I. INTRODUCTION

1. The present report addresses the programme performance of the United Nations Organization for the biennium 1994-1995. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B of 29 July 1994, the report has been prepared by the Office of Internal Oversight Services in accordance with the provisions of article V of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation (ST/SGB/PPBME Rules/1(1987)). Article V includes three regulations, 5.1-5.3 and two rules, 105.1 and 105.2. The present report was prepared within the framework of those regulations and rules. It is the second report to be prepared in accordance with the proposals made by the Secretary-General in his report entitled "Methodology for monitoring and reporting the programme performance of the United Nations" (A/46/173). The first report, covering the biennium 1992-1993 (A/49/135 and Corr.1 and Add.1), was submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, through the Committee on Programme and Coordination (CPC). In its consideration of the report at its thirty-fourth session, 1/ CPC expressed appreciation for its improved format and structure.

2. In terms of content, the present report captures the wide range of activities produced by the Organization and reflects the degree of implementation of the activities identified in the programme budget. It also indicates the extent to which programmed activities were modified during the implementation along with explanations for the modifications and an indication of attendant resources. It does not attempt to assess the quality of the outputs and services produced. As in the report covering the biennium 1992-1993, the information presented distinguishes between four groups of activities. The first covers outputs and services that are specifically indicated and quantified in the programme budget. The second format corresponds to activities that are described in the budget in general terms with little or no indication of the quantities to be delivered. Operational activities are subject to a third format of reporting, whereas conference and administrative services are reported through relevant workload indicators.

3. The report contains an overview of programme performance, a summary of resource utilization, findings and conclusions and a set of annexed tables summarizing the implementation and the reasons for the changes made during the biennium. The findings provide feedback for improving the formulation of the programmes and for enhancing implementation. Document A/51/128/Add.1, which constitutes section V of the present report, highlights the factors that affected programme deliveries during the biennium by section of the programme budget, including a brief reporting on the activities undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) that do not fit under the standardized presentation of the other programme budget sections.

II. OVERVIEW OF PROGRAMME PERFORMANCE

4. By resolution 48/231 A of 23 December 1993, the General Assembly adopted a programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 comprised of 6,497 final outputs that are specifically identified, as well as other diverse activities that do not fall within the standard categories of outputs mentioned in rule 104.4. Those other activities comprise non-outputs/services and operational activities.

5. The "non-outputs/services" are those that are not precisely quantified in the programme budget and are less "measurable". Nevertheless, they are essential for the functioning of the Organization and involve the use of resources. Examples of this type of activity are support to intergovernmental negotiations, good offices, the promotion of legal instruments, as well as coordination and consultation with governmental and non-governmental organizations. These activities appear in the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 2/ grouped under two major categories namely, International cooperation and Coordination, harmonization and liaison. The operational activities comprise advisory services, training seminars and workshops, as well as field projects.

6. The outputs specifically identified mainly fall under the major categories of parliamentary services, published material and information material and services. Those categories account for a large part of the work of the Organization, notably in the economic and social sectors. In the biennium 1994-1995, they utilized 62 per cent of the Professional work-months available for the production of the Organization's programme of work. The breakdown of that total by major category was as follows:

	Number	Percentage
Parliamentary services	2 699	41
Published material	3 039	47
Information material and services	759	12
Total	6 497	100

7. Of those 6,497 outputs, 4,888 or 75.2 per cent, were actually implemented during the biennium. By category of activities the overall rate of implementation was as follows:

	Percentage
Parliamentary services	78
Published material	74
Information material and services	70

8. It will be noted that the category "Parliamentary services" groups under it all parliamentary documentation and substantive servicing of intergovernmental bodies, including reports and background papers produced to service the meetings. The category of "Published material" comprises recurrent and non-recurrent publications as well as other published technical material not included in the publication programme of the United Nations. The majority of outputs under information material and services are those of the Department of Public Information.

