I. INTRODUCTION

A. Opening of the session

1. The Executive Committee of the programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) held its forty-sixth session at Geneva from 16 to 20 October 1995. The session was opened by the outgoing Chairman, Mr. Ahmad Kamal (Pakistan), who began by welcoming Bangladesh, India and the Russian Federation, the three new members of the Executive Committee.

2. Mr. Kamal noted that, while there were a number of positive developments, particularly regarding solutions to certain long-standing refugee problems, various crises, such as those in the Great Lakes region and former Yugoslavia, persisted. He emphasized the fundamental role of UNHCR in helping refugees achieve sustainable reintegration in their country of origin, particularly through the provision of protection and assistance in post-conflict situations.

3. Alluding to the current financial difficulties of the United Nations, the outgoing Chairman suggested that UNHCR pre-empt criticism by increasing efficiency, adhering to good management practices and exploiting computer-based information technologies to improve the information flow between headquarters, field operations and Governments. The results, in terms of speedier decision-making and decreased field-operation costs, could be far-reaching.

4. Refugee crises were bound to increase; the solution to them, the outgoing Chairman said, lay in resolving the factors, notably disputes, that lead to such crises. While UNHCR cannot take a direct role in resolving disputes, it could continue to prompt the international community to take action. Mr. Kamal concluded by noting that progress in addressing the root causes of refugee movements would ensure that the international community would not be faced repeatedly with the sight of mass movements across borders, an endless reproach to those who could have done more, but did not.

2. Election of officers.
3. Adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters.

4. General debate.
5. Programme, administrative and financial matters:
  - (a) Review of UNHCR programmes financed by voluntary funds in 1994-1995 and of proposed programmes and budget for 1996;
  - (b) Status of contributions and overall financial requirements for 1994 and 1995;
  - (c) Administration and management;
  - (d) Adoption of 1996 general programmes.
6. Participation of government observer delegations.
7. Consideration of the provisional agenda of the forty-seventh session of the Executive Committee.
8. Any other business.
9. Adoption of the draft report of the forty-sixth session.
10. Closing of the session.

E. Opening statement by the Chairman of the Executive Committee

13. The incoming Chairman, Mr. J. Esper Larsen (Denmark), paid tribute to the High Commissioner for her skill, perseverance and courage and commended the dedicated work of the staff of UNHCR and of non-governmental organizations, particularly those working in the field.

14. The Chairman drew attention to the ever-growing numbers of refugees, displaced persons and others of concern to UNHCR who, at the end of 1994, amounted to some 27.4 million persons. He stressed the responsibility of the international community at large and of the Executive Committee in particular, in the face of crises in the Great Lakes region and the former Yugoslavia and in the many other situations of conflict around the world.

15. In responding to protection needs, most countries had demonstrated their readiness to adopt pragmatic and flexible approaches to provide temporary protection to persons fleeing conflict. The Executive Committee would need, however, to give consideration to how far Member States would be prepared to go beyond the existing international and regional instruments in order to ensure international protection to all who need it.

16. The Chairman also highlighted the burden shouldered by refugee-hosting countries, particularly the most impoverished among them, and expressed the view that international solidarity with and support for those countries had been insufficient. In the search for durable solutions through voluntary repatriation, reintegration and reconstruction, he stressed the need for development agencies to dovetail their efforts with those of UNHCR in the reintegration process. In this context, he recalled the resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 1995 substantive session on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance

17. Mr. Larsen concluded by referring to the process of reforming the working methods of the Executive Committee, which would extend the possibilities for the Committee to exercise effective governance in response to the desire of Member States for greater transparency, accountability and oversight.

II. WORK OF THE FORTY-SIXTH SESSION

18. The High Commissioner delivered an opening statement to the Executive Committee, the text of which is reproduced in the annex. Following this, Mr. Salim Ahmed Salim, Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, addressed the Committee. The full account of the deliberations of the Committee, including the statements or other interventions made by delegations on all the agenda items, as well as the closing statements by the Chairman and the High Commissioner, are contained in the summary records of the session.

III. DECISIONS AND CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

A. Conclusions on international protection

1. General conclusion on international protection

19. The Executive Committee,

Distressed at the continued suffering of refugees for whom a solution has yet to be found,

(a) Reaffirms that respect for fundamental humanitarian principles, including safeguarding the right to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution, and full regard for the principle of non-refoulement, are incumbent on all members of the international community, and urges the continued commitment of States to receive and host refugees and ensure their protection in accordance with accepted legal principles;

(b) Notes that the search for solutions to refugee problems is an integral part of the High Commissioner's mandate for international protection, and that identifying and implementing solutions to the problems of refugees requires the constant support of the international community so that the will and capacity of individual States are reinforced in this common pursuit;

(c) Emphasizes the primacy of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees 1/ and its 1967 Protocol 2/ as forming the international legal basis for the protection of refugees, and underlines the value of regional instruments, as applicable, notably the 1969 OAU Convention Governing the Specific Aspect of Refugee Problems in Africa, as well as the 1984 Cartagena Declaration on Refugees and the 1994 San José Declaration on Refugees and Displaced Persons;

(d) Welcomes the accession of Namibia, the Solomon Islands, Samoa and Antigua and Barbuda to the 1951 Convention and/or the 1967 Protocol, bringing to 130 the number of States parties to one or both instruments, and urges States that are not yet party to accede to those instruments, and all States to implement them fully;

(e) Reaffirms the competence of the High Commissioner in supervising the application of international instruments for the protection of refugees; stresses the importance of their interpretation and application by States in a manner consistent with their spirit and purpose; reminds States party to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and/or the 1967 Protocol of the undertaking in article 35 of the Convention, reiterated in conclusion 57 of the fortieth session of the Executive Committee, in 1989, to provide the High Commissioner with detailed information on the implementation of the Convention, 3/ and urges those States parties that have not yet complied with that undertaking to do so;

