targets;

11. Stresses the need for future reports on the implementation of Assembly resolution 47/199 to focus on the outcome and output of the activities of the United Nations system, in particular at the field level, rather than on the input;

12. Requests the United Nations system, including the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat, to devote sufficient resources to the coordinated and effective implementation of Assembly resolution 47/199, including through temporary secondment of staff from the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system;

13. Decides to review the implementation of the present resolution at its substantive session of 1994, as part of the review of the implementation of Assembly resolution 47/199 called for in paragraph 54 of that resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/7

22 July 1993 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1993/L.28), based on informal consultations; agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 24-29, 35, 38, 40.

Financing of operational activities

A significant downturn in contributions to operational activities within the United Nations system was registered in 1993.⁽⁷⁾ Voluntary pledges to UNDP totalled $910 million, a reduction of 15 per cent from 1992, forcing it to restrict commitments to only 70 per cent of indicative planning figures (IPFs). Contributions to UNICEF totalled $539 million, a drop of 22 per cent from 1992, while UNFPA's overall income fell by almost 8 per cent, to $219.6 million. A target of $1.5 billion was established for WFP for the 1993-1994 biennium (the same level as for 1991-1992); the pace of pledges being made towards that target was far below that of the previous biennium and was also cause for concern.

Expenditures

During 1992,⁽⁸⁾ expenditures by the United Nations system on operational activities totalled $8.9 billion. Of that amount, $4.6 billion was distributed in development grants through UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and specialized agencies and other organizations, and $4.3 billion was disbursed in concessional loans by the International Development Association (IDA) ($4.1 billion) and IFAD ($131 million). Non-concessional loans, disbursed through the World Bank and the International Finance Corporation (IFC), had a negative balance of $6.9 billion in 1992. Grants to finance refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities totalled $1.2 billion.

Of total expenditures on grant-financed development activities in 1992, WFP accounted for 34.4 per cent; UNDP and UNDP-administered funds, 25.4 per cent; UNICEF, 16.2 per cent; specialized agencies, 15.9 per cent; regular budgets, 5.3 per cent; and UNFPA, 2.8 per cent.

By region, approximately 45.5 per cent of expenditures went to Africa; 35.8 per cent to Asia and the Pacific; 7.5 to the Americas; and 0.6 per cent to Europe. Interregional and global activities received 7.9 per cent.

Expenditures by sector on grant-financed development activities were as follows: humanitarian aid and relief, 28 per cent; health, 19 per cent; agriculture, forestry and fisheries, 11 per cent; general development issues, policy and planning, 9 per cent; education and natural resources, 6 per cent each; industry, 4 per cent; population, social conditions and equity, and transport and communications, 3 per cent each; employment and science and technology, 2 per cent each; and human settlements and international trade and development finance, 1 per cent each.

Contributions

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities of the United Nations system, including IFAD and the World Bank group (World Bank, IDA and IFC), totalled $11.2 billion in 1992.⁽⁸⁾

In addition, contributions for refugees, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities totalled $1.1 billion, and for the United Nations Environment Programme Environment Fund $77 million.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1993 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 2 and 3 November to receive government pledges for 1994 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

In an October note⁽⁹⁾ to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General listed contributions pledged or paid at the 1992 pledging conference to 24 United Nations funds and programmes, as at 30 June 1993, totalling approximately $1.4 billion, with $760 million designated for UNDP.

United Nations field offices

In a July report,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General assessed the experience gained in the establishment and functioning of the seven United Nations interim offices, in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan, which he decided to set up in 1992.⁽¹¹⁾

On 9 November,⁽¹²⁾ the Under-Secretary-General for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, in a statement before the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, said that the establishment of the interim offices represented an advance towards a unified, cost-effective United Nations presence in the field. It responded to demands for a better coordinated and multi-disciplinary response to the needs of recipient countries, and was intended to reduce administrative costs and maximize resources for programme delivery. The offices would be headed by the United Nations Representative, who would function as team leader and also serve as UNDP resident coordinator. He wished to dispel concerns that the offices might, without mandate, perform political functions, become a politicized new model of United Nations offices in the field or be used for human rights monitoring. The main function of the offices was, and would continue to be, to respond to the development needs of the countries concerned, including the provision of coordinated humanitarian assistance. United Nations public information activities were also an integral component of the interim offices (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/209 without vote.

Operational activities for development: field offices of the United Nations development system

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 34/213 of 19 December 1979, 44/211 of 22 December 1989, 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and 47/199 of 22 December 1992,

Having considered the statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General by the Under-Secretary-General for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development before the Second Committee on 9 November 1993,

Reaffirming that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, and their neutrality and multilateralism,

Reaffirming also the importance of a more effective and coherent coordinated approach by the United Nations system to the needs of recipient countries, particularly at the field level,

Reaffirming further that the mandates of the separate United Nations sectoral and specialized entities, funds, programmes and specialized agencies should be respected and enhanced, taking into account their complementarities,

Reaffirming that assistance should be based on an agreed division of responsibility among the funding organizations, under the coordination of the Government concerned, in order to integrate their response into the development needs of recipient countries,

1. Reaffirms the principle that the assistance provided by the United Nations system should be in conformity with the national objectives and priorities of the recipient countries, that the coordination of various assistance inputs at the national level is the prerogative of the Government concerned and that the overall responsibility for, and coordination of, operational activities for development of the United Nations system carried out at the country level is entrusted to the resident coordinator;

2. Authorizes the establishment of field offices in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Eritrea, Georgia, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and Uzbekistan, and decides that those offices shall be field offices of the United Nations development system;

3. Reaffirms that the field offices of the United Nations development system at the country level shall be coordinated by resident coordinators and shall comply fully with the provisions laid down by the General Assembly relating to the organizational structure, mandates and functions of the offices of the United Nations development system and to the role of the resident coordinator, in particular those provisions contained in its resolutions 34/213, 46/182 and 47/199;

4. Stresses that all field offices should comply fully with the provisions of its resolution 47/199 relating to the role and functions of the resident coordinator, in particular paragraphs 38 and 39 thereof, and reaffirms that the resident representative of the United Nations Development Programme shall normally be designated as the resident coordinator and that, in accordance with its resolution 46/182, the resident coordinator shall normally coordinate the humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system at the country level;

5. Reaffirms that field office activities related to public information, where in place, should follow the relevant provisions of resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular its resolution 48/44 B of 10 December 1993;

6. Also reaffirms the need to increase the number of common premises, in cooperation with host Governments, in a way that increases efficiency through, inter alia, consolidation of administrative infrastructures of the organizations concerned, but does not increase the costs for the United Nations system or for developing countries;

7. Further reaffirms that all field offices should operate on a sound financial basis;

8. Reaffirms that all field offices are to be funded through voluntary contributions, including those from the host country, and that the United Nations regular budget is a financial source for currently mandated activities related to public information;

9. Decides to review the situation of all field offices as part of the next triennial policy review of operational activities for development within the United Nations system, through the procedures established for that purpose in its resolution 47/199;

10. Stresses that field offices in any new recipient country shall be based on the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions, including those contained in the present resolution.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1993, (1) the UNDP Administrator discussed changes in the international community's thinking and approaches with regard to development. He stated that the mixed record of development and of development cooperation resulted largely from the failure to acknowledge that the political and cultural framework as well as governance of countries were part of the development process, and that development must be owned by the potential beneficiaries. UNDP's contribution to the conceptual debate on development was based on the concept of sustainable human development involving poverty alleviation, employment generation, empowerment of disadvantaged groups in society, equity and the regeneration of the environment. It was promoting the concept and reorienting its cooperation at all levels to support national efforts to achieve and sustain human development in economic, socio-cultural, environmental, political and other terms. The challenge for UNDP was to remain relevant and accountable and to seek more effective ways of supporting countries.

In 1993, estimated UNDP income was some $1,371 million, a decrease from $1,620 million in 1992. Of the 1993 total, approximately $891 million came from voluntary pledges, compared to $1,778 million in 1992. Other major sources included cost-sharing contributions by recipient Governments ($376 million), trust funds established by the Administrator, excluding the Global Environment Facility (GEF) ($71 million), contributions to local office costs ($17 million), government cash counterpart contributions ($12 million), extrabudgetary activities ($4 million) and contributions to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) ($0.26 million). An additional $149 million was received through management service agreements.

In addition, eight funds administered by UNDP provided approximately $76.8 million during 1993, bringing total income to $1,588.6 million. Those funds were the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), the United Nations Volunteers (UNV), the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the UNDP Energy Account and the UNDP Study Programme.

Of the donor country members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, Austria, Germany, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway and Portugal maintained their 1994 contributions at the previous year's levels, while Denmark, Finland, Ireland and Sweden increased their contributions. Of the programme countries, Bangladesh, Honduras, India, Mongolia, Mali, Morocco, Namibia, Niue, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Samoa, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam increased their contributions. India continued to be the largest donor in that group, while the Republic of Korea pledged an increase of over 50 per cent.

Field programme expenditures, including IFF resources, Special Programme Resources (SPR), the Special Measures Fund for LDCs, cost-sharing and government cash counterpart contributions amounted to $1.031 billion in 1993. Of field programme expenditures, 49.2 per cent went to project personnel, which included internationally and nationally recruited experts and UNV specialists, 19.3 per cent to subcontracts, 15.4 per cent to project equipment, 9.3 per cent to training and the remainder to miscellaneous expenses such as maintenance and operational costs.

By region, both sub-Saharan Africa and Asia and the Pacific absorbed about 37 per cent of IPF resources in 1993; Latin America and the Caribbean 10 per cent; the Arab States 8 per cent; and Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States 1 per cent. Global and interregional projects absorbed 6 per cent.

Project approvals during 1993 totalled 954, a decline from 972 in 1992. The value of new project approvals was $782 million, compared to $642 million the previous year.

UNDP Governing Council

In 1993, the UNDP Governing Council held both its organizational meeting and a special session to discuss pending issues from 16 to 19 February, and its fortieth session from 1 to 18 June in New York.⁽²⁾ A special session to discuss the 1994-1995 programme budget and the question of integrating the UNDP Office of Project Services into the United Nations Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS) was held in New York on 16 December.⁽³⁾

At the organizational meeting, the Council adopted a decision on its schedule of meetings and other organizational matters.⁽⁴⁾ At the February special session, it adopted eight decisions, which are dealt with below.

During its fortieth session, the Council adopted 37 decisions. Those not dealt with in this chapter related to the United Nations humanitarian programme, follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), regional cooperation for the protection of vulnerable ecosystems, human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), technical cooperation in support of the transition to a market economy and democracy in countries of Eastern and Central Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, UNDP's role in implementing the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, LDCs, the programme of assistance to the Palestinian people, UNFPA and its financial budgetary and administrative matters, UNIFEM and UNSO.

On 16 December, the Council's special session adopted a decision on the Office for Project Services (see below).

On 1 June,⁽⁵⁾ the Council approved the agenda and organization of work for its fortieth session, and on 9 June,⁽⁶⁾ deferred consideration of the venue of Council sessions pending the outcome of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations. On 16 June,⁽⁷⁾ the Council paid tribute to William H. Draper, the UNDP Administrator from 1986 to 1993. On 17 June, it took note of a number of reports and documents;⁽⁸⁾ decided to review the provisional agenda of its forty-first session at its organizational session;⁽⁹⁾ and agreed on the schedule of its future sessions and that of its subsidiary bodies.⁽¹⁰⁾

The General Assembly, by decision 48/447 of 21 December, took note of the report of the UNDP Governing Council on its organizational meeting for 1993, its special session and its fortieth session.⁽²⁾

In resolution 48/162 of 20 December, the Assembly decided to transform the current governing body of UNDP/UNFPA into an Executive Board.

Standing Committee for Programme Matters. The Standing Committee for Programme Matters held an in-session meeting during the special session of the Governing Council (16-19 February).⁽¹¹⁾ It considered reports on field visits, country programmes and projects and its future programme of work, including the tentative timetable for mid-term reviews by country and intercountry programmes to be carried out between 1993 and 1995. The Committee recommended that the Council adopt a draft decision approving a number of country programmes.

The Standing Committee also held an in-session meeting during the fortieth session of the Council (1-18 June),⁽¹²⁾ covering country, intercountry and global programmes, UNFPA, field visits, evaluation, programme management issues, including decentralization and the country programme approach, and its future programme of work. The Committee recommended that the Council adopt draft decisions approving a number of UNDP and UNFPA country programmes, on assistance to Myanmar and on evaluation. It approved revised terms of reference for field visits.