9. Annex I to the present report provides a summary of the status of implementation of the final outputs and the departures from programmed commitments by section of the programme budget, with an indication of the Professional work-months utilized under each major category of outputs. It shows that the number of outputs implemented and reformulated as compared with the number of those programmed varied for the various budget sections. It was highest (100 per cent) under the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, 97 per cent under the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and 90 per cent under crime control, and lowest (42 per cent) in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), 53 per cent under the Department of Political Affairs, 60 per cent under the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and 65 per cent under the Department for Development Support and Management Services. In all other sections the rate of implementation fluctuated between 70 and 80 per cent. The high implementation rate under the activities of peace-keeping and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme is due to the fact that the outputs under "Parliamentary services" weigh heavily in the programme of work. The implementation of these activities is by definition not left to the discretion of the Secretariat. In the case of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, a substantial reduction in the number of activities programmed under "Published material" in the biennium 1994-1995, compared with 1992-1993, contributed to higher implementation.

10. The low implementation rates in ESCWA and the Department of Political Affairs, can be explained in terms of the fundamental reorganization and restructuring that was taking place during the biennium in these two offices. Thus, during the first nine months of 1994, ESCWA was fully engaged in conducting a major revision of its programme of work and organizational structure. Furthermore, throughout the biennium ESCWA had the highest rate of vacancy in the Organization, averaging 30 per cent of Professional posts in the substantive divisions. In the case of the Department of Political Affairs, the merger of the two parts of the Department in March 1994 and the consequential streamlining and consolidation of the functions greatly affected delivery during the first year of the biennium. It will be noted that, given the weight of published material in the work of the economic and social sectors, the actual delivery of publications affected the overall performance of the related sections. The interpretation of the results by section of the programme budget is given in section V of the present report (A/51/128/Add.1).

11. As in previous reports, a distinction is made between outputs implemented as programmed - column 2 - and outputs implemented that have been "reformulated" - column 3. An output is considered "reformulated" when its description has been modified, as compared with the narrative in the programme budget, while continuing to address the same subject-matter of the programmed output. Quite logically nearly half of the outputs reformulated are published material. The reformulation occurred essentially in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), which jointly accounted for almost two thirds of the reformulated published material.

12. The 1,609 programmed outputs that were not implemented during the biennium were either postponed (590 or 9.1 per cent) or terminated (1,019 or 15.7 per cent). An output is considered "postponed" if, irrespective of its stage of completion, it was not delivered to its primary users during the biennium. The postponed outputs are essentially published material (420 or 71 per cent). Of this total, 15 per cent originated under legal activities alone and another 34 per cent in UNCTAD and the five regional commissions combined. This is not unusual, and perhaps not altogether worrisome, especially if one considers that most of the published material postponed under legal activities are substantially completed. Their delivery was delayed for logistical reasons. As for the postponements under UNCTAD and the regional commissions, they were more than offset by the additional publications prompted by the need to address new mandates including the preparation of important conferences in 1996. This has inevitably disrupted the timely implementation of the 1994-1995 work programme.

13. Annex V to the present report provides explanations of the main reasons that prompted the postponement of outputs by sections of the programme budget. Delays because of logistical considerations in the area of printing and publishing caused 22 per cent of the total postponements. Generally speaking, Conference Services gives preference to processing parliamentary reports and not to published material. It will be noted that 39 per cent of the outputs are reported postponed for "other" reasons. This proportion is too large and comprises mainly outputs whose status of implementation could not be ascertained, as well as those for which no particular reason was provided. In those instances, the outputs were considered postponed.

14. If not postponed, the non-implemented outputs were terminated either by legislative decisions - 52 per cent - or at the discretion of Programme Managers in accordance with rule 105.2 of the Regulations and Rules. The 1,019 outputs terminated during the biennium 1994-1995 represented 15.6 per cent of outputs programmed, and were in the following major categories.