(f) Recalls conclusion 74 (XLV), on international protection, adopted at its forty-fifth session, 4/ which encouraged the High Commissioner to engage in consultations and discussions concerning measures to ensure international protection to all who need it; reiterates its support for the role of UNHCR in exploring the development of guiding principles to this end, consistent with fundamental protection principles reflected in international instruments, and calls on UNHCR to organize informal consultations on this subject;

(g) Calls upon the High Commissioner to support and promote efforts by States towards the development and implementation of criteria and guidelines on responses to persecution specifically aimed at women, by sharing information on initiatives by States to develop such criteria and guidelines, and by monitoring to ensure their fair and consistent application. In accordance with the principle that women's rights are human rights, those guidelines should recognize as refugees women whose claim to refugee status is based upon well-founded fear of persecution for reasons enumerated in the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol, including persecution through sexual violence or other gender-related persecution;

(h) Condemns all forms of ethnic violence and intolerance, which are among the major causes of forced displacements as well as an impediment to durable solutions to refugee problems, and appeals to States to combat intolerance, racism and xenophobia and to foster empathy and understanding through public statements, appropriate legislation and social policies, especially with regard to the special situation of refugees and asylum-seekers;

(i) Recognizes that for States to fulfil their humanitarian responsibilities in receiving refugees, reintegrating returning refugees and addressing some of the causes of refugee movements, an effective human rights regime is essential, including institutions that sustain the rule of law, justice and accountability, and calls on UNHCR to strengthen its activities in support of national legal and judicial capacity-building, where necessary, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

(j) Calls on all States to promote conditions conducive to the return of refugees and to support their sustainable reintegration by providing countries of origin with necessary rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction, as appropriate, with UNHCR and relevant development agencies;

(k) Reiterates the right of all persons to return to their country, and emphasizes the prime responsibility of countries of origin for establishing conditions that allow voluntary repatriation of refugees in safety and with dignity, and, in recognition of the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls on all States to facilitate the return of their nationals who are not refugees;

(l) Emphasizes the need to address problems pertaining to the return of persons not in need of international protection, and encourages UNHCR to cooperate with other international organizations in looking into ways in which the return process can be facilitated, and to inform the Standing Committee;

(m) Calls upon the High Commissioner to continue to expand and strengthen the Office's activities with regard to the promotion and dissemination of refugee law and protection principles with the active support of States and through increased cooperation with non-governmental organizations, academic institutions and other relevant organizations; further calls upon the High Commissioner to explore ways to integrate its activities in the areas of documentation, research, publications and electronic dissemination;

(n) Recognizes the role refugee community education can play in national reconciliation, and encourages UNHCR, in cooperation with other organizations, to strengthen its efforts in assisting host country Governments to ensure the access of refugees to education, including the introduction into such programmes of elements of education for peace and human rights;

(o) Calls on all States to manifest their international solidarity and burden-sharing with countries of asylum, in particular those with limited resources, both politically and in other tangible ways that reinforce their capacity to maintain generous asylum policies, through cooperation in conjunction with UNHCR to support the maintenance of agreed standards in respect of the rights of refugees; reiterates the critical importance of development and rehabilitation assistance in addressing some of the causes of refugee situations, as well as their solutions, including voluntary repatriation when deemed appropriate, and also in the context of the development of prevention strategies;

(p) Reiterates the continued importance of resettlement as an instrument of protection and its use as a durable solution to refugee problems in specific circumstances; welcomes the initiative in commissioning an evaluation study and the UNHCR-sponsored consultation on resettlement; and encourages UNHCR to continue the process of dialogue with interested Governments and non-governmental organizations to strengthen its activities in this connection, and to provide regular reports to the Executive Committee;

(q) Reaffirms its conclusion 48 (XXXVIII), on military or armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements, adopted at its thirty-eighth session, 5/ and reiterates that, the grant of asylum or refuge being a peaceful and humanitarian act, refugee camps and settlements must maintain their exclusively civilian and humanitarian character, and all parties are obliged to abstain from any activity likely to undermine this; condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security of refugees and asylum-seekers, and also those that may endanger the safety and stability of States; calls on States of refuge to take all necessary measures to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements is maintained and calls on all other States to assist them; and further calls on States of refuge to take effective measures to prevent the infiltration of armed elements, to provide effective physical protection to refugees and asylum-seekers, and to afford UNHCR and other appropriate organizations prompt and unhindered access to them.

2. Conclusion on the prevention and reduction of statelessness and the protection of stateless persons

20. The Executive Committee,

Recognizing the right of everyone to a nationality and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's nationality,

Concerned that statelessness, including the inability to establish one's nationality, may result in displacement,

Stressing that the prevention and reduction of statelessness and the protection of stateless persons are important in the prevention of potential refugee situations,

(a) Acknowledges the responsibilities already entrusted to the High Commissioner for stateless refugees and with respect to the reduction of statelessness, and encourages UNHCR to continue its activities on behalf of stateless persons, as part of its statutory function of providing international protection and of seeking preventive action, as well as its responsibility, entrusted to it by the General Assembly, to undertake the functions foreseen under article 11 of the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness; 6/

(b) Calls upon States to adopt nationality legislation with a view to reducing statelessness, consistent with fundamental principles of international law, in particular by preventing arbitrary deprivation of nationality and by eliminating provisions that permit the renunciation of a nationality without the prior possession or acquisition of another nationality;

(c) Requests UNHCR actively to promote accession to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons 7/ and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, in view of the limited number of States parties to those instruments, as well as to provide to interested States technical and advisory services pertaining to the preparation and implementation of nationality legislation;

(d) Further requests UNHCR actively to promote the prevention and reduction of statelessness through the dissemination of information and the training of staff and government officials, and to enhance cooperation with other interested organizations;

(e) Invites UNHCR to provide it biennially, beginning at the forty-seventh session of the Executive Committee, with information on activities undertaken on behalf of stateless persons, particularly with regard to the implementation of international instruments and principles relating to statelessness, and including the magnitude of the problem of statelessness.

