GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/195 without vote.

Assistance to Yemen

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling its resolutions 45/193 and 45/222 of 21 December 1990, 46/174 of 19 December 1991 and 47/179 of 22 December 1992 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/62 of 26 July 1991, taking note of Council resolution 1993/58 of 29 July 1993, and recalling decisions 91/19 and 91/20 of 25 June 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Stressing the importance of implementing all relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions, and relevant decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the implementation of all relevant resolutions and to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a comprehensive report on that implementation.

General Assembly resolution 48/195

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/726) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); 3-nation draft (A/C.2/48/L.29); agenda item 100.

States affected by sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

In 1992,⁽²⁴⁾ and in 1993 by resolution 820(1993), the Security Council imposed an arms embargo against the territory of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and a comprehensive set of mandatory trade and economic sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). In 1992, the Council had agreed that appropriate consideration should be given to the special economic problems of States resulting from sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, and invited the Secretary-General to consult with the heads of international financial institutions, other components of the United Nations system and Member States and to report to the Council⁽²⁵⁾ On 18 June 1993, the Council, by resolution 843(1993), confirmed that its Committee on the former Yugoslavia⁽²⁶⁾ was entrusted with examining requests for assistance and invited it to make recommendations to the President of the Council for appropriate action. By July 1993, Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, Slovakia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uganda and Ukraine had requested consultations with the Council and had provided information regarding their special economic problems as a result of the sanctions.

Albania reported that, in addition to direct economic losses, the country's capacity to respond to new market-oriented incentives in its economic programme had been hampered by the sanctions. Total estimated losses to its economy were between $300 million and $400 million. Bulgaria said that by the end of 1992, its economy had suffered losses amounting to $1.2 billion in the areas of industry, trade, transport, energy, tourism and construction, and for the period May to December 1993 it estimated losses of $1.9 billion. Hungary reported that, in addition to economic difficulties stemming from the sanctions, restrictions on navigation on the Danube River were particularly serious. It estimated that since May 1992 it had incurred losses of $800 million. Romania stated that by the end of 1992, direct and indirect losses to its economy since the beginning of the sanctions totalled about $7 billion. The sanctions had seriously affected all branches of the economy, including industry, transport, agriculture and tourism. The social costs included increasing unemployment, a lack of consumer goods and migration of the labour force. Uganda stated that following the imposition of sanctions, work on the construction of the Mityana-Fort Portal road in western Uganda by a Yugoslav construction company had come to a standstill. Uganda requested Council authorization for payments to be made to allow completion of the project.

Ukraine reported discussions with the United Nations concerning reimbursement for heavy losses arising from strict implementation of the sanctions. It drew particular attention to international trade on the Danube and requested a simpler procedure for obtaining transshipment authorization and coordination with the Danube States regarding expansion of the list of articles requiring authorization.

The Committee on Sanctions recommended that the Council appeal to all States to provide immediate technical, financial and material assistance to the affected countries to mitigate the adverse impact on their economies. It also invited competent organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including international financial institutions and regional development banks, to consider how their assistance programmes could alleviate special economic problems arising from the sanctions. It requested the Secretary-General to seek information from States and concerned United Nations organs and agencies on action taken to alleviate those problems.

By a letter of 6 July⁽²⁷⁾ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General of the Committee's recommendations and requested him to implement the actions contained therein.

On 20 September, the General Assembly, by resolution 47/120 B, invited the Council to consider appropriate measures by the United Nations system and international financial institutions to solve the special problems of States arising from the measures imposed by the Council.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Council in December 1992,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported in November 1993⁽²⁹⁾ on the special economic problems of States resulting from the imposition of the sanctions. The report outlined the Council's application of Article 50 of the Charter and deliberations on the issue by other United Nations intergovernmental bodies. It examined the experience gained and summarized replies received by the Secretary-General on the application of Article 50. The Secretary-General concluded that the Council's response to special economic problems resulting from sanctions had been flexible and that that flexibility should be preserved. He proposed measures to improve international responses, including the establishment of a permanent fund or individual trust funds to assist the affected States. He said that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should support the Security Council's appeal for assistance in order to emphasize and enhance the commitment of the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/210 without vote.

Economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,
Recalling the provisions of Articles 25, 48, 49 and 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993 entitled "An Agenda for Peace", and in particular section IV thereof,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 724(1991) of 15 December 1991, 757(1992) of 30 May 1992, 787(1992) of 16 November 1992 and 820(1993) of 17 April 1993, in which the Council decided to impose an arms embargo against the territory of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and a comprehensive set of trade and economic sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Taking note of Security Council resolution 843(1993) of 18 June 1993, in which the Council entrusted the Committee established pursuant to its resolution 724(1991) concerning Yugoslavia with the task of examining requests for assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter, as well as other relevant resolutions,

Commending the efforts of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) aimed at improving the efficiency of its work,

Expressing concern at the special economic problems confronting States and in particular the States that border the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the other Danube riparian States and other States in the region adversely affected by the severance of their economic relations with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the disruption of traditional transport and communications links in that part of Europe,

Noting the information provided by States regarding the measures taken to give full effect to the sanctions as laid down in the relevant Security Council resolutions, as well as the information concerning the special economic problems they have been confronted with as a result of the implementation of those measures,

Recalling the recommendations adopted by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) with regard to the States confronted with special economic problems arising from the application of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) pursuant to Security Council resolutions 757(1992), 787(1992) and 820(1993),

Recognizing that the continued full implementation of Security Council resolutions 713(1991), 724(1991), 757(1992), 760(1992) of 18 June 1992, 787(1992) and 820(1993) by all States will support measures to ensure compliance with these and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to the note by the President of the Security Council regarding the question of special economic problems of States as a result of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Commends the States bordering on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the other Danube riparian States and all other States for the measures they have taken to comply with Security Council resolutions 713(1991), 724(1991), 757(1992), 760(1992), 787(1992) and 820(1993), and urges all States to continue to observe those resolutions strictly;

2. Recognizes the urgent need to assist States in coping with their special economic problems arising from the implementation of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), inter alia, through consideration of assistance for the promotion of the exports of the affected countries and for the promotion of investments in those countries;

3. Supports the recommendations of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) concerning Yugoslavia, in response to requests for assistance received by the Security Council from certain States confronting special economic problems under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, in which the Committee, inter alia:

(a) Appealed to all States on an urgent basis to provide immediate technical, financial and material assistance to the affected States to mitigate the adverse impact on their economies of the application by those States of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) pursuant to Security Council resolutions 757(1992), 787(1992) and 820(1993);

(b) Invited the competent organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including the international financial institutions and the regional development banks, to consider how their assistance programmes and facilities might be helpful to the affected States, with a view to alleviating their special economic problems arising from the application of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) pursuant to Security Council resolutions 757(1992), 787(1992) and 820(1993);

4. Appeals to all States and invites the competent organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to fulfil these recommendations of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991);

5. Requests the Secretary-General to seek on a regular basis information from States and the concerned organs and agencies of the United Nations system on action taken to alleviate the special economic problems of the affected States and to report thereon to the Security Council, as well as to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

On 12 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/205, decided that its coordination segment should consider the theme "Coordination of humanitarian assistance: emergency relief and the continuum to rehabilitation and development" and make recommendations for implementation by the United Nations system.

In response to that decision, the Secretary-General submitted in June a report⁽¹⁾ outlining United Nations efforts to achieve coordinated humanitarian responses that treated relief, rehabilitation and development as an integrated whole. The Council also had before it a statement by the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies⁽²⁾. The Council's conclusions⁽³⁾ emphasized the important leadership role of the Secretary-General, through the Emergency Relief Coordinator, in coordinating coherent and timely responses to major and complex emergencies and natural disasters. It also emphasized the need for Governments, the United Nations system and NGOs to support fully the coordinating role of the Secretariat's Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA). It stressed the need for the Emergency Relief Coordinator to ensure that the humanitarian dimensions of relief assistance were taken fully into account, and called on the operational agencies of the United Nations system to implement, through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC), the agreed division of responsibilities.

The Council also stressed that coordination should be field-oriented, and emphasized the important role of the Emergency Relief Coordinator in facilitating access to emergency areas, coordinating inter-agency needs assessment missions, preparing consolidated appeals and supporting field coordination. It further stressed the importance of adequate financial resources both for relief and for the continuum to development. The Council requested the governing bodies of relevant United Nations organizations to support the implementation of its conclusions.

The Council also made specific recommendations in various operational areas. It recommended, among other things, that: DHA intensify its promotion of disaster preparedness and consider the deployment of an inter-agency emergency response team in situations where there was no United Nations field presence; IASC serve as the primary policy coordinator in complex emergencies and be more action-oriented; DHA consider entrusting primary responsibility in specific complex emergencies to operational agencies, under the overall leadership of the Emergency Relief Coordinator; the Secretary-General review the financial regulations governing the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF) to ensure quick disbursement; the General Assembly increase the size and scope of CERF; consolidated appeals be used selectively for a system-wide response and their projected requirements be realistic; and Governments, United Nations development organizations, the Bretton Woods institutions and regional commissions be involved early in an emergency to ensure that needs assessments took account of rehabilitation and long-term requirements, promoted national capacity-building and helped to prevent and mitigate future emergencies.

The issue was also considered in April by the Administrative Committee on Coordination⁽⁴⁾ whose recommendations were incorporated into the Secretary-General's report⁽¹⁾.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, in November⁽⁶⁾ reported on strengthening the coordination of United Nations humanitarian emergency assistance. The report covered the activities of DHA and IASC, the system's response to disasters and emergencies, information management, and relief, rehabilitation and development efforts.

DHA coordinated responses to an increasing number of emergencies and disasters and established or strengthened mechanisms and procedures to implement Assembly resolutions. It also set up and managed CERF. It continued to adjust its organizational structure and management and coordination mechanisms, including IASC. DHA clarified and rationalized the division of work between its Geneva and New York offices, including the merging of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction secretariat and the Disaster Mitigation Branch. It also proposed integrating the Relief Coordination and Complex Emergencies Branches. DHA also strengthened its cooperation with the operational agencies of the United Nations system, particularly UNDP.

DHA assisted in formulating technical programmes and in channelling external assistance to 18 of the most disaster-prone countries. It helped to launch collective programmes for groups of neighbouring countries with similar needs in Africa, the Andes, Asia, the Mediterranean and the South Pacific. New country-specific programmes were launched in Argentina in 1993. In Asia, the priorities for a new programme of technical cooperation were identified, while in Africa, field missions went to seven of the more disaster-prone countries and a region-wide survey was conducted on the status of national disaster mitigation and future assistance needs.

In the 20 months ending October 1993, DHA addressed 107 disasters worldwide and launched 41 appeals for international assistance. Inter-agency field missions supported national authorities, working closely with the resident coordinator and the disaster management team. DHA provided $1.12 million in emergency grants, established the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination Stand-by Team, which began operating in September 1993, and was preparing operational guidelines for the use of military and civil defence assets to deliver relief assistance following large-scale natural disasters or similar emergencies. DHA was also developing standard operating procedures for a coordinated response to technological disasters, establishing a Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities and incorporating basic specifications for the most frequently used disaster relief items into the stockpile registry.

A dramatic increase in the number and scale of complex emergencies during the year presented new challenges to the United Nations system, particularly DHA. A variety of structures and processes were put in place in different countries to ensure field-level coordination; however, in many cases, intense conflict hampered humanitarian access to those in need. The Secretary-General noted that the financial and human resources available to the United Nations system were insufficient to respond to the increasing number of disasters and emergencies.

DHA was involved in policy coordination and resource mobilization for the clearing of landmines and was collaborating in the establishment of a database on various aspects of the problem. It was also working with the United Nations Security Coordinator to safeguard humanitarian personnel.

In February, DHA established an informal IASC task force on internally displaced persons and took steps to assist displaced persons in the Sudan and Zaire. It was also involved in the establishment of a new emergency operations centre at Geneva.

Central Emergency Revolving Fund. Concerns were expressed during the year about some of the constraints in utilizing CERF and the desirability of strengthening and expanding it. CERF had disbursed a total of $52.6 million since becoming operational in 1992. Of that amount, $22.5 million had been reimbursed and the balance stood at $19.5 million. In response to recommendations of the Economic and Social Council⁽³⁾ DHA advocated the Fund's use for early relief efforts and planned to review its financial regulations to ensure quick disbursements.

Inter-agency coordination. During 1993, IASC provided clear guidelines and made specific policy decisions on a number of substantive issues relating to United Nations responses to complex emergencies in Angola, Somalia, the Sudan and the newly independent States of the former USSR. It also focused on the formulation of system-wide policies and strategies for addressing the problems of internally displaced persons and the relief-rehabilitation continuum. In response to the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council⁽⁴⁾ on its role and activities in coordinating assistance during complex emergencies, IASC agreed that terms of reference should be drafted to enhance its decision-making and follow-up. The first meeting of the IASC Task Force on the Relief-to-Development Continuum (New York, 6 October) established two working groups, the first to discuss a unified definition of the concept and development of a system-wide operational framework, and the second to elaborate a financial strategy.

The Commission on Human Settlements, in May⁽⁵⁾ recommended that the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) play an active role in the work of IASC.

UNDP action. On 18 June⁽⁶⁾ the Governing Council requested UNDP to work closely with the secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction in disaster prevention and mitigation, and to participate in the 1994 World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction. It urged that a more structured working relationship between UNDP and DHA be put into effect as soon as possible. The Council requested the UNDP Administrator to support DHA initiatives to develop an operational framework identifying the roles and responsibilities of all the system's operational entities at the various stages of the relief-to-development continuum.

In his annual report for 1993⁽⁷⁾ the Administrator reported that UNDP took several important steps during the year in the area of the relief-to-development continuum, in collaboration with DHA. It made 54 approvals under the disaster mitigation category of the Special Programme Resources and initiated support for the reintegration of uprooted populations in Cambodia, Djibouti, Kenya, Liberia, Mozambique, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Somalia.

In the area of disaster mitigation, assistance was directed towards coordination, with special emphasis on those activities not covered by other

United Nations agencies. Allocations focused on vulnerability reduction, multisectoral needs assessments for the internally displaced, refugees and returnees, and short-term support to resident coordinators to enhance the field-level coordination of emergency assistance provided by the United Nations system. The main objective was to build the capacity of national disaster-management institutions. It also conducted 15 workshops under its Disaster Management Training Programme, jointly managed with DHA.

UNICEF action. The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) (26 April-7 May)⁽¹⁰⁾ urged that UNICEF country programmes, especially in emergency-prone countries, give increased attention to disaster prevention, preparedness and vulnerability analysis. It recommended that country programmes link rehabilitation to sustainable development programmes; suggested that UNICEF increase the evaluation of its emergency programmes, as well as its participation in system-wide evaluations of those activities; confirmed that its emergency support should be financed primarily from supplementary funds and that, in view of the complementarity of the Emergency Programme Fund (EPF) and CERF, funding from EPF should be used only for rapid responses to emergencies not covered by DHA and CERF. The Board requested the Executive Director to collaborate with DHA and other United Nations agencies providing humanitarian assistance in order to make CERF more accessible to the United Nations development system, and recommended a level of $14 million for EPF for 1994-1995, subject to review.

In a follow-up report⁽¹¹⁾ UNICEF reviewed progress in responding to emergencies in 1993. It provided an overview of UNICEF assistance and discussed its support to the United Nations coordination system, the continuum from relief to development, policy and programme development and humanitarian mandates. It also discussed UNICEF action to streamline its operational procedures and guidelines for responding rapidly and effectively to emergencies. Annexed to the report were a report on UNICEF assistance in support of complex emergencies and details on the utilization of EPF.

Consolidated appeals

Consolidated inter-agency appeals issued or remaining in effect as at 24 September 1993 related to Afghanistan, Angola, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Georgia, Haiti, Iraq, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Mozambique, Rwanda, Somalia, the Sudan, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslavia, southern Africa and Zaire. However, only 56 per cent of their requirements had been met and other funding mechanisms and resource mobilization strategies were being studied. IASC was formulating guidelines to ensure the consistency, effectiveness, field orientation and priority focus of the appeals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/57 without vote.

Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and 47/168 of 22 December 1992,

Reaffirming also the guiding principles contained in section I of the annex to its resolution 46/182,

Noting that States have submitted replies to the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraphs 7 and 8 of its resolution 47/168,

Taking note of the relevant decisions of operational agencies, organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system concerning their participation in a coordinated response to humanitarian emergencies,

Deeply concerned about the increasing number and growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other emergencies,

Concerned about the impediments created by natural disasters and other emergencies to the efforts of the affected countries to achieve development,

Emphasizing the importance of a timely, prompt and effective humanitarian response,

Stressing the importance of a coordinated response to natural disasters and of technical and financial assistance to the natural-disaster-prone countries in the fields of disaster preparedness and mitigation, including exchange of information and post-disaster development activities,

Noting the encouraging results of the operation of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund and its increasing utilization by the operational agencies,

Recognizing the increasing need for humanitarian assistance and adequate financial resources to ensure a prompt response by the United Nations to humanitarian emergency situations, both for relief and for the continuum to development,

Recognizing also the need to strengthen coordination further, in particular field coordination, on humanitarian assistance, bearing in mind that coordination should be field-oriented,

Noting also the humanitarian and rehabilitation aspects of the problem of mine clearance, in the context of its resolution 48/7 of 19 October 1993,

Welcoming the efforts being undertaken in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to develop a coherent and complementary approach on the part of the relevant operational and development actors to the continuum-related activities,

Stressing the need for adequate protection of personnel involved in humanitarian operations in accordance with relevant norms and principles of international law and within the context of General Assembly resolutions 47/120 A of 18 December 1992 and 47/120 B of 20 September 1993, taking into account recent initiatives in this regard,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Agrees fully with the agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council, the implementation of which will be reviewed by the Council at its substantive session of 1994;

3. Emphasizes the leadership role of the Secretary-General, through the Emergency Relief Coordinator and working closely with him, in coordinating a coherent and timely response to humanitarian emergencies;

4. Stresses the essential need for improved coordination within the United Nations system, and, while reaffirming the mandate and functions of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs to that end, requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to improve coordination and management further, both at Headquarters and at the field level, including the coordination of the work of the relevant operational agencies;

5. Invites the intergovernmental bodies of the relevant operational organizations and agencies to provide full support for system-wide coordination, under the leadership of the Emergency Relief Coordinator, in order to facilitate an effective response at Headquarters and at the field level to natural disasters and other emergencies;

6. Also stresses, in this regard, that the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, under the leadership of the Emergency Relief Coordinator, should serve as the primary mechanism for inter-agency coordination, meet more frequently and act therefore in an action-oriented manner on policy issues related to humanitarian assistance and on formulating a coherent and timely United Nations response to humanitarian emergencies;

7. Further stresses the necessity of accelerating the development of an emergency information system, within the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, to collect and disseminate timely information on natural disasters and other humanitarian emergencies, including information provided by the national Government, United Nations agencies, donors and relief organizations, to provide early warning of a crisis, to assess needs on a continuing basis and to track financial and other contributions;

8. Recognizes the need to increase the resources available in the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, including through timely repayment of funds, invites potential donors to make additional contributions to the Fund, and requests the Secretary-General to conduct consultations to that effect, taking fully into account the need to secure contributions to the Fund on an assured, broad-based and additional basis;

9. Decides to expand the scope of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund to include the International Organization for Migration;

10. Invites operational agencies to contribute to field-level coordination in the early stages of an emergency;

11. Requests the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to agree, as a matter of urgency, on the best means and guidelines to ensure adequate human and financial resources for rapid response coordination, including the provision of resources that could be drawn on by the Emergency Relief Coordinator for establishing special coordination arrangements in the initial stage of an emergency, taking into account the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 46/182 and 47/199 of 22 December 1992 and of the agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council related to field-level coordination;

12. Decides also, pending a final decision to be taken by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994, on the basis of the recommendations of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, as well as on the experience gained, to authorize, in exceptional circumstances, on a time-bound basis and while preserving the revolving nature of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, the Emergency Relief Coordinator and relevant operational agencies, under the leadership of the Coordinator, to draw from the interest earned by the Revolving Fund to enhance rapid response coordination where insufficient capacity exists at the field level;

13. Also requests the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to provide recommendations on other issues related to field coordination, including measures taken for clear allocations of responsibilities at an early stage of an emergency, in particular by entrusting the primary responsibility to the operational agencies, as appropriate, and on standardized procedures for joint emergency needs assessment missions, under the overall leadership and coordination of the Emergency Relief Coordinator;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his annual report on the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance recommendations on practical measures to enhance the coordinated system-wide support for efforts to facilitate the transition from emergency relief to rehabilitation and development and, particularly in the context of activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, the promotion of national capacity-building to help prevent and mitigate future emergencies;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen the consolidated appeals process, making it more field-oriented, and to ensure that such appeals are based on specific priorities resulting from comprehensive and realistic projections of relief requirements for natural disasters and other emergencies requiring a coordinated response, and in this context invites all concerned operational and humanitarian organizations and agencies to cooperate and fully participate in the preparation of these appeals;

16. Calls upon States to respond quickly and generously to consolidated appeals for humanitarian assistance, taking into account rehabilitation and long-term development requirements;

17. Invites the Secretary-General to examine further all possible ways and means to provide, within existing resources, adequate qualified personnel and administrative resources commensurate with the responsibilities of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs in dealing with the increasing number of natural disasters and other emergencies;

18. Stresses the importance of the Emergency Relief Coordinator participating fully in the overall United Nations planning of responses to emergencies in order to serve as the humanitarian advocate in ensuring that the humanitarian dimension, particularly the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality of relief assistance, is taken fully into account;

19. Emphasizes the importance of the role of the Emergency Relief Coordinator in facilitating access by the operational organizations to emergency areas for the rapid provision of emergency assistance by obtaining the consent of all parties concerned, through modalities such as the establishment of temporary relief corridors where needed, days and zones of tranquillity and other forms, including facilitating for those organizations the return of refugees and displaced persons;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his annual report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session recommendations on ways and means to improve the operational capacity of the emergency stockpiles, as well as an analysis of the advantages or disadvantages, including promptness of the response and cost-effectiveness, of the establishment of regional warehouses, taking into account the existing facilities and the possibility of strengthening them;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994 the recommendations of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee requested in paragraphs 11 and 13 of the present resolution;

22. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his annual report on the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session information on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and on ways of further strengthening coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance within the United Nations system.

The Assembly, in resolution 48/162, outlined its organizational approach to discussions on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance.

Activities

Africa

Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa

In May, DHA reported that United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched in 1993 for Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia and the Sudan under the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa (SEPHA). However, the response to the appeals was weak. Of the $921.8 million requested for the five countries, only $172,174,350, or 18.7 per cent, was received or firmly committed as at 10 May. As a result, most agencies either scaled down or failed to implement many humanitarian aid efforts.

In Eritrea, which became independent on 24 May, a plan was being finalized for the return and rehabilitation of refugees. The total 1993 appeal for Eritrea was $80.5 million, and a pledging conference for refugee reintegration and rehabilitation of resettlement areas was held on 6 July. In Ethiopia, improvements in the general situation significantly reduced the number of people requiring assistance, and total funding requests for Ethiopia in 1993 amounted to $299,871,748 for relief, rehabilitation and refugee assistance activities. In Kenya, the need for aid for drought victims, refugees and displaced people continued, although the numbers requiring assistance declined. The 1993 appeal for Kenya totalled $192.2 million. There were no major unmet humanitarian needs in Djibouti, but further assistance was given for the expansion of refugee camps and for the repatriation of refugees to Somalia. In Somalia, there were significant improvements in the provision of relief aid during the first months of 1993 and mortality and morbidity dropped sharply.

Angola

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1993 on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola.⁽¹³⁾ The report described the humanitarian assistance programme, including sectoral interventions and organizational arrangements, and outlined the assistance provided by Member States and the United Nations system. The Secretary-General said that the prospect of favourable conditions for the economic and social rehabilitation of Angola was extinguished with the advent of an undeclared state of war following the 1992 elections. Major hostilities through September 1993 had devastated Angola's population and caused the virtual collapse of its social and economic system, posing special challenges to all relief agencies. Efforts to establish a cease-fire to permit the provision of humanitarian assistance had proved unsuccessful, and reconstruction and development plans had been transformed into emergency humanitarian assistance programmes. The United Nations focused on immediate humanitarian needs and preventive approaches in fields such as health and nutrition. In February, UNICEF applied its adaptive programming approach for a country in difficult circumstances, and subsequently launched a 90-day Plan of Action. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) modified its programme to concentrate on repatriates and to extend support to non-returnee populations bordering Zaire and Zambia. Various NGOs also reoriented their strategies and programmes to cope with the wide-scale civil conflict.

In May, DHA issued a consolidated inter-agency appeal for $226 million in humanitarian assistance. Contributions of $60 million were reported, including $48 million in food aid. Following discussions in July and August, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) agreed to a revised emergency relief plan targeting areas considered insecure. In October, the first relief flights in nine months reached the town of Cuito, and all besieged cities received humanitarian assistance.

A United Nations Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit, under the supervision of the Special Representative, was established to coordinate the activities and contributions of the international community, NGOs and United Nations agencies. The Unit developed an emergency relief plan to deliver humanitarian relief items to sites that remained accessible and to negotiate with the Government and UNITA for access to locations under siege. The Secretary-General concluded that comprehensive and lasting peace was essential for the adequate provision of humanitarian assistance to Angola.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/202 without vote.

International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/164 of 18 December 1992, 46/142 of 17 December 1991, 45/233 of 21 December 1990 and 44/168 of 15 December 1989 on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola,

Recalling also that the Security Council in its resolutions 387(1976) of 31 March 1976, 475(1980) of 27 June 1980, 628(1989) of 16 January 1989 and other resolutions on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola had, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to Angola,

Deeply concerned about the critical economic and political situation prevailing in Angola, aggravated by the renewal in October 1992 of hostilities which continue to destroy the economic and social infrastructure,

Concerned about the serious deterioration of the humanitarian situation, as a result of which an estimated 3 million people are in need of emergency aid,

Gravely concerned about the drought, which has devastated the centre and south of the country, causing suffering for millions of people,

Taking into consideration the fact that the implementation of the Peace Accords for Angola would create favourable conditions for the economic and social rehabilitation of the country,

Aware of the need for a greater effort and commitment on the part of the international community to assist Angola in rehabilitating its economy,

Conscious of the fact that during 1993, owing to the prevailing situation in the country, the Government of Angola was unable to organize a round-table conference of donors as planned,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Calls upon all parties to do their utmost to achieve the full and effective implementation of the Peace Accords for Angola in order to bring peace and stability to Angola, thus creating conditions conducive to its economic rehabilitation;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all States, United Nations organizations and other donors for the emergency humanitarian assistance rendered to Angola through the Special Relief Programme for Angola, and appeals for continued and generous contributions for emergency humanitarian assistance;

4. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to continue to render the material, technical and financial assistance necessary for the economic rehabilitation of Angola;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the international community, to continue to mobilize organizations and organs of the United Nations system in order to ensure an appropriate level of economic assistance for Angola;

6. Welcomes the decision of the Government of Angola to organize in 1994 a round-table conference of donors for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Angola, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, the African Development Bank, the Government of Portugal and other interested countries;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola".

General Assembly resolution 48/202

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/727) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Algeria (for African States), Antigua and Barbuda, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Cambodia, China, Colombia, Cuba, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Suriname and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (A/C.2/48/L.36), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 101.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 33-35, 41, 45; plenary 86.

Burundi

On 27 October⁽¹⁴⁾ Burundi informed the Secretary-General of violence and the risk of civil war in the country following a military coup on 21 October. The number of refugees and displaced persons at that time was estimated at more than 300,000. Burundi requested the international community to intervene urgently to restore democratic institutions and provide emergency humanitarian assistance.

On 3 November, the General Assembly, by resolution 48/17, requested Member States and international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide emergency humanitarian assistance and/or other assistance to the people of Burundi.

On 16 November⁽¹⁵⁾ the President of the Security Council stated that the Council was alarmed at the movement of over 700,000 refugees into neighbouring countries and an increasing number of displaced persons throughout the country. The Council appealed to all States, international agencies and other humanitarian organizations to provide prompt humanitarian assistance to the af-fectured civilian population in Burundi and neighbouring countries.

In response to that situation, the United Nations, on 23 November, launched an appeal for $9.5 million to meet the basic survival needs of the displaced. UNHCR also appealed for $17 million for assistance to Burundi refugees in Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

Liberia

The Secretary-General submitted in September a report on assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia⁽¹⁶⁾ as requested by the Assembly in 1992.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report provided sectoral reviews of assistance and requirements and outlined contributions from Member States and the United Nations system.

The report noted that the security and socio-economic situation in Liberia continued to deteriorate and that the October 1992 attack on Monrovia and subsequent hostilities had led to massive population displacements and damage to infrastructure. As a result of the new emergency situation, a special emergency appeal for $7.5 million was issued in November 1992. Donations received since the outbreak of the Liberia crisis totalled $147.4 million. The signing, on 25 July 1993, of the Cotonou Peace Agreement⁽¹⁸⁾ created the prospect of more effective relief operations and the implementation of rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes. By mid-August, the United Nations had resumed humanitarian relief to parts of Liberia controlled by the National Patriotic Front and had sent a mission to assess needs.

The Secretary-General said that it was necessary to maintain a range of humanitarian assistance activities to deal with the return of refugees, the resettlement of displaced persons, and the demobilization and reintegration of troops. The programme should also shift its emphasis from relief to reconstruction and rehabilitation.

On 26 March, by resolution 813(1993), the Security Council reaffirmed its support for increased humanitarian assistance to Liberia and demanded that parties to the conflict refrain from impeding its delivery. It also called on the parties to ensure the safety of all humanitarian assistance personnel. On 22 September, by resolution 866(1993), the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, which would assist in the coordination of humanitarian activities in the field. It also welcomed the Secretary-General's establishment of a Trust Fund to assist in mine-clearing, humanitarian and development activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/197 without vote.

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/232 of 21 December 1990, 46/147 of 17 December 1991 and 47/154 of 18 December 1992,

Taking note of Security Council resolutions 813(1993) of 26 March 1993, 856(1993) of 10 August 1993 and 866(1993) of 22 September 1993, in which the Council, inter alia, decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, under its authority and under the direction of the Secretary-General through his Special Representative, for a period of seven months,

Taking note also of Security Council resolution 868(1993) of 29 September 1993, in which the Council, inter alia, urged States and parties to a conflict to cooperate closely with the United Nations to ensure the security and safety of United Nations forces and personnel,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that, even though a viable country-wide emergency assistance programme has been instituted, security and logistic problems continue to hamper relief assistance, particularly in the interior, and have prevented the transition from emergency relief to reconstruction and development,

Gravely concerned about the devastating effects of the protracted conflict on the socio-economic conditions in Liberia, and noting the urgent need to rehabilitate, in an atmosphere of peace and stability, basic sectors of the country in order to restore normalcy,

Welcoming the signing on 25 July 1993 at Cotonou, Benin, under the auspices of the Economic Community of West African States, by the Interim Government of National Unity of Liberia, the National Patriotic Front of Liberia and the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy, of a peace agreement providing for a cease-fire, disarmament and demobilization of the warring parties, formation of a transitional government and the holding of general and presidential elections,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and international and non-governmental organizations that have responded and continue to respond to appeals by the Interim Government of Liberia, as well as to appeals by the Secretary-General for emergency relief and other assistance;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts in mobilizing the international community, the United Nations and other organizations to provide emergency assistance to Liberia, and urges that such assistance be continued;

3. Calls upon the international community and intergovernmental organizations to continue to provide Liberia, as appropriate, with technical, financial and other assistance for the repatriation and resettlement of Liberian refugees, returnees and displaced persons and for the rehabilitation of combatants, which constitute important elements for facilitating the holding of democratic elections in Liberia;

4. Appeals to the international community and intergovernmental organizations to provide adequate assistance to programmes identified in the report of the Secretary-General, including through contributions to the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General, in order, inter alia, to help defray the cost of the deployment of additional peace-keeping forces of the Military Observer Group of the Economic Community of West African States;

5. Calls upon all parties and factions in Liberia to ensure fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, as well as of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement throughout Liberia, and to take all steps necessary to create an atmosphere conducive to the successful implementation of the Cotonou Agreement;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to coordinate the work of the United Nations system and to mobilize financial, technical and other assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia;

(b) To undertake, when conditions permit, in close collaboration with the authorities of Liberia, an overall assessment of needs, with the objective of holding, when appropriate, a round-table conference of donors for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "International assistance for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Liberia".

General Assembly resolution 48/197

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/726) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.63), based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria (for African States), Guyana and United States (A/C.2/48/L.32); agenda item 100.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 33-35, 41, 45; plenary 86.

Rwanda

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁹⁾ to the Security Council in August that the number of displaced persons in Rwanda resulting from the conflict there was estimated at 900,000. The situation was exacerbated by Rwanda's already precarious economic condition, high population density and rapidly declining agricultural production. Following an inter-agency mission to Rwanda in March, DHA on 15 April launched a consolidated appeal for $78 million to meet the needs of those displaced from April to December.

In March, the Security Council (resolution 812(1993)) expressed alarm at the humanitarian consequences of the latest resumption of fighting in Rwanda and called on the parties to allow the delivery of humanitarian supplies and the return of displaced persons. In September⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the international community had contributed up to $100 million since January 1993. Since the signing of the Arusha peace agreement in August (see PART TWO, Chapter I), 600,000 individuals had returned home, and assistance would continue to be provided to those remaining in camps. The United Nations was encouraging the donor community to pool resources for a comprehensive programme of assistance to demobilized soldiers, UNHCR was coordinating refugee activities, and a mine-clearing programme was to be initiated. UNDP and DHA were planning a round-table meeting on humanitarian assistance in 1994.

The Security Council in October (resolution 872(1993)) established the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, to assist in the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities. It urged Member States, the specialized agencies and NGOs to intensify their economic, financial and humanitarian assistance.

Also in October⁽²¹⁾ Rwanda informed the General Assembly that, although the April appeal had improved the humanitarian situation, the war had destroyed a substantial amount of socio-economic and administrative infrastructure and had prevented Rwanda from achieving the macroeconomic and sectoral objectives of its 1990 structural adjustment programme. Further international assistance was requested to revive the economy and rebuild and rehabilitate national infrastructure.

In December⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that emergency and rehabilitation efforts for displaced persons had been complicated by an influx of some 375,000 refugees from Burundi, due to ethnic violence and drought in that country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/211 without vote.

Emergency assistance for the socio-economic rehabilitation of Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 812(1993) of 12 March 1993 and 846(1993) of 22 June 1993 on the situation in Rwanda,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 872(1993) of 5 October 1993, in which the Council urged Member States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide and intensify their economic, financial and humanitarian assistance in favour of the Rwandese population and of the democratization process in Rwanda,

Noting with satisfaction the signing, on 4 August 1993 at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, of the Peace Agreement between the Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, which put an end to the armed conflict,

Taking into account the serious consequences of the breakdown of the national economy and the destruction of important social, economic and administrative infrastructures in the areas affected by the war, as well as the imperious necessity to satisfy the needs of the displaced persons and the refugees,

Taking into consideration the fact that the implementation of the Arusha Peace Agreement would create favourable conditions for the socio-economic rehabilitation of Rwanda,

Also taking into consideration the fact that the insufficiency of economic and financial resources of Rwanda requires the assistance of the international community in order to enable the implementation of the Arusha Peace Agreement,

Noting the recent large-scale inflow of refugees from Burundi into Rwanda,

1. Calls upon all parties to do their utmost to achieve the full and effective implementation of the Arusha Peace Agreement and national reconciliation goals, thus creating conditions conducive to the socio-economic rehabilitation of Rwanda;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States, United Nations organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for the emergency humanitarian assistance rendered to Rwanda since the beginning of hostilities;

3. Welcomes the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Rwanda, launched in April 1993 by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in favour of displaced persons in Rwanda;

4. Urges all States, United Nations organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify, in favour of Rwanda, economic, financial, material and technical assistance in order to encourage the process of rehabilitation and sustained development, especially by raising its economy, rebuilding and rehabilitating various infrastructures destroyed by the war;

5. Invites all States, United Nations organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide to Rwanda adequate assistance for the settlement of displaced persons and the repatriation of refugees, the demobilization of soldiers and reintegration of demobilized soldiers into civil life, the clearance of mines and the completion of the democratic process;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to support with all possible assistance the consolidation of peace in Rwanda and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Emergency assistance for the socio-economic rehabilitation of Rwanda".

General Assembly resolution 48/211

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/735) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Algeria (for African States), Belgium, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, El Salvador, Honduras and Republic of Korea (A/C.2/48/L.35), orally revised, and further orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 171.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 33-35, 42, 45; plenary 86.

Sierra Leone

The Cotonou Peace Agreement⁽¹⁸⁾ signed in July, provided for the sealing of borders with Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone to prevent cross-border attacks, infiltration or the importation of arms. In September, the Security Council (resolution 866(1993)) established a United Nations Observer Mission (see above), inter alia, to monitor compliance with that Agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/196 without vote.

International assistance to Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/158 of 17 December 1982, 38/205 of 20 December 1983 and 39/192 of 17 December 1984, in which it appealed to all States, the specialized agencies and international development and financial institutions to provide all possible assistance for the development of Sierra Leone,

Recalling also its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Sierra Leone in the list of the least developed countries,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 866(1993) of 22 September 1993, in which the Council decided to establish, under its authority, the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia to, inter alia, monitor compliance with the peace agreement, including at points on Liberia's borders with Sierra Leone and other neighbouring countries,

Aware that the Government of Sierra Leone, in cooperation with the Governments of the other States members of the Economic Community of West African States, embarked, at the height of the Liberian crisis, upon a peace-keeping/peace-monitoring exercise at Monrovia, capital of neighbouring Liberia,

Aware also of the serious destruction and devastation of the productive areas of the territory of Sierra Leone, and of its economy as a whole, brought about by the spill-over effect of the conflict in Liberia,

Concerned at the consequent devastating effects on the lives and properties of Sierra Leoneans in the eastern and southern provinces, which have resulted in massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons,

Alarmed at the astronomical cost to the Government of Sierra Leone of protecting its territory and people from the spill-over effect of the conflict in Liberia,

Conscious of the need for the international community to assist Sierra Leone in the rehabilitation of its economy and the effective implementation of reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes, which require the mobilization of substantial resources that are beyond the current means of the country,

Aware that the financial crisis that Sierra Leone is undergoing has led to a slowing down of its economic and social development,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his efforts in mobilizing the international community, the United Nations system and other organizations to provide assistance to Sierra Leone;

2. Calls upon the international community and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide Sierra Leone with technical, financial and other forms of assistance for the repatriation and resettlement of Sierra Leonean refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

3. Appeals to the international community and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide adequate assistance for the rehabilitation of the economy of Sierra Leone and the reconstruction of its devastated areas;

4. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Sierra Leone meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicine and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

5. Urgently reiterates its appeal to the international community, including the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to contribute generously, through bilateral and multi-lateral channels, to the economic and social development of Sierra Leone;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Sierra Leone;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "International assistance to Sierra Leone".

General Assembly resolution 48/196

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/726) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.64), based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria (for African States), Cuba, Grenada, Guyana, Papua New Guinea, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Singapore and Solomon Islands (A/C.2/48/L.31); agenda item 100.

Somalia

Responding to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General, in an October report on emergency assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia⁽²⁴⁾ provided information on the 100-Day Action Programme for Accelerated Humanitarian Assistance, the 1993 relief and rehabilitation programme, challenges facing the humanitarian mission, and assistance provided by the United Nations system and by Member States.

The 100-Day Action Programme, initiated in October 1992⁽²⁵⁾ was extended to the end of March 1993 and received $74 million of the $83 million required. The Unified Task Force (UNITAF) helped to open access to remote areas and enabled the delivery of relief supplies. It opened the port of Mogadishu and repaired major supply routes. The combined efforts of humanitarian organizations and security forces dramatically reduced levels of malnutrition and mortality; however, theft, looting and extortion plagued relief efforts, and the resettlement of internally displaced persons and refugees was affected by ongoing security problems.

At the beginning of 1993, the worst of the emergency appeared to be over and the focus of the operation started to shift from relief to rehabilitation. The 1993 relief and rehabilitation programme, with requirements of $166.5 million, was launched at the Third Coordination Meeting for Humanitarian Assistance for Somalia (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 11-13 March). The Conference on National Reconciliation (15 March) endorsed the outcome of the Meeting and condemned attacks on relief personnel and supplies.

The mandate of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM) was expanded by the Security Council in March (resolution 814(1993)), following reports by the Secretary-General⁽²⁶⁾ The Council requested him to provide assistance covering: economic relief and rehabilitation; the repatriation of refugees and resettlement of displaced persons; the re-establishment of national and regional institutions, civil administration and the Somali police force; and mine clearance. UNOSOM II took over from UNITAF the task of facilitating the delivery of humanitarian assistance and expanding efforts to establish security throughout Somalia.

In July, the Secretary-General reported to the Council⁽²⁷⁾ on attacks on UNOSOM II forces on 5 June. The attack and insecurity in Mogadishu South resulted in the temporary curtailment of many humanitarian programmes, but relief operations in the country were not disrupted. Pockets of acute malnutrition and medical problems persisted and about 1 million Somalis required shelter and life-sustaining assistance. Of the 1.7 million Somalis forced to leave their homes, over 1 million had crossed into Kenya and Ethiopia, while others moved to Mogadishu, Kismayo and Baidoa.

The rehabilitation of social services also continued, with NGOs reporting that some 23,000 primary grade students had enrolled in 22 schools in the Bay, Bakool, Mogadishu and Lower Shabelle regions. In the Juba Valley, schools were rehabilitated and provided with textbooks and other equipment. An education development centre was established at Mogadishu, together with a scholarship programme to allow Somali university students to complete their studies abroad. Some 32 hospitals and 81 child health centres were operating throughout the country, and mobile vaccination teams were providing immunization. The water supply systems at Mogadishu, Afgoi, Hargeisa and Berbera were rehabilitated and sanitation projects were maintained. Some success was reported with the reactivation of food-crop and livestock production. Commercial and trading activities showed encouraging signs of recovery, limited telecommunication services were available and local companies provided fuel throughout the country. UNOSOM II, the World Bank and UNDP developed a draft planning framework for the reconstruction and recovery of Somalia, which was reviewed by the third informal meeting of donors, United Nations agencies and NGOs, sponsored by the World Bank (Paris, 22 October).

On 16 November, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs told the Assembly's Second Committee that Somalia required short-term assistance and rehabilitation measures and long-term development and reconstruction work. The Fourth Coordination Meeting for Humanitarian Assistance for Somalia (Addis Ababa, 29 November-1 December) considered implementation of those measures.

The Secretary-General, in a later report to the Council⁽²⁸⁾ stated that UNOSOM II had highlighted, at the Fourth Coordination Meeting, its efforts to place humanitarian assistance at the forefront of its work in Somalia. Somali delegates and international donors had reaffirmed their commitment to accelerate Somali control of the recovery and development process, and the Meeting had agreed on a strategy for the mobilization and allocation of resources and the development of programmes and projects. Agreements were also reached on the establishment of development committees in the various regions and the formation of a Development Council to mobilize resources. An aid coordination body was to be set up to coordinate donor assistance. The strategy was to be implemented in regions where a large measure of stability and security prevailed.

The Secretary-General also reported that the donor community's willingness to commit further resources to Somalia's rehabilitation and reconstruction was conditional on national reconciliation and at least minimum levels of security.

In November⁽²⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator informed the Governing Council that he would continue to approve projects in Somalia on a case-by-case basis, pending normalization of the situation in the country. UNDP would concentrate on rehabilitation and reconstruction activities, particularly in the water, health, sanitation, education and infrastructure sectors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/201 without vote.

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988, 44/178 of 19 December 1989, 45/229 of 21 December 1990, 46/176 of 19 December 1991 and 47/160 of 18 December 1992 and the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in which the Council, inter alia, urged all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia and reiterated the call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of those organizations and the guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia,

Noting the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries of the Horn of Africa and the countries of the Non-Aligned Movement in their efforts to resolve the humanitarian, security and political crisis in Somalia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to assist the Somali people in their efforts to promote peace, stability and national reconciliation,

Welcoming the results of the Fourth Coordination Meeting for Humanitarian Assistance for Somalia, held at Addis Ababa from 29 November to 1 December 1993,

Noting also the significant improvement in the situation in most parts of the country achieved by the United Nations Operation in Somalia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia, and the statement made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on 16 November 1993 by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance rendered by a number of States to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected Somali population,

Emphasizing the importance of the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at the local and regional levels throughout the country,

Recognizing that the emergency phase of the present crisis is almost over and that the focus is shifting to rehabilitation and recovery,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all States and the inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded to the appeals of the Secretary-General and others by extending assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance to the Somali people;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries of the Horn of Africa and the countries of the Non-Aligned Movement to resolve the situation in Somalia;

4. Urges all States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue the further implementation of resolution 47/160 in order to assist the Somali people to embark on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of civil administration at the local level in all those parts of the country where peace, security and stability prevail;

5. Appeals to all the Somali parties concerned to terminate hostilities on the basis of the Addis Ababa Agreement of 27 March 1993, and to engage in a national reconciliation process leading to the re-establishment of peace, order and stability, which are essential if relief and rehabilitation efforts are to be successful;

6. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and its specialized agencies and of non-governmental organizations and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement throughout Somalia;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Somalia;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all measures necessary for the implementation of the present resolution, to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994 of the progress made and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/726) without vote, 9 December (meeting 46); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.69), based on informal consultations on 11-nation draft (A/C.2/48/L.40); agenda item 100. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 33-35, 41, 46; plenary 86.

Sudan

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report on emergency assistance to the Sudan.⁽³¹⁾ The report provided an update on the situation and emergency responses, including Operation Lifeline Sudan. It also provided information on action by Member States and organizations of the United Nations system.

The report stated that the ongoing conflict in the Sudan had displaced hundreds of thousands of people. Malnutrition rates in some areas were high and the delivery of emergency relief had been hindered by a lack of security and heavy rains. Cattle herds had been decimated by raids and disease, and crop planting had been constrained by the lack of security. Some 700,000 people in the south were at risk of starvation, while another 1.5 million were in urgent need of food. In January⁽³²⁾ the Sudan briefed the Secretary-General on the activities of the rebel movement, which was obstructing the distribution of relief supplies to the southern part of the country.

The growth forecast under the Sudan's economic reform programme had not materialized. Inflation and a devalued pound had caused a surge in prices of basic commodities and shortages of other necessities. Pay increases had not kept pace with inflation and the World Bank had suspended its operations pending repayment of outstanding loans.

Emergency requirements for the Sudan for 1993, as reflected in the January 1993 United Nations consolidated appeal, amounted to $130 million for food aid and $74 million for the non-food sector. By July, contributions totalled $65 million for food aid and $17 million for non-food aid. The Government had requested that donors concentrate humanitarian aid in the areas of development, basic needs, transport and logistics. In January, the Government and international NGOs agreed on a wide range of issues, including cooperation on national capacity-building, administrative procedures to facilitate relief work and the need to shift from relief to rehabilitation. A Commission of Voluntary Agencies, the Government's focal point for the concerns and activities of NGOs, became operational in July. In August, the United Nations Special Envoy for the Sudan met with the Government and faction leaders. Agreement was reached on measures to expedite the delivery of assistance and on access by United Nations monitors to all United Nations relief locations. Similar agreements were made with NGOs.

In September, an informal consultation on the Sudan's priority needs was convened at Geneva.

On 16 November, the Sudan informed the Second Committee that it had signed various agreements consolidating cooperation between the Government, the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and NGOs. Those agreements resulted in increased food delivery, the streamlining of administrative procedures, greater participation by NGOs and the entry of ICRC into southern Sudan. Agreements were also signed with WFP to take advantage of cheap river transport, and with Sudan Railways to increase the frequency and capacity of rail trips to the south.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/200 without vote.

Emergency assistance to the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988, 43/52 of 6 December 1988, 44/12 of 24 October 1989, 45/226 of 21 December 1990, 46/178 of 19 December 1991 and 47/162 of 18 December 1992 on assistance to the Sudan,

Noting that, despite the progress made in the Sudan Emergency Operation and Operation Lifeline Sudan, considerable relief needs still remain to be addressed, particularly in the areas of non-food assistance, logistics and emergency recovery and rehabilitation,

Recognizing the need in emergency situations to address the continuum of relief, rehabilitation and development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and of the statement made by the representative of the Sudan before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on 16 November 1993,

1. Notes with appreciation the cooperation between the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations, which has resulted in a number of agreements and arrangements to facilitate relief operations and enhance their efficiency and effectiveness, and encourages the Government of the Sudan to continue to improve their implementation;

2. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to the emergency needs of the country, including its recovery and rehabilitation needs, as well as to national capacity-building in the areas of emergency management, preparedness and prevention;

3. Appeals to all parties concerned to continue to pursue dialogue and negotiations and to terminate hostilities in order to allow for the re-establishment of peace, order and stability and also to facilitate relief efforts;

4. Stresses the importance of assuring safe access for personnel providing relief assistance to all in need;

5. Urges all parties involved to continue to offer all feasible assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, so as to guarantee maximum success of the Sudan Emergency Operation in all parts of the country;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize and coordinate resources and support for the Sudan Emergency Operation and Operation Lifeline Sudan, to assess the emergency situation in the country and to report thereon, as well as on the recovery and rehabilitation of the country, to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

Zaire

In August, the Secretary-General dispatched an inter-agency mission to Zaire to assess the humanitarian needs of the people affected by economic and social turmoil and to identify ways to meet their needs. The general economic and social situation had deteriorated and a combination of political and economic problems had brought about civil and ethnic strife. That situation had resulted in the collapse of administrative, social and economic structures, hyperinflation, high unemployment, a shortage of basic goods and large numbers of internally displaced persons. Some United Nations agencies, ICRC, international and local NGOs and church organizations had managed to bring some relief to the displaced, but their resources were overstretched and additional assistance was urgently needed to prevent a human tragedy of massive proportions. In December, the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration launched an appeal for $84,248,520 to provide urgent assistance in the fields of transport, health, sanitation, agriculture and shelter.

Afghanistan

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1993 a report, with a later addendum⁽³⁴⁾ on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan. He outlined emergency humanitarian and relief assistance and described the current political situation. Following his revision of United Nations coordination arrangements in Afghanistan, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan, under the auspices of DHA, was responsible for coordinating humanitarian programmes as of 1 January. Also in January, the Secretary-General launched an updated consolidated appeal for Afghanistan for $138.2 million to support mine clearance, voluntary repatriation, food aid, health, water supply and sanitation, emergency agricultural inputs and relief management. He said that, because of continued insecurity, the projected number of returning refugees had been reduced from 2 million to 1.3 million; as a result, the overall programme requirements were reduced to $112.6 million. In June, the Secretary-General reminded donor Governments that his appeal for humanitarian assistance remained seriously underfunded and programmes might have to be curtailed. As at 15 August, $45.8 million had been either pledged or contributed.

During May/June, a group of experts prepared a comprehensive draft Action Plan for Immediate Rehabilitation, which was expected to be transformed into a full-scale rehabilitation strategy for presentation to donors in 1994.

The security of United Nations staff in Afghanistan remained a major concern and a short-term strategy was developed to maintain and strengthen the United Nations international presence in safe areas of the country, while continuing delivery of assistance to other areas with the help of national staff and NGOs. In mid-July, a lull in the fighting enabled the deployment of a small number of international staff at Kabul on a rotating basis.

The mine-clearing programme continued uninterrupted. Some 2,000 trained Afghan mine clearers were employed to clear unexploded ordnance from access roads, villages, irrigation canals and agricultural land, and a nationwide survey started to identify more accurately the areas affected by mines. Of the $15 million requested in the January appeal for mine clearance, $12.4 million had been made available.

The first meeting of the Tripartite Commission, comprising the Governments of Afghanistan and Iran and UNHCR, met in May to discuss the return and rights of refugees and operational matters. Also in May, Pakistan agreed to allow refugees from Iran to transit through Baluchistan; by July, over 15,197 persons from Pakistan and 28,732 returnees from Iran had been assisted.

In June, a cholera epidemic spread rapidly to 21 of the country's 29 provinces and a United Nations task force was established to address the problem. WHO and UNICEF chlorinated wells and conducted a public awareness campaign through local media. By August, however, there had been no donor response to the January appeal for $2 million to carry out emergency repairs to water supply systems in several Afghan cities. In the meantime, UNDP provided IPF funds to restore the water supply to 300,000 persons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/208 without vote.

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/119 of 18 December 1992 on emergency international assistance for the reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that the establishment of the Islamic State in Afghanistan provides a new opportunity for the reconstruction of the country,

Wishing the people of Afghanistan peace and prosperity,

Deeply concerned about the massive destruction of property and the serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure of Afghanistan caused by fourteen years of war,

Stressing the importance of the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan for the prosperity of its people, who have suffered many hardships during fourteen years of war and devastation and who have lost the chance for development throughout the conflict,

Aware that Afghanistan continues to suffer from an extremely critical economic situation as a land-locked, least developed and war-stricken country,

Affirming the urgent need to initiate international action to assist Afghanistan in restoring basic services and in rebuilding the country,

Expressing its hope that the international community will respond adequately to the consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian assistance for Afghanistan, launched by the Secretary-General for the period October 1993 to March 1994,

Thanking all Governments that have rendered assistance to Afghan refugees, in particular the Governments of Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran, and recognizing the need for international assistance for the repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between the revitalization of the economy and the strengthening of the ability of Afghanistan to take effective steps towards those objectives and the ensuring of peace and normalcy in the country,

Stressing the important role that the United Nations can play in the further consolidation of peace and stability by assisting the process of national rapprochement, reconstruction and rehabilitation in Afghanistan,

Expressing its appreciation to the States and the inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded positively and continue to respond to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative for mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

Welcoming the Action Plan for immediate rehabilitation, dated October 1993, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme, as lead agency, in cooperation with the Government of Afghanistan, as a first step towards reconstruction and as a framework for the mobilization of international assistance for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the country,

Appreciating the assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in its continued support for the repatriation of Afghan refugees from neighbouring countries,

1. Encourages the Government of Afghanistan to take immediate steps to consolidate further the political process through national rapprochement, thus contributing to the creation of a sound political situation and good security, which would allow the holding of general, free and fair elections in the country, observed by the United Nations, as soon as circumstances permit;

2. Welcomes with appreciation the efforts of the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the international community to the acute problems of Afghanistan;

3. Urgently appeals to all States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as to the international financial and development institutions, to provide, on a priority basis, all possible financial, technical and material assistance for the restoration of basic services and the reconstruction of Afghanistan and for the resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons, having in mind the availability of the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund referred to in paragraph 6 below;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To dispatch to Afghanistan, as soon as possible, a United Nations special mission to canvass a broad spectrum of the leaders of Afghanistan soliciting their views on how the United Nations can best assist Afghanistan in facilitating national rapprochement and reconstruction, and to submit its findings, conclusions and recommendations to the Secretary-General for appropriate action;

(b) To develop the Action Plan for immediate rehabilitation, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme, into a full-scale strategy for rehabilitation and reconstruction, based on an in-country assessment by a team of experts of the war damage and destruction;

(c) To initiate, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the United Nations special mission to Afghanistan, a plan for mobilizing financial, technical and material assistance, including the possibility of convening a conference of donor States and international financial institutions;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the overall situation in Afghanistan and make available his good offices as required, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

6. Appeals to all Member States, in particular donor countries, to provide emergency financial assistance through the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund established in August 1988 and the consolidated appeals by the Secretary-General for emergency humanitarian assistance for Afghanistan;

7. Invites the international financial institutions, specialized agencies, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, where appropriate, to bring the special needs of Afghanistan to the attention of their respective governing bodies for their consideration and to report on the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan".

Iraq

The Plan of Action of the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Cooperation Programme for Iraq, established in 1991,⁽³⁵⁾ was completed in March 1993. The Plan, under which relief supplies were transported by the United Nations from southern Turkey to northern Iraq, was supported by $165 million in voluntary contributions and funds from the United Nations escrow account. A United Nations inter-agency assessment mission visited Iraq from 5 to 16 March. It confirmed the need to expand the ongoing humanitarian programme to cover the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 and to include relief and rehabilitation activities to promote self-reliance. It concluded that conditions in all sectors had deteriorated and the numbers registering for destitute status had increased as living standards declined. A new United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Cooperation Programme requiring $489.2 million was finalized to succeed the Plan of Action. The new Programme included relief and humanitarian assistance projects in the areas of food and nutrition; agricultural assistance and rehabilitation; health; community rehabilitation and infrastructure; and programme support and coordination. Agreement was reached in principle between the United Nations and Iraq on the extension of the existing Memorandum of Understanding providing a framework for the humanitarian programme.

The United Nations Guards contingent was increased in October to cope with an increase in security incidents affecting the programme.

In a progress report on the implementation of the 1993/94 cooperation programme, DHA stated that, as at 10 December, resources available or pledged for humanitarian activities totalled $200 million against revised estimated requirements of $467 million. Activities by United Nations agencies involved a total of $93 million.

In June⁽³⁶⁾ the UNDP Administrator informed the Governing Council that he intended to continue approving projects in Iraq on a case-by-case basis within the framework of the new United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme for Iraq. The projects would be implemented in cooperation with the Coordinator of the Programme.

Lebanon

In response to requests in 1992 by the General Assembly⁽³⁷⁾ and the Economic and Social Council⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1993 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon.⁽³⁹⁾

The report stated that 1993 was expected to be a year of vigorous recovery characterized by better control over inflation and the exchange rate, better balance in public finance, real growth of GDP and a return to normal interest rates. The Government launched the National Emergency Rehabilitation Programme (NERP), a multisectoral operation focusing on emergency repairs and the rehabilitation of physical and social infrastructure. It comprised $1.7 billion of public infrastructure investment, $250 million for private sector credit and $300 million for technical assistance. The Government also formulated a programme of institutional renewal and development to accompany NERP. In April, a draft 10-year (1993-2002) national reconstruction plan, costing at $10 billion, was disclosed. By 31 May, external funds secured for the reconstruction of Lebanon totalled $1,020 million, of which $630 million was identified for NERP. United Nations assistance for reconstruction amounted to $30 million. The World Bank approved a $175 million loan to finance high-priority reconstruction in the areas of electricity, water, waste water and solid waste, education, housing and technical assistance. The International Finance Corporation granted a $45 million loan to commercial banks for onlending to industrial and tourism enterprises.

Under the programme of United Nations Assistance for Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon (UNARDOL), the resident coordinator continued to promote cooperation and coordination of system-wide activities. The United Nations presence in Lebanon was strengthened, as an increasing number of projects became operational and field operations for development activities were extended outside Beirut for the first time. In July, the United Nations responded to an emergency created by armed conflict in southern Lebanon and the West Bekaa region and, in August, an inter-agency humanitarian needs assessment mission to the region identified short-term humanitarian needs totalling about $30 million for housing, the repair and reconstruction of schools and agricultural inputs. An appeal for humanitarian assistance, amounting to $28,745,200, was launched on 20 August, following a visit to Lebanon by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs. On the advice of UNARDOL, the Government was preparing, with lead support from UNDP, a two-phase needs assessment programme for the reactivation of public administration. UNARDOL was finalizing a priority humanitarian assistance programme.

The UNDP Governing Council approved the third country programme for Lebanon⁽⁴⁰⁾ which focused on building national capacity for human development. UNDP's technical cooperation for 1992-1996 was to concentrate on social reconstruction, economic revitalization and reactivation of the public sector. UNDP developed a comprehensive programme for fiscal reform and administration for co-financing with IMF, and also helped to finance and establish a technical cooperation unit.

The General Assembly, by decision 48/450 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/59 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/155 of 18 December 1992 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon, and recalling previous resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council, in which the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system were called upon to expand and intensify their programmes of assistance in response to the urgent needs of Lebanon,

Aware of the deteriorating economic and social conditions of Lebanon and the magnitude of the country's needs, subsequent to the serious destruction of the infrastructure which adversely affected the social conditions, and the efforts to rebuild and develop the country,

Noting with great concern the high rate of inflation in Lebanon during the past few years, and its still pervasive negative consequences, and the serious erosion of the value of the country's currency,

Reaffirming the great need for a regional and international initiative to assist the Government of Lebanon in the reconstruction of the country and the recovery of its human and economic potential,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in mobilizing assistance for Lebanon,

1. Appeals to all Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance for the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

2. Requests all organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to intensify their assistance in response to the urgent needs of Lebanon, and invites them to take the necessary measures to assign an adequate number of employees to their offices in Beirut as soon as possible;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to inform the Council at its substantive session of 1994 of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Europe

Croatia

By a letter of 18 June⁽⁴¹⁾ Croatia drew the Secretary-General's attention to the large-scale destruction caused by war, the significant human losses and suffering of the expelled and displaced population, as well as the inability of its economy to cope with the cost of displaced persons and refugees and the reconstruction of destroyed and damaged property. The destruction and blockade of certain sections of the infrastructure had led to economic fragmentation and had paralysed economic activity in some areas. About a third of the country's industrial facilities had been destroyed or damaged, together with other infrastructure, housing and cultural treasures. Major damage had also been inflicted on social welfare infrastructure. In addition, Croatia was caring for about 270,000 refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Government had prepared a survey of programmes for humanitarian aid, reconstruction and development, for which it was requesting assistance in the form of donations, favourable credit and joint ventures. It asked the Secretary-General to set up a United Nations mission of experts, as recommended by the General Assembly in 1992⁽⁴²⁾ to assess the nation's war damage and reconstruction and development needs.

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1992 Assembly request⁽⁴²⁾ reported in October on international cooperation to alleviate the consequences of war in Croatia and to facilitate its recovery.⁽⁴³⁾ The report covered the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeals and the role of the international community in the reconstruction of Croatia.

The report stated that, following the consolidated appeal for humanitarian programmes launched in 1992 for the countries of the former Yugoslavia, a new appeal was launched in March to cover the 1993 humanitarian needs of over 3.8 million people, of whom 800,000 were in Croatia. Besides focusing on short-term humanitarian needs, the appeal reflected a commitment to post-emergency economic recovery and rehabilitation and included projects in the areas of agriculture, income generation and post-emergency shelters, sponsored by UNDP, FAO and UNIDO. The appeal included reconstruction and rehabilitation projects for Croatia totalling $158,237,587.

In May, on the initiative of the Croatian Government, UNDP and the private sector sponsored an international conference on the role of international institutions in the reconstruction and development of the Croatian economy. The conference estimated war damage to the Croatian economy at $20 billion. The World Bank initiated lending activities in Croatia for an emergency operation, adjustment lending, a credit line to local banks and infrastructure projects. The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development targeted its lending on the Government's stabilization programme and selected industries. The conference also resulted in a series of conferences on the role of the public and private sectors in the reconstruction and transition process, and the United Nations presented a project to strengthen the management of external support to Croatia. Following the conference, the Prime Minister of Croatia indicated that his country was seeking loans from the international community totalling $20.7 billion for reconstruction and rehabilitation. UNDP was assisting in the assessment of war damage needs and was discussing a country programme with the Government.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/204 without vote.

International cooperation and assistance to alleviate the consequences of war in Croatia and to facilitate its recovery

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 47/166 of 18 December 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, in which he summarized the international community's humanitarian effort in Croatia within United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeals and reviewed the role of the international community in the reconstruction of Croatia,

Taking note of the letter dated 18 June 1993 from the Prime Minister of Croatia to the Secretary-General,

Noting the continuous efforts of the Government of Croatia to solve the problems of postwar reconstruction of the national infrastructure and, at the same time, to solve the existing problem of refugees, displaced persons and victims of war within Croatia,

Recognizing the importance of the United Nations overall humanitarian effort in Croatia, in particular its involvement in specific actions aimed at transforming humanitarian relief into longer-term development projects,

1. Reaffirms its appeal to all States, regional, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to provide cooperation in various forms and special and other assistance, in particular in the most severely affected areas and with a view to facilitating the return of refugees and internally displaced persons to those areas;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the circumstances in the region, to carry out, in cooperation with the Government of Croatia, an assessment of needs for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Croatia and to launch, if appropriate, an international appeal for the funding of a programme for rehabilitation, reconstruction and development;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other territories of former Yugoslavia

In 1993, the situation in the territories of the former Yugoslavia, other than Croatia, grew increasingly difficult in the face of continuing armed hostilities. The United Nations humanitarian assistance programme operated under unpredictable conditions due to a lack of security and to obstruction by the warring parties of the delivery of such assistance. The situation was especially difficult in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where humanitarian aid had to be delivered to a number of areas under siege in the eastern part of the country. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was experiencing serious economic difficulties owing to the sanctions regime imposed against it by the Security Council and to the large number of refugees to whom it was giving asylum. Likewise the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia's economy was deteriorating due to the interruption of trade in the region.

The United Nations estimated that by March the number of people requiring assistance in the entire region had reached some 3.8 million. It launched a consolidated inter-agency appeal for $1,335.3 million for the period 1 April to 31 December. As the situation worsened, an inter-agency mission visited the region and a new United Nations inter-agency appeal for $522 million was launched on 8 October to provide assistance from January to June 1994 for some 4.3 million people.

Newly independent States

On the recommendation of the Inter-Agency Task Force on the Newly Independent States, a special emergency programme for those countries was launched within DHA-Geneva. The Task Force was concerned with follow-up to the consolidated inter-agency appeals for the four newly independent countries and the lack of donor response.

In June, an appeal was issued for Armenia totalling $22.5 million for the period 10 July 1993 to 31 March 1994, to meet the needs of refugees and displaced persons following two earthquakes and continued armed conflict.

The United Nations also issued an appeal for Azerbaijan in June for $12.5 million to assist over 500,000 refugees and displaced persons as a result of the five-year old conflict over Nagorno-Karabakh.

In Georgia, conflicts in Abkhazia and South Ossetia resulted in the displacement of an estimated 250,000 persons. The United Nations issued an appeal in March, updated in December, for $20 million to cover them through May 1994.

An urgent preliminary appeal for $20.4 million for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan was launched on 11 January to cover the needs of some 400,000 internally displaced persons and Tajik refugees in Afghanistan through May 1993. Civil strife and fighting throughout the southern provinces, particularly along the border with Afghanistan, had created a volatile situation with potentially grave consequences for Central Asia.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Central America

In response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1993 a report⁽⁴⁵⁾ on implementation of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, which commenced in 1988⁽⁴⁶⁾ and was extended to 1993.⁽⁴⁷⁾ An updated strategy framework for the Plan was approved by Governments in February, defining sectoral/thematic priorities. Under the revised strategy, the Plan retained its primary objective, but incorporated two new priority areas: productive modernization and human resources development. Since 1988, 71 technical assistance projects had been approved (of which 15 had been completed) at a cost of $138 million. In addition to those projects, investment portfolios and technical cooperation projects had been formulated, requiring $2.3 billion in external resources. Sectoral/thematic meetings with Governments, institutions and donors had resulted in commitments totalling $643 million, while another $442 million was being negotiated. Under the Plan, assistance was provided in the areas of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, food aid, external debt and financial support to the Central American Common Market, industrial rehabilitation and reconversion, agricultural development, external trade, physical infrastructure, the energy sector, programmes against poverty, micro-, small- and medium-sized business, food security, tourism, the environment, and support for the Central American Bank for Economic Integration.

The Secretary-General stated that the Plan had contributed to peace through development and had facilitated dialogue within the subregion and the international community. Those achievements needed to be consolidated, as advocated by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama in a Joint Declaration⁽⁴⁸⁾ signed at Guatemala City on 17 June 1993. The Secretary-General suggested that the international community continue its support, particularly in easing the transition from humanitarian assistance to development cooperation. He pledged United Nations assistance in the renewed effort to consolidate peace and democracy with human development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/199 without vote.

Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988, 44/10 of 23 October 1989 and 45/15 of 20 November 1990,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 42/204 of 11 December 1987, 42/231 of 12 May 1988, 43/210 of 20 December 1988, 44/182 of 19 December 1989, 45/231 of 21 December 1990 and 46/170 of 19 December 1991,

Recalling also the importance of the efforts made by the Secretary-General with respect to the situation in Central America and the continuing involvement of the United Nations in economic cooperation in the region,

Particularly interested in ensuring that the critical situation in Central America continues to be addressed, especially in view of the severe economic and social crises that still affect the region,

Recognizing the work being done by the United Nations Development Programme in discharging the responsibilities entrusted to it for the coordination of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, in accordance with the decisions that the Central American Governments have taken on the subject,

Recognizing also the importance of the Special Plan, especially in promoting intraregional and international consensus on securing and coordinating cooperation, the assistance provided to Central American countries in setting priorities for their development, the involvement of the international community in attaining priority goals, the strengthening of regional organizations, including the General Secretariat of the Central American Integration System, the Central American Bank for Economic Integration, the Permanent Secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration and the Central American Parliament, the mobilization of international resources for the region and the gearing of programmes to the social sector, and the role of the International Conference on Central American Refugees as a vital tool of the emergency programme of the Special Plan.

Bearing in mind that establishing a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development is a fundamental goal in Central America,

Recognizing further the commitments assumed at the presidential summits, especially the commitments on establishing a framework of priorities with a view to preventing any reversal of the achievements in Central America and to building a firm and lasting peace, with human development, in the region, which calls for the identification of fundamentally new courses of action and the preparation of a new integrated and sustained development strategy,

Noting that, in the Guatemala Declaration, adopted on 29 October 1993 at the conclusion of the fourteenth summit of Central American Presidents, the Presidents underlined that Central America offered the conditions necessary for establishing interdependence between peace and development and that the building of peace would be strengthened if such interdependence was made effective through an integrated approach, and appealed to the international community to support the efforts of the Governments of the subregion to alleviate poverty by carrying out programmes and projects oriented to human development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, which describes the status of implementation of the Special Plan, together with requirements in terms of the resources and financial assistance indispensable to the completion of priority programmes and projects for peace-building;

2. Supports the efforts of the Central American Governments in their commitments to poverty alleviation and sustainable human development, and urges them to implement further appropriate policies and programmes in executing those commitments;

3. Requests, given the need to anticipate the depletion of resources under the Special Plan and the conclusion in May 1994 of the process established by the International Conference on Central American Refugees, that the necessary resources be provided for the establishment of updated and new regional programmes, through arrangements that the Central American countries are to determine jointly with the cooperating community and the agencies of the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Development Programme, in support of the efforts of the Central American Governments with a view to preventing any reversal of the achievements in Central America and to building peace in the region through integrated and sustained development;

4. Urges all States, intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions, the organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and regional and subregional organizations to step up support for the implementation of the goals and objectives of the Special Plan, taking into account the severe economic and social crises facing the region;

5. Again stresses the urgent need for the international community to maintain its cooperation with the Central American countries and to provide them, in a sustained manner, with adequate financial and technical resources on appropriate terms, with a view to promoting effectively the development and economic growth of the region;

6. Commends the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments to consolidate peace by implementing the agreements adopted at the summit meetings held since 1987, urges them to continue with their efforts to consolidate a firm and lasting peace in Central America, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to afford the fullest possible support for the initiatives and efforts of the Central American Governments;

7. Supports the decision taken by the Presidents of the Central American countries at their fourteenth summit meeting with respect to the adoption of decentralization policies oriented to human development at the local level and linked where necessary to macroeconomic policies, given the need to ensure a continuum from humanitarian assistance to development cooperation;

8. Notes with appreciation the effective support extended by international and regional financial institutions to the priority programmes and projects that the Central American countries have identified as regards energy, communications, roads and agriculture within the framework of the Special Plan;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the Special Plan;

10. Decides to examine and evaluate the implementation of the Special Plan at its forty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 48/199

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/726) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.65), based on informal consultations on 15-nation draft (A/C.2/48/L.42); agenda item 100. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 33-35, 42, 45; plenary 86.

El Salvador

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September a report on assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador⁽⁵⁰⁾ The report outlined the economic situation in 1992 and the Government's plan for 1993, examined the advances, limitations and prospects for national reconstruction and the strengthening of democratic institutions, and discussed challenges and expectations.

The end of 1992 was marked by increased production despite an incomplete stabilization and adjustment effort and an accumulation of social problems. In 1993, the main macroeconomic objectives were to maintain the rate of economic growth (4.5-5 per cent), to reduce inflation and the fiscal deficit, and to strengthen the current balance-of-payments account.

The short-term contingency phase of El Salvador's National Reconstruction Plan was successfully executed. However, implementation was affected by a number of factors, including delays in the provision of external resources and the Government's limited financial capacity to respond to the priorities of the 1992 Peace Accords and agreements reached with different beneficiaries. The second phase of the Plan, a five-year medium-term phase, was being implemented in 115 of El Salvador's 265 municipalities.

The Government submitted priority programmes totalling $1,533 million over four years to the Consultative Group of donors (Paris, 1 April). That included $1,161 million for the Reconstruction Plan. The Government undertook to provide $403 million in addition to $362 million in external assistance already promised, leaving a funding deficit of $768 million.

The Government's land-transfer programme was not advancing as quickly as desired. Only 59 per cent of the land included in the first phase of the programme had been handed over and only 25 of the negotiations for private properties had been finalized. Nevertheless, the second phase of the programme had begun and had benefited some 623 ex-combatants. The emergency demobilization programme for the reintegration of ex-combatants was formulated and executed, with UNDP as the lead agency. The second phase of the programme for the war-disabled was also being implemented and the Law on the Protection of the War-Disabled entered into force on 22 January. However, a lack of resources for the fund established under the Law raised concern about its viability. The European Economic Community was financing a project for the productive reintegration of the war-disabled and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) was coordinating negotiations on a housing programme under the Reconstruction Plan for ex-combatants and the disabled of the Armed Forces and of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional. The Government submitted the financial and technical assistance requirements for that programme to the Consultative Group meeting. The Secretary-General noted that the shortfall in resources to finance an important part of the reconstruction and development programmes and to strengthen democratic institutions threatened the consolidation of the peace process.

In a November report⁽⁵¹⁾ to the Security Council on ONUSAL, the Secretary-General stated that donors had shown a preference for financing infrastructure and environment projects, with the result that commitments for the reintegration of ex-combatants and the promotion of democratic institutions had fallen short of expectations. The Government had, however, been reallocating funds intended for other purposes to peace-related projects, and continued to mobilize external financing for that purpose. The Secretary-General noted that implementation of the peace process had progressed well and elections in March 1994 should be the culminating point in the process (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/203 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 784(1992) of 30 October 1992 and reaffirming its resolution 47/158 of 18 December 1992,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador, and the further report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Noting the progress made in implementing the commitments assumed as a result of the signing, on 16 January 1992 at Mexico City, of the Chapultepec Agreement between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, which put an end to the armed conflict in El Salvador through a process developed under the auspices of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that El Salvador is at a critical stage of transition and that international cooperation will help to overcome the difficulties that have arisen and to implement fully the commitments assumed under the Chapultepec Agreement,

Noting also that, in spite of national efforts and the support given by the international community to the implementation of priority programmes in the National Reconstruction Plan and the strengthening of democratic institutions, some of these programmes have been affected by, inter alia, the limited availability of financial resources,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, which make up the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, and to the Government of the United States of America and other Governments that are helping to build peace in El Salvador;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the international community, especially the cooperating community, to the specialized agencies of the United Nations and to other governmental and non-governmental organizations for the technical and financial assistance they have provided to El Salvador to supplement the effort to build peace;

3. Recognizes that the implementation of the National Reconstruction Plan and the strengthening of democratic institutions are efforts complementary to the peace process: they reflect the collective aspirations and needs of the country, being means of overcoming the root causes of the crisis and of consolidating peace, democracy and human development;

4. Calls upon the signatories to the Chapultepec Agreement to expedite the implementation of any remaining commitments under that Agreement, in order to guarantee fully the building of peace in El Salvador and hence to encourage the international community to increase the level of financial resources accorded to priority projects for reconstruction, development and the strengthening of democratic institutions in El Salvador;

5. Calls upon the Government of El Salvador to consider the possibility, in the implementation of projects under the National Reconstruction Plan in areas affected by the conflict, of greater involvement of non-governmental organizations that have addressed the needs of the populations of those areas, with a view to making the projects more sustainable and facilitating increased participation by civilian society in decisions affecting its future;

6. Emphasizes the importance of external technical and financial assistance to the implementation of the complementary efforts for building peace;

7. Again requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures and make every possible effort to mobilize material and financial resources, in keeping with the requirements for the progress of priority programmes in El Salvador;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "Assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador", and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Nicaragua

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-General reported in August on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua in the aftermath of the war and natural disasters.⁽⁵³⁾ The report described the activities of the United Nations system in Nicaragua during the transition to peace. It stated that since the end of the war in 1990, a Programme of National Reconciliation and Rehabilitation had been implemented and a stabilization programme had reduced the annual rate of inflation from a five-digit figure to 4 per cent in 1992 and less than 20 per cent in early 1993. It had also reduced the overall cash deficit from 31.2 per cent to 10.8 per cent of GDP in 1993. Structural adjustments included the abolition of a State monopoly in banking and traditional exports, a unified foreign exchange rate and the privatization of public enterprises. However, those programmes had not been sufficient to reactivate the Nicaraguan economy and a further deterioration in social conditions had undermined the credibility of democratic political institutions. The report also noted that Nicaragua had been affected by a series of natural disasters.

Various United Nations agencies, particularly UNDP, provided support to Nicaragua. UNDP assisted in emergency agricultural projects, as well as projects to strengthen the rule of law, institutional development and the private sector. It also assisted those affected by natural disasters. UNDP helped the Government design a development strategy, announced by the President in January, to improve the quality of and access to social services, and to activate the productive resources of the poor. It was also supporting a national dialogue on economic, political and social themes and was instrumental in creating a Ministry of Social Action. In addition, the World Bank and IMF provided technical and financial support to the Government's Economic Stabilization and Structural Adjustment Programme and for a reform of the State banking system. The report suggested that the United Nations help Nicaragua to renegotiate its external debt, which stood at over $10 billion, and to define future assistance needs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/8 without vote.

International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/15 of 20 November 1990, 46/109 A and B of 17 December 1991 and 47/118 of 18 December 1992 concerning the situation in Central America, in which it welcomed the implementation of phases I and II of the National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters concluded in Nicaragua on 26 October 1990 and 15 August 1991, and endorsed, in particular, the provision concerning exceptional circumstances of Nicaragua and the invitation to the international community and the international funding agencies to provide effective and efficient support for the implementation of the Agreement,

Recalling its resolution 47/169 of 22 December 1992 concerning the item entitled "International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters", in which it commended the international community for its work in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua and requested the continuation of the support to overcome the aftermath of the war and natural disasters and to stimulate the process of reconstruction and development,

Deeply concerned at the fact that the recent natural disasters and the burden of foreign debt are impeding Nicaragua's efforts to overcome the consequences of the war within the framework of a democracy and in the macroeconomic conditions already achieved,

Recognizing the efforts of the international community and the Government of Nicaragua to provide relief and emergency assistance to persons affected by the aftermath of the war, the floods, the volcanic eruption, the tidal wave and the recent hurricane,

Recognizing also that the intensive efforts of the Government of Nicaragua to promote economic reactivation within the framework of a process of adjustment with economic growth and development with equity have been hindered by situations of violence resulting from the aftermath of the war and by the needs of thousands of displaced persons, refugees and unemployed persons who must be integrated into the economic life of the country, as well as by the effects of natural disasters,

Recognizing further that the Government of Nicaragua is making considerable progress in securing a broad social consensus by means of a process of national dialogue for the adoption of measures to lay the foundations for reconstruction and economic and social development,

1. Commends the efforts made by the international community, including the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to supplement the action undertaken by the Government of Nicaragua in the task of rehabilitation and national reconstruction, as well as in providing emergency assistance;

2. Encourages the Government of Nicaragua to continue its efforts for reconstruction and national reconciliation;

3. Requests all Member States, the international funding agencies and regional, intraregional and non-governmental organizations to continue providing, in a flexible form, support to Nicaragua at the required levels, giving particular attention to the exceptional circumstances in Nicaragua, both to overcome the aftermath of the war and natural disasters and to stimulate the process of reconstruction, social investment, stabilization and development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close cooperation with the Nicaraguan authorities, to provide all necessary assistance to activities for the rehabilitation, reconstruction, stabilization and development of that country and to continue to ensure the timely, comprehensive, flexible and effective formulation and coordination of programmes of the United Nations system in Nicaragua, given the importance of those activities for the consolidation of peace;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide Nicaragua, at the request of its Government, with all possible assistance to support the consolidation of peace, in areas such as the settlement of displaced and demobilized persons and refugees, land ownership and land tenure in rural areas, direct care for war victims, mine clearance and the overcoming of difficulties in the restoration of the productive areas of the country, and, in general, a process of sustained economic and social recovery and development that will render the peace and democracy achieved irreversible;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the action taken to implement the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session the item entitled "International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters".

Haiti

The United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) responded to the worsening situation in Haiti by formulating, through a coordinating committee for humanitarian assistance to Haiti, a joint Consolidated Humanitarian Plan of Action. The Plan, covering needs totalling $62.7 million, was launched in March and included emergency programmes in the fields of health, nutrition and food aid, water supply and sanitation, and agriculture, as well as support services and some education and other social needs. A United Nations/OAS Steering Committee was established to coordinate its implementation.

The Assistant Secretary-General of OAS and the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations renewed the March appeal in June, and again in August, urging the international community to respond to Haiti's deteriorating economic and social circumstances. They said they were encouraged by the signing of the Governors Island Agreement in July (see PART TWO, Chapter II) and the promise it held for restoring normal political, social and economic activity. They noted that the renewed appeal focused on immediate emergency needs and that a comprehensive emergency economic recovery programme, under the auspices of the World Bank, IMF, UNDP and the United States Agency for International Development, was being formulated.

On 16 June, the Security Council, by resolution 841(1993) and consistent with the trade embargo recommended by OAS, imposed an oil embargo on Haiti. The Committee established to monitor the embargo was able, however, to authorize the importation, in non-commercial quantities, of petroleum and petroleum products for verified essential humanitarian needs.

The General Assembly, in December, by resolution 48/151, called on Member States to intensify their humanitarian assistance to the people of Haiti, and welcomed the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch a team of additional humanitarian personnel there. In April, by resolution 47/20 B and again in December, by resolution 48/27, the Assembly confirmed that the international community intended to increase technical, economic and financial cooperation when constitutional order was established in Haiti.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June 1993 a report with later addendum⁽²⁾ on the implementation of the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (IDNDR), proclaimed by the Assembly in 1989⁽³⁾ and reiterated in 1990. (4) The report described activities in support of national disaster reduction strategies, demonstration projects for the Decade and plans for the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction (see below). The two international organs of the Decade—the Special High-Level Council and the Scientific and Technical Committee—met during 1993. The Council adopted a 12-point Plan of Action for the Conference and the Committee recommended action to strengthen the Decade.

In July, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs told the Economic and Social Council that it was important to harmonize the work of disaster mitigation with IDNDR and that arrangements were being made to integrate the IDNDR secretariat into DHA. The IDNDR Director reported that a steering committee had been established to coordinate United Nations contributions to the Decade; however, national commitment to the Decade was uneven and the resources available were insufficient. He suggested that technical and financial support should be consolidated, either through the Decade Trust Fund or bilaterally.

Major meetings organized in connection with the Decade included the IDNDR Chiba International Conference (Japan, 27-30 November 1992) and the IDNDR Aichi Nagoya International Conference (Japan, 1-4 November 1993).⁽⁵⁾

1994 World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly in 1991(I) had endorsed the recommendation of the Scientific and Technical Committee of IDNDR to convene a World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction in 1994 as a contribution to the mid-term review of the Decade.

In January 1993, the Special High-Level Council of IDNDR, at its second session, adopted a 12-point Plan of Action for the Conference, recommending measures to be taken by the Secretary-General. It undertook to mobilize support and resources for the Conference and promote the adoption of national disaster mitigation policies.

In April, the Scientific and Technical Committee, as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, finalized a conference programme, which included national risk assessments and national and regional meetings to review progress towards Decade goals. The aims of the Conference were to review the national, regional and international accomplishments of the Decade, chart an action programme for the future, exchange information on the implementation of programmes, and increase awareness of the importance of disaster reduction policies. Major themes for the Conference included the cost benefits of hazard mitigation, construction of safer buildings, drought management, disaster warning and preparedness systems, interaction between natural and technological disasters, and the vulnerability of communities and special groups.

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/328, took note of the Secretary-General's report⁽²⁾ and expressed its support for the preparatory work on the Conference. It welcomed the offer of the Government of Japan to host the Conference at Yokohama (23-27 May 1994) and recommended that the General Assembly further consider the plans and preparations for the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/188 without vote.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Expressing its support to all countries that have suffered a heavy loss of human life, as well as serious damage, both material and economic, as a result of natural disasters,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, in which it proclaimed the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and 46/182 of 19 December 1991, in the annex to which it called for substantive improvements in international humanitarian emergency assistance and which led to the establishment of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat,

Recalling also its resolution 46/149 of 18 December 1991, in which it endorsed the convening in 1994 of a world conference of representatives of national committees for the Decade,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1993/328 of 30 July 1993 on the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction,

Recognizing the important contribution the Decade can make to the improvement of emergency management in general and to capacity-building for disaster preparedness and mitigation at the national level,

Emphasizing the important role of professional and other non-governmental organizations, particularly scientific and technological societies, humanitarian groups and investment institutions, in the implementation of programmes and activities of the Decade,

Having considered the 12-point Plan of Action for the Conference, adopted by the Special High-Level Council for the Decade at its second session,

Having also considered the recommendations made by the Secretary-General with the purpose of providing guidance for the continuing implementation of the Decade and the effective preparation and convening of the Conference,

Recognizing the close interrelationship between disaster prevention and sustainable development, which was already recognized at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and taken account of in chapter 7, section F, of Agenda 21,

Convinced that each country bears the primary responsibility for protecting its people, infrastructure and other national assets from the impact of natural disasters,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Decade, which contains, inter alia, the second annual report of the Scientific and Technical Committee on the Decade,

1. Commends those countries exposed to disasters that have already taken initiatives to reduce their vulnerability, encourages them to continue in the context of their socio-economic process, with the implementation of natural disaster mitigation policies during the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, taking into account the targets for progress in disaster reduction defined by the Scientific and Technical Committee on the Decade, and also encourages them to pursue the possibilities of regional cooperation within the framework of the Decade;

2. Encourages the members of the Special High-Level Council for the Decade, on the basis of the advice they have provided to the Secretary-General, to embark actively, individually and as a group, on measures to increase public awareness of the potential for disaster reduction and raise support for the activities of the Decade from Governments, international financing institutions and other funding organizations, and the business community;

3. Commends the Scientific and Technical Committee for the work accomplished in 1992, and endorses its proposals for the preparations for the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction;

4. Calls upon Member States and all other participants in the Decade to participate actively in the financial and technical support of Decade activities, including those of the secretariat of the Decade;

5. Calls upon the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, of which the secretariat of the Decade has become an integral part, to continue to bring closer together the operational and promotional efforts in disaster preparedness and mitigation, thus paving the way for the successful attainment of the goals and objectives of the Decade;

6. Decides to convene in 1994 the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction with the following objectives:

(a) To review the accomplishments of the Decade at the national, regional and international levels;

(b) To chart a programme of action for the future;

(c) To exchange information on the implementation of Decade programmes and policies;

(d) To increase awareness of the importance of disaster reduction policies;

7. Accepts with deep appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Japan to host the World Conference, and decides that the Conference will be held at Yokohama from 23 to 27 May 1994;

8. Decides to establish a Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, which will meet for five days at Geneva, no later than March 1994, to review organizational and substantive preparations for the Conference, approve the programme of work of the Conference and propose rules of procedure for adoption by the Conference, on the basis of recommendations submitted by the secretariat of the Decade, after consultation with the host country;

9. Requests the secretariat of the Decade to serve as the secretariat of the Conference and to coordinate preparatory activities, in close cooperation with the host Government and the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, with the full support of relevant departments and offices of the United Nations Secretariat;

10. Recognizes the importance of broad and multidisciplinary participation in the Conference, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to invite to the Conference all States, national committees for the Decade, and organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as the intergovernmental organizations and scientific associations concerned, relevant non-governmental organizations and the private sector;

11. Calls upon all Governments to take an active part in the Conference and its preparatory process, in particular by:

(a) Undertaking systematic assessments of national and local hazards and risks, with the assistance of the intersectoral national committees for the Decade;

(b) Organizing multidisciplinary national and regional conferences and technical meetings, so as to ensure that the entire potential of each country, both at the national level and within the context of regional cooperation, including its scientific and technical capability, is fully utilized in disaster reduction;

(c) Preparing comprehensive reports on progress achieved and plans for further action to be presented at the Conference;

12. Calls upon all United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to participate actively in the Conference, as well as its preparatory process, and commends those organizations which, in line with the open and participatory nature of the Decade, have assumed responsibility for the organization of technical committees at the Conference;

13. Decides that the preparatory process and the Conference itself should be funded through existing budgetary resources, without negatively affecting programmed activities, and through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund established for the Decade;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to appeal to all Member States to contribute generously to the Trust Fund with a view to financing the additional activities required in preparing for and holding the Conference;

15. Expresses its deep appreciation to those countries that have provided generous support for the activities of the Decade by making voluntary contributions to its Trust Fund, making available scientific and technical knowledge, developing and implementing innovative disaster reduction projects and hosting activities or meetings of importance to the Decade;

16. Also expresses its deep appreciation to those national committees and focal points for the Decade that have participated actively in the process of attaining the goals and objectives of the Decade;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, including the findings of the mid-term review of the implementation of the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, to be carried out by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994.

Drought-stricken areas

Southern Africa

DHA stated in a June situation report that the 1992/93 regional drought emergency, which affected more than 20 million people in southern Africa (Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe), was over. Improved crop and food supply estimates and the mobilization of local and regional resources had averted a major famine. DHA stated that $708 million of the $951 million requested had been received following the joint Southern African Development Community (SADC)/United Nations appeal launched in 1992. Contributions to the appeal totalled 1.5 million metric tons of target food,

2 million tons of programme food, and $76 million for non-food requirements. In addition, Governments in the region had diverted large amounts of their own resources for food imports and the distribution of relief assistance. DHA noted that the SADC region usually exported food, but had been forced to import 11.6 million tons of food valued at $4 billion, including transportation costs. Efforts were under way at the national and regional levels to review the response to the 1991/92 drought to see how the region's capacity to respond to future droughts might be improved. A number of SADC initiatives were also focusing on regional food security. A key factor in the effective coordination of the flow of food was the SADC/WFP Logistics Advisory Centre. NGOs assisted with the feeding of vulnerable groups, emergency water and sanitation activities and the implementation of nutrition and health programmes.

With widespread rains in Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia during the 1992/93 growing season, the forecast for total 1993 cereal production in the SADC region was around 11.5 million metric tons—almost double that of the 1992 harvest. Although much of the food deficit for the 1993/94 marketing year would be covered by commercial imports, several countries would require substantial food aid. The impact of the drought on the water supply and health sectors continued to be felt and additional assistance was required to prevent further deterioration in health conditions. The continued effects of the drought were also being felt in the areas of livestock, industry, infrastructure and social institutions. Close collaboration at the national level by United Nations agencies, NGOs, the World Bank, IMF and the African Development Bank would be necessary during the transition to the post-emergency phase.

DHA continued to cooperate with SADC in identifying ways to enhance the emergency response and drought management capacities of its member countries. An SADC regional drought management workshop was held (Harare, Zimbabwe, 13-16 September) to determine the most effective strategies for dealing with future drought; it was followed by workshops in each of the SADC countries. The SADC initiative was intended to complement activities undertaken or planned for countries of the region by the DHA-UNDP Disaster Management Training Programme.

Sudano-Sahelian region

In a report on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO),⁽⁶⁾ the UNDP Administrator noted that UNSO programme activities, totalling about $60 million, supported the broad areas of environmental planning, the development of local natural-resource management capacities, environmental information systems, coordination and information, and the negotiation of an international convention to combat desertification. During 1993, UNSO-supported drought and desertification strategies were adopted by Benin, Burkina Faso, the Gambia, Mali and Mauritania, and were in different stages of preparation in other countries. UNSO also supported local-level natural resources management, traditional land-use systems, and the decentralization of resources management to land users. It helped to formulate Environmental Information Systems programmes in Chad, the Gambia, Mali, the Niger, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, and to prepare desertification case-studies for Uganda and Mali.

On 21 May⁽⁷⁾ the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) requested the Executive Director, in consultation with UNDP, to amend the UNEP/UNDP joint undertaking to allow UNSO to intensify its involvement in desertification control.

On 18 June⁽⁸⁾ the UNDP Governing Council recognized the important role of UNSO in implementing follow-up activities to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED)⁽⁹⁾ and encouraged the Administrator to strengthen the role of UNSO as the UNDP focal point for all matters related to drought and desertification control. It requested the Administrator to report in 1994 on alternative ways of financing the work of UNSO and reconfirmed its support for the UNSO/UNEP joint venture to implement the drought and desertification programmes of UNCED's Agenda 21, particularly in Africa.

UNSO prepared UNDP's system-wide desertification strategy, which was adopted in November.

The Secretary-General, in a June report on the implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification⁽¹⁰⁾ and the medium-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region⁽¹¹⁾ stated that UNSO, in collaboration with the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, was creating closer ties with SADC and the Maghreb Arab Union and was strengthening its collaboration with the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank in subregional consultations and joint strategic programmes related to provisions of Agenda 21.

The Economic and Social Council, on 29 July, by decision 1993/312, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Storms and cyclones

Cuba

On 31 March⁽¹²⁾ Barbados, on behalf of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean Member States, reported that on 12 March Cuba was battered by winds of up to 200 kilometres per hour and waves up to 25 feet. Eight of Cuba's 14 provinces were seriously affected by winds and sea-water flooding in coastal areas. Five people died and tens of thousands were displaced when homes were destroyed or damaged. Preliminary estimates of losses to personal property, industrial installations, public service facilities and crops exceeded $1 billion.

Although national efforts had been fully deployed to counter the effects of the storm, and some international aid had been received, the Group considered it necessary for the United Nations to encourage massive international assistance to counter the widespread damage to the Cuban economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/228 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Cuba

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the extensive damage and devastation in Cuba caused by the very severe storm that affected that country on 12 and 13 March 1993,

Noting with concern the loss of life, the destruction of thousands of dwellings and the severe damage to major sectors of the national infrastructure,

Acknowledging the efforts of the Government and the people of Cuba to provide relief and emergency assistance to the people affected by the storm,

Noting that the continuing efforts of the Government of Cuba to promote economic growth and development will be hampered by this calamity,

1. Declares its solidarity with the Government and the people of Cuba in this hour of trial;
2. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the Government of Cuba to provide speedy relief to the storm victims from national resources;
3. Commends the efforts of the international community to supplement the relief operations and emergency assistance provided by the Government of Cuba;
4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close collaboration with the Government authorities, to assist in the rehabilitation efforts of the Government and the people of Cuba;
5. Requests all States and international organizations and other intergovernmental agencies to extend emergency support to Cuba for the duration of the emergency and the ensuing rehabilitation process to alleviate the plight of the afflicted people of Cuba, including their economic and financial burden.

Iran

Floods caused by heavy rains in Iran between February and April resulted in severe loss of life and livestock and damage to farmlands, housing and infrastructure. Total damage was estimated at $350 million to $400 million. International responses included contributions in cash, through the Iranian Red Crescent Society, and in kind. DHA made an emergency grant for the purchase of rice and vegetable oil, and conducted a mission in May, in collaboration with UNDP Tehran, the Government and non-governmental institutions.

The National Disaster Task Force had overall responsibility for relief programmes.

Other disastersEarthquake in India

On 30 September, the south-eastern area of India's Maharashtra State was struck by an earthquake measuring 6.4 on the Richter scale. DHA dispatched its United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination Stand-by Team, and the international response to cover United Nations relief activities was reported at over $6 million as at 4 October. The Indian Government launched a major relief operation, using army teams who worked with thousands of volunteers. The earthquake was the strongest in India in 50 years, killing more than 11,000 people and causing extensive property damage.

Locust infestation in Africa

Countries in the Maghreb/Sahel region reported a resurgence of the desert locust in September. Infestations were reported in the Sudan and Somalia. In West Africa, a first wave had passed through Chad, eastern Niger and Mauritania. Reproduction of locust populations had also been observed in Mali and Mauritania. Available data suggested that ecological conditions were generally favourable to the locusts in West Africa and that swarms from the current reproduction cycle would move towards central and northern Mauritania, and possibly to Morocco or south-west Algeria. India and Pakistan also faced serious infestations and it was feared that those populations, if not destroyed, could aggravate the situation in central and western regions in 1994.

An ad hoc meeting of experts from the countries of the Arab Maghreb Union and the Sahel discussed the locust infestations (Tunis, Tunisia, 1 and 2 September)⁽¹³⁾ and described action taken by FAO to organize prevention and control operations and raise the necessary financial resources. The meeting elaborated an emergency plan to contain the locust invasion in the short and medium term. Its recommendations were adopted by a meeting of FAO and Ministers of Agriculture responsible for locust control in the countries of the Maghreb and the Sahel (Algiers, Algeria, 27 September).⁽¹⁴⁾ The latter meeting invited FAO, as an immediate measure, to implement the emergency plan quickly, and to undertake complementary activities to manage the situation in the front-line countries and in Mauritania in particular. FAO was asked to formulate a medium-term preventive control programme for the entire desert locust invasion area and to develop training and research in scientific and technical areas of locust control. The establishment of a regional training and research centre for West Africa was recommended.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/20 without vote.

Emergency action to combat locust infestation in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the international strategy for the fight against locust infestation, particularly in Africa, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1989/98 of 26 July 1989 and endorsed by the General Assembly in its decision 44/438 of 19 December 1989,

Also recalling its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, which included locust infestations among the types of natural disasters to be covered by the Decade,

Deeply concerned at the exceptional seriousness and real dangers of the current locust infestation in Africa and concerned at its resulting economic, social and environmental consequences, including the reduction of agricultural output and the displacement of affected populations,

Aware that current campaigns for locust control have so far been unable to put an end to the infestation, in particular because of the limited financial resources of the affected countries, and convinced that the fight against this plague, because of its recurrent nature, requires increased and coordinated mobilization of appropriate human, scientific, technical, material and financial resources,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the meeting of the Ministers of Agriculture responsible for locust control of the countries of the Maghreb and of the Sahel, held at Algiers on 27 September 1993,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the worsening locust infestation in Africa, especially in the Sahel and Maghreb regions, which threatens other regions of Africa, and reaffirms the need to accord high priority to locust control and eradication;

2. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the affected countries, and expresses its gratitude to donor countries, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other competent institutions of the United Nations system for their efforts to contain the locust infestation in Africa;

3. Calls upon the international community, particularly the developed countries and the United Nations system, to support fully the locust control programmes undertaken at the national, subregional and regional levels by the affected countries;

4. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization speedily to implement the emergency plan adopted by the experts from the region at their meeting held at Tunis on 1 and 2 September 1993 and to undertake the relevant complementary activities with a view to controlling the situation in the front-line countries;

5. Requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization, in collaboration with the Secretary-General, to keep the situation under constant review and to organize a pledging conference as early as possible in the first quarter of 1994 with a view to mobilizing the necessary financial and other resources such as aircraft, appropriate chemicals and technical personnel to provide effective assistance to affected countries in their efforts to combat the locust infestation in Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chernobyl aftermath

On 22 June⁽¹⁵⁾ the Russian Federation communicated to the Secretary-General an appeal to parliaments, Governments and the international community issued by participants in the International Conference on the Scientific and Practical Aspects of Medical and Social Problems and the Role of the Sanatorium and Spa System in Improving the Health of the Population Exposed to the Effects of Radiation as a Consequence of the Accident at the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant, and of Other Radiological Disasters (Golitsyno, Russian Federation, 10 and 11 February). The Conference appealed for greater efforts to save the lives and protect the health of people affected by the accident, and to revitalize the regions exposed to radioactive contamination.

In July, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs reported orally to the Economic and Social Council on strengthening international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study and mitigate the consequences of Chernobyl. On 22 July, the Council, by decision 1993/232, took note of the oral report and decided to keep the matter under review.

In September⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1992⁽¹⁷⁾

presented the conclusions of an analytical review of all United Nations activities related to the accident, summarized action by the international community and made recommendations for further action to stimulate and coordinate assistance. The report noted that in March 1993 the post of United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl was conferred upon the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, who convened a meeting of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Chernobyl (Geneva, 16 April). That meeting launched a new approach to the Chernobyl problem and submitted priority projects with clearly defined time-frames to the Coordinator.

In May, the Coordinator went to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. He took part in a coordination meeting with their Ministers responsible for Chernobyl relief (Minsk, Belarus, 26 May), which emphasized the importance of openness and transparency in issues of nuclear safety and waste management. It recommended that the United Nations promote closer cooperation and a more effective division of labour among the States affected, the United Nations system and international organizations, and agreed on the need for a flexible funding strategy. In the communique issued following the meeting, the three Ministers and the Coordinator agreed to increase efforts to implement priority projects; to identify possible sources of funding on a bilateral, regional and multilateral basis; to encourage the incorporation of the Chernobyl problem into the regular activities of the specialized agencies; to request the Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO) to conduct a study on the treatment of the health of the persons who took part in the immediate post-Chernobyl relief efforts; and to create a quadripartite coordination committee. That new high-level coordinating mechanism would meet regularly to exchange information on the efforts of the United Nations system, to provide for more precise coordination of international efforts, and to promote and strengthen efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the disaster. The first meeting of the committee was held on 17 November.

The Management Committee of the WHO International Programme on the Health Effects of the Chernobyl Accident met in May and reported that, due to financial constraints, so far only five health projects had been implemented. The Coordinator held meetings with the European Community in June and with the Commission of the European Communities in July as part of the initiative to strengthen cooperation, and a further meeting of the Inter-Agency Task Force was convened in July to determine ways of approaching potential donors to finance specific projects. The meeting urged that preference be given to projects that promised tangible results for the affected population, rather than purely research projects.

The results of the analytical review of United Nations activities indicated that an appropriate balance had to be achieved between the United Nations approach, which addressed the issue within the more complex economic and social context of the affected States, and the interests of the international community, which lay principally in research. The two approaches were considered complementary, and it was noted that areas of overlap provided opportunities for collaboration, for combining resources and for pooling expertise and knowledge. It was felt that the United Nations should cultivate an interdisciplinary focus and mobilize support for organizations that could effectively respond to priority needs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/206 without vote.

Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990 and 46/150 of 18 December 1991,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/50 of 13 July 1990, 1991/51 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/38 of 30 July 1992 and taking note of Council decision 1993/232 of 22 July 1993,

Taking note of the decisions adopted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 45/190 and 46/150,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by Member States and by organizations of the United Nations system in the development of cooperation to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, the activities of regional and other organizations, in particular the Commission of the European Communities, as well as bilateral activities and those of the non-governmental sector,

Bearing in mind the communique on the meeting of the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine and the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, held at Minsk on 26 May 1993,

Recognizing the importance of providing international support to the ongoing national efforts to mitigate and minimize the radiological, health, socio-economic, psychological and environmental consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, taking into consideration the subsequent social, economic and other changes that have occurred in the countries most affected by the Chernobyl disaster,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 47/165 of 18 December 1992 and the conclusions of the analytical review of all United Nations activities to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 45/190, 46/150 and 47/165 and, in particular, to continue to maintain close contacts with the Commission of the European Communities and regional and other relevant organizations, with a view to encouraging the regular exchange of information, cooperation, coordination and complementarity in the multilateral and bilateral efforts in those areas, while implementing programmes and specific projects;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of a further exchange of information between the United Nations, as a catalyst, existing coordination mechanisms and Member States on the activities related to Chernobyl;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its fiftieth session, under a separate agenda item, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

The growth of both world output and world trade accelerated in 1992 for the first time since 1988. While the recovery in output was modest, the volume growth of world trade was much greater, due to the recovery in the United States, the import boom in Latin America and the continued expansion of intra-Asian trade. However, international trade continued to be affected by structural and policy-driven changes as well as by macroeconomic developments in the world economy, including the recession and large currency misalignments.

An important landmark in the liberalization of global trade was the successful conclusion on 15 December, seven years after it was launched, of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. The General Assembly had earlier urged participants to complete the Round by that date, taking into account the particular interests of the developing countries (resolution 48/55).

The Assembly examined various aspects of international trade, finance and development and decided to convene, in 1995, under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Third United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (decision 48/442). It emphasized the importance of monitoring the implementation of the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by UNCTAD VIII in 1992, and requested UNCTAD to continue its special role in trade and environment (resolution 48/55). With regard to the debt problems of developing countries, the Assembly called on the international community to implement additional relief measures, including further cancellation or reduction of debt and debt service related to official debt, and to take urgent action with regard to the remaining commercial debt owed by the developing countries (48/182).

In the area of transport, the International Convention on Maritime Liens and Mortgages was adopted at a Conference convened by UNCTAD and the International Maritime Organization.

UNCTAD VIII follow-up

In a September 1993 report on strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade⁽¹⁾ prepared in response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on developments within UNCTAD and its subsidiary bodies since the eighth session (1992) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VIII).⁽³⁾ UNCTAD's work had concentrated on the implementation of the Cartagena Commitment, focusing on reforms to its intergovernmental machinery and working methods and on reorienting and enhancing its activities in the areas of trade and development through the adoption and implementation of work programmes for all its new intergovernmental organs. Although those reforms were largely implemented, further work was needed to address outstanding institutional issues, such as optimal forms of the outcome of the intergovernmental deliberations. Recent activities in UNCTAD had demonstrated the willingness of member States to assign it a wider scope for policy analysis and UNCTAD was well placed to contribute to the processes of consensus-building and policy-making regarding the post-Uruguay Round trade agenda.

The report also described developments in the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations and addressed the question of strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade (see below).

At the second part of its thirty-ninth session (Geneva, 15-26 March),⁽⁴⁾ the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) discussed follow-up action to the recommendations adopted at UNCTAD VIII. It had before it a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General⁽⁵⁾ on the development of human resources for trade. The report discussed human resources development as a strategic factor in international trade and competitiveness and the formulation and implementation of human resources development in international trade, and outlined UNCTAD's future role in supporting developing countries and economies in transition in their human resources development efforts. The report recommended that UNCTAD familiarize policy makers with the subject, promote exchanges of views and disseminate information and databases; pursue on-the-job training in the context of advisory services; expand its TRAINMAR and TRAINFORTRADE programmes in cooperation with the International Trade Centre (ITC) and other United Nations organizations; cooperate with research and training institutions; and develop a research programme in human resources development for trade.

TDB adopted a report of one of its Vice-Presidents, which noted that the Board's discussion supported the continuation and implementation of UNCTAD's human resources development activities in trade and trade-related areas. Such activities should be carried out in collaboration with ITC and other organizations, paying special attention to the needs of the least developed countries (LDCs) and geographically disadvantaged countries. The Board approved of the approach of TRAINMAR and TRAINFORTRADE, particularly their long-term approach to capacity-building and network development. The discussion highlighted the need for UNCTAD to develop human resources development networks among research, training and technological institutions in trade and trade-related areas and noted that the work of UNCTAD's intergovernmental experts contributed to the development of appropriate human resources development policies. TDB invited donor countries to increase their contributions to UNCTAD and drew attention to the desirability of developing countries using bilateral and multilateral funds to enable them to benefit from UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities in human resources development.

At the first part of its fortieth session (Geneva, 20 September-1 October)⁽⁴⁾ TDB reviewed the evolution and consequences of emerging free trade and economic integration agreements. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽⁵⁾ which analysed the recent evolution and consequences of economic spaces and regional integration processes, and examined European integration, economic integration in the western hemisphere, in Asia and the Pacific and among developing countries, and the dynamic effects of regional integration on the international trading system. The UNCTAD Secretary-General submitted to the Board's March session a report on regional integration issues in Africa.⁽⁷⁾

On 1 October⁽⁸⁾ TDB stated that, to maintain the positive aspects of integration arrangements and their dynamic growth effects, member States and groupings should be supportive of the multilateral trading system; integration groupings should observe multilateral disciplines and rules in devising their policies and ensure transparency of their rules, regulations and standards, taking into account the effects on third countries; intensification or extension of integration schemes should lead to further multilateral trade liberalization and global integration; integration groupings should bear special responsibility for their weaker trading partners, particularly developing countries, identify new opportunities for economic interaction with developing countries, and encourage investment cooperation, joint ventures and other measures to help third countries to expand trade and economic cooperation with groupings; and, in accepting new members, they should avoid adverse effects on liberal market access for developing countries. The UNCTAD secretariat should provide technical advice, analysis and training to facilitate information, dialogue and evaluation for a better understanding of integration schemes, and UNCTAD bodies, including its Standing Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I), should intensify their work on strengthening economic integration of developing countries.

TDB recommended that the secretariat should provide it with information on significant new developments in regional integration groupings and on their implications for other countries.

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 1993(1) noted that international trade in 1992 was affected by structural and policy changes as well as by macroeconomic developments in the world economy. These included the recession in the developed economies and large currency misalignments and realignments; the collapse of the economic and political systems of the former socialist countries of Eastern Europe; the unification of Germany; initiatives regarding regional trading blocs; new environmental policies; trade conflicts and protectionism in member countries of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD); the trade-liberalization and export-expansion policies of developing countries; increased productivity of primary commodities; the conflict in the Persian Gulf; the emergence of China as a major participant in world trade; and uncertainties due to the failure to complete the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations until the end of 1993 (see below). While some developments enlarged developing countries' trading opportunities, others intensified competition in OECD markets, in some cases accompanied by reduced predictability and greater risks, threatening the momentum of export expansion in developing countries and those of Central and Eastern Europe and of the former USSR.

The World Economic Survey 1993(2) reported that the pattern of trade flows did not suggest a large change from recent trends. The volume of world exports grew by 4.5 per cent in 1992, compared with around 3.5 per cent in 1991. Growth in trade reflected the regional pattern of the growth of output, differing widely among countries and regions. The developed market economies gave only weak impetus to world trade in 1992, except for North America, which increased imports by 11 per cent, reflecting the economic recovery in the United States and Canada that began to take hold during the year. United States exports grew by 7 per cent, almost twice the global growth rate, despite the sluggish nature of its markets in Europe and Japan. Japan's imports contracted and exports fell steeply as growth of its economy slowed. There was a sharp reduction in German import growth after two years of double-digit growth. The weak import demand in Germany and in other European economies had important repercussions on their European trading partners.

In the transition economies, the attempt to redirect trade resulted in a sharp decline in both exports and imports. The States of the former USSR entered deeply into that process in 1992, while in Eastern Europe the overall contraction in trade appeared to have ended. Although the rate of growth of trade of developing countries as a whole slowed somewhat, exports grew by 7 per cent and imports by 10 per cent. In Latin America and the Caribbean, trade expanded rapidly, especially imports. The volume of exports increased by over 6 per cent, with Brazil and Chile registering rapid expansion. Africa's exports, dominated by primary products, grew by only 4 per cent compared to 7 per cent in 1991. Imports recovered modestly from 1991 levels, mostly food imports to supplement production shortfalls. Trade in South and East Asia continued its strong growth, although at a much slower rate than in 1991. Exports grew by 11 per cent and imports by 10 per cent compared with 15 per cent in 1991. China's trade continued to expand vigorously; the value of its exports grew by some 14 per cent and imports by 22 per cent. Depressed oil prices resulted in only a modest increase in the value of exports of the countries of Western Asia, while imports expanded by 7 per cent.

UNCTAD action. At its September/October session, TDB considered, on the basis of the Trade and Development Report, 1993, the international implications of macroeconomic policies and issues concerning global interdependence. On 1 October⁽⁷⁾ it expressed concern over the continuing recession in the developed market economies. It noted that the slow growth, in addition to adding to unemployment in the developed countries, was exacerbating protectionist pressures and limiting the demand for, and hence putting downward pressure on, the prices of their imports from developing countries. The terms of trade for developing countries' commodity and manufactured exports were deteriorating continuously, with adverse consequences for their development performance and prospects. TDB emphasized that the failure of developed countries to improve access to their markets posed a danger for the efforts of other countries to accelerate development by opening up their own economies and integrating into the world economy. The need for an early-warning mechanism to address key emerging issues was stressed, as was the need to adhere to the principles and rules of the multilateral trading system. There was consensus on the importance of an early and balanced conclusion of the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations, taking into account the interests of developing countries. TDB also identified global economic measures to stimulate growth (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/55 without vote.

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continuing validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, the Cartagena Commitment, and the various agreements, in particular Agenda 21, that provide an overall framework for developing cooperative action to address the development challenges of the 1990s,

Recalling its resolutions 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly and 47/183 of 22 December 1992 on the eighth session of the Conference,

Noting the progress made by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the implementation of the outcome of its eighth session, in particular its contribution, within its mandate, to trade and environmental issues,

Noting with concern that, although a number of developing countries have experienced higher rates of growth and an expansion of their trade, the current international economic situation, characterized by slow growth and a fragile economic recovery, has adversely affected the growth and development of all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Emphasizing the importance of an open, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory and predictable multilateral trading system that is consistent with the goals of sustainable development and that leads to the optimal distribution of global production in accordance with comparative advantage, and of a stable international financial environment for economic recovery and growth in all parts of the world economy, in particular in the developing countries,

Noting with serious concern the intensification of pressures for protectionism and unilateralism, in particular in many developed countries, and stressing in this regard the need for all countries to halt and reverse protectionism and respect multilaterally agreed trade rules,

Emphasizing also that the high economic cost of protectionist policies has a negative impact on the economic growth and sustainable development of all countries, in particular the developing countries, and emphasizing further that within this context such policies in no case constitute an appropriate means of addressing the serious problems of unemployment,

Recognizing that improved access to external markets and further multilateral trade liberalization are very important prerequisites for the reactivation of growth in all parts of the world economy, in particular in the developing countries,

Recognizing with satisfaction that major structural economic reforms, as well as trade policy liberalization and regional economic integration efforts, are being undertaken by many developing countries, as well as by a number of other countries, and that such policies have contributed to the expansion of world trade and enhanced export possibilities and economic growth prospects for all countries,

Recognizing also that regional economic integration processes, including those among developing countries, which have intensified in recent years, impart substantial dynamism to global trade and enhance trade and development possibilities for all countries, and stressing that in order to maintain the positive aspects of such integration arrangements and assure the prevalence of their dynamic growth effects, Member States and groupings should strive to be outward-oriented and supportive of the multilateral trading system,

Emphasizing the need for increased international support for the reforms being undertaken by many developing countries and by countries with economies in transition, including the provision of increased global market access for their exports, which is of critical importance for the success and further encouragement of those reforms,

Reaffirming the need to give priority to problems facing the least developed countries, owing to the fragility of their economies and their particular vulnerability to external shocks and natural calamities,

Reaffirming also the message from the Trade and Development Board to the Governments participating in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, adopted by the Board at the second part of its thirty-ninth session, in which the Board stressed that an early and successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round should be viewed as a prerequisite to a return to the path of growth, trade expansion and an improved world economic climate,

Stressing that, for the Uruguay Round to be concluded in a balanced manner, issues of particular interest to developing countries and their development must be taken fully into account,

Emphasizing that a failure of the Uruguay Round would seriously risk eroding business confidence, intensify trade differences and disputes, retard global economic growth and recovery, encourage and protect uncompetitive sectors of the economy and undermine the outward-oriented reforms being undertaken by many developing countries,

Reaffirming the need for a balanced and integrated approach to environment, trade and development issues within the context of a new global partnership for sustainable development,

Recognizing that the complex linkages between trade and environment pose significant challenges to the pursuit of sustainable development and to the maintenance of a free and open trading system,

Welcoming Trade and Development Board decision 402(XXXIX) of 26 March 1993 on sustainable development and its conclusions 407(XL) of 1 October 1993 regarding the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate and in the context of sustainable development, to the study of the interlinkages between trade and environment,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-ninth session and the first part of its fortieth session, and calls upon all States to take appropriate action to implement the outcome of those sessions;

2. Emphasizes the importance of follow-up and monitoring of the implementation of the policies and measures contained in the Cartagena Commitment;

3. Takes note of the conclusions derived from the debate of the Trade and Development Board, which was underpinned, inter alia, by the Trade and Development Report, 1993, on the international implications of macro-economic policies and issues concerning interdependence, as constituting a concrete contribution to the changing of perceptions on issues concerning growth dynamics in various regions, particularly with respect to the conceptual framework, design and implementation of structural adjustment policies;

4. Recognizes that trade liberalization by all countries, in particular the developed countries, is an important tool for increasing economic efficiency and improving resource allocation, economic growth, sustainable development and employment in all countries;

5. Stresses in this context the urgent need for trade liberalization and improved access to the markets of all countries, in particular those of the developed countries, in order to generate global economic growth and sustainable development for the benefit of all countries, in particular the developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition;

6. Emphasizes that, in order to promote sustainable development through trade, the removal of existing distortions in international trade is essential; emphasizes, in particular, the need for a substantial and progressive reduction in the support and protection of agriculture, covering internal regimes, market access and export subsidies, as well as of industry and other sectors, so as to avoid inflicting large losses on the more efficient producers, especially in developing countries; and in this context further emphasizes that trade liberalization should be pursued on a global basis across economic sectors so as to contribute to sustainable development;

7. Deplores the repeated delays in concluding the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

8. Urges all countries, in particular the major developed countries, to resolve all outstanding differences in all areas of the negotiations in order to ensure a successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round;

9. Strongly urges all participants in the Uruguay Round to complete the Round by 15 December 1993, taking into account issues of particular interest to the developing countries and providing a comprehensive market access package on goods and services, including items of export interest to those countries, and stresses in this regard the need for a full contribution by all parties;

10. Urges all participants to give special attention to the least developed countries with a view to enhancing their full participation in the multilateral trading system;

11. Stresses that the ability of many developing countries to mobilize, through international trade, the resources needed to finance investments required for sustainable development may be impaired by tariff and non-tariff impediments, including tariff escalation, limiting their access to export markets, and also that a comprehensive and balanced conclusion to the Uruguay Round would help all countries mobilize financing for sustainable development;

12. Emphasizes that an open, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory and predictable multilateral trading system that is consistent with the goals of sustainable development and that leads to the optimal distribution of global production in accordance with comparative advantage is of benefit to all trading partners, and in this context also emphasizes that improved market access for the exports of developing countries in conjunction with sound macroeconomic and environmental policies would have a positive environmental impact and would therefore make an important contribution towards sustainable development;

13. Also emphasizes that environment and trade policies should be made mutually supportive, with a view to achieving sustainable development;

14. Further emphasizes that environmental measures addressing transborder or global environmental problems should, as far as possible, be based on an international consensus, and in this context emphasizes still further that the international community should strive for the broadest possible international coordination of environmental and trade policies through intergovernmental cooperation, taking into account the complex linkages between environment, trade and sustainable development;

15. Emphasizes that trade policy measures for environmental purposes should not constitute a means of arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination or a disguised restriction on international trade and that, in this respect, unilateral actions to deal with environmental challenges outside the jurisdiction of the importing country should be avoided;

16. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue its special role in the field of trade and environment, including policy analysis, conceptual work and consensus-building, with a view to ensuring transparency and coherence in making environmental and trade policies mutually supportive, and taking into account the work being done by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and other competent international and regional economic institutions;

17. Invites the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with their respective mandates and competencies and in close cooperation with other competent United Nations bodies and the regional commissions, to address trade and environmental matters comprehensively, and to submit, through the Commission on Sustainable Development, a report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994.

General Assembly resolution 48/55

10 December 1993 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.D without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.57), based on informal consultations on draft by China and Colombia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/48/L.15); agenda item 91 (al).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 30-32, 34, 45; plenary 75.

Trade policy

The Trade and Development Report, 1993(1) noted that the process of trade liberalization in developing countries continued, with many countries taking steps to open their economies, foster their integration into world markets, and reduce tariff rates or simplify or bind most of their tariffs. Import-liberalization measures in the non-tariff area were also implemented and anti-dumping and anti-subsidy legislation was adopted. Countries in Central and Eastern Europe also embarked on fundamental economic reforms embracing liberal trade policies and the newly independent States of the former USSR declared their intention to adopt outward-oriented policies, despite the disruption of trade that accompanied the difficult transition process. By contrast, trade liberalization in the developed countries was modest. Some of them made liberalization contingent upon attaining their objectives in international trade negotiations, while others implemented tariff reductions provisionally pending a satisfactory outcome of the Uruguay Round. Only a few developed countries reduced trade restrictions on a most-favoured-nation (MFN) basis. The move towards regional and subregional integration accelerated with the completion of a number of integration schemes and trading arrangements.

The World Economic Survey 1993(2) reported that the resort to bilateral, regional or mini-multilateral trading arrangements was a concomitant of the growing disenchantment with multilateralism. However, concern over the wisdom of such trading blocs had arisen with their proliferation.

Some proponents of trade blocs viewed them as building blocks of an open international trading system. However, the many protectionist and discriminatory practices associated with the formation and functioning of trading blocs cast doubt on that view. Indeed, blocs could provide greater incentives for applying trade-management devices such as anti-dumping measures and voluntary export restraints.

A multilateral trading system in which all countries traded freely with one another remained the best way to increase world welfare. To ensure that trade blocs did not ultimately fragment the multilateral trading system, it was necessary to strengthen the rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) (see PART SIX, Chapter XVIII), especially those relating to transparency and non-discrimination, and the commitment to abide by those rules.

Trade policy reforms in developing countries

In a January report on trade policy reforms in developing countries and the international support required, (4) the UNCTAD secretariat noted that an increasing number of developing countries had embarked on far-reaching economic reforms with the active collaboration of international financial institutions. Trade policy reforms, which were usually important components of the broader reform efforts, were increasingly directed towards trade liberalization. While some progress had been made, many reforms had yet to achieve their objective. Only a few of the more advanced developing countries had managed to increase exports and investments significantly. The report recommended an expansion of external support through unhindered access to export markets and the development of an equitable, secure and predictable international trading system; the promotion of competitive market structures; incentives and assistance conducive to technology transfer and direct foreign investment in developing countries; and the provision of technical cooperation. Since there was no standard trade-policy approach applicable to all developing countries, international support should allow for policy pluralism and flexible approaches to policy reforms.

UNCTAD action. In conclusions adopted on 26 March⁽⁵⁾ TDB considered that developing countries' trade policy reforms and structural adjustment should be pursued, consistent with their trade, financial and development needs, and should incorporate a social component, especially with regard to vulnerable social groups. It agreed that the international community should support developing countries, particularly LDCs, through improved market access, increased flows of financial resources and debt relief. It also agreed that UNCTAD should identify and propose treatment of key emerging trade and development issues, including an early-warning perspective. The Inter-governmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices should pursue its work with regard to policies and rules to control such practices, in order to encourage competition, promote proper functioning of markets and efficient resource allocation, and bring about further liberalization of international trade. TDB invited the Ad Hoc Working Group on Expansion of Trading Opportunities for Developing Countries to support those countries' reforms. It agreed that the secretariat should refine a proposal on the study of market-based price mechanisms to assist technology transfer to developing countries, and suggested that further study of national policies in developing countries and of appropriate external support measures to ensure long-term success of trade policy reforms should be carried out.

Uruguay Round

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1993 report on strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade⁽⁷⁾ in which he reviewed developments in the Uruguay Round—the eighth round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched in 1986⁽⁸⁾ under the aegis of GATT.

The Secretary-General noted that the prospects for a successful conclusion of the Round had brightened with the Tokyo Summit (7-9 July 1993)⁽⁹⁾ where leaders of the seven major industrialized countries and the European Community (EC) renewed their determination to achieve a global and balanced agreement before the end of the year. In addition, an agreement on market access issues was reached by Canada, Japan, the United States and EC on 7 July, which led to the resumption of negotiations in the middle of that month. The Secretary-General said it was expected that the negotiations would accelerate with the aim of concluding them by 15 December.

In resolution 48/55, the Assembly deplored the repeated delays in concluding the negotiations and urged all participants to complete the Round by 15 December.

The negotiations, which were concluded on that date, proved to be a landmark in the international trade endeavour to strengthen the multilateral trading system. However, some countries expressed concern over the balance between the likely benefits and shortcomings of the outcome.

UNCTAD action. In March⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB adopted a message to Governments participating in the Uruguay Round. It stated that the draft Final Act should take into account issues of interest to developing countries and their development, financial and trade needs, and be supplemented by a comprehensive market-access package on goods and services. Special attention should be given to the problems of LDCs in order to integrate them into the global trading system. TDB also transmitted to its third executive session (Geneva, 27 April) the report of the Chairman of its Sessional Committee I. The Group of 77 developing countries issued a declaration entitled "Developments in the Uruguay Round", which TDB annexed to its report on that session⁽¹¹⁾

On 1 October⁽¹⁰⁾ the Board, in a statement by its President, said that special efforts should be made in the market-access negotiations for improvements for products of export interest to developing countries, and stressed that evaluation of the Round's results in terms of differential and more favourable treatment for developing countries should be undertaken well in advance to provide sufficient time for possible corrective measures. It recognized UNCTAD's important role in considering developments in the Round, as well as in analysing and assessing the outcome, particularly through technical assistance to developing countries.

Trade and environment

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽¹²⁾ TDB examined the issue of trade and environment at its 1993 sessions. On 26 March⁽¹³⁾ it decided to consider the theme "trade and environment" at the first part of each of its annual sessions and, at the first part of its fortieth session in September/October 1993, the specific issue of trends in the field of trade and environment within the framework of international cooperation. For subsequent sessions, the theme to be discussed would be determined through consultation. TDB transmitted to the General Assembly, through the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and the Economic and Social Council, its report on UNCTAD's plans to implement Agenda 21⁽¹⁴⁾ adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, which it annexed to its decision.

At its September/October session, TDB considered an UNCTAD secretariat report on trends in the field of trade and environment in the framework of international cooperation⁽¹⁵⁾ The report described the linkages between trade and environment, trends in environmental policy and trade, the use of trade measures for environmental purposes, international cooperation on environmental standards, and proposals for strengthening international cooperation. The following were identified as important objectives of strengthened cooperation in trade and environment: expansion of trading opportunities for developing countries; prevention of trade conflicts and maintenance of an open trading system; greater coherence between policies and measures implemented by individual countries; prevention of the detrimental effects of environmental policies and measures on the economic growth of developing countries; and greater integration of trade and environmental policies.

In 1 October conclusions⁽¹⁶⁾ TDB agreed that UNCTAD's role in trade and environment should lie in policy analysis and debate, conceptual work, the building of consensus among member States on the interaction between environmental and trade policies, the dissemination of information to policy makers and assistance in capacity-building, paying attention to the problems and special circumstances of developing countries, including LDCs, as well as to countries in transition. The Ad Hoc Working Group on Expansion of Trading Opportunities for Developing Countries should study the economic costs of reducing the negative environmental effects of production processes and consumption, and the market opportunities for exporters flowing from the demand for such "friendly products". Increased attention should be paid to environmentally motivated policy instruments with a trade impact, such as those on packaging, labelling and recycling, particularly their impact on exporters in developing countries and countries in transition, and eco-labelling programmes should take into account the trade and sustainable development interests of producing countries. TDB also stated that the effects of OECD procedural guidelines on integrating trade and environment policies and its future work programme needed to be studied, and interaction between UNCTAD and OECD and other intergovernmental and regional organizations in the field of trade and environment should continue to be developed. Technical assistance in trade and environment should be pursued by UNCTAD, and donor countries, other countries in a position to do so and multilateral agencies should increase significantly their funds for technical assistance, particularly for LDCs. Countries should reply to the UNCTAD secretariat questionnaire on environmental measures which could have an impact on trade.

The Board recommended that it consider the themes "the effect of the internalization of external costs on sustainable development" and "the impact of environment-related policies on export competitiveness and market access" at its 1994 sessions.

In resolution 48/55, the General Assembly requested UNCTAD to continue its special role in trade and environment and invited it, and GATT, to submit to the 1994 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission on Sustainable Development, a report on trade and environmental matters.

Strengthening institutional trade arrangements

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1993 a report on strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade⁽⁷⁾ in which he stated that no further replies had been received from Governments or international organizations to the UNCTAD Secretary-General's request for their views on the subject, made in response to a 1991 Assembly request⁽¹⁷⁾

The report also discussed developments since UNCTAD VIII and the status of the Uruguay Round (see above).

Taking into account the views of Governments, which had stressed that, given the unfinished state of the Uruguay Round, the time might not be ripe to define a clear line of action or to draw conclusions as to the institutional needs of a global trading system, the Secretary-General stated that it might be advisable for the Assembly to review the matter again in 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/54 without vote.

Strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continuing validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, the document entitled "A New Partnership for Development: the Cartagena Commitment", and the various agreements, in particular Agenda 21, that provide an overall framework for developing cooperative action to address the development challenges of the 1990s,

Recalling its resolutions 45/201 of 21 December 1990, 46/207 of 20 December 1991 and 47/184 of 22 December 1992,

Welcoming the progress made by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the implementation of the outcome of its eighth session, in particular the institutional reforms within the organization,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning institutional developments related to the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade,

Deeply concerned by the repeated delays in concluding the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations,

Stressing the urgent need for the Uruguay Round to be concluded in a balanced manner, taking into account issues of particular interest to developing countries and their development,

Emphasizing the importance of a strengthened multilateral trading system and of the respect by all countries for multilaterally agreed rules,

1. Once again urges all Governments, competent regional economic integration organizations, and the executive heads of the competent specialized agencies and of other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to present their views to the Secretary-General on this matter;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, an updated report taking into account the positive institutional outcome and implementation of the results of the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the developments in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.

General Assembly resolution 48/54

10 December 1993 Meeting 75 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.1) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.55), based on informal consultations on draft by China and Colombia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/48/L.13); agenda item 91 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 30-32, 34, 45; plenary 75.

Structural adjustment

for transition to disarmament

As follow-up to the establishment by TDB in 1992⁽¹⁸⁾ of an ad hoc working group to explore the issue of structural adjustment for the transition to disarmament, the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a February 1993 report on the activities of the United Nations in that area.⁽¹⁹⁾ The report surveyed the activities of United Nations organizations and identified the major issues that UNCTAD could consider through its Ad Hoc Working Group. They included the global impacts on trade and development of the adjustment to disarmament and the conversion of military capacities to civilian uses; economic and social policy issues and options; connections and interactions between debt, trade, growth, military expenditures and sustainable development; and consensus-building on policies and measures at the local, national, regional and global levels.

On 26 March⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB requested its President to hold informal consultations on the draft terms of reference of the Ad Hoc Working Group, and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare draft terms of reference and a compendium of comments submitted by member States. It agreed to establish, at its September/October session, the Working Group's terms of reference and timetable.

In September⁽²⁰⁾ the United Nations Secretary-General stated that he had requested the UNCTAD secretariat to coordinate the establishment of a United Nations interdepartmental task force to provide Member States with political, technical and economic advice on the transition from military to civilian production (see PART ONE, Chapter II, under "Economic aspects of disarmament").

TDB members held informal consultations on the Ad Hoc Working Group's terms of reference on 8 September. The Board's fourth executive session (Geneva, 13 September)⁽²¹⁾ had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note containing suggested terms of reference⁽²²⁾ and a compendium of comments on the terms of reference⁽²³⁾ by four member States (Brazil, China and Japan, and Denmark on behalf of EC). TDB agreed that further consultations should be held on the issue on 17 September and that the results would be communicated to the Board in September/October.

TDB was informed that, at the 17 September consultations, an open-ended drafting group was established to work on the draft terms of reference. That group met on 30 September and a number of amendments were made. On 1 October,⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB noted that further consultations were required and asked the President of its thirty-ninth session, who was chairing the consultations, to continue his mandate and report to the Board at its next (1994) executive session. Further consultations were held on 11 and 12 November, which resulted in revised draft terms of reference.⁽²⁴⁾

Trade preferences

Generalized system of preferences

TDB's Special Committee on Preferences held its twentieth session at Geneva from 10 to 14 May 1993.⁽²⁵⁾ It considered the sixteenth general report⁽²⁶⁾ by the UNCTAD secretariat on the implementation of the generalized system of preferences (GSP), which described changes and improvements in the system and updated information on its trade effects. It noted that, with the exception of a few technical changes, the EC scheme would be applied mutatis mutandis from 1 January to 31 December 1993. The countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Georgia were added to the list of beneficiaries under the EC scheme. However, benefits were not extended to cover textiles, iron and steel and finishing products. Namibia and the former Czechoslovakia became beneficiaries under Japan's scheme. Croatia, the Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Saint Kitts and Nevis and Slovenia were added to the beneficiary list of Finland. Bosnia and Herzegovina was added to Norway's beneficiaries, while Israel and Turkey were withdrawn, following the entry into force of trade agreements between them and Norway. Sweden also removed Turkey from its beneficiaries as a result of a free trade agreement, while it provided GSP-LDC treatment to Namibia. Turkey was withdrawn from Switzerland's list of beneficiaries as well. The United States designated the successor States of the former Yugoslavia, other than Serbia and Montenegro, as beneficiaries under its scheme. The Russian Federation implemented a temporary preferential scheme whereby imports from developing countries were subject to a 50 per cent MFN rate of its import customs tariffs. The scheme also provided for duty-free treatment for goods originating in LDCs and established a list of beneficiary developing countries, including LDCs.

In a summary of discussions annexed to the Special Committee's report⁽²⁵⁾ the Chairman said that developing countries felt that there was a need to expand product coverage of the schemes to include all products of export interest to developing countries, and to grant those products deeper tariff cuts, including duty-free treatment. In that connection, concern was expressed over the possible erosion of preferential margins resulting from MFN tariff reductions after the conclusion of the Uruguay Round. There was also a need for multilaterally agreed criteria for applying the built-in limitation measures of the schemes, as well as graduation. With regard to the rules of origin, it was felt that harmonization would simplify the rules and lead to better equivalence of access to preference-giving country markets. As to technical cooperation, developing countries expressed concern over the decline in resources available and appealed to potential donors and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to provide further assistance. It was agreed that technical assistance activities should be practical and pragmatic, provide for informal consultations to solve immediate problems and pay attention to the requests of LDCs. A number of countries felt that GSP should be revitalized and that the Committee should conduct a policy review at its next session. Countries were encouraged to submit information to the secretariat on utilization of the schemes, particularly with regard to the rules of origin, in preparation for the review.

In a text, which it attached to its report⁽²⁵⁾ the Committee decided to begin preparations for the 1995 policy review of GSP and to consider its 1994 session as a preparatory meeting for that review. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to study ways to improve and enhance the impact of GSP in the new international economic and political environment, in consultation with experts and eminent personalities.

On 13 September, at its fourth executive session⁽²¹⁾ TDB endorsed the Committee's decision on preparations for the 1995 policy review.