	Number	Percentage
Parliamentary services	474	47
Published material	359	35
Information material and services	186	18

15. The figures in annex I show that terminated outputs were heavily concentrated in a few sections and programmes of the programme budget. More than 80 per cent occurred in the Department of Political Affairs, the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, UNCTAD and the five regional commissions combined.

16. The termination of a programmed output during the biennium can signal the management of a complex and evolving programme or deficiencies at the time of the elaboration of the programme, or the lack of voluntary resources that had been expected, or a combination of such factors. Normally, outputs that cannot be produced would be postponed and not terminated. However, in some instances, a postponement may not be appropriate because the output would lose its relevancy and effectiveness. In these instances, the outputs were terminated. Annex VI presents a summary of the reasons that prompted the termination of outputs, by section of the programme budget. It shows that more than 50 per cent were terminated by legislation or alternatively were not requested by a given intergovernmental body as anticipated in the programme budget. It also shows that programmatic consideration accounted for 11 per cent of the total outputs terminated whereas 16 per cent were due to lack of anticipated resources. The shortfalls in resources is particularly reflected in the termination of outputs relying on mixed funding. The current methods by which extrabudgetary resources are projected do, in some cases, generate over programming and a consequent lower level of programme implementation as a result of terminations.

17. In addition to the 6,497 outputs that were programmed and subsequently implemented, postponed or terminated, a significant number of outputs were added to the programme budget during the biennium and implemented. Such outputs - a total of 1,226 were added either by intergovernmental bodies or at the initiative of the Secretariat. These outputs represented 19 per cent of the total outputs initially programmed for the biennium 1994-1995. Their distribution by major category is as follows:

	Legislation	Secretariat	Total
Parliamentary services	467	147	614
Published material	243	276	519
Information material and services	51	42	93

18. The distribution by major category of outputs added by intergovernmental bodies differed from the distribution of the outputs added by the Secretariat. Parliamentary services represented 61 per cent of all outputs added by legislation. This is, a priori, a normal feature of an active legislative process. It will be noted, however, that 64 per cent of the 761 supplementary outputs added by legislation occurred under UNCTAD, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), ESCAP and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), which in turn had programmed only 34 per cent of the initial outputs included in the programme budget. Annex VII summarizes the reasons that prompted the addition of 465 outputs by the Secretariat. It shows that in almost 90 per cent of the cases, outputs were introduced for programmatic considerations, that is, to replace outputs postponed or terminated and to enhance the attainment of the programme's objectives.

19. The overall rate of implementation of high-priority subprogrammes by section of the programme budget is provided in annex II. The percentages in the last column show that the average rate of implementation of the high-priority subprogrammes combined is analogous to that of the overall rate of implementation of all programme budget sections (76 per cent). It will be noted, however, that in many sections the rate of implementation of the high-priority subprogrammes was lower than the overall implementation rate of the relevant sections. It will also be noted that high-priority subprogrammes have accounted for 36 per cent of the 1,226 supplementary outputs added during the biennium by legislation and by the Secretariat, and they had accounted for 36 per cent of the total outputs postponed and terminated.

20. Information by section of the programme budget on the implementation of final outputs designated with highest and lowest priority is provided in annexes III and IV, respectively. The figures in annex III indicate an overall implementation rate of 66 per cent, mainly on account of termination of parliamentary services and information materials by legislation in the Department of Political Affairs. Meetings were mandated but did not take place for reasons related to the overall evaluation of the activities of the Organization in that area. The figures in annex IV indicate that 68 per cent of the outputs, designated as lowest-priority were implemented, mainly on account of terminations and postponements of published material. It will be noted that highest and lowest priority outputs which represented 18 and 6 per cent, respectively, of the total outputs programmed for the biennium, accounted for 25 and 8 per cent, respectively, of the total outputs postponed and terminated.

