Report of the Secretary-General
Addendum

I. INTRODUCTION

1. While the financial position of the United Nations remains extremely grave, information received recently significantly affects previous cash flow projections. The present addendum is issued to inform Member States of the current situation.
II. CURRENT CASH POSITION
2. The financial forecasts presented to Member States in document A/50/666/Add. 4 for the cash position of the combined General Fund (the regular budget, the Working Capital Fund and the Special Account) have been largely confirmed by subsequent actual cash receipts and disbursements. A generally improved pattern of payments reflects the considerable efforts by a number of Member States to respond to previous appeals concerning the financial situation of the United Nations and is illustrated in the annex to the present report.
3. Nevertheless, against a cash balance of $$ 79$ million projected in February for the end of April, $1 /$ the actual cash balance at that date was close to zero. Despite earlier and larger payments by many Member States, payments from Germany, Japan and the United States of America did not fully adhere to the schedule of payments forecast earlier by those Member States for the period January to April 1996.
4. While Germany and Japan have reaffirmed that the amounts in question will be paid by June, the situation of the United States was, until very recently, quite uncertain. The shortfall in the combined General Fund during May will be covered with short-term borrowings from peace-keeping.
5. As to the peace-keeping cash position, a more positive position prevails. More contributions for peace-keeping have been received than had been projected previously for the period January to April. Accordingly, the short-term borrowings of peace-keeping cash to cover the negative position in the combined General Fund at 30 April can be undertaken with some degree of confidence in the ability of the United Nations to effect repayment.

III. RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

6. The national budget recently approved for the United States for the current year provides increased funding for the United Nations, both for the regular budget and peace-keeping, and the amounts involved are now relatively precise. They include substantially full funding for United Nations regular budget assessments in 1995 and additional peace-keeping appropriations. No action was taken, however, relative to the regular budget assessments for 1996 or for periods prior to 1995, which remain unpaid.
7. It now appears likely that the United Nations can expect payments of $$ 122$ million more for the regular budget and $$ 134$ million more for peace-keeping than the amounts it had previously used in preparing forecasts of cash receipts in the months ahead. Of the amounts approved for the regular budget, $$ 80$ million is conditional upon certification by the United States Secretary of State that the United Nations has taken no action to increase "funding for any United Nations programme without identifying an offsetting decrease elsewhere in the United Nations budget". The United Nations was also informed that it could expect to receive most of the increased regular budget payments in June, subject to the above-mentioned condition. Approximately $$ 40$ million will be paid in July or shortly thereafter, again subject to the above-mentioned condition.
8. In early March, the Russian Federation announced its intention to pay a total of $$ 400$ million to the United Nations in 1996 , $$ 275$ million more than was previously forecast. Of the total, the United Nations received $$ 46$ million in full payment by the Russian Federation of its 1996 regular budget assessment in March, and $$ 28$ million in peace-keeping assessments in April.
9. As a result of the resolution of the national budget situation of the United States and the announced intention of the Russian Federation to pay $$ 400$ million to the United Nations this year, the estimated cash position of the United Nations should improve, both at 30 June and 31 December 1996. The aggregate new resources being added to the forecasts for 1996 are $$ 531$ million, with most of that amount earmarked for peace-keeping.

IV. REGULAR BUDGET CASH FLOW PROJECTIONS

10. The new forecast for combined General Fund cash balances at 30 June 1996 is now $\$ 129$ million against a forecast in February of $\$ 36$ million. $\underline{2} /$ Almost all of the increase is attributable to the anticipated receipts from the United States by 30 June, as a result of that Member State's resolution of its national budget situation. Accordingly, it is now forecast that the combined General Fund cash position will become negative in August, rather than at end June or early July as originally forecast. It is now likely that borrowing from peace-keeping operations to fund regular budget needs can be delayed until then.

11. The February forecast for the combined General Fund at 31 December 1996 was for an extreme negative position of $$ 420$ million. 3/ The new forecast shows a significant negative position of minus $$ 198$ million.
12. The anticipated decline in the negative balance is due almost entirely to two factors. The new forecast for 31 December includes $$ 122$ million in new cash receipts from the United States as a result of that Member State's recently enacted national legislation. Most of this amount will be received by 30 June, but some will be received after that date and before 31 December. In addition, an amount of $$ 113$ million is forecast to be received from the United States during the last quarter of 1996, in that Member State's new fiscal year. This latter amount was not included in earlier forecasts.
13. While the United States Government has indicated that it intends to ask its legislature for full funding of its 1996 United Nations regular budget assessments, the United Nations Secretariat, as a prudent measure, has included in this new forecast only the amount actually received from the United States in the comparable period of 1995. The new forecast does not include any other amounts in the United States Government's new national budget request for United Nations 1996 assessments as recently submitted to its legislature.

V. PEACE-KEEPING CASH FLOW PROJECTIONS

14. Cash flow forecasts for peace-keeping operations are inherently more difficult to make than for the regular budget, as the pattern of payments to peace-keeping operations is more complicated and less predictable, month by month, than for the regular budget. It is also due to the uncertainties surrounding the amount and timing of additional peace-keeping assessments. Focusing on the 31 December 1996 position, however, should level out, to a degree, unpredictable month-to-month variations.
15. At 31 December 1996 the Organization's peace-keeping cash position is forecast to be $$ 586$ million, a marked improvement from the $$ 340$ million originally forecast.
16. One reason for this change is the change in forecast contributions from the United States. Of the $$ 225$ million now anticipated from the United States in 1996, $$ 134$ million relates to the recently enacted United States legislation, and $$ 91$ million relates to anticipated contributions after 30 September. The latter amount is based on actual receipts during the comparable 1 October to 31 December period in 1995. Another factor is the increase of $$ 275$ million in contributions anticipated from the Russian Federation.
17. If these contributions are received as now forecast, it may be possible to pay $$ 275$ million to Member States for troop and contingent-owned equipment costs in addition to payments of some $$ 300$ million already anticipated in the original forecast. The decision to make additional payments to troop and equipment providers can and will only be taken when the forecast contributions are actually received. If it is possible to make these payments, the debt to Member States for troops and equipment will decrease to $$ 725$ million at 31 December 1996. That would be a welcome development for those Member States which have awaited such payments for so long.

VI. CONCLUSION

18. Forecasts in February estimated that the combined cash position of the United Nations at 31 December 1996 would be a negative $$ 80$ million. 4 / The factors described above lead to a new forecast of a combined cash position of a positive $$ 388$ million, with a negative balance of $$ 198$ million for the combined General Fund and a positive peace-keeping balance of $$ 586 \mathrm{million}$. Amounts owed to Member States for troop costs and contingent-owned equipment are now forecast to end the year at $$ 725$ million compared with $$ 1$ billion estimated earlier.
19. The new forecasts outlined above show a welcome improvement in the overall position of the Organization. Even if contributions now forecast are actually received, however, they will only mitigate the precarious financial situation of the United Nations, not restore it to financial viability. It should be recalled that, while the new projections constitute a real improvement, the combined General Fund is still estimated to end 1996 with a negative position of $$ 198$ million and that outstanding assessed contributions would still total approximately $$ 2.1$ billion, of which $$ 1.3$ billion would be owed by a single Member State.
20. The projected improvement in the cash position of the Organization is a very welcome development and the Secretary-General would like to express his appreciation to those Member States which have made considerable efforts to meet their obligations to the Organization. Further efforts are clearly required, however, and in this connection Member States with significant arrears have been contacted and urged to make payments immediately or indicate a schedule of when such payments may be expected. The results of this latest appeal will be reflected in future reports to the General Assembly.