Technical cooperation

The delivery of technical cooperation with regard to GSP and other trade laws remained high in 1993⁽²⁷⁾ owing to increased interest shown by beneficiaries and made possible by UNDP and trust fund contributions to the GSP programme by UNCTAD member States. Extrabudgetary funding for global GSP activities in 1993 totalled $877,780, of which UNDP accounted for approximately $256,000 or 29 per cent, with the remainder coming from trust fund contributions. Trust fund contributions for specific purposes amounted to $487,250, in-kind contributions to $55,395 and central trust fund contributions to $79,135, or 13 per cent of total funding. During the year, some 45 activities were undertaken in all regions of the world, including 30 training seminars/workshops and 7 advisory missions aimed primarily at assisting preference-receiving countries to make better use of the system and to establish or upgrade GSP focal points. In all, 1,204 participants from 31 preference-receiving countries benefited from those training activities.

Countries in Africa and Central and Eastern Europe showed increasing interest in GSP, leading to more requests for training activities. Furthermore, as the Uruguay Round had been successfully concluded, more requests for seminars and advisory missions on GSP and other trade laws were anticipated.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1993, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of their goods in international commerce. The main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area was ITC.

International Trade Centre

During 1993, ITC, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued its technical cooperation activities, serving as a focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes. ITC held a technical meeting (Geneva, 16 and 17 February)⁽²⁸⁾ to consider the 1992 evaluation of its activities in commodity trade, development and promotion⁽²⁹⁾ to examine the evaluators findings and recommendations and to make recommendations to the Joint Advisory Group (JAG) (see below). The meeting concentrated on key issues raised in the evaluation, such as ITC's role within the international producer-consumer cooperation system, particularly relationships with the Common Fund for Commodities, the optimal use of available resources, and the extension of interregional work to activities at the national level. It recommended that ITC should continue to support commodity diversification and processing by promoting the export development of derivatives from natural resources. Commodity-specific work should be complemented by more attention to cross-commodity issues. With regard to ITC's coverage of its commodity work, the meeting recommended that the issue be kept under review. As to funding, ITC should seek non-traditional sources of financing.

In comments on the evaluation's specific recommendations, the meeting emphasized the importance of expanding programme activities at the country and regional levels, and suggested that ITC seminars could be used to identify its potential role in implementing national project activities. Concerning the extension of ITC's work to metals and minerals, it suggested that ITC should assess its impact in this area with its current staff and resources. In sustaining an ongoing ITC commitment in relation to a given commodity, the meeting recommended that priorities should be kept under review in the light of available resources. ITC should try to align its practices to those of other United Nations organizations in carrying out the evaluation's recommendations.

The meeting had reservations on the recommendation relating to ITC's commodity work and stressed that ITC should continue to provide technical assistance to international commodity bodies for the elaboration of projects for submission to the Common Fund.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group on ITC held its twenty-sixth session at Geneva from 8 to 11 November 1993.⁽³⁰⁾ It had before it a report on ITC's 1992 activities⁽³¹⁾ the report of the 1992 ITC technical meeting⁽³²⁾ an evaluation of the ITC subprogramme on institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level⁽³³⁾ ITC's comments on the recommendations contained in the evaluation of that subprogramme⁽³⁴⁾ the report of the 1993 technical meeting (see above), and the report on the 1992 evaluation of ITC's activities in commodity trade, development and promotion⁽²⁹⁾

JAG regretted the postponement of a decision on the appointment of an Executive Director of ITC and the filling of other key management posts, and called on UNCTAD and GATT urgently to arrive at an appropriate solution. Donor countries expressed support in principle for ITC's activities, but some indicated that uncertainties surrounding management posts would affect consideration of their trust fund contributions. JAG noted the innovative steps that ITC was taking in the environmental aspects of trade.

China, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, India and Japan announced their trust fund contributions for 1994. However, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland indicated their intention either not to contribute to the fund or to reduce contributions substantially until an Executive Director was appointed.

JAG agreed that its Bureau should initiate informal consultations on the terms of reference and timing of a review of ITC's mandate, financial and personnel situation, general structure and relations with UNCTAD and GATT.

In resolution 47/212 B of 6 May, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to pursue as a matter of urgency his efforts to agree with the GATT Director-General on a prompt appointment to the post of Executive Director of ITC at its current level. The Assembly reiterated the request in resolution 48/228 of 23 December.

Trade efficiency

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade Efficiency—established by TDB in 1992⁽³⁵⁾—held its second session at Geneva from 15 to 19 November 1993.⁽³⁶⁾ It considered an UNCTAD secretariat note containing a compendium of trade facilitation recommendations⁽³⁷⁾ and a consultant's report on draft guidelines on better trade practices⁽³⁸⁾. The Group agreed that the compendium should be part of the background documentation for the 1994 International Symposium on Trade Efficiency (see below). It also agreed that delegations' views concerning the recommendations relating to preshipment inspection should be brought to the attention of the Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), and that its Bureau and that of the ECE Working Party should cooperate further in implementing international standards to enhance trade efficiency.

The Ad Hoc Working Group also had before it the UNCTAD secretariat's interim report⁽³⁹⁾ on the first evaluation of the trade point programme to establish, operate and interconnect trade points (trade facilitation centres), a key component of the Trade Efficiency Initiative, launched by UNCTAD VIII. In his summary of the discussions on this item, the Chairman indicated that several countries had reported on the status of their trade points and that trade point directors had made a number of recommendations and identified issues requiring further consideration.

The Ad Hoc Working Group also considered an UNCTAD secretariat progress report⁽⁴⁰⁾ on measures taken by the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁴¹⁾ to prepare for the convening in 1994 of the United Nations International Symposium on Trade Efficiency. The Group was informed of the schedule for the preparations for the Symposium, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, United States.

Trading opportunities for developing countries

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Expansion of Trading Opportunities for Developing Countries, established in 1992,⁽⁴²⁾ held its second session at Geneva from 22 to 26 November 1993.⁽⁴³⁾ It had before it reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on market opportunities, covering environmental measures, structural adjustment policies and restrictive business practices⁽⁴⁴⁾ and trade measures and implications of regional integration arrangements.⁽⁴⁵⁾ A number of countries made presentations to the Working Group on their national experiences, export capabilities, market opportunities and export promotion and marketing. In his summary of the Group's discussion, which covered the building of export capabilities, expanding export market opportunities, and export promotion and marketing, the Chairman stated that a number of prerequisites for building internationally competitive export capabilities had been identified. The Group recommended that the subsidy element of export incentives should be kept moderate and be subject to review; high priority should be given to investments in the area of human resource development; and consideration should be given to the impact of environmentally motivated policy instruments on trading partners, particularly exporters in developing countries and countries in transition. It also recommended that countries adopt and enforce competition policy and strengthen cooperation to prevent restrictive business practices from impeding or negating market opportunities of developing countries, and that the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices study the interface between competition and international trade and prepare guidelines on competition policy. The need for more countries to assist LDCs in export promotion and marketing was highlighted.

Restrictive business practices

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its twelfth session at Geneva from 18 to 22 October 1993.⁽⁴⁶⁾ It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note⁽⁴⁷⁾ containing replies from nine countries on steps taken to meet their commitment to the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set)⁽⁴⁸⁾. Other secretariat notes dealt with activities relating to specific provisions of the Set, including technical assistance, advisory and training programmes⁽⁴⁹⁾ and information and consultation on restrictive business practices⁽⁵⁰⁾. The Group also had before it draft commentaries to possible elements for articles of a model law or laws on restrictive business practices⁽⁵¹⁾ a note on the compilation of a handbook on restrictive business practices legislation⁽⁵²⁾ an UNCTAD study on the role of competition policy in economic reforms in developing and other countries⁽⁵³⁾ and a revised report on concentration of market power, through mergers, take-overs, joint ventures and other acquisitions of control, and its effects on international markets, in particular the markets of developing countries⁽⁵⁴⁾.

On 22 October⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Group of Experts adopted a series of conclusions, in which it agreed that the UNCTAD secretariat should publish the study on concentration of market power⁽⁵⁴⁾ and revise the study on the role of competition policy in economic reforms⁽⁵³⁾ finalize a check-list for requests for information and consultations; circulate an updated directory on competition authorities; and continue elaboration of the commentary to the model law or laws and compilation of the handbook on restrictive business practices legislation. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to provide technical assistance, advisory and training services in the area of competition policy to developing countries and countries in transition; called on intergovernmental organizations, financing programmes and member States to provide the necessary resources and to inform the secretariat of programmes eligible for technical assistance; and called on intergovernmental organizations to cooperate in this area.

On 21 December, by decision 48/442, the General Assembly, taking note of the recommendation of the Second (1990) United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices⁽⁵⁵⁾ decided to convene a Third Conference, under the auspices of UNCTAD, at Geneva in 1995.

Commodities

The World Economic Survey 1993(2) stated that the prices of non-oil commodities, as measured by UNCTAD's combined index of nominal dollar prices, declined in 1992 for the third successive year, by 3.4 per cent. The decline was attributed to weak demand for raw materials in most industrialized economies; contraction of demand in the former USSR and Eastern Europe, combined with high levels of exports of minerals and metals from those areas; and a chronic excess supply of a wide range of agricultural commodities on world markets. However, despite the overall decline, there were indications of recovery in some prices due to the resumption of growth in the United States, increased imports by some developing countries, the continued strong demand of Asian exporters of manufactures and the emergence of China as a growing market for industrial raw materials.

Among the major commodity groups, prices of tropical beverages fell by 14 per cent and coffee prices plummeted to their lowest level in 22 years, 21 per cent lower than in 1991. Cocoa prices declined by around 8 per cent, while tea prices improved to their highest level in three years. Wheat prices showed some strength, but later weakened when the United States and other countries suspended exports to the Russian Federation when it defaulted on repayments of 1991 loans for grain imports. Prices of vegetable oils and oil-seeds increased by 7.5 per cent. Prices of agricultural raw materials as a whole declined by 3.1 per cent, and the UNCTAD index of minerals and base metals prices declined by 3 per cent.

The Trade and Development Report, 1993(1) stated that, in addition to the recession in the main consuming countries and changes in the formerly centrally planned economies, economic reforms introduced in developing countries had had mixed effects on commodity supply and export earnings. While many inefficiencies were corrected by those reforms, established export structures were destroyed and new difficulties emerged in commodity exports. Devaluations contributed to reducing real wages in many developing countries, resulting in lower prices for commodity exports. Several longer-term factors also contributed to the emergence of depressed commodity markets, including the increased importance in developed countries of relatively less commodity-intensive sectors, the substitution of traditional materials by synthetics and composites, and the saturation point reached in per capita consumption of many foods in developed countries.

Common Fund for Commodities

The Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989, and the Fund became operational that year.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1993⁽⁵⁶⁾ the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had been signed by 118 States and the European Economic Community (EEC)/European Union, and, with the accession of Mozambique on 30 September 1993, 106 States and EEC had become parties to it.

Individual commodities

Agricultural commodities

Bananas. In order to complete a single market in respect of bananas, EEC proposed a common import regime to allow duty-free access for African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) suppliers and to impose a tariff quota and import duties on other suppliers. The new regime came into effect on 1 July 1993.

On 13 April⁽⁵⁷⁾ Panama transmitted to the Secretary-General the 2 April Declaration on Bananas issued by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, rejecting the new EEC regime as a violation of GATT principles. It also rejected an EEC proposal to establish a compensation fund in respect of certain Latin American banana-producing countries.

On 10 May⁽⁵⁸⁾ Saint Lucia rejected the assertions made in both the Declaration on Bananas and the 11 February Declaration of Santiago de Guayaquil, which was presented to the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States by the Presidents of the Central American banana-producing countries. It submitted the text of a statement on the subject that it had made to the Permanent Council, in which it stated that the small banana-producing countries of the Caribbean would suffer severe economic and social difficulties if the international commitments in favour of ACP countries under the Lome Convention were not honoured.

Cocoa. The United Nations Cocoa Conference, 1992, held two sessions at Geneva in 1993 (22 February-5 March, 5-16 July) to negotiate a successor arrangement to the International Cocoa Agreement, 1986⁽⁵⁹⁾ which had been extended in part for two years, effective 1 October 1990.

On 16 July⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Conference established the text of the International Cocoa Agreement, 1993⁽⁶¹⁾ which was open for signature at United Nations Headquarters from 16 August to 30 September. The Agreement would come into force on 1 October 1993 if at least five exporting countries, accounting for at least 80 per cent of total exports, and Governments representing importing countries having at least 60 per cent of total imports deposited their instruments of ratification. If they could not complete their constitutional procedures before then, in accordance with article 55, the Agreement could be applied provisionally.

As at 31 December 1993⁽⁶²⁾ 15 States had signed the Agreement, 4 States had formally ratified or accepted it, and 8 States had provided notification of provisional application.

Coffee. The International Coffee Agreement, 1983, the economic provisions of which were suspended in 1989, was extended in 1991 to 30 September 1993.⁽⁶³⁾ At a 29 April meeting, the Executive Board of the International Coffee Organization recommended a one-year extension until 30 September 1994. On 4 June 1993, the International Coffee Council agreed to the extension to allow for negotiation of a new Agreement.

Olive oil. The United Nations Conference on Olive Oil and Table Olives, 1993, was held at Geneva from 8 to 10 March. It established the text of the 1993 Protocol⁽⁶⁴⁾ extending the International Agreement on Olive Oil and Table Olives, 1986,⁽⁶⁵⁾ with amendments. The Protocol, which was open for signature at United Nations Headquarters from 1 May to 31 December 1993, was to enter into force on 1 January 1994 if instruments of ratification were deposited by Governments holding at least 85 per cent of the participation shares.

As at 31 December 1993,⁽⁶⁶⁾ eight States and EEC had signed the Protocol and two States and EEC had formally ratified or approved it.

Sugar. On 20 January 1993⁽⁶⁷⁾ those States which had deposited instruments of ratification to the International Sugar Agreement, 1992,⁽⁶⁸⁾ or had notified that they would apply it provisionally, met to decide whether to put the Agreement into force provisionally or definitively among themselves. Since the target of 60 per cent of the votes required for the Agreement's entry into force had been exceeded, the 20 States represented and EEC decided to put the Agreement into force provisionally as of that date.

As at 31 December,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the International Sugar Agreement, 1992, had been signed by 26 States and EEC, 21 States and EEC had formally become parties to it, and 14 States had provided notification of provisional application.

Tropical timber. The International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983,⁽⁷⁰⁾ was due to expire on 31 March 1994. In accordance with a 1991 request of the International Tropical Timber Council, the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened the United Nations Conference for the Negotiation of a Successor Agreement to the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983 (Geneva, 13-16 April, 21-25 June and 4-15 October 1993). The Conference considered the composite text of a draft successor agreement,⁽⁷¹⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat in cooperation with the Executive Director of the International Tropical Timber Organization, based on proposals submitted by producer and consumer groups.⁽⁷²⁾ It also had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the background, status and operation of the Agreement, 1983, and recent developments of relevance to the negotiation of a successor agreement.⁽⁷³⁾ By a 15 October resolution,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Conference, noting the status of the negotiations, requested the International Tropical Timber Council to facilitate consultations on the main issues before the Conference. It invited its President to recommend that the UNCTAD Secretary-General reconvene the Conference in January 1994.

Minerals and metals

Bauxite. The Second Ad Hoc Review Meeting on Bauxite of the Standing Committee on Commodities (Geneva, 29 and 30 April 1993)⁽⁷⁵⁾ reviewed the current market situation and outlook for bauxite, alumina and aluminium. The Chairman, in his summary of the discussions, stated that there were significant gaps in available information on several important items, including data on trade, aluminium stocks and secondary aluminium, and that improvements in statistics on production, consumption and trade of bauxite, alumina and aluminium in the republics of the former USSR would contribute significantly to a better understanding of the dynamics of the markets for those commodities. The meeting was informed of the publication by the International Primary Aluminium Institute of the Bauxite Mine Rehabilitation Survey, detailing information on the environmental impact and rehabilitation of bauxite mines.

Iron ore. The second session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Iron Ore of the Standing Committee on Commodities was held at Geneva from 25 to 27 October 1993⁽⁷³⁾ The Group reviewed iron ore statistics, the current situation and outlook for iron ore and a bibliography of relevant studies on iron ore. It also considered its possible application to the Common Fund for Commodities and decided to reconsider the question in 1994.

Tungsten. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Tungsten held its second session at Geneva from 8 to 10 November 1993.⁽⁷⁴⁾ It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat review of the current tungsten market situation and medium- and long-term outlook⁽⁷⁵⁾ The Group examined statistics and reviewed the current market situation and outlook; and considered industry views on particular aspects of the industry and ways to improve the functioning and stability of the tungsten market through strengthened international cooperation between Governments and industries of producing and consuming countries. In addition, it discussed project proposals by Governments and industry for possible financing under the Second Account of the Common Fund for Commodities. The Group agreed that projects should meet Common Fund criteria and should be sent to the UNCTAD secretariat for examination by other members.

Services

The Standing Committee on Developing Services Sectors: Fostering Competitive Services Sectors in Developing Countries, established by TDB in 1992,⁽⁷⁶⁾ held its first session on insurance at Geneva from 1 to 5 February 1993.⁽⁷⁷⁾ The Committee had before it reports on issues for consideration in the establishment of the work programme on insurance⁽⁷⁸⁾ and on agricultural insurance in developing countries⁽⁷⁹⁾ a review of developments in insurance markets⁽⁸⁰⁾ and a report on privatization of insurance enterprises and liberalization of insurance markets in developing countries⁽⁸¹⁾ Also before it was the report of the Group of Experts on Agricultural Insurance in Developing Countries (Geneva, 28 and 29 January)⁽⁸²⁾

The Standing Committee adopted its work programme in the field of insurance, under which it intended to promote transparency, foster competitive insurance services and strengthen technical cooperation and human resources development.

In carrying out its work, the Committee would give due regard to the work of the former Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade and of the UNCTAD secretariat.

Finance

Financial policy

The World Economic Survey 1993(1) stated that, in 1992, the major industrialized countries began to look at fiscal and monetary means to stimulate their economies. Inflation fell to relatively low rates in several countries and monetary restraints were eased. There was also room for a non-inflationary fiscal stimulus in some countries. Fiscal actions were taken or announced in 1992 in Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States and at the European Community Summit, but each stimulus was a modest one. However, following the meeting of finance ministers of the seven major economies in February 1993, discussions began on arranging credible steps in a new spirit of cooperation to strengthen economic growth.

In giving a preliminary assessment of the world economic situation at the end of 1993⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the steady fall in inflation in most developed economies offered an important opportunity for putting into effect some macroeconomic policies to stimulate demand. While the scope for fiscal stimulus appeared limited, there was significant room for monetary easing, especially in Europe where real interest rates were still high in most countries.

Although the short-term growth outlook of the developing countries was encouraging, two sources of concern remained: Latin America's recovery of growth could prove fragile, as inflation and large budget deficits remained a major concern in some countries; and Africa's need for aid was increasing in order to facilitate the reform process and support investment in human and physical infrastructure, even as aid fatigue seemed to be setting in.

The task of reform in the transition economies, particularly the faster-changing ones, had had a much more inflationary aspect than had been foreseen. External assistance could ease some economic constraints to reform and make the political tasks of reform less onerous.

Net transfer of resources

The turn-around in the transfer of resources between developed and developing countries which began in 1991 continued into 1992. The World Economic Survey 1993(1) reported on the subject, as requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽³⁾ noting that developed market economies transferred over $50 billion to other countries in 1992, $17 billion more than in 1991, while the developing countries received a similar amount in transfers, marking the second year of very large aggregate net inflows. It was estimated that the transition economies transferred about $1 billion in hard currency to other countries.

In 1992, for the first time in a decade, the deficit energy-exporter countries again became net recipients of external resource transfers. African oil exporters, however, were still making net transfers abroad and Egypt had begun to do so to reduce its trade deficit as part of its adjustment programme. Africa was the only region of the developing world that had a negative transfer in 1992, although the smaller countries of the sub-Saharan region continued to register a modest overall positive transfer of about $10 billion. Latin America and the Caribbean registered a net inflow of $7 billion, compared with negative transfers of between $20 billion and $30 billion in the late 1980s. Although the region of China, South and East Asia and the Pacific made substantial net transfers abroad during the late 1980s, most transfers were to build up official reserves, repay external debts and invest in other countries. However, as a whole, the region was a net recipient of financial resources in 1992.

Developing countries as a whole were expected to continue to absorb net resource transfers in the next few years, as some countries had regained access to private credit markets, interest rates were not expected to rise strongly and there was no shortage of private finance at the global level, or of official credit on commercial terms. That did not mean, however, that the overall resource constraint on the economic growth of the developing countries had been removed.

Development financing

The World Economic Survey 1993(1) stated that the trend in the flow of official development finance, which had been rising steadily in dollar terms in recent years, was expected to continue in 1992, after reaching almost $56 billion in 1991. However, in real terms it had fluctuated, rising by 2.5 per cent in 1991 after falling to the 1988 level in 1990. The pattern of flows from donor countries seemed to be changing, with growth hinging almost completely on aid from industrialized countries, as flows from Arab donor countries and the former centrally planned economies declined. Although developed countries had reaffirmed their commitment to reach the United Nations target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) for official development assistance (ODA), there was little change in the ODA/GNP ratio. In many developed countries, there had been a major rethinking of aid, while in others budget exigencies had caused aid cut-backs. However, Japan had made a major commitment to expand its aid programme and was likely to be the premier donor of the 1990s. Nevertheless, the Survey stated, the political and economic role of ODA needed to be rethought and the image and effectiveness of aid policies re-examined if a voter constituency for international assistance was to be rebuilt in donor countries.

Report of the Secretary-General. In the context of the General Assembly's 1991 decision⁽⁴⁾ to consider convening an international conference on the financing of development and its 1992 decision⁽⁵⁾ to continue exploring the issue, the Secretary-General, in response to a request in the latter decision, submitted a September 1993 report on sources of financing for development.⁽⁶⁾ The report described the situation in development finance, covering both domestic and international resources. It also put forward a number of current domestic and international policy issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/187 without vote.

International conference on the financing of development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continued validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the Cartagena Commitment, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, and the various consensus agreements and conventions, especially Agenda 21, adopted during the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Recalling its resolution 46/205 of 20 December 1991 on the convening of an international conference on the financing of development, and its decision 47/436 of 18 December 1992,

Noting with interest the analysis of the current international financial situation outlined in the report of the Secretary-General, and recalling the link between peace, security, growth and development,

Recalling also its resolution 47/181 of 22 December 1992 on an agenda for development,

1. Decides to continue to explore the issue of the financing of development and its potential funding sources, in close consultation and cooperation with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a report on the situation of all potential sources of financing for development, including sources of new and additional financing for development, in order to consider the issue of the convening of an international conference on the financing of development;

3. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session, under the item "International cooperation for economic growth and development", the issue of the financing of development.

General Assembly resolution 48/187

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/723) without vote, 9 December (meeting 46); draft by China, Colombia (for Group of 77) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (A/C.2/48/L.4), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 97.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 8, 9, 15, 46; plenary 86.

Debt problems of developing countries

The World Economic Survey 1993(1) stated that, at the aggregate level, the debt crisis appeared past. However, for the crisis to be over, developing countries needed to be perceived as creditworthy and to maintain a sustainable relationship between debt levels and other variables. The relationship between debt servicing and export earnings, in particular, had to appear to be stable over the long run, meaning that the ratio of debt to exports and debt to GNP did not grow on average over long periods of time. If trends in debt ratios were useful indicators of the long-run sustainability of debt, the debt-servicing ratio indicated the current burden of the debt. Overall, the ratio of debt service to exports of goods and services in 1992 was virtually unchanged from 1991. There was a rise in principal repayments, which was offset by a decline in the interest-servicing ratio associated with the decline in average interest rates. Evidence of the debt crisis being over could also be gathered from the secondary market for commercial bank debt. However, the picture was mixed, with demand having strengthened in the secondary market for some countries' debt, while cautious with others and quite pessimistic with yet others. The conclusion was that, while for some countries the debt crisis had at last been overcome, for others it remained a pressing concern.

The Trade and Development Report, 1993(7) stated that the character of the debt crisis in the early 1990s was substantially different from that of the early 1980s. For a number of major middle-income debtors it had become much less acute, though at a high price in terms of development progress and falling per capita income. At the global level, the major problem was debt owed to official creditors and, to an increasing extent, to international financial institutions. The growing share of multilateral debt had also made the debt structure less flexible. Although the current crisis mainly affected low-income countries, mostly in Africa, several lower-middle-income countries had yet to graduate from the debt rescheduling process. In addition, while the major Latin American debtors were leaving the rescheduling scene, the Russian Federation had entered it. Despite recent improvements, the terms of reschedulings of the Paris Club (a group of creditors) were not yet well adapted to debtors' capacity to pay and were likely to lead to further pressures on external payments. Improvements were required in the scale of debt reduction, eligibility criteria and the time-frame for implementation. There had been calls for closer coordination between the Paris Club and donor groups (such as the consultative groups and consortia chaired by the World Bank and round tables chaired by UNDP) or for shifting the official bilateral debt rescheduling for low-income countries to such forums. A single meeting on debt and finance would reduce the high transaction cost for separate uncoordinated meetings of the Paris Club and make it possible to detect and act on a country's debt-servicing difficulties early, before arrears started to accumulate.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,(8) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1993 a report on the international debt strategy as at mid-1993.(9) It discussed the current debt situation of developing countries and current issues in international debt policy, including the overall policy environment, the Paris Club and difficulties in servicing multilateral debt.

The report concluded that solving the debt problem of the developing countries would not ipso facto solve external financial constraints, much less their development problems. Restructuring debt so as to remove the debt overhang needed to be part of a package of measures leading to a sustainable external payments situation with adequate economic growth. Even the countries that were furthest along in working their way out of their debt crisis had not yet fully reached that goal. In many cases, their recovery remained fragile and would have to be watched closely. Many other countries remained even further behind and were not yet out of the debt crisis. Continued intensified international cooperation was thus warranted to assist countries still mired in the debt crisis and to help others restore adequate economic growth.

Tokyo Summit. The seven major industrial nations, at their Economic Summit (Tokyo, 7-9 July)⁽¹⁰⁾ confirmed the validity of the international debt strategy and invited the Paris Club to continue reviewing the question of debt relief for the poorest highly indebted countries, especially with regard to earlier reductions in the stock of debt, on a case-by-case basis. They welcomed the United States decision to join them in debt reduction for those countries.

UNCTAD action. On 1 October⁽¹¹⁾ TDB welcomed the recent improvements in the international debt strategy and noted that there was a need for continuing efforts by debtors and the international community to resolve the remaining problems, paying special attention to LDCs. It also noted the role that increased external financial flows, particularly non-debt-creating flows, could play in helping to prevent and overcome debt difficulties. TDB observed that Paris Club practices had improved, particularly with the adoption of enhanced concessional terms for the poorest, most indebted countries. It emphasized the crucial role of the international financial institutions in supporting developing countries and endorsed the principle that the preferred creditor status of those institutions should not be impaired.

Calls were made by a number of TDB members for a review of the eligibility criteria for debt reduction so as to include all heavily indebted low-income countries. Attention was also drawn to the urgent needs of the lower-middle-income countries for debt reduction. As to multilateral debt, it was stressed that a substantial increase in net transfers from international financial institutions was particularly important for heavily indebted countries and would help them to avoid the emergence of arrears. Some members called for an adequate replenishment of the soft windows of those institutions, and others pointed to the need for an agreement on a new IMF enhanced structural adjustment facility to be reached before the end of 1993, with the concessional element being no less than in the previous scheme. As regards commercial bank debt, Governments of creditor countries were urged to ensure that the Brady deals being negotiated, that is, arrangements for restructuring such debt, brought about a significant reduction in the total external debt of the countries concerned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/182 by recorded vote.

Enhanced international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986, 42/198 of 11 December 1987, 43/198 of 20 December 1988, 44/205 of 22 December 1989, S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, 45/199 of 21 December 1990, 45/214 of 21 December 1990, 46/148 and 46/151 of 18 December 1991 and 47/198 of 22 December 1992,

Noting that, owing to uneven developments in the context of the evolving international debt strategy, further progress and further concrete measures are essential for the solution of the external debt problems of a large number of developing countries,

Welcoming the fact that some developing countries have made substantial progress towards resolving their debt difficulties,

Noting with concern the continuing debt and debt-service problems of indebted developing countries, which adversely affect their development efforts and economic growth, and reiterating the need to address and solve those problems through effective debt-relief measures, bearing in mind, in this context, the special and critical situation of the most indebted developing countries of Africa,

Noting also that a number of countries with economies in transition are experiencing debt-servicing difficulties, while recognizing that the Paris Club has adopted a flexible and innovative approach to deal with these problems, and calling upon private creditors to adopt similar measures,

Stressing the importance of alleviating the onerous debt and debt-service burdens connected with all types of debt of developing countries, taking into account the urgent need for an equitable and durable approach,

Emphasizing the importance for debtor developing countries of continuing to pursue and intensify their efforts in their economic reform, stabilization and structural adjustment programmes, in order to raise savings and investment, reduce inflation and improve economic efficiency, taking into account their individual characteristics and the vulnerability of the poorer strata of their populations,

Stressing also the necessity of a supportive international economic environment as regards, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access, trade practices, exchange rates and international interest rates, and noting the continued need for resources for the implementation of international consensus agreements for the promotion of sustainable development,

Expressing its concern that, in many developing countries, the burden of debt and debt service constitutes one of the major obstacles to the revitalization of growth and development, despite the often strenuous economic reforms of those countries,

Noting that those developing countries which have continued, at great cost, to meet their international debt and debt-service obligations in a timely fashion have done so despite severe external and domestic financial constraints,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the external debt crisis and development;

2. Notes the fact that some debtor developing countries with commercial external debt have been able to conclude agreements on commercial bank debt-service reduction, and calls for the conclusion of similar agreements with other interested developing countries;

3. Calls upon the international community to explore ways to implement additional measures, including further cancellation or reduction of debt and debt service related to official debt, and to take more urgent action with regard to, inter alia, the remaining commercial debt owed by the developing countries;

4. Welcomes the write-off by certain donors of a significant part of the bilateral official debt of the least developed countries, and urges those countries which have not done so to cancel or provide equivalent relief for the official development assistance debt of the least developed countries;

5. Calls for the rapid and effective implementation of the measures taken to address the debt problem of certain middle-income African countries, and invites all creditors to consider taking appropriate measures for middle-income debtor developing countries, taking into account the special and critical situation of those in Africa;

6. Calls upon the donor countries and multilateral financial institutions, within their prerogatives, to consider appropriate new measures for substantial relief of the debt of low-income countries;

7. Stresses the need for the broadest and most expeditious implementation of the recent initiatives and the need to continue to build upon them, and calls upon the developed countries to adopt and implement further debt-alleviating terms, including consideration of the Trinidad terms, as appropriate;

8. Recognizes the urgent need to continue to provide a social safety net to vulnerable groups most adversely affected by the implementation of economic reform programmes in the debtor countries, particularly low-income groups, in order to ensure social and political stability;

9. Emphasizes the importance for developing countries of continuing their efforts to promote a favourable environment for attracting foreign investment, thereby promoting growth and sustainable development;

10. Stresses also that concerted action by the international community, in particular by developed countries, to alleviate the debt burden of developing countries is vital to growth in the developing countries, which, in turn, would promote the growth of the world economy;

11. Recognizes also the need of debtor developing countries for a supportive international economic environment as regards, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access and trade practices, and stresses the urgent need for a balanced and successful outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which would result in the liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, in particular the developing countries;

12. Stresses further the need, in addition to debt-relief measures that include debt and debt-service reduction, for new financial flows to debtor developing countries, and urges the creditor countries and the multilateral financial institutions to continue to extend concessional financial assistance, as appropriate, in order to support the implementation by the developing countries of their economic reforms, stabilization and structural adjustment programmes, so as to enable them to extricate themselves from the debt overhang and to assist them in achieving economic growth and development;

13. Urges the international community to consider wider application of innovative measures, such as debt-for-equity, debt-for-nature and debt-for-development swaps, without prejudice to more durable solutions such as debt reduction and/or cancellation;

14. Calls upon private creditors and, in particular, commercial banks to renew and expand initiatives and efforts to tackle the commercial debt problems of the least developed countries and of low- and middle-income developing countries;

15. Urges the multilateral financial institutions to continue to provide support for debt and debt-service reduction packages with the necessary flexibility under their established guidelines, and also urges that earnest attention be given to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution to the problems of developing countries that are having serious debt-servicing difficulties, including those countries whose debt is mainly to official creditors or to multilateral financial institutions;

16. Urges creditor countries, private banks and, within their prerogatives, multilateral financial institutions to consider the extension of appropriate new financial support to developing countries, in particular the low-income countries with substantial debt burdens that continue, at great cost, to service the debt and meet their international obligations;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 164-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/718) by recorded vote (152-1), 13 December (meeting 48); draft by China and Colombia (for Group of 77) (A/C.2/48/L.5/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 92.

investment and financial flows

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Investment and Financial Flows; Non-debt-creating Finance for Development; New Mechanisms for increasing Investment and Financial Flows, established by TDB in 1992,⁽¹²⁾ held its second session at Geneva from 28 June to 2 July 1993.⁽¹³⁾ The Working Group considered global trends and issues, including foreign investors' motivations, and host and home country policies and measures to promote foreign direct investment (FDI), including export processing zones (EPZs) and special economic zones. It had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on recent trends and policy issues in FDI in developing countries⁽¹⁴⁾ the role of FDI in EPZs and the developmental impact of EPZs⁽¹⁵⁾ and a study on selected country experiences of EPZs⁽¹⁶⁾. A number of countries presented case-studies on the subject of EPZs.

The Working Group concluded that the upward trend of FDI flows to developing countries and economies in transition was expected to continue in the 1990s. However, constraints could emerge if economic uncertainty and high unemployment in developed countries continued. The Group noted that economic liberalization policies had helped to increase FDI flows for some countries, while for others, especially LDCs, flows had fallen short of expectations. It considered that regional trading groupings would have an important impact on the FDI pattern. Concern was expressed by some countries about the low level of large-scale FDI and FDI in high-technology sectors flowing to them.

On the question of EPZs, the Working Group considered that, although they had largely met their objectives by attracting FDI, backward and forward linkages with the domestic economy had not in general developed to a significant degree. Despite the growing trend towards trade liberalization, there was still a role for EPZs as windows for attracting FDI and for introducing market reforms. They also had an important demonstration effect and could be used to promote new activities.

Transport

Maritime transport

Shipping

In response to a 1992 request of the Standing Committee on Developing Services Sectors (Shipping)⁽¹⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a note on the specific outputs and activities of its work programme on shipping⁽²⁾ to TDB's March 1993 executive session. The note provided lists of meetings on shipping projected for the period 1993-1995, of reports, studies and background documents to be prepared for those meetings, and of recurrent publications and technical material. Operational activities, including advisory services, group training and field projects, would be provided at the request of Governments. The activities listed were also reflected in UNCTAD's proposals for the 1994-1995 United Nations programme budget.

The main developments of 1992 in international shipping and related fields were analysed in UNCTAD's Review of Maritime Transport 1992.⁽³⁾

Multimodal transport

A global meeting, under the aegis of TRAIN-MAR (Valencia, Spain, November), was held to improve consensus building and to share experiences from various regions of the world in the field of multimodal transport. It brought together regional multimodal-transport lecturing teams in the commercial transport industry in an effort to reach consensus on a future action programme for human resources development in multimodal transport. An association (the Club of Valencia) was established to act as a catalyst for the exchange of ideas on modern trade and transport technologies and serve as a pool of experts on multimodal transport issues. The secretariat continued to collect and disseminate information on technologies and structural changes in multimodal transport and on measures affecting access to markets for such transport.

Ports

Following approval of its terms of reference by TDB on 26 March⁽⁴⁾ the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Ports held its first meeting at Geneva from 25 to 29 October.⁽⁵⁾ It had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on port organization and management⁽⁶⁾ port marketing and the challenge of the third generation port⁽⁷⁾ strategic planning for port authorities⁽⁸⁾ the management and development of human resources in ports⁽⁹⁾ legal aspects of port management⁽¹⁰⁾ the principles of modern port management and organization⁽¹¹⁾ and sustainable development for ports⁽¹²⁾

The Group of Experts recommended that Governments reflect on the importance of ports and their potential for fostering trade and development; that they adopt long-term and business planning methodologies in adopting their port policies; that port matters be included more often as specific items on the agendas of national, regional, intergovernmental and international meetings concerning trade, development and environmental issues; and that further study and analysis be conducted on the strengths/weaknesses of the concepts of privatization/commercialization of port organization and management structures. It also recommended that UNCTAD identify and document cooperative efforts among ports. The Group supported the conclusions and recommendations of a 1991 informal meeting of legal experts on port matters⁽⁹⁾ and made a number of recommendations on ports in relation to the environment and development.

With regard to specific aspects of port organization and management, the Group recommended that port policy should reflect the importance of ports as a link in the transport chain (railways, roads, waterways), with other integrated functionaries (customs, police, local authorities) comprising the others. Port policy should be implemented by optimum labour use, more efficient cargo handling, intensive use of electronic data interchange, streamlined procedures and efficient use of equipment. The current port system should be modernized and supported by an appropriate legal framework that would take account of the division of responsibilities between central, regional and local levels, and the roles of private entities and port labour. Port management should be market-oriented and port policy defined, with clear objectives and development strategies. The Group recommended further studies on: survey of national port systems; analysis of the relationship between the city and the port; and human resource development in ports. It also recommended that the necessary resources be assured for training, that UNCTAD training programmes be maintained and reinforced, and that the TRAINMAR network be extended and strengthened.

The Group further recommended that donor countries and ports in a position to do so contribute to the full rehabilitation of the Somalia port system, and that UNCTAD act as an information exchange point for ports seeking information on technical cooperation cases like those of Liberia and Somalia. It also recommended that a list of ports, private companies and individuals offering port management expertise be drawn up for the reference of Governments and ports.

Technical assistance and training

UNCTAD's technical and training activities in shipping, ports, multimodal transport and maritime legislation recovered in 1993 from a decline the previous year. A total of 34 projects were carried out, with expenditures of $3 million, compared to 32 projects totalling $2 million in 1992. Activities included the management of the ports of Kismayu and Mogadishu, in Somalia, and the surveying and drawing up of a rehabilitation programme for those ports and the ports of Berbera and Bosasso. UNCTAD continued to develop and implement the Advance Cargo Information System (ACIS)—a collection of computer applications designed to produce management information. By the end of 1993, the ACIS tracking module for railway cargo was operational in 13 African countries and the port module was operational in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, and Mombasa, Kenya.

The TRAINMAR programme, which supported institutions providing training for officials and managers in the maritime sector, continued to expand. By the end of 1993, 51 bodies in 46 countries were involved, and projects totalling over $1 million were executed. New projects related to strengthening training institutions in the southern cone of South America and developing a new course on short sea multimodal transport. Assistance was provided in modernizing maritime legislation at national and regional levels.

UNCTAD delivered 30 policy seminars in shipping, ports and multimodal transport during 1993, including new ones on the commercial role of ports and strategic port pricing.

Maritime liens and mortgages

In accordance with a 1991 General Assembly resolution⁽¹³⁾ the Secretaries-General of UNCTAD and the International Maritime Organization (IMO) convened the Conference of Plenipotentiaries on a Convention on Maritime Liens and Mortgages at Geneva from 19 April to 6 May 1993.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Conference had before it draft articles for the convention⁽¹⁵⁾ the report of the Joint UNCTAD/IMO Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Maritime Liens and Mortgages and Related Subjects on its sixth session, held in 1989⁽¹⁶⁾ that Group's final report, adopted in 1989⁽¹⁷⁾ and a compilation of comments and proposals by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the draft convention⁽¹⁸⁾

On 6 May, the Conference adopted its Final Act and the text of the International Convention on Maritime Liens and Mortgages, 1993.⁽¹⁹⁾ The Convention was to be open for signature at United Nations Headquarters from 1 September 1993 until 31 August 1994. Also on 6 May, the Conference adopted a resolution recommending that UNCTAD and IMO, in the light of the Conference's outcome, reconvene the Joint Intergovernmental Group of Experts to review the International Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to the Arrest of Sea-going Ships, 1952.

As at 31 December 1993,⁽²⁰⁾ the Convention had been signed by Guinea and Tunisia.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in May 1993 a report on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods during 1991-1992.⁽²¹⁾ The Committee paid special attention to coordinating its activities with those of other international organizations connected with the transport of dangerous goods and established liaison with the secretariats of the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme to avoid duplicating work connected with existing agreements and instruments on the safe transport of dangerous goods. The Committee expressed concern over the possible duplication of work in harmonizing systems of classification and labelling of chemicals due to the possible creation of new United Nations bodies in the context of the implementation of chapter 19 (environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals, including prevention of illegal international traffic in toxic and dangerous products) of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992.⁽²²⁾ It requested the Economic and Social Council to call on Governments and international organizations involved in implementing that chapter to avoid such duplication and to ensure that the new system drew on, or was compatible with, that developed by the Committee.

The Committee requested the Secretariat to publish the new and amended recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods (eighth revised edition) before the end of 1993. It stressed the role of the Secretariat in implementing the recommendations and requested that adequate funding be provided to support its work. The Committee agreed on the work programme of its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods.

The Subcommittee held its seventh (Geneva, 12-21 July)⁽²³⁾ and eighth (Geneva, 22-30 November)⁽²⁴⁾ sessions in 1993, while the Committee itself was scheduled to meet again in 1994.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/50 without vote.

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 468(XV) of 15 April 1953, 1983/7 of 26 May 1983, 1985/9 of 28 May 1985, 1986/66 of 23 July 1986, 1987/54 of 28 May 1987, 1989/104 of 27 July 1989 and 1991/57 of 26 July 1991,

Noting the ever-increasing volume of dangerous goods in world-wide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Noting also that the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development recommended, in chapter 19 of Agenda 21, that international bodies, including the International Programme on Chemical Safety of the World Health Organization, the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Environment Programme, as well as the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Maritime Organization, the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, in cooperation with regional and national authorities having existing classification and labelling systems and other systems for the dissemination of information, should establish a coordinating group with a view to establishing and elaborating a harmonized classification and labelling system for chemicals,

Noting further that, in response to its requests made in its resolutions 1983/7, 1985/9, 1986/66, 1987/54, 1989/104 and 1991/57 for adequate staff resources for servicing the Committee, an additional Professional post was granted but has not yet been filled officially, in spite of temporary redeployment arrangements,

Bearing in mind the continuing need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life, property and the environment through the safe transport of dangerous goods while facilitating trade,

Aware that, in order to achieve internationally harmonized legislation, the specialized agencies and other international organizations involved in activities related to the transport of dangerous goods, as well as interested Member States, have responded positively to the relevant resolutions adopted since Council resolution 468 G (XV) and are committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations, including those concerning classification and labelling, and, therefore, rely on the work of the Committee,

Aware of the concern expressed by the Assembly of the International Maritime Organization, in its resolution A.717(17) of 6 November 1991, with regard to the development of new conventions, legislation and recommendations relating to dangerous goods or to the management of chemicals outside the coordinated forum of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, and aware also that the Assembly had urged all United Nations and other intergovernmental bodies concerned working on various aspects of the management of chemicals to coordinate their efforts in order to ensure the compatibility of any legislation on chemicals with established transport rules and regulations,

Recognizing the increasing need for cooperation between international bodies involved in activities related to the transport of dangerous goods and those involved in other aspects of chemical safety,

Confirming the need for the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods to participate actively in relevant activities associated with the implementation of Agenda 21,

Reaffirming the desirability of widening the decision-making base of the Committee by encouraging the participation of developing countries and other non-member countries in its future work,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods during the biennium 1991-1992 and of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee for inclusion in its existing recommendations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To incorporate in the existing recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods all the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee at its seventeenth session, held at Geneva from 7 to 16 December 1992;

(b) To publish the new and amended recommendations in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, not later than the end of 1993;

(c) To circulate the new and amended recommendations immediately after their publication to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned;

3. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the work of the Committee, together with any comments they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

4. Invites all interested Governments and the international organizations concerned, when developing appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee;

5. Invites all Governments and the international organizations concerned with the implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21, and participating in the development of a globally harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals, to avoid duplication of work and to ensure that, to the greatest extent possible, the new system draws on, or is compatible with, the internationally well-recognized and implemented system developed by the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all steps necessary to ensure representation of the secretariat of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods at appropriate meetings of international organizations committed to implementing the recommendations of the Committee or involved in the process of global harmonization of classification and labelling systems for chemicals;

7. Recommends once again that adequate funding be provided to support the work of the Committee;

8. Recommends that the staff necessary for the adequate servicing of the Committee continue to be made available, and that the vacant Professional post be filled as a matter of priority;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council in 1995 a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/50

29 July 1993 Meeting 45 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/111) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by Committee of Experts on Transport of Dangerous Goods (E/1993/57); agenda item 15 ff).

UNCTAD structure, programme and finances

UNCTAD programme

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held two regular sessions and three executive sessions in 1993, at Geneva. It held the second part of its thirty-ninth session from 15 to 26 March and the first part of its fortieth session from 20 September to 1 October⁽¹⁾ In March, it adopted a decision on sustainable development (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and agreed conclusions on trade policies, structural adjustment and economic reform, UNCTAD's contribution to implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see preceding chapter), and a review of progress in implementing the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It also sent a message to Governments participating in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. In September/October, it adopted agreed conclusions on global interdependence, debt issues, trade and environment and economic spaces and regional integration processes.

In accordance with its new working methods, TDB also held its second (5 March),⁽²⁾ third (27 April)⁽³⁾ and fourth (13 September)⁽⁴⁾ executive sessions. At the second session, it took note of the reports of its subsidiary bodies and endorsed their work programmes and activities. It also discussed the restructuring process. At the third session, it reviewed developments in the Uruguay Round and discussed the report on the twenty-second session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see below). At the fourth session, it also considered reports of its subsidiary bodies and discussed procedural and administrative matters.

On 12 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/208 A, decided to consider at its 1993 substantive session TDB's report on the second part of its thirty-ninth session. It authorized the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the General Assembly's forty-eighth (1993) session the report on the first part of its fortieth session.

On 29 July, by decision 1993/301, the Council took note of TDB's report on the second part of its thirty-ninth session.

Restructuring

As part of the ongoing process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations Secretariat, the Secretary-General transferred to UNCTAD responsibility for activities under the programme on transnational corporations and three subprogrammes of the programme on science and technology for development, formerly carried out by the Department of Economic and Social Development in New York.

Programme budget

At its twenty-second session (Geneva, 5-8 April, 17 September and 13 October)⁽⁵⁾ the UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget reviewed proposed revisions and adopted amendments to the UNCTAD sections of the United Nations programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995. In April, it stressed the need for increased transparency in the United Nations budget process as it applied to UNCTAD and identified a number of factors which inhibited efficient and effective review of the programme budget. To address those concerns, it recommended that: future sessions of the Working Party should be provided with financial tables; in preparing documents for the Working Party or other groups involved in the programme and budget planning/review, the mandate from which a specified activity was drawn should be indicated; the narrative should clearly identify activities financed from the regular budget, those to be funded from extra-budgetary resources and those dependent on extra-budgetary resources being made available; there should be consistency in the application of definitions and presentation of the materials between and within subprogrammes; and the nomenclature should clearly distinguish between those ad hoc expert groups established by the UNCTAD Secretary-General and intergovernmental groups of experts mandated by intergovernmental bodies.

In terms of priorities, the Working Party recommended that those areas designated as "high priority" should be given a larger share of overall UNCTAD resources, and the division of resources among the "high priority" areas should be equitable according to the work programmes approved in the relevant intergovernmental bodies.

In September/October, the Working Party requested that the UNCTAD Secretary-General review all aspects relating to conference facilities and services and make proposals for improving the current situation, taking into account the financial situation of the United Nations.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, in October⁽⁶⁾ recommended approval by the General Assembly of the programme narrative of the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995 relating to UNCTAD. The Assembly endorsed the recommendation in resolution 48/228.

On 23 December, by resolution 48/231 A, the Assembly approved an appropriation of $108,296,400 for UNCTAD for the 1994-1995 biennium.

Technical cooperation

In 1993, some $20 million was allocated to UNCTAD technical cooperation activities. UNDP remained the largest single source of funds, while bilateral donors and other sources, including the European Union (formerly EC), provided increasing amounts. Activities in the area of trade included continued assistance to developing countries participating in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations; development of the service sector; utilization of GSP; competition policies; transfer of technology; and UNCTAD's programmes for the development of human resources for trade and for helping developing countries to manage better their external trade liabilities. Activities were also pursued with regard to insurance, selected international monetary issues, commodities, and diversification and marketing. Work was undertaken on the transit problems of land-locked developing countries in Africa, the development of shipping services, including assistance for the better management of ports, multimodal transport and the human resources development programme for the maritime sector. UNCTAD also assisted in making operational the port of Mogadishu, Somalia. UNCTAD's largest technical cooperation programme assisted over 50 countries to improve their management of customs. Operational activities were also initiated under a new UNCTAD programme on trade efficiency.

Thirtieth anniversary of UNCTAD in 1994

In a note to TDB's second executive session⁽⁷⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat presented preliminary thoughts on possible events to be organized in 1994 to mark UNCTAD's thirtieth anniversary. Suggested events included a Raul Prebisch lecture; a one-day symposium of eminent panellists on selected themes on the development agenda; a special event hosted by a member State and to include non-governmental organizations, the enterprise sector, trade unions and academics; the issue of several publications and a special exhibition; the preparation of a film on UNCTAD; the production of special issues of UNCTAD publications; and various activities in collaboration with the media. The United Nations Postal Administration had already agreed to issue a commemorative stamp. Those activities, including a special meeting of TDB at which it could adopt a declaration to mark the anniversary and activities at the national level, would require support by member States.

On 5 March⁽²⁾ TDB agreed that its President, regional coordinators and China should hold consultative meetings with the secretariat on the preparations for the anniversary.

In an oral report to TDB's fortieth (September/October) session, the President of the thirty-ninth session stated that, during the consultations, it had been agreed that a two-day high-level meeting should be held during the autumn 1994 session and that the output of the celebrations should serve as an input for the preparation of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1995. Switzerland's offer to host and finance the proposed seminar/symposium was welcomed; the theme would be discussed further. The UNCTAD secretariat was requested to contact regional commissions and development banks with regard to organizing and financing regional seminars. It had been agreed that the secretariat proposal for a film could be envisaged only on the basis of voluntary contributions. The secretariat was requested to examine the feasibility and financial implications of organizing an international competition among universities throughout the world on a theme in relation to UNCTAD.

On 1 October⁽¹⁾ TDB mandated the President of the thirty-ninth session to continue to coordinate arrangements for the celebration of the anniversary and to pursue further consultations.

Chapter V

Transnational corporations

The role of transnational corporations (TNCs) in economic development continued to grow in 1993 as foreign direct investment flows into developing countries reached record levels. The newly opened economies of Central and Eastern Europe provided further scope for TNCs to make a positive contribution to the world economy.

The role of TNCs in the transitional economies of Central and Eastern Europe was a new item on the agenda of the Commission on TNCs, which met in New York in April. The Commission also discussed trends in foreign direct investment in developing countries and the role of TNCs in services, including banking. The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting met in March.

In July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare reports on how to improve flows of foreign direct investment to African and other developing countries (resolution 1993/49). It invited TNCs to continue to contribute to the demise of apartheid in South Africa and to take appropriate measures regarding the vulnerable and critical process there.

The United Nations programme on TNCs underwent a second phase of restructuring during the year, when programmes relating to TNCs were integrated within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on 1 September. UNCTAD established a new Division on TNCs and Investment to implement the programme on TNCs and related activities.

Bilateral, regional and international arrangements

In a March report on an international framework for TNCs⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed trends and developments in law- and policy-making concerning the emerging international framework for foreign direct investment and the operation of TNCs.

At the multilateral level, the most significant developments were the adoption of guidelines on the treatment of foreign direct investment and the continuing negotiation of agreements on international trade in services, trade-related investment measures and trade-related aspects of intellectual property. At the regional and interregional levels, the main treaty-making activity occurred in the context of regional integration schemes and the expansion of free trade zones. Also of importance for foreign investment operations was the 1991 review of the Declaration on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development. At the bilateral level, the network of bilateral treaties for the promotion and protection of foreign direct investment continued to expand; cooperation agreements were concluded between the United States and a number of developing countries. Various instruments were also successfully concluded on specific aspects relative to the operations of TNCs, notably on environmental protection, antitrust and banking supervision.

Those developments confirmed a trend already established in the 1980s; Governments from both developed and developing countries continued to be preoccupied with the provision of policy conditions under a legal framework that would attract foreign direct investment flows into their countries. A preliminary assessment of the contribution of the new instruments to the international framework suggested a further strengthening of principles on the treatment of foreign investors, while the elaboration of standards on TNC activities had proceeded mainly through the conclusion of instruments dealing with specific issues, such as environmental protection, banking and financial markets supervision and illicit payments in international business transactions.

At its April session⁽²⁾ the Commission on TNCs took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Draft code of conduct

In his report, mentioned above, on the international framework for TNCs,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General referred to the draft code of conduct on TNCs, first considered in 1975,⁽³⁾ as well as to other international arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs.

He noted that informal consultations, held in July 1992,⁽⁴⁾ had concluded that no consensus was currently possible on the draft code of conduct. It was generally recognized that the code negotiations, which spanned a period of more than 15 years and involved all countries and regions, contributed significantly to the elaboration of principles and standards on foreign direct investment. The negotiations, in addition to elaborating general principles to guide the treatment of foreign investors by host Governments, had suggested a set of rules of good conduct to guide foreign investors' behaviour.

Standards of accounting and reporting

At its eleventh session (New York, 4-12 March 1993),⁽¹⁾ the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting had before it reports of the Secretary-General on a global review of the state of accounting and auditing education and training,⁽²⁾ as well as on regional reviews in Africa⁽³⁾ Asia and Latin America⁽⁴⁾ and Europe and North America⁽⁵⁾ Other reports before the Working Group were on: responsibilities of the accounting profession and direction of accounting and auditing education⁽⁶⁾ requirements for professional accounting education for the year 2000 and beyond⁽⁷⁾ recent developments affecting the European accountancy profession⁽⁸⁾ and education of European accountants and challenges of the international economy⁽⁹⁾

Following a discussion of accounting education and strengthening of the profession, the Group expressed concern that accountants and auditors were not being properly prepared to meet their global responsibilities. There was consensus on the need to develop standards for a global qualification that would make the accounting profession equal around the world. The Group suggested that two new designations be established—that of United Nations registered accountant and (on a higher level) that of United Nations registered auditor.

The Group called upon the International Federation of Accountants to focus on education problems globally and to consider developing global qualification standards for accountants and auditors to be endorsed by the United Nations. The Group also requested the Secretary-General to explore with interested parties—international, public and private—ways of launching a consultation process with a view to promoting global interaction for the advancement of accounting and professional education.

In other action, the Group recommended for adoption by the Commission on TNCs three draft resolutions, by which the Economic and Social Council would be requested to increase the Group's membership from 34 to 50; the General Assembly would be requested to grant financial assistance to developing countries that were members of the Group; and the Secretary-General would be called on to ensure an appropriate structure and resources within the Secretariat so that the Group could carry out its mandate effectively.

On the recommendation of the Commission⁽¹⁰⁾ the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1993/49, decided that consideration of the Group's proposals should be deferred until the Commission's 1994 session. It took note of the report of the Group and reaffirmed the importance of its work in contributing to greater transparency in the activities of TNCs.

Commission on TNCs

The Commission on Transnational Corporations held its nineteenth session in New York from 5 to 15 April 1993 (1) It discussed the role of TNCs in the world economy and trends in foreign direct investment in developing countries; the role of TNCs in the newly opened economies of Central and Eastern Europe; TNCs in services, including banking; international, regional and bilateral arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs; and the activities of the United Nations TNCs and Management Division and its joint units. It also considered the provisional agenda for its twentieth (1994) session.

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its nineteenth session⁽¹⁾ (decision 1993/306) and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the twentieth session (decision 1993/304).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/49 without vote.

Strengthening the role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

The Economic and Social Council

1. Takes note of the reports prepared for the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its nineteenth session;

2. Reaffirms the validity of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the need further to strengthen its role as the focal point within the United Nations system for comprehensive intergovernmental consideration of issues concerning foreign direct investment as related to transnational corporations;

3. Emphasizes the need for the Secretary-General to reinforce the role of the United Nations system, including the joint units established with the regional commissions, in strengthening the capacity of developing countries, in particular, at their request, in the field of foreign direct investment by providing technical cooperation, consultative and advisory services, training, research and information to those countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in coordination with multilateral organizations and financial institutions, to give priority to strengthening technical cooperation in order to enhance the capacities of developing countries and other recipient countries to create a favourable investment climate, including in the services sector, in the context of their economic programmes;

5. Invites the Governments of developed countries to increase their activities aimed at assisting, in particular, developing countries, in the development of an environment favourable to foreign investment;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to give priority to analytical studies, including those on global trends and determinants of foreign direct investment flows, as related, inter alia, to transnational corporations, and on the impact of those trends, flows and stocks on all countries, in particular developing countries;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission at its twentieth session an analytical and comparative report on the role of foreign direct investment in Africa, with recommendations on ways and means of improving foreign direct investment inflows throughout the African continent;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission at its twentieth session an analytical report on the flows of foreign direct investment, paying special attention to the situation of the least developed countries, and other developing countries outside Africa, with recommendations on how to improve flows to developing countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that the work of the United Nations system in the field of transnational corporations and related issues is undertaken in a coordinated manner that avoids duplication of work, and to submit a report to the Commission at its twentieth session on the steps taken;

10. Takes note of the regional conference held in 1992 on foreign investment flows in Latin America and welcomes the initiative taken by the Secretariat in organizing a similar meeting in 1993 in Africa, at the ministerial level;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, with regard to technical cooperation activities, to continue to promote and to provide advice on the interrelationship between foreign direct investment and interregional, regional and subregional economic integration and technical and economic cooperation among developing countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue activities in matters relating to the role of transnational corporations in the development of small and medium-sized enterprises;

13. Stresses the importance of the role of foreign direct investment, in particular that of transnational corporations, in privatization processes, and reiterates the invitation to the Secretary-General to enhance studies and technical cooperation programmes in this area, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/36 of 30 July 1992;

14. Takes note of the results of the consultations on the draft code of conduct on transnational corporations held by the President of the General Assembly from 21 to 23 July 1992;

15. Invites Member States, in particular developed countries, to increase financial support flows for research and advisory and information work as it relates to foreign investment;

16. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting and decides that consideration of the draft resolutions contained therein should be deferred to the twentieth session of the Commission, and reaffirms the importance of the work of the Group in contributing to greater transparency in the activities of transnational corporations;

17. Recognizes the need for the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy through, inter alia, an increase in inflows of foreign direct investment, and recognizes also the contribution that the United Nations system can make in this regard, taking into account General Assembly resolutions 47/175 and 47/187 of 22 December 1992;

18. Calls upon Member States to exchange information among themselves, their relevant private sectors and all competent organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system on their activities, programmes and experiences related to the promotion of foreign direct investment, in particular in developing countries;

19. Reiterates the urgent need for the removal of the remaining obstacles to the creation of an atmosphere conducive to constitutional negotiations in South Africa in order to build upon the significant developments already achieved;

20. Recognizes that some financial institutions are unable to resume their lending activities to South Africa as a result of the inhibiting economic and political difficulties in that country, such as the ongoing violence;

21. Reiterates further its obligations towards the complete eradication of apartheid, reaffirmed in General Assembly resolutions 45/176 A of 19 December 1990, 46/79 A of 13 December 1991 and 47/116 A of 18 December 1992 and in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989;

22. Reaffirms that Governments, entrepreneurs and enterprises, including transnational corporations, have contributed to the demise of the apartheid system, and invites them to give their full and concerted support to that end and to take appropriate measures regarding the vulnerable and critical process currently under way in South Africa, with the aim of achieving the total eradication of the apartheid system and the establishment of a united non-racial and democratic South Africa;

23. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue, in close cooperation with the relevant organs of the United Nations, the work of collecting and disseminating information on the activities of transnational corporations conducting operations in South Africa;

(b) To continue preparing studies on the scale, form and responsibilities of the operations of transnational corporations in South Africa, including their non-equity business arrangements and their involvement in particular sectors of the South African economy;

(c) To continue examining possible contributions of transnational corporations to the construction of a united and non-racial democratic South Africa in the economic and social fields, taking into account the special need for the development of human resources, particularly the training of black South African entrepreneurs, and for employment, housing and health;

24. Decides that the Commission should review its future activities at its twentieth session and, if appropriate, make recommendations to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, in the context of the ongoing restructuring of the United Nations in the economic and social fields;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission at its twentieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/49

29 July 1993 Meeting 45 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/111) without vote, 23 July (meeting 14); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1993/30); agenda item 15 (d).

TNCs in South Africa

A March report of the Secretary-General on the role of TNCs in South Africa⁽²⁾ dealt with the involvement and possible contributions of TNCs to the South African economy as it was going through a period of adjustment.

The Secretary-General discussed South Africa's economy in the context of world recessionary conditions, addressing in particular external and internal constraints, favourable balance-of-payments, currency, monetary and fiscal developments, the more optimistic long-term outlook for gold, and the recent involvement of TNCs in South Africa. In addition, he considered possible economic policy measures that would encourage long-term inward foreign investments by TNCs, including abolishing the dual exchange rate system, privatizing industry, restructuring the economy by focusing on projects aimed at benefiting South Africa's mineral wealth other than gold, and fostering a favourable tax regime.

The Secretary-General concluded that South Africa was faced not only with an urgent need for cyclical recovery, but also with the need for some structural readjustments to bring its economy back on to a path of sustainable higher-level growth and provide employment for the masses of unemployed. He noted that all the policy measures discussed in the report would encourage the inflow of foreign investments by TNCs.

In an addendum to the report⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General provided lists of TNCs from 18 countries that had disposed of their equity interests in South Africa and of those from 20 countries with equity interests of more than 10 per cent. Annexed to the addendum was a Code of Conduct for Multinational Companies Investing in South Africa, submitted by the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU), and a Platform of Guiding Principles for Foreign Investors, formulated by COSATU and the African National Congress.

On the recommendation of the Commission on TNCs,⁽¹⁾ the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1993/49, reaffirmed that Governments, entrepreneurs and enterprises, including TNCs, had contributed to the demise of the apartheid system, and invited them to take appropriate measures regarding the vulnerable and critical process under way in South Africa, with the aim of achieving the total eradication of the apartheid system. The Secretary-General was requested to continue preparing studies on TNC operations in South Africa and to examine their possible contribution to the construction of a united and non-racial democratic society.

Follow-up to UNCED

In a March report on follow-up to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED)⁽⁵⁾ as related to TNCs, the Secretary-General summarized the discussions on business and industry that took place during the UNCED preparatory process. He also provided an overview of emerging positive trends in the role of TNCs in environment and development; discussed the implications of UNCED agreements for TNCs, and business in general; and suggested how the Commission on TNCs could organize future work on TNCs and the environment in order to maintain and broaden the momentum gained at UNCED regarding the corporate role in sustainable development.

Numerous chapters of Agenda 21(6)—the action plan for sustainable development adopted by UNCED—contained references to TNCs, including issues such as business and hazardous waste; business and biodiversity; and international banking and the debt crisis. The Secretary-General noted that Agenda 21 suggested that the best environmental practices of TNCs could be promoted with wider adoption of and reporting on implementation of environmental codes of conduct; adoption of voluntary information-sharing programmes, based on the spirit of international guidelines; and development of sectoral trade association guidelines on cleaner production.

The TNCs and Management Division informed more than 2,000 TNCs of the results of UNCED, and asked for their appraisal of it. A preliminary reading of the responses indicated that the business community was overwhelmingly positive in its assessment of the Conference; the responding corporations looked forward to working with the United Nations in implementing Agenda 21, and it was clear that they had seriously considered the implications of sustainable development for their activities.

In discussing the near-term role of the United Nations in the business-related recommendations of Agenda 21, the Secretary-General said that future environmental work relevant to TNC activities could focus on six areas: integrating environment and development into corporate decision-making in all countries; building the institutional capacity of developing and transitional economies to manage large-scale projects, investments and technologies in an environmentally sound manner; examining the linkages between trade, foreign investment and the environment; evaluating market and regulatory instruments that sought to increase the use of "green" products, processes and services; supporting full internationalization of environmental costs and transparency in accounting and reporting; and contributing to the further expansion of corporate international environmental laws, agreements and guidelines.

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on TNCs⁽¹⁾ took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested the Chairman of that Commission to transmit it to the Commission on Sustainable Development for substantive consideration (decision 1993/305).

TNCs in transition economies

In a March report on foreign direct investment in the newly opened economies of Central and Eastern Europe⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General addressed the main issues associated with such investment in those economies, including the countries of the former USSR, during their transition from centrally planned to market-oriented structures. He discussed the structure of and trends in foreign direct investment, and policy, legal and institutional frameworks covering investment in Central and Eastern European countries. He also addressed some policy implications of foreign direct investment in those countries.

The Secretary-General concluded that foreign direct investment could play an important role as a catalyst in opening up the economies of Central and Eastern Europe, enhancing labour productivity and transferring management techniques and skills. Foreign direct investment in those economies remained in the early stages, but substantial opportunities were available for investment development. There was an urgent need, however, for strategic international technical support to assist the transition economies in their efforts to strengthen foreign direct investment policy formulation and management capacity. Technical assistance should focus in particular on the analysis, design and implementation of national transformation and privatization policies, the training of entrepreneurs, financiers and corporate managers, and specific investment promotion activities at the regional or country levels. Assistance could also be provided in drafting investment legislation, tax and other fiscal regulations affecting TNCs, and natural resource legislation for programmes affecting the environment. Considering the challenge of establishing and maintaining an internationally competitive private sector, entailing the establishment and management of advanced infrastructure and communication networks, investment frameworks and economy-wide technologies, there was an urgent need for assistance in institution-building and human resource development.

United Nations cooperation in promoting foreign direct investment in transition economies included the design by the TNCs and Management Division of a programme of integrated technical assistance and human resource development aimed at strengthening national capacity for the effective assimilation of foreign investment, and the establishment of a Section on Economies in Transition and Free Economic Zones. The Division, in collaboration with Bulgaria, organized an Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on the Role of Foreign Direct Investment in the Newly Opened Economies of Central and Eastern Europe (Sofia, 5-7 January).

In April⁽¹⁾ the Commission on TNCs reaffirmed the importance it attached to the research and technical assistance activities of the TNCs and Management Division in countries with transitional economies and requested the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on the Division's analytical and technical assistance activities in all transitional economies, as well as on the progress and activities of foreign direct investment and TNCs operating in such economies.

TNCs and international economic relations

In April, the Commission on TNCs had before it three reports dealing with TNCs in the world economy and trends in foreign direct investment in developing countries, as well as a related report on the universe of TNCs.

In a March report⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed global trends in foreign direct investment, as well as regional trends in developed and developing countries and in the transitional economies of Central and Eastern Europe. He noted that inflows of foreign direct investment to all regions of the developing world had increased in absolute and relative terms, despite the decline in such flows worldwide in 1991 and in inflows to the developed countries. The reason for that trend in 1991 was, on the one hand, the continued economic uncertainty in the developed countries and, on the other, the maintenance or resurgence of economic growth and sustained profitability in developing countries in Asia and Latin America, together with the continuing trend towards liberalization and privatization.

The decline in world-wide flows of foreign direct investment in 1991 represented the first downturn since 1982 and occurred largely because of recessionary conditions in major industrialized countries and structural weaknesses in the financial systems in a number of countries, which made finance capital for investment more difficult to obtain. Despite those declines, the importance of the activities of TNCs in the world economy continued to increase as net additions to the world-wide stock of foreign direct investment and their pace of growth were faster relative to exports, domestic output and domestic investment. Several structural changes in the world economy, combined with a number of anticipated policy-related changes, were likely to contribute to an upward trend in foreign direct investment flows during the 1990s.

Another March report⁽⁹⁾ examined the growth of foreign direct investment in the 1980s and attempted to determine whether the surge in investment flows in the latter half of that decade signified a new trend or if it was just a temporary bulge.

The Secretary-General stated that cyclical factors alone did not explain the size of the investment flow between 1985 and 1990, which grew at an annual rate of 28 per cent, the highest ever recorded. A contributing factor in the increase was the response of TNCs to policy changes and to structural changes in the world economy. Policy-related factors included trade liberalization, changes in exchange rates, the liberalization of foreign direct investment regimes, privatization, non-tariff barriers and regional integration schemes. Structural factors included the existence of a stock of foreign direct investment already in place and the emergence of an integrated international production system. The influence of those factors suggested that investment flows would probably continue to increase, despite the fact that cyclical factors were currently having the opposite effect.

The emergence of an integrated international production system and its implications for developing countries were discussed by the Secretary-General in another March report.⁽¹⁰⁾ He noted that the rapid growth of foreign direct investment in the 1980s was evidence of the growing importance of TNCs in the world economy. Foreign direct investment had grown three times faster than world exports and almost four times faster than world output between 1983 and 1990. TNCs also influenced international production through non-equity linkages, such as franchising and joint ventures. In addition to providing capital through inflows of foreign direct investment, TNCs also had an impact on host economies through the transfer of technology and skills to host country nationals, expansion of the host country's role in international trade and stimulating host country business enterprise through the local purchasing of raw inputs, services and manufactured components.

As TNCs were adopting new strategies and organizational structures, the functional and geographic scope of international production was undergoing significant change. While TNCs applied different strategies under different circumstances, there appeared to be a definite evolution towards those involving a more complex type of cross-border, intra-firm integration of the value chain over a wider geographical area. As those new strategies and structures evolved, host economies—especially those of developing countries—needed to evaluate and update their policy frameworks for attracting foreign direct investment and the activities of TNCs.

In a report⁽¹¹⁾ on the universe of TNCs, the Secretary-General outlined its dimensions and the characteristics, utilizing the results of efforts to establish an information system on TNCs by the Centre on TNCs and its successor, the TNCs and Management Division and its joint units.

At the beginning of the 1990s, there were about 35,000 parent TNCs with some 175,000 affiliates covering all sectors of the economy and regions of the world. A relatively small number of large companies accounted for a significant share of TNC activity as measured by foreign assets. A relatively small group of TNCs also played a major role in determining flows of foreign direct investment and associated technology and the integration of a country within the international production system. While the majority of TNCs originated in developed countries, during the 1980s a growing number of firms headquartered in developing countries had also become part of the universe of TNCs.

In April⁽¹⁾ the Commission on TNCs requested the Secretary-General to continue the research programme on TNCs in the world economy and flows of foreign direct investment to developing countries, and to disseminate the results through publications such as the World Investment Report and the World Investment Directory.

Foreign direct investment in services

In a report⁽¹²⁾ on issues related to the liberalization of foreign direct investment in services, including banking, the Secretary-General noted that services had maintained their role as the largest and fastest growing sector in both the flows and stocks of foreign direct investment, mainly as a re-suit of investment among developed countries. A number of countries were doing what, a decade earlier, would have been unthinkable: permitting TNCs into their financial, air-transportation, telecommunication and utilities industries. Foreign direct investment in services was likely to continue to grow rapidly and extend into such capital-intensive service industries as telecommunications and air transport in both developed and developing countries.

Foreign direct investment policies in services were being increasingly liberalized as a means to increase the efficiency and competitiveness of local service industries. As the experience of many countries showed, the opening of key services could lead to productivity gains that could improve overall economic performance.

In April⁽¹⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to strengthen in-depth research and technical cooperation in the area of services and to report in 1994.

UN programme on TNCs

Administrative questions

In September 1993, the Secretary-General, in a report on the restructuring and efficiency of the Secretariat⁽¹⁾ informed the General Assembly that the programme relating to TNCs had been integrated within UNCTAD. That action was taken in accordance with Assembly resolution 47/212 B of 6 May on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, in which the Secretary-General was requested to ensure that all activities related to TNCs were integrated. The UNCTAD programme on TNCs became operational at Geneva on 1 September.

UNCTAD established a new Division on TNCs and Investment to implement the programme, as well as related UNCTAD activities in the areas of foreign direct investment, privatization and enterprise development.

In March⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Commission on TNCs that, in the first phase of restructuring in 1992, the mandate of the former United Nations Centre on TNCs and its joint units was subsumed under the Department of Economic and Social Development, as the TNCs and Management Division.⁽³⁾

The main thrust of the Division became to respond to the challenge of strengthening national capabilities and supporting the move to market structures.

Some of the new priorities of the TNC programme were in the fields of sustainable development, information management, privatization and private sector development, and assistance to economies in transition. In order to develop and implement activities to support the process of economic reform and restructuring, a special Section on Economies in Transition and Free Economic Zones was set up within the TNCs and Management Division.

Implementation of the TNC programme

In a March report⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General discussed implementation of the United Nations programme on TNCs by the TNCs and Management Division and its joint units. In addition to reviewing the evolution of the programme since its establishment by the Economic and Social Council in 1974⁽⁴⁾ he described its major accomplishments in 1992.

The information system on TNCs continued to provide products and services in the areas of corporate information; aggregate economic and financial information; laws, regulations and policies; contracts and agreements; industries and sectors; and business reference⁽⁵⁾ It also expanded the range of topics on which information services were provided. The restructuring of the Secretariat resulted in increased demands being placed on the information-on-demand component of the system, as that was recognized as a comprehensive repository capable of serving expanded needs. Work was begun on coordinating the provision of information services, with the goal of expanding services while realizing economies.

Particular effort was devoted to strengthening the legal component of the information system, as access to a store of legal and contractual information could facilitate the move of many countries towards liberalization of investment and market activities. The TNC programme had built a database and issued an inventory of investment contracts; it had also begun an inventory of current full-text investment legislation available in-house, or from electronic information services or research institutions.

The store of corporate information continued to expand. The pilot phase of an information network on foreign investors and investment services (FIND) was launched, its objective being to enhance the flow of information on investment opportunities and to match investors and projects.

In 1993, the programme completed the development and testing of TRANSCIS, a micro-computer-based system for the storage, processing and retrieval of bibliographic and textual information for users at the country level. Three bibliographic databases with a total of 12,000 records were incorporated into the system.

Joint units with the regional commissions

The joint units of the TNC programme with the five regional commissions were responsible for preparing case-studies on economic, social and institutional aspects of TNC activities in their regions.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) focused its efforts on research on the operations of TNCs in the region, with emphasis on alternative forms of investment and cooperation. It also examined the role of Japanese foreign direct investment in Africa, with particular emphasis on technology transfer and home country policy development. Missions were undertaken to Burkina Faso and the Niger on the role of joint ventures in Africa, to Ghana and Nigeria on transnational trading companies, and to Tokyo on Japanese investment in Africa.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Europe focused on providing direct support to the economies in transition of Central and Eastern Europe in the area of industrial enterprise restructuring through foreign direct investment and external financing. In cooperation with Governments, support was directed towards helping individual Eastern European enterprises to define their specific problems and their possibilities for obtaining outside assistance through investment by specific Western enterprises.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific undertook a number of research projects, including an evaluation of the contribution of TNCs to the development of backward linkages in the electrical and electronic industry (funded by Japan); an update of service industries in Asia; and a study on management contracts for international chain hotels in Thailand. The unit continued to collect, analyse and disseminate information and data on the activities of TNCs and on changes in foreign direct investment legislation in the region. The unit provided technical support to an International Conference on TNCs and China (Beijing, 9-11 September).

The joint unit established with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) focused its research primarily on TNCs and the industrial restructuring process in selected countries of the region, and on TNCs and the process of change in the international economy. It prepared the final version of the Directory on Foreign Investment in Latin America and the Caribbean 1993: Legal Framework and Statistical Information. In the area of technical cooperation, the unit cooperated with the Andean Development Corporation in preparing for a second regional high-level symposium on the contribution of TNCs to the growth and development of Latin America and the Caribbean, to be held in 1994.

The joint unit established with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) contributed to the preparation of the World Investment Directory, volume V: Africa and West Asia, which was being finalized. The unit's activities were reduced in 1993 because of the temporary deployment of responsible ESCWA staff to New York in the wake of the war in the Persian Gulf.

Research

The research activities of the TNCs and Management Division bore directly on policy debates concerning the role of TNCs.

In July 1992, the Division published the World Investment Report 1992: Transnational Corporations as Engines of Growth⁽⁵⁾ the second in an annual series begun in 1991. A study entitled Transnational Corporations from Developing Countries: Impact on Their Home Countries⁽⁶⁾ was finalized, examining how TNCs from developing countries could make positive contributions to their home economies. The Division also published a study entitled The Impact of Trade-related Investment Measures on Trade and Development, to promote a better understanding of issues related to the role of TNCs in several areas affected by the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. Other research publications included: a study entitled From the Common Market to EC92: Regional Economic Integration in the European Community and Transnational Corporations⁽⁷⁾ three volumes of the World Investment Directory 1992, covering Asia and the Pacific⁽⁸⁾ Central and Eastern Europe⁽⁹⁾ and the developed countries⁽¹⁰⁾ and studies on small and medium-sized TNCs.

As a complement to the statistical information contained in those volumes, the Division embarked on the publication of 20 volumes of analytical studies entitled United Nations Library on Transnational Corporations.

A series of case-studies on the activities of TNCs in Africa was prepared by the joint unit established with ECA, and the joint unit with ECLAC continued its work on a global overview of the industrial restructuring process in Latin America, based on case-studies of Brazil, Chile, Colombia and Mexico.

her of technical cooperation activities in 1992. Particular emphasis was placed on economic reform and marketization; human resources development; environment and natural resources management; private sector development and privatization; and assisting tax reform.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, Cuba was assisted in promoting foreign investment in and export of health-care products, and Antigua and Barbuda, Honduras and Peru were advised on privatization projects. In Africa, assistance was provided to Mozambique in developing a legal and institutional framework to negotiate effectively with TNCs, and to Algeria and Tunisia in drafting foreign investment laws and codes. In Asia and the Pacific, members of the Indian Ocean Commission were aided in harmonizing foreign investment and development policies, and advice on foreign investment and technology transfer was provided to Fiji, Malaysia, Samoa, Tonga and Vanuatu. In Central and Eastern Europe, the TNC programme helped with projects dealing with developing legal infrastructure in Albania, privatization and restructuring in Romania, and the development of export markets for the scientific resources of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Training projects intended to enhance human resources development included workshops in several African countries—Ghana, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania—on topics such as international commercial arbitration, negotiating joint ventures, and fraud in international banking and financial transactions. In Asia and the Pacific, round tables were held for officials in Pakistan and the Philippines, and on-the-job training on the legal aspects of natural resources and other projects was provided at the Attorney-General's Office in Papua New Guinea. In Latin America and the Caribbean, workshops were held in Colombia, Cuba and Jamaica on environmental protection policy, intellectual property rights and negotiating joint ventures. In Central and Eastern Europe, workshops were held on privatization in Hungary and on international industrial contracts in Romania.

In the area of environment and natural resources management, the programme helped Colombia, Ecuador and Nicaragua to draft policies, laws and regulations on environmental protection, and reviewed a proposal for an ethanol plant in Grenada. The programme drafted the Solomon Islands Environmental Law and assisted Bangladesh and Papua New Guinea in negotiations with companies in the petrochemical and mining industries. Assistance was provided to Angola in the natural resources sector, a gold-mining contract was reviewed for the United Republic of Tanzania, and Sierra Leone was helped in drafting a Mines and Minerals Act. Legislation pertaining to the tourism industry in Mozambique was reviewed.

Privatization and foreign investment

In a March report⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General provided the Commission on TNCs with information on experience gained in technical assistance and advice on foreign investment projects, with particular reference to privatization. He noted that the core belief behind the transfer to private ownership or operation of commercial interests of the State was that goods and services would be more efficiently provided by the private sector under competitive conditions. At least 80 countries had active privatization programmes and some 8,500 State enterprises worldwide had been privatized over the preceding 12 years. The former German Democratic Republic accounted for two thirds of completed privatizations, while a small number of countries in Latin America accounted for nearly 60 per cent of all privatizations in the developing world.

The Secretary-General discussed foreign investment policy issues in privatization, organizing privatization and the role of foreign participation, regulation and privatization, and modalities in privatization transactions. He concluded that the privatization process was still at an early stage in most countries, with foreign investor participation playing a significant though not dominant part in the process so far. Foreign participation could contribute to the goals of privatization by bringing skills, capital, markets and technology that were not available domestically.

There was considerable need and scope for training and advisory support to the developing and transitional economies covering policy and regulatory review and subsequent implementation, enterprise reform, and development of supporting business disciplines and institutions, as well as in the design and negotiation of divestments involving foreign investors.

With many countries in Africa about to undertake large-scale privatization and divestiture programmes, the TNC programme had provided advice to Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. Assistance had also been provided to the Gambia, Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe.

Financing

Resources for implementing the programme on TNCs were made available from the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary funds.

During 1992,⁽²⁾ nine States contributed or pledged some $1.3 million to the Trust Fund of the United Nations TNCs and Management Division. Total extrabudgetary disbursements amounted to about $5.7 million, of which $2.9 million came from UNDP and $2.8 million from trust funds.

Expenditures on workshops and other training activities in 1992 amounted to about $1.6 million, while extrabudgetary expenditures on advisory projects totalled some $2.4 million.

Chapter VI

Natural resources, energy and cartography

The use and conservation of natural resources and energy continued to be considered by a number of United Nations bodies in 1993. The Committee on Natural Resources held its first session as an expert committee in March/April following the 1992 restructuring of the United Nations in the economic and social fields. The Committee discussed, among other things, permanent sovereignty over mineral and water resources, new techniques for identifying those resources, small-scale mining activities in developing countries, and relevant matters arising from the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED). The importance of the water and mineral resources programme in the context of sustainable development was brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council.

In his report to the General Assembly, the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) also referred to UNCED, noting that IAEA could play an important role in achieving the objective of sustainable development by facilitating the transfer of nuclear techniques to promote health, ensure greater availability of fresh water and secure data on the atmosphere and seas. The Assembly, in November, urged States to strive for effective international cooperation in carrying out IAEA's work in promoting the use of nuclear energy (resolution 48/14).

Natural resourcesExploration*UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

During 1993, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE), established by the General Assembly in 1973,⁽¹⁾ continued to assist developing countries in the exploration of minerals, water and energy resources, and to help attract investment to exploit them. During its 20 years of operation, the Fund—administered by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—expended a total of $78 million and discovered mineral resources having an estimated potential value of $1.5 billion.⁽²⁾

In the Philippines, metallurgical tests on a pilot-plant scale were carried out in 1993, following exploration for secondary chromite deposits on Dinagat Island. Gold exploration at Mapawa was initiated and fieldwork completed by the end of the year. With UNRFNRE support, a gold deposit was discovered in the United Republic of Tanzania and an initial drilling programme was designed. In Guatemala, a call for bids to develop the gold deposit at El Pato was prepared. UNRFNRE received requests for assistance in mineral exploration programmes from Guinea, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam. Potential recipients also included Cuba, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Estonia, Mongolia, Myanmar and Namibia.

In the area of geothermal energy, the Fund had in the pipeline projects in Argentina, China, Costa Rica, Mexico, Nicaragua and the Russian Federation, but project execution awaited sufficient funding.

New techniques for natural resources exploration and assessment

In response to a 1991 request of the Economic and Social Council⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the March/April 1993 session of the Committee on Natural Resources a report on new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing mineral and water resources.⁽⁴⁾ The report provided information on features of remote-sensing systems available through commercial outlets, including price schedules, and summarized the activities of the Department of Economic and Social Development (DESD) in remote sensing, particularly with regard to strengthening the capabilities of developing countries.

DESD, with the Office of Outer Space Affairs, prepared a training programme on the use of microwave sensors in the Sahel region of Africa, and similar arrangements were made for such a training course for countries in Latin America (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee on Natural Resources emphasized that new techniques, such as remote sensing, played a complementary role in identifying, exploring for, developing and managing mineral and water resources. It was of the view that they would be of paramount importance for monitoring and understanding the global hydrologic cycle. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to prepare, for the second (1994) or third (1996) Committee session, a note giving information on existing internationally agreed principles, rules and regulations governing the relationship between the owner of data collected through remote-sensing techniques and the country to which such data were related, as well as information on United Nations activities related to the issue.

Disaster prevention and mitigation

In the mineral resources and mining area, United Nations activities in disaster mitigation and prevention were carried out in worker safety in the mining and mineral industries and in areas where mineral resource and geological expertise and technology were applicable, such as the monitoring and prediction of earthquakes, landslides and volcanic eruptions. Such activities were mainly implemented by the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

In Malaysia, the Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS), formerly DESD, began a project in 1993 to enhance the Government's regulatory and administrative systems for managing worker safety in the minerals industry.

The geological expertise of DDSMS was being used to provide input to the Technical Committee of the United Nations Working Group on Mine Clearance, which had the objective of creating a centralized and systematic means of assisting countries in the clearance of land-mines and munitions. DDSMS would prepare maps, identify geophysical companies having technology and equipment for mine clearance, and establish a computerized database.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee on Natural Resources stressed the importance of effective and coordinated implementation of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and the need for countries to adopt proactive strategies for water- and mining-related disasters. It recommended that United Nations organizations devote priority attention to developing strategies and programmes that integrated water and land issues and that the Secretariat be asked to prepare a study on non-structural measures taken by Governments to prevent disasters related to water and mineral resources.

In response to a 1991 Economic and Social Council request⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources a report on permanent sovereignty over natural resources.⁽⁷⁾ It reviewed trends with respect to the exercise of permanent sovereignty in the context of sustainable development, discussed salient issues affecting water resources and described the focus of DESD's technical cooperation activities.

Special mention was made of the facility for technical support services at the programme level (TSS-1), which was established to contribute to, among other things, achieving a sharper technical focus by agencies and enhancing agency technical support to developing countries in the upstream stages of programme and project cycles.

The United Nations could contribute to a common thematic approach to developing resources for the benefit of all, while the sovereignty of a country was maintained in order to determine the mode and timing of development of its resources. The use of TSS-1 studies and evaluations to formulate such an approach could be beneficial to developing countries in ensuring that the economic, scientific and technological objectives of developing a resource were achieved, while acknowledging and protecting the concerns of other countries.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee on Natural Resources recommended that the issue of permanent sovereignty over mineral and water resources no longer be included in its agenda as a standing item, but that specific aspects be brought to its attention under other relevant items. It also recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to update the section of his report dealing with water and the exercise of permanent sovereignty, devoting special attention to issues related to shared water resources, taking into account comments by Committee members, Member States and non-governmental organizations, and including an analysis of trends in recent negotiations and agreements related to shared water resources. The Committee further recommended that the Council request the Secretary-General to prepare a study reviewing the mining legislation of selected countries.

Committee on Natural Resources

The new expert Committee on Natural Resources, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1992⁽⁸⁾ to replace the former standing committee of the same name, held its first session in New York from 29 March to 8 April 1993⁽⁹⁾ It discussed permanent sovereignty over mineral and water resources; new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying and assessing those resources; disaster prevention and mitigation in developing and utilizing mineral and water resources; activities of the United Nations system in the fields of water and mineral resources; matters arising from

UNCED⁽⁹⁾ in the field of water resources; issues concerning the 1991 International Round-table on Mining and the Environment⁽¹⁰⁾ small-scale mining activities in developing countries; and priority programmes for coordinated action by the United Nations system in both water and mineral resources.

The Committee issued statements on some of those issues and recommended that its second session be held in 1994 instead of 1995. It also made recommendations regarding its terms of reference and future work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, by decision 1993/302, the Economic and Social Council decided that the second session of the Committee on Natural Resources should be held in 1994, that the normal two-year cycle of meetings would resume at that time and that the third session would be held in 1996. It approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the second session, with the inclusion of an additional item entitled "Review and recasting of the recommendations made by the Committee at its first session", and requested the Secretariat to prepare reports related to that agenda item. The Council requested the Committee to review in 1994 its recommendations relating to water, with a view to making a contribution to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its 1994 session, and to review and recast the recommendations it made at its 1993 session by following a standard pattern of reporting when submitting its recommendations to the Council.

Mineral resources

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its March/April 1993 session, had before it four reports of the Secretary-General concerning mineral resources, three of which were submitted in response to a 1991 Economic and Social Council request.⁽¹¹⁾

In a report on ways and means of facilitating the flow of financial resources and transfer of technology to develop the mineral resources of developing countries⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General discussed recent trends in prices, supply and demand of metals and minerals, ways to facilitate the flows of financial resources, existing programmes to support the efforts of developing countries in securing investments for the development of mineral resources, the transfer of technology to developing countries, and the recommendations of two 1991 United Nations seminars on mining taxation and applied finance for natural resources⁽¹⁰⁾ The report stated that, since modern mining and processing methods were very capital-intensive, developing countries would have to rely increasingly on foreign investment. In attracting foreign capital, those countries should pay particular attention to their policies and procedures as they applied to foreign enterprises and attempt to make them competitive.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to update his report for its 1994 session, taking into account the special needs of economies in transition and requirements for environmental protection.

The Secretary-General submitted a report⁽¹³⁾ in which he reviewed the outcome of the 1991 International Round-table on Mining and the Environment⁽¹⁰⁾ and the mining-related recommendations of UNCED. The report discussed the environmental challenges facing the mining sector and the impact of environmental policies on its growth, and outlined the environmental aspects of mineral development activities in 1991-1992 and those planned for 1993.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recommended that the Council request the Secretary-General to prepare for its 1994 session a report on the effects of changing environmental legislation and regulations applicable to the mining industry on a global basis. It also recommended that studies be prepared by entities of the United Nations system on the impact on the environment of exploration and mining in developing countries and economies in transition, starting with precious and base metals, and that a review be carried out of state-of-the-art technologies dealing with processing of mining waste and tailings for the recovery of useful mineral components in order to alleviate disposal problems.

A third report⁽¹⁴⁾ considered recent achievements in small-scale mining activities in developing countries. It addressed the issue of transformation to full commercialization of artisanal or informal mining and discussed recent national legislation, progress in technology transfer, promotion of small-scale mining, the contribution of women in such mining, and environmental considerations. The report concluded that artisanal mining should be rationalized and, in the developing countries, strengthened, given its contribution to rural economic and social development.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recommended that the Council ask the Secretary-General to prepare a report for its 1994 session on the impact of small-scale mining on environmental and social aspects of selected regions (giving priority to precious metals, industrial minerals and construction materials); the drawing up and/or adaptation of related legislation and regulations; and typical, mechanized small-scale mining operations, conditions and possibilities for implementing them, and improvement of miners' working conditions. Particular attention should be given to the position and role of women in small-scale mining.

In a February report⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee a proposal for a mechanism to monitor and gather information on a regular basis on issues concerning the flow of investment in the mineral sector of developing countries and capacity-building in investment promotion. The creation of such a mechanism might be considered as developing countries were actively seeking new investment inflows and there was a critical need for accurate data because of a lack of comparability between countries.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee, taking into account the problems identified in obtaining data on foreign direct investment and the existing economic analyses of activity in the mining sector undertaken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Bank, considered that a study of proposed procedures, costs and benefits should be undertaken before any comprehensive analysis of foreign direct investment flows began. Existing analyses could be further enhanced by reflecting major geological regions controlling mineral deposit types as well as purely geographical or socio-economic groups. Also, increased attention should be given to building systematic knowledge bases concerning the nature, quantity and location of mineral resources and of mineral resource potential. The Committee recommended that the United Nations system encourage strategic programmes of regional resource assessment and land classification at the national and international levels and that the Council request the Secretary-General to prepare a summary review of regional mineral resource assessment programmes.

DDSMS was the principal United Nations office responsible for executing and coordinating technical cooperation activities in mineral resource development. Areas addressed included exploration, evaluation and feasibility studies, mining and ore processing, investment promotion and marketing.⁽¹⁶⁾

In response to increased requests from developing countries for assistance in formulating and designing foreign investment policy and regulatory and tax legislation and in negotiating terms and conditions of foreign investment with potential investors, DDSMS completed projects involving foreign investment policy development in 1992 and 1993 in Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Malaysia, the Philippines and Yemen. It was also involved in assisting such policy development in Burkina Faso, Chad, Kenya, the Niger and Viet Nam. Three projects involving negotiation preparation or assistance were completed in Bolivia, Burundi and Jamaica, and projects with negotiation components were under way in Burkina Faso, the Niger and the United Republic of Tanzania. Advice was provided regarding a privatization project in Bolivia.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee on Natural Resources recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to prepare for its 1994 session a report on technical cooperation activities of the United Nations system in the mining sector, paying special attention to projects aimed at enhancing the capacity of the developing countries and economies in transition to develop effective foreign investment policies, negotiate mining investment agreements and develop and implement adequate social policies to respond to the ongoing trend towards privatizing the mining sector. It also recommended that the Council invite the UNDP Administrator to report to it in 1994 on UNRFNRE activities, including current administrative mechanisms and financing arrangements, as well as an extensive assessment of achievements and future programmes of activities.

Water resources

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its March/April session, had before it five reports of the Secretary-General regarding water resources.

In February⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the activities of the United Nations system in the field of water resources. The Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted in 1977 by the United Nations Water Conference⁽¹⁸⁾ provided the basis for coordination and cooperation efforts among the 21 organizations within the system that were active in the field of water resources. The report outlined coordination efforts at the global and regional levels, and presented the results of various meetings held during 1990-1992, including the 1992 International Conference on Water and the Environment⁽¹⁹⁾

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council encourage United Nations organs and organizations to adopt and implement more coherent perceptions of water-related issues and to address the cognitive problems involved through intersectoral, inter-professional and interdisciplinary cooperation and joint programming in water resources. It drew to the Council's attention the following: that the Committee was the appropriate forum to provide expertise and advice on the parts of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992⁽²⁰⁾ related to water and mineral resources; that interrelated water and land issues were inseparable components of sustainable development; and that it acknowledged and supported the important role of the Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in the exchange of information and coordination of programmes aimed at the sustainable development of water resources.

The Committee also recommended that the Council invite United Nations organs and organizations to enhance their cooperation with organizations outside the system and that the theme for World Water Day, 1994, should be public participation in the sustainable development and management of water resources.

The Secretary-General submitted two reports on cross-sectoral priority programmes for coordinated action by the United Nations system in water resources, one on information management⁽²¹⁾ and the other on capacity-building for water resources management.⁽²²⁾

The former report described the objectives and scope of an integrated information system and discussed information management issues at the national, regional and global levels. It stated that the integrated management of information on water resources—together with other physical, environmental, demographic and socio-economic data—was an essential component in the rational use and protection of finite and vulnerable water resources. It suggested that the objective of a monitoring system should be to act as an indicator of areas of opportunity and as a warning system of areas at risk.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recommended that United Nations organizations assist Governments to establish or strengthen their databases as tools for integrated action in developing and managing water resources; priority attention needed to be given to drought-prone countries where haphazard development of water resources, particularly groundwater, was common. It also recommended that they give urgent consideration to establishing a system-wide integrated monitoring and assessment network, with a view to evaluating periodically the state of freshwater resources on a global basis.

The latter report⁽²²⁾ noted that, as far as water resource development and management were concerned, capacity-building could be defined in terms of four elements: information development and management; human resources development; institutional and legal arrangements; and public awareness. It discussed the evolution of the concept of capacity-building and reviewed what might constitute the elements of a capacity-building strategy.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recommended that United Nations organizations promote capacity-building as a component of all technical cooperation programmes and that United Nations assistance with regard to capacity-building for water resources development and management be increased. Besides training and the transfer of technology, assistance should include provision of equipment and machinery, and on-the-job training programmes should take into consideration the wider requirements of capacity-building for water resources planning and management. Noting that the diversity of conditions faced by water-short regions called for case-studies to identify their underlying causes and characteristics, the Committee recommended that the studies consider both bio-geo-chemical and socio-technological cycles of water, with a view to supporting human resources development in developing countries, and that priority be assigned to drought-stricken regions of developing countries.

In a February report⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the provisions of Agenda 21 relevant to the area of freshwater resources. He stated that, although the challenge of securing a reliable supply of fresh water, adequate in quantity and quality, for all people, was perhaps the most fundamental issue related to both environment and development, UNCED had not fully addressed the issue.

On 8 April⁽⁵⁾ the Committee recognized the importance of formalizing the rights of humanity and duties of Governments in relation to the water cycle, decided to study the issue in depth in 1994 and invited the Economic and Social Council to bring the question to the attention of the Commission on Sustainable Development. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 1994 on existing instruments in other areas, which would be pertinent to global action on the water cycle. The Committee also invited the Council to take freshwater issues into account when deciding on the agenda of forthcoming conferences and to recommend to the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) that it pay particular attention to the most salient water interlinkages involved in desertification. The Committee recommended that greater external financial support be given to developing countries to improve their capacity to manage their soil and water resources, that countries consider adopting water-pricing policies and that the Council invite the World Bank to strengthen the activities of the International Programme for Technology Research for Irrigation and Drainage. The Council and the Commission on Sustainable Development were invited to consider modalities to enable the Committee to assist them in reviewing the relevant chapters of Agenda 21.

With regard to other issues arising from UNCED, the Committee recommended that the Secretary-General submit in 1994 reports on action taken by Governments concerning integrated water resources development and management, and on institutional and legal issues related to such management. It further recommended that the Council recommend to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) that they take steps to promote a dialogue between the scientific community and decision makers in the area of water management and invite the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to take steps to develop integrated water, soil and land-use management strategies for sustainable development and conservation of the natural resource base.

In a report on human development issues and water resources development in the 1990s,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General put forward a set of proposals for implementing a sustainable water resources development strategy. Particular attention was given to the institutional and financial factors required to implement such a strategy, and the importance of public participation and involvement by local communities was stressed. Areas in which reforms had to be undertaken to achieve compatible human and water resources development included poverty, human development, research into water- and land-use practices, public participation, environment, subsidies and cost recovery for water projects, water rights, national water plans, organizational arrangements, macroeconomic and structural adjustment programmes and development assistance. The reduction of poverty was seen as one of the basic conditions for reducing destructive environmental activities and achieving sustainable development.

A number of United Nations organizations were involved in activities in the field of water resources in 1993 in the context of the programme areas outlined in Agenda 21,⁽²⁰⁾ namely: integrated water resources development and management; water resources assessment and impacts of climate change on water resources; protection of water resources, water quality and aquatic ecosystems; drinking-water supply and sanitation; water and sustainable urban development; and water for sustainable food production and rural development.

In the area of integrated water resources development and management, DDSMS, together with UNDP, carried out a number of pilot sector assessments or diagnostic studies in countries such as Bolivia, India, Morocco, Nepal, Peru and Yemen.⁽²⁵⁾ Further work was envisaged in China, Madagascar, Papua New Guinea and the countries of the Southern Africa Development Community. The first Freshwater Consultative Forum took place from 13 to 16 December at Geneva, and the Working Group on Water Resources of the Multilateral Middle East Peace Process held meetings in April. A macroeconomic-based, multi-objective planning model in the field of integrated water resources development and management was successfully developed and applied in a north China project, which concluded in November.

Water resources assessment activities continued to occupy a major place in UNESCO and WMO programmes. The fourth UNESCO/WMO/International Council of Scientific Unions Conference on Hydrology, held in Paris from 22 to 27 March, highlighted those programmes and agreed to the Paris Statement, which recommended an even closer partnership between the two agency programmes.

Regarding the impacts of climatic change on water resources, WMO convened a workshop in Trinidad and Tobago from 5 to 9 July that dealt with water-quality issues in small islands. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean convened a regional expert meeting in November on the possible effects of climate change on water resources in the region.

Inter-agency coordination

The ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources met at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 6 to 8 October⁽²⁶⁾ and was preceded by a meeting of the Inter-agency Steering Committee for Water Supply and Sanitation (4 and 5 October). Issues discussed by the Subcommittee included arrangements for the system-wide monitoring of the water-related provisions of Agenda 21, its own terms of reference and those of the Steering Committee.

Energy

Many entities within the United Nations system were active in 1993 in all aspects of energy. Activities focused on environmental aspects of energy development and use, including energy conservation and efficiency, inter-fuel substitution and promotion of the development and increased use of new and renewable sources of energy.

The Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, established in 1992,(1) was to hold its first session in 1994.

Energy resources development

During 1993, a large number of programmes of technical cooperation with developing countries were carried out by various United Nations organizations. They included advisory services, training workshops and seminars, publications and database management.(2) Practically all of them involved energy conservation and efficiency of use and issues relating to energy and the environment. Activities promoting the development and more widespread use of new and renewable sources of energy were on the increase.

DDSMS fielded technical advisory services to 60 countries in 1993. At the end of the year, 115 energy projects were being executed in 40 developing countries, with a total budget of $110 million. The DDSMS energy programme focused on operational activities, including advisory services, project formulation and implementation, organization of meetings, symposia and workshops and publications. It maintained an ongoing programme of research in support of technical cooperation. Its publications in 1993 included Power Generation Options,(3) Energy Efficiency in Transportation(4) and Trends in Environmental Impact Assessment of Energy Projects.(5)

Meetings organized during 1993 by DDSMS included: Workshop on Economic Restructuring and Environmental Management in the Coal Sector, Prague, Czech Republic, 15 and 16 March; Symposium on Safety and Mechanization in Underground Coal Mining, Omuta City, Japan, 13-16 October; Symposium on Coal Preparation and Beneficiation, China, 26-31 October; Seminar on System Planning in the Power Sector, New York, 8-12 November; Regional Workshop on Energy Efficiency and Control of Environmental Emissions, Lima, Peru, 22 November-4 December; and Conference on the Clean and Efficient Use of Coal and Lignite, Hong Kong, 30 November-3 December.

The Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development was engaged in three energy subprogrammes: monitoring and analysis of global energy trends and prospects and their impact on development and environment; promotion of sustainable energy exploration and development in developing countries; and furthering the development and use of new and renewable sources of energy.

The Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis also carried out activities in energy. Its Statistical Division compiled energy information, and its Macroeconomic and Social Policy Analysis Division was involved in analysing current and long-term energy developments and prospects and their impact on the world economy and development efforts.

UNDP was in the process of formulating an overall strategy on energy and the environment as part of its continuing activities. There were 122 ongoing projects under UNDP indicative planning figure funding, representing some $104 million in UNDP funding and $46 million in cost-sharing from other sources. UNDP Global Environment Facility energy projects totalled some $86 million and ranged from the installation of renewable energy systems to monitoring greenhouse gases.

Energy account

The United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) funded energy projects through the Energy Account of UNDP.(6) The projects focused mainly on energy efficiency and on the use of renewable sources of energy to meet the basic needs of rural communities.

Financing Energy Services for Small-Scale Energy Users (FINESSE) was initiated in 1989 by the World Bank, in collaboration with the Netherlands Ministry of Development Cooperation, the United States Department of Energy and UNFSTD, and resulted from the recognition that traditional energy-sector lending by multilateral and bilateral institutions was biased towards large-scale, supply-oriented fossil fuels and hydro-based projects. Its objective was to identify and promote ways to provide technically feasible and economically viable renewable energy as well as energy efficiency services to end-users. The Netherlands provided a trust fund of almost $900,000 for FINESSE.

Another large-scale proposal, the Programme for Asian Cooperation on Energy and the Environment, was funded by a trust fund of over $2 million from Australia. Its objective was to assist developing countries in the environmentally responsible production and efficient use of energy from coal. Through a related project, funded by Germany, international conferences were organized in China and India to enhance their efforts in the clean and efficient use of coal.

Other activities funded under the Energy Account included the installation of solar water-heating systems at three hospitals in Grenada and assistance to the Solar Energy Company in Kiribati in the design, installation, maintenance and management of solar photovoltaic home systems.

UNFSTD participated in the funding and organization of an international workshop on renewable energy project implementation and management (New Delhi, India, March). Also, in cooperation with the Latin American Energy Organization and the Treaty for Amazonian Cooperation, a training workshop on photovoltaic systems for rural electrification was organized in November in Ecuador.

Nuclear energy

IAEA report

On 23 August 1993,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the 1992 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly. Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 1 November, the IAEA Director General said that mankind seemed to stand on the threshold of an era in which many nuclear techniques might be disseminated for peaceful purposes, especially for the benefit of the developing world; in which nuclear power could help reduce environmental threats; and in which one might even begin to think seriously about how to organize a nuclear-weapon-free world (see PART SIX, Chapter I, for further information on IAEA activities).

The Director General addressed the issues of environmental protection and radioactive waste, as well as nuclear non-proliferation (see PART ONE, Chapter II) and IAEA's nuclear safeguards system, including inspection missions in Iraq and verification activities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Nuclear techniques had much to contribute to the objective of sustainable development as outlined in Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992.⁽⁸⁾ IAEA, as the central intergovernmental mechanism in the nuclear sphere, could play an important role in that regard, and not only in the areas of safe generation of energy and safe disposal of radioactive waste. It could facilitate the transfer of nuclear techniques to promote health, to ensure greater availability of fresh water and to secure data on the atmosphere and the seas. The IAEA laboratories helped institutes in Africa to use nuclear techniques for conducting element analysis in air, water, soil and biological samples, and helped marine laboratories in developing countries by providing expertise and training.

Agenda 21 had called for the design and implementation of environmentally sound energy strategies, which was not an easy task as all forms of energy generation entailed some risks. A mix of energy sources was needed to minimize those risks. IAEA was engaged, along with other organizations, in obtaining data about the implications of different energy policy scenarios, including the assessment of the potential of nuclear power for mitigating greenhouse emissions.

IAEA's efforts to develop not only recommendations but legally binding safety standards for nuclear powerplants continued, and there was a consensus about the structure and main content of a nuclear safety convention, the scope of which would be limited to civil nuclear-power reactors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November, the General Assembly, by recorded vote, adopted resolution 48/14.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1992.

Noting the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 1 November 1993, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 1993,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency in promoting the further application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, as envisaged in its statute,

Also recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance from the Agency in order to benefit effectively from the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Further recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, applications of nuclear methods and techniques, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in all these fields,

Again stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear plants so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment,

Noting the statements and actions of the Agency concerning non-compliance by Iraq with its non-proliferation obligations,

Taking note of resolutions GOV/2636 of 25 February 1993, GOV/2639 of 18 March 1993, GOV/2645 of 1 April 1993 and GOV/2692 of 23 September 1993 of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency in connection with the implementation of the agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, as well as Security Council resolution 825(1993) of 11 May 1993, and expressing its grave concern that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has failed to discharge its safeguards obligations and has recently widened the area of non-compliance,

Bearing in mind resolutions GC(XXXVII)/RES/614 on measures to resolve international radioactive waste management issues, GC(XXXVII)/RES/615 on strengthening nuclear safety through the early conclusion of a nuclear safety convention, GC(XXXVII)/RES/616 on practical utilization of food irradiation in developing countries, GC(XXXVII)/RES/617 on a plan for producing potable water economically, GC(XXXVII)/RES/618 on the strengthening of the Agency's main activities, GC(XXXVII)/RES/619 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system, GC(XXXVII)/RES/624 on the implementation of the agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, GC(XXXVII)/RES/625 on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa, GC(XXXVII)/RES/626 on the implementation of Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) relating to Iraq and GC(XXXVII)/RES/627 on application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, adopted on 1 October 1993 by the General Conference of the Agency at its thirty-seventh regular session,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Welcomes the reappointment of Mr. Hans Blix as Director General of the Agency;

4. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international cooperation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute; in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment; in strengthening technical assistance and cooperation for developing countries; and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the safeguards system of the Agency;

5. Welcomes the decisions taken by the Agency to strengthen its safeguards system;

6. Welcomes also the decisions taken by the Agency to strengthen its technical assistance and cooperation activities;

7. Commends the Director General and the secretariat of the Agency for their impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement still in force between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and urges the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to cooperate immediately with the Agency in the full implementation of the safeguards agreement;

8. Also commends the Director General of the Agency and his staff for their strenuous efforts in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991 and 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, and endorses his efforts to put in place the necessary measures for the implementation of the plan for future ongoing monitoring, in accordance with Security Council resolution 715(1991);

9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

1 November 1993 Meeting 46 140-1-9 (recorded vote)

Cartography

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

The Fifth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas was held in New York from 11 to 15 January 1993.(1)

The Conference, noting the importance of technology transfer in the mapping sciences, recommended that the United Nations, together with the international scientific community, convene a small meeting to examine the feasibility of establishing an international advisory group available to developing nations wishing to acquire modern technologies in the mapping sciences. It recognized the need to establish environmental information systems and to bring up to date global, regional and national geographic information for sustainable development, using geographic information system (GIS) technology, and recommended that ways be devised to overcome problems of introducing GIS systems into developing countries.

The Conference recognized the need for the region's smaller nations to develop geographic information systems and recommended that available information on such systems be collected and disseminated through regional seminars. It noted that constraining or impeding the conservation or development communities from acquiring land or geographical data and information was in conflict with the aims and spirit of UNCED. It therefore recommended that Member States make available all publicly funded land and geographical data sets and that self-teaching packages be produced for training in cartography and geo-information.

The Conference also recommended: that developing countries use new technologies, such as aerial triangulation by global positioning systems, image motion compensation aerial survey cameras and digital technology in orthophotography, and that aerial survey specifications be adapted to reflect new technologies; that training and cooperative assistance activities be supported by awarding fellowships to developing-country personnel and by workshops on surveying and mapping; that the United Nations continue to cooperate with scientific and professional organizations in surveying, mapping, GIS and cartography and to select authors for background papers in collaboration with them; and that the United Nations collaborate with all organizations dealing with issues relating to women in cartography to increase their participation in all fields of cartography.

On 12 July, by decision 1993/225, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Fifth Conference⁽¹⁾ and requested him to implement the Conference's recommendations. It endorsed the Conference's recommendation to convene the Sixth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas during the first half of 1997.

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

In a note verbale to the Secretary-General⁽²⁾ China offered to host the Thirteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in Beijing in May 1994.

On 30 July, by decision 1993/327, the Economic and Social Council accepted the invitation with gratitude.

Standardization of geographical names

On 12 July, by decision 1993/226, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Sixth (1992) United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names⁽³⁾ It endorsed the Conference's recommendation to convene the Seventh Conference during the second half of 1997 and accepted the offer of Iran to host it. The Secretary-General was requested to take measures to implement the Conference's other recommendations. The Council approved the statute of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names, which was annexed to the Secretary-General's report on the Conference⁽⁴⁾

Chapter VII

Science and technology

In 1993, the United Nations continued its efforts to strengthen the scientific and technological areas of development. As a result of the restructuring of the United Nations in the economic and social fields, programmes in science and technology were integrated within the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, whose Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer met twice during the year.

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, at its first session, considered issues related to scientific and technological capacity-building in developing countries, technology transfer, conversion of military technology for civilian use, application of science and technology for sustainable development and mobilization of financial resources for science and technology. In July, the Economic and Social Council acted on the Commission's recommendations in seven resolutions and two decisions, endorsed by the General Assembly in December (resolution 48/179). In the same resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the validity of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and stressed the need to strengthen the role of the United Nations in those fields.

Science and technology for developmentImplementation of the Vienna Programme of Action*General aspects

The 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development⁽¹⁾ continued to be implemented by several United Nations bodies and organizations in 1993. Its main goal, reaffirmed by the General Assembly in 1989 following an end-of-decade review⁽²⁾ was to strengthen the scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries as a basis for their social and economic development.

The Secretary-General, in a March report to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development⁽³⁾ stated that, although many of the hopes raised in the Vienna Programme of Action remained unfulfilled, the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED)⁽⁴⁾ had revitalized the idea of technology cooperation between developed and developing countries and had added the new paradigm of "sustainability" to the agenda of science and technology as a cross-cutting issue to be reflected in the further implementation of the Programme of Action.

In a March report⁽⁵⁾ to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Secretary-General assessed the effect of United Nations activities related to endogenous capacity-building in science and technology, one of the three major issues of the Vienna Programme of Action. It focused on a pilot programme executed in 10 developing countries since 1986 to assist in establishing appropriate national policies and programmes. The programme included pilot projects in Jordan, Nepal, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania and an interregional project in six other countries (see below), as well as inter-agency missions to coordinate and review various science and technology programmes undertaken by the United Nations system. The report recommended that endogenous capacity-building be one of the major guidelines in the development process and a major objective of all long-term projects, and that donors coordinate their efforts at the country level to improve the use of resources and complementarity of programmes. It also recommended that cross-sectoral technological projects be executed through national organizations; that capacity-building projects be incorporated into national plans and programmes; and that greater attention be given to the quality of experts, the supply, maintenance and modernization of equipment, and training.

The Commission also had before it a 1992 review of United Nations operational activities related to the enhancement of national capacity-building in science and technology⁽⁶⁾ and reports on the 1992 Meeting of High-level Experts on Science and Technology for Development⁽⁷⁾ on the activities of the Department of Economic and Social Development in science and technology⁽⁸⁾ and on improving coordination and cooperation in that field (see below, under "Organizational matters"). It emphasized that endogenous capacity-building should become a key area in its work and that the pilot programme for developing countries should be integrated with sustainable development and made available to other States, including economies in transition.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1991 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1993 on the strengthening of endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries.⁽¹⁰⁾ The report reviewed the development of world scientific and technological capacities in 1970-1990 and noted that the gap between the developed and developing countries had widened during that period, with the former accounting for 96 per cent of global research and development expenditure and 85.5 per cent of all the research scientists and engineers. Developing countries, under the pressure of economic and social problems, were being forced to abandon their long-term capacity-building plans in science and technology. Massive flows of external cooperation and the role of the international donor community would be critical in building their capabilities in science and technology. That conclusion was also reached at the Conference on the Development and Strengthening of Research Capacity in Developing Countries (The Hague, Netherlands, 2 and 3 September). The Conference agreed that there should be no division in scientific research between the North and the South and called for a global research system.

The report identified components essential for strengthening the process of endogenous capacity-building and described activities under an inter-regional technical cooperation project on endogenous capacity, which included pilot projects in Cape Verde, Jamaica, Pakistan, Togo, Uganda and Viet Nam. The project, totalling $2.2 million, was financed by Germany through the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development. Its goal was to enhance human and institutional capacity in developing countries to make autonomous decisions on the development, acquisition, deployment and diffusion of technologies; to integrate science and technology into the national development process; and to introduce a cohesive approach to achieve that objective. In 1993, policy dialogues under the project were carried out in Viet Nam (31 March-2 April), Cape Verde (11-14 October) and Uganda (15 and 16 November).

The report outlined possible actions for strengthening capacity-building, including coordination of sources of financing, technology assessment and forecasting, and operational activities of the United Nations. It also provided background information on the International Association of Technology Assessment and Forecasting Institutions—a non-governmental organization established in Bergen, Norway, in July 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 48/179 without vote.

Science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the continuing validity of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, which the General Assembly endorsed in its resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979 and subsequently reaffirmed in its resolution 44/14 A of 26 October 1989,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session, the recommendations and decisions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, particularly those contained in Agenda 21, General Assembly resolution 46/165 of 19 December 1991, and other resolutions and decisions adopted by the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system concerning science and technology for development,

Recognizing, in the context of relevant measures to restructure the Secretariat and of General Assembly resolution 47/212 of 23 December 1992, the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in this respect,

Bearing in mind the vital contribution of science and technology, including new and emerging technologies, to the reactivation of economic growth and development of the developing countries and their efforts to achieve the objectives set forth by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Reaffirming that capacity-building in science and technology for development in the developing countries should remain one of the priority issues on the agenda of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that the United Nations should play a central role in the enhancement of support and assistance to the developing countries in their efforts to build their endogenous capacity in science and technology,

Recalling the need to promote, facilitate and finance, as appropriate, access to and the transfer of environmentally sound technologies and corresponding know-how, in particular to the developing countries, on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights as well as the special needs of the developing countries for the implementation of Agenda 21,

Stressing the need for developed countries and international organizations to continue to support the efforts of developing countries to create and develop endogenous scientific and technological capabilities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on ways and means of strengthening endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the developing countries,

1. Endorses the relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993 on the basis of the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its first session, including the recommendation that the Council, at its organizational session for 1994, include science and technology for development as a priority subject to be considered for the coordination segment of the Council in 1994;

2. Stresses that endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the developing countries is indispensable to their efforts to mobilize indigenous resources for science and technology for development;

3. Emphasizes the vital role of the United Nations in supporting the developing countries in endogenous capacity-building in the field of science and technology;

4. Urges that national efforts and international development cooperation, in particular through supportive financial and technical assistance from donor Governments, multilateral lending institutions and international agencies, be intensified and strengthened towards endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the developing countries;

5. Welcomes the initiative for a consultative meeting to consider ways and means for organizing a more effective coalition of resources to meet the scientific and technological needs of the developing countries, and requests the Secretary-General to make provisions for convening such a meeting, within existing resources, as soon as possible;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure the full implementation of programme 17, science and technology for development, of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and the activities planned for the biennium 1994-1995 in the field of science and technology for development, in accordance with the specific mandates provided for in relevant General Assembly resolutions;

7. Stresses the urgent need to strengthen the vital role of the United Nations in the field of science and technology, particularly through better coordination, including in the fields of technology assessment, monitoring and forecasting;

8. Calls upon the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Commission on Sustainable Development to interact effectively, through the Economic and Social Council, in carrying out their respective mandates;

9. Recognizes the importance of cooperation among the developing countries in the field of science and technology, building on their comparative advantages and complementarities, and urges the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international, regional or subregional organizations and programmes to provide continued and enhanced support, through technical assistance and financing, as appropriate, for such efforts;

10. Recognizes also the potentially important role of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development in enhancing endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the developing countries, and calls upon all countries in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Fund;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on progress in the implementation of the present resolution, as well as on ways and means of reinvigorating the Fund and ensuring its effective operation.

General Assembly resolution 48/179

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.9) without vote, 10 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.77), based on informal consultations on draft by China and Colombia (for Group of 77) (A/C.2/48/L.16) and orally amended by China; agenda item 91 (h).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 8, 9, 15-17, 20, 30-32, 34, 36-40, 43-45, 47; plenary 86.

Strengthening technological capacity in developing countries

Activities of the United Nations system

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, at its first session (New York, 12-23 April),⁽¹⁾ considered as its substantive theme the contribution of technologies, including new and emerging ones, to the industrialization of developing countries and to the strengthening of regional and global integration processes, including proposals for transferring such technologies and incorporating them in the productive sector of those countries.

The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the contribution of technology to industrialization and regional and global integration.⁽²⁾ The report reviewed the impact of global technological and managerial transformations on the developing countries' economies and the extent to which regional and global economic integration could contribute to their technological modernization and economic performance. It emphasized the need to integrate science and technology policies in developing countries so as to upgrade their scientific and technological base and strengthen the linkages between national research and development and private firms. It also underscored the new conditions for regional economic integration, resulting from the globalization of research and development and inter-firm collaborative agreements.

The Commission also took note of a 1991 report⁽³⁾ of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation on new developments and trends in the activities of the United Nations in science and technology for development.

The Commission concluded that it should serve as a global framework for the assessment of scientific and technological advancement and of its impact on developing countries and economies in transition. It should review and reassess the new and emerging technologies which would affect development in those countries, particularly in the areas of international competitiveness, sustainable development and employment trends. It should also disseminate the knowledge and experience of the technologically developed countries and encourage regional and global integration through science and technology. Institutional mechanisms should be established to implement technological cooperation projects.

In other activities, DESD convened, in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, an expert group meeting on technology assessment, monitoring and forecasting (Paris, 25-28 January), which examined the methodological issues of introducing technology assessment in developing countries. It discussed economic, social and environmental impact assessment methodologies and practices and the major factors likely to foster technology assessment in the government and private sectors. It specified the role a technology assessment focal point could play within the United Nations system.

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/69 without vote.

Contribution of technologies, including new and emerging technologies, to the industrialization of developing countries and the strengthening of regional and global integration processes, and proposed ways and means of transferring such technologies and incorporating them into the productive sector of those countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the contribution of technology to industrialization and regional and global integration,

Recognizing that appropriate action at the subregional, regional, interregional and international levels can considerably broaden the scope for equitable, sustainable and efficient industrial development at the national level,

Considering that ongoing globalization trends define new modalities of international specialization, to which developing countries and economies in transition must respond,

Bearing in mind the fruitful experience gained from innovative approaches to technological cooperation at the regional and subregional levels,

Emphasizing that priority attention must be given to support activities at the national level, as the basis both for national development and for cooperation at the subregional, regional and interregional levels,

Considering the contribution of technologies, including new and emerging ones, to the industrialization of developing countries and the strengthening of regional and global integration processes,

Pursuing its mandate of promoting and catalysing international cooperation in the field of science and technology for development, in particular in developing countries, and in helping to solve global scientific and technological problems,

Bearing in mind the theme and contents of Agenda 21, in particular paragraphs 31.2, 34.13 and 35.3 thereof,

Taking into account General Assembly resolutions 46/165 of 19 December 1991 and 47/153 of 18 December 1992,

Recognizing the strong interest expressed by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in enhancing the linkages between research and development activities and the productive sector, and the related policy measures,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation on new developments and trends in the programmes and activities of the United Nations system in science and technology for development,

1. Decides to form an ad hoc panel of experts from the members of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, aided by the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to study in depth the various issues related to the substantive theme and the report of the Secretary-General so as to formulate recommendations for consideration by the Commission at its second session, under an agenda item entitled "Action arising from the first session", concentrating on the following issues:

(a) Policies and mechanisms for promoting linkages among national, subregional, regional and global science and technology systems and between those science and technology systems and the industrial sector of developing countries;

(b) The development of internal linkages within the United Nations system for effective coordination of the work dealing with the promotion of sustainable industrial development;

(c) Past, present and future trends in science and technology, including the transfer of technology, and their implications for the sustainable industrial development of developing countries;

(d) Strategies for using science and technology in promoting exports in selected sectors;

2. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its second session a report on the results obtained from the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer;

3. Requests the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Labour Organisation and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to update the section of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the problems and policy measures related to promoting effective linkages between research and development and the productive sector, with particular attention to the new developments and approach being effected in support of Agenda 21, and with an indication of any major new opportunities open for international cooperation in this matter; the updated section will be included in the report of the Secretary-General on the coordination of United Nations activities in science and technology, to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/69

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31); agenda item 15 (c).

UNCTAD activities. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) conducted various activities to strengthen the technological capacity of developing countries. Under its project on endogenous capacity-building, policy dialogues were carried out in Cape Verde, Uganda and Viet Nam. It organized a seminar on the strengthening of national technological capabilities (Bujumbura, Burundi, 24-26 February), which identified problems and suggested measures for establishing closer links between research institutions and enterprises in the productive sector. It also discussed institutional arrangements, incentives, research and development projects design and financing, human resources development and international cooperation. A workshop was held prior to the seminar on the legal aspects of the transfer of technology, in particular contractual arrangements for the acquisition of technology. Other activities included a workshop on recent trends in promoting innovativeness and technology transfer (Bangkok, Thailand, 21-24 September), which focused on policies and instruments for the creation, transfer, adaptation and absorption of technology, with particular reference to the role of intellectual property protection. Several publications were also issued on industry and case-studies on technology transfer and development.

UNCTAD had three ongoing new information technology programmes, designed to improve transit systems. They were: the Advance Cargo Information System, providing information on movements of cargo and transport equipment, which was being implemented in several African countries; the Automated System for Customs Data and Management for modernizing and streamlining customs administrations and their operational procedures, which was being implemented in 51 countries; and the Trade Point Programme, designed to set up trade facilitation centres for foreign trade transactions.

UNCTAD also completed a study on research and development collaboration agreements among enterprises.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/71 without vote.

Activities of the United Nations system in science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on ways and means of improving the quality of coordination and cooperation in science and technology for development, the assessment of the effect of activities of the United Nations system related to the process of creating and strengthening endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries, and the activities of the Department of Economic and Social Development of the Secretariat in science and technology for development, the report of the Meeting of High-level Experts on Science and Technology for Development and the note by the Secretariat on the Expert Group Meeting on Technology Assessment, Monitoring and Forecasting,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/199 of 22 December 1992, in particular paragraph 20 thereof,

Having examined the note by the Secretary-General on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the United Nations system as a means of examining the contribution of the operational activities of the United Nations system to the enhancement of the national capacities of developing countries in the field of science and technology,

1. Recommends that the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1994, include science and technology for development as a priority subject to be considered at the coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council in 1994;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for that purpose, a report containing an analysis of and action-oriented proposals to improve the coordination mechanisms of organs, programmes and specialized agencies, including the World Bank, which are involved in the science and technology activities of the United Nations system; the report should take into account the implications of the recent reforms of the Secretariat, as well as ways and means of improving the coordination of the United Nations system with other relevant intergovernmental institutions and private organizations involved in science and technology activities;

3. Considers the note by the Secretary-General on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the United Nations system a valuable input to the consideration of science and technology activities at the coordination segment of its substantive session of 1994;

4. Requests the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to consider, at its second session, the outcome of the coordination segment of the substantive session of the Council of 1994;

5. Stresses that endogenous capacity-building in science and technology is an indispensable component of any country's effort to mobilize science and technology for development and that it should hence remain a priority issue on the United Nations agenda;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its biennial sessions of the progress being achieved and any major problems encountered in the application of science and technology for sustainable development at the national, subregional and regional levels, with a view to identifying new options for international action;

7. Expresses its approval of the activities undertaken so far by the United Nations system to assist the developing countries in enhancing their national capacities in the field of science and technology;

8. Expresses its approval of the innovative features of the series of ten pilot projects being undertaken by the United Nations system to develop endogenous capacity, such as the participatory approach, demand-driven and developmental orientation and country-level coordination, and requests that those projects be completed and evaluated, with a view to disseminating information on their successful features;

9. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the regional development banks and other multilateral and bilateral cooperation agencies to give priority to endogenous capacity-building in their respective projects on science and technology for development and to integrate appropriate participatory approaches into the planning and evaluation cycles of their projects;

10. Stresses the need for national policies in support of science and technology communities in order to enhance information-management capacity and to facilitate affordable and widespread access to international on-line science and technology information networks and their connectivity to global and regional networks in all countries, and the need to make them available to all countries through on-line access, floppy disks, and other electronic and traditional means;

11. Urges organizations of the United Nations system and their collaborating institutions to coordinate their activities aimed at information management, including the upgrading and updating of their databases in the field of science and technology;

12. Calls upon all Governments to promote further harmonized and coherent approaches to and policies on science and technology for development at the national level and to reflect such harmonized approaches in their multilateral activities throughout the United Nations system;

13. Invites the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to develop an appropriate, dynamic mechanism for its interaction with intergovernmental organizations that are not part of the United Nations system, as well as with non-governmental organizations, institutions, foundations and the private sector concerned with science and technology for development and wishing to make common cause with the Commission;

14. Also invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in their activities related to science and technology, to take full advantage of the potential contribution of relevant intergovernmental organizations outside the United Nations system and of non-governmental organizations;

15. Welcomes, in this connection, such initiatives as that of the Third World Academy of Sciences in establishing regional centres for the application of science and technology for sustainable development in the developing countries, and urges donor agencies and Member States to support such initiatives.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/71

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 15 (c).

Science for sustainable development

In March 1993,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on implications arising from Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED⁽⁴⁾ for the Commission's work.

The Secretary-General identified the four areas of activities in science and technology which fell under Agenda 21 as technology transfer and cooperation, endogenous capacity-building, technology assessment in support of the effective management of technologies, and science for sustainable development. He suggested that assistance to Member States in those areas should focus on formulating policies and programmes to facilitate access to and transfer of environmentally sound technologies; building national consensus on the use of science and technology options most suitable to countries' needs and developing appropriate decision-making mechanisms; strengthening the international network of regional and national technology assessment institutions and building technology assessment capabilities, including environmental risk assessment; and improving Member States' capacities to generate scientific knowledge and technical know-how in the areas of environment and development.

The Commission also considered a report on the transfer of environmentally sound technologies (see below, under "Technology transfer") and proposals by Austria for university cooperation for sustainable development⁽¹⁵⁾ It requested the Secretariat to examine further the relationship between science and technology and sustainable development, as well as modalities for effective interaction with the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Commission action. The Commission⁽¹⁶⁾ emphasized the role of the educational sector for science and technology transfer and encouraged Member States to adopt measures promoting: educational cooperation with industrial enterprises; establishment of regional training and research centres in developing countries and economies in transition; South-South university scholarship programmes and North-South university partnerships and networks; and equitable access of all people to science and technology education and information. It requested the Secretary-General to study and report on strengthening United Nations activities in science and technology through educational measures; to review the United Nations science and technology information networks; and to explore the feasibility of providing developing countries and economies in transition with access to international scientific data networks, with a view to creating a global means of scientific communication and information transmission. The Commission also recommended that the Economic and Social Council invite relevant United Nations bodies to consider ways of harnessing resources to enhance science, technology and research capacity-building in developing countries and economies in transition.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/72 without vote.

Science and technology for sustainable development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992 on institutional arrangements to follow up the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Emphasizing the importance of effective interaction between the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Commission on Sustainable Development,

1. Takes note of the following documentation considered by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its first session under the agenda item entitled "Science and technology for sustainable development":

(a) Note by the Secretary-General on the implications of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, including Agenda 21, for the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development;

(b) Report of the Secretary-General on the utilization and marketing of energy technologies, focusing on policy issues and options for the effective transfer and application of environmentally sound energy technologies;

2. Stresses the critical importance of supporting countries, in particular the developing countries, in harnessing the potential of science and technology, with a view to achieving the objectives set forth by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

3. Emphasizes, in this respect, the relevance of the activities of the United Nations system in the areas of science and technology, particularly in endogenous capacity-building, including the improvement of traditional technologies, as well as aspects related to technology transfer, technology assessment and forecasting, science and technology information dissemination and management, and science for sustainable development;

4. Decides that the Commission on Science and Technology for Development should place particular emphasis in its work on policy issues and options related to the development, transfer and utilization of technologies that promote sustainable development objectives, in accordance with the mandate of the Commission and taking into account the provisions of Agenda 21 concerning science and technology;

5. Supports the activities of the United Nations system and the international cooperation aimed, taking into account the elements of chapter V.B of the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its first session, at promoting the use of the following:

(a) New and renewable sources of energy technologies;

(b) Clean coal, fossil fuels and other energy technologies;

(c) Alternative fuel technologies;

6. Encourages bilateral and multilateral donors to provide further support for the development, transfer and application of environmentally sound technologies;

7. Calls upon the Commission on Sustainable Development to interact closely with the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and to take advantage of its work while reviewing the implementation of Agenda 21;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that information on those aspects of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development that have a bearing on the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development is distributed to members of the latter Commission and that the work of the two Commissions is coordinated effectively.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/72

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 15 (c).

Conversion of military technologies

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/70 without vote.

Scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacity for civilian use and sustainable development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling principle 25 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, which states that peace, development and environmental protection are interdependent and indivisible,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 46/36 C of 6 December 1991, in which the Assembly stressed the growing importance of the relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations, and Assembly resolution 46/36 B of 6 December 1991, in which the Assembly recalled the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the study on charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment,

Stressing that science and technology could contribute greatly to the elaboration of a strategy for the conversion of military technologies for civilian use, sustainable development and environmental protection, affecting the most fundamental interests of all Member States,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/14 E of 26 October 1989, in which the Assembly decided, inter alia, to entrust the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat to serve as the focal point for technological assessment within the United Nations system and, where possible, for relations with Governments and non-governmental organizations concerning technological assessment activities in Member States, and Assembly resolution 46/165 of 19 December 1991, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the role of the Centre, at Dortmund, Germany, from 24 to 27 February 1992 and in Moscow from 12 to 17 October 1992 on the scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacity, as well as the activities of the United Nations system in this field, in particular those of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

1. Reaffirms that, in the era of global concern for the environment and in the new political climate, the conversion of military technologies for civilian use and sustainable development should receive increased international attention, with the appropriate support and involvement of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its second session a report on the scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacity for civilian use and sustainable development, with a focus on technology assessment issues, particularly the economic effects, employment implications and environmental consequences of alternative technological choices;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to elaborate that report by drawing from the United Nations conferences and other United Nations activities referred to in the fifth preambular paragraph above, particularly those of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer, and to explore the issue of strengthening agreement on the transition to disarmament.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/70

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31); agenda item 15 (c).

Financial resources for science and technology

In March, the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on the organization of a coalition of resources to finance science and technology for development.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report reviewed the existing experience of mobilizing financial resources and outlined a concept for organizing a coalition and proposals for action. According to the report, such a coalition should be based on programmes oriented to attract potential donors and should focus on coordination and policy coherence and not on the establishment of a new funding body. It should emphasize qualitative additionality, with clearly defined programme coverage centring on endogenous capacity-building. It should give priority to programmes resulting from dialogues among participants in the development process and provide for maximum flexibility and diversity in their approaches.

The Secretary-General examined alternative models for resource mobilization, including an inter-institutional mechanism for information exchange and policy coherence, to facilitate coordination and assist in developing guidelines, or the creation of an international association or council for science and technology, to mobilize resources and allocate funds to specific capacity-building projects. The report outlined the structure, functions and mode of operation of the second alternative.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/73 without vote.

Financing science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Acknowledging the significant role of the United Nations in the field of science and technology for development,

Recognizing that there is a need to harmonize the efforts of different sources of funding for science and technology for development,

Recognizing also that the increasing need for cooperation in programmes of endogenous capacity-building requires adequate financial support,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/190 of 22 December 1992, in which the Assembly called upon all concerned to implement all commitments, agreements and recommendations reached at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, especially by ensuring provision of the means of implementation,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the organization of a coalition of resources to finance science and technology for development, submitted to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its first session,

1. Decides to maintain as a priority its efforts to enable developing countries to address their needs for funds and cooperation to enhance the input of science and technology into their development programmes and to build up an endogenous capacity on the basis of the priorities and plans of developing countries; due attention should be paid in this regard to the needs of the countries with economies in transition, in accordance with the relevant mandates of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 46/165 of 19 December 1991, in which the Assembly requested concrete proposals for organizing a more effective coalition of resources to meet the scientific and technological needs of developing countries, to convene a consultative meeting in 1993;

3. Decides that the consultative meeting shall:

(a) Compare and exchange views on portfolios of programmes and projects in science and technology in support of endogenous capacity-building at the national, regional and global levels;

(b) Consider ways and means of securing continual interaction and complementarity of the institutions involved in the financing of science and technology and suggest specific ways in which such cooperation could continue for the harmonization of their policies and the enhancement of specific opportunities for a coalition of resources among the interested financing and funding institutions;

4. Also decides that the participants in the consultative meeting should include representatives from multilateral development financial institutions, including the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and the regional development banks, together with private and international foundations and bilateral donors interested in science and technology for development;

5. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to consider providing the consultative meeting with a review of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development aimed at redefining its role in this context;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994 a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/73

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 15 (c).

Financial implications. S-G, E/1993/31/Add.1.

The consultative meeting requested by the Council was subsequently postponed until 1994.

UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development

During 1993, the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development, including the Energy Account of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), received an estimated $1.04 million in resources from voluntary and cost-sharing contributions and from interest and other income. A total of $7.83 million was carried over from 1992. During the year, the Fund's expenditure amounted to $2.94 million, leaving a balance of $6.93 million, less $5.44 million in unspent project allocations.

The endogenous capacity-building programme in science and technology accelerated with the organization of a second group of policy dialogues in Cape Verde, Jamaica, Pakistan, Uganda and Viet Nam. The Fund complemented that programme with new projects on management of technology and technology assessment, both addressing the needs of the middle-income and least developed countries (LDCs) in Asia. Its programme of assistance in establishing technology business incubators, implemented in some 14 countries, produced 50 operational incubators, mostly in China. The Science and Technology Referral Services for Journalists, designed to improve the quality of media reporting in science and technology, was extended, and included Malaysia, the Philippines and Sri Lanka. The Fund completed the establishment of a computerized data bank for mineral resources in Mongolia and a quality control project for heavy industry in Latin America, as well as a project to set national standards for quality control in China. More than 800 scientific instruments were repaired under a repair and maintenance project in southern Africa, which evolved into a broader programme covering West Africa and South Asia. Activities dealing with transfer of knowledge through expatriate nationals were also expanded to include 39 countries.

Poverty alleviation was also addressed by the programme on financing energy services for small-scale energy-users, which targeted the rural poor and placed emphasis on new and renewable sources of energy and energy conservation.

Technology transfer

During the year, activities in the field of technology transfer were geared towards the implementation of relevant provisions of the Cartagena Commitment, adopted in 1992 by the eighth session of UNCTAD (UNCTAD VIII).⁽¹⁾

The Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer, established by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) in 1992,⁽²⁾ held two sessions in 1993. At its first session (Geneva, 25-29 January),⁽³⁾ the Group adopted its programme of work in the areas of investment flows, transfer of technology and competitiveness; technological capacity-building in developing countries, particularly LDCs, and in economies in transition; and transfer and development of environmentally sound technologies (ESTs).

At its second session (Geneva, 13-17 December),⁽⁴⁾ the Group reviewed the work of the United Nations system and a number of inter-governmental, national and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) dealing with investment-related technology issues⁽⁵⁾ and discussed evolving approaches to technology capacity-building and competitiveness⁽⁶⁾ It also considered 14 country case-studies and the report of a workshop on the transfer and development of ESTs (see below).⁽⁷⁾

In March,⁽⁸⁾ TDB agreed that the proposal on the study on market-based price mechanisms as a means of assisting technology transfer to developing countries should be further refined. In September,⁽⁸⁾ it referred the issue to the Working Group.

By decision 1993/322 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to provide a brief report to the General Assembly in early 1994 on technology transfer activities and coordination mechanisms within the United Nations system.

Transfer of environmentally sound technology

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in March 1993⁽⁶⁾ a report on utilization and marketing of energy technologies, focusing on policy issues and options for the effective transfer and application of ESTs. The report recommended that developed countries finance demonstration and development of energy technologies in developing countries and provide them with information on product and service vendors; the developing countries should create better policy environments for investment in energy-efficient goods and services. The report also recommended that developed and developing countries establish joint research and development strategies for the generation, transfer and use of ESTs.

In April, the Commission underscored the need for funding for technology transfer and placed special emphasis on modalities for fostering the development and transfer of clean energy technologies, as well as increasing energy efficiency.

The workshop on the transfer and development of ESTs (Oslo, Norway, 13-15 October)⁽⁷⁾ organized by UNCTAD and the Government of Norway, reviewed environment-related technology issues and examined the role of private firms in generating and transferring ESTs and the demand side of the transfer process. It also considered priority elements for an action programme covering technological capacity-building, access to technology, activities relating to the private sector, actions for recipient Governments, finance for the transfer of ESTs, related standards and regulations and their enforcement, and international institutional aspects.

The workshop recommended studies on technology information and assessment; extension of the effectiveness of benchmarking and incorporation of environmental benchmarks into measures to attract foreign direct investment; upgrading of environmental standards and incentives for technological initiatives in the private sector; a multi-donor approach to the provision of environmental services and institutional capacity-building; the selection and transfer of effective measures already introduced in developing countries; and establishment of a financial instrument for addressing local problems with environmental, technological and developmental dimensions.

Action by the Commission on Sustainable Development. In June, the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Sustainable Development on the progress achieved in facilitating and promoting the transfer of environmentally sound technology.⁽¹⁰⁾ The report considered trends and issues related to such transfers, initiatives being undertaken by the United Nations, the private sector, Governments and NGOs, and issues concerning the future work of the Commission.

The Commission (New York, 14-25 June)⁽¹¹⁾ stressed the need to facilitate and finance access to and the transfer of ESTs and know-how, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms; to promote long-term technological cooperation and partnership between holders and potential users of such technologies; and to improve the endogenous capacities of developing countries to develop, assess, manage and use ESTs through, inter alia, research and development, education and training. The Commission urged donors and Governments to increase financial support for the transfer and management of ESTs. It recognized the need to develop methodologies and establish institutions for technology assessment and stressed the importance of strengthening national capacities in the field of new technologies. Governments were urged to promote access to and the transfer of ESTs by developing or modifying appropriate policies and mechanisms, providing incentives for the private sector and supporting the required investment and infrastructure. The Commission recommended strengthening measures promoting information exchange on hazardous technologies and discouraging their transfer, and called on the international community to support technological cooperation and capacity-building among developing countries, as well as their initiatives in the field of environmentally sound technology. It requested the Secretary-General to implement the relevant sections of Agenda 21, including the designation of a focal point for United Nations activities in technology assessment, the collection and dissemination of information on environmental emergencies, and the establishment of a network of national, subregional and regional information systems.

The Commission decided to establish an inter-sessional ad hoc open-ended working group to review progress in technology transfer and capacity-building, and invited Governments and intergovernmental bodies to provide information on their activities in those areas. Emphasizing the need for effective interaction with intergovernmental bodies, it invited the Economic and Social Council to consider the intergovernmental machinery related to science and technology at the coordination segment of its 1994 substantive session so as to clarify the distribution of labour and cooperation mechanisms.

Draft code of conduct

mitted in November 1993 a report⁽¹³⁾ on consultations carried out in 1993 on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology. He recalled that UNCTAD VIII had recognized that conditions did not exist to reach full agreement on outstanding issues in the draft code of conduct.

The report stated that the future of the negotiations on the draft code could be influenced by the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer. A clearer understanding of the issues being discussed by the Group could contribute to a better perception of the initiatives Governments might wish to take. The UNCTAD Secretary-General therefore proposed to undertake consultations with Governments after completion of the Working Group's activities and to report to the General Assembly on further action to be taken.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/167 without vote.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

The General Assembly

1. Recognizes that the conditions do not currently exist to reach full agreement on all outstanding issues in the draft international code of conduct on the transfer of technology and also that, should Governments indicate, either directly or through the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development reporting in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/214 of 20 December 1991, that there is the convergence of views necessary to reach agreement on all outstanding issues, then the Trade and Development Board should re-engage and continue its work aimed at facilitating agreement on the code;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, based on the relevant provisions of the Cartagena Commitment and taking into account the findings of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer, to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the state of the discussion.

Organizational matters

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, established in 1992,⁽¹⁾ held its first session in 1993 (New York, 12-23 April).⁽²⁾

The Commission considered as its substantive theme the contribution of technologies to the industrialization of developing countries and the strengthening of regional and global integration processes, including proposals for transferring such technologies and incorporating them in the productive sector of those countries. It also examined United Nations activities in science and technology and matters relating to science and technology for sustainable development, the financing of science and technology for development, the organization of ad hoc panels and workshops on specific science and technology issues, and programme questions. The Commission recommended seven draft resolutions and two decisions for action by the Economic and Social Council and brought to its attention one resolution and one decision.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/321 of 30 July, took note of the Commission's report, endorsed the resolution and decision brought to its attention and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's second session.

Future work of the Commission

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development suggested criteria for the selection of substantive themes for its future sessions and topics for consideration, including science and technology and women; the conversion of military technology to civilian use; information science and technologies; application of biotechnology to agriculture, health and other areas; ecology; educational technologies for children; linkage between research and development and the production sector; and the role of science and technology in the informal sector. It stressed that the topics chosen should aim at achieving holistic and multidisciplinary approaches and that it should focus on two or three themes at each session. Topics considered by the former Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development could be updated and taken into account in the selection of future themes. The Commission felt that its work should be directed towards a clearly defined, specific and pragmatic programme that could be effectively implemented.

Expert panels

In a March report⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General recommended that the Commission on Science and Technology for Development continue the practice established by the former Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development of convening ad hoc panels/workshops of experts on specific issues of science and technology. He suggested organizing up to four ad hoc panels each biennium to advise the relevant operational agencies of the United Nations system.

The Commission pointed out that the themes chosen for the ad hoc panels should deal with policy analysis, research and coordination. Among topics proposed for future panels were science and technology for ensuring food security, environmentally sound technology for waste management, science and technology in meeting the basic needs of the population and application of science and technology in improving the productivity of the informal sector. The Commission stressed the importance of obtaining adequate resources and expert advice for its work and of maintaining relationships with other entities within and outside the United Nations system.

On 23 April⁽⁴⁾ the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted resolution 1993/74 without vote.

Future work plan of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the organization of ad hoc panels/workshops on specific issues of science and technology for development,

Taking into account the need to focus the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development during its two-year inter-sessional periods through the preparation of analytical reports on a limited number of substantive themes,

Recognizing that the opportunity of organizing ad hoc panels or workshops during the inter-sessional period can at least in part be used for deepening the analytical work on the substantive themes chosen for each period, while in the same period ad hoc panels or workshops can still be organized on specific issues of science and technology for development,

Noting the offer of some member States to host such panels or workshops and the offer of one member State to finance a panel on a substantive theme, preferably to be held in a developing country, in order to encourage the new style of work on the substantive themes, thus enabling one extrabudgetary panel to be convened in addition to the four panels or workshops provided for in the regular programme budget,

Considering the desirability of connecting the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development with the concrete experiences of member States in the area of science and technology for development and with policies in that area,

Emphasizing, inter alia, the following criteria for choosing substantive themes for the inter-sessional work:

- (a) The themes and the work thereon should, whenever possible, be timely and directed at the broad interests of organizations of the United Nations system;
- (b) They should serve the mandate of the Commission by making it possible to:
 - (i) Synthesize relevant issues and insights without conducting extensive new research;
 - (ii) Provide advice on science and technology policies in the developing countries and facilitate discussion thereon at the national and regional levels;
 - (iii) Formulate recommendations within the United Nations system;
 - (c) They should fall within the mandate of the Commission and reflect the comparative advantage of the Commission vis-a-vis other United Nations bodies;
 - (d) They should be of wide interest to end-users, in particular in developing countries, and be relevant to the least developed countries;

1. Decides that the following three substantive themes shall be the focus of the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development during the inter-sessional period 1993-1995:

(a) Technology for small-scale economic activities to address the basic needs of low-income populations; the theme should be examined by one of the panels of experts, which would build upon relevant studies from inside and outside the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and regional development banks. A diagnosis and action-oriented proposals would be made with regard to the following issues:

- (i) Access to and adaptation of technology, and North-South and South-South transfer of technology;
- (ii) Effects of productivity;
- (iii) Generation of jobs and income to combat poverty by addressing the basic needs (education, health, housing and food) of low-income populations, including issues related to gender and age;
- (iv) Dissemination mechanisms, including training, regional and international cooperation and networking, data banks and project banks;
- (v) Interrelation with other endogenous capacity-building and research and development activities;
- (vi) Finance and monitoring;
- (b) The gender implications of science and technology for developing countries; the following topics would be analysed, taking into account cultural and social aspects and the knowledge of indigenous people:
 - (i) The implications of technological change for employment and skills;
 - (ii) The health implications of advances in medical knowledge;
 - (iii) Energy technologies;
 - (iv) Agricultural technologies;
 - (v) Science and technology education and entry into the professions.

The work would include an analysis of activities, both within and outside the United Nations system, on these topics and would lead to science and technology recommendations for national Governments and the relevant United Nations bodies;

(c) The science and technology aspects of the sectoral issue to be discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development in 1995; the purpose is to relate the expertise of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development directly to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

2. Also decides to assign responsibility for the inter-sessional work on each of the substantive themes to a member of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development who would call together a panel of experts with the help of the Secretariat; other members of the Commission would be invited to join the assigned member in that task;

3. Further decides to have, in addition to the three panels of members of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and outside experts, panels of experts or workshops on the following specific issues:

(a) The contribution of technologies, including new and emerging ones, to industrialization in developing countries;

(b) Information technologies and their role in the field of science and technology, in particular in relation to the needs of developing countries; once the relevant issues have been made clear by the panel, this issue might be selected as a substantive theme of the Commission for the inter-sessional period 1995-1997;

4. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that provide technical cooperation assistance in the field of science and technology to take full advantage of the expertise of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and its willingness to participate actively in the provision of such technical cooperation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/74

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31); agenda item 15 (c).

Also on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, the Council adopted decision 1993/320 without vote.

Preparation of analytical reports by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 30 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council decided that the Commission on Science and Technology for Development should adopt, within existing resources, the procedures for preparing analytical reports contained in the annex to the present decision.

ANNEX

Tasks of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and preparation of analytical reports by the Commission

1. The tasks of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development include:

(a) Assisting the Economic and Social Council in providing science and technology policy guidelines and recommendations to Member States, in particular developing countries;

(b) Providing innovative approaches to improving the quality of coordination and cooperation within the United Nations system in the area of science and technology, with a view to ensuring optimum mobilization of resources;

(c) Providing expert advice to other parts of the United Nations system.

2. In order to fulfil its tasks, the work of the Commission should include the preparation of reports on a limited number of substantive topics. In preparing those reports the Commission should adopt the following procedures:

(a) The substantive themes for each session of the Commission should be determined by the Commission at its previous session, taking into account the agenda of the General Assembly and other agreed criteria. The Secretary-General will be invited to suggest possible themes after consultation with relevant agencies of the United Nations system;

(b) For each theme chosen, the Commission will establish a panel of its own members having responsibility for preparing a draft report for consideration by the Commission as a whole at its next session. Other experts may also be involved in the preparatory process. The panels will appoint their own chairman and rapporteur and determine their method of work. They will be assisted by the secretariat of the Commission. A lead agency of the United Nations system may be invited to work with the panel in identifying the activities relevant to the theme within the United Nations system;

(c) Once adopted by the Commission, the reports on substantive themes will be submitted to the Economic and Social Council as representing a major output from a particular session of the Commission and will also be given wider distribution throughout the development community;

(d) In order for the Commission to evaluate the reports effectively at its plenary meetings, its consideration of those reports will occur in two stages. The first stage will be devoted primarily to technical discussion of the draft chapters and selection of substantive themes for the next session of the Commission. The second stage will be devoted, as necessary, to intergovernmental negotiations concerning draft recommendations and resolutions. The total duration of a given session of the Commission will be kept as short as possible.

3. The use and application of the content and recommendations of the analytical reports of the Commission will be monitored to ensure that they are having the desired effects.

4. The Secretariat should seek to establish a computer network for communication between the Secretariat and the members of the Commission and among the members of the Commission, so that the products of the deliberations of each panel can be made available to the members of the Commission in a timely manner. The network should allow for computer conferencing on the substantive themes.

5. These methods of work will be implemented within the existing resources for science and technology. To supplement those resources, Member States and relevant organizations are encouraged to provide voluntary contributions.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/320

Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/110) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31); agenda item 15 (c).

Programme of work for 1994-1995

The Commission's programme proposals for the biennium 1994-1995 covered four sub-programmes: proposed activities in endogenous capacity-building and resource mobilization; the Advanced Technology Assessment System (ATAS), with a special focus on the conversion of military technology to civilian applications; coordination and harmonization of United Nations activities; and information services.

The Commission generally supported the programme of work and emphasized the role of the regional commissions in coordinating the programme at the regional level.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1993/75.

Programme of work for 1994-1995 in the field of science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Transmits to the General Assembly, for further consideration, the following draft resolution, as approved by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its first session:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 46/235 of 13 April 1992 and 47/212 and 47/214 of 23 December 1992,

"Having considered the note by the Secretariat on programme proposals for the biennium 1994-1995 in the field of science and technology for development, in particular paragraphs 2 and 5 thereof,

"1. Reaffirms the mandates and functions of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development as the main substantive organ of the Economic and Social Council dealing with the global issue of science and technology for development;

"2. Also reaffirms the need to count on the substantive support of an efficient Secretariat unit provided with a level of resources commensurate with its functions;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure the full implementation of programme 17 of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and, in particular, to provide resources for the implementation of the activities proposed for the biennium 1994-1995 in the field of science and technology for development, taking into account the priority attached to these activities within the medium-term plan;

"4. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Secretariat unit having primary responsibility for the implementation of programme activities in the field of science and technology for development, including the substantive servicing of the Commission, will be managed in an integrated manner, and further requests the Secretary-General to provide for its strengthening in terms of the efficient organization of the Secretariat;

"5. Further requests the Secretary-General to make sufficient provisions within the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 for the implementation of technical cooperation activities in the field of science and technology;

"6. Requests the Secretary-General to clarify the division of labour and coordination arrangements for the efficient functioning of Secretariat units in the field of science and technology for development, particularly the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, the Department for Development Support and Management Services, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions;

"7. Expresses concern regarding the proposed abolition of the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the negative impact this may have on the quality of the coordination of system-wide activities in these fields;

"8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the resources necessary for convening at least four inter-sessional ad hoc panels/workshops on specific issues in the field of science and technology, which will provide crucial input into the work of the Commission in terms of independent, specialized and expert advice;

"9. Urges the Secretary-General to make every possible effort to adhere strictly to existing rules and to avoid the repetition of the regrettable experience of the late issuance of documentation for the first session of the Commission."

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/75

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Referred by Economic Committee (E/1993/110), 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1993/31), orally amended in Council following informal consultations; agenda item 15 (c).

Financial implications. S-G, E/1993/31/Add.1.

Following the adoption of the resolution, Belgium, on behalf of the European Community (EC), indicated that it could not support the draft resolution for three reasons: the text was not discussed by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and was not therefore accepted by all its members; the draft resolution had unspecified financial implications for the 1994-1995 programme budget; and it prejudged the results of the restructuring of the Secretariat of the United Nations. However, conscious of the importance of international cooperation, the EC members agreed that the text should be forwarded to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session for an in-depth examination.

Restructuring in the UN system

In 1993, as part of the restructuring in the United Nations system, programmes relating to science and technology for development were integrated within UNCTAD and the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the United Nations Secretariat, established on 1 February. Within the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), functions of the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development were absorbed by the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions and the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development.

On 6 May, by section III of resolution 47/212 B, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in implementing the restructuring of the Secretariat and in preparing the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995, to provide adequate resources and to identify clearly units for the implementation of all programmes and activities, including science and technology for development, and to strengthen coordination of the activities on science and technology within UNDP for better management of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development.

Coordination in the UN system

In a March report⁽⁵⁾ to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Secretary-General provided proposals for improving coordination and cooperation in the United Nations system. He recommended placing greater emphasis on coordination at country and regional levels, adopting a coherent approach to national capacity-building, ensuring harmonization of activities at the headquarters level, facilitating coordination through a framework of policy studies, organizing early consultations on programmes requiring joint action and financing, and establishing a United Nations scientific and technological information network. Other recommendations dealt with ATAS as the United Nations focal point for technology assessment and coordination on identified specific activities.

In April, the Commission considered that special priority should be assigned to enhancing the complementarity of all components of the system in science and technology and underscored the importance of coherence and harmonized national policies in that field. It recommended that an effective coordination mechanism for science and technology be maintained within the restructured ACC.

The ACC Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development, at its second meeting (New York, 8-10 September)⁽⁶⁾ designated task managers for follow-up to and reporting on, inter alia, education and science, the transfer of ESTs, cooperation and capacity-building and biotechnology. The ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions, at its first session (New York, 20-24 September)⁽⁷⁾ decided to focus on linkages between science and technology and development, and included an item on science and technology for development in its programme of work for 1994.

The Joint Meetings (twenty-seventh series) of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and ACC (New York, 27 October), in considering the results of UNCED and their implications for the United Nations system⁽⁸⁾ identified the transfer of ESTs, cooperation and capacity-building as an important area of coordination. They considered it essential to ensure effective interaction and collaborative arrangements in this area within the framework of the Economic and Social Council based on clear division of labour and responsibilities. They recommended that the Council consider science and technology at the coordination segment of its 1994 substantive session.

Chapter VIII

Environment

Follow-up on the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) and efforts to implement its Agenda 21 dominated the major environment-related activities of the United Nations system in 1993. Intergovernmental meetings were held on such issues as desertification and fisheries, and environmental concerns were integrated into many economic and social development programmes.

The General Assembly noted progress made by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee towards elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification (resolution 48/191) and by the Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks (48/194). The Convention on Biological Diversity entered into force in December 1993.

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) held its seventeenth session in 1993 (Nairobi, 10-21 May), adopting 45 decisions on environmental and administrative matters. The Assembly (48/174) called for the strengthening of UNEP and welcomed its action-oriented approach to UNCED follow-up.

UNCED follow-up

In 1993, institutional structures were established and other activities pursued to follow up on UNCED and implement the main texts adopted at the Conference: the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development; the comprehensive plan of action for sustainable development into the twenty-first century, also known as Agenda 21; and the Non-legally Binding Authoritative Statement of Principles for a Global Consensus on the Management, Conservation and Sustainable Development of All Types of Forests. (1)

Progress was made with ratification of two conventions opened for signature at UNCED: the International Framework Convention on Climate Change and the International Framework Convention on the Conservation of Biological Diversity.

Other developments on UNCED issues included meetings of a United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish

Stocks and preparations for an international convention to combat desertification.

By its resolution 48/193 of 21 December, the General Assembly decided to convene, in Barbados from 25 April to 6 May 1994, the first Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, as called for in Agenda 21 (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

UNDP activities. In May,⁽²⁾ the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) submitted a report on UNCED follow-up and on UNDP's strategy for sustainable development. He stated that UNDP had intensified its efforts to integrate environmental concerns into the mainstream of its development activities and had launched a major programme in support of Agenda 21 that included Capacity 21, a programme designed to help developing nations to implement Agenda 21 (see PART THREE, Chapter II). The report discussed the implications of Agenda 21 for UNDP and described Capacity 21.

On 18 June⁽³⁾ the Council welcomed the Administrator's report⁽²⁾ and requested that he proceed with implementing Capacity 21.

The Governing Council supported UNDP's goal of devoting 40 per cent of the Capacity 21 budget to the least developed countries and requested the Administrator to report annually on follow-up to UNCED and on UNDP activities in the field of sustainable development.

UNEP activities. In February⁽⁴⁾ the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) submitted a note describing how UNEP proposed to follow up on three subjects emanating from UNCED: the global conference on the sustainable development of small island States; the elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification; and the convening of an intergovernmental meeting on the protection of the marine environment from land-based activities. The UNEP Governing Council, on 21 May⁽⁵⁾ endorsed the actions proposed by the Executive Director regarding those issues.

Institutional arrangements

In an October report⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the establishment of and secretariat support arrangements for the Commission on Sustainable Development⁽⁷⁾ the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development; and the High-Level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

On 21 May⁽⁸⁾ UNEP's Governing Council requested the Executive Director to coordinate UNEP's programme activities with the outcome of the first session of the Commission on Sustainable Development and to ensure that adequate staff resources were available for collaboration with the newly restructured Global Environment Facility (GEF). The Executive Director was encouraged to refocus UNEP's offices so that they could also collaborate with the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development.

Dissemination of Rio Declaration

At its June session⁽⁹⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development reported on its first session and proposed programme of work. It noted initial efforts to incorporate into the programmes and processes of the United Nations system the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, consisting of 27 principles as a basis for negotiation of an Earth Charter that could be approved on the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1995.⁽¹⁰⁾ It also requested that the Secretary-General keep it informed of measures taken for the effective functioning of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/190.

Dissemination of the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development contains fundamental principles for the achievement of sustainable development, based on a new and equitable global partnership,

Conscious of the fact that the dissemination of the principles contained in the Declaration will contribute to increasing public awareness of the need to take a balanced and integrated approach to development and environment questions,

Bearing in mind its resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992, in particular paragraph 4 (a) thereof, in which it recommended that the Commission on Sustainable Development promote the incorporation of the principles of the Declaration in the implementation of Agenda 21, and taking note of paragraphs 32 and 42 of chapter I of the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development on its first session,

Recalling that the ministers and other participants at the high-level meeting of the first session of the Commission emphasized the need to promote broad dissemination of the principles of the Declaration at all levels with a view to promoting public awareness regarding sustainable development,

Recalling also chapter 36 of Agenda 21, entitled "Promoting education, public awareness and training",

1. Urges all Governments to promote widespread dissemination of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development in the public and private sectors;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Declaration is widely disseminated by the competent organs and bodies of the United Nations system and that its principles are incorporated in their programmes and processes, in accordance with paragraphs 32 and 42 of chapter I of the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development on its first session.

General Assembly resolution 48/190

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/725) without vote, 9 December (meeting 46); draft by China and Colombia (for Group of 77) (A/C.2/48/L.46); agenda item 99.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 36-43, 46, 47; plenary 86.

Coordination within the UN system

The Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD), established by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in 1992⁽¹¹⁾ held two meetings in 1993 (New York, 23-25 March and 8-10 September).

At its September session⁽¹²⁾ IACSD discussed the sharing of responsibilities for implementation of Agenda 21 among the organizations of the United Nations system. It designated task managers and cooperating organizations for the various chapters and programme areas of Agenda 21, agreed on the responsibilities and functions of the task managers and established a process for inter-agency consultations and coordination.

An ad hoc inter-agency meeting was convened in Paris on 23 and 24 August to work out arrangements for an inter-agency mechanism that would deal with broad development issues related to the oceans and report to IACSD. As a result, IACSD recommended the establishment of an ACC Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas to meet the coordination needs broadly defined in chapter 17 of Agenda 21.

The results of UNCED and their implications for the United Nations system was the topic of the twenty-seventh series of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) and ACC (New York, 27 October).⁽¹³⁾

The Joint Meetings concluded that harmonized policy guidance on sustainable development issues by various governing bodies throughout the United Nations system was crucial, and recommended that the Commission on Sustainable Development assist the Economic and Social Council with coordination.

The Joint Meetings had before them a background paper,⁽¹⁴⁾ which drew attention to a number of issues addressed by ACC, IACSD and the Commission on Sustainable Development and discussed financial constraints on the implementation of Agenda 21, as well as coordination questions.

In a March report⁽¹⁵⁾ the UNEP Executive Director proposed that ACC remain the central body responsible for coordination in the field of environment. She also stated that in April she would inform ACC of the establishment of an Inter-Agency Environment Coordination Group as a possible successor arrangement to the system of Designated Officials for Environmental Matters. On 21 May⁽¹⁶⁾ UNEP's Governing Council took note of those proposals, and welcomed the new machinery developed by ACC for the system-wide follow-up to UNCED, particularly the creation of IACSD.

The Governing Council requested that ACC, in future, report only in those years when the Council met in regular session⁽¹⁷⁾ and focus its reports on policy matters related to UNCED, particularly those regarding system-wide coordination and emerging and important environmental issues of system-wide interest.

System-wide medium-term environment programme

In April, the UNEP Executive Director reported on implementation of the second system-wide medium-term environment programme, 1990-1995 (SWMTEP II), and on the results of the mid-term review of SWMTEP for the period 1990-1995⁽¹⁸⁾. The Executive Director recommended that, in view of the proposal for a new system-wide coordinating arrangement, UNEP's coordinating mandate be assessed at a later stage. She also recommended that proposals for a future planning and strategy document be made to the UNEP Governing Council at its 1995 session.

On 21 May⁽¹⁹⁾ the Governing Council endorsed that recommendation.

Cooperation between UNEP and Habitat

On 21 May⁽²⁰⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue her efforts to increase cooperation between UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in the implementation of Agenda 21, and to report to the Governing Council's eighteenth regular session on the outcome.

General aspects

Environmental perspective

On 21 December, by decision 48/449, the General Assembly decided to discontinue the reporting it requested in 1987(1) related to the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, and the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development⁽²⁾

Women and environment

On 21 May⁽³⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director, as UNEP's contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women to be held in Beijing in 1995, to ensure that gender considerations were well integrated into all policies, programmes and activities of UNEP and to prepare concrete proposals for the integration of concerns related to women and environment into the process of sustainable development.

In its resolution 1993/12, adopted on 27 July, the Economic and Social Council requested, among other things, that, in their reports for the 1995 Beijing Conference, Governments include information on the extent to which objectives proposed in Agenda 21, chapter 24, relating to women, had been met, and how the recommended activities had been implemented (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

Climate change convention

By the end of 1993, 166 States had signed the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change⁽⁴⁾ which had been opened for signature at UNCED in 1992⁽⁵⁾. The goal of the Convention was to limit the emission into the atmosphere of carbon dioxide and other "greenhouse gases" that might cause a change in the Earth's climate.

By the end of the year, the Convention had been ratified by 51 States and the European Economic Community. The date for the Convention's entry into force was set at 21 March 1994, 90 days after the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change held its seventh session in New York from 15 to 20 March⁽⁶⁾. It discussed, among other things, matters relating to the financial mechanism and technical and financial support to developing country parties, and the activities of the Convention's interim secretariat.

The Committee's eighth session was held at Geneva from 16 to 27 August.⁽⁷⁾ It discussed national communications and other statements relating to the Convention, and Convention-related activities of the United Nations system. In an October note by the Secretary-General⁽⁸⁾ the General Assembly was asked to accept Germany's invitation to host the first session of the Conference of Parties to the Framework Convention at Berlin, 28 March-7 April 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/189.

United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, negotiated under its auspices and opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro on 4 June 1992, during the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Noting with satisfaction the progress being made towards fulfilling the requirements for entry into force stipulated in article 23 of the Convention and the preparatory work undertaken by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 47/195 of 22 December 1992,

Noting that, in accordance with article 7, paragraph 4, of the Convention, the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention shall be convened by the interim secretariat of the Convention and shall take place not later than one year after the date of entry into force of the Convention,

Having considered the recommendation made by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee at its eighth session regarding the Conference of the Parties and the related note by the Secretary-General,

Taking into account the basic provisions of General Assembly resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985,

1. Decides that the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change shall be held from 28 March to 7 April 1995, subject to the applicable provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change;

2. Accepts with deep appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Germany to host at Berlin the first session of the Conference of the Parties;

3. Also decides to include the first session of the Conference of the Parties in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1994-1995.

General Assembly resolution 48/189

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/725) without vote, 10 December (meeting 47); draft by China and Colombia (for Group of 77) (A/C.2/48/L.38), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 99.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 36-43, 46, 47; plenary

Convention on Biological Diversity

The Convention on Biological Diversity, which was opened for signature at UNCED in 1992,⁽⁹⁾ became international law on 29 December 1993, 90 days after its thirtieth ratification. At the time of its entry into force, 37 States had ratified the Convention and 167 States had signed it. The first Conference of Parties to the Convention was tentatively scheduled for the period 28 November to 9 December 1994.

The UNEP Governing Council, in May,⁽¹⁰⁾ established the Intergovernmental Committee on the Convention on Biological Diversity to prepare for the first meeting of the Conference of Parties to the Convention. On 21 September, UNEP announced the appointment of seven specialists to the Interim Secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity at Geneva.

Montreal Protocol and Ozone Convention

Parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer⁽¹¹⁾ held their fifth meeting at Bangkok, Thailand, from 17 to 19 November. The meeting agreed to phase out the production of halons in developed countries at the end of 1993. A $510 million replenishment of the Multilateral Fund was approved for the next three years to help developing countries phase out the use of ozone-depleting substances. The meeting concluded that, when selecting alternatives and substitutes for hydrochlorofluorocarbons, factors such as environmental health and safety, technical feasibility, commercial availability and performance must be considered.

The Montreal Protocol meeting was followed by the Third Meeting (Bangkok, 23-24 November) of the Conference of the Parties of the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer⁽¹²⁾ which pledged to protect human health and the environment from the effects of ozone depletion by coordinating international research. It was recommended, among other things, that States parties to the Convention contribute to the World Meteorological Organization's special fund for environmental monitoring of the Global Ozone Observing System, in order to expand the station network in developing countries.

At the end of 1993 there were 133 States parties to the Vienna Convention and 131 States parties to the Montreal Protocol⁽⁴⁾

Global Environment Facility

The pilot phase of the Global Environment Facility (GEF)—a joint effort of the World Bank, UNDP and UNEP established in 1991⁽¹³⁾—entered its third and final year in 1993. The purpose of GEF was to help developing countries respond to environmental problems in four programme areas:

climate change, ozone depletion, pollution of international waters and biodiversity.

GEF member Governments met in Rome, Beijing, Washington, D.C., Paris and Cartagena, Colombia, in 1993.

The Cartagena meeting in December was billed as the final round of negotiations on the new facility. Although it failed to reach agreement on key operational arrangements, it did make progress on the institutional framework, and donors reconfirmed their intention to contribute to the $2 billion target for GEF II.

Forty-five projects totalling $288.7 million had been approved by the implementing agencies at the end of 1993: 22 by UNDP, 20 by the World Bank and 3 by UNEP. There were 113 projects in the GEF work programme for a total commitment of $727 million.

On 21 May⁽¹⁴⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue to cooperate closely with the World Bank and UNDP in the successful completion of GEF's pilot phase.

Environmental activities

Environmental monitoring and assessment

The Executive Director of UNEP reported to the Governing Council in February⁽¹⁾ that uncertainties over the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) and restructuring within the United Nations system had prevented UNEP from completing detailed proposals for adequate financial and institutional support as requested by the Governing Council at its previous (sixteenth) session.

Earthwatch, the environmental assessment arm of UNEP in cooperation with the United Nations specialized agencies, shares its activities among the Global Environment Monitoring System (GEMS), the International Environmental Information System (INFOTERRA) and the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC), aiming to make the provision of reliable information for decision-making on the global environment a more coherent and effective process.

Following inter-agency discussions for strengthening Earthwatch, it was decided that its institutional framework could only be determined once the rationalization of inter-agency bodies and the establishment of new structures for sustainable development were more advanced.

The Executive Director suggested that, in view of the prevailing circumstances, the Governing Council request that she continue efforts to strengthen Earthwatch and report to the next (eighteenth) session in 1994.

State of the environment

On 21 May⁽²⁾ the UNEP Governing Council took note of three reports dealing with the state of the environment.

The first report, the Executive Summary of the Comprehensive State-of-the-Environment Report: 1972-1992⁽³⁾ examined the major environmental issues of the day and how they had evolved over the last two decades, and the manner in which developments in different sectors of the economy had impacted on the environment and affected the human condition. It also analysed the range of responses to developments at the scientific, public, national and international levels and sociopolitical, economic and technological developments and the challenges and opportunities implied by them.

The second report, the Executive Summary of the State-of-the-Environment Report 1992: Poverty and the Environment⁽⁴⁾ addressed poverty and its variations within and between countries and between rich and poor; the economic and physical environment and its impact on the poor; migration; and the persistence of poverty.

The third report⁽⁵⁾ on emerging environmental issues, was divided into two main parts. Part I covered such issues as the re-use of waste water, volatile organic compounds in air, and tropospheric ozone. Part II briefly updated issues examined in a report to the sixteenth session on new technologies, plastics, municipal wastes and the ecological situation in the Arctic.

Environmental indicators

In February⁽¹⁾ the UNEP Executive Director discussed the development and use of environmental indicators in connection with Earthwatch to monitor the state of the environment and detect changing conditions over time.

On 21 May⁽⁶⁾ UNEP's Governing Council requested UNEP to continue to develop environmental indicators in cooperation with the United Nations Statistical Office and relevant specialized agencies. The Executive Director was requested to submit to the Council in 1994 a progress report and plan of action on the development and use of environmental indicators.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

UNEP policy and activities in the area of hazardous waste were among topics covered in a February report by the Executive Director⁽⁷⁾

Effective 1 January, the Executive Director established a permanent Secretariat at Geneva for the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal. UNEP had been performing the functions of the Convention Secretariat on an interim basis since its adoption in 1989. Its main tasks were to implement the Convention and the decisions adopted by the Conference of its parties; to implement technical assistance projects; and to respond to requests for assistance related to the environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes, the development of national legislation in that field and capacity-building. (See also action by the Commission on Human Rights, PART THREE, Chapter X.)

On 21 May⁽⁸⁾ the UNEP Governing Council urged Governments that had not already done so to ratify or accede to the Basel Convention, and requested the Executive Director to examine its implementation to date and any issues that might have resulted in its slow ratification. As at 13 October, the Basel Convention had been ratified or acceded to by 49 countries.

The Council urged developed countries to assist in technology transfer to developing countries and countries in transition to a market economy in order to minimize the generation of hazardous wastes, and requested the Executive Director to continue to promote an international strategy for the environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes through the Secretariat of the Basel Convention⁽⁹⁾

In a related decision⁽¹⁰⁾ the Council requested the Executive Director to replace a list of environmentally harmful chemical substances, processes and phenomena of global significance⁽¹¹⁾ with an assessment, every four years, of chemical issues that were critical globally.

Irradiated nuclear fuel

UNEP participated in a Joint Working Group on the Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel by Sea, together with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and the International Maritime Organization (IMO). The Working Group met in London (8-11 December 1992) and at Vienna (26-30 April 1993) following letters of concern from a number of Governments and non-governmental organizations about the planned shipment by sea of plutonium from France to Japan and the possible implications for human life and the environment if an accident occurred. The Joint Working Group completed a draft Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium, and

High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on Board Ships at the Vienna meeting in April, and on 21 May UNEP's Governing Council requested that the Executive Director report on future developments resulting from the Group's work⁽¹²⁾

Forum on Chemical Risk Assessment

On 21 May⁽¹³⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to convene, together with the executive heads of the World Health Organization and the International Labour Organisation, a meeting of experts from Governments and relevant intergovernmental organizations that could constitute the first Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Risk Assessment and Management. The Council noted an offer by the Swedish Government to host a meeting on chemical risk assessment and management at Stockholm in April 1994.

Environmental emergencies

In April⁽¹⁴⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on the United Nations Centre for Urgent Environmental Assistance (UNCUEA), summarizing and evaluating its activities and experiences. Established experimentally in 1991⁽¹⁵⁾ the Centre aimed to assess and respond to man-made environmental emergencies in cooperation with other United Nations agencies.

The Executive Director recommended, among other things, that UNCUEA remain in UNEP, that its experimental phase be extended and that its role be defined more precisely.

On 21 May⁽¹⁶⁾ UNEP's Governing Council decided to extend the experimental stage for a further twelve months, during which time the Centre should identify the specific needs of countries faced with different types of environmental emergencies; analyse the ability of the United Nations and other organizations to respond; review the major disasters of the last 10 years and identify gaps in responses to them; and develop concrete proposals for an enhanced international response capacity, focusing on the United Nations system in particular.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/192.

Strengthening international cooperation in the monitoring of global environmental problems

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 44/224 of 22 December 1989 and 46/217 of 20 December 1991 on international cooperation in the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental threats and in assistance in cases of environmental emergency,

Reaffirming also the relevant provisions of Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, including principle 2 of the Declaration, which states that States have, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental and developmental policies, and the responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond their national jurisdiction,

Recalling decision 16/37 of 31 May 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on early warning and forecasting of environmental emergencies, and taking note of Governing Council decision 17/26 of 21 May 1993 on the United Nations Centre for Urgent Environmental Assistance,

Taking note of the relevant parts of the reports of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on its thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth sessions in particular, in which the Committee noted the importance of remote sensing by satellites for monitoring the Earth's environment and, in particular, for studying and monitoring global change,

Taking into account the ongoing activities of the Committee on Earth Observation Satellites in support of global environment monitoring and related applications,

Bearing in mind the importance of the participation of relevant organs, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, in Earthwatch, in particular in its environmental monitoring programmes, and the need for early warning capabilities in those programmes,

Recognizing the need to make Earthwatch a more efficient instrument for environmental sensing and assessment of all elements influencing the global environment in order to ensure a balanced approach in serving, in particular, the needs of developing countries,

Recognizing also the potential and importance of current available methods, technologies and techniques for monitoring, assessment and anticipation of global environmental problems, including remote sensing and monitoring from outer space,

1. Invites Governments, relevant organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, and other relevant entities to review, as appropriate, their contribution to international cooperation in environmental monitoring, including environmentally related remote sensing and data assessment, and to provide appropriate support for such activities within existing resources;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to prepare and to submit to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its eighteenth session a report on the activities of the Programme in environmental monitoring, containing proposals and recommendations within the context of Agenda 21 and a review of Earthwatch, taking into account the decisions adopted by the Governing Council at its seventeenth session, in cooperation with relevant entities within the United Nations system and, where appropriate, outside the United Nations system;

3. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to consider the above-mentioned report at its eighteenth session and to submit its conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 48/192

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/725) without vote, 10 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.80), based on informal consultations on 14-nation draft (A/C.2/48/L.47); agenda item 99 (a). Sponsors: Armenia, Belarus, Canada, Czech Republic, Georgia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine.

Ecosystems

Global climate

In a February report⁽¹⁷⁾ the Executive Director of UNEP transmitted two documents to the Governing Council: the report on the progress and future activities of the World Climate Impact Assessment and Response Strategies Programme (WCIRP); and the report of the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), discussing the IPCC budget and work programme in 1991 and 1992. On 21 May,⁽¹⁸⁾ the UNEP Governing Council took note of both reports and adopted a three-part decision on climate change.

The Governing Council urged Governments to increase their support for IPCC and endorse its revised structure and future work plans. It requested the Executive Director to further develop WCIRP and ensure the preparation of an integrated proposal concerning the Programme's coordination and resource needs. It also urged Governments to ensure early implementation of the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Meeting on the World Climate Programme.

Desertification and drought control

The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, held its organizational session in New York from 26 to 29 January⁽¹⁹⁾ its first session at Nairobi from 24 May to 3 June⁽²⁰⁾ and its second session at Geneva from 13 to 24 September⁽²¹⁾

The General Assembly established the Committee in 1992⁽²²⁾ and, with a view to finalizing a convention by June 1994, invited UNEP, UNDP, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) and other international organizations dealing with desertification to contribute to its work.

At its first substantive session, the Committee established two working groups. Working Group I was responsible for the elaboration of the preamble, principles, objectives and commitments, including financial arrangements and capacity-building. Working Group II was responsible for the elaboration of institutional, administrative, technological and scientific aspects, research, data collection and exchange of information, procedural arrangements and legal provisions. The Committee decided that an instrument on Africa should be negotiated once the main structure of the convention had been defined, and should be adopted as an integral part of the convention. It encouraged Governments to make written submissions on the contents of the convention.

At its second session, the Committee requested the Secretariat to continue to support the preparation of a regional instrument on Africa and similar instruments for Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean, and to take into account other affected regions.

The Committee also requested the Secretariat to draft a single negotiating text to the convention, which would serve as the basis for discussions in the Committee's two working groups at its third substantive session in 1994. That text, contained in a November note by the Secretariat⁽²³⁾ drew heavily on views submitted by Governments, as well as on statements by the two working groups at the Committee's second session. The negotiating text contained 42 articles.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/191.

Elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification in countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/172 of 19 December 1989, 44/228 of 22 December 1989 and other relevant General Assembly resolutions, as well as decisions of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, in particular the recommendation by which the Conference invited the General Assembly to establish, under its auspices, an intergovernmental negotiating committee for the elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification in those countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification, particularly in Africa,

Recalling also its resolution 47/188 of 22 December 1992, by which it established the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, with a view to finalizing such a convention by June 1994,

Recalling further that in Agenda 21, chapter 12, in particular paragraphs 12.1 to 12.4 thereof, desertification and/or drought is recognized as a problem of global dimension, in that it affects one sixth of the world population and one quarter of the total land area of the world and requires a broad response, as set out in paragraph 12.4 of Agenda 21, and that concrete measures have to be taken in all regions, particularly in Africa, within the framework of the convention,

Reiterating the objective of finalizing the convention by June 1994 and of implementing it as soon as possible,

Noting with appreciation the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee at its first and second substantive sessions,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General concerning the progress of the negotiations on the convention,

1. Urges the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, to complete the negotiations successfully by June 1994, in accordance with resolution 47/188;

2. Decides that the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee shall hold one session after the adoption of the convention in order to review the situation in the interim period pending its entry into force, in particular with regard to the implementation of provisions adapted to the specific needs of each region;

3. Also decides that the session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee after the adoption of the convention shall be held not later than 31 January 1995, and requests the Secretary-General to make appropriate arrangements for the functioning of the ad hoc secretariat and the multidisciplinary panel of experts to service that session;

4. Further decides that the negotiating process shall continue to be funded through existing United Nations budgetary resources, without negatively affecting its programmed activities, and through voluntary contributions to the trust fund established pursuant to its resolution 47/188 specifically for that purpose for the duration of the negotiations and administered by the head of the ad hoc secretariat under the authority of the Secretary-General, with the possibility of carrying over contributed resources from one fiscal year to the next;

5. Notes the contributions to the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee in the conduct of its mandate made by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and other relevant international organizations dealing with desertification, drought and development, and invites them to continue to provide such support;

6. Notes with appreciation the initial contributions made to the trust fund, and invites Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to continue their support for the fund;

7. Invites the international community, in particular the developed countries and other countries in a position to do so, to make voluntary contributions to the secretariat of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee and/or the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office of the United Nations Development Programme and any other relevant international and regional organizations to allow them to assist countries affected by drought and/or desertification in all regions, particularly in Africa, in their preparation for the negotiating process;

8. Also notes with appreciation the contributions made to the special voluntary fund established pursuant to resolution 47/188 to assist developing countries affected by desertification and drought, in particular the least developed countries, to participate fully and effectively in the negotiating process, and invites Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to continue to contribute generously to the fund;

9. Notes the arrangements made by the Secretary-General and the welcome support of relevant or interested organizations, organs, programmes and concerned agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental, subregional and regional organizations in the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, and invites them to continue to participate actively in the work of the Committee in the future;

10. Urges Governments to continue, in close collaboration with the regional commissions and national, subregional and regional organizations, to organize activities to support the process of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, involving, as appropriate, the scientific and industrial communities, trade unions, the relevant non-governmental organizations and other interested groups;

11. Notes also the assistance provided by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to the countries covered under its mandate in their preparations for and participation in the negotiating process, and invites the Office to continue to support the Governments concerned and to continue to mobilize resources for that purpose;

12. Notes further the constructive contribution of relevant non-governmental organizations to the success of the negotiating process, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee and taking into account procedures used in the process of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and encourages them, particularly non-governmental organizations from developing countries, to continue to contribute to the success of the negotiating process;

13. Reiterates its request to the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee to continue to submit progress reports on the negotiations to the Commission on Sustainable Development and other appropriate bodies;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and scientific and other institutions concerned;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session, under the item entitled "Implementation of decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development," the sub-item entitled "Elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification in those countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification, particularly in Africa".

General Assembly resolution 48/191

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/725) without vote, 9 December (meeting 46); draft by Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee (A/48/226/Add.1), orally revised; agenda item 99 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 36-43, 46, 47; plenary 86.

UNEP activities. On 21 May⁽²⁴⁾ the UNEP Governing Council adopted a three-part decision on desertification issues. In the first, on the implementation in 1991-1992 of the 1977 United Nations Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (PACD)⁽²⁵⁾ the Governing Council requested UNEP to provide to the Governments of affected countries information gathered by monitoring. It requested the Executive Director to continue to promote international cooperation, to expand UNEP's regional/subregional joint ventures for implementation of a coordinated plan of action to combat desertification, as recommended in chapter 12 of Agenda 21, and to continue to cooperate fully in the preparations of the desertification convention by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee.

In the second part, the Executive Director was requested to intensify UNEP's interaction with UNDP and the World Bank on funding activities to combat land degradation through the Global Environment Facility (GEF) following discontinuation of the global financing mechanisms of PACD.

In the third part, the Executive Director was authorized to continue supporting UNSO as a joint venture with UNDP, at least until the conclusions of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the desertification convention became clear.

A report by the Executive Director⁽²⁶⁾ on the implementation of PACD in 1991 and 1992 was included in a June report of the Secretary-General⁽²⁷⁾ to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

In another June report⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General presented the results of a study on land degradation in South Asia, undertaken in response to a 1991 Economic and Social Council request.⁽²⁹⁾ The report covered the status, causes and consequences of land degradation; institutions and programmes to combat it; and proposals for action.

UNDP activities. In an April report⁽³⁰⁾ the UNDP Administrator summarized UNSO's activities during 1991-1992 and discussed the implications of a 1992 review of UNSO in the light of UNCED. That review had resulted in a redefinition of goals and the reorientation of major UNSO activities to emphasize its role as the United Nations focal point on issues concerning drought and desertification.

On 18 June⁽³¹⁾ the UNDP Governing Council recognized the important role of UNSO in follow-up activities to UNCED, and reconfirmed its support to the UNDP-UNSO/UNEP joint venture to implement chapter 12 of Agenda 21. The UNDP Administrator was requested to report to the Governing Council at its 1994 session on the implementation of the Governing Council's decision.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, by decision 1993/312, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of PACD and of the medium-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region⁽²⁷⁾ and of the Secretary-General's report on combating aridity, soil erosion, salinity, waterlogging, desertification and the effects of drought in South Asia⁽²⁸⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/175.

Drought and desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/172 of 19 December 1977, in which it approved the report of the United Nations Conference on Desertification, containing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject,

Recalling also the decisions of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development set forth in chapter 12, entitled "Managing fragile ecosystems: combating desertification and drought", of Agenda 21, which develop and complete the decisions contained in the Plan of Action,

Concerned about the continued world-wide degradation of soil resources, particularly in Africa,

Bearing in mind that in the long term the problems of drought, desertification and degradation of the productive capacity of the soil have serious world-wide economic and social consequences that threaten the security and well-being of all affected countries,

Stressing the importance of the ongoing negotiations to elaborate an international convention to combat desertification in those countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification, particularly in Africa,

Noting the active role played by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in combating drought and the important contribution of that Office to African countries in the ongoing process of negotiating an international convention to combat desertification,

Taking note of the recommendation contained in paragraph 38.27 of Agenda 21 and of decision 93/33 of 18 June 1993 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Governing Council encouraged the Administrator to strengthen the substantive role and maintain the identity of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office as the focal point within the Programme for all matters related to drought and desertification control, in particular those in Africa, in accordance with the ongoing process of integrating the Office into the core programme of the Programme,

Recalling the appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme to continue and strengthen their cooperation in combating desertification, notably through support for the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office by the joint venture programme,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and of the medium-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

1. Welcomes the support of the international community and urges it to continue its financial, technical and material support to the countries most affected by drought and desertification in order to support their effort to translate the decisions of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development into concrete activities to implement the programmes outlined in chapter 12 of Agenda 21, duly taking into account the provisions of the future international convention to combat desertification in those countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification, particularly in Africa;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of decision 93/33 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Governing Council decided that the experience and technical expertise of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in drought and desertification control should be made available to all affected countries, in particular those in Africa;

3. Recommends that the cooperation between the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme, ensured by the joint agreement to support the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in a manner consistent with the provisions of the future convention, be strengthened and enlarged in the context of implementing Agenda 21, but without prejudice to the particular attention that must be paid to the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region;

4. Appeals to donor countries to contribute to the United Nations fund for the Sudano-Sahelian region to allow it to continue to bring effective assistance to African countries within the framework of the negotiation process for an international convention to combat desertification and to assist the affected countries in implementing chapter 12 of Agenda 21;

5. Appeals urgently to the members of the international community, particularly donor countries, to support the effort being exerted to combat drought and desertification on affected subregional levels, inter alia, within subregional intergovernmental organizations such as the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Drought Control in the Sahel, the Southern African Development Community and the Arab Maghreb Union, as well as within the programmes, funds and relevant agencies of the United Nations system, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Marine ecosystems

Straddling and highly migratory fish stocks

Pursuant to chapter 17 of Agenda 21 and a 1992 General Assembly resolution⁽³²⁾ the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks met in New York in 1993 for an organizational session from 19 to 23 April and for a second session from 12 to 30 July. A summary of the discussions and recommendations was contained in an October report by the Secretary-General.⁽³³⁾ The Conference recommended that two further sessions be convened in 1994 and that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) prepare information papers on the precautionary approach in fisheries management and on the concept of maximum sustainable yield.

A negotiating text prepared by the Conference Chairman was contained in an annex to the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/194.

United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 47/192 of 22 December 1992, concerning the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks (the Conference),

Noting that the Conference held its organizational session in New York from 19 to 23 April 1993 and its second session, also in New York, from 12 to 30 July 1993,

Noting with appreciation that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has agreed to prepare two information papers, one on the precautionary approach and the other on the concept of maximum sustainable yield,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made by the Conference during 1993,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Conference to the General Assembly, as set forth in the report of the Conference on its second session, regarding the convening of two further sessions in 1994, required by the Conference in order to complete its work,

Convinced that the widest possible participation in the Conference is important to ensure its success,

1. Notes the progress made by the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks;

2. Reaffirms that the Conference should complete its work before the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

3. Approves the convening in New York of two further sessions of the Conference, to be held from 14 to 31 March 1994 and from 15 to 26 August 1994, in accordance with the recommendation of the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide services for these two sessions of the Conference, with facilities enabling the Conference to hold two simultaneous meetings during the sessions;

5. Renews its request to Governments and regional economic integration organizations to contribute to the voluntary fund established in accordance with paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 47/192 for the purpose of assisting developing countries, especially those most concerned by the subject-matter of the Conference, in particular the least developed among them, to participate fully and effectively in the Conference, and expresses its appreciation for the contributions to the fund made so far;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to circulate to delegations as early as possible the information papers being prepared by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session the final report on the work of the Conference;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session, under the item entitled "Implementation of decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development," the sub-item entitled "Sustainable use and conservation of marine living resources of the high seas: United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks".

General Assembly resolution 48/194

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/47/725) without vote, 10 December (meeting 47); draft by Fiji (A/C.2/48/L44), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 99 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 36-43, 47; plenary 86.

Drift-net fishing

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October a report on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on living marine resources.⁽³⁵⁾ The report discussed the activities of intergovernmental organizations regarding pelagic drift-net fishing and reviewed the situation in the Pacific, Atlantic and Indian Oceans, the Baltic Sea and the Mediterranean.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 48/445, by which it took note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General⁽³⁵⁾ It called on all members of the international community, intergovernmental organizations, regional economic integration organizations and appropriate non-governmental organizations to provide the Secretary-General with information relevant to the implementation of a 1991 Assembly resolution⁽³⁶⁾ It requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1994, and to submit subsequently annual updates on further developments relevant to the implementation of that resolution.

Marine pollution from terrestrial sources

UNEP was invited, in chapter 17 of Agenda 21, to convene an intergovernmental meeting on protection of the marine environment from land-based activities. In a March report⁽³⁷⁾ UNEP's Executive Director discussed that request and suggested a work plan, timetable and budget for the meeting.

On 21 May⁽³⁸⁾ UNEP's Governing Council asked the Executive Director to coordinate preparations for the intergovernmental meeting to be held in 1995. It decided that the preparatory process should include, among other things, a preliminary meeting of experts in late 1993 to assess the effectiveness of selected regional agreements and a one-week meeting of Government-designated experts to focus on the 1985 Montreal Guidelines for the Protection of the Marine Environment against Pollution from Land-based Sources⁽³⁹⁾ to be held in June 1994.

In a March report⁽⁴⁰⁾ the UNEP Executive Director reviewed the Programme's efforts since 1990 to protect the African elephant and the African and Asian rhinoceros. She stated that in the last 20 years the world's rhinoceros population had declined by 85 per cent and that over the last decade African elephant populations had also declined rapidly, mainly as a result of intensive ivory poaching and the encroachment of human populations on their habitats.

The UNEP Governing Council, on 21 May⁽⁴¹⁾ requested the Executive Director to assist collaborative approaches to elephant conservation in Africa and to establish an African elephant conservation facility within UNEP. It also requested the Executive Director to establish an African and Asian rhinoceros conservation facility if requested by a forthcoming conference of range States and donors.

UNDP action. On 18 June⁽⁴²⁾ the UNDP Governing Council asked the Administrator to recognize the need to protect vulnerable ecosystems such as large bodies of water bounded by more than one country, and urged him to use programming mechanisms available to him to respond to those problems if necessary. In adopting the decision, the Council took note of the need to protect such large bodies of water as the Caspian Sea and Lake Victoria.

Programme and finances of UNEP

Finances

On 21 May⁽¹⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to maintain a clear distinction between programme deliveries and administrative overheads in the Programme's budget format and presentation. The Council requested that the revised 1994-1995 and proposed 1996-1997 budgets be presented to its 1995 session in a more transparent format.

Environment Fund

On 21 May,⁽²⁾ the UNEP Governing Council approved revised appropriations of $37,818,600 for the programme and programme support costs budget for 1992-1993, including $3,490,000 on a loan basis towards the construction of new office accommodation. It also approved an initial appropriation of $41,829,500 for the programme and programme support costs budget for the biennium 1994-1995.

Also on 21 May,⁽³⁾ the Council approved an appropriation of $120/130 million for a core Environment Fund programme activity for the biennium 1994-1995. The budget subprogrammes receiving the largest share were: capacity-building for environmentally sound and sustainable development; environmental management of terrestrial ecosystems and their resources; and Earthwatch data, information, assessment and early warning. The Council approved an additional appropriation of up to $10 million for use as and when additional resources became available for a supplementary programme, particularly for further implementation of Agenda 21.

Trust funds

On 21 May⁽⁴⁾ the UNEP Governing Council took note of a report of the Executive Director,⁽⁵⁾ which discussed the management and finances of 45 general and technical cooperation trust funds administered by UNEP. The Council approved the establishment of three general trust funds and four technical cooperation funds by the Executive Director since the Council's 1991 session.

UNEP regional offices

On 21 May,⁽⁶⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to review UNEP's representation with a view to strengthening its regional and liaison offices.

UNEP Council

At its seventeenth session, held at Nairobi from 10 to 21 May 1993, the UNEP Governing Council adopted 45 decisions on environmental and administrative matters,⁽⁷⁾ including follow-up actions to UNCED; the role of women in environment and development; the environmental effects of the Iraq-Kuwait conflict; movements of hazardous wastes and irradiated nuclear fuel; transfer of environmentally sound technology; desertification; protection of the marine environment; measures for the conservation of elephant and rhinoceros populations; and climate.

On 12 February, in decision 1993/208 C, the Economic and Social Council decided that, when reviewing at its substantive session of 1993 the report of the Governing Council of UNEP on its seventeenth session, it would not consider new draft proposals except for specific recommendations requiring action by the Council and proposals relating to coordination aspects of the work of those bodies.

On 29 July, by decision 1993/311, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Governing Council of UNEP on its seventeenth session.⁽⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 48/174.

Strengthening of the United Nations Environment Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, in which it decided to establish a Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling also decision 15/1 of 25 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in which the Governing Council, inter alia, reaffirmed the central role of the United Nations Environment Programme as the central catalysing, coordinating and stimulating body in the field of environment within the United Nations system,

Recalling further decisions 16/1 and 16/6, both of 31 May 1991, of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in the first of which the Council expressed its support for retaining at the headquarters of the United Nations Environment Programme at Nairobi the programme activity centres already located there, decided that future major extensions to the physical or other infrastructure of the Programme, particularly those with global functions, would be centred principally at Nairobi, and requested the Executive Director to examine the feasibility of providing on-site interpretation facilities and to continue negotiations with the host Government with a view to improving the facilities available at the headquarters office at Nairobi, including external communication services,

Reaffirming paragraphs 38.21 and 38.23 of Agenda 21, in which it was stated that there would be a need for an enhanced and strengthened role for the United Nations Environment Programme and its Governing Council, that, inter alia, the regional offices of the Programme should be strengthened without weakening its headquarters at Nairobi and that its liaison and interaction with the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank should be reinforced and intensified,

Reaffirming also paragraphs 25, 26 and 32 (c) of its resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992,

Commending the United Nations Environment Programme for its leading role in the negotiation of many international conventions on the environment, its mobilization of global environmental awareness and its contribution in the area of capacity-building in regard to the preservation of the environment and its integration into sustainable development,

Mindful of the need to rationalize meetings related to the United Nations Environment Programme so as to ensure effective capacity utilization at the headquarters of the Programme,

1. Endorses the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its seventeenth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Stresses the need for close cooperation between the United Nations Environment Programme and the Commission on Sustainable Development in implementing the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, in accordance with the relevant provisions of chapter 38 of Agenda 21;

3. Welcomes the action-oriented approach of the Governing Council towards the implementation of the follow-up activities to the Conference, as outlined in its report;

4. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Kenya for the grant of an additional forty acres of land for the expansion of office facilities and the improvement of the communications network, and encourages it to continue to ensure that the United Nations Environment Programme and other United Nations organs, agencies and programmes based at Nairobi work in a conducive and hospitable environment;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to strengthen further the liaison function at Nairobi for the secretariat of the Commission on Sustainable Development, on the basis of arrangements made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, duly taking into account all relevant provisions of paragraph 32 (c) of General Assembly resolution 47/191;

6. Urges Member States to make their contributions to the Environment Fund in accordance with Governing Council decision 17/32 of 21 May 1993;

7. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to ensure that as many meetings related to the Programme as possible are held at the headquarters of the Programme so as to maximize utilization of conference facilities and services;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the programming of meetings related to the Programme is rationalized to facilitate economy and more effective capacity utilization at the headquarters of the Programme;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

Military conflicts and the environment

On 21 May⁽¹⁾ the UNEP Governing Council encouraged Governments to establish a national environmental policy for the military sector and requested the Executive Director to report on the application of environmental norms for the treatment and disposal of hazardous wastes by military establishments.

Also on that date⁽²⁾ the Council requested the Executive Director to maintain UNEP's leading role in coordinating the efforts of the United Nations and other international organizations to assess the environmental effects of the conflict between Iraq and Kuwait, and to mobilize funds for assessment and rehabilitation programmes.

Environmental assistance to Israeli-occupied territories

On 21 May⁽³⁾ the UNEP Governing Council expressed concern over deteriorating environmental conditions in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. It requested the Executive Director to provide technical assistance for Palestinian institutional and capacity-building in the environment field and to submit an updated report on the state of the environment in the occupied territories to the Council's eighteenth regular session.

Environmental problems of economies in transition

On 21 May⁽⁴⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to consider how UNEP could best assist those countries with economies in transition with their environmental problems. She was requested to participate fully in the follow-up to the 1993 Lucerne Conference on Environment for Europe.

Transfer of environmentally sound technology

On 21 May⁽⁵⁾ the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to examine the feasibility of developing international guidelines for information on potential environmental impacts that technology exporters should provide to importers, and to report to the Council on the results of that study at its 1995 session.

In February⁽⁶⁾ the Executive Director suggested that the establishment of three international environmental technology centres, in addition to the UNEP International Environment Centre in Japan, might be warranted. She suggested a centre for industrial pollution control technologies in Eastern Europe or nearby; a centre for forestry, agroforestry, afforestation and soil management technologies in Latin America and the Caribbean; and a centre for rangeland management and desertification control technologies in Africa. On 21 May⁽⁷⁾ the Council requested the Executive Director to strengthen existing links between UNEP and relevant centres of excellence, and to keep the establishment of technology centres under review.

Environmental Law

On 21 May⁽⁸⁾ the Governing Council adopted the Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law for the 1990s.⁽⁹⁾ The Programme, which earlier had been adopted by a Meeting of Senior Government Officials Expert in Environmental Law that met in November 1991 and in September 1992, identified 18 programme areas and their respective objectives, strategies and activities for action by UNEP in the light of experience and new developments, including Agenda 21, since the 1982 adoption by the UNEP Governing Council of the 1981

Montevideo Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law⁽⁹⁾ which had provided the basis for UNEP activities in the field of environmental law for the following decade.

The 1993 Programme defined a broad strategy for UNEP activities in the field of environmental law for the 1990s. The Governing Council requested the Executive Director to prepare and disseminate analytical reports, organize inter-governmental meetings and contribute to capacity-building in the field of environmental law. The Council was to review the Programme's implementation not later than its regular session in 1997.

Environment and criminal law

In its resolution 1993/28 on the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment, the Economic and Social Council, among other things, requested the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of undertaking activities in the field of environmental crime in the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

Chapter IX

Population and human settlements

The United Nations Population Fund, while addressing the problems of population growth, distribution and movement, focused in 1993 on improving the quality of family-planning services, integrating them with reproductive health care, empowering women to make free and informed reproductive choices, and strengthening information, education and communication activities. It continued to assist Governments with the formulation, implementation and evaluation of population policies and programmes and with the collection of population data.

As part of preparations for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, the Economic and Social Council adopted a conceptual framework for the Conference's draft recommendations, including the outline of a new plan of action on population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development (decision 1993/323). Both the Council and the General Assembly emphasized the importance of a thorough intergovernmental preparatory process for the success of the Conference and action to publicize its objectives and the issues on its agenda (resolutions 1993/76 and 48/186).

The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements continued to assist developing countries in all aspects of human settlements activities, through research and development, technical cooperation and information dissemination. As the United Nations lead agency coordinating activities related to the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, the Centre's objective remained adequate shelter for all.

The Commission on Human Settlements, at its fourteenth session, considered as its major themes a strategy for improving municipal management, intermediate and cost-effective building materials, and technologies and transfer mechanisms for housing delivery. In December, the General Assembly adopted a Plan of Action for 1994-1995 to implement the Global Strategy, as recommended by the Commission (48/178).

The Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), scheduled for 1996, held its organizational session in 1993. The preparatory process for the Conference was officially launched on 4 October.

Population

1994 International Conference on Population and Development

In 1992,⁽¹⁾ the General Assembly had endorsed a decision by the Economic and Social Council earlier that year⁽²⁾ to hold the International Conference on Population and Development at Cairo, Egypt, from 5 to 13 September 1994.

In a note⁽³⁾ to the Council in January 1993, the Secretary-General proposed that the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference be advanced from August to mid-May 1993 and extended from four to eight days. It was also proposed that the Population Commission's twenty-seventh session be deferred until April 1994 when it could be held in conjunction with the third session of the Preparatory Committee. The Secretary-General recommended similar arrangements for the participation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to those adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, but with improvements in the accreditation procedures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/4 without vote.

International Conference on Population and Development and its preparatory process

Recalling its resolutions 1989/91 of 26 July 1989, 1991/93 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/37 of 30 July 1992, in which it decided on the convening, mandate and preparatory process of the International Conference on Population and Development,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/176 of 22 December 1992, in which, inter alia, the Assembly recognized the importance of ensuring an adequate intergovernmental preparatory process for the Conference, as well as the importance of the participation in the Conference and its preparatory process of all relevant non-governmental organizations from developed and developing countries,

1. Decides that the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population and Development shall be rescheduled to take place from 10 to 21 May 1993 in New York;

2. Also decides to convene the third session of the Preparatory Committee from 11 to 22 April 1994, within the overall resources of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 to be approved by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session in accordance with its resolution 47/213 of 23 December 1992 and without prejudice to the utilization of resources available through contributions to the voluntary trust funds for the Conference, taking fully into account the need to ensure the success of the Conference in fulfilling its mandate and the need to ensure an adequate inter-governmental preparatory process for it;

3. Further decides to postpone the twenty-seventh session of the Population Commission to 1994 and to consider at the Council's substantive session of 1993 the possibility of scheduling it in conjunction with the third session of the Preparatory Committee, within the overall resources of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 to be approved by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session in accordance with its resolution 47/213;

4. Adopts the modalities for the participation in and contribution to the Conference and its preparatory process of non-governmental organizations, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Decides that, in order to support the full and effective participation of developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, in the Conference and its preparatory process, each least developed country, to the extent that extrabudgetary funds are available, may be provided, from the voluntary trust funds for the Conference, with travel expenses and, on an exceptional basis, daily subsistence allowance for one representative attending the sessions of the Preparatory Committee and the Conference itself;

6. Recognizes the importance of non-governmental participation in the preparatory process and the Conference itself and encourages all support to enable representatives of non-governmental organizations from developing countries to participate fully.

ANNEX

Participation of non-governmental organizations in the International Conference on Population and Development and its preparatory process

1. Non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council which express their wish to attend the International Conference on Population and Development and the meetings of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference shall be accredited for participation. Others wishing to be accredited may apply to the secretariat of the Conference for this purpose in accordance with the requirements of the present resolution.

2. The secretariat of the Conference shall be responsible for the receipt and preliminary evaluation, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, of requests from non-governmental organizations for accreditation to the Conference and its preparatory process.

3. All such applications must be accompanied by information on the competence of the organization and the relevance of its activities to the work of the Preparatory Committee, with an indication of the particular areas of the Conference preparations to which such competence and relevance pertain, and should include the following:

- (a) The purposes of the organization;
- (b) Information on its programmes and activities in areas relevant to the Conference and its preparatory process and in which country or countries they are carried out;
- (c) Confirmation of its activities at the national and/or international level;
- (d) Copies of its annual reports with financial statements, and a list of members of the governing body and their countries of nationality;
- (e) A description of its membership, indicating the total number of members and their geographical distribution.

4. In the evaluation of the relevance of applications of non-governmental organizations for accreditation to the Conference and its preparatory process, it is agreed that a determination will be made based on their background and involvement in population issues or population and development issues, including those mentioned in paragraph 4 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/93 of 26 July 1991.

5. Non-governmental organizations seeking accreditation shall be asked to confirm their interest in the goals and objectives of the Conference.

6. In cases where the secretariat of the Conference believes, on the basis of the information provided in accordance with the present resolution, that the organization has established its competence and the relevance of its activities to the work of the Preparatory Committee, it will recommend to the Preparatory Committee that the organization be accredited. In cases where the secretariat does not recommend the granting of accreditation, it will make available to the Preparatory Committee its reasons for not doing so. The secretariat should ensure that its recommendations are available to members of the Preparatory Committee at least one week prior to the start of each session.

7. The Preparatory Committee will decide on all proposals for accreditation within twenty-four hours after the recommendations of the secretariat of the Conference have been taken up by the Preparatory Committee in plenary meeting. In the event of a decision not being taken within this period, interim accreditation shall be accorded until such time as a decision is taken.

8. A non-governmental organization that has been granted accreditation to attend a session of the Preparatory Committee may attend all its future sessions.

9. In recognition of the intergovernmental nature of the Conference, non-governmental organizations shall have no negotiating role in the work of the Conference and its preparatory process.

10. Relevant non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council may be given an opportunity to briefly address the Preparatory Committee in plenary meeting and its subsidiary bodies. Other relevant non-governmental organizations may also ask to speak briefly at such meetings. If the number of requests is too large, the Preparatory Committee shall request the non-governmental organizations to form themselves into constituencies, each constituency to speak through one spokesperson. Any oral intervention by a non-governmental organization should, in accordance with normal United Nations practice, be made at the discretion of the chairman and with the consent of the Preparatory Committee.

11. Relevant non-governmental organizations may, at their own expense, make written presentations during the preparatory process in the official languages of the United Nations, as they deem appropriate. Those written presentations will not be issued as official documents except in accordance with United Nations rules of procedure.

12 February 1993 Meeting 3 Adopted without vote

Draft by President and members of Bureau based on informal consultations (E/1993/L10/Rev.1); agenda item 4.

Preparatory activities

During 1993, preparatory activities for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development were undertaken by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the Population Division of the Secretariat's Department of Economic and Social Development—which was incorporated into the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis later in the year—and Conference focal points designated by 19 units, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system. They focused on priority issues, including population growth and demographic structure; population policies and programmes; population, environment and development; population distribution and migration; status of women and population; and family-planning programmes, health and family well-being.

The Population Commission, acting as the Preparatory Committee, reviewed preparatory activities at its second session (New York, 10-21 May 1993)⁽⁴⁾ and agreed on provisional rules of procedure for the Conference. It also considered the conceptual framework of draft recommendations of the Conference, proposed by the Conference Secretary-General⁽⁵⁾. The framework provided the outline of a new plan of action on population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development, to be adopted by the Conference; it was based on a number of international instruments, including the 1974 World Population Plan of Action⁽⁶⁾ and the recommendations of the 1984 International Conference on Population.⁽⁷⁾

The Preparatory Committee decided to approve a list of NGOs to be accredited to the Conference. On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed that decision, took note of the Committee's report⁽⁴⁾ and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Committee's third session (decision 1993/325). By decision 1993/324 of the same date, the Council endorsed the Committee's recommendation that representatives designated by associate members of the regional commissions could participate as observers, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Conference, the preparatory process and any other appropriate committee or working group.

In October⁽⁸⁾ the United Nations Secretary-General drew the attention of the General Assembly to the report of the Preparatory Committee on its second session. By decision 48/448 of 21 December, the Assembly took note of the information.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in July, adopted decision 1993/323 without vote.

Proposed conceptual framework of the draft recommendations of the International Conference on Population and Development

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 30 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council decided to request the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Population and Development, in preparing documentation for the Conference, to be guided by the views expressed by delegations and other participants at the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population and Development, and to take into account the Chairman's summary annexed to the present decision.

ANNEX

Chairman's summary concerning the conceptual framework

1. The purpose of the present summary is to provide guidance to the secretariat of the International Conference on Population and Development for further work on the draft of the Cairo document, to be submitted to the Preparatory Committee at its third session, based on the discussions that took place at the second session of the Preparatory Committee on the proposed conceptual framework of the draft recommendations of the Conference.

2. Discussions on the structure of the document took place in a subgroup of the informal consultations of the whole and led to the following draft structure:

Preamble
Principles/fundamental considerations
	Choices and responsibilities
Chapter I.	The interrelationships between population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development
Chapter II.	Gender equality and empowerment of women
Chapter III.	Population growth and structure
Chapter IV.	The family, its role and composition
Chapter V.	Reproductive rights, reproductive health and family planning
Chapter VI.	Health and mortality
Chapter VII.	Population distribution, urbanization and internal migration
Chapter VIII.	International migration
	Means of implementation
Chapter IX.	Promotion of population information, education and communication
Chapter X.	Capacity-building
Chapter XI.	Technology, research and development
	Partnership in population—actors and resources
Chapter XII.	National action
Chapter XIII.	International cooperation
Chapter XIV.	Partnerships with non-governmental sectors
	From commitment to action
Chapter XV.	Follow-up to the Conference

3. The discussions on the content of the document in both plenary meetings and the informal consultations of the whole covered the entire range of topics proposed in the conceptual framework, as well as the issue of goals for the year 2015 proposed by the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Population and Development. Those discussions are summarized as follows.

4. Several delegations spoke on the importance of ensuring that the preamble defined the context of the Conference document and conveyed to a broader public the vision and purpose of the Conference. It was suggested that, in addition to the items contained in paragraph 13 of the conceptual framework, the preamble should include reference to past experiences with population policies and programmes; contain strengthened demographic data that was focused on the twenty-year framework; and indicate action necessary to attain population objectives in the context of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, with emphasis on human rights and giving special attention to the developing countries, particularly the least developed countries. The preamble should also draw attention to the magnitude of resources required for implementing commitments made by the Conference. The list of instruments mentioned in paragraph 14 of the conceptual framework should be expanded for balance and coverage and should include key regional documents.

5. All delegations agreed that the principles would be an essential part of any document emanating from the Conference and would form the basis for the new plan of action. That section of the document should ensure that the plan of action was action-oriented and would form the basis for international consensus. While circumstances would change and priorities vary, the principles agreed on at the Conference would provide the guiding philosophy in the area of population and development well into the twenty-first century.

6. Most delegations stressed that the principles should be built as much as possible on agreed international instruments, including the World Population Plan of Action, the recommendations of the International Conference on Population, the Amsterdam Declaration on a Better Life for Future Generations, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21. Many delegations considered that the right to development was an essential principle, as was the sovereignty of nations.

7. Numerous delegations favoured a group of principles in which the importance of human rights was fundamental and provided the main point of departure. It was hoped that the principles would be concise and easily readable so as to have maximum public appeal.

8. It was generally agreed that the International Conference on Population and Development should concentrate on its overall theme of population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development. Issues and recommendations relating to this theme should be forward-looking, operational and pragmatic.

9. Many delegations mentioned the new climate of agreement and the spirit of cooperation regarding population issues. They also noted the lack of major differences between the approaches of the developing and the developed regions on substantive issues and the broad consensus on the need to examine population matters in the context of development. They further stressed the central importance of the human being in all questions of population and development and the need for population policies and programmes to be based on the fundamental rights and freedoms of individuals and couples.

10. While building on the important achievements of the 1974 and 1984 population conferences, many delegations endorsed the suggestion of the Secretary-General of the Conference for a new plan of action that would be free-standing and operational in nature. They also stressed the importance of ensuring that the recommendations were formulated in a manner that clearly identified their innovative aspects and priorities. In addition, the recommendations of the regional conferences and expert group meetings should be fully taken into account in preparing the Cairo document.

11. Many delegations emphasized the need for recommendations to reflect the considerable demographic, social and economic diversity that existed among and within countries. Traditional classifications of development were considered inadequate, given the social and economic changes of recent years. The economies in transition of Europe, for example, had very complex demographic and socio-economic problems that differed markedly from those of the more developed European countries. Recommendations for action should take into account regional diversity and country-specific conditions.

12. All delegations agreed that population, environment and development were inextricably interrelated. Many delegations stressed, however, that the Conference should not run the risk of being too diffuse in its deliberations, but rather should focus most particularly on population-related issues, while taking note of complementary issues. In this regard, it was recognized that the Conference should build on existing international agreements, especially those adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, including Agenda 21. Merely renegotiating those agreements would serve no purpose.

13. Many delegations strongly emphasized that sustained economic growth and socio-economic development had a fundamental impact on population. Highest priority must therefore be accorded to improving the quality of life for all people, notably through the alleviation of poverty; the creation of employment; the guarantee of human rights; and the improvement of health, education and housing, and economic opportunities, particularly for women.

14. In order to promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development, many delegations stressed the importance of a supportive international economic environment. The debt burden of poorer countries remained a major constraint to their socio-economic development. Restrictive trade policies inhibited economic growth and led to inefficient patterns of production and resource use. Structural adjustment programmes could have the effect of weakening social services, placing added stress on vulnerable groups, including women and children, and encouraging over-exploitation of natural resources and environmental degradation. Emphasis was also placed on science and technology and the development of relevant new technologies and their accessibility by countries in need. Building domestic capacities and strengthening institutions to meet the challenges of demographic change were further priorities.

15. Many delegations pointed out that achieving the objectives of sustained economic growth, sustainable development and effective population policies would require mobilization of substantial additional financial resources from the international community as well as within countries. It would not be useful to adopt objectives without considering the means of implementation and the resources required. In this regard, the model provided by Agenda 21 could be considered.

16. There was general agreement that population factors had significant impact on and were in turn influenced by continued widespread poverty and inequality of wealth between and within nations, as well as by wasteful patterns of production and consumption, unsustainable use of natural resources and environmental degradation and serious social and gender inequalities.

17. An important priority, it was pointed out, was the development of adaptive strategies to address the implications for sustainable development and the environment resulting from the inevitable increase in population numbers and changes in concentration and distribution, particularly in ecologically vulnerable areas and urban agglomerations. Related to this were strategies to minimize dislocations of populations due to environmental factors and natural disasters. Such policies would need to address the underlying causes, promote emergency preparedness and establish mechanisms to aid the victims, both within and outside their own country.

18. Several delegations noted the importance of maintaining a balance between human needs and aspirations on the one hand and the natural resource base and environmental conditions on the other. It was recognized that inefficient and unsustainable use of natural resources and environmental degradation, whether caused by rapid population growth, poverty or unsustainable consumption patterns, could constrain prospects for socio-economic development. In this connection, some delegations underscored the importance of changing values, behaviour patterns and the distribution of power within society.

19. Social and economic factors could influence the impact of population on both local and global environmental problems. Many delegations referred to increasing demographic-related pressures on the environment and natural resources, whether associated with numbers, urban concentrations, migration or consumption patterns. Concern was expressed about effects on natural life-support capacities in different ecological zones.

20. It was considered important to promote more effective partnerships between Governments and the private sector in addressing population and development issues. Greater involvement and participation in the process of both policy-making and implementation by local communities, industry, non-governmental organizations and indigenous groups should be stimulated.

21. There was unanimous agreement that the empowerment of women was an essential factor in achieving population objectives, sustained economic growth and sustainable development. Existing gender inequalities and barriers to women should be eliminated and their participation in all levels of policy-making and implementation should be increased. Opportunities should be enhanced for leadership roles and for greater access to education, jobs and improved health services, including sexual and reproductive health services and family planning. The role and responsibility of men in bringing about gender equity, policy and value changes was repeatedly emphasized.

22. Delegations expected that in the Cairo document issues of gender equality, equity and rights that were specific to particular chapters would be addressed in those chapters. Gender issues (such as achieving gender equality in education and training; enactment and/or enforcement of laws pertaining to minimum age at marriage; proposals concerning women's opportunities for productive and remunerative employment; and women's rights, health and advancement at the workplace), which cut across many of the chapters and could not be adequately dealt with under any single heading, such as health or reproduction, should be addressed under chapter II of the document, to be entitled "Gender equality and empowerment of women". Many delegations emphasized the need to present the recommendations in a systematic manner, and a suggestion was made to structure them according to four categories: legal, economic, educational and cultural. Some delegations called attention to issues such as power-sharing in decision-making in the family, violence against women, prostitution and the special needs of women for protection in times of war. Genital mutilation, which some delegations saw as both a health issue and a rights issue, also needed to be addressed in the Conference document. In general, it was felt that the document should give greater emphasis to the comprehensive relationship between women's empowerment, development and population.

23. Some delegations emphasized that the document should not merely reiterate general principles that had already been accepted but should go further than earlier agreements and make concrete proposals for action that would lead to those accepted goals, or else should elaborate or extend earlier language regarding rights and responsibilities pertaining to gender issues, as they were linked to population and development. It was also felt that there was a need to develop indicators to monitor progress in this area. Specific suggestions were made in some areas, such as goals for achieving gender equality in education and universal primary education for both girls and boys. Delegations also emphasized the need to include concrete steps to improve women's access to productive and remunerative employment, as well as measures to eliminate negative stereotypes against women.

24. While many delegations emphasized the importance of rapid population growth as one of the main challenges faced by the world community, it was also recognized that there existed considerable variation in population growth rates among regions and countries. Consequently, any recommendations concerning population growth should take this diversity into account and be formulated accordingly. Some delegations noted that there was a growing international consensus on the importance of achieving stabilization of population. A few delegations suggested that specific demographic targets should be set, including targets for population growth.

25. Trends in population growth and structure, many delegations agreed, should be clearly highlighted in the final document, since they provided the necessary background against which population and development relationships interacted. In this regard, a number of delegations stressed the special situation of the least developed countries, which needed special attention. Also, mention was made of the importance of future levels of population in relation to consumption and production.

26. Many delegations noted that population growth and poverty were closely related but that simplistic cause and effect notions should be avoided. Many socioeconomic variables affected population growth, in particular gender equality and human resources development, in the areas, inter alia, of education, health, family planning and employment. These linkages should be brought out in the final document.

27. While the discussion on population structure covered all age groups, many delegations focused particularly on population ageing and agreed that the consequences of ageing required close scrutiny. The issue of ageing was of immediate concern in a number of the developed countries, but it was pointed out that problems of ageing could become overwhelmingly large in the developing countries, where the bulk of the elderly would be living.

28. Rapidly ageing populations represented a new phenomenon in human history that required urgent attention, particularly when viewed over a longer time perspective. It was pointed out that women would make up a disproportionate share of the elderly, making it all the more crucial to integrate women in the development process.

29. Several delegations expressed the need for the document to take into account the perspective of particular population groups, such as indigenous peoples and the disabled, whose needs concerning, inter alia, sexual and reproductive health, including family-planning services, should be recognized. It was also suggested that the Conference document should address the specific forms of discrimination that disabled people may face with regard to international migration.

30. Many delegations requested that there should be a separate chapter on the family, emphasizing its central role in society. Delegations emphasized the importance of addressing within this issue the diversity of families and their varied experiences.

31. Many delegations suggested that the Cairo document should recognize that women, regardless of age, marital status, sexual orientation and other social conditions, have the right to have access to information, education and services to exercise their reproductive and sexual rights.

32. The reproductive rights of couples and individuals to decide freely and responsibly the number and spacing of their children, as stated in the World Population Plan of Action, was reaffirmed by a large majority of delegations. A few speakers suggested some modification of the rights to make them apply to couples only, to individuals only or to women only.

33. In relation to sexual and reproductive health, many delegations reiterated that reproductive health programmes should protect women of all ages. Such programmes should have a client-centred approach. Some delegations recommended the inclusion of proper prevention, treatment and referral of sexually transmitted diseases and infertility.

34. Family-planning services were widely recognized as a means of fulfilling reproductive rights as well as of promoting maternal and child health. Such services, it was strongly recommended, should be voluntary, accessible, acceptable and affordable. Improving the quality of services and choice of available methods was also recognized as an important priority. Many delegations reiterated the need to promote research and development on both male and female family-planning methods. The role that men can play in the practice of family planning was also suggested as an important topic of attention. Many participants recommended a special mention of the need to remove legal barriers to the wider social dissemination and marketing of family-planning methods.

35. Human sexuality and sexual behaviour were recognized as a neglected area that required special attention. In this respect, it was recommended that sexuality and gender relationships be treated as closely interrelated and as factors that affect sexual health and reproductive behaviour. Many delegations suggested specific action covering a wide range of activities, such as behavioural research, sex education for boys and girls, counselling, and the consideration of parents as a major channel for ensuring responsible parenthood.

36. Adolescents also received particular attention. Many delegations recommended the inclusion in the Cairo document of specific actions aimed at facilitating informed decisions regarding their sexual behaviour, sexual health and the prevention of sexually transmitted diseases, as well as the removal of barriers to the access by adolescents to reproductive health-care services.

37. It was pointed out that among the issues that the Conference needed to address was the unacceptably high levels of maternal mortality and morbidity in many developing countries. Unsafe and illegal abortion, which in many countries was an important cause of maternal morbidity and mortality, constituted one of the most neglected problems affecting women's lives. It was seen by most delegations as a major public health issue which the Conference needed to recognize and address as such. While many delegations suggested that all women should have access to safe abortion, others suggested that the best way to eliminate abortions was the provision of effective, modern contraception information and services; a few delegations reiterated that abortion should not be promoted as a method of family planning.

38. Several delegations emphasized the importance of primary health care in combating infant, child and maternal mortality and expressed concern about the reduction of social investment in health as a result of structural adjustment programmes. It was recommended that, with respect to child survival, the Conference take into account the strategies and goals agreed upon at the World Summit for Children. The situation prevailing in the countries in economic transition regarding mortality levels and trends, especially adult male mortality, preoccupied several delegations and should also be addressed in the final document.

39. Many delegations stressed the need for the Conference document to pay particular attention to those issues that had come to light since the International Conference on Population in 1984, such as the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) pandemic. The Cairo document was seen as a unique opportunity to articulate a consensus on strategies for the prevention of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection. In this respect, it was noted that information, education and communication campaigns were vital for preventing the spread of AIDS and that information about the prevention of HIV/AIDS infection should be included as an element in family-planning programmes. The issue of international cooperation in research on drugs to treat and prevent AIDS should receive adequate attention.

40. With respect to themes related to population distribution and internal migration, delegations supported the need for decentralization and the strengthening of local government. Support was also expressed for the elimination of generalized subsidies in urban areas, the adoption of appropriate pricing policies for services and agricultural goods and the introduction of cost-recovery schemes. Subsidies must be directed only to the urban poor, whose productivity had to be enhanced as part of any strategy of poverty alleviation. Inclusion of environmental issues related to population distribution was welcomed. There was support for the need to promote balanced urban and rural development and to create jobs in rural areas. Redirecting migration from large to small or medium-sized urban centres as a means of achieving a balanced population distribution was endorsed. Some delegations suggested that recommendations to enhance data sources on internal migration were needed, as well as studies on the causes of internal migration.

41. With respect to international migration, several delegations stressed the need to consider different types of migrants. It was important to use the appropriate terminology, especially in the area of rights. With respect to migrant workers, mention of the relevant International Labour Organisation conventions and recommendations was suggested, although caution had to be exercised in citing international instruments that had not yet been ratified. Delegations from the developed countries underscored the relevance of the recommendations on international migration made by the European Population Conference, held at Geneva from 23 to 26 March 1993, whose language already represented the broad consensus of countries that were members of the Economic Commission for Europe.

42. The generally positive tone adopted in discussing international migration was welcomed. It was pointed out that in many circumstances migration was beneficial both to countries of origin and to receiving countries. The challenge was to reduce pressures leading to uncontrolled migration. Several delegations pointed out the difficulty of the task, particularly because the development process was likely to increase migration pressures in the short term. A few delegations noted that strong migratory pressures could be generated in the economies in transition if their serious demographic problems were not solved, in conjunction with job-creation. It was suggested that a special subsection on international migration and development be included. That subsection should contain recommendations regarding the causes of migration, particularly relative to those areas where economic growth and sustainable development could be fostered by international cooperation. Some delegations stressed the need for bilateral or multilateral negotiations and agreements regarding particular aspects of international migration, such as the treatment of migrant workers and their families or the migration of skilled personnel. The need to protect female migrant workers from exploitation was underscored.

43. Several delegations noted that it was important to prevent racism and xenophobia not only with respect to long-term migrants but rather with respect to all migrants. The integration of long-term migrants was to be pursued while at the same time respecting their cultural background.

44. The need to improve statistics on both migrants and their remittances was stressed by a number of delegations. The interchange of information between the sending and the receiving countries had to be fostered. Further studies on the causes of international migration and the effects of remittances were suggested.

45. With respect to refugees, delegations indicated that the relevant international instruments should be mentioned and that it was important to reiterate the international consensus on protection. Mention should be made of the right to seek asylum and not to the right to asylum. It was stressed that refugee assistance was needed both in the developing countries and in the countries that were in economic transition. The provision of adequate health and sexual and reproductive health services for female refugees was suggested.

46. Many speakers emphasized the major role of population information, education and communication and motivational activities in bringing a diverse cross-section of policy makers, planners, programme managers, administrators, field workers and the general public to new levels of awareness about the implications of emerging population issues. In order to achieve responsible choices in all aspects of population, including fertility and migration, better communication was needed to reach all segments of the population. Individuals, families and communities should know what choices were available to them and how best to make them. At the same time, Governments should recognize their responsibility at every level to avoid coercion and to promote informed choice. It was pointed out that, with the wide variety of forms of information and communication channels available for awareness creation and the delivery of motivational messages, Governments should carefully examine their information, education and communication programmes to ensure that they employ appropriate information-processing and repackaging techniques in order to achieve maximum results with their specific target audiences.

47. Mere awareness was no longer sufficient. It would be appropriate to move from awareness to action. It was therefore appropriate to spell out for the 1990s, in the fields of information, education and communication, specific options and opportunities that would enhance individual, family, community and national choices.

48. The importance of timely dissemination of reliable and up-to-date information in appropriate formats for the formulation of effective population policies and the implementation of efficient programmes should be stressed in the Conference document. It should emphasize that the development of national population information systems was an effective means of organizing the data and information that constituted the knowledge-base on population. The document should recommend that the use of modern information-handling technologies be promoted to develop databases, facilitate the processing and analysis of population data and improve the exchange of information.

49. Many delegations considered the collection and analysis of population and related statistics to be essential for a complete and accurate understanding of population trends in the formulation, implementation and monitoring of population plans and programmes. Research, both scientific and policy related, was emphasized as an essential ingredient of population and development efforts. In addition, research should pay proper attention to gender issues and considerations of special population groups, such as indigenous peoples and the disabled.

50. Several delegations pointed out the need to give greater emphasis to data-generation, training (including research training) and research in the area of population. In many developing countries, the paucity of population data and the insufficiency of research capabilities had adversely affected the possibility of meaningfully integrating population perspectives into development plans and strategies.

51. A number of speakers stressed the importance of research and technology in responding to population and development issues, particularly with regard to contraception, infant and child survival, disability and environmental degradation. The Cairo document should reflect the vital contributions that technology and research could make in improving human lives and living conditions.

52. There was a broad consensus among delegations that strong emphasis needed to be placed in the Cairo document on the need for broadened national action aimed at social development. More resources, both national and international, should be assigned to social programmes. Several delegations endorsed the view of the Secretary-General of the Conference that the share of total national expenditure going to the social sectors should rise to at least 20 per cent. It was underscored that, within social-sector expenditure, the population sector should be given high priority, commensurate with the crucial linkages between that sector and socio-economic development.

53. National action in population-related matters concerned developing and developed countries alike. The theme of the Conference—population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development—made it clear that a reciprocity of actions was needed, with the North re-examining its lifestyles and unsustainable consumption patterns while the South acted to bring population growth down to a level compatible with sustainable development. Many delegations highlighted the necessity of including in the Cairo document this broad perspective of population and development.

54. Delegations suggested a broadening of the scope of resource mobilization beyond family planning to encompass sexual and reproductive health care. Further, many delegations were of the opinion that an even broader message must come out of the Conference, namely that reproductive health and family planning were linked to other factors, such as education and women's status, which were equally important for the achievement of socio-economic development.

55. On the matter of increased allocation of national resources for population, delegations were in broad agreement. None the less, increased allocations should be made within the constraints of overall resource availability and perceived national development priorities. International bilateral and multilateral assistance, which had been declining in recent years, had played an important part in facilitating national action in the area of population. In the view of many delegations, assistance for population should be increased in line with an overall increase in overseas development assistance to 0.7 per cent of gross national product.

56. Delegations broadly supported the need for a partnership for national action on population between Governments, non-governmental organizations and other organizations outside government, as well as the private sector. Non-governmental organizations were seen not as substitutes for government action but as partners acting as catalysts for change, setting quality standards for population programmes and developing innovative approaches.

57. Delegations also considered it important for the Cairo document to address the issue of adequate and reliable funding for the activities of non-governmental organizations. Both Governments and donor agencies should develop mechanisms for assuring a regular flow of resources to non-governmental organizations. In the view of some delegations, this policy should include increasingly direct reliance on national non-governmental organizations, in order to profit from their knowledge of local socio-cultural conditions.

58. Similarly, the complementary role of the private sector in the area of population should be clearly spelt out in the Cairo document. Legal and regulatory barriers impeding full access to reproductive health and family-planning services should be reviewed. The contribution of services supplied by the private sector to promoting cost-effectiveness in reproductive health care and other social sectors should be given full recognition.

59. Many delegations noted the need for updated estimates for resource requirements in order to achieve global population goals of the sort proposed by the Secretary-General of the Conference. The Amsterdam Declaration on a Better Life for Future Generations, the only international forum to have addressed the issue of resource mobilization for population activities, should be refined in this respect, so as to provide the Cairo Conference with more precise estimates of the resources required over the next decade. In this connection, various delegations suggested that relevant recommendations made by the European Population Conference regarding resource mobilization be consulted.

60. The appeal to increase resources for population activities could be strengthened by emphasizing the developmental successes achieved by investments in population programmes and the high rates of return observed on such investments. Other delegations noted that post-cold-war circumstances presented the opportunity to increase investments in social sectors substantially, including the population sector.

61. The need for international cooperation for technical assistance to help resolve various population issues was underscored. The special needs of the economies in transition for such cooperation was noted and it was suggested that the corresponding recommendations made by the European Population Conference be consulted.

62. There was general support for the proposal of the Secretary-General of the Conference to include a set of quantitative goals in the Cairo document. Such goals must take into account regional and national variations. Some delegations suggested that the proposed time-frame of twenty years be segmented into five- and ten-year frames. Progress towards achieving the goals should be monitored.

63. The point was made by many delegations that the goals must be consistent with each other and with those set at other international forums. There must be no coercion of any kind involved in the programmes formulated to achieve those goals. Some delegations suggested the possibility of including other social and economic goals.

64. Some delegations suggested that the Cairo document also include qualitative goals and objectives.

65. Additional resources would be required to achieve those goals. Estimates in this regard should be prepared by the Secretariat, taking into account current and proposed levels of national expenditure in the social sector.

66. Several delegations emphasized the need for the Cairo document to make adequate provision for the follow-up to commitments made at the Conference, including mechanisms for the review and appraisal of progress made towards implementation of Conference objectives. Some delegations also suggested that the document include recommendations on institutional arrangements for the implementation of the new plan of action.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/323

Adopted without vote

Referred by Economic Committee (E/1993/112), 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Preparatory Committee (E/1993/69); agenda item 15 (f).

Reports of the Secretary-General of the Conference. In response to a 1991 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General of the Conference, Dr. Nafis Sadik, Executive Director of UNFPA, submitted a progress report in April 1993⁽¹⁰⁾ reviewing preparations and related financial and organizational questions.

She noted that, in response to her request, more than 80 national committees related to the Conference preparatory process had been set up as of early 1993, and that the Conference secretariat had developed an outline for use by Governments in preparing their national reports on population. As part of its information activities, the secretariat continued to publish a newsletter covering Conference preparations. The newsletter, Population 94, was renamed ICPD 94 in early 1993 and was to be issued every two months in English, French and Spanish. Issues related to the participation of NGOs were discussed further by the NGO Planning Committee for the Conference and its Steering Committee at meetings in New York on 8 January and 11 and 12 March, respectively. The report noted the ongoing seventh population inquiry and exercises to monitor population trends and policies and multilateral population programmes. The financial requirements for the Conference were estimated at $5,651,000 and included $2,650,300 for conference servicing and some $3 million in non-conference-servicing costs.

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General of the Conference submitted a further progress report on Conference preparations in October.⁽¹¹⁾ The report noted that national preparatory committees had been established in more than 100 countries and that the Conference secretariat continued to disseminate information on the objectives and activities of the Conference through its newsletter and other information materials. In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/4, 332 NGOs received accreditation for the Conference, while 69 others also participated in the preparatory process.

Coordination within the United Nations system was ensured through the Administrative Committee on Coordination and its Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting for the Conference, which met for the second time in 1993 (Geneva, 13 July).⁽¹²⁾ The Meeting reviewed Conference preparations and discussed the contributions of United Nations bodies to the review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action, as well as the proposed action programme to be adopted at the Conference.

An addendum to the Secretary-General's report⁽¹³⁾ provided an annotated outline of the final Conference document, dealing with the interrelationships between population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development; gender equality and empowerment of women; roles, composition and structure of the family; population growth and structure; reproductive rights, reproductive health and family planning; health and mortality; population distribution, urbanization and internal migration; international migration; population information, education and communication; capacity-building; technology, research and development; national action; international cooperation; partnerships with NGOs, the private sector and local community groups; and follow-up to the Conference.

Expert group meetings

In 1991,⁽⁹⁾ the Economic and Social Council had authorized the Secretary-General of the Conference to convene six expert group meetings on population and development issues, five of which had been held in 1992.⁽¹⁴⁾ The sixth meeting, on population distribution and migration (Santa Cruz, Bolivia, 18-22 January 1993), was attended by 16 internationally renowned experts and adopted 37 recommendations to the Preparatory Committee, dealing with internal and international migration, refugees, and data and research needs regarding population distribution and migration. The expert group's findings were summarized in a progress report on Conference preparations by the Secretary-General of the Conference.⁽¹⁰⁾ In April 1993, she also submitted to the Preparatory Committee a synthesis of the six meetings.⁽¹⁵⁾

As a follow-up to those meetings, several round-table meetings were held on topics relevant to the Conference:⁽¹⁶⁾ women's perspectives on family planning and reproductive health and rights (Ottawa, Canada, 26 and 27 August); population policies, programmes and HIV/AIDS (Berlin, 28 September-1 October); population and development strategies (Bangkok, Thailand, 17-19 November); population, environment and sustainable development (Geneva, 24-26 November); and population and communication (Vienna, 2 and 3 December). In addition, the Twenty-second General Population Conference of the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population (Montreal, Canada, 24 August-1 September) devoted a one-day session to issues on the agenda of the International Conference.

In 1991,⁽⁹⁾ the Economic and Social Council had invited the regional commissions to convene conferences on the status of population policies and programmes in their regions. Two of them were held in 1992⁽¹⁴⁾ and regional activities in 1993 were described in progress reports of the Conference Secretary-General, submitted to the Economic and Social Council⁽¹⁰⁾ and the General Assembly.⁽¹¹⁾

The European Population Conference (Geneva, 23-26 March), jointly sponsored by the Economic Commission for Europe, the Council of Europe and UNFPA, involved countries in Europe and North America. It adopted a set of recommendations on: fertility, the status of women and the family; health and mortality; selected consequences of population growth and age structure; international migration; international cooperation in the field of population; and the generation and use of policy-relevant knowledge.

The Arab Population Conference (Amman, Jordan, 4-8 April), organized by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, the League of Arab States and UNFPA, adopted the Second Amman Declaration on Population and Development in the Arab World,⁽¹⁷⁾ further to the Amman Declaration adopted at the Third Regional Population Conference in the Arab World in 1984.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Second Amman Declaration established general principles and objectives for population policies to: achieve appropriate population growth rates; reduce maternal child and infant mortality in particular; and achieve a geographical population distribution consistent with sound development and a healthy environment, by rationalizing urban growth and improving the quality of life in rural areas. The Declaration also contained recommendations on human development; population, environment and development; population distribution and urbanization; international migration; women, population and development; maternal and child health and family planning; information, education and communication; the role of national NGOs in development; special categories of population; structural adjustment and population policies; data, research, information exchange and training; and regional and international cooperation.

The Latin American and Caribbean Regional Conference on Population and Development (Mexico City, 29 April-4 May), convened by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and UNFPA, adopted a consensus statement,⁽¹⁹⁾ which reviewed the population situation in the region and made recommendations on population growth and structure; population distribution, development and the environment; women and population dynamics; population policies and programmes; development, health, family planning and well-being; international migration and development; training, data production and research; and international cooperation in the population field.

Several subregional meetings were also held during the year as a follow-up to the regional conferences.⁽¹⁶⁾ The conference of the Maghreb countries (Algeria, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Tunisia) (Tunis, Tunisia, 7-10 July) adopted the Tunis Plan of Action on Population and Development in the Arab Maghreb.⁽²⁰⁾ The South Pacific Ministerial Meeting on Population and Sustainable Development (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 6-10 September) adopted the Port Vila Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development.⁽²¹⁾ The Ministerial Meeting on Population of the Non-Aligned Movement (Bali, Indonesia, 9-13 November) adopted the Denpasar Declaration on Population, a statement of issues and recommendations for the International Conference and a statement of support for South-South collaboration in population and family planning.⁽²²⁾

Other subregional activities included the South Asian Ministerial Conference on Women and Family Health (Kathmandu, Nepal, 21-23 November), organized by the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation and UNFPA; a meeting of the Andean countries (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela) (Lima, Peru, 1-3 December), which adopted the Andean Declaration on Population and Development; and the Caribbean Meeting of Experts for a Regional Plan of Action on Population and Development (Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, 2 and 3 December).

Trust funds

Two trust funds were established by the United Nations Secretary-General to support the Conference.⁽¹¹⁾ The first, the Trust Fund for the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (General Trust Fund), was to be used for preparatory activities. By October, contributions to the Fund totalled $939,769. The second fund, the Voluntary Fund for Supporting Developing Countries' Participation in the Conference, had received $663,080 in contributions or pledges. A Trust Fund of UNFPA was also established to support national preparatory activities, including meetings and studies at the country level, activities to disseminate information and increase awareness of the Conference, and other conference-related costs. A total of $3,124,579 had been contributed or pledged to the Fund.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/76 without vote.

Preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolutions 45/216 of 21 December 1990 and 47/176 of 22 December 1992, and reaffirming Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/91 of 26 July 1989, 1991/93 of 26 July 1991 and 1993/4 of 12 February 1993,

Reaffirming also Council resolution 1992/37 of 30 July 1992, in which it accepted the offer of the Government of Egypt to host the International Conference on Population and Development and decided to convene the Conference at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994,

Reaffirming further General Assembly resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, 45/199 of 21 December 1990, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, 45/206 of 21 December 1990 on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, 45/217 of 21 December 1990 on the World Summit for Children and 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, as well as the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Recognizing the particular importance of population issues in the context of sustained economic growth and sustainable development processes, and conscious of the need to give priority to the issues related to population and development,

Aware of the political impetus given to the issue of population on the international agenda since the decision of the United Nations to hold a conference on population,

Noting the appointment of the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund as Secretary-General of the International Conference on Population and Development and of the Director of the Population Division of the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis of the Secretariat as Deputy Secretary-General of the Conference,

Stressing the need for the intergovernmental preparatory process for the International Conference on Population and Development to be completed before the holding of the Conference itself,

1. Recommends that the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population and Development be made a subsidiary body of the General Assembly, without prejudice to current arrangements for participation in the International Conference on Population and Development and its preparatory process and, in that context, decides that the report of the Preparatory Committee on its second session shall be submitted, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, to be considered under the item entitled "International Conference on Population and Development", as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 47/176;

2. Requests the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Population and Development to prepare for the information of delegations, by February 1994, the first draft of the final substantive document of the Conference, taking into account the views expressed by participants during the second session of the Preparatory Committee and the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly;

3. Decides to extend the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference by one week, starting on 4 April 1994, and to ensure that adequate facilities are available for it, all within the approved budget limit set by the General Assembly for the biennium 1994-1995;

4. Also decides to convene two-day pre-Conference consultations at the venue of the Conference;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the extrabudgetary contributions to the trust funds established to assist developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, in preparing for and participating fully and effectively in the Conference and its preparatory process, and invites all Member States and organizations in a position to do so to support these trust funds further;

6. Reaffirms the significance of the media, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote the objectives and activities of the Conference;

7. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Population and Development, to include in the report referred to in paragraph 20 of General Assembly resolution 47/176 an annotated outline of the final document of the Conference, as well as information on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/76

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Referred by Economic Committee (E/1993/112), 26 July (meeting 15); draft by Preparatory Committee (E/1993/69), orally amended; agenda item 15 (f). Financial implications: S-G, E/1993/116.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 48/186 without vote.

International Conference on Population and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/176 of 22 December 1992 on the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994.

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/91 of 26 July 1989, 1991/93 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/37 of 30 July 1992, and taking note of Council resolution 1993/4 of 12 February 1993,

Recognizing the importance of population issues in the context of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and the need to treat population issues in their proper developmental perspective,

Taking note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population and Development on its second session,

Emphasizing the importance of a thorough intergovernmental preparatory process for the success of the Conference,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development and the accompanying annotated outline of the draft final document of the Conference;

2. Endorses fully Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/76 of 30 July 1993 on the preparations for the Conference;

3. Decides that the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population and Development shall become a subsidiary body of the General Assembly, without prejudice to current arrangements for participation in the Conference and its preparatory process;

4. Expresses its appreciation to States and organizations for the extrabudgetary contributions made so far to the three trust funds that have been established to support preparatory activities, including national activities, as well as to support the participation in the Conference and its preparatory process of developing countries, particularly the least developed among them, and calls upon all States and organizations in a position to do so to support those trust funds further;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference, in preparing the draft final document of the Conference, to be guided by the views expressed by delegations and groups of delegations on the annotated outline, including those expressed at the forty-eighth session of the General Assembly;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General of the Conference, in recognition of the importance to the preparations for the Conference of the regional and subregional population conferences, to submit to the Preparatory Committee at its third session a report synthesizing the results of those conferences;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to convene, within existing resources, informal consultations at United Nations Headquarters in the period prior to the third session of the Preparatory Committee, to exchange views in preparation for negotiations on the draft final document of the Conference;

8. Reaffirms the importance of the participation in and contribution to the preparatory process and the Conference itself of non-governmental organizations, in accordance with the relevant provisions of Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/4;

9. Emphasizes the particular importance of immediate action in widely publicizing the objectives of the Conference and the issues to be discussed at it;

10. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close consultation with the Secretary-General of the Conference, to ensure implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Report of the International Conference on Population and Development".

General Assembly resolution 48/186

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/722) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia (for Group of 77), Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Russian Federation, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom and United States (A/C.2/48/L.11/Rev.1); agenda item 96.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 23-26, 45; plenary 86.

UN Population Fund

UNFPA activities

According to a report of the UNFPA Executive Director on 1993 activities,⁽²³⁾ the bulk of UNFPA assistance again went to family-planning services, followed by communication and education programmes, population-policy formulation and evaluation, population dynamics, basic data collection, special programmes and multisectoral activities.

At the end of 1993, the Fund was assisting 1,560 projects—493 country projects in Africa, 384 in Asia and the Pacific, 208 in Latin America and the Caribbean and 177 in the Arab States and Europe, as well as 127 regional and 171 interregional projects.

Family-planning programmes received $104.1 million of the total allocation of $206.1 million. UNFPA programmes focused on improving the quality of family-planning services, adopting a more comprehensive approach to reproductive health care, and empowering women in terms of reproductive rights and freedom. The Fund also formulated a policy paper to guide its humanitarian assistance during emergencies and other difficult situations. Thematic evaluations of family-planning services carried out in Botswana, Ecuador, Indonesia, Mexico, the Niger, Pakistan, Turkey and Viet Nam highlighted limitations in the choice of contraceptive methods available to clients, varied technical competence of service providers, a lack of infrastructure and equipment, and inadequate follow-up mechanisms and record-keeping. They also found that projects and activities in maternal and child health/family planning (MCH/FP) did not focus adequately on the quality of services. The evaluations resulted in recommendations that the mix of contraceptive methods should be sufficiently diverse to meet the needs of all users, that the choice of method should rest with users and not with service providers, and that users should be provided with complete and accurate information on available methods. Other recommendations dealt with promoting male contraception, training service providers and their supervisors, and developing adequate follow-up mechanisms and record-keeping systems.

As the cost of providing family-planning services continued to escalate, UNFPA supported case-studies on cost-recovery schemes in Brazil, Colombia, Egypt, Kenya, Indonesia and Thailand, and an in-depth review and appraisal of global experiences in shifting a significant share of funding from Governments and donors to the private sector. The Fund also prepared a policy proposal to support national efforts to integrate family planning into reproductive health care through primary health care systems. According to the proposal, integrated care would provide information and services aimed at all couples and individuals, including adolescents; treatment of gynaecological problems related to contraception; information, education and services dealing with prenatal and postnatal care and with childbirth; information and services regarding the prevention of sexually transmitted diseases; diagnosis and treatment of infertility and sub-fecundity and referral services for follow-up care; and routine reproductive health check-ups for women. It was also proposed that integrated services be extended to poor women, minorities, unmarried women and adolescents, to promote healthy and responsible reproductive behaviour as well as the use of condoms and other barrier methods of contraception, and to pay special attention to young adults and men.

The prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS, was an integral component of reproductive health care and an important concern of the UNFPA programme. The Fund helped to organize a round table on the impact of HIV/AIDS on population policies and programmes (Berlin, September/October), which emphasized that commitment to combat the disease should be an essential part of sound population and related family-planning policies. UNFPA also participated in inter-agency discussions on the feasibility of establishing a joint and co-sponsored United Nations programme on AIDS, called for by the World Health Assembly (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). On 18 June,⁽²⁴⁾ the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) supported the initiative and noted the UNFPA Executive Director's intent to cooperate fully in consultations on its implementation. In 1993, the Fund prepared and distributed the 1992 AIDS Update, providing information on UNFPA assistance in supplying condoms, training MCH/FP service providers and promoting HIV/AIDS information and education activities. Under its Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs in Developing Countries in the 1990s, UNFPA collaborated with the World Health Organization in preparing estimates for condom requirements for HIV/AIDS prevention as part of in-depth studies in the Philippines, Turkey and Viet Nam. The estimates were included in an update of global contraceptive requirements for 1994-2005, prepared by UNFPA in cooperation with the Population Council.

The Fund's assistance for information, education and communication (IEC) activities totalled $37.7 million, or 18.3 per cent of all programme allocations. Activities aimed at creating demand for reproductive health care and family-planning services and changing people's behaviour by helping to: generate political commitment to and community support for such services; improve the quality of services; train service providers in interpersonal communications and motivational skills; change people's perceptions of family planning; inform potential clients about the availability of services; and enable them to choose a contraceptive method. UNFPA organized a thematic evaluation of seven IEC projects in support of MCH/FP activities in the Comoros, India, the Philippines, Rwanda and Zambia. It found that projects needed to be less ambitious, have a realistic time-frame and emphasize quality as well as quantity. The shortcomings identified in the evaluation were addressed in a technical paper on developing IEC strategies for population programmes. A technical note was also prepared on the relationship between IEC and family-planning service delivery. It focused on the need for: close cooperation between service providers and IEC personnel in identifying desired changes in behaviour and targeting different population groups; strong intra- and inter-sectoral coordination; the use of mass media and interpersonal communications to disseminate and personalize IEC messages; a sound service-delivery system to meet demand created by IEC activities; integration and coordination of IEC and family-planning activities; and the incorporation of monitoring and evaluation mechanisms in project design.

The Fund allocated some $17.9 million, or 8.7 per cent of its assistance, for the formulation, evaluation and implementation of population policies and programmes, and some $14 million (6.8 per cent) to population dynamics programmes. Assistance to national project execution was provided through country support teams, all eight of which—three in Africa, three in Asia, one in the Arab States and one in Latin America and the Caribbean—became fully operational in 1993. The teams fielded missions to some 100 countries, providing technical support for the formulation of projects to strengthen family-planning services and delivery to remote areas in Egypt, to expand and upgrade MCH/FP services in Yemen and MCH/birth spacing in Cambodia, and to strengthen training for expanded family health services in the Syrian Arab Republic. Focus-group discussions on women's reproductive health care and family-planning concerns were organized in Nepal. Assistance was also extended to Viet Nam to formulate a comprehensive population education project and to China to train 22 high-level educators to plan population education programmes. Technical back-stopping was provided to the Sudan for a project on family-welfare planning, education, motivation and services in industrial areas of Khartoum. Training and orientation were provided to three senior Mongolian officials in population and development planning, and to 110 Latin American professionals in programme management.

Basic data collection received some $13.2 million in assistance, or 6.4 per cent of the total allocation. The Fund continued to help developing countries generate population data and improve their capacity to collect, analyse and disseminate information on a timely basis. It assisted in developing a management information system for contraceptive supplies in Viet Nam and in designing a questionnaire for a migration and labour force survey in the Sudan, and it emphasized efforts to improve the capacity of Latin American countries in obtaining and using demographic data to support decentralized social policies.

Other allocations included some $10.6 million, or 5.1 per cent of total assistance, for special programmes, and $8.6 million (4.2 per cent) for multisectoral activities. Another $6 million was delivered through population projects under the United Nations regular programme of technical cooperation.

UNFPA continued to seek ways of linking family-planning activities with efforts to improve the social and economic status of women in society. It published a comprehensive assessment of its experimental projects to help women secure credit and set up micro-enterprises, to provide technical assistance and training in small-business management and to promote family planning. The assessment was based on the findings of four project evaluation missions to Egypt, Ghana, India, Kenya, Paraguay and the Philippines, which recommended the introduction of MCH/FP, IEC and other population components into existing micro-enterprise programmes and the linking of micro-enterprise projects for women with UNFPA country-level population programmes, and especially those activities to enhance women's reproductive rights.

The Fund continued to coordinate with agencies and organizations within and outside the United Nations system. In March, an inter-agency task force discussed questions concerning the division of labour between the various actors in country-level activities and the operations of country support teams, and emphasized the need to improve the quality of technical back-stopping plans.

The task force also considered technical support in December. In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution on the streamlining of United Nations operational activities for development,⁽²⁵⁾ the Fund participated in the development of a system-wide interpretation of the programme approach; collaboration in the area of evaluation; and the drafting of system-wide guidelines for United Nations contributions and programmatic responses. UNFPA, UNDP and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) agreed to fund an umbrella project on a system-wide integrated approach to country-level technical assistance activities, and reached agreement on an integrated development package for the Governate of Assiut in Egypt. The Fund convened working groups to harmonize programming cycles for Latin America and the Caribbean and for the Middle East and North Africa within the three bodies. A UNFPA/UNICEF integrated planning model was being developed for Bangladesh, to include modules on literacy, nutrition, health and women's status.

In March,⁽²⁶⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on the Fund's collaboration with the World Bank and regional development banks. The report examined the rationale for close collaboration between those organizations, analysed their collaborative programming activities at the global, regional, national and headquarters level, and identified further actions.

On 18 June,⁽²⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the report and endorsed actions to strengthen collaboration.

UNFPA's The State of World Population 1993, entitled "The Individual and the World: Population, Migration and Development in the 1990s", called for urgent action to establish common international classifications of migrants and migration. It also sought increased attention to relevant international legislation, the effects of development policies on migration flows and the needs of migrant women in particular.

UNDP Governing Council action. On 18 June,⁽²⁴⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's report on the 1992 activities of the Fund⁽²⁷⁾ and encouraged UNFPA to heighten the strategic focus of its programmes to maximize their effectiveness. It welcomed an increase in resources allocated to MCH/FP and called for stronger IEC activities, focused on the needs of adolescents. It noted the status report⁽²⁸⁾ on the implementation of the strategy for UNFPA assistance to sub-Saharan Africa,⁽²⁹⁾ and requested the Executive Director to strengthen the Fund's activities in Africa and to report in 1995 on the strategy's implementation. The Fund was encouraged to monitor the impact of its activities in the area of women, population and development and to pursue links with women's organizations at the country and intercountry levels. The Council commended progress on the Fund's Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs, and requested that the Executive Director report on the subject in 1994 and continue the Initiative beyond that year. It welcomed the Fund's efforts to harmonize its programme cycles with those of other bodies and to adapt them to national development plans, and encouraged it to involve NGOs in population programme activities in the field. The Executive Director was requested to report in 1994 on the implementation of the 1992 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ to submit in 1994 an updated review and assessment of UNFPA, synthesizing its experience over the last 25 years, and to present proposals on programme priorities and the future direction of UNFPA in 1995.

Country and intercountry programmes

In an April 1993 report,⁽³⁰⁾ the Executive Director provided the status of financial implementation of Governing Council-approved UNFPA country programmes and projects for the period 1985-1992, plus estimates of $118.5 million, including $77.7 million from regular funds, for 15 new programmes. The balance of UNFPA commitments for ongoing and new programmes amounted to $525.1 million.

The Governing Council, on 18 June,⁽³¹⁾ approved the 15 country programmes—11 in sub-Saharan Africa and 2 each in Asia and the Pacific and in Latin America and the Caribbean—and made a provision that the Executive Director should present interim reports in 1994 on implementation of the programmes for Equatorial Guinea and Rwanda.

The combined allocation for country and intercountry programmes was $206.1 million in 1993, up from $163.6 million in 1992.⁽²⁵⁾ UNFPA concentrated on programmes in 58 priority countries (32 in Africa, 17 in Asia and the Pacific, 5 in Latin America and the Caribbean and 4 in the Arab States), which received $119 million, or 72.6 per cent, of the $164.1 million allocated to country programmes overall. The resources allocated to priority programmes increased in absolute terms from $77.9 million spent in 1992, but dropped by 3.2 per cent from that year's share in the total. Allocations for intercountry activities (regional and interregional) amounted to some $42 million, or 20.4 per cent of the total in 1993, compared with $25.5 million (19.8 per cent) of expenditures in 1992.

In a March report,⁽³²⁾ the Executive Director reviewed implementation of the Fund's priority-country system and criteria for determining priority status. The report noted that allocations to priority countries increased from $277 million during 1983-1987 to $411 million for 1988-1992, or from 70 per cent of the total country programme expenditure in 1983 to 75 per cent in 1992. It recommended that the existing criteria for determining priority status and their threshold levels be retained and that the list of priority countries be updated more frequently. On 18 June,⁽²⁴⁾ the Governing Council took note of the report and the January 1992 update of the list, and reaffirmed the continued use of the criteria. It requested the Executive Director to study the feasibility of including the maternal mortality rate as a criterion and to report on the subject in 1995.

Allocations to programmes for sub-Saharan Africa totalled $59.3 million in 1993, up from $37 million in 1992. Most resources (62.4 per cent) were allocated to family-planning and communication and education programmes. The Fund's strategy for assistance to Africa was modified to reflect growing governmental awareness of population problems, the establishment of at least rudimentary family-planning services in all but 2 of the 44 countries covered, and the emergence of new population issues. During the year, however, UNFPA-supported activities were disrupted by political and social unrest in Angola, Burundi, Cameroon, the Congo, Liberia, Mali, Nigeria, Togo and Zaire; improved conditions facilitated programmes in Ethiopia and Mozambique. The Fund fielded its first mission to the new nation of Eritrea and developed four projects to bridge the 1993-1994 period while the first country programme was being formulated (for details on Eritrea's independence, see PART TWO, Chapter I). A fact-finding mission went to South Africa to identify priorities and modalities for future assistance.

The Arab States and Europe received $23.2 million in 1993, compared with $10.7 million spent in 1992. Of that total, more than $19 million was allocated to the Arab States and some $4 million to Europe and the newly independent States of the former USSR. Family-planning programmes accounted for 54.9 per cent of the total allocation and were being increasingly introduced to the Arab States, along with action programmes in reproductive health and communication and education. Family-planning and related activities were also the focus of UNFPA assistance to Europe, which had high rates of induced abortion. More than 85 technical assistance missions were undertaken to 20 countries during the year.

Some $76.8 million was allocated to Asia and the Pacific in 1993, an increase from $49.5 million spent in 1992. Family-planning programmes received 64 per cent of allocations. The Fund initiated assistance programmes for five countries of Central Asia and provided emergency relief in the areas of children's health and women's reproductive health. It provided more than $2 million for procurement of contraceptives and training in their use. Two project-formulation missions were fielded to Cambodia to assess priority needs related to a national census and MCH/birth-spacing services. In total, some 150 technical advisory missions were carried out in more than 30 countries in the region.

UNFPA resources allocated to Latin America and the Caribbean increased in 1993 to $21.3 million from the 1992 expenditures of $15.4 million. Of that, 51.7 per cent was allocated to family planning, which, along with reproductive health, was among the region's priorities. Country support teams based in the region fielded 125 missions in response to 170 requests.

Allocations for interregional programmes in 1993 totalled some $24.4 million, of which $8.3 million, or 22.1 per cent, went to family planning. Policy formulation and population and development received $5 million, or 20.5 per cent. Major activities focused on training and research and the dissemination of population information.

Work programmes

In an April report on the UNFPA work plan and proposed programme expenditure for 1994-1997,⁽³³⁾ the Executive Director provided information on resource utilization and the distribution of programmable resources among country and intercountry activities for 1989-1992, 1993-1996 and 1994-1997.

On 18 June,⁽³⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council approved the work plan for 1994-1997 and the request for new programme expenditure authority of $217.3 million for 1994, and endorsed the following estimates for new programmable resources for 1995-1997, subject to actual contributions: $234.1 million for 1995, $246.8 million for 1996 and $260.4 million for 1997. It also endorsed an estimated $15 million per year in multi-bilateral funding for 1994-1997.

Programme planning and evaluation

During the year, UNFPA continued its efforts to enhance the impact of its programmes by reviewing programme strategies and evaluating performance through its programme review and strategy development (PRSD) exercise.⁽²³⁾ Five PRSD missions were organized in 1993—two in Africa (Chad, Zambia) and three in Asia and the Pacific (Iran, Maldives, Philippines)—bringing the total number of missions conducted since 1977 to 189. UNFPA analysed the quality and impact of 29 PRSD reports, covering the period 1989-1992, and examined the PRSD process as a whole. The reviews reaffirmed the exercise as a powerful approach to population programming and noted that the objectives and strategies of the corresponding UNFPA country programmes were clearly based on PRSD recommendations. It was recommended that more attention be given to PRSD follow-up.

On 18 June,⁽²⁴⁾ the Governing Council underlined the need to strengthen further the capacity of recipient countries to formulate well-coordinated, monitored and evaluated programmes, and noted that experience gained through the PRSD exercise enabled the Fund to contribute to the formulation of the country strategy note and the development of a common programme approach. It encouraged the Executive Director to continue efforts to improve evaluation activities and requested her to report in 1994 on progress made in decentralizing to the field the decision-making process, including project approval.

During 1992-1993, UNFPA carried out 220 project evaluations and a series of thematic evaluations in three programme areas. In 1993, it launched another thematic evaluation, on local production of contraceptives, and conducted desk reviews for future evaluations on community participation in family-planning programmes and on information and service programmes for adolescents. To ensure proper feedback and use of evaluation results, the Fund began to redesign its evaluation database and to publish the Evaluation Findings bulletin. It also revised its guidelines on decentralization and extended total programme approval authority, on a trial basis, to field offices in 12 countries.

The Fund's estimated income in 1993 fell by 7.8 per cent from $238.2 million in 1992,⁽²³⁾ to $219.6 million, while provisional expenditures totalled $215.4 million, up from $193.6 million the previous year. During the year, 101 Governments pledged $216.6 million, $17.2 million (7.4 per cent) less than in 1992. An additional $14.8 million for multi-bilateral projects and $10.9 million for programmes were generated through other financial arrangements.

On 18 June,⁽³⁵⁾ the UNDP Governing Council took note of the annual review of activities financed by UNFPA in 1992⁽²⁶⁾ and requested the Executive Director to include in future annual reviews, in line with revised financial regulations, an overview of cost-sharing contributions and their distribution among programme areas. It expressed concern at a higher ratio of administrative costs to programme delivery in 1992-1993 and requested the Executive Director to include a progress report on budget implementation in the annual financial review and to report in 1994 on administrative cost savings achieved. She was urged to institute guidelines to delineate programme, programme-support and administrative expenditures. The Council reconfirmed its 1991 decision⁽³⁷⁾ to keep the annual level of the Fund's operational reserve at 20 per cent of general resources income.

Noting progress in implementing recommendations of the Board of Auditors on management issues, the Governing Council called for audited financial statements by executing agencies and Governments on their activities on behalf of UNFPA, requested a summary of observations thereon by external auditors and of corrective action taken by the agencies, and urged the Executive Director to avoid duplication of procurement capacities in the United Nations system.

The Council also had before it a progress report⁽³⁸⁾ on UNFPA successor support-cost arrangements,⁽³⁷⁾ which provided proposals to improve the implementation of technical support services arrangements. The Council welcomed the proposals, noted the establishment of UNFPA country support teams, authorized the Executive Director to take steps to improve technical support services further, and requested her to report on the subject in 1995.⁽²⁴⁾

In response to a 1992 decision of the Governing Council,⁽³⁹⁾ the Executive Director submitted in April 1993 proposed amendments⁽⁴⁰⁾ to the UNFPA financial regulations relating to procurement and cost-sharing. On 18 June,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Council approved the revised financial regulations dealing with trust funds, internal control, the definition of cost-sharing and UNFPA funds.

In April 1993, the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council budget estimates for UNFPA administrative and programme support services for the 1994-1995 biennium.⁽⁴²⁾ The total biennial budget amounted to $120.1 million gross, or an 8.6 per cent increase over revised 1992-1993 estimates of $110.6 million.

On 18 June,⁽³⁵⁾ the Council, having considered the budget estimates, audit reports for the year ended 31 December 1991⁽⁴³⁾ and a report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ),⁽⁴⁴⁾ approved gross appropriations of $120,092,200 to finance 1994-1995 administrative and programme support services. The Council agreed that overhead credits estimated at $6.5 million and miscellaneous income of $500,000 from trust funds for support services should be used to offset the gross amount, resulting in net appropriations of $113,092,200. The Executive Director was authorized to transfer credits between programmes within reasonable limits, with the concurrence of ACABQ. The Council also approved changes in the level of posts and additional posts requested in the budget estimates, and invited the Executive Director to make further proposals for the level of Country Director posts in the 1996-1997 budget.

UN Population Award

In September, the Secretary-General presented the 1993 United Nations Population Award to Dr. Fred T. Sai (Ghana) for his leadership in family planning and population and contributions to research on nutrition and community welfare; and to the Mainichi Shimbun Population Problems Research Council (Japan) for creating awareness of population issues and for its population studies and publications. Each received a diploma, a gold medal and a monetary prize. The Award was established by the General Assembly in 1981⁽⁴⁵⁾ to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increased awareness of population problems and to their solutions. The Award's Trust Fund totalled $627,471 as at 31 December 1992.

In August,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the UNFPA Executive Director's report on the status of the Award. The Assembly took note of it by decision 48/452 of 21 December.

Human settlements

Commission on Human Settlements

The Commission on Human Settlements held its fourteenth session at Nairobi, Kenya, from 26 April to 5 May 1993, adopting 20 resolutions and five decisions. It considered activities of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) in 1992-1993(1) and requested(2) the UNCHS Executive Director to assess in future reports the relevance of United Nations system-wide activities to the Centre's work. He was also requested(3) to strengthen the Centre's regional activities, restructure its network of regional offices, and report on progress in 1995.

The Commission decided⁽⁴⁾ that the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNCHS would meet at least four times a year to assess human settlements problems and the implementation of the Commission's decisions. The Commission considered the Executive Director's draft of its third report to the General Assembly on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,⁽⁵⁾ adopted by the Assembly in 1988,⁽⁶⁾ and the proposed plan of action and timetable for 1994-1995.⁽⁷⁾ It decided⁽⁸⁾ to incorporate into the draft additions and amendments submitted by national delegations, and to submit the revised report,⁽⁹⁾ including the 1994-1995 plan of action, to the Assembly.

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/310, took note of the Commission's report on its fourteenth session⁽¹⁰⁾ and of its third report on the Strategy's implementation.⁽⁹⁾

1995 session

On 5 May,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission, recalling its 1987 resolution⁽¹²⁾ regarding the selection of two themes for each session and having considered the Executive Director's report⁽¹³⁾ on themes for the fifteenth (1995) session, requested the Executive Director to prepare papers for the 1995 session, reviewing national action on housing since the 1976 Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements⁽¹⁴⁾ and on sustainable human settlements in an urbanizing world. It also decided to take up in 1997 the contribution of the private and non-governmental sectors to shelter for low-income groups, and the management of natural resources in the context of sustainable human settlements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/176 without vote.

Human settlements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977, by which it established the Commission on Human Settlements and its secretariat, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), to serve as the institutional focus for human settlements activities within the United Nations system,

Recalling also its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, in which it designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the intergovernmental body responsible for coordinating, evaluating and monitoring the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Cognizant of the importance of maintaining the momentum already generated at the national and international level for the implementation of the Strategy,

Recognizing the role of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in the implementation of the Strategy and of the human settlement aspects of Agenda 21 and in the preparatory work for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat

Noting with appreciation that the Commission on Human Settlements and the Centre, in line with the objectives and responsibilities set out in General Assembly resolution 32/162, have succeeded in placing human settlements high on the agenda for national action and international cooperation and in promoting increased understanding of the links among people, settlements, environment and development,

Noting with concern that, in many developing countries, the achievements in terms of policies, programmes and projects at the national level in the field of human settlements have not been sufficient to arrest or reverse the deterioration in the living conditions of their populations, in both urban and rural areas,

Convinced that proper planning, development and management of human settlements will lead to economic and social progress and thereby alleviate poverty and promote development that is environmentally sound and sustainable in the long run, and aware that widespread civil conflicts and wars have left many cities and villages totally destroyed,

Reaffirming the importance of its resolution 47/180 of 22 December 1992 on the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II),

Recalling its resolution 47/212 B of 6 May 1993, in which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General to reconsider his proposal to abolish the post of Under-Secretary-General of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), taking into account the views and recommendations of the Commission on Human Settlements and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the views expressed by Member States regarding the question of separate senior management arrangements for the Centre,

1. Endorses the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its fourteenth session;

2. Also endorses Commission resolutions 14/7 of 5 May 1993 on the strengthening of regional activities, 14/19 of 5 May 1993 on the role and place of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in the United Nations system and 14/20 of 5 May 1993 on the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) are kept under distinct and separate management and direction, in accordance with their specific mandates and activities;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General—in the context of ensuring high-level leadership of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) through distinct and separate management and direction as contemplated in General Assembly resolution 32/162, taking into account relevant recommendations on the ongoing restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system as it prepares for the challenges of human settlement development and management in the twenty-first century, as well as preparations for Habitat II—to give full consideration to the views expressed by Member States regarding the leadership of the Centre;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that, in the restructuring of the United Nations system, the Centre is maintained as the global focal point for human settlements and that its institutional capabilities are strengthened at its headquarters, maximizing the effectiveness of national and regional operations;

6. Urges all Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to contribute to and participate actively in adequate preparations for Habitat II;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress made in preparations for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II).

General Assembly resolution 48/176

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.8) without vote, 13 December (meeting 48); draft by China and Colombia (for Group of 77) (A/C.2/48/L.37), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 91 (g).

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The UNCHS Executive Director presented a report⁽¹⁵⁾ to the Commission on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.⁽⁶⁾ It covered the period 1991-1992 and described action taken by UNCHS, Member States, the United Nations system and bilateral and multilateral agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It noted that the Centre's activities promoted wider understanding of the links between shelter, the living environment and sustainable development, provided substantive support to Member States and disseminated information on the Strategy, as well as on areas such as research and development, women in shelter and services development, and cooperation with NGOs and other organizations. The Executive Director concluded that, although many Governments had taken positive steps towards national shelter strategies, their impact on the living environment of the poor remained rather limited, and that action should be intensified in the areas of access to land, infrastructure and finance.