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

On 19 February,⁽¹³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council approved country programmes for 18 countries: 6 in Africa, 4 in Arab States, 3 in Europe, 1 in Asia and the Pacific, and 4 in Latin America and the Caribbean. It approved a fifth country programme for Rwanda with the provision that the Administrator present an interim report on its implementation and on the impact which the evolution of the general context of the country might have on the programme's implementation. It also approved the extension of the third country programme for Cyprus. The Council noted the Administrator's intention to continue to approve projects on a case-by-case basis for Somalia, pending normalization of the situation there, and requested the Administrator to report to its fortieth session and its special session in February 1994 on the results and progress of UNDP efforts in that country. The Council noted the tentative timetable for the mid-term reviews to be carried out between 1993 and 1995.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 18 June,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Council approved country programmes for 25 countries: 10 in Africa, 9 in Asia and the Pacific, 4 in the Arab States, and 2 in Latin America and the Caribbean. It approved the fifth country programme for the United Republic of Tanzania, subject to the Administrator's reporting to it in 1994 on the advancement of the programme in the light of comments made by the Standing Committee for Programme Matters. The fourth programme for Sudan was approved on the understanding that the proposed activities would have a primary focus on food security and sustainable rural agriculture development and would be subject to a policy review after one year. The Council endorsed the Administrator's recommendation⁽¹⁶⁾ to continue the country programme for Malawi, maintaining the focus on human development through poverty alleviation while encouraging and facilitating the process of political change and its contribution to the achievement of the programme goals. It approved amendments to the country programme for Rwanda⁽¹⁷⁾ and took note of an oral report on assistance to Cambodia. The Council approved a one-year extension of the country programmes for 15 countries: 6 in Africa, 1 in Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, and 8 in Latin America and the Caribbean. It also noted the Administrator's intention⁽¹⁸⁾ to continue to approve projects in Iraq on a case-by-case basis.

In response to a 1992 Council request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Administrator, in April, submitted a note⁽²⁰⁾ summarizing the outcome of a resource allocation review of ongoing fourth cycle (1987-1991) projects, carried out with Myanmar and executing agencies in 1992. As a result of the review, $8.4 million was released by curtailing several projects and was being applied to high-priority projects with greater grass-roots-level impact. The report also presented the major findings of an evaluation of Myanmar's fifth country programme, which highlighted the need to restore curtailed projects. The report recommended that the sixth country programme be submitted to the Council in 1995 and outlined areas where continuing UNDP technical cooperation would be needed during the transitional period from July 1993 to December 1995. An amount of $40 million from the fifth cycle (1992-1996) IPF for Myanmar was proposed to meet those needs.

On 18 June,⁽²¹⁾ the Council decided that, until a country programme for Myanmar was considered, all future assistance from UNDP and related funds should be targeted towards programmes having a grass-roots-level impact, particularly in the areas of primary health care, the environment, HIV/AIDS, training and education, and food security. It approved, in addition to the amounts released from the reallocation of carried-over fourth cycle resources, an expenditure of up to $18 million from fifth cycle IPF allocations for the 18-month period to December 1994. The Administrator was requested to continue to approve assistance on a project-by-project basis and to submit to the Council in 1994 a report on the status of approval and implementation of new projects and recommendations for future programming.

Mid-term reviews. In response to a 1992 request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Administrator presented to the Council's February special session a tentative timetable and reporting proposals for 1993-1995 mid-term reviews.⁽²²⁾ On 19 February,⁽¹³⁾ the Council took note of the tentative timetable and decided to examine it further in the light of views expressed at the special session.

In a November report,⁽²³⁾ the Administrator gave an overview of mid-term reviews carried out in 1993 of the country programmes for India, Indonesia and Zambia. He also submitted a revised timetable for 1993-1995 reviews. The reviews indicated that UNDP's programmes remained valid and that existing projects had only required re-organization around sectoral or thematic clusters to sharpen focus, impact and continued relevance. The reviews also examined experience gained in national execution; UNDP assistance in national capacity-building for policy and programme formulation, management and evaluation; experience with new support cost arrangements, including implementation problems; and experience with the programme approach and the extent to which alternative programme mechanisms changed the focus of country programmes. With regard to the resource situation, the Administrator stated that IPF resources were nearly fully committed, with a significant proportion having been carried over from preceding programmes. The decline in available resources limited the capacity of UNDP country programmes to adjust to changing circumstances and/or initiate new activities.

Country programmes by region

Africa

UNDP, through its Regional Bureau for Africa, continued to support the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s⁽²⁴⁾ (see next chapter), mainly through its project executed by the Economic Commission for Africa. It provided assistance at central and local government levels for strengthening economic management capacity in several countries. It also collaborated with other bodies and agencies in identifying priority areas for government/donor cooperation and funded studies in preparation for a 1994 donors' conference on human resource development for post-apartheid South Africa. Under its African Capacity-Building Initiative, eight more projects were approved, bringing the total to 18, with a total commitment of $46.3 million. The National Long-Term Perspective Studies Programme, designed to help countries define national priorities to guide their development over a 25-year period, became fully operational in 1993 in six countries. A number of seminars, conferences and workshops were held to sensitize African countries to the initiative.

Seventy-five nationally executed projects were approved for some $60 million, representing 45 per cent of new projects approved and about 60 per cent of the total value in 1993. To help strengthen indigenous capacity for national execution, UNDP conducted a number of seminars and workshops on the subject. It collaborated with other agencies and bilateral partners in alleviating poverty through a comprehensive approach encompassing macroeconomic policy reforms and sectoral interventions. Efforts were made to operationalize the human development concept, with particular attention being paid to the promotion of women's participation in the development process. In the area of private sector development, UNDP assisted in improving management capabilities and promoting trade and investment. By the end of 1993, the Africa Project Development Facility, a joint effort with the African Development Bank, IFC and bilateral donors, had completed more than 130 projects in 25 countries, helping entrepreneurs to identify financial resources and obtain technical and managerial expertise.

UNDP programmes also addressed environmental management, including conservation, pollution control and desertification. Some 14 projects were approved for funding under GEF, including $16 million for regional water pollution control and biodiversity preservation for Lake Tanganyika and the Gulf of Guinea. Support was also provided to a number of countries to prepare national environment programmes.

Two round-table meetings were held: the one for Burkina Faso focused on economic management and a policy framework paper, while that for Equatorial Guinea concentrated on aid coordination, support to the structural adjustment programme and the development of long-term perspective policies. Sectoral consultations were held in Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic and the Niger. UNDP supported the democratization process in a number of countries, including Burundi, Eritrea, Malawi, Mali, Namibia, the Niger and Sierra Leone, while humanitarian assistance was provided to several countries in conflict.

Concerning HIV/AIDS, UNDP approved a $15.5 million programme for capacity-building to support national programmes in Uganda. It also developed training materials for use in Kenya, Senegal, Uganda and Zimbabwe.

Asia and the Pacific

By the end of 1993, the fifth (1992-1996) cycle IPF resources for Asia and the Pacific were estimated to amount to $1.3 billion. Cost-sharing contributions from recipient countries and third parties were expected to provide another $100 million. During the year, some 210 projects were approved with a value of about $187 million from IPF and SPR, and the total expenditure for the region was estimated at $250 million.

The regional programme utilized the programme approach to facilitate the integration of cross-cutting issues into a rational programme with strategic aims. Region-wide projects were focused on only 16 key programmes under the three themes of economic reform, environmental management, and poverty alleviation and human development.

Two large programmes on jute and leather in India gathered momentum, while in Bangladesh, UNDP assisted in developing two major programmes in the urban and education sectors. Thailand was assisted in developing strategies to enhance incomes of the rural population.

Some 125 nationally executed projects were approved for $113 million, representing 59 per cent of the total number of new projects approved and 56 per cent of the total value. China and India were the leading countries implementing projects through national execution, accounting for 35 per cent of total projects under the fifth cycle. A regional centre was opened at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, to help Governments discharge their accounting and reporting responsibilities.

In the area of aid coordination, UNDP assisted Viet Nam in preparing and conducting its first donor conference, held in Paris in November, resulting in pledges of $1.86 billion. Agreement was reached with the Asian Development Bank, key Pacific island intercountry organizations, the World Bank and the Pacific island countries that UNDP would continue to be the lead agency supporting the round-table process for interested Governments. Six Pacific island countries were preparing for round-table and sectoral meetings. UNDP helped Mongolia to prepare for its donor meeting and provided support to Cambodia in preparing its national strategy.

A major emphasis was being placed on improving inter-agency coordination, especially among the JCGP partners. In that context, UNDP established a United Nations Inter-Agency Support Unit in Pakistan to assist with planning and implementing the local United Nations common agenda—a methodology for joint programming in population, education, and income generation and employment.

In the human development area, UNDP supported a project in India to collect and analyse human development indicators and the establishment of the Parliamentarians Forum for Human Development. Under the regional programme, NGO assistance was sought to collate seven case studies of successful people's participation in six countries. UNDP's sustainable human development initiative resulted in the publication of the Pacific Sustainable Human Development Report, addressing new development options, policies and strategies for the Pacific islands. Implementation of community-based sustainable human development schemes started on a pilot basis to ensure improved and sustainable quality of life under small island conditions.

With regard to poverty alleviation, UNDP supported the development of a national strategy and action plan for Nepal, implemented a programme in Sri Lanka, and, with other agencies and the World Bank, supported a successful rural water supply and sanitation programme in Pakistan. It also assessed the poverty situation in rural Mongolia, as a result of which the Government and donors requested UNDP to develop a multisectoral comprehensive framework for coordinated donor effort in poverty alleviation.

In environment and natural resources management, UNDP assisted China to formulate a national Agenda 21 programme to form the basis of a high-level donors' conference in 1994. At the regional level, consultative and planning meetings were convened for programmes in agricultural resource management and marine pollution. Under GEF, $36 million, covering activities in over 20 countries and territories in the region, was approved. GEF pre-investment activities in six countries resulted in follow-up capital and technical cooperation investments of about $92 million.

In other action, UNDP developed a comprehensive framework for addressing governance issues in Mongolia and assisted in modernizing election machinery in the Philippines. Also in the Philippines, a significant step was taken towards establishing a regional framework to address the legal, ethical and human rights dimensions of HIV/AIDS with the holding of the Inter-country Consultation on Law, Ethics and HIV (Cebu, 3-6 May).

The regional programme was instrumental in facilitating information and data-sharing among countries in the region, and a database of telecommunication and socio-economic data for telecommunication planning activities was established at the Asian-Pacific Telecommunity, an intergovernmental body.

UNDP, through its resident representatives, coordinated relief assistance in Nepal and Sri Lanka and assumed responsibility in Cambodia for providing and channelling international assistance for demining operations.

Arab States

Programming for the Arab States region for the fifth (1992-1996) cycle was practically finalized during 1993. The Governing Council had approved programmes for all countries except Iraq and Somalia (where the situation did not allow the development of country programmes and where the Administrator would approve programmes on a case-by-case basis) and Oman, where it was decided not to develop a country programme.

A substantial part of technical cooperation in the region was directed at supporting macroeconomic reforms, economic policy development, economic and social development and administrative reform. Social policy, concern with human development and environment and natural resources management were featured in several programmes.

The regional programme for the Arab States was developed in 1993 and approved by an inter-governmental meeting at Sana'a, Yemen, in December. It envisaged launching programmes in sustainable human development, economic integration and trade, and energy. Many projects would be implemented by Arab regional organizations and institutions, and the programme would also cooperate with the Palestinians in the occupied territories.

In Somalia, UNDP supported community-based small-scale programmes in the more peaceful northern region, cooperated with the humanitarian programme of the United Nations Operation in Somalia and, with the World Bank, developed a medium-term rehabilitation plan for the country. It restored drinking water production in Mogadishu and financed the rehabilitation of its airport and seaport. It developed a programme to demobilize and reintegrate the militia in the north-west (see next chapter). The area development schemes programme continued to be successfully implemented in the Sudan, and its philosophy was applied to developing the rehabilitation programme in northern Somalia.

UNDP continued to support economic reform in Egypt and administrative reforms in Kuwait. In Algeria, UNDP supported policy development and mobilized resources and expertise to draw up a new investment code to promote private domestic and foreign investments. It financed the preparation of the programme of administrative rehabilitation in Lebanon and co-sponsored a round table on human development with Tunisia. It supported Djibouti and Morocco in combating the HIV epidemic and Morocco and Lebanon in eliminating illegal drug production.

Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States

UNDP opened seven new country offices in the region during 1993, bringing the total number of offices in the region to 19 by the end of the year (see also under "Organizational issues" below). The wide area network (WAN), a donor-funded, satellite-based communications network, was operational in seven countries of the region, and a proposal had been prepared to extend the system to additional countries. Once established in all country offices, the WAN would be made available to other users, such as government aid coordination agencies, parliamentarians, NGOs and the media.

In collaboration with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), UNDP launched an initiative to strengthen nuclear safety and radiation protection infrastructures in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). Following a ministerial-level forum on the subject (Vienna, May), IAEA and UNDP began to prepare a large-scale programme involving all concerned United Nations agencies and interested donors to cover all sectors affected by nuclear safety problems.