B. Decisions on programme, administrative and financial matters

1. General decision on programme, administrative and financial matters

21. The Executive Committee

(a) Confirms that the activities proposed under general and special programmes as set out in the overview of UNHCR activities, 1994-1996, 8/ have been found, on review, to be consistent with the Statute of the Office of the High Commissioner, annexed to General Assembly resolution 428 (V) of 14 December 1950; the High Commissioner's "good offices" functions, as recognized, promoted or requested by the General Assembly, the Security Council or the Secretary-General; and the relevant provisions of the financial rules for voluntary funds administered by the High Commissioner; 9/

(b) Requests the High Commissioner, within the resources available, to respond flexibly and efficiently to the needs currently indicated under 1996 general and special programmes, which are tentatively estimated at $1.1 billion, and to any other new needs that might arise, bearing in mind the Statute of the Office, the priority to be accorded to statutory activities and the relevant provisions of the financial rules for voluntary funds;

(c) Approves the revised 1995 general programmes budget amounting to $428,732,500, 10/ and notes that the present estimates for 1995 general and special programmes amount to some $1.3 billion;

(d) Also approves the country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets under the 1996 general programmes, amounting to $357,434,900, as well as $25 million for the emergency fund, $20 million for the voluntary repatriation fund and a programme reserve of $42,892,100, 10/ representing 12 per cent of programme activities and constituting a 1996 total general programmes budget of $445,327,000, and authorizes the High Commissioner, within this approved level, to effect adjustments in project, country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets, as may be required by changes affecting the refugee/returnee programmes for which they were planned;

(e) Requests UNHCR to allocate the financial and human resources required for the implementation of the recommendations of the Working Group on Refugee Women and Children adopted by the Executive Committee at its forty-fifth session; 11/

(f) Requests the High Commissioner to keep the Executive Committee regularly informed of developments under both general and special programmes, including the uses made, in accordance with their established criteria, of the emergency fund, the general allocation for voluntary repatriation (henceforth to be known as the voluntary repatriation fund) and the programme reserve, and on progress in implementing UNHCR policies under general and special programmes;

(g) Notes the report of the Board of Auditors to the General Assembly on the accounts of the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the year ended 31 December 1994, 12/ the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on UNHCR activities financed by voluntary funds: report for 1994-1995 and proposed programmes and budget for 1996 13/ and the report of the High Commissioner on the inspection and evaluation activities of UNHCR, 14/ and requests to be kept regularly informed of the measures taken to address the recommendations and the observations raised in these various oversight documents;

(h) Expresses serious concern about the observations of the Board of Auditors in its report, 12/ especially those on management issues and, in particular, those relating to continuing problems in regard to the lack of adequate managerial control by UNHCR of programmes implemented by its partners, and asks that the matters raised in the report be reviewed in a systematic fashion by the Standing Committee;

(i) Requests the High Commissioner to initiate a process of informal technical consultations on the question of overhead costs for non-governmental implementing partners, particularly headquarters costs, with a view to having an initial progress review at the time of the first session of the Standing Committee in 1996, and authorizes the Standing Committee, if it sees fit, to decide on this issue in the course of its deliberations during 1996;

(j) Urges Member States and concerned Governments and bodies, in the light of the extensive needs to be addressed by the Office of the High Commissioner, to respond generously and in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing, and in a timely manner, to her appeals for resources;

(k) Notes the intention of the High Commissioner, in her efforts to improve conditions of service in the most difficult duty stations (categories D and E), to extend the provisions of the Fund for International Staff Housing and Basic Amenities as of 1996 to any duty station within those categories, including capital cities, and approves the use of special programme funds to replenish the Fund for International Staff Housing and Basic Amenities, to the extent that international staff benefiting from the provisions of the Fund are a charge to a particular special programme;

(l) Approves the transfer of an additional amount of $150,000 from the 1995 programme reserve and an amount up to $1,200,000 from the 1996 programme reserve to the Fund for International Staff Housing and Basic Amenities;

(m) Approves the creation of the post of Assistant High Commissioner (Policy, Planning and Operations) at the Assistant Secretary-General level, to be funded from voluntary funds, and related staffing (Executive Assistant at the P-4 level and a Secretary at the G-5 level);

(n) Approves the proposal 15/ under which the Office of the High Commissioner would be allowed, exceptionally, to charge to general programmes the expenditure still to be incurred in relation to remaining tertiary level students, and which cannot be met through the education account.

2. Decision on budget structure and governance

22. The Executive Committee,

Having reviewed the report of the informal consultations on budgetary questions, 16/ adopted by the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters at its inter-sessional meeting on 20 June 1995, decides that:

(a) Any UNHCR budget structure should have as its objectives the following:

- (i) Transparency, accountability and managerial control;
- (ii) The necessary flexibility to address emergency situations and unexpected changes to programmes;
- (iii) Assured funding of statutory activities;

(b) Further streamlining of the budget structure of UNHCR should be undertaken bearing in mind the objectives set out in conclusion 1, so that in a single, coherent budget structure there is a clear indication of overall needs, as well as of needs at the country level, and for other programmes and headquarters;

(c) The criteria for the inclusion of activities under General Programmes is that they qualify as statutory; in addition, they should be activities related to situations that have stabilized;

(d) The group of stabilized, statutory activities that constitute the general programmes shall be a funding priority. A commitment to their full funding would be facilitated by a process of dialogue in which the High Commissioner explains the rationale used for the inclusion of the various activities within the annual programme component of the general programmes;