On 5 May,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission adopted its third report on the Strategy's implementation, including the plan of action for 1994-1995.⁽⁷⁾ It urged Governments to continue preparing annual progress reports for submission to the Executive Director and to publicize them within their countries. Governments were also invited to intensify efforts to formulate and implement national shelter strategies, using the guidelines for national action contained in the Strategy⁽¹⁷⁾ and the plan of action for 1994-1995, and to pay particular attention to specific recommendations of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED).⁽¹⁸⁾ The Commission recommended that Governments adopt a cost-effective monitoring system for national shelter strategies by applying shelter sector performance indicators (see below). It requested the Executive Director to continue disseminating information to Member States on successful country experiences, and providing technical assistance and training in policy formulation and implementation. He was also requested to collaborate with relevant capacity-building and other programmes within the United Nations system, to have country experiences reflected in the Strategy's mid-term review for the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) (see below), and to report on the Strategy's implementation in 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/178 without vote.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, in which it adopted the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the United Nations intergovernmental body responsible for coordinating, evaluating and monitoring the Strategy,

Recalling also its resolution 47/180 of 22 December 1992 on the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), in which it affirmed that a mid-term review of the implementation of the Global Strategy should be conducted at the Conference,

Noting with satisfaction the recognition of the renewed commitment to the Global Strategy expressed in Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Bearing in mind the high potential of enabling shelter strategies, which rely on labour-intensive and locally based technologies, to generate employment, demand for local products and savings, and thereby promote economic development and poverty reduction,

Bearing in mind also that enabling strategies typically include activities, such as institutional reform, revision of building codes and regulations and steps aimed at facilitating the access of the poor to critical resources, especially land and finance, which can best be implemented through partnership arrangements among the public, private and community sectors and the empowerment of the poor and of women,

Convinced that the concept of enabling strategies synthesizes the lessons learned in the development of living conditions since Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held at Vancouver from 31 May to 11 June 1976, and that broad commitment to the implementation of such strategies represents the only viable way of reversing the trend towards deterioration of those conditions,

Recognizing that, since the adoption of the Global Strategy, additional weight has been given to and further insights have been reached into several essential aspects of enabling shelter strategies, such as the requirement for sensitivity to gender considerations, and their potential for contributing to environmentally sustainable development,

Aware that adequate information plays a pivotal role in the proper analysis of the outcome, opportunities and constraints of current housing processes, and in assessing the impact of policies, strategies and programmes thereon,

Having considered the third report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Noting with satisfaction that a number of Governments have initiated or reformulated their national shelter strategies based on the principle of enabling all actors in the shelter sector, that many other Governments have initiated action on particular components of a national shelter strategy and, furthermore, that a number of Governments have commenced a process for applying selected indicators for monitoring the progress and efficiency of their national shelter strategies,

Noting also with satisfaction the support given to the implementation of the Global Strategy by donor Governments, international bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Cognizant of the importance of maintaining the momentum already generated at the national and international levels for the implementation of the Global Strategy,

1. Commends Governments that are already revising, consolidating, formulating or implementing their national shelter strategies based on the enabling principles of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

2. Urges all Governments to adopt and/or strengthen integrated national shelter strategies based on the enabling approach and principles of social, economic and environmental sustainability, and to review them regularly with a view to ensuring the improvement of living conditions, particularly of the rural and urban poor, women and the homeless;

3. Recommends that all Governments adopt a cost-effective system for monitoring the progress of their national shelter strategy and, when assessing the performance of the shelter sector, also adopt, as far as is feasible, taking into account local conditions and sensitivity to gender considerations, guidelines for monitoring national shelter strategies and the application of shelter sector performance indicators, and publicize the guidelines within their countries, particularly on World Habitat Day, and also submit them to the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), in order to enable him to prepare the reports on the implementation of the Global Strategy for consideration by the Commission on Human Settlements;

4. Urges Governments to integrate fully the environmental dimension in the formulation and implementation of national shelter strategies, taking into account the relevant components of Agenda 21;

5. Invites Governments to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation in order to facilitate the implementation and monitoring of the Global Strategy;

6. Urges the international community to strengthen its support for national efforts to formulate and implement enabling shelter strategies in developing countries, as recommended in Agenda 21;

7. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, and other multilateral and bilateral agencies to provide, on the basis of an approach consistent with the Global Strategy, increased financial and other support to Governments for the implementation of the Global Strategy Plan of Action for 1994-1995;

8. Adopts the Global Strategy Plan of Action for 1994-1995, and urges all Governments, relevant United Nations and private sector organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to prepare and implement their specific plans of action.

General Assembly resolution 48/178

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/717/Add.8) without vote, 13 December (meeting 48); draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/48/8); agenda item 91 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 36-40, 48; plenary 86.

Shelter sector performance indicators

In response to a 1991 Commission request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on shelter sector performance indicators⁽²⁰⁾ designed to help Governments monitor progress towards the objectives of the Global Strategy. The report provided a conceptual framework for the UNCHS/World Bank Housing Indicators Programme, a plan for its globalization, and an overview of progress based on a survey of 52 countries. It proposed 12 key indicators—grouped under the headings of price, quantity, quality, supply and demand—to capture the essential elements of shelter sector performance worldwide, and described their uses and the criteria for their selection.

On 5 May,⁽²¹⁾ the Commission urged Governments to intensify their monitoring of housing sector performance through use of the key indicators, the findings of which should be the basis for national reports on the status of human settlements to Habitat II. The Commission recommended technical and financial assistance for monitoring, and the Executive Director was requested to coordinate the activities of the Housing Indicators Programme with programmes related to women's participation, the urban environment and the city database. He was also asked to initiate action to introduce housing indicators into the Globed Report on Human Settlements, the World Development Report and other reports published on a regular basis, and to report on the subject in 1995.

Building materials for housing

Pursuant to a 1991 Commission request,⁽²²⁾ the Executive Director presented a report on appropriate, intermediate, cost-effective building materials, technologies and transfer mechanisms for housing delivery.⁽²³⁾ The report reviewed recent production, import and price trends underlying the housing crisis in developing countries, and outlined an operational strategy for the sector's development. It suggested that the Commission might consider national and international action to enhance the supply of durable and affordable building materials using renewable resources and energy-efficient technologies and to minimize the adverse environmental impact caused by the extraction of raw materials and the production of building materials.

On 5 May,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission recommended that Governments consider implementing national strategies for the sustainable supply of affordable building materials. Governments were urged to facilitate the role of non-governmental and community-based organizations, households and women's groups in the design, promotion, production and use of environmentally sound buildings and household energy technologies. The Commission called on Governments to create an environment conducive to greater decentralization, innovation and competition, increased investment and improved technological capacity and organization in the sector; to support the transfer of appropriate and environmentally sound technologies and related equipment; to support domestic capacity for research and development, standardization training and awareness creation; and to organize training in support of ecologically friendly and low-cost informal-sector building schemes and household energy programmes.

The Commission further recommended that Governments: support the development, transfer and diffusion of technologies that made efficient use of natural resources and agricultural and industrial wastes, improved energy efficiency and reduced environmental pollution; provide industrial extension services to small-scale producers of building materials and encourage their cooperation; improve the availability of venture capital, equity and term-loan support for technological upgrading of the building-materials sector; support the adoption of appropriate building codes, regulations and standards; disseminate information on available cost-effective and environmentally sound building materials; set up appropriate technology transfer mechanisms to enhance the application of technology options; and incorporate building technologies in the educational curricula of professional institutes. It also recommended greater efforts to enhance the recycling of building materials. The Executive Director was asked to present in 1995 a list of building materials that were potentially harmful to human health and the environment, and to continue UNCHS publications and training programmes to facilitate the environmentally sound production of cost-effective and durable building materials.

1996 Conference on human settlements

In 1992,⁽²⁵⁾ the General Assembly had decided to convene the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in 1996 and to establish a Preparatory Committee for the Conference.

The Preparatory Committee held an organizational session in 1993 (New York, 3-5 March).⁽²⁶⁾ It had before it a report of the Secretary-General on Conference preparations,⁽²⁷⁾ containing recommendations on substantive issues. Topics suggested for consideration by the Conference included a general declaration of principles; a review of global conditions, trends and issues, and of the role and institutional arrangements for human settlements in the United Nations system; resource mobilization for a global action plan; and programmes and subprogrammes dealing with development, settlement policies and strategies, new and emerging technologies, capacity-building and institutional strengthening, and finance. The report also noted decisions to set up an ad hoc Conference secretariat as part of UNCHS and to establish two voluntary trust funds—one to meet general Conference costs and the other to support the participation of developing countries. It further proposed a procedure for determining NGOs' relevance to the Preparatory Committee's work and outlined an information programme for the Conference.

On 5 March, the Preparatory Committee invited the Commission on Human Settlements to provide recommendations on substantive issues for the Conference and to draft guidelines for a harmonized approach to national preparations and reporting. The Secretary-General of the Conference (to be appointed) was asked to assist developing countries, at their request, to prepare national reports to the Conference. The Committee also requested the United Nations Secretary-General to consider the results of the review of Agenda 21⁽¹⁸⁾ on human settlements issues by the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and the outcome of regional and subregional preparatory meetings when making recommendations on a global action plan. It urged United Nations bodies to provide inputs to the preparatory process and asked Governments to contribute to the Conference's voluntary funds. The Committee further decided on the organization and agenda of its first session, to be held in April 1994, and adopted rules of procedure for the participation of NGOs in the Conference and its preparatory process.

In response to the Committee's request, the UNCHS Executive Director reported to the Commission on Human Settlements in April on substantive issues and draft guidelines for preparations and reporting at the country level.⁽²⁸⁾ The report grouped the issues under three central themes—policies and strategies for an urbanizing world, democratization and capacity-building, and investment in sustainable settlements development. It also suggested criteria for the organization and support of country-based preparatory activities and modalities for action.

In May,⁽²⁹⁾ the Commission revised the Executive Director's report and asked him to forward it to the Preparatory Committee. It recommended that the Conference programme focus on: the main future challenges and problems in the field of human settlements; the implementation of programmes resulting from Agenda 21; international coordination of strategies and development projects; and strengthening the basis for international cooperation in human settlements. The Commission also recommended that Governments initiate their preparatory activities in line with the proposed guidelines, that national and international preparations integrate NGOs, local governments, communities and the private sector, and that national focal points for the Conference be established as soon as possible. The Executive Director was asked to draft guidelines for the focal points, to test the feasibility of the guidelines for national and thematic global reports through the establishment of ad hoc working groups, and to support the preparatory process at the country and regional levels. The Commission requested the United Nations Secretary-General to appoint urgently a Secretary-General of the Conference, and decided to include an item on preparations for the Conference in the provisional agenda of its 1995 session and to discuss the mid-term review of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 at that session.

Preparations for Habitat II were officially launched in New York on 4 October, World Habitat Day. UNCHS made presentations on the Conference at the Second Annual Meeting of Ministers for Housing and Urban Development in Latin America (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 29 November-1 December) and at a meeting of cities from Europe, North America and Latin America (Barcelona, Spain, 1-3 December). The Centre also initiated information activities for the Conference and published the first issue of the Habitat II Bulletin.

The Ministerial Conference on Urbanization in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 27 October-2 November) adopted a Regional Plan of Action on Urbanization and called for broad-based participation in the preparatory process for Habitat II as part of the Plan's implementation.

Human settlements and political, economic and social issues

Assistance to victims of apartheid

On 5 May,⁽³⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Settlements, noting discussions between the South African Government and representatives of the black majority and other interested groups, expressed the hope that they would have a positive effect on the deplorable housing situation of the South African majority. It commended the Organization of African Unity and others for supporting the struggle against apartheid and called on the international community to continue its assistance to displaced and homeless victims of apartheid. The Executive Director was asked to intensify efforts to provide technical training and other forms of assistance.

Housing strategy for Palestinians

In response to a 1991 Commission request,⁽³¹⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on the housing requirements of the Palestinian people,⁽³²⁾ which reviewed the land use and demographic situation in the occupied territories, provided a profile of the Palestinian housing sector, examined housing demand and supply trends and proposed a Palestinian housing strategy. The Executive Director also considered future housing delivery mechanisms in the territories and recommended an action plan, comprising background studies, the development of a national housing strategy and institutional capacity, and the establishment of a housing-finance system. He listed housing institutions that needed to be created and suggested an investment plan totalling $2.37 billion.

By 16 votes to 1, with 24 abstentions, the Commission⁽³³⁾ requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Director and in cooperation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, to implement a national Palestinian housing strategy in accordance with the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, and called on international donors to increase their assistance in that area. It called on Israel to end the confiscation of Palestinian lands, the establishment of settlements for new immigrants and the application of laws preventing Palestinians from establishing national housing-finance institutions. It also called on Israel to refrain from policies preventing building permits for Palestinians and prohibiting production of local building materials, and to lift sanctions on financial aid for housing from international, Arab and regional organizations. The Commission asked the Preparatory Committee for Habitat II to consider the housing requirements of Palestinians in the Conference agenda. The Executive Director was requested to facilitate training for Palestinian technical personnel and to report in 1995 on progress made.

Women and human settlements

On 5 May,⁽³⁴⁾ the Commission urged Governments to develop a shelter strategy that strengthened the participation of women in settlement development and management locally, nationally and regionally, and to review and repeal gender-discriminatory legislation in human settlements development. It called for active collaboration between Governments and UNCHS to improve the condition of women in the design, development, governing and management of human settlements, and asked the Executive Director to increase support to Governments for the development of gender-sensitive shelter strategies. The Executive Director was also requested to review key shelter sector performance indicators for gender sensitivity and to supplement them with indicators identifying the possibly disadvantaged position of women in the housing sector. He was also requested to formulate guidelines on women's legal rights to house and land tenure and access to credit; to incorporate those measures into the work programme of the Centre for 1994-1995; to prepare a substantive contribution to the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women; to include the outcome of that Conference in documentation for Habitat II; and to report on the subject in 1995.

Shelter, employment and poverty

Pursuant to a 1991 Commission request,⁽³⁵⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on the relationship between underemployment and unemployment and shelter provision.⁽³⁶⁾ The report provided the rationale for linking shelter and employment in the context of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, examined linkages between housing, human settlements development and employment generation, and appraised the scope and modalities for increasing employment opportunities in poor communities by supporting labour-intensive technologies. It also reviewed recent United Nations efforts to integrate employment-generation and shelter provision, and made suggestions for future research and action. Calling for a common strategy to promote shelter and employment for the poor, the Executive Director recommended that international and national efforts concentrate on projects to test employment-intensive approaches to housing and service supply, the mixed use of residential areas, and technical and organizational skills training.

On 5 May,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission called on UNCHS and the International Labour Organisation to intensify their coordination and cooperation in the areas of employment-generation and labour-intensive programmes. It urged Governments to support labour-intensive technologies in the delivery of shelter, infrastructure and services and to encourage the training and use of the unemployed in those activities. It also called on Governments to introduce legislation bridging the gap between formal-sector and informal-sector activities and to promote building codes, standards and regulations for the use of locally available materials and labour-intensive technologies. Governments were urged to support the establishment and expansion of community-based credit mechanisms for the urban poor, and credit and loan systems for small-scale enterprises. The Executive Director was asked to convene an inter-governmental meeting on strategies for poverty reduction through employment-intensive modes of delivering shelter, infrastructure and services in low-income urban communities, and to increase support to countries interested in new building legislation. He was also urged to increase assistance for employment-intensive approaches to housing, infrastructure and services supply. The Commission recommended that Governments involve small-scale, labour-intensive enterprises in public works activities, and asked the Executive Director to report on the potential of employment-intensive shelter programmes to the World Summit for Social Development in 1995.

On 5 May,⁽³⁸⁾ the Commission encouraged all States that had not done so to ratify all international treaties containing the human right to adequate housing, in particular the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.⁽³⁹⁾ It invited all States to repeal, reform or amend legislation, policies or programmes negatively affecting that right and to provide the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights with any relevant information. Governments were urged to cease practices such as forced evictions and any other form of discrimination in the housing sphere, and to establish mechanisms for monitoring homelessness, inadequate housing conditions, persons without security of tenure and other related issues impeding the efficiency of the shelter sector. The Commission encouraged States to take legislative action for the realization of the right to adequate housing, and recommended that the issue be considered by the Preparatory Committee for Habitat II. The Executive Director was asked to solicit States' views on the most effective ways of implementing and monitoring the right to adequate housing and to report in 1995 on possible contributions by UNCHS towards that end, including the development of an integrated monitoring system by the Centre and United Nations human rights bodies.

Environmental aspects of human settlements

In response to a 1991 Commission request,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Executive Director reported in February 1993 on the outcome of UNCED, with special reference to human settlements issues, and the follow-up activities of UNCHS.⁽⁴¹⁾ The report outlined ongoing and planned activities to promote: the development of sustainable human settlements and adequate shelter for all; improved settlements management; sustainable land-use planning and management; the integrated provision of environmental infrastructure, including water, sanitation and solid-waste disposal; sustainable energy and transportation systems in human settlements; settlement planning and management in disaster-prone areas; sustainable construction industry activities; and human resource development and capacity-building. Other related areas addressed by UNCED included protection of the atmosphere, oceans and coastal areas and human settlements activities involving NGOs and women.

Urban areas, environment and energy

An expert group meeting (Lund, Sweden, 8-12 March), convened by UNCHS in cooperation with the Governments of the Netherlands and Sweden, discussed strategies for implementing Agenda 21 as it related to human settlements, with special emphasis on urban areas, the environment and energy. The meeting stressed the need to provide access to environmentally sound basic services for all, and to maximize public participation and the use of local resources in urban development programmes. It emphasized the central role of women in energy and environmental management, suggested the development of a framework to evaluate the sustainability of urban development, and recommended the establishment of a network for interregional and intercountry exchanges of information, and monitoring of the implementation of Agenda 21 in the context of urban energy and shelter.

On 5 May,⁽⁴²⁾ the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to integrate the meeting's conclusions into the Centre's work programme and to disseminate its recommendations within and outside the United Nations system. The Preparatory Committee for Habitat II was invited to use the report and its recommendations in its work.

Disaster and post-war reconstruction

On 5 May, the Commission recommended⁽⁴³⁾ that UNCHS play an active role in the work of the recently established Inter-Agency Standing Committee (see PART THREE, Chapter III). It also requested⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Executive Director to make arrangements for assistance to Cuba, which had recently suffered considerable loss of life and damage to its economy, housing and other infrastructure during a severe storm. It was requested that assistance focus on the reconstruction and development of Cuba's housing sector and the preservation of urban areas in disaster-prone zones. (For further details, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

UN Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)

Activities

In 1993, UNCHS supported 257 technical cooperation programmes and projects in 95 countries, with an overall budget in excess of $42 million. A total of 42 new projects were approved and became operational during the year, while 48 others were completed. The Centre provided special advisory services in human settlements finance, building materials and construction technology, and the application of microcomputer technology to data management. It fielded a total of 10 technical assistance missions to Brazil, Costa Rica, Egypt, Italy, Japan, Myanmar, the Philippines and the United States. Another mission went to Ghana as part of the Sustainable Cities Programme (see below).

The 1992-1993 UNCHS work programme was structured under eight subprogrammes: global issues and strategies; national policies and instruments; integrated settlements management; financial resources; land management; infrastructure development and operation; housing production; and the construction sector. In 1993, the Commission on Human Settlements had before it a report of the Executive Director on the implementation of the work programme.⁽¹⁾

The first subprogramme helped developing countries to formulate and implement national shelter strategies in accordance with the Global Strategy for Shelter. Its GSS in Action provided an overview of the Strategy's main recommendations and highlighted them in 22 success stories from 17 countries. The Strategy was reviewed at a regional seminar for South Pacific countries (Brisbane, Australia, 13-17 April).

The objective of the second subprogramme was to analyse national human settlements policies and instruments, prepare policy options and guidelines for sustainable human settlements programmes, and assist with investment planning and translation of the Global Strategy at the national level. Activities in that area included a workshop on gender-aware approaches to human settlements development (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 11-13 June) and the training of trainers in local government management for east and southern African countries (Livingstone, Zambia, 9-29 May).

The third subprogramme focused on metropolitan, secondary-centre and subnational systems management and human resources development. The Centre continued its research project on metropolitan planning and management in the developing world, initiated in 1990, and issued a related publication on spatial decentralization policies implemented in Bombay, India, and Cairo, Egypt. Among other publications were the Gestión urbana en ciudades intermedias de America Latina and The Management of Human Settlements: The Municipal Level. The Centre also participated in the World Conference on Metropolitan Governance, held in Tokyo, which focused on decentralization and modernization of metropolitan management as well as on city-to-city and private/public co-operation.

The financial resources subprogramme analysed the ability of housing-finance institutions to address the increasing demand for housing and services. The Centre was preparing technical publications on selected national proposals for housing-finance programmes, and case-studies of innovative housing-finance institutions and housing as a source of economic activity. Another publication dealt with the role of cooperatives and credit unions in mobilizing finance for the improvement of low-income human settlements. UNCHS also co-sponsored a course on housing in development, attended by housing officials from east and southern Africa (Nairobi, 27 March-24 April).

The fifth subprogramme focused on land management and ways of ensuring a steady, adequate and affordable supply of land for all settlement needs. Work continued on reviewing and updating technical and administrative requirements to improve the operation of land registration and information systems. In 1993, the Centre published a study of Australia's experience in the development of land-title registration systems and organized an international seminar on new approaches to land regularization policies in developing countries (Mexico City, 23-26 February).

Activities under the infrastructure development and operation subprogramme were carried out under the Settlement Infrastructure and Environment Programme, which was initiated in 1992 to develop an integrated approach to the planning, delivery, maintenance and management of environmental infrastructure and services in human settlements. In 1993, as part of the Programme's waste-management component, the Centre started a project on small-scale composting and digestion of organic municipal refuse and held a regional workshop on solid-waste recycling and reuse in developing countries (Manila, Philippines, 20-22 January). It was also formulating projects for the development of waste-management tools at the municipal level and on environmental and health risk assessment of solid-waste management. The Centre began field research activities on the integrated management of water resources and environmental infrastructure in Ecuador, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nicaragua and Zambia, and continued studies of urban water-resource management in eight Asian megacities. The environmental health component included a project on crowding and health in low-income settlements and related workshops in Indonesia (Jakarta, 16 February) and Guinea-Bissau (Bissau, 13 May).

The seventh subprogramme, on housing production, paid special attention to the needs and potentials of the poorest groups. A regional workshop on community participation and training for settlement development was held (Ndola, Zambia, 7-11 June), and an international seminar on enabling community management was organized in October for high-level government officials, community leaders and project personnel from Bolivia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Ghana, Sri Lanka, Uganda and Zambia.

The eighth subprogramme focused on the construction sector, the transfer of small-scale technologies to local building materials industries, and skills development and upgrading. In collaboration with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Centre convened the first global consultation on the construction industry (Tunis, Tunisia, 3-7 May) to discuss natural resource consumption by the industry, physical disruption caused by construction activities and increased environmental pollution. It also continued to publish its Journal of the Network of African Countries on Local Building Materials and Technologies.

UNCHS participated in the annual Conference of Ministers responsible for human settlements in Central and Eastern Europe (Romania, 24-26 March), a conference on habitat: proposals for a "liveable" environment (Bormio, Italy, May), and a design workshop on regional development for east and southern Africa (Harare, Zimbabwe, 1-5 June). The Centre continued to issue Habitat News and the UNCHS (Habitat) Shelter Bulletin, and prepared a number of technical publications, audio-visual aids and information kits.

The 1993 Habitat Scroll of Honour Awards for outstanding contributions by individuals, organizations and projects to the shelter delivery process were presented to the Cites Unies Développement (France), the Build-Together Programme (Namibia) and, posthumously, to Anthony William Bullard (United Kingdom) and Zia ul Haq (Afghanistan)—UNCHS staff members killed in an ambush in Afghanistan.

Improvement of municipal management

The UNCHS/UNDP/World Bank 10-year Urban Management Programme (UMP) was designed to strengthen the contribution of municipalities in developing countries towards human development, economic growth, poverty alleviation and environmental enhancement. Its first phase (1986-1991) focused on land management, municipal finance and administration, infrastructure, urban environment and, as of 1991, urban poverty alleviation. The second phase (1992-1996) was aimed at building the capacity of developing countries to address those five programme areas. It included city and country consultations; technical cooperation through regional panels of experts in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean and the Arab States; and global support from UMP nucleus teams to continue research on efficient urban management, to synthesize past experiences and to disseminate UMP-related materials. Aggregate resources for the second phase were in excess of $25 million. The first African regional workshop on urban management was held at Nairobi (11-15 January) and the sixth annual review meeting of UMP also took place (The Hague, Netherlands, 30 June and 1 July).

An operational arm of UMP's urban environmental component, the Sustainable Cities Programme, was launched by UNCHS in 1990 to help municipal authorities improve their environmental planning and management capacity. The Programme's demonstration projects resulted in broad-based environmental strategies, priority capital investment projects and strengthened urban management capacities. City-level demonstration activities were under way in 12 countries and UNCHS began projects in four cities—Dar es Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania), Ismailia (Egypt), Concepcion (Chile) and Madras (India). The project in Ismailia was reviewed at a consultation on the city's sustainable growth and development (Abu Sultan, Egypt, 5-8 July). Six more city-level demonstrations were to be launched in 1993-1994 in Accra (Ghana), Ibadan (Nigeria), Tunis (Tunisia), Jakarta (Indonesia), Guayaquil (Ecuador) and Katowice (Poland). In addition, Berlin, Moscow, Tianjin (China) and Plovdiv (Bulgaria) expressed interest in participating in the Programme.

Another joint UNCHS/UNDP/World Bank initiative, the City Data Programme, was launched in 1991 to identify key urban indicators for planning and management decisions and promote data collection and dissemination. Programme activities included the UNCHS-CitiBase project to develop a global urban-data collection and dissemination system, pilot projects in Kenya and Romania, and the development of a visual settlement planning approach to improve low-income and informal settlements. Activities in 1993 included a regional seminar on strategic options for public transport improvements in large cities of developing countries (Pune, India, 27 and 28 January) and a capacity-building workshop on information dissemination strategies for urban management (Dakar, Senegal, 6-8 July).

In January 1993, the Executive Director submitted to the Commission a report on the improvement of municipal management.⁽⁴⁵⁾ It discussed the need for a radically new look at the role of cities in national and global development, and for municipal management that involved the whole population in city development. It identified the key areas for improved municipal management as land management, infrastructure and services, transport, financial management and organizational performance. The report suggested options for partnerships between municipalities, for central-government support and for international cooperation. The Executive Director recommended that the Commission consider: ways for municipal management to address urban poverty issues; ways of promoting institutional and sectoral partnerships; steps to strengthen institutional capacity-building; the issue of metropolitan management; and possible new initiatives under the Centre's technical support programmes.

On 5 May,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Commission adopted a broader concept of municipal management and recommended that the authority of municipal governments to develop and manage local revenues according to principles of efficiency, equity and fairness be recognized. It urged municipal governments to cooperate with NGOs, community organizations and the private sector in identifying priority problems and facilitating public-private partnerships. The Executive Director was requested to develop guidelines to improve the management and living conditions in different settlements and to report on the subject in 1995.

Work programme

In February, the Executive Director submitted to the Commission a draft 1994-1995 work programme for UNCHS,⁽⁴⁷⁾ based on the eight sub-programme areas of the 1992-1997 medium-term plan.

On 5 May,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Commission adopted the work programme having amended specific programme outputs and added activities in such areas as comparative shelter strategy development, municipal management, settlements financing, infrastructure development and technology transfer. It also designated 16 programme priorities.

Coordination

In May, the Commission had before it a joint progress report of the Executive Directors of UNCHS and the United Nations Environment Programme⁽⁴⁹⁾ describing cooperation in such areas as the assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; environmental aspects of policies, planning and management in rural and urban settlements; environmentally sound human settlements technology; and research, training and the dissemination of information.

The Commission, having considered the joint report as well as the UNCHS Executive Director's reports on coordination and cooperation,⁽⁵⁰⁾ requested⁽⁵¹⁾ him to intensify the coordination of United Nations system-wide activities, particularly those relating to implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter and the human settlements aspects of Agenda 21, and to report in 1995 on further areas of collaboration emerging from Agenda 21. He was also asked to continue close cooperation between the Centre, universities, research and scientific institutes, NGOs and voluntary groups, and to report on the results in 1995.

The Commission confirmed⁽⁵²⁾ the importance of UNCHS as a focal point for human settlements action within the United Nations system and recommended that it increase its assistance to countries in formulating solutions to human settlements problems. The Executive Director was asked to report in 1995 on the Centre's new objectives and its role within the United Nations system.

The Commission endorsed⁽⁵³⁾ the conclusions and recommendations of the 1992 Meeting on Governmental-Non-Governmental Cooperation in the Field of Human Settlements⁽⁵⁴⁾ and encouraged Member States to cooperate with non-governmental and community-based organizations. Member States were urged to involve NGOs in the promotion of public awareness and implementation and monitoring of the Global Strategy for Shelter and relevant parts of Agenda 21. The Executive Director was requested to consult regularly with representatives of those organizations and to strengthen their research, training and dissemination capacity. The Commission asked the Secretary-General of Habitat II to facilitate their involvement in the Conference and its preparations.

As a follow-up to the 1992 Meeting, the Centre organized an international seminar in 1993 in Tokyo on housing settlement policy. It examined prospects for partnerships between Governments and NGOs, prepared several reports for the 1993 meeting of the Subcommittee on Rural Development (formerly the Task Force on Rural Development) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and issued a related publication on rural regional settlement systems in Africa.

Triennial policy review of human settlements activities

In 1992,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the General Assembly had requested executive heads of United Nations agencies to submit progress reports to their governing bodies concerning the triennial policy review of operational activities of the United Nations development system in their respective fields. In a March 1993 report,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Executive Director analysed issues to be addressed in the policy review and suggested that the Commission consider measures to strengthen the UNCHS capacity to provide policy advice and technical support at the country level, and to strengthen and expand the Centre's training programmes.

In May,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Commission supported the Centre's initiatives to expand its programme for in-country human settlements analysis and needs assessment, and its shelter sector indicators programme. It also endorsed efforts to expand in-country capacity-building.

CPC consideration. In March, the Secretary-General presented to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) a triennial review of the implementation of its recommendations concerning the evaluation of the human settlements programme.⁽⁵⁸⁾ He assessed the implementation of CPC's recommendations on coordination, programme planning, information dissemination and the intergovernmental review of the in-depth evaluation, and provided suggestions for national focal points and NGOs to improve United Nations activities in human settlements. The Secretary-General recommended that UNCHS and the regional units adopt the suggestions, agree on their respective roles and appropriate coordination mechanisms, and reflect the views of governmental experts and NGOs in proposed work programmes. He also recommended that the Preparatory Committee for Habitat II be informed of CPC's decisions on coordination.

In May,⁽⁵⁹⁾ CPC endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations.

Global Parliamentarians on Habitat

At their seventh meeting (Nairobi, 3 May 1993), the Global Parliamentarians on Habitat agreed to raise major human settlements problems in their national parliaments. They decided to become an incorporated body and to participate in the preparations for Habitat II, and asked the UNCHS Executive Director to extend support to their 1994 meeting, to be held in Mexico.

On 5 May,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Commission took note of and annexed to its resolution the conclusion reached by the meeting.

Financing

The Centre's work programme was financed from the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. UNCHS project delivery in 1993 amounted to $44.4 million, including projects financed by UNDP ($22.3 million), the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation ($12.7 million) and other sources ($9.4 million).

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

As at 1 March 1993,⁽⁶¹⁾ voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Set-

dements Foundation consisted of unpaid pledges of $937,612 and pledges for 1993 of $6.68 million. Income for the biennium ended 31 December 1993 was estimated at $22,680,746, against estimated expenditures of $23,628,142. Combined pledges by Governments for the same period amounted to $20,562,254.

At a pledging meeting held during the Commission's 1993 session, 18 countries made pledges to the Centre and the Foundation. In addition, some 40 States pledged $758,025 at the November United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

In February 1993, the Executive Director reported on the Foundation's proposed budget for the biennium 1994-1995.⁽⁶²⁾ The report estimated income for that period at $21,741,700, including $18.2 million in expected contributions and pledges. Estimated expenditures totalled $19,842,300 plus an allocation of $600,000 to the reserve fund, leaving an expected balance of $1,299,400. The concurring report of ACABQ and the projected use of the Centre's extrabudgetary resources in 1994-

1995 were submitted as addenda to the proposed budget.

The Commission adopted the budget on 5 May.⁽⁶³⁾

Chapter X

Human rights

In 1993—the forty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights—the United Nations continued its efforts to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The World Conference on Human Rights, which was held at Vienna in June, adopted the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, by which participating Governments reaffirmed their solemn commitment to a broad range of human rights and fundamental freedoms and called for measures to strengthen international human rights instruments and their monitoring mechanisms. As recommended in the Declaration, the General Assembly, in December, created the post of High Commissioner for Human Rights (resolution 48/141).

The year marked the International Year of the World's Indigenous People. In December, the Assembly proclaimed the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, to begin on 10 December 1994 (Human Rights Day), with the goal of strengthening international cooperation to solve problems faced by indigenous people in areas such as human rights, the environment, development, education and health (48/163). It also proclaimed the third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, beginning in 1993, and adopted the Programme of Action for the Decade (48/91).

The Human Rights Commission established a Working Group on the Right to Development to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development. Progress was made by the Working Group to Elaborate a Draft Optional Protocol to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Work continued on a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms and on a draft declaration defining gross and large-scale violations of human rights as an international crime.

Alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined.

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-ninth session at Geneva from 1 February to 12 March, during which it adopted 98 resolutions and 16 decisions.

The Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its forty-fifth session at Geneva from 2 to 27 August. At that session, it adopted 46 resolutions and 11 de-

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

In 1993, United Nations efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination continued to be carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989 put forward in 1984⁽¹⁾ and the plan approved by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽²⁾ covering the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 Commission on Human Rights request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General reported on progress made in carrying out the plan of activities to implement the Programme of Action.⁽⁴⁾ He described United Nations seminars, publications and studies, action taken by United Nations bodies, and the status of the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade. He presented perspectives on proclaiming a third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination, which might serve as a basis for the Commission's debate on the subject.

Pursuant to an Economic and Social Council 1985 request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, in a May report, ⁽⁶⁾ described recent activities by United Nations bodies to implement the Programme for the Second Decade and stated that the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (22 March 1993) had focused on the theme "Racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and violence: what can the United Nations do?". As authorized by the Council in 1990,⁽⁷⁾ a meeting of representatives of national institutions and organizations promoting tolerance and harmony and combating racism and racial discrimination took place (Sydney, Australia, 19-23 April). The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade.

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽⁸⁾ the final draft of the model legislation to guide Governments in enacting legislation against racial discrimination, as revised by the Secretariat in accordance with comments made by members of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, was submitted in October.⁽⁹⁾

On 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 48/426, took note of the draft model legislation.

Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003)

Draft programme of action

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General, in May 1993,⁽⁶⁾ presented a revised draft programme of action for the third decade in light of observations made in the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights. The revisions were based on the elements for the programme of action put forward by the Secretary-General in 1992.⁽¹¹⁾

As requested by the Assembly in 1992,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in (October a new draft programme of action for the third decade, taking into account comments made by the Assembly in 1992 and by the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1993.⁽¹²⁾ The draft also included proposals put forward in 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights"), suggestions made at a non-governmental organization (NGO) forum (Vienna, 10-12 June 1993) and recommendations adopted by An international consultation of NGOs on racism, xenophobia, racial and ethnic intolerance and conflicts (Geneva, 15-17 September 1993) organized by the NGO Subcommittee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization in cooperation with the United Nations Centre for Human Rights. Those recommendations were annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

The new draft elements emphasized measures to be taken by the Assembly and Security Council for the complete elimination of apartheid and support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa and to counteract the legacy of cultural, economic and social inequality left by apartheid. Actions proposed at the international, national and regional levels included ratification and implementation of international instruments to combat racism and racial discrimination; activities by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO); basic research and studies; resolution of ethnic conflicts; cooperation with United Nations efforts; measures in the areas of teaching, education and culture; activities involving the mass media; and measures to protect vulnerable groups and populations disadvantaged as a result of racism or racial discrimination. The importance of coordination and reporting between United Nations bodies was also discussed.

The Secretary-General suggested that the goals and objectives of the third decade be the same as those adopted by the Assembly in 1973 for the first Decade.⁽¹³⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February 1993,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission appealed to all States that had not ratified or acceded to the relevant international instruments to combat racism and racial discrimination to do so. It urged Governments to combat new forms of racism and asked them, and international organizations and NGOs, to increase their activities to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to study the effects of racial discrimination on children of minorities and those of migrant workers in the areas of education, training and employment, and to submit recommendations on measures to combat those effects. The Commission asked UNESCO to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and aids to promote educational and training activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination. Member States were called on to consider signing and ratifying the 1992 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families⁽¹⁵⁾ as a matter of priority.

Regretting that most activities scheduled for 1992-1993 had not been implemented due to lack of resources, the Commission called on the international community to provide financial resources for efficient action against racism and racial discrimination and appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund. It asked Governments, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to participate in activities scheduled for 1990-1993 that had not yet been carried out.

The Commission recommended that activities related to a draft programme of action for a third decade, as contained in a 1992 report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹¹⁾ be undertaken and reviewed at mid-term. It asked the Secretary-General, in preparing the draft programme of action, to accord the highest priority to activities for monitoring the transition to a non-racist society in South Africa. Governments were called on to encourage further positive change in South Africa, based on guidelines contained in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa.⁽¹⁶⁾ It recommended that 1992-1993 activities that had not been implemented because of lack of resources be included in the draft programme of action for the third decade along with other proposed activities annexed to its resolution. It decided to consider the draft programme of action in 1994.

On 2 March,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission took note of a 1992 report by the Secretary-General⁽¹⁸⁾ describing trends in racism, racial discrimination, intolerance and xenophobia and recommended that the General Assembly take steps to launch a third decade, beginning in 1993. The Commission confirmed the importance of a complementarity of economic, social, educational and information measures at the national level, including legislative, administrative and penal measures, and of international measures, and urged Governments to take measures and develop policies to combat racism and eliminate discrimination. It decided to appoint, for three years, a special rapporteur to address contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia who would report to the Commission annually, beginning in 1994. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the special rapporteur in performing his or her functions.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/258 of 28 July, approved the Commission's decision to appoint a special rapporteur and its request to the Secretary-General for assistance.

The Chairman of the Commission appointed Robert Dossou (Benin) as Special Rapporteur.

Subcommission action. On 16 August,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Subcommission recommended that the Special Rapporteur examine situations in various regions, beginning with incidents that were increasing in the developed countries, and the theories and attitudes of racial superiority that incited them. It recommended that he report to the Subcommission in 1994 and that arrangements be made to convene, at that time, a joint meeting between the Subcommission and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, with a view to elaborating recommendations concerning the importance of the complementarity of economic, social, educational and information measures at the national level, including legislative, administrative and penal measures, and of international measures. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to prepare, for that meeting, a survey of efforts by United Nations bodies to prevent and combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, together with proposals on how those efforts could be strengthened and better coordinated.

Other action. In March,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination discussed a possible third decade and expressed interest in holding seminars on themes, including the effectiveness of national legislation and recourse procedures available to victims of racism; the eradication of incitement to racial hatred and discrimination; and the problem of refugee flows resulting from ethnic conflicts or political restructuring.

The Committee Chairman informed the Commission on Human Rights of the Committee's readiness to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia and related forms of intolerance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/8 without vote.

Third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination

Recalling its resolution 1992/13 of 20 July 1992,

Reaffirming the purpose set forth in the Charter of the United Nations of achieving international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling that in resolution 1992/13, it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a draft programme of action for the third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, taking into account, inter alia, the elements of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination that had not yet been fully implemented,

Recalling also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 47/77 of 16 December 1992, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, and requested him to submit to the Assembly, at its forty-eighth session, a new draft programme of action for the third decade,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Convinced that it is necessary that the General Assembly proclaim in 1993 a third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination as a means of intensifying national and international efforts in this field,

Taking into account the progress made towards building a democratic and united South Africa not based on racial prejudice,

Emphasizing that it is the responsibility of the Government of South Africa to take all necessary measures to stop immediately the violence in that country and to protect the life and property of all South Africans,

Emphasizing also the need for all parties to cooperate in combating violence and to exercise restraint,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989 and contained in the annex thereto,

Deeply concerned about the prevalent of racism and racial tensions, as well as of the rising tide of xenophobia,

Stressing the need to continue the coordination of activities undertaken by various United Nations bodies and specialized agencies for the purpose of implementing the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

1. Declares that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized forms, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session proclaim a third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the draft programme of action for the third decade, to accord the highest priority to activities aimed at monitoring the transition from apartheid to a non-racist society in South Africa;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to take into account the results of the World Conference on Human Rights and the discussion held during the substantive session of 1993 of the Council in the preparation of the programme of action for the third decade;

5. Considers that voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are indispensable for the implementation of the above-mentioned programmes;

6. Calls upon the international community to provide the Secretary-General with appropriate financial resources for efficient action against racism and racial discrimination;

7. Decides to accord the highest priority to the question of the implementation of the programme of action for the third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/8

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/104) without vote, 14 July (meeting 9); draft by France and Senegal (for African States) (E/1993/C.2/L.1), orally revised; agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 48/91 without vote.

Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objectives set forth in 1 be Charter of the United Nations to achieve international cooperation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also the outcome of the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983,

Welcoming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Welcoming also decision 1993/258 taken by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July 1993 concerning the appointment of a special rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, the annex to which contains the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with grave concern that despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the two Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Deeply concerned about the current trend of the evolution of racism into discriminatory practices based on culture, nationality, religion or language,

Recalling in particular its resolution 47/77 of 16 December 1992,

Having considered the report submitted by the Secretary-General within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Firmly convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained measures at the national and international levels for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Welcoming the proposal to launch a third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination,

Convinced of the need to ensure and support the peaceful transition towards a democratic and non-racial South Africa,

Recognizing the importance of strengthening national legislation and institutions for the promotion of racial harmony,

Aware of the importance and the magnitude of the phenomenon of migrant workers, as well as the efforts undertaken by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Recalling the adoption at its forty-fifth session of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Acknowledging that indigenous people are at times victims of particular forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, unanimously adopted by the General Assembly at its sixteenth special session, on 14 December 1989, which offers guidelines on how to end apartheid,

1. Declares once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, whether in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority and/or exclusivity, such as "ethnic cleansing", are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Decides to proclaim the ten-year period beginning in 1993 as the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and to adopt the Programme of Action proposed for the Third Decade contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Calls upon Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

4. Urges all Governments to take all necessary measures to combat new forms of racism, in particular by adapting constantly the methods provided to combat them, especially in the legislative, administrative, educational and information fields;

5. Decides that the international community in general and the United Nations in particular should continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and intensify their efforts, during the Third Decade, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord special attention to the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and to include regularly in his reports all information on such workers;

7. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families as a matter of priority, to enable its entry into force;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue the study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities, in particular those of migrant workers, in the fields of education, training and employment, and to submit, inter alia, specific recommendations for the implementation of measures to combat the effects of that discrimination;

9. Urges the Secretary-General, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, all Governments, intergovernmental organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations, in implementing the Programme of Action for the Third Decade, to pay particular attention to the situation of indigenous people;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to revise and finalize the draft model legislation for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination, in the light of comments made by members of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at its fortieth and forty-first sessions and to publish and distribute the text as soon as possible;

11. Renews its invitation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

12. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Third Decade should be given equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Third Decade;

13. Regrets that some of the activities scheduled for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been implemented because of lack of adequate resources;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary financial resources are provided for the implementation of the activities of the Third Decade during the biennium 1994-1995;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to accord the highest priority to the activities of the Programme of Action for the Third Decade that aim at monitoring the transition from apartheid to a non-racist society in South Africa;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit each year to the Economic and Social Council a detailed report on all activities of United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies containing an analysis of information received on such activities to combat racism and racial discrimination;

17. Invites the Secretary-General to submit proposals to the General Assembly with a view to supplementing, if necessary, the Programme of Action for the Third Decade;

18. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate fully in the Third Decade;

19. Invites all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives;

20. Decides to keep the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination" on its agenda and to consider it as a matter of the highest priority at its forty-ninth session.

ANNEX

Programme of Action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003)

Introduction

1. The goals and objectives of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are those adopted by the General Assembly for the first Decade and contained in paragraph 8 of the annex to its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973:

"The ultimate goals of the Decade are to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind on grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, especially by eradicating racial prejudice, racism and racial discrimination; to arrest any expansion of racist policies, to eliminate the persistence of racist policies and to counteract the emergence of alliances based on mutual espousal of racism and racial discrimination; to resist any policy and practices which lead to the strengthening of the racist regimes and contribute to the sustainment of racism and racial discrimination; to identify, isolate and dispel the fallacious and mythical beliefs, policies and practices that contribute to racism and racial discrimination; and to put an end to racist regimes."

2. In drawing up suggested elements for the Programme of Action for the Third Decade, account has been taken of the fact that current global economic conditions have caused many Member States to call for budgetary restraint, which in turn requires a conservative approach to the number and type of programmes of action that may be considered at this time. The Secretary-General also took into account the relevant suggestions made by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at its forty-first session. The elements presented below have been suggested as those which are essential, should resources be made available to implement them.

Measures to ensure a peaceful transition from apartheid to a democratic, non-racial regime in South Africa

3. Recently, there have been signs of change in South Africa, notably the abolition of such legal pillars of apartheid as the Group Areas Act, the Land Areas Act and the Population Registration Act. Although there is reason to be hopeful that South Africa is moving into the mainstream of the international community, the transition period may prove to be difficult and dangerous. Fierce political competition between political parties and ethnic groups has in fact already led to bloodshed.

4. The General Assembly and the Security Council should therefore continue to exercise constant vigilance with regard to South Africa until a democratic regime is installed in that country. These two bodies might, moreover, consider initiating a mechanism to advise and assist the parties concerned in order to bring apartheid to an end, not only in law but also in fact. Reference should be made to Security Council resolution 765(1992) of 16 July 1992 urging the South African authorities to bring an effective end to the violence and bring those responsible to justice.

5. The General Assembly will continue to examine the relevant work undertaken by the established United Nations bodies in the fight against apartheid, that is, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Group of Three and the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa.

Measures to remedy the legacy of cultural, economic and social disparities left by apartheid

6. Action will be needed to rectify the consequences of apartheid in South Africa, since the policy of apartheid has entailed the use of State power to increase inequalities between racial groups. The knowledge and experience of human rights bodies dealing with racial discrimination could be most useful in promoting equality. Assistance to the victims of the political antagonisms resulting from the process of dismantling apartheid must also be given the greatest attention, and international solidarity on their behalf should be intensified.

7. The Centre for Human Rights should offer technical assistance in the field of human rights to South Africa during and after the transition period. A cycle of seminars intended to encourage (the advent of an egalitarian society should be envisaged, in cooperation with the concerned specialized agencies and units of the United Nations Secretariat, which could include the following:

(a) Seminar on measures to be taken on behalf of the disadvantaged groups in South African society in the cultural, economic and social fields ("positive discrimination");

(b) Seminar on the effects of racial discrimination on the health of members of disadvantaged groups;

(c) Training courses in human rights for the South African police force, military and judiciary.

8. In addition, in cooperation with the democratically elected Government of South Africa, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization might undertake a project for the total revision of the South African educational system in order to eliminate all methods and references of a racist character.

Action at the international level

9. During the discussion at the substantive session of 1992 of the Economic and Social Council concerning the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, many delegations expressed their concern with regard to new expressions of racism, racial discrimination, intolerance and xenophobia in various parts of the world. In particular, these affect minorities, ethnic groups, migrant workers, indigenous populations, nomads, immigrants and refugees.

10. The biggest contribution to the elimination of racial discrimination will be that which results from the actions of States within their own territories. International action undertaken as part of any programme for the Third Decade should therefore be directed so as to assist States to act effectively. The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination has established standards for States, and every opportunity should be seized to ensure that these are universally accepted and applied.

11. The General Assembly should consider more effective action to ensure that all States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination fulfil their reporting and financial obligations. National action against racism and racial discrimination should be monitored and improved by requesting an expert member of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to prepare a report on obstacles encountered with respect to the effective implementation of the Convention by States parties and suggestions for remedial measures.

12. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to organize regional workshops and seminars. A team from the Committee should be invited to monitor these meetings. The following themes are suggested for the seminars:

(a) Seminar to assess the experience gained in the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. The seminar would also assess the efficiency of national legislation and recourse procedures available to victims of racism;

(b) Seminar on the eradication of incitement to racial hatred and discrimination, including the prohibition of propaganda activities and of organizations involved in them;

(c) Seminar on the right to equal treatment before tribunals and other judicial institutions, including the provision of reparation for damages suffered as a result of discrimination;

(d) Seminar on the transmission of racial inequality from one generation to another, with special reference to the children of migrant workers and the appearance of new forms of segregation;

(e) Seminar on immigration and racism;

(f) Seminar on international cooperation in the elimination of racial discrimination, including cooperation between States, the contribution of non-governmental organizations, national and regional institutions, United Nations bodies and petitions to treaty-monitoring bodies;

(g) Seminar on the enactment of national legislation to combat racism and racial discrimination affecting ethnic groups, migrant workers and refugees (in Europe and North America);

(h) Seminar on flows of refugees resulting from ethnic conflicts or political restructuring of multi-ethnic societies in socio-economic transition (Eastern Europe, Africa and Asia) and their link with racism in the host country;

(i) Training course on national legislation prohibiting racial discrimination for nationals from countries with and without such legislation;

(j) Regional seminars on nationalism, ethno-nationalism and human rights could also provide an opportunity for broadening knowledge of the causes of today's ethnic conflicts and particularly of the so-called policy of "ethnic cleansing", in order to provide solutions.

13. The General Assembly requests the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to undertake specific activities that could be carried out by Governments and relevant national non-governmental organizations to commemorate the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on 21 March each year. Support should be sought from artists, as well as religious leaders, trade unions, enterprises and political parties, to sensitize the population on the evils of racism and racial discrimination.

14. The Department of Public Information should also publish its posters for the Third Decade and informative brochures on the activities planned for the Decade. Documentary films and reports, as well as radio broadcasts on the damaging effects of racism and racial discrimination, should, moreover, be considered.

15. In cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Department of Public Information, the General Assembly supports the organization of a seminar on the role of mass media in combating or disseminating racist ideas.

16. In cooperation with the International Labour Organisation, the possibility of organizing a seminar on the role of trade unions in combating racism and racial discrimination in employment should be explored.

17. The General Assembly invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education.

18. The General Assembly calls upon Member States to make special efforts:

(a) To promote the aim of non-discrimination in all educational programmes and policies;

(b) To give special attention to the civic education of teachers. It is essential that teachers be aware of the principles and essential content of the legal texts relevant to racism and racial discrimination and of how to deal with the problem of relations between children belonging to different communities;

(c) To teach contemporary history at an early age, presenting children with an accurate picture of the crimes committed by fascist and other totalitarian regimes, and more particularly of the crimes of apartheid and genocide;

(d) To ensure that curricula and textbooks reflect anti-racist principles and promote intercultural education.

Action at the national and regional levels

19. The following questions are addressed in the context of action to be taken at the national and regional levels: have there been any successful national models to eliminate racism and racial prejudices that could be recommended to States, for example, for educating children, or principles of equality to tackle racism against migrant workers, ethnic minorities or indigenous people? What kind of affirmative action programmes are there at the national or regional level to redress discrimination against specific groups?

20. The General Assembly recommends that States that have not yet done so adopt, ratify and implement legislation prohibiting racism and racial discrimination, such as the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.

21. The General Assembly recommends that Member States review their national programmes to combat racial discrimination and its effects in order to identify and to seize opportunities to close gaps between different groups, and especially to undertake housing, educational and employment programmes that have proved to be successful in combating racial discrimination and xenophobia.

22. The General Assembly recommends that Member States encourage the participation of journalists and human rights advocates from minority groups and communities in the mass media. Radio and television programmes should increase the number of broadcasts produced by and in cooperation with racial and cultural minority groups. Multicultural activities of the media should also be encouraged where they can contribute to the suppression of racism and xenophobia.

23. The General Assembly recommends that regional organizations cooperate closely with United Nations efforts to combat racism and racial discrimination. Regional organizations dealing with human rights issues could mobilize public opinion in their regions against the evils of racism and racial prejudices directed towards disadvantaged racial and ethnic groups. These institutions could serve an important function in assisting Governments to enact national legislation against racial discrimination and promote adoption and application of international conventions. Regional human rights commissions should be called upon to publicize widely basic texts on existing human rights instruments.

Basic research and studies

24. The long-term viability of the United Nations programme against racism and racial discrimination will depend in part on continuing research into the causes of racism and into the new manifestations of racism and racial discrimination. The General Assembly may wish to examine the importance of preparing studies on racism. The following are some aspects to be studied:

- (a) Application of article 2 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. Such a study might assist States to learn from one another the national measures taken to implement the Convention;
- (b) Economic factors contributing to perpetuation of racism and racial discrimination;
- (c) Integration or preservation of cultural identity in a multiracial or multi-ethnic society;
- (d) Political rights, including the participation of various racial groups in political processes and their representation in government service;
- (e) Civil rights, including migration, nationality and freedom of opinion and association;
- (f) Educational measures to combat racial prejudice and discrimination and to propagate the principles of the United Nations;
- (g) Socio-economic costs of racism and racial discrimination;
- (h) Global integration and the question of racism and the nation State;
- (i) National mechanisms against racism and racial discrimination in the fields of immigration, employment, salary, housing, education and ownership of property.

Coordination and reporting

25. It may be relevant to recall that in its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, in which it proclaimed the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the General Assembly charged the Economic and Social Council with coordinating the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade and evaluating the activities. The Assembly decides that the following steps should be taken to strengthen the United Nations input into the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination:

- (a) The General Assembly entrusts the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, in cooperation with the Secretary-General, with the responsibility for coordinating the programmes and evaluating the activities undertaken in connection with the Third Decade;
- (b) The Secretary-General is invited to provide specific information on activities against racism, to be contained in one annual report, which should be comprehensive in nature and allow a general overview of all mandated activities. This will facilitate coordination and evaluation;
- (c) An open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights, or other appropriate arrangements under the Commission, may be established to review Decade-related information on the basis of the annual reports referred to above, as well as relevant studies and reports of seminars, to assist the Commission in formulating appropriate recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on particular activities, allocation of priorities and so on.

26. Furthermore, an inter-agency meeting should be organized immediately after the proclamation of the Third Decade, in 1994, with a view to planning working meetings and other activities.

Regular system-wide consultations

27. On an annual basis, consultations between the United Nations, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations should take place to review and plan Decade-related activities. In this framework, the Centre for Human Rights should organize inter-agency meetings to consider and discuss further measures to strengthen the coordination and cooperation of programmes related to the issues of combating racism and racial discrimination.

28. The Centre should also strengthen the relationship with non-governmental organizations fighting against racism and racial discrimination by holding consultations and briefings with the non-governmental organizations. Such meetings could help them to initiate, develop and present proposals regarding the struggle against racism and racial discrimination.

29. The Secretary-General should include the activities to be carried out during the Decade, as well as the related resource requirements, in the proposed programme budgets, which will be submitted biennially, during the Decade, starting with the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995.

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1993,⁽²⁰⁾ there were 137 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965⁽²¹⁾ and in force since 1969.⁽²²⁾ Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Czech Republic, the Republic of Moldova and Slovakia became parties during 1993.

Implementation of the Convention

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1993, both at Geneva: the forty-second session from 1 to 19 March and the forty-third from 2 to 20 August.⁽¹⁹⁾

Most of CERD's work was devoted to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. The Committee considered the reports of 23 States. In its report, it summarized its members' views on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned. CERD adopted an amendment to its general guidelines regarding the form and content of reports to be submitted under article 9, which consisted of inserting a new paragraph concerning information on the ethnic characteristics of the country. Regarding reporting obligations under article 9, CERD, on 19 March, requested further information by 31 July 1993 from Croatia and Serbia and Montenegro,⁽²³⁾ where continuing ethnic conflict was cause for concern. It also encouraged Bosnia and Herzegovina to confirm its adherence to the Convention and, if it proceeded accordingly, to submit information by 31 July 1993 on the implementation of the Convention (for details on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, see below, under "Human rights violations"). All three of the States concerned submitted the requested information, which was considered by CERD in August.

The Committee adopted general recommendations concerning non-citizens; training of law enforcement officials in human rights protection; adherence to the Convention by successor States; article 1.1 of the Convention concerning the definition of racial discrimination; article 4 of the Convention dealing with the penalization of certain categories of misconduct; the application of article 9 of the Convention; and the establishment of national institutions to facilitate the Convention's implementation.

CERD also considered, in conformity with article 14, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Eighteen States parties—Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, the Russian Federation, Senegal, Sweden, Ukraine and Uruguay—had declared such recognition. The text of the Committee's opinion on one communication was annexed to its report.

Under article 15 of the Convention, the Secretary-General transmitted to CERD documents related to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Committee observed that it found it impossible to fulfil its function under article 15 as the documents did not include copies of petitions and did not contain valid information concerning legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures directly related to the Convention's principles and objectives. The Committee asked that appropriate information be furnished.

CERD considered activities to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the launching of a third decade (see above). In August, it discussed the outcome of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights") and its possible implications for the Committee's work.

In October,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that, on 1 March 1993, he had communicated to all States parties an amendment to the Convention, adopted in 1992,⁽²⁵⁾ regarding the financing of CERD. As at 15 September 1993, the amendment, which was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties, had been accepted by five of them. The Secretary-General reported that, as at 31 August, outstanding assessments and arrears totalled $311,540 from 90 States.

On 26 February,⁽²⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights urged States parties to notify the Secretary-General, as depositary of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, of their acceptance of the amendment and welcomed a 1992 General Assembly decision on the financing of CERD.⁽²⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/90 without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and its resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the Convention, which is one of the most widely accepted human rights instruments adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Reiterating once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially its most brutal forms,

Emphasizing the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures in order to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular section II.B, relating to equality, dignity and tolerance,

Calling upon States parties expeditiously to notify the Secretary-General in writing of their agreement to the amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of the Committee, as decided upon at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January 1992 and endorsed in General Assembly resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992,

Welcoming efforts of the Secretary-General to ensure interim financial arrangements for the financing of the expenses incurred by the Committee,

Stressing the importance of enabling the Committee to function smoothly and to have all necessary facilities for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee,

1. Commends the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for its work with regard to the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and for its contribution to the preparation of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Welcomes the innovative procedures adopted by the Committee for reviewing the implementation of the Convention in States whose reports are overdue and for formulating concluding observations on State party reports;

3. Takes note of the general recommendations adopted by the Committee, which concretize the obligations of States parties with regard to the provisions of the Convention, especially General Recommendation XII (42), on successor States, and General Recommendation XV (42), on article 4 of the Convention;

4. Encourages the Committee to continue to exert its efforts to enhance its contributions in the area of prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning and urgent procedures;

5. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the Convention still have not fulfilled their financial obligations, as shown in the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Remains fully aware of the fact that such a situation may lead to a further delay in the discharge by the Committee of its substantive obligations under the Convention;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the work of its forty-second and forty-third sessions;

8. Urges States parties to accelerate their domestic ratification procedures with regard to the amendment concerning the financing of the Committee;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure adequate financial arrangements and appropriate means to enable the functioning of the Committee;

10. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention and to pay their outstanding contributions and, if possible, their contributions for 1994 before 1 February 1994, so as to enable the Committee to meet regularly;

11. Strongly appeals to all States parties, especially those in arrears, to fulfil their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties which are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

13. Decides to consider at its forty-ninth session, under the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination", the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the report of the Committee.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious freedom

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1992,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in a January 1993 report,⁽²⁹⁾ described activities to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief being carried out by the United Nations University (UNU), DPI and under the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights. He reported on progress made in preparing a general comment to be adopted by the Human Rights Committee concerning article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽³⁰⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽³¹⁾ dealing with freedom of thought, conscience and religion (see below, under "Civil and political rights"). He stated that the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance had received substantive assistance in fulfilling his mandate and his report had been issued.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a January report⁽³²⁾ to the Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro (Portugal) stated that he had transmitted to 24 Governments allegations regarding situations which seemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.⁽³³⁾ The allegations were reproduced in the report as were comments received from Governments in response. The majority of allegations pointed to the violation of the right to have the religion or belief of one's choice, the right to change one's religion or belief, the right to manifest and practise one's religion in public and in private, the right to celebrate holidays and ceremonies in accordance with the precepts of one's religion or belief and the right not to be subjected to discrimination on those grounds by any State, institution or group of persons.

The Special Rapporteur stated that many acts of religious intolerance and discrimination continued to be characterized by violence or the threat of its use, including extrajudicial killings, arbitrary imprisonment, enforced disappearance and abduction. He noted, however, continued progress in the area of religious freedom by countries in Eastern Europe, the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Holy See and Israel and efforts to set up a dialogue and create greater understanding between the Catholic and Jewish communities in Spain.

The Special Rapporteur invited Governments facing religious tensions to avail themselves of the advisory services and technical assistance offered by the Centre for Human Rights. He urged States to ratify the relevant international human rights instruments and recommended that they continue to consider preparing a separate binding international instrument on the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief. He believed that States should adapt legislation to existing international standards, particularly the 1981 Declaration, and make available effective administrative and judicial remedies. The Special Rapporteur advocated creating national institutions to promote tolerance in matters of religion and belief and underlined the importance of promoting religious tolerance and understanding by introducing national and international human rights standards in school and university curricula and through teacher training. He emphasized the significant role of media briefings and information seminars aimed at the broadest possible dissemination of the Declaration's principles.

Human Rights Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽³⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights continued in 1993 to consider measures to implement the Declaration. On 5 March,⁽³⁵⁾ it urged States to provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and called on them to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect for freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respected different religions and beliefs. It further called on States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration, the right of all persons to worship or assemble for religious purposes, establish and maintain places to do so and ensure that such places were fully respected and protected. The Commission considered it desirable to enhance United Nations promotional and public information activities relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that measures were taken to that end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to accord high priority to disseminating the Declaration in all United Nations official languages and to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres (UNICs) and other interested bodies. States were called on to consider facilitating the text's dissemination in national and local languages and interested NGOs were asked to consider what further role they play in implementing the Declaration and disseminating it in national and local languages. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur to enable him to report to the Commission in 1994 and also to report himself in 1994.

Following the resignation of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance during the Commission's 1993 session, the Chairman of the Commission appointed Abdelfattah Amor (Tunisia) as his replacement.

Subcommission action. On 13 August,⁽³⁶⁾ the Subcommission recommended to the Commission that it consider organizing, in cooperation with UNESCO, UNU, interested governmental organizations and NGOs and academic and research organizations, a global consultation on the positions and approaches of different religions and beliefs to human rights and fundamental freedoms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/128 without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing that those rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming also its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 47/129 of 18 December 1992, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/25 of 5 March 1993,

Reaffirming the call of the World Conference on Human Rights for all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/17 of 21 February 1992, in which the Commission decided to extend for three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures, as appropriate, and recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1992/226 of 20 July 1992,

Welcoming the appointment of Abdelfattah Amor as Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, and calling upon all Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur to enable him to carry out his mandate fully,

Recognizing that it is desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and that both Governments and non-governmental organizations have an important role to play in this domain,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief,

Conscious of the importance of education in ensuring tolerance of religion and belief,

Alarmed that serious instances, including acts of violence, of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief occur in many parts of the world, as evidenced in the report of the former Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro,

Reaffirming the dismay and condemnation expressed by the World Conference on Human Rights at the continued occurrence of gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights, including religious intolerance,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide full guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there is intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief;

4. Urges all States therefore to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, including those motivated by religious extremism, and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

6. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief, and to establish and maintain places for those purposes;

7. Also calls upon all States in accordance with their national legislation to exert utmost efforts to ensure that religious places and shrines are fully respected and protected;

8. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that appropriate measures are taken to this end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration, in all the official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by the United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

10. Encourages the continuing efforts on the part of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

11. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

12. Recommends that the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion be given appropriate priority in the work of the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, including work on the drafting of basic legal texts in conformity with international instruments on human rights and taking into account the provisions of the Declaration;

13. Notes with interest the adoption by the Human Rights Committee of a general comment on article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, dealing with freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

14. Welcomes the efforts of non-governmental organizations to promote the implementation of the Declaration;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the implementation of the Declaration and in its dissemination in national and local languages;

16. Urges all States to consider disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in national and local languages;

17. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

18. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Indigenous populationsDraft declaration on indigenous rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see below) be authorized to meet for 10 days prior to the 1993 session of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to intensify efforts to complete a draft declaration on indigenous rights and to issue, following the final adoption of the draft, a United Nations sales publication. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group and its Chairman-Rapporteur, to transmit the Group's 1992 report⁽³⁸⁾ to Governments, indigenous peoples' and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments and suggestions, and to ensure that the Group's sessions were provided with interpretation and documentation in English and Spanish. The Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to consider favourably requests for contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations.

Also on 5 March,⁽³⁹⁾ the Commission asked the Working Group and the Subcommittee to make their best effort to complete their consideration of the draft declaration and to report to the Commission in 1994.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/262, authorized the Group to meet for 10 working days prior to the Subcommittee's 1993 session and approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Group.

Working Group activities. At its eleventh session (Geneva, 19-30 July), the Working Group on Indigenous Populations⁽⁴⁰⁾ agreed on a final text of the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, which was based on a revised working paper prepared by the Chairperson-Rapporteur⁽⁴¹⁾ and a relevant explanatory note.⁽⁴²⁾ The Group decided to submit the final draft text, which was annexed to its report, to the Subcommittee in August. It recommended that the Subcommittee request the Secretary-General to send the text to United Nations editorial and translation services as soon as possible and circulate it to indigenous peoples, Governments, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs, indicating that there would be no further discussion of the text in the Working Group. It further recommended that the Commission and the Economic and Social Council enable indigenous peoples to participate in the consideration of the draft declaration by the Subcommittee and other United Nations bodies and that the draft be submitted to the Commission in 1995.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁴³⁾ the Subcommittee decided to entitle the draft declaration on indigenous rights, "United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples", to postpone until 1994 consideration of the draft and to submit it to the Commission in 1995 for consideration and adoption, on the understanding that the Working Group's 1994 session would contain a summary of general views expressed by the participants on the draft declaration. It asked the Secretary-General to submit the draft for technical revision as soon as possible and to transmit it to indigenous peoples and organizations, Governments and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs upon completion of the revision and not later than 31 March 1994 and to include in the note of transmittal a reference that no further amendments to the revised text would be accepted during future standard-setting proceedings of the Working Group. It recommended that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council enable indigenous peoples to participate in the consideration of the draft.

On the same date,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Subcommittee requested the Commission to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that the Working Group's annual report be issued as a United Nations sales publication and that a seminar on indigenous land rights and claims be held. It requested the Secretary-General to consider establishing a permanent forum for indigenous peoples in the United Nations system and to prepare an annotated agenda for the Working Group's 1994 session.

Protection of indigenous heritage

In July,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Subcommittee's Special Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), submitted a study on the protection of the cultural and intellectual property of indigenous peoples. She described contemporary issues involving indigenous heritage and discussed existing legal instruments and mechanisms applicable to indigenous peoples' collective rights to their heritage. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures to: recognize indigenous peoples as the true collective owners of their works, art and ideas; recover loss of dispersed heritage; prevent further losses of heritage; and continue her study with a mandate to draft basic principles and guidelines related to the protection of indigenous heritage.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Subcommission decided that the Special Rapporteur's study should be entitled "Protection of the heritage of the indigenous peoples" and asked her to expand her study with a view to elaborating draft principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous peoples and to submit a preliminary report thereon in 1994.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 1992 request⁽⁴⁸⁾ to Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martinez (Cuba) to prepare a second progress report on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations for submission to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and the Subcommission in 1994.

On 28 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/289, approved the Commission's endorsement.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Subcommission reiterated its request to the Special Rapporteur to submit a second progress report to the Group and the Subcommission in 1994.

World's Indigenous People (1993)

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽³⁹⁾ the Commission called on the United Nations system and Governments to develop policies to support the objectives and the theme of the International Year of the World's Indigenous People and to strengthen the institutional framework to implement them. It recommended that all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups pay particular attention to the situation of indigenous people and asked the Coordinator of the Year, in the report to the 1994 General Assembly on the activities and results of the Year, to include an account of the response of the United Nations system to the needs of indigenous people. The Commission urged the Coordinator to continue to solicit the cooperation of the specialized agencies, regional commissions, financial and development institutions and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system to promote the Year's programme of activities, adopted by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽³⁰⁾ and appealed to those bodies to take into account the needs of indigenous people in their budgeting and programming.

The Commission encouraged the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights (1993) to consider how issues pertinent to the Year could be addressed within the framework of the Conference and authorized the Working Group's Chairman-Rapporteur to represent the Group at the Conference. It appealed to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the International Year.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Subcommission decided to request the Commission to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that it approve the participation of the Working Group's Chairperson-Rapporteur in the closing ceremony of the International Year.

Other action. In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Coordinator of the International Year of the World's Indigenous People reconvened the technical meeting on the International Year of the World's Indigenous People (Geneva, 14-16 July)⁽⁵²⁾ to examine progress during the first six months of the Year and consider suggestions for the final six months. The meeting adopted a series of recommendations concerning coordination within the United Nations system; indigenous people's health issues; dissemination of information; the proclamation of an international decade of the world's indigenous people; and financial assistance for projects and activities of indigenous people. The technical meeting of agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system with representatives of States, organizations of indigenous peoples and other NGOs having a special interest in indigenous matters was held at Geneva from 9 to 11 March 1992⁽⁴⁸⁾ and from 3 to 5 August.⁽⁵³⁾ In July 1993,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Working Group on Indigenous Populations endorsed the recommendations made at the final technical meeting (see below).

On 18 June,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the World Conference on Human Rights commemorated the International Year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/133 without vote.

International Year of the World's Indigenous People, 1993

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations set forth in the Charter is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without discrimination as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing and respecting the value and the diversity of cultures, as well as the cultural heritage and the forms of social organization of the world's indigenous people,

Recalling its resolution 45/164 of 18 December 1990, in which it proclaimed 1993 the International Year of the World's Indigenous People, with a view to strengthening international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous communities in areas such as human rights, the environment, development, education and health,

Conscious of the need to improve the economic, social and cultural situation of the indigenous people with full respect for their distinctiveness and their own initiatives,

Appreciative of the contributions made to the voluntary fund for the Year opened by the Secretary-General,

Noting the establishment of the fund for the development of indigenous peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean as one kind of support for the objectives of the Year,

Taking note of the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, that an international decade of the world's indigenous people should be proclaimed,

Noting the need to continue strengthening the initiatives taken as a result of the Year,

Recalling the request to the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities that it should complete its consideration of the draft universal declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples,

1. Calls upon the United Nations system and Governments that have not yet done so to develop policies in support of the objectives and the theme of the International Year of the World's Indigenous People and to strengthen the institutional framework for their implementation;

2. Recommends to all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups that they pay particular attention, within the framework of their mandates, to the situation of indigenous people;

3. Urges the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights to continue to solicit actively the cooperation of specialized agencies, regional commissions, financial and development institutions and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system for the promotion of a programme of activities in support of the objectives and the theme of the Year;

4. Appeals to the specialized agencies, regional commissions and financial and development institutions of the United Nations system to continue to increase their efforts to take into special account the needs of indigenous people in their budgeting and in their programming;

5. Requests:

(a) That reports of the three technical meetings, first provided for in paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 46/128 of 17 December 1991, be included in the final assessment proceedings provided for in paragraph 12 of the same resolution and that their conclusions be included in the report of the Coordinator for the Year to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

(b) That the Commission on Human Rights convene, from within existing resources, a meeting of participants in the programmes and projects of the Year, in the three days preceding the twelfth session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, to report to the Working Group on the conclusions that can be drawn from the activities of the Year with a view to the elaboration of a detailed plan of action and the establishment of a funding plan for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People;

6. Stresses the relevance for the solution of problems faced by indigenous communities of the recommendations contained in chapter 26 of Agenda 21, including their implementation;

7. Notes with satisfaction the holding at Manila of a Global Youth Earth-saving Summit which, by its reaffirmation of the role of traditional cultures in the preservation of the environment, underscored the right to cultural survival;

8. Welcomes the proposal for a gathering of indigenous youth in 1995, an "Indigenous Youth Cultural Olympics", as a follow-up to the Year, to be held in conjunction with the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, to reaffirm the value of traditional cultures, folk arts and rituals as effective expressions of respective national identities and as a foundation for a shared vision for peace, freedom and equality;

9. Also stresses that the governmental and intergovernmental activities undertaken within the context of the Year and beyond should take fully into account the development needs of indigenous people and that the Year should contribute to enhancing and facilitating the coordination capabilities of Member States for collecting and analysing information;

10. Notes that there is a continuing need within the United Nations system to aggregate data specific to indigenous people by means of enhancing and facilitating the coordination capabilities of Member States for collecting and analysing such data;

11. Requests the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its forty-sixth session, to complete its consideration of the draft universal declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and to submit its report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-first session;

12. Requests the Coordinator for the Year, in the report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the activities developed and the results achieved within the context of the Year, to include an account of the response of the United Nations system to the needs of indigenous people;

13. Expresses its appreciation for the work undertaken for the Year by Governments, the Coordinator for the Year, the International Labour Organisation, the Goodwill Ambassador, Rigoberta Menchu, indigenous and non-governmental organizations, the Commission on Human Rights and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights (Vienna, 14-25 June),⁽⁵⁵⁾ recommended that the General Assembly proclaim an international decade of the world's indigenous people, to begin in January 1994. In July,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Working Group on Indigenous Populations welcomed that recommendation and, in August,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Subcommittee endorsed it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/163 without vote.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in its Charter, is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling its resolution 45/164 of 18 December 1990, in which it proclaimed 1993 as the International Year of the World's Indigenous People, with a view to strengthening international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in areas such as human rights, the environment, development, education and health,

Acknowledging the significance of the Year in raising international awareness of the contribution of, and problems faced by, indigenous people throughout the world, and aware of the need to build on the results and lessons of the Year,

Recognizing the importance of consulting with indigenous people, the need for financial support from the international community, with support from within the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, the need for a strategic planning framework and the need for adequate coordination and communication channels,

Expressing its appreciation for the work undertaken by the Coordinator for the Year, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, the Goodwill Ambassador, Rigoberta Menchu, and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recognizing the value and the diversity of the cultures and the forms of social organization of the world's indigenous people,

Welcoming the report of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, in which the vital role of indigenous people and their communities in the interrelationship between the natural environment and its sustainable development is recognized, including their holistic traditional scientific knowledge of their lands, natural resources and environment,

Recognizing the importance of considering the establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people in the framework of an international decade,

Taking note of the recommendation in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, that the General Assembly should proclaim an international decade of the world's indigenous people, which should begin from 1994 and should include action-oriented programmes to be decided upon in partnership with indigenous people,

1. Proclaims the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, commencing on 10 December 1994, the period from 1 January to 9 December 1994 to be set aside for planning for the Decade in partnership with indigenous people;

2. Decides that the goal of the Decade should be the strengthening of international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, education and health;

3. Also decides that, beginning in the first year of the Decade, one day of every year shall be observed as the International Day of Indigenous People;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its fiftieth session, to invite the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to identify at its next session an appropriate date for this purpose;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights as the Coordinator for the Decade;

6. Requests the Coordinator to coordinate the programme of activities for the Decade in full collaboration and consultation with Governments, competent bodies, the International Labour Organisation and other specialized agencies of the United Nations system, and indigenous and non-governmental organizations;

7. Requests competent United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to designate focal points for coordination with the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat of activities related to the Decade;

8. Invites Governments to ensure that activities and objectives for the Decade are planned and implemented on the basis of full consultation and collaboration with indigenous people;

9. Requests specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system to consider with Governments and in partnership with indigenous people how they can contribute to the success of the Decade, and to transmit their recommendations to the Economic and Social Council;

10. Appeals to its specialized agencies, regional commissions, financial and development institutions and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system to increase their efforts to take into special account the needs of indigenous people in their budgeting and in their programming;

11. Invites indigenous organizations and other interested non-governmental organizations to consider the contributions they can make to the success of the Decade, with a view to presenting them to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations;

12. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to ask the Working Group on Indigenous Populations to identify possible programmes and projects in connection with the Decade and to submit them through the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to the Commission for its consideration;

13. Recommends that adequate human and financial resources be made available to the Centre for Human Rights in support of its activities related to indigenous people, within the overall framework of strengthening its activities envisaged in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a voluntary fund for the Decade, and authorizes him to accept and administer voluntary contributions from Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other private institutions and individuals for the purpose of funding projects and programmes during the Decade;

15. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the voluntary fund for the Decade to be established by the Secretary-General, and invites indigenous organizations to do likewise;

16. Invites Governments, competent United Nations bodies and specialized agencies and other intergovernmental institutions, including financial institutions, to consider providing additional resources to finance the attachment of suitable staff, including indigenous staff, to the Centre for Human Rights on a regionally balanced basis;

17. Encourages Governments to establish national committees or other more permanent structures involving indigenous representatives to plan activities for the Decade;

18. Requests that the meeting to be convened in accordance with its resolution 46/128 of 17 December 1991 to review the Year also consider preparations for the Decade, giving full participation to indigenous people, particularly with regard to the elaboration of a detailed plan of action, including an evaluation mechanism, and the establishment of a funding plan for the Decade, and that the meeting report to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations;

19. Urges the competent United Nations organs, programmes and specialized agencies, in planning activities for the Decade, to examine how existing programmes and resources might be utilized to benefit indigenous people more effectively, including through the exploration of ways in which indigenous perspectives and activities can be included or enhanced;

20. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session to give priority consideration to the establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people in the United Nations system;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to give all the assistance necessary to ensure the success of the Decade;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to it a preliminary report at its forty-ninth session and a final report at its fiftieth session on a comprehensive programme of action for the Decade;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Programme of activities of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People".

Migrant workers

International Convention

As at 31 December 1993,⁽²⁰⁾ Morocco had ratified, Egypt had acceded to and Chile, Mexico and the Philippines had signed the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in 1990.⁽⁵⁶⁾

The Secretary-General reported that, as at 1 August 1993, Morocco had ratified, Egypt had acceded to and Mexico had signed the Convention.⁽⁵⁷⁾ In a later report, he stated that, as at 1 December 1993, Chile and the Philippines had also signed the Convention.⁽⁵⁸⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Commission urged all States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention and invited United Nations agencies and organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to disseminate information on it. It asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance necessary to promote the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights") and to report on the Convention's status in 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/148 without vote.

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and to ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Aware of the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and the marked increase in migratory movements that has occurred, especially in certain parts of the world,

Considering that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, all States are urged to guarantee the protection of the human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Underlining the importance of the creation of conditions to foster greater harmony and tolerance between migrant workers and the rest of the society of the State in which they reside,

Recalling its resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990, in which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Bearing in mind that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action States are invited to consider the possibility of signing and ratifying the Convention at the earliest possible time,

Recalling that, in its resolution 47/110 of 16 December 1992, it requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its forty-eighth session a report on the status of the Convention,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families;

2. Welcomes the signature or ratification of, or accession to, the Convention by some Member States;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, and expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the promotion of the Convention, through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

5. Invites the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the Convention;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the status of the Convention;

7. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-ninth session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

Freedom of movement

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Subcommission requested host countries to continue efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families and to protect them against violence, bodily injury, threats and intimidation.

Protection of minorities

Declaration

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Commission called on States to promote and give effect to the principles contained in the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,⁽⁶²⁾ and urged all treaty bodies and special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission and Subcommission to give due regard to the Declaration. It invited intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. It called on the Secretary-General to make available, as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre for Human Rights, qualified experts familiar with minority issues and encouraged Governments to consider availing themselves of such services and assistance. The Secretary-General was asked to provide additional resources for such services and assistance and to report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution in 1994.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁶³⁾ the Subcommission appealed to States to take municipal, legislative, administrative and other measures to promote and give effect to the principles in the Declaration and to conclude bilateral or, where possible, multilateral agreements to ensure the rights of national or ethnic minorities in their countries and to observe them in accordance with the standards of international humanitarian law in cases of armed conflict. It asked the Secretary-General to make available the resources to provide monitoring, advisory assistance and financing to States for activities related to the protection of minorities.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Secretary-General presented, in November 1993, an overview of activities for the effective promotion of the Declaration taken by United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, treaty bodies, special rapporteurs and independent experts and NGOs and human rights institutes.⁽⁶⁴⁾ The Secretary-General advocated dialogue by means of negotiations and consultations to improve the situation of persons belonging to minorities. He stated that the promotion of dialogue between States, and between States and persons belonging to minorities, with a view to implementing the Declaration should be encouraged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/138 without vote.

Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, in which it adopted the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,

Conscious of the need effectively to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to minorities, as set out in the Declaration,

Noting the importance of an even more effective implementation of international human rights instruments with regard to the rights of all persons, including those belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Welcoming Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/24 of 5 March 1993 on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Noting that resolutions 1993/42 and 1993/43 adopted by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on 26 August 1993 are to be considered by the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session,

Aware of the provisions of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights concerning the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an increasingly important role to play regarding the protection of minorities by, inter alia, taking due account of the Declaration,

Concerned by the growing frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts concerning minorities in many countries, and their often tragic consequences,

Affirming that effective measures and the creation of favourable conditions for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, ensuring effective non-discrimination and equality for all, contribute to the prevention and peaceful solution of human rights problems and situations involving minorities,

Considering that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace, and enrich the cultural heritage of society as a whole of the States in which such persons live,

Reaffirming the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law in accordance with the Declaration,

Welcoming initiatives aiming at disseminating information on the Declaration and at promoting understanding thereof,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the effective promotion of the Declaration,

Mindful of the recommendations contained in section II, paragraphs 25 to 27, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted unanimously by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities;

2. Urges States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, including through the facilitation of their full participation in all aspects of the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of society and in the economic progress and development of their country;

3. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to examine ways and means to promote and protect effectively the rights of persons belonging to minorities, as set out in the Declaration;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to provide through the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, at the request of Governments concerned and as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre, qualified expertise on minority issues and human rights, as well as on the prevention and resolution of disputes, to assist in existing or potential situations involving minorities;

5. Appeals to States to take all the necessary legislative and other measures to promote and give effect, as appropriate, to the principles of the Declaration;

6. Also appeals to States to make bilateral and multilateral efforts, as appropriate, to protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their countries, in accordance with the Declaration;

7. Urges all treaty bodies and special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to give due regard to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities, as set forth in the Declaration, as appropriate, within their mandates;

8. Encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue the dissemination of information on the Declaration and the promotion of understanding thereof, including, as appropriate, in the context of the training of United Nations personnel;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Minority problems

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In August, Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) submitted his final report on ways to facilitate the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities.⁽⁶⁵⁾ In addenda,⁽⁶⁶⁾ he reported on replies to a questionnaire on minorities received from 25 Governments and 4 NGOs. A reply from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was submitted separately,⁽⁶⁷⁾ as were recommendations for measures to be taken at the national and international level.⁽⁶⁸⁾

Other action. In accordance with a 1992 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁶⁹⁾ a technical meeting of experts on minorities from different regions of the world was held (Geneva, 2-4 February 1993)⁽⁷⁰⁾ to exchange views on the Special Rapporteur's progress reports and to provide guidance for his final report.

In July, UNESCO submitted to the Subcommission a report describing its 1993 activities to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and those planned for 1994 and 1995.⁽⁷¹⁾

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁷²⁾ the Subcommission recommended that the Special Rapporteur's study be published in all official United Nations languages and given the widest circulation possible. It endorsed his recommendations and urged relevant treaty bodies to take note of recommendations 48 to 55 and recommendation 65; the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to take account of recommendations 56 to 63; States to note and act on recommendations 4 to 22 and to take into account recommendations 25 to 34; and NGOs to study and act on recommendations 66 to 68. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission study a proposal in recommendation 44 to establish a working group on minority issues and to study and give advice to the Centre for Human Rights concerning recommendations 46 and 47, in particular on ways in which the programme of technical assistance and advisory services could help in preventing group conflicts. It decided to consider in 1994 the follow-up to the report, including the feasibility and usefulness of preparing a more comprehensive programme for the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities, and entrusted the Special Rapporteur with preparing a working paper containing suggestions for such a programme.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽⁷³⁾ the Commission called on States to take steps to ensure the full enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) or with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), their families, those associated with them and people presumed to be at risk of infection, paying particular attention to women, children and other vulnerable groups, in order to prevent discrimination against them. It urged them to include in their AIDS programmes measures to combat discrimination and to take steps to develop a supportive social environment for effective AIDS prevention and care. The Commission asked the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and similar bodies to monitor States parties' compliance with their commitments under the relevant human rights instruments regarding the rights of people infected with HIV or AIDS, their families and people with whom they lived, or people presumed to be at risk. It welcomed! a 1990 preliminary report⁽⁷⁴⁾ and the 1991⁽⁷⁵⁾ and 1992⁽⁷⁶⁾ progress reports of the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur (Luis Varela Quiros, Costa Rica), and endorsed requests made by the Subcommission in 1992 that he submit his final report in 1993 and that the Secretary-General give him any assistance he required. The Commission decided to consider the final report in 1994.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/269, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's requests.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In August, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Luis Varela Quiros, submitted a final report on discrimination against HIV-infected people or people with AIDS.⁽⁷⁷⁾ In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stated that discriminatory practices could be eradicated only by national and international education programmes. As women and children stood out as being the ones most unfairly affected by the disease, the Special Rapporteur called for special emphasis to be placed on the provisions of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽⁷⁸⁾ and for the Subcommission to condemn the exploitation of children and child prostitution. He called for the provision of appropriate hospital treatment and psychological care for those suffering from the disease.

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽⁷⁹⁾ the Subcommission called on States to take steps, including protective legislation and appropriate education, to ensure the full enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by people with HIV and AIDS, their families, those associated with them and people presumed to be at risk of infection, paying particular attention to women, children and other vulnerable groups, in order to prevent discrimination against them. It also called on them to advance the legal, economic and social status of women and indigenous peoples, as well as of minorities and other groups suffering discrimination, to render them less vulnerable to HIV infection and to the adverse socio-economic consequences of the pandemic. The Subcommission urged relevant United Nations working groups and special rapporteurs to consider the impact of AIDS and AIDS-related discrimination in their reports, and asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to their attention, as well as to treaty-monitoring bodies and those bodies concerned with the status and rights of women. It further asked the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on developments concerning the possibility of establishing a joint United Nations programme on HIV and AIDS between the United Nations system and the World Health Organization. The Subcommission expressed grave concern at the continued exploitation of children and child prostitution and called on the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery to pay urgent attention to the matter.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽¹⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽²⁾ totalled 125 and 74 States respectively.⁽³⁾ Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cape Verde, Czech Republic, Dominica, Ethiopia, Malawi, Mozambique, Nigeria, Republic of Moldova and Slovakia became parties to the Covenant in 1993; Armenia, Czech Republic, Germany, Guinea, Guyana, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia acceded or succeeded to or ratified the Optional Protocol.

Parties to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in 1989⁽⁴⁾ and in force since July 1991⁽⁵⁾—totalled 19 States as at 31 December 1993.⁽⁶⁾ Austria, Ecuador, Ireland, Mozambique, Panama, Uruguay and Venezuela ratified or acceded to it in 1993.

In a report to the Commission,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Optional Protocols as at 1 December (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocols and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. A similar appeal was made in December by the General Assembly in resolution 48/119. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on the status of the Covenant and its Optional Protocols.

Implementation

ticle 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1993: its forty-seventh from 22 March to 8 April in New York, and forty-eighth from 12 to 30 July and forty-ninth from 18 October to 5 November, both at Geneva.

At those sessions, the Committee considered reports from 15 States—Bulgaria, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Guinea, Hungary, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Japan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Niger, Norway, Romania and Uruguay—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on 22 communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated. The Committee decided that 19 other such communications were inadmissible.

The Committee adopted and annexed to its report⁽⁸⁾ a general comment on article 18 of the Covenant concerning the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. The comments were intended to assist States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and promote the Covenant's implementation.

In October,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee requested Angola and Burundi, following recent events in those countries (see PART TWO, Chapter I for details), to submit reports on their application of rights protected under the Covenant relating to the imposition of a state of emergency, the right to life, torture, personal security, freedom of movement and the right to participate in public life.

State of siege or emergency

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission recommended the inclusion in the agenda of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights") an item on strengthening protection of human rights during states of emergency. It also recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft decision concerning the work of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and states of emergency (Leandro Despouy, Argentina).

On 26 February,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission underlined, as did the General Assembly later in the year in resolution 48/119, the necessity for strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the Covenant and the need for States parties to provide full and timely information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances could be assessed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/265, endorsed a 1992 Subcommission request⁽¹¹⁾ to the Special Rapporteur to continue updating the list of states of emergency and to include in his annual report to the Subcommission and the Commission recommendations on inalienable or non-derogable rights. It also endorsed the Subcommission's request that the Secretary-General provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he might require.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy submitted his sixth annual report containing information on 83 States or territories which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency.⁽¹²⁾ Previous reports were issued in 1987,⁽¹³⁾ 1988,⁽¹⁴⁾ 1989,⁽¹⁵⁾ 1991⁽¹⁶⁾ and 1992.⁽¹¹⁾

As requested by the Subcommission on 25 August 1992,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Special Rapporteur revised and updated his sixth report,⁽¹⁸⁾ which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission in November.⁽¹⁹⁾

Self-determination of peoples

By three resolutions adopted in 1993, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination of the people of Cambodia,⁽²⁰⁾ Palestine⁽²¹⁾ and Western Sahara.⁽²²⁾ A fourth resolution⁽²³⁾ adopted under the item pertained to the use of mercenaries as a means to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General summarized action taken in 1993 by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council on the right of peoples to self-determination. He also summarized replies received from five Governments in response to his request for information from States for inclusion in his report, prepared in response to two 1992 Assembly resolutions.⁽²⁵⁾

In 1993, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions and one decision on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

On 20 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/93 without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth and forty-ninth sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989, 45/131 of 14 December 1990, 46/88 of 16 December 1991 and 47/83 of 16 December 1992,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

General Assembly resolution 48/93

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/626) without vote, 12 November (meeting 32); 35-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.15); agenda item 108 (al).

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 3-10, 25, 32; plenary 85.

Also on 20 December, on the Third Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 48/94 by recorded vote.

Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in the importance of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and foreign domination,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights,

Considering the urgent need of Namibia for assistance in its efforts to reconstruct and strengthen its fledgling economic and social structures,

Recalling the Abuja Declaration on South Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-seventh ordinary session, held at Abuja in June 1991, and the statement on developments in South Africa adopted by the Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa of the Organization of African Unity at its extraordinary session of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs, held in New York on 29 September 1993,

Affirming the need to exercise vigilance with respect to developments in South Africa to ensure that the common objective of the international community and the peoples of South Africa is achieved by the establishment of a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa without deviation or obstruction,

Recalling the signing of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique at Rome on 4 October 1992, which provides for the termination of the armed conflict in that country,

Reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Deeply concerned by Israel's continuing occupation of parts of southern Lebanon and its frequent attacks against Lebanese territory and people, as well as its refusal to implement Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978,

Bearing in mind United Nations resolutions related to the question of Palestine,

Taking note of the recent positive evolution in the Middle East peace process, in particular the signing on 13 September 1993 of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully and faithfully all the relevant resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by peoples under colonial and foreign domination;

2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign occupation, in all its forms and by all available means;

3. Reaffirms also the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and all peoples under foreign occupation and colonial domination to self-determination, independence and sovereignty;

4. Calls upon those Governments which do not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial domination, alien subjugation and foreign occupation to do so;

5. Calls upon Israel to refrain from violation of the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people and from denial of its right to self-determination;

6. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations, to extend their support to the Palestinian people through its sole and legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization, in its struggle to regain its right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Urgently appeals to all States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations to render assistance to Namibia in order to enhance its efforts to promote democracy and economic development;

8. Strongly urges the Government of South Africa to take additional steps to implement fully the provisions of the statement on developments in South Africa adopted on 29 September 1993 by the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa, in order to achieve the objectives of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

9. Calls upon all parties to refrain immediately from acts of violence, and calls upon the Government of South Africa to exercise its responsibility to end the ongoing violence through, inter alia, strict adherence to the National Peace Accord signed on 14 September 1991;

10. Calls upon all signatories to the National Peace Accord to manifest their commitment to peace by fully implementing its provisions, and calls upon other parties to contribute to the attainment of its objectives;

11. Strongly condemns the establishment and use of armed groups with a view to pitting them against the national liberation movements;

12. Demands that the Government of South Africa repeal the security legislation that remains in force, which inhibits free and peaceful political activity;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to act speedily to implement Security Council resolution 772(1992) of 17 August 1992 in its entirety, including those parts pertaining to the investigation of criminal conduct and the monitoring of all armed formations in the country;

14. Demands the full application of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, imposed under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by all countries and more particularly by those countries which maintain military and nuclear cooperation with the Government of South Africa and continue to supply it with related materiel;

15. Appeals to the international community, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 47/82 of 16 December 1992, to continue to extend assistance to Lesotho to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

16. Pays tribute to the Government and people of Angola for their noble contribution to the evolving climate of peace in southern Angola, and addresses its strongest appeal to the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola to undertake to commit itself to the peace process that will lead to a comprehensive settlement in Angola on the basis of the Peace Accords;

17. Demands that the Government of South Africa pay compensation to Angola for damages caused, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Security Council;

18. Demands also that the Government of South Africa pay full and adequate compensation to Botswana for the loss of life and damage to property resulting from the unprovoked and unwarranted military attacks of 14 June 1985, 19 May 1986 and 20 June 1988 on the capital of Botswana;

19. Calls upon the international community to continue to extend its generous support to the ongoing efforts aimed at ensuring respect for and the successful implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique and at assisting the Government of Mozambique in the establishment of lasting peace and democracy and in the promotion of an effective programme of national reconstruction in that country;

20. Fully supports the Secretary-General in his efforts to implement the plan for the settlement of the question of Western Sahara by organizing, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, a referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara;

21. Notes the contacts between the Government of the Comoros and the Government of France in the search for a just solution to the problem of the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question;

22. Strongly condemns the continued violation of the human rights of the peoples still under colonial domination and alien subjugation;

23. Calls for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance given by all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through anti-apartheid organizations and national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity;

24. Reaffirms that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constitutes a criminal act, and calls upon the Governments of all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through their territories to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General;

25. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental individual rights and compliance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

26. Expresses its appreciation for the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial rule continue to receive from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, and calls for a substantial increase in that assistance;

27. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system to do their utmost to ensure the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to intensify their efforts to support peoples under colonial, foreign and racist domination in their just struggle for self-determination and independence;

28. Decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 101-26-36 (recorded vote)

By decision 48/427 of 20 December, the Assembly deferred to a future session consideration of the question of the effective realization of the right of self-determination through autonomy.

Cambodia

Human Rights Commission action. On 19 February,⁽²⁰⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to ensure a continued United Nations human rights presence in Cambodia after the expiry of the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) (see PART TWO, Chapter III). He was asked to appoint a special representative to maintain contact with the people and Government of Cambodia; guide and coordinate the United Nations human rights presence; assist the Government to promote and protect human rights; and report to the Commission in 1994. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1993/254 of 28 July. The Commission further asked him to communicate the contents of its resolution to, and seek the consent and cooperation of, the newly elected Government of Cambodia to facilitate the tasks of the special representative and the Centre for Human Rights in fulfilling their respective mandates.

On 23 November, the Secretary-General appointed Michael Kirby (Australia) as his Special Representative.

Palestinians

Human Rights Commission action. By a 19 February resolution,⁽²¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 27 to 1, with 19 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and called on Israel to withdraw from the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in accordance with United Nations resolutions. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Israel and all other Governments, to distribute it as widely as possible and to make available to the Commission, prior to its 1994 session, all information pertaining to its implementation by Israel.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽²⁶⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 2, with 5 abstentions, condemned Israel for its gross violations of the rules of international law; its policy of deporting Palestinian citizens and expelling them from their homeland; establishing Israeli settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories; its continued occupation of the Syrian Golan and defiance of United Nations resolutions; and the inhuman treatment and terrorist practices exercised against Syrian Arab citizens in the occupied Golan. It called on Israel to withdraw from the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories; to refrain from deporting and expelling Palestinian citizens from their homeland; and to dismantle Israeli settlements in the occupied territories. It asked all States and international organizations not to recognize any Israeli laws, jurisdiction or administration in respect of the occupied Syrian Golan. The Secretary-General was requested to provide in 1994 an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents relating to the question of Palestine and other occupied Arab territories, with texts of relevant United Nations decisions and resolutions, the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, and other relevant information.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1992 Commission request,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported in January 1993⁽²⁸⁾ that he had asked Israel for information on the Commission's 1992 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine and had received no reply.

Western Sahara

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February 1993,⁽²²⁾ the Commission endorsed the content of a 1992 letter from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General⁽²⁹⁾ in which Council members expressed the view that Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro must abide by the 1991 cease-fire agreement and abstain from any provocative behaviour endangering the Secretary-General's 1991 settlement plan.⁽³⁰⁾ It decided to follow the situation in Western Sahara and to consider the matter in 1994.

Mercenaries

Human Rights Commission action. On 19 February,⁽²³⁾ the Commission, reaffirming that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries should be considered as offences of grave concern, called on all States to consider acceding to or ratifying the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries⁽³¹⁾ and urged them to prevent mercenaries from using any part of their territory to destabilize any sovereign State. It asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 1994.

On 9 March,⁽³²⁾ the Commission asked all special rapporteurs and working groups to continue to pay particular attention to the adverse effect on the enjoyment of human rights of acts of violence committed by armed groups that spread terror among the population, and by drug traffickers, in their forthcoming reports on the situation of human rights in countries where such acts of violence occurred. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue to collect information on the question and to make it available to the special rapporteurs and working groups concerned.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1992 Assembly request,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General, in September 1993,⁽³⁴⁾ transmitted a report containing information on mercenary activities covering February to July 1992, prepared by Special Rapporteur Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru). He noted that there had been a growing trend towards recourse to the use of mercenaries, chiefly due to the outbreak of new armed conflicts and to the establishment of new States. He also noted that standard legal procedures were resorted to in order to conceal a mercenary. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Assembly, among other things, advise States to be more alert to the dangers in tolerating, permitting or acquiescing in the recruitment, hiring and training of mercenaries; ask Member States to adopt domestic legislation prohibiting organizations that traffic in mercenaries; consider establishing a group of experts to determine the criteria for defining the real mercenary status of an individual having dual or multiple nationality or who had benefited from the purported granting of nationality; and call on States that had not yet ratified or acceded to the 1989 Convention to speed up the process of doing so.

In a later report,⁽³⁵⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. He described his activities during 1993 and correspondence received from Member States concerning mercenary activities. He reported on mercenary activities in Africa, the former Yugoslavia and a number of republics of the former USSR (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, the Republic of Moldova, Tajikistan) and the consequences for human rights of violent acts committed by armed groups and drug traffickers.

As to the status of the 1989 International Convention,⁽³¹⁾ the Special Rapporteur stated that only seven States had become parties to the Convention—Barbados, Cyprus, Maldives, Seychelles, Suriname, Togo and Ukraine; an additional 13 States had signed it—Angola, Belarus, Cameroon, Congo, Germany, Italy, Morocco, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire. The Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

Among recommendations for action by the Commission on Human Rights made by the Special Rapporteur were that it should condemn mercenary activities and consider appointing a working group to evaluate reports and communications on acts of violence committed by armed groups and drug traffickers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/92 by recorded vote.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/84 of 16 December 1992 on the use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples,

Urging strict respect for the principle of the non-use or threat of the use of force in international relations, as developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples and their liberation movements for their independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign intervention and occupation, and that their legitimate struggle can in no way be considered as or equated to mercenary activity,

Convinced that the use of mercenaries is a threat to international peace and security,

Deeply concerned about the menace that the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African and other developing States,

Profoundly alarmed at the continued international criminal activities of mercenaries in collusion with drug traffickers,

Alarmed by the growing linkage observed between mercenary activities and terrorist practices,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to the fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and impede the process of the self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Deeply concerned about the continuing participation of South Africa in mercenary-related activities, as highlighted in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Deeply concerned also about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

Convinced that it is necessary to develop international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of such offences,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption of the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing, and Training of Mercenaries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

2. Condemns the continued recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries, for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of African States and other developing States and fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

3. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are offences of grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Denounces any State that persists in, permits or tolerates the recruitment of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

5. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that their territory and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries or for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to fight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention or occupation;

6. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

7. Reaffirms that to use channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries is inadmissible;

8. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking early action to sign or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

9. Requests the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to organize, within the framework of its existing resources, working meetings to analyse the philosophical, political and legal aspects of this question, in the light of the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Rapporteur;

10. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the use of mercenaries, especially in view of the additional elements highlighted in his report.

Rights of detained persons

Administration of justice

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽³⁶⁾ the Commission called on its subsidiary bodies, including its special rapporteurs and working groups, to give special attention to questions relating to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice and to provide specific recommendations, including proposals for possible concrete measures under advisory services programmes. It requested its Subcommission to continue to create a sessional working group on detention to draw up proposals regarding human rights in the administration of justice, and to formulate proposals to the Secretary-General on the utility and format of his reports prepared in pursuance of a 1974 Subcommission resolution.⁽³⁷⁾ It invited the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) to explore ways of cooperating with the human rights programme in the administration of justice.

Also on 5 March,⁽³⁸⁾ the Commission urged Governments to pay more attention to the needs of institutions concerned with the administration of justice by allocating more resources to them and to strengthen existing national and regional human rights institutions. It appealed to them to include in their national development plans the administration of justice as an integral part of the development process and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal aid services to promote and protect human rights. The Commission appealed to the international community to provide assistance for the provision of legal aid services to ensure the promotion, protection and full enjoyment of human rights in African and other developing countries and asked the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance made by institutions concerned with such matters. It urged the Secretary-General to consider favourably applications for assistance by African Member States and other developing countries regarding the creation and strengthening of national institutions concerned with the administration of justice within the framework of the United Nations programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General, in November,⁽⁴⁰⁾ presented an overview of advisory services and technical assistance, activities of United Nations bodies, dissemination of relevant international instruments and coordination of activities in the area of human rights in the administration of justice. He concluded that United Nations standards should remain the focus of sustained and effective dissemination and technical assistance efforts, particularly through the programme of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre for Human Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/137 without vote.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/120 of 17 December 1991,

Bearing in mind the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 9, 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols thereto, in particular article 6 of the Covenant, in which it is stated explicitly that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life and prohibits the imposition of the death penalty for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age,

Bearing in mind also the relevant principles embodied in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Mindful of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular of the obligation of States parties to treat men and women equally in all stages of procedures in courts and tribunals,

Calling attention to the numerous international standards in the field of the administration of justice, such as the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners and recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty, the Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-Custodial Measures (the Tokyo Rules), the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (the Beijing Rules), the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters and the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released,

Recalling its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance,

Welcoming the important work of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, in particular regarding the independence of the judiciary, the independence of judges and lawyers, the right to a fair trial, habeas corpus, human rights and states of emergency, the question of arbitrary detention, the human rights of juveniles in detention, the privatization of prisons and the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights,

Taking note of resolution 1993/39 of 26 August 1993 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, entitled "Independence of the judiciary",

Welcoming Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1993/32 of 5 March 1993, entitled "The administration of justice and human rights", and 1993/41 of 5 March 1993, entitled "Human rights in the administration of justice",

Welcoming also the important work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, as reflected in section III of Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/34 of 27 July 1993,

Recognizing that the rule of law and the proper administration of justice are prerequisites for sustainable economic and social development,

Recognizing also the central role of the administration of justice in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Aware of the importance of national and regional intergovernmental human rights bodies and institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Mindful of the recommendations relating to human rights in the administration of justice contained in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

3. Acknowledges that it is the primary responsibility of all Governments to promote and protect human rights;

4. Acknowledges also that the administration of justice, including law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies and, especially, an independent judiciary and legal profession in full conformity with applicable standards contained in international human rights instruments, are essential to the full and non-discriminatory realization of human rights and indispensable to the processes of democracy and sustainable development;

5. Once again calls upon all States to pay due attention to United Nations norms and standards on human rights in the administration of justice in developing national and regional strategies for their practical implementation and to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as for adequate financial resources to ensure more effective implementation of those norms and standards;

6. Appeals to Governments to include in their national development plans the administration of justice as an integral part of the development process and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal-aid services with a view to the promotion and protection of human rights;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to consider favourably requests for assistance by States in the field of the administration of justice within the framework of the United Nations programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights, and to strengthen coordination of activities in this field;

8. Strongly recommends, in this context, that the establishment of a comprehensive programme within the system of advisory services and technical assistance be considered in order to help States in the task of building and strengthening adequate national structures that have a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law; such a programme should provide, upon the request of the interested Governments, technical and financial assistance to national projects for the reform of penal and correctional establishments and for the education and training of lawyers, judges and security forces in human rights and in any other sphere of activity relevant to the good functioning of the rule of law;

9. Acknowledges that institutions concerned with the administration of justice should be properly funded and that an increased level of both technical and financial assistance should be provided by the international community;

10. Appeals to the international community to provide assistance, at the request of the Governments concerned, for the provision of legal-aid services with a view to ensuring the promotion, protection and full enjoyment of human rights;

11. Invites the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance made by institutions concerned with the promotion and protection of human rights, with a view to enhancing and strengthening their national capacities to promote and protect human rights consistent with the standards set forth in international and other human rights instruments;

12. Acknowledges the important role of the regional commissions, specialized agencies and United Nations institutes in the area of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice, and of other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field;

13. Invites the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to pay particular attention to questions relating to the administration of justice, with special emphasis on the effective implementation of norms and standards;

14. Decides to consider the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its fiftieth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 48/137

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.2) without vote, 6 December (meeting 53); 34-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.69); agenda item 114 (b).

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, established by the Subcommission on 3 August,⁽⁴¹⁾ met at Geneva on 5, 9 and 16 August.⁽⁴²⁾ The Group decided to recommend to the Subcommission that the report of the Secretary-General and the annual synopsis of materials provided by Governments, special agencies and NGOs on the human rights of detained or imprisoned persons, prepared pursuant to a 1974 Subcommission resolution,⁽³⁷⁾ be discontinued.

On 25 August,⁽⁴³⁾ the Subcommission decided to stop considering information received pursuant to its 1974 resolution⁽³⁷⁾ and recommended to the Secretary-General that he no longer issue reports and synopses of material on the subject.

The Working Group on Detention decided to postpone until 1994 examination of habeas corpus as a non-derogable right and as one of the requirements for the right to a fair trial, pending consideration by the Subcommission of a 1992 report on the right to a fair trial.⁽⁴⁴⁾

As to the death penalty, the Group recommended that its agenda item should be formulated as: issues related to the deprivation of the right to life, with special reference to imposition of the death penalty on persons under 18 years of age and on the mentally and physically disabled; and questions relating to summary, arbitrary and extrajudicial executions.

In its discussion of juvenile justice, the Group recommended that the Subcommission urge States to make greater efforts to separate adults and juveniles in prisons.

In response to a 1992 Subcommission request,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Claire Palley (United Kingdom) was preparing an outline of a study of the privatization of prisons. The Group, having heard Ms. Palley's description of her outline, recommended that the Subcommission recommend to the Commission that she be requested to carry out a further special study on the subject. On 5 March,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's request to Ms. Palley to prepare an outline of the possible utility, scope and structure of a special study on the issue of privatization of prisons and to the Secretary-General to provide her with all the assistance she needed. In June,⁽⁴⁷⁾ she submitted the outline to the Subcommission. The Subcommission, on 25 August,⁽⁴⁸⁾ requested the Commission to authorize it in 1994 to appoint one of its members to conduct a special study on issues raised in the outline.

In other matters, the Group requested the secretariat to draft a report on coordination between the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and decided to consider in 1994 follow-up measures to the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands), in his eighth report to the Commission on questions relevant to torture,⁽⁵⁰⁾ said that he continued to receive requests for urgent action or information concerning persons who were allegedly being tortured or about whom fears were expressed that they might be. He brought 79 of those cases to the immediate attention of 31 Governments, appealing to them to ensure humane treatment of the persons concerned while in detention. Details on the contents of those appeals and of government replies were given in the report.

The Special Rapporteur reported on his participation in the second mission of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia in 1992.⁽⁵¹⁾

The Special Rapporteur made a number of recommendations, some of which were taken up by the Commission in a March resolution.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁵²⁾ the Commission, commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, stressed his conclusions and recommendations concerning: instituting a system of periodic visits by independent experts to places of detention; guaranteeing to detainees by the judiciary their rights in accordance with international and national standards; forbidding illegal incommunicado detention; adopting legal provisions giving a detainee access to legal counsel and the right to initiate promptly after arrest proceedings before a court on the lawfulness of the detention; taking strict measures against members of the medical profession who practised torture; interrogating detainees at official interrogation centres, recording such interrogations and forbidding blindfolding or hooding; and establishing at the national level an independent authority to receive complaints about torture or other maltreatment. It endorsed the recommendation that those responsible for acts of torture should be brought to trial and, if found guilty, severely punished. The Commission called on all States to sign and accede to or ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.⁽⁵³⁾ It urged the Secretary-General to make available, as part of the programme of human rights advisory services, qualified experts in law enforcement, detention and medicine to assist Governments in preventing torture. The Commission noted with regret the resignation of the Special Rapporteur and asked the Chairman of the Commission to appoint a replacement. The Secretary-General was asked to provide all the assistance the special rapporteur might require.

As at 31 December 1993, 79 States had become parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment,⁽⁵³⁾ nine of them (Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Morocco, Slovakia and Slovenia) in 1993.⁽⁵⁾ The Convention had entered into force in 1987.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture, set up under the Convention, to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 34 parties had made the required declarations. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 December 1993.⁽⁵⁵⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Commission urged all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority; it asked all ratifying or acceding States and those States parties that had not done so to consider making the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing their reservations to article 20. States parties were encouraged to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18 of the Convention adopted in 1992.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue submitting annual reports on the Convention's status and to ensure appropriate staff and facilities for the effective functioning of the Committee against Torture.

Draft optional protocol

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Commission welcomed progress made by the Working Group to Elaborate a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment at its first (1992) session.⁽⁵⁷⁾ It asked the Working Group to meet between sessions for a period of two weeks prior to the Commission's 1994 session to continue its work and to report to the Commission. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report to Governments, specialized agencies, chairmen of the human rights treaty bodies, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned so that they could submit their observations to the Group. It also asked him to invite Governments, specialized agencies, NGOs, the Chairman of the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur to participate in the Working Group's activities and to extend all the necessary facilities to the Group for its meeting.

Working group activities. The Working Group on the Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Geneva, 25 October-5 November 1993)⁽⁵⁹⁾ examined and revised the text of articles 1 to 7 of the draft as submitted by Costa Rica in 1991⁽⁶⁰⁾ completing its first reading of those articles, which it annexed to its report. The Group also considered articles 8 to 19 of the draft.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/46 without vote.

Question of a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/34 of 5 March 1993,

1. Authorizes the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the fiftieth session of the Commission with a view to continuing the elaboration of the draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend to the working group all necessary facilities for its meetings and to transmit the report of the working group to Governments, the specialized agencies, the chairmen of the human rights treaty bodies, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/46
28 July 1993 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote
Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) without vote, 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Committee against Torture

The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its tenth session at Geneva from 19 to 30 April.⁽⁶¹⁾ It examined reports submitted by Canada, China, Hungary, Panama, Spain and Sweden under article 19 of the Convention.

In eight closed meetings devoted to its activities under article 20, the Committee studied confidential information which appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee continued to consider a communication, which was declared admissible in 1992,⁽⁶²⁾ from an individual claiming to be a victim of violations by a State party. Annexed to the Committee's report was a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 30 April 1993.

An addendum to the Committee's report⁽⁶³⁾ summarized the results of an inquiry on Turkey, carried out under article 20 of the Convention. The inquiry, which began in 1990 following the receipt of information alleging the systematic practice of torture in Turkey, concluded in 1993. The Committee's conclusions covered legislation enacted in Turkey covering criminal procedures and the treatment of detained persons, allegations received during the inquiry and places of detention.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the cooperation of the Turkish authorities and congratulated them on having acted on many of its recommendations and improved the human rights situation. It remained concerned at the number and substance of allegations of torture, which confirmed the existence and systematic character of the practice of torture in Turkey and expressed the hope that the new Government, formed in June 1993, would take measures to end the practice.

The Committee held its eleventh session, also at Geneva, from 8 to 19 November, examining reports submitted by Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Paraguay, Poland and Portugal. It studied seven communications and adopted its final views on one of them.

By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note of the Committee's report on its ninth (1992) and tenth sessions.

On 24 November 1993, the fourth meeting of the States parties to the Convention elected five members of the Committee to replace those whose terms of office would expire on 31 December and to consider the question of the responsibilities of States parties for the expenses referred to in article 17, paragraph 7, and in article 18, paragraph 5, of the Convention. The meeting had before it a November report of the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁴⁾ on the status of contributions received from States parties, actual expenditures for the financial periods covering 1987-1992, estimated expenditure for 1993 and anticipated commitments for 1994 and 1995.

Fund for victims of torture

On 5 March,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.⁽⁶⁶⁾ It called on the Secretary-General to consider arranging a special pledging session for the Fund in the context of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see under "Advancement of human rights") and asked him to transmit to Governments its appeals for contributions, ensure the provision of adequate staff and computer equipment to operate the Fund and inform the Commission annually of the Fund's operations.

In response to a 1992 Commission request,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, by a January note with later addenda⁽⁶⁸⁾ submitted a consolidated report on the Fund's activities during the preceding ten years (1982-1992). The note gave amounts of donor contributions and programmes and reflected donor trends. The Secretary-General concluded that, despite limited means and little fund-raising time, the Fund had proven to be a useful tool in assisting torture victims and their families.

By the same note, the Secretary-General transmitted the text of the Istanbul Declaration adopted by the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims, issued following a 1992 symposium organized by the Rehabilitation and Research Centre for Torture Victims (Denmark) and the Human Rights Foundation of Turkey and the Turkish Medical Association, which appealed for an increase in national governments' contributions to the Fund from $1.6 million in 1992 to $25 million in 1995 and at least $100 million in 1999.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Fund,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 19-28 April), the Fund's Board of Trustees recommended approval of grants for 67 projects in 50 countries in the amount of $2,111,880. The projects recommended by the Board focused on supporting programmes providing direct medical, psychological, social and other assistance to torture victims and their families. The Board also recommended four new guidelines dealing with applications for grants, the reporting procedure, pledges, refunding grants, termination of projects and established channels of assistance, which were annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

During 1993, the Fund received $1,892,630 from 25 States. Contributions were also received from a number of individuals.

By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's annual report.

Detention of juveniles

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Commission welcomed a 1992 proposal by the Secretary-General⁽⁷¹⁾ to organize in 1994 a meeting of experts on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles. It endorsed the Subcommission's 1992 request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance for the meeting⁽⁷²⁾ and asked him to report on the meeting's results.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/280, approved both the Secretary-General's proposal to organize a meeting of experts and the representation of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery and the Working Group on Detention at the meeting. It also approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance for the meeting.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a June note,⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretary-General reported on progress in arranging the meeting.

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Subcommission requested the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance for the meeting and asked him to report on its results.

Detention without charge or trial

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Commission asked the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, created in 1991⁽⁷⁶⁾ for a three-year period, to investigate cases of detention imposed arbitrarily or otherwise inconsistently with the international standards set forth in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽⁷⁷⁾ or in relevant international legal instruments. The Commission considered that the Group, within its mandate, could take up cases on its own initiative. It asked the Group to report in 1994 on its activities and to make suggestions and recommendations to enable it better to carry out its task. The Commission asked the Group to continue to seek information from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and individuals concerned or their representatives. The Secretary-General was requested to assist the Group, particularly with regard to staffing and appropriate resources to discharge its mandate, including the organization, carrying out and follow-up of missions in countries wishing to invite the Group. The request to the Secretary-General was approved by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July by decision 1993/264.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held three sessions at Geneva in 1993 (26-30 April, 27 September-1 October, 1-10 December).⁽⁷⁸⁾ The activities of the five-member group of independent experts consisted of transmitting letters to the Governments of countries where cases of alleged arbitrary detention were reported to have occurred, asking them to make inquiries and inform the Group of the results within 90 days. The Group sent communications to 32 countries concerning 183 cases of arbitrary detention, to which 15 countries replied. In addition, the Group received five replies to letters transmitted prior to 1993. The Group also addressed 17 urgent-action appeals to 14 countries. Most of these concerned cases of alleged arbitrary detention which had endangered the health or life of the detainees.

The Group stated that timely and comprehensive information from Governments was the main factor in the success of the Group's work and appealed to Governments that maintained states of emergency for long periods to limit their use. It recommended strengthening habeas corpus and recommended that the Commission on Human Rights support its Subcommission's efforts to elaborate a declaration on habeas corpus with a view to arriving at an additional protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see below).⁽¹⁾ Annexed to the report were the Group's methods of work, as revised in December, and decisions adopted by the Group concerning communications transmitted in 1992 and 1993.

Detained UN staff members

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families.⁽⁷⁹⁾ Annexed to the report was a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Commission appealed to Member States to respect and ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under United Nations authority and their families, and urged them, in accordance with the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,⁽⁸¹⁾ to provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention. It further urged Member States to allow medical teams to investigate the health of detained staff members, experts and their families in order to provide them with medical treatment, and called on them to allow representatives of international organizations to attend hearings. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations staff members, experts and their families were fully respected and to seek compensation for damage suffered, as well as their full reintegration. It also asked him to take steps to ensure the application of the recommendations contained in the final report of the Special Rapporteur on the protection of the human rights of United Nations staff members, experts and their families⁽⁷²⁾ and to submit in 1994 an updated report on the situation of United Nations staff members, experts and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, including those cases that had been successfully settled since his last report.⁽⁸²⁾

Extra-legal executions

The Commission on Human Rights had before it the first report submitted by its new Special Rapporteur on summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal).⁽⁸³⁾ He addressed a series of issues related to his mandate and described urgent appeals and other communications transmitted to Governments, together with any replies or observations received from them. There were grounds, the Special Rapporteur stated, for believing that armed conflicts and political violence had resulted in an increase in violations of the right to life. He expressed concern at the high number of allegations concerning violations of the right to life in the context of violence against participants in demonstrations and other public manifestations, journalists and members of trade unions or political movements.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations concerning: violations of the right to life in connection with the death penalty; deaths in custody; deaths due to use of force by law enforcement officials; violations of the right to life during armed conflicts; expulsion of persons to a country where their life was in danger; genocide; and victims' rights.

In August,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Special Rapporteur submitted a report on his visit to Rwanda (8-17 April) where he investigated allegations of grave and massive violations of the right to life in the context of an armed conflict between Rwandese Government forces and the armed opposition movement, the Rwandese Patriotic Front.

From 24 May to 2 June, he had visited Peru to look into allegations of violations of the right to life there.⁽⁸⁵⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Commission, strongly condemning the large number of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions taking place, appealed to Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to take action to combat and eliminate them. It welcomed the appointment of the new Special Rapporteur for extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and requested him to continue examining such executions, to pay special attention to executions of children and allegations concerning violations of the right to life in the context of violence against participants in demonstrations, and to respond to information he received, particularly when a summary or arbitrary execution was imminent or threatened or when such an execution had occurred. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur and to consider ways to publicize his work and recommendations. It urged Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur and to take measures to lower the level of violence and needless loss of life during situations of internal violence, disturbances, tensions and public emergency.

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Commission requested the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to submit all information it deemed necessary and any specific recommendations it might have regarding the fulfilment of its task; pay attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons; take account of the provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances;⁽⁴⁹⁾ and modify its working methods if necessary. The Commission encouraged Governments concerned to consider inviting the Group to visit their countries and asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance, in particular staff and resources, especially in carrying out missions and holding sessions in countries prepared to receive it. It further asked him to inform the Group of steps he had taken to secure the widespread dissemination and promotion of the Declaration.

Also on 5 March,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Commission, noting the proposed model autopsy protocol prepared under United Nations auspices,⁽⁸⁹⁾ asked the Secretary-General to consult with Governments, United Nations bodies, professional organizations of forensic experts, and other interested institutions to identify experts who could join forensic teams or provide advice or assistance to thematic or country mechanisms, advisory services and technical assistance programmes. It also requested him to establish a list of forensic experts and experts in related fields and to make that list available to special rapporteurs and human rights experts so that they might request the forensic experts to assist them in evaluating documents and other evidence and to accompany them on country visits. The Commission further asked the Secretary-General to inform it in 1994 of progress made.

On 9 March,⁽⁹⁰⁾ the Commission, commending Governments that had invited any of the thematic special rapporteurs or the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to visit their countries, encouraged them to respond expeditiously to requests for information. It invited Governments to study carefully the recommendations addressed to them under the thematic procedures and to keep the relevant mechanisms informed on progress made in implementing them. The Commission requested special rapporteurs and working groups to include in their reports gender-disaggregated data, as well as comments on problems of responding and the results of analyses. It asked the Secretary-General to consider convening a meeting of all thematic special rapporteurs and working group Chairmen to enable an exchange of views and closer cooperation; to issue annually the conclusions and recommendations of special rapporteurs and working groups; and to ensure the availability of resources for effective implementation of all thematic mandates.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a February report,⁽⁹¹⁾ the Secretary-General described the activities of forensic scientists that helped to combat human rights violations and reported on consultations conducted by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances with organizations concerned with forensic science and human rights. He stated that the Working Group had elaborated a preliminary scheme consisting of: maintaining a list of experienced organizations in human rights and forensic science; the designation of experts by the organizations; establishing three types of programmes for forensic activities, including programmes requested by Governments, programmes initiated at the request of special rapporteurs, working groups or other United Nations organs, and programmes requested by NGOs; and granting experts the legal status of experts on mission in accordance with the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.⁽⁹²⁾ Recommendations for further activities included consultations with NGOs experienced in human rights and forensic science and studying various legal and practical issues in detail. Annexed to the report was the text of a cooperation service agreement between the United Nations and Physicians for Human Rights, a United States-based NGO.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,⁽⁹³⁾ held three sessions in 1993: its thirty-ninth in New York (17-21 May) and its fortieth and forty-first at Geneva (24 September-1 October and 24 November-3 December).⁽⁹⁴⁾ The Group examined information on enforced or involuntary disappearances received from Governments and NGOs.

A member of the Group carried out a mission to parts of the territory of the former Yugoslavia (4-13 August) to determine how the problem of disappearances there could best be approached,⁽⁹⁵⁾ and recommended that the special process should be entrusted to the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia in a joint mandate with a member of the Group, resulting in joint annual reports to the Commission on Human Rights and, possibly, the General Assembly. The total number of reports of enforced or involuntary disappearances received from the former Yugoslavia numbered 11,103. (For further details, see below, under "Human rights violations".)

In 1993, the total number of cases worldwide being kept under active consideration stood at 33,843. The Group continued to process a backlog of some 2,639 reports submitted in 1991 and received some 5,523 new reports of disappearances in 30 countries. It transmitted 3,162 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned, of which some 523 were received in 1993, while the rest were part of the backlog. It also transmitted to Governments 151 cases under its urgent-action procedure, of which 18 were clarified during the year.

The Group concluded that the phenomenon of disappearances was still rampant and that the policy and practice of many States ran counter to the provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances.⁽⁹⁶⁾ It noted, however, that cooperation with most Governments was improving. The Group appealed for increased human resources to carry out its mandate effectively.

Annexed to the Group's report was a list of new NGOs that had contacted the Group and graphs showing the development of disappearances during the period 1973-1992 in countries with more than 50 transmitted cases.

By decision 1993/263 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to establish a list of forensic experts and experts in related fields who could provide advice in regard to the monitoring of human rights violations and training of local teams and/or assistance in the reunification of families of the disappeared. It also approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General provide resources to fund Centre for Human Rights activities to implement the Commission's resolution on human rights and forensic science.⁽⁸⁸⁾

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Slavery

Working Group activities. The Subcommission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its eighteenth session (Geneva, 17-27 May),⁽⁹⁶⁾ focused on the training of law enforcement officials and police, economic development programmes, information campaigns, education programmes for children in danger, new forms of legislation, rehabilitation measures and the protection of working children. It also considered the Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography⁽⁹⁷⁾ and the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (see below, under "Other human rights questions") and reviewed developments in other contemporary forms of slavery, including slavery and the slave trade, debt bondage, forced labour and exploitation and traffic affecting children, including child soldiers and illegal traffic for the purposes of adoption and organ transplants, and incest.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽⁹⁸⁾ the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite States parties to the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,⁽⁹⁹⁾ and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ to submit regular reports to the Subcommission on the situation in their countries. It invited States that had not ratified the relevant Conventions to do so, or to explain in writing why they felt unable to. Intergovernmental organizations, relevant United Nations organizations and NGOs were asked to supply information to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. The Commission encouraged its Subcommission to elaborate recommendations on ways to establish an effective mechanism to implement the slavery Conventions on the basis of a 1989 study by the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁰¹⁾ It asked the Secretary-General to designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for coordinating United Nations activities to suppress contemporary forms of slavery and to report in 1994 on measures taken to that end. It asked the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children to examine ways of cooperating with the Working Group and asked Governments to pursue a policy of information, prevention and rehabilitation of women victims of prostitution and to take appropriate economic and social measures to that effect. The Secretary-General was to report to the Economic and Social Council on steps taken to implement a 1983 Council resolution on suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others.⁽¹⁰²⁾

On 10 March,⁽¹⁰³⁾ the Commission approved a number of requests made by its Subcommission in 1992 pertaining to organizational matters of the Working Group.

Subcommission action. On 20 August, the Subcommission adopted a resolution concerning matters considered by the Working Group,⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ another on additional assistance in studying ways of resolving problems arising from slavery⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ and a third on the Group's mandate.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a May 1993 report summarizing information from 12 Governments, two specialized agencies, one regional commission and two other United Nations bodies on the suppression of traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others.⁽¹⁰⁸⁾

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/48 without vote.

Suppression of the traffic in persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1982/20 of 10 March 1982 on the question of slavery and the slave trade in all their practices and manifestations, including the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, 1988/42 of 8 March 1988, 1989/35 of 6 March 1989, 1990/63 of 7 March 1990, 1991/58 of 6 March 1991 and 1992/47 of 3 March 1992 on the report of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, taking note of Commission resolution 1993/27 of 5 March 1993 and decision 1993/112 of 10 March 1993, also on the report of the Working Group, and recalling Commission resolution 1992/74 of 5 March 1992 on programmes of action for the prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and for the elimination of the exploitation of child labour,

Recalling also Council resolutions 1982/20 of 4 May 1982 and 1983/30 of 26 May 1983 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, 1988/34 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/74 of 24 May 1989 on the Working Group, and 1990/46 of 25 May 1990, 1991/35 of 31 May 1991 and 1992/10 of 20 July 1992 on the suppression of the traffic in persons,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/36 of 28 February 1992 on a draft programme of action for the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others,

Considering that the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Economic and Social Council on the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others still constitutes a useful basis for further action,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others,

Noting that only a few Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations have submitted information on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30,

Gravely concerned that slavery, the slave trade and slavery-like practices still exist, that there are modern manifestations of those phenomena and that such practices represent some of the gravest violations of human rights,

Convinced that the United Nations Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery will play an important role in the protection of the human rights of victims of contemporary forms of slavery,

Aware of the complexity of the issue of the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and the need for further coordination and cooperation to implement the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and by various United Nations bodies,

Sharing the grave concern, expressed by the Commission on Human Rights in paragraph 2 of its resolution 1993/27, at manifestations of contemporary forms of slavery as reported to the Working Group,

Mindful of the resolutions on violence against women, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Welcoming the determined stance taken in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993 against gender-based violence and all forms of sexual harassment and exploitation, including those resulting from cultural prejudice and international trafficking and the pertinent reference made in that Declaration to legal measures, national action and international cooperation in such fields as economic and social development, education, safe maternity and health care, and social support,

1. Reminds States parties to the Slavery Convention of 1926, the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956, and the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949 that they should submit to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities regular reports on the situation in their countries, as provided for under the relevant conventions and under Council decision 16(LVI) of 17 May 1974;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the Council, at its substantive session of 1994, on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30 by those Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations which have not yet submitted such information and to make that report available to the Working Group;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to include in the abovementioned report, or to make available to the Council in some way, information on activities of the supervisory bodies of the International Labour Organisation regarding the implementation of provisions and standards designed to ensure the protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery;

5. Takes note in this connection of the information on activities of the supervisory bodies of the International Labour Organisation regarding the implementation of provisions and standards designed to ensure the protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the abovementioned report information on any operational activities of the United Nations system that can foster the implementation of standards designed to ensure the protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery and activities that might be geared to the prevention of violations and alleviation of the plight, or rehabilitation, of victims;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the abovementioned report information on the matter of the close collaboration of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice with the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat on the issue of the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure effective servicing of the Working Group and of other activities related to the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery and slavery-like practices, and requests him to report to the Council at its substantive session of 1994 on the steps taken in that regard;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for the coordination of activities in the United Nations for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery, and requests the Secretary-General to report on the follow-up to this request;

10. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to collaborate closely with the Centre for Human Rights on the issue of the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

11. Welcomes the establishment of the United Nations Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery;

12. Approves the endorsement by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1993/27 of the recommendation made by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1992/2 of 14 August 1992, that the arrangements regarding the organization of the sessions of the Working Group, as contained in Commission decision

1992/115 of 3 March 1992, should be repeated in subsequent years;

13. Welcomes Commission on Human Rights decision 1993/112 to authorize the Subcommission to consider the possibility of appointing a special rapporteur to update the report of the Special Rapporteur on the exploitation of child labour, Mr. Abdelwahab Bouhdiba;

14. Concurs with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in its assessment of the relevance of the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines) contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 45/112 of 14 December 1990;

15. Decides to consider the question of the suppression of the traffic in persons at its substantive session of 1994 under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Sexual exploitation of women during wartime

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ the Subcommission decided to entrust Linda Chavez (United States), as Special Rapporteur, with undertaking an in-depth study on the situation of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during wartime, including internal armed conflict. It asked her to submit a preliminary report.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In September,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ the Special Rapporteur submitted a preparatory document on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during wartime, presenting background information for the in-depth study, the object of the study and its outline. (For information on rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, see below under "Human rights violations".)

UN Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery

On 5 March,⁽¹¹¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the Secretary-General's appointment of a Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, established by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽¹¹²⁾ and asked him to assist the Board in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known. It appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Fund and asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to all Governments.

Population transfer

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,⁽¹¹³⁾ the Commission, by a vote of 48 to 1, endorsed the Subcommission's 1992 decision⁽¹¹⁴⁾ to entrust Special Rapporteurs Awn Shawkat Al-Khasawneh (Jordan) and Ribot Hatano (Japan) with preparing a preliminary study, for submission in 1993, on the human rights dimensions of population transfer and its request to the Secretary-General to give them all the assistance they required. The Commission's endorsements were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/288 of 28 July.

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. In July,⁽¹¹⁵⁾ the Special Rapporteurs on the human rights dimensions of population transfer, including the implantation of settlers, described the circumstances under which population transfers occurred as well as their cumulative effects and listed applicable international standards and regional human rights instruments and bilateral population exchange agreements and treaties. The Special Rapporteurs recommended that a specific legal instrument should clarify that population transfer was, prima facie, unlawful and elaborate the circumstances under which, in exceptional cases, population transfer would be permitted. They made a number of recommendations, several of which were incorporated into a Subcommission resolution.

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽¹¹⁶⁾ the Subcommission endorsed the preliminary report's conclusions and recommendations. Regretting the inability of Special Rapporteur Hatano to continue his duties, it asked Special Rapporteur Awn Shawkat Al-Khasawneh to continue the study on population transfer and to submit a progress report in 1994. The Subcommission asked the Commission to request the Secretary-General to organize an expert seminar in 1995 and to ask the Special Rapporteur to undertake on-site visits to diverse, ongoing cases of population transfer. It requested the Secretary-General to invite Governments, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide the Special Rapporteur with relevant information and to provide him with all the assistance he might require.

Freedom of speech

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽¹¹⁷⁾ expressing concern at the extensive occurrence of detention of persons exercising their right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Commission appealed to States to ensure respect and support for that right. It also appealed to them to ensure that persons seeking to exercise those rights and freedoms were not discriminated against or harassed, in areas such as employment, housing and social services. It asked its Chairman to appoint for three years a special rapporteur on the right to freedom of opinion and expression and asked the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance he or she might require. It asked the Special Rapporteur to note the relevant work being carried out in the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations and to submit a report in 1994.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/268, approved the appointment of a special rapporteur, the request to the Secretary-General to assist him or her and the request to the Special Rapporteur to submit a report in 1994.

The Commission's Chairman appointed Mr. A. Hussain (India) as Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of opinion and expression.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

Report of the Secretary-General. In February 1993,⁽¹¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in response to a 1992 Commission request,⁽¹¹⁹⁾ provided information on specific cases in which persons alleged that they had suffered reprisals for availing or attempting to avail themselves of United Nations human rights procedures or had been subjected to intimidation to prevent them from doing so. He also described decisions and measures taken by United Nations policy-making organs in that regard. Annexed to the report were allegations of intimidation and reprisal received and processed by United Nations human rights bodies.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹²⁰⁾ the Commission urged Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against individuals or groups seeking access to United Nations human rights bodies. It requested representatives of those bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights to help prevent the hampering of access to United Nations human rights procedures and to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal. It also requested them to include in their reports a reference to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken by them. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1994.

Conscientious objectors

Report of the Secretary-General. In January,⁽¹²¹⁾ the Secretary-General summarized replies from 24 Governments and one NGO received in accordance with a 1991 Commission request⁽¹²²⁾ for comments or information on conscientious objection to military service.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹²³⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1995 on conscientious objection to military service, taking into account comments by Governments and further information received by him.

Amnesty

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽¹²⁴⁾ the Commission endorsed a 1992 Subcommission decision⁽¹¹⁹⁾ to entrust Special Rapporteurs El Hadji Guissé (Senegal) and Louis Joinet (France) with drafting a study on the question of impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations and asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteurs with any assistance they might require.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/266 of 28 July, approved the Commission's endorsement and its request to the Secretary-General.

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. As requested by the Subcommission in 1992,⁽¹¹⁹⁾ the Special Rapporteurs submitted a progress report on the question of impunity of perpetrators of serious human rights violations.⁽¹²⁵⁾ They recommended that ways to eradicate the practice of death squads be studied; guidelines for implementing national reconciliation policies drawn up; NGOs given a greater role in a strategy for combating impunity; comparative study of various experiences of truth-finding commissions undertaken; guidelines for conserving and regulating access to the files and records of the security and intelligence services drawn up; a study on the scope of the right of every person to a hearing prepared; and a comparative analysis of various purging policies carried out.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽¹²⁶⁾ the Subcommission requested the Special Rapporteurs to submit a report in 1994 on the question of impunity for perpetrators of violations of civil and political rights and to continue their study on perpetrators of violations of economic and social rights. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteurs with any assistance they might need.

Independence of the judicial system

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽¹²⁷⁾ the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 1992 decision⁽¹¹⁹⁾ to entrust Louis Joinet with preparing a report on practices and measures which had served to strengthen or weaken the independence of the judiciary and on the protection of members of the legal profession. It requested the Secretary-General to provide Mr. Joinet with all the assistance necessary to prepare the report.

By decision 1993/267 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's endorsement and request.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Joinet presented information collected from 25 States on measures they had taken to strengthen the safeguards of independence and protection of judges and lawyers and analysed advisory services and technical assistance programmes in that area.⁽¹²⁸⁾ He also examined cases of measures and practices that had weakened those safeguards, based on information received from 17 States. The Special Rapporteur discussed cooperation between the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the United Nations human rights programme and the establishment of a monitoring mechanism for reviewing the independence and impartiality of the judiciary.

Subcommission action. On 28 August,⁽¹²⁹⁾ the Subcommission recommended that the Commission create a monitoring mechanism in the form of a special rapporteur to follow up the question of the independence and impartiality of the judiciary. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the special rapporteur with the assistance he or she might need.