21. Annex VIII provides information on the status of implementation of outputs carried over from earlier bienniums and reported as postponed to the biennium 1994-1995 in the Secretary-General's report on programme performance for the biennium 1992-1993 (A/49/135). These outputs were due for implementation in the biennium 1994-1995. The figures in annex VIII show that of the 884 outputs carried over, more than half (56 per cent) were implemented, whereas 23 per cent were terminated because they became obsolete, and some 181, consisting mainly of published materials, were further postponed. The continuing relevancy of these outputs in the context of the 1996-1997 programme is questionable. In the absence of further justifications warranting their continuation, it is recommended that they be terminated.

22. A comparison between the 1992-1993 and 1994-1995 levels of implementation is presented in table 1 below. In order to ensure comparability, the 884 outputs carried over from the earlier biennium have been included in the total outputs programmed and due for implementation in the biennium 1994-1995. The table shows that the overall level of implementation was slightly lower (73 per cent) in 1994-1995 than in 1992-1993 (74 per cent) mainly on account of a higher percentage of terminations (16.6 per cent in 1994-1995 as against 11.7 per cent in 1992-1993). However, the implementation of highest-priority outputs was substantially lower in 1994-1995 (66.4 per cent) compared with the previous biennium (87.1 per cent). The number of outputs added by legislation in 1994-1995 was lower than their number in 1992-1993, whereas the number added at the initiative of the Secretariat was substantially larger.

23. Annex IX provides information by section of the programme budget on the relative weight, in terms of work-month utilization of activities falling under the major categories of International cooperation and Coordination, harmonization and liaison. It will be recalled that most of the work done under these categories does not generate "final outputs". Examples of this type of activity are support to intergovernmental negotiations, good offices, the promotion of legal instruments as well as coordination with governmental and non-governmental organizations.

24. Annexes X, XI and XII, refer to the variety of operational activities undertaken by the Organization during the biennium 1994-1995. These are advisory services (annex X), training, seminars and workshops (annex XI) and field projects (annex XII). It will be noted that a relatively high proportion of advisory services and training seminars are undertaken in conjunction with the substantive work of various Secretariat units, in addition to those provided under the regular programme of technical cooperation. They are funded mainly from regular budget resources and from extrabudgetary resources related to technical cooperation trust funds.

III. RESOURCE UTILIZATION

25. A total of 52,029 Professional work-months (including consultant services) were reported available to programme managers for the production of the programme of work in 1994-1995. Of those work-months, an estimated 13,730 or 26 per cent, were funded from extrabudgetary resources. The breakdown of the work-months utilized by major activities and source of funding is as follows.

Table 2. Distribution of Professional work-months utilized under main categories of activities in the biennium 1994-1995

	Regular budget	Percentage	Extra-budgetary	Percentage	Total	Percentage
Parliamentary services	10 680	28	1 430	10	12 110	23

(c) Field projects	1 470	4	2 990	22	4 460	8
Total	38 299	100	13 730	100	52 029	100

26. Table 2 shows that 32,483 work-months, that is 62 per cent of the total work-months utilized, were committed for the implementation of activities that generate final outputs under the major categories of parliamentary services, published material and information services. These are the activities reported in annex I. Of that total, 7 per cent were utilized for the production of 796 outputs designated as high-priority and 3 per cent for the delivery of the 288 outputs designated low-priority. The two figures are not commensurate with the proportion of high-priority and low-priority designated outputs in the total programmed, namely 18 and 6 per cent, respectively.

27. The proportion of the resources committed to activities that do not generate "final outputs" in the fields of International cooperation and Coordination, harmonization and liaison was 14 per cent, that is 7,505 work-months. Of those work-months, 62 per cent were utilized to implement activities of the Centre for Human Rights, the Department of Political Affairs, the Office of Legal Affairs, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and the Department of Peace-keeping Operations.

28. Operational activities accounted for the balance of the total work-months utilized during the biennium, that is 12,041 work-months, or 23 per cent. These activities were concentrated in the economic and social sectors with six departments, namely, UNCTAD, the Centre for Human Rights, ESCAP, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), UNEP and the Department for Development Support and Management Services, which combined utilized 65 per cent of the total work-months.