(e) If, for a given year, all stabilized, statutory activities were not able, in the High Commissioner's judgement, to be included under general programmes, the first priority for inclusion should be refugee situations that have stabilized; in giving effect to this decision, the High Commissioner shall, inter alia, bear in mind the relative chances of funding for different activities, depending on the programme category in which they would be placed. The High Commissioner would report to the Executive Committee the considerations that determined a particular course of action;

(f) The Executive Committee should keep under review the criteria governing the emergency fund, the programme reserve and the voluntary repatriation fund to ensure that those contribute to the flexibility of the Office's operations; their levels should also be regularly reviewed;

(g) In recognition of the statutory nature of activities on behalf of refugees and, therefore, their potential for inclusion under general programmes, the programme reserve may be used for refugee situations being funded, for various reasons, under special programmes. Such a use of the programme reserve, would, nevertheless, be limited; it may be used to complement special programme funding for refugee situations, provided that the total of all such allocations does not exceed one third of the programme reserve in a given year;

(h) In recognition of the importance of voluntary repatriation, and to support repatriation activities that could not be included, for various reasons, under general programmes, the use of the voluntary repatriation fund should be enhanced by its extension to voluntary repatriation operations for refugees included under special programmes; it is proposed that, in a given year, an allocation of up to $10 million could be made for any such voluntary repatriation operation;

(i) The proposed expanded use of the programme reserve and the voluntary repatriation fund could require that their levels be raised. It is proposed that, as of 1997:

(i) The programme reserve be constituted between 10 and 15 per cent of programmed activities under the annual programme for a given year;

(ii) The level of the voluntary repatriation fund for a given year be set between $20 million and 10 per cent of the budgetary estimates for voluntary repatriation for the previous year;

(iii) Within the limits set out above, the High Commissioner would propose the actual levels of the programme reserve and the voluntary repatriation fund for approval by the Executive Committee, bearing in mind that the overall level of the proposed general programmes target should be such as to justify a reasonable expectation of its full funding;

(j) With a view to maximizing the use of the programme reserve and the voluntary repatriation fund in any given year, any allocations made from them could be cancelled if sufficient contributions were later received for the relevant activities;

(k) It is proposed to extend the use of the working capital and guarantee fund to guarantee budgetary increases in the headquarters component of general programmes, not exceeding 2 per cent of the approved general programmes total target, that may result from increased headquarters costs directly due to exchange-rate fluctuations. The Executive Committee would thus allow the general programmes approved budgetary target to rise by up to 2 per cent, if this was necessary to accommodate such increased costs. The adjustment of the general programmes budget target in accord with the above provisions, and related accounting adjustments, would take place at the end of a calendar year. If such a use had to be made of the working capital and guarantee fund, it would be replenished in the subsequent year in accordance with the provisions of the Financial Rules;

(l) In addition to the broad review of general and special programmes at the time of the Executive Committee, inter-sessional meetings shall consider updates on programme needs and funding; at inter-sessional meetings, there shall also be a review of all country programmes (general and special) in a particular region or regions (e.g., Asia/South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East; Europe/Americas; Africa), and of any special programmes covering a number of countries in the region(s);

(m) The regular, systematic review of UNHCR programmes at the country level by the Executive Committee at inter-sessional meetings shall be based on agreed documentation (see below), and will include presentations by the senior staff of the Bureau concerned;

(n) The uses made of the emergency fund, the programme reserve and the voluntary repatriation fund shall be reviewed by the Executive Committee at its annual and inter-sessional meetings at the time of each of the programme reviews mentioned in subparagraph (m) above, to ensure that their use is in accord with the governing criteria;

(o) The wording of the decision related to general and special programmes needs and resources adopted at the annual (or any other) session of the Executive Committee shall better reflect the enhanced governance exercised by the Executive Committee over those programmes;

(p) Within the broad framework of oversight of the work of UNHCR, the Executive Committee, in the course of its annual session and at inter-sessional meetings, shall consider, according to an agreed timetable, the various reports on audits, programmes and evaluations and on the work of the UNHCR inspection and evaluation service, as well as the response of UNHCR to those reports;

(q) Programme documentation should be so presented that the focus is principally on countries/areas with a clear picture of programmes at the country level;

(r) Programme documentation (covering both general and special programmes) for given countries/areas should be concise (not exceeding six pages) and should be primarily focused on and offering justification for programmes in a planning year; the current and prior years' activities shall be addressed only to explain any significant variations from estimates and planned activities. Special programmes covering more than one country will also be presented separately, with corresponding consolidated tables showing estimates and expenditure;

(s) The presentation of the annual accounts should be improved; in particular, the number of special programmes accounted for individually in the annex to financial statement 2, which sets out income and expenditure for special programmes, shall be expanded to include the most important of those that are currently reported under "Other trust funds"; to the extent possible, "Other trust funds" should be identified by region;

(t) Among the steps to be taken to further enhance the budgetary structure of UNHCR and related matters, study and informal consultations will be undertaken in relation to the following:

(i) The further adaptation and improvement of the budget structure, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above;

- (ii) The categories/sectors for reporting on UNHCR activities, including the possibility of quantifying aspects of UNHCR protection activities;
- (iii) The presentation of budgets and reporting on programme activities, bearing in mind the need for conciseness and clarity, and the observations of ACABQ in this regard;
- (iv) Review of current computer systems and databases of UNHCR and action to ensure that they are adapted to UNHCR budgeting and reporting needs;
- (v) Ways to ensure better linkages between the presentation of UNHCR budgets in the United Nations biennium budget in support of the medium-term plan and the current UNHCR annual budgets presented to the Executive Committee;
- (vi) Ways to ensure a better funding base for UNHCR activities;
- (vii) Review of UNHCR Financial Rules, including the provisions governing general and special programmes.