Right to a fair trial

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽¹³⁰⁾ the Commission decided to endorse a 1992 request of the Subcommission⁽¹³¹⁾ to two Special Rapporteurs to continue their study on the right to a fair trial.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/290, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's request.

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. In June,⁽¹³²⁾ Special Rapporteurs Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) and William Treat (United States) submitted their fourth report on the right to a fair trial, in which they recommended the development of a third optional protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽¹⁾ aiming at guaranteeing under all circumstances the right to a fair trial and a remedy. A preliminary draft of the optional protocol was annexed to their report, as was a supplemental bibliography of relevant material. In separate addenda, the Special Rapporteurs submitted a resolution and draft declaration on the right to a fair trial and a remedy for future discussion by the Subcommission⁽¹³³⁾ and a summary of information received from NGOs and bar associations concerning national laws and practices relating to the right to a fair trial.⁽¹³⁴⁾

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽¹³⁵⁾ the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteurs to submit in 1994 a final report, including recommendations for strengthening the implementation of the right to a fair trial, together with a draft optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽¹⁾ and to consider elaborating a draft declaration or body of principles on the right to a fair trial and a remedy. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the draft third optional protocol to Governments, NGOs and the Human Rights Committee for comments and suggestions. The Subcommission decided to consider in 1994 the advisability of elaborating a third optional protocol to the Covenant and other recommendations of the Special Rapporteurs.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Expert seminar. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1991,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General organized an expert seminar to discuss indicators to measure achievements in the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights (Geneva, 25-29 January 1993).⁽²⁾ Given the nature of the seminar's objectives, it was considered a satellite meeting to the World Conference on Human Rights (see below under "Advancement on human rights"). The seminar concluded that the first priority was to identify and clarify the content of specific rights and States parties' obligations in order to identify the most appropriate way to assess progressive achievement, which might or might not involve the use of statistical indicators. It also concluded that monitoring the performance of States in the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights required new approaches in data collection analysis and interpretation that focused on poor and disadvantaged groups. The seminar outlined the objectives necessary to promote the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights and made a number of general recommendations for action by United Nations bodies, including the specialized agencies, and States.

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights requested the Secretary-General to bring the conclusions and recommendations of the expert seminar to the attention of Member States, the Commission, other United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, financial institutions and NGOs.

The Commission encouraged States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁽⁴⁾ to support and cooperate with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and asked the Economic and Social Council to identify ways in which international cooperation and technical assistance could contribute to the effective implementation of the rights recognized in the Covenant. Taking note of the final report of the Special Rapporteur on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, submitted in 1992,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to ensure wide distribution of that report and the Special Rapporteur's 1990⁽⁶⁾ and 1991⁽⁷⁾ progress reports throughout the United Nations, in particular by publishing them in a single document. It also requested the Secretary-General to invite international financial institutions to consider organizing an expert seminar on their role in realizing economic, social and cultural rights; prepare basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment and economic, social and cultural rights; and promote coordination of United Nations human rights activities and those of development agencies, with a view to drawing on their expertise and support.

On the same date,⁽⁸⁾ by a roll-call vote of 36 to 2, with 12 abstentions, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1994, in consultation with Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned, a report on the repercussions and prospects of the debt crisis and structural adjustment programmes on the effective enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights of developing countries.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 Subcommission request,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General in July highlighted activities undertaken by the Centre for Human Rights in the field of economic, social and cultural rights.⁽⁹⁾ Annexed to the report was a list of United Nations bodies and agencies having mandates bearing directly on those rights. A separate addendum⁽¹⁰⁾ provided a list of documents relating to economic, social and cultural rights issued in preparation for the World Conference on Human Rights.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1993, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽⁴⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽¹¹⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 127 States. Armenia, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cape Verde, the Czech Republic, Dominica, Ethiopia, Malawi, Nigeria, Republic of Moldova and Slovakia became parties in 1993.⁽¹²⁾

The Secretary-General provided information on the status of ratifications of or accessions to and signatures of the Covenant as at 1 December 1993⁽¹³⁾ (see also below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Implementation of the Covenant

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission appealed to all States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant. It welcomed the efforts of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in preparing general comments on the provisions of the Covenant and encouraged Governments to publish the Covenant in as many languages as possible and to disseminate it widely. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on the status of the Covenant.

Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985,⁽¹⁵⁾ held its eighth (extraordinary) session at Geneva from 10 to 28 May.⁽¹⁶⁾ The session was authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1992⁽¹⁷⁾ owing to the long-standing backlog of States parties' reports awaiting the Committee's consideration. Its pre-session five-member working group, established in 1988⁽¹⁸⁾ to meet for one week prior to each session, convened at Geneva from 28 June to 2 July. The Committee held its ninth (regular) session, also at Geneva, from 22 November to 10 December.⁽¹⁶⁾

Concerning the rights covered by articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights and the right to social security) the Committee examined a report from Senegal.⁽¹⁹⁾ Rights covered under articles 10 to 12 (the protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard and to physical and mental health) were examined in reports submitted by Nicaragua.⁽²⁰⁾ As to the rights covered by articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation), the Committee considered reports from Australia⁽²¹⁾ and Germany.⁽²²⁾ Under articles 10 to 15, the Committee examined a report from Canada.⁽²³⁾

Under articles 1 to 15, the Committee examined reports from Iceland,⁽²⁴⁾ Iran,⁽²⁵⁾ Lebanon,⁽²⁶⁾ Mexico,⁽²⁷⁾ New Zealand,⁽²⁸⁾ Niue,⁽²⁹⁾ Tokelau⁽³⁰⁾ and Viet Nam.⁽³¹⁾

The Committee reviewed the state of implementation of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Covenant by Kenya which, although a party to the Covenant since 1976, had not fulfilled its reporting obligations.

The Committee's day of general discussion in May focused on the rights of the ageing and the elderly and, in December, on the right to health.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/296 of 28 July, noting the longstanding backlog of States parties' reports awaiting consideration, authorized the holding of an extraordinary additional three-week session of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the first half of 1994. It also authorized a special three-day meeting of the Committee's pre-session working group, to be held immediately following the conclusion of the Committee's ninth session. Also on 28 July, the Council, by decision 1993/297, endorsed the Committee's request to the General Assembly to authorize payment to each Committee member of an honorarium equivalent to that payable to members of other treaty bodies. By decision 1993/298 of the same date, the Council decided to consider in 1994 the allocation of resources to enable the Committee to involve experts in its general discussion. In addition, by decision 1993/295 of 28 July, it renewed its endorsement of the Committee's 1992 decision⁽³²⁾ to send one or two of its members to advise the Dominican Republic regarding efforts to promote full compliance with the Covenant in the case of large-scale evictions, subject to acceptance by the Government. On the same date, the Council, by decision 1993/294, approved the Committee's offer of technical assistance to Panama.

On 28 July, the Council, by decision 1993/299, took note of the Committee's report on its 1992 session⁽³²⁾ and of an extract from the Committee's report on its 1993 extraordinary session.⁽³³⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted proposals in January 1993⁽³⁵⁾ for the implementation and promotion of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development.⁽³⁶⁾ He addressed obstacles to the implementation of the right to development and examined the criteria to measure progress in the realization of that right. Among his proposals was the setting up of a supervisory mechanism such as a group of independent experts, or an inter-agency advisory group or the appointment of a special rapporteur.

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 36 to 1, with 13 abstentions, established, initially for a three-year period, a working group on the right to development to identify obstacles to the implementation and realization of the 1986 Declaration⁽³⁶⁾ and to recommend ways towards the realization of that right by all States. It asked the working group to submit to it a report on the obstacles affecting the implementation of the Declaration and to report annually on its work. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the group received all necessary assistance and asked him to invite Governments and intergovernmental organizations to communicate to the Advisory Services, Technical Assistance and Information Branch of the Centre for Human Rights sample projects on the effective implementation of the Declaration. It requested the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to give attention in 1993 to the implementation of the principles in the Declaration. Noting with concern the lack of coordination in the United Nations system of the implementation of the principles contained in the 1986 Declaration, the Commission urged all relevant bodies, particularly the specialized agencies, to take due account of the Declaration and to make efforts to contribute to its application.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽³⁸⁾ the Subcommission decided to entrust Asbjorn Eide (Norway) with producing a preparatory document on the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights, and income distribution, taking into account matters related to the realization of the right to development, with a view to determining how to strengthen activities in that area. It asked him to consult the widest possible variety of sources in preparing the document, which it would examine in 1994.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on the Right to Development, at its first session (Geneva, 8-19 November 1993),⁽³⁹⁾ elected its officers, adopted its agenda and defined its methods of work. The 15-member Group reviewed major developments since the adoption of the Declaration, discussed its mandate and considered obstacles to the realization of the Declaration. The Group recommended that additional information be sought from Governments, international institutions, regional economic commissions, the Commission on Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women, as well as other international bodies. Annexed to the Group's report were preliminary guidelines and a checklist which would facilitate the collection of information from those sources. The Group proposed holding two sessions in 1994 and a meeting between its Chairman and the chairpersons of other human rights bodies prior to its second session. It further recommended that: the Secretary-General be asked to provide the Centre for Human Rights with a unit to follow up on the Declaration and its implementation and to give logistical support to the Group; the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions be invited to a future session; Governments and the international community be encouraged to incorporate the right to development into their activities; the right to development be put on the agenda of forthcoming United Nations meetings; and NGOs and other grass-roots organizations be enabled to play a major role in activities relating to the right to development.

Note by the Secretary-General. In November,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his 1992 report to the Commission⁽³²⁾ on the implementation of the 1986 Declaration, as requested by the Assembly in 1992.⁽³⁴⁾

On 20 December, the General Assembly, by decision 48/430, took note of the Secretary-General's note on the right to development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted decision 1993/260 by a roll-call vote.

Right to development

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/22 of 4 March 1993, approved:

(a) The Commission's decision to establish, initially for a three-year period, a working group on the right to development, to identify obstacles to the implementation and realization of the Declaration on the Right to Development and to recommend ways and means towards the realization of the right to development by all States;

(b) The Commission's request to the working group to submit to the Commission at its fiftieth session an initial, comprehensive report and to continue reporting to the Commission, on a yearly basis, on its work;

(c) The Commission's request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the working group received all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources required to fulfil its mandate, and to invite Governments and intergovernmental organizations to communicate to the Advisory Services, Technical Assistance and Information Branch of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat sample projects on the effective implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/260

44-1-4 (roll-call vote)

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, France, Guinea, India, Italy, Kuwait, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukraine, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Germany, Japan, United Kingdom.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/130 without vote.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Right to Development, which it proclaimed at its forty-first session,

Recalling its resolutions 45/97 of 14 December 1990, 46/123 of 17 December 1991 and 47/123 of 18 December 1992, and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1993/22 of 4 March 1993,

Recalling also the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right,^a

Recalling further the principles proclaimed in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development of 14 June 1992,

Reiterating the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Mindful that the Commission on Human Rights entered a new phase at its forty-ninth session in its consideration of this matter, which is directed towards the implementation and further enhancement of the right to development,

Reaffirming the need for an evaluation mechanism so as to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development, and welcoming in this regard, the decision of the Commission at its forty-ninth session, in its resolution 1993/22, to establish a working group on the right to development,

Noting that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, examined the relationship between development and the enjoyment by everyone of economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights, recognizing the importance of creating the conditions whereby everyone may enjoy those rights as set out in the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling that, in order to promote development, equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, which reaffirms the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights and reaffirms that the human person is the central subject of development,

Having considered the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to resolution 47/123,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries;

2. Takes note with interest of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/123;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session concrete proposals on the effective implementation and promotion of the Declaration on the Right to Development, taking into account the views expressed on the issue at the forty-ninth session of the Commission as well as any further comments and recommendations that may be submitted pursuant to paragraph 10 of Commission resolution 1993/22;

4. Notes with appreciation the convening of the first meeting of the Working Group on the Right to Development from 8 to 19 November 1993 at Geneva;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue coordination of the various activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration;

6. Urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, particularly the specialized agencies, when planning their programmes of activities, to take due account of the Declaration and to make efforts to enhance their cooperation in its application;

7. Urges the regional commissions and regional intergovernmental organizations to convene meetings of governmental experts and representatives of non-governmental and grass-roots organizations for the purpose of seeking agreements for the implementation of the Declaration through international cooperation;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session and the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session of the activities of the organizations, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system for the implementation of the Declaration;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to make proposals to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right and the report of the Working Group on the Right to Development;

10. Takes note with satisfaction of the results of the World Conference on Human Rights, including its reaffirmation that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing;

11. Decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Extreme poverty

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,(41) the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's appointment in 1992 of Leandro Despouy (Argentina) as Special Rapporteur on human rights and extreme poverty.⁽⁴²⁾ It asked him to pay special attention to several aspects of the subject and to consider the possibility of organizing a seminar on extreme poverty and denial of human rights. It called on States, specialized agencies, United Nations bodies and other international organizations to continue to make their views on human rights and extreme poverty known to the Secretary-General, and to give due attention each International Day for the Elimination of Poverty (17 October) to the situation of the poorest and to inform the Secretary-General of activities undertaken in that regard. It asked the Secretary-General to take into account, in preparing the programme for the International Day, of the relationship between extreme poverty and the full realization of human rights and to report to the Commission in 1994 on the subject.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July,⁽⁴³⁾ Special Rapporteur Despouy, in his preliminary report on human rights and extreme poverty, proposed holding a seminar on extreme poverty and denial of human rights. He outlined the plan of work for his progress report which would offer a definition of extreme poverty, discuss problems of poverty and work of the agencies and organizations, consider a human rights approach to extreme poverty and present conclusions and recommendations. It would also discuss the history of the subject, review his mandate and outline his sources of information.

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Subcommission approved the Special Rapporteur's proposals for the seminar on extreme poverty and the denial of human rights and asked him to submit an interim report in 1994. It requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to inform him of the conclusions of any consultations held on human rights and extreme poverty with Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/44 without vote.

Human rights and extreme poverty

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/13 of 26 February 1993 and recalling resolution 1992/27 of 27 August 1992 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Approves the appointment of Mr. Leandro Despouy as Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and extreme poverty with responsibility for preparing a study on this subject on the basis of the aspects set out by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolutions 1989/10 of 2 March 1989, 1990/15 of 23 February 1990 and 1991/14 of 22 February 1991, bearing particularly in mind the approach defined in Commission resolution 1992/11 of 21 February 1992;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his consultations on the topic of human rights and extreme poverty with Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and to inform the Special Rapporteur of the conclusions of those consultations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance for the fulfilment of his mandate, including, as appropriate, assistance from consultants with specialized knowledge of the subject.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/44

28 July 1993 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) without vote, 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Right to own property

Report of the independent expert. In 1993,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Commission had before it the final report of independent expert Luis Valencia Rodriguez (Ecuador) on the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others. He discussed the significance of the right to own property as a contribution to securing peace and the goals of economic and social development enshrined in the Charter. The expert discussed the legal protection of the right to own property as a human right and its implementation; presented national and international policies, national legislation and practical measures in the field; and described the restrictions and limitations in exercising the right. He recommended retaining the subject on the agendas of the General Assembly and the Commission; maintaining a link between the right to own property, the right to adequate housing and other relevant human rights; supporting property rights reforms in ex-socialist States and some developing countries; convening a seminar in an Eastern European country on ensuring the right to own property; and the routine provision of remedies by local courts, administrative tribunals and other authorities. He outlined action that should be taken by CERD and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Commission renewed the independent expert's mandate for one year in order for him to complete his report using observations and comments submitted by Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs that were not included due to the time when they were received. It requested the Secretary-General to assist the independent expert and decided to consider the report in 1994.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/259, approved the Commission's decision and its request to the Secretary-General.

Right to adequate housing

Human Rights Commission action. On 4 March,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 1992 decision⁽⁴⁸⁾ to appoint Rajinder Sachar (India) as Special Rapporteur on promoting the realization of the right to adequate housing.

By decision 1993/287 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommittee's requests to the Special Rapporteur to submit to the Subcommittee in 1993 a progress report on the promotion of the realization of the right to adequate housing and to the Secretary-General to provide assistance to him.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June,⁽⁴⁹⁾ Special Rapporteur Sachar elaborated and clarified States' obligations concerning the right to adequate housing, as well as other legal dimensions of that right. He proposed that the United Nations Advisory Services Programme develop expertise in the area of housing rights and recommended developing legal and political procedures to enhance Government accountability regarding housing rights. The Special Rapporteur considered visits to countries as an indispensable component of his future work and asked for the support of the Subcommittee in that regard.

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Subcommission endorsed the Special Rapporteur's preliminary conclusions and recommendations and decided to renew his mandate for one year to enable him to explore fully the issues arising from the right to adequate housing. It asked the Special Rapporteur to submit in 1994 a second progress report and to examine the need to adopt an international declaration or convention on the right to adequate housing. The Subcommission requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur in preparing the study.

Forced evictions

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 March,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Commission urged Governments to take measures to eliminate the practice of forced evictions, to confer legal security of tenure on all persons so threatened and to adopt measures giving full protection against forced eviction. It recommended that Governments provide restitution, compensation and/or appropriate and sufficient alternative accommodation or land to persons and communities forcibly evicted, following mutually satisfactory negotiations. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional and intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and community-based organizations to solicit their views and comments. It also requested him to compile an analytical report on the practice, based on an analysis of international law and jurisprudence and information provided in response to his request and to submit the report in 1994.

Subcommission action. On 26 August,⁽⁵²⁾ the Subcommission recommended that Governments provide immediate restitution, compensation and/or sufficient alternative accommodation or land to persons and communities that had been forcibly evicted.

Human rights education

On 9 March,⁽⁵³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights recommended that the General Assembly take measures to declare a decade for human rights education in the light of recommendations of the UNESCO International Congress on Education for Human Rights and Democracy (Montreal, Canada, 8-11 March). It asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1994 a report on action taken in relation to the declaration of a decade for human rights education. The Commission called on States to increase their efforts to eradicate illiteracy and provide the necessary facilities to ensure that the entire population had access to all-round education.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/127 without vote.

Decade for human rights education

The General Assembly,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, according to which "education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms",

Recalling the provisions of other international human rights instruments, such as those of article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 20 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, that reflect the aims of the aforementioned article,

Convinced that human rights education is a universal priority in that it contributes to a concept of development consistent with the dignity of the human person, which must include consideration of the diversity of groups such as children, women, youths, persons with disabilities, the ageing, indigenous people, minorities and other groups,

Aware that human rights education involves more than providing information but rather is a comprehensive life-long process by which people at all levels of development and in all strata of society learn respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring that respect within a democratic society,

Taking into account the efforts made by educators and non-governmental organizations in all parts of the world, as well as by intergovernmental organizations, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, to promote education in accordance with the aforementioned principles,

Considering the World Plan of Action on Education for Human Rights and Democracy, adopted by the International Congress on Education for Human Rights and Democracy convened by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Montreal from 8 to 11 March 1993, according to which education for human rights and democracy is itself a human right and a prerequisite for the realization of human rights, democracy and social justice,

Aware of the experience in human rights education of United Nations peace-building operations, including the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/56 of 9 March 1993, in which the Commission recommended that knowledge of human rights, both in its theoretical dimension and in its practical application, should be established as a priority in educational policies,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights at Vienna on 25 June 1993, in particular section II, paragraphs 78 to 82,

1. Appeals to all Governments to step up their efforts to eradicate illiteracy and to direct education towards the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Urges governmental and non-governmental educational agencies to intensify their efforts to establish and implement programmes of human rights education, as recommended in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

3. Takes note of the World Plan of Action on Education for Human Rights and Democracy and recommends that Governments and non-governmental organizations consider it in preparing national plans for human rights education;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, in cooperation with Member States, human rights treaty-monitoring bodies, other appropriate bodies and competent non-governmental organizations, to consider proposals for a United Nations decade for human rights education, which should be incorporated by the Secretary-General into a plan of action for such a decade and submitted, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, with a view to the proclamation of a decade for human rights education;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the establishment of a voluntary fund for human rights education, with special provision for the support of the human rights education activities of non-governmental organizations, to be administered by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat;

6. Invites the specialized agencies and United Nations programmes to develop suitable activities in their respective fields of competence to further the objectives of human rights education;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights and education;

8. Calls upon international, regional and national non-governmental organizations, in particular those concerned with women, labour, development and the environment, as well as all other social justice groups, human rights advocates, educators, religious organizations and the media, to increase their involvement in formal and non-formal education in human rights and to cooperate with the Centre for Human Rights in preparing for a United Nations decade for human rights education;

9. Urges the existing human rights monitoring bodies to place particular emphasis on the implementation by Member States of their international obligation to promote human rights education;

10. Decides to consider this matter at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Advancement of human rights

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/123 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in the Charter, is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling further its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Noting with concern that many of the principles enunciated in resolution 32/130 have not yet been taken into consideration by the international community with all the necessary dynamism and objectivity,

Emphasizing the special importance of the purposes and principles proclaimed in the Declaration on the Right to Development, contained in the annex to its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Reaffirming that the implementation of the right to development is an indispensable element in the process of creating the appropriate conditions for the full enjoyment and preservation of all human rights and fundamental liberties,

Taking into account the final documents of the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta in September 1992,

Reiterating that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of development opportunities is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals within nations,

Expressing its particular concern about the progressive worsening of living conditions in the developing world and the negative impact thereof on the full enjoyment of human rights, and especially about the very serious economic situation of the African continent and the disastrous effects of the heavy burden of the external debt for the peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America,

Reiterating its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights,

Deeply convinced that, today more than ever, economic and social development and human rights are complementary elements leading to the same goal, that is, the maintenance of peace and justice among nations as the foundation for the ideals of freedom and well-being to which mankind aspires,

Reiterating that cooperation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Reiterating also that, in order to ensure the full implementation of the right to development, international cooperation should be conducive to an improvement of relations among States as well as to the commitment of States to refrain from conditioning their economic assistance to developing countries,

Considering that the efforts of the developing countries to promote their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources and by the adoption of appropriate and substantive measures for creating an external environment conducive to such development,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights continue its current work on overall analysis with a view to further promoting and strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and working methods of the Commission, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the provisions and ideas set forth in General Assembly resolution 32/130;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international cooperation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for every human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from promoting and protecting the others;

3. Reaffirms that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

5. Notes that the questions mentioned in paragraph 4 above were discussed during the World Conference on Human Rights held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993 and are referred to in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action as obstacles still prevailing to the achievement of further progress in the field of human rights;

6. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

7. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements for achieving the full realization of the right to development;

8. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

9. Considers it necessary for all Member States to promote international cooperation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, with a view to solving international economic, social and humanitarian problems;

10. Urges all States to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Abo urges all States to promote international cooperation which contributes to the enhancement of the promotion and preservation of human rights, unbiased by any political motivation or condition whatsoever;

12. Decides that the approaches to future work within the United Nations system on human rights matters should take into account the content of the Declaration on the Right to Development and the need for the implementation thereof;

13. Decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session.

National institutions for human rights protection

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1992,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in January⁽²⁾ on steps taken to plan a follow-up workshop, following the World Conference on Human Rights, to the 1991 International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights.⁽³⁾ The Secretary-General suggested holding consultations during the Commission's 1993 session so that a Member State could offer to host the workshop.

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, in November,⁽⁵⁾ reported on activities undertaken to enhance the dissemination of principles relating to the status of national institutions⁽¹⁾ and thus trigger the promotion of such institutions in countries that had none. It stressed the role of national institutions and their activities during the World Conference on Human Rights and described technical assistance programmes and advisory services being carried out by the Centre for Human Rights. Annexed to the report was the text of principles relating to the status of national institutions.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to give high priority to requests from Member States for assistance in establishing and strengthening national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights. It asked the Centre for Human Rights to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and regional and national institutions. The Commission welcomed the holding of a meeting of national institutions within the framework of the World Conference on Human Rights (see above) and the invitation to representatives of national institutions to participate as observers in the Conference. It requested the Secretary-General to finance developing countries' attendance at the World Conference from the voluntary fund for the Conference and asked Governments and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to contribute to the fund. The Secretary-General was asked to: bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of the Preparatory Committee of the Conference; prepare a report for the Conference on possible means to assist in establishing and strengthening national institutions through international cooperation; organize, following the Conference, an international workshop as a follow-up to the 1991 International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights;⁽³⁾ and consider the results of the 1991 workshop and other international meetings when preparing a manual on national institutions. It asked the Conference's Preparatory Committee to promote the principles⁽⁷⁾ and to bear in mind the report of the 1991 Workshop.

On 28 July, by decision 1993/270, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to finance developing countries' attendance at the World Conference on Human Rights and to continue organizing an international workshop.

International workshop. The second International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (Tunis, 13-17 December 1993)⁽⁷⁾ made recommendations on strengthening national institutions; protecting the rights of disabled persons, women, children and migrant workers; the release of hostages and victims of arbitrary detention; and on torture.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/134 without vote.

National institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant resolutions concerning national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, notably its resolutions 41/129 of 4 December 1986 and 46/124 of 17 December 1991 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1987/40 of 10 March 1987, 1988/72 of 10 March 1988, 1989/52 of 7 March 1989, 1990/73 of 7 March 1990, 1991/27 of 5 March 1991, 1992/54 of 3 March 1992, and taking note of Commission resolution 1993/55 of 9 March 1993,

Emphasizing the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments for promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Affirming that priority should be accorded to the development of appropriate arrangements at the national level to ensure the effective implementation of international human rights standards,

Convinced of the significant role that institutions at the national level can play in promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms and in developing and enhancing public awareness of those rights and freedoms,

Recognizing that the United Nations can play a catalytic role in assisting the development of national institutions by acting as a clearing-house for the exchange of information and experience,

Mindful in this regard of the guidelines on the structure and functioning of national and local institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 33/46 of 14 December 1978,

Welcoming the growing interest shown worldwide in the creation and strengthening of national institutions, expressed during the Regional Meeting for Africa of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Tunis from 2 to 6 November 1992, the Regional Meeting for Latin America and the Caribbean, held at San Jose from 18 to 22 January 1993, the Regional Meeting for Asia, held at Bangkok from 29 March to 2 April 1993, the Commonwealth Workshop on National Human Rights Institutions, held at Ottawa from 30 September to 2 October 1992 and the Workshop for the Asia and Pacific Region on Human Rights Issues, held at Jakarta from 26 to 28 January 1993, and manifested in the decisions announced recently by several Member States to establish national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, in which the World Conference on Human Rights reaffirmed the important and constructive role played by national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular in their advisory capacity to the competent authorities, their role in remedying human rights violations, in the dissemination of human rights information and education in human rights,

Noting the diverse approaches adopted throughout the world for the promotion and protection of human rights at the national level, emphasizing the universality, indivisibility and interdependence of all human rights, and emphasizing and recognizing the value of such approaches to promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the updated report of the Secretary-General, prepared in accordance with its resolution 46/124 of 17 December 1991;

2. Reaffirms the importance of developing, in accordance with national legislation, effective national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and of ensuring the pluralism of their membership and their independence;

3. Encourages Member States to establish or, where they already exist, to strengthen national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and to incorporate those elements in national development plans;

4. Encourages national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights established by Member States to prevent and combat all violations of human rights as enumerated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and relevant international instruments;

5. Requests the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to continue its efforts to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and national institutions, particularly in the field of advisory services and technical assistance and of information and education, including within the framework of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

6. Also requests the Centre for Human Rights to establish, upon the request of States concerned, United Nations centres for human rights documentation and training and to do so on the basis of established procedures for the use of available resources within the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to respond favourably to requests from Member States for assistance in the establishment and strengthening of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights as part of the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights, as well as national centres for human rights documentation and training;

8. Encourages all Member States to take appropriate steps to promote the exchange of information and experience concerning the establishment and effective operation of such national institutions;

9. Affirms the role of national institutions as agencies for the dissemination of human rights materials and for other public information activities, prepared or organized under the auspices of the United Nations;

10. Welcomes the organization, under the auspices of the Centre for Human Rights, of a follow-up meeting at Tunis in December 1993 with a view, in particular, to examining ways and means of promoting technical assistance for the cooperation and strengthening of national institutions, and to continue to examine all issues relating to the question of national institutions;

11. Welcomes also the Principles relating to the status of national institutions, annexed to the present resolution;

12. Encourages the establishment and strengthening of national institutions having regard to those principles and recognizing that it is the right of each State to choose the framework that is best suited to its particular needs at the national level;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights

Competence and responsibilities

1. A national institution shall be vested with competence to promote and protect human rights.

2. A national institution shall be given as broad a mandate as possible, which shall be clearly set forth in a constitutional or legislative text, specifying its composition and its sphere of competence.

3. A national institution shall, inter alia, have the following responsibilities:

(a) To submit to the Government, Parliament and any other competent body, on an advisory basis either at the request of the authorities concerned or through the exercise of its power to hear a matter without higher referral, opinions, recommendations, proposals and reports on any matters concerning the promotion and protection of human rights; the national institution may decide to publicize them; these opinions, recommendations, proposals and reports, as well as any prerogative of the national institution, shall relate to the following areas:

- (i) Any legislative or administrative provisions, as well as provisions relating to judicial organizations, intended to preserve and extend the protection of human rights; in that connection, the national institution shall examine the legislation and administrative provisions in force, as well as bills and proposals, and shall make such recommendations as it deems appropriate in order to ensure that these provisions conform to the fundamental principles of human rights; it shall, if necessary, recommend the adoption of new legislation, the amendment of legislation in force and the adoption or amendment of administrative measures;
- (ii) Any situation of violation of human rights which it decides to take up;
- (iii) The preparation of reports on the national situation with regard to human rights in general, and on more specific matters;
- (iv) Drawing the attention of the Government to situations in any part of the country where human rights are violated and making proposals to it for initiatives to put an end to such situations and, where necessary, expressing an opinion on the positions and reactions of the Government;

(b) To promote and ensure the harmonization of national legislation regulations and practices with the international human rights instruments to which the State is a party, and their effective implementation;

(c) To encourage ratification of the above-mentioned instruments or accession to those instruments, and to ensure their implementation;

(d) To contribute to the reports which States are required to submit to United Nations bodies and committees, and to regional institutions, pursuant to their treaty obligations and, where necessary, to express an opinion on the subject, with due respect for their independence;

(e) To cooperate with the United Nations and any other organization in the United Nations system, the regional institutions and the national institutions of other countries that are competent in the areas of the promotion and protection of human rights;

(f) To assist in the formulation of programmes for the teaching of, and research into, human rights and to take part in their execution in schools, universities and professional circles;

(g) To publicize human rights and efforts to combat all forms of discrimination, in particular racial discrimination, by increasing public awareness, especially through information and education and by making use of all press organs.

Composition and guarantees of independence and pluralism

1. The composition of the national institution and the appointment of its members, whether by means of an election or otherwise, shall be established in accordance with a procedure which affords all necessary guarantees to ensure the pluralist representation of the social forces (of civilian society) involved in the promotion and protection of human rights, particularly by powers which will enable effective cooperation to be established with, or through the presence of, representatives of:

(a) Non-governmental organizations responsible for human rights and efforts to combat racial discrimination, trade unions, concerned social and professional organizations, for example, associations of lawyers, doctors, journalists and eminent scientists;

(b) Trends in philosophical or religious thought;

(c) Universities and qualified experts;

(d) Parliament;

(e) Government departments (if these are included, the representatives should participate in the deliberations only in an advisory capacity).

2. The national institution shall have an infrastructure which is suited to the smooth conduct of its activities, in particular adequate funding. The purpose of this funding should be to enable it to have its own staff and premises, in order to be independent of the Government and not be subject to financial control which might affect its independence.

3. In order to ensure a stable mandate for the members of the institution, without which there can be no real independence, their appointment shall be effected by an official act which shall establish the specific duration of the mandate. This mandate may be renewable, provided that the pluralism of the institution's membership is ensured.

Methods of operation

Within the framework of its operation, the national institution shall:

(a) Freely consider any questions falling within its competence, whether they are submitted by the Government or taken up by it without referral to a higher authority, on the proposal of its members or of any petitioner;

(b) Hear any person and obtain any information and any documents necessary for assessing situations falling within its competence;

(c) Address public opinion directly or through any press organ, particularly in order to publicize its opinions and recommendations;

(d) Meet on a regular basis and whenever necessary in the presence of all its members after they have been duly convened;

(e) Establish working groups from among its members as necessary, and set up local or regional sections to assist it in discharging its functions;

(f) Maintain consultation with the other bodies, whether jurisdictional or otherwise, responsible for the promotion and protection of human rights (in particular ombudsmen, mediators and similar institutions);

(g) In view of the fundamental role played by the non-governmental organizations in expanding the work of the national institutions, develop relations with the non-governmental organizations devoted to promoting and protecting human rights, to economic and social development, to combating racism, to protecting particularly vulnerable groups (especially children, migrant workers, refugees, physically and mentally disabled persons) or to specialized areas.

Additional principles concerning the status of commissions with quasi-jurisdictional competence

A national institution may be authorized to hear and consider complaints and petitions concerning individual situations. Cases may be brought before it by individuals, their representatives, third parties, non-governmental organizations, associations of trade unions or any other representative organizations. In such circumstances, and without prejudice to the principles stated above concerning the other powers of the commissions, the functions entrusted to them may be based on the following principles:

(a) Seeking an amicable settlement through conciliation or, within the limits prescribed by the law, through binding decisions or, where necessary, on the basis of confidentiality;

(b) Informing the party who filed the petition of his rights, in particular the remedies available to him, and promoting his access to them;

(c) Hearing any complaints or petitions or transmitting them to any other competent authority within the limits prescribed by the law;

(d) Making recommendations to the competent authorities, especially by proposing amendments or reforms of the laws, regulations and administrative practices, especially if they have created the difficulties encountered by the persons filing the petitions in order to assert their rights.

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-ninth session at Geneva from 1 February to 12 March 1993, during which it adopted 98 resolutions and 16 decisions. In addition, the Commission recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council four draft resolutions and 44 draft decisions.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/300 of 28 July, took note of the Commission's report on its forty-ninth session.⁽⁸⁾

On 11 March,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission decided that reports submitted to it should, as much as possible, not exceed 32 pages and should be distributed in all official languages no less than six weeks before Commission consideration. It authorized special representatives, special rapporteurs, independent experts and thematic working groups to begin their work immediately following approval by the Commission, on the understanding that if the Economic and Social Council did not approve the initiation or extension of a mandate, work on that mandate would cease. On the same date,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission requested its Chairman to ensure, when appointing special representatives, special rapporteurs and independent experts, that the appointments were made on as wide a geographical basis as possible to correct a current geographical imbalance.

With regard to the organization of its work, the Commission decided, on 2 February,⁽¹¹⁾ to invite a number of experts, special rapporteurs, special representatives and chairman-rapporteurs of working groups to participate in the meetings at which their reports were to be considered.

On 26 February,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission expressed its gratitude to the outgoing Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights, Antoine Blanca, for his services and dedication.

Emergency mechanism of the Commission

On 13 March,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission postponed consideration of a 1992 proposal⁽¹⁾ to establish an emergency mechanism of the Commission to enable the United Nations to react appropriately and immediately to acute situations arising from gross human rights violations.

Organization of the work of the 1994 session

On 12 March,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize 40 fully serviced additional meetings for the Commission's fiftieth (1994) session and requested that the Chairman organize the session's work within the time normally allotted, the additional meetings to be utilized only if absolutely necessary.

On 28 July, by decision 1993/293, the Council approved the request.

Rationalization of work

On 12 March,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission established an open-ended inter-sessional working group, to be convened after the World Conference on Human Rights and chaired by the Chairman of the Commission, to consider the rationalization of the work of the Commission and submit specific proposals for consideration at its 1994 session.

Procedure for special sessions

On 11 March,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft decision concerning the procedure for holding special sessions of the Commission, which the Council adopted on 28 July.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted decision 1993/286 without vote.

Procedure for special sessions of the Commission on Human Rights

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/96 of 11 March 1993, recalling Council resolution 1990/48 of 25 May 1990, in which it authorized the Commission to meet exceptionally between its regular sessions, provided that a majority of States members of the Commission so agreed, mindful of the need for the Commission to deal with urgent and acute human rights situations in the most expeditious way, and recognizing the need to specify the procedure to be followed in the case of a request for a special session of the Commission, decided that the procedure for convening special sessions of the Commission in accordance with its resolution 1990/48 should be that contained in the annex to the present de-

ANNEX

Procedure for Special Sessions of the Commission on Human Rights

1. Any State Member of the United Nations may request the Secretary-General to convene a special session of the Commission on Human Rights. Such a request shall be submitted, together with the reasons for the request, to the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights at Geneva.

2. The following rules shall apply for the consideration of such requests:

(a) The Assistant Secretary-General shall immediately transmit the request, together with the reasons given, to the States members of the Commission by the most expeditious means of communication available and inquire whether or not they support the request;

(b) States members of the Commission shall, within four United Nations working days from the date of the communication from the Assistant Secretary-General, express in writing their views concerning the request;

(c) The replies from States members of the Commission must reach the office of the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights not later than 6 p.m. (Geneva time) on the fourth day;

(d) The Assistant Secretary-General shall duly inform the States members of the Commission of the results of the inquiry and, if the majority of States members have expressed support for the convening of a special session of the Commission within the deadline referred to in paragraph 2 (c) above, in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/48 of 25 May 1990, the Assistant Secretary-General shall communicate the opening date of the special session;

(e) The special session shall open between the fourth and the sixth United Nations working day after the deadline referred to in paragraph 2 (c) above.

3. In considering the appropriateness of holding a special session, States members of the Commission may take into consideration whether the Economic and Social Council or the General Assembly is in regular session and is, or is likely to be, seized of the matter concerned.

4. The duration of the special session shall, in principle, not exceed three days.

5. The rules of procedure of such a special session shall be the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council.

6. The Commission meeting in special session may take the same decisions as at its regular sessions.

7. If the Commission meeting in special session requests the submission of a report on the matter under consideration, the report, together with any information provided by the State concerned, shall be distributed promptly by the Assistant Secretary-General to all States members of the Commission.

8. If the report and the information referred to in paragraph 7 above are not considered by the Commission meeting in special session on the issue, they shall be considered at the next regular session of the Commission or the General Assembly or at the next substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, whichever occurs earlier.

Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Subcommission session

The Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its forty-fifth session at Geneva from 2 to 27 August 1993.⁽¹⁷⁾ At that session, it adopted 46 resolutions and 11 decisions. In addition, it recommended to the Commission on Human Rights, its parent body, six draft resolutions and 14 decisions for adoption.

The Subcommission adopted decisions relating to the composition of its pre-session working groups,⁽¹⁸⁾ methods of voting on proposals pertaining to allegations of human rights violations in countries,⁽¹⁹⁾ and its 1993 agenda.⁽²⁰⁾ It also adopted a decision⁽²¹⁾ on the communications procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970⁽²²⁾ and decided to invite a number of experts and special rapporteurs to participate in the meetings at which their reports were to be considered.⁽²³⁾

Report of the Subcommission Chairman. In February,⁽²⁴⁾ the Subcommission's 1992 Chairman, Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba), submitted a report on the work of the 1992 inter-sessional Working Group on the methods of work of the Subcommission.⁽²⁵⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽²⁶⁾ the Commission called on the Subcommittee, in fulfilling its functions and duties, to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council. Taking note of the steps taken by the Subcommittee to rationalize and streamline its work, the Commission invited the Subcommittee to consider ways to improve its work further. It asked the Subcommittee to restrict its requests to the Secretary-General to ask Governments, intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and other bodies for their views and comments to requests relating to studies that had received prior approval from the Commission. It invited the 1992 Subcommittee Chairman to consult with members of the Bureau of the Commission and asked the 1993 Subcommittee Chairman to report on progress made with regard to the work of the Subcommittee.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/261, approved the Commission's decision.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽²⁷⁾ the Subcommittee decided to convene in 1994 a sessional working group to continue to study its methods of work, emphasizing the methods to be used and procedures to be followed under item 6 of its agenda (human rights violations and fundamental freedoms).

Strengthening the Centre for Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽²⁸⁾ the Commission on Human Rights requested the Secretary-General to enhance the coordinating role and importance of the Centre for Human Rights within the United Nations system and to ensure that it was provided with sufficient resources. It asked the Secretary-General and United Nations bodies to implement the relevant recommendations of the World Conference on Human Rights with regard to securing the financial and other resources to strengthen the Centre (see below).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission, in February, an interim report on developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights,⁽³⁰⁾ and, in November, a report to the General Assembly on the proposed programme budget for 1994-1995 to strengthen the Centre.⁽³¹⁾

By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's November report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/129 without vote.

Strengthening of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/135 of 15 December 1989, 45/180 of 21 December 1990, 46/118 and 46/111 of 17 December 1991, and 47/127 of 18 December 1992, and bearing in mind all relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic purposes of the United Nations enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and of high importance to the Organization,

Noting that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the importance of strengthening the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat is stressed,

Bearing in mind that the Secretary-General, in his reports on the work of the Organization for 1992 and 1993, stated that "the Charter of the United Nations places the promotion of human rights as one of our priority objectives, along with promoting development and preserving international peace and security", and that "in the course of 1993, the activities of the Centre for Human Rights at Geneva underwent a significant expansion in the five main areas of its work",

Noting also that the difficult financial situation of the Centre has created considerable obstacles to the implementation of the various procedures and mechanisms, has negatively influenced the servicing by the Secretariat of the bodies concerned and has impaired the quality and precision of the reporting,

1. Supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the role and importance of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as the coordinating unit, within the United Nations system, of bodies dealing with the promotion and the protection of human rights;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make additional proposals to increase further the resources of the human rights programme in 1994-1995, so as to enable the Centre fully to discharge its duties implementing all the mandates assigned to it by the General Assembly and other legislative bodies;

3. Welcomes the recommendations of the World Conference on Human Rights concerning the strengthening of the Centre, as contained in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

4. Takes note of the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination that the General Assembly approve the programme narratives of section 21 of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

5. Takes note also of the statement by the Secretary-General in his report concerning the implications of organizational changes in the Secretariat^a that he would propose to use the remaining vacant posts now available in the Secretariat in the light of new initiatives and emerging mandates and priorities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to ensure that appropriate additional resources from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations are accorded to the Centre to enable it to carry out, in full and on time, the mandates contained in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action without diverting resources from development programmes and activities of the United Nations;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session and a final report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the strengthening of the Centre and on the measures taken to implement the present resolution.

Strengthening United Nations action

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽³²⁾ the Commission reiterated that all peoples had the right to determine freely their political status and pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State had the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the United Nations Charter, including respect for territorial integrity. It called on Member States to base their activities for the promotion, protection and full realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the development of further international cooperation in that area, on the Charter, the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽³³⁾ and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities inconsistent with that international legal framework. It underlined the need for accurate, impartial and objective information on political, economic and social situations and events in all countries and asked United Nations human rights bodies and special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups to take into account its resolution in carrying out their respective responsibilities. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue gathering information and comments from Member States on the basis of its resolution for consideration by the World Conference on Human Rights. It also asked him to submit in 1994, based on comments by Governments, proposals for promoting international cooperation and strengthening United Nations action in the area of human rights.

Also on 9 March,⁽³⁴⁾ by a roll-call vote of 33 to 16, with 3 abstentions, the Commission expressed its conviction that strengthening the United Nations role in the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights required increasingly efficient functioning of all mechanisms, as well as suitable methods of work of the Commission. It requested the Secretary-General to submit a report in 1994 on various aspects of treaty and non-treaty mechanisms established to supervise, investigate and monitor the implementation of the provisions of international legal instruments and on the criteria used by the Centre for Human Rights to channel communications received either to existing public machinery or to bodies provided for in a confidential procedure established under a 1970 Economic and Social Council resolution.⁽²²⁾ It also asked him to make the report available to the World Conference on Human Rights.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1992,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted comments received from States (Cuba, Mexico, Nicaragua) on possible means to ensure that accurate, impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events in all countries was made regularly available to human rights bodies and international public opinion.⁽³⁶⁾

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/125 without vote.

Strengthening of United Nations action in the human rights field through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and its determination to promote social progress and better standards of living in greater freedom,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Bearing in mind also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization shall promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being that are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and that, in accordance with Article 56, all Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55,

Reiterating that Member States should continue to act in the human rights field in conformity with the provisions of the Charter,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/163 of 18 December 1990, 46/129 of 17 December 1991 and 47/131 of 18 December 1992,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 2131(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 and 36/103 of 9 December 1981,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/59 of 9 March 1993,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, as affirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Aware of the fact that the promotion, protection and full exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as legitimate concerns of the world community should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the protection and promotion of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with that international framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Affirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity, and should not be used for political ends;

6. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the contents of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

7. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Stresses, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

9. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, and international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its fiftieth session, to continue to examine ways and means to strengthen United Nations action in this regard on the basis of the present resolution and of Commission resolution 1993/59;

11. Decides to consider this matter at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Rule of law

On 9 March,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reiterated the need to consider ways by which the United Nations could better contribute to the development and strengthening by Member States of the rule of law. It requested the Secretary-General of the World Conference on Human Rights to bring its resolution to the attention of the Conference's Preparatory Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/132 without vote.

Strengthening of the rule of law

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the achievement of international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language and religion is one of the purposes of the United Nations,

Recalling also that, by adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Firmly convinced that, as stressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the rule of law is an essential factor in the protection of human rights,

Convinced that through their own national legal and judicial systems States must provide appropriate civil, criminal and administrative remedies for violations of human rights,

Aware of the need for the implementation of strengthened advisory services and technical assistance activities in the field of human rights,

Mindful of the significant role played by national institutions in the promotion and protection of universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms in their respective countries,

Convinced that the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat should play an important role in coordinating system-wide attention for human rights,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/51 of 3 March 1992 and taking note of Commission resolution 1993/50 of 9 March 1993, both entitled "Strengthening of the rule of law",

Noting with appreciation that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, the Conference recommended that priority be given to national and international action to promote democracy, development and human rights,

1. Endorses the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights that a comprehensive programme be established within the United Nations and under the coordination of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, with a view to helping States in the task of building and strengthening adequate national structures which have a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law;

2. Expresses its conviction that such a programme should be able to provide, upon the request of the interested Government, technical and financial assistance for the implementation of national plans of action as well as specific projects for the reform of penal and correctional establishments, and the education and training of lawyers, judges and security forces in human rights, and in any other sphere of activity relevant to the good functioning of the rule of law;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the request contained in section II, paragraph 70, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, to submit concrete proposals to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session containing alternatives for the establishment, structure, operational modalities and funding of the proposed programme, taking into account existing programmes and activities already undertaken by the Centre for Human Rights;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to remain actively seized of this question, with a view to further elaborating the outline of the proposed programme;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-ninth session in the light of the proposals of the Secretary-General.

High Commissioner for Human Rights

The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,⁽³⁸⁾ adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June (see below), in addressing the need to strengthen United Nations machinery for human rights, called for the General Assembly to consider, as a matter of priority, the establishment of the post of High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Pursuant to that recommendation, the Assembly's Third Committee established an open-ended working group to consider that question and other aspects of applying the Vienna Declaration's recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/141 without vote.

High Commissioner for the promotion and protection of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Emphasizing the responsibilities of all States, in conformity with the Charter, to promote and encourage respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing also the need to observe the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and for the full implementation of the human rights instruments, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Reaffirming that the right to development is a universal and inalienable right which is a fundamental part of the rights of the human person,

Considering that the promotion and the protection of all human rights is one of the priorities of the international community,

Recalling that one of the purposes of the United Nations enshrined in the Charter is to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights,

Reaffirming the commitment contained under Article 56 of the Charter of the United Nations to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the United Nations for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55,

Emphasizing the need for the promotion and protection of all human rights to be guided by the principles of impartiality, objectivity and non-selectivity, in the spirit of constructive international dialogue and cooperation,

Aware that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that as such they should be given the same emphasis,

Affirming its commitment to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Convinced that the World Conference on Human Rights made an important contribution to the cause of human rights and that its recommendations should be implemented through effective action by all States, the competent organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations,

Acknowledging the importance of strengthening the provision of advisory services and technical assistance by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and other relevant programmes and bodies of the United Nations system for the purpose of the promotion and protection of all human rights,

Determined to adapt, strengthen, and streamline the existing mechanisms to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms while avoiding unnecessary duplication,

Recognizing that the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights should be rationalized and enhanced in order to strengthen the United Nations machinery in this field and to further the objectives of universal respect for observance of international human rights standards,

Reaffirming that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights are the responsible organs for decision- and policy-making for the promotion and protection of all human rights,

Reaffirming also the necessity for a continued adaptation of the United Nations human rights machinery to the current and future needs in the promotion and protection of human rights and the need to improve its coordination, efficiency and effectiveness, as reflected in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and within the framework of a balanced and sustainable development for all people,

Having considered the recommendation contained in paragraph 18 of section II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

1. Decides to create the post of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

2. Decides that the High Commissioner shall:

(a) Be a person of high moral standing and personal integrity and shall possess expertise, including in the field of human rights, and the general knowledge and understanding of diverse cultures necessary for impartial, objective, non-selective and effective performance of the duties of the High Commissioner;

(b) Be appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and approved by the General Assembly, with due regard to geographical rotation, and have a fixed term of four years with a possibility of one renewal for another fixed term of four years;

(c) Be of the rank of Under-Secretary-General;

3. Also decides that the High Commissioner shall:

(a) Function within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, other international instruments of human rights and international law, including the obligations, within this framework, to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and domestic jurisdiction of States and to promote the universal respect for and observance of all human rights, in the recognition that, in the framework of the purposes and principles of the Charter, the promotion and protection of all human rights is a legitimate concern of the international community;

(b) Be guided by the recognition that all human rights—civil, cultural, economic, political and social—are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(c) Recognize the importance of promoting a balanced and sustainable development for all people and of ensuring realization of the right to development, as established in the Declaration on the Right to Development;

4. Further decides that the High Commissioner shall be the United Nations official with principal responsibility for United Nations human rights activities under the direction and authority of the Secretary-General and that within the framework of the overall competence, authority and decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, the High Commissioner's responsibilities shall be:

(a) To promote and protect the effective enjoyment by all of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights;

(b) To carry out the tasks assigned to him/her by the competent bodies of the United Nations system in the field of human rights and to make recommendations to them with a view to improving the promotion and protection of all human rights;

(c) To promote and protect the realization of the right to development and to enhance support from relevant bodies of the United Nations system for this purpose;

(d) To provide, through the Centre for Human Rights and other appropriate institutions, advisory services and technical and financial assistance, at the request of the State concerned and, where appropriate, the regional human rights organizations, with a view to supporting actions and programmes in the field of human rights;

(e) To coordinate relevant United Nations education and public information programmes in the field of human rights;

(f) To play an active role in removing the current obstacles and in meeting the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and in preventing the continuation of human rights violations throughout the world, as reflected in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

(g) To engage in a dialogue with all Governments in the implementation of his/her mandate with a view to securing respect for all human rights;

(h) To enhance international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights;

(i) To coordinate the human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system;

(j) To rationalize, adapt, strengthen and streamline the United Nations machinery in the field of human rights with a view to improving its efficiency and effectiveness;

(k) To carry out overall supervision of the Centre for Human Rights;

5. Requests the High Commissioner to report annually on his/her activities, in accordance with his/her mandate, to the Commission on Human Rights and, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly;

6. Decides that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights shall be located at Geneva and shall have a liaison office in New York;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide appropriate staff and resources, within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations, to enable the High Commissioner to fulfil his/her mandate, without diverting resources from the development programmes and activities of the United Nations;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

1993 World Conference on Human Rights

The World Conference on Human Rights took place at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993.⁽³⁹⁾ On 25 June, it adopted the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,⁽³⁸⁾ in which participating Governments reaffirmed their solemn commitment to a broad range of human rights and fundamental freedoms, called for specific measures to strengthen international human rights instruments and their monitoring mechanisms.

The Declaration's recommendations addressed racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance; national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities; the status and human rights of women; children's rights; freedom from torture; rights of disabled persons; national and international action to promote democracy, development and human rights; and human rights education.

It also called for increased coordination on human rights within the United Nations system, a substantial increase in resources for the human rights programme and strengthening the Centre for Human Rights and United Nations human rights machinery, including establishing the post of High Commissioner for Human Rights.

The Conference adopted two declarations calling on the international community, particularly the Security Council, to take forceful and decisive steps to bring peace to Angola and to Bosnia and Herzegovina. It commemorated the 1993 International Year of the World's Indigenous People (see above) and designated commemorative days during the Conference dedicated to various themes, such as peace, development, women, children and democracy.

The Conference was attended by representatives of 171 States, 2 national liberation movements, 15 United Nations bodies, 10 specialized agencies, 18 intergovernmental organizations, 24 national institutions and 6 ombudsmen, 11 United Nations human rights and related bodies, 9 other organizations, 248 NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and 593 other NGOs. A number of eminent persons attended and addressed the Conference at the invitation of the Secretary-General.

Prior to the Conference, consultations took place among senior officials of participating States Members (Vienna, 9-12 June).

Preparatory Committee

The Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights, at its fourth session (Geneva, 19 April-7 May 1993,⁽⁴⁰⁾ adopted and transmitted to the Conference paragraphs of the draft final document of the Conference, based on declarations adopted at regional preparatory meetings: Africa (Tunis, 2-6 November 1992),⁽⁴¹⁾ Asia (Bangkok, 29 March-2 April 1993)⁽⁴²⁾ and Latin America and the Caribbean (San Jose, Costa Rica, 18-22 January 1993)⁽⁴³⁾ and on other documents, including an April note by the Secretary-General containing elements for possible inclusion in the draft.⁽⁴⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/121 without vote.

World Conference on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/155 of 18 December 1990, in which it decided, inter alia, to convene at a high level a World Conference on Human Rights in 1993, and its resolutions 46/116 of 17 December 1991 and 47/122 of 18 December 1992,

Taking note with appreciation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Bearing in mind the view of the Conference that the promotion and protection of human rights is a matter of priority for the international community,

Convinced that the Conference has made an important contribution to the cause of human rights and that its results have to be translated into effective action by States, the competent organs of the United Nations and its family of organizations and other organizations concerned, as well as non-governmental organizations,

Bearing in mind the recommendation of the Conference that the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system related to human rights consider ways and means for the full implementation, without delay, of the recommendations contained in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Expressing its gratitude to the Government and people of Austria for acting as hosts to the Conference, for the excellent arrangements and for the hospitality extended to all participants,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Secretary-General of the Conference and the members of the Secretariat for effectively preparing for and servicing the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the World Conference on Human Rights;

2. Endorses the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the Conference on 25 June 1993;

3. Expresses its satisfaction with the work of the Conference, which constitutes a solid foundation for further action and initiatives by the United Nations and other interested international bodies, as well as by the States and national organizations concerned;

4. Confirms the views of the Conference on the urgency of eliminating denials and violations of human rights;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the distribution of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action as widely as possible and to include the text of the Declaration in the next edition of Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the competent organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

7. Urges all States to give widespread publicity to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and the work of the Conference in order to promote increased awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Calls upon all States to take further action with a view to the full realization of human rights in the light of the recommendations of the Conference;

9. Endorses the recommendations of the Conference that the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system related to human rights should take further action with a view to the full implementation of all recommendations of the Conference;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the measures taken and the progress achieved in the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

11. Decides to include in the agenda of its forthcoming sessions, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", a standing sub-item entitled "Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action".

General Assembly resolution 48/121

Public information activities

In response to a 1992 request of the Human Rights Commission,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on public information activities in the human rights field, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights launched by the General Assembly in 1988,⁽⁴⁶⁾ carried out by the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI).⁽⁴⁷⁾ He also discussed coordination and cooperation within and outside the United Nations system, human rights observances and national focal points and assessed the Campaign's impact.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Commission encouraged Member States to provide, facilitate and promote publicity for United Nations human rights activities and to accord priority to disseminating in their national and local languages the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽³³⁾ and other international instruments. Urging Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues, it encouraged the Centre for Human Rights to produce materials for that purpose. It welcomed the Centre's decision to convene a series of expert meetings in 1993 to elaborate training manuals. The Commission asked DPI to use fully its available resources in human rights to produce materials on such issues. It stressed the need for close cooperation between the Centre and DPI in implementing the World Campaign and asked the Secretary-General to take advantage of the collaboration of NGOs in that process. It also emphasized the need for the Secretariat to harmonize its public information activities with those of other international bodies with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure that recent periodic reports of States parties to treaty-monitoring bodies and summary records of discussions on them in the treaty bodies be made available in UNICs in the submitting countries; to increase resources for the Public Information Campaign; to review the human rights information programmes and any views expressed on them during the World Conference; to consider a recommendation of the fourth (1992) meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies;⁽⁵⁰⁾ that an expert group from outside the Secretariat be appointed to review the Centre's information programme; and to submit in 1994 a report on public information activities.

Advisory services

In 1993,⁽⁵¹⁾ under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights established in 1955,⁽⁵²⁾ activities funded by the United Nations regular budget included the establishment of a human rights field office at Phnom Penh, Cambodia, on 1 October, the appointment of a human rights officer in Guatemala to monitor the return of refugees from Mexico and provide advisory services and technical assistance and the appointment of an independent expert to assist the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia to re-establish human rights and the rule of law, as well as the eventual holding of elections. The Centre for Human Rights provided electoral assistance to South Africa and advisory services to assist in constitutional drafting processes attending democratic transition in Malawi, South Africa and Tajikistan. Among seminars and training courses held were: a seminar on free and fair elections and human rights in a democratic society (Maseru, Lesotho, January); a workshop on human rights and the resolution of conflicts between citizens and state organs (Bucharest, Romania, 10-14 May); and a colloquium on human rights and the media (Bucharest, 16-20 August). Two meetings of national institutions were held (Sydney, Australia, 19-23 April; Tunis, 13-17 December). Fellowships were awarded to 47 candidates and 120 internships were offered to graduate students. Needs assessment missions were fielded to Burundi, Malawi, Romania, and South Africa.

Under the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, established in 1987,⁽⁵³⁾ support was given to regional institutions in Africa and an Asian and Pacific workshop on human rights issues was held (Jakarta, Indonesia, 26-28 January). Ongoing projects were under way in Africa (Benin, Burundi, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia, Sao Tome and Principe, Somalia, South Africa, United Republic of Tanzania); Asia and the Pacific (Cambodia, Mongolia, Papua New Guinea, Tajikistan); Europe (Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Hungary, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia); and Latin America (Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico, Paraguay).

The Secretary-General reported that, as at 31 December 1993, the Fund had a negative balance of $1,172,076. Annexed to the report was an account of the Fund's income and expenditures, utilization and project commitments in 1993.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Commission, taking note of the Secretary-General's report on advisory services in human rights during 1992, including the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights,⁽⁵⁵⁾ asked him to implement all activities under the programme of advisory services on the basis of clearly defined objectives and themes; provide urgently more human and financial resources to enlarge advisory services; pursue efforts towards a comprehensive plan for advisory services and technical cooperation; and give special attention to proposals for the implementation of advisory services made by United Nations human rights treaty bodies, special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups and to report on follow-up activities undertaken as a result. It requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, to recommend specific projects under the programmes of advisory services and encourage Governments to avail themselves of the services provided for under the programmes.

Concerning the Voluntary Fund, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to appoint a board of trustees; to include the Board's report in his annual report on advisory services and technical cooperation; and to guarantee transparency of the criteria and rules of procedure to be followed in carrying out human rights technical cooperation. It asked the Board to assist the Secretary-General to streamline and rationalize the Fund's working methods and procedures and to promote and solicit contributions and pledges. Regarding system-wide cooperation, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to explore further the possibilities offered by cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and specialized bodies of the system; bring the need for further technical assistance in the legal field to the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies; and report to the Commission annually on progress made in implementing the programme of advisory services.

By decision 1993/283 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to provide urgently more human and financial resources to enlarge human rights advisory services and to appoint a board of trustees for the Fund.

Georgia

On 10 March,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to evaluate the needs for human rights support and technical assistance to Georgia by providing advisory services aimed at furthering legislation in constitutional and institutional matters and at providing institutions with the expertise to implement international human rights standards. The Commission's request to the Secretary-General was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/281 of 28 July.

Guatemala

Human Rights Commission action. Taking note of the report by independent expert Christian Tomuschat (Germany) on the situation of human rights in Guatemala,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Commission, on 10 March,⁽⁵⁸⁾ asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide that country and NGOs with advisory services and to extend the independent expert's mandate. Urging Guatemala to intensify investigations to identify and bring to justice those responsible for human rights violations, the Commission appealed for intensified efforts to ensure that its authorities and security forces fully respected the human rights of the Guatemalan people. It also asked that the expert report in 1994 on measures taken by Guatemala.

By decision 1993/335 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council postponed consideration of a draft decision on assistance to Guatemala which would have approved the extension of the expert's mandate⁽⁵⁹⁾ On 21 October, by decision 1993/336, the Council approved the extension.

Subcommission action. On 20 August⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Subcommission adopted a resolution on the situation of human rights in Guatemala.

Somalia

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March⁽⁶¹⁾ the Commission asked the Secretary-General to appoint for one year an independent expert to assist the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia to develop a long-term programme of advisory services; to give priority to implementing the programme recommended by the independent expert; and to provide additional resources to fund the activities of the independent expert and the Centre for Human Rights in implementing its resolution. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/282 of 28 July. The Commission asked the independent expert to report in 1994 on conditions in Somalia to the General Assembly, the Commission and, if needed, to the Economic and Social Council. The Secretary-General was urged to recommend the establishment of a unit within the United Nations operation in Somalia to assist in promoting and protecting human rights, in encouraging respect for humanitarian law and in implementing the independent expert's recommendations.

Report of the independent expert. In October⁽⁶²⁾ independent expert Fanuel Jarirentundu Kozonguizi (Namibia) concluded that it was premature to propose any concrete activity under the advisory services programme. If the situation did not improve, he would consider recommending that the Commission change his mandate or revert the situation to other United Nations bodies. He recommended establishing an independent group of human rights monitors to receive complaints and collect and investigate reports of human rights violations and humanitarian law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/146 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the International Bill of Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Gravely concerned by the situation in Somalia, including the extensive damage and destruction of villages, towns and cities, the heavy damage inflicted by the civil conflict on the country's infrastructure and the still widespread disruption of many public facilities and services and the lack of a governmental authority to ensure even basic human rights,

Deplored the loss of human life in Somalia and attacks against personnel of the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations in Somalia, which sometimes result in serious injuries or deaths,

Recalling Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 21 January 1992, all subsequent relevant Security Council resolutions and General Assembly resolution 47/167 of 18 December 1992, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/86 of 10 March 1993,

Commending the ongoing efforts in Somalia of the United Nations, the specialized agencies, humanitarian organizations, non-governmental organizations, countries in the region and regional organizations,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the independent expert on the conditions in Somalia, dated 26 October 1993,

1. Commends the independent expert for his report on the conditions in Somalia, in which he cited an increase in human rights violations fuelled by the absence of an accountable government and the lack of infrastructure;

2. Urges all Somali parties in the conflict to confirm their commitment to the Addis Ababa agreement of 27 March 1993;

3. Urges all Somalis to work together towards peace and security in Somalia and to guarantee the protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all Somalis;

4. Calls upon all parties to protect civilians, United Nations personnel and humanitarian relief workers from being killed, tortured or arbitrarily detained;

5. Requests that, following the restoration of political stability and security in Somalia, the Commission on Human Rights, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, consider establishing a group of independent human rights monitors, funded from within existing United Nations resources, to receive complaints and collect and investigate reports of violations of human rights and to transmit them, where appropriate, to the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, in an effort to prevent human rights violations;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 48/146

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 53); 44-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.62/Rev.1); agenda item 114 (c).

International human rights instruments

Human rights treaty bodies

In 1993, there were seven human rights treaty instruments in force providing for monitoring treaty implementation by expert bodies. Those instruments and their respective treaty bodies were the: 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁽⁶³⁾ (CERD); 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁽⁶³⁾ (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽⁶³⁾ (Human Rights Committee); 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽⁶⁴⁾ (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽⁶⁵⁾ (Committee against Torture); 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child⁽⁶⁶⁾ (Committee on the Rights of the Child); and the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽⁶⁷⁾ (Group of Three).

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Commission endorsed continuing efforts to streamline, rationalize and improve reporting procedures by treaty bodies and by the Secretary-General, as well as the recommendations made at the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, on ensuring financing and adequate staffing for operating those bodies. It requested that a 1989 study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhance the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations human rights instruments⁽⁶⁹⁾ be updated for submission in 1994 and that an interim report be presented to the General Assembly in 1993 and made available to the World Conference on Human Rights. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to give high priority to establishing a computerized database to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the functioning of treaty bodies; to expedite implementation of the 1990 recommendations of the Task Force on Computerization⁽⁷⁰⁾ by asking Member States to contribute voluntarily to cover the cost of the proposed system; to prepare an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities to facilitate better-informed decision-making; to ensure that recent periodic reports of States parties to treaty-monitoring bodies and summary records of committee discussions pertaining to them were made available in the UNICs in countries submitting the reports; and to ensure that the Manual on Human Rights Reporting⁽⁷¹⁾ was available in all official languages at the earliest opportunity.

Report of the Independent Expert. Independent Expert Philip Alston (Australia) presented in April 1993⁽⁷²⁾ an interim report updating his 1989 study on possible long-term approaches to enhance the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations human rights instruments.⁽⁶⁹⁾ He concluded that existing levels of secretariat servicing provided to the treaty bodies was inadequate and made recommendations regarding reporting procedures, steps to remedy the problem of overdue reports by States parties and financing arrangements.

By a November note,⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the interim report was presented to the World Conference on Human Rights and was being made available to the General Assembly.

By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October report⁽⁷⁵⁾ examining the conclusions and recommendations of the fourth (1992) meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies.⁽⁵⁰⁾

Also in response to a 1992 Assembly request,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, in November, discussed the need to ensure financing and adequate staffing resources for the operations of the treaty bodies.⁽⁷⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/120 without vote.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992, as well as other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the effective implementation of United Nations human rights instruments is of major importance to the efforts of the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Reaffirming its responsibility to ensure the proper functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to instruments adopted by the General Assembly and, in this connection, further reaffirming the importance of:

(a) Ensuring the effective functioning of systems of periodic reporting by States parties to these instruments,

(b) Securing sufficient financial resources to overcome existing difficulties with their effective functioning,

(c) Addressing questions of both reporting obligations and financial implications whenever elaborating any further instruments on human rights,

Recalling the conclusions and recommendations of the second meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva in October 1988, and the endorsement of the recommendations aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111 and the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1993/16 of 26 February 1993,

Noting the meeting, within the framework of the World Conference on Human Rights, of persons chairing treaty bodies together with those persons chairing each of the principal regional and other human rights bodies,

Recalling in particular the conclusions and recommendations of the third and fourth meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva in October 1990,^a and in October 1992, respectively,

Expressing concern about the increasing backlog of reports on implementation by States parties of United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on progress achieved in enhancing the effective functioning of the treaty bodies,

Taking note also of the relevant paragraphs of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Welcoming the interim report of the updated study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of the human rights treaty system,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures, as well as the continuing efforts in this connection by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General within their respective spheres of competence;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the interim report of the updated study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of the human rights treaty system, and requests that the Commission on Human Rights review the proposals to be submitted in the final report of the independent expert with a view to recommending further action;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give high priority to establishing a computerized database to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the functioning of the treaty bodies;

4. Again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations and to contribute, individually and through meetings of States parties, to identifying and implementing ways of further streamlining and improving reporting procedures as well as enhancing coordination and information flow between the treaty bodies and with relevant United Nations bodies, including specialized agencies;

5. Welcomes the emphasis placed by the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies and by the Commission on Human Rights on the importance of technical assistance and advisory services, and further to this end:

(a) Endorses the request of the Commission that the Secretary-General report regularly to the Commission on possible technical assistance projects identified by the treaty bodies;

(b) Invites the treaty bodies to give priority attention to identifying such possibilities in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

6. Endorses the recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on the need to ensure financing and adequate staffing resources for the operations of the treaty bodies, and with this in mind:

(a) Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General provide adequate resources in regard to the various treaty bodies;

(b) Requests that the Secretary-General report on this question to the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

7. Urges States parties to notify the Secretary-General, as depository of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, of their acceptance of the amendments approved by the States parties and by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111, for the purpose of funding the respective committees from the regular budget;

8. Calls upon all States parties to fulfil without delay and in full their financial obligations, including their arrears, under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment until the amendments enter into force;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that the two committees established under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment meet as scheduled until the amendments enter into force;

10. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the effective implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the fourth meeting of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, held in October 1992, particularly the holding of the meeting of chairpersons and those persons chairing each of the principal regional and other human rights bodies at Vienna on 15 and 16 June 1993, within the framework of the World Conference on Human Rights, at which the "Vienna statement of the international human rights treaty bodies" was adopted;^b

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to take the appropriate steps in order to continue financing the biennial meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies from the available resources of the regular budget of the United Nations;

12. Decides to continue giving priority consideration, at its forty-ninth session, to the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, in the light of the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 48/120

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.1) without vote, 3 December (meeting 50); 29-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.61); agenda item 114 (a).

Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Slovakia, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 36-50; plenary 85.

In other action, the General Assembly, by decision 48/430 of 20 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the need to ensure adequate resources for the operations of human rights treaty bodies.⁽⁷⁶⁾

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 48/429, took note of a report of the Third Committee, which contained its recommendations on a number of human rights-related topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 114).⁽⁷⁷⁾

Reporting obligations of States parties

On 26 February,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Commission urged States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and to contribute to identifying and implementing ways to further streamline and improve reporting procedures.

Successor States and human rights treaties

On 5 March,⁽⁷⁸⁾ the Commission urged successor States that had not done so to accede to or ratify those international human rights treaties to which the predecessor States were not parties. It requested the Secretary-General to render advisory services with respect to succession or accession to successor States that were United Nations Members and to report in 1994 on action taken.

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽⁷⁹⁾ the Commission adopted a resolution on the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽³³⁾ which corresponded largely to a resolution adopted by the General Assembly later in the year. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on the status of the Covenants and on the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General reported on the status of the Covenants as at 1 August 1993.⁽⁸⁰⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/119 without vote.

International covenants on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/113 of 17 December 1991, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/15 of 26 February 1993,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Welcoming the fact that the total number of States parties to each of the Covenants has increased significantly through recent ratifications or accessions, while noting at the same time that many States Members of the United Nations have yet to become parties to them or to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols thereto,

Also recognizing the important role of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Welcoming the submission to the General Assembly of the annual report of the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its seventh session,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the ongoing efforts of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to improve their methods of work,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports from States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the successful conclusion of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and the adoption of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, and taking into account in particular the call for strengthening and further implementation of the human rights instruments,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to intensify systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the Covenants and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to assist such States, at their request, in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants;

4. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

5. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

6. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification for and appropriateness of measures taken in these circumstances can be assessed;

7. Also stresses the importance of taking fully into account the specific needs and situation of women in the implementation of the Covenants at the national level, particularly in the national reports, and in the work of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

8. Encourages States to consider limiting the extent of any reservations they lodge to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible and to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the relevant treaty or is otherwise contrary to international law;

9. Encourages the States parties to review regularly any reservations made in respect of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights with a view to withdrawing them;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh and forty-eighth sessions;

11. Also takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its sixth and seventh sessions;

12. Expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which both Committees are carrying out their function;

13. Welcomes the efforts of the Committees to further improve their working methods, in particular by adopting concluding observations containing specific suggestions and recommendations concerning steps States parties could take to implement the Covenants more effectively;

14. Invites the Committees to identify specific needs of States parties that might be addressed through the advisory services and technical assistance programme of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, with the possible participation of members of the Committees where appropriate;

15. Encourages the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to consider further innovations in their working methods, in particular aiming at the prevention of serious human rights violations in their respective fields of competence and the promotion of peaceful solutions;

16. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar human rights questions to respect these uniform standards, as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee;

17. Also welcomes the efforts of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the preparation of general comments on the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

18. Urges States parties to fulfil in good time such reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights as may be requested;

19. Urges States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the specialized agencies and other relevant United Nations bodies to extend their full support and cooperation to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

20. Also urges States parties to take duly into account, in implementing the provisions of the Covenants, the observations made at the conclusion of the consideration of their reports by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

21. Invites States parties to give particular attention to the dissemination at the national level of the reports they have submitted to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as the summary records relating to the examination of those reports by the Committees;

22. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many local languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of assisting States parties to the Covenants in the preparation of their reports, including seminars or workshops at the national level for the purpose of training government officials engaged in the preparation of such reports, and the exploration of other possibilities available under the regular programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, to make appropriate arrangements for additional resources from within the regular budget to be provided to the Human Rights Committee for dealing in an effective and timely manner with the increasing workload under the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

25. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates;

26. Once again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including all reservations and declarations.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a General Assembly resolution on the fortieth (1988) anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in December 1993 a report⁽⁸²⁾ on activities undertaken since 1988 towards the universal ratification of or accession to United Nations human rights instruments. New mechanisms included the establishment of additional treaty bodies, special procedures—such as thematic and country-oriented rapporteurs—advisory services and the Working Group on the Right to Development. The Secretary-General reviewed measures taken by the Commission and the Subcommission to improve the effectiveness of existing mechanisms for the promotion and protection of human rights and those under consideration by the Commission. He discussed instruments being drafted and new topics presented in studies, reports and working papers. He also described developments under advisory services, public information activities and activities to strengthen national and existing regional institutions for the promotion of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 48/410 A of 7 December, the General Assembly increased from five to nine the number of award winners of human rights prizes to be presented to mark the forty-fifth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration.⁽⁴⁹⁾

By decision 48/410 B of 10 December, the Assembly, in accordance with its 1966 resolution,⁽⁸³⁾ its 1992 decision⁽⁸⁴⁾ and decision 48/410 A, awarded nine prizes to individuals and organizations that had made outstanding contributions to promote and protect human rights (see APPENDIX III).

The Assembly, by decision 48/416 of 10 December, reaffirmed, on the occasion of the forty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration, the Declaration's significance as a source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the promotion and protection of human rights, and decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third (1998) session an item on the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration.

Electoral processes

Periodic and genuine elections

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in November 1993 a report on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections.⁽⁸⁶⁾ Between 16 October 1992 and 15 October 1993, 27 requests were received from 24 Member States for electoral assistance. Of those requests, 21 related to technical assistance or advisory activities, compared to 14 the previous year. Annexed to the report were details of the status of 35 Member States' requests, including the nature of the requests and action taken in response. The Secretary-General discussed major United Nations missions, including UNTAC (see PART TWO, Chapter III), the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II (see PART TWO, Chapter I) and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

The United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation, established in 1991,⁽⁸⁷⁾ for cases in which requesting Member States were unable to finance in whole or in part the electoral verification, had received contributions of $569,069.

By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/131 by recorded vote.

Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/146 of 15 December 1989, 45/150 of 18 December 1990, and especially 46/137 of 17 December 1991 and 47/138 of 18 December 1992, as well as the annex to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/51 of 7 March 1989,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference of Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, especially the recognition therein that assistance provided upon the request of Governments for the conduct of free and fair elections, including assistance in the human rights aspects of elections and public information about elections, is of particular importance in the strengthening and building of institutions relating to human rights and the strengthening of a pluralistic civil society, and that special emphasis should be given to measures that assist in achieving those goals;

Reaffirming that electoral assistance is provided only at the specific request of the Member State concerned,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the high level of requests for electoral assistance by Member States,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations activities aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections;

2. Commends the electoral assistance provided to Member States at their request by the United Nations, requests that such assistance continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the proposed guidelines on electoral assistance, recognizing that the fundamental responsibility for ensuring free and fair elections lies with Governments, and also requests the Electoral Assistance Unit of the Secretariat to inform Member States on a regular basis about the requests received, the responses given to those requests and the nature of the assistance provided;

3. Requests that the United Nations attempt to ensure, before undertaking to provide electoral assistance to a requesting State, that there is adequate time to organize and carry out an effective mission for providing such assistance, that conditions exist to allow a free and fair election and that provisions can be made for adequate and comprehensive reporting of the results of the mission;

4. Recommends that the United Nations, in order to ensure the continuation and consolidation of the democratization process in Member States requesting assistance, provide assistance before and after elections have taken place, including needs-assessment missions aimed at recommending programmes which might contribute to the consolidation of the democratization process;

5. Recalls the establishment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation and the establishment by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme of a separate fund, the Trust Fund for Technical Assistance to Electoral Processes, and calls upon Member States to consider contributing to the funds;

6. Stresses the importance of coordination by the focal point within the United Nations system, commends the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for the advisory services and technical assistance it provides and the Department for Development Support and Management Services of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme for the technical assistance they provide to requesting Member States, and requests the focal point to strengthen its collaboration with the Centre for Human Rights, including through an exchange of personnel when appropriate, and with the Department for Development Support and Management Services and the United Nations Development Programme and inform them of requests submitted in the area of electoral assistance;

7. Recommends that the United Nations continue and strengthen its coordination of election preparation and observation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations which have an interest in such activities;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Electoral Assistance Unit with adequate human and financial resources, under the regular budget of the United Nations and within existing resources, to allow it to carry out its mandate;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to reinforce the Centre for Human Rights through the redeployment of resources and personnel, so as to enable it to answer, in close coordination with the Electoral Assistance Unit, the increasing number of requests from Member States for advisory services in the area of electoral assistance;

10. Recommends that the Secretary-General, on the basis of the guidelines proposed in his report and on the basis of experience acquired over the last two years, provide a revised set of guidelines for consideration at its forty-ninth session;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of resolution 47/138 and the present resolution, in particular on the status of requests from Member States for electoral assistance and verification, and on the validity of the guidelines in the light of experience.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October a report⁽⁸⁹⁾ summarizing action taken by the Commission on Human Rights concerning respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes. He stated that, while no specific action had been taken by the Commission to review the fundamental factors negatively affecting the observance of those principles, a number of its resolutions referred to the issue of elections in the context of guaranteeing the free expression of the will of people. They addressed the questions of Afghanistan,⁽⁹⁰⁾ Georgia,⁽⁹¹⁾ Myanmar,⁽⁹²⁾ Somalia,⁽⁹³⁾ consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of acts of violence committed by armed groups that spread terror among the population and by drug traffickers,⁽⁹⁴⁾ and strengthening United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity.⁽⁹⁵⁾

By decision 48/430 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/124 by recorded vote.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and for liberation from colonial domination and apartheid, and for the establishment of a society in which the people, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will fully enjoy political and other rights on a basis of equality and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Reaffirming also the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to decide freely on their own future,

Recognizing that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections,

Recognizing also that there is no single political system or single model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples, and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

Convinced that the establishment of the necessary mechanisms and means to guarantee full popular participation in electoral processes corresponds to States,

Recalling its resolutions in this regard, in particular resolution 47/130 of 18 December 1992,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the processes of promoting and protecting human rights should be conducted in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Reaffirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the ways for its implementation according to their constitution and national legislation, and that, consequently, States should establish the necessary mechanisms and means to guarantee full popular participation in those processes;

3. Reaffirms also that any activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that are intended to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms further that there is no universal need for the United Nations to provide electoral assistance to Member States, except in special circumstances such as cases of decolonization, in the context of regional or international peace processes or at the request of specific sovereign States, by virtue of resolutions adopted by the Security Council or the General Assembly in each case, in strict conformity with the principles of sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States;

5. Urges all States to respect the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and the sovereign right of peoples to determine their political, economic and social systems;

6. Strongly appeals to all States to refrain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

7. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

8. Reiterates that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of universal suffrage, can lead to a just and lasting solution to the situation in South Africa;

9. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly of the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to determine their political, economic and social system, without interference;

10. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session to continue giving priority to the review of the fundamental factors that negatively affect the observance of the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Regional arrangements

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1992,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in January 1993 a report⁽³⁴⁾ describing action taken by the Centre for Human Rights to cooperate with regional bodies and commissions in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific and Europe with regard to promoting and protecting human rights.

The Secretary-General stated that he would continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights. Such organizations were in a valuable position to strengthen human rights norms, and cooperation could only be mutually beneficial.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Commission asked States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights did not exist to consider establishing regional machinery to promote and protect human rights. It welcomed the continued cooperation of the Centre for Human Rights with the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) in establishing a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials at ESCAP headquarters (Bangkok). The Commission asked the Secretary-General, as foreseen in the medium-term plan for 1992-1997, to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights, and welcomed the continued organization, by the Centre, of national, regional and subregional workshops and training courses for government officials engaged in the administration of justice and in implementing international human rights instruments. It asked him to submit a further report on the state of regional arrangements in 1995.

Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly, in 1990,⁽⁹⁶⁾ had welcomed the designation of the ESCAP library at Bangkok as a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials within ESCAP. The library's functions included the collection, processing and dissemination of such materials in the Asia and Pacific region.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a January progress report to the Commission on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in Asia and the Pacific,⁽⁹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General described cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and ESCAP and summarized replies from two specialized agencies and two United Nations bodies containing their suggestions for activities. He also discussed consultations taking place between the United Nations and countries in the region.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽⁹⁸⁾ the Commission encouraged ESCAP member States and associate members and other parties to use ESCAP's depository centre and asked the Secretary-General to ensure a continuing flow of human rights materials to the library. It encouraged States in Asia and the Pacific to consider establishing regional arrangements to promote and protect human rights and appealed to Governments in the region to consider using the United Nations programme of advisory services and technical assistance in human rights to organize information and training courses for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international organs. The Commission welcomed the interest of some Governments in hosting a regional meeting for Asia and the Pacific in 1993 or 1994 to follow up the discussion on the region's consultative mechanism and requested the Secretary-General to facilitate the realization of that activity. The Commission's request to the Secretary-General was approved by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1993/271 of 28 July. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to consult the States in the region in the implementation of its resolution and to submit a report in 1994 on the progress achieved.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Working Group activities. The Working Group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms held its eighth session at Geneva from 18 to 29 January and on 1 March 1993.⁽⁹⁹⁾ The Group completed the first reading of the text of articles 3 and 4 of chapter III and of article 5 of chapter V, and began the second reading of the preamble of the draft declaration. Annexed to the Group's report were a first reading text of the draft declaration and compilations of first and second reading proposals.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ the Commission urged the Working Group to complete its task and submit the draft declaration in 1994, and requested the Secretary-General to circulate the Group's report to Member States, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments on the first reading text. The Commission decided to continue elaborating the draft declaration at its 1994 session and to make meeting time available to the Working Group prior to and during that session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/47 without vote.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/92 of 10 March 1993,

1. Authorizes the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the fiftieth session of the Commission in order to continue its work on the elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all necessary facilities to the working group for its meetings;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the working group, including the text of the draft declaration adopted at first reading, to the Governments of all States Members of the United Nations and members of competent specialized agencies and to interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, with an invitation to submit written comments on the text adopted on first reading for consideration by the working group at its forthcoming session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/47

28 July 1993 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) without vote, 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Internally displaced persons and humanitarian assistance

On 11 March,⁽¹⁰¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the comprehensive study prepared by the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons,⁽¹⁰²⁾ prepared in response to a 1992 Commission request,⁽¹⁰³⁾ asked him to renew the mandate of the representative for two years with a view to identifying ways to improve protection for and assistance to such persons. It asked the representative to submit annual reports on his activities to the Commission and the General Assembly and to make suggestions and recommendations to enable him to carry out his activities better. The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests on 28 July by decision 1993/285.

Note by the Secretary-General. In November,⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report prepared by his representative on internally displaced persons, as requested by the Commission. The report described the activities of the representative and those that he planned to undertake.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/135 without vote.

Internally displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the large number of internally displaced persons throughout the world, and conscious of the serious problem this is creating for the international community,

Recalling the relevant norms of international human rights instruments as well as of international humanitarian law,

Conscious of the human rights as well as the humanitarian dimensions of the problem of internally displaced persons,

Conscious also of the need for the United Nations system to gather information comprehensively on the issues of the protection of the human rights of and assistance to internally displaced persons,

Welcoming the initiative of the Commission on Human Rights on this question and, in particular, its resolution 1992/73 of 5 March 1992, by which it requested the Secretary-General to appoint a representative to study the human rights issues related to internally displaced persons, and Commission resolution 1993/95 of 11 March 1993, by which it requested the Secretary-General to mandate his representative for two years to continue his work aimed at a better understanding of the problems faced by internally displaced persons and their possible long-term solutions,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which calls for a comprehensive approach by the international community with regard to refugees and displaced persons,

Welcoming the support provided to the representative of the Secretary-General by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Department for Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming also the decision by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to extend, on a case-by-case basis and under specific circumstances, protection and assistance to the internally displaced,

Taking note of the comprehensive study of the representative of the Secretary-General, submitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session, and the useful suggestions and recommendations contained therein,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the representative of the Secretary-General;

2. Encourages the representative, through dialogue with Governments, to continue his review of the needs for international protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, including his compilation and analysis of existing rules and norms;

3. Invites the representative to present suggestions and recommendations with regard to ways and means, including the institutional aspects, of providing effective protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons;

4. Calls upon all Governments to continue to facilitate the activities of the representative, encourages them to give serious consideration to inviting the representative to visit their countries so as to enable him to study and analyse more fully the issues involved, and thanks those Governments which have already done so;

5. Urges all concerned United Nations agencies and organizations to provide all possible assistance and support to the representative in the implementation of his programme of activities;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 48/135

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Humanitarian assistance

By a vote of 14 to none, with 7 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 26 August,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ expressed its appreciation to Claire Palley (United Kingdom) for her preparatory document on the role of the United Nations in international humanitarian activities and assistance and human rights enforcement.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ It recommended that the Commission authorize the Subcommission to appoint her as special rapporteur on humanitarian assistance, taking into account the need to develop international cooperation in the humanitarian field and to promote and protect human rights. It asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a preliminary report in 1994, a progress report in 1995 and, if possible, a final report in 1996, and requested the Secretary-General to provide her with the necessary assistance. The Subcommission invited its members to submit their views on the question and recommended a draft decision for adoption by the Commission in 1994.

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined during 1993 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those allegations.

Also discussed were alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") with regard to Cambodia, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970 to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights,⁽¹⁾ the Commission held closed meetings in 1993 to study confidential documents and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1990.⁽²⁾ Those documents dealt with human rights situations in Bahrain, Chad, Kenya, Rwanda, Somalia, the Sudan and Zaire. The Commission decided to discontinue its consideration of the human rights situation in Bahrain and Kenya. It also decided that it would no longer examine the human rights situation in the Sudan and Zaire under the Council's confidential procedure, given the public procedure adopted by the Commission with regard to both in 1993.^(3,4)

Africa

Chad

On 20 August,⁽⁵⁾ the Subcommission strongly condemned the gross and continuing human rights violations in Chad and appealed to the international community to take measures to enhance the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country.

Equatorial Guinea

On 10 March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a report by Expert Fernando Volio Jimenez (Costa Rica,⁽⁷⁾) expressed concern at the persistence of politically motivated human rights violations in Equatorial Guinea, a lack of cooperation with the Expert, and the fact that the Government had neither implemented the 1980 Plan of Action prepared by the Expert⁽⁸⁾ nor approved his 1992 emergency plan of action.⁽⁹⁾ It called on Equatorial Guinea to permit the establishment of an independent judiciary, to promote harmonious coexistence of the peoples of the country and to free all political prisoners. The Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to study human rights violations by Equatorial Guinea and report in 1994, and asked the Secretary-General to assist him or her.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/277, approved the appointment of a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Equatorial Guinea and the Commission's request to the Secretary-General for assistance. Alejandro Artucio Rodriguez (Uruguay) was appointed Special Rapporteur.

South Africa

Working Group activities. In 1993, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967,⁽¹⁰⁾ submitted to the Commission a final report⁽¹¹⁾ and prepared an interim report to be submitted in 1994.⁽¹²⁾

The Group, in its interim report, re-examined its mandate and discussed the organization of its work concerning fact-finding missions to gather testimony from witnesses (Gaborone, Botswana, 16-19 August; Harare, Zimbabwe, 20-27 August). Subjects of inquiry concerned the right to life, detention without trial, detention and deaths in police custody, political trials, political prisoners, executions, the system of "homelands", freedom of the press, the right to education, trade union rights (see below), constitutional negotiations and proposed electoral law (see PART TWO, Chapter I, for details on the political situation in South Africa).

The Working Group invited the new Government of South Africa to adopt and ratify some of the more important international covenants and asked the Commission on Human Rights to invite the Government to create an independent and impartial judiciary, and a police force to serve the entire population without discrimination. It further recommended retraining for security forces in accordance with international standards; encouraging black people to serve as members of the judiciary; abolishing repressive regulations, including those applicable to "homelands"; unconditional amnesty for all sentences arising from anti-apartheid activities regarded as politically motivated; abolition of the death penalty and replacement with other forms of punishment for prisoners on death row; abolition of the "homelands" system; provision of human and material resources for education; inviting ILO to advise on labour laws; and human rights monitoring during the post-election transitional period. The Group noted that the international community had a vital role to play in assisting the new South Africa.

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission demanded that the South African authorities fully respect section 29 of the Prisons Act, prevent the inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and ensure their basic and legitimate freedoms of movement, association and education. It called on the authorities to release all political prisoners; allow the safe return of political exiles and refugees; maintain law and order; abolish the system of "homelands"; repeal remaining discriminatory laws; accede to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽¹⁴⁾ and the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;⁽¹⁵⁾ implement the recommendations of and cooperate with the Commission of Inquiry regarding the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation (see PART TWO, Chapter I); and allow the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa to visit South Africa.

The Commission called on the international community to support the process of transition in South Africa; assist and enhance the role of humanitarian and human rights groups in extending assistance to apartheid victims and monitoring the human rights situation; assist the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and other humanitarian organizations in repatriating and reintegrating South African refugees; observe fully the mandatory arms embargo and the Security Council's 1977 request to monitor effectively the implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa;⁽¹⁶⁾ support the peace process in Angola and Mozambique; and assist non-racial sports bodies in redressing structural inequalities in sports. The Commission called on the Centre for Human Rights to respond to South Africa's needs during its period of transition, in accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁷⁾ It decided to renew the Group's mandate for an additional two years—a decision approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/257 of 28 July—and asked the Group to submit its interim report in 1994 and its final report in 1995 and a preliminary report to the General Assembly in 1993 (see below) and 1994.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Subcommission called on South African authorities to maintain law and order, stop the violence that continued to devastate South Africa, prosecute its perpetrators and protect all citizens, irrespective of their political affiliation. It called on South Africa not to execute persons convicted and sentenced to death for "security", "security-related" or "unrest-related" offences and to bring before the courts any members of the security forces or other government organs or other persons against whom prima facie evidence of participation in killing residents in black areas or in murdering political opponents of apartheid existed. It condemned all military collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the nuclear field.

Note by the Secretary-General. In November,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a preliminary report on the situation of human rights in South Africa, prepared by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa. The report evaluated the principal developments of the human rights situation in South Africa between February and September 1993; its recommendations were similar to those made in the interim report (see above).

Transition to democracy

On 26 February,⁽²⁰⁾ the Commission recommended a draft text to the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/45 without vote.

Monitoring the transition to democracy in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolution 1992/3 of 20 July 1992,

Noting the statement of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Ahmed Khalifa, in presenting his last report, that in the light of recent events the list of institutions giving support to the South African regime should be discontinued,

Noting also that it is of paramount importance to monitor the process towards democracy and social justice in South Africa,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Ahmed Khalifa, for his considerable contribution to the cause of eliminating the policy of apartheid;

2. Expresses its thanks to all Governments and organizations that supplied the Special Rapporteur with information;

3. Authorizes the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Ms. Judith Sefi Attah with the task of submitting annually a report on the transition to democracy in South Africa, including therein:

(a) Steps taken in accordance with international human rights instruments to prevent violence between different groups in South Africa;

(b) Steps taken to investigate the alleged involvement of the South African security forces in fomenting violence and how this problem is being addressed;

(c) Steps taken to ensure equal political participation for all South Africans, including those removed under the apartheid system to the so-called homelands;

(d) Steps taken to ensure the enjoyment by all South Africans, without discrimination, of economic and social rights;

(e) An analysis of the obstacles preventing the democratization of South Africa and ways and means of eliminating them;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to extend to Ms. Attah, the Special Rapporteur, all the assistance that she may require in the exercise of her mandate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/45

28 July 1993 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) without vote, 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Judith Sefi Attah (Nigeria) presented a preliminary report on monitoring the transition to democracy in South Africa, in which she considered the political process in the country, political violence, inequality of economic and social rights and impediments to the transition.⁽²¹⁾ She observed that the process of change through peaceful negotiations remained fragile and made recommendations to facilitate the full democratization of the country.

In a later addendum,⁽²²⁾ the Special Rapporteur described a mission to South Africa (24 November-2 December) that coincided with a period in the transition process during which important negotiated transitional legislation had either been concluded or was nearing completion. The mission recommended that the United Nations initiate and coordinate detailed planning of socio-economic assistance programmes; the international community support NGOs involved in voter education and other aspects of the transition; NGOs assist in consolidating democratic change through development-related activities; all groups and parties participate in elections; use of violence and intimidation by political leaders discontinue; the private sector support youth programmes; the new Multi-Party Peace-keeping Force receive support; the international community cooperate and coordinate activities under United Nations auspices; and sound preparations be made to ensure the success of United Nations monitoring of the elections.

Subcommission action. On 13 August,⁽²³⁾ the Subcommission requested the Secretary-General to bring the Special Rapporteur's report to the attention of the Government of South Africa and to contact the Government to enable the Special Rapporteur to undertake a special mission to South Africa while preparing her next report. It asked the Special Rapporteur to submit her second report in 1994 and requested the Secretary-General to provide her with all the assistance she needed.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1993, there were 98 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,⁽²⁴⁾ which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973⁽²⁵⁾ and entered into force in 1976.⁽²⁶⁾ In 1993, Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Czech Republic and Slovakia became parties to the Convention. In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified, acceded or succeeded to it as at 31 August.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports of States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention—held its fifteenth session at Geneva from 25 to 29 January.⁽²⁸⁾ The Group examined the reports of Algeria, Colombia, Mexico, Senegal, Tunisia and Venezuela.⁽²⁹⁾ It continued to examine whether the actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken against them under the Convention. The Group called on States parties to incorporate in their legislation provisions relating to the crime of apartheid and invited Governments, entrepreneurs and enterprises to support the transition in South Africa. The Group recommended to the Commission that it request the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention which had not done so to express their views on the extent and nature of the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid in South Africa.

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February,⁽³⁰⁾ by a roll-call vote of 30 to none, with 21 abstentions, the Commission urged States that had not done so to accede to the Convention against apartheid and recommended once again that all States parties take account of the guidelines laid down by the Group of Three in 1978 for submission of reports.⁽³¹⁾ It requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation. The Commission requested the international community to urge South Africa to repeal the remaining apartheid laws and introduce legal and administrative measures to correct socioeconomic inequalities. It asked the Group of Three to continue to meet every two years and the Secretary-General to provide assistance to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/89 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/103 of 4 December 1986, 42/56 of 30 November 1987, 43/97 of 8 December 1988, 44/69 of 8 December 1989, 45/90 of 14 December 1990, 46/84 of 16 December 1991 and 47/81 of 16 December 1992,

Mindful that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid constitutes an important international treaty in the field of human rights and serves to implement the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid is a crime against humanity and constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and a gross violation of human rights, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Condemning the abhorrent system of apartheid wherever it exists, as well as the repression it engenders,

Convinced that universal ratification of or accession to the Convention and the immediate implementation of its provisions will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Commends those States parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid which have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;
3. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes of apartheid;
4. Underlines the importance of the universal ratification of the Convention, which would be an effective contribution to the fulfilment of the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other human rights instruments;
5. Appeals once again to those States which have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;
7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

General Assembly resolution 48/89

Foreign support of South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. On 28 February,⁽³²⁾ by a roll-call vote of 30 to 12, with 9 abstentions, the Commission condemned assistance to South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields. It called on Governments that had not done so to take measures to end military cooperation with South Africa and assistance in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there and to cease nuclear collaboration. The Commission further called on them to maintain pressure against South Africa until agreement was reached on drawing up and adopting a new constitution and holding elections. Noting with appreciation measures taken by some States, parliamentarians, institutions, trade unions and NGOs to exert pressure on South Africa, the Commission called on them to maintain their efforts to urge South Africa to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions.

The Commission appealed to the international community to assist the front-line and neighbouring States and to increase its contributions to the victims and opponents of apartheid. It also appealed to the international community, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to increase humanitarian and legal assistance to apartheid victims, returning refugees and exiles and released political prisoners.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the coordination of activities of the United Nations system in accordance with the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,⁽³³⁾ to continue to monitor its implementation and to pursue initiatives leading to the eradication of apartheid. Expressing appreciation to the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), for his updated 1992 report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to South Africa,⁽³⁴⁾ the Commission asked the Secretary-General to give the report the widest dissemination and to issue it as a United Nations publication. It further requested him to report on the implementation of its resolution in 1994.

Note by the Secretary-General. In June,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council that the Government of South Africa had submitted directly to ILO its report on measures taken in response to the 1992 report of the ILO Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association⁽³⁶⁾ concerning allegations of infringements of trade union rights in South Africa. In accordance with a 1992 Council request,⁽³⁷⁾ the Government of South Africa was to submit its report to the Secretary-General who in turn would transmit the document to ILO.

By decision 1993/299 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Sudan

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 35 to 9, with 8 abstentions, the Commission, on 10 March,⁽³⁾ expressing its deep concern at the serious human rights violations in the Sudan, urged the Government to respect human rights and called on all parties to the hostilities to cooperate to ensure such respect. The Commission also called on all parties to respect the provisions of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect civilians from violations. It further called on them to permit international agencies, humanitarian organizations and donor Governments to deliver humanitarian assistance and to cooperate with the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs. The Commission called on the Sudan to comply with applicable international human rights instruments and to ensure a full investigation of the killings of Sudanese employees of foreign relief organizations, to bring to justice those responsible and to provide just compensation to the victims' families.

The Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan and asked him or her to seek and receive credible and reliable information from Governments, NGOs and any other parties and to report to the General Assembly in 1993 and the Commission in 1994. It called on the Sudan to cooperate fully and to ensure that the Special Rapporteur had free and unlimited access to any person with whom he or she wished to meet, and asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

On 30 March, the Chairman appointed Dr. Gáspár Biro (Hungary) as Special Rapporteur.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/272 of 28 July, approved the Commission's decision to appoint a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, and its requests to the Special Rapporteur to report to the Commission in 1994 and to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. On 18 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report of the Special Rapporteur.⁽³⁸⁾ He visited the Sudan from 11 to 23 September where he met with government authorities, representatives of humanitarian organizations and individual citizens and detainees, and visited displaced-persons camps and prisons. The Special Rapporteur received reports of extrajudicial killings and summary executions; enforced or involuntary disappearances; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; arbitrary arrest and detention; and reprisals by police and security forces. He drew attention to specific cases of human rights violations by the Sudanese army and paramilitary forces under its control having occurred in the Nuba Mountains area in central Sudan, an area he visited between 17 and 21 September.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the seriousness of the human rights situation in the Sudan demanded continuing and intensified monitoring. He recommended that the Government abide by its human rights obligations under international law; ensure training for its security and police forces, army, paramilitary or civil defence groups; grant free access to regional and international humanitarian and human rights organizations; complete investigations into the arrest, disappearance and killing of hundreds of civilians and army officers following an attack by the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Juba in 1992; carry out investigations into human rights violations in the Nuba Mountains; cease attacks on civilians; ensure access to food and health care; agree on a cease-fire; and address the problem of displaced persons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/147 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Recalling resolution AHG/Res.213(XXVIII) on the strengthening of cooperation and coordination among African States, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-eighth ordinary session, held at Dakar in June and July 1992, as well as the declaration AHG/Decl.1(XXVI), adopted at the twenty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa in July 1990,^a

Noting with deep concern reports of grave human rights violations in the Sudan, particularly summary executions, detentions without trial, forced displacement of persons and torture, described in part in the reports submitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session by the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture and extrajudicial summary or arbitrary executions,

Disturbed by the failure of the Government of the Sudan to provide for a full impartial investigation of the killings of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign government relief organizations, despite the announcement by the Government of its intention to convene an independent judicial inquiry commission,

Concerned over the reported attack on 12 November 1993 by aeroplanes of the Government of the Sudan on an airstrip in Thiet that resulted in injuries to three relief workers, and further concerned by the reported bombing of civilian areas in Loa and Pageri on 23 November 1993 that may have resulted in deaths or injuries,

Deeply concerned that access by the civilian population to humanitarian assistance is being impeded, which represents a threat to human life and an offence to human dignity, but welcoming the continuing dialogue between the Government of the Sudan and other parties, donor Governments and international private voluntary agencies regarding the delivery of humanitarian aid, and expressing the hope that such dialogue will result in improved cooperation for the delivery of humanitarian assistance,

Alarmed by the large number of internally displaced persons and victims of discrimination in the Sudan, including members of minorities who have been forcibly displaced in violation of their human rights and who are in need of relief assistance and of protection,

Alarmed also by the mass exodus of refugees to neighbouring countries and conscious of the burden that this places on those countries, but expressing its appreciation for the continuing efforts to assist them, thereby easing the burden on host countries,

Emphasizing that it is essential to put an end to the serious deterioration of the human rights situation in the Sudan, including that in the Nuba Mountains,

Recognizing the fact that the Sudan has been hosting large numbers of refugees from several neighbouring countries over the last three decades,

Welcoming the efforts of the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations to provide humanitarian relief to those Sudanese in need, ^aA/45/482.

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, and commending him for his interim report on the situation of human rights in the Sudan,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the continuing and serious human rights violations in the Sudan, including summary executions, detentions without due process, forced displacement of persons and torture;

2. Takes note of paragraph 24 of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, in which he stated that the Government of the Sudan had cooperated with him by arranging the meetings he had requested and further facilitated visits to the locations he had wished to see;

3. Notes with concern the reprisals taken by the Government of the Sudan against those who contacted or attempted to contact the Special Rapporteur;

4. Urges the Government of the Sudan fully to respect human rights, and calls upon all parties to cooperate in order to ensure such respect;

5. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to comply with applicable international human rights instruments, in particular the International Covenants on Human Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to which the Sudan is a party, and to ensure that all individuals in its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including members of all religious and ethnic groups, enjoy the rights recognized in those instruments;

6. Calls upon all parties to the hostilities to respect fully the applicable provisions of international humanitarian law, including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect all civilians from violations, including arbitrary detention, ill-treatment, torture and summary execution;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the humanitarian organizations for their work in helping displaced persons and drought and conflict victims in the Sudan, and calls upon all parties to protect humanitarian relief workers;

8. Calls upon the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions again to address the killing of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign government relief organizations;

9. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to explain fully the actions to obstruct the efforts of the Special Rapporteur, especially the ill-treatment afforded those who contacted or attempted to contact him;

10. Also calls upon the Government of the Sudan to ensure a full, thorough and prompt investigation by the independent judicial inquiry commission of the killings of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign government relief organizations, to bring to justice those responsible for the killings and to provide just compensation to the families of the victims;

11. Further calls upon the Government of the Sudan to investigate and explain without delay the circumstances behind the air attacks on 12 and 23 November 1993;

12. Strongly urges all parties to the hostilities to redouble their efforts to negotiate an equitable solution to the civil conflict to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Sudanese people and thereby create the necessary conditions to end the exodus of Sudanese refugees to neighbouring countries and facilitate their early return to the Sudan, and welcomes efforts to facilitate dialogue among the parties to that end;

13. Notes with appreciation, in this connection, the current regional efforts of heads of State of States members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development (Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya and Uganda) to assist parties to the conflict in the Sudan to reach a peaceful settlement;

14. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan and other parties to permit international agencies, humanitarian organizations and donor Governments to deliver humanitarian assistance to the civilian population and to cooperate with the recent initiatives of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to deliver humanitarian assistance to all persons in need;

15. Recommends that the serious human rights situation in the Sudan be monitored, and invites the Commission on Human Rights to give urgent attention to this question at its fiftieth session;

16. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-ninth session.

Togo

On 10 March,⁽³⁹⁾ the Commission, deploring the obstacles standing in the way of a democratic transition in Togo and the use of violence by the armed forces against peaceful demonstrators, called on the authorities to take measures to create conditions conducive to the return of Togolese refugees in security and dignity and to guarantee the security of all Togolese, including political opponents. It requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the Togolese authorities, asking them to indicate action taken thereon, and to report to the Commission in 1994 on the basis of any information obtained on the human rights situation in Togo, including information furnished by NGOs.

Zaire

On 10 March 1993,⁽⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights deplored the continuing serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Zaire and expressed concern about discriminatory measures affecting persons belonging to minority groups. It recommended that thematic rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission should continue to keep a close watch on the human rights situation in Zaire, and requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of Zairian authorities and to report in 1994.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) presented to the Commission on Human Rights in February a report on the human rights situation in Afghanistan.⁽⁴⁰⁾ He visited Pakistan from 29 January to 3 February and Afghanistan on 31 January 1993 to gather up-to-date material following the submission of his 1992 interim report.⁽⁴¹⁾ At the request of the Russian Federation, the Special Rapporteur visited Moscow on 28 January to discuss the situation of former Soviet prisoners of war held in Afghanistan, and that of Afghan children who had been brought from Afghanistan to study in the former USSR.

The Special Rapporteur stated that, although the 1992 change in power had taken place peacefully,⁽⁴²⁾ it was followed by increasingly violent clashes between armed groups of various political factions. It appeared that the decision concerning the political status of the country was still dependent on the outcome of an armed struggle for political power, which the Secretary-General's 1991 five-point peace plan had sought to prevent.⁽⁴³⁾

He had received reliable information regarding the existence of some 1,500 prisoners who were detained by different mujahidin groups. In addition, the fate of former Soviet prisoners had not been clarified. The enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights was not guaranteed and genuine elections had not taken place.

In addition to his 1992 recommendations,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Special Rapporteur recommended that Afghanistan respect humanitarian law; issue a declaration on article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (relating to human rights in emergency situations);⁽⁴⁴⁾ allow the International Committee on the Red Cross (ICRC) to visit places of detention; limit the period of detention on remand or preventive detention to a reasonable term; not discriminate against refugees who had been associated with the former Government and to whom amnesty applied; and apply the country's general amnesty without discrimination. He stated that the United Nations should invite the Afghan Government to accept United Nations monitoring or advisory services; collaborate with it in studying the human rights situation; initiate the process of periodic and genuine elections; and cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. He advocated a systematic search into the whereabouts of disappeared persons and support by the international community to the repatriation of some 4 million Afghan refugees.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Commission urged the Afghan parties to undertake all efforts to achieve a comprehensive political solution, respect the humanitarian rules set out in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols of 1977,⁽⁴⁶⁾ halt the use of weapons against civilians and protect them from reprisals and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution, and expedite the exchange of prisoners. It called on States and parties concerned to implement a 1992 General Assembly decision concerning prisoners of war and persons missing as a result of war in Afghanistan⁽⁴⁷⁾ and to make efforts to release all prisoners of war, particularly former Soviet prisoners of war, since the hostilities in which the former USSR was involved had legally ended. The Commission urged the unconditional release of all prisoners detained without trial in Afghanistan by rival groups and called on all conflicting parties to investigate the fate of disappeared persons, apply amnesty decrees equally to all detainees, reduce the period during which prisoners awaited trial, treat all prisoners in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners⁽⁴⁸⁾ and apply to all convicted persons the relevant articles of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Expressing concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, were becoming increasingly difficult, the Commission urgently appealed to Member States and humanitarian organizations to promote the implementation of projects envisaged by the Coordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance to Afghanistan (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and UNHCR programmes (see PART THREE, Chapter XV). It also appealed to Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to cooperate fully, especially on the subject of mine detection, in facilitating the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity. The Commission urged all parties to ensure the safety of personnel involved in implementing United Nations humanitarian and economic assistance programmes and to extend their cooperation to the Commission and its Special Rapporteur. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1993 and the Commission in 1994. The Secretary-General was asked to give him all necessary assistance.

By decision 1993/275 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the Commission's request that he report in 1993 and 1994.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan from March to October 1993. (49) The Special Rapporteur had visited Pakistan and Afghanistan in September.

Despite the formation of an Islamic Government, the rivalry between the groups whose leaders or members were ministers in the coalition Government had continued and their difference had not been resolved through negotiation. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the human rights situation was far from satisfactory. Fighting continued in Kabul, where some 36,000 houses were partly or fully destroyed and more than 30,000 damaged. Some 110,000 families were displaced and thousands of persons were killed or wounded. Numerous cases of rape and ill-treatment by armed persons had been reported. In 1993, a relatively small number of refugees chose to return from Pakistan. An estimated 2 million remained in Pakistan and some 2.15 million were in Iran. More than 90,000 new refugees had arrived in Pakistan since April 1992. Numerous members from the Afghan Sikh and Hindu communities had fled Kabul owing to the insecurity caused by shelling and looting. Death sentences continued to be pronounced and were reportedly carried out.

The Special Rapporteur recommended abolishing prisons run by political parties and releasing their prisoners; broadening and accelerating mine clearance; enabling displaced persons to return safely to their homes and to rebuild them; ensuring respect for women; and solving political conflicts peacefully and democratically. He further recommended that the United Nations try to bring the conflicting groups to the negotiating table and urged it to continue to monitor the human rights situation. He appealed to the international community to continue its efforts in favour of mine clearance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/152 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals that could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of the inhabitants of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces,

Recalling also its resolution 47/141 of 18 December 1992 and all its other relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note, in particular, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/66 of 10 March 1993, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan for one year and to request him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, and of Economic and Social Council decision 1993/275 of 28 July 1993, in which the Council approved the Commission's decision,

Noting that, following the demise of the former Afghan Government, a transitional Islamic State of Afghanistan was established,

Noting with deep concern that in spite of the efforts and initiatives taken by the Government of Afghanistan towards ensuring complete peace and stability, a situation of armed confrontation, affecting mainly the civilian population, which is still the target of indiscriminate military attacks by rival groups, continues to exist in parts of the territory of Afghanistan, and in particular in Kabul, and has also caused a dramatic rise in the number of persons displaced inside the country,

Concerned that the prevailing situation in the country as regards the political and legal order is affecting the security of members of all ethnic and religious groups, including minorities,

Noting with concern reports of violations of rights enshrined in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, such as the right to life, liberty and security of person and to freedom of opinion, expression and association,

Deeply concerned about the violation of the human rights of women by warring factions in Afghanistan, and about the lack of respect towards them and their honour, physical integrity and dignity, as reported by the Special Rapporteur,

Concerned at reports of detainees who are being held for political reasons by rival groups, in particular in prisons run by political parties, among whom are several members of the former Government,

Noting that much remains to be done for the treatment of prisoners to be in conformity with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned that the repatriation of Afghan refugees has dramatically declined in 1993, owing to the prevailing situation in Afghanistan, and expressing the hope that conditions in the country will allow those still in exile to return as soon as possible,

Aware that peace and security in Afghanistan are prerequisites for the successful repatriation of about four million refugees, in particular the achievement of a comprehensive political solution and the establishment of a freely and democratically elected government, the end of armed confrontation in Kabul and in some provinces, the clearance of the minefields that have been laid in many parts of the country, the restoration of an effective authority in the whole country and the reconstruction of the economy,

Affirming that the declaration of general amnesty issued by the Islamic State of Afghanistan should be applied in a strictly non-discriminatory manner and that prisoners detained by rival groups without trial on Afghan territory should be released unconditionally,

Commending the activity carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross in cooperation with the Afghan authorities, as well as non-governmental organizations, in favour of the people of Afghanistan,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

Welcoming the fact that the Special Rapporteur was able to visit the capital of Afghanistan, Kabul,

1. Welcomes the cooperation that authorities in Afghanistan have extended to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in view of the circumstances prevailing in the country;

2. Also welcomes the cooperation that the authorities in Afghanistan have extended, in particular to the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and to international organizations, such as the specialized agencies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross;

3. Urges all the Afghan parties to undertake, where appropriate under the auspices of the United Nations, all possible efforts in order to achieve a comprehensive political solution, which is the only way to bring about peace and the full restoration of human rights in Afghanistan, based on the free exercise of the right to self-determination by the people, including free and genuine elections, the cessation of armed confrontation and the creation of conditions that will permit the free return, as soon as possible, of about four million refugees to their homeland in safety and dignity, whenever they wish, and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by all Afghans;

4. Welcomes all the efforts towards reaching a comprehensive, peaceful political solution to the conflict in Afghanistan;

5. Urges all the parties to carry out as soon as possible a disarmament process, which constitutes a prerequisite of a solution to the conflict, as decided also in the Afghan peace accord signed by the Afghan parties at Islamabad on 7 March 1993;

6. Invites the United Nations to offer, upon request of the Government of Afghanistan and with due regard to the Afghan tradition, advisory services and technical assistance concerning the drafting of a Constitution, which should embody internationally accepted human rights principles, and the holding of direct elections;

7. Recognizes that the promotion and protection of human rights should be an essential element in the achievement of a comprehensive solution to the crisis in Afghanistan, and calls upon all the Afghan parties to respect human rights;

8. Urges all the Afghan parties to respect accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to protect all civilians from acts of reprisal and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary executions, and to expedite the simultaneous release of prisoners wherever they may be held;

9. Strongly urges all Afghan parties to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women, so that their honour and dignity would be ensured in accordance with the provisions of international human rights instruments and the humanitarian law;

10. Calls upon all States and parties concerned to make all efforts for the realization of its decision 47/428 of 16 December 1992 entitled "Prisoners of war and persons missing as a result of war in Afghanistan", and calls upon them to make all efforts for the immediate release of all prisoners of war, and in particular of former Soviet prisoners of war, as provided for under article 118 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949, considering that the hostilities in which the former Soviet Union was involved have legally and effectively ended, and also in particular for the tracing of the many Afghans still missing as a result of the war;

11. Urges the unconditional release of all prisoners detained without trial on the Afghan territory by rival groups, and calls for the abolition of prisons run by political parties;

12. Calls upon the authorities in Afghanistan to investigate thoroughly the fate of those persons who have disappeared during the conflict, to apply amnesty decrees equally to all detainees, to reduce the period during which prisoners await trial, to treat all prisoners, especially those awaiting trial or those in custody in juvenile rehabilitation centres, in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to apply to all suspected or convicted persons article 14, paragraphs 3 (d) and 5 to 7, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

13. Appeals to all Member States to provide adequate humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan in order to contribute to the alleviation of the suffering of refugees and especially to the improvement of the living conditions of women and children;

14. Urgently appeals to all Member States and humanitarian organizations to continue to promote the implementation of the projects envisaged by the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially the pilot projects for the repatriation of refugees;

15. Reiterates its appeal to all Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to cooperate fully on the question of mine detection and clearance, in order to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity;

16. Strongly urges all the parties to the conflict to undertake all necessary measures to ensure the safety of the personnel of humanitarian organizations involved in the implementation of the United Nations humanitarian and economic assistance programmes relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in order to avoid further deplorable incidents such as those which have caused loss of life among that personnel;

17. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, once the situation is back to normal and upon the invitation of the Afghan Government, to study the situation of the Kabul Museum and of the national archives and to take proper action to preserve the Afghan cultural heritage;

18. Recommends the translation of the report of the Special Rapporteur into the Dari and Pashtu languages;

19. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to continue to extend their full cooperation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

21. Decides to keep under consideration during its forty-ninth session the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Cambodia

The Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council expressed concern about the protection of human rights in Cambodia (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/154 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note of the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, signed on 23 October 1991, including part III thereof, relating to human rights,

Taking note also of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/6 of 19 February 1993,

Bearing in mind the role and responsibilities of the United Nations and the international community in the process of the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia,

Recognizing that the tragic recent history of Cambodia requires special measures to assure the protection of the human rights of all people in the country and the non-return to the policies and practices of the past, as stipulated in the agreements signed in Paris on 23 October 1991,

Welcoming the elections of May 1993 and the inauguration of the Government of the Kingdom of Cambodia,

1. Welcomes the establishment in Cambodia of an operational presence of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat:

(a) To manage the implementation of educational and technical assistance and advisory services programmes, and to ensure their continuation;

(b) To assist the Government of Cambodia established after the election, at its request, in meeting its obligations under the human rights instruments recently adhered to, including the preparation of reports to the relevant monitoring committees;

(c) To provide support to bona fide human rights groups in Cambodia;

(d) To contribute to the creation and/or strengthening of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

(e) To continue to assist with the drafting and implementation of legislation to promote and protect human rights;

(f) To continue to assist with the training of persons responsible for the administration of justice;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in line with all effective measures, to assure the protection of the human rights of all people in Cambodia and to ensure adequate resources, from within existing overall United Nations resources, for the functioning of the operational presence of the Centre for Human Rights in Cambodia;

3. Welcomes also the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Representative to undertake the tasks set out in paragraph 6 of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/6;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary resources, from within existing resources, to enable the Special Representative to fulfil those tasks expeditiously;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the role of the Centre for Human Rights in assisting the Cambodian Government and people in the promotion and protection of human rights and on any recommendations made by the Special Representative on matters within his mandate;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Cambodia at its forty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 48/154

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 53); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.75), orally revised; agenda item 114 (c).

China

On 11 March,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 22 to 17, with 12 abstentions, decided to take no action on a draft resolution concerning the situation in China.

By that draft, the Commission would have expressed concern over continuing reports of human rights violations in China and called on the Government to ensure the observance of human rights and improve the administration of justice.

East Timor

Report of the Secretary-General. In a February report to the Commission on Human Rights on the situation in East Timor,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General discussed his good-offices activities aimed at achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement of the question of East Timor. He also described action taken by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances in 1992,⁽⁵²⁾ the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions⁽⁵³⁾ and the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture.⁽⁵⁴⁾ Annexed to the report was information received from the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal and NGOs regarding the trials surrounding November 1991 incidents of violence at Dili, which resulted in loss of life, injuries and disappearances among civilians.⁽⁵⁵⁾ (See also PART ONE, Chapter III.)

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March,⁽⁵⁶⁾ by a roll-call vote of 22 to 12, with 15 abstentions, the Commission expressed deep concern at the reports of continuing human rights violations in East Timor and, referring to the trials surrounding the 1991 incident at Dili, regretted the disparity in sentences imposed on those civilians not indicted for violent activities—who should have been released—and on the military involved. It called on Indonesia to ensure that all

East Timorese in custody were treated humanely, all trials were fair, just and public, and those not involved in violent activities were released, and urged it to invite the Special Rapporteurs on torture and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to visit East Timor. It decided to consider the situation in East Timor in 1994 on the basis of the reports of the Special Rapporteurs and Working Groups and that of the Secretary-General, which would include an analytical compilation of information received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Subcommission action. The Subcommission had before it a July note by the Secretariat,⁽⁵⁷⁾ updating the good-offices activities of the Secretary-General, including a visit to Indonesia and East Timor from 3 to 8 April by his Personal Envoy, S. Amos Wako (Kenya).

By a secret ballot of 13 votes to 10, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 20 August,⁽⁵⁸⁾ urged the Indonesian authorities to implement the Commission's 1993 decisions concerning East Timor and to honour the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War regarding the prohibition on removing prisoners from their original place of residence.

Indonesia

On 25 August,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 7, with 1 abstention, decided to take no action on a draft resolution concerning human rights violations in Indonesia. By that draft, the Subcommission would have encouraged the Indonesian authorities to invite the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture and on extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions to visit Aceh and other parts of Indonesia. The Special Rapporteur on torture, Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands), had been prevented from visiting Aceh province during a November 1991 visit to Indonesia.⁽⁶⁰⁾

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a January report on the human rights situation in Iran.⁽⁶¹⁾ He had received information on alleged incidents and cases concerning the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the administration of justice; freedom of expression, opinion and association and the right to peaceful assembly; political rights; the situation of women and children; the right to education; the right to own property; the right to leave one's country and to return; freedom of religion; and the Baha'i community. The detailed allegations had been transmitted to Iran to enable it to verify their accuracy; Iran's replies were reflected in the Special Representative's report. He also discussed repressive aspects in Iran's fight against drug trafficking, the refugee population and military and civilian victims of chemical-weapons attacks during the hostilities between Iran and Iraq.

The Special Representative noted that there was continued uncertainty about the official reaction to dissidence; self-censorship was widespread in the media; several guarantees of due process were still the letter of the law or the subject of proposed legislation; the right of free association had been denied; ICRC continued to be prevented from performing its function in prisons; the restrictions on non-Islamic religious groups were manifold; and the situation of women left much to be desired. The number of judicial executions continued to exceed the very restrictive terms of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and there had been cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

The Special Representative recommended making urgent appeals to Iran to implement fully the international human rights standards in force and the 1991 agreement concluded with ICRC concerning visits to prisons and prisoners.⁽⁶²⁾ He stated that the urgent need to reduce drastically the number of executions should be emphasized and that Iran should be asked to resume a policy of full cooperation with the Commission.

In a later addendum,⁽⁶³⁾ the Special Representative presented Iran's replies to questions raised in his 1992 interim report.⁽⁶²⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁶⁴⁾ by a roll-call vote of 23 to 11, with 14 abstentions, the Commission, expressing concern at continuing reports of human rights violations in Iran, called on that country to intensify its efforts to investigate and rectify the human rights issues raised by the Special Representative, comply with international human rights instruments and ensure that all individuals enjoyed the rights recognized in those instruments. It encouraged Iran to continue to cooperate with ICRC and the Special Representative. The Commission endorsed the Special Representative's view that international monitoring of human rights in Iran should continue. Deciding to extend the Special Representative's mandate for another year, the Commission asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1993 (see below) and a final report to the Commission in 1994. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/273 of 28 July.

Note by the Secretary-General. On 3 August,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General drew the Subcommission's attention to reports by special rapporteurs or human rights bodies, as well as to steps which had been or were being taken by the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights to prevent human rights violations in Iran since August 1992.

Subcommission action. On 20 August 1993,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 20 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions, asked the Special Representative to consider and recommend the strongest measures that could be adopted within the United Nations to eliminate human rights violations in Iran, and asked the Secretary-General to inform it in 1994 of the reports and measures towards that end, implemented or under way by United Nations bodies.

Interim report of the Special Representative.

In November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Representative's interim report on the human rights situation in Iran,⁽⁶⁷⁾ which summarized allegations of human rights violations received by him between January and September 1993 and which he had communicated to Iran. They concerned the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the administration of justice; freedom of expression, opinion and the press; freedom of religion and the situation of the Baha'is; the situation of women and children; and the rights to work, education and to own property. Information was also received on the 25 May 1993 air attacks by the Iranian Air Force on military bases in Iraq, which belonged to the Iran National Liberation Army of the People's Mujahidin, and on tensions between the Government and the Kurdish and Naraoui people.

The Special Representative recommended that Iran be urged to: stop its intelligence agents from threatening or attempting to kill members of the Iranian opposition abroad and to investigate the incidents that had been reported; give effect to the guarantees of due process of law in its courts and tribunals; recognize that men and women were equal before the law; examine the problem of intimidating the media and adopt legal measures to protect the press; implement a 1991 agreement between ICRC and the Government;⁽⁶⁸⁾ and resume full cooperation with the Special Representative by allowing him to revisit the country. He stated that the human rights situation in Iran should remain under international scrutiny.

In a later addendum,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Special Representative presented Iran's replies to allegations of human rights violations presented in his interim report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/145 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Bearing in mind its relevant resolutions, including the most recent, resolution 47/146 of 18 December 1992, as well as those of the Commission on Human Rights, including the most recent, resolution 1993/62 of 10 March 1993, and those of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, including the most recent, resolution 1993/14 of 20 August 1993,

Noting that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran has responded to the request of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for information concerning allegations of human rights violations in that country, but that it did not allow him to pay a fourth visit to the country so that he might obtain direct and first-hand information on the current human rights situation there,

Reaffirming that Governments are accountable for assassinations and attacks by their agents against persons on the territory of another State, as well as for the incitement, approval or wilful condoning of such acts,

Noting the observation of the Special Representative that there is enough evidence to show that it is entirely proper for the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran to remain under international scrutiny,

Noting also that the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1993/14, has condemned the continuing flagrant violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Noting further the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights and the considerations and observations contained therein;

2. Expresses its deep concern at continuing reports of violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

3. Expresses its concern more specifically at the main criticisms of the Special Representative with regard to the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, namely, the high number of executions, cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the standard of the administration of justice, the absence of guarantees of due process of law, discriminatory treatment of certain groups of citizens by reason of their religious beliefs, notably the Baha'is, whose existence as a viable religious community is threatened, and restrictions on the freedom of expression, thought, opinion and the press, and that, as noted by the Special Representative, there is continued discrimination against women;

4. Expresses its grave concern at the continued use of the death penalty, which the Special Representative has described as excessive;

5. Also expresses its grave concern that there are continuing threats to the life of a citizen of another State, whose case is mentioned in the interim report of the Special Representative, as well as to individuals associated with his work, which appear to have the support of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran;

6. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to refrain from activities such as those mentioned in the interim report of the Special Representative against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad;

7. Regrets that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran has still not permitted the Special Representative to visit the country and has thus not enabled him fully to discharge his mandate by according him full cooperation;

8. Also urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to implement existing agreements with international humanitarian organizations;

9. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to intensify its efforts to investigate and rectify the human rights issues raised by the Special Representative in sections IV and V of his interim report, in particular as regards the administration of justice and due process of law;

10. Also calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with international instruments on human rights, in particular the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party, and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including religious groups, enjoy the rights recognized in those instruments;

11. Endorses the view of the Special Representative that the international monitoring of the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran should be continued;

12. Further calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to cooperate fully with the Special Representative;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;

14. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups, such as the Baha'is, during its forty-ninth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions" in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Iraq

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February,⁽⁷⁰⁾ Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) reported on the human rights situation in Iraq, including allegations of violations he had received regarding summary or arbitrary execution; enforced or involuntary disappearances; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; arbitrary arrest and detention and due process of law; freedom of association and expression; and access to food and health care. He also received information on human rights violations in Iraq affecting the Kurdish population, the Assyrian and Turkoman communities, the indigenous Ma'dan and others in the southern marsh area and the Shia of southern Iraq. The report contained Iraq's replies to the Special Rapporteur's inquiries and to the allegations of human rights violations reported by him in 1992.⁽⁷¹⁾

The Special Rapporteur concluded that there had been massive human rights violations of the gravest nature by Iraq. He recommended that Iraq: bring the activities of its security services into conformity with the standards of international law; set up a commission on disappearances and cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances; end its interference in the religious activities of the Shias and compensate them for damages; end its internal economic embargoes; take advantage of the food-for-oil formula to enable Iraq to finance humanitarian assistance; and approve his previous recommendation to send human rights monitors to the country.⁽⁷¹⁾

demnation of massive human rights violations by Iraq, in particular: summary and arbitrary executions; systematic torture; enforced or involuntary disappearances; suppression of freedom of thought, expression and association; and violations of property and economic rights. It called on Iraq to release persons arbitrarily arrested and detained, including Kuwaitis and nationals of other States, and, as a State party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽¹⁴⁾ to abide by its obligations under them. The Commission urged Iraq to set up an independent commission of inquiry to look into the fate of tens of thousands of disappeared persons and to bring its security services into line with the standards of international law.

Regretting Iraq's failure to provide satisfactory replies concerning human rights violations brought to the Special Rapporteur's attention, it called on Iraq to reply without delay to enable him to formulate recommendations to improve the human rights situation there. It asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Special Rapporteur, to send monitors to Iraq to help verify reports on the human rights situation and to provide additional resources for that purpose. The Commission decided to extend for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate as defined in a 1992 Commission resolution,⁽⁷¹⁾ and urged Iraq to cooperate with him, notably during his next visit. It asked the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1993 and to report to the Commission in 1994. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to give him all the assistance he needed. The decision to extend the mandate and the Commission's requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General, including the provision of additional resources to send human rights monitors to Iraq, were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/279 of 28 July.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 14 votes to 9, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 20 August,⁽⁷³⁾ condemned the human rights violations by the Government of Iraq.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an interim report by the Special Rapporteur,⁽⁷⁴⁾ in which he described grave human rights violations in the marshes of southern Iraq and the situation of economic rights throughout the country. He concluded that the Government had discriminated in its distribution of food and health care to the detriment of the human rights of the general populations living in the northern and southern parts of the country. He recommended that Iraq end its military activities against civilians in the southern marsh area; allow the stationing of human rights monitors; cooperate with the United Nations Special Commission (see PART TWO, Chapter III); end activities that might cause environmental damage to the southern marsh area; take action towards securing the economic, social and cultural rights of peoples of the southern marsh; allow unhindered access of United Nations humanitarian agencies throughout the country; remove interferences with the fair and equitable access to food, medical supplies and essential resources; cease its artillery shelling of farms and communities in the northern Kurdish territory; contribute to the United Nations humanitarian programme in Iraq; and take advantage of the food-for-oil formula. In December,⁽⁷⁵⁾ Hungary requested that the Special Rapporteur's interim report be circulated to the Security Council.

In a later addendum to his report ⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Special Rapporteur presented a reply by the Government of Iraq to the allegations of human rights violations contained therein.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/144 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its resolution 47/145 of 18 December 1992, in which it expressed its deep concern at flagrant violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq should cooperate with humanitarian organizations and ensure that the human and political rights of all Iraqi citizens were respected,

Recalling in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991, by which the Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a Special Rapporteur to make a thorough study of the violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, based on all information the Special Rapporteur might deem relevant, including information provided by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and any comments and material provided by the Government of Iraq,

Bearing in mind the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights condemning the flagrant violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, including its most recent resolution, 1993/74 of 10 March

1993, by which the Commission extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a further year and requested him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session and a final report to the Commission at its fiftieth session,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 706(1991) of 15 August 1991, 712(1991) of 19 September 1991 and 778(1992) of 2 October 1992,

Deeply concerned by the massive and grave violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, such as summary and arbitrary executions, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, enforced or involuntary disappearances, arbitrary arrests and detention and lack of due process and the rule of law and of freedom of thought, of expression, of association and of access to food and health care,

Deeply concerned also by the fact that chemical weapons have been used on the Iraqi civilian population, by the forced displacement of hundreds of thousands of Iraqi civilians and by the destruction of Iraqi towns and villages, as well as by the fact that tens of thousands of displaced Kurds have had to take refuge in camps and shelters in the north of Iraq,

Deeply concerned further by the increasingly severe and grave violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq against the civilian population in southern Iraq, in particular in the southern marshes, a large part of which has sought refuge on the border between Iraq and the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Expressing concern in particular at the fact that there are no signs of improvement in the general situation of human rights in Iraq, and, therefore, welcoming the decision to deploy a team of human rights monitors to such locations as would facilitate improved information flows and assessment and would help in the independent verification of reports on the situation of human rights in Iraq,

Regretting that the Government of Iraq has not seen fit to respond to requests for a visit of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq, and noting that, despite the formal cooperation extended to the Special Rapporteur by the Government, such cooperation needs to be substantially improved, in particular by giving full replies to the inquiries of the Special Rapporteur about acts being committed by the Government that are incompatible with the international human rights instruments that are binding on that country,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report submitted by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Expresses its strong condemnation of the massive violations of human rights of the gravest nature, for which the Government of Iraq is responsible and to which the Special Rapporteur has referred in his recent reports, in particular:

(a) Summary and arbitrary executions, orchestrated mass executions and burials, extrajudicial killings, including political killings, in particular in the northern region of Iraq, in southern Shiah centres and in the southern marshes;

(b) The widespread routine practice of systematic torture in its most cruel forms;

(c) Enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrest and detention, including arrest and detention of women, the elderly and children, and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law;

(d) Suppression of freedom of thought, expression and association and violations of property rights;

(e) The unwillingness of the Government of Iraq to honour its responsibilities in respect of the economic rights of the population;

3. Deplores the refusal of Iraq to cooperate in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) and its failure to provide the Iraqi population with access to adequate food and health care;

4. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to release immediately all persons arbitrarily arrested and detained, including Kuwaitis and nationals of other States;

5. Calls once again upon Iraq, as a State party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to abide by its obligations freely undertaken under the Covenants and under other international instruments on human rights and, particularly, to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

6. Recognizes the importance of the work of the United Nations in providing humanitarian relief to the people of Iraq, and calls upon Iraq to allow unhindered access of the United Nations humanitarian agencies throughout the country, including ensuring the safety of United Nations personnel and humanitarian workers, inter alia, through the continued implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding signed by the United Nations and the Government of Iraq;

7. Expresses special alarm at the repressive practices directed against the Kurds, which continue to have an impact on the lives of the Iraqi people as a whole;

8. Also expresses special alarm at the resurgence of grave violations of human rights in southern Iraq, which is the result of a policy directed against the marsh Arabs in particular, many of whom have sought refuge outside the country;

9. Welcomes the sending of human rights monitors to the border between Iraq and the Islamic Republic of Iran, and calls upon the Government of Iraq to allow immediate and unconditional stationing of human rights monitors throughout the country, especially the southern marsh area;

10. Expresses its special alarm at all internal embargoes, which permit essentially no exceptions for humanitarian needs and which prevent the equitable enjoyment of basic foodstuffs and medical supplies, and calls upon the Government of Iraq, which has sole responsibility in this regard, to remove them and to take steps to cooperate with international humanitarian agencies in the provision of relief to those in need throughout Iraq;

11. Urges once more the Government of Iraq to set up an independent commission of inquiry to look into the fate of tens of thousands of persons who have disappeared;

12. Regrets the failure of the Government of Iraq to provide satisfactory replies concerning the violations of human rights brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur, and calls upon the Government fully to cooperate and to reply without delay in a comprehensive and detailed manner so as to enable the Special Rapporteur to formulate the appropriate recommendations to improve the situation of human rights in Iraq;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all assistance necessary to carry out his mandate;

14. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Iraq during its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions" in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Myanmar

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February, (77) Special Rapporteur Yozo Yokota (Japan) reported on the human rights situation in Myanmar. He had visited the country from 7 to 14 December 1992, when he met with government officials, visited a prison and spoke with Muslim village leaders whom he asked about religious and ethnic tolerance.

The Special Rapporteur received information of alleged human rights violations relating to the right to life; torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment; disappearances; arbitrary and prolonged detention; and freedom of expression. He discussed the systematic repression of the Muslims of Rakhine State which was based on ethnic and racial intolerance. He was informed that the provisions of Myanmar's Citizenship Law, under which persons must prove that they had Burmese nationality back to eight great-grandparents, were directed at the Rakhine Muslim population to forbid them from gaining nationality or associate nationality, a category of second-class citizenship.