29. The share of extrabudgetary resources in funding the diverse activities of the Organization by major category of outputs is as follows:

	Percentage
Parliamentary services	12
Published material	21
Information materials and services	12
International cooperation	27
Coordination, harmonization and liaison	23
Operational activities	55
Total	26

30. The figures in table 2 indicate that 52 per cent of the work-months funded from extrabudgetary resources was used in support of substantive activities, that is non-operational. In this regard, annexes III and IV show that work-months funded from extrabudgetary resources represented 13 per cent of the work-months utilized in the production of the highest-priority designated outputs and 24 per cent of the lowest-priority designated outputs, respectively. As for the supplementary outputs which were added to the programme of work at the initiative of the Secretariat (annex VII), extrabudgetary resources have accounted for 36 per cent of the work-months utilized to produce them.

IV. FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

31. Reporting on programme performance has to be seen in the context of, on the one hand, the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, in particular the details of reporting in subparagraph (d) of rule 105.1, and on the other hand, the constraints resulting from the degree of programmatic details in the programme budget document, the need to respond to the multitude of new demands and the challenging requirements of delivering while simultaneously reforming the structures and methods of work through an ongoing process of streamlining and reorganization. The balance sheet of what has been delivered, despite the various constraints, appears largely positive in terms of quantity of outputs and services produced. However, the picture becomes blurred when the aspect of redundancy and duplication of many of the activities reported implemented is taken into account.

32. Thus, the findings of the monitoring exercise covering the biennium 1994-1995 suggest that legislative bodies have been often seized with a wide range of documentation and reports, the purpose of which is not clear other than their general information nature. In many instances, reporting to intergovernmental bodies has included country reports of regional advisers, proceedings of ad hoc non-governmental expert group meetings, reports on global conferences already reported on elsewhere, etc.

33. A related issue is that of publications. The aspects of relevancy and duplication within the publication programme in the United Nations has long been a concern of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. In its first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, 3/ the Advisory Committee referred to this issue and noted that the concerns raised 10 years ago were still valid today. The findings of the 1994-1995 programme performance underline the magnitude of the problems raised by the Committee, in particular as it relates to duplication. A cross-departmental review of the titles of various published material issued within the context of the monitoring exercise suggests that, in many instances, the same information is being rehashed and reproduced in various forms under different categories of outputs. Thus expert group meetings are reported as an implemented activity. In many cases, the reports emanating from these meetings are then submitted to an intergovernmental body and are reported as a separate activity. Subsequently, the same reports are issued as publications. Other instances of duplication consist of issuing sectoral or thematic studies which are then consolidated into another global study or survey issued by the same department.

34. The above situation developed because each substantive division within an organizational unit (office or department) produces its own set of publications and documentation to legislative bodies in what appears to be a decentralized and uncoordinated effort. The problem is further compounded by the absence of a clearly articulated dissemination policy and criteria to be applied by various Secretariat units in approving material for publication or as background documentation for submission to intergovernmental bodies.

35. A report to an intergovernmental body is issued either at the request of the body concerned, or at the initiative of the Secretariat for the purpose of bringing a matter to the attention of the legislator and seek endorsement for the follow-up action proposed by the Secretariat. Background documentation is warranted if it provides specific insight to issues under deliberation. Similarly, for any material to be issued as a United Nations publication, there should be a reasonable expectation of positive advantage to the United Nations in terms of greater public awareness of the work of the Organization or of providing practical assistance to the membership of the Organization. In any event, no report or publication should duplicate material which in substance has already been published and is readily available. In this regard, mention should be made of the Secretary-General's report on the publication policy of the United Nations submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session (A/C.5/48/10), which spells out a number of criteria to be applied by the Secretariat in approving materials for publication. There is little evidence that such criteria have been adhered to in a large number of the publications issued.