C. Decision on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance

23. The Executive Committee

(a) Welcomes resolution 1995/56, adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1995, on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance;

(b) Decides that the first inter-sessional meeting of the Standing Committee in 1996 should give specific consideration to the resolution and its significance for the work of UNHCR;

(c) Requests the High Commissioner to submit to that Standing Committee meeting a proposal as to how the various aspects of the resolution relevant to the work of UNHCR might most effectively be reviewed in the course of the inter-sessional meetings in 1996;

(d) Calls on UNHCR to pursue in the inter-agency Standing Committee the issues raised in the resolution;

ANNEX

Opening statement by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's
Programme at its forty-sixth session

(Monday, 16 October 1995)

I am pleased to welcome you to the forty-sixth session of the Executive Committee. May I extend a special welcome to the delegations of Bangladesh, India and the Russian Federation. Their presence here, at their first regular session of the Executive Committee, symbolizes the global nature of refugee concerns and the universal support for the mandate of my Office.

I should like to thank the outgoing Chairman, Mr. Ahmad Kamal of Pakistan, who, despite the competing claims on his time in New York, has made a special effort to come to Geneva to open the meeting. Let me congratulate you, Mr. Chairman, and the new Bureau on your election. As the representative of a country which has been a strong and constant supporter of UNHCR, and as a treasured friend of the Office, we look forward to continue working closely with you.

I would also like to welcome our special guest, Mr. Salim A. Salim, Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). His presence here today is testimony to the close cooperation that OAU and UNHCR have enjoyed for more than a quarter of a century. It is also indicative of the importance of Africa to the work of my Office. Africa hosts more refugees and internally displaced persons than any other continent. Africa is also the scene of voluntary repatriation today. Of the close to 2 million refugees who returned home in 1994, 1.5 million were in Africa. Out of 18 planned repatriations in 1996, 9 are foreseen in Africa. I count on the conflict-resolution mechanism of OAU and its leadership to help create and maintain the momentum on the voluntary repatriation of refugees.

UNHCR has been confronted with massive emergencies every year since I became High Commissioner in 1991. In recent weeks, almost half a million people were displaced by war and violence in the former Yugoslavia. The urgency of saving lives in the course of the past year has been matched by the pressures to find solutions and the dilemmas of ensuring protection, whether in refugee camps or returnee communities, in situations of open conflict or fragile peace. In a world in which war deliberately targets civilians and peace fails to bring security, the dual mandate of UNHCR of international protection and solutions has been severely tested this past year in almost every region.

In the aftermath of the emergency in the Great Lakes region, we sought to respond to the strong pressure for early return, while continuing to take care of 2 million refugees and remaining vigilant to new risks of displacement. In Angola, thanks to the implementation of the political settlement, we have launched our operation to assist some 311,000 refugees to return home by mid-1997. In the Sudan, we have embarked on voluntary repatriation to Eritrea and Ethiopia. In West Africa, we have tried to nurture solutions. In contrast, in South-East Asia, Central America, Tajikistan and Mozambique, where solutions have taken root successfully, we have grappled with ways to phase down or move out. In the Middle East, we have been encouraged by the evolution of peace and remain ready to play our role in line with our mandate and in cooperation with other organizations. Elsewhere, the picture has been mixed. In Afghanistan, renewed violence has set back the flow of repatriation. In former Yugoslavia, peace talks have offered the first glimmer of hope in months, although I fear that, in the short term, there could be more displacement as people are forced to move to accommodate territorial adjustments.

The thrust of these various developments has been to put the issue of solutions, and more precisely repatriation, even higher on the UNHCR agenda. One important statistic shows the extent to which we have shifted from a bias on exile to a focus on the country of origin. Of the 27.4 million persons of concern to UNHCR today, only about 14.5 million are refugees. The rest include 4 million returnees, 5.4 million internally displaced persons and 3.5 million civilians affected by conflict. Almost half of the persons of concern to UNHCR are thus to be found within their own country.

These statistics also reveal that while the number of refugees has declined, the numbers and categories of those in need of international protection and assistance are in fact expanding. They illustrate that the pursuit of solutions without regard to protection will not take us far and that international protection is a more complex task than merely assuring asylum. The two arms of my mandate are fundamentally linked. The objective of protection must be, not to perpetuate exile, but to encourage solutions. But if solutions are not approached from the perspective of protection - in other words, if they fail to protect the basic human rights of the individuals - then they will be neither effective nor permanent. Extending from flight, through exile, to return and reintegration, protection principles provide the overarching framework for the prevention and solution of refugee problems.

In my statement today I should like to focus on our efforts to develop a new paradigm of protection oriented towards solutions. How do we seize the political impulse for solutions while retaining the humanitarian imperative for protection? What are the prospects and the possibilities that inspire us, the dilemmas and difficulties that confront us? Externally, what are the partnerships we must cultivate? Internally, what are the management priorities and structures we must establish?

Dilemmas of protection

One of the most difficult problems confronting my Office in recent years has been the decline of asylum, even on a temporary basis. Many countries are openly admitting their weariness with large numbers of refugees and blatantly closing borders. Others are more insidiously introducing laws and procedures that effectively deny admission to their territory. This year was particularly significant in that developments in the Great Lakes region demonstrated that even the proverbial African generosity towards refugees has become strained.

The threat to asylum has taken on a global character, affecting both the developing and the industrialized world. In major incidents in Africa and Europe in recent months, borders have been closed to refugees fleeing danger. Thousands of refugees and displaced persons have found themselves caught in the midst of conflict and violence. Some have been killed, others have been brutally attacked and terrorized or forced to return to danger.

International protection reflects the convergence of humanitarian and political interests. In many circumstances, asylum is not only the most powerful tool of protection but also the most pragmatic, especially when provided on a temporary basis. This is why UNHCR requested Governments to provide temporary protection to those fleeing the conflict in former Yugoslavia and has urged them to continue it for the time being. The possibility of temporary asylum encourages a phased and orderly approach to repatriation and thereby assures greater stability for peace and progress in the country of origin. I call upon the members of the Executive Committee to support our endeavours to ensure respect for the institution of asylum, at least on a temporary basis, for those fleeing persecution, conflict and civil strife.