He recommended that the Government of Myanmar transfer power to the elected civilian government; fulfil its obligations under articles 55 and 56 of the United Nations Charter; consider acceding to the International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽⁷⁸⁾ and the 1977 Protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 1949,⁽⁴⁶⁾ and withdraw its reservations to articles 15 (freedom of association) and 37 (prohibition of the torture of minors) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;⁽⁷⁹⁾ comply with its obligations under ILO Conventions relating to forced labour and the existence and practice of free trade unions; revise its Citizenship Law; respect the human rights of Muslims and other minorities; and try, by a properly constituted and independent civilian court, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and all other political leaders arrested or detained under martial law following demonstrations in 1988 and 1990. He advocated lifting the state of emergency in the country, abolishing martial law and bringing Myanmar law concerning the protection of physical integrity rights into line with accepted international standards.

In a February note verbale to the Secretary-General,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Government of Myanmar made rebuttals concerning certain allegations presented by the Special Rapporteur.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Commission, deploring the continued seriousness of the human rights situation in Myanmar and the fact that political leaders, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other leaders of the National League for Democracy, remained deprived of their liberty, urged the Government to release her and other detained political leaders and all political prisoners. The Commission further urged the Government to take steps towards establishing a democratic State; adopt measures recommended by the General Assembly in 1992;⁽⁸²⁾ and take measures to allow all citizens to participate freely in the process of transition to democracy by convening the Parliament elected in May 1990, lifting restraining orders on political leaders, releasing detainees, ensuring the normal function of political parties and lifting restrictions on the rights of association and assembly and of freedom of opinion and expression. It called on Myanmar to lift emergency measures; end the flow of Myanmar refugees to neighbouring countries and facilitate their early repatriation and full reintegration; and pay particular attention to the conditions of its prisons. The Commission asked the Government to ensure that all persons were afforded the minimum guarantees for a fair trial, that laws were given due publicity and that the principle of non-retroactivity was respected. It urged Myanmar to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1993 and to the Commission in 1994. The Economic and Social Council approved that decision and request by decision 1993/278 of 28 July.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽⁸³⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 2, with 5 abstentions, called on the Government of Myanmar to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to allow full implementation of the May 1990 election, in accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution.⁽⁸²⁾

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In November,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Special Rapporteur stated that in September and early October he had transmitted to the Government of Myanmar a memorandum of allegations of human rights violations concerning arbitrary detention; torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; disappearances; summary or arbitrary execution; repatriated Muslims from northern Arakan State; labour rights; rights of the child; compliance with the May 1990 elections and principles and guidelines of the National Convention; rights devolved from citizenship status; improving the human rights situation; social, cultural and economic rights; arrests and detentions; the administration of justice; restrictions as to movement, residence and possession of articles under the 1975 Law Safeguarding the State against the Dangers of Subversive Elements; and the repatriation of Muslims. The Government's October response to some of the allegations was reproduced in the Special Rapporteur's report.

The Special Rapporteur observed that there were arrests of persons attempting to voice political dissent and arrests under emergency decrees. The arrest of some labour activists was reported, as was the continued practice of forced labour. He described forms of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment that took place during interrogation, forced portering and forced labour and forced relocations in the context of military operations. Although all death sentences had been commuted to life imprisonment, reports continued to be received of extrajudicial executions carried out by the army in the context of forced portering and labour, most frequently against ethnic minorities. Over 35,000 Myanmar Muslims from northern Rakhine State had returned from Bangladesh; their residency and citizenship status remained unclear and they were not entitled to freedom of movement, to enrol in institutions of higher learning or to enter certain professions. He stated that the Government had replied that disappearances could not occur because the law required keeping a register of all detainees; regarding extrajudicial executions, inquests were made into unknown causes of death; allegations of summary or arbitrary executions were false and unfounded; returnees were resettled into their original villages; people in the border areas contributed voluntary labour; and the army had prevented Myanmar from disintegrating and had safeguarded national sovereignty.

In a later report,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Special Rapporteur described his visit to Myanmar from 9 to 16 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/150 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the Organization promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that "the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government",

Recalling its resolution 47/144 of 18 December 1992,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur to establish direct contacts with the Government and with the people of Myanmar, including political leaders deprived of their liberty, their families and their lawyers, with a view to examining the situation of human rights in Myanmar and following any progress made towards the transfer of power to a civilian Government and the drafting of a new Constitution, the lifting of restrictions on personal freedoms and the restoration of human rights in Myanmar,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/73 of 10 March 1993, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur,

Gravely concerned that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitments to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Gravely concerned also at the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, in particular summary and arbitrary executions, torture, forced labour, abuse of women, restrictions on fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of expression and assembly, and the imposition of oppressive measures directed in particular at ethnic and religious minorities,

Noting that the human rights situation in Myanmar has consequently resulted in flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, thus creating problems for the countries concerned,

Noting also the measures taken by the Government of Myanmar, including its accession to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war, and the release of a number of political prisoners in response to the concerns expressed by the international community, including the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Welcoming the signing of the Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of Myanmar and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on 5 November 1993 on the voluntary repatriation of refugees from Bangladesh to Myanmar,

Noting further the cease-fire that has been reached between the Government of Myanmar and several groups of ethnic and religious minorities in Myanmar,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Deplores the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar;

3. Again urges the Government of Myanmar, in conformity with its assurances given at various times, to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990, and to ensure that political parties can function freely;

4. Notes with concern the observation of the Special Rapporteur, with regard to the National Convention, that no evident progress has been made towards turning over power to a freely elected civilian Government;

5. Also notes with concern in this respect that most of the representatives duly elected in 1990 have been excluded from participating in the meetings of the National Convention, created to prepare basic elements for the drafting of a new Constitution, and that one of the objectives of the National Convention is to maintain the participation of the armed forces in a leading role in the future political life of the State;

6. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to take all appropriate measures to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to accelerate the process of transition to democracy, in particular through the transfer of power to the democratically elected representatives;

7. Urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and assembly, and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities and to put an end to violations of the right to life and integrity of the human being, to the practices of torture, abuse of women and forced labour and to enforced disappearances and summary executions;

8. Appeals to the Government of Myanmar to consider becoming a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

9. Stresses the importance of free and confidential access to prisoners by international humanitarian agencies;

10. Regrets the recent harsh sentences meted out to a number of dissidents, including persons voicing dissent in regard to the procedures of the National Convention;

11. Regrets also that, while a certain number of political prisoners have been released, many political leaders are still deprived of their freedom and their fundamental rights;

12. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release unconditionally and immediately the Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi, who is now in her fifth year of detention without trial, and other political leaders and remaining political prisoners;

13. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to respect fully the obligations of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, in particular the obligations in article 3 common to the Conventions, and to make use of such services as may be offered by impartial humanitarian bodies;

14. Encourages the Government of Myanmar fully to implement the Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of Myanmar and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of 5 November 1993 and to create the necessary conditions to ensure an end to the flows of refugees to neighbouring countries and to facilitate their speedy repatriation and their full reintegration, in conditions of safety and dignity;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to assist in the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

16. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-ninth session.

Papua New Guinea

On 10 March,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Commission urged the Government of Papua New Guinea to permit international fact-finding missions access to that country, particularly Bougainville, to assist in resolving the conflict there, and to recommence negotiations with all factions of the Bougainville peoples to achieve peace and a mutually satisfactory solution to the armed conflict. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit to the Commission in 1994 information on the situation in Bougainville from the Government of Papua New Guinea.

On the same date,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Commission endorsed a 1992 Subcommission request⁽⁸⁸⁾ to the Special Rapporteur on the study of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations to include in his report the case of the agreements entered into between the indigenous people of Bougainville and the Government of Papua New Guinea.

Tibet

On 20 August,⁽⁸⁹⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions, decided to take no action on a draft resolution concerning the situation in Tibet. By that text, the Subcommission would have urged China to facilitate access to all parts of Tibet by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission and asked the Secretary-General to report to the Commission in 1994 on the situation in Tibet.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Albania

In February,⁽⁹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on steps that Albania had taken to implement a 1992 Commission resolution concerning its human rights situation.⁽⁸⁸⁾ Included in the report was a communication from Albania describing measures taken in 1992 to guarantee and promote human rights.

The Commission, on 10 March,⁽⁹¹⁾ called on Albania to continue to adopt legislative and administrative measures to meet the requirements of relevant international human rights instruments and to respect the rights of minorities living there. It asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Albania's attention, request information regarding its implementation and report to the Commission in 1994.

Cyprus

In February,⁽⁹²⁾ the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1992 Commission decision,⁽⁸⁸⁾ reported on human rights in Cyprus. He described action taken in 1992 by the Security Council and the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

On 8 March,⁽⁹³⁾ the Commission postponed debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus until 1994, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide a report on their implementation.

Estonia and Latvia

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October on progress made in the area of human rights in Estonia and Latvia.⁽⁹⁵⁾ A fact-finding mission visited Estonia from 7 to 11 February 1993 to investigate alleged human rights abuses against minorities. The mission focused on the issue of Estonian citizenship and on the language requirements established for obtaining it. It also inquired into the cultural rights of minorities and their religious freedom but found no evidence of discrimination on ethnic or religious grounds. The mission observed that the country's transition from a centralized to a market-oriented economy limited the possibilities to promote faster integration of Es-tonian residents of non-ethnic Estonian origin. It recommended measures to improve the teaching of the Estonian language and stated that the United Nations Centre for Human Rights was prepared to offer advisory services and technical assistance to Estonia.

A fact-finding mission to Latvia took place in 1992.⁽⁹⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/155 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Estonia and Latvia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/115 of 16 December 1992,

Taking into account the provisions of the Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who Are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the conclusions and recommendations therein of the United Nations fact-finding missions to Estonia and Latvia;

2. Welcomes the cooperation that the Governments of Estonia and Latvia have extended to various international fact-finding missions;

3. Notes the existence of unresolved issues that involve large groups of population of different ethnic origin;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States informed of the situation of human rights in Estonia and Latvia, and decides to consider this item at one of its future sessions.

Romania

In February,⁽⁹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported on action taken pursuant to a 1992 Commission resolution on human rights in Romania,⁽⁹⁶⁾ noting that he had requested information from Romania on the implementation of the resolution's provisions. Included in the report was a communication from Romania describing steps it had taken in 1992 to guarantee and promote human rights. The report also described advisory services and technical assistance during 1992 and provided information on relevant activities of the Commission's special rapporteurs.

On 10 March,⁽⁹⁸⁾ the Commission urged the Government of Romania and its authorities to continue their efforts to ensure respect for human rights and encouraged their cooperation in the area of advisory services. It requested the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to Romania's attention, ask it to provide information on its implementation and report in 1994.

The former Yugoslavia

Human rights situation

Commission of Experts. In February,⁽⁹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the first interim report of the Commission of Experts to examine evidence of human rights violations in the former Yugoslavia, established by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1992 Security Council request.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ The Commission discussed and adopted the report at its third session (Geneva, 25 and 26 January 1993). The report, covering the period November 1992 to January 1993, provided a broad view of the Commission's work and presented its preliminary conclusions on evidence examined and its views on a number of legal issues. It described the Commission's projected plan of work, which included in-depth investigations into mass killings and destruction of property; treatment of prisoners and detainees; systematic sexual assaults; and ethnic cleansing. In the light of the need for additional financial and personnel resources to carry out the in-depth investigations, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund.

In its concluding remarks, the Commission noted that the establishment of an ad hoc war crimes tribunal, by the Security Council or another international body, would be consistent with the direction of its work.

Annexed to the Commission's report was the report of a December 1992 preliminary site exploration of a mass grave near Vukovar, Croatia.⁽¹⁰¹⁾ The report also contained photographs, maps of the area, preliminary forensic reports and a list of missing persons from the Vukovar Hospital and the Vukovar area, prepared by the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains, based at the University of Zagreb Medical School.

In October,⁽¹⁰²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the second interim report, describing the work of the Commission from February to August 1993, during which time the Commission had held, at Geneva, its fourth (1-3 March), fifth (24 and 25 May), sixth (13 and 14 July) and seventh (30 and 31 August) sessions. The report outlined the steps the Commission had taken to implement the programme of work established in January and progress achieved.

Investigative missions were sent to Belgrade, Ljubljana, Sarajevo and Zagreb (18-29 April), Knin (17-19 May), and to Sarajevo again (20 June-9 July). In addition, interviews with five prisoners of war were held at Zagreb (11-14 August). Reconnaissance missions were set to Vukovar (5-16 March) to prepare for the excavation of a mass grave at Ovcara and to Dubrovnik (20-22 May) to explore the possibility of an on-site investigation into targeting, indiscriminate attacks, destruction of cultural property and ethnic cleansing. As to allegations of systematic rape, the Commission was forming female investigative teams. It had to postpone or limit the scale and scope of its investigative missions and major projects owing to the volatile military and political situation in the former Yugoslavia and to the fact that voluntary contributions of financial and human resources did not start to come in on a sufficient scale until July/August.

The Commission had set up a database to record all alleged grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other human rights violations. As at 31 August, the database contained over 3,000 cases, representing thousands of alleged violations and incidents of victimization.

Pursuant to the Commission's request, the Secretary-General set up a Trust Fund, to which a number of Governments made contributions or pledges. As at 31 August, the balance of the Fund amounted to some $730,000 in cash and over $380,000 in pledges.

The Commission's future projects included further investigative missions to Sarajevo and other regions of the former Yugoslavia, investigations of mass graves, systematic rape, and detention centres and prison camps, and continued work on the database.

The Security Council, in resolution 827(1993) of 25 May, established the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Former Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter IV, for information on the situation in the former Yugoslavia).

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. In February,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ Special Rapporteur Tadeusz Mazowiecki (Poland) described the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Croatia, Slovenia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. He visited the last three countries from 10 to 17 January. He also discussed a visit that took place from 12 to 23 January by medical and psychiatric experts, the Director of the United Nations Division for the Advancement of Women and staff from the Centre for Human Rights to investigate allegations of rape in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

The Special Rapporteur concluded that ethnic cleansing violated fundamental human rights principles and that Bosnian Serb political and military leaders bore responsibility for that policy. Evidence of war crimes in Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina was mounting, and the rape of women had been widespread in both conflicts. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, thousands of persons, mainly civilians, were still imprisoned. Convoys attempting to deliver humanitarian aid were repeatedly attacked. Indoctrination and misinformation continued to encourage national and religious hatred.

The Special Rapporteur recommended releasing all detainees; creating security zones in Bosnia and Herzegovina; ending blockades of cities and regions and opening humanitarian relief corridors; providing victims of rape access to medical and psychological care; expanding the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR); allowing Croatian refugees to cross the border for temporary protection or in transit to third States; guaranteeing the right to seek asylum; providing support to democratically oriented groups; guaranteeing the right of return to all victims of ethnic cleansing; further investigating the creation of an international war crimes tribunal; improving coordination of human rights activities; and providing sufficient resources to the Centre for Human Rights so that the Special Rapporteur could carry out his mandate effectively. Annexed to the report was a summary of the report of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions on his December 1992 mission to investigate allegations of mass graves/⁽¹⁰¹⁾ the report of the team of medical and psychiatric experts on their January 1993 mission to investigate allegations of rape in the former Yugoslavia, and the programme of action on humanitarian issues agreed between the Co-Chairmen of the 1992 International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ and the parties to the conflict.

By a 26 February note,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report to the Security Council and the General Assembly.

On 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 48/430, took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 February,⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ the Commission condemned in the strongest terms all human rights violations in the former Yugoslavia and called on Serbian authorities to refrain from the use of force and the practice of ethnic cleansing and to respect fully the rights of persons belonging to minority groups. It demanded that all parties notify ICRC of the location of all places of detention and that ICRC, the Special Rapporteur, UNHCR, the missions of the European Community and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) and other international and regional organizations be granted immediate, unimpeded and continued access to such places. It also demanded the immediate internationally supervised release of all persons arbitrarily or illegally detained in the former Yugoslavia and the immediate closure of all detention facilities not authorized by and in compliance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions.

It welcomed the work of the Commission of Experts (see above), asked the Secretary-General to provide additional resources to enable it to fulfil its mandate effectively and urged States to do the same. The Commission on Human Rights also welcomed Security Council resolution 808(1993) of 22 February by which it decided that an international tribunal should be established to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia. It asked the Secretary-General in his report to the Council to propose that the tribunal should also determine whether the crimes committed fell within the scope of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ The Commission asked the Council to consider establishing a United Nations observer mission to investigate and report on alleged human rights violations in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina (see also PART TWO, Chapter IV).

The Commission extended its Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to submit periodic reports. The Secretary-General was requested to continue to make those reports available to the Security Council. The Special Rapporteur was asked, in consultation with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and ICRC, to propose a mechanism to address the subject of disappearances. The Commission asked all United Nations bodies, Governments and informed intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur and to provide him with accurate information on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure the cooperation of all United Nations bodies in implementing its resolution and, in accordance with a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ to provide the Special Rapporteur with the necessary assistance to enable him to fulfil his mandate and, in particular, to appoint field staff in the former Yugoslavia to provide first-hand, timely reports on observance or violations of human rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted decision 1993/255 without vote.

Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/7 of 23 February 1993, approved:

(a) The Commission's request to the Secretary-General immediately to provide additional resources and personnel to the Commission of Experts that are sufficient to enable it to fulfil its mandate effectively;

(b) The Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year;

(C) The Commission's request to the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure the full and effective cooperation of all United Nations bodies to implement Commission resolution 1993/7 and, pursuant to paragraph 21 of General Assembly resolution 47/147 of 18 December 1992, to provide the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, with additional resources and all other necessary assistance to enable him to fulfil his mandate and, in particular, to provide for the appointment of field staff in the territory of the former Yugoslavia to provide first-hand, timely reports on observance or violations of human rights in their area of assignment.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/255

Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) without vote, 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 4, with 3 abstentions, vigorously condemned the violation of the human rights of the ethnic Albanians of Kosovo committed by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). It urged the authorities to bring the human rights violations to a halt, revoke all discriminatory legislation and re-establish Kosovo's democratic institutions. The Commission requested the Federal Republic to facilitate the appointment of field staff and allow CSCE missions of long duration to continue their activities, pursuant to the terms of Security Council resolution 855(1993).

Also on 20 August,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 22 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, urged the establishment of an international tribunal to prosecute those responsible for violations of international law in the former Yugoslavia, and called on the relevant United Nations bodies to ensure the urgent allocation of sufficient funds to the Commission of Experts.

On the same date,⁽¹¹¹⁾ the Subcommission urged United Nations Member States to bring to justice, in accordance with internationally recognized principles of due process, all those involved in the crimes committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and elsewhere in the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

Periodic reports of the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Commission in February, the Special Rapporteur submitted a series of periodic reports on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia.

In May,⁽¹¹²⁾ he stated that a team of his field staff had visited Bosnia and Herzegovina (1-16 April) to gather information regarding alleged human rights violations in the eastern part of the country. He described the human rights situation and events in the enclaves of Cerska, Konjevic Polje, Srebrenica, Gorazde and Zepa; the humanitarian situation of those forcibly displaced in the east; forced recruitment into military service by all parties; and the situation of Serbians in Tuzla. The Special Rapporteur concluded that massive and repeated violations of the 1949 Geneva Conventions were perpetrated by Serb forces in Cerska, Konjevic Polje and Srebrenica and by government forces who refused the evacuation of civilians from Srebrenica. He recommended that the parties to the conflict release all detainees; end blockades and open humanitarian relief corridors; expand the safe area concept, especially to Gorazde and Zepa; and guarantee the right to flight and the right to seek asylum. He also recommended expanding UNPROFOR's mandate and an immediate response by the international community to UNHCR and World Food Programme appeals for financing humanitarian aid.

In his second periodic report, also submitted in May,⁽¹¹³⁾ the Special Rapporteur reviewed a visit by his field staff (30 April-7 May) to the Lasva valley area of central Bosnia and Herzegovina, the scene of fighting between government and Croat forces. He described ethnic cleansing by Croat forces in the town of Vitez, the village of Ahmici and the city of Mostar, as well as arbitrary executions by government forces in the Vitez area. He concluded that hostilities between the two parties involved massive and systematic violations of human rights and international law; ethnic cleansing by Croat forces included forced displacement and detentions of civilians, arbitrary executions, attacks on towns, and destruction of villages and religious sites; government forces had carried out arbitrary executions and torture; there had been systematic violations of commitments by all parties to respect human rights and international agreements; and the peace plan designed to divide Bosnia and Herzegovina along ethnic lines had been used to create ethnically homogenous areas.

In August,⁽¹¹⁴⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed his visit to Sarajevo on 11 and 12 August, noting that conditions there had deteriorated dramatically since his October 1992 visit.⁽¹¹⁵⁾ He concluded that hostilities were being conducted in ways that violated the most basic human rights and were in fundamental breach of the laws of war. Those breaches included the starvation of a besieged population as a method of warfare; using civilians as military targets and deliberately killing and wounding them; denying and destroying electric, water and gas supplies and food and medical supplies; repeated hospital shellings; and detaining civilians as hostages. He recommended opening an overland relief route to Sarajevo; setting up energy and water installations under international protection; placing the central Kosovo hospital under international protection; administering relief as a priority to those in need of special protection; creating trust necessary for the release of prisoners of war and the closure of detention camps; protecting civilians from hostage-taking; and trying and sentencing snipers who killed or wounded civilians.

The Special Rapporteur's fourth periodic report, submitted in September,⁽¹¹⁶⁾ was based on information gathered by two field officers during nine days of on-site investigations and interviews in the city of Mostar and surrounding towns of Capljina, Citluk, Medjugorje and Pocitelj. He described the situation in Mostar, giving details of ethnic cleansing, arbitrary arrests and detentions resulting from forced evictions and the use of civilians as targets of military attacks. He concluded that those practices deserved the strongest possible condemnation and called for the restoration of respect for international humanitarian law. Stating that impeding humanitarian aid by any party to the conflict violated international law on the conduct of war, he demanded that immediate, unimpeded access to Mostar be guaranteed and that medical services be restored. He called for the release of all detainees with guarantees for their safe return.

In November,⁽¹¹⁷⁾ the Special Rapporteur provided a wide-ranging assessment of the human rights situation in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), based on a fact-finding mission by two staff members from the Centre for Human Rights (13-26 October).

Describing the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, he stated that 2.1 million people had been displaced from their homes since the war began—nearly 50 per cent of the population recorded in the 1991 census. At least 100 women were reportedly raped by Bosnian Croat soldiers between April and October 1993, a figure believed to be incomplete because of limited access to Mostar and the dispersal of refugees from western Herzegovina. Soldiers acting for the Government allegedly committed human rights abuses, including summary executions, arbitrary arrests and detention and violations of the rights of detainees. Human rights violations allegedly committed by Bosnian Croat forces were summary executions; mass deportations; arbitrary arrests and detention and violations of the rights of detainees; military attacks on civilians; and the imposition of exorbitant taxes on foreign aid convoys. As to violations by Bosnian Serb forces, the Special Rapporteur noted that the expulsion of non-Serbs from Serb-held territories was in some areas nearly complete. Summary executions and disappearances had occurred, as had arbitrary arrests and detention and the ill-treatment of detainees. He observed that through administrative measures alone, Bosnian Serb authorities had stripped non-Serbs of many basic human rights since 1992. There were military attacks on civilians, the imposition of taxes on foreign aid convoys and the destruction of mosques. The Special Rapporteur urged the international community to respond generously and speedily to the needs of Bosnia and Herzegovina by providing the necessary humanitarian aid. He stated that the Muslim community there was threatened with extermination, condemned the crime of rape and all other forms of sexual abuse, and reiterated his conviction that perpetrators of violations of humanitarian law should be held accountable and punished.

In Croatia, there were reports of arbitrary executions and ethnic cleansing committed by Croatian armed forces in the villages of Divoselo, Citluk and Pocitelj, situated in the Medak "pocket", and of the killing of Serbs, where it was alleged that Croatian authorities had failed to conduct proper investigations. There were cases of arbitrary detention, violations of the right to a fair trial, denials of citizenship, illegal evictions, damage to and destruction of buildings belonging to Croats of Serbian ethnic origin and government influence over the media. He described the situation of the Muslim minority and refugees and the situation in United Nations Protected Areas (UNPAs). The Special Rapporteur requested Croatian authorities to ensure punishment for those responsible for the contravention of human rights and international humanitarian standards in the Medak pocket and also requested that the parties to the conflict in the UNPAs refrain from shelling civilian targets.

With regard to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), he stated that the use of brutal and excessive force by the police had been reported to him throughout Serbia. Violations had been reported of the rights to freedom of assembly and association and expression. Residents of the area who could not prove their Serbian citizenship faced discrimination in employment, housing and education. There were some 530,000 refugees in Serbia from other territories of the former Yugoslavia. In Kosovo, the polarization of the Albanian and Serb populations continued, with reports of Albanians, who represented 90 per cent of the Kosovo population, being ill-treated and tortured, evicted from their homes and discriminated against through language and education. He also described the situation in Sandzak, Vojvodina and Montenegro. The Special Rapporteur advocated giving special attention to developing an independent, democratically oriented communications media; amending the law to allow persons immediate access to a lawyer after arrest; and rescinding a May 1993 instruction not to register as refugees men of military age from areas of Bosnia and Croatia regarded as safe municipalities. He drew attention to deaths of Albanians while in police detention in Kosovo and called for Serbian authorities to identify and punish those responsible.

In his sixth periodic report,⁽¹¹⁸⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed events that occurred in November and December in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Slovenia.

Regarding Bosnia and Herzegovina, he observed that ethnic cleansing continued. Citing the continuing war and the use of access to aid as an instrument of war as main causes of the severe suffering, he called for the immediate cessation of interference with aid deliveries. He drew attention to the fact that military attacks on civilians committed by Bosnian Serb and Croat forces exceeded that of the other warring parties. He reiterated his conviction that perpetrators of human rights violations must be held accountable and punished.

As to Croatia, the Special Rapporteur condemned the continuing practice of illegal and forced evictions by members of the Croatian armed forces and called on the Government to restore the rights of affected tenants and prevent the recurrence of such acts. He recommended establishing a court of human rights and reminded the international community of the urgent need for humanitarian assistance for refugees and displaced persons.

The Special Rapporteur noted with concern the continuing serious human rights violations in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). He recommended the adoption of legislation to remove the legal uncertainty surrounding citizenship and possible discrimination on grounds of ethnic, religious or other origin, and international support to develop a democratic opposition in Serbia. As to conscientious objection to military service, he recommended adoption of a law on amnesty and the introduction of alternative forms of service that were non-combatant or civilian.

The Special Rapporteur observed progress in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia in eliminating discriminatory practices and in freedom of the media. He urged donor countries to consider providing that country with bilateral technical and financial assistance to foster its overall development.

He observed that the human rights situation was satisfactory in Slovenia and recommended that the country be excluded from his mandate.

The Special Rapporteur discussed the problem of disappearances and the situation of children in the former Yugoslavia, including refugee and displaced children and children living in the territories of the former Yugoslavia that had not been directly involved in the war, and reiterated his previous recommendations and his call for follow-up action to them.

Activities of the Working Group on disappearances. In accordance with the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to develop, in consultation with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and ICRC, proposals for a mechanism to address the subject of disappearances in the former Yugoslavia, a mission was undertaken by a member of the Working Group and a Zagreb-based field officer of the Centre for Human Rights (4-13 August).⁽¹¹⁹⁾ The members of the mission visited Belgrade and Zagreb and two UNPAs.

The Working Group member proposed that United Nations action on missing persons in the former Yugoslavia should meet minimum standards of effectiveness, take a pragmatic approach, use the predicament of the relatives of missing persons as its point of departure and formulate a sensible response to it. In addition, it should take a strictly humanitarian, non-accusatory approach to clarifying cases of missing persons and incorporate requirements that interlocutors act on behalf of the relatives and that the identity of sources be kept confidential. He recommended entrusting such action to the Special Rapporteur in a joint mandate with one member of the Working Group, resulting in joint annual reports to the Commission and possibly the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/153 without vote.

Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia: violations of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and other instruments of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as the principles and commitments undertaken by States members of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Gravely concerned at the human tragedy in the territories of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and at the continuing massive and systematic violations of human rights occurring in most of those areas, particularly in the areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under Bosnian Serb control,

Bearing in mind its resolution 47/147 of 18 December 1992, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1992/S-1/1 of 14 August 1992, 1992/S-2/1 of 1 December 1992 and 1993/7 of 23 February 1993 and relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling specifically Security Council resolutions 771(1992) of 13 August 1992, 780(1992) of 6 October 1992, 787(1992) of 16 November 1992, 808(1993) of 22 February 1993 and 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 in which the Council demanded, inter alia, that all parties and others concerned in the former Yugoslavia immediately cease and desist from all breaches of international humanitarian law, requested the Secretary-General to establish a commission of experts to examine and analyse information relating to serious violations of such law being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and decided to establish an international tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for such violations,

Welcoming the convening of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the naming of its Chief Prosecutor,

Welcoming also Security Council resolutions 824(1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836(1993) of 4 June 1993, in which the Council declared that Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde, Bihac, Srebrenica and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas and that international humanitarian agencies should be given free and unimpeded access to those areas,

Welcoming further the interim reports and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights,

Expressing its appreciation to all States that have cooperated with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recalling its resolutions 47/80 of 16 December 1992, in which it condemned unreservedly "ethnic cleansing" and acts of violence arising from racial hatred, and reiterated its conviction that those who committed or ordered the commission of acts of "ethnic cleansing" were individually responsible and should be brought to justice, and its resolution 47/121 of 18 December 1992, in which it, inter alia, stated that the abhorrent policy of "ethnic cleansing" was a form of genocide,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Special Rapporteur, as well as those of the Chairman of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, who accompanied him on his missions,

Encouraging the continuing efforts made in the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to find a peaceful solution,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to re-establish its presence in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in order to prevent further human rights violations, and deeply concerned about the decision of the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to expel the monitoring missions of long duration of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the European Union to Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina, where the human rights situation remains a cause of great concern,

Welcoming also the efforts of the European Union, inter alia, through its monitoring missions, to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the territory of the former Yugoslavia,

Gravely concerned at the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and in particular at the continuing, odious practice of "ethnic cleansing", which is the direct cause of the vast majority of human rights violations there and whose principal victims are the Muslim population threatened with virtual extermination,

Noting the discriminatory policies, measures and violent actions committed against ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, and aware of the possible escalation of the situation into a violent conflict there,

Strongly rejecting policies and ideologies aimed at "ethnic cleansing" and at promoting racial and religious hatred in any form,

Alarmed that, although the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina is not a religious conflict, it has been characterized by the systematic destruction and profanation of mosques, churches and other places of worship, as well as other sites of cultural heritage, in particular in areas currently or previously under Bosnian Serb and Bosnian Croat control,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the territories of the successor States of the former Yugoslavia for his reports;

2. Expresses its grave concern at the Special Rapporteur's detailed reports of massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

3. Notes with grave concern the Special Rapporteur's conclusions about the impending humanitarian disaster in Bosnia and Herzegovina this winter;

4. Condemns in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) by all sides to the conflict, recognizing that the leadership in territory under the control of Serbs in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, the commanders of Serb paramilitary forces and political and military leaders in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) bear primary responsibility for most of those violations;

5. Condemns the specific violations identified by the Special Rapporteur, most of which are committed in connection with "ethnic cleansing" and which include killings, torture, beatings, arbitrary searches, rape, disappearances, destruction of houses and other acts or threats of violence aimed at forcing individuals to leave their homes, as well as reports of violations of human rights in connection with detention;

6. Condemns the indiscriminate shelling of cities and civilian areas, the systematic terrorization and murder of non-combatants, the destruction of vital services, and besieging of cities and the use of military force against civilian populations and relief operations by all sides, recognizing that the main responsibility lies with the Bosnian Serbs, who have used such tactics as a matter of policy, and the Bosnian Croats;

7. Supports the determination of the Security Council that all persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those breaches and that the international community shall exert every effort to bring them to justice;

8. Urges all States, United Nations bodies, including the specialized agencies, and the Special Rapporteur and, as appropriate, international humanitarian organizations to make available substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them relating to violations and the perpetrators of such violations of international humanitarian law, including grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established by the Security Council in its resolution 827(1993) for prosecution, as appropriate, by the Chief Prosecutor;

9. Expresses deep concern at the number of disappearances and missing persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and reiterates calls on all parties to make all possible efforts to account for those missing;

10. Urges that an immediate end be brought to the continuing practice of "ethnic cleansing", and in particular that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) use their influence with the self-proclaimed Serbian authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia to bring the practice of "ethnic cleansing" to an immediate end and to reverse the effects of that practice;

11. Urges the Government of Croatia to use its influence with the self-proclaimed Croatian authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to bring the practice of "ethnic cleansing" to an immediate end and to reverse the effects of that practice;

12. Reaffirms that States are to be held accountable for violations of human rights which their agents commit on their own territory or on the territory of another State;

13. Expresses its complete support for the victims of those violations, reaffirms the right of all persons to return to their homes in safety and dignity, considers invalid all acts made under duress affecting ownership of property and other related questions, recognizes the right of victims of "ethnic cleansing" to receive just reparation for their losses, and urges all parties to fulfil their agreements to this end;

14. Condemns in particular the violations of human rights and humanitarian law in connection with detention, including killings, torture and the systematic practice of rape, and urges the immediate, internationally supervised release of all persons arbitrarily or illegally detained in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

15. Calls for the immediate closure of all detention facilities not in compliance with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949;

16. Urges all parties to notify immediately the International Committee of the Red Cross of the locations of all camps, prisons and other places of detention within Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and Serbia and Montenegro, and urges that the International Committee, the Special Rapporteur and his staff, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the monitoring and other missions of the European Union and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and other relevant international and regional organizations be granted immediate, unimpeded and continued access to such places of detention;

17. Expresses its grave concern at the deteriorating human rights situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), particularly in Kosovo, as described in the reports of the Special Rapporteur, and strongly condemns the violations of human rights occurring there;

18. Strongly condemns in particular the measures and practices of discrimination and the violations of the human rights of the ethnic Albanians of Kosovo, as well as the large-scale repression committed by the Serbian authorities, including:

(a) Police brutality against ethnic Albanians, arbitrary searches, seizures and arrests, torture and ill-treatment during detention and discrimination in the administration of justice, which leads to a climate of lawlessness in which criminal acts, particularly against ethnic Albanians, take place with impunity;

(b) The discriminatory removal of ethnic Albanian officials, especially from the police and judiciary, the mass dismissal of ethnic Albanians from professional, administrative and other skilled positions in State-owned enterprises and public institutions, including teachers from the Serb-run school system, and the closure of Albanian high schools and universities;

(c) Arbitrary imprisonment of ethnic Albanian journalists, the closure of Albanian-language mass media and the discriminatory removal of ethnic Albanian staff from local radio and television stations;

(d) Repression by the Serbian police and military;

19. Urges the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro):

(a) To take all necessary measures to bring to an immediate end the human rights violations inflicted on the ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, including, in particular, discriminatory measures and practices, arbitrary detention and the use of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and the occurrence of summary executions;

(b) To revoke all discriminatory legislation, in particular that which has entered into force since 1989;

(c) To re-establish the democratic institutions of Kosovo, including the parliament and the judiciary;

(d) To resume dialogue with the ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, including under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia;

20. Also urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, and expresses the view that the best means to safeguard human rights in Kosovo is to restore its autonomy;

21. Expresses its grave concern at the report by the Special Rapporteur of violations of human rights occurring in Sandjak and Vojvodina, particularly acts of physical harassment, abductions, the burning of homes, warrantless searches, confiscation of property, arbitrary arrests, the closure of political parties, and other discriminatory practices in favour of the Serbian population, which are intended to change the ethnic structure of those areas;

22. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to allow the immediate entry of an international human rights monitoring presence into the country, particularly into Kosovo, and strongly urges them to reconsider their refusal to allow the continuation of the activities of the missions of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina and to cooperate with the Conference by taking the practical steps needed for the resumption of the activities of those missions, called for by the Security Council in its resolution 855(1993) of 22 February 1993 in order to prevent the extension of the conflict to those areas;

23. Reaffirms that all parties to the conflict in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) share the responsibility for finding a peaceful solution through negotiations under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, urges that human rights concerns be given proper priority in the peace process, and calls upon the parties to implement immediately all commitments made in the framework of the Conference and to reach a just and durable solution as soon as possible;

24. Urges all United Nations bodies, including the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations human rights treaty bodies and the specialized agencies, and Governments and informed intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, and in particular to provide him on a continuing basis with all relevant and accurate information in their possession on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

25. Urges all States and competent organizations to consider implementation of the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur in his recent reports, and in particular:

(a) Welcomes the call of the Special Rapporteur for the opening of humanitarian relief corridors to prevent the imminent death of tens of thousands of persons, especially in view of the lack of access to many areas in the face of the coming winter;

(b) Supports the call of the Special Rapporteur for the immediate release of detainees into conditions of safety;

(c) Draws the attention of the international community to the need for an effective response to counter the policy of "ethnic cleansing" perpetrated by any side, particularly the Bosnian Serb forces, who have used such tactics as a matter of policy, and Bosnian Croat forces;

(d) Supports the request of the Special Rapporteur to the Croatian authorities to take action against those who have committed human rights violations and contravened international humanitarian standards in the Medak Pocket and to take steps to punish those responsible to prevent such incidents in the future;

(e) Welcomes the signing of the Joint Declaration with respect to Freedom of Movement of 18 November 1993, in which the signatories have solemnly agreed to ensure complete and secure freedom of movement for all personnel of the United Nations and international humanitarian organizations and which was solemnly renewed at a meeting held at Geneva on 29 November 1993 within the framework of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia;

26. Urges the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the full and effective coordination of the activities of all United Nations bodies in implementing the present resolution, and urges those bodies concerned with the situation in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to coordinate closely with the Special Rapporteur and the International Tribunal;

27. Also urges the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to make all necessary resources available for the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate and in particular to provide him with adequate staff based in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to ensure effective continuous monitoring of the human rights situation there and coordination with other United Nations bodies involved, including the United Nations Protection Force;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to give all other necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

29. Calls upon the States concerned to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

30. Invites the Chief Prosecutor of the International Tribunal to consider the appointment to his office of experts in the prosecution of crimes of sexual violence;

31. Calls upon States to put experts, including experts in the prosecution of crimes of sexual violence, at the disposal of the Chief Prosecutor and the International Tribunal;

32. Invites the Commission on Human Rights at its fiftieth session to request the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

33. Decides to continue its examination of this question at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Rape and abuse of women

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 February,⁽¹²⁰⁾ the Commission strongly condemned the rape and abuse of women and children in the former Yugoslavia and demanded that those involved cease those acts and take action to ensure the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Welcoming the initiative of the European Council on the rapid dispatch of a mission to investigate the treatment of Muslim women (see PART TWO, Chapter IV),⁽¹²¹⁾ the Commission requested the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia to pursue a specific investigation into the rape and abuse of women and children, including the dispatch of a qualified team of experts, to coordinate with the relevant thematic special rapporteurs, with the mission dispatched by the European Council and with any other missions and to report further to the Commission. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with the means to enable any future missions to have free and secure access to places of detention and to submit a report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution not later than 30 June 1993.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted decision 1993/256 without vote.

Rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/8 of 23 February 1993, approved the Commission's requests:

(a) To the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia to pursue a specific investigation into the rape and abuse of women and children in the former Yugoslavia, including the dispatch of a qualified team of experts, to coordinate with the relevant thematic special rapporteurs of the Commission, with the mission dispatched by the European Council and with any other missions and to present a further report to the Commission;

(b) To the Secretary-General to provide such necessary means as are available to him in the area to enable any future missions to have free and secure access to places of detention.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/256

Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) without vote, 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in February, the Secretary-General submitted in June a report on rape and abuse of women in the former Yugoslavia.⁽¹²²⁾ He discussed action taken by the United Nations to prevent the rape and abuse and summarized information received concerning the activities of ICRC and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

He concluded that female human rights monitors would be essential to obtain first-hand evidence. Public education through dissemination of pamphlets, radio programmes and other mass media was an important element in collective healing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/143 without vote.

Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other instruments of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Recalling its resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973, entitled "Principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity",

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/8 of 23 February 1993, entitled "Rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia",

Appalled at the recurring and substantiated reports of widespread rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, in particular its systematic use against the Muslim women and children in Bosnia and Herzegovina by Serbian forces,

Reaffirming the relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 798(1992) of 18 December 1992, in which, inter alia, the Council strongly condemned those acts of unspeakable brutality,

Convinced that this heinous practice constitutes a deliberate weapon of war in fulfilling the policy of "ethnic cleansing" carried out by Serbian forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and recalling its resolution 47/121 of 18 December 1992, in which it stated, inter alia, that the abhorrent policy of "ethnic cleansing" was a form of genocide,

Welcoming the initiatives taken by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, particularly his prompt dispatch of a team of experts to the former Yugoslavia to investigate the allegations of rape and abuse of women,

Welcoming also the initiative of the European Council in the rapid dispatch of a mission to investigate the treatment of Muslim women in the former Yugoslavia, and the report of the mission,

Taking note with deep concern of the findings of the team of experts dispatched by the Special Rapporteur, and those of the mission dispatched by the European Council,

Welcoming the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, in pursuance of Security Council resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993 and 827(1993) of 25 May 1993,

Abo taking note with deep concern of the reports on the findings of the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General, assisted by the staff of the Special Rapporteur, regarding rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, particularly Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Deeply alarmed at the situation facing victims of rape in the conflicts in different parts of the world, in particular in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the continuing use of rape as a weapon of war,

Desirous of ensuring that persons accused of upholding and perpetrating rape and sexual violence as a weapon of war in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia will be brought to justice by the International Tribunal where appropriate,

Recognizing the extraordinary suffering of the victims of rape and sexual violence and the necessity for an appropriate response to provide assistance to those victims,

Taking into account resolution 37/3 of 24 March 1993 of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Noting with appreciation the work of humanitarian organizations aimed at supporting the victims of rape and abuse and alleviating their suffering,

1. Strongly condemns the abhorrent practice of rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, which constitutes a war crime;

2. Expresses its outrage that the systematic practice of rape is being used as a weapon of war and an instrument of "ethnic cleansing" against the women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, in particular against Muslim women and children in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

3. Demands that those involved immediately cease those outrageous acts, which are in gross violation of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, and take immediate action to ensure the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with their obligations under those instruments and other applicable international human rights instruments;

4. Urges all Member States to take joint and separate action, in cooperation with the United Nations, to bring about an end to that despicable practice;

5. Reaffirms that all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity and other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations, and that those in positions of authority who have failed adequately to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable together with the perpetrators;

6. Urges Member States to exert every effort to bring to justice, in accordance with internationally recognized principles of due process, all those individuals directly or indirectly involved in those outrageous international crimes;

7. Commends the Special Rapporteur for his report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

8. Urges all States and all relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the World Health Organization, to provide to the victims of such rape and abuse appropriate assistance for their physical and mental rehabilitation;

9. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to request the Special Rapporteur to continue investigation into the rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, in particular in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

10. Declares that rape is a heinous crime, and encourages the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to give due priority to the cases of the victims of rape in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, in particular in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide such necessary means as are available to him in the area to enable any future missions to have free and secure access to places of detention;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly not later than 31 January 1994;

13. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its forty-ninth session.

The Americas and the Caribbean

Cuba

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February(123) Special Rapporteur Carl-Johan Groth (Sweden) reported on the human rights situation in Cuba. He stated that the Government of Cuba had refused to cooperate because it questioned the legality of the Special Rapporteur's appointment and maintained that there were no human rights violations. He based his report on information received from Cubans living outside the country and information that Cuban citizens living in the country had sent abroad. Allegations of human rights abuses dealt with the rights to freedom of opinion, assembly and association, trade union freedom, religious freedom, the right to enter and leave the country and prison conditions.

The Special Rapporteur, through the Commission on Human Rights, recommended that Cuba ratify the principal human rights instruments to which it was not a party; end persecution for reasons related to the freedom of peaceful expression and association; permit legalization of independent groups; respect the guarantees of due process; ensure greater transparency and guarantees in the prison system; review sentences imposed for political offences and for trying to leave the country illegally; and expedite and make more transparent the procedure of applying for permission to leave and enter the country. Annexed to the report was a note verbale of 27 April 1992 from Cuba to the Secretary-General, giving its legal interpretation of a 1992 Commission resolution,⁽¹²⁴⁾ and a legal opinion thereon by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs.

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 27 to 10, with 15 abstentions, the Commission, on 10 March,⁽¹²⁵⁾ called on Cuba to permit the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate in full, particularly by allowing him to visit the country. It expressed concern that Cuba, a member of the Commission, had failed to cooperate with it and regretted the numerous unanswered reports of human rights violations described in the report, particularly intolerance for freedom of speech and assembly. It called on Cuba to carry out the measures recommended by the Special Rapporteur. The Commission affirmed and extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to maintain direct contact with the Government and citizens of Cuba, to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1993 and to report to the Commission in 1994. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to assist him.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/274, approved the extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the Commission's requests to him and the Secretary-General.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In November,⁽¹²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba. The Special Rapporteur stated that he had not been able to secure Cuba's permission to visit the country. Thus, his report was based on meetings with individuals and representatives of organizations and groups concerned with human rights in Cuba operating in New York and Washington, D.C. He had travelled to New York and Washington (15-22 September) and to Madrid, Spain (24 September), where he met with Cuban citizens in exile and representatives of human rights organizations.

The Special Rapporteur received information on alleged violations of freedom of opinion and expression, the right to leave the country, the right to an effective recourse and alleged conditions in prisons and labour camps.

The Special Rapporteur proposed that Cuba ratify the human rights instruments to which it was not a party; end persecution for reasons related to the freedom of peaceful expression and association; permit legalization of independent groups; respect the guarantees of due process; ensure guarantees in prison; review sentences imposed for political offences and for trying to leave the country unlawfully; and expedite and make more explicit the procedure of applying for a permit to leave the country. Appended to the report were a note verbale of 24 August from the Special Rapporteur to Cuba requesting its cooperation in carrying out his mandate and a note verbale of 8 October 1992 from Cuba to the Special Rapporteur rejecting a 1992 Commission resolution.⁽¹²⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/142 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Reaffirming also that all Member States have an obligation to fulfil the commitments they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Taking particular note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/63 of 10 March 1993, in which the Commission recognized with deep appreciation the efforts of the Secretary-General and of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights to carry out the mandate concerning the situation of human rights in Cuba,

Noting concern about ongoing reports of serious violations of human rights in Cuba, as outlined in the interim report submitted to the General Assembly by the Special Rapporteur,

Recalling the failure of the Government of Cuba to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights with regard to its resolution 1992/61 of 3 March 1992 by refusing to permit the Special Rapporteur to visit Cuba, and noting its response, as cited in appendix II to the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, in which it states: "we emphatically reject resolution 1992/61 and, accordingly, we cannot cooperate in its implementation in any way",

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report;

2. Expresses its full support for the work of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Calls upon the Government of Cuba to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur by permitting him full and free access to establish contact with the Government and the citizens of Cuba so that he may fulfil the mandate entrusted to him;

4. Regrets profoundly the numerous uncontested reports of violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms that are described in the report of the Special Rapporteur to the Commission on Human Rights and in his interim report;

5. Calls upon the Government of Cuba to adopt measures proposed by the Special Rapporteur and ratify international human rights instruments, cease the persecution and punishment of citizens for reasons related to freedom of expression and peaceful association, permit legalization of independent groups, respect guarantees of due process, permit access to the prisons by national independent groups and international humanitarian agencies, review sentences for crimes of a political nature and cease retaliatory measures towards those seeking permission to leave the country;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-ninth session.

El Salvador

Report of the Independent Expert. Independent Expert Pedro Nikken (Venezuela) submitted to the Commission in February a report on human rights in El Salvador, based on his visits to the country from 27 September to 4 October 1992 and from 7 to 14 January 1993.⁽¹²⁷⁾ He stated that the restoration of peace did not automatically mean the establishment of a climate in which human rights were fully observed and safeguarded. However, there were positive signs. There had been a decrease in extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and there had been no sign of enforced or involuntary disappearance. Arbitrary arrests continued and there had been a significant increase in the number of homicides attributed to persons unknown or common criminals. Structural deficiencies in the judicial system violated the right to due process and were seen as an obstacle to the safeguarding of human rights.

The Independent Expert recommended that the Government of El Salvador take advantage of the presence of the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) and implement the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces. He called on the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) to destroy all its weapons. He advocated strengthening the Office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights; setting up the National Civil Police; guaranteeing the independence of judges and lawyers; revising the approved text of the National Council of the Judiciary; satisfying the economic, social and cultural rights of Salvadorians; and providing support from the international community through the National Reconstruction Plan.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹²⁸⁾ the Commission, welcoming the February signing of the agreements and principles of the Forum for Economic and Social Consultation proposed in the 1992 Peace Agreement between El Salvador and FMLN,⁽¹²⁹⁾ urged both parties to abide by them.

The Commission expressed its gratitude to El Salvador for ending the armed conflict and its positive impact on the observance of human rights, and welcomed the integration of FMLN into the civil life of the country. It expressed concern at continued reports of human rights violations and urged both parties to carry out fully the remaining agreements, together with the recommendations by ONUSAL and by the Ad Hoc Commission on the Purification of the Armed Forces and those to be produced by the Commission on the Truth. Endorsing the Independent Expert's recommendations, it requested the Secretary-General to extend his mandate for one year and asked the Expert to report in 1994. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/284 of 28 July.

(For details of the political situation in El Salvador, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

ONUSAL

In accordance with a 1991 Security Council resolution,⁽¹³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General, in February, transmitted an ONUSAL report which discussed ONUSAL as a mechanism for active verification of human rights.⁽¹³¹⁾ Active verification involved a continuous presence, for an adequate length of time, in the territory of the country which was the subject of verification; acceptance by the warring parties of the mission's powers to observe, investigate and make recommendations; protection of human rights on the basis of undertakings sovereignly adopted within the State; and the capacity to promote meaningful change on the basis of the parties' acceptance of international verification of compliance with political or legal obligations. The report stated that ONUSAL's approach represented a valid option for improving the human rights situation in El Salvador.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/149 without vote.

Situation of human rights in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the international human rights instruments,

Recalling its resolution 47/140 of 18 December 1992, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/93 of 10 March 1993 and the statement of 20 August 1993 by the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on support for the peace process in El Salvador, as well as Security Council resolution 888(1993) of 30 November 1993,

Taking into account the reports of the Secretary-General and the Director of the Human Rights Division of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Convinced that full and speedy implementation of the outstanding commitments of the peace agreements is necessary in order to guarantee full respect for human rights and the consolidation of the reconciliation and democratization process under way in El Salvador,

Welcoming the fact that most of the agreements have already been put into effect by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional,

Concerned none the less that problems persist and that there are continuing delays in the implementation of several important elements of the peace agreements, referred to in Security Council resolution 832(1993) of 27 May 1993, and that there have also been some irregularities in the implementation of those relating to public security,

Noting with concern the recent acts of violence in El Salvador, which may indicate renewed activity by illegal armed groups, and could, if left unchecked, negatively affect the peace process in El Salvador, including the elections scheduled for March 1994,

Also noting with concern the seemingly politically motivated murders of, and threats against, members of the different political parties, including the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional and the Alianza Republicana Nacionalista,

Welcoming in this regard the efforts of the Secretary-General in cooperation with the Government of El Salvador towards the establishment of a mechanism to investigate illegal armed groups and their possible connection with renewed political violence,

Noting that El Salvador has entered a decisive phase in the peace process and that political parties have just begun a campaign for the elections to be held in March 1994, which should take place in a peaceful environment,

Noting also the importance of the fact that reforms of the judicial system have been adopted, as well as the need for the adoption of both the reforms in the process of being approved and those recommended by the Commission on the Truth, which are designed to contribute to the elimination of the existing impunity and consequently to the full attainment of the rule of law,

Recalling the role that the Office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights is called upon to play in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Considering that the international community must follow closely and continue to support all efforts to consolidate peace, ensure full respect for human rights and undertake the reconstruction of El Salvador,

1. Commends the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional for having fulfilled most of their commitments and for having overcome a number of obstacles to the implementation of their agreements;

2. Expresses its concern that there are important elements of the peace agreements that have been only partially implemented and therefore calls upon the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí to step up their efforts to complete as agreed, by the proposed dates, the programme for the transfer of land, the reintegration programme for ex-combatants, the deployment of the National Civil Police and the phasing out of the National Police, as well as the collection of weapons issued for the exclusive use of personnel of the armed forces and the adoption of the Act on Private Security Services;

3. Condemns the recent acts of violence that may be politically motivated, which have been repudiated by the various sectors of Salvadorian society, and considers it inadmissible that such acts, perpetrated by a small minority, should jeopardize the progress made in implementing the agreements and hamper the holding of free elections in March 1994;

4. Supports, in this context, the efforts of the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Government of El Salvador, to initiate immediately an impartial, independent and credible investigation of illegal armed groups, as recommended by the Commission on the Truth, and urges all sectors of society in El Salvador to cooperate with such an investigation;

5. Notes with satisfaction the statement of 5 November 1993, entitled "Commitment of the presidential candidates to peace and stability in El Salvador", in which the candidates, inter alia, solemnly committed themselves to maintaining the constructive evolution of the peace process and to implementing all the commitments contained in the peace agreements and rejected any politically motivated violence or intimidation;

6. Calls upon all Governments to contribute to the consolidation of peace and the attainment of full respect for human rights in El Salvador by supporting full compliance with the peace agreements;

7. Reiterates its gratitude for the important work being carried out by the Secretary-General and his representative and by the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, and extends to them its support so that they can continue to take all necessary steps to contribute to the successful implementation of the peace agreements;

8. Acknowledges with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, which make up the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, as well as the Government of the United States of America, in support of the steps being taken by the Secretary-General to consolidate the peace process in El Salvador;

9. Notes that, as has been pointed out by the Secretary-General, the human rights situation in El Salvador continues to evolve in a somewhat ambivalent fashion, since, on the one hand, there continue to be signs of improvement and, on the other, violations persist, particularly as regards the right to life, and the capacity of the judicial system to clarify and punish such violations continues to be unsatisfactory;

10. Urges all States, as well as the international financial and development institutions, promptly and generously to provide financial contributions to support the fulfilment of all aspects of the peace agreements, including the National Reconstruction Plan;

11. Urges the Government of El Salvador and all other institutions involved in the electoral process to adopt the necessary measures to create an atmosphere conducive to ensuring that the elections scheduled for March 1994 are free, representative and authentic, since they are a key element in the consolidation of the peace process.

Haiti

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February, Special Rapporteur Marco Tulio Bruni Celli (Venezuela) submitted to the Commission a report covering the human rights situation in Haiti during 1992.⁽¹³²⁾ He visited Haiti from 18 to 21 August 1992 and requested two additional visits, in December 1992 and January 1993, but was refused permission by the Haitian Government.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the human rights situation in Haiti had deteriorated in 1992, which had seen deaths, disappearances and murders, preventive repression, persecution, arbitrary detention, torture, extortion of protection money from citizens by security forces, the dropping of legislative programmes, the re-emergence of section chiefs, the banning of demonstrations, and police repression of all anti-government protests. There was virtually no rule of law.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission express its deep concern at the widespread violence and condemn systematic human rights violations; continue to monitor the human rights situation; inform the de facto Government that the fact that it had not been recognized by the international community did not exempt the State from its obligations to the Haitian people; inform the de facto Government that the systematic violation of human rights represented a breach of the principles enshrined in the United Nations Charter; express its concern at the fate of Haitians who were being sent back to the country after attempting to flee abroad; express satisfaction at the cooperation between United Nations organizations and those of the inter-American system; recognize the efforts taken by the inter-American system to resolve the political crisis and ask the Secretary-General to continue cooperating with the other bodies, especially with the Organization of American States (OAS); and continue to appoint a Special Rapporteur. He recommended that the Secretary-General send to Haiti human rights specialists to be permanently based at the United Nations Development Programme office at Port-au-Prince.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹³³⁾ the Commission strongly condemned the overthrow of Haiti's constitutionally elected President, the use of violence and military coercion and the subsequent deterioration of the human rights situation. It expressed deep concern over the substantial deterioration of the human rights situation since the September 1991 coup d'etat.⁽¹³⁴⁾ Drawing the attention of the international community to the fate of Haitians who were fleeing the country, the Commission asked for support in assisting them. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to submit a provisional report to the General Assembly in 1993 and a final report to the Commission in 1994. It requested the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he needed. The extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the Commission's requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1993/276 of 28 July.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽¹³⁵⁾ the Subcommission, noting with satisfaction the agreements signed between the constitutional President of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, called on all sectors of Haitian society to ensure that a peaceful transition could take place and that democracy could be firmly established (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Provisional report of the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General, in November,⁽¹³⁶⁾ transmitted the provisional report of the Special Rapporteur to the Assembly. In the course of his work, the Special Rapporteur had travelled to Washington, DC. (13 August), New York (19 August) and Haiti (22-26 August).

The Special Rapporteur stated that, since his last report, repression and politically motivated violence had persisted. Human rights violations had remained systematic and widespread; harassment, intimidation, attacks, arbitrary arrests, summary executions and torture continued to be carried out with impunity by members of the military and civilians working with them. Those violations continued throughout the year, even after the signing in July of the Governors Island Agreement and the New York Pact (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Assembly express its satisfaction with the agreements reached for restoring the constitutional Government, while regretting the obstacles to their full implementation, and express its gratitude to the International Civilian Mission, deployed jointly by the United Nations and OAS. He further recommended that the United Nations continue to observe and remain apprised of the human rights situation in Haiti; Haiti be required to honour the obligations assumed when it ratified international human rights instruments; the Government of Haiti be required to honour its pledge to conduct programmes relating to the administration of justice, prison administration, the updating of civil and criminal legislation, the separation of the police from the armed forces, the training of the police and modernization of the army and the investigation of crimes committed by the military, the authorities, security agents and those under their orders in violation of human rights; the joint United Nations/OAS Civilian Mission remain in Haiti for as long as was deemed necessary; and a programme be established for the promotion of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/151 without vote.

Human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/7 of 11 October 1991, 46/138 of 17 December 1991, 47/20 of 24 November 1992 and 47/143 of 18 December 1992,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Aware of its responsibility for the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and resolved to keep a close watch on human rights violations wherever they may occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States are required to promote and protect human rights and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/68 of 10 March 1993, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Rapporteur for one year, with a view to having him submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session and a final report to the Commission at its fiftieth session,

Taking note also of the report submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/20 B of 20 April 1993 by the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, established by the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Deeply concerned about the grave events occurring in Haiti since 29 September 1991, when the democratic process in that country was abruptly and violently interrupted, which have resulted in the loss of human lives and violations of human rights,

Concerned at the exodus of Haitian nationals from the country because of the deteriorating political and economic situation since 29 September 1991,

Deeply alarmed by the persistence and worsening of serious violations of human rights, in particular summary and arbitrary executions, forced disappearances, of torture and rape, arbitrary arrests and detentions and denial of freedom of expression, assembly and association,

Deeply concerned by the increase in acts of violence and intimidation against the Government of Haiti, especially the assassination of the Minister of Justice, François Guy Malary, which have contributed to the temporary withdrawal of the International Civilian Mission,

Recognizing the important role played by the International Civilian Mission, whose presence in Haiti has prevented greater violations of human rights, and encouraging its earliest possible return to Haiti,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Mr. Marco Tulio Bruni Celli, for his report on the situation of human rights in Haiti, and supports the recommendations contained therein;

2. Once again condemns the overthrow of the constitutionally elected President, Mr. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and the use of violence and military coercion, and the subsequent deterioration of the situation of human rights in Haiti;

3. Expresses its conviction that the full implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, which was signed by all parties, is essential for the improvement of the situation of human rights in Haiti and that the refusal by one of the parties to implement this Agreement has led to a further deterioration of the human rights situation;

4. Expresses its deep concern about the continuing worsening of the human rights situation in Haiti during 1993 and the resulting increase in violations of the human rights embodied in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the American Convention on Human Rights: "Pact of San Jose, Costa Rica" and other international human rights instruments;

5. Condemns the recurrence of the flagrant human rights violations committed under the illegal government that took power following the coup of 29 September 1991, in particular, summary executions, political assassinations, arbitrary arrests and detentions, torture, searches without warrant, rape, restrictions on freedom of movement, expression, assembly and association and of the press and the repression of popular demonstrations calling for the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

6. Calls for the early return of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti as a means of preventing further violations of human rights;

7. Calls the attention of the international community to the fate of the Haitian nationals who are fleeing the country and requests its support for the efforts being made to assist them;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the work it is doing in favour of the Haitian nationals fleeing the country, and invites Member States to continue to give financial and material support to its efforts;

9. Calls upon Member States to continue and to intensify their humanitarian assistance to the people of Haiti, and welcomes in this regard the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch a team of additional humanitarian personnel to Haiti;

10. Decides to keep the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Haiti under review during its forty-ninth session and to consider it further in the light of the information supplied by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 48/151

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 53); 54-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.72), orally revised; agenda item 114 (c).

Sponsors: Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Cambodia, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Peru, Portugal, San Marino, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 36-53; plenary 85.

In resolution 48/27 of 6 December, the Assembly strongly condemned the attempted illegal replacement of the constitutional President of Haiti, the use of violence and military coercion and the violation of human rights in the country.

Peru

On 23 August,⁽¹³⁷⁾ the Subcommission noted with interest the electoral processes, monitored by OAS, to elect a new Congress and renew the municipal authorities in Peru. It strongly condemned the human rights violations committed by the terrorist groups Sendero Luminoso and Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru. The Subcommission urged the Peruvian authorities to adopt the necessary measures to guarantee full compliance with the State's obligations to investigate and penalize those responsible for human rights violations, as well as to compensate the victims.

United States

On 16 August,⁽¹³⁸⁾ the Subcommission, by 6 votes to 4, with 7 abstentions, asked its Chairman to request the United States to provide information on an incident that took place on 29 July 1993 at Laredo, Texas, in connection with a donation intended for religious institutions in Cuba, which resulted in a hunger strike maintained for 17 days by 13 persons who considered that they were prevented from exercising their civil rights and whose health was deteriorating.

Middle East

Lebanon

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹³⁹⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 50 to 1, condemned ongoing Israeli human rights violations in southern Lebanon, manifested by arbitrary detention of civilians, destruction of their homes, confiscation of their property, their expulsion from the occupied area and bombardment of villages. It demanded that Israel end such practices immediately and implement relevant Security Council resolutions requiring its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. It also demanded that Israel end immediately its policy of forced deportation and implement a 1992 Security Council resolution,⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and facilitate the humanitarian mission of ICRC and similar organizations. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1993 and to the Commission in 1994 on the results of his efforts.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the Commission's request, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in November⁽¹⁴¹⁾ that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution and had received no reply.

On 20 December, by decision 48/430, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

As requested by the Commission in 1992,⁽¹⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in January 1993 a report⁽¹⁴³⁾ in which he stated that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1992 resolution and had received no reply.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1993, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a January report to the Commission,⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had brought the Commission's two 1992 resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ to the attention of Governments, the Committee on Israeli practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. They had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, international humanitarian organizations and NGOs. Information was also disseminated through United Nations press releases, publications, audiovisual programmes and journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine.

Also in January,⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a list of all United Nations reports issued since 6 March 1992 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.

In accordance with a 1992 Subcommission request,⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ the Secretary-General provided in July⁽¹⁴⁷⁾ an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents relating to the question of Palestine and other occupied Arab territories.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 19 February resolution,⁽¹⁴⁸⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 26 to 16, with 5 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel's policies and practices that violated the human rights of Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied territories. Affirming the right of the Palestinians to resist the Israeli occupation by all means, the Commission called on Israel to desist from all human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, to respect the principles of international law and its commitments to the United Nations Charter, and to withdraw from the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other occupied Arab territories, in accordance with United Nations and Commission resolutions. It decided to appoint a special rapporteur and called on Israel to cooperate with him or her. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and to all other Governments, concerned United Nations organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report to the Commission in 1994 on its implementation by Israel. It also asked him to provide the Commission with all United Nations reports issued between sessions of the Commission that dealt with the conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

Rene Felber (Switzerland) was appointed as Special Rapporteur.

By another resolution, adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 27 to 1, with 19 abstentions,⁽¹⁴⁹⁾ the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel for refusing to apply that Convention and for the ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees and prisoners. It also condemned Israel for deporting Palestinians, calling on it to comply with Security Council, General Assembly and Commission resolutions providing for their return to their homeland and to desist from that policy. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1994 on progress in implementing the resolution, after bringing it to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental and international humanitarian organizations and NGOs.

Also on 19 February,⁽¹⁵⁰⁾ by a roll-call vote of 29 to 1, with 17 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned Israel for refusing to comply with United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan. Condemning Israel's persistence in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Syrian Golan, the Commission emphasized that displaced persons must be allowed to return and recover their property. It determined that all Israeli measures that altered the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan were null and void, violated international law and the fourth Geneva Convention and had no legal effect. Strongly condemning Israel for attempting to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrians and for its practices of annexation, establishing settlements, confiscating lands, diverting water resources and imposing a boycott on agricultural products, the Commission called on Israel to desist from its settlement designs and policies aimed against academic institutions and from its repressive measures. It again called on Member States not to recognize any of those measures or actions. The Secretary-General was asked to give the resolution wide publicity and to report to the Commission in 1994.

By a further 19 February resolution,⁽¹⁵¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 46 to 1, the Commission reaffirmed that the installation of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and constituted a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. Regretting that Israel had not complied with its resolutions adopted in 1990,⁽¹⁵²⁾ 1991⁽¹⁵³⁾ and 1992,⁽¹⁵⁴⁾ it urged Israel to abstain from installing settlers, including immigrants, in the occupied territories.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted decision 1993/253 by roll-call vote.

Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/2 A of 19 February 1993, approved the Commission's decision to appoint a special rapporteur with the following mandate:

(a) To investigate Israel's violations of the principles and bases of international law, international humanitarian law and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

(b) To receive communications, to hear witnesses, and to use such modalities of procedure as he may deem necessary for his mandate;

(c) To report, with his conclusions and recommendations, to the Commission on Human Rights at its future sessions, until the end of the Israeli occupation of those territories.

Economic and Social Council decision 1993/253

26-12-8 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/108) by roll-call vote (22-11-10), 22 July (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1993/23); agenda item 18.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Guinea, India, Kuwait, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey.

Against: Australia, Belarus, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Japan, Norway, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Austria, Belgium, France, Italy, Republic of Korea, Spain, Ukraine.

Mass exoduses

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹⁵⁵⁾ the Commission again invited Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations to intensify their cooperation in addressing problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons (see PART THREE, Chapter XV) and the causes of such exoduses. It asked all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, governmental and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to cooperate with it and to provide information on the human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons within their mandates. The Commission urged the Secretary-General to allocate resources to consolidate the system for early-warning activities by designating the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs as the focal point for early warning and strengthening coordination among Secretariat offices concerned, in order to ensure that effective action was taken to identify human rights abuses contributing to mass exoduses. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to ask Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs for information and to submit in 1994 a report outlining the principal developments in the United Nations system regarding early warning and preventive diplomacy since the issuance in 1992 of "An Agenda for Peace".⁽¹⁵⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/139 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Noting that the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace" identifies the protection of human rights as an important element of peace, security and economic well-being and highlights the importance of preventive diplomacy,

Deeply disturbed by the increasing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own and upon the international community as a whole, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for strengthening international cooperation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees while providing durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, in which it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Bearing in mind its resolution 46/127 of 17 December 1991 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/70 of 10 March 1993, as well as all previous relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission,

Noting that the Secretary-General, in his report on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations, states that in complex emergencies, humanitarian assistance is essential but must be complemented by measures to address the root causes of such emergencies, and that the establishment of the inter-agency consultation on early warning serves the purposes of both prevention and preparedness,

Noting also that the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has specifically acknowledged the direct relationship between the observance of human rights standards, refugee movements and problems of protection,

1. Recalls its endorsement, in its resolution 41/70, of the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, including, inter alia, the call upon all States to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to refrain from denying these to individuals in their population because of nationality, ethnicity, race, religion or language;

2. Once again invites all Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations concerned to intensify their cooperation with and assistance to worldwide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses;

3. Requests all Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant international instruments, in particular in the field of human rights and humanitarian law, as this would contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

4. Requests all United Nations bodies, including the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, the specialized agencies and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to cooperate fully with all mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and, in particular, to provide them with all relevant and accurate information in their possession on the human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons within their mandates;

5. Welcomes the recommendation in Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/70 that special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups studying situations of violation of human rights pay attention to problems resulting in mass exoduses of populations and, where appropriate, report and make relevant recommendations to the Commission;

6. Notes that the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has specifically acknowledged the direct relationship between the observance of human rights standards, refugee movements, problems of protection and solutions;

7. Welcomes the contributions of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the deliberations of international human rights bodies, and encourages her to seek ways to make these contributions even more effective;

8. Also welcomes the statement made by the High Commissioner at the forty-ninth session of the Commission on Human Rights, on 3 March 1993, in which she emphasized the need for early response by the international community to human rights situations that threaten to generate refugees and displaced persons or that impede their voluntary return;

9. Encourages States that have not already done so to accede to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the Protocol thereto of 1967;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the emphasis placed by the Secretary-General in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the need to develop the capacity of the United Nations for early warning and preventive diplomacy to help deter humanitarian crises;

11. Reaffirms, in this regard, its previous resolutions on the question of human rights and mass exoduses, and requests the Secretary-General, in the further development of the capacity of the Secretariat for early warning and preventive diplomacy, to pay particular attention to international cooperation to avert new flows of refugees;

12. Notes, in this connection, that mass movements of populations are caused by multiple and complex factors, which indicates that early warning requires an intersectoral and multidisciplinary approach;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General especially to continue to discharge the task described in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, including the continuous monitoring of all potential outflows, and to implement the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit contained in its report on the coordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows;

14. Urges the Secretary-General to attach high priority and to allocate the necessary resources from the regular budget of the United Nations to the consolidation and strengthening of the system for undertaking early-warning activities in the humanitarian area by, inter alia, the designation of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point for early warning in this area and strengthened coordination between relevant offices of the Secretariat concerned with early warning and organizations of the United Nations system, for the purpose of ensuring, inter alia, that effective action is taken to identify human rights abuses that contribute to mass outflows of persons;

15. Welcomes the decision by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to establish a regular United Nations inter-agency early-warning consultation related to possible flows of refugees and displaced persons, based on the sharing and analysis of relevant information between United Nations bodies and the development of collective recommendations for action to alleviate, inter alia, the possible causes of new flows of refugees and displaced persons;

16. Also welcomes the decision by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to designate the Department of Humanitarian Affairs as the focal point of the United Nations inter-agency early-warning consultation;

17. Urges the Department of Humanitarian Affairs to take the necessary steps to function effectively as the focal point of the inter-agency early-warning consultation;

18. Urges all the bodies involved in the inter-agency consultation to cooperate fully in, and devote the necessary resources to, the successful operation of the consultation;

19. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to supporting the early-warning arrangement instituted by the Secretary-General to avert new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the strengthened role that he is playing in undertaking early-warning activities, especially in the areas of human rights and humanitarian assistance, as well as on any further developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees and the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session detailed information on the programmatic, institutional, administrative, financial and managerial efforts instituted to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to avert new flows of refugees and to tackle the root causes of such outflows;

22. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its fiftieth

Genocide

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1993,⁽²⁴⁾ 112 States had become parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ In 1993, Armenia, the Czech Republic, Georgia, the Republic of Moldova and Slovakia became parties to the Convention.

Subcommission action. On 20 August,⁽¹¹¹⁾ the Subcommission affirmed that all persons who perpetrated or authorized the commission of genocide were individually responsible for such actions and urged United Nations Member States to bring to justice those involved in the crimes committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina, elsewhere in the territory of the former Yugoslavia or in any other part of the world.

Terrorism

On 20 August,⁽¹⁵⁷⁾ the Subcommission called on Governments, in accordance with international human rights standards and internationally recognized principles of due process, to take measures to prevent and combat terrorism and called on the international community to enhance cooperation in the fight against the spread of terrorism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/122 without vote.

Human rights and terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind that the most essential and basic human right is the right to life,

Bearing in mind also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Reiterating that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and also that every individual should strive to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance,

Seriously concerned at the gross violations of human rights perpetrated by terrorist groups,

Profoundly deploring the increasing number of innocent persons, including women, children and the elderly, killed, massacred and maimed by terrorists in indiscriminate and random acts of violence and terror, which cannot be justified under any circumstances,

Noting with great concern the growing connection between the terrorist groups and the illegal traffic in arms and drugs,

Mindful of the need to protect human rights of and guarantees for the individual in accordance with the relevant international human rights principles and instruments, particularly the right to life,

1. Unequivocally condemns all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomever committed, as activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and security of States, destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, undermining pluralistic civil society and having adverse consequences on the economic and social development of States;

2. Calls upon States, in accordance with international standards of human rights, to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism;

3. Urges the international community to enhance cooperation in the fight against the threat of terrorism at national, regional and international levels;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Member States and to competent specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations;

5. Decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 48/122

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.2) without vote, 6 December (meeting 53); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.42); agenda item 114 (b).

Other aspects of human rights violations

Declaration on gross and large-scale human rights violations

In accordance with a 1992 Subcommittee decision,⁽¹⁵⁸⁾ Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) submitted the proposed core text of a draft declaration defining gross and large-scale violations of human rights as an international crime.⁽¹⁵⁹⁾

On 25 August,⁽¹⁶⁰⁾ the Subcommittee recommended that the Commission appoint Mr. Chernichenko as Special Rapporteur to prepare a report on the recognition of gross and large-scale violations of human rights perpetrated on the orders of Governments or sanctioned by them as an international crime. It recommended that the Special Rapporteur include in his report a draft declaration on the subject; it would consider the report in 1994.

Restitution for human rights violations

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽¹⁶¹⁾ the Commission endorsed a request made by its Subcommittee in 1992⁽¹⁶²⁾ concerning the preparation by the Special Rapporteur on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms of a final report and its request that the Secretary-General provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/291 of 28 July, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommittee's requests.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, the Subcommittee's Special Rapporteur, Theo van Boven (Netherlands), submitted his final report,⁽¹⁶³⁾ in which he proposed basic principles and guidelines for a set of standards to strengthen the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. He discussed crime prevention and criminal justice and international humanitarian law, reviewed decisions and views of United Nations human rights bodies, and discussed compensation to victims of gross human rights violations resulting from the invasion and occupation of Kuwait by Iraq. He recommended that the United Nations adopt a set of principles and guidelines and include provisions on reparations in new human rights instruments. Further recommendations were made to States, specialized agencies, international treaty bodies, working groups, rapporteurs and NGOs.

Subcommittee action. On 27 August,⁽¹⁶⁴⁾ the Subcommittee decided to transmit the Special Rapporteur's study to the Commission with a view to its publication and dissemination, and to examine further in 1994 the proposed basic principles and guidelines and to establish, if necessary, a sessional working group with a view to adopting a body of such principles and guidelines. It asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit their comments on the proposed principles and guidelines.

Civil defence forces

Report of the Secretary-General. In January/⁽¹⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General summarized comments received from 18 Member States, two intergovernmental organizations and three NGOs concerning domestic law and practice relating to civil defence forces and the relationship between such forces and human rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 9 March,⁽¹⁶⁶⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1994 a report containing a summary of additional information and comments received concerning civil defence forces and their relation to human rights protection and fundamental freedoms. It invited special rapporteurs and working groups concerned to continue to pay attention to the issue.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In August 1993,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims.⁽²⁾ As at 16 July, 126 States had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts); 13 States—Albania, Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Czech Republic, Egypt, Estonia, Greece, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, Slovakia, Tajikistan, Zimbabwe—had done so since the Secretary-General's report in 1992.⁽³⁾ All but 11 of the 126 also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States—France and the Philippines—adhered only to Protocol II.

Rights of the child

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1993,⁽⁴⁾ there were 154 parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989⁽⁵⁾ and in force since 2 September 1990. In 1993, 28 States became parties to the Convention.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention in November 1993.⁽⁶⁾

CRC activities. In 1993, the Committee on the Rights of the Child held its third (11–29 January) and fourth (20 September–8 October) sessions, both at Geneva.⁽⁷⁾

The Committee considered initial reports from 11 States parties—Bolivia, Costa Rica, Egypt, El Salvador, Indonesia, Peru, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Sudan, Sweden, Viet Nam—under article 44 of the Convention. It recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to study ways to improve the protection of children from the adverse effects of armed conflicts and asked him to bring its recommendation to the Assembly's attention, which he did by a note of 3 August.⁽⁸⁾ The working group established in 1992⁽³⁾ to submit final proposals on the subject presented an oral report to the Committee on its activities (see below for action concerning children in armed conflicts). The Committee asked the Secretary-General to transmit to the Commission on Human Rights in 1994 a preliminary draft optional protocol on involvement of children in armed conflicts, which it prepared at its January session.⁽⁹⁾ It made recommendations on the dissemination of information, cooperation with United Nations bodies and the establishment of a documentation unit on the rights of the child, and continued to discuss its participation in the preparatory activities for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights.

In accordance with article 43 of the Convention, the Third Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention met (New York, 23 February) to elect five members of the Committee to replace those whose terms were due to expire on 28 February 1993.⁽¹⁰⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission called on States that had not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority and appealed to States parties that had made reservations to review the compatibility of their reservations with article 51 of the Convention and other relevant rules of international law. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to assist in disseminating information on the Convention and in its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to it; to ensure the provision of staff and facilities for the effective performance of the Committee; and to report on the status of the Convention in 1994.

Sale of children, child prostitution and pornography

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January,⁽¹²⁾ Special Rapporteur Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand) submitted a report to the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children for, among other things, adoption, labour, prostitution and pornography and organ transplants. He summarized communications which he had sent to five States, prompted by reports concerning situations affecting children's rights and calling for clarification and response. The Special Rapporteur discussed his 1992 visit to Australia to study the situation there and recommended a number of preventive measures, among them: effective monitoring and law enforcement against criminal elements seeking to exploit children; a more active role by the private sector; improved information-gathering on child exploitation; making more visible the issues of child abuse and exploitation; enacting new laws on the sale of children; and improved law enforcement against the customers of child prostitution. Annexed to the report was a list of 46 States that had replied to a questionnaire on child prostitution and pornography,⁽¹³⁾ together with a questionnaire on the sale of children's organs and a list of 24 States that had replied to it.

Human Rights Commission action. On 10 March,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission appealed to Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur and asked him to continue to pay attention to insufficiently documented areas and to set short- and medium-term priorities in his recommendations. It also asked him to seek credible and reliable information from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to cooperate with the Committee, the Sub-commission and its Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, as well as with other United Nations bodies dealing with questions covered by his mandate. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate and enable him to report in 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/156 without vote.

Need to adopt efficient international measures for the prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted in its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989,

Recalling also the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York in September 1990, and recalling that in the Declaration States made a solemn commitment to give priority to the rights of the child and to his or her survival, protection and development, thus contributing to the welfare of every society,

Mindful of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which requires effective measures against female infanticide, harmful child labour, sale of children and organs, child prostitution, child pornography, as well as other forms of sexual abuse,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/74 of 5 March 1992, in which the Commission adopted the Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography,

Recognizing the enormous efforts made in this field by the United Nations, particularly the United Nations Children's Fund, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography,

Deeply concerned by the persistence of the practice of the use of children for prostitution, sexual abuse and other activities, which may also often constitute exploitation of child labour,

Deeply disturbed by the persistence of the practice of the sale of children and other practices, which may be linked to related disappearances, illegal adoptions, abandonment, kidnapping and abductions for commercial purposes,

Regretting that one of the main difficulties found by the Special Rapporteur has been the lack of information on this issue,

Bearing in mind the different causes that influence the emergence and continuation of these special circumstances, including in particular poverty, natural disasters and armed conflicts, and their harmful effects on the rights of children,

Considering that it is necessary to redouble greater efforts at the national and international level to promote and protect the rights of children all over the world,

Expressing its interest in benefiting from the studies, conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur,

1. Expresses great concern at the growing number of incidents worldwide related to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography;

2. Urges Governments to continue searching for solutions as well as ways and means of enhancing international cooperation to eradicate such aberrant practices;

3. Expresses its support for the work of the Special Rapporteur appointed by the Commission on Human Rights to examine all over the world the question of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and urges him to continue his efforts in the discharge of his mandate;

4. Urges all Governments to collaborate with the Special Rapporteur and to assist him by providing him with all the requested information;

5. Calls upon those States which have not done so to become parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and calls upon the States parties to the Convention to implement national measures aimed at fulfilling the provisions of the Convention;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider, during its fiftieth session, the creation of a working group to study, as a matter of priority and in close contact with the Special Rapporteur, the elaboration of guidelines for a possible draft convention on the issues related to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, as well as the basic measures required for preventing and eradicating these serious problems;

7. Requests the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to transmit paragraph 6 above to the Committee on the Rights of the Child so that it can express its comments;

8. Invites the Special Rapporteur, within the framework of his mandate, to continue giving attention to the economic, social, legal and cultural factors affecting these phenomena;

9. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit a provisional report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, from within existing resources, to provide the Special Rapporteur and the working group of the Commission on Human Rights with every necessary assistance;

11. Decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Necessity of adopting effective measures for the promotion and protection of the rights of children throughout the world who are victims of especially difficult circumstances, including armed conflicts".

Programme of action

Pursuant to a 1992 Subcommission request,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery in July⁽¹⁶⁾ presented replies received from 20 States, one specialized agency, one regional commission, two intergovernmental organizations and one NGO on measures adopted to implement the 1992 Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.⁽¹³⁾

On 20 August,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Subcommission decided to transmit the Group's report to the Commission in 1994. It requested the Secretary-General to invite Governments, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to investigate allegations of the removal of organs from children and indicate measures taken to counteract that practice.

Child labour

On 10 March,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Commission adopted the Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour and recommended that all States adopt legislative and administrative measures to carry it out. It urged United Nations bodies and intergovernmental organizations to bear in mind the Programme when drawing up policies and developing programmes related to children and the family. It also urged NGOs to adopt the Programme. It asked all States to report to the Subcommission on measures adopted to implement the Programme and on their efficacy. The Commission asked the Subcommission to submit a report every two years on the implementation of the Programme by States, and asked the Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights to support the Subcommission in fulfilling that mandate. The Programme of Action was annexed to the Commission's resolution.

Children in armed conflicts

On 10 March,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission, expressing its deep concern at the serious consequences of armed conflicts for children, who were often the main victims of the indiscriminate use of anti-personnel mines, asked all States to prevent such indiscriminate use and to protect and assist the victims. It asked relevant United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to intensify their efforts to assist child victims of anti-personnel mines and to support the activities of NGOs in that regard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/157 without vote.

Protection of children affected by armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, in which it adopted the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and its resolution 3318(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict,

Recalling that the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as article 38 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, accord children special protection and treatment,

Recalling the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York in September 1990, and stressing the necessity of implementing their provisions,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on its third session, held at Geneva from 11 to 29 January 1993, in particular its recommendation to the General Assembly that the Secretary-General should undertake a study of the ways and means of improving the protection of children from the adverse effects of armed conflicts,

Taking note also of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/83 of 10 March 1993,

Mindful of the strong support of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, for the proposed study by the Secretary-General, as reflected in paragraph 50 of section II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Profoundly concerned about the grievous deterioration in the situation of children in many parts of the world as a result of armed conflicts, and convinced that immediate and concerted action is called for,

Convinced that children affected by armed conflicts require the special protection of the international community and that there is a need for all States to work towards the alleviation of their plight,

Recognizing the valuable work done in this field by United Nations bodies and organizations, as well as by other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Expresses grave concern about the tragic situation of children in many parts of the world as a result of armed conflicts;

2. Calls upon States fully to respect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as those of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which accord children affected by armed conflicts special protection and treatment;

3. Urges all Member States to continue seeking comprehensive improvement of the situation of children affected by armed conflicts with appropriate and concrete measures;

4. Requests bodies and organizations of the United Nations, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, within the scope of their respective mandates, to cooperate in order to ensure more effective action in addressing the problem of children affected by armed conflicts;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on those concrete measures which have been taken, pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 above, to alleviate the situation of children in armed conflict;

6. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on its third session and the recommendations contained therein concerning the situation of children affected by armed conflict;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint an expert, working in collaboration with the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the United Nations Children's Fund, to undertake a comprehensive study of this question, including the participation of children in armed conflict, as well as the relevance and adequacy of existing standards, and to make specific recommendations on ways and means of preventing children from being affected by armed conflicts and of improving the protection of children in armed conflicts and on measures to ensure effective protection of these children, including from indiscriminate use of all weapons of war, especially anti-personnel mines, and to promote their physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration, in particular, measures to ensure proper medical care and adequate nutrition, taking into account the recommendations by the World Conference on Human Rights and the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

8. Requests Member States and United Nations bodies and organizations, as well as other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Health Organization and the International Committee of the Red Cross, to contribute to the study requested in paragraph 7 above;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the study to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

10. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider the study at its fifty-first session;

11. Decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Necessity of adopting effective measures for the promotion and protection of the rights of children throughout the world who are victims of especially difficult circumstances, including armed conflicts".

Street children

On 10 March,⁽²⁰⁾ the Commission called on all States that had not done so to become parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and called on the international community to support the efforts of States to improve the situation of street children by supporting development projects that had a positive effect on them. It recommended that the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other treaty bodies bear the plight of street children in mind when examining States parties' reports and called on special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups to pay particular attention to the problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/136 without vote.

Plight of street children

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/126 of 18 December 1992,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/81 of 10 March 1993,

Welcoming the special attention given to the rights of children by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and welcoming in particular section I, paragraph 21, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a major contribution to the protection of the rights of all children, including street children,

Reaffirming that children are a particularly vulnerable section of society whose rights require special protection and that children living under especially difficult circumstances, such as street children, deserve special attention, protection and assistance from their families and communities and as part of national efforts and international cooperation,

Recognizing that all children have the right to health, shelter and education, to an adequate standard of living and to freedom from violence and harassment,

Deeply concerned about the growing number of street children worldwide and the squalid conditions in which these children are often forced to live,

Profoundly concerned that the killing of and violence against street children threatens the most fundamental right of all, the right to life,

Alarmed at continuing serious offences of this nature against street children,

Recognizing the responsibility of Governments to investigate all cases of offences against children and to punish offenders,

Recognizing also that legislation per se is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including those of street children, and that Governments should implement their laws and complement legislative measures with effective action, inter alia, in the fields of law enforcement and in the administration of justice,

Welcoming the efforts made by some Governments to take effective action to address the question of street children,

Welcoming also the publicity given to, and the increased awareness of, the plight of street children and the achievements of non-governmental organizations in promoting the rights of these children and in providing practical assistance to improve their situation, and expressing its appreciation for their continued efforts,

Welcoming further the valuable work of the United Nations Children's Fund and its National Committees in reducing the suffering of street children,

Noting with appreciation the important work carried out in this field by the United Nations, in particular the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme,

Bearing in mind the diverse causes of the emergence and marginalization of street children, including poverty, rural-to-urban migration, unemployment, broken families, intolerance and exploitation, and that such causes are often aggravated and their solution made more difficult by serious socio-economic difficulties,

Bearing in mind also that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights urged all States, with the support of international cooperation, to address the acute problem of children in especially difficult circumstances and urged that national and international mechanisms and programmes should be strengthened for the defence and protection of children, including street children,

Recognizing that the prevention and solution of certain aspects of this phenomenon could also be facilitated in the context of economic and social development,

1. Expresses grave concern at the continued growth in the number of incidents worldwide and at reports of street children being involved in or affected by serious crime, drug abuse, violence and prostitution;

2. Urges Governments to continue actively to seek comprehensive solutions to tackle the problems of street children and to take measures to restore their full participation in society and to provide, inter alia, adequate nutrition, shelter, health care and education;

3. Strongly urges Governments to respect fundamental human rights, particularly the right to life, and to take urgent measures to prevent the killing of street children and to combat torture and violence against them;

4. Emphasizes that strict compliance with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child constitutes a significant step towards solving the problems of street children, and calls upon all States that have not done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

5. Calls upon the international community to support, through effective international cooperation, the efforts of States to improve the situation of street children, and encourages States parties to the Convention, in preparing their reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, to bear this problem in mind and to consider requesting, or indicating their need for, technical advice and assistance for initiatives aimed at improving the situation of street children, in accordance with article 45 of the Convention;

6. Reiterates its invitation to the Committee on the Rights of the Child to consider the possibility of a general comment on street children;

7. Recommends that the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other relevant treaty-monitoring bodies bear this growing problem in mind when examining reports from States parties;

8. Invites Governments, United Nations bodies and organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate and to ensure greater awareness and more effective action to solve the problem of street children by, among other measures, supporting development projects that can have a positive impact on the situation of street children;

9. Calls upon special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, within their mandates, to pay particular attention to the plight of street children;

10. Decides to consider the question further at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 48/136

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.2) without vote, 6 December (meeting 53); 79-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.66); agenda item 114 (b).

Youth and human rights

Conscientious objection to military service

In 1993, the Commission on Human Rights had before it a report of the Secretary-General in which he presented information on conscientious objection to military service received from 24 Governments and one NGO.⁽²¹⁾

Women

Discrimination

In July 1993,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of a 1992 Subcommission resolution requesting information on the equality and empowerment of women.⁽²³⁾ He stated that, as at 1 June, information had been received from Senegal.

Violence against women

On 8 March,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission, condemning human rights violations against women, requested special rapporteurs and working groups, in carrying out their mandates, to include in their reports information on human rights violations affecting women. It asked the secretariat to ensure that special rapporteurs, experts and working groups were fully apprised of the particular ways in which the rights of women were violated. The Commission decided to consider appointing in 1994 a special rapporteur on violence against women and asked the Secretary-General to consult with all United Nations human rights bodies on the implementation of its resolution. It asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1993 and to the Commission in 1994.

By resolution 48/104 of 20 December, the Assembly proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

On 25 August,⁽²⁵⁾ the Subcommission, welcoming Sri Lanka's offer to host a regional seminar on the elimination of harmful traditional practices affecting the health of women and children, recommended a draft text on the subject to be considered by the Commission in 1994.

Science and technology

Bioethics

On 10 March,⁽²⁶⁾ the Commission asked Governments, specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to inform the Secretary-General of activities being carried out to ensure that the life sciences were developing in a manner respectful of human rights. It also asked States to inform the Secretary-General of legislative or other measures taken on the subject. The Commission asked the Subcommission to consider ways to ensure that the life sciences developed in a manner respectful of human rights and to make recommendations to that effect. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1995.

Computerized personal files

On 10 March,⁽²⁷⁾ the Commission, referring to the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files,⁽²⁸⁾ adopted by the General Assembly in 1990,⁽²⁹⁾ requested the Secretary-General to report in 1995 on the application of the guidelines within the United Nations and on information collected from States, intergovernmental and regional organizations and NGOs concerning the follow-up to the guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/140 without vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological progress

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Reaffirming the importance of its resolution 45/95 of 14 December 1990, in which it adopted guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files, and its resolution 46/119 of 17 December 1991, in which it adopted the Principles for the Protection of Persons with Mental Illness and for the Improvement of Mental Health Care,

Welcoming with satisfaction Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/91 entitled "Human rights and bioethics" and Commission decision 1993/113 entitled "Question of the follow-up to the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal files", adopted on 10 March 1993,

Welcoming the relevant paragraphs of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Aware that everyone has the right to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications,

Reaffirming the need to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person in the conditions of scientific and technological progress,

Noting that certain advances, notably in the biomedical and life sciences as well as in information technology, may have potentially adverse consequences for the integrity, dignity and human rights of the individual, and that illicit dumping of toxic and dangerous substances and waste potentially constitutes a serious threat to the human rights, the life and health of everyone,

Considering that the human being is in the centre of social and economic development,

Conscious that modern science and technology give the possibility to create material conditions for the prosperity of society and for the thorough development of the human person,

Recognizing the need for international cooperation so that all mankind can benefit from the achievements of scientific and technological progress and so that their use in favour of economic and social progress can be to the benefit of all,

Convinced of the need to develop life science ethics both nationally and internationally,

1. Calls upon all Member States to ensure that the achievements of scientific and technological progress and the intellectual potential of mankind are used for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Once again calls upon Member States to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of science and technology are used only for the benefit of the human being and do not lead to the disturbance of the ecological environment, that is, inter alia, measures against the illicit dumping of toxic and dangerous products and waste;

3. Emphasizes the fact that many advances in scientific knowledge and technology in health, education, housing and other social spheres should be readily available to the populations as the heritage of humanity, with a view to sustainable development, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to inform the Secretary-General of the activities and programmes carried out to ensure development of life and technical sciences respectful of human rights, in order to contribute to the reports of the Secretary-General requested in resolution 1993/91 and decision 1993/113 of the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Decides to consider the question of human rights and scientific and technological progress at its fiftieth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 48/140

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/632/Add.2) without vote, 13 December (meeting 56); 13-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.77), orally revised and further orally amended by Ireland; agenda item 114 (b).

Human rights and the environment

Human Rights Commission action. On 10

March,⁽³⁰⁾ the Commission endorsed a 1992 Subcommission request⁽²³⁾ that Special Rapporteur Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria) be entrusted with preparing in 1993 a second progress report on human rights and the environment and that the Secretary-General be asked to give her all the assistance she might require.

The Economic and Social Council approved those requests by decision 1993/292 of 28 July.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur submitted a second progress report,⁽³¹⁾ reviewing developments regarding the recognition and implementation of environmental rights as human rights. She noted that environmental damage had direct effects on the enjoyment of human rights, such as the right to life, health, a satisfactory standard of living, sufficient food, housing, education, work, culture, non-discrimination, dignity and the harmonious development of one's personality, security of person and family, development and peace. She suggested that guidelines be drawn up to address the environmental aspects of universally recognized human rights and that a meeting of experts be organized to work out recommendations on incorporating the right to a satisfactory environment into the activities of human rights bodies. She also suggested that the right to a satisfactory environment be included in the agenda of the meeting of chairmen of human rights bodies. The Special Rapporteur further recommended that various themes be examined, among them, the rights of women and the environment, children and the environment, racial discrimination and the environment, interaction of the environment with economic, social and cultural rights, the right to life and the environment, and environment and development. She also proposed establishing a mechanism for monitoring situations, possibly in the form of a special rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur's first progress report was submitted in 1992.⁽²³⁾

Subcommission action. On 25 August,⁽²⁴⁾ the Subcommission requested the Special Rapporteur to submit in 1994 a final report, including recommendations aimed at developing basic principles and guidelines concerning human rights and the environment. It asked the Secretary-General to organize an expert meeting prior to the final report's preparation to draw up recommendations on incorporating the right to environment in the activities of human rights bodies. The Subcommission asked him to invite Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, indigenous peoples' organizations and international human rights organizations to provide the Special Rapporteur with information relating to her report. It also asked him to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance she needed. The Subcommission recommended a draft decision for adoption by the Commission in 1994.

Movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes

By a roll-call vote of 34 to 1, with 17 abstentions, the Commission, on 10 March,⁽²⁵⁾ welcomed the final declaration adopted by the 1992 regional meeting for Africa of the World Conference on Human Rights,⁽²⁶⁾ especially where it related to the environmental consequences of dumping toxic and dangerous products and wastes and its effect on human life. It invited Governments, through legislative and other measures, to prevent illegal international traffic in such products. It also invited the United Nations Environment Programme, ILO, the World Health Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Organization of African Unity and other regional organizations to intensify their cooperation and assistance on environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals, including their transboundary movement. The Commission decided to continue consideration of the subject in 1995.

Human rights of disabled persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March,⁽²⁷⁾ the Commission expressed its appreciation to the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs for its efforts to coordinate and supervise the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons.⁽²⁸⁾ It appealed to Member States to highlight the observance of the International Day of Disabled Persons on 3 December every year and encouraged them to implement the standard rules on equal opportunities for disabled persons. The Commission invited human rights treaty bodies to monitor the compliance of States with their commitments under the relevant human rights instruments to ensure the full enjoyment of those rights by disabled persons.

Subcommission action. On 27 August,⁽²⁹⁾ the Subcommission requested the Commission to take into consideration the recommendations of its Special Rapporteur, Leandro Despouy (Argentina),⁽³⁰⁾ and to appoint an international ombudsman for the human rights of disabled persons. It asked the Secretary-General to report to the Commission and the Subcommission on the coordination efforts of United Nations organs and bodies concerned with the protection of disabled persons, and to establish a mechanism to facilitate such coordination and cooperation.

Chapter XI

Health, food and nutrition

The global epidemic of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), added to the ills of malaria, diarrhoeal diseases, hunger, nutritional deficiencies and disabilities, continued to challenge the efforts of the United Nations in 1993.

Several United Nations programmes and agencies participated in the fight against the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), which causes AIDS. The World Health Organization (WHO) continued its Global Programme on AIDS, and the United Nations Development Programme reported on assessments of its HIV and Development Programme.

The Economic and Social Council, in July, supported several recommendations for improved coordination both within and outside the United Nations system in the fight against malaria, cholera and diarrhoeal diseases—diseases that affect several hundred million people and kill some four million of them each year.

In December, the General Assembly adopted Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities (resolution 48/96). The United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability came into operation at the beginning of 1993, replacing the fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, which ended in 1992.

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)—provided food to 47 million people. Most disasters during the year were the result of acts of man, and 83 per cent of new WFP commitments were in emergency relief.

HealthPrimary health care

The United Nations Children's Fund/World Health Organization (UNICEF/WHO) Joint Committee on Health Policy held its twenty-ninth session at Geneva on 1 and 2 February,⁽¹⁾ with the main purpose of recommending collaborative action to help countries achieve the goals of the 1990 World Summit for Children.

The Committee recommended that the Executive Boards of UNICEF and WHO reinforce complementary action to strengthen primary health care programmes; intensify research; support training, capacity-building, intersectoral cooperation and integrated approaches; focus on those most in need; and mobilize resources to augment national efforts in those areas. It recommended that every effort be made to follow up on the goals of the World Summit for Children, giving special attention to HIV/AIDS in children. The Committee endorsed intermediate goals to help achieve the longer-term targets of the Summit (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV).

The Committee also recommended support for: the management of district health systems in developing countries; the Bamako Initiative (see below); implementation of the "baby-friendly" hospital initiative; the prevention and control of AIDS in women and children; healthy life-styles for youth; health education in schools; hygiene education and community water supply and sanitation; and malaria control.

The UNICEF Executive Board, in May,⁽²⁾ welcomed the Joint Committee's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Bamako Initiative

At its 1993 session, the Executive Board of UNICEF considered a February interim progress report⁽³⁾ on the Bamako Initiative,⁽⁴⁾ adopted by African Ministers of Health in 1987 to improve the quality of primary health care in sub-Saharan Africa through community participation in financing and managing local health services. The report discussed key aspects of the Initiative in Africa, emphasizing the role of the household in changing health behaviour and status. It focused on countries that had taken up the Initiative in the previous year and concluded, on the basis of experience so far, that its implementation could be accelerated if there were a much broader mobilization of financial resources, either directly or through UNICEF.

AIDS prevention and control

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, in a May 1993 note,⁽⁶⁾ submitted to the Economic and Social Council the report of the Director-General of WHO on implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS, endorsed by the Assembly in 1987.⁽⁷⁾

The Director-General reviewed the global AIDS situation, the evolution of the global strategy, and the activities of WHO's Global Programme on AIDS in 1992. He also outlined activities by United Nations organizations and specialized agencies and described the coordination of HIV/AIDS activities within the United Nations system.

On 21 December, in decision 48/452, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

UNDP action. In a report to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP),⁽⁸⁾ the UNDP Administrator commented on the analysis and recommendations of an external and independent assessment, undertaken by UNDP's Central Evaluation Office, of country-level activities to address the HIV epidemic. The report also discussed assessments of UNDP's HIV and Development Programme, established in 1992.⁽⁹⁾

The Administrator stated that UNDP had a significant body of knowledge about effective approaches to the epidemic and that the challenge for UNDP and other institutions was to find ways to put those lessons and insights into practice quickly.

The Governing Council, on 18 June,⁽¹⁰⁾ took note of the report and encouraged the Administrator to adopt a community-based and multisectoral approach to HIV and AIDS at the country level. It supported the 1993 World Health Assembly request that the WHO Director-General study, in close consultation with all organizations and bodies concerned, the feasibility of establishing a joint, co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV and AIDS. The Governing Council requested the UNDP Administrator to cooperate fully in the consultative process established by the World Health Assembly for that study.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/51 without vote.

Coordination of United Nations activities related to the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS and on the coordination of HIV/AIDS activities at the global and country levels,

Welcoming the establishment of the Task Force on HIV/AIDS Coordination by the Management Committee of the Global Programme on AIDS, with a two-year mandate,

Taking note of decisions 93/14 and 93/27 A of 18 June 1993 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its fortieth session,

1. Welcomes the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization and invites the World Health Organization and other relevant organization and bodies of the United Nations system to continue their efforts in fighting, at all levels, the HIV/AIDS pandemic, giving due attention to its multisectoral aspects;

2. Supports fully World Health Assembly resolution WHA46.37 of 14 May 1993, in which the Director-General of the World Health Organization is requested to study, in close collaboration with all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system concerned, the feasibility and practicability of establishing a joint and co-sponsored United Nations programme on HIV and AIDS and to develop options for such a programme;

3. Calls upon the heads of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund, and invites the heads of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Bank, to cooperate fully in the consultative process established in World Health Assembly resolution WHA46.37 to carry out the study and calls upon the Task Force on HIV/AIDS Coordination, established by the Management Committee of the Global Programme on AIDS, to participate actively in this consultative process;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization to include the outcome of the above-mentioned study in the next biennial report on progress in the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS, to be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/51

29 July 1993 Meeting 45 Adopted without vote

Approved by Economic Committee (E/1993/113) without vote, 26 July (meeting 15); 19-nation draft (E/1993/C.1/L.5), orally amended based on informal consultations; agenda item 15 (m).

Malaria and diarrhoeal diseases

At its organizational session in February 1993, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/205, decided that one of two themes for the coordination segment of the Council's substantive session should be the coordination of United Nations activities in the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, cholera in particular.

The Secretary-General submitted a June report⁽¹¹⁾ on coordinated United Nations activities, noting that several hundred million cases of malaria and diarrhoeal diseases resulted in about four million deaths each year and were a major impediment to social and economic development.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for improving global and regional cooperation against these diseases. They included: the definition of broad policies for development; the strengthening of technical and managerial leadership within the lead agencies; expanded research and exchanges of information; the strengthening of early-warning systems to prevent and control epidemics; the need for balance between investments in specific disease interventions and general health infrastructure; and the need for more effective monitoring, communication and agency collaboration in the fight against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases. The Secretary-General also recommended, among other things, the formation of country-level coordinating groups, convened by the host Government and composed of concerned United Nations and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies.

At the coordination segment of its substantive session in July, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the Secretary-General's report and supported its recommendations. It suggested, however, that greater specificity was needed in the plans, targets, resource allocations and implementation schedules of United Nations and Bretton Woods institutions to ensure improved coordination and implementation of programmes in developing countries.

The Council stated that malaria and diarrhoeal diseases could be prevented and controlled with currently available tools, but better instruments and coordination were needed to ensure the effective use of resources. Continued investments were also needed for development and research activities.

The Council requested that the Secretary-General, in collaboration with WHO and other relevant organs, prepare a report on the implementation of these recommendations, specifying goals and workplans, time-frames and resources needed to achieve them.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

At its 1993 session (Vienna, 8-17 February), the Commission for Social Development considered a note by the Secretary-General,⁽¹²⁾ containing the final report of a 1992 expert group meeting convened at Vancouver, Canada,⁽¹³⁾ to develop a long-term strategy for implementing the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the year 2000 and beyond. The Programme of Action, which provided a policy framework for improving the status of disabled persons, was adopted by the General Assembly in 1982⁽¹⁴⁾ in the context of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992).⁽¹⁵⁾

In October,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on the implementation of the World Programme of Action, which discussed international cooperation, related activities of the United Nations and the monitoring of major policy documents in the field of disability. The Secretary-General stated that expectations for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons had not been fully realized and that the major challenge of the post-Decade era would be to adopt activities with direct benefits for people with disabilities.

He noted that the General Assembly encouraged the consideration of disability issues at several major international events between 1993 and 1995, including the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, the International Year of the Family (1994), the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, and the 1995 World Summit for Social Development.

The Working Group of Ministers, established in 1992 by the International Conference of Ministers Responsible for the Status of Persons with Disabilities,⁽¹⁷⁾ met twice. The first meeting, held in January in Paris, established an international secretariat for the Conference at Montreal, Canada. The second session, at Montreal in April, established two committees on legal, financial and operational issues.

The United Nations Secretariat and the Government of Finland were preparing a manual on the integration of disability issues into national planning and development projects, with a view to their completion and field testing in 1994. Four regional training seminars to strengthen national coordinating committees on disability were scheduled for 1993 and 1994. One was conducted in Nepal in May 1993 for the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation.

The Secretariat continued to collect and publish statistical data on disability, and the International Disability Statistics Database (DISTAT, version 2) was being prepared by the Statistical Office of the United Nations for dissemination in 1993.

On 20 December, in decision 48/428, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/21 without vote.

Positive and full inclusion of persons with disabilities in all aspects of society and the leadership role of the United Nations in the process

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

(For text, see General Assembly resolution 48/95 below.)

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/21

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1993/24); agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/95 without vote.

Positive and full inclusion of persons with disabilities in all aspects of society and the leadership role of the United Nations therein

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the pledge made by States, under the Charter of the United Nations, to take action jointly and separately, in cooperation with the United Nations, to promote higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Reaffirming the commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms, social justice and the dignity and worth of the human person proclaimed in the Charter,

Recalling in particular the international standards of human rights laid down in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Underlining that the rights proclaimed in those instruments should be ensured equally to all individuals without discrimination,

Recalling the provisions safeguarding the rights of women with disabilities in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Having regard to the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons, the Declaration on the Rights of Mentally Retarded Persons, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the Principles for the Protection of Persons with Mental Illness and for the Improvement of Mental Health Care and other relevant instruments adopted by the General Assembly,

Also having regard to the relevant conventions and recommendations adopted by the International Labour Organisation, with particular reference to participation in employment without discrimination for persons with disabilities,

Mindful of the relevant recommendations and work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in particular the World Declaration on Education for All, and of the work of the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned organizations,

Recognizing that the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, and the definition therein of equalization of opportunities reflect the determination of the international community to ensure that the various international instruments and recommendations will be put to practical, concrete and effective use in improving the quality of life of persons with disabilities and their families and communities,

Acknowledging that the objective of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) to implement the World Programme of Action is still valid and requires urgent and continued action,

Recalling that the World Programme of Action is based on concepts that are equally valid in developed and developing countries,

Convinced that intensified efforts are needed to achieve the full and equal enjoyment of human rights and full participation and inclusion in society of persons with disabilities,

Recognizing that persons with disabilities, their families and representatives and organizations concerned with the needs of persons with disabilities must be active partners with States in the planning and implementation of all measures affecting their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26 of 24 May 1990, and reaffirming the specific measures required for the attainment of full equality by persons with disabilities, enumerated in detail in the World Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the commitment of the Commission for Social Development to the provisions and rules set out in the ongoing process of elaborating standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities,

Recognizing also the essential role of the United Nations and the Commission for Social Development in providing leadership and positive guidance to encourage worldwide change by equalizing opportunities, promoting independence and ensuring the full inclusion and participation in society of all persons with disabilities,

Seeking to ensure effective implementation of measures to promote the full inclusion of persons with disabilities in all aspects of society and to affirm the leadership role of the United Nations in that process,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General to maintain the integrity and the identity of the United Nations programme on disabled persons, including the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, in order to promote the equalization of opportunities and full inclusion in society of persons with disabilities;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to strengthen, through redeployment of resources, the United Nations programme on disabled persons in order to enable it:

(a) To represent the needs of persons with disabilities and their families and communities throughout the United Nations system;

(b) To ensure effective coordination and streamlining of efforts to respond to the needs of persons with disabilities, through policy formulation, advocacy and liaison, among all bodies within the United Nations system, particularly the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund;

(c) To promote equal opportunities and full participation of persons with disabilities and their families and representatives within the United Nations system itself;

(d) In cooperation with Member States, bodies within the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and other appropriate agencies, to extend technical assistance and disseminate information in order to enhance the capacity of Member States to develop, implement and evaluate their efforts to equalize opportunities and provide for the full inclusion in society of persons with disabilities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report biennially to the General Assembly on the progress of efforts to ensure the equalization of opportunities and full inclusion of persons with disabilities in the various bodies of the United Nations system;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider, in view of the importance of ensuring that the needs of persons with disabilities and their families and communities are represented in an equitable manner, strengthening and upgrading the status of the Disabled Persons Unit of the Secretariat through redeployment of resources;

5. Reaffirms that the issues of equalization of opportunities and full inclusion in society for persons with disabilities will be an important part of the preparatory process and the agenda of the World Summit for Social Development to be held at Copenhagen on 11 and 12 March 1995;

6. Welcomes with satisfaction the commitment of the Commission for Social Development to ensuring that the needs of persons with disabilities and their families and communities will continue to be addressed in all of its work.

International Day of Disabled Persons

In 1993, the General Assembly recalled with satisfaction the first International Day of Disabled Persons, held on 3 December 1992. (18) It appealed to Governments to observe the Day and reiterated the need to involve disabled persons and their organizations in decisions regarding its celebration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/18 without vote.

International Day of Disabled Persons

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:
(For text, see General Assembly resolution 48/97 below.)

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/18

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1993/24); agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/97 without vote.

International Day of Disabled Persons

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 37/53 of 3 December 1982, in which, inter alia, it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons as a long-term plan of action,

Recalling also its request to the Secretary-General, made in its resolution 45/91 of 14 December 1990, to shift the focus of the United Nations programme on disabled persons from awareness-raising to action, with the aim of achieving a society for all by the year 2010,

Recalling further its resolution 47/3 of 14 October 1992 proclaiming 3 December as the International Day of Disabled Persons,

Noting that, despite an appreciable increase in activities designed to enhance public awareness of the needs and circumstances of people with disabilities and of related issues, there continues to be a need for sustained efforts to overcome physical and social barriers to the full equality and participation of disabled persons,

Aware of the need for broader and more vigorous action and measures at all levels to fulfil the objectives of the Decade and the World Programme of Action,

Bearing in mind that the purpose of the World Programme of Action is to promote effective measures for the prevention of disability, for rehabilitation and for the realization of the goals of full participation of disabled persons in social life and development and of equality, which means opportunities equal to those of the entire population and an equal share in the improvement in living conditions resulting from social and economic development,

1. Notes with satisfaction the number of Member States that celebrated the first International Day of Disabled Persons on 3 December 1992;

2. Appeals to all Governments to observe the International Day of Disabled Persons, using this opportunity to take the lead in awakening the consciousness of populations regarding the gains to be derived by individuals and society from the integration of disabled persons into every area of social, economic and political life;

3. Reiterates the need to involve disabled persons and their organizations in decisions on all matters of concern to them, including the celebration of the International Day of Disabled Persons;

4. Invites Member States to consider a way of linking, each year, the observance of the International Day of Disabled Persons with important United Nations events such as the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the International Year of the Family, to be observed in 1994, the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo in September 1994, the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen in March 1995, and the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing in September 1995;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-fourth session on measures taken by Member States to observe the International Day of Disabled Persons.

General Assembly resolution 48/97

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/627) without vote, 28 October (meeting 18); draft by ESC (A/C.3/48/L.4); agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 11-19, 21, 32; plenary 85.

UN Voluntary Fund

In accordance with a 1992 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons was renamed the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, effective 1 January 1993.

The Fund, under its new name and mandate, was to be used to strengthen technical cooperation activities through the co-financing of field-based projects, with special emphasis on least developed countries and disadvantaged groups.

From 1980 to 1992, the Fund provided more than $3.2 million in co-financing grants to 187 disability-related projects. The majority of projects supported training for disabled persons in developing countries, closely followed by support for technical exchange programmes, support for organizations of and for disabled persons, and data collection and applied research.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/20 without vote.

Development of a plan of action to implement the long-term strategy to further the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/91 of 14 December 1990, in which the Assembly invited Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the agenda for action until the end of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and beyond and the preliminary outline of a long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond: a society for all,

Taking note of the deliberations of the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session and of the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session on the subject of the long-term strategy,

Emphasizing the need to take rapid action in this connection,

Recalling its resolution 1991/9 of 30 May 1991, in which it recommended that a meeting of experts, to be funded by voluntary contributions, should be held in conjunction with the conference entitled "Independence 1992", to be organized in Canada, with the primary objective of drawing up a long-term strategy to implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the year 2000 and beyond,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Expert Group Meeting on a Long-Term Strategy to Further the Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond, held at Vancouver, Canada, from 25 to 29 April 1992, and of the important input of non-governmental organizations of persons with disabilities,

Recognizing that the report represents a significant step forward in the development of a plan of action to implement the long-term strategy,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the strategy outlined in the report of the United Nations Expert Group Meeting on a Long-Term Strategy to Further the Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to develop a draft plan of action based on those views, the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, the report of the Expert Group Meeting, the report of the ad hoc open-ended working group to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons and other recent developments, as appropriate;

3. Recommends that the draft plan of action include priorities and a time-frame for implementation and that it be submitted to the General Assembly for consideration at its forty-eighth session and for approval at its forty-ninth session;

4. Requests that the draft plan of action be developed in consultation with the international non-governmental organizations of persons with disabilities having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/20

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1993/106), orally amended; agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/99 without vote.

Towards full integration of persons with disabilities into society: a continuing world programme of action

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 37/52 and 37/53 of 3 December 1982, 46/96 of 16 December 1991 and 47/88 of 16 December 1992, and recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1992/276 of 30 July 1992 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/48 of 3 March 1992,

Noting the importance of developing and carrying out concrete long-term strategies for the full implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons beyond the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, with the aim of achieving a society for all by the year 2010,

Welcoming the unreserved reaffirmation in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities,

Reaffirming that the efforts of both the developing and the developed countries are indispensable in mobilizing the world's attention and resources to address the problems of persons with disabilities,

Aware of the major obstacles to the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, foremost among them an inadequate allocation of resources,

1. Reaffirms the continuing validity and value of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, which provides a firm and innovative framework for disability-related issues;

2. Reiterates the responsibility of Governments for removing or facilitating the removal of barriers and obstacles to the full integration of persons with disabilities into society, and supports their efforts in developing national policies to reach specific objectives;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give higher priority and visibility to disability issues within the programme of work of the United Nations system by:

(a) Integrating disability issues into the policies, programmes and projects of the specialized agencies on a broader scale and with higher priority, and asking all the specialized agencies to report on their engagement in the disability field;

(b) Asking the United Nations Development Programme to review how a disability component can be incorporated into all its reconstruction programmes on a continuing basis;

(c) Urging the finalization of the ongoing work on the creation of a disability index based on the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities;

(d) Encouraging the activities of the United Nations Children's Fund in promoting prevention and early detection, public awareness and community-based rehabilitation in respect of childhood disabilities;

(e) Publishing a manual on the integration of disability issues into national planning and development projects;

(f) Continuing the work of collecting statistical data about disability matters and finalizing the development of a global disability indicator;

(g) Pursuing his efforts to establish a panel of persons with wide experience in the field of disability, including persons with disabilities, and with due regard to equitable geographical representation, to advise him on disability matters;

(h) Urging Governments to integrate, where possible, disability components into technical assistance and technical cooperation programmes, including the exchange of experience in the disability field under the auspices of the competent specialized agencies;

4. Encourages the consideration during major forthcoming events, including the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held in 1994, the International Year of the Family, to be observed in 1994, the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995, and the World Summit for Social Development, to be held in 1995, of disability issues relevant to their themes;

5. Recommends that the regional commissions and other competent regional organizations be fully utilized to explore the best ways and means to improve the specific situation of persons with disabilities in each region;

6. Invites Member States and the private sector, including competent non-governmental organizations, to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability;

7. Invites Member States and other donors to pay close attention to the increasing number of persons with disabilities as a consequence of poverty and disease, wars and civil strife and demographic and environmental factors, including natural disasters and catastrophic accidents;

8. Commends the launching of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, and the adoption of the Proclamation on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asian and Pacific Region by the intergovernmental meeting to launch the Decade, convened by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Beijing from 1 to 5 December 1992;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on relevant developments concerning the present resolution, in the context of his report on the development of a plan of action to implement the long-term strategy to further the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons.

General Assembly resolution 48/99

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without a vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/627) without vote, 12 November (meeting 32); 32-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.7/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 10f.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, China, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Nicaragua, Norway, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 11-19, 21, 32; plenary 85.

Standard rules

The Commission for Social Development, at its February session, considered a note by the Secretary-General,⁽²⁰⁾ which contained the report of the ad hoc open-ended working group to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons. The draft standard rules were requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1990,⁽²¹⁾ and in 1992⁽²²⁾ the General Assembly urged the Commission to expedite them.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/19 without vote.

Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:
(For text, see General Assembly resolution 48/96 below)

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/19

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1993/24); agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/96 without vote.

Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26 of 24 May 1990, in which the Council authorized the Commission for Social Development to consider, at its thirty-second session, the establishment of an ad hoc open-ended working group of government experts, funded by voluntary contributions, to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled children, youth and adults, in close collaboration with the specialized agencies, other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, especially organizations of disabled persons, and requested the Commission, should it establish such a working group, to finalize the text of those rules for consideration by the Council in 1993 and for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session,

Also recalling that the Commission for Social Development, in its resolution 32/2 of 20 February 1991, decided to establish an ad hoc open-ended working group of government experts in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26,

Noting with appreciation the participation of many States, specialized agencies, intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, especially organizations of disabled persons, in the deliberations of the working group,

Also noting with appreciation the generous financial contributions of Member States to the working group,

Welcoming the fact that the working group was able to fulfil its mandate within three sessions of five working days each,

Acknowledging with appreciation the report of the ad hoc open-ended working group to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities,

Noting the discussion in the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session on the draft standard rules contained in the report of the working group,

1. Adopts the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests Member States to apply the Rules in developing national disability programmes;

3. Urges Member States to meet the requests of the Special Rapporteur for information on the implementation of the Rules;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the implementation of the Rules and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session;

5. Urges Member States to support, financially and otherwise, the implementation of the Standard Rules.

Introduction

Background and current needs

1. There are persons with disabilities in all parts of the world and at all levels in every society. The number of persons with disabilities in the world is large and is growing.

2. Both the causes and the consequences of disability vary throughout the world. Those variations are the result of different socio-economic circumstances and of the different provisions that States make for the well-being of their citizens.

3. Present disability policy is the result of developments over the past 200 years. In many ways it reflects the general living conditions and social and economic policies of different times. In the disability field, however, there are also many specific circumstances that have influenced the living conditions of persons with disabilities. Ignorance, neglect, superstition and fear are social factors that throughout the history of disability have isolated persons with disabilities and delayed their development.

4. Over the years disability policy developed from elementary care at institutions to education for children with disabilities and rehabilitation for persons who became disabled during adult life. Through education and rehabilitation, persons with disabilities became more active and a driving force in the further development of disability policy. Organizations of persons with disabilities, their families and advocates were formed, which advocated better conditions for persons with disabilities. After the Second World War the concepts of integration and normalization were introduced, which reflected a growing awareness of the capabilities of persons with disabilities.

5. Towards the end of the 1960s organizations of persons with disabilities in some countries started to formulate a new concept of disability. That new concept indicated the close connection between the limitation experienced by individuals with disabilities, the design and structure of their environments and the attitude of the general population. At the same time the problems of disability in developing countries were more and more highlighted. In some of those countries the percentage of the population with disabilities was estimated to be very high and, for the most part, persons with disabilities were extremely poor.

Previous international action

6. The rights of persons with disabilities have been the subject of much attention in the United Nations and other international organizations over a long period of time. The most important outcome of the International Year of Disabled Persons, 1981, was the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982. The Year and the World Programme of Action provided a strong impetus for progress in the field. They both emphasized the right of persons with disabilities to the same opportunities as other citizens and to an equal share in the improvements in living conditions resulting from economic and social development. There also, for the first time, handicap was defined as a function of the relationship between persons with disabilities and their environment.

7. The Global Meeting of Experts to Review the Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons at the Mid-Point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons was held at Stockholm in 1987. It was suggested at the Meeting that a guiding philosophy should be developed to indicate the priorities for action in the years ahead. The basis of that philosophy should be the recognition of the rights of persons with disabilities.

8. Consequently, the Meeting recommended that the General Assembly convene a special conference to draft an international convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against persons with disabilities, to be ratified by States by the end of the Decade.

9. A draft outline of the convention was prepared by Italy and presented to the General Assembly at its forty-second session. Further presentations concerning a draft convention were made by Sweden at the forty-fourth session of the Assembly. However, on both occasions, no consensus could be reached on the suitability of such a convention. In the opinion of many representatives, existing human rights documents seemed to guarantee persons with disabilities the same rights as other persons.

Towards standard rules

10. Guided by the deliberations in the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1990, finally agreed to concentrate on the elaboration of an international instrument of a different kind. By its resolution 1990/26 of 24 May 1990, the Council authorized the Commission for Social Development to consider, at its thirty-second session, the establishment of an ad hoc open-ended working group of government experts, funded by voluntary contributions, to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled children, youth and adults, in close collaboration with the specialized agencies, other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, especially organizations of disabled persons. The Council also requested the Commission to finalize the text of those rules for consideration in 1993 and for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

11. The subsequent discussions in the Third Committee of the General Assembly at the forty-fifth session showed that there was wide support for the new initiative to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities.

12. At the thirty-second session of the Commission for Social Development, the initiative for standard rules received the support of a large number of representatives and discussions led to the adoption of resolution 32/2 of 20 February 1991, in which the Commission decided to establish an ad hoc open-ended working group in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26.

Purpose and content of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities

13. The Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities have been developed on the basis of the experience gained during the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992). The International Bill of Human Rights, comprising the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, constitute the political and moral foundation for the Rules.

14. Although the Rules are not compulsory, they can become international customary rules when they are applied by a great number of States with the intention of respecting a rule in international law. They imply a strong moral and political commitment on behalf of States to take action for the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities. Important principles for responsibility, action and cooperation are indicated. Areas of decisive importance for the quality of life and for the achievement of full participation and equality are pointed out. The Rules offer an instrument for policy-making and action to persons with disabilities and their organizations. They provide a basis for technical and economic cooperation among States, the United Nations and other international organizations.

15. The purpose of the Rules is to ensure that girls, boys, women and men with disabilities, as members of their societies, may exercise the same rights and obligations as others. In all societies of the world there are still obstacles preventing persons with disabilities from exercising their rights and freedoms and making it difficult for them to participate fully in the activities of their societies. It is the responsibility of States to take appropriate action to remove such obstacles. Persons with disabilities and their organizations should play an active role as partners in this process. The equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities is an essential contribution in the general and worldwide effort to mobilize human resources. Special attention may need to be directed towards groups such as women, children, the elderly, the poor, migrant workers, persons with dual or multiple disabilities, indigenous people and ethnic minorities. In addition, there are a large number of refugees with disabilities who have special needs requiring attention.

Fundamental concepts in disability policy

16. The concepts set out below appear throughout the Rules. They are essentially built on the concepts in the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. In some cases they reflect the development that has taken place during the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons.

Disability and handicap

17. The term "disability" summarizes a great number of different functional limitations occurring in any population in any country of the world. People may be disabled by physical, intellectual or sensory impairment, medical conditions or mental illness. Such impairments, conditions or illnesses may be permanent or transitory in nature.

18. The term "handicap" means the loss or limitation of opportunities to take part in the life of the community on an equal level with others. It describes the encounter between the person with a disability and the environment. The purpose of this term is to emphasize the focus on the shortcomings in the environment and in many organized activities in society, for example, information, communication and education, which prevent persons with disabilities from participating on equal terms.

19. The use of the two terms "disability" and "handicap", as defined in paragraphs 17 and 18 above, should be seen in the light of modern disability history. During the 1970s there was a strong reaction among representatives of organizations of persons with disabilities and professionals in the field of disability against the terminology of the time. The terms "disability" and "handicap" were often used in an unclear and confusing way, which gave poor guidance for policy-making and for political action. The terminology reflected a medical and diagnostic approach, which ignored the imperfections and deficiencies of the surrounding society.

20. In 1980, the World Health Organization adopted an international classification of impairments, disabilities and handicaps, which suggested a more precise and at the same time relativistic approach. The International Classification of Impairments, Disabilities and Handicaps makes a clear distinction between "impairment," "disability" and "handicap". It has been extensively used in areas such as rehabilitation, education, statistics, policy, legislation, demography, sociology, economics and anthropology. Some users have expressed concern that the Classification, in its definition of the term "handicap", may still be considered too medical and too centred on the individual, and may not adequately clarify the interaction between societal conditions or expectations and the abilities of the individual. Those concerns, and others expressed by users during the 12 years since its publication, will be addressed in forthcoming revisions of the Classification.

21. As a result of experience gained in the implementation of the World Programme of Action and of the general discussion that took place during the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, there was a deepening of knowledge and extension of understanding concerning disability issues and the terminology used. Current terminology recognizes the necessity of addressing both the individual needs (such as rehabilitation and technical aids) and the shortcomings of the society (various obstacles for participation).

Prevention

22. The term "prevention" means action aimed at preventing the occurrence of physical, intellectual, psychiatric or sensory impairments (primary prevention) or at preventing impairments from causing a permanent functional limitation or disability (secondary prevention). Prevention may include many different types of action, such as primary health care, prenatal and postnatal care, education in nutrition, immunization campaigns against communicable diseases, measures to control endemic diseases, safety regulations, programmes for the prevention of accidents in different environments, including adaptation of workplaces to prevent occupational disabilities and diseases, and prevention of disability resulting from pollution of the environment or armed conflict.

Rehabilitation

23. The term "rehabilitation" refers to a process aimed at enabling persons with disabilities to reach and maintain their optimal physical, sensory, intellectual, psychiatric and/or social functional levels, thus providing them with the tools to change their lives towards a higher level of independence. Rehabilitation may include measures to provide and/or restore functions, or compensate for the loss or absence of a function or for a functional limitation. The rehabilitation process does not involve initial medical care. It includes a wide range of measures and activities from more basic and general rehabilitation to goal-oriented activities, for instance vocational rehabilitation.

Equalization of opportunities

24. The term "equalization of opportunities" means the process through which the various systems of society and the environment, such as services, activities, information and documentation, are made available to all, particularly to persons with disabilities.

25. The principle of equal rights implies that the needs of each and every individual are of equal importance, that those needs must be made the basis for the planning of societies and that all resources must be employed in such a way as to ensure that every individual has equal opportunity for participation.

26. Persons with disabilities are members of society and have the right to remain within their local communities. They should receive the support they need within the ordinary structures of education, health, employment and social services.

27. As persons with disabilities achieve equal rights, they should also have equal obligations. As those rights are being achieved, societies should raise their expectations of persons with disabilities. As part of the process of equal opportunities, provision should be made to assist persons with disabilities to assume their full responsibility as members of society.

Preamble

States,

Mindful of the pledge made, under the Charter of the United Nations, to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization to promote higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Reaffirming the commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms, social justice and the dignity and worth of the human person proclaimed in the Charter,

Recalling in particular the international standards on human rights, which have been laid down in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Underlining that those instruments proclaim that the rights recognized therein should be ensured equally to all individuals without discrimination,

Recalling the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability and requires special measures to ensure the rights of children with disabilities, and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, which provides for some protective measures against disability,

Recalling also the provisions in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to ensure the rights of girls and women with disabilities,

Having regard to the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons, the Declaration on the Rights of Mentally Retarded Persons, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the Principles for the Protection of Persons with Mental Illness and for the Improvement of Mental Health Care and other relevant instruments adopted by the General Assembly,

Also having regard to the relevant conventions and recommendations adopted by the International Labour Organisation, with particular reference to participation in employment without discrimination for persons with disabilities,

Mindful of the relevant recommendations and work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in particular the World Declaration on Education for All, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned organizations,

Having regard to the commitment made by States concerning the protection of the environment,

Mindful of the devastation caused by armed conflict and deploring the use of scarce resources in the production of weapons,

Recognizing that the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the definition therein of equalization of opportunities represent earnest ambitions on the part of the international community to render those various international instruments and recommendations of practical and concrete significance,

Acknowledging that the objective of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) to implement the World Programme of Action is still valid and requires urgent and continued action,

Recalling that the World Programme of Action is based on concepts that are equally valid in developing and industrialized countries,

Convinced that intensified efforts are needed to achieve the full and equal enjoyment of human rights and participation in society by persons with disabilities,

Re-emphasizing that persons with disabilities, and their parents, guardians, advocates and organizations, must be active partners with States in the planning and implementation of all measures affecting their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights,

In pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26, and basing themselves on the specific measures required for the attainment by persons with disabilities of equality with others, enumerated in detail in the World Programme of Action,

Have adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities outlined below, in order:

(a) To stress that all action in the field of disability presupposes adequate knowledge and experience of the conditions and special needs of persons with disabilities;

(b) To emphasize that the process through which every aspect of societal organization is made accessible to all is a basic objective of socio-economic development;

(c) To outline crucial aspects of social policies in the field of disability, including, as appropriate, the active encouragement of technical and economic cooperation;

(d) To provide models for the political decision-making process required for the attainment of equal opportunities, bearing in mind the widely differing technical and economic levels, the fact that the process must reflect keen understanding of the cultural context within which it takes place and the crucial role of persons with disabilities in it;

(e) To propose national mechanisms for close collaboration among States, the organs of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental bodies and organizations of persons with disabilities;

(f) To propose an effective machinery for monitoring the process by which States seek to attain the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities.

I. Preconditions for Equal Participation

Rule 1. Awareness-raising

States should take action to raise awareness in society about persons with disabilities, their rights, their needs, their potential and their contribution.

1. States should ensure that responsible authorities distribute up-to-date information on available programmes and services to persons with disabilities, their families, professionals in the field and the general public. Information to persons with disabilities should be presented in accessible form.

2. States should initiate and support information campaigns concerning persons with disabilities and disability policies, conveying the message that persons with disabilities are citizens with the same rights and obligations as others, thus justifying measures to remove all obstacles to full participation.

3. States should encourage the portrayal of persons with disabilities by the mass media in a positive way; organizations of persons with disabilities should be consulted on this matter.

4. States should ensure that public education programmes reflect in all their aspects the principle of full participation and equality.

5. States should invite persons with disabilities and their families and organizations to participate in public education programmes concerning disability matters.

6. States should encourage enterprises in the private sector to include disability issues in all aspects of their activity.

7. States should initiate and promote programmes aimed at raising the level of awareness of persons with disabilities concerning their rights and potential. Increased self-reliance and empowerment will assist persons with disabilities to take advantage of the opportunities available to them.

8. Awareness-raising should be an important part of the education of children with disabilities and in rehabilitation programmes. Persons with disabilities could also assist one another in awareness-raising through the activities of their own organizations.

9. Awareness-raising should be part of the education of all children and should be a component of teacher-training courses and training of all professionals.

Rule 2. Medical care

States should ensure the provision of effective medical care to persons with disabilities.

1. States should work towards the provision of programmes run by multidisciplinary teams of professionals for early detection, assessment and treatment of impairment. This could prevent, reduce or eliminate disabling effects. Such programmes should ensure the full participation of persons with disabilities and their families at the individual level, and of organizations of persons with disabilities at the planning and evaluation level.

2. Local community workers should be trained to participate in areas such as early detection of impairments, the provision of primary assistance and referral to appropriate services.

3. States should ensure that persons with disabilities, particularly infants and children, are provided with the same level of medical care within the same system as other members of society.

4. States should ensure that all medical and paramedical personnel are adequately trained and equipped to give medical care to persons with disabilities and that they have access to relevant treatment methods and technology.

5. States should ensure that medical, paramedical and related personnel are adequately trained so that they do not give inappropriate advice to parents, thus restricting options for their children. This training should be an ongoing process and should be based on the latest information available.

6. States should ensure that persons with disabilities are provided with any regular treatment and medicines they may need to preserve or improve their level of functioning.

Rule 3. Rehabilitation^a

States should ensure the provision of rehabilitation services to persons with disabilities in order for them to reach and sustain their optimum level of independence and functioning.

1. States should develop national rehabilitation programmes for all groups of persons with disabilities. Such programmes should be based on the actual individual needs of persons with disabilities and on the principles of full participation and equality.

2. Such programmes should include a wide range of activities, such as basic skills training to improve or compensate for an affected function, counselling of persons with disabilities and their families, developing self-reliance, and occasional services such as assessment and guidance.

3. All persons with disabilities, including persons with severe and/or multiple disabilities, who require rehabilitation should have access to it.

4. Persons with disabilities and their families should be able to participate in the design and organization of rehabilitation services concerning themselves.

5. All rehabilitation services should be available in the local community where the person with disabilities lives. However, in some instances, in order to attain a certain training objective, special time-limited rehabilitation courses may be organized, where appropriate, in residential form.

6. Persons with disabilities and their families should be encouraged to involve themselves in rehabilitation, for instance as trained teachers, instructors or counsellors.

7. States should draw upon the expertise of organizations of persons with disabilities when formulating or evaluating rehabilitation programmes.

Rule 4. Support services

States should ensure the development and supply of support services, including assistive devices for persons with disabilities, to assist them to increase their level of independence in their daily living and to exercise their rights.

1. States should ensure the provision of assistive devices and equipment, personal assistance and interpreter services, according to the needs of persons with disabilities, as important measures to achieve the equalization of opportunities.

2. States should support the development, production, distribution and servicing of assistive devices and equipment and the dissemination of knowledge about them.

3. To achieve this, generally available technical know-how should be utilized. In States where high-technology industry is available, it should be fully utilized to improve the standard and effectiveness of assistive devices and equipment. It is important to stimulate the development and production of simple and inexpensive devices, using local material and local production facilities when possible. Persons with disabilities themselves could be involved in the production of those devices.

4. States should recognize that all persons with disabilities who need assistive devices should have access to them as appropriate, including financial accessibility. This may mean that assistive devices and equipment should be provided free of charge or at such a low price that persons with disabilities or their families can afford to buy them.

5. In rehabilitation programmes for the provision of assistive devices and equipment, States should consider the special requirements of girls and boys with disabilities concerning the design, durability and age-appropriateness of assistive devices and equipment.

6. States should support the development and provision of personal assistance programmes and interpretation services, especially for persons with severe and/or multiple disabilities. Such programmes would increase the level of participation of persons with disabilities in everyday life at home, at work, in school and during leisure-time activities.

7. Personal assistance programmes should be designed in such a way that the persons with disabilities using the programmes have a decisive influence on the way in which the programmes are delivered.

II. Target Areas for Equal Participation

Rule 5. Accessibility

States should recognize the overall importance of accessibility in the process of the equalization of opportunities in all spheres of society. For persons with disabilities of any kind, States should (a) introduce programmes of action to make the physical environment accessible; and (b) undertake measures to provide access to information and communication.