The economic and societal transition of the countries of Eastern Europe and the former USSR, including transition to a market economy, privatization, democracy and governance and the social impact of transition, was the focus of a workshop (Berlin, 27 September-7 October), held in cooperation with the East-West Economic Academy. All resident representatives from the region as well as several resident representatives from other regions facing similar transitional problems attended. (For further information on transition economies, see the previous chapter and under "New recipient countries" below.)

Support for building national capacity for external resource management was a top priority for UNDP activities in the region. In collaboration with the World Bank, UNDP established external resource management agencies in Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan and trained government officials in several countries. It also supported Belarus in designing its aid management mechanism.

A number of integrated regional programmes were designed or launched in 1993, covering local economic development, inter-modal transport information systems, economic and social statistics and human development data, inter-republic trade, water and civil society, and strengthening of foreign affairs ministries. UNDP also supported projects in democratization, improved governance and strengthened local participation in the countries in transition.

In the area of energy and the environment, the project document for the GEF Black Sea programme was signed, and the Programme Coordination Unit was opened at Istanbul, Turkey. The work plan of the GEF Danube River Basin programme was completed and work on a strategic action plan started. Programmes were also launched in the human and social sector development sectors.

UNDP participated in United Nations consolidated appeals for Armenia, Azerbaijan and the former Yugoslavia for projects related to rehabilitation and reconstruction. It carried out a number of humanitarian assistance and reconstruction activities in the former Yugoslavia, including Croatia.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In 1993, as an important part of its agenda in Latin America and the Caribbean, UNDP addressed the problem of social reform.

That subject and its main issue, poverty, were addressed by the Forum on Social Reform and Poverty, jointly organized with the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) in February. Joint IDB/UNDP meetings were also held in several countries to define social reform policies and specific problems to be financed by IDB with UNDP execution of technical cooperation elements. Other major items on the UNDP agenda for the region were: governance and UNDP's capacity to exercise leadership in defining relations between various segments of society; the need for State reform and guarantees to citizens affected by the privatization process; and environment and development. Those items constituted the basis for UNDP advocacy in sustainable human development, which had been well received in many countries.

UNDP-supported activities at the national level on social reform and poverty alleviation were most evident in Argentina. Colombia also channelled a large share of its IPF resources and cost-sharing funds to improve health and education. Activities in this area were continued in Chile, Mexico, Peru and Central America.

In the area of governance, UNDP facilitated equal opportunities in health and education and continued to strengthen municipal and provincial governments. Ecuador addressed this issue and the consolidation of democracy through an education programme on human rights for the armed forces, and Panama requested UNDP assistance in organizing a national meeting on unity and human development. The Dominican Republic requested assistance in launching the National Consultation on Strategic Development Challenges, in preparation for the 1994 Presidential elections.

UNDP helped Peru to re-establish its rating on the international credit market and supported its privatization programme, and assisted Brazil in its efforts to become a global trader in computer software. In Colombia, a UNDP project covering 47 per cent of the indigenous population in the rural areas addressed the need to empower communities affected by armed conflict, poverty and lack of social services.

In the area of the environment, the portfolio of approved projects financed by GEF grew to 18, for a total of some $60 million.

Global and interregional programmes

UNDP's global and interregional programmes helped developing countries to benefit from international scientific knowledge, research and experience while enhancing their own national capacities.

UNDP investments in high-risk/high-reward activities achieved breakthroughs in a number of fields vital to developing countries and attracted complementary funding. The global programme supported non-governmental research institutes, which had developed improved strains of rice, potatoes, fish and other foods, and helped establish networks to study and monitor global environmental concerns. It promoted the sharing of knowledge and applied research and information exchanges and databanks.

In terms of environmental activities, the UNDP global programme undertook six GEF projects valued at $20.4 million, including a $4.8 million programme to establish monitoring stations in Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, Indonesia and Kenya to measure concentrations of harmful gases in the atmosphere and a $2.6 million project to establish centres for training in integrated ocean and coastal management in Africa, Asia, Latin America and Oceania.

In 1993, UNDP increased by $1 million its support to sustainable development networks, seven of which were in operation at the end of the year. It supported high-priority agricultural research to create and disseminate high-yielding, disease- and pest-resistant food products and funded a $4.6 million project to reduce the use of costly and dangerous pesticides in potato farming.

UNDP helped other United Nations specialized agencies and organizations to respond to the HIV epidemic. Several joint activities were initiated with specialized agencies, financial institutions and NGOs. It sought to strengthen national capacity to undertake research and study the extent and nature of the psychological, social and economic causes and consequences of the epidemic and to link research to policy and programme development. UNDP also facilitated the establishment of networks on law, ethics, and human rights and HIV in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean to strengthen their capacity to respond to the epidemic.

Regional integration

In a January report to the Governing Council,⁽²⁵⁾ the UNDP Administrator described UNDP's support for regional economic integration during the fourth (1987-1991) cycle and the approach for the fifth (1992-1996) cycle. He stated that the most visible motor of regional economic integration was the development of trade and the creation of institutions to promote the expansion of intra-regional trade. The emphasis for the future might shift towards regional economic cooperation rather than economic integration. In this regard, the emerging priorities of UNDP were consistent with changes taking place at the global level, with emphasis on cooperation in those areas linking regional efforts with changes in global trading arrangements. The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) also considered regional integration issues (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

On 17 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Programme planning and management

In response to a 1991 Governing Council request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Administrator, in March, submitted a report on the efficiency of programming and the comparative advantages of UNDP.⁽²⁷⁾ He stated that UNDP's comparative advantage in providing technical cooperation was created by international agreements and mandates; the resources available for administration and technical cooperation programmes and its managerial capacity to implement them effectively; and the resulting development of products, expertise and relationships. UNDP's technical cooperation was based on ideological and commercial neutrality and impartiality in sensitive areas; multilateralism and universality; its multisectoral nature; and its network of field offices. The combination of those characteristics was unique to UNDP.

UNDP was extremely effective in the areas for which it had functional comparative advantages, particularly in relation to multisectoral and cross-sectoral activities, donor coordination, promotion of regional integration and South-South cooperation, global initiatives on issues of major significance, and the development of innovative approaches to the design and delivery of technical cooperation. There was a major opportunity for UNDP to develop further its comparative advantages in the four substantive areas that were emerging as key priorities: economic management and public sector reform; social development, poverty alleviation and community participation in development; environmental protection and sustainable natural resource management; and productive capacity, involving technology transfer and private sector development support. Full realization of UNDP's comparative advantages would involve better utilization of the field office network, more effective mobilization of the expertise of the United Nations system, more effective networking with research institutions, NGOs and other sources of expertise, and recruitment of more specialized and technically qualified staff.

It would also be necessary to identify more precisely UNDP's role in the four substantive areas mentioned, refine its relationship with other agencies in similar fields, maximize linkages and complementarity in specific fields, and assist national authorities to identify more exactly their needs and priorities. There was also a need for greater dynamism in realigning resources to address new and emerging problems, to reformulate objectives and to reshape the institution.

In response to a 1992 Council request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on progress in harmonizing programme cycles and programme procedures among members of JCGP,⁽²⁸⁾ particularly the harmonization of terminology, the simplification of financial and reporting procedures and payments to government staff. He stated that harmonization had occurred in about one third of the countries served.

National execution

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽²⁹⁾ the Administrator, in May, presented a report on national execution and agency support costs.⁽³⁰⁾ He stated that new projects approved for national execution amounted to 30 per cent of all new approvals in 1991 and to 37 per cent in 1992. This trend was expected to accelerate in 1993 and future years. Preliminary data also indicated that agency implementation of nationally executed projects had increased significantly over the fourth (1987-1991) cycle. Under the fifth (1992-1996) cycle, it was estimated that 40 per cent of all new approvals of IPF-financed activities would be assigned for national execution. The Administrator also discussed new support cost arrangements (see below).

On 18 June,⁽³¹⁾ the Council welcomed the increased use of national execution in UNDP-assisted programmes and projects and called on recipient countries, with the assistance of UNDP, to assess national capacities for carrying out execution responsibilities before project approval. It encouraged greater use of United Nations specialized agencies in the design, technical appraisal and backstopping of nationally executed projects.

Capacity-building

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request that he report to it annually on national capacity-building, the Administrator, in January, submitted a report on the subject.⁽³²⁾ The report examined the background and conceptual framework of capacity-building, discussed ways of assessing its achievements and outlined a framework for national capacity-building. Although some valuable capacities were built as a result of efforts by UNDP and other donors, especially in the areas of infrastructure, vocational training, health statistics, civil aviation and meteorology, there was concern within the development community regarding the identification of more coherent strategies and instruments.

The report listed issues to be addressed in formulating capacity-building activities, including its relevance to core national development objectives; the national policy context for the programme activities; the extent to which the capacity of non-governmental as well as governmental institutions was being built; coordination mechanisms and sustainability; and incorporation of past lessons in the delivery of technical cooperation in support of capacity-building. UNDP support included the programme approach, national execution and aid coordination. In addition, the successor arrangement for agency support costs facilitated the development of programme frameworks. UNDP support to Governments included the capacity to define and manage a long-term vision of social and economic development, to formulate policies and substantive orientations for the short and medium term; to manage and implement national programmes; and to monitor and evaluate the impact of national programmes. The UNDP country strategy document also addressed capacity-building issues and set out the specific instruments through which the national strategy for capacity-building would be supported by UNDP.

On 17 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Capacity 21

In a January report on environment and development,⁽³³⁾ the Administrator stated that Capacity 21, launched by him and noted by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽³⁴⁾ was designed to aid developing countries in formulating and implementing sustainable development strategies and national capacity-building programmes. It had been established following the adoption by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development of Agenda 21,⁽³⁵⁾ which UNDP had been given a significant role in implementing.

The programme, which became fully operational in June 1993, would be managed within the provisions for SPR. A management committee had been established to screen programme proposals, approve funding, monitor and evaluate implementation and ensure coordination with regional and country programmes. An initial target of $100 million was proposed for its pilot phase. By the end of 1993, 11 Governments had pledged a total of $33 million.

On 19 February,⁽³⁶⁾ the Governing Council approved the Administrator's decision to launch Capacity 21 and decided that UNDP should present specific and detailed proposals for its implementation to the Council in June, including recommendations on the distribution of resources.

In response to that request, the Administrator issued in May a report⁽³⁷⁾ in which he stated that Capacity 21 was to complement capacity-building initiatives of such facilities as GEF, the 1987 Montreal Protocol for the Protection of the Ozone Layer,⁽³⁸⁾ UNSO, UNCDF and country IPFs. Consultations on the programme's scope and focus had taken place with donor and recipient countries, United Nations system agencies and other partners, which had provided a basis for identifying programmes for funding. The programme was to begin in 10 countries in 1993 and in a further 15 to 20 in 1994. Preparatory activities in some 30 to 40 countries would form the basis for full programmes in the 1995-1996 period.

On 18 June,⁽³⁹⁾ the Council requested the Administrator to proceed with implementing Capacity 21. It decided to distribute resources according to the criteria applied to SPR and supported the Administrator's intention to devote 40 per cent of the overall budget of Capacity 21 to LDCs. The Council endorsed the proposal to evaluate Capacity 21 at the end of the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle with a view to incorporating its activities into UNDP's regular programming.

NGO collaboration and grass-roots activities

In response to a 1990 Governing Council decision,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on UNDP cooperation with NGOs and grass-roots organizations.⁽⁴¹⁾ The report indicated an expansion in the scope and level of this cooperation through programmes that supported participatory, community-based development; promoted dialogue and collaboration between NGOs and grass-roots organizations, Governments and multilateral agencies; encouraged and supported their involvement in sustainable development activities; and strengthened the impact of the development efforts of NGOs and grass-roots groups. In particular, cooperation expanded in the areas of grass-roots participation in poverty eradication and environment and natural resource management. Such cooperation was increasingly reflected in country and regional programmes and initiatives. Activities were funded from IPF, global and inter-regional programmes, SPR and extrabudgetary funds.

The report proposed measures for strengthening cooperation, including adjusting UNDP's policies and procedures within the framework of country programmes; consulting with NGOs and grass-roots organizations during the elaboration of advisory notes and country programmes; participation of programme beneficiaries in the elaboration and evaluation of UNDP-funded programmes and projects; and including NGOs and grass-roots organizations in the consultative process at the country, regional and global levels regarding the development of strategies, programmes and projects addressing areas of focus for the fifth cycle.

On 17 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Management Development Programme

In a February report,⁽⁴²⁾ the Administrator described the implementation of the Management Development Programme (MDP), established by the Governing Council in 1988.⁽⁴³⁾ By December 1992, project activities for management improvement, fully or partially financed by UNDP, had been approved in 51 countries for a total expenditure of $50 million of MDP funds, $26 million of IPF resources, and $10 million from non-UNDP sources. UNDP also attracted cost-sharing and parallel financing from other bilateral and multi-lateral agencies. The programme was to be evaluated during 1993, and guidelines and working manuals were to be issued to promote needs assessment and provide guidance for programme design and formulation. Special attention was given to the role of and opportunities for women in management positions. National execution was used as the preferred mode of project implementation.