I am fully conscious that the decline of asylum cannot be arrested simply by appealing to the generosity of States. It must be addressed, on the one hand, by action to enable countries to receive refugees and, on the other, by initiatives to find solutions to refugee problems and where possible to prevent the outbreak of new crises.

Peoples and Governments around the world have shown and continue to show remarkable hospitality to millions of refugees, despite their own political, social, economic and environmental constraints. The costs of hosting large numbers of refugees are not always measurable in dollar terms. UNHCR refugee assistance does not redress the collateral impact of refugees on the host countries. If Governments are to continue to grant asylum, greater attention must be given by the international community to addressing the concerns of affected host communities and strengthening their capacity and willingness to cope with population movements.

One area that has attracted attention in the aftermath of the Rio Conference has been environmental damage caused by large concentrations of refugee population. In the light of those concerns, UNHCR is proposing a reformulation of its environmental policy. The objective is to make the environmental dimension an integral aspect of our operations.

Nor can we ignore the security implications of large-scale refugee flows. Indeed, the security dimension of today's refugee problems underscores both the decline of asylum and the drive towards solutions. In an effort to assist Governments to meet their international obligation to refugees, UNHCR strengthened the capacity to maintain law and order in the refugee camps in the United Republic of Tanzania and eastern Zaire. During my visit to Kivu in early September, I saw for myself the improved situation, thanks to the Zairian security personnel deployed with UNHCR assistance and the international security advisers seconded to UNHCR by Governments. Insecurity in refugee camps is not only a matter of law and order but also one of maintaining the civilian character of the camps, which is a fundamental principle of international protection. Although the primary obligation lies with the authorities granting asylum, UNHCR will do whatever it can within its mandate and in line with its expertise to help ensure respect for the principle, including seeking the relocation of camps, if necessary.

The challenges of solutions

Increased assistance to host countries alone, however, will not meet the demands of maintaining asylum. Whether in South-East Asia or in Central Africa, the Caribbean or the Balkans, the universal reality is that protection abroad cannot be assured without a parallel effort to find solutions at home. As refugees grow more impatient to return home, as Governments become more reluctant to grant asylum, and donors find other calls on their purse, how long can we wait for solutions to materialize? What are the parameters of the UNHCR mandate to promote solutions? What are the challenges we face in pursuing them?

In some parts of the world, political events may be turning the tide away from human suffering to homecoming. In others, it may take longer. However, in none of these instances is return likely to be under ideal conditions. In many it will be dogged by political insecurity and economic uncertainty. Anti-personnel mines are a major obstacle to returns. I am therefore disappointed the Vienna conference failed to make progress on this issue.

For UNHCR, the challenge of solutions lies in seizing the opportunities, while remaining alert to the dangers. It lies in ensuring that protection principles, not political expediency, guide the pursuit of humanitarian solutions. Working closely with political and peace-keeping operations, for instance in Rwanda, Liberia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), we have sought to inject humanitarian concerns into the political discourse and to reinforce our capacity to carry out our protection and assistance activities. The partnership has been fruitful, but obviously the humanitarian and strategic objectives have not always coincided. The relationship, particularly with the military, has at times created pressures on our humanitarian mandate.

In some cases, as in Angola and Tajikistan, we have reaped the benefits of our cooperation. In a few, such as the Caucasus, humanitarian solutions have become hostage to the lack of progress on parallel political negotiations, although I believe we are playing a meaningful role in that subregion by assisting displaced populations. In other regions, for other reasons, the situation of Bhutanese refugees in Nepal continues to suffer from a stalemate, while repatriation to Afghanistan has stalled, prolonging the refugee burden of the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan. We need to look at fresh strategies to break the impasse.

Ultimately, the challenge of solutions is not only to ensure that the humanitarian issues are on the political agenda but that those who return feel secure in their own homes.

New dimensions of protection

Protection needs do not disappear when people repatriate. On the contrary, they tend to resurface in more complex forms in the country of origin, as the problem of the internally displaced has shown, whether in Rwanda or the Russian Federation. This has given a new dimension to our protection responsibilities and has led us to interpret our mandate for solutions in a protection-oriented but proactive manner. Just as we no longer wait for refugees to cross the border but are increasingly involved with the internally displaced in order to avert outflow, we can no longer passively wait for conditions to change so that refugees can volunteer to return. Instead, we must work actively to create the conditions conducive to their safe return. It is important, therefore, that the protection debate moves on from interpreting voluntary repatriation solely in terms of the expression of individual will to the creation of conditions of safety - in the refugee camps, in the reception centres and in the home areas.

Rwanda shows the dilemmas of this approach, but also the way in which we have sought to overcome them. It is clear that in the longer term, the answer in the Great Lakes region lies in a comprehensive political solution. In the short term, however, I do believe that progress on humanitarian issues through voluntary and safe return can contribute to the political process, while easing the humanitarian crisis. It is this conviction that guided us in organizing the Bujumbura conference jointly with OAU last February. The Bujumbura Plan of Action provides a comprehensive framework for solutions involving countries of asylum and origin as well as other interested Governments.

Although I was disappointed at the failure to implement the Plan earlier, I believe that my recent mission, followed by the convening of the Tripartite Commission in Geneva at the end of September, has helped to create a momentum in favour of voluntary repatriation. Zaire has made clear its intention to deal with those who block repatriation. Rwanda for its part has unequivocally recognized the right of refugees to return and expressed its commitment to improve the reception and security of returnees, including full access for international monitoring. It would clearly reassure the camp population if the Rwandan Government were to define the different levels of responsibility in last year's genocide and examine specific measures in response to lower levels of responsibility. I was encouraged by the Government's declared intention to proceed along those lines.