^aRehabilitation is a fundamental concept in disability policy and is defined above in paragraph 23 of the introduction.

(a) Access to the physical environment

1. States should initiate measures to remove the obstacles to participation in the physical environment. Such measures should be to develop standards and guidelines and to consider enacting legislation to ensure accessibility to various areas in society, such as housing, buildings, public transport services and other means of transportation, streets and other outdoor environments.

2. States should ensure that architects, construction engineers and others who are professionally involved in the design and construction of the physical environment have access to adequate information on disability policy and measures to achieve accessibility.

3. Accessibility requirements should be included in the design and construction of the physical environment from the beginning of the designing process.

4. Organizations of persons with disabilities should be consulted when standards and norms for accessibility are being developed. They should also be involved locally from the initial planning stage when public construction projects are being designed, thus ensuring maximum accessibility.

(b) Access to information and communication

5. Persons with disabilities and, where appropriate, their families and advocates should have access to full information on diagnosis, rights and available services and programmes, at all stages. Such information should be presented in forms accessible to people with disabilities.

6. States should develop strategies to make information services and documentation accessible for different groups of persons with disabilities. Braille, tape services, large print and other appropriate technologies should be used to provide access to written information and documentation for persons with visual impairments. Similarly, appropriate technologies should be used to provide access to spoken information for persons with auditory impairments or comprehension difficulties.

7. Consideration should be given to the use of sign language in the education of deaf children, in their families and communities. Sign language interpretation services should also be provided to facilitate the communication between deaf persons and others.

8. Consideration should also be given to the needs of people with other communication disabilities.

9. States should encourage the media, especially television, radio and newspapers, to make their services accessible.

10. States should ensure that new computerized information and service systems offered to the general public are either made initially accessible or are adapted to be made accessible to persons with disabilities.

11. Organizations of persons with disabilities should be consulted when measures to make information services accessible are being developed.

Rule 6. Education

States should recognize the principle of equal primary, secondary and tertiary educational opportunities for children, youth and adults with disabilities, in integrated settings. They should ensure that the education of persons with disabilities is an integral part of the educational system.

1. General educational authorities are responsible for the education of persons with disabilities in integrated settings. Education for persons with disabilities should form an integral part of national educational planning, curriculum development and school organization.

2. Education in mainstream schools presupposes the provision of interpreter and other appropriate support services. Adequate accessibility and support services, designed to meet the needs of persons with different disabilities, should be provided.

3. Parent groups and organizations of persons with disabilities should be involved in the education process at all levels.

4. In States where education is compulsory it should be provided to girls and boys with all kinds and all levels of disabilities, including the most severe.

5. Special attention should be given in the following areas:

(a) Very young children with disabilities;

(b) Pre-school children with disabilities;

(c) Adults with disabilities, particularly women.

6. To accommodate educational provisions for persons with disabilities in the mainstream, States should:

(a) Have a clearly stated policy, understood and accepted at the school level and by the wider community;

(b) Allow for curriculum flexibility, addition and adaptation;

(c) Provide for quality materials, ongoing teacher training and support teachers.

7. Integrated education and community-based programmes should be seen as complementary approaches in providing cost-effective education and training for persons with disabilities. National community-based programmes should encourage communities to use and develop their resources to provide local education to persons with disabilities.

8. In situations where the general school system does not yet adequately meet the needs of all persons with disabilities, special education may be considered. It should be aimed at preparing students for education in the general school system. The quality of such education should reflect the same standards and ambitions as general education and should be closely linked to it. At a minimum, students with disabilities should be afforded the same portion of educational resources as students without disabilities. States should aim for the gradual integration of special education services into mainstream education. It is acknowledged that in some instances special education may currently be considered to be the most appropriate form of education for some students with disabilities.

9. Owing to the particular communication needs of deaf and deaf/blind persons, their education may be more suitably provided in schools for such persons or special classes and units in mainstream schools. At the initial stage, in particular, special attention needs to be focused on culturally sensitive instruction that will result in effective communication skills and maximum independence for people who are deaf or deaf/blind.

Rule 7. Employment

States should recognize the principle that persons with disabilities must be empowered to exercise their human rights, particularly in the field of employment. In both rural and urban areas they must have equal opportunities for productive and gainful employment in the labour market.

1. Laws and regulations in the employment field must not discriminate against persons with disabilities and must not raise obstacles to their employment.

2. States should actively support the integration of persons with disabilities into open employment. This active support could occur through a variety of measures, such as vocational training, incentive-oriented quota schemes, reserved or designated employment, loans or grants for small business, exclusive contracts or priority production rights, tax concessions, contract compliance or other technical or financial assistance to enterprises employing workers with disabilities. States should also encourage employers to make reasonable adjustments to accommodate persons with disabilities.

3. States' action programmes should include:

(a) Measures to design and adapt workplaces and work premises in such a way that they become accessible to persons with different disabilities;

(b) Support for the use of new technologies and the development and production of assistive devices, tools and equipment and measures to facilitate access to such devices and equipment for persons with disabilities to enable them to gain and maintain employment;

(c) Provision of appropriate training and placement and ongoing support such as personal assistance and interpreter services.

4. States should initiate and support public awareness-raising campaigns designed to overcome negative attitudes and prejudices concerning workers with disabilities.

5. In their capacity as employers, States should create favourable conditions for the employment of persons with disabilities in the public sector.

6. States, workers' organizations and employers should cooperate to ensure equitable recruitment and promotion policies, employment conditions, rates of pay, measures to improve the work environment in order to prevent injuries and impairments and measures for the rehabilitation of employees who have sustained employment-related injuries.

7. The aim should always be for persons with disabilities to obtain employment in the open labour market. For persons with disabilities whose needs cannot be met in open employment, small units of sheltered or supported employment may be an alternative. It is important that the quality of such programmes be assessed in terms of their relevance and sufficiency in providing opportunities for persons with disabilities to gain employment in the labour market.

8. Measures should be taken to include persons with disabilities in training and employment programmes in the private and informal sectors.

9. States, workers' organizations and employers should cooperate with organizations of persons with disabilities concerning all measures to create training and employment opportunities, including flexible hours, part-time work, job-sharing, self-employment and attendant care for persons with disabilities.

Rule 8. Income maintenance and social security

States are responsible for the provision of social security and income maintenance for persons with disabilities.

1. States should ensure the provision of adequate income support to persons with disabilities who, owing to disability or disability-related factors, have temporarily lost or received a reduction in their income or have been denied employment opportunities. States should ensure that the provision of support takes into account the costs frequently incurred by persons with disabilities and their families as a result of the disability.

2. In countries where social security, social insurance or other social welfare schemes exist or are being developed for the general population, States should ensure that such systems do not exclude or discriminate against persons with disabilities.

3. States should also ensure the provision of income support and social security protection to individuals who undertake the care of a person with a disability.

4. Social security systems should include incentives to restore the income-earning capacity of persons with disabilities. Such systems should provide or contribute to the organization, development and financing of vocational training. They should also assist with placement services.

5. Social security programmes should also provide incentives for persons with disabilities to seek employment in order to establish or re-establish their income-earning capacity.

6. Income support should be maintained as long as the disabling conditions remain in a manner that does not discourage persons with disabilities from seeking employment. It should only be reduced or terminated when persons with disabilities achieve adequate and secure income.

7. States, in countries where social security is to a large extent provided by the private sector, should encourage local communities, welfare organizations and families to develop self-help measures and incentives for employment or employment-related activities for persons with disabilities.

Rule 9. Family life and personal integrity

States should promote the full participation of persons with disabilities in family life. They should promote their right to personal integrity and ensure that laws do not discriminate against persons with disabilities with respect to sexual relationships, marriage and parenthood.

1. Persons with disabilities should be enabled to live with their families. States should encourage the inclusion in family counselling of appropriate modules regarding disability and its effects on family life. Respite-care and attendant-care services should be made available to families which include a person with disabilities. States should remove all unnecessary obstacles to persons who want to foster or adopt a child or adult with disabilities.

2. Persons with disabilities must not be denied the opportunity to experience their sexuality, have sexual relationships and experience parenthood. Taking into account that persons with disabilities may experience difficulties in getting married and setting up a family, States should encourage the availability of appropriate counselling. Persons with disabilities must have the same access as others to family-planning methods, as well as to information in accessible form on the sexual functioning of their bodies.

3. States should promote measures to change negative attitudes towards marriage, sexuality and parenthood of persons with disabilities, especially of girls and women with disabilities, which still prevail in society. The media should be encouraged to play an important role in removing such negative attitudes.

4. Persons with disabilities and their families need to be fully informed about taking precautions against sexual and other forms of abuse. Persons with disabilities are particularly vulnerable to abuse in the family, community or institutions and need to be educated on how to avoid the occurrence of abuse, recognize when abuse has occurred and report on such acts.

Rule 10. Culture

States will ensure that persons with disabilities are integrated into and can participate in cultural activities on an equal basis.

1. States should ensure that persons with disabilities have the opportunity to utilize their creative, artistic and intellectual potential, not only for their own benefit, but also for the enrichment of their community, be they in urban or rural areas. Examples of such activities are dance, music, literature, theatre, plastic arts, painting and sculpture. Particularly in developing countries, emphasis should be placed on traditional and contemporary art forms, such as puppetry, recitation and story-telling.

2. States should promote the accessibility to and availability of places for cultural performances and services, such as theatres, museums, cinemas and libraries, to persons with disabilities.

3. States should initiate the development and use of special technical arrangements to make literature, films and theatre accessible to persons with disabilities.

Rule 11. Recreation and sports

States will take measures to ensure that persons with disabilities have equal opportunities for recreation and sports.

1. States should initiate measures to make places for recreation and sports, hotels, beaches, sports arenas, gym halls etc. accessible to persons with disabilities. Such measures should encompass support for staff in recreation and sports programmes, including projects to develop methods of accessibility, and participation, information and training programmes.

2. Tourist authorities, travel agencies, hotels, voluntary organizations and others involved in organizing recreational activities or travel opportunities should offer their services to all, taking into account the special needs of persons with disabilities. Suitable training should be provided to assist that process.

3. Sports organizations should be encouraged to develop opportunities for participation by persons with disabilities in sports activities. In some cases, accessibility measures could be enough to open up opportunities for participation. In other cases, special arrangements or special games would be needed. States should support the participation of persons with disabilities in national and international events.

4. Persons with disabilities participating in sports activities should have access to instruction and training of the same quality as other participants.

5. Organizers of sports and recreation should consult with organizations of persons with disabilities when developing their services for persons with disabilities.

Rule 12. Religion

States will encourage measures for equal participation by persons with disabilities in the religious life of their communities.

1. States should encourage, in consultation with religious authorities, measures to eliminate discrimination and make religious activities accessible to persons with disabilities.

2. States should encourage the distribution of information on disability matters to religious institutions and organizations. States should also encourage religious authorities to include information on disability policies in the training for religious professions, as well as in religious education programmes.

3. They should also encourage the accessibility of religious literature to persons with sensory impairments.

4. States and/or religious organizations should consult with organizations of persons with disabilities when developing measures for equal participation in religious activities.

III. Implementation Measures

Rule 13. Information and research

States assume the ultimate responsibility for the collection and dissemination of information on the living conditions of persons with disabilities and promote comprehensive research on all aspects, including obstacles that affect the lives of persons with disabilities.

1. States should, at regular intervals, collect gender-specific statistics and other information concerning the living conditions of persons with disabilities. Such data collection could be conducted in conjunction with national censuses and household surveys and could be undertaken in close collaboration, inter alia, with universities, research institutes and organizations of persons with disabilities. The data collection should include questions on programmes and services and their use.

2. States should consider establishing a data bank on disability, which would include statistics on available services and programmes as well as on the different groups of persons with disabilities. They should bear in mind the need to protect individual privacy and personal integrity.

3. States should initiate and support programmes of research on social, economic and participation issues that affect the lives of persons with disabilities and their families. Such research should include studies on the causes, types and frequencies of disabilities, the availability and efficacy of existing programmes and the need for development and evaluation of services and support measures.

4. States should develop and adopt terminology and criteria for the conduct of national surveys, in cooperation with organizations of persons with disabilities.

5. States should facilitate the participation of persons with disabilities in data collection and research. To undertake such research, States should particularly encourage the recruitment of qualified persons with disabilities.

6. States should support the exchange of research findings and experiences.

7. States should take measures to disseminate information and knowledge on disability to all political and administration levels within national, regional and local spheres.

Rule 14. Policy-making and planning

States will ensure that disability aspects are included in all relevant policy-making and national planning.

1. States should initiate and plan adequate policies for persons with disabilities at the national level, and stimulate and support action at regional and local levels.

2. States should involve organizations of persons with disabilities in all decision-making relating to plans and programmes concerning persons with disabilities or affecting their economic and social status.

3. The needs and concerns of persons with disabilities should be incorporated into general development plans and not be treated separately.

4. The ultimate responsibility of States for the situation of persons with disabilities does not relieve others of their responsibility. Anyone in charge of services, activities or the provision of information in society should be encouraged to accept responsibility for making such programmes available to persons with disabilities.

5. States should facilitate the development by local communities of programmes and measures for persons with disabilities. One way of doing this could be to develop manuals or check-lists and provide training programmes for local staff.

Rule 15. Legislation

States have a responsibility to create the legal bases for measures to achieve the objectives of full participation and equality for persons with disabilities.

1. National legislation, embodying the rights and obligations of citizens, should include the rights and obligations of persons with disabilities. States are under an obligation to enable persons with disabilities to exercise their rights, including their human, civil and political rights, on an equal basis with other citizens. States must ensure that organizations of persons with disabilities are involved in the development of national legislation concerning the rights of persons with disabilities, as well as in the ongoing evaluation of that legislation.

2. Legislative action may be needed to remove conditions that may adversely affect the lives of persons with disabilities, including harassment and victimization. Any discriminatory provisions against persons with disabilities must be eliminated. National legislation should provide for appropriate sanctions in case of violations of the principles of non-discrimination.

3. National legislation concerning persons with disabilities may appear in two different forms. The rights and obligations may be incorporated in general legislation or contained in special legislation. Special legislation for persons with disabilities may be established in several ways:

(a) By enacting separate legislation, dealing exclusively with disability matters;

(b) By including disability matters within legislation on particular topics;

(c) By mentioning persons with disabilities specifically in the texts that serve to interpret existing legislation.

A combination of those different approaches might be desirable. Affirmative action provisions may also be considered.

4. States may consider establishing formal statutory complaints mechanisms in order to protect the interests of persons with disabilities.

Rule 16. Economic policies

States have the financial responsibility for national programmes and measures to create equal opportunities for persons with disabilities.

1. States should include disability matters in the regular budgets of all national, regional and local government bodies.

2. States, non-governmental organizations and other interested bodies should interact to determine the most effective ways of supporting projects and measures relevant to persons with disabilities.

3. States should consider the use of economic measures (loans, tax exemptions, earmarked grants, special funds, and so on) to stimulate and support equal participation by persons with disabilities in society.

4. In many States it may be advisable to establish a disability development fund, which could support various pilot projects and self-help programmes at the grass-roots level.

Rule 17. Coordination of work

States are responsible for the establishment and strengthening of national coordinating committees, or similar bodies, to serve as a national focal point on disability matters.

1. The national coordinating committee or similar bodies should be permanent and based on legal as well as appropriate administrative regulation.

2. A combination of representatives of private and public organizations is most likely to achieve an inter-sectoral and multidisciplinary composition. Representatives could be drawn from concerned government ministries, organizations of persons with disabilities and non-governmental organizations.

3. Organizations of persons with disabilities should have considerable influence in the national coordinating committee in order to ensure proper feedback of their concerns.

4. The national coordinating committee should be provided with sufficient autonomy and resources to fulfil its responsibilities in relation to its decision-making capacities. It should report to the highest governmental level.

Rule 18. Organizations of persons with disabilities

States should recognize the right of the organizations of persons with disabilities to represent persons with disabilities at national, regional and local levels. States should also recognize the advisory role of organizations of persons with disabilities in decision-making on disability matters.

1. States should encourage and support economically and in other ways the formation and strengthening of organizations of persons with disabilities, family members and/or advocates. States should recognize that those organizations have a role to play in the development of disability policy.

2. States should establish ongoing communication with organizations of persons with disabilities and ensure their participation in the development of government policies.

3. The role of organizations of persons with disabilities could be to identify needs and priorities, to participate in the planning, implementation and evaluation of services and measures concerning the lives of persons with disabilities, and to contribute to public awareness and to advocate change.

4. As instruments of self-help, organizations of persons with disabilities provide and promote opportunities for the development of skills in various fields, mutual support among members and information sharing.

5. Organizations of persons with disabilities could perform their advisory role in many different ways such as having permanent representation on boards of government-funded agencies, serving on public commissions and providing expert knowledge on different projects.

6. The advisory role of organizations of persons with disabilities should be ongoing in order to develop and deepen the exchange of views and information between the State and the organizations.

7. Organizations should be permanently represented on the national coordinating committee or similar bodies.

8. The role of local organizations of persons with disabilities should be developed and strengthened to ensure that they influence matters at the community level.

Rule 19. Personnel training

States are responsible for ensuring the adequate training of personnel, at all levels, involved in the planning and provision of programmes and services concerning persons with disabilities.

1. States should ensure that all authorities providing services in the disability field give adequate training to their personnel.

2. In the training of professionals in the disability field, as well as in the provision of information on disability in general training programmes, the principle of full participation and equality should be appropriately reflected.

3. States should develop training programmes in consultation with organizations of persons with disabilities, and persons with disabilities should be involved as teachers, instructors or advisers in staff training programmes.

4. The training of community workers is of great strategic importance, particularly in developing countries. It should involve persons with disabilities and include the development of appropriate values, competence and technologies as well as skills which can be practised by persons with disabilities, their parents, families and members of the community.

Rule 20. National monitoring and evaluation of disability programmes in the implementation of the Rules

States are responsible for the continuous monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of national programmes and services concerning the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities.

1. States should periodically and systematically evaluate national disability programmes and disseminate both the bases and the results of the evaluations.

2. States should develop and adopt terminology and criteria for the evaluation of disability-related programmes and services.

3. Such criteria and terminology should be developed in close cooperation with organizations of persons with disabilities from the earliest conceptual and planning stages.

4. States should participate in international cooperation in order to develop common standards for national evaluation in the disability field. States should encourage national coordinating committees to participate also.

5. The evaluation of various programmes in the disability field should be built in at the planning stage, so that the overall efficacy in fulfilling their policy objectives can be evaluated.

Rule 21. Technical and economic cooperation

States, both industrialized and developing, have the responsibility to cooperate in and take measures for the improvement of the living conditions of persons with disabilities in developing countries.

1. Measures to achieve the equalization of opportunities of persons with disabilities, including refugees with disabilities, should be integrated into general development programmes.

2. Such measures must be integrated into all forms of technical and economic cooperation, bilateral and multilateral, governmental and non-governmental. States should bring up disability issues in discussions on such cooperation with their counterparts.

3. When planning and reviewing programmes of technical and economic cooperation, special attention should be given to the effects of such programmes on the situation of persons with disabilities. It is of the utmost importance that persons with disabilities and their organizations are consulted on any development projects designed for persons with disabilities. They should be directly involved in the development, implementation and evaluation of such projects.

4. Priority areas for technical and economic cooperation should include:

(a) The development of human resources through the development of skills, abilities and potentials of persons with disabilities and the initiation of employment-generating activities for and of persons with disabilities;

(b) The development and dissemination of appropriate disability-related technologies and know-how.

5. States are also encouraged to support the formation and strengthening of organizations of persons with disabilities.

6. States should take measures to improve the knowledge of disability issues among staff involved at all levels in the administration of technical and economic cooperation programmes.

Rule 22. International cooperation

States will participate actively in international cooperation concerning policies for the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities.

1. Within the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other concerned intergovernmental organizations, States should participate in the development of disability policy.

2. Whenever appropriate, States should introduce disability aspects in general negotiations concerning standards, information exchange, development programmes, etc.

3. States should encourage and support the exchange of knowledge and experience among:

(a) Non-governmental organizations concerned with disability issues;

(b) Research institutions and individual researchers involved in disability issues;

(c) Representatives of field programmes and of professional groups in the disability field;

(d) Organizations of persons with disabilities;

(e) National coordinating committees.

4. States should ensure that the United Nations and the specialized agencies, as well as all intergovernmental and interparliamentary bodies, at global and regional levels, include in their work the global and regional organizations of persons with disabilities.

IV. Monitoring Mechanism

1. The purpose of a monitoring mechanism is to further the effective implementation of the Rules. It will assist each State in assessing its level of implementation of the Rules and in measuring its progress. The monitoring should identify obstacles and suggest suitable measures that would contribute to the successful implementation of the Rules. The monitoring mechanism will recognize the economic, social and cultural features existing in individual States. An important element should also be the provision of advisory services and the exchange of experience and information between States.

2. The Rules shall be monitored within the framework of the sessions of the Commission for Social Development. A Special Rapporteur with relevant and extensive experience in disability issues and international organizations shall be appointed, if necessary, funded by extrabudgetary resources, for three years to monitor the implementation of the Rules.

3. International organizations of persons with disabilities having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and organizations representing persons with disabilities who have not yet formed their own organizations should be invited to create among themselves a panel of experts, on which organizations of persons with disabilities shall have a majority, taking into account the different kinds of disabilities and necessary equitable geographical distribution, to be consulted by the Special Rapporteur and, when appropriate, by the Secretariat.

4. The panel of experts will be encouraged by the Special Rapporteur to review, advise and provide feedback and suggestions on the promotion, implementation and monitoring of the Rules.

5. The Special Rapporteur shall send a set of questions to States, entities within the United Nations system, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including organizations of persons with disabilities. The set of questions should address implementation plans for the Rules in States. The questions should be selective in nature and cover a number of specific rules for in-depth evaluation. In preparing the questions the Special Rapporteur should consult with the panel of experts and the Secretariat.

6. The Special Rapporteur shall seek to establish a direct dialogue not only with States but also with local non-governmental organizations, seeking their views and comments on any information intended to be included in the reports. The Special Rapporteur shall provide advisory services on the implementation and monitoring of the Rules and assistance in the preparation of replies to the sets of questions.

7. The Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat, as the United Nations focal point on disability issues, the United Nations Development Programme and other entities and mechanisms within the United Nations system, such as the regional commissions and specialized agencies and inter-agency meetings, shall cooperate with the Special Rapporteur in the implementation and monitoring of the Rules at the national level.

8. The Special Rapporteur, assisted by the Secretariat, shall prepare reports for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth sessions. In preparing such reports, the Rapporteur should consult with the panel of experts.

9. States should encourage national coordinating committees or similar bodies to participate in implementation and monitoring. As the focal points on disability matters at the national level, they should be encouraged to establish procedures to coordinate the monitoring of the Rules. Organizations of persons with disabilities should be encouraged to be actively involved in the monitoring of the process at all levels.

10. Should extrabudgetary resources be identified, one or more positions of interregional adviser on the Rules should be created to provide direct services to States, including:

(a) The organization of national and regional training seminars on the content of the Rules;

(b) The development of guidelines to assist in strategies for implementation of the Rules;

(c) Dissemination of information about best practices concerning implementation of the Rules.

11. At its thirty-fourth session, the Commission for Social Development should establish an open-ended working group to examine the Special Rapporteur's report and make recommendations on how to improve the application of the Rules. In examining the Special Rapporteur's report, the Commission, through its open-ended working group, shall consult international organizations of persons with disabilities and specialized agencies, in accordance with rules 71 and 76 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council.

12. At its session following the end of the Special Rapporteur's mandate, the Commission should examine the possibility of either renewing that mandate, appointing a new Special Rapporteur or considering another monitoring mechanism, and should make appropriate recommendations to the Economic and Social Council.

13. States should be encouraged to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability in order to further the implementation of the Rules.

General Assembly resolution 48/96

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/627) without vote, 28 October (meeting 18); draft by ESC (A/C.3/48/L.3); agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 11-19, 21, 32; plenary 85.

Tobacco or health

The Economic and Social Council had before it, in January, a 29 June 1992 note⁽²³⁾ by the WHO Director-General transmitting a 1992 World Health Assembly resolution and requesting that the subject "tobacco or health" be put on the agenda of the Economic and Social Council's 1993 session for discussion and follow-up in the General Assembly and organizations of the United Nations system.

At its February organizational session, the Council, by decision 1993/212, decided to include the subject as a sub-item for consideration under coordination questions. A report of WHO's Director-General on "tobacco or health" was annexed to a May note by the Secretary-General.⁽²⁴⁾ The document introduced essential elements on tobacco production, commercialization and consumption, giving an overview of the impact on health, and summarized related policy decisions by the World Health Assembly and proposed multi-sectoral collaboration for the future.

The WHO Director-General stated that tobacco consumption was a major avoidable cause of death and that the United Nations system should do its utmost to prevent that risk from spreading further, particularly to developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/79 without vote.

Multisectoral collaboration on "Tobacco or health"

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling World Health Assembly resolution WHA45.20 of 13 May 1992, in which the Assembly requested multisectoral collaboration within the United Nations system on tobacco or health issues,

Acknowledging the established leadership of the World Health Organization in alerting all Member States to the seriousness of the tobacco pandemic by providing estimates that tobacco use causes 3 million deaths a year and that, based on current smoking patterns, that figure is expected to increase to 10 million a year within the next few decades,

Concerned that, in countries where estimates have been made, more than one third of smokers who begin to smoke during adolescence and continue to smoke throughout their lives will die prematurely as a result of their habit and that, despite long-standing and widespread knowledge of the serious health consequences of tobacco use, worldwide tobacco production exceeds 7 million tons and is still increasing,

Concerned about the economic effects of reduced production in the tobacco-producing countries, which are still unable to develop a viable economic alternative to tobacco,

Recalling that the World Health Assembly, by its resolutions WHA39.14 of 15 May 1986 and WHA43.16 of 17 May 1990, has urged Member States to adopt comprehensive strategies of tobacco control,

Stressing that the serious health consequences of tobacco use cannot be tackled effectively without appropriate strategies for demand reduction,

Noting that the World Bank has adopted a policy of providing no new loans for tobacco growing or manufacturing projects,

Acknowledging the socio-economic context of tobacco production and the concerns of the tobacco-producing countries, particularly those that depend heavily on tobacco production, and acknowledging also that the implementation of comprehensive strategies as recommended by the World Health Organization will involve matters of tobacco agriculture, commerce, trade, taxation and marketing,

Acknowledging also that many international agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Health Organization and the World Bank, must collaborate closely in developing multisectoral approaches to the tobacco or health issue, particularly with respect to the concerns of tobacco-producing developing countries,

Acknowledging farther that cultural practices and customs relating to the use of tobacco should be duly taken into account in developing multisectoral approaches to the tobacco or health issue,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the need for multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health;

2. Urges Governments to intensify their commitment and efforts designed to reduce tobacco consumption and the demand for tobacco products, including the implementation of comprehensive multisectoral plans at the country level;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the full collaboration of the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Health Organization, other United Nations organizations and other international organizations, as appropriate, in contributing to the successful implementation of effective comprehensive strategies through multisectoral collaboration among international agencies;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to establish, under the auspices of the World Health Organization and within existing resources, a focal point among existing institutions of the United Nations system on the subject of multisectoral collaboration on the economic and social aspects of tobacco production and consumption, taking into particular account the serious health consequences of tobacco use;

5. Suggests that the multisectoral collaboration coordinated through the United Nations system focal point seek to offer practical advice and assistance to Member States, at their request, on how they can implement or strengthen comprehensive national tobacco control strategies;

6. Suggests also that a review of and recommendations concerning the impact of tobacco production on the economy of tobacco-producing countries, in particular those that depend on tobacco as a major source of income, as well as the impact of tobacco consumption on health, be included in the multisectoral collaboration work coordinated by the focal point;

7. Invites Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to develop a range of options, including bilateral and effective multilateral collaboration on agricultural diversification or development of other economic alternatives to tobacco agriculture, as appropriate, to assist economies for which tobacco is a major export, where demand for their tobacco products has decreased as a result of successful strategies for tobacco control;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the work of the United Nations system focal point begins as soon as possible and that each contributing agency, in consultation with Member States concerned, together with the focal point, develops, before 31 December 1993, individual plans of work, setting out deadlines and achievement milestones, for their agency's contribution to multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health that will lead to a rapid reduction in the burden of disease and death caused by the pandemic use of tobacco, while giving due consideration to any economic adjustments that may arise from a reduction in the demand for tobacco products;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994 on progress made by the United Nations system focal point in the implementation of multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health.

Food and agriculture

World food situation

WFC activities. At the 1992 ministerial session of the World Food Council (WFC), the United Nations coordination body on food issues, member States set in motion a review of WFC's future role in the context of the restructuring of the United Nations system. That action effectively suspended WFC's programmed activities, pending completion of the review. The WFC secretariat in Rome was closed and most of its staff reassigned.

On 12 February, the Economic and Social Council decided to undertake an in-depth review of WFC and to submit recommendations to the Assembly for consideration (decision 1993/208 B).

In May,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a WFC report, pursuant to a 1992 Assembly resolution on strengthening the United Nations response to world food and hunger problems.⁽³⁾ Council members agreed on principles to guide United Nations response to those problems, but disagreements concerning the institutional response to those principles remained.

Food aid

CFA activities

In 1993, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the governing body of WFP, held two sessions at Rome, Italy.

At its thirty-fifth session (31 May-4 June),⁽⁴⁾ CFA approved 12 projects recommended by its Sub-Committee on Projects (SCP) at its tenth session (Rome, 24-27 May). Projects included food for schoolchildren, watershed management, small-scale irrigation and food assistance for refugees and displaced persons.

CFA also endorsed the WFP pledging target of $1.5 billion for the 1995-1996 biennium and recognized the importance of one third of the pledges to the regular resources being made in cash. It did not reach consensus on the subject of global food aid resources and the review of food aid policies and programmes. Delegations agreed, however, that the Secretariat should monitor discussions and decisions in other fora and report to the Committee as appropriate. The Committee also agreed that the Secretariat should present its proposals for project criteria to the thirty-eighth session of CFA.

At its thirty-sixth session (25-28 October),⁽⁵⁾ CFA approved 11 projects recommended by SCP at its eleventh session.

The Committee took note of reports on the implementation of a 1992 General Assembly request⁽⁶⁾ for enhanced coordination of United Nations operational activities⁽⁷⁾ and on criteria for project approval.⁽⁸⁾

WFP activities

In 1993, the year of its 30th anniversary, WFP's assistance was of direct benefit to 47 million people who were either disaster victims or beneficiaries of Programme-assisted development projects. The Programme shipped 3.2 million tons of food to poor people during the year, and the total value of relief and development assistance was more than $1.4 billion. Relief assistance accounted for 83 per cent of total new commitments in 1993.

Relief activities

Some 29 million disaster victims, most of them women and children, received WFC assistance in 1993. This was the largest number of people to benefit from WFP relief assistance in any one year. New commitments amounted to some 2.5 million tons of relief food, valued at $1.2 billion.

WFP was the principal source of food assistance for 27 million refugees and displaced people, compared with 14 million in 1992.

This all-time high demand for food for refugees and displaced people was accompanied by a sharp fall in commitments for victims of drought and other natural disasters, with the phasing out of the successful southern Africa drought relief operation. New commitments for victims of natural disasters decreased from 1.2 million tons in 1992 to less than 100,000 tons in 1993.

WFP's relief assistance reached 17.8 million people in Africa and 7.6 million people in the former Yugoslavia, the former Soviet republics and the Middle East. Relief activities were also targeted on some 3.1 million people in south and east Asia and some 200,000 people in the Latin America and Caribbean region.

With substantial deliveries of relief food to areas affected by civil war and strife, WFP strengthened its interaction with United Nations peace-keeping operations. There was a close working relationship with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in the former Yugoslavia, with the United Nations Guard Contingent in Iraq, with the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM) and with peace-keeping forces in Mozambique. In Angola, 15,000 tons of food a month were being delivered at the end of 1993 to some 1.4 million victims of war and drought, despite the mining of roads and railways, destruction of bridges and attacks on planes and trucks. In Angola, the flight engineer of a WFP-contracted aircraft lost his life, two WFP employees were severely injured and one staff member disappeared. In Somalia, one employee was shot dead and another was shot and paralysed.

During the year, WFP gave greater attention to disaster mitigation activities, including the identification and design of appropriate projects, vulnerability mapping and emergency training.

Development assistance

At the end of 1993, about 18 million poor people in 83 countries were benefiting from WFP development food aid through 237 operational projects, with a total commitment of $2.8 billion. Of these projects, 107 were in Africa, 70 in Asia and 60 in the Americas.

New development commitments during 1993 totalled $253 million, representing 680,000 tons of food commodities and budget increases for ongoing WFP-assisted development projects. This was the lowest level of commitments in almost two decades. Land development and improvement projects were the largest single category assisted by the Programme.

Resources

During 1993, WFP transferred about $1.6 billion in resources worldwide to the poor and hungry through its regular programme and other expenditure. A target of $1.5 billion was set for donor pledges towards WFP's regular resources for the 1993-1994 biennium.

In its annual report⁽⁷⁾ to the Economic and Social Council, FAO and WFC, CFA endorsed a proposed target of $1.5 billion for the 1995-1996 biennium. It expressed concern, however, that only 77 per cent of the target for the previous biennium was achieved. It encouraged donors to try to ensure that current and future biennial targets were met.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/77 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1995-1996

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the comments of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme concerning the minimum target for voluntary contributions to the Programme for the period 1995-1996,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2462(XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2682(XXV) of 11 December 1970, in which the Assembly recognized the experience gained by the World Food Programme in the field of multilateral food aid,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the draft resolution annexed to the present resolution;
2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to undertake the preparations necessary for the announcement of pledges at the Sixteenth Pledging Conference for the World Food Programme.

ANNEX

Target for World Food Programme Pledges for the Period 1995-1996

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme was to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Noting that the Programme was reviewed by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its thirty-fifth session and by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1993,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/77 of 30 July 1993 and the recommendation of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of and continuing need for multilateral food aid as provided by the World Food Programme since its inception, both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the period 1995-1996 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of $1.5 billion, of which not less than one third should be in cash and/or services;
2. Urges States Members of the United Nations, members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure that the target is fully attained;
3. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters in 1994.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/77

30 July 1993 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Draft by Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (E/1993/91); agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 24-29, 35, 38, 40, 45, 46.

Food and agricultural development

Fourth replenishment of IFAD

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) (see PART SIX, Chapter XVI) continued to provide concessional assistance for financing agricultural projects in developing countries. It became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1977.⁽¹⁰⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/53 without vote.

Fourth replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/73 of 29 July 1988 on the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 47/149 of 18 December 1992 on food and agricultural development, in which the Assembly expressed concern about the increase in hunger and malnutrition and reaffirmed that the right to food was a universal human right,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/197 of 22 December 1992 on international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries, in which the Assembly, inter alia, urged all donors to contribute generously to the fourth replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development,

Bearing in mind resolution CM/Res.1471(LVIII) on the fourth replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-eighth ordinary session, held at Cairo from 21 to 26 June 1993,

Reiterating its deep concern about the increasing number of human beings, especially women, who, as a result of acute poverty, continue to suffer from hunger and chronic undernutrition,

Stressing the need further to strengthen international cooperation to overcome poverty and hunger and the urgent requirement to ensure adequate financing for this purpose,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by the International Fund for Agricultural Development in addressing the needs of the rural poor, particularly small-holding farmers, the landless, rural women and other marginalized groups,

Stressing the necessity of ensuring that the International Fund for Agricultural Development has sufficient resources to consolidate in the years to come the breakthroughs in the fight against hunger and poverty made in its operations over the past fifteen years,

1. Calls upon all countries to demonstrate the political will and flexibility to strengthen multilateral support for addressing the problems of hunger and poverty;

2. Appeals to all States members of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, and other developing countries, to continue to make every possible effort in the negotiating process in order to complete expeditiously the fourth replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, at the highest possible level, before the end of 1993.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/53

29 July 1993 Meeting 45 Adopted without vote

Draft by Benin on behalf of African States, Chile, and Netherlands (E/1993/L.27), orally revised by Vice-President based on informal consultations; agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 24-29, 35, 38, 40, 45.

Nutrition

International Conference on Nutrition

In follow-up to the 1992 International Conference on Nutrition,⁽¹⁾ the WHO Executive Board, at its January 1993 meeting,⁽²⁾ endorsed the Conference's World Declaration and Plan of Action for Nutrition. It urged member States to strive to eliminate famine and famine-related deaths and nutritional deficiencies by the year 2000 and to incorporate nutrition objectives into national development plans.

The World Declaration and Plan of Action for Nutrition was also brought to the attention of CFA at its October session.⁽³⁾ In an information note,⁽⁴⁾ CFA discussed WFP's contribution to the Plan of Action.

ACC activities

The twentieth session of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Nutrition was held at Geneva from 15 to 19 February 1993.⁽⁵⁾ The ACC Organizational Committee stated in April, however, that it could not take note of the Subcommittee's report because it had not been formally adopted.

UNU activities

During 1993, the United Nations University (UNU) completed specialized guidelines for its rapid assessment procedures (RAP) methodology. The specialized guidelines covered such areas as AIDS-related beliefs, attitudes and behaviours and improved household management of diarrhoea.

Working with WHO, UNU developed a master protocol for comparing the effectiveness of weekly versus daily iron supplements for anaemic pregnant women, adolescent girls and preschool children. UNU participated in the ACC Subcommittee on Nutrition, and the UNU-sponsored Group for the Control of Iron Deficiency which was to be redeployed for advocacy purposes as the International Commission for the Prevention of Iron Deficiency.

UNU efforts to establish regional or subregional food composition databases under its International Network of Food Data Systems (INFOODS) continued in 1993. Efforts were proceeding with Arab and south Asian regional groups for the completion of the INFOODS network, while computer facilities were established in New Caledonia. A separate INFOODS regional database for francophone African countries was also under consideration. A companion UNU project continued to help developing countries summarize dietary intake data for the past 30 years and make hard copies of the data available. Data sets for Mexico were completed in 1993, and those for Argentina, the Caribbean and Oceania were awaiting final completion.

A UNU study, Nutrition and Poverty, focused on different perceptions of poverty assessment and nutritional status. It attempted to define a standard of nutritional status for comparative assessment purposes and also considered the question of gender bias in nutritional deprivation. Although the evidence suggested a bias against females, the study cautioned that further research was necessary.

Chapter XII

Human resources, social and cultural development

During 1993, the United Nations continued to promote human resources, social and cultural development and to implement its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

Preparations began for the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and proposals were put forward on ways to contribute to its three core issues—greater social integration, poverty reduction and employment generation. Preparatory measures were underway and events were being planned for the observance in 1994 of the International Year of the Family, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1989.

In 1993, the Assembly proclaimed 1995 the United Nations Year for Tolerance (resolution 48/126).

Concerning crime, the Economic and Social Council, in July, called on the Secretary-General to organize in 1994 a World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime (resolution 1993/29). Preparations continued for the Ninth (1995) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continued to promote the return or restitution of cultural property to countries of origin.

In October, the Assembly proclaimed 1994 as the International Year of Sport and the Olympic Ideal (48/10) and urged Member States to observe the Olympic Truce (48/11).

In September, the Social Development Division, apart from its Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, was moved from the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna and incorporated into the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development in New York.

Human resources

Human resources development

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report on developing human resources for development.⁽²⁾ He presented an overview of human resources development and discussed official development assistance and efforts to improve cooperation, coordination and monitoring of the human resources development activities of the United Nations system.

The Secretary-General suggested national actions to offset the adverse effects of structural adjustment and stabilization programmes in some developing countries, including: government efforts to improve targeting the most needy while reducing unproductive expenditures, such as military expenditures; allocating at least one fifth of additional aid to human resources development; undertaking an integrated approach when drawing up sectoral policies for human resources development; and removing the structural causes of poverty. He proposed that the United Nations, together with the developing and donor countries, should emphasize betterment of the human condition, including environmental sustainability and participation by all groups and countries in the process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 48/205 without vote.

Developing human resources for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 44/213 of 22 December 1989, 45/191 of 21 December 1990 and 46/143 of 17 December 1991 on developing human resources for development, as well as its resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990 and 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolutions 40/179 of 17 December 1985 and 44/234 of 22 December 1989,

Reaffirming that people are central to all developmental activities and that human resources development is an essential means of achieving sustainable development goals,

Recognizing that the concept of human resources development specifically refers to the human component of economic, social and development activities,

Emphasizing that human resources development should contribute to total human development and that there is therefore a need to integrate human resources development into comprehensive strategies for human development which are sensitive to gender considerations, taking into account the needs of all people, in particular the needs of women,

Stressing the need for adequate resources to enhance the capacity of Governments of developing countries to promote human resources development in pursuit of their national programmes, plans and strategies for development,

Stressing also that Governments of developing countries have the primary responsibility for defining and implementing appropriate policies for human resources development,

Recognizing that, while stabilization and structural adjustment programmes are intended to promote economic growth and development, elements of such programmes may have a possibly adverse impact on human resources development, and also that there is a need to take action, in the formulation and implementation of these programmes, to mitigate their negative effects,

Stressing further that a favourable international economic environment is crucial to enhancing human resources development for the promotion of economic growth and development in developing countries,

Emphasizing the importance of international cooperation in supporting national efforts in human resources development in developing countries and the vital roles of North-South and South-South cooperation in this regard,

Emphasizing also the need for organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to give priority to human resources development and to approach the relevant activities in a coordinated and integrated manner,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Emphasizes that, in the development of human resources, an overall, well-conceived and integrated approach which is sensitive to gender considerations should be adopted, incorporating such vital areas as population, health, nutrition, water, sanitation, housing, communications, education and training and science and technology, as well as taking into account the need to create more opportunities for employment, in an environment that guarantees opportunities for political freedom, popular participation, respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacities to meet the challenge of development;

3. Also emphasizes the need to ensure the full mobilization and integration of women in the formulation and implementation of appropriate national policies to promote human resources development;

4. Reaffirms the importance of women and youth in human resources development, and in this context welcomes the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and the proposal noted at the Meeting of the Heads of Government of the Countries of the Commonwealth, held at Limassol, Cyprus, from 21 to 25 October 1993, to convene a global summit on youth at an agreed date;^a

5. Stresses the importance of international support for national efforts and regional programmes for human resources development in developing countries, particularly in the area of national capacity-building, and the need to increase the flow of resources to developing countries for such activities, through, inter alia, the improvement of the international economic environment;

6. Calls upon the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, at the request of developing countries, to take appropriate steps to strengthen the support provided by their operational activities to national and regional action and targets for human resources development, in particular by improving coordination and by developing a multisectoral, integrated approach;

7. Calls upon the relevant bodies to bear in mind the need to mitigate the possible negative impact and to include appropriate social safety nets in the formulation and implementation of stabilization and structural adjustment programmes in developing countries, taking into account the needs of all people, including the needs of women;

8. Notes the important role that non-governmental organizations can play in human resources development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development and, in this regard, to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including further action taken to enhance inter-agency coordination within the United Nations system with regard to human resources development and bearing in mind the definition of human resources development presented in General Assembly resolutions 44/213, 45/191 and 46/143;

10. Invites the United Nations system to assist developing countries, at their request, in developing their capacity to assess, inter alia, through appropriate indicators, progress made in satisfying, in the pursuit of human resources development, the fundamental economic, social and cultural needs of their populations, and requests the Secretary-General to include in the report requested in paragraph 9 above information on the steps taken towards that end;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to take into account the important role of human resources development in the elaboration of an agenda for development;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "Human resources development".

General Assembly resolution 48/205

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/730) without vote, 6 December (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.56), based on informal consultations on A/C.2/48/L.9, orally revised; agenda item 104. Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 15, 17, 21, 45; plenary 86.

Human Development Report

The Human Development Report 1993, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), focused on participation in development through markets, government and community organizations. The report discussed free and open markets as a form of participation for producers and consumers, people's participation in governance, and people's participation in civil society, particularly the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The report stated that building societies around people's genuine needs called for new concepts of human security that stressed the security of people, not only of nations; new models of sustainable human development that invested in human potential and created an enabling environment for the full use of human capabilities; new partnerships between the state and the market to combine market efficiency with social compassion; new patterns of national and global governance to accommodate the rise of people's aspirations and the decline of the nation-state; and new forms of international cooperation that focused directly on the needs of people.

UN research and training institutes

UN Institute for Training and Research

UNITAR activities

During 1993, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) continued to focus on training activities, organizing 66 courses involving some 2,749 participants.

Training programmes covered multilateral diplomacy and international affairs management, including institution building, dispute resolution, peace-keeping and peacemaking; environmental and natural resource management; debt and financial management; and disaster relief management.

In 1993, UNITAR launched its fellowship programme in peacemaking and preventive diplomacy, the first training course of that kind to be held within the United Nations system, for 24 participants (Burg Schlaining, Austria, 6-24 September). Due to newly established links with UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and other United Nations institutions and organs, as well as development agencies and training institutes, UNITAR was able to provide training for an increasing number of participants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 April, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 47/227 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/180 of 19 December 1991, Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Acting Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, and taking into account the statements made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on the Institute,

Noting the steps taken by the Secretary-General to restructure the Institute,

Recognizing the continuing importance and relevance of the interdisciplinary training functions within the United Nations system and the need to respond to the new challenges facing the United Nations and to meet the growing training requirements of Member States and staff in the United Nations system,

Recognizing that, in the context of the ongoing restructuring of the United Nations, the overall capacity of the United Nations in research and data-gathering should be enhanced,

Acknowledging that a restructured Institute should continue to develop a more structured relationship with relevant national and international institutions,

Reaffirming that the Institute should focus on providing training programmes and research activities related to training,

1. Decides that, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General, the building of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research shall be immediately transferred to the United Nations in return for the cancellation of the debt of the Institute and coverage of its financial obligations for 1992;

2. Also decides that, in accordance with the recommendations of the high-level consultant, as approved by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and by the Secretary-General in his report, the headquarters of the Institute shall be transferred to Geneva, and requests the Secretary-General to designate a liaison officer to organize and coordinate the existing training programmes and research activities relating to training in New York, within existing resources, drawing as appropriate on the services of senior fellows who shall be funded from voluntary contributions to the Institute;

3. Further decides that, as at 1 January 1993, the funding of all the administrative budget and the training programmes of the Institute shall be covered from voluntary contributions, donations, special-purpose grants and executing agency overheads;

4. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the restructured Institute, in particular to its General Fund, so as to assure its viability;

5. Decides that the funding of training programmes held at the specific request of Member States of the United Nations and members of other United Nations system organs and specialized agencies should be arranged by the requesting parties;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to explore further closer cooperation between the Institute and other qualified national and international institutions, including, inter alia, the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organisation, at Turin, Italy, in order to enable the United Nations system to respond to the increasing training needs at both the international and the national level in the most cost-effective manner and in the best interests of the participating Member States;

7. Invites the Secretary-General, in the context of the ongoing restructuring process of the United Nations, to continue his work on a comprehensive review of the research capacity of the United Nations system and to make proposals for the enhancement of that capacity, including the possibility of transferring the non-training related research functions of the Institute to other appropriate United Nations bodies, such as the United Nations University, and the possibility of promoting co-operation mechanisms with other relevant national and international research institutes;

8. Invites the Institute to improve its cooperation with relevant national, regional and international institutions that can contribute to fulfilling its training and related research needs in the field of international relations and in response to the new challenges facing the United Nations;

9. Urges the Institute to improve its collaboration with the United Nations and its funds and programmes;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the arrangements mentioned above.

General Assembly resolution 47/227

8 April 1993 Meeting 98 Adopted without vote

Approved by Committee (A/47/729) without vote, 16 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman of Committee (A/C.2/47/L.91), based on informal consultations on draft A/C.2/47/L.60/Rev.1, orally revised; agenda item 89 (a).

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/47/914; S-G, A/C.2/47/L.94, A/C.5/47/82.

Meeting numbers. GA 47th session: 2nd Committee 41, 42, 47, 51; 5th Committee 58; plenary 98.

On 21 December, the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 48/207 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/227 of 8 April 1993,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken to complete the process of restructuring the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, including the write-off of the debt through the disposition of the building of the Institute in New York, the transfer of its headquarters from New York to Geneva, the designing of programmes with a focus on providing training programmes and on research activities related to training and, finally, the introduction of strict administrative and financial management criteria,

Recognizing the importance and relevance of the interdisciplinary training functions within the United Nations system, the research activities and research relating to training aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the work of the United Nations,

1. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the restructured United Nations Institute for Training and Research so as to assure its viability and the future development of its training programmes;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to examine, in accordance with paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 47/227, the measures taken in 1993 with a view to improving further the organization and coordination of the training programmes and research activities relating to training in New York, and to provide appropriate logistical and administrative support, within existing resources;

3. Recommends that, as an interim measure and without budgetary implications, the full-time senior fellows should continue in their functions and status until a final decision is taken in this regard on the basis of the recommendations of the Board of Trustees of the Institute during its June session, but no later than 1 July 1994;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the context of his report on the implementation of the present resolution and in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 47/227, to submit to the Assembly at its forty-ninth

(a) Proposals for the enhancement of the research capacity of the United Nations system, including the possibility of transferring the non-training-related research functions of the Institute to other appropriate United Nations bodies, such as the United Nations University, and the possibility of promoting cooperation mechanisms with other relevant national and international research institutes;

(b) Information on the possibility of closer cooperation between the Institute and other qualified national and international institutions, including the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organisation at Turin, Italy.

General Assembly resolution 48/207

21 December 1993 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/48/732) without vote, 13 December (meeting 48); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/48/L.88), based on informal consultations on A/C.2/48/L.71; agenda item 106.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/48/794; S-G, A/C.2/48/L.84, A/C.5/48/57.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 2nd Committee 42, 46, 48; 5th Committee 43; plenary 86.

Financial situation and restructuring of UNITAR

As requested by the General Assembly in April, the Secretary-General reported in November(3) that the UNITAR building in New York had been transferred to the United Nations in exchange for cancellation of its debt and coverage of its 1992 financial obligations. As at 31 December 1992, the building was valued at $10.6 million in the accounts of the United Nations. Effective 1 July 1993, UNITAR headquarters was transferred to Geneva. However, arrangements were made to continue the multilateral diplomacy programmes in New York under United Nations auspices because of the widely expressed view that they had served a useful purpose for a large number of Member States.

In the nine months ending 30 September 1993, UNITAR received government contributions totalling $262,800. Miscellaneous income amounted to $166,400, resulting in total available resources of $429,200. Expenditures amounted to $417,200 as at the end of September. The Secretary-General stated that UNITAR's financial situation remained very tight and fragile and, unless UNITAR mobilized significant contributions and other income during the 1994-1995 biennium, there was serious danger of further financial difficulty.

UN University

UNU activities

In 1993,(4) the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, continued to carry out research, advanced training and the dissemination of knowledge on subjects of concern to the United Nations and its agencies. Research was carried out on universal human values and global responsibilities; new directions in the world economy; sustaining global life-support systems; advances in science and technology; and population dynamics and human welfare.

During the year, 63 UNU fellows completed their studies and 82 new fellows started their training. They included 13 fellows in geothermal energy at the National Energy Authority (Iceland); 5 in remote sensing technology at the Instituto de Pesquisas Espaciais (Brazil) and 1 at the University of Leicester (United Kingdom); 16 in biotechnology at various institutions in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Venezuela; 5 in microinformatics at various institutions in Ireland and 9 at the UNU International Institute for Software Technology (Macau); 8 in renewable energy systems at the Indian Institute of Technology (Delhi, India); 9 in limnology and management of inland waters at the University of Sao Paulo (Brazil); 14 in food science and technology and nutrition at the University of Ghana, the Instituto de Nutrición de Centro America y Panamá (Guatemala), the National Food Research Institute (Japan), the Central Food Technological Research Institute (India), the Universities of Nottingham and Reading (United Kingdom) and the University of Nairobi (Kenya); 1 in science and technology policy at the University of Sussex (United Kingdom); and 1 in economics at the University of Warwick (United Kingdom).

In addition, over 230 individuals attended short-term training courses and workshops in natural hazard reduction, biotechnology, genetic engineering techniques and the application of microcomputers for teaching mathematics and sciences.

Among the 26 titles published by the UNU Press in 1993 were: Environmental Change and International Law: New Challenges and Dimensions; The Global Greenhouse Regime: Who Pays?; Latin America Today: Peace and Security in the Asia Pacific Region; Post-Cold War Problems and Prospects; and Who Will Save the Forests? Knowledge, Power and Environmental Destruction.

UNU Council

The UNU Council held two sessions in 1993, both in Tokyo—its thirty-ninth (15-20 February), held in conjunction with the inauguration of the UNU permanent headquarters building, and its fortieth (13-17 December). In December, the Council adopted the budget and academic programme for 1994-1995, approved a new statute on dissemination and endorsed a policy on scholarly publishing. Several proposals for new UNU academic initiatives were also approved and an internal assessment group was set up to examine the University's performance under its second Medium-Term Perspective for 1990-1995.

On 30 July, by decision 1993/332, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Council's 1992 report.⁽⁵⁾

In November,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the UNU programme budget for the 1994-1995 biennium emphasized strengthening the academic contributions of the University to policy questions that needed to be addressed by the United Nations. Plans were also under way to intensify research activities directly benefiting the United Nations system.

University for Peace

In accordance with a 1991 resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the General Assembly considered at its 1993 session the item entitled "University of Peace".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/9 without vote.

University for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 34/111 of 14 December 1979 it approved the idea of establishing a University for Peace as a specialized international centre for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training for peace within the system of the United Nations University,

Recalling also that in its resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980 it approved the establishment of the University for Peace in conformity with the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace,

Recalling further its resolutions 45/8 of 24 October 1990 and 46/11 of 24 October 1991 on the tenth anniversary of the University, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on that anniversary,

Recognizing that the University has suffered from financial limitations which have impeded the development of the activities and programmes necessary for carrying out its important mandate,

Recognizing also the various activities carried out by the University during the period 1991-1993 largely thanks to the financial contributions made by Costa Rica, Italy and Spain, as well as by the Commission of the European Communities, and other contributions by foundations and non-governmental organizations,

Noting that in 1991 the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, established a Trust Fund for Peace consisting of voluntary contributions in order to provide the University with the means necessary to extend its sphere of activity to the rest of the world and to take full advantage of its potential capacity for education, research and support of the United Nations, and to carry out its mandate of working to promote peace in the world, with emphasis on specific research and training activities in the context of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace" in the areas of the prevention of conflict, the maintenance and consolidation of peace and the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Recalling that Slovenia acceded to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace on 6 June 1992,

Recalling also that in its resolution 46/11 it decided to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and biennially thereafter an item entitled "University for Peace",

1. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the establishment of the Trust Fund for Peace, consisting of voluntary contributions for the purpose of assisting the University for Peace to develop its activities for the promotion of peace and to ensure that it has the increasing and essential resources to pursue its future activities;

2. Invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental bodies as well as interested individuals and organizations to contribute directly to the Trust Fund for Peace and to the budget of the University;

3. Also invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace, thus demonstrating their support of a global institution for peace studies whose mandate is the promotion of world peace;

4. Decides to include in the agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "University for Peace".

Social and cultural development

Social aspects of development

World social situation

In response to a 1992 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in January the Report on the World Social Situation 1993,⁽²⁾ which highlighted major improvements in social conditions, drew attention to problems faced in improving social conditions in the difficult economic circumstances of the 1980s, described emerging situations and discussed policies adopted by Governments in response to those situations. It reviewed social development issues in the areas of population growth, urbanization, migration and the situation of refugees; hunger, malnutrition and food supplies; health; education and literacy; housing and sanitation; unemployment; and income distribution and poverty. It examined government expenditure on social services and social and economic indicators that reflect the quality of life. Problem areas in social development were considered, including changes in economic and social institutions; financial crisis and social security reform; ethnic conflicts and national disintegration; production and consumption patterns and the environment; social consequences of technological advances; and narcotic drug, tobacco and alcohol abuse.

Poverty was the outstanding economic and social problem in the world, afflicting about one fifth of the world's people, almost all of them in developing countries. Objectives expected to be achieved at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development included highlighting the importance of social development issues to policy makers and the public; considering those issues in the light of the new economic and political realities of the world; assessing priorities for social development in policy formulation; evaluating the efficiency of alternative policy instruments; and bringing forth the relative strengths of various organizations and seeking ways to pool their strengths.

A separate section, prepared in accordance with a 1989 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ discussed activities carried out to implement the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development.⁽⁴⁾

On 27 July, by decision 1993/244, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Report.

Social situation in Africa

In response to a 1989 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in January, a report⁽⁶⁾ describing the critical social situation in Africa and the obstacles which had hindered implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (1986-1990).⁽⁷⁾ It addressed such issues as the state of health, nutrition, education, employment, poverty, population and the environment and the situation of women, youth and refugees.

The report concluded that the continued decline in the African economies, made worse by conventional structural adjustment programmes and unprecedented population growth rates, had left the African family and household in a crisis of unparalleled dimensions. To mitigate the crisis, coherent social development policies were needed that paid attention to all dimensions of human development, including population and the environment and democratization.

Social development

World Summit for Social Development (1995)

In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁾ the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit for Social Development held its organizational session in New York from 12 to 16 April 1993,⁽⁹⁾ at which it elected officers and adopted its agenda. The Committee decided to hold the World Summit on 11 and 12 March 1995 at Copenhagen, Denmark, preceded by a meeting of personal representatives of heads of State or Government or other high-level representatives from 6 to 10 March 1995. Other decisions adopted by the Committee concerned NGO participation in the World Summit; national contributions; mobilization of voluntary resources of the Trust Fund for the World Summit for Social Development, established in response to a 1992 Assembly resolution;⁽⁸⁾ public information; organization of work; the holding of expert meetings in preparation for the Summit; and the provisional agenda for the Committee's first session in 1994. The Committee had before it an April note of the Secretary-General on mobilizing contributions to the Trust Fund⁽¹⁰⁾ and an April note by the Secretariat suggesting guidelines for contributions to the preparatory process of the Summit.⁽¹¹⁾

Expert meetings were held on two of the three core issues of the World Summit, one on social integration (The Hague, Netherlands, 27 September-1 October)⁽¹²⁾ and the other on the expansion of productive employment (Saltsjöbaden, Sweden, 4-8 October).⁽¹³⁾ The third core issue was poverty reduction.

In response to a 1992 Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, by an October note,⁽¹⁴⁾ transmitted a report of the regional commissions on activities planned or undertaken in preparation for the World Summit.

By resolution 1993/64 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council urged members of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) to participate in the preparatory activities for the World Summit and stressed the need for ECA members to adopt a common position on issues to be discussed.

On 20 December, the General Assembly, by decision 48/428, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the report of the regional commissions.

Report of the Secretary-General. As decided on 12 February (decision 1993/204), the Economic and Social Council, at its high-level segment (28-30 June) focused on the World Summit, including the role of the United Nations system in promoting social development. It asked the Secretary-General to prepare a report on ways of attaining the objectives of the Summit and to examine its core issues. United Nations bodies, including the specialized agencies, were asked to contribute.

As requested, the Secretary-General submitted a June report⁽¹⁵⁾ examining the three core issues of the World Summit—greater social integration, poverty reduction and employment generation—and proposed ways for the United Nations to contribute to social development. He noted that the core issues involved common areas of policy actions, such as the revival of the growth process, affirmative action for the poor, empowerment of marginal and disadvantaged groups, targeted employment generation, human resource development, labour market reforms, social security and democratization. They also required a common set of reorientations in international cooperation, including the role of the United Nations system.

In July,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Council's President summarized the debate at the high-level segment, noting that there was wide convergence on the analysis of and prognosis for the world social situation and on the preparation of the World Summit.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural), the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/100 without vote.

World Summit for Social Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/92 of 16 December 1992, by which it decided to convene the World Summit for Social Development, agreed on the objectives and core issues of the Summit and, inter alia, established a preparatory committee,

Recalling also the deliberations of the Economic and Social Council during the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1993 on the question of the Summit and the deliberations of the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session,

Recalling further the decision taken by the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit for Social Development at its organizational session to convene the Summit at Copenhagen on 11 and 12 March 1995, preceded by a meeting of personal representatives of heads of State or Government or other appropriate high-level representatives specifically designated by Governments, from 6 to 10 March 1995,

Considering that the Summit and its preparatory process should strengthen efforts by all countries to promote policies for the enhancement of social integration in all societies, the alleviation and reduction of poverty and the expansion of productive employment,

Considering also the contributions of non-governmental organizations,

Taking into account the need to facilitate the work of the substantive sessions of the Preparatory Committee,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the summary prepared by the President of the Economic and Social Council on the deliberations of the Council during the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1993 and of Commission for Social Development resolution 33/1 of 17 February 1993;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit for Social Development on its organizational session;

3. Calls upon all States, in accordance with paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 47/92, to appoint personal representatives of the heads of State or Government or other appropriate high-level representatives to participate in the first session of the Preparatory Committee;

4. Invites all States to contribute generously to the voluntary Trust Fund established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/92 for the additional activities required for the preparation and holding of the Summit, particularly the participation of the least developed countries in the Summit and its preparatory process;

5. Also invites all States to set up national committees or other arrangements for the Summit and to hold meetings for public debate on the core issues to be addressed by the Summit;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary provisions, within existing resources, so that the Preparatory Committee may, if it so decides:

(a) Establish, during its first session, a working group of the whole to meet in parallel with the plenary for a duration of one week;

(b) Establish, during its second session, a working group of the whole to meet in parallel with the plenary for a duration of two weeks;

(c) Establish, during its third session, two working groups to meet in parallel with the plenary for a duration of two weeks;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to report to the Preparatory Committee at its first session on the implementation of the programme of public information for the Summit;

8. Invites the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the regional commissions and competent regional organizations, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to inform the Preparatory Committee at its first session about their contributions to the Summit and its preparatory process;

9. Calls upon the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the United Nations and those accredited to the Summit and its preparatory process to contribute fully to the work of the Preparatory Committee and to the Summit;

10. Requests the Preparatory Committee to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the progress of work of the Committee and the preparations for the Summit.

Monitoring social development plans and programmes

In February,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission for Social Development considered a report of the Secretary-General on monitoring international plans and programmes of action relating to social development.⁽¹⁸⁾ It summarized the activities of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the regional commissions in the areas of social development and welfare, youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family.

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General, in January,⁽²⁰⁾ discussed progress achieved in implementing the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted at a 1987 interregional consultation⁽²¹⁾ and endorsed by the Assembly later that year.⁽²²⁾ The report was based on information provided by Governments and the United Nations system and on conclusions drawn from expert meetings. The Secretary-General proposed activities that the Assembly might recommend to Governments, including: participation in international discussions on social development, including preparations for the 1995 World Summit; organizing regional conferences to promote implementation of the Guiding Principles; developing a comprehensive national social policy; establishing national councils for social development; using the observance of the International Year of the Family in 1994 (see below) as an opportunity to draw up an integrated national family strategy; and promoting and facilitating mutual interaction between efforts to implement the Guiding Principles and those to implement Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.⁽²³⁾

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/244, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

On 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 48/428, also took note of it.

Social development cooperation

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1991,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁵⁾ on progress achieved and obstacles encountered in implementing the social development goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (the 1990s), adopted by the General Assembly in 1990,⁽²⁶⁾ and on progress made in carrying out the suggestions and recommendations made in 1990 at an expert group meeting on the social impact of the critical economic environment on developing countries.⁽²⁷⁾ The Secretary-General described recent thinking on the nature of social development and the scope for social policy in the context of the International Development Strategy and proposed several areas in which existing activities for development and international cooperation might be revised or expanded, based on the recommendations of the expert group.

On 27 July, by decision 1993/244, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

International year for tolerance

Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, by a June note,⁽²⁹⁾ transmitted the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) containing his suggestions on the observance of a United Nations year for tolerance, which UNESCO sought to have proclaimed for 1995. The Director-General described possible UNESCO activities in observance of the year and summarized the Economic and Social Council's criteria and procedures concerning proposals for international years, adopted in 1980.⁽³⁰⁾ The report contained a draft declaration on tolerance adopted by a meeting of experts (Istanbul, Turkey, 16 and 17 April 1993) and the text of a UNESCO Executive Board decision, adopted in May, on the proclamation of a United Nations year for tolerance and declaration of tolerance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/57 without vote.

Question of a United Nations year for tolerance

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1992/267 of 30 July 1992,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/124 of 18 December 1992 on the United Nations year for tolerance,

Referring to decision 5.4.3 of 28 May 1993, adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred forty-first session,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 and General Assembly decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 on guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

1. Stresses the importance of national and international efforts to promote tolerance;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization containing his suggestions on the observance of the United Nations year for tolerance;

3. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue its work on the preparation of a declaration on tolerance;

4. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its forty-eighth session, proclaim 1995 the United Nations year for tolerance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/126 without vote.

United Nations Year for Tolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Charter of the United Nations affirms in its preamble that to practise tolerance is one of the principles to be applied to attain the ends pursued by the United Nations of preventing war and maintaining peace,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations as set forth in the Charter is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Mindful of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Convinced that tolerance—the recognition and appreciation of others, the ability to live together with and to listen to others—is the sound foundation of any civil society and of peace,

Recalling its resolution 47/124 of 18 December 1992, in which, inter alia, it invited the Economic and Social Council to consider at its substantive session of 1993 the question of proclaiming 1995 the United Nations year for tolerance and to transmit a recommendation to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session,

Recalling also resolution 5.6 of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, concerning the proclamation of 1995 as the United Nations year for tolerance,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/57 of 29 July 1993, in which the Council recommended that the General Assembly, at its forty-eighth session, proclaim 1995 the United Nations year for tolerance,

Taking into account the note by the Secretary-General, transmitting the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Bearing in mind its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 concerning guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

Noting that the preparations for the United Nations year for tolerance will not involve any financial implications for the United Nations,

1. Proclaims 1995 the United Nations Year for Tolerance;

2. Recommends that the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system consider in their respective forums the contributions they could make to the success of the Year;

3. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to assume the role of lead organization for the Year;

4. Calls upon all Member States to cooperate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the preparation of the national and international programmes for the Year and to participate actively in the implementation of the activities to be organized within the framework of the Year;

5. Invites interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to exert efforts in their respective fields to contribute adequately to the preparation of programmes for the Year;

6. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare, in accordance with its General Conference resolution 5.6, a declaration on tolerance;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Preparation for and organization of the United Nations Year for Tolerance".

The family

International Year of the Family

In response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an August report⁽³²⁾ updating information presented in his 1992 report⁽³³⁾ on preparations for the 1994 International Year of the Family, proclaimed by the Assembly in 1989.⁽³⁴⁾ The report contained recommendations made by preparatory and coordinating bodies and other intergovernmental bodies, including: the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the World Health Organization. It also outlined preparatory measures for the Year at the national, regional and international levels, as well as events planned for its observance and follow-up.

At least 102 countries had established national coordinating committees or similar mechanisms for the Year and more than 90 countries had initiated national programmes for its preparation and observance or designated national focal points to liaise with the secretariat. Within the United Nations system, 34 offices, bodies and specialized agencies, including the regional commissions, were involved in the preparation for and observance of the Year. In 1993, four regional and interregional preparatory meetings were held to review the situation of families, identify regional priorities and formulate specific recommendations regarding policies concerning families and the observance of the Year for Africa and Western Asia (Tunis, Tunisia, 29 March-2 April); Asia and the Pacific (Beijing, China, 24-28 May); Europe and North America (Valletta, Malta, 26-30 April); and Latin America and the Caribbean (Cartagena, Colombia, 9-14 August).

As at 20 July, contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the International Year of the Family totalled $1,444,540, of which Governments contributed $234,060 and organizations and individuals $1,182,533; some $28,000 was received from other sources.

Annexed to the report was a statement on the Year, jointly issued by concerned organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system.

On 20 December, the General Assembly, by decision 48/428, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/23 without vote.

International Year of the Family

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

(For text, see General Assembly resolution 47/237 below.)

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/23

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1993/24); agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 47/237 without vote.

International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 44/82 of 8 December 1989, 45/133 of 14 December 1990 and 46/92 of 16 December 1991 concerning the International Year of the Family, as expressions of the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling that major United Nations instruments on human rights and social policy, as well as relevant global plans and programmes of action, call for the widest possible protection and assistance to be accorded to the family,

Convinced that equality between the sexes, women's equal participation in employment and shared parental responsibility are essential elements of modern family policy,

Conscious of the existence of various concepts of the family in different social, cultural and political systems,

Aware, at the same time, that families are the fullest reflection, at the grass-roots level, of the strengths and weaknesses of the social and developmental welfare environment, and as such offer a uniquely comprehensive and synthesizing approach to social issues,

Realizing that families, as basic units of social life, are major agents of sustainable development at all levels of society and that their contribution to that process is crucial for its success,

Stressing that the observance of the Year in 1994 will immediately precede the celebration by the family of nations of the historic fiftieth anniversary of the Charter of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, submitted to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session, on the state of preparations for the Year,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the state of preparations for the International Year of the Family;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for a well-coordinated and impressive effort in the preliminary and preparatory phases to the Year, despite resource constraints, and for the considerable progress made towards its observance;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the Year has gained increasing support at all levels and that the preparatory process has enhanced and strengthened the substantive orientation of the Year;

4. Commends all Governments, specialized agencies, regional commissions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations which have undertaken special efforts to prepare for the observance of the Year;

5. Urges Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, especially those which have not yet done so, to intensify the efforts undertaken, inter alia, by the identification of national coordinating mechanisms and the elaboration of national programmes of action, in the preparations for and observance of the Year;

6. Welcomes the holding in 1993 of four regional and interregional preparatory meetings for the Year, organized by the secretariat for the Year in the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat, in close cooperation with the regional commissions, and hosted by the Governments of China, Colombia, Malta and Tunisia;

7. Takes note with interest of the proposal by the Government of Slovakia that the Bratislava International Centre of Family Studies be affiliated with the United Nations;

8. Also takes notes with interest of the results of the Expert Group Meeting on the Social Consequences of Population Growth and Changing Social Conditions, with Particular Emphasis on the Family, co-sponsored by the Government of Germany and held at Vienna from 21 to 25 September 1992;

9. Also welcomes the active involvement of non-governmental organizations in the preparatory process for the Year, including the major global initiative to convene a world non-governmental organization forum entitled "Launching the International Year of the Family, 1994: Strengthening Families for the Well-being of Individuals and Societies", to be held at Valletta from 28 November to 2 December 1993, and calls upon all those concerned to support the event in every possible manner;

10. Expresses its special gratitude to Governments and other donors, especially those in the private sector, which have generously responded to earlier appeals to contribute resources to the Voluntary Fund for the International Year of the Family;

11. Appeals to all Governments concerned and all other prospective donors to pledge their contributions to the Voluntary Fund, notably during the pledging segments of the regional and interregional preparatory meetings in 1993, with a view to releasing new funds for specific family-oriented projects, particularly in developing countries, during both the Year and the follow-up thereto;

12. Invites policy-making organs of specialized agencies and other bodies in the United Nations system to consider, in the context of their substantive mandates, the principles and objectives of the Year and follow-up action to the Year for the benefit of the families of the world;

13. Also invites organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to include in their programme budgets for 1994 and 1995, as appropriate, programme elements for the observance of and follow-up to the Year;

14. Decides to devote one of its plenary meetings at its forty-eighth session, in early December 1993, to launching the International Year of the Family;

15. Also decides that, beginning in 1994, 15 May of every year shall be observed as the International Day of Families;

16. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, the Population Commission and the Commission on the Status of Women to include in the agendas of their sessions in 1993 or 1994 consideration of the principles and objectives of the Year in the context of their major areas of concern, and to propose specific follow-up measures regarding human rights, population issues and the advancement of women as each affects or is affected by families, including family-oriented components of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen on 11 and 12 March 1995, and the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995;

17. Further decides to devote two plenary meetings at its forty-ninth session, in 1994, to the implementation of the follow-up to the Year, and to designate those meetings as an international conference on families, which should take place at an appropriate global policy-making level and in keeping with the procedures and practices of the General Assembly;

18. Appeals to Member States as well as to all other participants in the observance of the Year to highlight 1994 as a special occasion to benefit families of the world in their quest for a better life for all, based on the principle of subsidiarity, which seeks solutions to problems at the lowest level of the societal structure;

19. Calls for a concerted promotional and information campaign on behalf of the Year at the national, regional and international levels, with the strong participation of the mass media;

20. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To seek the views of States members of the Commission for Social Development on the desirability of working out a declaration on the role, responsibilities and rights of families on the occasion of the Year;

(b) To plan adequate resources, including staff, through redeployment in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995, with a view to ensuring effective observance of and follow-up to the Year, commensurate with its important principles and objectives;

(c) To continue taking specific measures, through all the communication media at his disposal, particularly within the mandates of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to give widespread publicity to the preparations for and observance of the Year, and to increase the dissemination of information on the subject;

(d) To report on the observance of the Year at the national, regional and international levels, and to submit specific proposals on the follow-up to the Year, including a draft plan of action, if deemed appropriate, to the Assembly at its fiftieth session;

21. Decides to consider the question of the International Year of the Family at its fiftieth session, on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General under the item entitled "Social Development".

General Assembly resolution 47/237

20 September 1993 Meeting 112 Adopted without vote

Draft by ESC (A/47/1011) in resolution 1993/23; agenda items 12 and 93 (a).

Institutional machinery

Commission for Social Development

At its thirty-third session (Vienna, 8-17 February),⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission for Social Development recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption eight draft resolutions and three draft decisions. It also adopted one resolution and two decisions that called for Council action.

The draft resolutions covered the International Day of Disabled Persons (3 December); the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities; development of a plan of action to implement the long-term strategy to further the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons; inclusion of persons with disabilities in all aspects of society and the leadership role of the United Nations therein (see previous chapter for action on these four texts); the International Year of the Family (see above); implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing; the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year and draft world programme of action for youth towards the year 2000 and beyond (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV for action on these two texts); and the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (see below).

On 27 July, the Council, by decision 1993/237, took note of the Commission's report, endorsed its resolutions and decisions and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its thirty-fourth (1995) session.

On the same date, by decision 1993/239, the Council took note of the Commission's 1993 draft decision entitled "Contribution of comprehensive national social policies to societal management and to the solving of economic, environmental, demographic, cultural and political problems" and asked the Commission to reconsider the draft in 1995.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 1993, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD), an autonomous institution within the United Nations system established to promote research on the social dimensions of development, carried out research on crisis, adjustment and social change; socio-economic and political consequences of the international trade in illicit drugs; environment, sustainable development and social change; ethnic conflict and development; integrating gender into development policy; participation and changes in property relations in communist and post-communist societies; refugees, returnees and local society; and political violence and social movement. UNRISD research projects that focused on the 1995 World Summit for Social Development included rethinking social development in the 1990s; economic restructuring and new social policies; ethnic diversity and public policies; and the challenge of rebuilding war-torn societies.

The Commission on Social Development⁽¹⁷⁾ considered a report of the Board of UNRISD covering the Institute's activities in 1991 and 1992.⁽³⁵⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/25 without vote.

United Nations Research Institute for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of research on social issues for the formulation and implementation of development policies and, in this context, the functions and important contribution of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development,

Emphasizing the important role the Institute can play in the preparations for the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen on 11 and 12 March 1995,

Stressing the need to provide the necessary financial and administrative resources to enable the Institute to play its role and to further enhance its capacity to undertake research on critical problems of social development,

Having considered the report of the Board of the Institute on its activities during the period 1 November 1991 to 31 October 1992,

1. Expresses its appreciation to Governments providing financial support to the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development;

2. Invites those Governments that have not yet done so to make financial contributions to the Institute according to their capabilities, and those Governments that already support the Institute to consider the possibility of increasing their contributions, in both cases preferably on a regular basis;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide, within existing resources, financial and administrative services to the Institute in order to give it the capacity to carry out its research on critical social development problems.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/25

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1993/24); agenda item 20.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Commission on crime prevention and criminal justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1992,⁽³⁶⁾ held its second session at Vienna from 13 to 23 April 1993.⁽³⁷⁾

The Commission reviewed its priority themes as set out in a 1992 Council resolution,⁽³⁸⁾ and discussed, among other things, technical cooperation issues, United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and cooperation with other United Nations bodies.

The Commission recommended nine draft resolutions for adoption by the Council concerning violence against women (see next chapter); proposed guidelines for the prevention of urban crime; the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment; the 1994 World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime; control of the proceeds of crime; strengthening the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme; implementation of General Assembly and Council resolutions concerning crime prevention and criminal justice; preparations for the Ninth (1995) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders; and the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see below for action on these texts).

It also recommended three draft decisions for adoption by the Council on the organization of future sessions of the Commission; the provisional agenda for its third (1994) session (see below); and the reappointment of two members of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Interregional

Crime and Justice Research Institute (see APPENDIX III).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, by decision 1993/243, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its second session and endorsed its adopted resolutions and decisions. The Council also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the third (1994) session of the Commission. On the same date, by decision 1993/242, the Council decided that the Commission, at its third session, in addition to plenary meetings, should be provided with full interpretation services for eight meetings of the Committee of the Whole, and that future sessions of the Commission should be held for a period of eight days.

Operational activities and coordination

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1992 Economic and Social Council request,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a January report describing the results of a survey of crime prevention and criminal justice activities carried out within the United Nations system and by inter-governmental organizations and NGOs.⁽³⁹⁾ The survey focused on three priority themes: organized crime; urban, juvenile and violent criminality; and the administration of justice. The survey showed that organized crime was of concern to the international community, as evidenced by the number of activities undertaken. Of the three priority themes, that of urban, juvenile and violent criminality had the fewest reported activities. A great deal of activity was reported in the area of the administration of justice but was concentrated in more developed regions. An annex to the report listed the 17 United Nations organizations or entities, 41 intergovernmental organizations and 59 NGOs that had responded to the survey questionnaire.

Also in response to a 1992 Council request,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a February report⁽⁴⁰⁾ on progress made in establishing a sub-programme on operational activities, planning and coordination in crime prevention and criminal justice; operational activities in the priority areas of organized crime, urban juvenile and violent crime and the administration of justice; criminal justice statistics and information; the possible establishment of a world foundation on crime control and assistance to victims; a convention or other instrument on international cooperation; and the Ninth (1995) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. He also discussed General Assembly and Council action taken since 1991 in crime prevention and criminal justice. The Secretary-General con-eluded that too short a time had elapsed since the Commission's first (1992) session to assess the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/31 without vote.

Strengthening of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give a high level of priority to the activities of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/91 of 16 December 1992,

Recalling its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, in section VI of which it accorded high priority to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and requested an appropriate share of the overall resources of the United Nations for the programme,

Convinced that the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat can only be effective if it is provided with resources that are commensurate with its requirements and that allow it to implement its mandates and to respond in a timely and efficient manner to the increasing requests of Member States for its services,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/22,

Deeply concerned about the delay in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 46/152 and 47/91 and Council resolution 1992/22, with respect to strengthening, as resources permit, the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and upgrading the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch into a division,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and the crucial role it has to play in promoting international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality, and in enabling Member States to achieve the goals of preventing crime within and among States and of improving the response to crime;

2. Reaffirms also the importance of the role of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice as the principal policy-making body for the activities of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

3. Reaffirms further its decision, contained in its resolution 1992/22, section VI, to accord high priority to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/152, and to request an appropriate share of the overall resources of the United Nations for the programme;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to give effect to General Assembly resolutions

46/152 and 47/91 and to Council resolution 1992/22 by strengthening the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, by providing it with the resources required for the full implementation of its mandates and by upgrading it into a division, headed by a Director, if necessary by reallocating existing resources;

5. Takes note of the proposed programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice for the biennium 1994-1995, submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its second session, and requests the Secretary-General to reflect it, as modified in accordance with decisions of the Commission, in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

6. Invites the Committee for Programme and Coordination, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the General Assembly to ensure proper follow-up to the proposals of the Secretary-General, pursuant to the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, on progress made in the implementation of Council resolution 1992/22 and the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/31

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32); agenda item 20.

Also on that date, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1993/34.

Implementation of General Assembly resolutions 46/152 and 47/91 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/22, concerning crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/109 of 14 December 1990 on computerization of criminal justice,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 46/120 of 17 December 1991 on human rights in the administration of justice,

Bearing in mind also General Assembly resolution 47/91 of 16 December 1992 on crime prevention and criminal justice,

Bearing in mind further section VI of its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, in which it determined the three priority themes that should guide the work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the development of a detailed programme,

Recalling that in section VII of its resolution 1992/22, it decided, inter alia, that the Commission should include in its agenda, beginning with its second session, a standing item on the existing United Nations standards and norms in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling also its resolution 1990/21 of 24 May 1990 on the implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Taking note of the report of the Pre-session Working Group on the Implementation of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice of the former Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Also taking note of the recommendations of the Meeting of Experts for the Evaluation of Implementation of United Nations Norms and Guidelines in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Recalling section I of its resolution 1992/22, entitled "Strengthening the operational capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, especially operational activities and advisory services",

Conscious that preventing and controlling crime is a growing challenge for most Member States and the international community as a whole,

Convinced that developing crime prevention and criminal justice skills is necessary to strengthen the rule of law and to promote democracy,

Alarmed by the negative impact of criminal activities on the development process in many countries, particularly in developing countries and countries in transition,

Bearing in mind the urgent need of the least developed countries for assistance, particularly in training crime prevention and criminal justice officials and practitioners,

Conscious of the relationship between national crime and more sophisticated forms of transnational criminal activities,

Convinced that effective action against crime requires increased technical cooperation activities at the international level, in order to provide appropriate assistance to Member States whose capacity to deal with crime-related issues is insufficient, and to tackle serious forms of international criminal activity, such as organized transnational crime,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 46/152, emphasized the practical orientation of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and decided that the programme should provide States with practical assistance, such as data collection, information and experience-sharing and training, in order to achieve the goals of preventing crime and improving the response to it,

Concerned about the disparity between the need for technical assistance and the resources available for the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Recalling that in section VI of its resolution 1992/22, it determined that the majority of programme resources should be concentrated on the provision of training, advisory services and technical cooperation in a limited number of areas of recognized need, taking into account the need for technical assistance to developing countries, and that, in implementing special operational activities and advisory services in situations of urgent need, the Secretariat should place major emphasis on serving as a broker and clearing-house,

Convinced that the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme should provide the necessary operational perspective to Member States, thus assisting them in modernizing their criminal justice systems,

Aware that the introduction of modern criminal justice techniques requires education and training of criminal justice personnel,

Mindful that computer-assisted collection, management and distribution of crime prevention and criminal justice information are of growing importance to the effective and humane administration of criminal justice systems,

Expressing its appreciation to the Bureau of Justice Statistics of the United States Department of Justice and the State University of New York at Albany, United States of America, for their strong support in the development of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network,

Welcoming the contributions to technical cooperation made on a multilateral or bilateral basis by a number of Governments and institutions and noting in this regard that the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund has received contributions from the Governments of France, Italy and Tunisia and from the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, and the Asia Crime Prevention Foundation,

Recalling resolution 1/2 of 29 April 1992 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, resolutions 1(XXXV), 4(XXXV) and 11(XXXV) of 15 April 1992 of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/31 of 18 February 1992,

Reaffirming that the prevention and control of crime require effective, concerted and multidisciplinary action at the national, regional and international levels,

Convinced that the scope of international cooperation in all fields of crime prevention and criminal justice should be extended and increased as a matter of the utmost importance and that technical assistance programmes in crime prevention and criminal justice should be expanded and strengthened as a matter of urgency,

Alarmed by the fact that large financial profits derived from criminal activity may enable transnational criminal organizations to penetrate, infect and corrupt the structure of Governments, legitimate commercial activities and society at large, thereby impeding economic and social development, hampering law and order, undermining the foundation of States and preventing good governance,

Noting, with respect to priority themes, the need to pay particular attention to such issues as organized crime in all its manifestations, money-laundering, the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment, the protection of cultural property from theft and smuggling, domestic violence, the computerization of the administration of criminal justice, juvenile delinquency and street crime,

I. Review of priority themes

1. Reaffirms the priority themes formulated by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its first session and contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/22, section VI;

2. Invites Member States to prepare and circulate in advance of each session proposals on specific objectives and activities, as recommended in Commission resolution 1/1 of 29 April 1992 entitled "Strategic management by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme", underlining the importance for the third and subsequent sessions of the Commission of implementing the mechanisms, referred to in paragraphs 32 to 35 of the annex to that resolution, for determining the objectives and the specific activities of the programme;

II. Operational activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme

1. Welcomes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretariat to carry out operational activities, notably setting up projects to be implemented in developing countries and countries in transition;

2. Notes with appreciation the cooperation between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and other United Nations entities, such as the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the Division for the Advancement of Women and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, and recommends that such cooperation be expanded and intensified;

3. Also notes with appreciation the support provided by some Member States in the organization of training seminars, inter alia, by providing funding and in-kind expertise;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue elaborating, in accordance with the programme priorities, training curricula that could be implemented in Member States upon request and adapted to particular national or regional conditions and requirements, using new and existing materials such as manuals and other publications, United Nations guidelines, minimum rules and model treaties on crime prevention and criminal justice;

5. Welcomes with appreciation the Secretariat's participation in, and contribution to, the work of peace-keeping operations such as those of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the United Nations Protection Force, in accordance with resolution 1992/22;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to develop basic courses on United Nations norms and guidelines in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice which can be used, as necessary, for training peace-keeping and emergency mission personnel and their national counterparts;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the involvement of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch in the planning of such missions;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its third session, on technical cooperation and advisory services of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, including appropriate mechanisms for the mobilization of resources;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the institutional capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme by providing the Secretariat with adequate human and financial resources, if necessary by reallocating existing resources, as well as by means of voluntary contributions, to enable it to elaborate, execute and evaluate operational activities and advisory services at the request of Member States;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider making available the necessary resources for the participation of the least developed countries in the sessions of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

11. Invites Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund in order to augment the implementation of technical assistance projects;

12. Recommends to Member States that they integrate, where appropriate, crime prevention and criminal justice components into their priority areas for development, so as to better address crime-related issues in the context of national development;

13. Reaffirms the importance of technical cooperation, including that among developing countries;

14. Recognizes the relevance of close cooperation between the interregional, regional and associate institutes cooperating with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to the development of technical assistance and research projects at the regional and interregional levels, taking into account regional characteristics and traditions of the various criminal justice systems;

III. United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice

1. Reaffirms the importance of United Nations standards, norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Stresses the need for further cooperation and concerted action in translating those standards into practice;

3. Invites the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to focus on the promotion of the use and application of United Nations standards, norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice, while recognizing the social, cultural and economic conditions of Member States;

4. Invites Governments to pay due attention to United Nations standards, norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice and to enhance their widest possible dissemination;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the texts of the standards contained in the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which has been published only in English, and calls for the reprint of the compendium in English and for its publication in the other five official languages of the United Nations;

6. Recognizes the important role that the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the institutes associated or affiliated with the United Nations and non-governmental organizations play in promoting the use and application of the United Nations standards and norms in the administration of justice;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To assist Member States, at their request, in implementing existing United Nations standards in crime prevention and criminal justice;

(b) To strengthen and coordinate activities in this field, including advisory services, training programmes and fellowships, with a view to undertaking joint programmes and developing collaborative mechanisms;

(c) To commence without delay a process of information-gathering to be undertaken by means of surveys, such as reporting systems, and contributions from other sources, initially paying attention to the United Nations standards, norms and guidelines listed in paragraph 8 (a) below; the surveys should be conducted over a two-year period in order to enable Member States to have sufficient time to provide replies; the results of the first surveys should be considered at the earliest possible session of the Commission;

8. Requests the Commission to establish, at its third session, an open-ended in-session working group, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and subject to the consideration of financial implications, in order to discuss, inter alia, the following issues:

(a) The role of the United Nations in promoting the use and application of the following standards, norms and guidelines, on the understanding that this selection does not imply any priority over other standards, norms and guidelines and is subject to review at future sessions of the Commission:

- (i) The Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners;
- (ii) The Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, together with the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials;
- (iii) The Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;
- (iv) The Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary;

(b) The evaluation of the reporting system and other sources of information;

(c) Measures to improve the dissemination of information, education and technical assistance to enhance their use and application;

9. Commends the World Conference on Human Rights and its Preparatory Committee for bearing in mind the existence of important United Nations standards and norms in the administration of justice;

10. Calls upon the Commission, at its third session, to pay due attention to the results of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, as far as crime prevention and criminal justice issues are concerned;

IV. Crime prevention and criminal justice information management

A. Collection of information

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the survey of activities carried out in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice within the United Nations system and by relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and on coordination of activities with other United Nations bodies, the ongoing activities of the Secretariat concerning the Fourth United Nations Survey of Crime Trends, Operations of Criminal Justice Systems and Crime Prevention Strategies and other initiatives under way to acquire, process and distribute crime prevention and criminal justice data for the benefit of Member States and criminal justice professionals;

2. Reaffirms the usefulness of these information activities in crime prevention and criminal justice policy development and programme planning;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its third session, on progress made on the Fourth and Fifth United Nations Surveys of Crime Trends and Operations of Criminal Justice Systems and Crime Prevention Strategies, and other initiatives under way to acquire, process and distribute crime prevention and criminal justice data;

4. Strongly encourages Governments to continue to reply promptly to requests of the Secretary-General for crime prevention and criminal justice data in order to ensure that those data can be processed and provided to all Member States and other interested parties in a timely and efficient manner;

B. Management of information

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and to intensify efforts directed at the modernization of criminal justice techniques and administration, with the needs of developing countries being given special attention, introducing, inter alia, compatible information technology to facilitate the administration of criminal justice and to strengthen practical cooperation on crime control between Member States;

2. Encourages Member States, the private sector and criminal justice professionals to exchange proposals, information on projects and innovations enhancing criminal justice operations through the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch;

C. Distribution of information

1. Requests the Secretary-General to allocate the necessary services for the transfer of the management and daily operations of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch;

2. Invites Member States to consider the provision of extrabudgetary resources, including but not restricted to the secondment of computer-programming professionals with criminal justice experience, to the Secretariat in order to assist in the orderly transfer of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network, and to provide support for its further logistical and substantive development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, as resources permit:

(a) To strengthen and expand the clearing-house functions of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch;

(b) To organize training courses that would enable criminal justice professionals, in particular those in developing countries, to acquaint themselves with the services of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network;

(c) To establish a support system for developing countries that would, among other things, ensure that basic costs connected with the provision of the necessary modalities, including the costs of membership in the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network and transmission costs, are covered;

(d) To report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its third session, on progress made in the improvement of computerization in criminal justice management, with emphasis on strengthening national capacities for the collection, collation, analysis and utilization of the data;

V. Cooperation between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and other relevant entities

1. Welcomes with appreciation Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 10(XXXVI) of 7 April 1993 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/41 of 5 March 1993;

2. Invites the various relevant entities of the United Nations system, including but not limited to the Office of Legal Affairs, the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, the Department for Development Support and Management Services, the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the Division for the Advancement of Women, the regional commissions, the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to cooperate with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and to extend to it their support and assistance in implementation of its mandates;

3. Decides to continue its close cooperation in this field with the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Commission on the Status of Women and the specialized agencies in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of United Nations activities in areas of mutual interest and concern and to ensure coordination and avoidance of duplication;

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General consider resorting, where appropriate, to the expertise available in the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch in matters relating to the work of the International Law Commission on the preparation of a draft statute for the international criminal court and the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind;

5. Invites Member States to ensure that their efforts and arrangements aimed at cooperation and coordination at the bilateral and regional levels take into account the relevant activities and work of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage and facilitate cooperation and coordination in accordance with the present resolution and to report on the subject to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its third session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/34

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106/Add.1) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32), orally amended; agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/103 without vote.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by high costs of crime, particularly in its new and transnational forms, and the danger posed to the individual as such and to societies and to the welfare of all nations by the rising incidence of crime,

Reaffirming the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Emphasizing the need for strengthened regional and international cooperation to combat crime in all its forms and to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of criminal justice systems,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and the promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Recognizing that many States suffer from an extreme shortage of human and financial resources, which impedes them from responding adequately to problems related to crime,

Recalling its relevant resolutions as well as the decisions of the Economic and Social Council, in which a high level of priority was accorded to the activities of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and an appropriate share of the overall resources of the United Nations requested for the programme,

Recalling also its resolution 47/91 of 16 December 1992, in which it requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to upgrade, as a matter of urgency, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to a Division,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/34 of 27 July 1993, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the institutional capacity of the programme to enable it to plan, execute and evaluate operational activities and advisory services in its area of competence, upon request from Member States,

Convinced that the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch can be effective only if it is provided with resources commensurate with its requirements and adequate to allow it to implement its mandates and to respond in a timely and efficient manner to the increasing requests of Member States for its services,

Concerned about the delay in the implementation of its resolutions 46/152 of 18 December 1991 and 47/91 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1992/22 of 30 July 1992 and 1993/31 and 1993/34 of 27 July 1993, with respect to the strengthening of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and the upgrading of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to a Division,

1. Welcomes with appreciation Economic and Social Council resolutions 1993/27, 1993/28, 1993/29, 1993/30, 1993/31, 1993/32, 1993/33 and 1993/34 of 27 July 1993;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and the crucial role it has to play in promoting international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and in assisting Member States to achieve the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the priority attached to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 46/152 and 47/91, and the need for an appropriate share of the existing resources of the United Nations for the programme;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to give effect to its resolutions 46/152 and 47/91 and to Economic and Social Council resolutions 1992/22, 1993/31 and 1993/34 by providing the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandates, in conformity with the high priority attached to the programme;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to upgrade the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to a Division, as recommended in and in accordance with resolution 47/91;

6. Abo requests the Secretary-General to provide from existing resources adequate funds to build and maintain the institutional capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme to respond to requests of Member States for assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, if necessary through the reallocation of resources;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, to perform its functions and to ensure the proper coordination of all relevant activities in the field, in particular with the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

8. Invites the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to ensure proper follow-up to the proposals of the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake all steps necessary to ensure the adequate organization of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/32;

10. Expresses its support for the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, to be held in Italy in the last quarter of 1994, and calls upon Member States to be represented at the Conference at the highest possible level;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all measures, within existing resources, to ensure the appropriate organization of the Conference and to submit its conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

12. Welcomes the initiative to hold in Italy in June 1994, under the auspices of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, the International Conference on "Laundering and Controlling Proceeds of Crime: a Global Approach", to be organized by the Government of Italy and the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council;

13. Invites the relevant funding agencies of the United Nations to consider including crime prevention and criminal justice activities in their funding programmes, from within their existing resources, taking into account the increasing needs of Member States in the field, and to cooperate closely with the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in planning and implementing these activities;

14. Invites Governments to lend their full support to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to increase financial contributions to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution and of resolutions 46/152 and 47/91.

General Assembly resolution 48/103

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Organized crime

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1992,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a January report⁽⁴²⁾ which discussed the nature and extent of organized crime, its impact on society and future trends.

In April,⁽⁴³⁾ at the Commission's second session, the Minister of Justice of Italy called on the United Nations to organize and convene, in the second half of 1994, a world ministerial conference on organized transnational crime, for which his Government would act as host.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/29 without vote.

World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Alarmed by the increasing dimensions and sophistication of organized transnational crime,

Recognizing the danger posed by organized transnational crime to all countries of the world,

Reaffirming the need for more intensified international cooperation to prevent and control organized transnational crime,

Convinced that effective and concerted action at all levels to prevent and control the activities of organized transnational criminal groups represents an investment in the future for all societies,

Recognizing the need to intensify and coordinate efforts against organized transnational crime at the national and regional levels in order to ensure concerted and efficient global action,

Convinced that the regular exchange and dissemination of information can assist Governments in establishing adequate criminal justice systems and in devising effective strategies and policies against crime,

Convinced also that technical assistance in this field is indispensable,

Convinced further of the need to develop means of cooperating at the investigative and judicial levels,

Considering that the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat has at its disposal the knowledge and expertise required to assist Member States in their efforts against organized transnational crime,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 45/107, 45/121 and 45/123 of 14 December 1990, 46/152 of 18 December 1991 and 47/87 and 47/91 of 16 December 1992,

Recalling that, in section IV of its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, the Council recognized the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice as the principal policy-making body of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to organize, without real growth implications for the overall regular budget of the United Nations for the biennium 1994-1995, a World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, to be held in the third quarter of 1994, which should have the following objectives:

(a) To examine the problems and dangers posed by organized transnational crime in the various regions of the world;

(b) To consider national legislation and to evaluate its adequacy to deal with the various forms of organized transnational crime and to identify appropriate guidelines for legislative and other measures to be taken at the national level;

(c) To identify the most effective forms of international cooperation for the prevention and control of organized transnational crime at the investigative, prosecutorial and judicial levels;

(d) To consider appropriate modalities and guidelines for the prevention and control of organized transnational crime at the regional and international levels;

(e) To consider whether it would be feasible to elaborate international instruments, including conventions, against organized transnational crime;

2. Accepts with appreciation the offer of the Government of Italy to act as host for the Conference;

3. Invites all Member States to be represented at the Conference at the highest possible level;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its third session on the status of the preparations for the Conference.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/29

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32); agenda item 20.

Money laundering

In January,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a report on global efforts to prevent and control the use and laundering of the proceeds of crime. He discussed problems confronting Governments and their criminal justice systems and financial institutions. Measures against money laundering included legislative initiatives, regulatory mechanisms ensuring flexibility and adaptability and infrastructure building. The Secretary-General stressed the need for strengthening international cooperation to combat the problem.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/30 without vote.

Control of the proceeds of crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 concerning operational activities and coordination in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in section VI of which the Council determined the work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice should be guided by three priority themes, one of which included money-laundering,

Recalling also resolution 1/2 of 29 April 1992 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on control of the proceeds of crime,

Aware that control of the proceeds of crime is an essential element in the struggle against organized transnational crime,

Convinced that international action against organized and transnational crime requires, in addition to intensified law enforcement, concerted efforts to prevent and control the laundering of the proceeds of crime as an essential means of destroying criminal organizations,

Convinced also that effective control of the proceeds of crime requires concerted global action to curb the capacity of criminal organizations to transfer the proceeds of their illegal activities across national frontiers by taking advantage of gaps in international cooperation,

Convinced further that criminal organizations engage in a multitude of criminal activities generating illicit profits and that international action aimed at controlling the proceeds of crime can therefore only be effective if it takes into account all aspects of the problem,

Noting the efforts already undertaken by the Financial Action Task Force established by the heads of State or Government of the seven major industrialized countries and the President of the Commission of the European Communities, as well as the efforts of the Council of Europe, the European Community and the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States,

Recalling the recommendations contained in the Global Programme of Action, adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on measures to be taken against the effects of money derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking, illegal financial flows and illegal use of the banking system,

Welcoming Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 5(XXXVI) of 7 April 1993,

1. Requests the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat:

(a) To continue studying the problem of controlling the proceeds of crime;

(b) To continue collecting relevant information on national legislation and its implementation;

(c) To consider identifying areas of interest to criminal organizations, with a view to evaluating the efficiency and effectiveness of measures taken to control the proceeds derived from criminal activities;

(d) To consider, in cooperation with the United Nations bodies concerned and other relevant entities, such as the Financial Action Task Force, the possibility of assisting Governments, at their request, in developing guidelines for the detection, investigation and prosecution of the laundering of the proceeds of crime and in providing information to assist financial institutions in detecting, monitoring and controlling suspicious transactions and in preventing the infiltration of the legitimate economy by the proceeds of crime;

(e) To elaborate appropriate training material for use in providing practical assistance to Member States at their request;

(f) To provide technical assistance to Member States, upon request, in drafting, revising and implementing relevant legislation, in organizing special investigation teams and in training law enforcement, investigative, prosecutorial and judicial personnel;

2. Invites the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to cooperate closely with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in matters related to the control of the proceeds of crime;

3. Welcomes with appreciation the initiative of the Government of Italy and the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council in organizing, in cooperation with financial institutions—at the international and national levels—of the various countries that have dealt with the problem of controlling the proceeds of crime, and under the auspices of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, the International Conference on Laundering and Controlling Proceeds of Crime: a Global Approach, to be held in Italy in June 1994.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/30

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32); agenda item 20.

Urban crime

In April,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered the question of crime prevention in urban areas—established by the Economic and Social Council in 1992⁽³⁸⁾ as one of the priority themes guiding the Commission's work. The Commission recommended to the Council for adoption a series of guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in urban crime prevention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/27 without vote.

Proposed guidelines for the prevention of urban crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/20 of 9 May 1979, 1984/48 of 25 May 1984 and 1990/24 of 24 May 1990 and General Assembly resolutions 45/121 of 14 December 1990 and 46/152 of 18 December 1991,

Recalling also its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992,

Recalling further the Milan Plan of Action,^a the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines),^b the United Nations

Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules),^c the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the resolution entitled "Prevention of urban crime" adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,^d

Aware of the universal character of urban crime,

Recognizing the usefulness of establishing guidelines to facilitate action on preventing urban crime,

Anxious to respond to the call by many States for technical cooperation programmes adapted to local conditions and needs,

1. Takes note of the proposed guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in the field of urban crime prevention, contained in the annex to the present resolution, which are aimed at making urban crime prevention more effective;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate the proposed guidelines as widely as possible, with a view to having them examined by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its third session for inclusion in the discussion under item 6 of the provisional agenda for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1995, and then published in the most appropriate form, for example in the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

3. Encourages Member States to report on their experiences in elaborating urban crime prevention projects on the basis of the proposed guidelines;

4. Calls upon the interregional, regional and associate institutes cooperating with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and non-governmental organizations to report on their experiences in the field of urban crime prevention and to express their observations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to examine, taking into account the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, the possibility of coordinating measures for urban crime prevention that may be included in the assistance programmes carried out by other United Nations entities;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to examine, together with international financial institutions, the possibility of including urban crime prevention measures in their assistance programmes.

ANNEX

Proposed guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in the field of urban crime prevention

A. Modalities for the design and implementation of cooperation and assistance activities

1. All cooperation projects for urban crime prevention should comply with the principles set out below.

Local approach to problems

2. Urban crime is characterized by a multiplicity of factors and forms. For each case a local approach to the problems to be addressed must be adopted. This involves:

(a) A local diagnostic survey of the crime phenomena, their characteristics, factors leading to them, the form they take and their scope;

(b) The identification of all the relevant actors that could take part in compiling this diagnostic survey and in crime prevention: public institutions (national or local), local elected officials, the private sector (associations, enterprises etc.), community representatives etc.;

(c) The setting up, from the outset, of consultation mechanisms promoting closer liaison, the exchange of information, joint work and the design of a coherent strategy.

Concerted design of a global crime prevention action plan

3. The global crime prevention action plan:

- (a) Shall define:
 - (i) The nature of the phenomena to be tackled (poverty, unemployment, housing, health and education problems, cultural or inter-ethnic conflicts, drugs etc.);
 - (ii) The objectives being pursued and the time-limits fixed for them to be attained;
 - (iii) The modalities of action envisaged and the respective responsibilities of those involved vis-à-vis the implementation of the plan (national and local resources to be mobilized and resources available through international cooperation);
- (b) Shall involve a wide range of fields:
 - (i) Family, young people and adults, relationship between the generations or between social groups etc.;
 - (ii) Education, civic values, culture etc.;
 - (iii) Employment, training, measures for combating unemployment;
 - (iv) Housing;
 - (v) Health, drug and alcohol abuse;
 - (vi) Government and community welfare aid for the least fortunate members of society;
- (vii) Combating the culture of violence:
 - (c) Shall involve a range of actors representing:
 - (i) The police, the courts, education, housing, health, social workers etc.;
 - (ii) The community: elected officials, associations, volunteers, parents etc.;
 - (iii) The economic sector: enterprises, banks, business, public transport etc.;
 - (d) Shall provide for action on various levels:
 - (i) Primary prevention:
 - a. By promoting welfare and health development and progress and by combating all forms of social deprivation;
 - b. By promoting communal values and respect for fundamental human rights;
 - c. By promoting civic responsibility and social mediation procedures;
 - d. By adapting the working methods of the police and the courts (community police and courts);
 - (ii) Prevention of recidivism:
 - a. Through modified police intervention (rapid response, within the local community etc.);
 - b. By modifying methods of judicial intervention;
 - i. Diversification of modalities of treatment and of measures taken according to the nature and seriousness of the cases (special system for minors);
 - ii. Systematic research on the reintegration of offenders involved in urban crime;
 - iii. Socio-educational support within the framework of the sentence, in prison and as preparation for release from prison;

- (iii) After the sentence has been served: aid and socio-educational support, family support etc.;
- (iv) Protection of victims by practical improvements in the treatment of victims by means of the following:
 - a. Raising awareness of rights and how to exercise them effectively;
 - b. Reinforcing rights (in particular the right to compensation);
 - c. Introducing systems of victim reception, assistance and follow-up.

B. Implementation of the action plan

The national authorities

4. The national authorities:
 - (a) Should provide active encouragement to local actors (information, technical and financial aid etc.);
 - (b) Should coordinate national policy and strategies with local strategies and needs (possibly by means of contracts between national and local authorities);
 - (c) Should organize interministerial consultation and cooperation mechanisms.

The national and local authorities

5. The national and local authorities:
 - (a) Should be constantly mindful of respect for the fundamental principles of human rights in promoting these activities;
 - (b) Should implement training programmes (national and local) to inform and support all the professionals involved in crime prevention (initial training as well as in-service training to accommodate changes in working methods);
 - (c) Should compare experiences and organize exchanges of know-how;
 - (d) Should provide for means of evaluating regularly the effectiveness of the strategy implemented and the possible revision of it.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/27

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32); agenda item 20.

Criminal law and the environment

In April,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment—established by the Economic and Social Council in 1992⁽³⁸⁾ as one of the priority themes guiding the Commission's work.

The Commission recommended to the Council for adoption a draft resolution on the subject.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/28 without vote.

The role of criminal law in the protection of the environment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, in section VI of which it determined that the work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice should be guided by three priority themes, one of which included the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment, and in section III of which it invited Member States to establish reliable and effective channels of communication among themselves and with the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, including the regional institutes affiliated with the United Nations,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/121 of 14 December 1990 on the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Assembly welcomed the instruments and resolutions adopted by the Congress, inter alia, the resolution on the role of criminal law in the protection of nature and the environment,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in which the Assembly called for strengthening regional and international cooperation in combating transnational crime,

Noting with appreciation the collaboration of the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, and the Max Planck Institute for Foreign and International Criminal Law, in organizing the Seminar on the Policy of Criminal Law in the Protection of Nature and the Environment in a European Perspective, held at Lauchhammer, Germany, from 25 to 29 April 1992,

Noting also with appreciation the ongoing study on environmental crime, sanctioning strategies and sustainable development, undertaken jointly by the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the Australian Institute of Criminology,

1. Takes note of the conclusions of the Seminar on the Policy of Criminal Law in the Protection of Nature and the Environment in a European Perspective, contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of undertaking activities in the field of environmental crime in the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in particular to include environmental crime as an issue for technical cooperation and, for that purpose, to establish, with input from Member States, a roster of experts from all regions in the field of environmental crime;

3. Requests the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the regional or associate institutes cooperating with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to assist the Secretary-General in this endeavour by sharing their expertise;

4. Calls upon Member States and the bodies concerned to continue their efforts to protect nature and the environment using, in addition to measures provided by administrative law and liability under civil law, measures in the field of national criminal law, and to provide requesting Member States with technical cooperation in the field of environmental crime.

ANNEX

Conclusions of the Seminar on the Policy of Criminal Law in the Protection of Nature and the Environment in a European Perspective, held at Lauchhammer, Germany, from 25 to 29 April 1992

1. The existing state of the environment is serious and calls for efficient countermeasures throughout Europe at the national, supranational and international levels. The environment as a whole and its component elements must be protected in such a way that:

- (a) Existing damage will be eliminated or at least reduced (including restoration);
- (b) Harm will be prevented;
- (c) Risk will be minimized.

2. There should be enhanced recognition of environmental interests as special or particular legal interests. The necessity of using water, air, the soil and other natural elements to a certain extent, however, precludes a prohibition on every action affecting those environmental interests.

3. Environmental protection requires an integrated approach employing a variety of instruments for influencing conduct and reducing burdens on the environment, ranging from public participation to the use of sanctions. Regulatory environmental administrative law still remains at the heart of state instruments for the protection of the environment. Other methods of environmental protection, for example, economic incentives or the use of civil sanctions, will be important for many aspects of environmental protection. In addition, criminal law should play a flanking and supporting and, where appropriate, independent role.

4. The goal in using the threat of sanctions is not only to back up the enforcement of administrative rules, but also to protect environmental interests as such (qualifying them as penally protected interests). Here, too, criminal law can have a general and special preventive effect and may, by its moral stigma, heighten environmental awareness.

5. Substantive criminal law can play an autonomous and independent role in cases of serious attacks on the environment, including the endangerment of public health or of life or of serious bodily harm. Above and beyond this, the legislator cannot develop behavioural criteria under criminal law which are more stringent than those under administrative law. In that respect, environmental criminal law is closely linked to and dependent upon administrative law, which limits the effect of the former; nevertheless, this does not provide any reason for it not to be used in this context. That limitation is also dependent upon what differences exist in the approach and the means of the administration and the judiciary in the role which they play in protecting the environment. To reduce the risk of non-uniform application, emphasis should be placed on links with administrative regulations by comparison with links with administrative decisions.

6. Environmental criminal law should encompass all areas of the environment. It is up to the national legislators whether in this respect offences are developed which refer to the environment as a whole or the specific components thereof. The legislator should develop at least a common or similar offence in relation to water, air and soil pollution.

7. Offences should be differentiated according to their seriousness (with, as a consequence, a different range of sanctions). One factor is the division according to the state of mens rea between intentional and reckless or negligent acts. Another emerging possibility is the use of the concept of endangerment in addition to the traditional use of so-called result crimes in continental legislation.

8. It is not sufficient to use criminal law only to combat damage to other violations of environmental entities. Serious infringements of safety regulations, of other operator duties or of the administrator's preventive control interests can vastly increase the risk that hazards or damage will incur. Therefore it is justifiable to invoke criminal law to deal with the inappropriate handling of hazardous substances, goods and plants or the possible impairment of control interests. A distinction may be drawn between offences which require that the act:

(a) Create a concrete or actual danger to environmental objects (so-called concrete endangerment offence);

(b) Occur in a situation with a likelihood of danger (see the penal provision in the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, so-called potential endangerment offence);

(c) Cover a mode of behaviour which is typically dangerous for the environment (e.g., operation without the necessary permit of a plant classified in a list as typically dangerous; violation of an order prohibiting the running of a plant; illegal disposal or export of dangerous waste; so-called abstract endangerment offence).

9. Minor offences (especially non-severe violations of administrative rules) could, without a loss of efficiency, be sanctioned only by fines or, in countries where a distinction exists between criminal and administrative punitive sanctions, be classified as administrative violations (punishable by a non-criminal fine). In that respect the scope of criminal law could even be restricted.

10. In the context of moves towards the introduction of alternative or additional measures under criminal law in general, in comparison with the traditional use of fines and imprisonment, consideration should also be given to the possibility of using other measures (such as restoration of the status quo; imposition of obligations to improve the state of the environment; confiscation of proceeds from crime). The decision on such a variety of measures may be dependent on the use of those instruments by the administration and on their effect.

11. Support should be given to the extension of the idea of imposing (criminal or non-criminal) fines on corporations (or possibly even other measures) in Europe.

12. When using criminal law and creating new offences in the area of environmental protection, consideration should be given to the need for enforcement resources. In countries where prosecution is not undertaken by the administrative agencies themselves, the application (and effect) of environmental criminal law by the prosecuting authority and judiciary is to a great extent dependent on the use of the knowledge and experience of those agencies and upon their cooperation. In order to reduce conflicts of interests and to enhance the possibility of clearing up cases, legal rules or administrative guidelines for reporting offences by administrative agencies should be developed. Cooperation and coordination between the administrative and criminal agencies is essential. Special training and sufficient staffing should be provided. Further studies on improved measures for enforcement of existing environmental protection legislation should be undertaken.

13. The environment must be protected not only at the national but also at the international level. In this respect criminal law for the protection of the environment should also be developed at the international level.

14. Improvements should be made in the options available for prosecuting extraterritorial or transboundary criminal offences. In that respect:

(a) It should be possible to take jurisdiction in all countries over offences of a transboundary nature. Positive conflicts of jurisdiction should be solved. The problem of dealing under the criminal law with acts permitted in one State, and which produce harmful effects in another State where such acts are prohibited, should be examined in the light of the development of international and/or supranational law, including the use of bilateral and multilateral conventions or European Community regulations to develop common environmental standards;

(b) The extension of extraterritorial jurisdiction or the possible use or expansion of extradition should be considered.

15. European standards of environmental substantive criminal law should be developed. Following the encouragement for the harmonization of regional legislation given by the adoption of the resolution entitled "The role of criminal law in the protection of nature and environment" by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which was welcomed by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, the efforts of the Council of Europe in elaborating a convention and a recommendation on environmental offences should be supported. Such instruments should reflect the basic ideas expressed in paragraphs 6, 8 and 10 above. This will improve international cooperation and reduce the danger of dislocation through the evasion of stricter enforcement in one country by moving to another country.

16. European conventions applicable to international cooperation in the prosecution of offences (e.g., by extradition, mutual assistance, transfer of proceedings) should be adhered to and utilized.

Alien smuggling

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/102 without vote.

Prevention of the smuggling of aliens

The General Assembly,

Concerned that the activities of criminal organizations that profit illicitly by smuggling human beings and preying on the dignity and lives of migrants contribute to the complexity of the phenomenon of increasing international migration,

Recognizing that international criminal groups often convince individuals to migrate illegally by various means for enormous profits and use the proceeds from smuggling human beings to finance other criminal activities, thus bringing great harm to the States concerned,

Aw are that such activities endanger the lives of those individuals and impose severe costs on the international community, particularly upon certain States that have been called upon to rescue and to provide medical care, food, housing and transportation for these individuals,

Recognizing that socio-economic factors influence the problem of the smuggling of aliens and also contribute to the complexity of current international migration,

Noting that smugglers, particularly in the State of destination of the smuggling of aliens, often force migrants into forms of debt, bondage or servitude, often involving criminal activities, in order to pay for their passage,

Convinced of the need to provide humane treatment and protect the full human rights of migrants,

Recognizing that this illegal smuggling activity has high social and economic costs, contributes to corruption and burdens law enforcement agencies in all States where illegal aliens transit or are found,

Recalling relevant international agreements and conventions, including the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1960, the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974, and the Protocol relating thereto of 1978, by which specific safety standards are established for certain passenger ships, each State party is required to take the necessary steps to ensure that no vessel covered by the Conventions and flying its flag is permitted to carry passengers on international voyages unless it meets the standards established by the Conventions, and each port State party is required to prevent a foreign flag passenger vessel from sailing from its port when the condition of the ship or of its equipment is not in compliance with the Conventions,

Recalling also the undertaking of States parties to the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, done at Geneva on 7 September 1956, to take all practicable and necessary legislative and other measures to bring about progressively and as soon as possible the complete abolition or abandonment of the practice of debt bondage,

Reaffirming that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States must be respected, including their right to control their own borders,

Concerned that the smuggling of aliens undermines public confidence in policies and procedures for immigration and for the protection of refugees,

Noting that the smuggling of aliens can involve criminal elements in many States, including the State or States where the smuggling scheme was planned, the State of nationality of the aliens, the State where the means of transport was prepared, the flag State of any vessels or aircraft that transport the aliens, States through which the aliens transit to their destination or in order to be repatriated and the State of destination,

Taking into account the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization in responding to requests from States for assistance in dealing with the smuggling of aliens,

Emphasizing the need for States to cooperate urgently at the bilateral and multilateral levels, as appropriate, to thwart these activities,

1. Condemns the practice of smuggling aliens in violation of international and national law and without regard for the safety, well-being and human rights of the migrants;

2. Commends those States which have cooperated to combat the smuggling of aliens and to address specific incidents where smuggled aliens have needed to be processed in accordance with international standards and the domestic laws and procedures of the State concerned and returned safely to appropriate destinations;

3. Urges States to take appropriate steps to frustrate the objectives and activities of smugglers of aliens and thus to protect would-be migrants from exploitation and loss of life, inter alia, by amending criminal laws, if necessary, to encompass the smuggling of aliens and by establishing or improving procedures to permit the ready discovery of false travel documents supplied by smugglers;

4. Requests States to cooperate in order to prevent the illegal transport by smugglers of third country nationals through their territory;

5. Requests States that have not done so to make special efforts to prevent their airports, means of ground transportation and air carriers from being used by smugglers of aliens;

6. Also requests States to cooperate in the interest of safety of life at sea, to increase their efforts to prevent the smuggling of aliens on ships and to ensure that prompt and effective action is taken against the smuggling of aliens by ship;

7. Calls upon Member States and relevant specialized agencies and international organizations to take into account socio-economic factors and to cooperate at the bilateral and multilateral levels in addressing all aspects of the problem of the smuggling of aliens;

8. Reaffirms the importance of existing international conventions in preventing the economic exploitation and loss of life that can result from smuggling aliens, and calls upon all States to exchange information and to consider ratifying or acceding to such conventions where they have not done so and fully to implement and enforce them;

9. Emphasizes that international efforts to prevent the smuggling of aliens should not inhibit legal migration or freedom of travel or undercut the protection provided by international law to refugees;

10. Reaffirms also the need to observe fully international and national law in dealing with the smuggling of aliens, including the provision of humane treatment and strict observance of all the human rights of migrants;

11. Requests the relevant specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations, in particular the International Organization for Migration, the International Maritime Organization, the International Criminal Police Organization and the International Civil Aviation Organization, to consider ways and means, within their respective spheres of competence, to enhance international cooperation to combat the smuggling of aliens;

12. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider giving special attention to the question of the smuggling of aliens at its third session, to be held in 1994, in order to encourage international cooperation to address this problem within the framework of its mandate;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Member States and to relevant specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations;

14. Invites Member States and relevant specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to report to the Secretary-General on the measures they have taken to combat the smuggling of aliens;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the measures taken by States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to combat the smuggling of aliens, and decides to consider this question at its forty-ninth session under the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice".

UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme

Technical assistance

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1992,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in February,⁽⁴⁴⁾ outlined steps to operationalize fully the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and enable it to respond to the needs of Governments and the international community.

The Secretary-General's recommendations for the Commission's consideration included: placing high priority on operationalizing the crime prevention and criminal justice programme, subject to requests arising in emergency situations; inviting United Nations interregional and regional institutes and affiliated and associated institutes to participate in operational activities; developing model training and advisory services projects; expanding and updating the roster of experts to assist in delivering operational activities; holding courses on United Nations norms and guidelines designed to upgrade criminal justice practices; holding training programmes; conducting United Nations surveys of crime trends and criminal justice operations; disseminating information; and undertaking fund-raising.

UN standards and norms

In response to a 1992 Economic and Social Council request,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in January,⁽⁴⁵⁾ provided a description of achievements and difficulties in applying United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice. He proposed a series of recommendations for consideration by the Commission, including: asking Governments to promote the widest possible dissemination of United Nations norms, standards and guidelines; suggesting ways of assisting Member States in implementing existing United Nations norms, standards, guidelines and model treaties; specifying ways to strengthen crime prevention and criminal justice activities; considering ways of monitoring implementation through reporting; and proposing ways of promoting the widest possible dissemination of the texts of standards contained in the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The Secretary-General also suggested that the Commission consider establishing an open-ended working group to suggest to Member States measures on applying existing United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice.

The United Nations standards could serve as a basis both for domestic legislation and for bilateral or multilateral cooperation against national and transnational forms of crime, the Secretary-General said. United Nations model treaties could facilitate the harmonization of legislation and adoption of common strategies and could be used in joint training administered to criminal justice personnel.

Crime prevention institutes

In January,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General provided an overview of the 1992 activities of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the regional institutes affiliated with the United Nations—the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control—as well as other institutes cooperating closely with the United Nations, such as the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre, the Australian Institute of Criminology, the International Centre for Criminal Law Reform and Criminal Justice Policy and the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences.

The Secretary-General noted that the joint annual coordination meetings of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme network were the primary coordination mechanism. However, activities needed to be launched to meet the increasing needs of the developing countries, including clearing-house functions to identify viable policy options, the development, application and evaluation of programmes and strategies, and personnel exchanges among institutes and between the Secretariat and the institutes.

UNAFRI

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report⁽⁴⁹⁾ on the activities and financial situation of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI).

UNAFRI, established in 1987 and located in Uganda, conducted training activities for criminal justice personnel of States of the African region; carried out research; continued efforts to establish a specialized reference library; and provided advisory services to Governments.

The Secretary-General reported that, for the four years up to December 1992, full or partial payment of assessed contributions to UNAFRI had only been received from 8 out of 26 participating members. The financial situation of UNAFRI had become a serious crisis, constraining the Institute's activities, he stated. Moreover, its survival after 1993 was uncertain.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/33 without vote.

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in the annex to which it is stated that the contributions of the regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to policy development and implementation, and their resource requirements, especially those of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, should be fully integrated into the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/89 of 16 December 1992,

Bearing in mind section IV, paragraph 2, of its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Uganda for providing host facilities to the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its objectives, particularly those concerning training, technical assistance, policy guidance, research and data collection;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations Development Programme to continue providing assistance and support to the Institute.

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32); agenda item 20.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/101 by recorded vote.

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/89 of 16 December 1992 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/33 of 27 July 1993,

Recalling also its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in the annex to which it is stated that the contributions of the regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to policy development and implementation, and their resource requirements, especially those of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, should be fully integrated into the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Aware of the financial difficulties that the Institute continues to face as a result of the fact that many States of the African region are in the category of least developed countries and therefore lack the necessary resources with which to support the Institute,

Conscious of the efforts made thus far by the Institute in fulfilling its mandate through, inter alia, the organization of training programmes and regional seminars, as well as the provision of advisory services,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and intergovernmental bodies that have supported the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in the discharge of its responsibilities;

2. Calls upon Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its objectives, particularly those concerning training, technical assistance, policy guidance, research and data collection;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are provided to the Institute, within the overall appropriation of the programme budget, to enable it to carry out, in full and on time, all its obligations;

4. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to continue providing programme support to the Institute;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Preparations for the Ninth (1995) Congress

In January,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed preparations for the Ninth (1995) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. He discussed the dates and sites of five regional preparatory meetings to be held in 1994, the provisional agenda of the Congress, as prepared by the Economic and Social Council in 1992,⁽⁵¹⁾ the format of the Congress and topical proposals for workshops. Annexed to the report was the programme of work for the Congress and a summary of proposals for its workshops.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/32 without vote.

Preparations for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 415(V) of 1 December 1950 and 46/152 of 18 December 1991, the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be convened in 1995,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 32/59 and 32/60 of 8 December 1977, 35/171 of 15 December 1980 and 45/121 of 14 December 1990, in which the Assembly noted the importance of the United Nations congresses in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Acknowledging the new role of the congresses stipulated in paragraph 29 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/152,

Emphasizing the importance of undertaking all the preparatory activities for the Ninth Congress in a timely and concerted manner,

Recalling its resolution 1992/24 of 30 July 1992, in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a discussion guide for the regional preparatory meetings for the Ninth Congress, to be considered by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its second session, incorporating proposals for action-oriented research and demonstration workshops related to the topics selected for the Ninth Congress,

Recalling that, in the same resolution, it requested the Secretary-General to prepare draft rules of procedure for the Ninth Congress, taking into account, inter alia, the need for all draft resolutions on the selected topics to be submitted well in advance of the Ninth Congress,

Aware of the role played in crime prevention and criminal justice by the dissemination to the public of relevant information and of the impact on society at large of the mass media, at both the national and international levels,

Considering that, in view of the internationalization of new forms of criminality, the criminal justice community should work hand-in-hand with the mass media to attain an optimal level of dissemination of reliable and timely information on crime prevention,

Aware of the important work to be accomplished by the regional preparatory meetings for the Ninth Congress,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the preparations for the Ninth Congress,

1. Notes with appreciation the invitation of the Government of Uganda to act as host for the African Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Ninth Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Approves the following provisional agenda for the Ninth Congress, finalized by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its second session:

1. Opening of the Congress.
2. Organizational matters.
3. International cooperation and practical technical assistance for strengthening the rule of law: promoting the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme.
4. Action against national and transnational economic and organized crime, and the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment: national experiences and international cooperation.
5. Criminal justice and police systems: management and improvement of police and other law enforcement agencies, prosecution, courts, corrections; and the role of lawyers.
6. Crime prevention strategies, in particular as related to crimes in urban areas and juvenile and violent criminality, including the question of victims: assessment and new perspectives.
7. Adoption of the report of the Congress.

3. Also approves the rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, as recommended by the Commission at its second session and contained in the annex to the present resolution;

4. Notes that the Commission, at its second session, approved a discussion guide for the regional preparatory meetings for the Ninth Congress;

5. Endorses the programme of work for the Ninth Congress, including the holding of six workshops on the following topics:

- (a) Extradition and international cooperation: exchange of national experience and implementation of relevant principles in national legislation (one day);
- (b) Mass media and crime prevention (one day);
- (c) Urban policy and crime prevention (one day);
- (d) Prevention of violent crime (one day);
- (e) Environmental protection at the national and international levels: potentials and limits of criminal justice (two days);

(f) International cooperation and assistance in the management of the criminal justice system: computerization of criminal justice operations and the development, analysis and policy use of criminal justice information (two days);

6. Notes that all organizational work for the workshops mentioned in paragraph 5 above will be coordinated by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat;

7. Accepts with appreciation the initiatives taken by the interregional, regional and associate institutes cooperating with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to assist the Secretariat in convening the workshops, as well as the initiatives taken by States to participate actively in the organization of and follow-up to such workshops;

8. Invites donor countries to cooperate with developing countries to ensure the full participation of the latter in the workshops;

9. Decides to include in the programme of work of the Ninth Congress a one-day discussion in plenary meeting on experiences in and practical measures aimed at combating corruption involving public officials;

10. Invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and other relevant entities to support financially, organizationally and technically the preparations for the workshops;

11. Takes note of the timetable for the five regional preparatory meetings for the Ninth Congress contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

12. Recommends that adequate provision be made for the attendance of representatives of the relevant regional commissions at the third and fourth sessions of the Commission and at the Ninth Congress;

13. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To undertake the necessary logistic steps, in collaboration with Member States and the network of crime prevention institutes, to mobilize the participation of relevant parties in the preparations for all six workshops;

(b) To allocate, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995, the necessary resources for the organization of the five regional preparatory meetings for the Ninth Congress and of the Congress itself;

(c) To make available the necessary resources for the participation of the least developed countries in the regional preparatory meetings for the Ninth Congress and in the Congress itself;

(d) To provide the necessary additional resources, including temporary assistance, to the United Nations Office at Vienna, in order to enable the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to undertake, in an effective and timely manner, all preparatory and follow-up activities for the Ninth Congress;

(e) To provide resources, as required, to ensure a wide and effective programme of public information related to the preparations for the Ninth Congress and the Congress itself;

(f) To invite twenty expert consultants to participate in the Ninth Congress, at the expense of the United Nations, as was done for the previous three United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, thus ensuring that adequate expertise is provided to the Congress by each region for each substantive topic;

(g) To appoint, in accordance with the established practice for the congresses, a Secretary-General of the Ninth Congress;

14. Decides that the Ninth Congress should be held early in 1995 for a period of ten working days and two days of pre-Congress consultations;

15. Encourages Governments to undertake preparations for the Ninth Congress by all appropriate means, with a view to formulating national position papers;

16. Invites the Commission to accord high priority, at its third session, to the preparations for the Ninth Congress and to ensure that all necessary organizations and substantive arrangements are made in good time.

ANNEX

Draft rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders

I. Representation and credentials

Composition of delegations

Rule 1

The delegation of each State participating in the Congress shall consist of a head of delegation and such other representatives, alternate representatives and advisers as may be required.

Designated representatives

Rule 2

An alternate representative or an adviser may act as a representative upon designation by the head of delegation.

Submission of credentials

Rule 3

1. The credentials of representatives shall be issued either by the Head of State or Government or by the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

2. The credentials of representatives and the names of alternate representatives and advisers shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Congress, if possible not later than one week before the opening of the Congress. Any later change in the composition of delegations shall also be submitted to the Secretary of the Congress.

Credentials Committee

Rule 4

1. There shall be a Credentials Committee of nine members appointed by the Congress on the proposal of the President. Its membership shall, as far as possible, be the same as that of the Credentials Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations at its preceding session.

2. The Credentials Committee shall itself elect from among the representatives of participating States a Chairman and such other officers as it considers necessary.

3. The Credentials Committee shall examine the credentials of representatives and report to the Congress.

Provisional participation in the Congress

Rule 5

Pending a decision of the Congress upon their credentials, representatives shall be entitled to participate provisionally in the Congress.

II. Officers

Elections

Rule 6

The Congress shall elect from among the representatives of participating States a President, 24 Vice-Presidents and a Rapporteur-General, as well as a Chairman for each of the committees provided for in rule 45. These officers shall constitute the General Committee and shall be elected on the basis of equitable geographical distribution.

Acting President

Rule 7

1. If the President finds it necessary to be absent from a meeting or any part thereof, he or she shall designate one of the Vice-Presidents as acting President.

2. A Vice-President acting as President shall have the same power and duties as the President.

Replacement of the President

Rule 8

If the President is unable to perform his or her functions, a new President shall be elected.

Voting rights of the President

Rule 9

The President, or a Vice-President acting as President, shall not vote, but shall designate another member of his or her delegation to exercise that function.

III. General Committee

Chairman

Rule 10

The President or, in his or her absence, one of the Vice-Presidents designated by the President shall serve as Chairman of the General Committee.

Substitute members

Rule 11

1. If the President or a Vice-President or the Rapporteur-General is absent from a meeting of the General Committee, he or she may designate a member of his or her delegation to act as substitute.

2. In case of absence, the Chairman of a committee shall designate another officer of the committee or, if none is available, a member thereof, as a substitute. However, such a substitute shall not have the right to vote if he or she is of the same delegation as another member of the General Committee.

Functions

Rule 12

1. In addition to carrying out other functions provided in these rules, the General Committee shall assist the President in the general conduct of the business of the Congress and, subject to decisions of the Congress, shall ensure the coordination of its work.

2. At the request of the Chairman of a committee, the General Committee may adjust the allocation of work to the committees.

IV. Secretariat

Duties of the Secretary-General

Rule 13

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall appoint a Secretary-General and a Secretary of the Congress and shall provide the staff required by the Congress and its subsidiary organs.

2. The Secretary-General of the Congress or his or her representative shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the Congress and its subsidiary organs. He or she shall direct the staff assigned to perform services in connection with the Congress.

Duties of the secretariat

Rule 14

The secretariat of the Congress shall, in accordance with these rules:

- (a) Interpret speeches made at meetings;
- (b) Receive, translate, reproduce and distribute the documents of the Congress;
- (c) Publish and circulate the report and the official documents of the Congress;
- (d) Make and arrange for the keeping of sound recordings of meetings;
- (e) Arrange for the custody and preservation of the records of the Congress in the archives of the United Nations;
- (f) Generally perform all other work that the Congress may require.

Statements by the secretariat

Rule 15

The Secretary-General of the Congress or any member of the secretariat designated for that purpose may at any time make either oral or written statements concerning any question under consideration.

V. Conduct of business

Quorum

Rule 16

The President may declare a meeting open and permit the debate to proceed when representatives of at least one third of the States participating in the Congress are present. The presence of representatives of a majority of the States so participating shall be required for any decision to be taken.

General powers of the President

Rule 17

1. In addition to exercising the powers conferred upon him or her elsewhere by these rules, the President shall preside at the plenary meetings of the Congress, declare the opening and closing of each such meeting, direct the discussions, accord the right to speak, put questions to the vote and announce decisions. He or she shall rule on points of order and, subject to these rules, have complete control of the proceedings and over the maintenance of order. The President may propose to the Congress the closure of the list of speakers, a limitation on the time to be allowed to speakers and on the number of times participants may speak on a question, the adjournment or closure of the debate, and the suspension or the adjournment of a meeting.

2. The President, in the exercise of his or her functions, remains under the authority of the Congress.

Points of order

Rule 18

Subject to rule 38, a representative may at any time raise a point of order, which shall be immediately decided by the President in accordance with these rules. A representative may appeal against the ruling of the President. The appeal shall be immediately put to the vote, and the ruling of the President shall stand unless overruled by a majority of the representatives present and voting. A representative may not, in raising a point of order, speak on the substance of the matter under discussion.

Speeches

Rule 19

1. No one may address the Congress without having previously obtained the permission of the President, who shall, subject to rules 17 and 22 to 25, call upon speakers in the order in which they signify their desire to speak. The Secretary of the Congress shall be in charge of drawing up a list of such speakers.

2. Debate shall be confined to the question before the Congress and the President may call a speaker to order if his or her remarks are not relevant to the subject under discussion.

3. The Congress may limit the time allowed to speakers and the number of times participants may speak on a question; a motion to set such limits shall be immediately put to the vote. In any event, the President shall limit interventions on procedural questions to a maximum of five minutes. When the debate is limited and a speaker exceeds the allotted time, the President shall call him or her to order without delay.

Precedence

Rule 20

The Chairman or another representative of a subsidiary organ may be accorded precedence for the purpose of explaining the conclusions arrived at by that organ.

Closing of the list of speakers

Rule 21

During the course of a debate the President may announce the list of speakers and, with the consent of the Congress, declare the list closed. When there are no more speakers on the list, the President shall declare the debate closed. Such closure shall have the same effect as closure pursuant to rule 25.

Right of reply

Rule 22

The right of reply shall be accorded by the President to a representative of a State participating in the Congress who requests it. Any other representative may be granted the opportunity to make a reply. Such replies should be as brief as possible.

Suspension or adjournment of the meeting

Rule 23

Subject to rule 38, a representative may at any time move the suspension or the adjournment of the meeting. Such motions shall not be debated, but shall be immediately put to the vote.

Adjournment of debate

Rule 24

A representative may at any time move the adjournment of the debate on the question under discussion. In addition to the proposer of the motion, two representatives may speak in favour of and two against the motion, after which the motion shall be immediately put to the vote.

Closure of debate

Rule 25

A representative may at any time move the closure of the debate on the question under discussion, whether or not any other representative has signified his or her wish to speak. Permission to speak on the closure of the debate shall be accorded only to two speakers opposing the closure, after which the motion shall be immediately put to the vote.

Order of motions

Rule 26

Subject to rule 18, the following motions shall have precedence in the following order over all other proposals or motions before the meeting:

- (a) To suspend the meeting;
- (b) To adjourn the meeting;
- (c) To adjourn the debate;
- (d) To close the debate.

Items for consideration

Rule 27

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, shall approve the provisional agenda for the Congress. The Congress shall adopt the provisional agenda and consider the items therein.