The shift to market economies, the rise in democratic systems and the collapse of the USSR provided new impetus for MDP-assisted reforms. In this context, MDP would help Governments to build the institutional and organizational capacity to manage economic, financial and administrative reform, including civil service and organizational development.

On 17 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Programme evaluation

The Administrator's tenth annual report on programme evaluation⁽⁴⁴⁾ presented a synopsis of the evaluation strategy being pursued during the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle and summarized the findings and recommendations of major evaluations undertaken in 1992. It examined the status of other work undertaken by the Central Evaluation Office (CEO), including a study of the extent to which feedback and lessons from evaluation reports were internalized within the UNDP system; highlighted cross-cutting issues emerging from CEO's work in 1992; and gave an account of other evaluation work. It also presented the CEO work plan for evaluation activities in 1993-1994.

On 18 June,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Governing Council noted the impending issuance of revised and strengthened guidelines for country programme evaluations and requested the Administrator to include, as a biennial element in his annual report on evaluation, a statistical and quantitative analysis of evaluation reports. He was also requested to report in 1994 on the ongoing study on and proposal for a strategic approach to feedback throughout UNDP, including at the field level, and to undertake more joint evaluations with other United Nations organizations and Member States to promote common evaluation principles and practices. The Council urged the Administrator to continue supporting action towards a common system for reporting the degree and rate of success or failure in the achievement of programme and project objectives.

Programme management

In April,⁽⁴⁶⁾ in response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Administrator presented a report on programme management issues, including decentralization and the programme approach. He stated that the emphasis of country programmes in the fifth programming cycle was on supporting major national priorities with the aim of achieving identifiable and sustainable results in institutional and ecological terms. At the same time, monitoring and evaluation procedures were being revised to strengthen the capacity of in-country systems to keep track of programme implementation. They would also provide early warning for issues requiring corrective action. UNDP's guiding principles for its programme approach were issued in April, and the outline of a programme support document had been elaborated as the standard format for UNDP support to national programmes. The latter, which was being used on a trial basis, was designed to be responsive to different country situations and requirements as well as to provide information on progress in capacity-building and other outputs and to ensure financial accountability.

In relation to decentralization, emphasis was placed on expanding the scope of resident representatives for managing country programmes and their own administrative affairs. It aimed at improving UNDP's efficiency and effectiveness in the context of increased budgetary constraints. Accordingly, financial authority for project approvals was increased to $1 million for resident representatives and to $3 million for directors of the regional bureaux. Authority was delegated to resident representatives to formulate and approve the individual components of national programmes cleared by the Action Committee. Procedures were also introduced to balance this increased financial authority with more accountability and to review programme progress through the field office work-planning process. UNDP was also working with inter-agency groups to coordinate and harmonize programme management issues.

On 18 June,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Fifth and sixth programming cycles

In May, the Administrator submitted a report on matters relating to the fifth (1992-1996) and sixth (1997-2001) programming cycles.⁽⁴⁸⁾ He provided information on the status of fifth cycle resources and programmes, the planning framework for the remaining years of the cycle, and a list of and explanations for IPFs for the cycle. It also discussed the methodology for allocating programme resources in the sixth cycle. The Administrator reported that in 1993 there was a further erosion of resources due to reductions in contributions and the strengthening of the dollar. Based on estimates of contributions for the remaining years of the fifth cycle, he had established a revised planning framework in 1992, assuming a growth rate of resources of only 4 per cent rather than the target of 8 per cent set in 1990.⁽⁴⁹⁾ After further monitoring of the resource outlook, it had become necessary to revise again the planning parameters for the fifth cycle and to advise UNDP field offices that programme planning should be carried out under the assumption that only 75 per cent of established IPFs would be available. Accordingly, IPF expenditure targets for 1993 and 1994 were revised further to $640 million and $590 million, respectively. Those resource constraints and reductions in expenditure targets had obviously affected programme approvals during 1992 and 1993. The projected reductions in IPF expenditures would require reformulation of expenditure patterns of certain approved country programmes and even deferral or elimination of priority programmes and projects.

In response to a 1991 Governing Council request,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Administrator also presented his preliminary views on issues relating to the mobilization and allocation of resources for the sixth programming cycle, based on experience with earlier cycles. He stated that UNDP would contribute to the discussion currently going on in the General Assembly on funding mechanisms for operational activities, including the possibility of multi-year negotiated pledges, and would report to the Council in 1994.

On 17 June,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Council requested the Administrator to continue consultations on the preparations for the sixth programming cycle and to submit a conceptual paper on the issue to its 1994 session.

New recipient countries

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽⁵²⁾ the Administrator, in January, submitted a report on provisional activities of programmes undertaken between June and December 1992 in the Baltic States and CIS.⁽⁵³⁾ He had proposed an integrated strategy for United Nations assistance in those countries, with the highest priority being support for the transition process for which UNDP had established short-term strategies. Inter-agency coordination was being pursued with JCGP and ACC, while specific agreements were being reached with several international organizations. Nine field offices were being opened, and arrangements were under way to attend to requests for field offices for the remaining countries. The total cost of activities for the 1992-1993 biennium amounted to $5.5 million. High priority was being given to capacity-building, particularly aid management and resource mobilization. Programme resources came from core funds, trust funds and product-specific fund-raising, mainly through multilateral regional packages. A target of $100 million per year had been set. UNDP's role was evolving towards human development and the establishment of new equitable forms of regional cooperation.

On 19 February,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Also on 19 February,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Council, welcoming Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Georgia, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia and Tajikistan as recipient countries in UNDP, approved the allocation of IPFs and requested the Administrator to inform it at its fortieth session of any revised basic data and the effect on IPF computation. The Administrator was authorized to proceed with programme development in those countries, taking into account other development activities being carried out there.

On 18 June,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Council also welcomed Eritrea and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia as recipient countries in UNDP. It approved the allocation of IPFs and requested the Administrator to inform it in 1994 of any revised basic data and its effect on IPF computation. It authorized the Administrator to proceed with programme development in the two countries, taking into account other development activities being undertaken.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Administrator reported that total income in 1993 was $1.35 billion, compared with $1.53 billion in 1992, while expenditures remained at the same level of $1.4 billion. Consequently, UNDP's general resources declined to $149 million as at 31 December 1993 from $221 million as at 31 December 1992. Income from voluntary contributions totalled $897 million, a reduction of $180 million, or 15 per cent, from 1992 final figures. Miscellaneous income increased to $23.9 million as a result of reduced foreign exchange losses, while interest income remained stable. Cost-sharing contributions grew from $294 million in 1992 to $376 million in 1993.

IPF expenditures decreased by some 16 per cent to $609 million in 1993, in line with the need to reduce IPF targets, while cost-sharing expenditure increased from $225 million to $341 million. SPR expenditures fell from $50.6 million in 1992 to $46 million in 1993. Expenditure under national execution rose to $173 million, representing a 72 per cent increase over 1992 levels. Overall, 1993 expenditure exceeded income by $67 million.

The Administrator reported that the situation with respect to the growth levels of voluntary contributions had stabilized but the decline in UNDP general resources was expected to continue, despite expected reductions in total expenditure and modest growth in income. He urged Governments to increase voluntary contributions to the core resources of the organization, which were expected to remain flat in 1994.

On 18 June,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Governing Council took note of the annual review of the financial situation for 1992.⁽⁵⁹⁾ It noted with concern the level of resources expected to be available in 1993 and 1994 and urged Governments to increase their contributions to UNDP in line with the planning assumptions of the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle.

The Council noted the Administrator's efforts to develop strategies to reduce expenditure due to the reduced resource flows and requested him to protect UNDP's continued financial viability and integrity. It approved the retroactive request of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for additional support costs arising from the significant appreciation of the French franc over the period 1989 and 1990. In addition, it noted the intention of the Administrator to provide a final report upon the closure of the Special Measures Fund for LDCs.

Budgets

Revised 1992-1993 budget

The Administrator presented to the Governing Council revised budget estimates for 1992-1993,⁽⁶⁰⁾ along with observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).⁽⁶¹⁾ Estimates for UNDP core activities amounted to $479.6 million gross and $447.6 million net, representing a decrease of $1.5 million. There was a volume decrease for UNV of $438,000 due to the application of the staffing formula, and a volume increase for the Office of Project Services (OPS) of $526,000 relating to the core budget and $3.2 million relating to the extra-budgetary account.

On 18 June,⁽⁶²⁾ the Council approved the revised budget estimates for OPS and the UNV programme, as well as revised appropriations of $609,564,700 gross to finance the 1992-1993 biennial budget. It resolved that income estimates of $32 million should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $577,564,700. The Council requested the Administrator, in line with the recommendation of ACABQ, to include a concise statement of the Programme's current and projected income in the executive summary of future submissions of the biennial budget estimates, and invited him to consider further changes to achieve consistency among budget documents and financial review and expenditure reports.

UNDP budget estimates for 1994-1995, submitted by the Administrator in March,⁽⁶⁰⁾ totalled $628.4 million. That amount comprised appropriations of $486.1 million gross, or $449.4 million net, for UNDP core activities, $111.5 million for programme support and development activities, and $30.8 million for trust funds (UNCDF, UNFSTD/UNRFNRE, UNSO and UNIFEM).

The net core budget of $449.4 million, which included support for United Nations operational activities, compared with the appropriation level for 1992-1993 of $449.1 million. The overall volume reduction totalled $41.8 million. Of the total core budget, $336.7 million related to the field, while $149.4 related to headquarters, representing a reduction of $31.3 million and $10.5 million respectively. However, there were core field budget increases of $880,000 for implementation of the regional service centre concept and $1 million for use in CIS.

The total increase for the programme support and development activities budget for 1994-1995 was $10.2 million, mainly due to cost adjustments. Concerning trust funds, with budgets estimated at $30.8 million, there were volume reductions of $1.4 million and an increase of $0.3 million.

In its observations on the 1994-1995 budget estimates,⁽⁶¹⁾ ACABQ recommended that a concise statement of UNDP's current and projected income be included in the executive summary of the Administrator's future report on the budget.

On 18 June,⁽⁶²⁾ the Governing Council approved appropriations in the amount of $628,421,000 gross to finance the 1994-1995 biennial budget and resolved that the income estimates of $36,700,000 be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $591,721,100. It endorsed the Administrator's proposal, in relation to alternative sources of financing for the non-UNDP-related workload, to charge the full costs of such support to the UNDP budget and to reflect them separately by introducing a new appropriation line entitled "Support to the operational activities of the United Nations".

The Council welcomed the Administrator's proposal to implement volume reductions in the core budget of both headquarters and field offices without negatively affecting programme delivery and approved his proposals relating to cost adjustments, in particular the application of savings earned in 1993 up to a ceiling of 1.5 per cent of the 1992-1993 core appropriation. The Council urged the Administrator to be innovative and cost-effective in utilizing core resources allocated to the field presence in the Baltic States, CIS and Georgia; to give priority, when allocating core resources, to those countries with the lowest levels of per capita gross national product and the highest level of IFF and aggregate programme resources; and to ensure an integrated United Nations approach and presence. It requested him to conclude an agreement with the United Nations on the joint funding of the United Nations interim field offices in CIS and Georgia and to report to the Council on the question in 1994 in his revised budget estimates for 1994-1995.

It supported the Administrator's initiatives with regard to a regional service centre concept, in particular the involvement of commercial audit and accounting firms in providing audit and accounts examination services to field offices, and requested him to keep it informed of further developments in the context of the revised budget estimates for 1994-1995. It approved the continuation of posts for the Humanitarian Programme and called on the Administrator to include separate presentations on the programme in future budget documents, delineating all costs to be charged to it.

Under programme support and development activities, the Council approved the establishment of 41 sustainable development national officer posts and the request to establish a limited network of up to 22 national officer posts to support the resident coordinator/resident representative in the national response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic, subject to review.

The Council also approved the proposed 1994-1995 budget estimates for the Office for Project Services and the budget and staffing proposals relating UNCDF, UNIFEM, UNRWF/UNFSTF and UNSO.

It requested the Administrator to report in 1994 on experience gained in the piloting of short-term, non-permanent contracts, including consultations with the International Civil Service Commission. It decided to extend the pilot phase relating to reclassification and to review the implementation of the pilot arrangement, including its continuation, and reclassifications made on the basis of a report which the Administrator was requested to submit in the context of his budget proposals for 1996-1997.

Audit reports

The Governing Council considered the financial report and audited financial statements of the Board of Auditors on UNDP for the biennium ending 31 December 1991,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the views of ACABQ, thereon,⁽⁶⁴⁾ and the comments of the Administrator on the Board of Auditors' report.⁽⁶⁵⁾ It also examined the audited accounts of the participating and executing agencies as at December 1991⁽⁶⁶⁾ and a note by the Administrator summarizing observations of the external auditors of the executing agencies on their 1991 accounts relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP.⁽⁶⁷⁾

On 18 June,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Council noted with approval the Administrator's proposal to institutionalize a mechanism to follow up the external and internal audit recommendations as part of the proposed Office of Budget and Management. It supported his expansion of audit coverage through the regional service centre concept and urged him to take up the issue of timely audited statements from executing agencies in the appropriate inter-agency forums and to ensure strict adherence to established rules and procedures regarding the hiring of consultants. He was also urged to monitor the implementation of the revised instructions to be issued in 1993.