36. There is also little evidence of any concerted efforts on the part of programme managers to use more effectively the programming and budgeting process in addressing additional mandates. Changing demands and emerging needs have frequently prompted programme managers to adjust the work programme in the course of the biennium. Such adjustments have been translated more often than not into new activities in addition to the ongoing mandated ones. This is particularly evident from the large proportion of reports and publications reported added to the 1994-1995 programme. A selective review of the title of documents issued by various departments suggests that in many instances there was enough room and flexibility to recast the new issues within the existing programme through reformulation and/or refocusing the content of a related ongoing activity. This is particularly true in situations where the objectives at the subprogramme level are of a broad nature.

37. The report indicates that 181 outputs carried over from the biennium 1992-1993 were still further postponed. Of this total, nearly 73 per cent consist of publications. The remaining consist of documentation and background material that were programmed under parliamentary services, as well as some information material. In the absence of further justification warranting their continuation, it is recommended that these outputs be terminated.

38. Financial constraints require a more focused programme and a greater integration of the work into fewer mutually supporting activities. It also requires addressing at the programme formulation stage, issues of duplication and complementarities within the same programme as well as with other programmes of the Organization. To a large extent this depends on the ability of programme managers to rationalize the translation of the objectives defined in the medium-term plan into programmed activities. Such rationalization appears more warranted in the light of the findings relating to the proportion that reports and publications occupy in total work-month utilization (50 per cent).

39. In many instances the reporting on the work-months utilized suggests that resources were spread thinly over a variety of publications and reports. There were instances where an average of two days or one week was reported utilized for the production of a publication issued. This could signal that such publications should not have been programmed as a separate output in the first place. It could also mean that the output was basically an input into another activity. In other instances, activities in the 1994-1995 work programme were fragmented into small components which appeared to be a description of a process that leads to a clearly identifiable output or service. As a result, it was not uncommon to report a relatively small amount of work-months utilized for the production of a substantial number of outputs and services.

40. The above situation has reduced the transparency of the exercise and accordingly the ability to monitor changes adequately. This was further compounded by the lack of clarity in the description of activities programmed under the categories "International cooperation" and "Coordination, harmonization and liaison" which subsumes a wide range of activities that do not appear to belong to these categories, i.e., intermediate activities, work in progress, inter-divisional cooperation within the department, etc. Similarly, meetings of experts that are convened primarily to provide collective advice to the Secretariat are too often confused with ad hoc expert group meetings of intergovernmental character, thus inflating the number of activities programmed under the main category of "Parliamentary services".

41. Many of the aforementioned constraints could be overcome through fostering the link between the objectives of the plan and the budget, both in terms of programmes and organizational structure. This is predicated in the revised format of the medium-term plan, its relationship to the 1998-1999 programme budget and the related instructions for the preparation of the budget. It is essential that these instructions address the issue of fragmentation and duplication in the activities programmed. It is also essential that they address the issue of clarity in the citations of the subprogramme objectives to be attained during the biennium under consideration. Greater clarity in this area would help better ascertain the relevancy of the work done to the objectives of the subprogramme and assess the validity of the changes introduced in the course of implementation. However, a more satisfactory solution would require refining the definitions of the main categories of activities and the type of outputs/services to be incorporated under them.

42. Notwithstanding the above limitations, the present report reflects the diversity of the activities which the Organization has implemented in the course of the biennium 1994-1995. For some of these activities it was possible to indicate the degree of implementation, that is, the number of outputs/services produced, compared with those programmed in the budget. For others, it was only possible to provide a broad indication of the nature of the outputs produced or services rendered and the corresponding resources engaged in their production.

