3345 (XXIX). Research on the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Population Plan of Action⁷⁷ adopted by the World Population Conference, held at Bucharest from 19 to 30 August 1974, as an essential component of a system of strategies which, taken together, constitute the international community's overall strategy for the promotion of economic development and the quality of life,

Recalling further resolution IX of the World Population Conference⁷⁸ which recognized:

(a) The fact that population dynamics is one of the important elements in the preservation of the environment and available natural resources,

(b) The fact that only highly aggregated and simplified global models have been put forward relating population to resource availability and environmental carrying capacity, and the consequent need for comprehensive studies at disaggregated national and regional levels,

(c) The importance of a world network of country studies, both in developed and in developing countries, which relate national demographic trends to trends in national resource use and environmental impact,

Recalling further that the World Population Plan of Action recognized areas which were considered to require research in order to fill the existing gaps in knowledge,

Conscious of the need to take adequately into account the problems and priorities of the developing countries, in order to create the necessary conditions for their development,

Bearing in mind that the World Population Conference, in its resolution IX, recommended the provision of facilities for central research services within the United Nations system and called for generous co-operation from Member States to provide relevant data,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to provide facilities for co-ordinated multidisciplinary research also at the regional level aimed at synthesizing, integrating and advancing existing knowledge on the relationships between population, resources, environment and development, in order to assist Member States, particularly the developing countries, and the organizations of the United Nations system in their efforts to cope with the complex and multidimensional problems related to this field in the context of social and economic development;

2. Decides that the studies to be carried out should take full account of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order⁷⁹ and also take into account the progress made in the transfer of technological innovations in the economic field;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the implementation of paragraph 1 above, to take into account existing plans and provisions within the United Nations for a programme of integrated studies on the future;

⁷⁷ Ibid.

⁷⁸ Ibid., chap II.

⁷⁹ Resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI).

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to utilize the services and findings of national institutions engaged in such work, particularly those from developing countries;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to provide for the efficient co-ordination of related existing activities of the United Nations system;

6. Requests relevant bodies in the United Nations system to assist, upon request, developing countries in undertaking integrated studies on the matter at the country level;

7. Decides that the results from the central research activities referred to in paragraph 1 above should be submitted, together with an explanatory report on the methodologies and assumptions used in the research done, on a continuing basis, to the Economic and Social Council with the comments, as appropriate, of the Population Commission, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant United Nations bodies.