The Council requested the Administrator to streamline UNDP's project appraisal and approval procedures and to finalize measures to address the recommendations of the Board of Auditors regarding adequate property control, including accountability.

Financial regulations

In May,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on proposed financial regulation 4.6, which defined the term "readily usable" with respect to the currency of voluntary contributions, and on other matters on which consensus had not been achieved in 1992. The report reproduced the texts of those items for consideration by the Council.

On 18 June,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Council approved the following text as Financial Regulation 4.6:

"In view of the multilateral nature of the Programme, non-recipient donor countries which make their voluntary contributions wholly or partly in non-convertible currencies are requested to pay a gradually increasing share of their contributions in convertible currencies."

The Council also approved the following text as Financial Regulation 4.7:

"Meanwhile, entities headquartered in a net donor country which has contributed in a non-convertible currency shall be reimbursed for services and equipment purchased under the Programme only in the currency of that country where such a currency is accumulated and until such accumulation is used; conversely, if, when utilizing a non-convertible contribution, costs are incurred in other currencies, these shall be reimbursed to UNDP in a convertible currency."

The Financial Regulations were renumbered appropriately.

Procurement

In response to a 1991 Governing Council request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Administrator, in May, submitted a report on the procurement of goods and services from developing countries.⁽⁷¹⁾ The report provided an overview of procurement from developing countries by the United Nations system between 1988 and 1992, discussed improvements made to increase such procurement and identified the main constraints and limitations preventing further procurement from developing countries. The Administrator confirmed that procurement from developing countries under UNDP funding had increased significantly since 1988 (from $78 million to $103 million in 1992), due to an increase in national execution and additional delegation of authority by OPS to the field. However, there were still many constraints on the part of developing countries themselves. The Administrator believed that the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) should continue to enhance its service and coordinating role for research and development and information-sharing activities. He recommended that the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group (IAPWG) develop guidelines based on those measures, including the strengthening of focal points and the establishment of databases at the field and country level as well as training programmes for procurement staff. He cautioned the Council as to its expectations of significant results in the near future, especially in percentage terms, but stressed that progress would continue to be made in terms of the greater delegation of authority and decentralization of functions and processes and with the increased use of national execution as the modality of preference.

On 18 June,⁽⁷²⁾ the Council commended the progress made in increasing procurement from developing countries, as well as the research and development activities of IAPSO. It encouraged Governments to address the constraints and limitations, including attitudinal barriers, to promoting procurement from developing countries. It urged UNDP, through IAPWG, to encourage the United Nations, its funds, programmes and specialized agencies to increase procurement from developing and underutilized major donor countries and supported IAPWG in further defining and improving the accuracy of the data provided to IAPSO for its annual reporting to the Governing Council and to the Economic and Social Council. The Council requested UNDP, through IAPWG, to improve existing procurement or supplier databases to include greater product and skill specification, and stressed the need for the United Nations system to improve its rostering and shortlisting systems and procedures to ensure greater geographical representation from suppliers from developing countries and underutilized major donor countries.

UNDP-administered funds

During 1993, 10 new trust funds were established by the Administrator on behalf of UNDP.⁽⁷³⁾ They were the Trust Fund for the UNDP History Project, Trust Fund in Support of Peace-Building Activities in El Salvador, Trust Fund for Democratization Support and the Electoral Process in Guinea-Bissau, UNDP/Denmark Trust Fund for Electoral Assistance Project in Burundi, UNDP Trust Fund for Human Resources Development in South Africa, UNDP Trust Fund for Capacity-Building in De-mining Operations for Cambodia, UNDP Trust Fund for Council on Health Research for Development, UNDP Trust Fund for the Re-integration of Demobilized Military Personnel in Mozambique, UNDP/Norway Trust Fund for Assistance to the Electoral Process in Mozambique and the UNDP/Switzerland Trust Fund for Aid Management and Aid Coordination in Kyrgyzstan. Contributions received for those funds totalled $16.3 million. In addition, one trust fund was established on behalf of UNCDF and eight on behalf of UNV. Contributions for those arrangements totalled $1.6 million.

During 1993, contributions to the 75 trust funds and sub-trust funds in operation totalled $73.8 million, while expenditures amounted to $76.5 million.⁽⁷⁴⁾

Special Programme Resources

In 1993,⁽⁷⁵⁾ total SPR expenditures, representing resources set aside by the Governing Council to finance specified types of programme activities during each programming cycle, amounted to $74 million, of which $27.6 million was charged against cost-sharing contributions, resulting in a net expenditure of $46.4 million. Expenditures on SPR activities approved by the Council in 1992 were grouped under the categories of disaster mitigation, thematic activities, other special/and or new activities, aid coordination and programme development.

Support cost arrangements

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on national execution and agency support costs,⁽³⁰⁾ which examined the status of implementation of the new support cost arrangements established in 1992,⁽⁷⁵⁾ training programmes on their application and the status of financial provisions for them. It also reported on implementation of the technical support services at the programme level (TSS-1) work programme for 1992-1993; preparation of the TSS-1 work programme for 1994-1995; status of the technical support services at the project level (TSS-2) facility; issues relating to the smaller technical agencies; and monitoring and evaluation of the cost arrangements.

The report stated that, following field testing of the guidelines for implementation of the new agency support cost arrangements, several improvements and refinements had been incorporated and a revised version had been issued. The guidelines would continue to be field tested in 1993 and incorporated into UNDP's Programme and Projects Manual. Some 12 subregional and 9 national workshops were held between October 1992 and February 1993 to train field representatives from Governments, agencies and UNDP in the new arrangements.

With regard to financial provisions, the Administrator noted that the considerable erosion in the resource outlook for 1993 and future years had obliged him to establish a revised planning framework for the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle. Since the financial provisions for SPR, approved by the Council in 1991,⁽⁷⁶⁾ were based on higher projections for programmable resources, adjustments to individual components of the provisions had become necessary.

In 1991,⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Council had provided that, in respect of the first $140 million of nationally implemented projects approved for the fifth cycle, 10 per cent of their value should be added to the relevant IPF sub-lines and $17 million had been earmarked for that purpose. However, nationally executed projects approved under the old arrangements amounted to $304 million, far exceeding the original estimate, and the identification of the first $140 million of nationally implemented projects had proven to be operationally difficult. In addition, in a 1990 decision,⁽⁷⁷⁾ the Council had specified that IPF add-on would continue to be paid for nationally executed projects approved before the end of the fourth (1987-1991) cycle, leading several Governments and UNDP field offices to continue planning utilization of such add-on resources for an interim period in the fifth cycle.

The Administrator proposed, therefore, that instead of adding the specific resources to the IPF sub-line, the provisions for the IPF add-on legislation continue for one more year. Thus, he intended to provide 13 per cent of 1992 project expenditures relating to nationally executed projects approved before 1 January 1992 as an add-on to IPFs of the countries concerned. From 1993 onwards, the 1991 provisions relating to the IPF sub-line would be applicable.

On 18 June,⁽³¹⁾ the Council encouraged further training in the new arrangements for agency support costs and endorsed the Administrator's proposals on the provisions of IPF add-on in respect of nationally implemented projects approved before 1 January 1992. It welcomed progress in implementing the TSS-1 work programme for 1992-1993 and agreed that the formulation of the 1994-1995 work programme should be governed by national priorities and needs. The Administrator was requested to submit the 1994-1995 work programme in 1994. The Council urged that approvals of TSS-2 funding of UNDP-financed projects be accelerated and that specialized agencies be more involved in the design and formulation of such projects. It invited the Administrator to continue consultations with the smaller technical agencies on their full incorporation in the new support cost arrangements. The Council requested the Administrator to consult with Member States on the implementation of an external evaluation of the new arrangements to be carried out during 1994 and to report back to it.

Sectoral support

In a report to the Governing Council's special session,⁽⁷⁸⁾ the Administrator stated that the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) had requested the Council to consider increasing the annual allocation as of 1993 for the UNIDO Country Director Programme. The current allocation of $3.8 million had been established in 1991.⁽⁷⁹⁾ The Administrator therefore proposed an annual allocation of $5.4 million for 1992 and $4.8 million for 1993.

On 18 February,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Council authorized an amount of up to $10.2 million for the UNIDO Country Director Programme for 1992 and 1993, from the total of $19 million earmarked for funding the programme in the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle under the Sectoral Support Programme. The authorized reallocation would result in a corresponding reduction of yearly allocations for the last three years of the cycle. The Council invited UNIDO to manage the programme within the overall resources allocated and to sustain it through its own resources, subject to review by the Council in 1994.

Preparatory assistance

In a report to the Governing Council's special session,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Administrator stated that, following the Council's 1992 approval of global and interregional programmes for the fifth programming cycle,⁽⁸²⁾ a number of new initiatives had been launched, necessitating approval of preparatory assistance projects. In view of the increase of the global IPF from $63 million to $112 million for the fifth cycle, due to escalating costs of short-term consultancy services and increased time required for preparatory work on research-oriented projects, the Administrator recommended that the authority granted to him for all global preparatory assistance projects be increased from its current level of $125,000 to $250,000.

On 18 February,⁽⁸³⁾ the Council approved the Administrator's recommendation.

Organizational issues

Staff-related matters

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Administrator included in his revised budget estimates for 1994-1995⁽⁶⁰⁾ a report on his review of the senior management structure of UNDP against the background of the restructuring of the United Nations Secretariat. In line with the Secretary-General's policy of reducing overall the number of high-level posts in the United Nations, the Administrator proposed the elimination or downgrading of two posts at the Assistant Secretary-General (ASG) level (the post of Assistant Administrator for the Bureau for External Relations and one of the posts of Director, Regional Bureau) and 10 posts at the D-2 level.

On 18 June,⁽⁶²⁾ the Council endorsed the Administrator's proposals with regard to the senior management structure of UNDP, especially those maintaining the level of posts of Directors of Regional Bureaux, Director of the Bureau for Programme Policy and Evaluation and Director of the Bureau for Finance and Administration at the ASG level, with the exception of the proposal to downgrade the post of Director, Regional Bureau of Arab States from ASG to the D-2 level. He was asked to review the senior management structure and report to the Council in 1994.

Office of Project Services

As part of the second phase of the restructuring of the United Nations Secretariat, the Secretary-General created DDSMS, into which he proposed incorporating the functions of OPS.

On 19 February,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Governing Council requested its President to bring to the attention of the General Assembly and the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee its concerns regarding the need to consider the Council's continuing role in relation to OPS; the need for OPS to maintain its autonomy and improve its effectiveness and efficiency; the financial, administrative and personnel implications for the UNDP budget; and the need to ensure the maximum delegation of authority to the resident coordinator for implementing OPS activities.

General Assembly consideration. Following Fifth Committee consideration of a March report of the Secretary-General,⁽⁸⁵⁾ in which he outlined OPS functions and indicated that he had established a task force to review procedures for incorporating OPS into DDSMS on 1 January 1994, the Assembly, on 6 May, adopted resolution 47/212 B, in which it noted that the modalities for integrating OPS into DDSMS would first be considered by the UNDP Governing Council and then by the Assembly, in the light of the work of the Secretary-General's task force.

Governing Council consideration. By a June note,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted the report of his task force on OPS to the Governing Council. The task force defined the mandate, functions and governance of and the basic authorities for OPS, which would be a semi-autonomous and self-financing body within DDSMS. It proposed the establishment of an OPS management board reporting to the Governing Council and the General Assembly.

The UNDP Administrator, in a June report,⁽⁸⁷⁾ discussed the task force's recommendations and addressed the Council's concerns, raised in February. It recommended that the Council endorse the modalities for the transfer of OPS as set out by the task force and approved by the Secretary-General.

On 18 June,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Council noted that its present supervisory responsibilities for OPS and those of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, including the Council's responsibility for approving the OPS administrative budget, would remain unchanged. It underlined the continuing need for transparent reporting on OPS activities, including through annual financial statements and audit reports. The Council requested the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on steps taken to integrate DDSMS and OPS functions and to eliminate duplication between them. It accepted the modalities for the transfer, as outlined by the task force, subject to a number of requirements and on the understanding that the modalities would be further clarified prior to the transfer, and that 1 January 1994 should be regarded as a target date pending review by the General Assembly. The Council drew attention to the fact that ACABQ had requested the Secretary-General to report on the modalities before 1 January 1994, including information on how conditions of operation were to be met. ACABQ believed that the primary focus should be on resolving issues prior to implementation rather than on a predetermined target date.⁽⁶¹⁾ The requirements cited by the Council were that: OPS had to have the maximum possible degree of autonomy; it should continue to work closely with UNDP, in particular maintaining close links with resident representatives; it should further develop collaboration with other parts of the United Nations system, particularly the specialized agencies; and it should maintain its high level of expertise and staff commitment, remain self-financing, have the freedom to utilize the most cost-effective central services, retain and improve its rules of procurement and have the power to negotiate and conclude agreements for its implementation services.