43. As in the past, the report provides explanations and quantitative details about the changes made in the implementation of the work programme and the respective roles of intergovernmental bodies and the Secretariat in shaping these changes. In many instances, these changes were necessary because of adjustments resulting from ongoing restructuring exercises and because of the need to address new mandates. This was particularly evident in the case of Department of Political Affairs and ESCWA. There remains, however, a number of departures from programmed commitments and other findings which are difficult to justify. This could signal deficiencies at the time of the elaboration of the programmes concerned or a weakness in the management and implementation of these programmes. More importantly, it could signal a less than adequate internal control and programme oversight, or a combination of such factors. These changes, which are problematic from the view of central control of programme implementation, were as follows:

(a) Implementation rate. A quantitative picture of the status of implementation based on a comparison between outputs delivered and the commitments set out in the programme budget has its limitation as an indicator of performance. Nevertheless, in the absence of a valid justification, an overall implementation rate of below 70 per cent does imply the possibility of problems. The programmes which fall within this category are the Department for Development Support and Management Services and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements;

(b) High priority. It was not always possible to understand why adjustments in the work programme could not be made to ensure the implementation of outputs designated as high-priority. A related issue is that of the high-priority designated subprogrammes. Here again, it was not possible to explain why, in a number of instances, the implementation of activities under these subprogrammes could not have been higher. The programmes for which the implementation rate in high-priority subprogrammes is less than 70 per cent are the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development. Those for which the implementation rates of outputs designated as high-priority is less than 70 per cent are the International Trade Centre (UNCTAD/GATT), UNCTAD, UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements;

(c) Outputs added. In some programmes, a relatively large number of outputs were added to the programme of work either at the initiative of the Secretariat or by legislation. For outputs added at the request of intergovernmental bodies, there was no indication that programme budget implications were provided. When combined, the total implementation became higher than 100 per cent without indication of additional resources. The programmes which have an implementation rate of over 115 per cent are UNEP, crime prevention, ESCAP and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs;

(d) Outputs postponed and terminated. There are also instances where a large number of outputs are reported postponed or terminated without adequate reasons for such departures. The programmes where this state of affairs represented 70 per cent or more of total postponements and/or terminations are UNEP and crime prevention;

(e) Resource utilization. In several programmes, it was difficult to reconcile the work-months utilized with those authorized under the regular budget with due allowance given to the vacancies and to the requirements for administrative support. If the total work-months reported utilized are larger than those made available for a particular department, this could only signal a deficiency in management oversight leading to inaccurate reporting. The departments that have work-month utilization of more than 100 per cent are crime prevention and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs. In the case of UNEP, the utilized resources represented less than 50 per cent of the work-months available, which could also signal inaccuracies in reporting, combined with weaknesses in programme management. It could also mean a less than adequate utilization of available resources.

44. Taking into account all of the above considerations, the findings enumerated in subparagraphs (a) to (e) of paragraph 43 suggest that inspection reviews for UNEP, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, crime prevention, ESCAP, the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, the Department for Development Support and Management Services and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs are warranted. It should be noted that with the exception of ESCAP, all other departments have been identified in the 1992-1993 programme performance report as having delivery and/or reporting problems.

45. By and large, the findings of the report suggest that a tangible improvement in the quality of the monitoring and reporting exercise will always depend on the commitment of programme managers to institutionalize the monitoring and evaluation practices as an integral part of their managerial practices. The quality of departmental submissions received within the 1994-1995 programme performance exercise clearly indicates that in many departments and offices, there is inadequate commitment for oversight, therefore, there is no coordinating or managerial mechanism that collects and analyses on a routine basis information on the progress made and results achieved under the various activities and programmes. Many departments do not have a senior planning and coordinating function located within the office of the head of department or office to provide coordinated feedback on success and shortfalls, to ensure coherent strategies and to minimize duplicative efforts which would improve the overall management of the department.

46. Through its work in audit, inspection and evaluation, the Office of Internal Oversight Services will continue to emphasize the need for adequate mechanisms and systems of programme oversight and control at the departmental level. To this end, the Office of Internal Oversight Services will ensure that such mechanisms are established in various organizational units and used as a management tool. This issue has been addressed in more detail by the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on "Strengthening the role of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives" (A/51/88, annex).