Draft resolutions on topics selected for consideration by the Congress

Rule 28

1. Draft resolutions on items of the provisional agenda for the Congress shall be submitted to the Secretary-General of the Congress four months prior to the Congress, and distributed to all Member States not later than two months prior to the Congress.

2. Draft resolutions are proposals requiring the adoption of a decision on the substantive items of the agenda.

Other proposals and amendments

Rule 29

Substantive amendments shall be introduced in writing and handed to the Secretary of the Congress, who shall circulate copies to all delegations in the official languages of the Congress. Unless the Congress decides otherwise, substantive amendments shall be discussed or put to the vote no earlier than twenty-four hours after copies in the official languages of the Congress have been circulated to the delegations.

Rule 30

1. On a written proposal of one or several representatives of Member States submitted at the time of the consideration of the agenda, the Congress may decide, by a two-thirds majority of the representatives present and voting, on the inclusion of other items in its agenda on urgent and important matters.

2. Draft resolutions pertaining to items on the agenda, as defined in paragraph 1 above, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Congress for distribution in the official languages to the representatives not later than forty-eight hours prior to their consideration.

Withdrawal of proposals and motions

Rule 31

A proposal or motion may be withdrawn by its sponsor at any time before voting on it has commenced, provided that it has not been amended. A proposal or motion thus withdrawn may be reintroduced by any representative.

Decisions on competence

Rule 32

Subject to rule 18, any motion calling for a decision on the competence of the Congress to discuss any matter or to adopt a proposal submitted to it shall be put to the vote before the matter is discussed or a vote is taken on the proposal in question.

Reconsideration

Rule 33

When a proposal or motion has been adopted or rejected, it may not be reconsidered unless the Congress, by a two-thirds majority of the representatives present and voting, so decides. Permission to speak on a motion to reconsider shall be accorded only to two speakers opposing reconsideration, after which the matter shall be immediately put to the vote.

VI. Voting

Voting rights

Rule 34

Each State represented at the Congress shall have one vote.

Majority required

Rule 35

1. Unless the Congress decides otherwise, decisions of the Congress on all matters of substance shall require a two-thirds majority of the representatives present and voting.

2. Unless the Congress decides otherwise, and except as otherwise provided in these rules, decisions of the Congress on all other matters shall be taken by a simple majority of the representatives present and voting. If a vote is equally divided, the proposal or motion shall be regarded as rejected.

3. For the purpose of these rules, the phrase "representatives present and voting" means representatives present and casting an affirmative or negative vote. Representatives who abstain from voting shall be considered as not voting.

Methods of voting

Rule 36

Except as provided in rule 43, the Congress shall normally vote by show of hands, but any representative may request a roll-call vote, which shall then be taken in the English alphabetical order of the names of the States participating in the Congress, beginning with the one whose name is drawn by lot by the President. The name of each participating State shall be called in all roll-call votes, and its representative shall reply "yes", "no" or "abstention".

Explanation of vote

Rule 37

Representatives may make brief statements consisting solely of an explanation of their votes, either before the voting has commenced or after it has been completed. The representative of a State sponsoring a proposal or motion shall not speak in explanation of vote thereon unless it has been amended. The President may limit the time to be allowed for such explanations.

Conduct during voting

Rule 38

The President shall announce the commencement of voting, after which no representative shall be permitted to intervene until the result of the vote has been announced, except on a point of order in connection with the process of voting.

Division of proposals

Rule 39

A representative may move that parts of a proposal shall be voted on separately. If objection is made to the request for division, the motion for division shall be voted upon. If the motion for division is adopted, those parts of the proposal that are approved shall be put to the vote as a whole. If all operative parts of the proposal have been rejected, the proposal shall be considered to have been rejected as a whole.

Amendments

Rule 40

An amendment is a proposal that does no more than add to, delete from or revise part of another proposal. Unless specified otherwise, the word "proposal" in these rules shall be considered as including amendments.

Order of voting on amendments

Rule 41

When an amendment is moved to a proposal, the amendment shall be voted on first. When two or more amendments are moved to a proposal, the Congress shall vote first on the amendment furthest removed in substance from the original proposal, and then on the amendment next furthest removed therefrom, and so on until all the amendments have been put to the vote. Where, however, the adoption of one amendment necessarily implies the rejection of another amendment, the latter shall not be put to the vote. If one or more amendments are adopted, the amended proposal shall then be voted upon.

Order of voting on proposals

Rule 42

If two or more proposals, other than amendments, relate to the same question, they shall, unless the Congress decides otherwise, be voted on in the order in which they were submitted. The Congress may, after each vote on a proposal, decide whether to vote on the next proposal.

Elections

Rule 43

All elections shall be held by secret ballot, unless the Congress decides otherwise in an election where the number of candidates does not exceed the number of elective places to be filled.

Rule 44

1. When one or more elective places are to be filled at one time under the same conditions, those candidates, in a number not exceeding the number of such places, obtaining in the first ballot a majority of the votes cast and the largest number of votes shall be elected.

2. If the number of candidates obtaining such majority is less than the number of places to be filled, additional ballots shall be held to fill the remaining places.

VII. Subsidiary organs

Committees, subcommittees and working groups

Rule 45

There shall be as many committees of the whole as may be approved from time to time by the Economic and Social Council on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. Each committee may set up subcommittees and working groups, to the extent permitted by available facilities.

Officers

Rule 46

1. In addition to a Chairman elected by the Congress pursuant to rule 6, each committee shall itself elect a Vice-Chairman and a Rapporteur from among the representatives of participating States.

2. Subcommittees and working groups shall each elect a Chairman and no more than two Vice-Chairmen from among the representatives of participating States.

Applicable rules

Rule 47

The rules contained in sections II and IV to VI above shall be applicable, mutatis mutandis, to the proceedings of subsidiary organs, except that:

(a) The Chairmen of subsidiary organs other than the committees referred to in rule 45 may exercise the right to vote;

(b) A majority of the representatives participating in any subsidiary organs of limited membership shall constitute a quorum;

(c) Decisions of subsidiary organs shall be taken by a majority of the representatives present and voting, except that reconsideration of any such decision shall require the majority established by rule 33.

VIII. Languages and documents

Official languages

Rule 48

Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish shall be the official languages of the Congress.

Interpretation

Rule 49

1. Speeches made in an official language of the Congress shall be interpreted into the other such languages.

2. Statements may be made in a language other than an official language of the Congress if the speaker provides for interpretation into one of the official languages. Interpretation into the other official languages of the Congress by interpreters of the secretariat may be based on the interpretation given in the first such language.

Languages of official documents

Rule 50

Official documents shall be made available in the official languages of the Congress.

Sound recordings of meetings

Rule 51

The secretariat shall make sound recordings of meetings of the Congress and of the committees. Such recordings shall be made of meetings of other subsidiary organs when the body concerned so decides.

IX. Report of the Congress

Rule 52

1. The Congress shall adopt a report, the draft of which shall be prepared by the Rapporteur-General.

2. The report shall be distributed as soon as practicable and not later than six months after the closing of the Congress to all States and to other participants in the Congress.

X. Public and private meetings

General principles

Rule 53

1. The plenary meetings of the Congress and meetings of its subsidiary organs other than the General Committee and the Credentials Committee shall be held in public unless the body concerned decides otherwise.

2. Meetings of the General Committee and the Credentials Committee shall be held in private unless the body concerned decides otherwise.

XI. Other participants and observers

Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate as observers in the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under the auspices of the General Assembly

Rule 54

Representatives designated by organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under the auspices of the General Assembly may participate as observers, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Congress, its committees, subcommittees and working groups and, as appropriate, in its other subsidiary organs.

Representatives of national liberation movements

Rule 55

Representatives designated by national liberation movements invited to the Congress may participate as observers, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Congress, its committees, subcommittees and working groups and, as appropriate, in its other subsidiary organs.

Representatives of United Nations organs and related agencies

Rule 56

Representatives designated by organs of the United Nations, the specialized agencies or the International Atomic Energy Agency may participate as observers, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Congress, its committees, subcommittees and working groups and, as appropriate, in its other subsidiary organs.

Observers from other intergovernmental organizations

Rule 57

Observers designated by other intergovernmental organizations invited to the Congress may participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Congress, its committees, subcommittees and working groups and, as appropriate, in its other subsidiary organs.

Observers for non-governmental organizations

Rule 58

Observers designated by non-governmental organizations invited to the Congress may participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Congress, its committees, subcommittees and working groups.

Individual experts and consultants

Rule 59

1. Individual experts in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders may be invited to the Congress by the Secretary-General in their individual capacity and may participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Congress, its committees, subcommittees and working groups.

2. The Secretary-General may invite a small number of expert consultants to participate in the Congress at the expense of the United Nations. In inviting such expert consultants, the Secretary-General shall pay due regard to the principle of equitable geographical representation. Expert consultants thus invited may, as appropriate, initiate and assist in debates in the committees, subcommittees and working groups of the Congress.

Written statements

Rule 60

Written statements related to the work of the Congress submitted by the designated representatives, individual experts or observers referred to in rules 54 to 59 shall be distributed by the secretariat to all delegations in the quantities and in the languages in which the statements are made available to the secretariat for distribution, provided that a statement submitted on behalf of a non-governmental organization shall be on a subject in which it has a special competence.

XII. Amendment or suspension of the rules of procedure

Method of amendment

Rule 61

The present rules may be amended by a decision of the Congress taken by a two-thirds majority of the representatives present and voting upon a recommendation of the General Committee.

Method of suspension

Rule 62

1. Any of the present rules may be suspended by a decision of the Congress, provided that twenty-four hours' notice of the proposal for the suspension has been given, which may be waived if no representative objects; subsidiary organs may by unanimous consent waive rules pertaining to them. Any suspension shall be limited to a specific and stated purpose and to the period required to achieve it.

2. This rule shall not apply to rule 30.

Periodic review of rules

Rule 63

After the completion of each Congress, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice shall make appropriate recommendations to the Economic and Social Council for such amendments to these rules as it may deem necessary.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/32

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32), orally amended; agenda item 20.

By resolution 48/230, section III, of 23 December, the General Assembly approved, on an exceptional basis, the travel expenses of the representatives of the least developed countries attending the regional preparatory meetings for the Congress and the Congress itself. Those expenses would amount to $141,000, according to a November report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁵²⁾

Cultural development

World Decade for Cultural Development

On 12 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/209, postponed consideration of the biennial progress report on the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1991), requested by the General Assembly in 1986,⁽⁵³⁾ and decided to combine the report with the global mid-term review of the Decade requested by the Assembly in 1991.⁽⁵⁴⁾

Restitution of cultural property

As requested by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October report of the Director-General of UNESCO⁽⁵⁶⁾ describing measures taken to promote the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin since the last (1991) meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation.⁽⁵⁷⁾ Developments were outlined regarding bilateral negotiations for the return or restitution of cultural property, international cooperation and steps to curb illicit traffic in cultural property.

The eighth (1993) session of the Intergovernmental Committee was to take place in Guatemala from 7 to 10 June, but owing to the situation in the country at the time, it was postponed until early 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/15 by recorded vote.

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973,

3187(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391(XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981, 38/34 of 25 November 1983, 40/19 of 21 November 1985, 42/7 of 22 October 1987, 44/18 of 6 November 1989 and 46/10 of 22 October 1991,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting with satisfaction that, following its appeal, other Member States have become parties to the Convention,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Reaffirming the importance of inventories as an essential tool for the understanding and protection of cultural property and for the identification of dispersed heritage and as a contribution to the advancement of scientific and artistic knowledge and intercultural communication,

Deeply concerned at the clandestine excavations and the illicit traffic in cultural property that continue to impoverish the cultural heritage of all peoples,

Again supporting the solemn appeal made on 7 June 1978 by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the return of irreplaceable cultural heritage to those who created it,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms that the restitution to a country of its objets d'art, monuments, museum pieces, archives, manuscripts, documents and any other cultural or artistic treasures contributes to the strengthening of international cooperation and to the preservation and flowering of universal cultural values through fruitful cooperation between developed and developing countries;

3. Recommends that Member States adopt or strengthen the necessary protective legislation with regard to their own heritage and that of other peoples;

4. Requests Member States to study the possibility of including in permits for excavations a clause requiring archaeologists and palaeontologists to provide the national authorities with photographic documentation of each object brought to light during the excavations immediately after its discovery;

5. Invites Member States to continue drawing up, in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, systematic inventories of cultural property existing in their territory and of their cultural property abroad;

6. Also recommends that Member States should ensure that inventories of museum collections include not only the items on display but also those in storage, and that they comprise all necessary documentation, particularly photographs of each item;

7. Also invites Member States engaged in seeking the recovery of cultural and artistic treasures from the seabed, in accordance with international law, to facilitate by mutually acceptable conditions the participation of States having a historical and cultural link with those treasures;

8. Appeals to Member States to cooperate closely with the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation and to conclude bilateral agreements for this purpose;

9. Also appeals to Member States to encourage the mass information media and educational and cultural institutions to strive to arouse a greater and more general awareness with regard to the return or restitution of cultural property to its country of origin;

10. Requests States parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property to keep the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization fully informed of the measures taken to ensure implementation of the Convention at the national level;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to continue to develop all possibilities for bringing about the attainment of the aforementioned objectives;

12. Welcomes the steady increase in the number of States parties to the Convention;

13. Invites once again those Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention;

14. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

International Year of Sport and the Olympic Ideal and Observance of the Olympic Truce

By a 10 August letter,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted to the Secretary-General the documents of the 1993 meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (Cairo, Egypt, 21-26 June). One resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers dealt with an appeal by the International Olympic Committee to build a peaceful and better world through sport and was the basis of two General Assembly resolutions on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/10 without vote.

International Year of Sport and the Olympic Ideal

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the International Olympic Committee, founded on the initiative of a Frenchman, Pierre de Coubertin, will be celebrating the centenary of its founding in 1994,

Taking into account its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 concerning guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

Noting that the organization of the celebration for the International Year of Sport and the Olympic Ideal at the national and international level will be coordinated by the International Olympic Committee, with the collaboration of the International Sports Federations and the national Olympic committees,

Recognizing that the goal of the Olympic Movement is to build a peaceful and better world by educating the youth of the world through sport and culture,

Recognizing also that the Olympic ideal is to promote international understanding among the youth of the world through sport and culture and is therefore relevant to the International Year of the Family, which will be commemorated in 1994, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/82 of 8 December 1989,

Noting also that the preparation for the International Year of Sport and the Olympic Ideal will not involve any financial implications for the United Nations or its Member States, nor will it require the setting up of any administrative structure,

1. Proclaims 1994 as International Year of Sport and the Olympic Ideal;

2. Commends the Olympic Movement for its ideal to promote international understanding among the youth of the world through sport and culture;

3. Endorses the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee to build a peaceful and better world through sport, supported by resolution CM/Res.1472 (LVIII), adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-eighth ordinary session, held at Cairo from 21 to 26 June 1993;

4. Invites all States, organizations of the United Nations system and interested non-governmental organizations to participate in the observance of the Year and to cooperate with the Secretary-General in achieving the objectives of the Year;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in its endeavours to promote the observance of the Year.

General Assembly resolution 48/10

25 October 1993 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

123-nation draft (A/48/L.8/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1); agenda item 167.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 48/11 without vote.

Observance of the Olympic Truce

The General Assembly,

Considering the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee for an Olympic Truce, which was endorsed by one hundred eighty-four Olympic committees and presented to the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the goal of the Olympic Movement is to build a peaceful and better world by educating the youth of the world through sport, practised without discrimination of any kind and in the Olympic spirit, which requires mutual understanding, promoted by friendship, solidarity and fair play,

Recognizing also the efforts of the International Olympic Committee to restore the ancient Greek tradition of the ekhecheria, or "Olympic Truce", in the interest of contributing to international understanding and the maintenance of peace,

Recalling resolution CM/Res.1472(LVIII), which supports the appeal for an Olympic Truce, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-eighth ordinary session, held at Cairo from 21 to 26 June 1993, and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization,

Recognizing further the valuable contribution that the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee for an Olympic Truce could make towards advancing the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Commends the International Olympic Committee, the international sports federations and the national Olympic committees for their efforts to mobilize the youth of the world in the cause of peace;

2. Urges Member States to observe the Olympic Truce from the seventh day before the opening and the seventh day following the closing of each of the Olympic Games, in accordance with the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee;

3. Notes the idea of the "Olympic Truce", as dedicated in ancient Greece to the spirit of fraternity and understanding between peoples, and urges Member States to take the initiative to abide by the Truce, individually and collectively, and to pursue in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations the peaceful settlement of all international conflicts;

4. Calls upon all Member States to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in its efforts to promote the Olympic Truce;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the observance of the Olympic Truce among Member States, drawing the attention of world public opinion to the contribution such a truce would make to the promotion of international understanding and the maintenance of peace and goodwill, and to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in the realization of this objective.

General Assembly resolution 48/11

Chapter XIII

Women

During 1993, preparations were under way for the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held in 1995 to review and appraise progress in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the year 2000, adopted at the 1985 World Conference. Work continued throughout the United Nations system on implementing the Strategies—a set of measures to overcome obstacles to the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976–1985).

The Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women, adopted resolutions on a draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women (1993/10); women, environment and development (1993/12); communications on the status of women (1993/11); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (1993/14); improving the status of women in the United Nations (see PART FIVE, Chapter II) (1993/9); the situation of Palestinian women (see PART TWO, Chapter V) (1993/15); and women and children under apartheid (see PART TWO, Chapter I) (1993/13).

In December, the General Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (resolution 48/104), which set forth a definition of violence against women, stated the rights to be applied to eliminate such violence and outlined measures for action by States and the international community.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women considered reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. At the end of the year, the Convention had 96 signatories and 130 States parties.

During 1993, the Secretary-General proposed the merger of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women, with a view to strengthening the programmes for the advancement of women and enhancing the efficiency of the work of those organizations.

In September, the United Nations Division for the Advancement of Women was moved from Vienna and incorporated into the newly established Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development in New York.

Advancement of womenImplementation of the Nairobi Strategies

As requested by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1993⁽²⁾ reviewed the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.⁽³⁾ He assessed developments with regard to the priority themes of the Strategies (equality, development, peace), which were to be considered by the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-eighth (1994) session, and described preparations for the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace (see below).

The Secretary-General discussed cooperation between the organizations of the United Nations system and the Commission on the Status of Women on the implementation of the Strategies; contributions to forthcoming major international conferences; methods of data collection and compilation; women in vulnerable situations, including migrant women workers; women in development, particularly rural women; women in public life and international decision-making; the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women; and women in the United Nations Secretariat.

In an earlier report,⁽⁴⁾ submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General presented the proposed programme of work of the United Nations Division for the Advancement of Women for the 1994–1995 biennium, which was based on the implementation of the Nairobi Strategies. In March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission called on the Secretary-General to strengthen the institutional structure and work programme for the advancement of women.

In resolution 48/108, the General Assembly called on the Commission to continue to promote the implementation of the Nairobi Strategies (see below).

Monitoring, review and appraisal1995 World Conference on Women

In 1993, preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in Beijing, China, in 1995, accelerated within the United Nations system and at national, regional and international levels.⁽²⁾ The aim of the Conference was to review and appraise progress achieved in implementing the Nairobi Strategies and to identify measures to ensure the achievement of their objectives during the last five years of the twentieth century. The Secretary-General appointed Gertrude Mongella of the United Republic of Tanzania as Secretary-General of the 1995 Conference, and a Trust Fund for Conference preparatory activities was established, to which 10 Governments had contributed or pledged their support by September 1993.

At its 1993 session,⁽³⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women, which acted as the preparatory body for the Conference, had before it a series of reports by the Secretary-General. One described preparations for the Conference at the national, regional and international levels, including action taken by non-governmental organizations (NGOs),⁽⁷⁾ and another proposed activities and national guidelines for the information campaign for the Conference.⁽⁸⁾ In 1992,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission had decided that the Conference's agenda should include the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Strategies and the Platform of Action—the final document that would emerge from the Conference. The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission⁽¹⁰⁾ information on data needed for the second review and presented an outline for it, which he stated should emphasize the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first (1990) review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Strategies.⁽¹¹⁾ He also submitted a report containing the first draft of the Platform for Action,⁽¹²⁾ which comprised sections dealing with a statement of purpose; a diagnosis of the current situation of the world's women; an analytical statement of the most significant obstacles to the advancement of women identified in the diagnosis; key issues and basic needs, linking the status of women to global changes; specific action to be taken to reach obtainable goals in key areas; and a statement about implementation mechanisms.

In March,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's reports and expressed concern that only a few Governments had established national committees or designated focal points to promote the Conference.

Ad hoc inter-agency meeting. The seventeenth ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women (Vienna, 15 and 16 March) focused on preparations for the 1995 World Conference.⁽¹⁴⁾ It discussed the second review and appraisal and the Platform for Action and reviewed the proposed information programme for the Conference. Annexed to the report was a joint statement of the representatives of 28

United Nations organizations comprising the inter-agency meeting addressed to the 1993 session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/234 of 27 July, decided that an inter-sessional working group of the Commission should be convened for five working days during the first two weeks of 1994 to develop further the structure of the Platform for Action, as recommended by the Commission.⁽¹⁵⁾

In resolution 48/105 of 20 December, the General Assembly requested the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) to assist with preparations for the Conference (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 48/108 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 44/77 of 8 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it endorsed and reaffirmed the importance of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the interrelated goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling also its resolutions 46/98 of 16 December 1991 and 47/95 of 16 December 1992,

Taking into consideration the resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council on issues relating to women since the adoption of its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987,

Reaffirming its determination to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs and to promote development, cooperation and international peace,

Conscious of the important and constructive contribution to the improvement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned,

Concerned that the resources available in the Secretariat to the programme on the advancement of women are insufficient to ensure adequate support to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and effective implementation of other aspects of the programme, especially the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995,

Taking into account Commission on the Status of Women resolutions 36/8 of 20 March 1992 and 37/7 of 25 March 1993 on the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Bearing in mind the important role non-governmental organizations play in all activities for the advancement of women and the fact that some of them, especially those from developing countries, do not enjoy consultative status with the Economic and Social Council,

Noting with satisfaction that the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women have entered a substantive stage, that the relevant United Nations bodies, China, as the host country, and other countries all attach great importance to the preparation of the Conference and that the various preparatory activities are being conducted in an in-depth and comprehensive manner,

Considering that 1994 will be a year of crucial importance to the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, that the Commission on the Status of Women will convene an inter-sessional working group to deliberate the content of the Platform for Action and that the five regional commissions will convene their respective regional preparatory meetings for the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms section I, paragraph 2, of the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, which called for an improved pace in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies in the crucial last decade of the twentieth century, since the cost to societies of failing to implement them would be high in terms of slowed economic and social development, misuse of human resources and reduced progress for society as a whole;
3. Urges Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to implement the recommendations;
4. Calls again upon Member States to give priority to policies and programmes relating to the subtheme "Employment, health and education", in particular to literacy, for self-reliance of women and the mobilization of indigenous resources, as well as to issues relating to the role of women in economic and political decision-making, population, the environment, information and science and technology;
5. Reaffirms the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women and calls upon it to continue promoting the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000, based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, health and education", and urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system to cooperate effectively with the Commission in this task;
6. Requests the Commission, when considering the priority theme relating to development during its thirty-eighth and subsequent sessions, to ensure its early contribution to the preparatory work for forthcoming major international conferences such as the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held in 1994, the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995, and the World Summit for Social Development, to be held in 1995, and to address the impact of technologies on women;

7. Also requests the Commission to give special attention to women in developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries, who suffer disproportionately from the effects of the global economic crisis and the heavy external debt burden, and to recommend further measures for the equalization of opportunity and for the integration of the roles and perspective of women, as well as their needs, concerns and aspirations, into the entire development process when considering the priority theme of development;

8. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women of all ages in the development process, bearing in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries, and calls upon Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the participation of women in professional, management and decision-making positions in their countries;

9. Emphasizes once again the need to give urgent attention to redressing socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels as a necessary step towards the full realization of the goals and objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies through meeting the practical and strategic needs of women;

10. Strongly urges that particular attention be given by the competent United Nations organizations and Governments to the special needs of women with disabilities, elderly women and also women in vulnerable situations such as migrant and refugee women and children;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas, and urges the international community and the competent United Nations bodies and organs to place more emphasis on the sharp increase in the incidence of poverty among rural women;

12. Welcomes the recommendations adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development on women, environment and development in all programme areas, in particular those set out in chapter 24 of Agenda 21, entitled "Global action for women towards sustainable and equitable development";

13. Urges organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations to ensure active participation of women in the planning and implementation of programmes for sustainable development, and requests Governments, in the context of General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992, to consider nominating women as representatives to the Commission on Sustainable Development;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 and in integrating the Forward-looking Strategies into activities mandated by the General Assembly, to pay particular attention to specific sectoral themes that cut across the three objectives, equality, development and peace, and include, in particular, literacy, education, health, population, the impact of technology on the environment and its effect on women and the full participation of women in decision-making, and to continue to assist Governments in strengthening their national machineries for the advancement of women;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, bearing in mind its importance, placing particular emphasis on the adverse impact of the difficult economic situation affecting the majority of developing countries, particularly on the condition of women, giving special attention to worsening conditions for the incorporation of women into the labour force, as well as the impact of reduced expenditures for social services on opportunities available to women for education, health and child care, and to submit a final version of the preliminary version of the updated World Survey on the Role of Women in Development to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission on the Status of Women, in 1994;

16. Requests Governments, when presenting candidatures for vacancies in the Secretariat, in particular at the decision-making level, to give priority to candidatures of women, and requests the Secretary-General in reviewing those candidatures to give special consideration to female candidates from underrepresented and unrepresented developing countries;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for the existing weekly radio programmes on women in the regular budget of the United Nations, making adequate provisions for broadcasts in different languages, and to develop the focal point for issues relating to women in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, which, in concert with the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, should provide a more effective public information programme relating to the advancement of women;

19. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, an assessment of recent developments that are relevant to the priority themes to be considered at the subsequent session of the Commission and to transmit to the Commission a summary of relevant views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Assembly;

20. Requests the Commission to examine the implications of the World Conference on Human Rights and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Conference for its central role in matters related to the rights of women within the United Nations system and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report for the Commission, for consideration at its thirty-eighth session, on steps to be taken by the Division for the Advancement of Women, in cooperation with other United Nations bodies, specifically the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, to ensure that relevant human rights mechanisms of the United Nations, such as treaty-monitoring bodies, rapporteurs and working groups, regularly address violations of the rights of women, including gender-specific abuses;

22. Recognizes that the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, proclaimed in General Assembly resolution 48/104 of 20 December 1993, is essential to the attainment of full respect for the rights of women and is an important contribution to efforts aimed at achieving the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies by the year 2000;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to lend support to the convening of the regional preparatory meetings so as to lay a good foundation for the Fourth World Conference on Women;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General to give more support, from within existing resources, to the Division for the Advancement of Women, acting as secretariat of the Fourth World Conference on Women, by providing sufficient financial and human resources and giving wide publicity to the Conference and its preparatory activities;

25. Appeals to countries to compile their national reports in earnest and to forward them in time, both to their respective regional commissions and to the secretariat of the Conference;

26. Invites the Secretary-General to play a more active role in appealing to countries to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Fourth World Conference on Women, in order to finance additional activities of the preparatory process and the Conference itself, in particular the participation of least developed countries in the Conference and its preparatory meetings;

27. Recommends the further development of methods of compilation and data collection in areas of concern identified by the Commission on the Status of Women, and urges Member States to improve and broaden collection of gender-desegregated statistical information and make it available to the relevant bodies of the United Nations system with a view to preparing, in all official languages, as a background document for the Fourth World Conference on Women, an updated edition of The World's Women 1970-1990: Trends and Statistics;

28. Endorses the recommendation contained in Commission on the Status of Women resolution 36/8 that regional preparatory conferences should include in their agendas the issue of women in public life, as well as the request for the Secretary-General to include information on the decision-making position of women in public life and in the fields of science and technology in the preparation of the priority theme on peace: "Women in international decision-making", for the Commission at its thirty-ninth session, in 1995;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to make available for the Fourth World Conference on Women reports and decisions of the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development;

30. Decides, taking into account Commission on the Status of Women resolution 37/7, to adopt the modalities for the participation in and contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women and its preparatory process by the non-governmental organizations, particularly those from the developing countries, set out in the annex to the present resolution;

31. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report for the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held in Beijing in 1995, on the extent to which gender concerns have been included in the activities of the relevant human rights mechanisms of the United Nations, such as treaty-monitoring bodies, rapporteurs and working groups;

32. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on measures taken to implement the present resolution.

ANNEX

Participation of non-governmental organizations in the Fourth World Conference on Women and its preparatory body

Non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council that express the wish to attend the Conference and the meetings of the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as its preparatory body, will be accredited for participation. Others wishing to be accredited may apply to the Conference secretariat for that purpose in accordance with the following requirements:

(a) The secretariat of the Fourth World Conference on Women will be responsible for the receipt and preliminary evaluation, in accordance with the provisions set out below, of requests from non-governmental organizations for accreditation to the Conference and the Commission on the Status of Women acting as preparatory body;

(b) All such applications must be accompanied by information on the competence of the organization and on its relevance to the work of the preparatory body, indicating the particular areas of the preparations for the Conference to which such competence and relevance pertain, and should include the following:

- (i) The purposes of the organization;
- (ii) Information on its programmes and activities in areas relevant to the Conference and on the country or countries in which those programmes and activities are carried out;
- (iii) Confirmation of its activities at the national and/or the international level;
- (iv) Copies of its annual reports, with financial statements and a list of members of the governing body and their country of nationality;
- (v) A description of its membership, indicating the total number of members of the governing body and their country of nationality;
- (c) Non-governmental organizations seeking accreditation will be asked to confirm their interest in the goals and objectives of the Conference;
- (d) In cases where the Conference secretariat believes, on the basis of the information provided in accordance with the present document, that an organization has established its competence and relevance to the work of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as preparatory body, it will recommend to the Commission that the organization be accredited. In cases where the Conference secretariat does not recommend the granting of accreditation, it will make such information available to members of the Commission at least one week prior to the start of each session;

(e) The Commission on the Status of Women will decide on all proposals for accreditation within twenty-four hours of the recommendations of the Conference secretariat having been taken up by the Commission in plenary session. Should a decision not be taken within that period, interim accreditation will be accorded until such time as a decision is taken;

(f) A non-governmental organization that has been granted accreditation to attend one session of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as preparatory body may attend all future sessions and the Conference;

(g) In recognition of the intergovernmental nature of the Fourth World Conference on Women, non-governmental organizations will have no negotiating role in the work of the Conference and its preparatory process;

(h) Relevant non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council may be given the opportunity briefly to address the Commission on the Status of Women acting as preparatory body in plenary meeting and its subsidiary bodies. Other relevant non-governmental organizations may also ask to speak briefly at such meetings. If the number of requests is too large, the Commission will request that non-governmental organizations form themselves into constituencies, with each constituency speaking through one spokesperson. Any oral intervention by a non-governmental organization should, in accordance with usual United Nations practice, be made at the discretion of the Chairman and with the consent of the Commission;

(i) Relevant non-governmental organizations may, at their own expense, make written presentations in the official languages of the United Nations during the preparatory process, as they deem appropriate. Those written presentations will not be issued as official documents unless they are in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Conference.

General Assembly resolution 48/108

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/629) without vote, 1 December (meeting 48); draft by Colombia (for Group of 77 and China) (A/C.3/48/L.33), orally revised; agenda item 111.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 29-37, 41, 48; plenary 85.

Medium-term plan

By an April note,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretariat transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women covering the period 1996 to 2001, the last five years of the period designated for the implementation of the Nairobi Strategies. The proposed plan was organized into seven programmes and consisted of three parts: part one described strategies in terms of substantive areas such as discrimination, human resource development, peace and conflict resolution and decision-making; part two focused on improving international action through the development of statistics and technical cooperation; and part three covered actions that synthesized and coordinated the specific activities in parts one and two, including women in development and strengthening national machineries for the advancement of women.

The Commission on the Status of Women, in March, had considered preliminary proposals for the plan.⁽¹⁶⁾ It adopted a resolution,⁽¹⁷⁾ in which it recommended that the plan be revised after the 1995 World Conference on Women. It also made a series of comments on the plan that were incorporated into the version considered by the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/16 without vote.

System-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/59 of 27 July 1988, by which it requested the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to initiate the formulation of a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001,

Having considered the note by the Secretariat containing the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001,

Convinced that a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women can enhance coordination among the organizations of the United Nations system by providing a framework for including advancement of women in individual medium-term plans and programme statements,

Bearing in mind the fact that the United Nations planning cycle to which the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women was matched has changed, and that there has been a general shift to a more strategic form of planning,

Recognizing that the Platform for Action to emerge from the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, cannot be reflected in the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001, which must be approved in 1993,

1. Endorses the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 as a general framework for the coordination of system-wide efforts, as revised in the light of the comments set out in the annex to resolution 37/1 of 24 March 1993 of the Commission on the Status of Women;

2. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system that are preparing medium-term plans for the period 1996-2001 to incorporate relevant aspects of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women in formulating their individual plans in terms of advancement of women;

3. Also requests the organizations of the United Nations system, when implementing the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, to take account of the importance of ensuring that humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and refugee programmes provide for the health needs of women and for their protection from violence and sexual abuse, especially in emergency and conflict situations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to arrange for a revision of the system-wide medium-term plan after the Platform for Action and the results of the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women have been adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that any revised system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women is more concise, takes account of the changes in the United Nations planning cycle, takes a more strategic approach, highlighting policy implications, and includes more substantial strategies, time-frames, concrete measures, resources and allocation of responsibility for implementation;

6. Decides that the Commission on the Status of Women, together with the Committee for Programme and Coordination, should be given the responsibility for monitoring progress on the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women and that all United Nations entities should be held accountable for the components of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women that fall within their areas of responsibility.

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its thirteenth session at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 15 to 19 February 1993.⁽⁸⁾

The Board discussed the possible merger of INSTRAW with the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), a proposal put forth by the Secretary-General as part of an effort to streamline and coordinate the economic and social sectors of the United Nations. The Board recommended that the Secretary-General establish a task force to study the available options (see below).

It reviewed INSTRAW's activities to mainstream gender issues in development strategies and give visibility to women's contributions to socioeconomic development. It recognized the crucial role of networking to strengthen the position of women, particularly with the regional commissions. The Board reviewed its policy on focal points and approved the nomination of new focal points in the Netherlands and Zimbabwe. It agreed that INSTRAW should participate in the observance of the International Year of the Family (1994) (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) and in preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development (1994) (see PART THREE, Chapter IX) and the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women.

INSTRAW activities

Pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted an August report⁽²⁰⁾ on the results of INSTRAW's 1992-1993 work programme.

During 1993, in the area of research, INSTRAW carried out a study on female migration, internal and international, and its consequences for family and society; its purpose was to provide guidelines for compiling more adequate data on female migration. The first phase of a long-term research project on methods for valuating the contribution of women to development was completed.

INSTRAW developed gender training materials and computer models—"Urban Women in Development Model" and "Rural Women in Development Model"—to assist policy makers. It also began assessing the training needs of women farmers in Eastern European countries in transition.

The first phase of a project to develop communications materials for women and development, consisting of country profiles, national seminars and country-specific strategies in Argentina, Colombia and the Dominican Republic was completed. Material was prepared to sensitize the media and opinion makers to gender issues.

INSTRAW continued its efforts to make women visible through gender disaggregated data by providing technical assistance to Turkey, conducting a sub-regional workshop on statistics and indicators on women for the francophone African countries (Rabat, Morocco, 13-17 December) and preparing a study entitled "The Situation of Elderly Women: Available Statistics and Indicators".

In 1993, INSTRAW recorded contributions from Member States in the amount of $3,568,389. At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (November 1993), INSTRAW received pledges of contributions for 1994 totalling $582,142.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/17 without vote.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1992/21 of 30 July 1992, in which it took note of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its twelfth session,

Having considered the report of the Board of Trustees of the Institute on its thirteenth session,

Recognizing the important role that the Institute could play in the substantive preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995,

Also recognizing the equally important contributions that the Institute could make in its area of expertise to activities related to the International Year of the Family, the International Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development,

Reaffirming the continuing need for independent research and related training activities for the advancement of women and the role of the Institute therein,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its thirteenth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Commends the Institute for activities carried out that contribute to mainstreaming women's issues in development strategies and the appraisal of the contribution of women to social and economic development, particularly in relation to the informal sector;

3. Expresses its appreciation of the fact that the Institute maintains and seeks ways to strengthen its mode of operation, for example, by networking, particularly with the regional commissions and the focal points of the Institute, thereby ensuring effective outreach and coordination in order to empower women and strengthen their position at the national and regional levels;

4. Requests the Institute to assist in the substantive preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, given its essential role in research, training and statistics related to women;

5. Also requests the Institute to contribute, within its area of expertise, to the activities relevant to the International Year of the Family, to be observed in 1994, the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held at Cairo in 1994, and the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen in 1995;

6. Reiterates the importance of maintaining the level of resources devoted to independent research and related training activities, which are crucial for the situation of women;

7. Calls upon States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute, through voluntary contributions and pledges, to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, thus enabling the Institute to continue to respond effectively to its mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/105 without vote.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/99 of 16 December 1991 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/17 of 27 July 1993,

Taking note of the report of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its activities,

Stressing the need for independent research to ensure that policy-making and project implementation address issues and emerging areas of concern to women, and the role of the Institute therein,

Reaffirming the unique and specific role of the Institute in the areas of research and training that can facilitate the systematic inclusion of women as partners in development programmes and projects,

Recognizing the important role that the Institute could play in the substantive preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995,

Convinced that sustainable development cannot be achieved without the full participation of women,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the report of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its activities;

2. Commends the Institute for its efforts to focus on problems that constitute barriers to improving the status of women and thus impede overall development and progress;

3. Urges the Institute to continue to strengthen its activities in the areas of research, training and information aimed at mainstreaming gender in development strategies and giving women greater visibility by valuating their contribution to social and economic development as important means of empowering women and improving their status;

4. Requests the Institute to assist with the substantive preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, given its key role in the areas of research and training and its expertise in gender statistics;

5. Emphasizes the unique function of the Institute as the only entity within the United Nations system devoted exclusively to research and training for the integration of women in development, and stresses the importance of making its research findings available for policy purposes and for operational activities;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Institute to strengthen its programmatic linkages with other United Nations organizations, including the regional commissions, governmental and non-governmental organizations, research institutes and other organizations and groups, thereby broadening the scope of its operations, making optimum use of its limited financial resources and attaining a greater outreach and impact of its work;

7. Expresses its appreciation also to those Governments and organizations which have contributed to or supported the activities of the Institute;

8. Invites States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women so that the Institute can fulfil its mandate and ensure the full participation and proper recognition of women in society;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a report on the activities of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, including a detailed description of its administrative and institutional status, under the item entitled "Advancement of

Merger of INSTRAW and UNIFEM

By a June note,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on the activities of the Task Force on the proposed merger of INSTRAW and UNIFEM, which met from 24 to 26 May. After examining the mandates of the two organizations, the Task Force concluded that they complemented each other very well. The Task Force endorsed the proposed merger and urged that the interactions of the merged organizations with the Commission on the Status of Women be reviewed and rationalized.

By decision 1993/235 of 27 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and agreed to the merger, subject to an analysis of the legal, financial and administrative implications, and consideration by the General Assembly.

In November,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General presented the proposed legal, financial and administrative arrangements for the merger of INSTRAW and UNIFEM.

Also in November,⁽²³⁾ the Dominican Republic, the host country of INSTRAW, expressed concern over its possible relocation.

In a November note,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretariat, replying to the concerns raised by the Dominican Republic, stated that ultimate decisions on the matter were the prerogative of the relevant principal organs of the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/111 without vote.

Merger of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/135 of 16 December 1976, in which it endorsed the establishment of an International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1998(LX) of 12 May 1976, containing guidelines regarding the activities of the Institute,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1993/235 of 27 July 1993, in which the Council agreed to the recommendation of the Secretary-General to merge the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women, subject to a proper analysis of the legal, financial and administrative implications of the merger, and subject to consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1993/235,

Emphasizing that the ultimate goal of restructuring should be to strengthen the programmes for the advancement of women and to enhance the efficiency of the work of those organizations, in function, structure and cost-effectiveness,

Recognizing the importance of adequate preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995, under the guidance of the Conference secretariat, and the role therein of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

1. Affirms that both the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women should retain their comparative advantages in activities relating to the advancement of women;

2. Urges that the interaction between the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women be reviewed and rationalized within the context of ongoing efforts to revitalize the Economic and Social Council in pursuance of a stronger, more unified programme for the advancement of women;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in accordance with rule 157 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994 a report on the proposed merger of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women and to include therein:

(a) A clear analysis of the financial benefits resulting from the merger;

(b) An estimate of the one-time non-recurrent costs of the merger, including costs of transitional measures, as well as an estimate of the recurrent costs of the merger;

(c) Details of the current staffing structure of the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, together with details of the proposed structure, including reporting arrangements;

(d) Staffing implications;

(e) A report on consultations with the host Government of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report consideration of potential duplication of training activities of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

5. Requests the Economic and Social Council to submit its final recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session for its consideration and action before 31 December 1994.

Women and development

In March,⁽¹⁾ the Commission made a series of recommendations to Governments and Member States on improving the integration of women in development and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the subject of women in development was an integral part of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (the 1990s), adopted by the General Assembly in 1990.⁽²⁾

Integration of women in economic development

By a June note,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council an outline of a report on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development. The outline was submitted in lieu of the actual report, which was requested by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽⁴⁾ in order for the final report to be able to take into account developments from the first (1993) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I), the preparatory process for the International Conference on Population and Development (1994) (see PART THREE, Chapter IX) and the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

By decision 1993/308 of 29 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's June note.

In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly his report on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development.⁽⁵⁾ He described the role of gender in environment and sustainable development and suggested ways in which gender analysis could be included in monitoring Agenda 21, an action programme for the twenty-first century adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992.⁽⁶⁾ The Secretary-General discussed the gender dimension of poverty, urbanization and population growth and concluded that a condition for achieving sustainable development was the advancement of women.

The General Assembly, by decision 48/443 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report. On the same date, by decision 48/444, the Assembly took note of a report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee,⁽⁷⁾ which stated that, following a Committee debate on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, no action was taken on the subject.

Women in extreme poverty

The Commission on the Status of Women considered a January report by the Secretary-General on women in extreme poverty.⁽⁸⁾ He examined factors leading to a relatively higher incidence of poverty among women and discussed gender and household entitlements, female headed households, and the roles of the State, the economy and the community in combating poverty.

By a March resolution,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission urged Governments, international organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and community-based organizations to examine more closely the structural causes of poverty and ways to overcome it, and to evaluate, from a gender perspective, the effects of current socioeconomic policies. It called on Governments to adopt or strengthen measures to facilitate women's access to education, training, health, family planning, productive resources and income-generating employment and to ensure their full participation in the decision-making process. Governments were requested to share national experiences relating to their efforts to deal with extreme poverty, particularly the effects of those efforts on women.

1994 world survey

As requested by the General Assembly in 1989,^(10,11) the Secretary-General submitted in February a preliminary version of the 1994 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development.⁽¹²⁾ The World Survey, a joint effort of the Secretariat and the United Nations specialized agencies, analysed policy issues and concepts related to the advancement of women and was last updated in 1989.⁽¹³⁾

The preliminary version contained an expanded outline of the Survey covering problems including poverty, urbanization, the informal sector, the international economy and the impact on women of the reform of centrally planned economies; and solutions such as human resources development, access to economic instruments and empowerment, and women in decision-making, participation and democratization.

By decision 1993/308 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the preliminary version of the World Survey, as did the General Assembly by decision 48/443 of 21 December.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/12 without vote.

Women, environment and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 46/167 of 19 December 1991 on women, environment, population and sustainable development, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to include in the report on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, a section on the role of women in environment and sustainable development,

Recalling Commission on the Status of Women resolution 36/6 of 20 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, urged Governments to adopt laws, policies and programmes to promote women's participation in the preservation of the environment, and invited the Governments of donor countries, international organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations to ensure that greater attention was given to women's contributions to environmental protection and management in their cooperation with and assistance to developing countries,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992, in which the Assembly took note of the decision of the Secretary-General to establish a new Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, headed at the Under-Secretary-General level, and called upon the Secretary-General to establish a clearly identifiable, highly qualified and competent secretariat support structure for the Commission on Sustainable Development, the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development and the High-level Advisory Board, taking into account gender balance at all levels,

Welcoming the inclusion of principle 20 in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, according to which women have a vital role in environmental management and development and their full participation is therefore essential to achieving sustainable development, and the integration of gender issues into Agenda 21, including the special focus on women in chapter 24 thereof,

Noting that in Agenda 21, paragraph 24.9, it is recommended that the Secretary-General review the adequacy of all United Nations institutions in meeting development and environment objectives, consider how the environment and development programmes of each body of the United Nations system could be strengthened to implement Agenda 21, consider how to incorporate the role of women in programmes and decisions related to sustainable development, and, in particular, make recommendations to strengthen the capacities of United Nations entities with a special focus on women, such as the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Noting also the recommendations and objectives proposed for Governments in Agenda 21, chapter 24, including the objective, contained in paragraph 24.2 (d), to establish by 1995 mechanisms at the national, regional and international levels to assess the implementation and impact of development and environment policies and programmes on women and to ensure their contributions and benefits,

Recognizing that the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, will provide significant opportunities for reviewing the current status of women and for establishing priorities for future action, including action in relation to environment and development,

1. Urges the Commission on Sustainable Development, the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development and the High-level Advisory Board to develop appropriate mechanisms to ensure that the objectives and activities in Agenda 21, relating to the role of women in sustainable development, both as agents and as beneficiaries, are supported, that the objectives are met and the activities and other recommended actions are implemented and that Governments and all relevant United Nations entities monitor and report on the subject;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on the subject in the section on the role of women in environment and sustainable development in his report on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/167;

3. Urges Governments to take into account and to implement the recommendations contained in Agenda 21 in order to ensure the participation of women in developing, and making decisions on, policies and programmes relating to environmental management and sustainable development;

4. Requests Governments to include in their reports for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace information on the extent to which the objectives for Governments proposed in Agenda 21, chapter 24, relating to women, have been met and the activities recommended in that chapter have been implemented;

5. Agrees to review the current and planned activities of the Commission on the Status of Women in order to determine which recommendations in Agenda 21 relating to women are already being included in those activities and to consider how the others might be incorporated in future activities of the Commission, including the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to examine, in its discussion on the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women at its thirty-eighth session, the recommendations in Agenda 21 relating to women, with a view to:

(a) Identifying ways of facilitating implementation of the recommendations, including consideration of the role of Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

(b) Considering ways in which the Commission on the Status of Women might cooperate with and provide support for the Commission on Sustainable Development in ensuring the effective integration of issues on the status of women in its programme of work.

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/105) without vote, 12 July (meeting 6); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1993/27); agenda item 19.

Medium-term plan for women and development

In response to a 1989 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in April a report on the extent to which the system-wide medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995 for women and development had been incorporated into the programmes and programme budgets of the United Nations system.⁽¹⁵⁾ The report was based on information received from organizations and presented an overview of trends in incorporating the plan into their programmes. The Secretary-General concluded that there was an increased awareness and recognition of the issue of the integration of women in economic development. However, further efforts were needed to reflect the full significance and contribution of women to the development process.

By decision 1993/236 of 27 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Rural women

In response to a 1989 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on the situation of women in rural areas.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Secretary-General presented an analysis of recent trends in rural development policies based on an examination of institutional support, human resources development and implementation of measures that would give rural women broader access to and control of productive resources. He noted a sharp increase in poverty among rural women and growing awareness that poverty had a significant gender dimension. The Secretary-General recommended integrating concerns of rural women into development goals; eliminating gender-based social structures; developing legal literacy programmes for women; and recognizing the economic importance of rural women's activities.

By decision 1993/236 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 48/109 without vote.

Improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/14 of 9 November 1979, in which it endorsed the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action as adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, and 44/78 of 8 December 1989,

Recalling also the importance attached to the problems of rural women in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recalling further its resolution 47/174 of 22 December 1992, in which it welcomed the adoption of the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women by the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women, held at Geneva in February 1992, and urged all States to work for the achievement of the goals endorsed in that Declaration,

Welcoming the growing awareness of Governments of the need for strategies and programmes to improve the situation of women in rural areas,

Recognizing that the economic and financial crises in many developing countries have severely affected the socio-economic status of women, especially in rural areas, and noting with deep concern the continuing rise in the number of rural women living in poverty,

Also recognizing the urgent need to take appropriate measures aimed at further improving the situation of women in rural areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Invites Member States to attach greater importance in their national development strategies to the improvement of the situation of rural women, paying special attention to both their practical and strategic needs, by, inter alia:

- (a) Integrating the concerns of rural women into national development policies and programmes, in particular by placing a higher priority on budgetary allocations related to the interests of rural women;

- (b) Strengthening national machineries and establishing institutional linkages among governmental bodies in various sectors and non-governmental organizations concerned with rural development;

- (c) Increasing the participation of rural women in the decision-making process;

- (d) Improving accessibility of rural women to productive resources;

- (e) Investing in the human resources of rural women, particularly through health and literacy programmes;

3. Requests the international community, competent United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations to promote the realization of programmes and projects aimed at the improvement of the situation of rural women;

4. Invites the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held in 1994, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, both to be held in 1995, to give due consideration, in formulating respective strategies and actions, to the issue of improving the situation of rural women;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States and competent United Nations organizations, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session.

UN Development Fund for Women

The Consultative Committee on UNIFEM held two sessions in New York in 1993, the thirty-second on 25 and 26 January and the thirty-third from 7 to 9 September. In January, the Committee considered a progress report on UNIFEM's work and endorsed UNIFEM's budget for 1994-1995.

In September, it recommended the replenishment of UNIFEM's 1994-1995 regional programme budgets of $2,418,500 for the Africa Investment Plan; $2,250,000 for the Asia Pacific Development Strategy; and $2,443,000 for the Participatory Action Programme for Latin America and the Caribbean. It recommended approval of $1.5 million to support UNIFEM's initiatives for the Fourth World Conference on Women; $361,443 for the project, statistics on gender issues in Indonesia; and $300,000 for a project in Asia and the Pacific on monitoring the impact of new technologies on women's industrial work. It also recommended the replenishment of UNIFEM's mainstreaming development initiatives facility ($400,000), the small projects facility ($500,000), the monitoring and evaluation facility ($400,000) and the advocacy facility ($1,498,000).

During 1993, UNIFEM continued to work in three key programme areas—agriculture, trade and industry, and macro policy and national planning. They were complemented by technical support for credit, technology transfer, small business development and training.

In Africa, UNIFEM had 64 ongoing projects and programmes, 46 of them national and 18 regional. It developed a commodity-based food security strategy to elevate food crop production to the level of importance accorded cash crops in most national agriculture policies. UNIFEM launched a long-term programme to strengthen the training capacity of 17 women's organizations in South Africa, completed the preparatory phase of its regional internship programme for young African women and assisted women refugees in Eritrea and Liberian women refugees in Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire.

In Asia and the Pacific, UNIFEM supported 51 ongoing projects. It organized gender awareness seminars and a three-day women's summit (Phnom Penh, Cambodia, 5-8 March), with Khemara, an NGO devoted to women's issues. In late June, UNIFEM organized in Cambodia a workshop on women's rights and the Constitution. In Western Asia, UNIFEM started a project to strengthen governmental and NGO support for enterprise development for women.

One of UNIFEM's main programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean was its Andean Women's Food Technology initiative, combining public education on women's role in agriculture with networking assistance for individual production groups and rural cooperatives in Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela. To improve women's access to credit, UNIFEM acted as a guarantor of micro-loans for institutions in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia and Guatemala. In several countries, UNIFEM supported legislative and administrative reform to guarantee women's rights. There were 51 ongoing projects in the region in 1993.

At the global level, UNIFEM strengthened its programmes relating to women, environment and development; women's rights as human rights; women refugees and displaced citizens; and women's changing roles in finance, science and technology, and political decision-making.

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on the 1992 activities of the Fund.⁽¹⁸⁾

UNDP action. On 18 June,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNDP Governing Council called on UNIFEM to continue to support UNDP in gender-related programme areas and renewed its appeal for increased voluntary financial support to the Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/107 without vote.

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, by which it decided to establish the United Nations Development Fund for Women as a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme,

Reaffirming the catalytic role of the Fund in increasing opportunities and options for women in developing countries to participate more effectively in the development of their countries, in line with national priorities,

Recognizing the important contribution the Fund continues to make in galvanizing efforts of the organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to formulate and support innovative activities that directly benefit and empower women,

Recognizing also the initiatives of the Fund to provide technical assistance to national machineries for issues related to women and to other relevant line ministries in development planning with sensitivity to gender considerations, and to facilitate national preparatory activities for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995,

Emphasizing the position of the Fund as a specialized resource base for development cooperation linking the needs and aspirations of women with resources, programmes and policies for their economic development,

Noting the focused and responsive interventions of the Fund within its regional priority framework and its overall strategic approach to women in development,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the annual report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Commends the Fund for its support of catalytic and innovative projects that strengthen national capacity to improve the situation of women;

3. Encourages the Fund to continue to promote initiatives that incorporate the dimension of women in the agendas of the mainstream development efforts of Governments, United Nations organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector;

4. Also encourages the Fund to continue its support of initiatives regarding women in politics, especially within the democratization process in developing countries;

5. Welcomes the advocacy initiatives of the Fund, including its contribution to and participation in the follow-up to Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, in particular with respect to efforts to combat violence against women;

6. Also welcomes the appointment of an adviser from the United Nations Development Fund for Women to the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

7. Commends the Fund for its recent signing of a memorandum of understanding with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which should contribute to the development of meaningful and lasting solutions to the problem of refugee women and children;

8. Endorses the role of the Fund in promoting the strategic importance of the empowerment of women;

9. Commends the Fund's initiative to assist developing countries in their preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, including the preparation of national reports;

10. Stresses the importance of the role of the Fund in the preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development, the results of which should constitute a major contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women;

11. Notes with satisfaction the steady increase in contributions to the Fund, and urges Governments and public and private donors to continue to extend their support to the Fund through voluntary contributions and pledges to its programmes;

12. Welcomes the establishment of new national committees for the Fund in Canada, Liechtenstein and Switzerland, and urges other developed countries to encourage the establishment of national committees;

13. Stresses the importance of the work of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women in policy and programme directions related to the activities of the Fund;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session a report on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, to be submitted in accordance with its resolution 39/125.

General Assembly resolution 48/107

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Status of Women

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-seventh session (Vienna, 17-26 March 1993),⁽¹⁾ recommended seven draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. The resolutions dealt with a draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women; communications on the status of women; women, environment and development; women and children under apartheid (see PART TWO, Chapter I); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;⁽²⁾ Palestinian women (see PART TWO, Chapter V); and improving the status of women in the Secretariat (see PART FIVE, Chapter II). The decisions dealt with the report of the Commission's thirty-seventh session and agenda for its thirty-eighth (1994) session; and an inter-sessional working group of the Commission on the Platform for Action for the 1995 World Conference on Women.

1994 session

On 27 July 1993, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1993/233, took note of the Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its thirty-eighth (1994) session.

Violence against women

An expert group meeting on measures to eradicate violence against women (New Brunswick, New Jersey, United States, 4-8 October),⁽³⁾ organized by the Division for the Advancement of Women in collaboration with the Center for Women's Global Leadership at Douglass College, Rutgers University (New Brunswick), discussed the prevention and punishment of violence against women and made recommendations concerning human rights; law and justice; development; health and education; and peace, peace-keeping, emergencies and armed conflict. The deliberations of the group were based on the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women, which was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly (see below).

The question of violence against women was also discussed by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (13-23 April) (see preceding chapter), which recommended a draft resolution on the subject to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/26 without vote.

Violence against women in all its forms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General on domestic violence,⁴

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 45/114 of 14 December 1990 on domestic violence and 47/96 of 16 December 1992 on violence against migrant women workers,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/46 of 8 March 1993, in which the Commission, inter alia, condemned all acts of violence and violations of human rights directed specifically against women,

Referring to the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence against Women, held at Vienna from 11 to 15 November 1991,

Reaffirming its resolution 1992/18 of 30 July 1992,

Fully supporting the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women, elaborated at the Expert Group Meeting on Violence against Women and at the Meeting of the Working Group on Violence against Women of the Commission on the Status of Women, held at Vienna from 31 August to 4 September 1992,

Expressing deep concern about the continuing and endemic violence against women,

Convinced of the necessity of substantially improving the situation of victims of violence, ⁴A/CONF.144/17.

Calling attention to the fact that it is important for perpetrators of domestic violence to receive appropriate punishment,

Noting that, unlike rape within the family or in the community, systematic rape used as a political strategy is not mentioned in the documents referred to above,

Strongly condemning systematic rape during armed conflict,

Recognizing the increased public attention that is being given to the issue of violence against women, and how women can be victimized by virtue of their gender,

Recognizing also the work being done by non-governmental organizations in eliminating violence against women, in drawing attention to the nature, severity and magnitude of violence against women and in assisting women who are victims of violence,

Appreciating international cooperation in efforts to combat violence against women,

1. Urges Governments, the specialized agencies of the United Nations and the non-governmental organizations concerned:

(a) To take all possible steps to prevent violence against women;

(b) To intensify their efforts to use criminal law to prohibit violent acts against women;

(c) To promote police and penal systems that combine the protection of society with the prosecution and appropriate punishment of perpetrators;

(d) To offer full assistance, including provision of safe shelter, access to the legal system and, where necessary, counselling, medical, financial and other support, to women who are victims of violence;

(e) To improve police training to ensure that all incidents of violence against women are thoroughly investigated and that adequate help and support are given to victims in countries where it is necessary;

(f) To respond quickly to every case that calls for assistance to be provided to the victim;

(g) To take measures to combat violence against women occurring within the community, such as rape, sexual abuse, traditional practices harmful to women, trafficking in women and forced prostitution;

(h) To guarantee appropriate punishment and treatment of offenders, including sentencing strategies that deter perpetrators from repeating offences;

(i) To include the issue of violence against women in all its forms in the preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family, in 1994, under the question of crime prevention and criminal justice;

(j) To include the issue of violence against women in all its forms under the appropriate item of the provisional agenda for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1995;

2. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to include the issue of violence against women in all its forms in the provisional agenda of its third session;

3. Urges Governments to give their full support to the adoption by the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session of the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women, recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session;

4. Welcomes the extrabudgetary funds provided by the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, for the publication, in English, of the document entitled "Strategies for confronting domestic violence: a resource manual", prepared in collaboration with the Government of Canada, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat and the Helsinki Institute and reviewed at an expert group meeting hosted by the International Centre for Criminal Law Reform and Criminal Justice Policy, and requests the Secretary-General to publish it as soon as possible in the other official languages of the United Nations, subject to the availability of regular budgetary or extrabudgetary funds.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/26

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/106) without vote, 14 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1993/32); agenda item 20.

Declaration on the elimination of violence against women

The draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women, prepared by the expert group meeting on violence against women in 1991(4) and by the Commission on the Status of Women's inter-sessional working group on violence against women,(5) was adopted by the Commission and forwarded to the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/10 without vote.

Draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the elimination of violence against women, especially its resolutions 1991/18 of 30 May 1991 and 1992/18 of 30 July 1992 related to the elaboration of a United Nations declaration on the subject,

Bearing in mind that the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women identify violence as a major obstacle to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recognizing that the elimination of violence against women is essential to the achievement of equality for women and is a requirement for the full respect of human rights,

Convinced that a United Nations declaration on the elimination of violence against women would make a positive contribution to the achievement of full equality for women,

Recognizing that the effective implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women would contribute to the elimination of violence against women and that the declaration would strengthen and complement that process,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the experts, Member States and United Nations organizations that contributed to the elaboration of the draft declaration on the elimination of violence against women at the Expert Group Meeting on Violence against Women, held at Vienna from 11 to 15 November 1991, and at the Meeting of the Working Group on Violence against Women, held at Vienna from 31 August to 4 September 1992;

2. Urges the General Assembly to adopt the draft resolution on the declaration on the elimination of violence against women contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Urges Member States to adopt, strengthen and enforce legislation prohibiting violence against women and to take all appropriate administrative, social and educational measures to protect women from all forms of physical, sexual and psychological violence, whether occurring in public or private life, in accordance with the measures contained in the draft declaration;

4. Calls upon States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to continue to prepare their reports in accordance with general recommendation 19 on violence against women, adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its eleventh session;

5. Invites United Nations entities, as well as inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, to take all possible steps to implement the declaration, once adopted, to disseminate information on it and to promote its understanding;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary, within existing resources, for the dissemination of information on the declaration, once adopted;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report, in consultation with Member States, to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-ninth session, in 1995, and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session, in 1996, on the implementation of the declaration, once adopted;

8. Urges Governments to include an evaluation of the impact of the declaration, once adopted, in their preparatory activities for the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/10

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/105) without vote, 12 July (meeting 6); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1993/27); agenda item 19.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/104 without vote.

Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the urgent need for the universal application to women of the rights and principles with regard to equality, security, liberty, integrity and dignity of all human beings,

Noting that those rights and principles are enshrined in international instruments, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recognizing that effective implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women would contribute to the elimination of violence against women and that the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, set forth in the present resolution, will strengthen and complement that process,

Concerned that violence against women is an obstacle to the achievement of equality, development and peace, as recognized in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which a set of measures to combat violence against women was recommended, and to the full implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Affirming that violence against women constitutes a violation of the rights and fundamental freedoms of women and impairs or nullifies their enjoyment of those rights and freedoms, and concerned about the long-standing failure to protect and promote those rights and freedoms in the case of violence against women,

Recognizing that violence against women is a manifestation of historically unequal power relations between men and women, which have led to domination over and discrimination against women by men and to the prevention of the full advancement of women, and that violence against women is one of the crucial social mechanisms by which women are forced into a subordinate position compared with men,

Concerned that some groups of women, such as women belonging to minority groups, indigenous women, refugee women, migrant women, women living in rural or remote communities, destitute women, women in institutions or in detention, female children, women with disabilities, elderly women and women in situations of armed conflict, are especially vulnerable to violence,

Recalling the conclusion in paragraph 23 of the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990 that recognition that violence against women in the family and society was pervasive and cut across lines of income, class and culture had to be matched by urgent and effective steps to eliminate its incidence,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/18 of 30 May 1991, in which the Council recommended the development of a framework for an international instrument that would address explicitly the issue of violence against women,

Welcoming the role that women's movements are playing in drawing increasing attention to the nature, severity and magnitude of the problem of violence against women,

Alarmed that opportunities for women to achieve legal, social, political and economic equality in society are limited, inter alia, by continuing and endemic violence,

Convinced that in the light of the above there is a need for a clear and comprehensive definition of violence against women, a clear statement of the rights to be applied to ensure the elimination of violence against women in all its forms, a commitment by States in respect of their responsibilities, and a commitment by the international community at large to the elimination of violence against women,

Solemnly proclaims the following Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and urges that every effort be made so that it becomes generally known and respected:

Article 1

For the purposes of this Declaration, the term "violence against women" means any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life.

Article 2

Violence against women shall be understood to encompass, but not be limited to, the following:

(a) Physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring in the family, including battering, sexual abuse of female children in the household, dowry-related violence, marital rape, female genital mutilation and other traditional practices harmful to women, non-spousal violence and violence related to exploitation;

(b) Physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring within the general community, including rape, sexual abuse, sexual harassment and intimidation at work, in educational institutions and elsewhere, trafficking in women and forced prostitution;

(c) Physical, sexual and psychological violence perpetrated or condoned by the State, wherever it occurs.

Article 3

Women are entitled to the equal enjoyment and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field. These rights include, inter alia:

- (a) The right to life;
- (b) The right to equality;
- (c) The right to liberty and security of person;
- (d) The right to equal protection under the law;
- (e) The right to be free from all forms of discrimination;
- (f) The right to the highest standard attainable of physical and mental health;
- (g) The right to just and favourable conditions of work;
- (h) The right not to be subjected to torture, or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 4

States should condemn violence against women and should not invoke any custom, tradition or religious consideration to avoid their obligations with respect to its elimination. States should pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating violence against women and, to this end, should:

(a) Consider, where they have not yet done so, ratifying or acceding to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women or withdrawing reservations to that Convention;

(b) Refrain from engaging in violence against women;

(c) Exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate and, in accordance with national legislation, punish acts of violence against women, whether those acts are perpetrated by the State or by private persons;

(d) Develop penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs caused to women who are subjected to violence; women who are subjected to violence should be provided with access to the mechanisms of justice and, as provided for by national legislation, to just and effective remedies for the harm that they have suffered; States should also inform women of their rights in seeking redress through such mechanisms;

(e) Consider the possibility of developing national plans of action to promote the protection of women against any form of violence, or to include provisions for that purpose in plans already existing, taking into account, as appropriate, such cooperation as can be provided by non-governmental organizations, particularly those concerned with the issue of violence against women;

(f) Develop, in a comprehensive way, preventive approaches and all those measures of a legal, political, administrative and cultural nature that promote the protection of women against any form of violence, and ensure that the re-victimization of women does not occur because of laws insensitive to gender considerations, enforcement practices or other interventions;

(g) Work to ensure, to the maximum extent feasible in the light of their available resources and, where needed, within the framework of international cooperation, that women subjected to violence and, where appropriate, their children have specialized assistance, such as rehabilitation, assistance in child care and maintenance, treatment, counselling, and health and social services, facilities and programmes, as well as support structures, and should take all other appropriate measures to promote their safety and physical and psychological rehabilitation;

(h) Include in government budgets adequate resources for their activities related to the elimination of violence against women;

(i) Take measures to ensure that law enforcement officers and public officials responsible for implementing policies to prevent, investigate and punish violence against women receive training to sensitize them to the needs of women;

(j) Adopt all appropriate measures, especially in the field of education, to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women and to eliminate prejudices, customary practices and all other practices based on the idea of the inferiority or superiority of either of the sexes and on stereotyped roles for men and women;

(k) Promote research, collect data and compile statistics, especially concerning domestic violence, relating to the prevalence of different forms of violence against women and encourage research on the causes, nature, seriousness and consequences of violence against women and on the effectiveness of measures implemented to prevent and redress violence against women; those statistics and findings of the research will be made public;

(l) Adopt measures directed towards the elimination of violence against women who are especially vulnerable to violence;

(m) Include, in submitting reports as required under relevant human rights instruments of the United Nations, information pertaining to violence against women and measures taken to implement the present Declaration;

(n) Encourage the development of appropriate guidelines to assist in the implementation of the principles set forth in the present Declaration;

(o) Recognize the important role of the women's movement and non-governmental organizations world wide in raising awareness and alleviating the problem of violence against women;

(p) Facilitate and enhance the work of the women's movement and non-governmental organizations and cooperate with them at local, national and regional levels;

(q) Encourage intergovernmental regional organizations of which they are members to include the elimination of violence against women in their programmes, as appropriate.

Article 5

The organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should, within their respective fields of competence, contribute to the recognition and realization of the rights and the principles set forth in the present Declaration and, to this end, should, inter alia:

(a) Foster international and regional cooperation with a view to defining regional strategies for combating violence, exchanging experiences and financing programmes relating to the elimination of violence against women;

(b) Promote meetings and seminars with the aim of creating and raising awareness among all persons of the issue of the elimination of violence against women;

(c) Foster coordination and exchange within the United Nations system between human rights treaty bodies to address the issue of violence against women effectively;

(d) Include in analyses prepared by organizations and bodies of the United Nations system of social trends and problems, such as the periodic reports on the world social situation, examination of trends in violence against women;

(e) Encourage coordination between organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to incorporate the issue of violence against women into ongoing programmes, especially with reference to groups of women particularly vulnerable to violence;

(f) Promote the formulation of guidelines or manuals relating to violence against women, taking into account the measures referred to in the present Declaration;

(g) Consider the issue of the elimination of violence against women, as appropriate, in fulfilling their mandates with respect to the implementation of human rights instruments;

(h) Cooperate with non-governmental organizations in addressing the issue of violence against women.

Article 6

Nothing in the present Declaration shall affect any provision that is more conducive to the elimination of violence against women that may be contained in the legislation of a State or in any international convention, treaty or other instrument in force in a State.

General Assembly resolution 48/104

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/629) without vote, 1 December (meeting 48); draft by ESC (A/C.3/48/L.5); agenda item 111.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 29-37, 48; plenary 85.

Violence against women migrant workers

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 48/110 without vote.

Violence against women migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Charter of the United Nations reaffirms faith in human rights and fundamental freedoms, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women,

Reaffirming the principles set forth in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979 and annexed thereto,

Welcoming the reaffirmation made in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, that gender-based violence and all forms of sexual harassment and exploitation are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and must be eliminated by legal measures and through national and international cooperation,

Noting that large numbers of women from developing countries continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families, as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic situations in their home countries, while acknowledging the primary duty of States to work for conditions that provide employment to their citizens,

Recognizing that it is the duty of sending countries to protect and promote the interests of their citizens who seek or receive employment in other countries, to provide them with appropriate training/education and to apprise them of their rights and obligations in the countries of employment,

Aware of the moral obligation of receiving or host countries to ensure the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons within their boundaries, including migrant workers, in particular women migrant workers, who are doubly vulnerable because of their gender and because they are foreigners,

Noting with concern the continuing reports of grave abuses and acts of violence committed against the persons of women migrant workers by some of their employers in some host countries,

Stressing that acts of violence directed against women impair or nullify the enjoyment by women of their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Convinced of the need to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women and to protect them from gender-based violence,

1. Expresses grave concern at the plight of women migrant workers who become victims of physical, mental and sexual harassment and abuse;

2. Recognizes with appreciation the efforts exerted by some receiving countries to alleviate the negative situation of women migrant workers;

3. Welcomes the recommendation to the General Assembly by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1993/10 of 27 July 1993 of the draft Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women;

4. Reaffirms the provision in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action that the rights of women should form an integral part of United Nations human rights activities, including the promotion of all human rights instruments specifically relating to women;

5. Calls upon all countries, particularly the sending and receiving States, to cooperate in taking appropriate steps to ensure that the rights of women migrant workers are protected;

6. Calls upon the countries concerned to take appropriate measures to ensure that law-enforcement officials and the judiciary assist in guaranteeing the full protection of the rights of women migrant workers;

7. Urges both sending and host countries to help ensure that women migrant workers are protected from unscrupulous recruitment practices, if needed, by the adoption of legal measures;

8. Encourages Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families;

9. Invites trade unions to support the realization of the rights of women migrant workers by assisting them in organizing themselves so as to enable them better to assert their rights;

10. Requests treaty-monitoring bodies and calls upon non-governmental organizations concerned with violence against women to include, where appropriate, the situation of women migrant workers in their deliberations and findings and to supply relevant information to United Nations bodies and Governments;

11. Calls upon non-governmental organizations concerned to conduct, in cooperation with both the sending and the host countries, seminars and training programmes on human rights instruments, particularly those pertaining to migrant workers;

12. Urges all States, with the support of relevant non-governmental organizations, to adopt appropriate measures to provide support services to women migrant workers who have become traumatized as a consequence of violations of their rights by, inter alia, unscrupulous employers and/or recruiters, and to provide resources for their physical and psychological rehabilitation;

13. Also urges that the subject of violence against women migrant workers be included in the agenda of the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in Beijing in 1995;

14. Calls upon competent bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to inform the Secretary-General of the extent of the problem and to recommend further measures to implement the purposes of the present resolution;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account the relevant views of the Commission on the Status of Women in its discussion of the subject of violence against women at its thirty-eighth session, in March 1994.

General Assembly resolution 48/110

20 December 1993 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/48/629) without vote, 1 December (meeting 48); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/48/L.35), orally revised; agenda item 111.

Sponsors: Australia, Belarus, Belgium, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Ireland, Mexico, Myanmar, Namibia, Nicaragua, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Russian Federation, Senegal, Spain, Thailand, Uganda.

Meeting numbers. GA 48th session: 3rd Committee 29-37, 41, 48; plenary 85.

Rape and abuse of women in the former Yugoslavia

In March,⁽⁶⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women condemned the rape and abuse of women and children in the former Yugoslavia and urged States and the relevant intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to consider long-term action-oriented plans and programmes and the provision of adequate financial resources to rehabilitate those women and children. It also urged them to ensure that counselling and other support formed an integral part of health and welfare services. It requested the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission, in 1994, the reports of the Commission on Human Rights Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW)⁽⁷⁾ requested its Chairperson to send a letter to the Special Rapporteur, expressing the Committee's concern over alleged human rights violations against women in the former Yugoslavia. The letter to the Special Rapporteur and his reply were annexed to the Committee's report. CEDAW decided to request, on an exceptional basis and if warranted, reports from the States of the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly, by resolution 48/143, strongly condemned the systematic rape and abuse of women in areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia (see also PARTS TWO and THREE, Chapters IV and X, respectively).

Palestinian women

By a January note, ⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report describing the situation of Palestinian women, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1992.⁽⁹⁾ The Secretary-General discussed their living conditions, economic situation and employment, education, health and psychological well-being, and gender relations in the Palestinian family (see also PART TWO, Chapter V).

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1993/15, asked the Secretary-General to assist in the review of the situation of Palestinian women and to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1994 a report containing recommendations and a programme of action aimed at improving their situation.

Women and children under apartheid

In accordance with a 1992 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a

January report(11) describing the legal, economic and social conditions affecting women and children living under apartheid, and action taken by United Nations organizations and the international community to provide assistance to them (see also PART TWO, Chapter I).

On 27 July, the Council, by resolution 1993/13, appealed to the international community to increase its support for women and children under apartheid and asked the Secretary-General to report to the Commission in 1994.

Communications on the status of women

On 19 March,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women appointed a Working Group on Communications concerning the Status of Women to consider ways of making the communications procedure more transparent and efficient. The communications mechanism identified communications received by the Division for the Advancement of Women that revealed a consistent pattern of injustice and discriminatory practices against women. The Working Group was guided by a mandate set out in a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution.⁽¹²⁾ In its report to the Commission, the Working Group stated that it considered communications, confidential and non-confidential, received directly by the Division for the Advancement of Women and by the Centre for Human Rights, the International Labour Organisation and other United Nations bodies and agencies that had been forwarded to the Division. It noted that the most prevalent issues dealt with were cases of sexual violence and equal remuneration. The Working Group proposed that the Commission give attention to the trends emerging from the communications procedure, that it urge Governments to supply more substantive replies and that further publicity be given to the existing procedure.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1993/11 without vote.

Communications on the status of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 76(V) of 5 August 1947 and 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950, which form the basis for the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to receive at each of its regular sessions a list of confidential and non-confidential communications relating to the status of women,

Taking into consideration its resolution 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, in which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission to consider confidential and non-confidential communications on the status of women and authorized the Commission to appoint a working group to consider communications, with a view to bringing to the attention of the Commission those communications, including the replies of Governments, which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of reliably attested injustice and discriminatory practices against women,

Reaffirming that discrimination against women is incompatible with human dignity and that women and men should participate on the basis of equality, irrespective of race or creed, in the social, economic and political processes of their countries,

Recalling its resolution 1990/8 of 24 May 1990, by which it requested the Secretary-General to examine, in consultation with Governments, the existing mechanisms for communications on the status of women, in order to ensure that such communications received effective and appropriately coordinated consideration in view of the role of communications in the work of the Commission, and to report thereon to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session,

Recalling also its resolution 1992/19 of 30 July 1992, in which it requested the Secretary-General to publicize widely the existence and scope of the communications mechanism of the Commission and to ensure proper coordination of the activities of the Commission in this area with those of the other bodies of the Council, and requested the Commission to consider ways of making the procedure for receiving and considering communications, including the standard of admissibility, more transparent and efficient,

Bearing in mind the conclusion of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women, in its report to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session that, while the communications procedure provided a valuable source of information on the effects of discrimination on the lives of women, it should be improved to make it more efficient and useful, and that clear criteria for receiving communications should be given,

1. Reaffirms that the Commission on the Status of Women is empowered to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on what action should be taken on emerging trends and patterns of discrimination against women revealed by communications on the status of women;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize widely the existence and scope of the communications mechanism of the Commission, using all available media;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to support the activities of the Commission with regard to its consideration of communications and to ensure proper coordination of the activities of the Commission in this area with those of the other bodies of the Council;

4. Invites the Commission to take into account the report of the Secretary-General on examining mechanisms for communications on the status of women, submitted to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session, when considering ways of making the existing procedure for receiving and considering communications more effective;

5. Invites each regional group to appoint, one week before each session of the Commission, a member of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission at its thirty-eighth session on the ways in which the communications mechanism of the Commission has been publicized;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that any costs resulting from the activities set out in the present resolution are kept to a minimum and that the activities are carried out within existing resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/11

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/105) without vote, 12 July (meeting 6); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1993/27); agenda item 19.

Women's rights and legal literacy

In March,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women considered a report of the Secretary-General that examined obstacles to the exercise by women of their legal rights.⁽¹⁵⁾ Those obstacles were identified as a lack of awareness of the rights; illiteracy and a lower level of education; the absence of legislation to implement equal rights; the insensitivity of judicial personnel to gender factors; and family and community resistance to women using the legal system. An expert group meeting (Bratislava, Slovakia, 18-22 May 1992) on increased awareness by women of their rights, including legal literacy—defined as having an awareness of rights and the law, the ability to assert rights and the capacity to mobilize for legal and societal change—recommended that Governments form partnerships with NGOs to mobilize women to act for the enjoyment of their rights; ensure that their legal systems were accessible and gender-neutral; include an understanding of women's rights in school curricula; and adopt measures to make the development of legal literacy a more effective and general process. It also recommended that the relevant United Nations organizations support legal literacy programmes and activities for women and see that support as part of a general effort to promote international standards and norms, especially the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.⁽²⁾ Annexed to the report were extracts from the expert group meeting's report.

Women and drugs

In February,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described action taken or planned by United Nations organizations on women and drug abuse and the role of women in drug control in the context of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse (1991-2000). Activities centred on the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and intravenous drug abusers; treatment for HIV-infected and drug-dependent prisoners; the social impact of drug trafficking and abuse in low-income urban areas of Latin America and the Caribbean; drug abuse prevention education in Mediterranean countries; and rehabilitation and after-care. A joint position paper on women, drug abuse and HIV/AIDS was being prepared by the World Health Organization, in collaboration with the United Nations Drug Control Programme and the Division for the Advancement of Women, for submission to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1994.

Women and peace

In March,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women considered a report by the Secretary-General on women's participation in the peace process.⁽¹⁵⁾ He noted that, while women's participation in non-governmental activities, such as demonstrations, peace movements, peace education and peace research, had been strong and visible, their participation in the military had been limited. The Secretary-General reviewed the potential role of women in United Nations peace-keeping and suggested studying gender aspects of recent peace-keeping and humanitarian operations and collecting statistics on the participation of women in those operations.

Elimination of discrimination against women

Convention on discrimination against women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982(1) under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,⁽²⁾ held its twelfth session at Vienna from 18 January to 5 February 1993.⁽³⁾

The Committee considered the reports of 11 States parties (Bangladesh, France, Iraq, Kenya, Nicaragua, Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Sweden, United Kingdom and Yemen) on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention.

On 4 February, the Committee adopted a suggestion on the World Conference on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X) containing recommendations on women and human rights issues. It considered ways of contributing to the International Year of the Family (1994); the International Conference on Population and Development (1994); the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995); and the World Summit for Social Development (1995). CEDAW discussed the report of the fourth (1992) meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies⁽⁴⁾ and examined ways of expediting its work. The Committee decided that it should take steps, in common with other human rights treaty bodies, to seek an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice that would clarify the validity and legal effect of reservations to the Convention in order to assist Governments to reconsider their reservations with a view to withdrawing them.

In March,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women considered the report of CEDAW on its 1993 session and discussed the status of the Convention.

A draft general recommendation and draft general comments were adopted on articles 9 (equality with men regarding nationality), 15 (equality with men regarding legal matters) and 16 (elimination of discrimination against women in matters relating to marriage and family relations) of the Convention, with the agreement that three additions in the draft recommendation would be included in the final draft. The additions referred to the unequal power held by men and women within the family; the impact of the non-recognition of women's unpaid work at home; and the status of a minority of infertile women, who, in many African countries, had no inheritance rights after the death of their husbands. Final approval of the draft was expected at the Committee's 1994 session. Draft general comments and recommendations on other articles of the Convention were being prepared by a working group.

Annexed to the Committee's report were lists of States parties to the Convention as at 1 March 1993 and CEDAW members, and a chart giving the status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention as at the same date.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/14 without vote.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women is the most important international human rights instrument for the promotion of equality between women and men,

Welcoming the growing number of States parties to the Convention, which now stands at one hundred and twenty,

Noting with concern that the Convention is still the human rights instrument with the most reservations, despite the fact that some States parties have withdrawn their reservations to it,

Noting the importance of the monitoring function of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, as demonstrated most recently by the Committee at its twelfth session, at which it adopted suggestion 4 on the World Conference on Human Rights and also adopted, in substance, and decided to place on the provisional agenda of its thirteenth session for final approval without discussion, a draft general recommendation on article 16 and related articles 9 and 15 of the Convention, which would be its contribution to the International Year of the Family,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 47/94 of 16 December 1992,

Recalling its resolution 1991/25 of 30 May 1991 and other General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions relating to support for the Committee,

Noting that the annual session of the Committee is the shortest of all the annual sessions of the human rights treaty bodies,

Welcoming the expressed intention of the Committee to strengthen the analysis of country reports provided to it,

1. Supports the request of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women for additional meeting time for its future sessions, as granted for its twelfth and thirteenth sessions;

2. Welcomes suggestion 4 on the World Conference on Human Rights, adopted by the Committee at its twelfth session, and the draft general recommendation on article 16 and related articles 9 and 15 of the Convention, adopted, in substance, by the Committee at that session, both of which were submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-seventh session, and encourages the Committee to continue its work in developing detailed general recommendations;

3. Requests States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to review regularly their reservations and make efforts to withdraw them in order to enable the full implementation of the Convention;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to widely publicize the decisions and recommendations of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/14

27 July 1993 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Approved by Social Committee (E/1993/105) without vote, 12 July (meeting 6); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1993/27); agenda item 19.

Ratifications, accessions and signatures

As at 31 December 1993,⁽⁶⁾ the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women had received 96 signatures and 130 States had become parties to it. During the year, South Africa signed the Convention and Armenia, the Bahamas, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Czech Republic, the Gambia, India, Maldives, Morocco, Slovakia, Suriname and Tajikistan became parties to it.

In September,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the status of the Convention, which contained information on signatures, ratifications, successions and accessions as at 1 August 1993 and on reservations and objections made to specific reservations between 1 August 1992 and 1 August 1993.

Chapter XIV

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 1993, activities of the United Nations Children's Fund were geared towards achieving intermediate goals for 1995 as a follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children. Most of the Fund's allocations went to emergency operations in 64 countries. It provided assistance in the areas of immunization, maternal and child health, control of diarrhoeal diseases and acute respiratory infections, nutrition and household food security, breast-feeding, water supply and sanitation, basic education, urban services, and children in especially difficult circumstances.

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted a calendar of activities prepared by the Commission for Social Development to mark the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year in 1995. The Commission also made recommendations for further development of a draft world youth programme of action to the year 2000 and beyond.

In December, the General Assembly endorsed recommendations from the third review and appraisal of the International Plan of Action on Ageing along with global and national targets on ageing for the year 2001. It also redesignated the International Year of Older Persons, to be observed in 1999, as the International Year of the Elderly.

ChildrenUN Children's Fund

During 1993,⁽¹⁾ the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) cooperated in programmes in more than 130 countries, the greatest number of which were in Africa (46), followed by Latin America and the Caribbean (35), Asia (34) and the Middle East and North Africa (14). The Fund expanded its programme to nine Central and Eastern European countries and newly independent States. Programme expenditures totalled $804 million, of which $223 million (28 per cent) was spent on emergency operations; $210 million (26 per cent) on child health; $127 million (16 per cent) on programme planning, advocacy and support; $84 million (10 per cent) on water supply and sanitation; $72 million (9 per cent) on education; $31 million (4 per cent) on nutrition and household food security; and $57 million (7 per cent) on other programme areas.

Major strategic components of UNICEF activities were aimed at achieving and monitoring the goals for children in the 1990s and promoting the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (see below), advocacy and social mobilization, economic policies linked with social development, common strategies of the United Nations operational activities for development, action to reach the poorest, national capacity-building and empowerment and the environment and sustainable development.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its regular session from 26 April to 7 May⁽²⁾ and a special session on 6 and 7 October 1993,⁽³⁾ both in New York. On 7 June,⁽⁴⁾ the Board elected officers for the period 1 August 1993 to 31 July 1994. The Programme Committee convened from 28 April to 3 May and on 7 May, while the Committee on Administration and Finance met from 3 to 5 and on 7 May and on 6 and 7 October. (For dates of organizational sessions, see APPENDIX III.)

Programme policy decisions

The Executive Board approved a number of recommendations by its Programme Committee concerning programme policies.

The Board⁽⁵⁾ requested the Executive Director to ensure that country programme evaluations became an integral part of the country programming exercise, refine the evaluation information system and report on its status in 1994, and to continue collaboration with other United Nations bodies in developing similar evaluation reporting systems. The Executive Director was also requested to report biennially, starting in 1994, on the results of UNICEF programme and project evaluations and achievements in service delivery, capacity-building and empowerment. The Board noted⁽⁶⁾ the findings and recommendations of the multi-donor evaluation of UNICEF initiated by Australia, Canada, Denmark and Switzerland⁽⁷⁾ and asked the Executive Director to suggest further use of the evaluation results. The Fund and other interested parties were invited to identify evaluation issues for future consideration and to report on the subject in 1994.

In a separate action, the Executive Director was requested⁽⁸⁾ to include in future country programmes plans for UNICEF support of national capacity-building measures and to support the development of indicators for monitoring institutional development plans.

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

Having reviewed the Executive Director's report⁽⁹⁾ on the follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children and the implementation of the Summit's World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and Plan of Action,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Executive Board⁽¹¹⁾ urged heads of State or Government to maintain and strengthen their involvement in the commitments of the Summit and encouraged countries to identify feasible mid-decade targets in their national programmes of action (NPAs). Countries were also encouraged to incorporate NPA activities into the national budget process and make NPAs operational at provincial, municipal and district levels. The Executive Board requested that NPAs be taken into account in the course of poverty reduction, lending and adjustment processes and invited UNICEF, international donors and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to strengthen the delivery of social services, capacity-building and empowerment as components of NPAs and UNICEF-supported country programmes. The Board called for an increase in official development assistance and national budgetary allocations to priority social sectors. It requested the Executive Director to coordinate the Fund's follow-up activities with those of other United Nations bodies and ensure the integration of NPAs into action for sustainable development.

In response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in September 1993 a report⁽¹³⁾ on action by the international community in response to the World Summit. The report reviewed progress in the preparation of NPAs and their contents, the status of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child,⁽¹⁴⁾ regional and global developments, and responses of the United Nations system, NGOs and the private sector. As at 15 July 1993, NPAs were finalized or under preparation in 143 countries. The Secretary-General noted that, despite the excellent progress made since the World Summit, achievement of the goals for children in the 1990s remained a challenge, requiring greater integration of NPA strategies and implementation of the 1989 Convention with all aspects of national development, mobilization of adequate resources, reinforcement of monitoring systems and promotion of the Summit's pledges through advocacy and social mobilization. In the meantime, implementation of those pledges focused on mid-decade targets identified by regional meetings of heads of State or Government and by UNICEF and the World Health Organization (WHO).

On 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to submit an updated report to it in 1994 (decision 48/446).

Intermediate goals for 1995

The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy, at its twenty-ninth session (Geneva, 1 and 2 February),⁽¹⁵⁾ recommended intermediate goals for children for 1995, derived from the mid-decade targets adopted in 1992 by the International Conference on Assistance to African Children, the Second Conference on Children, organized by the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, and the League of Arab States.

The goals were: 80 per cent immunization coverage of six antigens in all countries, virtual elimination of neonatal tetanus and vitamin A deficiency, the reduction of measles mortality by 95 per cent and measles cases by 90 per cent compared to pre-immunization levels, universal salt iodization in countries affected by iodine deficiency disorders, the elimination of poliomyelitis in selected countries and regions, 80 per cent use of oral rehydration therapy and continued feeding to control diarrhoeal diseases, "baby-friendly" status for all hospitals and an end to the distribution of free and low-cost supplies of breast-milk substitutes in all hospitals and maternity facilities, the interruption of guinea worm disease transmission in all affected villages, a 20 per cent reduction in severe and moderate malnutrition levels compared to 1990, universal ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, an increase of the primary school enrolment/retention rate and a reduction of the 1990 gender gap by one third, and an increase in water supply and sanitation rates so as to narrow the gap between 1990 levels and universal access by 25 and 10 per cent, respectively.

The Executive Board endorsed the goals recommended by the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy.⁽¹⁶⁾

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Executive Board⁽¹⁷⁾ called on all States to ratify or accede to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to implement it. The Board endorsed the year 1995 as a target date for every State to become a party to the Convention. It requested the Executive Director to assist States to become parties to the Convention, to implement it, and to report on child rights annually until the Convention was universally ratified.

In his report to the General Assembly,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Convention's implementation was explicit in many NPAs, most notably those of Canada, the Netherlands and the Nordic countries. NPAs were among the few instruments available for setting a time-frame for Governments to achieve their minimum obligations under the Convention.

The Committee on the Rights of the Child met three times during 1993. Its third⁽¹⁸⁾ and fourth⁽¹⁹⁾ sessions were held at Geneva (11-29 January and 20 September-8 October), and an informal meeting was held at Bangkok, Thailand (23-29 May). It considered reports submitted by Member States and reviewed, among other matters, cooperation with United Nations bodies and other organizations, procedures for urgent action, public information activities, technical advice or assistance, future studies, and reservations to the Convention. The Committee adopted a draft optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflicts, made a statement on the economic exploitation of children and submitted its conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly for consideration.

In December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive study of the situation of children affected by armed conflicts (resolution 48/157). It also called on the international community to support efforts to improve the situation of street children (resolution 48/136) and emphasized the need for measures to prevent the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (resolution 48/156). (For further details, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Children, environment and sustainable development

In March, the Executive Director submitted a report⁽²⁰⁾ on UNICEF's response to Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.⁽²¹⁾ As a follow-up to the Conference, the Fund advocated "primary environmental care"—a community-based approach to meet basic needs while ensuring the protection and optimal use of natural resources. The implementation of primary environmental care (PEC) focused especially on the needs of children, women and the very poor, who were most threatened by urban poverty and environmental degradation. The Fund also promoted environmental education for children and women, advocacy and social mobilization.

The Executive Board⁽²²⁾ called on the Executive Director, in cooperation with the Commission on Sustainable Development and other United Nations bodies, to incorporate the PEC perspective and suitable environmental indicators into UNICEF-assisted programmes; assist Governments to include PEC elements in their NPAs; provide seed funds for innovative PEC activities; encourage children and their parents to be focal points for increasing environmental awareness in communities; and support the inclusion of children's and women's concerns into relevant local, national and regional policies and strategies. UNICEF field offices were asked to intensify efforts to reach families living under environmentally stressed and vulnerable conditions, particularly the poorest, and to promote environmental education and cooperation with NGOs. The Board also called for an increase in financial assistance to child-related PEC activities and asked the Executive Director to transmit the goals and strategies for children in the 1990s to the Commission on Sustainable Development for its deliberations on the multi-year thematic programme of work (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

In 1993, the Maurice Pate Award, established in 1966⁽²³⁾ in memory of UNICEF's first Executive Director, was presented to the people and State of Ceará, Brazil, for significant contributions to the well-being of children.⁽²⁴⁾ The $25,000 award recognized the State's efforts to improve and expand health-care services for children and women.

Emergency operations

In 1993, major emergency operations were carried out in Afghanistan, Angola, Ethiopia, Iraq, Kenya, Liberia, Mozambique, Somalia, Sudan and former Yugoslavia.⁽²⁵⁾ UNICEF provided emergency assistance to 64 countries affected by armed conflicts, health emergencies and natural disasters. Emergencies included an earthquake in India; floods and landslides in Ecuador, Nepal and the Philippines; tropical storms in Cuba and Honduras; a continuing political crisis in Haiti; and insurgencies in Peru. Emergencies in Africa received the largest share (38 per cent) of total allocations from the UNICEF Emergency Programme Fund (EPF), followed by countries in Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (30 per cent), the Americas and the Caribbean (16 per cent), Asia (9 per cent) and the Middle East and North Africa (7 per cent). During the year, the Executive Director authorized releases from EPF totalling some $4.6 million, while advances from the United Nations Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF) amounted to $10 million.

UNICEF also provided support for emergencies in the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Eritrea, Ghana, Togo and Zaire and assisted Cambodia in strengthening its emergency response capacities. In Lebanon, the Fund moved from immediate relief assistance to a reconstruction and development programme. It concentrated its interventions in Algeria on emergency planning and preparedness and on enhancing emergency communications, security and training. Relief and survival equipment, as well as essential medical supplies, drugs, vaccines and clothing were provided to Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia and Tajikistan.

At its April/May session, the Executive Board⁽²⁶⁾ requested UNICEF to continue to respond to the needs of children in emergency situations, concentrate its efforts on non-food assistance, and report in 1994 on measures to improve its emergency response capacity and the use of EPF. The Fund was encouraged to support emergency programmes with built-in development dimensions for women and children giving due regard to empowerment and capacity-building. The Board urged that UNICEF country programmes link rehabilitation with sustainable development programmes, and give increased attention to disaster prevention and preparedness and vulnerability analysis. It suggested that the Fund increase evaluation of its emergency programmes and its participation in the United Nations system-wide evaluations of those activities. It stressed the need for additional protection for UNICEF staff in emergency situations. The Board confirmed that EPF funds should be used only for rapid responses to emergencies not covered by the Secretariat's Department of Humanitarian Affairs and CERF. It recommended $14 million for EPF for 1994-1995, subject to review after the deliberations on the coordination of United Nations humanitarian assistance by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. (For more details on emergency assistance, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

Programme expenditures in Africa increased to $299 million in 1993—37.2 per cent of UNICEF total programme expenditures. The Fund's strategy for child survival, protection and development in Africa⁽²⁷⁾ focused on the maintenance of a high level of resource allocations to the region, strong international advocacy for the needs of African children, programme support for Africa's NPAs, the achievement of Africa's mid-decade goals, advocacy of capacity-building for sustainable development, the promotion of debt relief for the benefit of children and increased social investment, and the development of the United Nations common country strategy in African countries.

During the year, UNICEF continued its support to 23 countries in West and Central Africa,⁽²⁸⁾ 18 of which were affected by emergencies or political instability, social tension or ethnic violence. The region's infant, under-five and maternal mortality rates were among the highest in the world, caused mainly by malaria, acute respiratory infections (ARI) and diarrhoea, as well as complications during pregnancy or birth. The death toll from measles and neonatal tetanus also remained significant, and the number of deaths from acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) was rising rapidly. The 1991 immunization coverage rate of 50 per cent for three antigens had slipped in several countries, and only seven countries had achieved universal child immunization. The oral rehydration therapy (ORT) use rate exceeded 60 per cent. In most countries, more than 90 per cent of infants were breast-fed at birth and some 70 per cent were breast-fed until 24 months of age. Many States had developed regulations to stop the free or low-cost distribution of breast-milk substitutes at hospitals and health facilities. Some 30 hospitals in the region were declared baby-friendly, and another 170 were in the process of becoming so. Research results in Ghana suggested that a 20 per cent reduction in the under-five mortality rate was attributable to vitamin A supplementation. Among the 12 countries affected by iodine deficiency disorders (IDD), Cameroon and Nigeria took steps to increase salt iodization. Moderate to severe malnutrition rates ranged from 20 to 40 per cent in most countries, aggravated by the inadequacy of child health services. A number of countries took steps to eradicate dracunculiasis (guinea worm disease) through strengthened primary health care, safe water supply and health education. Regional illiteracy rates ranged from 29 per cent in Cape Verde to 89 per cent in the Niger, and student drop-out rates before completion of the fifth grade stood at 70 per cent, however, enrolment rates increased in the Congo, Ghana, Nigeria and Senegal. The unit cost of education was reduced in Ghana and Nigeria, and policies to produce and distribute teaching materials were implemented in Burkina Faso and Ghana.

By the end of the year, almost all countries in eastern and southern Africa⁽²⁹⁾ had produced final or substantive draft NPAs for children, and Botswana, Namibia, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania had begun to decentralize their NPAs to municipal, regional and district levels. A number of Governments restructured national budgets to give higher priority to social and human development sectors. Ongoing conflicts in some countries, however, fueled disease and malnutrition, causing numerous child deaths. There were growing fears of drought in parts of East Africa, including Kenya and Ethiopia. In addition, the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) epidemic had a growing impact on the health and productive capacity of the region. It contributed to infant and maternal mortality and created problems for the breast-feeding of children born to HIV-infected mothers. It was reported that HIV transmission rates from infected mothers to their infants through breast-feeding were as high as 50 per cent. AIDS prevention and control measures were given greater prominence in UNICEF country programming and were linked to family planning issues. Studies were conducted on integrating family planning with the expanded programme on immunization (EPI) in Rwanda and on appropriate combinations of activities for different target groups in Lesotho. Some countries, however, lacked funding for immunization, and coverage rates fell as low as 13 per cent in Ethiopia. Innovative school-based programmes to promote healthy lifestyles and family health education were started in Botswana, Kenya, Uganda and Zimbabwe.

UNICEF undertook multicountry studies on household food security, drought management and nutritional intervention in emergencies and initiated studies on the impact of structural adjustment on access to basic education and on the scope for budgetary restructuring in favour of human development. It organized two inter-country workshops on the implementation of NPAs and provided training in information resource management, emergency management and the psychosocial needs of children. The Fund helped to provide consulting services in water supply and sanitation to Eritrea, Ethiopia, Madagascar and Uganda and continued to promote stronger community health-care systems through the Bamako Initiative (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). Major national, regional and global activities were organized for the Day of the African Child on 16 June.

At its April/May session, the Executive Board⁽³⁰⁾ reaffirmed UNICEF's commitment to Africa as the region of highest priority. It called on African Governments to accelerate implementation of the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit for Children and to incorporate their NPAs in national development plans and structural adjustment programmes. The Board urged United Nations agencies and NGOs to help African countries achieve the goals of the World Summit and NPAs, and that UNICEF's country programme strategy for sustainable development involve recipient country nationals in the development, management and implementation of UNICEF policies and programmes. It also called on donor countries and institutions to reduce Africa's debt burden and for the allocation of 20 per cent of official development assistance and national budget allocations to social sector priorities by 1995.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1993, UNICEF programme expenditures in the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $80 million, or 10 per cent of total programme expenditures.

An estimated 192 million people were living in absolute poverty in Latin America and the Caribbean,⁽³¹⁾ representing 46 per cent of the region's population. Some 176 million people were without safe drinking water supplies and 221 million lacked basic sanitation services. Children, more than any other group, suffered the impact of poverty. Seven million children under five years of age were malnourished, 13 million had low height for their age and about 20 million repeated grades in school. Some 1.3 million children were born annually with low weight, and protein-energy undernutrition was related to an estimated 68 per cent of deaths among children under five years of age. High-to-moderate infant and under-five mortality rates caused by the cumulative effects of malnutrition, poverty, poor quality education and poor access to health services, safe drinking water and sanitation, persisted in Bolivia, Brazil, Guatemala, Haiti, Nicaragua and Panama.

Health systems were modernized in Argentina, Chile, Colombia and the Dominican Republic, and all but six countries of the region conducted measles vaccination campaigns for children between nine months and 14 years of age. Vitamin A deficiency decreased in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Panama, while Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica, Jamaica and Uruguay virtually eliminated commerce in non-iodized salt and six more countries were expected to do so by 1994. Programmes to eliminate iodine deficiency disorders were successfully implemented in the Andean subregion. Good ORT coverage was achieved in Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Jamaica, Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela, and local production of oral rehydration salts was increasing. In Mexico, the ORT use rate stood at 84 per cent and was expected to reach 90 per cent by 1995. The fatality rate from diarrhoeal diseases fell below 1 per cent in Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador and Peru. The Central American countries and eight others in the region were expected to end the free distribution of breast-milk substitutes at all maternity hospitals and service centres in the near future, with others to follow by 1995.

UNICEF country programmes provided a sharper focus on primary education in the region, allocating more than $1.5 million from its global funds. Increased attention was given to repeat students and drop-out rates and to improving the design of textbooks and self-instructional materials. Bilingual education was being instituted in Bolivia and Ecuador, and initiation school centres operated successfully in Honduras. The Fund expanded its support for water supply and sanitation projects in 10 countries during 1993 to include new projects in Argentina, Chile, Colombia and Cuba. The Fund assisted the Latin American Conference of Catholic Bishops with a module and several radio scripts for family education in child development.

The Executive Board⁽³²⁾ recommended the allocation of an additional $7 million in supplementary funds for the Special Adjustment Facility for Latin America and the Caribbean for 1994-1995 and encouraged donor countries and organizations to support the development efforts of Latin American and Caribbean countries.

Asia

UNICEF programme expenditures in Asia totalled $236 million in 1993, or 29.4 per cent of total programme expenditures. In South Asia,⁽³³⁾ a general increase in poverty as a result of economic reforms was aggravated by heavy floods in Nepal and Pakistan, a major outbreak of a cholera-like disease in Bangladesh, drought and a massive earthquake in India, civil strife in Sri Lanka and instability in Afghanistan. The subregion's 420 million children received less basic support in nutrition and education than any other regional group. At the same time, public policies and organized efforts were better geared in 1993 towards meeting children's needs than at any previous time. Country reports indicated that the distribution of vitamin A was moving ahead, and the guinea worm disease was under control in India and Pakistan. The gap in universal access to safe drinking water was narrowing, but the lowering of the water table due to low rainfall and extraction for irrigation posed technological and environmental challenges. In the area of family planning, it was hoped to increase contraceptive prevalence levels by 50 per cent and raise the minimum age of marriage for females to 18 years.

UNICEF-supported strategies for social development in East Asia and the Pacific⁽³⁴⁾ focused on poverty reduction, popular participation and improved access to preventive health care, basic education, water supply and sanitation. Life expectancy, infant mortality and school enrolment improved in 1993 in almost all East Asian countries, where increasing prosperity lifted many people out of absolute poverty. Nine countries—China, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mongolia, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Thailand, Viet Nam—with more than 90 per cent of the subregion's child population, were expected to lead in the achievement of most of the mid-decade goals. In September, 17 countries pledged support for those goals in the Manila Consensus adopted at a ministerial consultation in the Philippines.

In 1993, inadequate immunization coverage levels ranged from 33 per cent in Cambodia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic to 69 per cent in Myanmar. Universal child immunization, achieved in China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, Thailand and Viet Nam, was sustained. The incidence of neonatal tetanus, measles and poliomyelitis declined in many countries, and China, Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand were close to eliminating vitamin A deficiency. Safe drinking water was accessible for more than 80 per cent of the population in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Thailand; and with the exception of the Philippines, all provided basic sanitation to more than 90 per cent of people. In primary education, the subregion had an average enrolment rate of 60 to 70 per cent, and completion rates were almost universal in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and Singapore. Other countries, however, continued to face drop-out and retention problems. Some 400 million people in the subregion were at risk of developing IDD, and many countries legalized salt iodization. ORT use rates were still below 40 per cent in some countries, and the complete cessation of free or low-cost supplies of breast-milk substitutes to hospitals and maternity facilities remained a challenge. AIDS remained a major problem for the Asian region as a whole, with an estimated 1 million people infected with HIV, and all countries included HIV/AIDS prevention and control measures in their medium-term plans. The main regional strategy focused on reducing high-risk behaviour through intensive information, education and communication and social mobilization.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1993, UNICEF programme expenditures in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $119 million, which represented 14.8 per cent of total programme expenditures.

Despite a climate of uncertainty in much of the region, advocacy for children continued to advance.⁽³⁵⁾ A regional fund-raising strategy was developed to mobilize resources for NPAs, and a regional system to monitor progress towards the mid-decade goals was to become operational in early 1994. The main emphasis of social mobilization and regional networking during the year was on promoting child rights and putting children issues first on national development agendas. Regional meetings were organized to consider the refocusing of medical teaching and training on preventive medicine and on maternal and child health, and to analyse the changing functions and structure of the Arab family. A three-year initiative in early childhood development continued in Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Tunisia and Turkey, and a study was conducted on the promotion of girls' education in the region. Under its regional Communication for Learning Initiative, UNICEF supported the production and dissemination of television programmes for and about children as well as training in improved production techniques, child rights and mid-decade goals for directors, producers and scriptwriters. The first meeting of a new regional network was held to develop a plan of action to meet the psycho-social needs of children affected by armed conflicts. The Fund continued to support major emergency operations in Iraq and the Sudan. It assisted flood victims in Yemen and participated in an inter-agency emergency programme in southern Lebanon, providing resources to restore health services, water supply and sanitation in public schools.

Most countries sustained universal child immunization achievements and made progress towards the elimination of neonatal tetanus and measles. Poliomyelitis-free zones were identified in the Persian Gulf and Maghreb subregions. Control of diarrhoeal diseases remained a central focus of national health activities, and control of IDD was advanced throughout the region with the adoption of a universal salt iodization strategy. Many countries initiated ARI control programmes, 10 of which were operational in 1993. National commitments were developed to end micronutrient deficiencies by 1995 and to reduce iron deficiency anaemia by the end of the decade. Most countries banned the distribution of free and low-cost infant formula and were integrating the importance of breast-feeding into the curricula of medical schools. Almost every country had hospitals that were "baby-friendly".

Central and Eastern Europe

UNICEF programme expenditures in Central and Eastern Europe and newly independent States totalled $32 million in 1993, or 4 per cent of total programme expenditure. Emergency assistance to children accounted for the majority, with $19.4 million going to emergency operations in the republics of the former Yugoslavia. Programmes of cooperation were established in Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Romania, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan.

The transition to market-oriented economies caused profound economic and social disruptions and had severe effects on women and children.⁽³⁶⁾ Access to and the availability of health care, education, child care and other social services declined as they were restructured along market lines. There was minimal investment in the transformation of health and welfare services, which were often of low quality and lacked well-trained personnel and appropriate equipment. Infectious diseases were on the rise and outbreaks of tuberculosis, diphtheria and cholera were reported in a number of countries. The changing social order brought about a decrease in school attendance and a rise in the number of street children, as well as the frequency and gravity of juvenile crime. In addition, the region saw a dramatic increase in emergencies caused by natural disasters, civil strife and ethnic, religious and political conflicts.

During 1993, UNICEF gradually established its presence in the region. Assessment missions were sent to plan activities and determine programme priorities in Armenia and Azerbaijan. National immunization plans were being developed in Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, and supplies of vaccines and syringes were delivered to Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan. Three regional meetings were held to accelerate the preparation of NPAs in nine countries. Strategies to meet mid-decade goals for children were outlined for Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Romania, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, and a two-year project was under way in selected countries to eliminate IDD by 1995. The Fund provided an emergency delivery of vaccines, cold-chain equipment, essential drugs and other medical supplies to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine and supported the establishment of four community rehabilitation centres in those countries for children and families affected by the Chernobyl disaster. A three-year country programme was launched in Albania, focusing on the provision and promotion of basic services for women and children in health, nutrition and education; support for the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the development of a national programme of action; and the establishment of a database of social indicators. A two-year programme in Romania emphasized family and community education for a better response to children's needs and included several projects for the training of social workers, the modernization of approaches to juvenile justice, and the integration of handicapped children into mainstream and preschool education.

UNICEF supported and participated in subregional meetings on health-care management and financing (Alma Ata, Kazakhstan), vaccine planning in Central Asia (Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan), an international training seminar on the international code of marketing of breast-milk substitutes and its implementation (Prague, Czech Republic), three international training workshops on lactation management and the Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative (St. Petersburg, Russian Federation) and a seminar on children with disabilities in the Baltic States (Vilnius, Lithuania).

UNICEF programmes by sector

Immunization

During 1993, immunization coverage was maintained at about 80 per cent globally. One third of the developing countries showed improved performance and another third a decrease in coverage. UNICEF supported the development of infrastructure and institutions to extend routine services to all children, and encouraged countries to reduce their immunization drop-out rates. Countries with high coverage levels held national immunization days as a means of eradicating polio, eliminating neonatal tetanus and controlling measles. Immunization days were especially successful in China, the Philippines and Viet Nam. The Fund continued its close collaboration with WHO and other partners to strengthen the capacity of several countries for timely and effective disease surveillance.

The provision of adequate vaccines to meet programme needs was a special priority during the year, following a significant increase in vaccine prices. An analysis of the global vaccine situation was prepared under the Children's Vaccine Initiative, which was launched in 1991 by WHO, UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation. Expert teams assessed vaccine quality control and production capacity in Bangladesh, China, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines and Viet Nam. The Vaccine Independence Initiative to help countries procure vaccines through UNICEF began in Morocco and the Philippines, and discussions were under way in 10 other countries. The strategic plan for vaccine research, finalized in 1993, gave priority to the development of multi-antigen vaccines.

Maternal and child health and family planning

UNICEF strengthened its efforts in the areas of maternal and child health, safe motherhood, child spacing and family planning, and continued to support the Safe Motherhood Initiative organized jointly with WHO, UNDP, the World Bank and the Population Council. UNICEF also co-sponsored the Sexual and Reproductive Health Technical Support Group, an interregional effort to provide technical support for strategic programming countries in each region. At the country level, it continued to advocate improved prenatal care and was the largest supplier of iron and folic acid for pregnant women. It provided material and training support to develop referral strategies and improved access to emergency obstetric care in India, prepared programming guidelines for safe motherhood and expanded its efforts to reduce maternal mortality by 50 per cent by the year 2000.

The Executive Board urged⁽³⁷⁾ the Executive Director to promote sexual and reproductive health as part of UNICEF support for maternal and child health and family planning, paying particular attention to the needs of young people and education in responsible sexual behaviour. It urged him to include support for family planning in collaboration with the Fund's partners and invited United Nations agencies to collaborate with UNICEF child-survival and development efforts as part of their family planning activities. The Executive Director was requested to monitor collaboration in that field and to prepare the relevant operational guidelines.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases

As 3 million children continued to die every year from diarrhoea and dehydration, UNICEF focused its efforts on increasing the use of ORT in combination with continued feeding of the child. In October, a 15-month global programme for increased use of ORT was launched in Mexico, where the mortality rate from diarrhoea had been successfully reduced by 50 per cent in 11 states over a period of 18 months. Other preventive activities promoted with ORT included breast-feeding and hand-washing. Several countries developed comprehensive plans to strengthen case management at district health facilities and involve the commercial sector in the production and promotion of oral rehydration salts. Immunization coverage surveys were modified to include questions on diarrhoeal diseases and facilitate their monitoring.

Acute respiratory infections

ARI, especially pneumonia, remained the single most important cause of child mortality in the world, causing the deaths of 3.6 million children under five years of age every year. Some 19 countries accounted for 80 per cent of under-five mortality cases from pneumonia. While more than two thirds of developing countries had operational plans to control ARI, only 12 per cent carried out national activities to control pneumonia. The strategy to reduce deaths from pneumonia focused on the expansion of services and public information on correct case management. Most countries initiated or strengthened operational strategies to promote the involvement of NGOs, increase training, and make drugs for pneumonia management more widely available. Drug cooperatives were expanded in Indonesia and Thailand, and ethnographic surveys conducted in several countries with a view to adapting programmes to local conditions.

Following efforts to decentralize health care and planning in many countries, guidelines were developed to implement ARI control programmes at the district level. A questionnaire on ARI treatment and referral services was designed for use in household surveys, and questions on maternal knowledge related to ARI and pneumonia were included in immunization coverage surveys. Treatment charts were finalized under the UNICEF/WHO "sick child initiative" for the integrated treatment of diarrhoea, measles, malnutrition, pneumonia and malaria.

Nutrition

A review of NPAs of 79 developing countries indicated that almost all had targets to reduce the incidence of malnutrition, low birth weight and micronutrient deficiencies in accordance with goals set by the World Summit for Children. Key components of national nutrition strategies included the promotion of improved feeding practices and primary health care, micronutrient supplementation or fortification, community participation and nutrition education and surveillance. In 1993, the International Conference on Nutrition identified household food security, access to basic health services and adequate care of children and women as necessary conditions for nutritional well-being.

By 1993, a number of countries had adopted basic elements of UNICEF's new, development-oriented nutrition strategy, and many others were reorienting their nutrition strategies in the same direction. However, 184 million children in the world were malnourished, including 101 million in South Asia alone. The Fund supported country case studies in Brazil, India, Indonesia, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe to identify critical success factors in improving nutrition, and provided assistance to implement the new strategy in Bangladesh, Bolivia, Ghana, India, Pakistan, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam. UNICEF also supported activities to improve women's access to resources in situations of food insecurity. It participated in credit and education programmes which made significant gains for women in West Africa. A World Alliance for Nutrition and Human Rights, created in 1992 by UNICEF and the Norwegian Institute of Human Rights, held a special workshop on nutrition, ethics and human rights (New York, January, 1993) and set up task forces to monitor children's nutrition rights and the use of food as a weapon of war or for political reasons.

Representatives from 23 countries with major IDD problems meeting in New York in September, reviewed UNICEF strategy for IDD elimination and endorsed the goal of universal salt iodization. During 1993, the UNICEF consultants made 37 country visits to identify IDD problems and provide technical support for salt iodization. Additional assistance was extended through the International Consultative Council on IDD and the Programme against Micronutrient Malnutrition. In October, Central American countries made a commitment to reintroduce salt iodization and formed a Central American Federation of Salt Producers. Commitments for universal salt iodization were also made by China, Bangladesh, India and the Philippines. Most salt was adequately iodized in South America and Eastern Europe, and rapid progress in salt iodization was reported in several African countries. UNICEF continued to develop its strategy for the elimination of vitamin A deficiency, focusing on children under 24 months of age and linking vitamin A supplementation with food fortification or dietary diversification. UNICEF supported meetings to review the implementation of national strategies in Brazil and Ghana, participated in a study on ways to improve the effectiveness of iron supplementation programmes and organized a consultation on the nutritional importance of zinc in developing countries (Brisbane, Australia). The consultation concluded that zinc deficiency compounded poor growth in children and hindered the absorption of vitamin A.

Breast-feeding

The Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative (BFHI) remained the major UNICEF strategy to attain, by the year 2000, exclusive breast-feeding of all infants from birth until four to six months of age. In 1993, only 25 per cent of the world's infants were breast-fed exclusively for the first four months but the number of countries implementing the Initiative increased from 90 to 171, and the number of target hospitals and maternity facilities in developing countries grew to 24,000. Of these, 924 were designated as "baby-friendly". Action was taken in 70 countries to end the free or low-cost supply of breast-milk substitutes. However, the practice continued despite government bans in 20 countries. Breast-milk substitutes and bottle-feeding were also widespread in industrialized countries, especially in North America and Japan, where government commitments to end their distribution to all hospitals and maternity facilities by 1994 were lacking.

National breast-feeding training and resource centres were identified and supported in each region. UNICEF participated in a project to review medical textbooks worldwide and replace outdated information on infant feeding, and it co-sponsored four meetings to mobilize the support of international NGOs and organizations of health professionals to develop a common approach to the implementation of BFHI. It helped to prepare a number of exhibits to promote breast-feeding and the Initiative and supported the BFHI News monthly newsletter.

The Executive Board⁽³⁸⁾ called on all manufacturers and distributors of milk substitutes to comply with all government prohibitions on the free and low-cost distribution of their products and urged Governments in industrialized countries to take appropriate action to end such distribution by June 1994. It requested the Executive Director to support Member States in implementing the Initiative.

Dracunculiasis (guinea worm disease) eradication

In 1993, dracunculiasis was endemic in 18 countries of Africa and Asia, with nine of them—Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Sudan and Uganda—accounting for more than 90 per cent of some 170,000 known cases in 21,000 affected villages. Other seriously affected countries included Chad, Ethiopia, Kenya, Mauritania, Senegal and Togo, while Cameroon, India and Pakistan had nearly eliminated the disease. Programmes established under UNICEF's interregional programme for dracunculiasis eradication had helped reduce the number of new cases by about 50 per cent a year through surveillance and control activities in almost all affected countries. The programme also covered a village-based reporting system in six countries, research in health education, safe water supply for small and remote villages, the mapping of endemic areas, monitoring of specific interventions, and support for decision-making.

Water supply and sanitation

During the year, the Fund helped more than 90 developing countries to achieve water supply and sanitation goals for the mid-decade and the year 2000. While most countries in Asia and Latin America were expected to attain the targets for water supply coverage, efforts were needed to boost environmental sanitation and hygiene education in Asia and especially in Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines and Viet Nam. In Africa, UNICEF assisted eight countries with better performance rates (Botswana, Burkina Faso, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, the Gambia, Swaziland and Zimbabwe) to achieve universal coverage, and mobilized additional financial resources for countries with underserved populations in excess of 10 million.

Changes in global and country programme strategies in 1993 shifted the emphasis from service delivery to the health and socio-economic benefits of water supply and sanitation programmes, and stronger links to environmental protection. A UNICEF-sponsored workshop of international experts concluded that increased attention should be given to sector plans and strategies for all programmes, capacity-building for hygiene education at district and community levels, service delivery, the empowerment of communities, and linkages with other strategic sectors such as health, education and the environment. UNICEF supported innovative approaches to community management of rural and urban water supply and sanitation services in Bangladesh, Benin, Guinea, Honduras, India, Uganda and Viet Nam.

Basic education

In 1993, some 130 million children globally had no access to schools and nearly 1 billion adults were illiterate. Substantial additional external resources were needed, especially for low-income countries in sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia, to achieve the goal of universal primary education. UNICEF concentrated its efforts on analysing the primary education situation in individual countries, formulating action plans for enrolment and retention, upgrading the planning capacities of education ministries, reviewing school curricula, producing textbooks and teaching aids, training school principals and teachers, and strengthening the participation of parents and communities in school management and monitoring. UNICEF co-sponsored an Education-For-All Summit of nine highly populated countries (Bangladesh, Brazil, China, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan) in New Delhi, India, from 12 to 16 December. The Summit adopted the Delhi Declaration and Framework for Action which pledged to find a place, teachers and learning materials for every child, to give higher priority in resource allocation to basic education, and to systematically monitor enrolment, attendance, completion and learning achievement. The Fund supported a review of primary education in Bhutan, initiated community-managed village schools in Egypt and promoted village education committees in India. Its assistance to multi-grade schools in Bhutan, Colombia and Viet Nam helped to improve enrolment and reduce the drop-out rate of ethnic minority children. Steps were taken in Nicaragua to reduce drop-out rates in the first two grades.

In Africa, UNICEF organized primary education policy seminars for West and Central Africa (Burkina Faso) and for eastern and southern Africa (Uganda), as well as a regional workshop on comprehensive education analysis for eastern and southern Africa (Nairobi, Kenya). It encouraged Governments to re-examine their budgetary allocations to basic education and find ways to reduce unit cost while improving access and quality. Education cost studies were being prepared in Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Myanmar, Uganda and Viet Nam. UNICEF provided financial support to a research and capacity-building initiative for female education in Africa, the Pan-African Conference on the Education of Girls and education projects for girls in Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, the Gambia, the Niger, Senegal and Zambia. As part of the Fund's support for non-formal education, technical and financial assistance for literacy programmes was extended to Bolivia, Botswana, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Mozambique, Senegal and South Africa.

UNICEF efforts in early childhood development centred on an integrated approach to the growth and development needs of young children, and included support for health care, nutrition, basic education and women's programmes. A policy review of early child development in 1993 served as a reference for five training workshops and several international forums. Child development initiatives were launched in Bolivia, Costa Rica, Mali, Niger, the Philippines and Thailand, while six countries in the Middle East and North Africa began work on parenting skills and learning through innovative media approaches. To help countries develop tools to assess learning achievement, UNICEF worked with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to implement monitoring projects in China, Jordan, Mali, Mauritius and Morocco and embarked on a project to compile and analyse monitoring indicators in five African countries. A regional seminar was held in February (Dhaka, Bangladesh) on the adaptation of a basic competence assessment methodology.

Urban services

During the year, the Fund responded to some 150 requests for information, distributed about 700 publications and produced several case-studies on experiences with urban services programmes.

The Executive Board⁽³⁹⁾ endorsed a two-pronged approach to problems of the urban poor, combining an urban focus in all sectoral programmes with a revitalized strategy to deliver urban social services and promote employment. This approach had four main thrusts: the achievement of national decade goals for children and a balanced approach to rural and urban poverty reduction; action on primary environmental care; attention to children in especially difficult circumstances; and application of the concept of "urban development with a human face". The Board urged UNICEF to continue to address the needs of poor urban children and to ensure more effective action on behalf of street children. It called on concerned partners to consider the views of children and adolescents in decision-making and in the evaluation of programmes designed to reach them, and requested the Executive Director to report on the subject biennially.

Children in especially difficult circumstances

UNICEF continued to work closely with the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the issue of child labour and studied the situation in several countries, including Algeria, Bolivia, Niger and Pakistan (for more details on child labour, see PART THREE, Chapter X). The Fund supported children affected by armed conflicts, including unaccompanied children in Eritrea where 50 per cent of returnees were children. In Chad, where 40 per cent of households were separated from children because of conflicts, UNICEF provided treatment and training and held an assessment workshop in November. Street children were another cause of concern in many countries. They were the subject of surveys in four Ethiopian towns, a seminar on street and working children in Florence, Italy, and meetings on street children in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The Fund also completed global reviews of education and health issues affecting working children and of education and adolescent health.

UNICEF finances

In 1993, UNICEF income totalled $866 million, $72 million less than in 1992. Some $539 million was from Government contributions, $160 million from non-governmental sources, $95 million from greeting card and related operations, $49 million from the United Nations system and $45 million from other sources, less $22 million for translation adjustment. Of the total, $509 million went to general resources, $187 million to supplementary funds and $170 million to emergency supplementary funds.

Expenditures totalled $997 million, $65 million more than in 1992. Of the total, $804 million was for programme expenditures, $180 million for administrative expenditures and $13 million for write-offs and other charges.

Budget appropriations

At its April/May session, the Executive Board approved⁽⁴⁰⁾ a total of $270,920,000 for general resources funding and $371,167,000 for supplementary funding for programme cooperation. For each region, the respective amounts were: Africa, $82,634,000 and $97,981,000; the Americas and the Caribbean, $13,246,000 and $103,225,000; Asia, $121,540,000 and $107,491,000; Central and Eastern Europe and newly independent States, $18,500,000 and $29,345,000; the Middle East and North Africa, $35,000,000 and $33,125,000; and $179,198 to cover overexpenditure.

The Board approved⁽⁴¹⁾ the general resources and supplementary funds programme budget estimates for 1992-1993 in the respective amounts of $142.6 million and $181.3 million, and for 1994-1995 in the amounts of $140.6 million and $164 million. It also approved the supplementary funds programme plan estimates for 1996-1997, totalling $160.7 million. The Executive Director was authorized to enter into additional commitments to finance existing or new activities within each fund in an amount not exceeding 10 per cent from each activity.

The Board further approved⁽⁴²⁾ the administrative and programme support budget and related income for 1992-1993 in the respective amounts of $386,954,307 and $35,000,000, and for 1994-1995 in the amounts of $431,363,380 and $26,000,000. Also approved⁽⁴³⁾ was the medium-term plan⁽⁴⁴⁾ as a framework of projections for 1993-1996, including the preparation of up to $330 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1994.

In other action, the Board approved⁽⁴⁵⁾ the level of the reserve for procurement services at $2 million and noted the financial reports for 1992 and the 1990-1991 biennium, as well as related reports of the United Nations Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and a review of expenditures and commitments for completed projects financed by supplementary funds.

It authorized⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Executive Director to close the two special accounts for the World Summit for Children and transfer the remaining balance of $122,534 to general resources.

Organizational questions

To improve its procedures and rationalize the use of time at its regular sessions, the Executive Board⁽⁴⁷⁾ adopted recommendations concerning its documentation, agenda, resolutions and consideration of country programme recommendations. The Board decided⁽⁴⁸⁾ that an independent review of the administrative and management structures at UNICEF headquarters should be carried out by the end of 1994.

Greeting Card Operation

During its 1992-1993 season,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the contribution of the Greeting Card Operation (GCO) to UNICEF general resources was estimated at $91 million, a decrease against the previous year due to unfavourable exchange rates. The total number of cards sold, however, was projected at 156.5 million, 6.4 million more than the year before. In February 1993, the first global greeting card workshop for UNICEF national committees was held at Geneva.

The Executive Board approved⁽⁵⁰⁾ the greeting card and related operations work plan for the fiscal year 1 May 1993 to 30 April 1994, including budgeted expenditures of $69.2 million, and noted that GCO net proceeds for that season were budgeted at $169.8 million. It also noted⁽⁵¹⁾ the GCO financial report and accounts for the year ended 30 April 1992 and the GCO provisional report for the period 1 May 1992-30 April 1993.

Headquarters office accommodation

The Executive Board requested⁽⁵²⁾ the Executive Director to obtain from the United Nations Development Corporation, New York City and from the City of New Rochelle by 30 June 1993 firm offers for guaranteed space availability for a minimum of 40,000 square feet starting 1 August 1995, and to analyse and submit them to ACABQ by 31 July. It also decided to consider the matter at a special two-day session later in the year.

At its special session, held in October, the Board approved⁽⁵³⁾ the offer made by the New York City Economic Development Corporation/United Nations Development Corporation and authorized the Executive Director to negotiate and execute a lease/purchase agreement in respect of UNICEF headquarters and to continue negotiations concerning additional space required by the Fund. It decided to review future levels of UNICEF headquarters staff by 15 October 1994 and requested the Executive Director to review the location of the greeting card and related operations in New York.

Inter-agency cooperation

At its twenty-ninth session,⁽¹⁵⁾ the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy reviewed WHO health policies and UNICEF decisions; district health systems; implementation of the "baby-friendly" hospital initiative; follow-up to the World Summit for Children, including progress made in the areas of health indicators and monitoring methods; maternal health and newborn care; vaccine needs; and control of diarrhoeal diseases and ARI. The Committee also considered reports on collaborative activities in the prevention and control of AIDS in women and children, healthy lifestyles for youth, malaria control and health education, including hygiene education with reference to community water supply and sanitation.

The Executive Board endorsed⁽¹⁶⁾ the Committee's recommendations for further cooperation in those areas.

Youth

Programme planning, implementation and follow-up in the field of youth, in accordance with the guidelines adopted during the International Youth Year (IYY) in 1985,⁽¹⁾ were considered in 1993 by the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session (Vienna, 8-17 February).⁽²⁾ Pursuant to a 1991 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽³⁾ the Commission established an open-ended ad hoc working group to prepare a draft calendar of activities marking the tenth anniversary of IYY and a draft world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond.

The working group had before it a report on the subject, submitted by the Secretary-General.⁽⁴⁾ The report suggested dividing anniversary activities into a preparatory phase, covering the period 1993-1994 and aimed at raising awareness and initiating substantive action in the field of youth, and an observance phase during 1995, geared towards developing capacities for youth policy programming and implementation. It also provided a tentative framework for the world youth programme in six priority areas—education, employment, hunger, health, environment, drug abuse—and proposed means for implementing the programme.

The working group⁽⁵⁾ pointed out that 1995 was an appropriate time to evaluate the objectives of IYY and to elaborate relevant youth policies, programmes and strategies for adoption by the General Assembly, and it suggested linking anniversary activities with other major international events. It amended the draft world youth programme of action to include juvenile delinquency and leisure-time activities among themes covered. It recommended that the focus on hunger should also include poverty, and that the programme should cover all other themes in the field of youth identified by the Assembly in 1990,⁽⁶⁾ such as communication, housing, culture and illiteracy.

The group also decided to include a United Nations statement of intent on youth, affirming Member States' commitment to work together to solve the problems facing youth and their belief that every State should provide its young people with opportunities to participate fully in society and its decision-making processes. States should provide gainful employment, protect young people from harmful drugs and the effects of addiction, integrate youth work into national development plans, ensure that youth policies were consistent with international human rights instruments, foster mutual respect and understanding among youth of different racial and religious backgrounds, promote education and youth exchanges, actively engage young people in environmental education and action, better focus population activities on youth, foster equal access for girls and young women to education and employment and ensure public access to data on the situation and needs of young people.

The amended calendar of IYY anniversary activities was annexed to the resolution recommended by the Commission for Social Development to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted resolution 1993/24 without vote.

Tenth anniversary of International Youth Year and draft world programme of action for youth towards the year 2000 and beyond

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering all relevant General Assembly resolutions, particularly resolutions 40/14 of 18 November 1985, 45/103 of 14 December 1990 and 47/85 of 16 December 1992,

Recognizing the need to improve the situation of youth through concerted action aimed at more effective programming of youth activities and the implementation and evaluation of those programmes at all levels within the framework of the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, in 1995,

Noting the interlinkages between the fiftieth anniversary of the Charter of the United Nations, the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen on 11 and 12 March 1995, and the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the draft calendar of activities to mark the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year and the draft world programme of action for youth to the year 2000 and beyond,

1. Endorses the calendar of activities to mark the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue refining the draft world programme of action for youth to the year 2000 and beyond in accordance with proposals to be submitted by Member States, specialized agencies and other bodies within the United Nations system, and concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including non-governmental youth organizations, particularly in the light of the deliberations and suggestions of the Commission for Social Development;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the United Nations statement of intent on youth: problems and potentials, which could become an integral part of the world programme of action for youth;

4. Urges Member States, national coordinating committees and non-governmental organizations to prepare national programmes of action for the period 1993-1995 in the context of the preparations for the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year, encompassing provisions for substantive, promotional and informational activities directed towards youth, the authorities and the community at all levels, and to inform the Secretary-General of the progress achieved;

5. Urges all specialized agencies and United Nations bodies concerned, including the regional commissions, to incorporate appropriate activities within their work programmes for the period 1993-1995 in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year;

6. Invites the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to develop and implement a specific international programme of informational activities to be carried out mainly at the national level to ensure that the potential value of the observance of the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year is fully understood;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to undertake the necessary measures to ensure that the United Nations Youth Fund remains an important operational mechanism of the subprogramme of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, entitled "Integration of youth in development";

8. Stresses the importance of considering the issues of integration and participation of youth in society as part of the preparatory process and final agenda for the World Summit for Social Development, to be held at Copenhagen in 1995;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to give all possible support, through the redeployment of existing resources, as well as through extrabudgetary resources, to the subprogramme of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, entitled "Integration of youth in development";

10. Calls upon the Commission for Social Development to give priority attention at its thirty-fourth session to the refinement of the draft world programme of action for youth towards the year 2000 and beyond, and to establish an ad hoc informal open-ended working group on youth for this purpose, with a view to formulating a final draft to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1995 and to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session.

ANNEX

Calendar of activities to mark the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace

I. Preparatory phase (1993-1994)

A. Activities at the national level

Preparations could be facilitated by the establishment of a coordinating or preparatory committee at the highest level of government, which would include youth representatives in its membership. Such a body would undertake some or all of the following tasks:

(a) To develop a detailed programme based on an appropriate analysis of the situation of youth;

(b) To review existing youth-related national legislation, policies, plans and programmes, including administrative structures and services for youth;

(c) To collate and disseminate existing data and research on youth-related issues;

(d) To promote action-oriented research and studies by academic institutions, research institutes and youth organizations;

(e) To launch public information campaigns, using the mass media and other information networks, to promote awareness of youth issues and reinforce a positive attitude towards young people;

(f) To raise awareness of particular youth issues by promoting "creative" events, such as drawing, photographic, art and essay competitions, the results of which could be published in 1995;

(g) To promote communication between government and youth groups, and between generations in different formal and informal settings, thereby encouraging the active involvement of young people in the preparation and commemoration of the tenth anniversary and in the shaping of youth policies.

B. Activities at the international and regional levels

Non-governmental organizations

1. International and regional non-governmental organizations will clearly have an important role and might thus wish to consider how best they could reorient some of their activities to mark the tenth anniversary. Some of the possibilities for action are:

(a) To carry out or support independent surveys on the situation of young people, support research and facilitate publication or dissemination of research findings, especially where other channels of distribution are difficult to access;

(b) To conduct independent surveys and assessments of existing youth policies, plans and programmes, identifying current and emerging youth issues;

(c) To facilitate the publishing and exchange of information on youth activities, using their publications and information networks;

(d) To promote cultural and educational exhibits and radio and television programmes, highlighting international cooperation on youth issues and concerns;

(e) To encourage their regional and national offices to assist Governments in activities related to the anniversary of International Youth Year.

United Nations agencies and bodies

2. United Nations agencies and bodies may be expected to provide appropriate support to the activities marking the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year, at the level and in a manner corresponding to their respective mandates. In planning their programmes for the period 1993-1994, they might wish to give special consideration to how these could be made to support the activities marking the anniversary. Various possibilities might be considered, as listed below:

(a) To link to the preparations for the tenth anniversary activities pertaining to other major international events, such as the International Year of the Family (1994), the International Conference on Population and Development (1994), the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace (1995), the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Charter of the United Nations (1995), the World Summit for Social Development (1995) and the World Conference on Human Rights (1993);

(b) To support Governments in the strengthening of their national youth policies, programmes and strategies;

(c) To organize meetings, seminars, conferences and workshops on specific topics of particular relevance to youth;

(d) To give special attention to youth issues in 1995 in their regular bulletins, journals and newsletters;

(e) To mobilize the substantive resources of their regional and national offices with a view to assisting non-governmental organizations in their preparatory activities.

II. Observance phase (1995)

A. Activities at the national level

It is not yet possible to decide the most appropriate manner in which the tenth anniversary of International

Youth Year might be marked in different countries, at different levels of Government and by the different non-governmental entities concerned. The type of activities that should be suggested for implementation in 1995 will depend on the extent to which plans drawn up for the preparatory phase in 1993 and 1994 are finalized and implemented. At this stage, Governments, in cooperation with national youth organizations, might be requested to plan ahead, so that the tenth anniversary could provide an opportunity to initiate substantive measures in favour of youth, taking advantage of the publicity generated by the anniversary and by events such as the following:

(a) Conferences, workshops and debates on youth-related issues, in which prominent persons in the community would take part, for instance, political leaders and scholars, and especially youth leaders;

(b) Statements and appearances by prominent political personalities including, where possible, heads of Government, highlighting the positive contributions young people make to society;

(c) Issuance of commemorative stamps, posters and other souvenir materials;

(d) Designation of a national youth day, week or month during which youth issues could be highlighted in a variety of national events, by means of a special focus on youth, for example, in book fairs and other cultural events or sports competitions;