The Council supported the continuing role to be played by UNDP in developing management service agreements and stressed that OPS should not develop fund-raising capacities. The Administrator, together with DDSMS and other relevant bodies, was requested to prepare a timetable for the OPS transfer, and the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Administrator, was asked to address the Council's concerns, expressed in its requirements for accepting the modalities, in the context of the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995. He was also asked, in cooperation with the Administrator, to present by 1 September 1993 detailed information regarding staffing arrangements.

The Administrator, in collaboration with the Secretary-General, was asked to convene informal consultations on the modalities prior to their consideration by the Assembly. The Council decided to reconvene for a one-day special session to make recommendations on the modalities detailed in the programme budget for 1994-1995, also prior to Assembly consideration. It decided to review the impact of the OPS transfer on UNDP activities and functions in 1994, on the basis of a report by the Administrator, and to review the implementation of OPS staffing arrangements in 1995, on the basis of a report by the Secretary General.

Secretary-General's report. In an October/November report,⁽⁸⁹⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on the institutional and administrative arrangements governing the integration of UNDP/OPS into DDSMS. The Secretary-General addressed the Governing Council's concerns, as cited in its 18 June decision, as requirements for accepting the modalities for the transfer, including its request for detailed information on staffing arrangements. He noted that a detailed report on integration of implementation functions would be submitted to the Council in 1994.

Commenting in November on the Secretary-General's report,⁽⁹⁰⁾ ACABQ questioned the viability of the 1 January 1994 integration date and recommended to the Assembly that it take place on 1 January 1995. The Secretary-General was requested to submit a report to ACABQ's spring 1994 session on all modalities and working arrangements, in particular those which remained to be resolved, and include an operational budget, based on the merger of the portfolios of UNDP/OPS and DDSMS, with a clear indication of the personnel to be drawn from the existing UNDP/OPS and DDSMS. The report should also include information on the projected magnitude of the OPS portfolio and its internal organization.

In decision 48/459 of 23 December, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the Secretary-General's report⁽⁸⁹⁾ to its resumed session.

Governing Council consideration (special session). In accordance with its 18 June decision on

OPS,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Governing Council reconvened for a special session on 16 December to consider the question of the integration of OPS into DDSMS. It had before it the Secretary-General's report on institutional and administrative arrangements governing the transfer⁽⁸⁹⁾ and ACABQ's report on the issue.⁽⁹⁰⁾

On 16 December,⁽⁹¹⁾ the Council recommended that OPS remain within UNDP until 1 January 1995 and decided to review the modalities for its transfer to DDSMS. It requested the OPS Management Board to clarify further the arrangements for the transfer and asked the Council President to inform the President of the General Assembly of its decision. The Secretary-General was requested to report to the Council as soon as possible on steps taken to clarify the modalities for the transfer.

Proposal on the location of UNDP

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽⁹²⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on a proposal to relocate UNDP and UNFPA headquarters from New York to Bonn, Germany,⁽⁹³⁾ including its potential impact on the United Nations system and Member States, and its programme-related, budgetary, legal and administrative implications. The report stated that UNDP had held discussions with Germany, the United States and the United Nations Secretariat on Germany's proposal to host at Bonn the headquarters of UNDP, its affiliated funds and UNFPA. The Secretary-General had also requested the views of UNDP Member States on the impact of the proposed move for the United Nations system. As at 20 May 1993, the Secretary-General had received replies from or on behalf of 46 States. Of those, 41 indicated negative implications of relocation, 3 indicated positive implications, while 2 considered it too early to give a definitive response.

As for the impact of the relocation on Member States, by 23 March 1993, replies had been received from 72 States, including a common position taken by the 35 members of the Alliance of Small Island States and by 9 South Pacific Forum United Nations Members. Four Member States that replied in favour cited advantages ranging from better communications and proximity to German Federal Ministries and the North-South Centre at Bonn, to shorter travel distance to European capitals and Africa. A total of 58 States saw only disadvantages to relocating, stating that it would hamper developing countries in their efforts to interact with UNDP and UNIFEM. They also cited the lack of representation in Germany and Europe; functional difficulties for their representatives covering the General Assembly's Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council, UNDP and UNFPA; and financial burdens ranging from opening new missions or maintaining some form of diplomatic presence in Bonn to increased travel expenditures. Four States saw both advantages and disadvantages, and seven States were neutral on the issue.

With regard to programme-related, budgetary, legal and administrative implications, the Administrator reported that consultations were held within the United Nations system and with the German Government, and an inter-secretariat working group had been established to identify indicative costs and issues to be addressed. The working group concluded that there would be major human resource implications, some programme-related implications not yet fully identified or elaborated on, and a range of other issues and implications requiring further study. There were also constraints relating to services currently provided to UNDP and UNFPA by the United Nations Secretariat in New York and the related impact on the United Nations budget. Additionally, the German offer would require further elaboration regarding specific buildings or alternative options; the transition costs, which at 1992 prices could range from $88 million to $125 million; the possible savings in current expenditure, which could range from $10.1 million to $14.4 million per annum; and implications that might arise from the restructuring process within the United Nations.

On 16 June,⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Council recalled with appreciation Germany's proposal to host the headquarters of UNDP, of its affiliated funds and of UNFPA at Bonn from 1996 onwards. In the context of the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations system in the economic, social and related fields, it invited those Member States that had not yet transmitted their views on the proposal to do so prior to its next session. The Council also invited Member States to continue to review the Administrator's report on the issue and decided to consult further on the matter at its 1994 session.

Coordination with other organizations

In response to a 1992 Governing Council request,⁽⁹²⁾ the Administrator, in March, submitted a report on multilateral coordination and complementarity.⁽⁹⁵⁾ He stated that the role of UNDP and of multilateral financial institutions had changed significantly, and that the division of labour provided in their mandates regarding activities at the country level was no longer clear. At the global level, there was a trade-off for UNDP between greater decentralization of its programmes and participation in global initiatives.

The report suggested two possible approaches for dealing with the issue: one would be based on a new division of labour, involving a redefinition of the functions and responsibilities of each agency, by sector and region, and the other, based on competition, while stressing the need for coordination and complementarity, would involve the acceptance of the idea of a market in technical cooperation services. To contribute to a rational and effective use of technical cooperation by recipient countries, it was imperative that UNDP develop cost-effective and flexible modalities for programming and designing technical cooperation. Its relationship with multilateral financial institutions should therefore not be adversarial nor overly accommodating, but should be based on the best use of its comparative advantages, in particular those derived from its field presence in virtually all countries. It should develop its in-house analytical and policy advisory capacity, strengthen the information network and build a roster of consultants of high calibre. It should review existing collaborative arrangements and improve the effectiveness of its operations. UNDP should collaborate with other United Nations agencies in identifying its comparative advantages as a basis for redefining relationships with multilateral financial institutions. Within the United Nations system itself, the agencies and UNDP should forge a new alliance to support national development strategies.

By a 17 June decision,⁽⁸⁾ the Council took note of the Administrator's report.

Other technical cooperation

UN programmes

The newly created DDSMS, established as part of the restructuring of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, incorporated the technical cooperation functions of the former Department of Economic and Social Development, created in 1992.⁽¹⁾ The reorganization was designed to sharpen the focus and enhance the impact of United Nations technical cooperation. Other organizational entities engaged in providing technical cooperation assistance during 1993 included the regional commissions, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and UNCTAD.

In 1993, the organizational entities of the United Nations delivered a technical cooperation programme of $209 million, compared with $243 million in 1992.

DDSMS activities

In his annual report to the UNDP Governing Council on technical cooperation activities,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in 1993 DDSMS had more than 700 technical cooperation projects under execution in a dozen substantive sectors, with a total project expenditure of some $126 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $63.5 million; those by trust funds, $42.5 million; by UNFPA, $12.1 million and by the United Nations regular programme of technical cooperation, $8.2 million.

On a geographical basis, the DDSMS-executed programme included expenditures of $55.2 million in Africa; $28.6 million in Asia and the Pacific; $23.2 million for interregional and global programmes; $12.1 million in Arab States; $6.1 million in the Americas; and $1.1 million in Europe. Project delivery in Africa remained the largest, with a 44 per cent share of total delivery.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: natural resources and energy planning, $29.9 million; development policies and planning, $24.8 million; sustainable development and environmental management, $17.4 million; statistics, $14.9 million; governance and public administration, $12.9 million; public finance and enterprise management, $6.4 million; population, $6 million; United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, $5.3 million; human resources and social development, $4.4 million; national execution and capacity-building, $2.1 million; advisory services and training, $1.6 million; and social development, $0.5 million. Of the total of $126.3 million, natural resources and energy planning comprised 24 per cent; development policies and planning, 20 per cent; and sustainable development, 14 per cent.

On 18 June,⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the 1992 technical cooperation activities of the United Nations.⁽¹⁾ It stressed the need to improve the technical focus of DDSMS, especially through the United Nations regular programme of technical cooperation, and encouraged the Department to help strengthen national capacities for programme management, execution and implementation. The Council requested DDSMS to improve its preparation and appraisal of projects and its capacity-building techniques and to ensure that its activities were undertaken with full attention to the 1992 General Assembly resolution on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development in the United Nations system,⁽⁴⁾ particularly to the functions and responsibilities of recipient Governments and resident coordinators. It stressed the importance of clarifying the division of labour between DDSMS and other United Nations organs dealing with technical cooperation, especially UNDP, and requested the Administrator to report to the Council in 1994 on progress made in coordination. The Secretary-General was requested to provide a more analytical review of DDSMS technical cooperation.

United Nations Volunteers

In a report on UNV for the biennium 1992-1993,⁽⁵⁾ the Administrator stated that an average of 3,500 assignments had been undertaken each year, with over 2,000 ongoing at any given moment. On 31 December 1993, 2,085 UNV specialists were serving the Organization. The major focus of UNV activities remained unchanged (classic technical cooperation activities, community-based initiatives, peace-related activities, humanitarian relief and rehabilitation), but were now interrelated due to the interlocking nature of relief, peace-building and development activities. The UNV approach was to support the efforts of low-income and vulnerable community groups. Its closeness to the local level of resources, knowledge and experience was its chief distinguishing characteristic.

In his annual report covering 1993,⁽⁶⁾ the Administrator stated that UNV participation in humanitarian relief activities was very significant during 1993; by the end of the year, 300 UNV specialists had served in humanitarian programmes in 34 countries. In the areas of peace-building and the electoral process, 465 volunteers from 45 countries, serving as district electoral supervisors under the auspices of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (see PART

TWO, Chapter III), prepared for and administered the elections in Cambodia. In Mozambique, 105 UNVs working under the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (see PART TWO, Chapter I) assisted in the demobilization process, the registration of demobilized soldiers and the coordination of humanitarian assistance at the provincial level.

At the policy level, with the evolution of United Nations responsibilities, volunteer roles had proved to be particularly appropriate in the areas of peace-building and humanitarian relief. UNV had elaborated a strategic approach for the period 1993 to 1996 and was giving focus and relevance to its programme through identification with the special volunteer perspective and style of operation, derived from its solid base at the community level. UNV priorities were to mobilize resources from all sources, widen the range of UNV partners to involve local community groups, local governments and municipalities, development banks, and national and international NGOs, and make use of a full spectrum of assignment periods ranging from three months to a cumulative total of six years.

With regard to funding sources, the Administrator stated that the decline in UNDP's share of total resources (primarily IPFs), which had fallen from 70.1 per cent in 1991 to an estimated 49.9 per cent in 1993, pointed to the need for greater awareness of UNV's relevance to the more focused country programmes funded by UNDP. He considered UNV to be an essential instrument in furthering the overall UNDP objective of promoting sustainable human development and, in that context, UNV would also be able to draw on many non-IPF resources. UNDP would continue to work with UNV in seeking additional financial support for its Domestic Development Services programme. Contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund (SVF) had increased but remained modest. The level of SVF-supported activity was constrained by its inability to commit funds beyond actual cash in hand. The Administrator proposed that UNV be authorized to commit funds, on a fully funded basis, on receipt of written pledges rather than on receipt of the funds, so as to facilitate higher programme delivery and provide more accurate information on the utilization of funds for existing and potential donors.

UNISTAR

The Administrator, in a report on the United Nations International Short-Term Advisory Resources (UNISTAR) programme for 1991-1993,⁽⁷⁾ stated that, with effect from 1 June 1993, he had merged UNISTAR with UNV. UNISTAR, which provided short-term, highly specialized volunteer services to the private and public sectors of developing countries, would now serve as the UNV focal point for entrepreneurship promotion and development. The merger enabled UNISTAR to expand its activities beyond its present programme countries and focus in support of the broader spectrum of sustainable human development.