In the former Yugoslavia, assisting the victims has never been an end in itself for us. Our goal was and remains to help them return safely to their homes or to find new homes for those for whom return is not feasible. Last Tuesday at the meeting of the working group on humanitarian issues of the international conference on Yugoslavia, I reiterated the willingness of UNHCR to promote the organized return of refugees and displaced persons, in keeping with its role as the United Nations humanitarian lead agency and in cooperation with our sister organizations. At the same time, I stressed the importance of including humanitarian issues in the peace negotiations. People must not be used as pawns to further military and political interests. All returns must respect internationally accepted principles. The continued gross violations of human rights, the ethnic cleansing and the forcible return of refugees and displaced persons underline the importance of a firm commitment by all parties to human rights and humanitarian principles, and of international monitoring to ensure their compliance. In many situations people want to return home but are afraid to do so. Our negotiations to obtain the guarantees on safety, our presence in the camps to inform the refugees and in the areas of origin to reassure them are not only the prerequisites for successful repatriation but the predominant elements of our mandate for protection and solutions.

International presence in the country of origin is an important confidence-building measure, both for returnees and for the internally displaced. It has been instrumental in persuading the refugees to return from Bangladesh to Myanmar. I am pleased to report that more than 200,000 refugees have returned home so far. I hope the remaining 50,000 will repatriate over the course of the coming months, allowing us to phase down in Bangladesh while maintaining our presence in the areas of origin in Myanmar until reintegration is completed.

Another example is Tajikistan, where UNHCR mobile monitoring teams helped to stabilize the areas of origin and encouraged the vast majority of the refugees and displaced persons to return home safely. We closed the operation recently, successfully handing over the human rights aspects to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the rehabilitation issues to UNDP and other development actors.

I welcome the important operational role of United Nations human rights monitors as part of the collaborative effort to create safe conditions in countries such as Rwanda, El Salvador and Guatemala. However, the recent killing of returnees in Guatemala has underscored the difficulties of ensuring safety in the country of origin. I have noted the prompt action by the Government to prevent recurrences. Obviously, the success of a proactive solution-oriented approach is directly proportionate to the political commitment of the Governments concerned.

Reintegration and resources

Viable solutions demand that efforts to safeguard human rights be paralleled by endeavours to rehabilitate socio-economic conditions. UNHCR has relied on the model of small, community-based quick impact projects to spark rehabilitation, in situations as varied as Mozambique and Myanmar, Sri Lanka and Central America. Just as we have collaborated with political actors to ensure that humanitarian concerns are injected in the peace process, we have cooperated with development organizations like UNDP and financial institutions like the World Bank to incorporate our reintegration efforts into the larger rehabilitation and development plans. However, as we try to phase down in Mozambique, the challenge is to ensure that others have a stake in the reintegration process and will continue when we leave. To further this goal, we are embarking on a consultative process with the World Bank to identify concrete strategies for specific countries.

At a time when development assistance is shrinking and humanitarian needs are expanding, a third window for financing emergency rehabilitation activities is needed. It would allow donors to channel resources from both humanitarian and development funds and would allow organizations, whether humanitarian or development, to utilize them. In this way, both immediate rehabilitation and longer-term reconstruction needs could be addressed in the recovery process.

The issue of resources is critical when it comes to post-conflict rebuilding. It is tragic, therefore, that our programme in Mozambique is among those most strapped for cash. Nothing is more critical, however, than the funding shortfall of $50 million for the Burundi and Rwanda emergency operation, which leaves us with very little flexibility to adapt to either increased repatriation or potential exodus.

However, I am pleased to report that the overall level of financial contributions to UNHCR for 1995 has been impressive, totalling $757 million, of which $296 million is for general programmes. This is roughly equivalent to the pledges made at this point last year. As the total budget of UNHCR reaches $1.3 billion for the second consecutive year, I am the first to appreciate the enormosity of the demands we continue to make on our donors, large and small. I am very grateful for your generosity and understanding.

Imperative of prevention

The gap between expanding needs and limited resources reinforces the importance of the search for an effective strategy of prevention. In an effort to promote a preventive approach to refugee problems, UNHCR has moved towards greater involvement with the internally displaced, particularly in the CIS region. Within the framework of an inter-agency effort and based on a clear division of responsibilities, we successfully responded to the emergency needs of those displaced from the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation this past year. Having boosted the local response capacity, UNHCR is now gradually phasing down its activities.

True prevention means strengthening the will and capacity of Governments, individually and collectively, to pre-empt the reasons that force people to move. This is the underlying thrust of our efforts in the CIS and the neighbouring countries, where we have embarked on an ambitious project to draw up a regional action plan to address past, present and potential displacement. Further to General Assembly resolution 49/173 of 23 December 1994, UNHCR, together with IOM and the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights of OSCE, has organized several subregional meetings in preparation for the regional conference, hopefully in mid-1996. The conference will adopt a declaration of principles and a programme of action. The process is proving to be invaluable in developing a regional strategy to avert population displacement in a part of the world marked by ethnic tensions.

The challenge of prevention, as of solution, is ultimately protection. Early international presence can sometimes have a preventive impact, as was our experience in Tajikistan. However, if we are to break the pattern of coerced displacement, the security of States must presuppose the security of people within those States. A major test for the coming decades, as I see it, will be to develop a humanitarian perspective of security. While UNHCR, with its limited mandate and resources, can make a modest contribution to that process, the primary responsibility for prevention, as for security, is clearly a political one.

Looking ahead: management strategies

Four years ago, UNHCR launched its strategy of prevention, preparedness and solutions. Today, the review of our challenges shows the dramatic transformation in the approach to refugee problems. The second edition of the State of the World's Refugees, which comes out next month, highlights this solution-oriented approach. In taking the new direction, my Office has enjoyed the full confidence of the Executive Committee, for which I am grateful.