During the reporting period, UNISTAR completed 518 volunteer assignments to private and State-owned enterprises and government institutions in 41 countries. The services contributed were equivalent to more than $7 million in technical cooperation. Asia, Europe and CIS were the fastest-growing regions for UNISTAR cooperation. Activities during the reporting period included helping India to investigate new product uses and outlets for jute and assisting Mongolia in drafting its first company law and in introducing the concept of mutual funds through its stock exchange. At the enterprise level, it assisted printers, furniture makers, food processors and garment manufacturers, and organized workshops for enterprises too small to afford its services. It was also advising Governments and business associations on developing indigenous UNISTAR programmes.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1993,⁽⁸⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) had increased and high priority was being given to the TCDC modality. Promotional and operational activities supported by the system were increasing, as were financial contributions for TCDC from national budgets of developing countries.

The sensitization to TCDC was being expanded through a training-of-trainers approach at the national, regional and subregional levels, targeting private and public sector development professionals and United Nations development system staff. Orientation on the TCDC modality was also provided as part of other promotional activities, and information activities were strengthened through a number of publications, such as the magazine Cooperation South and the TCDC newsletter Focus. Two regional workshops (Asia/Pacific and Africa) were held to develop further the role of focal points in promoting and advising on the application of TCDC. Updating of the TCDC-INRES database on available capacities and expertise gathered momentum, and software was redesigned to offer greater compatibility with other database systems. Capacities and needs-matching consultations, aimed at enhancing the exchange of technical capacities between developing countries, were held in Bangladesh, Nigeria, Uganda and Zimbabwe. In the area of intercountry networking, a study of resource mobilization through aid cooperation covering nine countries in Latin America and the Caribbean was coordinated by Chile, and a network arrangement in inter-university cooperation on policy research, coordinated by the Addis Ababa University (Ethiopia), was launched.

Action by Committee on TCDC

The eighth session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries was held in New York from 25 to 28 May and on 4 June 1993.⁽⁸⁾

The Committee had before it the following: a review of progress in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC⁽⁹⁾ and decisions taken by the High-level Committee on the Plan of Action;⁽¹⁰⁾ a report covering several TCDC issues (the Expert Group Meeting on TCDC held at Rabat, Morocco, on 10 and 11 February 1993; the extent to which the recommendations of the 1990 report, The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission, pertaining to TCDC, could be implemented; the preparation of guidelines to review policies and procedures of the United Nations development system concerning TCDC; and intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC);⁽¹¹⁾ a report on developing a TCDC strategy in the United Nations development system;⁽¹²⁾ and a report on staffing the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC.⁽¹³⁾

On 4 June, the Committee adopted three decisions. Regarding progress in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Committee encouraged Governments and United Nations organizations to improve the methodology for reporting on progress and requested its Bureau to adjust the dates for submission of information by Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental organizations. Developing countries and United Nations organizations were invited to examine, for possible inclusion in their activities, the recommendations of the South Commission. The Committee called on United Nations organizations to apply, on an experimental basis, ACC guidelines for reviewing policies and procedures in the United Nations, in particular those relating to refinement and improvement, and called on ACC to monitor their implementation.

In a decision on an overall framework for promoting and applying TCDC in the 1990s,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Committee welcomed the development of such a strategy⁽¹²⁾ and called on all parties to implement it as a priority. It expressed reservations about the proposed establishment of an inter-regional fund to finance the foreign exchange components of TCDC and requested the UNDP Administrator to consult Governments on the matter and report on the outcome. It also encouraged consideration of regional and subregional mechanisms to support countries in implementing the strategy. The Committee requested developing countries and United Nations organizations to strengthen their focal points for TCDC by appointing them appropriate status and providing adequate staff and resources. It recognized the importance and potential for TCDC in countries with economies in transition and invited interested developed countries and donors to support the TCDC modality through their respective bilateral and trilateral arrangements. It expressed concern over the financial constraints affecting UNDP, including the decrease in the SPR allocation for TCDC, and invited the UNDP Governing Council to ensure that the increasing work of the Special Unit for TCDC was not adversely affected. It also invited UNDP to maintain the approved SPR allocation for TCDC for the 1992-1996 cycle so as to ensure implementation of the Special Unit's activities. The Committee urged United Nations organizations, in particular UNDP, to increase their support of TCDC activities and improve financing mechanisms, including regional, interregional and global resources, and called on developed and developing countries to increase their support of TCDC.

By its third decision,⁽¹⁶⁾ the High-level Committee approved the agenda for its ninth (1995) session.

On 18 June,⁽¹⁷⁾ the UNDP Governing Council noted the report of the High-level Committee and requested the Administrator to facilitate implementation of its decisions.

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/307, took note of the Committee report.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in October, submitted a report on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries.⁽¹⁹⁾ He stated that United Nations organizations had reported an increased emphasis on TCDC as reflected in the large number of promotional and operational TCDC activities supported by them, including activities facilitating the participation of women. They had also adopted, or were in the process of adopting, policies to accelerate the use of the TCDC modality. Through its Special Unit for TCDC, UNDP had adopted a multi-pronged approach to promoting TCDC and had increased its collaboration with United Nations agencies. The new subprogrammes prepared in the context of the overall strategy for the 1990s would cover compilation and dissemination of information on successful TCDC; identification of institutions in developing countries that had successfully applied the TCDC modality; expansion of the database on technical expertise and capacities of developing country institutions; funding training activities and networking or twinning arrangements; strengthening institutions to serve as centres of excellence; and assistance in developing strategies, policies and procedures for promoting TCDC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/172 without vote.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and 46/159 of 19 December 1991, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/41 of 30 July 1992,

Stressing that technical cooperation among developing countries remains a key element in international cooperation, that it has a complementary role with respect to other forms of international technical cooperation and that its final purpose is to promote economic growth and development, in particular human resource development, utilizing the capacities of developing countries,

Reaffirming also that, while developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting and implementing technical cooperation among themselves, the United Nations system and developed countries should assist and support such activities, and that the United Nations system should continue to play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical cooperation among developing countries, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

Taking note with satisfaction of the statement in the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 45/159 that the organizations of the United Nations system had reported an increased emphasis on activities in technical cooperation among developing countries and that nearly all of the responding organizations had reported having adopted or being in the process of adopting policies to accelerate the use of the modality of such cooperation, and stressing the role of the operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council in monitoring the use of this modality,

1. Endorses the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries on its eighth session and the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee in annex I of its report;

2. Urges all Member States, in particular the developed countries among them, the United Nations Development Programme and other programmes and bodies whose work is related to that of the Economic and Social Council, as well as the specialized agencies, to give high priority and full support in their specific fields of operational activities to technical cooperation among developing countries, in the fields of, inter alia, science and technology, transfer of technology, capacity-building, education and technical training and know-how;

3. Requests all parties involved in the implementation of the strategy for the promotion and application of technical cooperation among developing countries in the 1990s, as referred to in the report of the High-level Committee, to ensure the widespread use of such cooperation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the implementation of technical cooperation among developing countries in the United Nations development system and on the follow-up to the present resolution.

UN Capital Development Fund

During 1993, an estimated $45.6 million in resources was made available to UNCDF, a multi-lateral agency providing small-scale assistance to officially designated LDCs and other countries regarded as LDCs. The total comprised $31.5 million in voluntary contributions, a $7.2 million reduction in operational reserve, $5.8 million in other income, and $800,000 in loan repayments. A further $90.5 million was available from previous years.

Resources used during the year totalled $59 million, including $53.6 million in project expenditures, $4.4 million in administrative expenditures and $1 million in technical support costs.

Nineteen new projects were approved for Bhutan (2), Burundi, Cambodia, Guinea, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali (2), Mauritania (4), Mozambique, the Niger and Yemen, and 3 inter-regional projects. The total value of projects approved by UNCDF in 1993 was $36.9 million.

In his annual report for 1993,(1) the Administrator stated that UNCDF had launched its new programme approach, emphasizing partnership with local governments and institutions and geographical concentration in the provision of infrastructure, micro-credit and local development funds. It had also channelled resources directly to local governing bodies and had empowered local communities with decision-making authority. To adjust to the UNDP-wide resource constraints, completed projects were closed, with savings reverting to general resources. A comprehensive review of the pipeline for new projects led to its reduction by approximately 32 per cent over the next two to four years. At the same time, the Fund had been exploiting new avenues for resource mobilization, including the establishment of regional trust funds and increased contact with foundations and associations of local authorities. However, these initiatives could not substitute for core contributions in enabling UNCDF to fulfil its mandate.

In response to a 1981 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Administrator submitted his biennial policy review of the operations of UNCDF for the period 1991-1992.⁽³⁾

On 18 June,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council noted that the implementation of a partial funding formula had allowed for the highest level ever of programming in 1991 and a record level of programme expenditure in 1992. It was, however, concerned that the commitment capacity of UNCDF would be impaired by current funding trends, including the continuing decline in voluntary contributions. The Council invited the Administrator to mobilize additional resources, to cooperate more closely with other multilateral financing institutions and to submit recommendations to the Council in 1994. It endorsed the Administrator's proposal to continue the loan facility within UNCDF and invited him to submit an outline of his plans for the Fund's future in 1995, including identification of any potential reorientation of the Fund's original mandate and preservation of its autonomy and identity. It renewed its appeal for voluntary financial support to UNCDF so that it could continue to respond to the growing needs of its recipient countries.

Chapter III

Special economic and humanitarian assistance

In 1993, the United Nations continued to respond to the escalation of complex emergencies and humanitarian situations worldwide. The Economic and Social Council considered the coordination of humanitarian assistance and adopted recommendations to strengthen delivery. The General Assembly endorsed those conclusions and emphasized the leadership role of the Secretary-General, through the Emergency Relief Coordinator, in coordinating coherent and timely responses to humanitarian emergencies. It requested the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to ensure the availability of adequate resources for rapid and coordinated responses (resolution 48/57).

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme reviewed the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s. The Assembly called on the international community to pursue vigorously its responsibilities under the New Agenda and to support fully the African effort (48/214). The agencies of the United Nations system provided emergency disaster relief and other humanitarian assistance to various countries in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America.

The Assembly decided to convene the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction at Yokohama, Japan, from 23 to 27 May 1994 (48/188).

Special economic assistance

In 1993, the United Nations continued to mobilize and provide special economic assistance to a number of developing countries facing severe economic problems, often caused by armed conflict, civil strife or natural disasters.

Critical situation in AfricaNew Agenda for the Development of Africa

United Nations organizations continued to implement the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in 1991.⁽¹⁾ The Panel of High-Level Personalities on African Development, appointed by the Secretary-General in 1992⁽²⁾ to assist and advise him on the implementation of the New Agenda, held its second meeting at Rome, Italy, on 17 and 18 April 1993. The Panel reviewed implementation of the New Agenda and coordination of the activities of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), Governments and the United Nations system. A third meeting (New York, 2 and 3 December) focused on long-term development in Africa, security and development, and regional integration and cooperation. It also discussed the diversification of African economies and the feasibility of a diversification fund. Japan hosted the Tokyo International Conference on African Development (5 and 6 October). The Conference adopted the Tokyo Declaration on African Development, pledging to give further impetus to economic and political reforms adopted by African countries.

UNCTAD action. In March,⁽³⁾ the Trade and Development Board (TDB) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), in response to the commitment made at UNCTAD VIII in 1992,⁽⁴⁾ discussed issues relating to the New Agenda as well as regional integration and technical cooperation issues. It considered reports of the UNCTAD Secretary-General on regional integration issues in Africa⁽⁵⁾ and UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities in that region.⁽⁶⁾

TDB observed that Africa risked further marginalization if it did not pursue cooperation and regional integration. It stressed the importance of strengthening regional infrastructures and harmonizing policies, and urged the international community to increase its financial support for regional integration projects. It also urged the UNCTAD secretariat to be closely associated with the Tokyo International Conference on African Development.

The Board called for an evaluation of UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities to improve their effectiveness and to reflect the priorities of African countries. It suggested that African countries should intensify their collaboration with UNCTAD and use the round-table forum to broaden the dialogue on regional cooperation projects. It recommended that greater efforts be made to mobilize resources for UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities, as well as for projects supporting technical cooperation among developing countries. It stressed the need to continue the African multi-lateral trade negotiations project beyond the con-elusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART THREE, Chapter IV). The Board suggested that there should be closer dialogue between Africa and its development partners, similar to that organized by the Southern African Development Community, and greater collaboration with the Global Coalition for Africa.

The Board requested the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget to strengthen UNCTAD's Africa Unit.

UNDP action. In response to a 1992 decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)⁽⁷⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted in April 1993 a report⁽⁸⁾ on UNDP's role in the implementation of the New Agenda. The report explained UNDP's integrated approach to African development and outlined the thrust of its interventions and plans for strengthening future support.

On 18 June⁽⁹⁾ the Governing Council asked the Administrator to contribute fully to the implementation of the New Agenda and to strengthen coordination with the United Nations system and with the Office of the Special Coordinator of Assistance to Africa and the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) in particular. It called on African countries to follow up on the New Agenda to achieve sustainable growth and development, to promote cooperation and regional and subregional integration, to intensify the process of democratization, to encourage investment, and to integrate population issues into the development process. The Council called on the international community to help African countries by solving the African debt crisis, providing adequate resource flows, diversifying African economies, enhancing market access and supporting regional integration. It appealed for increased contributions to cover the projected shortfall in resources for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996), and encouraged UNDP to focus its National Long-Term Perspective Studies and African Capacity-Building Initiative on a holistic and coordinated approach to development. The Council welcomed the Capacity 21 initiative to support UNDP's follow-up to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), and called on the Administrator to continue implementing UNCED's Agenda 21,⁽¹⁰⁾ inter alia, in the context of the elaboration of the International Convention on Drought and Desertification. The Council asked the Administrator to work closely with the Department of Humanitarian Affairs to ensure effective and coordinated responses to emergency situations in Africa and to encourage a rapid transition from emergencies to rehabilitation and sustainable development. It also requested UNDP to support regional and subregional cooperation and integration in Africa to enhance the efficiency of the related institutions.

In a later report on implementation of the New Agenda⁽¹¹⁾ the Administrator stated that during 1993 UNDP supported the Secretary-General's Panel of High-Level Personalities, provided follow-up and monitoring of networks, strengthened mechanisms for policy dialogue on Africa, reinforced the capacity of the Special Coordinator of Assistance to Africa and LDCs in New York, and supported the Africa Recovery magazine. In collaboration with Japan and Indonesia, it co-sponsored follow-up workshops to the Tokyo International Conference on African Development (see above). It also supported the establishment of the African Economic Community and the strengthening of selected subregional bodies and programmes.

UNDP's National Long-Term Perspective Studies Programme became operational, with programmes in a number of African countries. By the end of 1993, the African Capacity-Building Foundation, which managed donor funds, was aiding training institutions in Benin, Guinea, Nigeria and Zimbabwe, and operational work was under way in other countries. UNDP was supporting 24 countries in political transition and was developing a programme for sustainable political systems and better governance as the basis for continued UNDP backing. It also provided humanitarian assistance and support for economic reforms, private sector development, aid coordination, human resources development and the environment.

The number of UNDP projects for Africa was reduced significantly during 1993, but the volume of resources executed by national authorities continued to grow. At the end of 1993, over $50 million in project funds were approved for national execution, compared with $32 million in 1992.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a September report⁽¹²⁾ submitted the first preliminary assessment of the New Agenda since its adoption in 1991. The report focused on global factors relevant to the Agenda's successful implementation; reviewed major support of African socio-economic recovery and development; analysed specific concerns within the African region; and outlined action to reinforce implementation.

Major action in support of the New Agenda in 1993 included the second meeting of the Panel of High-Level Personalities on African Development, the Tokyo Conference on African Development and adoption of the Tokyo Declaration, and revitalization of the Inter-Agency Task Force on African Recovery and Development. Several bilateral creditors provided debt relief to support economic growth, environmental management and poverty alleviation programmes. Multilateral financial assistance was provided by the World Bank Group, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the African Development Bank (AfDB), the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and the European Community. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) contributed towards food security through early-warning and disaster-preparedness projects, and, on behalf of the Secretary-General, undertook a feasibility study on the establishment of a $50 million-$75 million Diversification Facility for African Commodities⁽¹³⁾ It was proposed that the Facility be set up in AfDB for an initial period of three to four years. Assistance was also provided in the areas of education and training, the African Capacity-Building Initiative, national shelter strategies, the environment and population. United Nations agencies, particularly UNCTAD, took action to promote regional economic cooperation and integration.

The Secretary-General, in October⁽¹⁴⁾ submitted a study on overall resource flows to Africa and proposed ways of mobilizing additional resources in the 1990s.

In a January report to the Commission for Social Development on the critical social situation in Africa⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General identified obstacles to implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,⁽¹⁶⁾ and the major social development issues facing Africa, including their impact on women, youth and refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/214 without vote.

United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Also reaffirming its resolution 45/253 of 21 December 1990 on programme planning, in which the economic recovery and development of Africa are spelt out as one of the five overall priorities reflected in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,

Recalling its resolutions 45/178 A to C of 19 December 1990 and 45/200 of 21 December 1990 on the critical economic situation in Africa and on African commodity problems, respectively,

Reaffirming the importance of addressing the challenges facing African agricultural sectors, inter alia, drought, desertification, land degradation, locust infestation, land management and incentive structures, so as to achieve African food security as outlined in the New Agenda,

Deeply concerned by the constrained financial resource flows to Africa aggravated by rising debt and debt-service obligations and low private investment flows, and noting that Africa is the only continent experiencing a negative net transfer of resources in the 1990s,

Acknowledging the positive impact of substantive official development assistance transfers to Africa,

Reaffirming also the commitments on resource flows, including private direct investment, as contained in paragraphs 29 and 30 of the New Agenda,

Special assistance to Djibouti

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽¹⁷⁾ submitted in August 1993 a report⁽¹⁸⁾ on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti. He reported that Djibouti's only resources were geothermal energy, which had not been tapped, and fisheries, and that the country's ecosystem was threatened by increasing desertification, soil erosion and groundwater depletion. He noted that Djibouti's transit trade with neighbouring Ethiopia and Somalia made its economy very sensitive to political developments in those countries. The crisis in Ethiopia and the prolonged closure of the border with Somalia had caused trade to shrink between 1989 and 1991, and the situation had been exacerbated by the Persian Gulf crisis, which had caused the collapse of the national airline, Air Djibouti. Other adversities, including increased fuel prices, delays in investment projects and internal conflict, demonstrated an urgent need to diversify the economy. Accordingly, the priorities of the 1991-1995 development plan were to promote the development of infrastructure and human resources.

The report noted also that an influx of refugees had imposed additional burdens on social services, including the education and health systems. Unemployment was high, and there was a shortage of skilled labour. The Government planned to expand primary and secondary education, improve technical vocational training and strengthen planning and management.

The UNDP country programme for Djibouti focused on the development of human resources and infrastructure. Its implementation was, however, delayed by disturbances in the north of the country. United Nations agencies were also planning assistance for the refugees in Djibouti.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 48/198 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/157 of 18 December 1992 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance attached to the follow-up to that Conference,

Aware that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti, which is included in the list of least developed countries, are constrained by the extremes of the local climate, in particular cyclical droughts and torrential rains and floods such as those which occurred in 1989, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of resources that exceed the real capacity of the country,

Noting with concern that the situation in Djibouti has been adversely affected by the evolving critical situation in the Horn of Africa, and noting the presence of over 100,000 refugees and persons displaced from their countries, which has, on the one hand, placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of the country and, on the other, raised serious security concerns,

Noting the critical economic situation of Djibouti resulting from the number of priority development projects that have been suspended in the light of the new critical regional and international situation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling with gratitude the support provided to emergency relief operations during the floods in 1989 by various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Declares its solidarity with the Government and people of Djibouti in the face of the devastating consequences of the torrential rains and floods and the new adverse economic realities of Djibouti resulting, in particular, from the new critical situation in the Horn of Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Djibouti in particular and the Horn of Africa in general;

3. Invites the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, to assist the Government of Djibouti, in the context of the scheduled round-table meeting, in preparing an urgent programme of rehabilitation and reconstruction, as well as a sustainable and adequate long-term development programme;

4. Calls upon all States, all regional and interregional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other intergovernmental agencies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Bank, to provide Djibouti with appropriate assistance, on a bilateral as well as a multilateral basis, to enable it to cope with its special economic difficulties;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a study of the progress made with economic assistance to that country, in time for the question to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 48/198

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/726) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Algeria (for African States), Bahrain, Bangladesh, China, Djibouti, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Suriname and Yemen (A/C.2/48/L.33), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 100.

Namibia

The Secretary-General, in an October report to the General Assembly⁽¹⁹⁾ recalled that the Assembly had in 1991⁽²⁰⁾ endorsed an Economic and Social Council resolution inviting the United Nations system and donor agencies to grant Namibia assistance comparable to that given to LDCs for a number of years immediately after its independence. He noted that the Governing Council of UNDP had granted Namibia "as if" LDC status in 1991, making it eligible for additional assistance from specialized funds and the Special Programme Reserve for LDCs. Under that arrangement, Namibia was eligible for loans on concessional terms and full LDC privileges in United Nations conferences and donor negotiations. The UNDP Trust Fund for Namibia, established in 1989, had successfully completed priority projects in agriculture and rural development, education and training, health and housing. At the end of 1992, the Fund had received contributions of $4.4 million and would continue to co-finance ongoing projects under the first country programme for Namibia (1993-1997). Total indicative planning figure (IPF) resources under that programme amounted to $14.4 million, with Government cost-sharing projected at $1.2 million. The Namibian Government had agreed to a round-table conference and a National Technical Cooperation and Assessment Programme. The United Nations Capital Development Fund and the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office conducted missions to Namibia and identified specific areas for intervention. IFAD was hoping to conclude a $12.5 million loan for livestock development, and AfDB concluded a concessional loan agreement of 36 million rand for education.

However, Namibia was unable to obtain International Development Association (IDA) loans from the World Bank, because the Bank did not recognize its assumed LDC status. The Secretary-General concluded that the United Nations should continue to accord Namibia "as if" LDC status to facilitate its efforts at mobilizing development resources.

The General Assembly, by decision 48/452 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Other economic assistance

Yemen

In July⁽²¹⁾ Yemen informed the Economic and Social Council that the first parliamentary elections since unification in 1990 had been held in April 1993, and the new Government was formulating a general development strategy to deal with its economic problems. The country continued to face heavy burdens on its administrative and financial resources, including those associated with the Persian Gulf war, unification, the return of migrants and refugees from neighbouring countries, the loss of remittances from returnees, and natural disasters. The deficit on its current account balance averaged about 22 per cent of gross domestic product (GDP), Yemen needed large-scale foreign assistance, particularly grants and soft loans, to rectify a deplorable socio-economic situation, and the Government believed that the methodology applied to determine the magnitude and management of aid to the country should be reviewed.

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1992 request of the General Assembly⁽²²⁾ submitted in August 1993⁽²³⁾ a report on assistance to Yemen. He stated that the World Bank and Yemen, in collaboration with UNDP, had developed a $245 million multisectoral emergency recovery programme. The World Bank had so far mobilized $60 million in credits and grants, including $33 million from the World Bank/IDA, $15 million from the United States Agency for International Development and $4.5 million from Germany. UNDP provided $400,000 from Special Programme Resources. Total funds available for the programme amounted to $86 million, leaving a funding gap of $159 million. To date, 55 per cent of the World Bank/IDA funds and 90 per cent of the German funds had been disbursed. Other agencies contributing to the programme were UNICEF, FAO, WFP and UNFPA.

In November, a UNDP representative informed the Assembly's Second Committee that the round-table process had been reactivated and a second meeting was planned to discuss Yemen's financial needs. UNDP and IMF were preparing a programme to strengthen Yemen's economic and financial management and to lay the foundation for sustainable and equitable growth. UNDP was also supporting the rehabilitation and privatization of public enterprises in the southern part of the country, and was working with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Government to develop a free-trade zone.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/58 without vote.

Assistance to Yemen

The Economic and Social Council,

Convinced of the need for further cooperation with Yemen in its efforts, which began with the unification of Yemen and culminated in the holding of the first parliamentary elections in April 1993,

Recognizing that Yemen is one of the least developed countries and that it still faces major economic and social challenges as a result of unification, the return of Yemeni expatriates, the flow of refugees from the Horn of Africa, in particular from Somalia, and recent natural disasters,

Taking into consideration previous resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other international organizations in this regard, in particular Assembly resolutions 45/193 and 45/222 of 21 December 1990, 46/174 of 19 December 1991 and 47/179 of 22 December 1992, and Council resolutions 1990/65 of 26 July 1990, 1991/62 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/61 of 31 July 1992,

Bearing in mind the letter dated 2 July 1993 from the representative of Yemen to the United Nations Office at Geneva addressed to the Secretary-General,

Having heard the oral report on assistance to Yemen made on behalf of the Secretary-General at the 38th plenary meeting, on 21 July 1993, by the representative of the United Nations Development Programme,

1. Encourages the international community to respond actively to the needs of Yemen, and requests donor States to continue to provide assistance on a bilateral and multilateral basis, with a view to enabling Yemen to address the emergency situation;

2. Calls upon Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, as well as financial institutions, to provide assistance to the Government of Yemen in its reconstruction and development efforts;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts and requests him to continue to coordinate the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system with a view to intensifying their cooperation with and their assistance to Yemen, in order to assist Yemen in the mobilization of its own resources;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994 a written report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.