I have just returned from New York where the United Nations is preparing to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. It is a sobering moment as Member States evaluate the United Nations performance for the past five decades and reassess their own expectations for the future. Spurred by the financial crisis, the issue of reform is high on the agenda. The future of the United Nations will inevitably affect UNHCR. We too must prepare for a vigorous reappraisal of how we work. If we are to do our job properly, we too must use our resources more effectively. Consolidating what we have achieved so far, I believe that for the coming year, we must set the following four priorities:

First, we must revitalize our protection policies and strategies. They must both reflect the dimension of solutions and respond to the needs of a growing range of beneficiaries. We are being compelled often to provide refuge in the midst of conflict and promote repatriation in the midst of insecurity. How can protection strategies be reformulated to take account of these realities? How can we better help States, whether of asylum or origin, to meet their obligations in the light of these constraints? As a first step we are setting up an internal working group to look at the problems in Africa. We hope to undertake a similar exercise also for Europe. Given the dominance of the domestic agenda in many countries, mobilizing public opinion as a tool of protection will be an important element of the strategy.

In refining our approach to protection and solutions, we have not overlooked resettlement. Let me thank the Governments and non-governmental organizations for supporting the consultations we have launched and for their positive response to our resettlement appeal on the former Yugoslavia.

Secondly, we must rethink the way we plan. The dynamics of displacement today require a planning approach that is comprehensive and integrated: comprehensive in covering the sequence of refugee flows from prevention to emergency response to solutions, and integrated in bringing together the entire spectrum of issues and actors.

Planning for partnership is vital. Given the multiplicity of organizations and agencies on the humanitarian scene today, our objective is to increase the predictability of action for mutual support, and thereby create a better basis for cooperation and coordination. We have strengthened our dialogue with the political and peace-keeping arms of the United Nations. We have cooperated with the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, and with ICRC and IOM in their respective areas. We have refined the concept of service packages with Governments. We have further developed our operational agreement with WFP and signed a memorandum of understanding with UNFPA. I will be signing an agreement also with UNICEF when I visit New York next month. As for our closest partners, the non-governmental organizations, we are following up on PARINAC recommendations at the field level. The increasingly important role of regional organizations in peacemaking has added a new dimension to our partnership strategy, as has the growing interest of institutions such as the World Bank in refugee and returnee issues.

Thirdly, we must reinforce the proper implementation and monitoring of our policies, guidelines and programmes. This includes our ability to monitor and control our implementing partners. I see it as an important priority for the coming year.

One area where the gap between policy and action has constantly drawn the attention of the Executive Committee is that of refugee women. The Beijing Conference highlighted the considerable achievements we have made, as well as our shortcomings. We are introducing a number of specific measures to increase action and accountability, including additional resources to the field and stronger follow-up mechanism at headquarters. Furthermore, I have decided to reformulate UNHCR recruitment policies to give priority to women Professional staff in order to try to reach parity by the year 2000.

Fourthly, we must restructure the way in which we work so as to improve our delivery, accountability and performance and build a capacity to contract and expand in response to operational demands.

I have taken a number of steps to achieve this goal, including strengthening the top management in UNHCR. In an emergency-driven organization such as ours, innovation can easily lapse into improvisation in the absence of a policy planning framework. This is why you will recall last year I decided to appoint a Director for Policy Planning and Operations. Having assessed the value and the need for the function, I am requesting the creation of a post of Assistant High Commissioner at the Assistant Secretary-General level, to which I hope you will accede. Overseeing the regional bureaux, policy development and external relations and supported by a revamped research and information capacity drawn from existing resources, the Assistant High Commissioner will act as the fulcrum for an integrated approach to policy, planning and operations in UNHCR.

Like so many others, we must also learn to do better and more with less. I have requested the Deputy High Commissioner to lead a management review of our priorities, procedures and personnel so that we can ascertain how best to improve delivery and increase productivity while reducing costs. Although the ratio of administrative costs between the field and headquarters has actually declined, our expanding operations worldwide have pushed our budget and our staff to levels at which they cannot be sustained for long. Growth has a high management price, and I am acutely conscious of my responsibility to assess those costs and make the cuts. In the course of the past year, we have taken a number of initiatives to streamline management, increase delegation to the field and utilize our resources better. One of the most significant steps we are taking is to prepare an information and communications systems plan that will take us into the twenty-first century.

I hope that one important result of all these initiatives will be the downsizing of headquarters and the redeployment or reduction of staff in the field, based on improved forward planning and prioritization. As new operations open up, we must phase down elsewhere, as we did a few years ago in Cambodia and more recently in southern Africa. We expect dramatic reductions in South-East Asia in 1996. The Comprehensive Plan of Action is in its final phase. However, some transitional arrangements may still be necessary to ensure the smooth conversion of the operation into a migration programme.

Obviously, the key to productivity and performance lies in a highly trained, motivated and mobile staff. The reform of UNHCR human resources management, particularly the implementation of the career management system and strengthening of staff training, remains high on my agenda. I should like to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Dan Conway, the outgoing Director of the Human Resources Management Division, for his efforts. I know that, as always, I can count on the commitment, competence and creativity of UNHCR staff in making the adjustments.

Let me conclude by saying that the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations is an opportune moment for UNHCR also to reflect on where it is going and how it will get there. The United Nations is here to stay but the very nature of the UNHCR mandate ordains that we must disappear when our task is done. Yet, every day brings new challenges for us, ranging from peace in the Balkans to return in Rwanda and retrenchment in Asia. The imperative for action carries within it an impetus for change. While retaining the core of our principles and the thrust of our strategy, we must continuously revitalize the way we think and review the way we work. Our goal is to be a slimmer, trimmer organization, responsive to emergency needs, aggressive in the search for solutions and committed to protection. Our donors expect it, the countries of asylum and origin need it, and the refugees deserve it. In that process of constant renewal and change, I know I can count on your support.
